HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 28, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OLSON—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON CALLING OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Last Friday a question of privilege was raised with regard to the procedure to be followed in calling the organization meeting of a standing committee. I promised last Friday to take the long and well written memorandum of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) into consideration. If I could have the indulgence of the house I should now like to give my opinion.

On Friday last the hon. member for Medicine Hat rose on a question of privilege which he summarized as follows:

> The point I wish to make now is that a member of a standing committee which has been set up does in fact have the right to request a meeting of that standing committee, and the officers in this house are under obligation to call such a meeting.

Neither the standing orders of the house nor Beauchesne are very helpful in answering all the questions posed in the statement of the hon. member for Medicine Hat. Standing order 65(1) states:

> At the commencement of each session, a special committee, consisting of five members, shall be appointed, whose duty it shall be to prepare and report, with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the following standing committees of the house;

This standing order was complied with on May 16, when on motion of the right hon. Prime Minister, seconded by the Minister of Justice, it was resolved that a special committee be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the standing committees of this house, the said committee to be composed of Messrs. Caron, Churchill, Knowles, Leboe, Pickersgill and Winkler, and that the provisions of standing order 65(1) be suspended in relation to the number of members thereon.

You will notice that among the members to compose the committee are the whips of the different parties and the house leaders of the government and the opposition. We will come back to this fact.

The procedure set out in standing order 65(1) was followed and on June 27, 1963 Mr. Walker, who had by this time become the chief government whip and had replaced Mr. Caron as such on the special committee, presented the first report of the committee which was then concurred in. This report provided, inter alia, for the composition of the standing committee on agriculture, composed of 60 members, therein enumerated.

At this point I might perhaps be allowed to quote Bourinot on the organization of committees. He states at page 463:

> It is usual for the leader of the government in either house to give the Clerk of the house instructions as to the time and place of meeting for the organization of the several standing committees.
> In the case of standing committees of the commons, there are certain clerks whose duties are connected with them especially. For instance, the clerks of standing orders, private bills, public accounts, railways, canals and telegraph lines, and printing. It is usual for the member, on whose motion a select committee has been nominated, to take the initiative in calling it together, and having it organized; and this he will do by placing himself immediately in communication with the Clerk of the house.

You will notice that Bourinot mentions that it is usual for the member on whose motion the select committee has been nominated to take the initiative in calling it together and having it organized.

It is true that the committee on agriculture is a standing committee, but it is true also that it is on the motion of the chief whip that the standing committees have been nominated. Therefore he is in the same position as a member on whose motion a committee has been organized, and he is acting in the name or in the place of the leader of the government in the House of Commons. It is not necessary to decide whether his power is delegated or not; it is certain that this has ever been the practice in the house before and after Bourinot.

The chief whip is the instrument, the channel of operation, from constant practice. It would not be of much use to organize a committee unless some special matters were to be referred to it; and as these matters can only be referred on government motions, who is better placed to call a meeting than the chief government whip?

In other words, organization meetings of standing committees have always been called on instructions from the chief government whip the moment the house refers or is about to refer matters to the said committees. It is for this reason that instructions have invariably come from the chief government whip's office. This is why, in the absence of any other specified authority, the hon. member's request was sent to the chief government whip to call an organization meeting and to ask the house to refer to the committee the matters mentioned in his letter.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat said at the beginning of his remarks in the house that he had addressed a letter to the chief of the committees and private legislation branch, and he quoted from his letter as follows:

> Dear Sir:
> I wish to request that a meeting of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization be called with all convenient speed for the purpose of selecting a chairman and other officers.
> I further request that the committee be asked to consider and investigate the wide difference between the price received for feed grain by the producers in western Canada and the price paid by livestock feeders in eastern Canada.

Later on the hon. member for Medicine Hat declared that—> —a member of the staff of this house wrongfully interfered with the rights of a member.

Also that—> —the officers of this house are under obligation to call such a meeting.

To this I have already given a preliminary answer, but I might add first that Mr. Anthony Plouffe is not an officer of the house. If one looks at the last pages of Hansard of October 23, that is, last Wednesday, page 10, it will be noted that officers of the house are the Clerk of the house, the Sergeant-at-Arms, the parliamentary counsel, the assistant clerks and the deputy sergeant-at-arms. Under the heading of chiefs of principal branches is the name of Mr. Plouffe as chief of committees and private legislation. This does not make him an officer of the house.

Second, the member for Medicine Hat requests from the chief clerk committees branch—> —that the committee be asked to consider and investigate the wide difference between the price received from feed grain by the producers in western Canada and the price paid by livestock feeders in eastern Canada.

This request, that the committee be asked by the chief clerk of committees to consider that particular proposition, is certainly not one which could be entertained by him even if he did have the right to call a meeting of the committee. As stated by Beauchesne at citation 304(1) page 244,

> A committee can only consider those matters which have been committed to it by the house.

Neither the chief clerk of committees nor the clerk of a committee should interfere and ask a committee "to consider and investigate the matter referred to". There is no doubt that to do so would be most improper.

[Mr. Speaker.]

If only for this reason, the chief clerk of committees was justified in not calling a meeting of the committee, nor can it be said that he has "wrongfully interfered with the rights of a member"; for the second paragraph of the hon. member's letter cannot be dissociated from the first one.

Third, the responsibility of calling organization meetings does not and should not rest with the chief of the committees and private legislation branch. The main responsibility of the branch consists, once the organization meetings have been called, in seeing that the committees are provided with quarters for the meetings, and to provide also for secretarial and other assistance to the committees. If any and all members could request the calling of committee meetings at any time, it is possible that three or four members might request meetings of the same committee at different times, or at the time of meetings of other committees, and the result would be utter confusion and disorganization.

The government leader in the house, who followed the hon. member for Medicine Hat and who was careful to state that he had not made any study of the question, declared that he had "no doubt it has been the custom that these committees be set up at the suggestion of the government whip as a convenience", but he added other comments which are not in accord with the conclusions of this memorandum.

Perhaps we can leave it at that, with the further suggestion that as the procedure is not clearly defined in our standing orders, this might be a matter that could very well be studied in the committee on procedure.

MR. WEBB—POSTMASTERSHIP AT ENTERPRISE, ONT.

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On October 23 the Postmaster General referred to the postmastership at Enterprise, Ontario, and stated that the widow of the deceased postmaster, Clare Stewart, was not a veteran as I had previously stated.

Mrs. Stewart is a war veteran. Her service number is W23627. She has five children to care for. One of these children has to be maintained at the home for retarded children in Smiths Falls, Ontario. Her husband applied for an army pension shortly before he died but this had not been processed. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, on being appointed postmaster in April, 1962, purchased a home formerly owned by a doctor in Enterprise. This home was purchased due to the fact that there were no steps leading into the home, thus making it more convenient for elderly people.

On October 4 Mrs. Stewart wrote to the Postmaster General and at the bottom of her letter stated "Please acknowledge". On October 18 her mother wrote from Toronto to the Postmaster General, and as of October 25 no reply had been received by either. On October 10 I received a letter from the service officer of the Royal Canadian Legion, branch 458, asking me to make representations on behalf of Mrs. Stewart. On that date I wrote to the Post Office Department. Only this morning did I receive a reply.

The minister also stated that the new appointee had 10 children. I should like to lay before the house the facts with regard to the 10 children. One girl is married and is living in Kingston. One son is working in Ottawa. Two daughters are working in Ottawa and one daughter is working in a bank in Kingston. The husband works as a carpenter for a construction firm. The appointee works part time as a store clerk and also drives a mail route. They also own a farm.

An hon. Member: Also Grit.

Mr. Webb: On Friday October 25 I received a petition which reads as follows:

> We, the patrons of Enterprise post office and the rural routes are well satisfied with the excellent services of our postmistress, Mrs. Betty Stewart, and it is our wish that she remain in her present position.

This petition involving this small post office contains 190 signatures.

[Translation]

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to give an answer to the hon. member, since I did so on the twenty third when I gave a precise summary of the facts.

First of all, Mrs. Stewart is not entitled to the privileges granted to veterans.

Then, she has never been postmistress. She was employed in the post office in question, on a temporary basis, after her husband's death.

It has also been said that she had increased the post office revenue to $2,000. In fact, she was employed for one month only, and the revenue was not increased to $2,000 a year, the total annual revenue of that post office being of about $1,421.

The hon. member has mentioned what type of work Mrs. Dillon's children do. That they work in a bank, as labourers or carpenters, does not change the fact that Mrs. Dillon is the mother of 10 children.

[Text]

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Webb: —in regard to revenue, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; it seems to me we have spent a considerable time on this matter. I thought the quickest way to deal with it was to let the hon. member explain his point and then get on with our business. If the hon. member is not satisfied he should follow through with a motion. Otherwise we must follow the regular routine.

Mr. Webb: I just want to put before the house, sir—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure there are other ways of doing that. For example, there will be the estimates of the Postmaster General.

LABOUR RELATIONS

APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEES—TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL AND LETTER FROM MINISTER

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in compliance with a request made by the Leader of the Opposition on Friday I should like to table copies of the order in council appointing the board of trustees and also copy of a letter which I sent to Mr. Banks dated October 23. I regret that I stated incorrectly on Friday it had been sent on October 22. This was an inadvertent statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not hear what the inadvertence was.

Mr. MacEachen: It was an inadvertent mistake which I made on Friday, which I wanted to draw to the attention of the house.

NATIONAL PARKS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGE IN ADMINISTRATION OF BRANCH

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an announcement concerning the national parks branch of my department. Because of the ever-expanding increase in the use of our national parks and national historic parks and sites, it has been concluded that a decentralization of administration is necessary. Therefore, instead of all park field units reporting directly to Ottawa, in future each unit will report to a regional headquarters and only the regional offices will report to Ottawa.

There will be three regions, each headed by a regional director. The western region, with headquarters at Calgary, will cover everything west of the Manitoba-Ontario boundary. The central region, with headquarters at Cornwall, will cover Ontario and Quebec; and the Atlantic region, with headquarters at Sydney, will cover the four Atlantic provinces. To give additional strength to the Ottawa head office of the national parks branch, there will be a second assistant director. Similarly, in recognition of the complexity of problems in administering the townsite of Banff, a townsite manager is to be appointed. The townsite manager will be resident in Banff and will report to the general superintendent. This reorganization of the national parks branch will go into operation as soon as the necessary new regional headquarters can be opened and staffed.

The announcement I have just made is all the more significant in view of other information just placed before me today. Attendance at our national parks and sites for the period April 1 to September 30, 1963 has soared to an unprecedented 9,224,788, an increase of 24 per cent over the same period in 1962. This information confirms the popularity and importance of our parks and the need for even more efficient administration and more careful development to ensure their proper use and preservation for present and future generations.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I think the house has listened with interest to the statement by the minister in regard to the re-organization of the parks branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

I would like to point out that the necessity of decentralizing the parks administration has been evident for some time. As the minister will remember, during the early period of the previous administration we made a first move in this direction by putting the western parks under a western supervisor, who tried to bring about some cohesion in over-all field of policy to the western parks, and the extension of this principle to central Canada and the maritimes is good.

I would like to take this opportunity, I think on behalf of most Canadians, to put forward the idea that any effort made by the government to try to establish national parks in the big provinces of Quebec and Ontario will be welcomed by all the people of Canada. These national parks can play a big part in the Canadian parks policy that can only be fully understood as generations follow each other; and if in the future we in Canada have parts of our country in the very conditions they were in at the beginning, they will be a constant reminder of the wonderful pristine wilderness our country was, and how we saved its natural resources.

My second thought in connection with parks policy is to remind the house that formulating it and making it good can only be done most effectively when there is complete co-operation and co-ordination with the provincial governments. They each have their parks policies, and if in the working out of a co-operative program with the provinces they are continually informed they will be able to share in this over-all planning. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in the last government helped in bringing the provinces together to further that policy, and I am glad this statement by the present minister is carrying on the moves made at that time.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we were all very pleased to hear of the increased patronage of the national parks—I am referring to numbers, not other aspects thereof—and of the division of the administration into regions. I have been very interested, as have members of this group, in national parks for many years, because they are a very important part of our national resources, and there is a great need for improvement in their administration, which result largely from changing circumstances and the growing numbers they are required to handle.

I agree with what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said, that there is a need for close co-operation with provincial governments, and also with the public. We must have the understanding, appreciation and co-operation of the public in general if we are to devise a permanent national parks policy that will be satisfactory in preserving the parks for future generations.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, without going into any detail on the effect that this new administrative policy might have regarding our national parks, I would just add my support to the remarks that have already been made, which emphasize the importance of the national parks in our Canadian way of life and the need not only to improve the administration but also to extend the services of national parks. Therefore in so far as the general principles involved in this statement of policy are concerned, we give our support to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, it is with great interest that we learned from the minister that the administration of national parks in Canada is being decentralized.

I should like to point out to the house, however, that even though it was deemed advisable to decentralize the administration of national parks by dividing it into three regions, that is, the maritime provinces, the western provinces and the central provinces comprising the two largest Canadian provinces, namely Ontario and Quebec, the administrative centre for those two provinces is being located in the province of Ontario.

I suggest to the minister that it would have been much more advisable to set up four regions instead, a third one for the province of Ontario and a fourth one for the province of Quebec.

We know that national parks in the various provinces may present different features to tourists. In my opinion, such an aspect should be considered.

May I also suggest that in order to encourage our fellow citizens to visit our national parks, we could try to find some incentive for example: an income tax deduction for expenses incurred by Canadians who spend their holidays in national parks. This would not only allow us to develop national parks in Canada, but would prompt our fellow citizens to take advantage of all their features. It is very fine to have national parks, but we should also give our fellow citizens the opportunity and financial means to visit them and make use of them.

[Text]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. Will the minister say how his statement affects purchasing for the parks? Will orders for materials formerly not purchased locally, about which there has been some criticism, now be placed through the regional office instead of Ottawa?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Bell: The question arises from the statement made today.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): It is the objective of the new arrangement in connection with our parks to facilitate both the making of decisions and purchasing, and to localize these as much as possible.

QUESTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the house that the following questions are being answered today: 1,154, 1,189, 1,242, 1,260, 1,262, 1,304, 1,306, 1,307, 1,329, 1,345, 1,350, 1,353, 1,358, 1361, 1,364, 1,365, 1,376, 1,382, 1,396, 1,397, 1,398, 1,400, 1,405, 1,411, 1,415, 1,419, 1,438, 1,440, 1,453, 1,457 and 1,483.

[Text]

If questions 1,280 and 1,369 could be made orders for returns the returns will be tabled immediately. If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred questions 1,134, 1,315, 1,372, 1,385 and 1,445, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*CONSIDERATION OF WOMEN IN FEDERAL APPOINTMENTS

Question No. 1,134—Mr. Mather:

In the appointments to such bodies as the Atlantic development board, the economic council of Canada, the judiciary, the diplomatic corps and the Senate, is the government giving consideration to naming a due proportion of qualified women for these positions?

Mr. Pearson: The answer to this question is yes.

PETER LEBEL, TORONTO—R.C.M.P. INVESTIGATION

Question No. 1,154—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the R.C.M.P. investigating the whereabouts, occupation, friends, etc., of Mr. Peter Lebel, now a resident of Toronto and, if so, (a) for how long has this surveillance been carried out (b) what is the purpose of such surveillance (c) is the information acquired passed on to anybody outside the department and (d) how long will such surveillance continue?

Mr. Chevrier: It has not been the practice either of this government or its predecessor in office to furnish information of the kind sought by this question.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL SECRETARIAT

Question No. 1,189—Mr. Latulippe:

Is it the government's intention to establish, during the present session, a federal-provincial secretariat and, if so, when and how will it do so; and, if not, for what reasons?

Mr. Pearson: The question of the setting up of appropriate machinery to ensure continuing liaison between the federal and provincial governments will be considered at the federal-provincial conference in November. It is not possible to anticipate at this stage what the decision of the conference will be.

FEDERAL GRANTS TO DISASTER REGIONS

Question No. 1,242—Mr. Laprise:

1. What is the total amount granted by the federal government since 1949 to regions which have been declared victims of a disaster such as drought, tornado, flood or fire?
2. Out of that amount, how much was granted to regions outside Canada?
3. What amount has been granted each year to the different provinces since 1949?
4. What amount has been granted each year since 1949 to regions outside of Canada?

Mr. Benson: 1. $34,991,197.

2. $11,046,729.

PURCHASES BY INDIAN BANDS

Question No. 1,260—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering amending sections 88 and 89 of the Indian Act so that they would permit an Indian band, as an organization, to make purchases of equipment and other material needed for improving the economic status of members of the band?

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Munro: While sections 88 and 89 of the Indian Act are being reviewed for possible amendment, it may be mentioned that where the provisions of section 68 of the act have been applied to a band, the band council from band revenue funds may purchase equipment and other material needed for improving the economic status of the band or its members, provided that an item has been included in the band budget for this specific purpose.

PROVINCIAL CENTENNIAL COMMITTEES

Question No. 1,262—Mr. Southam:

What provinces have organized their 1967 centennial celebration committees under the proposed federal government plan, and what are the names and addresses of the executive officers of each of these provincial committees?

Mr. Lamontagne: Listed are the names of provincial centennial committees provided under provincial legislation and the executive officers in those instances where appointments have now been made.

Province: British Columbia, Canadian confederation centennial committee of British Columbia; Alberta, national centennial committee (Alberta); Saskatchewan, Saskatchewan diamond jubilee and Canadian centennial celebrations committee. Executive director, Mr. Albert G. Watson, 1753 Cornwall street, Regina, Saskatchewan; Manitoba, Manitoba centennial corporation; Ontario, centennial committee; Quebec, provincial secretary's department; New Brunswick, confederation centenary celebration committee; Nova Scotia, confederation centenary celebration committee. Chairman and chief executive officer, Mrs. Abby Lane, 61 Cambridge street, Halifax, N.S.; Prince Edward Island, Prince Edward Island centennial committee, Inc. Manager—Mr. William Hayward, Charlottetown, P.E.I.; Newfoundland, national centennial committee.

BILINGUALISM AMONG C.N.R. EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,304—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the C.N.R. developed a policy to encourage bilingualism among its employees and, if so, is this policy reflected in advertisements for new employees?

2. On October 8, 1963, did the C.N.R. advertise in the Montreal Gazette, page 34, for young men between 16 and 18 years of age and, if so, was there any mention of bilingualism as a necessity or an advantage?

Answer: 1. and 2. The memorandum relating to bilingualism in Canadian National, tabled in the house on October 4, indicates the company's policy and progress being made in this regard. Advertisements for new employees refer to bilingualism when the job requirement is that the employee speak both French and English.

EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM, TORONTO

Question No. 1,306—Mr. Scott:

Has the government given consideration to the request of the city of Toronto to have the winter works program extended from October to May and, if so, what has been the government's response to such request?

Mr. MacEachen: Consideration has been given to a number of representations, including a request from the city of Toronto, regarding the effective period of the winter works program, but it is not the intention to extend the period beyond the six months commencing November 1 and ending April 30.

CANADIAN ARSENALS PLANT, SCARBOROUGH TOWNSHIP

Question No. 1,307—Mr. Scott:

1. Briefly, what is the nature of the products being produced by the crown owned Canadian Arsenals plant on Warden avenue in the township of Scarborough?

2. How many persons were employed there in the years 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963?

3. What lines of production are being abandoned, and what specific products are being discontinued.

4. In detail, what efforts are being made to find alternate domestic and/or foreign markets for the lines being discontinued?

5. Is any "on the job training" being contemplated to fit the workers being released for other gainful employment?

6. What are the guide lines for deciding who will be let go, and who will be retained?

Mr. Drury: 1. Some types of military electronic, optical and fire control equipment.

2. The average number of employees at this division for the fiscal years requested is as follows: 1959, 272; 1960, 277; 1961, 300; 1962, 290; 1963, 252.

3. Those production facilities and military products involved in (1) above.

4. Such lines are military in nature and are not marketable in terms of commercial product line. The market depends upon the requirements of the armed services in Canada and abroad.

5. The personnel are highly qualified in their own particular fields and therefore no on the job training is being contemplated.

6. The factors that will be considered in reducing staff are ability, qualifications and length of service.

*USE OF "AIR CANADA" BY T.C.A.

Question No. 1,315—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

What are the security and control reasons which make it impossible to add the words "Air Canada" on the fuselage of T.C.A. aircraft?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Speaker, both air traffic control and ground control of aircraft movement on airports involve visual identification features at certain times, and both governmental and air line officials are strongly of the opinion that the use of two different names on an aircraft fuselage, particularly in circumstances of congestion and high-density movement, could lead to misunderstanding and confusion on the part of the various personnel involved in giving and receipt of control and movement instructions.

SUSPENSION OF COLD STORAGE ACT

Question No. 1,329—Mr. Howard:

Upon what date, by whom, by what method, by what authority, and for what reason, was assistance under the Cold Storage Act suspended?

Mr. Hays: Assistance grants for the construction of cold storages under the Cold Storage Act were suspended in July, 1962, as an economy measure.

COST OF NORTHERN TRIP BY MINISTER AND OFFICIALS

Question No. 1,345—Mr. Rheaume:

1. What was the total cost to the treasury, including hotel, meals and miscellaneous expenditures, of the recent trip by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and his officials from the time of their Ottawa departure, through the Yukon and Northwest Territories until their return to Ottawa?

2. What was the cost of the chartered DC-3 aircraft employed for the northern part of this trip, including gasoline surcharges and crew expenses?

3. Were tenders called for the charter of this aircraft and, if so, which companies submitted bids, in what amounts, and which bid was accepted?

4. What are the names and functions of each of the persons accompanying the minister on this trip?

Answer: 1. $16,402.61.

2. $13,250.00.

3. Four companies invited to tender. Complete bids received from the two following companies only: Pacific Western Airlines, $13,680 plus additional charges for fuel and oil as specified in the carrier charter tariff by the air transport board; Connelly-Dawson, $13,045 plus additional charges for fuel and oil as specified in the carrier charter tariff by the air transport board, low tender accepted.

4. The names and functions of the people on the tour, which began at Whitehorse are: Mr. E. A. Côté, deputy minister; Mr. J. Austin, executive assistant, joined tour at Fort Smith; Mr. B. G. WAR MEMORIAL, NEPEAN POINT, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,350—Mr. MacRae:

1. Is it the intention of the government to proceed at this time with the construction of a war memorial on Nepean point and if not, for what reason?

2. Has the government received representations from the dominion command of the Royal Canadian Legion regarding this project and, if so, what were the recommendations?

3. When may a final decision be expected?

Answer: 1. The government does not intend to proceed immediately with the implementation of the original plan for the construction of a national shrine of remembrance on Nepean point.

This proposal has been the subject of some public controversy in the press and otherwise. A number of the views expressed have supported it while several have, for various reasons, suggested modifications or alternatives or even the abandonment of the whole project. It seems possible that some of the criticisms of the concept of the shrine have been founded on a lack of appreciation of its principal purpose which is to enable the display, in suitable surroundings, of Canada's Books of Remembrance containing the names of our war dead.

At present, all four of the books are on display in the severely limited space in the world war I memorial chamber in the peace tower. That is, of course, the best place to display the world war I book as the atmosphere of the chamber relates solely to that war. The other three books—those containing the names of the dead of the Nile expedition of 1885 and the South Africa war, and world war II and Korea—were placed temporarily in the chamber so that they might be seen by the Canadian public during the time prior to the completion of a permanent repository. The proposed shrine would enable the display of these three beautifully illuminated books, together with a facsimile of the world war I book, in surroundings comparable to those of the memorial chamber but, of course, in an atmosphere not designed to commemorate one period only.

The realization of this concept of a shrine of remembrance dedicated to the memory of Canada's dead of all wars and containing a record of their names would be a significant expression of national pride in their achievements and sacrifices. The decision to proceed with the construction of such a shrine honouring our war dead is not, however, one that should be taken in an atmosphere of disagreement or controversy.

2. While this government has not received direct representations from the dominion command of the Royal Canadian Legion regarding the proposal to erect a shrine of remembrance on Nepean point in Ottawa, the stand of the Legion in this matter is well known. They were represented on the committee which first recommended the erection of such a shrine. Their continuing strong support of the project was expressed in a recent editorial in their official publication, The Legionary.

3. The government has undertaken a thorough review of the proposal to erect the shrine, including the design of the building itself and the surrounding area. Some time will elapse before this study can be completed and the final decision reached.

PICNIC SITE AND CAMP GROUND CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 1,353—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Will picnic site and camp ground construction be included in the winter works program this year and, if so, what period will it cover?
2. If not, will it be replaced by a recreational parks program?
3. Does the government intend to continue the useful federal provincial parks conference inaugurated last year and, if so, when will the conference be convened?

Answer: 1. The winter works program for national parks in designated areas provides for the extension and development of picnic sites and camp grounds. The program will extend to March 31, 1964.

2. N/A

3. Yes. The second federal-provincial parks conference will be held in Ottawa from November 18 to 22 inclusive.

DIRECTIONAL RADIO BEACON, BLANC SABLON, QUE.

Question No. 1,358—Mr. Ricard:

Have tenders been called for the building of a directional radio beacon at Blanc Sablon, Quebec, and, if so, (a) what are the names of the tenderers (b) what was the amount of each tender submitted (c) what is the name of the tenderer to whom the contract was awarded?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: Yes, (a) and (b).

| Names of tenderers | Amount |
|---|---|
| Nordec Construction Inc. | $23,600 |
| Plessis Construction Ltée. | 25,890 |
| Continental Electrical Contracting Ltd. | 28,650 |

DEFENCE EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,361—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the amount, in dollars, expended in the fiscal years 1960, 1961, and 1962 on national defence?
2. What in 1962 was the approximate percentage of federal expenditures represented by the combined costs of interest payment on the federal debt and on defence outlay?

Mr. Benson: 1.

| Department of National Defence | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1960 | 1961 | 1962 |
| $ | $ | $ |
| Department of Defence Production | | |
| 17,600,214 | 20,435,693 | 23,929,926 |

| $ 1,534,172,668 | $ 1,537,966,276 | $ 1,650,034,438 |

2. 37.62 per cent.

EQUITABLE INCOME TAX FOUNDATION

Question No. 1,364—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Was the Equitable income tax foundation given the right to receive contributions which are deductible for income tax purposes and, if so, on what date was the right granted?
2. What reasons were advanced by this organization to the minister in its request that it be granted such a right?
3. What were the government's reasons for granting such tax exemption status to the Equitable income tax association?
4. Is the Equitable income tax foundation engaging in activities such as proposing that the tax laws be changed in respect to Canadian co-operatives?
5. Is the government reconsidering the tax-exempt status of the Equitable income tax foundation?

Mr. Garland: 1. No.

2. The foundation has been formed as a permanent organization to conduct study, research and investigations on the subject of taxation and its effect on the economy of Canada; to propagate the principles of equitable taxation; to make representations to governmental authorities at all levels regarding tax legislation as may seem desirable as a result of the study, research and investigation carried on by this organization.

3. Not applicable.

4. Yes.

5. No.

CANADIAN ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION

Question No. 1,365—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Was the Canadian economic association given the right to receive contributions which are deductible for tax purposes and, if so on what date was the right granted?
2. What reasons were advanced by this organization to the minister in its request that it be granted such a right?
3. What were the government's reasons for granting such tax exemption status to the Canadian economic association?

Questions

4. What are the principal aims of the Canadian economic association, and do they include participation in political activities?

5. Is the government reconsidering the tax-exempt status of the Canadian economic association?

Mr. Garland: 1. Not aware of this association.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. Not applicable.

5. Not applicable.

*PROBLEMS OF EXCESSIVE DRINKING, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,372—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Have any comprehensive studies been done by the federal government on the social and economic problems resulting from excessive drinking of alcoholic beverages in the N.W.T. and, if so, what studies were done, by whom, and what were the recommendations, if any?

2. Does the government have any program under way to alleviate or combat problems resulting from excessive drinking in the N.W.T. and (a) if so, what are these programs (b) if not, are there any plans to initiate such programs?

Mr. Laing: 1. My department, through the northern co-ordination and research centre, has commissioned studies into the uses of alcoholic beverages in three settlements in the Northwest Territories. These studies are being carried out by Mr. Donald Clairmont, assistant professor of sociology, St. Mary's University, Halifax, N.S. and Dr. John J. Honigmann, professor of anthropology, University of North Carolina. The studies are still in progress, and the only preliminary report received to date contains no recommendations.

In addition the incidence of excessive drinking where this occurs, and special factors which may influence the problem, have been discussed in other sociological reports on northern communities commissioned by the centre.

2. Federal participation in the study of this problem is occasioned by the federal concern for Eskimos. An interdepartmental committee has been at work for some time assembling information on the handling of comparable situations elsewhere in Canada, and assisting in co-ordinating the work of government and private agencies. However, liquor policy is the responsibility of the territorial council and government. As its votes and proceedings show, the council of the Northwest Territories has given extensive and continuing attention to the problem of excessive drinking and to policies to deal with it.

THOMPSON, MAN. RADIO AND TELEVISION STATIONS

Question No. 1,376—Mr. Fisher:

1. Did the B.B.G. turn down an application for a T.V. transmitter for the Thompson area (submitted by a Mr. Metcalfe and based on transmitting C.B.C. programming) because it had approved an A.M. radio station and that the board did not consider that at the time the Thompson market could also support a T.V. station and, if so, when was this decision announced?

2. Has the radio station been constructed or is it in operation?

3. Has the B.B.G. received complaints about the television service situation at Thompson since June 1, 1963 and, if so, from whom, and briefly, to what point?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Yes. The decision was announced on March 21, 1962.

2. No.

3. Since June, 1963, the board has received one letter from Mr. R. I. Robinson of Thompson in which he complains of the program quality and technical standard of the service provided by the closed circuit T.V. station CESM at Thompson.

WHEAT SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL

Question No. 1,382—Mr. Jones:

ERNEST CÔTÉ, NATIONAL MUSEUM

Question No. 1,400—Mr. Fisher:

What responsibility has Ernest Côté had in the past ten years for the national museum, in general and in terms of directives or memoranda or instructions given him?

Answer: Subject to the directives of the minister and, until July 1, 1963, of the deputy minister, he had the general responsibility for the policies affecting the development of the national museum for most of this period.

BENEFITS TO DESIGNATED AREAS IN MANITOBA

Question No. 1,405—Mr. Simpson:

What benefits, if any, will accrue to designated areas (a) in the municipal district of Dauphin (b) in the district normally coming within the administration of the Dauphin branch of the unemployment insurance commission (c) other areas of the province of Manitoba?

Mr. MacEachen: (a) and (b) All municipalities located in the area serviced by the Dauphin local office of the national employment service, which has been designated as an area of high winter unemployment, will be entitled to a federal contribution of 60 per cent of direct payroll costs incurred on approved projects under the municipal winter works incentive program. This area will also qualify in connection with the supplementary federal government winter construction program, which applies to designated development areas and designated areas of high winter unemployment.

(c) The Dauphin local employment office area is the only area in Manitoba which has been designated.

FEED GRAIN BOARD OF EASTERN FARMERS

Question No. 1,411—Mr. Laverdiere:

Is the government considering setting up a feed grain board, to consist of eastern farmers and modelled on the Canadian wheat board and, if so, will that feed grain board have a responsibility of buying and selling feed grain on behalf of eastern farmers, and to provide for adequate storage of feed grain?

Mr. Hays: Representations with respect to a feed grain agency for eastern Canada are being considered by the government.

SPONSORED IMMIGRANTS RECEIVING WELFARE PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,415—Mr. Prittie:

Is it possible, from records maintained by the Department of National Health and Welfare, to determine (a) the number of sponsored immigrants who are in receipt of old age security benefits, disabled persons' allowances and blind persons' allowances at the present time (b) the number of sponsored immigrants who will be eligible for such allowances by the year 1970, and (c) the estimated cost of the allowances to such persons at present and projected to 1970?

Miss LaMarsh: No, the information asked for is not available.

CHIEF ARCHAEOLOGIST, NORTHERN AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,419—Mr. Fisher:

Has the minister of northern affairs under consideration the appointment of a Mr. Taylor to the post of chief archaeologist of Canada and, if so, what are Mr. Taylor's qualifications in detail, including the archaeologists under whom he has worked?

Answer: This question presumably refers to the chief of the archaeology section of the national museum. Appointment to this position is not the responsibility of the minister but of the civil service commission. However, I should advise the hon. member that the civil service commission appointed Mr. W. E. Taylor, Jr., who had been acting chief of the section, as chief, effective July 10, 1963. Mr. Taylor's qualifications follow:

1. Academic background: B.A. (Honours) anthropology, U. of Toronto, 1951, A.M. sociology, U. of Illinois, 1952; graduate fellow, U. of Illinois, 1951-52; graduate fellow, U. of Illinois, 1952-53;; teaching fellow, U. of Illinois, 1953-54; research assistant, U. of Michigan, 1954-55; research assistant, U. of Michigan, 1955-56; post-M.A. student, U. of Illinois, 1952-3, 1953-4, "A" standing; post-M.A. student, U. of Michigan, 1954-5, 1955-6, "A" standing; passed Ph.D. oral and written examinations, May 1956, U. of Michigan; Ph.D. pending submission of dissertation; won but declined graduate fellowships and assistantships at several universities including Chicago, Arizona, Kentucky, Wisconsin, Harvard, and North Carolina.

2. Publications: He has published 28 titles, has one in press, two others ready for submission, and is preparing five others. He is also compiling, editing and contributing to a large volume, "The Archaeology of Canada" to be published by the museum. He has represented the museum and read technical papers at international meetings.

3. Experience: Between 1947 and 1963, he has participated in 25 field projects in Ontario, Quebec, Newfoundland, Illinois, Arizona, Michigan and the Canadian Arctic. In the last named, his area specialization, he has passed 11 field seasons. He has been invited to join archaeological expeditions to Alaska, Greenland, Egypt, Mexico, and Ecuador. He has examined museums in Canada, the U.S.A., Mexico, Scotland, England, France, Belgium, and Denmark, and has served as acting senior archaeologist at intervals since 1960.

4. Teachers: In the field he has worked with J. N. Emerson, U. of Toronto; K. E. Kidd, Royal Ontario Museum; J. C. McGregor, U. of Illinois; H. B. Collins, Smithsonian institute; E. F. Greenman, U. of Michigan; and T. E. Lee, Ottawa.

In universities, he has studied under Emerson, McGregor, Greenman and J. B. Griffin, R. K. Beardsley, A. C. Spaulding at the University of Michigan. Among the other anthropologists he has studied under are J. Steward, O. Lewis, and E. Wolfe at Illinois, L. White, F. Thieme, and E. Service at Michigan, and T. McIlwraith, G. Brown, and E. Carpenter at Toronto.

5. Mr. Taylor is also a: fellow, Arctic institute of North America; fellow, American association for the advancement of science; fellow, society of the sigmaXi; member, Arctic circle; member, society for American archaeology; member, American anthropological association; assistant editor for the journal "Anthropologica"; consulting director, Canadian research center for anthropology.

SKOPJE, YUGOSLAVIA—REQUEST FOR AID

Question No. 1,438—Mr. Matheson:

1. Has the government received any requests for aid to the stricken city of Skopje, if so, from whom, and when?
2. What aid has been advanced thus far?
3. What plans, if any, have been formulated by Canada to contribute to the rebuilding of Skopje?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. Yes. On August 8, 1963 the Yugoslav ambassador to Canada called on me to report the tragic disaster at Skopje and to describe the more immediate needs for which his government was making an international appeal. On August 15 he provided me with preliminary estimates of longer term reconstruction costs.

2. To date some $45,000 has been made available from Canadian sources, of which $10,000 was a grant from public funds.

3. No decision has been taken concerning additional Canadian government assistance.

USE OF LIME TO COMBAT STRONTIUM 90 IN WHEAT

Question No. 1,440—Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

1. Has the Department of Agriculture inaugurated any program to encourage increased lime applications on wheat lands to combat the tenfold increase of strontium 90 in spring wheat reported by the Department of National Health and Welfare in the September issue of "Data from the Radiation Protection Programs"?
2. Has the department inaugurated any similar program with regard to increasing calcium intake of livestock to counteract the uptake of strontium 90 by cattle?

Mr. Hays: 1. 2. No.

The Departments of Agriculture and National Health and Welfare keep closely in touch with each other in such matters. It is felt that the measures mentioned are not required to ensure public safety with the levels of strontium 90 that have been found to date.

*INCREASES IN BREAD PRICES

Question No. 1,445—Mr. Pigeon:

Since this government took office, what have been the increases, if any, in the prices of bread and milk in the cities of Montreal and Toronto?

Mr. Sharp: As measured by the consumer price indexes for Montreal and Toronto respectively, the price of bread increased 2.8 per cent in Montreal and decreased 1.4 per cent in Toronto between May 1963 and September 1963. Over the same period, the price of milk was unchanged in Montreal but increased 0.8 per cent in Toronto.

BEER ADVERTISING ON TELEVISION

Question No. 1,453—Mr. Laprise:

1. Have any consultations been held between the B.B.G. and the Secretary of State in connection with the decision taken by the B.B.G. to increase from 12 to 60 seconds the time allowed on television for advertising by breweries?
2. Were temperance associations requested to present their views on this matter before a decision was taken and, if so, how many, and what associations accepted such an invitation?
3. Is the decision taken by the B.B.G. in this matter irrevocable and final?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. No consultations were held between the Secretary of State and the B.B.G. in connection with the decision by the board to amend the regulations governing the advertising of beer and wine by broadcasting stations. The amendment enacted by the board on August 29, 1963, does not, in fact, increase the time allowed on television for advertising by breweries, but it permits certain changes in the form and technique of such advertising.

2. As required by section 11(2) of the Broadcasting Act, the board published in the Canada Gazette of July 20, 1963, a notice of its intention to amend the regulations governing the advertising of beer and wine by broadcasting stations. Copies of this notice were at the same time provided to the press gallery of the House of Commons and were sent out to those names on the board's general mailing list. The notice confirmed that representations on the proposed amendment would be received by the board at a public hearing on August 27, 1963. Association Lacordaire et Sainte-Jeanne d'Arc du Canada was the only association which advised the board that it wished to present representations at the August 27 public hearing.

3. Under section 11 of the Broadcasting Act, the board is empowered to make or amend regulations. Regulations having been enacted by the board may only be changed or revoked by the board under the authority of section 11 of the act.

SUBSIDIES PAID TO JAMES CULLEN AND SONS, WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,457—Mr. Scott:

1. During the year 1963, has the government or anyone on its behalf conducted an investigation and/or audit of the affairs of James Cullen & Sons, Ltd., of Woodstock, Ontario, relating to the payment of subsidies to the company by the Department of Agriculture?

2. Has such investigation and/or audit disclosed that subsidies have been improperly claimed from the Department of Agriculture?

3. Briefly, what has been the result of the said investigation, and what action has to date been taken by the government in this connection?

Mr. Hays: 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. The amounts improperly claimed have been recovered.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION VICE PRESIDENT

Question No. 1,483—Mr. Langlois:

1. Has the position of vice president on the board of directors of the Farm Credit Corporation, which was vacant in May, 1963, been filled and, if so, by whom?

2. Is this person a Canadian of French or English origin?

Mr. Hays: 1. No. This matter is presently under consideration.

2. Not applicable.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, my question No. 1,335 has been on the order paper for some time. All I wanted to know was how many grain boats were waiting to be loaded during the strike. Surely it does not take that long to count these boats.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

MUNICIPAL WINTER WORKS PROGRAMS, PONTIAC-TEMISCAMINGUE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,280—Mr. Martineau:

1. How many municipalities within the constituency of Pontiac-Temiscamingue instituted a works program under the winter works incentive program during each of the fiscal years 1958-59, 1959-60, 1960-61, 1961-62 and 1962-63?

2. What are, in each case, the names of such municipalities, and what were the costs, in each case, of such works program?

3. How many applications have to date been received by the federal Department of Labour from municipalities located within the constituency of Pontiac-Temiscamingue for participation under the current winter works incentive program?

4. What are, in each case, the estimated costs of such works programs?

Return tabled.

COAL—PRODUCTION, EXPORTS, IMPORTS AND SUBSIDIES

Question No. 1,369—Mr. Martineau:

1. What was the total Canadian production of coal in 1962, showing the quantity for each class of coal produced?

2. What is, for each such class of coal, the estimated Canadian production for 1963?

3. What is the total Canadian export of coal for each such class, for each of the years 1957, 1959, 1960, 1961, and 1962?

4. What is for each class of coal, the total imports into Canada, for each of the years 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, and 1962?

5. What is the estimated total quantity of coal exports for each class of coal for 1963?

6. What is the estimated imports of coal into Canada for each class of coal for the year 1963?

7. What were the total subsidies paid by the Canadian government to coal producers by provinces for the years 1956-57, 1957-58, 1958-59, 1959-60, 1960-61, 1961-62, and 1962-63?

LABOUR RELATIONS

REFUSAL OF U.S. DOCK WORKERS TO LOAD CANADIAN SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is going to report on the widespread refusal of United States dockers to load Canadian ships, as reported in today's Ottawa Journal, which refers to a statement made by Mr. Tanner, vice president of the S.I.U. of North America, that the S.I.U. program of picketing Canadian ships would last indefinitely. I would ask him whether, in face of what is taking place in this connection on the great lakes, a stern note will be sent to the United States government asking for the co-operation of that government in law enforcement, protesting against the flagrant violations of Canadian rights which are taking place.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter has already been taken up with the United States government. It was taken up again this morning, and the state department has been again informed of the views of the government in respect to this matter. I would point out that when the Leader of the Opposition talks—I am not sure whether I am using his exact words—of the widespread holding up of Canadian ships, I believe there are three ships which have been subjected to picketing over the week end. One in Chicago has been in that unhappy position for a good many weeks. One in Superior, Wisconsin, was loading United States barley, and when it was unable to proceed with loading United States barley it moved to Fort William, where it will load 600,000 bushels of Canadian wheat, which I think is an improvement from the Canadian shipping point of view. The third ship which was picketed, I believe in Buffalo, has been cleared and the ship is operating.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The report says that this is going to be continued. I ask the Prime Minister now, has he been in touch with the President in this connection and protested against it?

Mr. Pearson: I have been in touch with the United States government as recently as this morning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not with the President on the "hot line".

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING INTERFERENCE IN UNION AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In the Christian Science Monitor of Saturday, under the byline of Associated Press and Reuters dispatches, there is this statement with reference to the trustees: "The trustees have agreed not to interfere with the union's internal affairs". Is this correct?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not been talking to the trustees at all since last Wednesday night, but I did notice in the week end press that Mr. Justice Dryer stated on his arrival in Vancouver that no arrangements had been made with Banks as a prelude to getting the men back to work, and I think Mr. Millard, the other trustee, specifically dealt with this particular question and said that no commitment had been made with respect to any trusteeship decision, or that no commitment had been made by the trustees not to interfere in the operations of the S.I.U. So I think in this instance we must rely on a Canadian-made statement rather than a Boston-made statement.

BREAD

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that it requires an increase of 30 cents a bushel in the price of wheat to warrant an increase of one cent a pound on a loaf of bread, has the restrictive trades practices branch looked into the recent increase in the price of bread? If so, is there any indication that the milling monopolies across Canada have once again been guilty of price fixing, as they were found to be guilty some time ago?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the director of research in the combines investigation branch is keeping under surveillance the question of prices of bread. He had the matter up for discussion with me prior to his departure for Paris and the United Kingdom, which was a short time ago. At that time he gave no indication to me that there was sufficient evidence before him to warrant a prosecution.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. If the minister's department has not been able to make a full investigation, would he consider referring this matter to the committee on agriculture and colonization for a full study of bread prices as related to flour and wheat prices?

Mr. Chevrier: As the hon. gentleman knows, the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice is under the Combines Investigation Act, and that will be pursued. So far as the other matter is concerned I would have no objection, but it would not be my decision to refer the matter. If that is the wish of the house, I think there are methods whereby that can be done.

Mr. Douglas: Would the minister agree, in view of the ruling today by Mr. Speaker, that any matter referred to the committee must originate with the government? I have not had an answer. Could I ask the Secretary of State as government house leader if the government would be prepared to refer this matter to the committee on agriculture and colonization?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I would not think of committing the government without consulting with my colleagues. I will be very glad to do that and report to the house.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINTER WORKS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Since today is the 28th of October, has the government decided to have the winter works program initiated on October 30 instead of November 30, as it should normally be, in order to help underdeveloped and depressed areas in Canada?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The Prime Minister recently made a statement in the house on the general policy of the government in this regard and gave reasons why it was felt the present dates selected for the operation of the winter works program would be most effective in creating the maximum number of jobs during the period of high seasonal unemployment.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Does the minister agree that it is urgent to help those depressed areas?

[Text]

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL—PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour?

In connection with the lay-off at the Falconbridge nickel mine, in the Sudbury area, can the minister tell the house whether his department has reached a decision concerning the proposals made by unions and union members of the Falconbridge nickel mine?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is a question for the order paper?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which applies not only to what took place today but to what has taken place on many other occasions.

Whenever a member of the house puts a question in French to an English speaking minister, the minister listens to the simultaneous translation and only gets the point a few seconds after the question has been asked. That happens every time and explains the apparent hesitation on the minister's part when he starts to get up, but you lose no time ruling the question out of order.

That is my question of privilege. When a question is put to him in French, we should allow an English speaking minister a few extra seconds to hear the question in full instead of always thinking he does not wish to answer. I feel it would be wise to wait a few seconds to make sure the minister has heard the question in its entirety. A case in point is what happened a few moments ago when the hon. member for Villeneuve asked his question.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have listened very carefully in French and English, and I am capable of listening in French and in English, to the hon. member for Lapointe. The question asked by the hon. member for Villeneuve was out of order, at least should have been put on the order paper, because the information he expected to get from the minister was not such that a minister could, on the spur of the moment, be expected to give to the house. I did not need to wait for the minister to make up his mind, because the question itself was faulty.

Mr. Caouette: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the minister was just going to rise to answer my question.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SPRUCEDALE, ONT.—APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Were two veterans by-passed in favour of a non-veteran in appointing a postmaster at Sprucedale, Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member would prefer to put that question on the order paper.

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question based on the disturbing information given by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac when he spoke on a question of privilege earlier today. Does the minister not think it is about time the estimates of his department were referred to the standing committee for close examination?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): It is not the question of the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac that is disturbing to the hon. member. It is the answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

LIST OF CONSULTANTS—NAMES OF CANDIDATES NOT FILING EXPENSE RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. My question relates to a current matter, but it is based on a question of privilege which I raised on November 30 of last year, when the previous government was in power. My point of privilege was that it did not seem to me to be appropriate that persons who had violated the law should be appointed to certain positions. I referred to defeated candidates who had failed to file their expense returns. The Secretary of State supported my point of privilege and felt that these people, like other citizens, should obey the law.

In view of that fact I wonder if the Secretary of State would call to the attention of his colleague, the Postmaster General, sessional paper No. 1B, which the Secretary of State tabled on October 1, 1963, and which lists a number of people who failed to comply with the law by not filing their return. Because a number of these people are on the Postmaster General's list of consultants, would he not suggest they should be excluded from that list?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I think the hearing of the Postmaster General is just as good as mine.

Mr. Knowles: Why do we get this difference in attitude on the part of the Secretary of State when he is on that side of the house as compared with when he was on this side of the house?

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO CHARGES OF PATRONAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the various charges relating to the unusual patronage in the Post Office Department, will he look into the matter and inform the house whether there is such a policy of Liberal preference over a veteran's preference?

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe that question is in order. If the hon. member wishes to make a charge he should make it and not put a question in that form.

Mr. Aiken: On the point you have raised, Mr. Speaker, we have spent a good deal of time on questions of the Postmaster General, and if these charges are well founded surely the Prime Minister could clear it up. If they are unfounded, then he could tell us that there is no such patronage in the Post Office Department.

INDUSTRY

TRENTON, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ORDER FOR RAILWAY CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the extreme urgency and importance of this matter to my constituents and to the whole area, may I ask the hon. gentleman whether he has received a communication from the annual clergy conference of the diocese of Antigonish held at East Bay, Cape Breton, requesting a railway car order for the Eastern Car plant at Trenton, Nova Scotia? If so, will the minister advise the house what action the government will take on this pressing matter.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I do not recall receiving any such communication, but I will check and let the hon. member know.

NOVA SCOTIA—ESTABLISHMENT OF HEAVY WATER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Minister of Labour or the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour received an urgent communication from a congress of the clergy of the diocese of Antigonish in reference to the location of a heavy water plant in Cape Breton?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that. I have received a good many communications on this matter, but I am not sure whether this is among them.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REVIEW OF SECURITY PROCEDURES—INQUIRY AS TO RETROACTIVITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Did the statement he made on Friday night with regard to security procedures apply to members of the armed forces as well as to those employed in government departments? If so, can people who have already been the subject of adverse decisions now ask for a review of their cases under the new regulations? I am thinking of the Petersen case.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The statement did apply to members of the armed forces, but it is my view that it would be undesirable to make this procedure retroactive. The cases which have been decided under the procedure which applied when the decisions were taken should be regarded as closed. To go back and reopen any particular case would involve, surely, the risk of having to reopen them all, and the situation in this respect might become altogether impossible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaïmo-Cowichan-The Islands): Did not the government actually reopen a case not very long ago concerning a man in the armed forces, the case of Gordon Knott?

Mr. Pearson: That is right, but I am being asked whether we would make the new procedure retroactive to cover all cases in the past, and I think that would be undesirable.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the Prime Minister if the new procedures have been embodied in written regulations or in written form. If so, will they be made available to the house?

Mr. Pearson: They will be embodied in written regulations and in written form. I will be glad to look into the question of whether they could be made available to the house, but I would point out that it would be undesirable to make these regulations at the present time. We are having a debate on the subject, and some good suggestions were made the other night. I do not think we should put these regulations into written form until the debate is concluded.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

REPORTED INTENTION TO MOVE FROM OTTAWA TO HULL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

In view of the contradictory reports concerning the future location of the royal mint, could the minister inform the house of the government's intentions in that respect?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I read an article in Saturday's newspaper which confirmed what everybody knows, that is that the hon. member for Hull looks most actively after the interests of his riding.

However, I must say that no decision has been made concerning the possible relocation of the royal mint and that no new site has been chosen in case it were moved.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the reference made by the minister with respect to the hon. member for Hull, could he tell us if there are grounds for his remarks on this matter?

Mr. Deschatelets: Would you kindly repeat the last part of your question?

Mr. Martineau: I would like to know whether the remarks made by the hon. member for Hull are founded.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, if the remarks made by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue are meant to find out how I might feel about such a project, I must tell him that I am always favourably inclined towards any project that would benefit the city of Hull.

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Can he tell the house if he intends to reach a decision about that matter soon, so that one may know if the mayor of Ottawa has more influence than the hon. member for Hull?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, that decision will have to be taken by the government, and the house will be told about it in due course.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Public Works suggesting that the hon. member for Hull is making irresponsible statements in the press to the effect that the mint would be moved to Hull?

[Text]

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXTENSION OF SALARY INCREASES TO RECENTLY RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the gross injustice felt by those affected, will the government reconsider its decision not to grant retroactive pay increases to federal civil servants who were on strength after the effective date of such increases but who had retired before they were announced?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): This question has been raised on a number of occasions, and I have nothing further to add on the subject.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. gentleman and the government reconsider this matter before we reach the point where we have to approve of the government's decision by voting for a certain dollar item in the estimates?

GLASSCO COMMISSION—IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the President of the Privy Council a question. In view of the very widespread interest in the matter, would the minister make a statement this week as to the government's intentions with regard to the recommendations contained in the Glassco commission report?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I could probably be ready to make a statement on this matter very soon, but first I would want to have a word with the leader of the house.

Mr. Scott: Can the minister indicate when we can expect this important statement?

Mr. Lamontagne: I may give an answer to the hon. member tomorrow.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.—INQUIRY AS TO CLOSING OF STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise me whether he has received a telegram from the Charlottetown and district labour council regarding the possible closing of the R.C.A.F. station at Summerside, and whether he has been able to give this important body an assurance regarding the matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I have received a telegram and I am surprised that this body, or the hon. gentleman, would even think I would think of doing such a thing.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Perhaps the minister would give us his comments with regard to these suggestions that the R.C.A.F. station at Summerside is to be closed.

Mr. Hellyer: I shall be glad to tell the hon. member tomorrow.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ANIMALS USED IN SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he recently received a brief entitled "The protection of animals used in scientific research". If so, would the hon. gentleman tell us what action, if any, is contemplated?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Notwithstanding the urgency of this question and, I must say, the importance which attaches to it, the reply I have to make is that I did receive a copy of this brief. I referred it to my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, because it is her department which would be concerned with taking any initiative in this matter. At that time I explained my position to those who had sent me the brief, and suggested that they direct any further submissions they might have to make to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Webster: A supplementary question. Could the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell us what she is doing about this matter?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR COPY OF ADDRESS BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

In view of the importance of the occasion, the influence of the speaker and the incalescence of his subject, would the minister provide members of the house, for their illumination, with a copy of his address at the 18th annual meeting of the Saskatchewan river development association on November 1 at Moose Jaw, after delivery?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would put that question on the order paper.

HAINES ROAD—NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, as found on page 3948 of Hansard of October 24 I asked a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or his parliamentary secretary. Unfortunately they were away at the time I asked the question and the acting minister, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, indicated that he would try to give me an answer.

The question had to do with the completion of negotiations between the United States authorities and the Canadian authorities with respect to the maintenance of the Haines cut-off. Can the minister tell me whether those negotiations have yet been completed and, if so, what are the results?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think this question was answered in part last Friday by the Minister of National Defence. Negotiations are still in progress. As my hon. friend knows, a number of bodies are interested because they can see the advantage of keeping the road open and as far as possible we want to have them all participate. We expect to make an announcement shortly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nielsen: The reply of the Minister of National Defence to my question concerned only the Alaska highway, not the Haines cut-off. In the absence of a clearcut answer with respect to these negotiations, can the minister assure the house that only Canadian workmen will be employed on the maintenance of this road?

Mr. Laing: As my hon. friend might have suspected, this is the end to which we are working.

TRADE

POTATOES—STEPS TO PROVIDE EXPORT MARKETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Mullally (Kings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the large potato production in the maritime provinces and the very depressed market price prevailing at the present time, I wonder whether the minister could advise what action his department is taking to provide an export market for potatoes.

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a question of some urgency. Perhaps hon. gentlemen do not think markets for potatoes are important, but I do.

Mr. Nowlan: When did you grow a potato?

Mr. Sharp: My officials are in contact with the potato producers and shippers in the maritime provinces and are well aware of the present need for export markets. They are exploring every possible opportunity for sales to traditional as well as new markets, and any prospects will be reported to the trade as soon as they arise.

WHEAT—COMMODITIES TO BE TAKEN FROM RUSSIA IN EXCHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Megantic addressed a question to the Minister of Agriculture which properly should have been addressed to me. I should like to answer it now. The question was whether or not Canada received any commodities, apart from cash in connection with the wheat transaction with Russia, and if so, what were those products? The answer is that all the shipments that have been made from Canada to the Soviet union have been paid for in cash. There are no barter arrangements in the agreement.

[Mr. Laing.]

GRAIN

ALBERTA—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has just been dealing with the marketing of potatoes. Has he had a complaint from the Alberta wheat pool and farm organizations that some of the points in Alberta have not even had a one bushel quota? In answering a question by the Leader of the Opposition last week he said—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: —that quotas would be increased by two or three bushels in Saskatchewan. Has he had any complaint from the Alberta wheat pool and, if so, is it being investigated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I personally have not seen the complaint but I shall certainly look up the files and see if it exists. I can assure the hon. member that we are trying to increase quotas as rapidly as possible.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of a statement made by the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that obviously a group under the leadership of the hon. member for Red Deer would at all costs support the Liberal government?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I study all statements of the right hon. gentleman very carefully.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I wonder if the Prime Minister can say if changes in the ministry are imminent?

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN STORAGE IN EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture for eastern Canada, the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane. Can the minister tell the house whether the government has initiated proceedings, or studies, in order to give eastern Canada elevators for feed grain? If such were the case, could the minister tell us how far those investigations and studies have progressed?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, officials of the Department of Agriculture are constantly reviewing the needs of eastern Canada in matters of feed grain, and whatever measure the government will be taking will be announced by the Minister of Agriculture.

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF COLD STORAGE SUBVENTION

On the orders of the day:

[Text]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I could direct a question to the Prime Minister. Earlier today I received a reply to a written question indicating that the subsidies under the Cold Storage Act were suspended in July, 1962 because of the austerity program then in effect. Is it the intention of this government to reinstitute those subventions under the Cold Storage Act, especially as they apply to fisheries products?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into the matter. I am sorry the minister is not here, but he is laid up with the flu.

SHIPPING

REMOVAL OF WRECK FROM ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport of which I gave him notice. Does his department intend to pay the costs of refloating the Tritonica wreck which may impede winter navigation on the St. Lawrence?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the notice of the question is somewhat different from what I heard. I take it the hon. member was inquiring about the removal of the Tritonica, not who would pay the cost. Responsibility for removal lies with the owner, managing owner, master or person in charge of the vessel at the time of the wreck. The owners and their agents and also the owners of the Roonagh Head were notified by letter of July 25 that the wreck was considered a menace to navigation and must be removed. In their reply of July 29 the owners of the Tritonica advised that tenders for the removal were due on August 3.

No contract has been awarded to date due to disagreement on the extent of the removal to be undertaken. The Department of Transport requests that the vessel be completely removed, and so far the owner has not signified acceptance of this. If the owner fails to complete arrangements for removal as required by the department within a reasonable time, the federal government will call tenders and see that the work is done.

An attempt is being made to have the removal take place at the earliest possible date. However, in view of some questions asked the other day on this point perhaps I should add that it is probable that the removal cannot be undertaken until spring, due to the lateness of the season and the prevalence of heavy fields of floating ice during the winter months.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTHERN RHODESIA—RESOLUTION RESPECTING ARMS SHIPMENTS BY GREAT BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did the Canadian delegation abstain on the vote which was taken at the United Nations requesting Great Britain to stop all shipments of arms to Southern Rhodesia until that country has a representative government? If the Canadian delegation did abstain, did they do so on the instructions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answering my hon. friend I would say that the action taken by the Canadian delegation, which of course was on instructions from the government, was predicated on the fact that the British government is engaged in difficult and complicated negotiations to bring about the dissolution of the federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland by December 31. It has been the policy of the government and of the preceding government not to support proposals advanced at the United Nations which will impede these negotiations.

The Canadian government is concerned that the political future of Southern Rhodesia after the dissolution of the federation should be decided by negotiation and agreement between the African and the white population. The government is aware of the fact that the British government is exerting its influence in that direction. The Canadian delegation abstained on the resolution in question which passed in the committee on October 18. The resolution criticized the United Kingdom and urged the imposition of a solution in Southern Rhodesia.

This is a complicated matter. The course taken by the Canadian delegation was a responsible one.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Is the minister implying that all other governments which voted for the resolution took an irresponsible attitude?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend knows that my reply obviously does not reflect on the action taken by any government. But my hon. friend may be sure that the Canadian government, after assessment of its commonwealth position and in its anxiety to see all groups treated alike, believes that this is the responsible attitude to take at this time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in no way disagreeing with the hon. gentleman's final statement may I ask, so the record will be complete, that he place before the house the names of the nations which were the sponsors of the resolution in question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will be glad to do that.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—ASSAULT OF INMATE BY GUARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he is now in a position to inform the house of the results of the investigation by the commissioner of penitentiaries into the attack by guards on an inmate of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary days after a riot took place, such investigation having been most strongly recommended by a judge of the Quebec courts.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I came into the house during the last week with a statement covering that matter. It is a lengthy statement, and it would be much too long for me to read. However, if I have the permission of the house I can bring it in tomorrow and, with unanimous consent, table it. It is an answer to the statements which were made before the courts in Montreal. I take it my hon. friend is referring to the Gunn case?

Mr. Winch: Yes. It will be brought in tomorrow and filed?

Mr. Chevrier: If there is unanimous consent I will have it ready for tabling tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISCONTINUANCE OF COMMUTER ALLOWANCE AT MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on October 23, as recorded on page 3922 of Hansard, I directed a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence in relation to the discontinuance of the commuter allowance at the Point Edward naval base. Is the minister in a position today to confirm this, or are these employees in fact receiving a cut in wages by this government.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that as of November 1 the commuting allowance will be discontinued at the Point Edward naval base in order to keep our practices in accord with those prevailing in industry. So far as any cut in wages is concerned, of course, this is not a question of wages. I understand that the Department of Labour revises the wage rates in these bases periodically.

SUPPLY

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

ABANDONMENT OF DEFENCE PROJECTS AND INSTALLATIONS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate today because of a situation prevailing in Canada that has engaged the attention of everybody and needs to be examined here in this house of parliament. I hope to open up discussion of a subject which will create a lively interest amongst all members of this chamber.

We have, as Canadians with some national pride, been disturbed about Canada's prestige abroad. It has reached an all-time low. When we read in foreign newspapers that the present government is a rudderless mess, we think it is time that parliament had a look at the situation. It is a regrettable circumstance indeed when people abroad are looking at Canada, finding fault with Canada and expressing their opinion in the printed word that the government of this country is unsuitable to carry on the work that we expect the government of Canada to do. It is a very serious matter indeed.

The prestige of the government at home is another matter of very serious concern. There is no question about the widespread discontent across Canada with regard to this government. Almost every newspaper in Canada now is making comment which is far from complimentary to the government. I do not intend to read these newspaper comments, not even the one which was in the Toronto Star on Saturday last; but when a paper as close to the Liberal party as the Toronto Star has to take action of that sort, then every Canadian must re-examine the position of this government.

Let us not overlook the fact that only a few days ago one of the most serious charges I have ever heard in my time in this chamber was levelled against people on the treasury benches, to the extent that one of the senior members of the house, the hon. member for Kootenay West, said that when we can no longer respect the word of a member of the cabinet democracy in this country is on the down grade. This is indeed a very serious matter, and we have heard question after question put in this house to which evasive answers have been given, and to which a few misleading answers have been given.

Members of the house have been rising on questions of privilege to draw attention to these misleading statements. Only today we listened to a question of privilege respecting a misleading statement by the Postmaster General, disclosing an attitude toward the veterans of this country which does not redound to the credit of the government.

When one enters upon a subject such as this it is rather difficult to select a specific area on which to dwell, because the areas of indecision, hesitation and spinelessness are so many. Which department should one deal with? Is it the Department of Finance? Could anybody stand another rehearsal of the ineptitude and mistakes of that department? What about the Department of National Health and Welfare? Do we want to have a look at that? The department of the Postmaster General is gradually disclosing itself as one of the least well administered departments of the government, and the Department of Agriculture is being served by a minister in absentia, so it is very difficult to get any conclusive answers with regard to the problems that confront agriculture.

The Department of National Defence looks like a suitable area to which to draw a little attention, the department whose motto now reads "Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow". This is the department from which we were to get decisions, but six months have gone by, 190 days—that is three times 60 days plus 10—full of indecision and inability to cope with the problems, and the hopes of the people of Canada have been frustrated.

Abandonment of Defence Projects

Back in March the Prime Minister wrote a letter to Canadian servicemen to bring them up to date prior to the election. I quote from the Winnipeg Tribune of March 26 what he said in his letter:

> Efficient and stable government at home is a first requirement.

I think it is. This is what we want, but it is not what we have been getting. He also said:

> We must regain it to rebuild confidence to bring about sound administration of the nation's business, to end deficits and promote steady economic expansion with full employment.

Then he went on to say:

> The Liberal party will take decisive action to meet these goals. It has no illusion that the task will be easy.

It has fewer illusions now.

> It means hard work for all of us.

Are these the men who were going to do the hard work and make the decisions? Then he ends by saying:

> The time has come for action and decision with a new Liberal government.

Now 190 days have gone by, and where is the action and the decision? Well, the Prime Minister made some impression on some people in the country, and the Ottawa Citizen on March 27 dealt with this on the question of defence:

> There is not the slightest doubt now about how a new Liberal government will proceed on the tangled and emotionally charged question of defence. As soon as parliament meets—and that will be on May 16—a Pearson government "will act vigorously, decisively and responsibly" to end the defence muddle.

Then it went on to say:

> It will refer the long range question of Canada's defence role to an all party defence committee of the Commons.

Those were bold words forecasting decisive action, but 190 days have gone by and the decisive action by the minister of defence and his department has been the scuttling of the Royal Canadian Navy.

What other decisions have we had in this 190 days? Let me give some examples of what has been going on. Going back to July 2 there was a report in the Winnipeg Tribune headed "Ottawa won't wait for defence views."

> Defence minister Paul Hellyer said today the government intends to make a decision on the navy's $300 million shipbuilding program without awaiting the views of the Commons defence committee. He said the review of the eight ship program would be carried on and the decision would be made within a few weeks.

We had been led to believe that we would be able to play some part in helping the government make the decisions, but on July 3 the hon. member for Victoria, who I am sure will want to participate in this debate, was reported in the Montreal Gazette as follows:

David Groos (L-Victoria) said yesterday in the Commons defence committee that the government seems to be making decisions on equipment procurement programs before deciding what defence policy will be.

Further on the article said this:

Mr. Lloyd (L-Halifax) said the committee apparently would not have a chance to look at the program before the government decided to cancel or go ahead with it.

I hope that hon. member will give us his views in this debate. We were led to believe the defence committee would be permitted to assist the government by discussing in advance questions of policy, and getting statements from the minister with regard to his proposed policy, so the committee would have the opportunity of making recommendations to him. But on July 5, somewhat disturbed by some of the things that were going on, the hon. member for Edmonton West asked the Minister of National Defence this question with regard to the frigate program, as recorded at page 1868 of Hansard for that date:

Will the decision of the government await also the recommendation of the defence committee?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have no control over the defence committee. I have no idea how long their deliberations will take, nor when they will be in a position to advise the government. I do have, under our constitution, the responsibility for making a recommendation to the government, and I will do that at the proper time.

I then asked him:

Will the Minister of National Defence refer this problem to the special committee on defence for their recommendation?

And the minister replied:

No, Mr. Speaker—

It makes it a bit awkward for a committee on defence to advise a government under circumstances such as those. However, calling back to my mind the statements of the Prime Minister early in the session that this committee was to review defence policy and make recommendations to the minister, I persisted in my questioning, and on October 1 I asked the minister of defence would he refer to the special committee on defence certain proposed changes in defence policy which he had referred to in a speech outside this chamber.

He was very evasive and said:

Mr. Speaker, no doubt the committee will wish to consider all these problems and I will be most happy if it does so.

I was not satisfied with that answer and asked him again:

[Mr. Churchill.]

May I ask the minister again, will the committee have an opportunity before he makes his decision to inquire into and give him advice with regard to proposed changes in policy?

His reply was:

I am not a member of the committee, Mr. Speaker. I cannot really control how fast it acts. If it acts with dispatch I have no doubt it will be able to consider some of these problems before the decision is made. If it is tardy in its deliberations it may not be able to do so.

We are not told when the minister is going to make these statements or disclose them in advance to the press. He is not putting before the defence committee the subject matter that we should like to discuss with him. But what is one to do about it. I have pressed him on a number of matters. On October 22, page 3857 of Hansard, I asked him:

—is it the intention of the government to purchase United States armoured personnel carriers rather than the Canadian produced type?

The Minister of National Defence answered:

Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken in this matter yet. When it is it will be announced in the usual way.

I submit the announcement "in the usual way" is to leak information to the press. We read about it in the press, and do not hear about these matters in the House of Commons. I made the mistake the other day of thanking the minister for announcing in the House of Commons the proposed reduction of the frigate program, because I found it was all in the press several days before. This is an affront to parliament. Away back on July 6 the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) warned that the elimination of the frigate program would be a disastrous blow to employment in Canadian shipyards. This is reported in the Montreal Gazette of that date. Both the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and myself asked the minister whether he would refer the matter to the defence committee for its recommendation or await such a recommendation. The minister declined. He said that the views of the defence committee would, however, be taken into consideration along with representations from other sources. But this is after the fact, after he has taken his action, and not before. Every newspaper I have picked up recently has some story about national defence, some story based on statements which the minister has made outside the house or some statement from informed sources and so we have to watch very closely to see what he is doing. We cannot depend on him to inform the house or pass the word on to the committee. Away back on September 4, according to the Winnipeg Tribune, which quoted a Canadian Press dispatch, the minister indicated that he would cancel the frigate construction program initiated by the former government. On September 17 the Quebec Chronicle took a look at the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin), and I think he should be given more prominence instead of being in the shadow of the Minister of National Defence. When the associate minister took office back in April he stated that his position was co-ordinated with that of the Minister of National Defence on an equal basis, that he should not be kept in the shadows. The Quebec Chronicle of September 17, under heading: "Government dodging clear stand on naval building issue", had this to say:

> One would have thought that the cue given by Mr. Lowery—

—who was speaking at the meeting which was attended by the associate defence minister—

> —the associate defence minister would have had an excellent opportunity to say something ex cathedra on the subject. He is presumably not a little cog in the government machinery, but a real big wheel. As associate minister he is obviously intimately aware of government policy on the subject—if, in fact, there is any policy.
> Did Mr. Cardin rise to the occasion and make a clear statement? Not at all. Mr. Cardin waffled. He gave his listeners a history of the Qu'Appelle——and he failed to give any indication as to what his program was. I think the Minister of National Defence should permit the associate minister to leak some of this information out to the press from his office, as is obviously happening.

On October 1 the Winnipeg Tribune quotes Southam news service as follows:

> Defence minister Paul Hellyer practically admitted Monday that the R.C.A.F. decision, now reversed, to use Penhold as a jet training base was made without all the facts in hand.

I am not going to deal with that particular area of decision and indecision, advance and retreat; I will leave that to others to discuss.

On October 12 the Ottawa Journal carried the heading: "Mr. Hellyer whittles". He is sitting in a corner somewhere, whittling away with a jackknife. This article says:

> The R.C.N. sees old veterans of the destroyer fleet going into retirement with no decision made on whether there will be new all-purpose frigates or a clutch of submarines to keep the navy up to date in years to come. There is uncertainty about the future of the Bobcat armoured personnel carrier for the army now under development. The R.C.A.F. is concerned that only 25 per cent of its budget is available to buy equipment which is more complex and more expensive.
> Mr. Hellyer has a responsibility to eliminate useless expenditures but he also has a duty to maintain efficient defence services for the protection of Canada and to keep faith with our allies.

And so it goes—decisions announced by way of the press, and failure to let us have a go at these things in the committee which was set up for that specific purpose, in accordance with the instructions that this house received from the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson).

On October 9 the Ottawa Citizen reports the following, and the question here was with regard to the naval program. I had asked him a question and the newspaper reports this. The defence minister said:

> I hope to reach a decision very soon—

I had asked whether the minister wanted a recommendation from the committee, and the minister said he did not think this would be necessary, although of course the committee had the right to do so. Well, Mr. Speaker, what can you do with a minister like this, who is advancing a program piecemeal through the press and not through parliament, or with the assistance of the defence committee?

On October 16 the Winnipeg Tribune quoted a Canadian Press report as follows:

> The government plans to switch half the R.C.A.F. strike force to low level jet bombers in Europe to a non-nuclear role, informed sources say.

When I asked the Minister of National Defence whether something like that might be done he brushed me aside. Away back on May 30 I said the CF-104 Starfighter might be modified. I asked him whether he was aware that the Starfighter aeroplane with appropriate modifications could use a conventional bomb instead of a nuclear weapon and he gave me a profound answer from high Olympus. He started off by saying that I knew nothing about it, but that is the normal answer I get from the minister. Then he said, as reported at page 486 of Hansard:

> It is not a good all-purpose, general weapons platform, and the particular configuration purchased by this government was designed in such a way that it is virtually useless for anything except the role that was undertaken by the previous government; and the modifications which could make it useful for some other purpose are so considerable, and the effectiveness that it would have under those circumstances would be so low, that no military adviser would ever recommend it to any government, I can assure you.

Now an informed source says that the government is planning to switch out of low level jet bombers to a non-nuclear role, which means that it will have to be modified in order to carry a non-nuclear weapon. We have seen, and are seeing, massive confusion in the Department of National Defence, and along with the other departments I have mentioned this department is creating confusion in the minds of the public and is contributing to the lowered prestige of the present government. Three times 60 days for decision, with 10 days extra, and the government have created the impression in the minds of the people abroad and in the minds of the people at home that they are the most ineffective government which Canada has seen since confederation.

The most recent announcement made by the minister with regard to the frigate program constituted a shattering blow to the senior service in Canada, a service which has a remarkable record both in war and in peace. Yet this shattering blow was dealt to the Royal Canadian Navy without any suggestion of an alternative being put forward so that the service could keep going. Now we find all the men in the Royal Canadian Navy considering, and rightly, that this government is washing its hands of the service and intends to scuttle it. Everyone in the navy knows that the present ships are rapidly becoming obsolete and that new ones need to be provided. I expect most members of this house know that a shipbuilding program cannot be completed in one year or in two years—it has to be a continuous process lasting over a number of years and a start has to be made immediately, before present vessels go out of service. The pride of Canada, the Canadian navy, has been shattered by the Minister of National Defence, working in accordance with the plans of the Prime Minister and the government to reduce the effectiveness of our armed forces.

The effect of the blow which is being struck at the morale of the navy will be hard to calculate. As anyone who has had experience of the services knows, morale is a factor of the highest importance. If morale is high, people can sometimes manage with equipment which is not the best; but if morale is damaged the whole organization suffers. I think it was a terrible thing for the minister, acting of course with the approval of the Prime Minister, to announce in the house the cancellation of the program the other day without having consulted the defence committee, without even asking the committee for its advice. A preliminary statement appeared in the press and then an announcement was made in the house in order to satisfy our demands with regard to the authority of parliament. We spend all these hours in the defence committee discussing these very matters, and then we find our feet cut right out from under us. What a waste of time it is. We are discussing whether to put our money into one thing, or into another, and here the minister has decided: "This is it." We might as well disband the committee. When I asked the hon. gentleman if he wanted advice on the frigate program, he said it was not necessary.

What does this committee sit for? This is certainly a derogation of the functions of parliament—a refusal to let us determine some of these issues. Yet that was the purpose for which the committee was set up. Statement after statement was made by the Prime Minister to the effect that the committee was to assist in the solution of this great problem facing Canada, namely what our defence policy should be. We want to assist. We have been attending meeting after meeting. Yet our assistance has been refused by the Minister of National Defence.

I do not intend to discuss the work of the committee in any detail, but if it has served no other purpose it has, in the course of its deliberations, learned the truth with regard to the Arrow program, and this has more than repaid us for all the hours we have spent in that committee. Now we have it clearly set out that in 1957 the government of that day was prepared and determined to cancel the Arrow program, but they deferred taking action because there was an election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Falsified the position completely.

Mr. Churchill: When we tried to find some method of dealing with this problem we were accused of having sabotaged the defence program, of having destroyed the Royal Canadian Air Force and of having ruined the air industry in Canada. Now we know the facts. Now we have the statement by General Foulkes detailing the advice which was given to the former administration in 1957, and the fact that they deferred taking a decision to cancel the program because there was an election coming up and they did not want the people to have the truth.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman let me ask him a question? Has he just told us that a decision had been made in 1957 to cancel the Arrow program but that it took his government until February, 1959, to carry out a decision which had already been made.

Mr. Churchill: We did not look back at the secret conclusions of the cabinet. When we took office in 1957, the prime minister said we would not look back at the conclusions of the earlier administration but follow the well established practice of parliamentary government, by putting aside those conclusions. My right hon. friend said we would make our own decisions and go ahead. But the situation has changed. There has been a great search, in 1963, of the secret deliberations and conclusions of the cabinet of the previous six years in order to find something which has never been found and which cannot be located. How many hours of searching was done by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) or by Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) in an effort to produce the document they hoped to find within those secret records?

One way to destroy the effectiveness of parliament is for an incoming government to act in that way toward an outgoing government. To do so is to break with a tradition established over generations and, regretfully, we have to deplore this action by the present government. Whether or not the government in the early part of 1957 had arrived at a written cabinet conclusion with regard to the cancellation of the Arrow program I do not know, because none of us ever examined those conclusions. However, we have the authority of the chief of staff for saying that this was the advice which was given. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite failed to take action because of the fear of an election. So they saddled the Canadian people with these tremendous expenditures, knowing all the time that the cost of these airplanes had jumped from $2 million to $8 million per copy, and knowing also that the requirement had dropped from 400 planes to 100 planes. They had that knowledge, but they did not want to take action; they did not want to tell the people the truth. They saddled us with the problem and then, throughout 1957 and 1958 they condemned us in the harshest terms for our bold and decisive action with regard to the Arrow program.

Mr. Pickersgill: After 18 months.

Mr. Churchill: I wish I had time to remind the house of some of the words the Minister of National Defence used in those debates—how he condemned that great gentleman who was then the minister of national defence, Mr. George Pearkes, for his actions on that occasion. It is a shocking record which, eventually, we may have to bring forward to show just what the attitude of the present Minister of National Defence was when he was in opposition, and when he was so irresponsible.

I said I hoped the subject I was introducing would develop a lively interest, and I am sure there are members on the other side who would like to take part in this debate. I do not wish to deprive them of the opportunity. In any case, there are many on this side who will have additional information to lay before the house, so I will conclude by moving, seconded by my hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt):

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"This house regrets the widespread confusion, unrest and damage caused by the government's piecemeal pronouncements concerning abandonment of defence projects such as, in particular,

(1) the cancellation of the general purpose frigate program,

(2) the cancellation of the conversion of R.C.A.F. station Penhold for jet training, and

(3) the contemplated abandonment of other defence establishments, and deplores that such steps have been and are being taken without seeking the views of or awaiting recommendations from the special committee on defence."

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, until a few moments ago it was impossible for all hon. members to know what grievance was being raised by the official opposition on this supply motion. As you will understand, sir, it is therefore impossible for us at this time to comment on the subject by the use of direct quotations from newspapers or from the evidence presented thus far to the special committee on defence. However, it does not make a great deal of difference to us that we are not able to do so.

In my opening remarks on behalf of this group may I say I regret very much that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), in presenting something which I would have supposed would have been based on principle, made use of so many "I's". There were so many "I's" that I started to wonder whether he was and is the only member of the defence committee of the House of Commons. He has also seen fit, for reasons best known to himself, to convey what may or may not be the conclusions to be drawn from the evidence which has been presented to the House of Commons committee on defence. However, I do want to say that I agree in part with the hon. member, who has introduced a want of confidence amendment to a supply motion.

It has been my privilege to be a member of two defence committees of the house in the past 10 years. The first one was a special committee on defence that dealt wholly and solely with the estimates of the department which had been referred to the committee by the house. At that time the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) was an opposition member. I can remember questions being asked of the then minister of national defence, Major General Pearkes, and the military authorities day after day in our meetings and we could not get any answers. This question was a matter of policy; that question was a matter of security. I still have a vivid memory of the man who is now Minister of National Defence being aroused and irked that the committee could not get the information it desired.

Today we have another committee of the House of Commons on defence which was set up, not to deal with the estimates but with policy, a committee which was given a great build-up by both the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of National Defence. I find there is no difference in the situation between trying to get information from the present Minister of National Defence and the situation when the present minister was a member of the opposition and he and I were trying to get information on the estimates. It is very strange what happens to members when they cross the floor from one side of the house to the other.

The present special committee of the house was given very great responsibilities. There has been a great deal of criticism of the committee in the press both in reports and editorials, but I do not think the members of that committee should be too concerned about that, as long as they try to do the job for which they were appointed. We have not been allowed to do the job for which we were appointed because over the weeks it has been made clear to us that the Minister of National Defence, in view of his responsibilities in that position and as a member of the government, would make his own decisions. Therefore the committee was basically a window dressing show behind the curtains of which the government would do whatever it jolly well pleased.

This has disturbed a great number of the members of that committee because, first of all, we read in the newspapers leakages as to probable or possible policy and then at the very time we are receiving evidence on certain phases of defence policy an announcement is made by the government as to what the policy is, without the government even having the decency or courtesy to say a word to the special committee on defence.

A few moments ago I criticized the previous speaker for using "I" so much, but may I say that on three occasions in the defence committee meetings I suggested we should give consideration to whether or not the committee should be disbanded, because we were just being used as window dressing or camouflage while the government was proceeding to reach its own decisions as to what it was going to do, anyway.

Irrespective of that, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a major job which can be done by the committee, and that is the laying down of a defence policy over the years and giving some indication of our views in that regard on the basis of the evidence we have had from some very excellent witnesses. It is only because I think we still have a job to do in analysing the past and the present and trying to lay down an over-all picture for the years ahead that I am still prepared to remain a member of the committee.

But I do want to point this out and I do so by way of a challenge, if you like, to the previous speaker because, I did not think he was fair. I believe he spoke from the point of view of Conservative opposition bias, and not as a member of parliament and of the committee of the house which is making an analysis in the interests of Canada to find out what our defence policy should be. There are times, sir, when you must recognize that partisanship is not the right attitude to adopt. Admittedly, it was a serious thing when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) told this House of Commons that the government had reached a decision to eliminate the expenditure of $425 million on the general frigate program. Of course, sir, this announcement hit our shipyards very hard. It hits hard at thousands of our workers in the shipyards.

But, sir, if the members of this House of Commons are motivated by sincerity and honesty, then they must act on the basis of principle. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if you accept the statement made by the vice-admiral who appeared before the defence committee, all the evidence tended to show that the general frigate program would not aid the defence of Canada, would not improve our contribution to NATO or any other alliance and was a useless expenditure of the taxpayers' money. Therefore, anyone who guides himself by principle and not partisanship, by being constructive and not obstructionist, can only agree from the evidence which we have received in our defence committee, that in this respect the government made the right decision. They made it with understanding of the need for maintaining our shipyard industry. It was for this reason they immediately introduced a $110 million program for ship construction for peaceful purposes. I hope the government will also give consideration to our proposal for maintaining our shipyards on a full time basis by rectifying a mistake they made in the past and starting a Canadian merchant marine for use in peacetime and, if it is required, God help us, in time of war.

Our experience on this defence committee has been to some extent most frustrating, but also most interesting. We have heard from such men as Major General Simonds, General Foulkes, the former chief of staff or chairman of the joint chiefs of staff. These men have given us an indication, from their experience and their knowledge, of the part they think Canada could, should or might play with a comprehensive, understandable and reasonable defence policy. They have pointed out in the clearest possible terms that Canada has no part to play as a nuclear power. Both of these men have pointed out emphatically that Canada has nothing to gain, nothing to offer either tactically or strategically, with nuclear weapons. These two men, with their most remarkable experience, say that Canada has an entirely different role to play. Both Major General Simonds and General Foulkes, if you will read the evidence they gave before the committee, say that Canada has spent millions of dollars uselessly on defence which is no defence; that over the years we have lost any idea of defence policy because of the personalities, suspicions, ambitions and jealousies between the three services.

As a result of their experience, both of these gentlemen say that we need a unified command. Will you note this, though, Mr. Speaker? Both of them say you are never going to get a defence policy in Canada that means anything, you are never going to get efficiency in the service, you are never going to get value for your expense dollar until the government has the courage to lay down defence policy and make the brass adhere to it, or get out. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been frustrated in this committee. Yes, we have been heartbroken in this committee. As committee members, we get most of our information from things that have been leaked to the press or from statements the minister makes to the house, without ever having had the courtesy to meet the defence committee and talk them over.

However, Mr. Speaker, despite the frustration and the set-backs, I still think that the evidence we have received thus far, and what we hope to receive in the future of a constructive nature, will make this defence committee pay off, if we are allowed to recommend an over-all policy for the future. I believe, sir, it could be done. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that all members of this house will read the evidence presented to this committee. There are only 24 members of the committee. Perhaps all hon. members can help Canada arrive at a defence policy that, for the first time, means defence; a defence policy that represents a dollar's value for a dollar spent. Perhaps those who become emotional or hysterical about some of these matters should know the words of Major General Simonds, the words of General Foulkes concerning the role they believe, as a result of their experience, Canada should play in the maintenance of peace.

I may say that I do not believe I have missed one meeting of this committee. I feel very proud, and do you know why? Those who are professional soldiers have given evidence indicating that we in this group, who are not professional soldiers, were right and have always been right in our policies for Canada in connection with defence. We have recommended a unified force in being and on call for the United Nations. This should be a highly mobile force. I regret that the mover of this motion had to resort to an attitude of partisan opposition and obstructionism as a basis for his motion instead of considering the best defence policy for Canada. I believe our committee still has a job to do and, given an opportunity, we will do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate, I should like to begin my remarks by reminding the hon. members of this house that the committee was set up to examine and deal with the defence of Canada, something which our movement had been advocating for two years.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the work the committee has done so far and the evidence given are enough to prove that we were right in making our proposal. I am convinced that when the committee submits its reports, which we hope will be before Christmas, it will then bring before the house, the government and the Canadian people the essence of what must be the future defence policy of our country.

I listened with attention to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) violently attacking the government's present defence policy and especially its recent abandonment of the previous government's project of building frigates to strengthen the Canadian navy.

I wonder if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has seen in that step taken by the government some sort of revenge for the abandonment by the Conservatives of the Arrow project in 1957-58. The only difference in those two cases is that vast sums of money were already invested in the Arrow project while we are told that $500,000 have been spent for the frigates.

In the light of all the evidence presented since the beginning of the committee sittings, it is obvious, I think, that the frigate construction program was absolutely useless, because they would be of no use for the purpose for which they were intended.

I am glad that the government decided not to provide more public funds for a project which is definitely doomed to fail.

On the other hand, if the government was ready to spend the sum of approximately $500 million on that single frigate item the cancelling of which our group fully supports —we should like to see that amount spent in another sector, more economically sound for Canada, and in my opinion, in the maritime field, there is only one profitable sector for the Canadian economy, and it is the setting up of a merchant navy so that we might ship our products to the markets abroad without using the ships of other countries, as we are doing at the present time to move the wheat we have sold.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that in this attack of the official opposition against this government's policy, there are certain points which may be well-founded, in that the minister makes decisions without letting us know about them.

I admit that the minister has to make decisions. He certainly cannot wait until the committee has submitted its report to decide on the day to day administration of his department. But the members of the committee would like to be told of those decisions so that they may discuss them at their meetings.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that the proposed amendment is related, among other things, to the conversion, let us say, of the Penhold base, and I feel that is precisely a matter that should be the subject of a special study by the members of the committee on national defence.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the house to the fact that since the committee began to meet, the members' attendance record has been remarkable, as well as their interest in the proceedings. I think that all those who attended the meetings have noted that.

In my own opinion, the information which has been conveyed to us has proved most useful. Officials of the various branches of the Department of National Defence stated their problems and made their requests. Were we to grant all the requests made by the representatives of the three branches of the services, the whole budget would be used up.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure hon. members that although they are aware of the requirements of the armed forces of the country, the members of the committee know equally well that they simply cannot appropriate the whole national revenue for a defence system against a hypothetical enemy.

On the other hand, we have had the opportunity to hear counterclaims, when retired generals, now released from their oath of office and secrecy, appeared before the committee to state their views and analyse past and present Canadian defence policy and, what is even more important, in my opinion, our policy for the next ten years.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that as responsible and conscientious citizens, we should attach much more importance to future rather than past national defence policy. And even if I am prepared to blame in part the present government, a share of the responsibility should be attributed to the previous government.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the report submitted by the committee on national defence will reflect the policy that the present government intends to follow in the future for the defence of the country. If the policy suggested in this report were not to be followed by the government, or by any succeeding one, then the government in power would be the only one responsible and would have to submit to the people's judgment. As a matter of fact, I am firmly convinced that the press in general and the Canadian people will support the committee report.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that the members of the committee showed a great deal of objectivity, especially in the last meetings.

At the beginning, we feared that there would be constant conflict between the various members but, fortunately, that was only a question of adaptation and we can now inform the house that the sittings of the committee have become truly interesting in view of the sincere questions which are asked—at least, I hope they are sincere—and the impartial and complete replies which are given by the witnesses.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the members of the present cabinet cannot state fully the the policy which will be followed in the future since, in most cases, it has not even been decided upon. That is exactly what we want, because we firmly believe that in addition to the white paper to which the Minister of National Defence refers in particular, the government will have the opportunity to give serious thought to the report which will be submitted and which may well have some bearing on the decisions which will be communicated to the house.

Mr. Speaker, a non-confidence motion has been moved against the government concerning its national defence policy. When you consider the proposal made by the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), you wonder whom he is criticizing. Is he blaming his party for having introduced the frigate construction program or is he criticizing the present government for abandoning the program? I feel that the situation is rather confused. In view of the incomplete and inconclusive evidence we have at the present time, the least we can say is that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has made a hasty decision anticipating the report which will be submitted by the committee.

Mr. Speaker, we are convinced that the defence of Canada is a most important factor; however, the testimony heard so far has established practically beyond doubt that it is extremely difficult, not to say impossible, to plan any defence system of our shores in case of a nuclear war with guided missiles.

In view of this evidence, we wonder what role Canada could actually assume. I believe it is General Foulkes who told us that he was opposed to a nuclear defence role for Canada, because he felt that it would be absolutely impossible and futile. He thinks that if Canada decided to play a nuclear role, it should be offensive rather than defensive.

Mr. Speaker, that is an idea I had already expressed myself, because I feel that if Canada is unable to counter-attack and must be restricted to a purely defensive action, then we have to admit some weakness on our part. And as we are economically unable to launch an attack and it is useless to think that we could withstand one, I think that we should advocate, for Canada, an army that would hinge on certain bases, that is an extremely mobile army that would enforce law and order in this country and that would also be available to assist United Nations forces.

I think that the United Nations is perhaps the place where Canada can play her greatest part, and that part will be even greater if it is really devoted to peacemaking.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the importance of military matters will decrease in years to come and that the present conflict is to be waged on the economic plane rather than on the battlefield that is precisely the competition of an economic nature which was launched 30 years ago by the communist block and which we are in the process of losing.

I believe that the future will prove it is only in that field we can really effectively fight, for if we have to provide a defence against an attack, would it not be more sensible to eliminate the causes which could justify this prospective attack?

If we refer to the origin of all the wars in history, we realize they always resulted from an economic weakness and also from somebody's wish to subjugate another nation.

I believe that in the present context of war, the will to subjugate another nation has lost some of its attractions. Today, it is especially the question of a higher standard of living which we consider. It is especially on that ground that we should consider our future policy.

In my opinion, when the committee publishes its report, such report shall obtain the support of the whole population, since I am more and more convinced that unanimity is making progress among the members of the house on the part Canada should play, that is the part of a peacemaker devoted to maintaining peace through the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker, other members of the house will probably follow me in this debate. I know that the future has certainly surprises in store for us. I know also that it is difficult to foresee in which way military weapons will develop in future. It is as if the government was placing money in quicksand for what it decides to do today, in the light of the available knowledge, may soon become entirely useless. In fact, this item concerning frigates substantiates that fact.

It may well be that the government, which had decided to put forward that frigate program, had first hand information. But unfortunately, I find that the military men who are supposed to have been the government's advisers in the matter are the same who are telling us today that the program is useless and will not serve the intended purpose.

Therefore, I believe we ought to wait for the committee's report so that the government can find out exactly what is the general opinion of the committee, which is made up of members from all parties. As a matter of fact, I even think that the tabling of that document in the house will give everybody an opportunity to take part in a debate which could, in my view, be of benefit to all.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the opportunity which this debate affords me to make a few comments on the non-confidence motion or, if you prefer, the amendment put forward by our Conservative friends. In proposing the amendment, the hon. member said:

[Text]

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"This house regrets the widespread confusion, unrest and damage caused by the government's piecemeal pronouncements concerning abandonment of defence projects such as, in particular,

1) the cancellation of the general purpose frigate program,

2) the cancellation of the conversion of R.C.A.F. station Penhold for jet training, and

3) the contemplated abandonment of other defence establishments, and deplores that such steps have been and are being taken without seeking the views of or awaiting recommendations from the special committee on defence."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, last year, just about the same non-confidence motion could have been put, although against the Conservative government of the day.

As far as defence is concerned, if the government cancels the frigate program or intends to cut down expenditures in the various services of the national defence department, I think it is due to certain suggestions made more than a year ago while the Conservatives were in power when we were made aware, for instance, of the Glassco report which clearly pointed out that tremendous and fantastic amounts of money were ill spent for armaments or defence projects which would never be used.

Today, the Conservatives are censuring the policies which they advocated themselves last year, two years ago and even five years ago.

Mr. Speaker, at the same time those reductions are announced, we are told about the setting up of new nuclear bases in various sections of our country and more particularly, as far as we are concerned, in the province of Quebec. For instance, there is one nuclear base at Bagotville, another one at Val d'Or, one at North Bay and another one in Labrador.

We do not know exactly what the government means or intends to do when it says that those nuclear bases will cost Canada absolutely nothing but that the Americans will pay for all organization and even operation costs.

As for us, we have taken, in this house as well as outside, a stand against nuclear arms, neither through sentimentalism or parochialism, nor for regional or local reasons only, but rather because we feel that Canada must lead the way to peace instead of putting up with methods that will not fail to bring us inevitably to nuclear war.

Mr. Speaker, when we agree to have nuclear bases in Canada, supposedly because it is one of the steps in the defence program—we will not have offensive weapons, just defensive weapons—is it not true that by creating the defensive nuclear bases announced—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I waited until now to interrupt the hon. member, hoping that he might soon revert to the subject of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), which is very limited in scope and does not allow for a general debate.

I take the liberty of reminding the hon. member that the house already came to a decision as to the general problem of nuclear arms when a vote was taken on the occasion of the debate on the speech from the throne.

For those reasons, I would suggest to the hon. member for Villeneuve that he try to limit his remarks to the amendment proposed by the hon. member and which is already before us.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, with all due respect, I wonder, while the amendment states here, at the end—

[Text]

—and deplores that such steps have been and are being taken without seeking the views of or awaiting recommendations from the special committee on defence.

[Translation]

Is not the question of nuclear weapons precisely a question of defence dealt with by the defence committee?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It may be noted that I cannot start a debate with the hon. member. Even though the remark he just made is correct, we must stick to the various basic points of the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill).

There are three points mentioned in the amendment and there is no reference to nuclear weapons.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I shall then stick to these three points. But I still maintain that these three points will unavoidably be replaced by nuclear weapons, in Canada.

At any rate, I will limit myself to the three points mentioned in that amendment, and first the discontinuance of the frigate program, a defence program, when the government has announced, for instance, expenditures of the order of 400 and some odd million dollars. And the other day, the minister said that these outlays were restricted to about 100 million dollars.

We are wondering what is the positive program of the government. And if they do not need those amounts for defence, will they apply those appropriations to help this country get for example a merchant marine, which is not that flourishing at the present time? The shipping of Canadian products abroad could be done with Canadian ships instead of using or allowing foreign ships for that purpose as is now the case. These amounts taken out of arms or war ship production should be affected to the Transport Department or other departments, and not necessarily to the National Defence Department, but to others in order to strengthen the Canadian economy.

In regard to the cancellation of the conversion of the R.C.A.F. station Penhold for jet training, the same thing could apply here, and these sums could be used to set up some peace industries, to create a climate of peace, of confidence and not of distrust as it is the case today.

The third point deals with the abandonment of other defence establishments. Mr. Speaker, we suggest that the government should assume its responsibilities in view of the situation very chaotic indeed, which prevails in Canada.

We might use those sums of money for practical construction programs. We realize that all countries of the world, after having improved their economic conditions following the war or the declaration of war in 1939, improved their economy, not only as far as frigate construction was concerned, but also in production improvement. So when we compare the 1939 production in the United States with the 1943 production in that same country, that is a period of four years, taking for granted that production was 100 per cent in 1939, we realize, according to official statistics, that in four years, the production of electrical steel in the United States increased by 383 per cent, railway cars, 391 per cent—for electric equipment, the increase was 521 per cent in 1943 as compared to the 1939 production. Aluminum increased by 588 per cent; for machines and equipment, production increased by 630 per cent. For engines, the 1943 production increased to 853 per cent as compared to 1939. The production of airplanes increased from 1939 to 1943 in the United States—we could say the same thing in Canada—by about 1632 per cent, while the production of merchant ships increased by 6918 per cent, and for magnesium, the increase in production was 7100 per cent, as compared to the 1939 production.

That indicates that when there is a war emergency, a national defence emergency, governments, whatever they are, Liberal or Conservative, or Democrat or Republican in the United States, found the required means, funds and credits to make possible those improvements and increases in production amounting to about 500 or 600 per cent in a period as short as four years.

But the war ended in 1945, almost 20 years ago. Since then, the Conservatives and the Liberals have headed the government one after the other, but nothing has changed. We are still looking for a solution to the problem of unemployment in Canada and for means to establish new secondary industries. The situation remains unchanged: we do not have the necessary capital, we do not know where to get the required funds to develop our natural resources in order to help—

[Text]

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, I think the hon. member who has the floor was certainly closer to being in order when he was talking about nuclear arms. Certainly he was a lot more interesting when he was speaking on that subject than he is on this.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already reminded the hon. member that his remarks did not pertain to the matter being discussed and that he should stick to the amendment before the house.

I take the liberty of reminding him of that once again.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the amendment seems to provide that the government should continue spending those sums for national defence, on the recommendations of the special committee on defence.

And now the government decides to curtail those expenses, to reduce the national defence forces and replace those forces by something more constructive.

The hon. member who just finished his remarks, will certainly understand the attitude according to which the government should not stop spending, but direct its spending to other areas of economic activity, because defence is certainly one of them.

Mr. Speaker, at any event, the amendment submitted to us this afternoon does not mean so much.

The government must be blamed for it. But, when the Conservatives were in power they behaved almost in the same way. Today they are trying to blame the government for things the former government did not do or neglected to do.

Mr. Speaker, I should like now to move an amendment to the amendment. Therefore, I move, seconded by Mr. Gilles Gregoire:

That all words after "government" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

subserviently agreeing to the storing of nuclear arms on the territory of the state of Quebec, notwithstanding the strong protests voiced by the civic and municipal authorities of Quebec, the national societies and the welfare clubs, the labour and agricultural unions as well as by the Quebec members of parliament belonging to all political parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might give my ruling now on whether the subamendment introduced by the hon. member for Villeneuve is in order or not.

As the hon. member and the house know, the debate now in progress originates in an old parliamentary practice, that is a proposal subject to amendments that the house resolve itself in a committee of supply. In this case, it is a grievance and an amendment. But the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) is to the effect that some national defence programs established previously had been cancelled by the government. This is the essence of the amendment.

In my opinion, the subamendment of the hon. member is completely outside the scope of the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and contains something new. Consequently, the hon. member's subamendment is inadmissible and I must rule that it is out of order.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to explain myself.

First of all, the amendment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member is entitled to give explanations on the validity or the admissibility of the amendment which the Chair has ruled out of order. The only thing he can do now, is to appeal from the ruling. It is certainly not proper for him to launch a debate on a subamendment which has been ruled out of order.

Abandonment of Defence Projects

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I shall not comment on the subamendment but on the amendment which was moved a short while ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member will have an opportunity to take part in the debate on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre when he is recognized, in a few minutes, I believe.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I appeal from your ruling. In my opinion, you misconstrued the Conservative amendment itself a while ago by wanting to limit it to the three points mentioned whereas, in the amendment they are used as an example, as indicated by the words "such as". Therefore, if that is a limitation, I appeal from your ruling.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair from which the hon. member for Lapointe has appealed to the house. All those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Som hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from a ruling of the Chair, which is as follows:

To the motion that Mr. Speaker do leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre proposed an amendment as follows:

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"This house regrets the widespread confusion, unrest and damage caused by the government's piecemeal pronouncements concerning abandonment of defence projects such as, in particular,

1) the cancellation of the general purpose frigate program,

2) the cancellation of the conversion of R.C.A.F. station Penhold for jet training, and

3) the contemplated abandonment of other defence establishments, and deplores that such steps have been and are being taken without seeking the views of or awaiting recommendations from the special committee on defence.

To this amendment the hon. member for Villeneuve proposed an amendment:

Mr. Caouette, seconded by Mr. Gilles Gregoire, moved that all the words after "government" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"subserviently agreeing to the storing of nuclear arms on the territory of the state of Quebec, notwithstanding the strong protests voiced by the civic and municipal authorities of Quebec, the national societies and the welfare clubs, the labour and agricultural unions, as well as by the Quebec members of parliament belonging to all political parties."

The Chair decided that the subamendment was in effect a new question, a new grievance, and also that it was out of order as not being relevant to the grievance raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Thereupon the hon. member for Villeneuve appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was not sustained on the following division:

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the subject of defence is a very complicated one and the prime mistake I shall likely make tonight perhaps is to reduce it to too simple terms. I do not pretend to be an expert on the subject, and I think that should be most encouraging to the house, because we have had nothing but confusion from all the experts. I have, however, paid more than a passing interest, as I am sure have most Canadians, to this subject which is of such vital importance to us.

We sometimes lose track of the object of defence, which I think is simply to protect the security and integrity of our country and our way of life, and to maintain our freedom and independence from all other nations. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, when we consider defence policy I would think that no matter what subject or what items under the heading of defence we are considering, we have to measure them by asking whether they add to Canada's defensive armament. Do they give us an extra weapon, or a choice of or share in extra weapons, which will make our country more secure?

In this respect I do not think we can overemphasize the changed position in the world today as compared with the last world conflict in which Canada became engaged. Today it is not a question of whether we have enough fire power to protect ourselves, because having enough fire power is impossible; it is indeed impossible for any nation. There is, Mr. Speaker, too much fire power on our side, and also too much on the other side. The whole world can be wiped out many times over, so obviously any defence policy whereby we merely try to add a pittance to the total fire power of the western side does not make sense.

Perhaps, then, we should see whether our efforts are going to help to add to the control of that fire power. Do we have a voice which will enable the fire power which exists on the western side to be more effective in our defence? Again, no one on the government side, in fact no one in this house, has ever attempted to suggest that we can pretend, through any alliance we make or any action we take in this house, to gain for ourselves a voice which will be effective enough to increase our defence by giving us a control over the total weapons of the western world. If we are to look at the matter realistically, if we cannot contribute to total defence because there is already too much, and if we cannot share in world control of these nuclear weapons which are already so complete in themselves, then obviously if we are to make any contribution to our friends, our allies and the world at large we must make it in a role where Canada can play an honourable and responsible part, maintaining our voice in its proper perspective, protecting as best we can our right to be heard in world councils, and our right not to be dictated to by anyone, whether they be friend or anybody else.

I will not attempt, Mr. Speaker, to deal tonight with the methods by which we might attain some of these objectives under NATO or United Nations auspices. In the field of defence only, I would suggest that concern with weapons, if we are to have our own voice and control of them, must be confined to those weapons which we can handle, use, hold and control by ourselves. Whether the make-up of our own particular forces differs from that of our allies does not matter. Whether we are merely one unit of ten identical units on the western side should not matter too much. But if we have our own distinctive unit made up of our own contribution, in co-operation proportionately with our allies, it seems to me that this is the most we can hope to contribute to our defence and the defence of the western world.

Therefore I suggest that any proposal that we take nuclear weapons can only complicate the question of control. It can only complicate our relations with our allies and friends, and unless handled with tremendous skill lead to suspicion that we are asking too big a voice, and therefore alienating our friends, or that we are asking too little a voice, and therefore losing our self-respect. Certainly to demand less than our fair share of the voice of the western world is to surrender some of our sovereignty. I note, as I am sure all hon. members noted, the remarks and reassurances of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that the arrangements made for acquiring nuclear weapons on Canadian soil have not involved loss of sovereignty. This is very encouraging Mr. Speaker if we can place any reliance on it. However, a little review of this question of nuclear weapons and the difficulties posed by control does little to reassure us on this score.

The Prime Minister has referred in this house to the long arguments and the frustrating attempts to reach agreement in this regard. To put it very simply, that degree of control of nuclear weapons which is consistent with our sovereignty has always been taken as a further expansion of the nuclear club which would unsettle world conditions and really not increase our defence. Any control less than that, any nuclear weapons on our soil over which we did not have full voice, must of necessity involve a loss of sovereignty.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we be reminded that one of the purposes of our defence policy is to protect our sovereignty. For at least four years the previous government wrestled with this problem, but were unable to solve it because it was not capable of solution without loss of sovereignty. I am suggesting that despite the assurances of the Prime Minister, and despite anything that can be said along that line, we cannot accede to the proposition that Canada, in accepting nuclear weapons, has not given up its sovereignty. Common sense rejects it. The experience of the number of years we have spent in trying to arrive at a solution but could not find one is further evidence. France pulled out of her close alliance with the United States on this same subject. I should like to refer to the answer given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in this house.

It will help us to understand where we are with regard to this nuclear question. I asked the right hon. gentleman whether he was ashamed of acquiring nuclear weapons. His answer was that it was a mistaken policy —that we were in error when we entered upon any agreement to take them. But, he said, having entered upon an agreement it was necessary to take these weapons. In a further question I reminded him that a further agreement was necessary before these weapons were made available; would this not give us a way out? The Prime Minister replied that this was perfectly true, that it had taken the previous government four years to make up its mind whether or not to accept that agreement and that, meanwhile, we had spent a billion dollars on this equipment. That exchange is to be found on page 791 of Hansard for June 7.

Here the Prime Minister himself confesses that Canada's policy with regard to the acquisition of nuclear weapons is wrong. He agreed also that there is an opportunity to get out of this situation, because another agreement is necessary. He further indicates that the only reason for adhering to the policy is because, he says, we had spent a billion dollars on equipment. That is the only reason why we are carrying on with the policy. I am sure it must be an encouraging situation for the citizens of this country to contemplate—that we are carrying on a policy which was wrong when it was made four years ago, despite the fact that there is a way out, particularly when a billion dollars is at stake. I may say immediately that this figure is a gross exaggeration. It is a lot of nonsense. Nevertheless, that is the justification given for our policy. We do not have a definite policy on defence: We have an excuse, the excuse that a billion dollars has been paid for certain equipment.

It might appear that I am being somewhat harsh in my criticism of the government. Perhaps certain hon. gentlemen opposite take umbrage at the suggestion that they are supporting a government that does not even pretend to give this country a defence policy. Let us look at the record of the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) to see where he stands. I recall saying in this house that in the committee on defence we would not get any information. I wish now to correct that statement. The committee certainly does not get any information about the defence situation today, but there have been some interesting revelations about what went on in 1956. I am sure those of us who have been here for some time will remember the great indignation of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) every time the Arrow was mentioned. They will remember how he went up into the air as he spoke of the terrible Conservatives dropping that wonderful weapon, the Arrow. And all the time, if he were capable of blushing, he must have been hanging his head in shame every night as he remembered he was the associate minister of defence in a government decision that already made the defence decision to drop the Arrow. They had not made the political decision, but the decision based on defence requirements had been made while he was a member of that government. However, he and his colleagues were facing an election. This is what we know now of the government to which the hon. member belonged. It is not whether Canada gets sound defence that matters; it is the kind of image they can sell to the public, whether justified or not, which matters. The politics of defence in 1956 were much more important than the defence of Canada.

In 1963, the acquisition of nuclear arms is in no way involved in the defence of Canada. I am sure we can all see it does nothing in this regard. Moreover, the method by which this government tries to sell nuclear arms on the basis of a commitment is enough to make even the most naïve person look at it again and again. Politics, not defence, is what the people of Canada get from this government.

There has been much confusion over what were commitments. For some of this confusion, we were, in part, to blame. We said there were no commitments, while on the other side they said there were, indeed, commitments. Perhaps what we should have said, was: define "commitments". We can all understand what is meant by an agreement to make an agreement. I can agree to buy a house. I can say I will definitely buy a house if we can agree on a price. To this extent, I have a commitment to buy a house. Canada had an agreement to accept nuclear arms if we could agree on a system of control which would not mean giving up our sovereignty. We tried for four years to reach such an agreement, but we failed. Finally, we said it could not be done this way—we must seek another road. Today, according to the Prime Minister, we are following a defence policy to which the previous government committed us in 1959, and we are following that policy, despite the fact that the previous government reached a decision that conditions had changed and that the problem could not be solved until we took a new look at defence problems. The previous government said that in the NATO conference they would reconsider our policies and help work out a new and sensible arrangement in which Canada could play its part. For this, we were condemned.

We could be charitable toward this government if they were to make even a pretence that nuclear arms would benefit the defence of Canada. But not even the Minister of National Defence has had the temerity or the effrontery to suggest this to us. The only excuse we have for the present ridiculous policy or lack of policy is the Prime Minister's statement that there are a billion dollars at stake. Let us consider this statement more closely. How much is involved in the two Bomarc installations? I suggest it is about $15 million. After hearing the Liberal propaganda some people might believe there was a billion dollars right there tied up in the Bomarcs. In fact, it is less than 1 per cent of our present defence budget for one year, and I am sure no member of this house will say that putting aside this $15 million amounts to wasteful extravagance. If we cannot find more than 1 per cent of the budget spent inefficiently in the department itself, then the Glassco report must be wrong.

Only in connection with the Honest John can we make out a case for nuclear warheads. As to the fighter planes, money spent on them is certainly not wasted. If the Prime Minister wants the country to believe he is honest, he had better explain how he arrives at this figure of a billion dollars difference between nuclear and non-nuclear defences. I suggest he can point to nothing which represents a sum anything like a billion dollars. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) talks about confusion and unrest in the country. When we consider how ridiculous and inadequate is Liberal policy on defence matters it is easy to see why there should be a great deal of confusion and unrest in the country, and I trust all hon. members will be honest enough to support the amendment.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all, may I say I cannot understand the charge which has been levelled by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, that the special committee on defence is being prevented from doing its work. The Department of National Defence has co-operated in every way to the maximum extent. A precedent has been set by allowing serving officers to appear before the committee. This has not been done before in Canadian history. Similarly there has been no attempt to limit the witnesses who might be called before the committee, and a wide range of witnesses with a wide range of opinions have been called and others will be. I think this is a good idea. There has been no attempt to divert the committee from its task of calling witnesses and getting opinions in respect of all defence matters, including policy and what the future policy should be.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, as minister I gave the committee an opening statement. I have been in attendance six or seven times along with the chiefs of staff, and I have consistently offered to appear before the committee whenever requested to do so. If I have not given more witness than I have, it has been the committee's decision and not mine. Let there be no mistake about that.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) said that I was making decisions without having the courtesy to discuss them with the committee. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am one of those people who believes that the courtesy should be extended for me to go there and discuss them, if that is the wish of the committee, and without complaining afterwards that I have not when the opportunity was not made available. There was a basic contradiction in the contribution of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre this afternoon. He talked about the strictures on the committee preventing a discussion of policy, if I understood him correctly. Did I understand the hon. gentleman correctly?

Mr. Churchill: I did not put it that way at all. I dwelt on the failure of the minister to present his policies to the committee for consideration and advice before he made his decisions.

Mr. Hellyer: I understood the hon. gentleman to say, and I shall have to check the record again, that the committee was limited in its discussion, and particularly in the discussion of policy. But then he proceeded to introduce an amendment which was related entirely to hardware and housekeeping, and I found this fact not in accord with the speech he had previously made.

Surely hardware and housekeeping are not the main concern of the committee. They should, of course, use this opportunity which is available to them to acquaint themselves with the hardware and use the opportunity to study the weapons systems that are in modern use; but surely their main interest is in defence policy in the broader sense. Perhaps they have been directing their questions in the wrong way. What are the strategic considerations of future policy? I would have thought the committee would have spent a great deal of their time in trying to determine what western strategy was at the present time, what it would be in the future and whether or not it was realistic in the world in which we live—

An hon. Member: Or is there any.

Mr. Hellyer: Or is there any—and once having determined the answer to those fundamental questions and having satisfied themselves in respect of them, to evolve a policy for the Canadian contribution which would be compatible with the over-all strategy. Once that is done, once the fundamentals have been considered and decided on, then the tasks to be assigned to our armed forces and the hardware necessary to carry out those tasks follow logically from the more basic considerations.

These are the large issues to which the committee could in fact turn its attention, and I think they would be doing the house and the country a great service if they would expend their major effort in determining the strategic considerations of future policy both for the alliance as a whole and for Canada as a member of that alliance.

In the meantime progress cannot stand still. Action must be taken in respect of some matters. This should not surprise hon. members of the committee, because it was all forecast and carefully set out in my opening statement to the committee on June 27 last. On page 25 of that statement I referred to Canadian defence policy and I said this:

> Our contributions at this time are those which have been agreed to in the past. They are as I have set them out for you. It is the policy of the government to make effective those weapons systems which have been acquired as part of the Canadian contribution, including making immediately available nuclear devices required to make our contribution credible. Furthermore, it is the policy of the government to undertake a thorough review of our defence policy and commitments in order to determine the best and most effective contribution we can make to the collective defence of the free world and to the maintenance of peace in the years ahead.

I then went on to say:

> In order to facilitate the review, certain action has been taken. All major procurement programs are being reconsidered. In particular, any procurement program which would tend to limit future policy or interfere with the exercise of future options is being carefully reviewed.

That statement is very clear. Even more precise is the next paragraph:

> One of these programs is the general purpose frigate program. It is a project involving the expenditure of large sums of money. For this reason all present and likely future options have to be carefully considered before proceeding.

Surely that was a clear indication to the committee that a review of this program would take place and that a decision would be made without too much delay. Later in respect of the air division and our commitment in Europe I had this to say:

> We are considerably concerned about the effectiveness of the four squadrons to be located on the two French bases at Marville and Grostenquin. As members of the committee know, the French government has so far not permitted the stockpiling of nuclear weapons for NATO on its territory. In consequence, the weapons for the four squadrons would not be readily at hand, and those aircraft to be maintained on quick reaction alert would have to be deployed to other bases. This raises the further question of vulnerability. In view of these problems, it is considered desirable to review at once the alternatives which may be available now or in the future.

Is it surprising to hon. gentlemen that we are in fact reviewing them as we said we would? Is it surprising that we are doing precisely what was indicated to the committee would have to be done? Further on, Mr. Speaker, I said this:

> As soon as a review of existing procurement programs is complete and decisions taken, which I hope will be within a few weeks, the general review of future policy will commence.

As a matter of fact, it has taken more time to reach some of these decisions than I had hoped, but as hon. gentlemen on the other side know as well as we know sometimes in government it takes a few days to do what one might under other circumstances do a little more quickly.

An hon. Member: We are all in a daze.

Mr. Churchill: You are learning.

Mr. Hellyer: Surely the indication is very clear. It was indicated to the committee that within a few weeks decisions would be taken on a number of important matters which were hanging fire from the previous government, including major procurement programs and including the follow-up purchase of CF-104 aircraft and the general purpose frigate program. They should not, therefore, be surprised when we do as we said we would do and make the decisions we said we would make. In our general review we have to consider the relationship between our forces and our allies.

Mr. Clancy: Did you know in February that the French would not allow nuclear arms on their soil?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, I knew it three years ago. As a matter of fact, I introduced the problem in the house and drew it to the attention of the government of that day. I was surprised that after three years nothing had been done about it and it was left for me to try to solve.

An hon. Member: You are a hero.

Mr. Hellyer: In order to make our proper assessment of future requirements we have undertaken a number of studies. These include both major and minor studies ranging from the study of the probability of various types of wars to various types of incursion or insurrection which might take place in the world generally, the balance of forces at present existing between east and west and the possible most effective contribution which a country like Canada could make in the years ahead.

A number of additional specific studies have been undertaken and are being undertaken, and we hope that in total they will give us a very broad base of information on which to work toward a comprehensive policy for the future.

I also gave an indication of the timing that I hoped would be achieved and I concluded my remarks in respect of the general review by saying:

> It is hoped that notwithstanding the considerable scope and magnitude of our own studies we will be in a position to reach conclusions early in the new year. I am sure that the views of this committee will be most helpful in assisting us to determine the best role for Canada to play in future years.

Abandonment of Defence Projects

Actually, Mr. Speaker, we have stuck to our target dates very well so far. We are making very good progress in the Department of National Defence. We still hope to achieve our goal of having a policy ready for consideration by the government in the new year which could be presented to this parliament before the following year's estimates are being considered. I still hope that the special committee on defence will make recommendations before we have completed our policy study so that we will have the benefit of their views.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: I said, and I state again, I would welcome a report from the committee stating the consensus of the members of that committee with regard to what the future defence policy of Canada should be. I have been told that the committee hopes to have a report ready in mid December. If this could be achieved, it would be very valuable and be of considerable assistance to the government in discharging its responsibilities. My statement to the defence committee not only set out the problems on which decisions must be made, but also was a rather accurate indicator of the timing in respect of them.

Now, I should like to refer to the specific charges set out in the amendment. The first of these is with regard to the cancellation of the general purpose frigate program. This decision was forecast in a statement to the special committee on defence. It was stated then the cost was considerable; that it was a major project involving a very large proportion of our resources, and for that reason would have to be reviewed very carefully. Particularly, it would have to be reviewed in the light of the effect it would have on future policy because there has been the charge that equipment determined policy, and there has been the suggestion put forward in many quarters that it should be the other way around—that policy should determine the acquisition of equipment.

This was certainly a consideration in the review of this particular project. There were, as I stated in the house the other day, other aspects in respect of the cancellation. These particular ships were multi-purpose, ships designed for a number of different roles; and because they were fairly small ships and so many different capacities were included as part of the design, the effectiveness of each was compromised considerably. One of the major problems, Mr. Speaker, in respect of this decision not to proceed, is the decision of what the future roles of our armed forces will be, and of the navy, which is the proud, senior branch of our armed services.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Our general review is taking a look, first of all, at strategy. Is the strategy of the western world realistic? Does it take into consideration the change which has taken place in the last few years or does it still reflect the circumstances of 1954 and 1955? I think Canada has a considerable influence, if it properly exerts this, in determining what strategy should be. Certainly, we should be aware of the strategical implication because our contribution and our policy must at least have taken them into account; otherwise we are likely to find ourselves in a position where we are either making a contribution which is redundant, or failing to make our most effective contribution towards the peace and stability of the world.

We are doing a special review on naval problems, and particularly in the antisubmarine warfare field. We are going to determine, if we can, the relative effectiveness of different weapons systems in that respect. So far as we can determine, this has not been done effectively by any navy in the western world. There have been studies, and I would not want to give hon. members the impression there have not been. However, a specific cost-effectiveness study of antisubmarine weapons systems to my knowledge is not available. We are going to undertake one in concert with our allies. It will be designed to determine, as best we can, the relative effectiveness of submarines, both conventional and nuclear, of surface ships, both large and small, of ship based aircraft, both fixed wing and helicopters, and of land based planes. It may easily be that in the antisubmarine role a combination of these carriers is the best solution. But we must have a broad band of information, more than we have at present, before deciding just what the proper mix should be. Our goal is to get for our navy the best equipment possible for the tasks and roles that it will be assigned in the years that lie ahead.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the second specific charge was in relation to Penhold. Penhold, as hon. gentlemen know, was chosen as a base for jet training. In order to effect jet training at Penhold, a number of requirements existed. The first of those was extra land; the second was runway extensions; and the third was the use of air space. When the question of air space was considered, it did not check out.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would answer a question?

Mr. Hellyer: I would be delighted to do so, if I can.

Mr. Woolliams: Did you not, Mr. Minister, confirm that this would continue to be an air base in Alberta in accordance with your own plans, and when you ran into difficulty was it not because of a conflict with the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith)?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not believe I quite understood the first part of the question, but may I state the facts as I know them and if the hon. member has an additional question he may ask it.

Before our government took office it had been decided to use Penhold as a jet training base. It was in the plan; it was an accepted fact. Later, as information came across my desk, I found that not all of the things that had to be checked out in respect of it had been checked out. One of these things was the use of air space. When we communicated with the Department of Transport, this was confirmed. When their requirements were made known to us, it was obvious that there was not sufficient air space available to properly effect jet training safely at Penhold. With the facts in front of us, we had to make a decision for the safety not only of the people using the air lanes but also for the safety of the people on the ground in that district. There was no other choice open to us.

Now, my hon. friends might say that this could have been caught sooner, if the problem of air space had been checked out earlier, and this is quite true. It was not checked out earlier. It could have been checked out many months before under the regime supported by the hon. gentlemen. The main thing, so far as I am concerned, is that we caught the error before the plans got too far and before vast new amounts of the taxpayers' money had been spent.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister answer another question? Did you not confirm, as reported in the newspapers in Alberta, that this was to be a training base?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not know what is meant by "confirming". It is possible that earlier on I did state it would be used, because it was planned that way.

Mr. Woolliams: Was it so?

Mr. Hellyer: I don't know, and anyway I think it is irrelevant at this stage.

The third charge relates to the contemplated abandonment of other defence establishments. First of all, this is hypothetical but also, Mr. Speaker, it is quite possible. We are making an effort in the Department of National Defence to effect economies by reducing overhead. The only way this can be done is to implement changes. One suggestion that has been made hundreds of times and in hundreds of places, including many hon. gentlemen in various parts of this house, is that we have too much overhead, too much tail and not enough fighting teeth in the Department of National Defence; that we should cut the fat and increase effectiveness. However, just as soon as somebody initiates a move in this direction, there is a general outcry. It is impossible to have it both ways. If our job is to provide the maximum fighting effectiveness that we can with the resources available to us, and to get the best use of the taxpayers' dollar in making a contribution to the defence of freedom in the western world, then some changes are absolutely essential. They are not all going to be politically palatable. You just cannot avoid it. You talk about accepting the facts of life, and these are the facts of life. You either want a large establishment and a small operational force, or you want to put more of your resources into the forces and have a smaller overhead. This is a decision that must be made.

If we want to have the maximum defence effectiveness, then economies have to be effected in other directions. This is going to cause some hardship in some cases, and it cannot be avoided. It is clear, however, that if these housekeeping decisions must be referred to in the special committee on defence, it is an abrogation of responsible government.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Hellyer: If the hon. member would wait until I am finished.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The minister is not prepared to yield the floor.

Mr. MacInnis: I fully understand this, Mr. Speaker. We all know he is not capable.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, I am sorry to interrupt the minister but we have an amendment in front of us and an amendment to the amendment. What the minister is discussing right now is the amendment, while we in this part of the house feel he should be dealing with the subamendment.

Mr. Hellyer: If the hon. gentleman would give me about two minutes to refer to a statement by the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) I will get right down to the subamendment immediately after that. The hon. member for Lake St. John suggested we should spend some of our defence dollars to build up other parts of the Canadian economy. I would like to state to him my personal philosophy, which is that we have to put forth more effort in all directions. We have unused resources in Canada. We have men who are unemployed and factory space which is not being used. I would like to see these resources put back to work and our output increased, so that then we can direct some of this additional output in the direction which my hon. friend suggests. I believe we should do that, rather than make a diversion from one requirement to another.

This is the proper approach when we have these tremendous unused resources. We should see them put back to work effectively and efficiently, increasing output, and then use some proportion of that output to alleviate hardship throughout the world and undertake many of the projects at home and abroad which I am sure all hon. gentlemen would support.

In respect to the subamendment, the question has been raised of the servile imposition of atomic arms on the territory of the "state of Quebec". First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think that the "state of Quebec" is still part of Canada, and one of the propositions which has been put forward, which I think most of us subscribe to, is equal rights and equal responsibilities. Now, it is part of the responsibility of this government to plan as best it can for the defence of Canada, including a contribution to the western alliance.

Part of this commitment, part of the role we have taken on in partnership with the United States, is the air defence of this continent. We are particularly placed in respect to that because, geographically, we cannot separate ourselves from the United States. We are part of the same land mass and we cannot extricate ourselves from our traditional, historical and geographic position associated with our allies and neighbours to the south.

We have accepted responsibilities. They are to our advantage as well as to the advantage of others, and we should never forget that. As I pointed out to the special committee on defence, the United States would have been willing to have placed the two Bomarc squadrons on their territory, but in order to facilitate us and in order to provide some semblance—as it was believed at that time—of protection for the cities of Montreal and Toronto, the stations were moved north into a position further away from the built up areas, in order that interceptions could take place at an earlier time.

This made perfectly good sense from our point of view, and it was a decision which was concurred in by the government of Canada. No one forced it on us, nor was there any servility involved. We made that decision; no one else could make it.

An hon. Member: General Norstad.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Hellyer: Hon. gentlemen opposite, when I say "we" I mean we in the broad sense. I mean "you". The decision was made by the government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada. The people of Canada are proud people, and when they take on a responsibility by decision of their own duly elected government, they feel some pride and responsibility in carrying through with that commitment.

I have stated before, and I believe it strongly that, having led the United States to believe that if they provided the missiles, if they provided the large part of the cost of this weapons system, which is much larger than just the Bomarc stations themselves, and having encouraged them to make such large expenditures as part of their over-all defence program with the obvious thought in mind of making them effective when they were in place, then we had a responsibility as citizens of Canada to carry through with our part of the bargain.

Completely apart from the military effectiveness of the weapons systems themselves, we undertook a solemn obligation, and our neighbours and allies would feel we had let them down and deceived them badly if we did not do what we led them to believe we would do. It is important for us to live up to our word, because our voice is only as loud as our word.

Another point in respect to these weapons systems is that these are defensive weapons systems only. They cannot start a war. They cannot be used for aggressive purposes. There is only one potential use for them, and that would be after a general war had broken out. It is very easy for hon. gentlemen to say that there will be no general war. This is the view which is widely held and we all hope and pray it will be so; but let me just add this one word of caution, that if at the present time, with the present existing weapons stockpiles on both sides of the iron curtain, there were a general war by accident, madness or miscalculation, those weapons systems would save millions of lives.

I do not say this will be true two, three, five or ten years from now. It will depend on the weapons systems available on both sides of the iron curtain; but I am saying that, as of this moment, if there were a war of madness or miscalculation, those weapons would provide very effective and considerable interception of attacking bombers—

Mr. Churchill: What about missiles?

Mr. Hellyer: And save a great many lives. The hon. gentleman knows they are not effective against ballistic missiles.

Mr. Churchill: Don't mislead the public.

Mr. Hellyer: I am not misleading the public, but I would like to add a few things for the edification of my hon. friend, that whereas the missiles would, if there was such a war, be used in the initial attack, at this moment the big weapons, the weapons of millions of tons of explosive power, are still carried predominantly by manned bombers. So, the statement I made is mathematically correct.

Mr. Pugh: Did you put that before the defence committee?

Mr. Hellyer: At any time.

Mr. Pugh: Did you put it before the defence committee?

Mr. Hellyer: It is mathematically correct. If there were now, and pray heaven it won't happen, a war by miscalculation, these weapons systems would have a beneficial effect in that they would save many lives.

Mr. Winch: An absolute lie.

Mr. Hellyer: It is not a lie. The hon. gentleman can forecast into the future any amount he wants, and he may be quite right in respect to the future.

Mr. Winch: I am talking about now.

Mr. Hellyer: Now is what I am talking about.

Mr. Winch: Well, take the evidence of your own chiefs of staff.

Mr. Hellyer: I have, and I am more familiar with my own chiefs of staff than any hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Hellyer: If you wait a minute or two I will be through.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister is trying—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The minister does not have to yield the floor.

Mr. Greene: Stupid questions later.

Mr. Pugh: Stupid answers now.

Mr. Hellyer: Because our air defences, even though they are not a major part of the total air defence of North America, are an integral part of a system designed on a continental basis. I believe we have a responsibility, for the time being at least, to carry forward with those weapons systems which we have acquired, and bring them to their maximum usefulness. It is for this reason that agreements have been signed and that the weapons systems will be brought to their maximum useful state as quickly as that can be brought about.

Under the circumstances I reject in the strongest possible terms any implications of servility; this is not true. We want to make our own decisions, but we also still believe in the sanctity of contracts, and when a duly elected government of the people makes a decision it binds them to an action which is relied on by others. Unless the other party is willing by negotiation to contract out, which in this case I am sure it is not, then I think we are duty bound as honourable people to carry it through and do our part of the bargain. In consequence we must reject this subamendment. It is unfounded and is not in keeping with the spirit of all our peoples from shore to shore.

Finally may I say this. The question of the morale of the armed forces was raised.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister continues, he has finished the subject he has been dealing with just now. Will he allow a question at this point?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman made the statement a moment ago that he was sure that the United States would not be prepared to contract out of the responsibility of Canada's providing nuclear warheads on the Bomarc—is that what the minister said? Has the government tried to contract out as yet, or how is the minister able to speak with such authority when he says that he is sure the United States would not agree to that?

Mr. Hellyer: I am not entirely without perception, Mr. Speaker, and in discussions with respect to defence matters I know the regard had for these weapons systems in high places in the United States of America, the importance they attach to them, and the very significant impact they had on the deterioration of relations between our two countries.

The question of the morale of our armed forces was raised. The armed forces of Canada, like the people of Canada, expect this government to produce a comprehensive long range policy and plan which will enable them to carry out their tasks most effectively in the years which lie ahead. In this respect I am sure they will give their full and complete backing to the proposals which will be brought before this house next year. Morale will be stimulated and encouraged by decisiveness and by effectiveness in the years which lie ahead, and we are going to see that everything possible is done to ensure that our armed forces are given the tools with which to do the job.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I remind hon. gentlemen that we are going to proceed with our studies. We hope that the special committee will do the same.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With perception.

Mr. Hellyer: With perception and with understanding, and I hope with comprehension as well.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do too.

Mr. Hellyer: In accordance with our responsibilities we will prepare and bring before this government next year, before the following year's estimates are introduced, a comprehensive policy related to the strategic concepts of the western world. It will enhance Canada's contribution to the freedom of the western world, to the peace of all the world, and which will provide a plan and chart a course which will have the backing and support not only of the armed forces of Canada, but I hope of the special committee on defence as well, and the vast majority of people from coast to coast.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) rising to ask a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker; the minister did say he would answer. As I understood the position of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), he said that Canada would accept nuclear warheads, and when they got them, negotiate out of them. Is that still the Liberal policy?

Mr. Hellyer: To the best of my knowledge he said no such thing. He pointed out very specifically that this commitment which had been undertaken on behalf of Canada was an attempt to work out a much more comprehensive and sensible policy for the years which lie beyond.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) rising on a question?

Mr. MacInnis: I have a question to ask the minister. When I asked a question earlier the minister made a statement which suggested that the special committee would be dealing with this matter. I think his words were "an abdication of government responsibility". I would ask the minister whether the statement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) made when the committee was about to be set up—

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Another hon. Member: He does not know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May we please have some order and give the hon. member a chance to ask his question.

Mr. MacInnis: The Prime Minister, in setting up the special committee on defence, said that it would be for the committee to deal with all aspects of defence, including policy. How does the minister consider the remark that he has now made as anything but a contradiction of what the Prime Minister previously said?

Mr. Hellyer: I did not hear in what the hon. gentleman said any suggestion that this question of housekeeping would be referred to the committee for decision.

Mr. MacInnis: On that very question the minister must be able to answer the point made by the Prime Minister when he referred to all aspects of defence, including policy. This would, I imagine, include the housekeeping aspect. How can he say that his statement tonight is not a contradiction?

Mr. Hellyer: It most certainly is not.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I did attempt to ask two questions, and on both occasions the minister said he would reply when he had finished. The minister also said that he is more aware of the opinions of his chiefs of staff than any other hon. member in the house. This was when he was speaking on the issue of the Bomarc. Does that mean that the chiefs of staff have not been accurate in their submissions to the defence committee?

Mr. Hellyer: Not at all.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I recognize at once the great importance of the question of defence policy as far as this country is concerned. It is something that exercises the minds of a great many Canadians, and in addition to that it is one of the costliest projects that Canadian taxpayers are involved in. At the moment we are confronted with the question of certain decisions which have been made, and others pending, which have a great bearing on what our defence policy is going to be in the future.

It was said during the campaign before the election last April that this is something which a committee of the house should decide. I am one who agrees that the airing of views in public, with a view to making as many Canadians as possible conversant with the various points of view having to do with defence and the various problems involved, is a useful exercise. But I think the government cannot have it both ways. Last March 26, while speaking in Kingston, the Prime Minister had this to say:

> A Liberal government also would set up an all-party Commons defence committee right away to take the defence issue away from partisan politics. The committee's work would be part of a Liberal government review of Canadian defence policy to determine an appropriate role for this country.

Such changes would take considerable time. We now find ourselves in the position where any report which the committee may make may be completely contradictory to the decisions the minister is currently taking.

It is said that the work of this committee will be part of the government's review of defence policy. If it is only a part, it should be consistent with the whole; and this is why I object most strongly to the fact that important decisions on defence policy are being announced before the special committee on defence has had any opportunity to study these specific matters.

It is said that the minister has confined his decisions to housekeeping matters. They are much more than that, because housekeeping matters in national defence must fit into a long term policy. If that long term policy is not yet formulated, the minister's so-called housekeeping decisions cannot be intelligently made. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in that same speech in Kingston on March 26, had this to say—and the fact that time has proved him so obviously wrong in this second statement removes credence from the other one. He said on that occasion: "As soon as parliament meets we will act to bring the muddle and confusion of defence to an end. We will satisfy Canada's defence commitments to our allies." If this is bringing the muddle to an end, I would hate to see the muddle in full steam. In my opinion the Canadian people have hardly ever been more confused about the problems of defence than they are at the present time.

In addition, there is a great deal of apprehension in various parts of the country, because defence decisions have an important bearing on the economy. People are uncertain as to what the future of large defence bases in any particular area may be. My chief concern is that the announcements which have already been made do not bear the earmarks of a policy evolved by defence experts. They bear all the earmarks of pressure by treasury board, I presume, in the process of evolving the estimates of the Department of National Defence for the next fiscal year. They bear all the earmarks of a decree from treasury board instructing the department to cut expenditures at short notice.

I have sympathy for the minister in these circumstances, and I suspect this is the position in which he finds himself. It is true that we should not have a defence policy which envisages spending more money than we can afford. But that is not to say we shall get best value for our defence dollar if we make sudden cut-backs in the program or in any given situation. It was said long ago that the pen is mightier than the sword. This situation bears the imprint of the personality of certain people who believe that a red pencil is mightier than defence philosophy. I hope the minister will stand up against these demands for a sudden cut in expenditure until a reasoned policy can be evolved and until the special committee on defence has an opportunity to record its findings. I hope he will then act on the basis of those findings and on the basis of the evidence presented to the committee, much of which has been of a high order. The government can make the decisions and be responsible for them. No one suggests that the government has to accept holus-bolus any recommendations which the defence committee may make, but I feel the committee will be able to make recommendations worthy of very careful study by the government, recommendations which will be helpful to the government in evolving a long range policy on defence matters. For this reason I think it is most unfortunate that pressure is now being placed on the Department of National Defence to save money, in an attempt to make the deficits a little smaller in the next fiscal year, before a thorough study can be given to all the effects such sudden cuts may have.

Recommendations have been made to the government already with regard to national defence. They may be considered to be minor in character in some respects—I refer to the recommendations of the royal commission on government organization, the Glassco commission. In this report, this commission made certain recommendations to the government. It recommended the closing down of only one defence establishment, the defence college in Victoria, B.C. As far as I know, no action has been taken to implement this recommendation and I do not know what action, if any, has been taken in connection with the other recommendations of this royal commission. This is one phase of defence housekeeping, as the minister calls it, where a fairly thorough study has already been made. If economies are to be effected I would suggest that the minister confine them at the present time to those suggested in the report of this royal commission.

I wish to turn now for a few moments to a subject which the minister brought up, that of submarines. This relates not only to the navy but, also, to the air force and it raises most important considerations. In our day and age there have been great changes in the concept of submarine warfare and anti-submarine warfare. With the advent of nuclear powered submarines and submarines capable of firing medium range ballistic missiles, a new threat is posed to our security, defence against which poses a difficult problem. Such submarines are no longer a weapon to be used against shipping alone; they pose a threat against land bases and against our cities, both on the coast and several hundreds of miles inland, depending on how close such submarines may get. Thus there is a great new defence policy required to deal with this extremely difficult problem. There is no defence against these missiles. The only defence possible would be to keep these submarines beyond the range of our coasts. If this is to be done, or attempted, a great new role remains to be filled in antisubmarine work. I would agree with the minister that a thorough examination of this whole problem of defence against submarines is most necessary, but I would most strongly recommend to him that no decision be taken with regard to our present forces in maritime command until the results of such a study become available. I have reason to believe there is a distinct possibility that the maritime command of the R.C.A.F. will be forced to cut its expenditure drastically in the next fiscal year. I would hope that the minister and his colleagues from the maritime provinces and British Columbia would recognize the importance of any decision along this line, and resist any ideas that their colleagues on treasury board might have to cut the expenditures of maritime command back, so that there may be money to spend somewhere else. The role of maritime command in the R.C.A.F. and of the antisubmarine branch of the navy is a most important one and, as I have said already, and I reiterate, I think it is most essential that no drastic action be taken along the lines of changing our ability to cope with the submarine threat until this study is completed.

If I may be more specific and come nearer home, I am naturally very much concerned about the future of the R.C.A.F. base at Summerside in my province. I want to turn now for a few moments from the question of the purely defence aspects of this matter and point out to the minister that the most serious consideration should be given to the economic impact of any drastic cut in existing defence establishments, especially those in areas of relatively small population where there are no other industries to cushion the blow if there is a cut-back in such military establishments.

If the R.C.A.F. station at Summerside were to be cut back this would have a profound effect on the economy not only of that area but of the whole province. Although this is only one R.C.A.F. station, I think I am correct in saying that looked at in the rather tiny background, relatively speaking, of the economy of Prince Edward Island it is perhaps the second most important industry of that province. Its removal or drastic cut-back or even slight cut-back would have a very serious effect on the economy of that area. I would hope that the minister would use his best arguments, and I think there are many in favour of maintaining that base, to convince his colleagues that to cut back this station would be a serious mistake not only from a defence point of view, but because it would have a very detrimental effect on the economy of that area and on the employment situation there.

I am generally not very concerned about whether or not we in this parliament make the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) an honest man, but I should like to remind the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) that the Secretary of State had this to say, speaking in Summerside on March 26 last:

> It is the Liberal policy to see that every able person willing to work will have the opportunity to earn a decent living.

I should like to point out to the minister that if the air force station at Summerside is cut back there will be a great number of people there who will have their means of livelihood removed and it will be a severe dislocation to the economy of the province of Prince Edward Island. I might say that the fact that the Secretary of State made this statement does not necessarily mean it is now a policy that is embraced by the Liberal government.

I said there was confusion as far as defence policy was concerned, and that is not surprising because contradictory statements have been made not only in this house but with greater frequency during the election campaign by members who now sit on the treasury benches. Almost at the same time as the Secretary of State was saying that it is Liberal policy to see that every able person willing to work will have the opportunity to earn a decent living, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) at the opposite end of the country made this statement in Vancouver on February 25, 1963:

> People who say that we are going to eliminate unemployment simply don't know the country.

I tend to agree with that statement, but at the moment I should like to point out to the minister that the impression was left not only by the Secretary of State but by his colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught), and by everyone else speaking on behalf of his party, that this very important base at Summerside, which is so important to the economy of Prince Edward Island, would not be downgraded or cut back in any way. I am not raising this point at the moment for political advantage or anything of that sort. I am speaking as an islander and I wish the Solicitor General well in his attempts with the Minister of National Defence to convince treasury board that this is not necessary.

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I have the pleasure of speaking as a member of the defence committee. As a member of that committee I believe that its deliberations have been of value and help not only to the members of the committee but also, I believe, to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). Over the course of the meetings since June 27 we have had a variety of witnesses, all of them learned men, no doubt, in their art. However, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), as I understood his remarks this afternoon, apparently does not believe that the defence committee has been of much value, in that it has not been allowed to get to the bottom of things and no one has listened to it. He also says that the government has spread confusion and unrest, particularly by not waiting for the decisions of the defence committee and specifically by scrapping the general purpose frigate program.

I submit that the committee has had the opportunity of examining a great deal of the defence policy of Canada and especially with reference to the general purpose frigate. Since the committee's first meeting on June 27 it has heard many times about the general purpose frigate, about its speed, about its performance, about its cost and what it can do. We found out that the cost for eight frigates is $452 million, considerably up from the $300 million forecast a year or two ago. We can say, of course, that this is because it requires munitions, stores and various other equipment, but as we found out on October 15 the total cost is $452 million.

On October 18 we learned about the speed of the proposed frigate vis-à-vis a nuclear submarine. When a frigate that is supposed to go out, detect, locate and destroy enemy submarines can only travel 27 knots per hour it is not going to be very effective against a nuclear submarine that can travel 40 or 50 knots per hour submerged.

Mr. Langlois: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is somewhat off the subamendment at the moment.

Mr. Temple: Mr. Speaker, I am coming very quickly to the matter of the subamendment. As a matter of interest, though, I thought that the subamendment was a little bit at variance with the amendment. However, members of the house have ruled that the subamendment does in fact bear a close resemblance to the amendment so I do not think I am too far off base. I have spoken briefly about the speed of the frigate compared with the speed of a nuclear submarine. We also found out that the proposed general purpose frigate was somewhat inferior in speed to the latest Leander and Whitby class frigates produced in the United Kingdom.

This afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre also said that the Minister of National Defence was scuttling the navy. He said that the Royal Canadian Navy was shattered and the effectiveness of the armed forces was reduced. I should like to ask this: Am I correct in taking from the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) that we would help the navy, we would help the defence of Canada, we would increase the effectiveness of the armed forces, by continuing with the acquisition of eight obsolete general purpose frigates?

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that was what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre implied. In fact, there was more than an implication; there was a definite statement that Canada should have eight obsolete general frigates. When the hon. member makes these remarks, I would refer him to the testimony of Commodore Plomer, General Foulkes and General Simonds before the committee, all of whom held opinions to the contrary about the acquisition of the general purpose frigates. I think, Mr. Speaker, it has been obvious to the members of the defence committee for quite some time that we should not go ahead with the acquisition of the general purpose frigates. I think the testimony that came out in the committee was of great help to the Minister of National Defence and his department.

No doubt my hon. friends across the aisle wish to hear some remarks about nuclear arms being based in Quebec. I shall leave that part of the subject to other qualified members of our party. I merely wish to say that I believe the committee is doing good work, will continue to do good work and that if the committee, the Department of National Defence and the minister continue to co-operate we will do a lot of good for the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, coming as they did after our subamendment on nuclear arms in the state of Quebec, I was rather surprised to hear the arguments put forth by the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). However, there is surely one point that nobody could have forgotten. Last April a member of the United States cabinet, namely the defence secretary, stated that the Bomarcs we were seeking to instal at La Macaza base were obsolete and would serve but one purpose, that is to make good targets for Russian atomic bombs or nuclear weapons in case of an attack against the United States or Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there are three nuclear arms bases in the province of Quebec: Val d'Or, Bagotville and La Macaza.

And those bases are to be used for one thing only, not for defensive purposes, because, as stated by the U.S. defence secretary, those weapons are obsolete, but as targets for the nuclear weapons that might be directed against the United States and Canada. That means that Canadians are to be used as targets for the nuclear attacks which would otherwise be directed against the United States.

Mr. Speaker, if those weapons are efficient, why were they not installed north of the American border itself? Then the American territory would have been protected. But no, they are installed 400 miles farther north, especially to prevent the first enemy nuclear bombs from hitting the United States and to have them fall on the heads of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we may well ask the Minister of National Defence whether, under such circumstances, the wives and homes of Canadian citizens are not just as important as the wives and homes of Americans.

That is when the Minister of National Defence jumped to his feet—I would practically say like a comedian—to speak of the responsibilities of the present government. I submit that the first responsibility of the government is towards the citizens of Canada and not those of another country. Its foremost concern should be the Canadian people.

In my opinion, the first duty of the present government was to commit Canada to a policy of world disarmament and to encourage all countries to follow a policy of nuclear disarmament because, as we all know, a nuclear war is unthinkable today since it would destroy the whole world.

By refusing to accept nuclear weapons, Canada could have kept on playing that part, but by joining the nuclear club, our country can hardly act as peacemaker or advocate nuclear disarmament.

When I went to the United Nations on September 15 last, the present government had just made known its intention to store nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. This was only a few days after a hundred or so countries of the world had signed the Moscow agreement banning nuclear tests throughout the world.

While the situation was less strained, while countries were effecting nuclear disarmament and it was agreed to stop nuclear tests, Canada was the only country in the world willing to store nuclear weapons. As a matter of fact, since then no other country has stored such weapons.

And yet, remember the fight there was last year, around the same date, when the United States objected to the storing of nuclear arms in Cuba because it was a neighbouring country. Well, Canada also is a neighbour of Russia. What if the storing of nuclear arms were to start a nuclear war, which is what almost happened last year?

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, we object to the storing of nuclear arms in the province of Quebec. Moreover, we do not think that the role of Canada is a nuclear one, but rather that its role is to work towards peace and disarmament throughout the world. We also feel that a nuclear war is unthinkable and that the presence of nuclear arms on our soil must be avoided as much as possible so that our country may be spared the hardship that might be the lot of many countries.

That is why we are against nuclear stockpiling within the state of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, a great many municipal councils, social clubs and national organizations are opposed to the acquisition of nuclear weapons by Canada or at least by the province of Quebec. I should like to draw to the attention of the Minister of National Defence resolutions which were passed by municipal councils and national organizations in that connection.

I have here a resolution dated July 8 which was adopted by the town of Port Alfred, county of Chicoutimi, and which is signed by both Mayor J. E. A. Beaulieu and town clerk Willie Tremblay. The relevant part of the resolution reads as follows:

> That the town of Port Alfred protest to the Minister of National Defence against the stockpiling of nuclear weapons at the R.C.A.F. base at Bagotville, and request that the government reconsider its decision and refuse to accept any kind of nuclear weapon in Canada. And if it is proven that the country needs them, the government must see to it that they are stored in a place where they would offer no hazard for our populations, should an accident occur.
> Therefore, the town of Port Alfred should canvass all the towns of the area, from Dolbeau to the Baie des Ha! Ha!, and ask them to second its request to the government.

(Text):

That city, Mr. Speaker, is located three miles away from the military base of Bagotville, where squadrons are stationed and where nuclear arms are stored.

Besides the request from the town of Port Alfred, I have another one from the town of Alma, in the constituency of Lake St. John, which is signed by his worship Mayor J. L.

Desmeules and Mr. Paul Tremblay, deputy clerk, and which reads as follows:

It is moved by alderman Dr. Raymond Grenon, seconded by alderman Maurice Fortin, and unanimously adopted, to second the motion adopted by the city of Port Alfred to the effect that it opposes the federal government plan to store nuclear warheads at the Bagotville base of the R.C.A.F.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: All good Liberals.

Mr. Gregoire: These are two official protests from public corporations in the ridings of Lake St. John and Chicoutimi, two of the largest cities in those regions.

Moreover, I received another letter of protest from the Societe St. Jean Baptiste, Saguenay branch. By the way, I know very well the former regional president of that society. It is a resolution adopted on July 30, 1963, at the annual meeting of the members of the executive of the Saguenay branch, which reads as follows:

The members of the executive of the Societe St. Jean Baptiste, Saguenay branch, protest against your government's decision to equip with nuclear warheads the planes at the air force base at Bagotville and to store them.

That dangerous situation will certainly endanger the life of the citizens. We know that the government will go ahead anyway, but it will be against our will.

In the hope that you will ask the proper authorities on our behalf to put a stop to such a situation, I remain, yours very truly—

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the representations made by the municipalities, I have here the July 3 issue of La Terre de Chez Nous in which the Catholic Farmers' Union protests as follows:

The Catholic Farmers' Union is made up of over 43,000 farmers—

In the province of Quebec only, and this is what they say:

Instead of joining in the arms race, our country could play a much more useful part in the world by urging other countries to promote disarmament and peace and by providing assistance to underdeveloped countries.

Some hon. Members: Well said.

Mr. Gregoire: And the article of the Quebec Catholic Farmers' Union goes on as follows:

Quebec farmers, as all French Canadians, were against conscription in the 1914 and 1939 wars. The prospect of an atomic war is a thousand times more horrible than past conscription.

—Mr. Speaker, some municipalities, St. Jean Baptiste societies or other social clubs wrote to ask me to protest against the storage of nuclear weapons in Quebec using approximately the same terms as the St. Jean Baptiste society, from the Saguenay area used in its letter:

We know that the government will do it just the same without our consent.

—I replied as follows: I think that my request will be useless since the Department of National Defence does not take any advice from anybody and makes sport of everybody.

Mr. Speaker, nevertheless we want to record the protest of the province of Quebec, and members from that province in this house know very well at the present time that such is the opinion of all their fellow citizens from Quebec to protest strongly against the storage of nuclear weapons in that province, in the counties of Lotbiniere, Mercier, St. James or any other one, and the Liberal members know that very well.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question. Can he explain to us, in view of the stand taken by the present Prime Minister, who was then leader of the opposition, how we still managed however to get 47 Liberal members elected in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, the first three words of the amendment to the amendment explains that—

An hon. Member: Because your leader believes in it.

Mr. Gregoire: The explanation is found in the first three words of the amendment to the amendment:

"subserviently agreeing to the storing of nuclear arms"

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals, the hon. members for Lotbiniere and Mercier included, know full well that during the last general election they accepted contributions from the U.S. financiers to bolster their slush fund.

They have not been elected by the voters of the province of Quebec, but by American money.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: The hon. member for Lotbiniere and the others know that very well—

[Text]

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is no longer in the house. He is standing behind the bar.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I can see it hurts. There is a wound at the broken arm. They cannot stand the truth now, because you know very well that the last election was won with the help of American financiers.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, may I—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): If the hon. gentleman has a question to ask the hon. member for Lapointe, will he do so?

Abandonment of Defence Projects

Mr. Choquette: I have a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege?

What the hon. member for Lapointe says is absolutely untrue. In the riding of Lotbiniere—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I have allowed the hon. gentleman to stray away from his place, but I would rather he would not stray away from the subamendment.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: It is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that during the last election campaign, the Liberals promised to acquire nuclear arms and that their arguments had the support of American finance.

It is on account of the help of American finance, which bolstered the Liberal party's coffers, that they won the last election, and everybody knows that the cash-box was well supplied. We all keep in mind the great number of television programs and full page advertisements in the newspapers.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order, order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I was entirely within the limits of the subamendment while I was explaining that to accept servilely—

means someone who can be bribed. This is the word I was trying to explain, and it is included in the subamendment.

Mr. Speaker, if I was dealing with that point, it is because the Liberal members of the province of Quebec are well aware that the Quebec voters do not support the storage of nuclear arms in the state of Quebec.

Tomorrow, during the vote on the motion, if they do not support the subamendment, the reason will be that they are tied, they have been bribed by American financiers who have generously replenished the election coffers.

Mr. Jean Berger (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, could I put a question to the hon. member?

[Text]

May I ask a question of the hon. member for Lapointe?

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten).]

Mr. Gregoire: On one condition, that I will have the time back at the end of my speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: The hon. member claims, and keeps insisting on the fact, that the Liberal members were elected thanks to U.S. funds. I should like him to prove it or stop making fallacious assertions against several members from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, it is very easy. I put on the order paper of the house—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hon. gentleman from Lapointe has the floor and has the right to make his speech without interruption. If any hon. member wants to ask him a question, then the hon. member for Lapointe may yield the floor. Otherwise he will continue with his speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I shall have ample time to do that since I have put on the order paper a notice of motion for the setting up of a committee to consider the sources of the election expenditures of the four political parties. Then, I shall be able to give proof.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, we know one thing, and it is that the province of Quebec does not want it. And I challenge the present government to hold a referendum, to have the courage to hold a referendum in the province of Quebec, as the Liberals did in 1942 on the conscription issue. At that time, the members from the province of Quebec reacted according to the will of their electors. And in the present case, they would soon realize that those electors are against the storing of nuclear weapons in the province of Quebec.

I would ask them who pretend to ignore where the funds came from for their last election, I would ask them to have at least the decency to vote according to the wishes and desires of their electors in their ridings. Now that they are sitting here, they could take the most decent way to defer to the desire of their electors in their riding, that is to vote for the subamendment against the acquisition of nuclear weapons in the state of Quebec.

An hon. Member: Very well.

Mr. Gregoire: We have said in the province of Quebec, that the part for Canada to play would be to strive for peace in the world and not for destruction and for war. That is what we said.

It was not nuclear arms we asked for, Mr. Speaker, but bread, butter, homes and work for everybody in this country.

While we are trying to suggest ideas to improve our system so that every Canadian citizen can find an adequate and decent living in this country, the present government has but one thing in mind, nuclear weapons, the storing of nuclear weapons we shall not even control but which will be controlled by foreigners, by the Americans.

When I see the surprise on the face of the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), I find that to be the normal attitude of the guy who could not care less, who crawls on his belly, who drags along, acts like a sheep, is unable to think for himself and lets others do it for him.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being ten o'clock p.m. this house stands adjourned until 2.30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 29, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—ANSWER TO STARRED QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I rise on a question of privilege which affects all members of this house. It concerns the veracity of returns and statements made by two occupants of the treasury benches. I regret very much that I have to refer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, because hitherto he has always appeared to me to be forthright. However, I am afraid the evidence I have on this matter in uncontrovertible. What I have to say affects also the minister of northern affairs in connection with a return he made to my notice of motion for the production of papers, No. 64.

However, my question of privilege affects more directly the Secretary of State for External Affairs in relation to my starred question, No. 1,235, which appeared on the order paper on October 4. It was answered by the hon. gentleman on October 21. In order to lay the groundwork for my question of privilege I have to read from starred question No. 1,235, as follows:

> Has the government of Canada or any official or employee of the government had any consultations with either the government of the province of British Columbia or with the government of the United States of America or with any official or employee of either of the said governments with respect to (a) the maintenance or paving of the Alaska highway?

The question continues but what follows is not relevant to my question of privilege. The answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on October 21 was as follows:

> There have been no recent negotiations between the governments of Canada and the United States on any of the five subjects mentioned in the question although there have been some informal and inconclusive discussions with regard to the Haines cut-off highway.

The remainder of the answer is irrelevant to the point I am making.

I have, Mr. Speaker, a letter dated October 3, 1963, from the officer in charge of Canadian affairs, department of state, Washington, which letter reads in part as follows:

> Discussions have also been held in the past with officials of the Canadian government and have revealed that, in Canadian thinking, paving of the Canadian portion of the Alaska highway has quite low priority, owing to the limited economic benefit which would be derived for Canada relative to the cost. In their view, Canadian funds would be more profitably expended on other highway projects in Canada, some of which might also be of more immediate benefit to Alaska than paving the Alaska highway.
> Following a recent report of an alleged renewed interest on the part of the Canadian Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, Arthur Laing, the department requested the embassy in Ottawa to seek clarification from responsible Canadian officials. Upon inquiry the embassy learned that the story was apparently based on a passing comment to a reporter and was not an official statement.

The letter goes on to say:

> The embassy has been informed that this statement reflects the official position of the Canadian government. This would seem to indicate that no change in the Canadian government's views has occurred.

My question of privilege is that the answer given to me by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is false if we are to believe the information in this letter dated October 3, 1963, which was well before the minister gave his answer to me in the house. The letter is signed by Delmar R. Carlson, officer in charge, Canadian affairs, department of state, Washington.

I think the house must either have this matter satisfactorily explained by the minister or must accept the conclusion that there has been deception in the minister's reply.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend will agree there has been no deception. If there has been wrong information given, that will be corrected. I shall look into this matter at once, but I assure my hon. friend that the answer I gave was the answer that I believed the circumstances warranted. However, I will be glad to examine what my hon. friend has said in relation to the answer given and to the facts as I am informed of their existence. I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Nielsen: May I say a brief word in conclusion on the question of privilege and by way of reply. It seems to me again, Mr. Speaker, that we must get proper answers to the questions we ask. I should not have to go through the department of state in Washington. I do not want to put my questions on the order paper in the United States congress.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier) presented the second report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, before the report is concurred in, I would like to point out that, at this morning's meeting, the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines unanimously agreed to a motion requesting the interested authorities to see to it that the reports of the committee are published in both languages at the same time, in view of the fact that this morning we received only the English text, although the committee had asked that, in future, the report be published simultaneously in both French and English.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: In reply to the hon. member for Lapointe I must say that the only question before the house is this motion. Therefore I propose we restrict ourselves to the motion which has been presented.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is away on public business, I wish to announce that he has just signed, on behalf of the Canadian government, a long term wheat agreement with the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic. In connection with the negotiation of the agreement, the Minister of Trade and Commerce welcomed to Ottawa Mr. J. Poula, Czechoslovak vice minister of foreign trade, who is in the gallery today witnessing our proceedings. Mr. Poula signed the agreement on behalf of the government of his country.

The agreement is for a period of five years during which Czechoslovakia will purchase and Canada will supply 1.2 million metric tons of Canadian wheat, that is, about 44 million bushels, for shipment in the following quantities: In the first year of the agreement, 350,000 metric tons, of which 120,000 tons will be shipped before July 31, 1964; in the second year of the agreement, between 300,000 and 400,000 tons; in the third, fourth and fifth years, a combined total of between 450,000 and 550,000 metric tons, provided that the quantity in each of these years shall not be less than 120,000 tons.

The Canadian wheat board and Koospol have concluded the first sales contract under this agreement, which provides for the shipment of 120,000 metric tons of wheat during the summer of 1964. Purchases under this agreement will be facilitated by the extension of credit arrangements under the Export Credits Insurance Act providing for payment over three years.

There is a long standing tradition of friendly and fruitful trade relations between Canada and Czechoslovakia. The house will share my view that this important new agreement between the two governments is a clear indication of the desire of both parties to see an increase in the development of mutually advantageous trade.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am sure all Canadians will welcome the extension of these sales to countries behind the iron curtain. I should like to say a word of appreciation to his excellency the ambassador for Czechoslovakia for the very long and careful negotiations he has carried on with the Canadian government over the last two or three years leading up to this long term agreement. Since the announcement was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I think he can assure the house that there are documents on file outlining the conditions that we thought would make an excellent basis for a long term agreement. I am pleased indeed to see that this idea has been put into effect and has been accepted by both parties.

I think, too, the house will recognize the wisdom of the course followed a year ago, when the first item of business in that new parliament was the extension of the Export Credits Insurance Act to provide $400 million under this act to cover these new sales. I hope that new sales announced in the next week or so will be of equal size to the one we have heard about today.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I am sure the people of Canada are not particularly concerned about which government was in office when these negotiations were started. What the people of Canada will be pleased to know is that an agreement has been concluded. We in this party would like to offer our congratulations to the Canadian wheat board upon concluding this agreement, and to express our thanks to the Czechoslovakian ambassador who has carried on the negotiations on behalf of his government.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the succession of sales agreements that have been concluded in recent months all indicate the value of having a wheat marketing board and carrying on an orderly wheat marketing policy. In spite of the criticism we have heard from south of the border with regard to fixed price agreements, I think in the long run both the importers of wheat and the producers of wheat in Canada will gain from this arrangement.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): We in this group, Mr. Speaker, welcome the announcement that has just been made in respect of the sale of grain to Czechoslovakia. We offer our congratulations to the wheat board upon negotiating this deal. I think, too, we would like to take this opportunity of supporting the government in the action they have taken to provide the credit that was necessary to bring the deal to fruition.

I think the succession of large grain sales made during the last few months points to the fact that Canada is resuming her position as the major exporter in the international wheat market, and it is particularly welcome following the excellent crop Canada has had, and which is now completely harvested and in storage.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that we have learned of this new sales agreement signed with another of the countries behind the iron curtain.

These countries recognize, I am sure, the superiority of our grain or wheat production; no doubt this is why they are interested in buying part of our national production.

However, our eastern farmers will see with a certain anxiety, perhaps even with anguish, ships sailing along the St. Lawrence, and filled with wheat for Czechoslovakia and Russia.

In addition to the wheat which is being sold to the countries behind the iron curtain we would like to see some wheat being sold inside our own borders, and more particularly along the St. Lawrence; our eastern farmers would then also benefit from our production at a price which would be every bit as profitable as the price which is offered foreign countries.

Mr. Speaker, we like to hear statements of that kind coming from the minister about sales to other countries, but we sincerely hope that the day is at hand when the Canadian government will announce a policy favourable to our eastern farmers.

[Text]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of his statement concerning the wheat agreement with Czechoslovakia. Is the statement that he made to the house today a duplication of the statement he made to the people of the United States while in that country over the week end, speaking to a university group, or is this another statement he has issued to the Canadian people?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would hardly call it a duplication but rather an amplification.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the public accounts, volumes 1, 2 and 3, and the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962, laid before the house on January 21, 1963, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Motion agreed to.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SHIP CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce to the house departmental programming plans for the construction of 12 survey and research ships at a cost of $50 million, with tender calls during the next five years.

The ships are to be used to meet the vital needs for charting and studying Canada's tremendous expanses of coastal and inland waters. The new plans simply mean that the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has an impressive shipbuilding program to replace obsolete ships and to provide the additional ships so urgently needed for hydrographic and oceanographic work.

The new program will be carried out in two phases. Phase one calls for the construction of five vessels at a cost of some $20 million, with tender call during the next 14 months. Phase two covers the construction of the remaining seven vessels at a cost of $30 million.

The vessels in phase one comprise (1) two major survey and research vessels, at a cost of from $5 million to $6 million each, for the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, designed for work in the Arctic as well as for duty in coastal waters and in the open oceans; (2) two tidal current survey vessels, at a cost of from $3.75 million to $4 million each, one for each coast; third, a research vessel primarily to support the oceanography program of the institute of oceanography at the University of British Columbia, at a cost of $1 million.

Phase two of the shipbuilding program comprises, first, two additional major survey vessels capable of hydrographic and oceanography work in the Arctic and deep waters, at a cost of from $5 to $6 million each; second, five minor survey vessels designed for work in Canada's inshore and inland waters, at a cost of from $1.6 to $2 million each.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to hear the minister give us some details on that shipbuilding program involving research ships for hydrographic and oceanographic work. That statement by the minister tends to continue and to confirm the oceanographic development program instituted by the previous government.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it would be well to recall to the house the various phases of the work carried out by the previous administration in these fields, and more particularly the setting up of the Bedford oceanographic centre, near Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The Conservative government also built H.M.C.S. Hudson, which was described as a floating laboratory. I am sure the minister will agree with me that this ship is recognized as one of the most modern in that particular field.

The oceanographic and hydrographic programs need to be pushed in Canada. The Conservative party initiated that action and this government is carrying on, but all the Canadians are the ones who will eventually benefit from it.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, this is a necessary program and we are pleased with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the statement just made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Benidickson). Personally, I regret one thing, though I do not know if my colleagues will agree with me. It is that our party did not have the opportunity to initiate a shipbuilding policy in the field of oceanography.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the house that in the province of Quebec, especially in the Quebec city area, there are many shipyards, and we hope that the department will give some tenderers of this area the opportunity to build some of its ships. In fact, our facilities in that field are very good and it must be noted also that unemployment is quite serious there. Consequently, I ask the government to take this suggestion into consideration, since we have excellent shipyards in the Quebec city area.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we shall not dally any more to say that we also approve that shipbuilding program as announced today by the government. When it comes to developing our country by peaceful means rather than war instruments, we agree and can only congratulate the government for the statement it has made today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST INDIES—INQUIRY AS TO ADDITIONAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of a statement ascribed yesterday to Prime Minister Barrow of Barbados regarding the question of additional aid and assistance to commonwealth countries in the West Indies. The right hon. gentleman recently stated there would be an increase in the assistance to be given under aid programs. Would he give consideration to expanding assistance to our friends and fellow members of the commonwealth in the area adjacent to North America?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): My answer to the leader of the opposition is in the affirmative. The government will give consideration—I may say the government is giving consideration—to this matter.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTHERN RHODESIA—RESOLUTION RESPECTING ARMS SHIPMENTS BY GREAT BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Perhaps I could take this opportunity to deal with a question asked me yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition regarding a resolution at the United Nations concerning the shipment of arms to Southern Rhodesia, about which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam also inquired. The sponsors were 41 African and Asian members in addition to Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, and Yugoslavia. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would agree to my tabling the list of sponsors, in view of its length and in order to save the time of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the ruling by Mr. Speaker to the effect that responsibility lies with the government for convening standing committees of the house, will the government take immediate action to convene the committee on agriculture and colonization?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): My understanding is that Your Honour indicated that it was the custom for the chief whip, who is after all not a member of the government, to do this. But I have conferred with the chief whip, and he is doing his best to get this done as quickly as possible.

[Later:]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could supplement the answer I gave to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I have now been informed that a meeting was held at two o'clock today, the very thing the hon. gentleman asked for.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Would the government be prepared to have the house refer to this committee the whole question of prices in Canada as related to bread, flour and wheat?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a matter which the government will have to consider. I cannot commit the government without consultation, but I should be glad to take that question up with my colleagues.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State as house leader. My question is supplementary to the statement he made earlier today. Is he aware that a meeting of the agriculture and colonization committee called by me was held at two o'clock this afternoon, and that the committee elected a chairman and vice chairman, passed a motion to print its proceedings, and took other matters of substance into consideration?

Mr. Pickersgill: I had heard, Mr. Speaker, that this meeting took place, and I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his initiative and enterprise.

INQUIRY AS TO COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER BILLS C-83 AND C-84

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Secretary of State related to the question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. Can the hon. gentleman inform the house when a committee will be set up to consider Bills C-83 and C-84, in accordance with a commitment he made to this house on July 8?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I would be glad to make a statement about that. The hon. member for Lapointe was good enough to assure me the other day—I am sure he will not consider this any breach of confidence—that he did not feel there was any need to have a committee set up before second reading was given to the bills. He also indicated that as far as he and his friends were concerned they were prepared to give second reading to the bills whenever the government called them.

I know the former minister of northern affairs is interested in seeing these bills move forward, because they represent his own policy. If we could get unanimous agreement to have second reading of these bills with very limited debate, the government would be only too happy to bring them forward. I say this in the light of a situation which is well known to the hon. gentleman, the situation in the Mackenzie where it is proposed to establish a greater degree of self government. I should be glad to have an opportunity of consulting with hon. gentlemen opposite to see whether, in the circumstances I have mentioned, these bills could not be brought down this week.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question. Does the Secretary of State not consider that these items are of sufficient importance to demand more than a restricted debate? This represents a major step forward in confederation, and I should think it would require maximum consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman's question deserves a somewhat extended answer. This does pose a serious problem with respect to the timetable of parliament. There are many matters which merit debate, but the time in which debate can take place is limited. In this particular case, because of a special situation which the government inherited—I am not being critical; we approve of the policy the hon. gentleman sponsored—it is really necessary that this legislation should be dealt with promptly if the policy laid down by the previous government is to be carried out. It is not possible both to have an extended debate and to deal with this matter promptly, and the house will have to make up its mind which it prefers.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Since these bills could have been sent to the committee four weeks ago, does the hon. gentleman not think that if they were sent to committee now they could be given the consideration, for a week or for two weeks, which the hon. member for Brandon-Souris has suggested they should receive? Such discussion in committee would probably lead to more unanimity in the house. Let us hear the people of the north before the bills are placed before us here.

Mr. Pickersgill: That, of course, would be a wonderful idea if it were not completely contrary to the rules.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROTECTION AGAINST FOOD POISONING FROM FISH PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the warning by the United States food and drug administration that some smoked fish products from the great lakes area contain botulous organisms, what special measures are being taken by the Department of Fisheries to ensure that there is no danger to consumers from botulism present in fish taken from the great lakes and processed or offered for sale in Canada?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): We are fully aware of the situation, and we deplore the unfortunate poisoning incidents which have occurred recently. The matter is presently under investigation by officials of my department in conjunction with officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare. A complete statement on the situation and on the action being taken by the two departments involved will be made tomorrow.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VAL D'OR, QUE.—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF NUCLEAR BASE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Is work now under way at Val d'Or in order to build an American nuclear base?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker; no work has been started to erect a United States nuclear base at Val d'Or.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister—

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister give us the assurance that no work will be undertaken at Val d'Or along those lines?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: The only work that is being done is work for a Canadian base, and I should be very pleased if the hon. member would let me know whether he would like to have it in his constituency or not.

PROPOSED AFFILIATION OF C.M.R. WITH UNIVERSITY OF MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Following the request of the St. Jean Baptiste society, does the government intend to recommend the official affiliation of the College Militaire Royal de St. Jean to the University of Montreal, so that the curriculum may be entirely in keeping with the former training of the cadets?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this matter is still under consideration.

Mr. Pigeon: It is taking a long time.

Mr. Dupuis: It will take less time than under the Conservative administration.

Mr. Pigeon: We did not have the time; we were defeated.

[Text]

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS—POSSIBLE REVOCATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a question?

Could the minister tell us whether it is the government's intention to rescind the order in council regarding the Three Rivers bridge and whether he has met with the authorities of the corporation of the Three Rivers bridge about that matter?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): As to the first question, may I say the matter is under consideration. There is a grave question as to the validity of the order or purported order in council. As to the second matter, I expect to meet with the bridge authorities some time in the next few days.

Mr. Balcer: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question. Has his department not given a legal opinion on the validity of this order in council in these last few days?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I am not aware that a legal opinion has been given, but I will be glad to look into the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice?

Can the minister tell us whether the statement made by the secretary of the corporation, Mr. François Nobert, in Three Rivers last week, to the effect that the Department of Justice had confirmed the validity of that order in council, is true?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen or read Mr. Nobert's statement in the newspapers, but I will be pleased to inquire and see whether there is any contradiction between his statement and the records of the Department of Justice.

[Text]

FINANCE

MUNICIPAL LOAN LEGISLATION—AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a question?

Can the minister tell the house whether an agreement has been signed between the government of the province of Quebec and the municipal development and loan board?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the agreement has been signed by the province of Quebec and is now en route to Ottawa to be signed here.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Can the minister tell us whether this agreement provides that federal inspectors will have access to the accounts of the province of Quebec? Has he received a protest from the Quebec government in that connection?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted to give a slightly longer answer to this particular question than is usual for me. In section 7 (2) of the Municipal Development and Loan Act, which provisions hon. members may recall were among those included in the bill as a result of the discussions held with the provinces at the conference at the end of last July, there is subsection (d) which provides inter alia that the board will have the right to inspect from time to time any municipal project in respect of which a loan has been made under the agreement. The agreement referred to is the agreement to be made by the municipal development and loan board with the provinces which wish to do so.

The province of Quebec has decided to make such an agreement with the board. From the very beginning of the discussions that the board has had with Quebec and other provinces concerned, a provision has been included in the various draft agreements for inspection of the projects and related records by the board. This is necessary, of course, so that the board will be able to assure parliament that parliament's instructions have been carried out. The provincial representatives after discussion have agreed to this.

I think it should be stated that the board is in no way trying to vary the spirit of what was agreed to with the province of Quebec and the other provinces in July, but is merely carrying out the will of parliament. The Quebec authorities, I am sure, fully recognize this. As I said a minute ago, I am informed that they have signed the agreement and are returning it to Ottawa today to be signed by the federal authorities. I have had no suggestion from the Quebec authorities that they object in any way to the draft agreement. In fact they have agreed to it.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the minister if a standard agreement was presented to all the provinces, and how many of the provinces have signed and forwarded agreements to Ottawa for signature?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gordon: There is a standard agreement which has been reviewed, discussed and agreed to by all the provinces, and I am hoping at the end of this week to make a complete report to the house on the status of the various agreements. It is this week that they are being signed, and I am not sure which ones have been signed to date and which ones are still to be signed.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): A further supplementary question. Would the government consider renegotiating the federal inspection clause at a future time?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the agreement that I believe is just in the process of being settled with the province of Quebec, I do not know why we would now consider suddenly starting to renegotiate it.

Mr. Ricard: A supplementary question. Is the minister of the opinion that with this clause included the federal government is respecting municipal autonomy?

Mr. Gordon: If this clause is satisfactory to the province of Quebec I would think that the answer would be in the affirmative.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GLASSCO COMMISSION—IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister now or at an early date give a report to the house on the extent to which the recommendations of the Glassco commission have been implemented by the present government, and what activities are now going forward or are planned in this regard?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in answer also to a question asked yesterday I wish to say that I will be prepared to make a statement to the house on this matter next Monday.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED POSSIBILITY OF FARE REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport?

Could the minister inform us about the stand the government intends to take with regard to the recent statement made in Rome by the general manager of the International Air Transport Association to the effect that tariff reduction would solve air transport problems?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I do think this is a question for the order paper.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONTINUANCE OF STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will he be giving us today his promised statement with respect to the R.C.A.F. station at Summerside?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to tell my hon. friend that the Department of National Defence has no intention of closing the R.C.A.F. station at Summerside. We have a continuing requirement for it for our maritime activities, Atlantic. We are very pleased with the co-operation that the Royal Canadian Air Force receives from the citizens of the island. We acknowledge that co-operation, and I am pleased to tell the hon. member that we are going to carry on.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the house leader because I am not sure to which minister I should direct it. The departure of the NATO delegation has been delayed for seven hours. We will depart at five minutes after ten. Is this on account of hurricane Ginny raging in the Atlantic or is it because of the hurricane that took place in the House of Commons last night?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not very well informed about this matter. I do not know what the reason is, but I hope it is that hon. members are coming to realize that their first duty is in this house.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—REPORTED RAISING OF RENTS FOLLOWING PENSION INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is there any basis for the complaints being received that rentals are being increased by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and that these increases have a direct connection with the increase in the amount of the old age pension?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the right hon. gentleman for giving me notice of a question on this general subject but not along the lines of the question he has just posed. I have a list here, if he is interested in it, of the areas where increases have been effected since June 15, the period of time to which he has referred in his notice. I am glad to tell him that the majority of these increases are automatic and result from increases in municipal taxes.

In view of the detail involved as to places, amounts and the reasons in each case, I wonder whether he would agree to my tabling this list.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Possibly it could be put in Hansard as part of the answer in order to save the time of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Garland: With respect to the question now posed by the hon. gentleman, may I say there have been no increases in elderly citizens projects since I made my announcement around the middle or early part of September.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the assurance given yesterday to the national Liberal women's federation by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the Canada pension plan will be proceeded with either at this session or at the next session, will the Prime Minister tell us which it is to be, this session or next?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to confirm what I have said more than once, that it will be proceeded with as soon as possible. My hon. friend asked the other day whether I would be in a position soon to make a statement on this matter.

I propose to do that next Monday, and to relate this statement to our proposals for the future conduct of the work for the remainder of this session.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): May I ask a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister care to indicate what steps the government is taking to negotiate a Canada pension plan with the province of Ontario?

Mr. Pearson: We have been having some discussions with the province of Ontario and other provinces which have brought up points arising out of the last meeting we had with them on this matter.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if in considering this statement he proposes to make on Monday next he would consider announcing the intention of the government in respect of the projection of family allowances beyond the age of 16 for educational purposes?

Mr. Pearson: I will be talking about the business of the house, Mr. Speaker, and what we wish to do during the balance of the session.

WORLD FAIR

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS TO ACT OF INCORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning the world fair. Does the Prime Minister intend, in the near future, to suggest amendments to the act to establish the Canadian world exhibition corporation?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister tell us what the nature of these amendments will be?

Mr. Pickersgill: Wait and see.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TRANSFER TO PROVINCES OF JURISDICTION OVER HEALTH MATTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what progress she is making in attempting to have the jurisdiction over health and related services in relation to Indians transferred to the various provinces.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am afraid the question is too broad to be answered on orders of the day. I shall be very happy if my hon. friend would raise it at the time my estimates are before the house.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister tell us whether her estimates are going to be brought before the house by herself, or will there by some other minister answering for the department?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): My question is for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and it arises out of press reports to the effect that the executive vice president of the Liberal association of the Northwest Territories is in the process of being appointed commissioner of the Northwest Territories. Will the minister take the house into his confidence and advise whether he intends to make this appointment, or whether such a commitment has been made?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The hon. member should know that I would refuse to answer such a question. There are bills that are still to come before this house, and which must pass this house, before any commissioner for the territories can be appointed. I accept no responsibility for the statements in the press. I know nothing about them. Certainly when the time comes to appoint a commissioner we will appoint the best commissioner that we can obtain from any source.

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO PAVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that Mr. Delmar R. Carlson, the officer in charge of Canadian affairs in the United States administration has purported to announce the Canadian government policy—I refer the minister to the portion of the letter which I read to him earlier on my question of privilege—will the minister or his colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources tell the house what the policy of the Canadian government is in respect of the paving of the Alaska highway?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as this question relates to the department over which I preside, I have already indicated that I propose to examine the reply given earlier in the light of my hon. friend's comment.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REVIEW OF SECURITY PROCEDURES—EFFECT ON UNIVERSITY INVESTIGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the principles he enunciated last Friday with regard to security investigations will result in any changes in the procedures recently followed at universities. I ask this in relation to representations made to the Prime Minister by university professors and student organizations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The changes in the regulations as such would not, as I understand them, apply to the problem of the universities that has been in the minds of some hon. members concerning activities on the university campus. We have discussed this special problem with representatives of the universities, and we hope to meet them again next week to discuss with them the new regulations and any matters arising out of them which would concern the universities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RAYMOND RODGERS—INQUIRY AS TO PRESS GALLERY PRIVILEGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the house leader a question in which you, Mr. Speaker, have an interest. I ask it of you and the house leader as a member of the commission on internal economy. I want to know whether there is any possibility of a quick resolution of a long standing situation whereby the parliamentary correspondent of the St. Catharines Standard has been excluded from the facilities supplied by the crown in this parliament.

I should like to explain that this is not a matter of urgent national importance, but some of us want to take some further action through the machinery available, and we need an answer to this question before we do.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I would have no idea what kind of answer to give. If Your Honour can throw any light on the matter I would not wish in any way to prejudge your decision.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate very much the interest taken by the hon. member for Port Arthur in this difficult situation. I wish to assure him that although it is taking a considerable time to reach a right and just decision involving not only a certain gentleman in question but the whole matter of principle, there are many urgent matters which require immediate attention from day to day, as hon. members will appreciate. There has not been sufficient physical time to make the proper study which the case merits, and which is so much in the mind not only of the Speaker but of other persons concerned in the matter.

I wish to assure the hon. member that just as soon as it is physically possible to give the proper time and attention to this really serious matter of principle, it will be done, and I hope a just decision rendered.

INQUIRY AS TO SITTING ON REMEMBRANCE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if, when he is considering his statement about the future work of this house, he will consider declaring Monday, November 11 a holiday for all Canadians as well as for the members of this house and the people who work in the House of Commons.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I may be wrong, but I think November 11, a day which means so much to so many people, is already a legal holiday. I believe the best way that parliament can show its observance of this day would be by working.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—ASSAULT OF INMATE BY GUARDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yesterday at the request of the hon. member for Vancouver East, as well as in answer to a question which was posed by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and I think one other hon. member, I agreed, with the unanimous consent of the house, to table a statement with reference to the Gunn case. I do so now.

Mr. Fisher: May we have it in Hansard?

Mr. Chevrier: If that is the wish of the house I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The statement referred to above is as follows:]

In consequence of the newspaper publicity concerning the alleged beating of Alvin Gunn, an inmate of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, I requested the commissioner of penitentiaries to cause an inquiry to be made into the facts of the case. He reports to me as follows:

In January 1962 Alvin Gunn was transferred from Kingston penitentiary to St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. He is described as a boxer and an aggressive individual. During the riot at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in June 1962, he was identified by nine different witnesses as a ringleader of the rioters. He struck a senior keeper on the neck with sufficient force to cause his mouth to bleed. He appeared for trial this month, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to one day's imprisonment concurrent with his present sentence. During the proceedings of the trial, he described the brutal beating that he alleges was given to him by penitentiary guards following the riot.

On June 22, 1962, 70 inmates of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary were reported as being prominent among those rioting. They were dissociated from the main prison population. Gunn was taken to the dissociation area by five officers who, at this time, cannot be positively identified.

On June 24, 1962, Warden LeCorre heard that Gunn was in hospital and visited him there. Gunn answered the warden's question as follows: "I have been beaten up, Mr. LeCorre, look at me; but I gave them quite a good fight."

Warden LeCorre had been appointed to St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary only two weeks before the riot broke out. He knew few of the officers and he was forced to follow the procedure laid down by his predecessor. He had heard rumours of "goon squad" and "muscle men" in the institution, but had not time, prior to the riot, to investigate.

After his interview with Gunn, he attempted to find those responsible for beating him up, but was not helped by the staff and Gunn could not name his assailants. As his inquiry was getting nowhere, he issued, on June 28, 1962, a directive to the staff, in which he stated, in concise terms, that brutality would not be tolerated. The directive stated, inter alia:

[Translation]

"It is not a matter of settling personal scores or of brutalizing those who took part in the riot. I do not want any unfortunate incident on the part of officials. Those who make abusive use of force, especially when it is not necessary, lower themselves morally in the eyes of all. To punish or harm anyone in any way will not solve any problem and, on the contrary, will create new difficulties we certainly do not need. Let justice take its course, even if sometimes you find it too slow or too lenient. Not only is it not your responsibility to solve that problem, but you will only interfere with it if you act unwisely.

It is a matter of restoring order as well as fair and equal discipline in the institution, and we start immediately."

[Text]

In July 1962 an official inquiry was held at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the riot. Gunn volunteered as a witness and appeared before the board on July 25, 1962. He gave approximately 2,000 words of testimony and the only reference he made to a beating is as follows: "I was not a victim of that 'goon squad'. A few days after that 'bingo' I was the No. 1 victim." He did not pursue the point and the board of inquiry, being more interested in the causes of the riot, did not question him further on it. It should be noted that Gunn appeared before the board on July 25, 1962 and, except for a skin abrasion on his face, seemed in good physical condition.

The warden interviewed Gunn on other occasions between July 1962 and October 1963 and never was the beating mentioned.

The commissioner, in his report to me, repeats a report made to him by the regional director of penitentiaries for Quebec:

"It is my impression the officers guilty of unlawful and excessive use of force in the case of inmate Gunn (and possibly other inmates) during the critical period which followed the riot of June 16, 1962, were members of the so called "goon squads" which operated inside the institution prior to the appointment of Mr. LeCorre as warden and which were referred to on several occasions in the course of the investigation into the riot carried out under the chairmanship of the director of inmate training, Mr. J. C. A. LaFerrière, last summer."

Warden LeCorre has not allowed excessive use of force in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary.

This most unfortunate incident emphasizes the need for a proper staff training program in the penitentiary service. I am pleased to announce that, on October 8, 23 young recruits for the penitentiary service in the Quebec region commenced eight weeks formal training at the Quebec penitentiary staff college prior to commencing work inside the institutions. This period of training for all newly joined custodial officers will, as soon as possible, be increased to three months.

The new staff training program, which will be country-wide by April next year, should do much to preclude incidents similar to this one at St. Vincent de Paul, which, in themselves, are the result of staff not trained properly to perform their duties.

SUGAR

STEPS TO ENCOURAGE CANADIAN SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the present tight world sugar supply, is the government willing to consider additional encouragement and stabilization of the sugar beet industry in Canada with a view to expanding our domestic supply of sugar?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This question involves, of course, an important consideration of government policy with which I could not deal on orders of the day. If my hon. friend will put this question on the order paper I will do my best to get him a comprehensive reply.

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio, who is the future minister of agriculture for eastern Canada, and it looks as if he is going to remain a "future minister" for a long time.

Could the minister tell us if he supports the request made by 55,000 eastern farmers for a federal agency to look after the transportation, storage, pricing, control and purchasing of feed grain for eastern Quebec or eastern Canada?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the brief submitted by the Catholic farmers' union of the province of Quebec is now being studied by the Department of Agriculture and a new policy will be announced by the Minister of Agriculture in the near future.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, October 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Churchill and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Caouette.

ABANDONMENT OF DEFENCE PROJECTS AND INSTALLATIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada stated, on October 9, speaking precisely on the storing of nuclear arms in Canada, in answer to the present Leader of the Opposition:

> If the right hon. gentleman—

And at that time, the Prime Minister was referring to the present Leader of the Opposition—

> —will raise this question on the supply motion next Monday, we can go into the record.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this question of nuclear arms is raised on a motion that the house go into committee of supply. Therefore, we hope that the Prime Minister will take this opportunity to go into the record regarding the storing of nuclear arms on Canadian soil and that he will clear up the matter. It is not the only time that such a promise has been made.

On May 23, 1963, the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien)—and I quote from the official report for May 23, at page 187—said:

> I believe that problem is important, and the Prime Minister undertook to give us an opportunity for a full debate, not only an afternoon sitting.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have today the opportunity to discuss that problem. I see that the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche nods assent to what he said then, but I find that, at page 187, right hand column, he also stated:

During the campaign, I took a position by saying that I was against nuclear arms.

That is what the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche said on May 23, 1963, as reported in Hansard at page 187, right hand column.

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. I would like the hon. member for Lapointe to read in full the sentence he has just begun to read, in order to report exactly the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche, according to the record of that day.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I must admit frankly that the text from the member for St. Maurice-Lafleche is four pages long and I do not think it is important enough to deserve a full reading.

Mr. Speaker, it means one thing, and it is that the members from the province of Quebec themselves—since the member for St. Maurice-Lafleche said it repeatedly—have stated they are opposed to the storing of nuclear weapons on the territory of the country, and especially on the soil of the state of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal members will have the opportunity, tonight, by their vote on the subamendment proposed by the Ralliement Creditistes, to express their opinion flatly, categorically and clearly against the storing of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

The Minister of National Defence told us yesterday we had made commitments, and he added: However, to be useful to us, they—that is, the Americans—furnished what they believed at the time was a semblance of protection. Therefore, the Minister of National Defence himself thought that the Bomarcs and the Voodoos were a semblance of protection. It is thus for a mere semblance of protection that we would jeopardize the role that Canada could play for world peace, and nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Speaker, the commitments were referred to on both sides of the house here. When the Liberals were in the opposition they requested the party in power to table the commitments of the Conservative party, but as soon as the Liberals assumed office, they, in turn, were requested by the Conservatives to table, to make public the same commitments.

If the Liberals refuse or object and contend that it is not the way to promote public security, there is a continuing contradiction on both sides of the house.

Those commitments were never produced, because they do not exist. As we said yesterday and continue to state today, Canada's part is a peace role through a disarmament program at home—

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gregoire: This is the second time he stands up.

Mr. Chretien: The hon. member for Lapointe has quoted words I said in this house. His quotation was as follows:

During the campaign, I took a position by saying that I was against nuclear arms but that if Canada had been committed to acquire them by the Conservative government, I did not want the Liberal government to fail to respect those commitments, or to do in public life what we do not do in private life.

It is a question of privilege and honesty. The hon. member for Lapointe should at least read the whole paragraph, and not only two parts of a sentence. I demand that the hon. member for Lapointe retract by reading the whole sentence.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, there is one point that the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche has forgotten, and it is that this government never proved that Canada had committed itself under the preceding administration. The hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche—

Mr. Chretien: It is a question of privilege.

Mr. Gregoire: How do you expect me to answer your question of privilege? If Canada had been committed by the Conservative government, has it been proved that there had been a commitment? No evidence has ever been submitted in that respect. There has never been any evidence submitted to the house that commitments had been made by the Conservative government of the time with regard to the storage of nuclear weapons in the country.

If the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche wants to be honest, he will admit that these commitments have never been proven and that the sentence—

Mr. Chretien: The hon. member for Lapointe gives me the opportunity to ask for explanations—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that is quite enough argumentation between two hon. members, and I suggest we get on with the subject at hand.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I am very, very conscious, indeed, that the motion which is being discussed today cuts to the quick certain hon. members from the province of Quebec.

We still remember what the hon. members said during the last election campaign. They proclaimed: "Nuclear weapons, no, but work for everybody, yes." This slogan was repeated by representatives of all the political parties in the house, and more particularly by the hon. members of the Liberal party.

These same representatives—again mostly on the Liberal side—have now an unhoped for opportunity to leave once and for all a servile and subservient party.

In the motion, we said:

—subserviently agreeing to the storing of nuclear arms.

Mr. Speaker, I would like, in a few words, to establish that the Liberal party is indeed subservient, obsequious to financial interests; I hope that the Liberal members might then see things more clearly, and vote against the subserviency of their party to big financial interests.

And we notice this subservience within the Liberal party by the acquisition of nuclear arms, even though the people of Quebec do not want them on their territory.

It is to be noted also that the Liberal party dawdles as much as it can in order to maintain all the international sugar trusts.

You have noticed also that since the new session the present government managed, in its subservience to high finance, to impose an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. This is another example of its subservience to the financial community.

The Liberal government found it possible also to increase the income tax rate by 1 per cent. And the yearly budget deficit will hit a new high.

What about unemployment? It is well known that the province of Quebec has 40 per cent of the total number of unemployed in Canada, that the unemployment situation is not improving and that eastern farmers are constantly flouted by the servile government we have at present—

Mr. Jean Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Longueuil rises on a point of order.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the hon. member for Lapointe is out of order since there is no connection between his remarks and the amendment or the subamendment under consideration.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I feel that my remarks are relevant since the subamendment deals with the servility and the subservience of the Liberal party and that is precisely what I want to prove.

Whether they like it or not, this increases their subservience in the nuclear field.

Mr. Speaker, I was speaking about the lot of the eastern farmers who are scoffed at and whose claims are ignored by the present government.

We also note the servility of the present government in other fields. In fact, it is sufficient to consider the patronage being practised at the present time by the Post Office Department.

[Text]

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible for the hon. member from Lapointe to come back to defence and the subamendment, and stop insulting in vulgar terms honest people on this side of the house?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. member for Lapointe to continue his observations in a more polite manner.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I admit that the truth hurts, especially when you are not the shepherd, but just one sheep in the herd.

Another evidence of the servility of the Liberal party is the patronage now going on in the Post Office Department; it is claimed to be a good patronage although it is nothing but shameless patronage.

And how about the centralization carried out by this government in every area?

That, Mr. Speaker, is the sad record of a really sad Liberal government over the last six months.

Members of the Liberal party, now that we are unfolding under your eyes the deplorable achievements of your government in less than six months—and believe me, real genius was needed to do so badly in so little time—we are going to read to you once again what the electors in the province of Quebec think of it. This is an editorial published last July 3 in La Terre de Chez Nous, a farm newspaper:

The Catholic farmers' union wishes to join with all the voices which in all objectivity and in good faith objected to the acquisition of nuclear arms by our country. The C.F.U. invites the government authorities, the town councillors, the representative groups and all the citizens to take a similar stand.

Mr. Speaker, we want the government to consider these remarks. We heard all social classes demand that our country do not accept the stockpiling of nuclear arms on our territory.

The part we ought to play should favour nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal women of Canada are just now holding a convention in Ottawa, and they must feel embarrassed by the fact that the Liberal party declared itself in favour of acquiring nuclear destructive arms, whereas we know that the mothers of families objected to our acquiring such means of annihilation. This glimpse of our country's future is hardly an enviable prospect.

An hon. Member: Do not make us cry.

Mr. Caouette: You are going to cry all right at the next election, do not worry.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, without getting sentimental, but to come back to hard facts, I think that all hon. members of the province of Quebec—and I appeal to them now—should make it their duty vigorously to protest against the acquisition, by this country, of nuclear arms or the stocking of such nuclear arms on the territory of the state of Quebec, by voting with courage and determination in favour of the subamendment we introduced.

If they do so, they will deserve the respect and consideration of their fellow citizens. On the other hand, if they abstain from doing so, they will be blamed for their action all their lives.

Let them learn to stand up. Serpents love to crawl on their bellies, but the proper attitude of man is to stand erect. It is, indeed, a happy feeling to stand up, but some men go on crawling like poisonous snakes.

[Text]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words at this time with respect to the Penhold airport. It was said during yesterday afternoon's debate that this R.C.A.F. station is being seriously considered for closure by the Minister of National Defence. However, many things remain to be said, and I wish to put on the record some of the economic factors which, as a perusal of the record will show, will be consequent upon such closure.

The Penhold airport is a well developed base which cost in the neighbourhood of $40 million to $50 million. If any hon. member has seen the base he will bear me out when I say that the living accommodation there is second to none; the dwellings constitute the finest in living quarters. All of this cost a tremendous amount of money, in addition to the provision of runways, hangars, and all the other facilities necessary to an airport.

If this Penhold airport were to be scrapped, what would be the scrap value? Having had some three years of experience with airports which were sold through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, I can tell the minister that the scrap value of Penhold once it has been closed would be not more than 10 cents on the dollar. If three years pass and the paint starts to peel and other things go wrong, the scrap value will be about 5 cents on the dollar. That was the experience at Fort Macleod airport, at the Vulcan airport, and also at the Claresholm airport. All these airports had splendid locations, with wonderful runways which could be lengthened to accommodate jet flying without trouble because the airports are located in areas where the ground is as level as a billiard table.

If freedom of airways and safety are factors, Mr. Speaker, why not take a good look at Claresholm or Fort Macleod as a jet base? If it is a question of saving money and greater safety, why not take a look at either of those two airports? However, I am of the opinion that it was neither a question of safety nor, in the strictest sense, a financial consideration; it was other considerations which led the minister to make his decision regarding Penhold, and I intend to go into some of them.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it seems to me that the hon. member's speech is completely irrelevant to the subamendment which is now before the house. I suggest that he direct his remarks to the subamendment.

Mr. Kindt: Perhaps my hon. friend's intervention is completely irrelevant too. Adjacent to Penhold is the city of Red Deer. That city has become adjusted to a $4 million pay roll. Over 700 service personnel are located at Penhold and there are 250 civilians. The Department of National Defence has encouraged the Vista village community, which consists of 60 large units many of which are now occupied by R.C.A.F. officers. The Department of National Defence has guaranteed a ten year occupation term to the builder. Why was it not known ahead of time that the government was going to close the base, before all this additional equipment was provided?

Fifteen miles east of the airport and connected to it by a new government built road is a multi-million dollar radar station which is tied in with R.C.A.F. activities. Adjacent to the airport are two other huge defence installations, an underground shelter for heads of government in case of attack and a communications centre which would take care of the province's communications work also in the case of attack. If that station were closed it would mean a loss of $4 million to the area. It would mean about $1 million loss in housing construction, and it would mean hundreds of thousands of dollars lost through repairs and maintenance. Above all, the building trade of the area would be dealt a mortal blow. The excess of housing would be apparent to anyone, and the future of the building trade in the area is likely to feel the effects for many years to come.

This airport was approved by the former government, and it was also approved by this government, for operation as a jet training base. The minister said that Penhold is the logical site for a jet training base, and the people of Red Deer, from the information I have been able to gather, are still infuriated over the decision of the Minister of National Defence. Let me put on the record what they are saying, as appears in an article in the Edmonton Journal of October 1, 1963:

> Despite his—

—meaning the minister—

> —denials it seems fairly obvious that it is pressure from Calgary and Edmonton, funnelled into the cabinet through agricultural minister Harry Hays, that has caused the change in plans. Mr. Hellyer has fired a torpedo into the economic life of Red Deer and central Alberta.

The minister has advanced as a reason for closure the matter of safety. Let us take a closer look at that. Take, for example, the Winnipeg base. All hon. members at one time or another have no doubt flown out of the Winnipeg base, and are well aware of the fact that huge airliners carrying more than 100 passengers are only a few hundred feet above residential areas when climbing into the air. So far no one has suggested that the Winnipeg airport ought to be closed. Mention has been made of a 20 mile buffer zone, but nowhere in the regulations of the department of defence or the Department of Transport is there any reference to a 20 mile buffer zone. Therefore I ask what foundation there is for the suggestion that safety is the overriding factor. As I understand the buffer zone idea, it means between the air space allocated for jet training, and controlled air space. They argue that it did not leave sufficient air space for jet training to be carried out. This provided a good talking point for the public and an easy point to sell to the public, and was used as an excuse for closing the airport. If safety is the factor involved here, are the same rules to be applied elsewhere in Canada? Is this safety factor, which has been seized upon here as a precedent, to be the overriding factor to be considered from one end of Canada to the other? If it is, I wish the minister and his officials would take a look at what is happening at Moose Jaw, Portage la Prairie and Gimli. These places do not have a 20 mile zone. I should say not. Take the case of Moose Jaw which is only eight miles from one of the busiest airways in Canada. Portage la Prairie is less than 15 miles from the busy Trans-Canada Air Lines route. Gimli is about 12 miles from the main airway. Each of these airports is within 20 miles of the main airway. In view of this does the minister continue to rely on this one factor as his excuse for closing down Penhold, or does he intend to think up another manoeuvre which, he hopes, will get him off the hook?

Civilian air training is another matter which has been mentioned. Well, this is going on in every airport in Canada. Students with only six hours' training are landing and taking off at all airports which big jets are using. How can it be said that safety is the overriding factor which caused the minister to issue the order concerning Penhold? Did these considerations of safety only just come to life, despite the fact that the whole matter has been under review for many months? The Department of National Defence knew, and the minister knew, that planes were flying between Calgary and Edmonton on regular routes before they called for tenders to increase the length of the runways. They knew these facts before they called for bids to construct additional buildings. How, in the name of good sense, can the minister come before us now and say that the overriding factor responsible for his decision was the question of safety? The hon. gentleman has known about the situation there ever since he became minister.

The people of the Red Deer area are firmly convinced that there is a nigger in the wood pile, that some other consideration is involved. What they are after is to find out a little more about the unexplained motives. There are reasons which still remain hidden, in the opinion of many people. I have before me an article which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of April 1 entitled "Safety? That Excuse is Nonsense". Here is what it says:

> Central Alberta has been sold short by Mr. Hellyer for political purposes and the repercussions will be felt for many years to come.

To illustrate once again feelings of the local people, I wish to quote from the Calgary daily Herald of October 2, 1963 in which an article appeared stating:

> The Red Deer chamber of commerce strongly suggests that the reasons given for the government's reversed decision are evasive, and that we have a right to know the background of so serious a matter to our economy. We intend to pursue this matter until we are satisfied not only for our own selfish reasons but for all the taxpayers of Canada.

The people of the Red Deer area have adjusted their economy to the presence of this airport, and what is taking place there will vitally affect their well-being.

May I say in conclusion that, although the interests of safety have been advanced as the overriding reason for closing this airport, we feel there must be other factors. We have not yet heard the minister tell us in detail how the safety factors are to be applied to other airports—whether the same ground-rules are to be used in all the airports of Canada. The inconsistencies in this respect certainly destroy the argument that safety is the overriding princpile behind the closing of this airport. The motive of safety is simply being used as a flimsy excuse. The people want to know from the Minister of National Defence and from the Minister of Transport what the reasons really are—and I mean the reasons deep down—which have caused the government to bring forward this decision concerning Penhold.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a feeling that this debate is untimely and premature. My reason for taking this attitude is the fact that the special committee on defence has not yet produced a report which can be intelligently discussed in this house. For this, the committee can hardly be blamed. It was given a heavy task to perform and it hopes to be able to make a report in December.

In the second place, the minister has given us no statement of policy relating to Canadian defence, nor any indication of an over-all military doctrine in the light of which the decisions of the government announced from time to time could be properly considered. In all fairness, we cannot condemn the minister for this failure. I would be the first to complain if he, disregarding the committee on defence, were to announce his version of Canada's defence role. He has promised a white paper on defence by January and I hope by that time—

Mr. Kindt: On a point of order, is the hon. member who now has the floor making a speech or is he calling attention to some irregularity in our procedure?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood stood up to make a speech.

Mr. Brewin: I did not hear the interruption.

Mr. Knowles: You did not miss much.

Mr. Brewin: I was pointing out that we were debating in a vacuum because we have not heard a statement on military policy from the minister. I have said that no blame attaches to the hon. gentleman in that regard. Speaking for myself, I believe we must reject the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) because he has made it quite clear, implicitly if not explicitly, that in his view the whole purpose of the defence committee has been frustrated by announcements made by the minister. I do not share that view, and I do not accept the defeatism and pessimism of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre with regard to the work of the committee. It is my conviction that, notwithstanding any statements made by the minister or leaks to the press from his office, some of which I regret, the defence committee still has a vitally important role to play in helping to develop something which has been so sadly lacking in the whole Canadian defence picture. The fundamental lack in the past has been a clear definition of what Canada's defence role should be. Until that is decided we are going to continue to flounder around with piecemeal and often misguided decisions, with cancelled programs and with tremendous economic waste. It is to supply this need for a statement and a clear definition of Canada's role that I believe the defence committee can be of real value.

We have had before that committee already distinguished, capable and experienced witnesses. Nearly every one of them has stressed the need for a clearcut decision as to Canada's defence role and an up to date appraisal of the kind of war or conflict in which Canada's forces are likely to be called on to engage in or play a part, and where they can fit in.

I should like to refer to three of the witnesses in this regard. I do not propose to discuss their evidence in detail. That, of course, is a task for the committee to concern itself with. However, I should like to refer to the evidence of General Foulkes, former chief of the general staff of Canada and a distinguished soldier. As found on page 501 of the evidence before the defence committee he said that these are the questions that have to be considered:

> What will be the defence requirements in the seventies? Where and from what direction will any challenges to the peace be likely to occur in the next decade? What will be the state and condition of our alliances on which we now depend for our security and to which we make defence contributions? What should be the character, size and composition of our contributions to these various organizations in the seventies? These are some of the questions that must be considered or at least some indications of the answers foreseen before decisions are taken as to whether frigates, submarines, aircraft or Bobcats should be ordered.

I venture to supplement what General Foulkes has said by saying that individual, piecemeal decisions without answering the sort of questions that the general has posed will continue to produce chaos in this particular field. As found on page 506 General Foulkes spoke of his answers to some of these questions and I want to refer very briefly to them. He said:

> Now I should like to state some conclusions. Once the long term aims and objectives of the defence policy are determined, it is then possible to derive some guidance as to the equipment and manpower to implement such a policy. From the foreseeable trends, there are strong indications of a movement away from making preparations to fight a major war in Europe and tending toward the more flexible and mobile roles of preventing wars from breaking out in the NATO area, or anywhere in the world under U.N. auspices.

To fulfil any of these roles will require flexible, highly mobile, well trained, lightly equipped forces at high states of readiness and efficiency. This kind of requirement suits Canadian aptitudes and aspirations. It allows Canadian industry an opportunity to provide the equipment and avoids the needs for heavy imported items such as tanks, armoured carriers and nuclear support weapons.

Another very distinguished soldier gave evidence before our committee, Lieutenant General Simonds. I am going to refer only briefly to his evidence. As found on page 453 of the evidence before the committee he acceded to this proposition which he had written some time before:

In the first place, Canada has been muddling along on defence, in the second place, it has been too much influenced by the Pentagon.

He went on to make it clear it was his view that if Canada applied independent thinking to the problem it would undoubtedly determine that Canada's role, the role we would come up with, would be a conventionally armed tri-service, highly mobile force adapted to deal with brush fire wars in support of the United Nations or our allies, and that this would be our most useful role within the alliance.

By the same token, Mr. Speaker, he indicated his agreement with General Foulkes and other witnesses that our present strike reconnaissance role with CF-104's equipped with nuclear weapons, which has already cost this country half a billion dollars, was based on the misconception that tactical nuclear war could be undertaken in Europe without escalating into all-out nuclear war. At page 442 of his evidence he summed up the matter as follows:

We should not be in the nuclear field at all. The most useful contribution we can make to any coalition or alliance of which we become a partner is in the field of being able to make a contribution to preventing a situation developing which would lead to thermonuclear exchange.

The author of this statement that we should not be in the nuclear field at all is one of the most distinguished generals and military men that Canada has ever produced. Another witness was Mr. John Gellner, a distinguished military writer and analyst. He came to similar conclusions. His evidence has not yet been printed but it parallels an article he wrote for Saturday Night in 1962 to which I should like to refer. In his view the $18 billion we have spent since 1951 on defence has produced nothing adequate or useful. He says that as a result of this expenditure all we now have is:

An air defence organization with very limited capability for the one task which North American air defence can possibly have today: that of deterring a bombing attack against this continent.

Overseas forces designed and trained to deter, and fight if need be, a type of war (limited nuclear) which will not occur, or will not last as such if it does.

Intervention forces of the Canadian army at home, whose effectiveness is greatly reduced by lack of transport, and partly of air transport ability, and tactical air support.

A civil defence set-up which appears to have deliberately stopped short of the most important, the crucial measure of protection: the training of all citizens to help themselves in case of nuclear war.

Then he proceeds to say:

If these are facts—and we believe they are—then much of the Canadian defence effort in the last seven of the 11 years since 1951 has been to no good purpose. The questions now are: how and why did it happen? There is little doubt that the main reason was that we swallowed, hook, line and sinker, the American defence policy that grew out of the frustrations of the Korean war.

So Mr. Gellner and these other witnesses who have appeared before this committee have made it clear that before we can discuss intelligently what contribution we can make to defence we have to determine the role which we have to play. I believe that the discussions of the committee, which have been conducted on a non-partisan basis, and the evidence presented to it can lead to a sane, a practical and a nationally chosen role that will enable Canada to make the maximum contribution to the security and peace of Canada and the world. For this reason I believe that the amendment we have before us today is very premature in that we are asked to declare that this committee of the house cannot perform the task that has been put before it.

I seem to have caught the ear of the minister for a moment. I regret that he has found it necessary to make piecemeal announcements about policy, but I am prepared to accept his statement and those of other members of the government that they will pay attention to the decisions and conclusions of the defence committee on the major strategy which should be applied to Canadian defence. If it turns out that he or the government are unwilling to do that, I will then be prepared to criticize them for failing to do so.

Before I part with the general question of the role which Canada should play I should like to refer to what I believe is the most useful contribution that has been made by any Liberal member of the house on the subject of defence. I have reference to a speech made by the present Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Drury) on December 14, 1962, when he was a private member. I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) to reread what his colleague said at that time, because it made excellent sense in determining the role that Canada should play and because it is quite inconsistent with what the minister said in the house yesterday, namely that there was some good purpose to be served apparently by our continuing to maintain, through NORAD, an answer to the bomber threat, and nuclear weapons to back it up.

I should like to read now a paragraph from page 2683 of Hansard and I ask the minister to consider it. This is the present Minister of Defence Production speaking. He had set out five tests of what Canada's military role should be. In my opinion he set them out very admirably and I suggest they deserve consideration now. Then he went on to say:

> I would suggest that perhaps consideration of the criteria I have suggested, when applied to our apparent dilemma in North America, might shed some light on this problem.
> In respect of NORAD we perform two functions. One of them corresponds to all the tests I have outlined and the other does not. The military task of identification and warning which is NORAD's main task does correspond to the criteria I have just outlined. The function of aircraft interception and destruction—more particularly aircraft destruction—with nuclear weapons, does not correspond—

He goes on to express his disapproval of that function. I hope the various words we have heard from time to time from the minister, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and other persons to the effect that this government is generally reconsidering the role that Canada should play, really mean what they say. I hope the government will not go on tying us up with agreements that will make it difficult for us to adopt an intelligent role.

It may be apparent to hon. members that my voice is not in the best condition today. I should like to go on and deal at this stage with the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). We in this party would certainly not have worded the amendment in the way in which the hon. member for Villeneuve has. We very much regret that the terms of the amendment refer to Quebec alone, and to the introduction of nuclear weapons in the territory of Quebec. So far as we are concerned, for the purpose of defence as well as for many other purposes, there is no distinction to be drawn between the province of Quebec and the rest of Canada. I suggest we are concerned, in our party and in this house, with the defence and security of Canada as a whole. What makes sense for Quebec, makes sense for Canada. We in this party have made it clear from time to time that we do not think nuclear defence makes sense for Canada, and therefore it makes no sense for any part of Canada.

Our view in the matter has been powerfully reinforced by the evidence given before the committee, and particularly the evidence of General Simonds. He pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that the nuclear tipped Bomarc missiles are designed to shoot down manned bombers that might come over from Russia. He said that this was not a real threat at all. The Russians, he said, would be crazy to send manned bombers to attack North America and, he added, they are not crazy. Our warning system spread around the North American continent would enable the targets of the manned bombers, namely the nuclear retaliatory forces of the United States to be off the ground and out of harm long before the bombers arrived. Any all-out nuclear attack, if it could happen at all, and if the Russians are not crazy, would necessarily be an attack by I.C.B.M.'s, against which we have as yet devised no defence. If the Russians contemplated a second blow with bombers, they would knock out the Bomarc bases first, cooking them, as the technical term goes and as General Simonds has said.

In any event, the Bomarc would knock out only a proportion of the bombers, and the small proportion that came over would be armed with megaton bombs which would wreak universal havoc in our country and in the United States. General Simonds concluded by saying that the idea we should involve ourselves in heavy expenditures directed against a bomber threat that was non-existent at this particular time did not make sense. It is in the name of common sense that I suggest, Mr. Speaker, this role should be abandoned and that the amendment, which objects to nuclear weapons in Quebec, should be extended to the whole of Canada. I say if it makes good sense there, it makes good sense in the rest of Canada.

The minister disagreed with General Simonds. Apparently he still sees some useful role for the Bomarc. If I did not misinterpret him, the minister suggested that we must continue with this role to satisfy our United States allies and live up to our commitment. I am sure he is familiar with the words of secretary for defence McNamara who says that the Bomarc is virtually obsolete; it is only being continued because there has already been a large expenditure of $2 billion on that particular system, and maintenance does not cost very much, so we might as well keep it going for a little while longer. Are we required by any treaty or engagement to keep in effect a weapons system which the United States secretary for defence has described as obsolete? This is the prime question, Mr. Speaker. Has any effort been made to ascertain whether or not the United States government is insisting upon the maintenance of this particular effort? I must say it appears to me that the adoption of this role and the conclusion of an agreement to bring these nuclear weapons under United States custody on Canadian soil arises far less from any need of our allies or any sensible analysis of our position, and far more from the need to satisfy Canadian political exigencies, to satisfy the misguided impressions of a section of the Canadian public that these weapons are useful to the defence of Canada or the United States. In fact, they are not useful at all.

In so far as the introduction of nuclear warheads into any part of Canada is concerned, in our view that is clearly based on an obsolete, impractical military doctrine because it is meaningless in terms of effective defence. We feel we are bound to support the amendment, based on its application to all of Canada as well as the province of Quebec.

Something has been said, Mr. Speaker, about the wording of the amendment and particularly the reference to the "state of Quebec." This certainly is not language which we would be familiar with or would use in this party. I do not think that language has any particular significance; but a very distinguished, leading Liberal, the premier of Quebec, Mr. Jean Lesage, habitually refers to the state of Quebec. If the expression is good enough for him, I do not see why it should not be good enough for the hon. member for Villeneuve and, indeed, for the members of this house. I do not think it has any more significance in relation to the status of Quebec within confederation than a reference to the state of Pennsylvania would have in the United States. I think any attempt that may be made later to concentrate on this particular form of expression would be a red herring tending to obscure the real meaning of the amendment, which is in opposition to the useless nuclear installations in the province of Quebec and, I assume, by the extension thereof, in any other part of Canada.

In this party, we have consistently opposed nuclear installations in Canada, not for sentimental or emotional reasons, or simply moral reasons. We have opposed them for sound common sense reasons that have commended themselves to General Simonds, General Foulkes, Mr. Gellner and other witnesses to whom I have referred. We believe our views have been confirmed by common sense and the evidence that has been heard in the committee. Our opposition to nuclear weapons has been established and we shall cast our vote on this motion in the light of that well known opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this discussion and to indicate that I associate myself with this government's defence policy; this should prove to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) that I am not afraid to express my views and opinions in this house, even before tonight's vote.

When I was appointed to the committee on defence, several of my voters rejoiced at my being a member of such an important committee. And tonight, I am given the opportunity of making my views in defence matters known to the people who elected me as their representative as well as to all hon. members of the house.

The hon. member of Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) did not surprise me at all when he criticized this government's actions in defence matters, and still less when he introduced his non-confidence motion. The hon. gentleman, who is a member of the defence committee and a former minister of national defence, was often disappointed with the way that committee went about its business, because he would have liked us to rehash all those disputes which arose during the months preceding the defeat of the Conservative government, so that our committee would have become a political arena with regard to defence matters. The committee members preferred to limit themselves to their terms of reference, by making a complete analysis of the present situation, so as to familiarize themselves with the subject matter and be able to make the appropriate recommendations with regard to the whole defence problem in this country while helping establish a Canadian policy in this field.

I consider that at this stage, the committee was far from being ready to come to a conclusion on the general purpose frigate program, no more than we are ready, as regards the unification of the three arms or their integration into a very mobile force, because the members had not yet started a discussion on the various testimonies given in the last few months.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that even the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), who just spoke before me, could himself express an opinion on behalf of the defence committee because he only quoted the evidence that he saw fit to quote.

I think that the members of the defence committee still have much work to do. They have to exchange ideas and concepts. As far as I am concerned, I know that some of my original ideas might have changed or evolved and I even know that if, on some other matters, I think I have a very clear idea at the present, I am still ready to discuss them and I hope that the other members of the committee will keep up the same spirit. This will make room for a thorough discussion and at the same time will enable us to arrive at really constructive and far reaching suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, after several months of hesitation and indecision—and here, I do not blame the former minister of national defence—on the part of the previous administration, this government could not afford to wait very long before reaching a decision. I must therefore commend the Minister of National Defence for the serious work he does as the head of his department where an exhaustive investigation of the present defence policy was undertaken to give it a new direction if need be, taking into account the importance of curbing some expenditures and of eliminating some others which could be considered as less vital.

I cannot see how the performance of the department could come in conflict with the defence committee, because I am convinced that eventually, both will meet at some crossroads and then, we shall be in a better position to judge the efficiency of the work done and the ground covered.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Canadian people would have been really justified to be shocked about the implementation of a program which was to cost $452 million, which completely ignored the investigation now under way on defence questions and which was devoid of any planning.

I would ask the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to tell us whether, in his opinion, a single member of the defence committee would have dared defend such a program, especially after the evidence given before the committee by Lieutenant General Guy Simonds and General Charles Foulkes, both of them ex-military men of renown, who occupied the highest post in our armed forces.

As mentioned by the minister in his statement of October 24, this decision was made after a thorough study of the program, and we must admit that the reasons put forward by the minister are fairly in line with certain points of view which were presented to the defence committee. The more so because, on the economic side, the present government still wanted to show the population it took its responsibilities, when the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) announced a shipbuilding program, the cost of which will reach close to $110 million, and which shall be completed in the years 1963, 1964 and 1965.

And, Mr. Speaker, what about the statement of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Benidickson) who, this afternoon, announced the construction of 12 additional ships—12 hydrographic research and survey ships—at a cost of $50 million.

We have therefore abolished a program of military expenditures, the cost of which appeared exorbitant, if we take into account especially the fact that the very efficiency of those general purpose frigates was questioned and that the part they would play was most controversial. We have instead preferred a shipbuilding program originating in the Department of Transport and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, at a greatly lower cost, whereas the ships shall be much more useful to the Canadian people. The building of these ships will start immediately, so that unemployment will not be increased by the scrapping of the program. Common sense and reason have prevailed, and the present government has established that it wants to assume its responsibilities in every possible field.

Mr. Speaker, concerning the subamendment of the hon. member for Villeneuve, about the storing of nuclear warheads in the province of Quebec, my hon. friend has proved once more that he is content to exercise his political action in one province only, and that his dissident group is not capable of grasping the situation in its national context. The hon. leader of the Caouettistes and of the Gregorians goes as far as to say he is speaking, in his subamendment, on behalf of the Quebec members belonging to the various political parties. I will ask him however, with all due respect, to exclude me from his statement, because I consider it as wholly irresponsible, and tainted with a partisan spirit. I would suggest to my hon. friend to go back in thought to the last electoral campaign. He will remember that the leader of the Liberal party had adopted a very definite and categorical position on the subject of our obligations towards our allies. Some people derided us, when we said that we were anxious first of all to fulfil our obligations—that is precisely what we are doing at the moment—and that afterwards, if necessary, we would revise the situation, and try to establish if it were necessary to re-orient our policy, in order to better adapt it to our desires.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is a member of NATO and of NORAD, and I am convinced that this duty and this right are recognized by nearly all Canadians.

When the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) says that we have accepted the storing of nuclear weapons in the face of universal protest, he is not entirely faithful to truth. Our position on that point has been extremely precise; in spite of a few inevitable protests, the people of the province of Quebec have given us their unconditional support. We appeared before the electorate as a fully responsible party; we formed a government which is ready to assume its responsibilities and to meet its obligations. We carry on the dialogue with our friends, and we hope to continue to do so indefinitely, for we must try to solve together our common problems.

True, because modern technique changes so rapidly, we must constantly study and revise our defence policy, but when millions of dollars are involved, we just cannot keep on disrupting everything, especially when we are part of a defence system that must be as invulnerable as possible.

The storing of nuclear warheads on Canadian soil does not shock me. In my view, such a thing is inevitable. I believe that Canada, being a free country, should play the role it can afford to play in the defence of the free world. It is time we stop playing upon words and even claim we are losing our influence as a pacifist country. Our reputation is well established and the Prime Minister is recognized throughout the world as a man of peace.

Do we or do we not belong to the western bloc? What would have happened if the Cuban crisis had degenerated into a nuclear war, with or without nuclear warheads in storage? If we had had to defend ourselves, I think we would just have stood there gaping, unable to do anything.

Let us be serious. Would we be more to blame for accepting those weapons than for selling the great quantity of uranium used in the manufacturing of American atomic bombs?

The hon. member for Lapointe referred to the unanimous opinion of members of parliament and citizens of the province of Quebec. But when he found that members on the government side did not share his opinion—heaven forbid—he accused us of having sold out to the Americans and went off into considerations of petty politics which are typical of him.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, I would be less afraid of American domination than of a dictatorship offered by the Gregoire-Caouette group, which might be similar to that imposed by the idols of the hon. member for Villeneuve, namely Hitler and Mussolini.

Those people do not accept other people's opinion and readily condemn those who dare to think in a different way.

Mr. Speaker, before closing I wish to point out the fact that this country has a role to play in the world, that we cannot be isolationists, neither from the economic point of view nor from the standpoint of defence of the free world. That role must be examined thoroughly and it can be changed according to circumstances. As a matter of fact, I urge the Minister of National Defence to keep up his good work. And, so as to prove to the hon. member for Lapointe that nobody dictates our policy, and that within the Liberal party, every member is free to think as he pleases, I am going to make a suggestion to the Minister of National Defence, that is to consider the possibility of setting up in Canada a system of compulsory military service, which, in my opinion, might benefit directly the Canadian people.

In fact, it is noteworthy that in every country where such a system is in effect, it has fostered unity and has proven profitable to the nation. Indeed, a stay in a disciplinary corps is, in my opinion, a supplementary training which is a good preparation for the future, inasmuch as it instills into a man a bit of discipline and a sense of responsibility, which is something that our young people need today and which is also lacking in the Caouette group.

This service should not be on the same basis as service in an emergency but it should be oriented so as to provide the young people with the opportunity of attending trade or specialization courses, as well as civil defence classes, all this without interfering with a general education. In other words, a formula related to that of our military colleges but very much simplified.

It would be, in my opinion, a contribution to the economy, that is an expenditure which would benefit directly the Canadian people and which would, at the same time, alleviate unemployment among our young people.

Mr. Speaker, the people are watching the House of Commons, wondering certainly what is in the minds of the opposition parties, at a time when the government shows increasing evidence of its ability to give our economy the guidance it needs.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my first grievance today will certainly be directed against the party in power, because it is due to the absence of fifty-odd Liberal members that we are still discussing today a subamendment which has already been put to a vote, no matter how the hon. members for Lapointe and Villeneuve (Messrs. Gregoire and Caouette) feel about it, without the approval or support of the members of the Social Credit party. But it is not for me to teach the members of the party in power a lesson; I guess that was taken care of, and strongly too, at the caucus this morning.

In any case the party in power gives us the opportunity to talk again about nuclear arms, and I think we are about to have a little fun.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to go over the whole story from 1957 to 1963, because a series of contradictions coming either from the party in power or the opposition would have to be recalled. And to what end? Simply to establish that the Canadian people have been fooled either by one political party or the other. In fact, the people of Quebec did not want nuclear arms and today they find them in their own back yard.

In that respect, I wish to quote words spoken in 1959 by the then prime minister. At that time, the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr Diefenbaker) stated: Those nuclear arms are not fully effective unless they are equipped with nuclear warheads.

And at the same time, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), who could clearly hear the echo of the Voice of Women, and the present Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), who was writing a book on the philosophy of the Liberal party, both stated:

> We do not need nuclear arms in Canada. It is better to be a great power working for defence and peace than a small atomic power.

When a by-election was held in my riding in 1960—I apologize for referring to my riding when I should be speaking on behalf of my party—the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) ranged all over my constituency. During a meeting held in the Mont Laurier parish hall, where I was seated in the first row, the Minister of Justice told the people: Do not vote for the evil Conservatives who want to establish a Bomarc base in La Macaza, because this will kill your wives and children. Do not vote for the evil Conservatives.

Do you know what happened? Well, the people of the riding of Labelle did not vote for the evil Conservatives. They elected the Liberal candidate.

Yet at that very moment, the poor little Conservative candidate was working himself up into a frenzy, expounding lofty principles. As a matter of fact, he was saying: If you want peace, prepare for war.

What do we hear today? We are told: We must meet our commitments, we must join our friends to check the communist bloc.

And the poor little Conservative candidate was saying: This is an economic asset, a huge establishment which will bring prosperity to the riding. But he was defeated while the Conservative party was still in power.

Why was the poor little Conservative candidate defeated? Because throughout the county of Labelle, in 1960, the people said: We do not want any nuclear weapons.

The voters of the riding of Labelle did the same thing again in 1961: We are against nuclear weapons, let us vote for the winner of the Nobel prize for peace, let us vote Liberal.

[Mr. Girouard.]

But suddenly in 1962, the same Liberal candidate who had been elected in spite of the Conservative landslide was defeated. Why? In fact everybody wonders why. Well, the answer is quite simple as far as my constituents are concerned. The leader of the Liberal party had become a little more deaf, he no longer heard the Voice of Women, probably his wife's to begin with.

In 1963, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) completely reversed his policy. In fact, I consulted Hansard from 1959 to 1962 and I could not find anything worse. There were only the words of a promoter of peace, of a politician against nuclear weapons.

But during the election campaign they began saying: We have to live up to our commitments. Our country has to do its share in the field of nuclear weapons.

And then we noted that the Liberal candidate in Labelle had been defeated by the Social Crediter who had only made one promise.

I actually stated everywhere in my constituency during the election campaign: "I am going to Ottawa, I will not accomplish any miracle, but I promise you that I will vote against nuclear weapons".

Furthermore, in La Macaza, a Bomarc missile base, as I have already said in this house and I repeat it, because, in my opinion, it is significant, the Social Credit candidate obtained a majority. Why? Because the voters of Labelle county are intelligent enough to know when a candidate comes and tells them: "Vote Grit", that he wants them to vote Grit, and that if they are told: "Vote Tory", the candidate wants them to vote Tory. As for me, I travelled through my riding of Labelle telling my electors that I would vote against nuclear arms. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was elected because of that and, today, I will respect my mandate precisely for that reason.

Mr. Speaker, why does the hon. member for Villeneuve submit his subamendment today, saying that he blames the Quebec Liberal members for their subservience.

Much to my regret, I must recognize that Voltaire himself had his moments of truth, and I must admit that the member for Lapointe was right this morning. I must admit that if the member for Lapointe never says what he thinks, he always thinks what he says. And when he stated that the Liberal members had been subservient, I believe he was right.

This action is outrageous because we wonder if, in all this, some political parties have not been playing small politics.

But, Mr. Speaker, what about the people in all that? The people whom the recipient of the Nobel prize for peace told in 1960 and 1961 that he did not want nuclear weapons. At that time, the people recognized the defence and peace policy of this good fellow, but today, they realize that they have been misled by the same good fellow who claims he changed his policy because of changed circumstances. But circumstances have not changed and the people have not altered their opinion.

In the issue of the day before yesterday, the editor of the newspaper L'Echo de la Lievre, the official organ of the Liberal party in my riding, wrote: down with nuclear weapons. That is what the people, being the people, have understood. They could have realized that if the situation were to change, a war becoming imminent, the government, on the recommendation of the defence committee, could take a new direction.

But where is war today? I must admit the merits of the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) who said: today, hundreds of countries sign a disarmament agreement, and Canada is the only one which accepts nuclear warheads.

If there is a war on today, Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather related to the economy. Seafarers are at war today because they are unsatisfied. The unemployed are at war because they have no jobs. The separatists are at war today because they are disappointed in the stand taken by the federal government. The Liberals are at war today—the federal wing and the provincial wing—because the provincial wing of the Liberal party is not satisfied with the stand taken by the federal wing of the party.

And what about the Conservative party, Mr. Speaker? If they are at war today, it is not so much because they are looking for a leader, but it is the leader who is looking for a party.

We must admit that Social Crediters are also at war, and not because they are looking for a leader, but because they have too many.

It must be admitted that the N.D.P. is at peace, but it is for a lack of fighters; today there are no wars and there will not be any more, since at the present time, as far as the provincial wing of the N.D.P. in the province of Quebec is concerned, the latter manages to avoid any dispute between that provincial wing and the rest of the country.

Mr. Speaker, such is the situation which prevails today. Because of the absence of about 50 Liberal members who could not vote in favour of the Speaker's decision, which I believed fair, we have to talk two more days on this subject.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the situation has so deteriorated now, if we have to discuss nuclear weapons, I wonder if this has not been premeditated on the part of the government party. Perhaps they figured that instead of being criticized for two days about the bad situation prevailing in this country, about the dissatisfied unemployed workers, about the compelling necessity of fulfilling their promises, they would rather let the house spend two days talking about nuclear weapons, which did not entail any risk since these weapons are securely installed in this country and that nobody can remove them.

Perhaps this is what happened, Mr. Speaker, but I also envision other possibilities. I see my young friends on the other side of the house smiling, but when I look at my old friends opposite, I realize that they seem very sad indeed, and I think that it is about time that the government party, instead of wasting their energies today to support the stand of the Postmaster General, who liberally dispenses patronage, should better listen to the newcomers, who are injecting, and one has to admit it, new blood into the party in power.

These newcomers have brought with them something which we, Socreds, have also featured in this house, namely perhaps a certain amount of guilelessness, but also of honesty. These newcomers like Social Crediters were sent to Ottawa by their constituents to tell the government: things have been lagging long enough in parliament at Ottawa, we will go there and make our contribution.

I am sure that when the present Prime Minister decides that it is better to respect the younger members of parliament and let them take the initiative instead of defending the old party members, who are giving out-of-date direction—

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to reproach my hon. friend opposite, for whom I have a great deal of consideration, for his disrespect for our leaders who enjoy the respect and admiration of all of us.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to call the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) to order and to remind him that he must limit his remarks to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the testimony of friendship and respect which the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) has just given to his leaders.

I would only wish that the hon. member would stop once in a while and consider the nefarious decisions and policies of his leaders, such as nuclear stockpiling in Canada.

Abandonment of Defence Projects

Since I must come back to the question of nuclear weapons, let us take a look at the present situation.

The Leader of the Opposition is and has always been against the acquisition of nuclear weapons, and he does not hesitate to say so.

On the other hand, the government states that it was opposed to the acquisition of nuclear weapons but that it had to accept them to fulfil the commitments made by the Conservatives when they were in office.

Apart from those two parties, there is the N.D.P., the Social Credit party, and the Caouette group who wonder, after witnessing such a performance, where the truth lies. There is the New Democratic party, which at some time said: Let us see the commitments given by the Conservative party and then we will know whether you are responsible or not.

At that time, there was no refusal whatsoever; the national defence minister said: Very well, we shall produce them—no, I think it was the Secretary of State for External Affairs—"We shall produce them; of course, there are certain state secrets that we cannot disclose, but we shall give you the information we can on this matter".

But then, the Conservative party would not have anything of the kind. Oh no. It's all or nothing; it could be discriminatory. But we, Mr. Speaker, the representatives of the people in this house, we ask you, on behalf of the people, to give us the requested information. Do the Canadian people know why we have nuclear weapons at present? No, that is an official secret. They will never know. And yet, they are the ones who elect the government. All of us here, regardless of party affiliations, will have to seek a new mandate from the people at the next election; we will say to our constituents: "Vote for us. Give us your support. But when the time comes to make important decisions, frowned upon by the people, there is no fear of the people, who are told that those are official secrets.

For two years now, the Social Credit party has been advocating in the house the establishment of a national defence committee. I for one know very well that our leader said that it was inadvisable to give a premature reply one way or the other. He said: "Let us wait until the defence committee submits a report after having secured the necessary information."

And did we ever get that defence committee report? All we were able to get from that committee were the press reports which the various papers had published the day before. We never could find out what we wanted to know. Was there a definite Conservative pledge with regard to nuclear armament or not? Nobody has been able to find out. If we were to know one day, it would explain this government's present position.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, people are tired of being left in the dark with regard to this important matter. I must refute what my hon. friend from Lotbiniere county stated in the last election: "The people of the province of Quebec obviously know that the leader of the Liberal party did not undertake to have nuclear arms", but even without having been in Lotbiniere county during the election, I know very well that most of the Liberal members from Quebec said: "Dear friends, you know that Mr. Pearson is a great man, that he was awarded the Nobel prize for peace, and he said we should get nuclear arms, but as you know very well, only in case of an emergency." Indeed, some went even further, and I would like the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin)—

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. What the hon. member for Labelle says is inaccurate. I stated in the county of Lotbiniere, that our present Prime Minister's position was what it is today, and I was elected with such a crushing majority that the Social Credit candidate lost his deposit. The people of the county of Lotbiniere supported the Liberal party's statement. Let anybody try to refute it.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, I accept the word of the hon. member for Lotbiniere, and I shall tell him that, if he was elected in the manner he says, the representatives of the three other parties in his county must indeed have been a pitiful sight.

Mr. Speaker, let us now come back to the subamendment before us. I would like to read it once again to hon. members:

I move, seconded by Mr. Gilles Gregoire—

Here is the amendment to the amendment:

—subserviently agreeing to the storing of nuclear arms on the territory of the state of Quebec, notwithstanding the strong protests voiced by the civic and municipal authorities of Quebec, the national societies and the welfare clubs, the labour and agricultural unions as well as by the Quebec members of parliament belonging to all political parties.

If this subamendment is read carefully, Mr. Speaker, one finds something striking about it. Here we have an amendment brought forward by a provincial group made up of provincial members. They are bringing in a provincial subamendment to blame the federal government for having stored nuclear arms in a province.

Now, faced with such a subamendment, we may ask ourselves who must blame the government. Should parliament, today, blame the government for having stored nuclear arms in the Quebec state? If we apply a contrario reasoning, especially if we should use the reasoning of the hon. member for Villeneuve, we must say that the hon. member for Villeneuve does not want nuclear arms in the province of Quebec but that he wants them in all the other provinces. I said: "if the line of argument of the hon. member for Villeneuve is to be followed".

Then, does it rest with parliament to decide whether it would be advisable to have nuclear arms in the other provinces and not in the province of Quebec? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. members have wondered about the words "state of Quebec". As for me, I am proud of the expression "state of Quebec". On the other hand, I know very well that the province of Quebec is not a state. But I know that the words "state of Quebec" are used by Mr. Jean Lesage who is considered as a regular guy in this house, and also by Mr. Daniel Johnson who does not have but enemies here, as well as by all important people in the province of Quebec. Therefore, I feel that the words "state of Quebec" are properly used here.

But one should wonder who will blame the government for having stored nuclear weapons in the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Who will blame the government? Liberals, yes, but Liberals from Quebec state. Who will blame the government? Conservatives, yes, but Conservatives from Quebec. Who will blame the government? Social Crediters, but Social Crediters from Quebec. Who will blame the government? Caouetters, but Caouetters from Quebec.

[Translation]

That is why, Mr. Speaker, before such a subamendment blaming the government for storing nuclear arms in the province of Quebec, I say to the government: let the members from Quebec settle that matter; let the Liberals from the province of Quebec settle that matter; let the Conservatives from the province of Quebec settle that matter; let the Social Crediters from the province of Quebec settle that matter; and let the members of the Caouette group, from the province of Quebec of course, settle that matter. Thus, Mr. Speaker, the people might find out, a little late perhaps, if today the Liberals of the province of Quebec decide openly to blame the government for storing nuclear arms in Quebec, that at a caucus they tried to prevent the remainder of their members from taking a regrettable decision.

While today the Quebec Conservatives blame the federal government, the people will surely realize that the deep-set hesitation of their leader was brought about by the fact that the Quebec members were set against nuclear arms. With all due respect to the hon. member for Villeneuve, to the Liberals and to the Conservatives, the people in the province of Quebec remember that the Social Crediters elected to the federal parliament had promised the electorate they would vote against nuclear arms. The people will understand clearly that the Social Credit group in Ottawa cannot work miracles, and has never promised any. The Social Crediters however are doing their best to ensure that the country is well administered. Above all, the people will have to admit that the Social Credit group has not reneged, and that it has voted against the stockpiling of nuclear arms in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I move, in accordance with standing orders, chapter III, section 29, that the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) be now heard.

Some hon. Members: Closure.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Winkler) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived.

[Mr. Winkler.]

[Translation]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer). Had I voted, I would have voted to maintain your decision.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. If I had not been, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Wait until the pairs are in.

Mr. MacInnis: It is on this very business of pairing that I raise a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: Wait until it is over.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder would all hon. members take their seats for just a minute. I propose to hear the pairs first and then the point of order.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, I was paired, or I would have voted against the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to maintain your decision.

[Text]

Mrs. Konantz: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I not been, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I was about to raise with regard to the matter of pairing, I bring it up at this time for the simple reason that it is a waste of time going through all the members and hearing them say whom they were paired with, for the very reason that there has been a violation of the pairs on the part of the Liberal members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege, and I do not want to hold up the hon. member in any way. The course followed in this house has invariably been that the Speaker has taken the list of members from the whip. We are being denied, by your action today, the right to explain the vote we are making this evening. I submit, sir, it is most improper, and with great respect I say that to you.

You have denied us by your action the right to have anyone speak for this party and explain the nature of our attitude respecting the amendment to the amendment laid before the house.

Mr. Harkness: If I may have a word on this particular point of order, I attempted to get up to speak twice yesterday evening. I was informed by the deputy chairman of committees who was then in the chair, not long before ten o'clock last night, that after the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) had finished, I would be next on the list.

I found out today that another list had gone in. I made inquiries and found I was down on this list fifth, sixth or seventh from the position I thought I was going to be in, and then I was finally recognized.

I would also like to say that nobody asked me to give up my place in favour of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), or made any suggestion to me in that regard or anything else along that line. Therefore this whole motion is one which I find very difficult to understand.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition. I suggest that his remarks were out of order on two counts. In the first place he was reflecting on a vote that this house has just taken, and in the second place he was blaming Your Honour for a decision which was taken by vote of the house. He was out of order and he owes an apology to Your Honour.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I owe no apology for drawing your attention to the fact that you, sir, departed from the regularly appointed plan we have always had, of accepting the nominations of the party whip.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly do not wish to pour any more oil on the fire, but I believe that I have acted in accordance with tradition and precedent. If I may just take one minute I think it will settle the question. Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 121, paragraph 1 says:

> There should not be a list of speakers with an order of precedence in the House of Commons. Any member who wishes to speak may rise and endeavour to catch the Speaker's eye. He who is first seen has the right to speak. By old parliamentary usage, a member who wishes to make his maiden speech enjoys the privilege of being first seen by the Speaker, if he rises at the same time as other members; but the privilege will not be conceded unless claimed within the parliament to which the member was first returned.
> (2) the succession of speakers is left entirely to the Speaker. If his call is disputed by some member who thinks he rose before the Speaker's choice, a motion may be made under S.O. 35—
> —which is now standing order 29—
> —that "he be now heard."

Among my papers I have a signed note from the chairman of committees in which is assigned the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), following which was the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). In the circumstances I had no other choice but to act in accordance with what I considered to be the right thing, and tradition.

The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; the right hon. Leader of the Opposition complained that no member of his party was given an opportunity to explain their position. If this is true, then the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) is not a member of his party, and I think the house has a right to know that.

Mr. MacEwan: What party do you belong to now? You should be across the floor.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): It seems with considerable difficulty I am finally going to be able to make my speech.

Mr. Speaker, I could devote all the time that is available to me to a discussion of the arguments and considerations which, in my opinion, made it desirable that Canada should acquire nuclear warheads for certain weapons systems for the use of the Canadian forces. However, for a variety of reasons I am not going to follow that course.

First of all, I spent some two and a half years putting forward these considerations and arguments, and I do not think there is anything to be gained by repeating them once more at this time, especially in view of the fact that the present Minister of National Defence repeated a number of them in his speech yesterday. I can only regret that he and the other members of his party did not come to this same decision some one and a half to three years earlier than they did. This might have avoided the whole subject of nuclear arms becoming the matter of partisan political argument which it did and has become.

I will not follow that course for another reason. Most hon. members are aware that all of the polls held on this subject in the period from six months to a year ago indicated the fact that a considerable majority of Canadians who had any opinion on it were in favour of the acquisition of nuclear arms. Therefore there is no need to make further efforts to convince the general public of that fact. Furthermore, in my view this matter was settled by a vote of the house in the early part of the session, and therefore should not have been revived, as it has been at this time.

There are a few things I would like to say. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) cited several people, whom he looked upon as experts in this field, as saying nuclear arms for Canada were not needed and were not desirable. On any military matter, and particularly on the subject of any type of weapon you will have a variety of opinion so far as the experts, real or so-called, are concerned.

This is inevitable, and one can cite all kinds of people on both sides of the question. However, in my opinion there was no doubt that the great bulk of informed military opinion was convinced of the fact that nuclear weapons were necessary and desirable, so far as the weapons systems in Canada for which they were proposed and for which they are now being put into effect were concerned.

I doubt very much whether anything is going to be gained at the present time by great repetition of the views and opinions of experts on one side of the question or the other.

The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) said that Quebec wishes Canada to work for peace. I should like to make it quite clear that I think everyone in this country who is concerned with attempting to get nuclear weapons for Canadian forces is also just as much concerned to work for peace. In fact, I believe quite firmly that the best method of ensuring that we will have peace and that there will not be the outbreak of another world conflict is to keep the western world strong. To do that, each member of the western alliance has to play its due part and take its due burden of responsibility for the defence of the west. As far as Canada is concerned, in my view that involves our making use of nuclear weapons. So much for the nuclear weapons question.

I should now like to say something about the cancellation of the general purpose frigate program. The main point I have to make is that this cancellation is, in effect, a decision to reduce Canada's naval contribution to NATO. Last Friday I asked the minister of defence whether the government had made a decision to reduce our naval contribution to NATO, and his reply was no. I accept that, of course, as the case; no formal decision in that regard has been made. But it appalls me that a decision has been made to scrap the general purpose frigate program without having something else to put in its place, or without the realization that by taking the decision to scrap the program Canada has decided, in effect, to reduce its contribution to NATO, which reduction is inevitable.

Anybody experienced in naval shipbuilding programs is well aware of the fact that such a program is a very long and lengthy process. To begin with, a great deal of time is involved in attempting to assess the best type of ship to build. After that decision is reached a great deal of time is involved in drawing up the plans and finding out where to fit in the multitudinous electronic devices necessary at the present time, the armament, and so on. Then there is a further lengthy period before construction actually gets under way and is completed. So that a naval building program is a very long term project.

The general purpose frigate program having been cancelled, I think there is no question that because nothing has yet been decided upon to take its place all these lengthy processes I have mentioned cannot be brought under way. As the present ships in the navy are taken out of commission or wear out there will be nothing to replace them. Therefore, Canada's navy in the years ahead will be reduced in size and effectiveness. I think there is no use our blinking at that fact; that is inevitably the situation.

As far as the adoption of any particular ship or weapons system is concerned, arguments for or against each one can be made. As I mentioned before, you can get expert opinion both pro and con in regard to any one of them. What has to be done is that an assessment has to be made of the value of a particular ship or piece of equipment compared with another, and a final decision come to as to which will best meet the general purpose you have in mind. One of the arguments made against the general purpose frigate is that its speed is not as great as that of a nuclear submarine. No surface ship of any size is able to go as fast as the present nuclear-powered submarines can go under water. Therefore, this argument, if made against the general purpose frigate, can also be made against any type of surface vessel of any size. The position may be changed by development of larger-sized hydrofoil vessels, but so far there has been no such development. And whether it would be successful in any event we do not know—especially the development of vessels with a good deal of endurance in the matter of the time they can spend at sea, and other matters.

I do not think that anyone who has had experience in these matters would for a moment become completely wedded to one particular ship or type of equipment and say that that was the only one of any use, that nothing else would do and that we must proceed with it no matter what the consideration. On the other hand, I think that merely to discard a particular type of weapon or particular type of ship, as in this case, without having anything to replace it, is shortsighted policy and one which does not tend to maintain or build up the strength of Canadian forces or to maintain our contribution to the NATO forces of the west.

A considerable number of people in this country would like to see military expenditures of all kinds reduced, and I can sympathize with this view. But the actual fact is that our contribution to the forces of NATO calculated as a percentage of the gross national product has been going down steadily. Our gross national product has been going up; the actual forces contributed have remained approximately the same.

We have been able to counter complaints on that score by pointing out that our contribution has been that which we agreed to make, which we have kept up, and so on. If we start to reduce it we will get into the position where we can properly be accused by our allies of not pulling our weight in the total western effort. As a result, I hope the government will reconsider this scrapping of the general purpose frigate program. If they are not prepared to do that, I hope they will be able to produce immediately an alternative in sufficient time to meet the gap which will otherwise exist. However, I do not think that is possible. Therefore, the only way in which our naval strength can be kept up and our commitments to NATO met is to proceed with the general purpose frigate program.

This program, Mr. Speaker, was not conceived in haste. This frigate was the type of ship required for replacement purposes and one which had received a tremendous amount of study and development. All sorts of alternatives were considered, and eventually our naval experts recommended that this type of ship be built, as one which would be best adapted to the needs of the future for the next 15 to 20 years. That opinion was concurred in by the chiefs of staff, a recommendation made to me, and I spent a very long time going into it and subsequently recommended it to cabinet, after being convinced that the alternatives suggested, some of which some people wanted to proceed with, would not be as good.

I do not think that the period of review which the minister mentioned will change the basic situation at all. He can continue to review the subject for as long as he likes, but I think he will still be faced with the identical considerations, and the same decisions which have to be made, as I was when minister of defence. I doubt very much whether any alternative can be produced which is better, and I am quite certain that none can be produced in time.

I do not want to take undue time, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to mention one othe matter, namely the question of the Penhold air base which was dealt with this afternoon by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt). I agree with him that the excuse given, that the air base will be closed by reason of safety factors, just does not hold water. One has only to consider the fact that in the city of Ottawa there is a squadron of operational jets based at the same airport used by civilian traffic. No question has been raised that the airport is not safe with this squadron there. As a matter of fact, the amount of traffic in and out of Ottawa is much greater than the amount of air traffic passing through Penhold. This is another decision which I hope will be looked at and rescinded. A large amount of money has been spent on Penhold and on the new buildings there. If a decision has been made to reduce the number of R.C.A.F. stations, there are other stations, on which a great deal less money has been spent, with largely second world war buildings, and things of that kind. It would be much more economical and sensible to close some of these stations than to close a station like Penhold which represents a very big investment for the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Balcer: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, just before I came into the house, a friend of mine told me: "After what occurred this afternoon, your speech had better be interesting."

I must say that if I speak tonight, it is because I understand deeply the problems facing the house at the present time. Some people even say that the government may be overthrown by the vote on the subamendment, but I do not think it will, because the group who moved the subamendment merely used a trick as old as the hills, namely submitting a question of policy to the house, but surrounding it by all sorts of qualifications which ensure its rejection even before it is submitted.

I declare that the subamendment moved by the Ralliement Creditistes is an underhanded one, the result of which will be to maintain this government in office.

As far as we of the Conservative party are concerned, we are anxious to overthrow the government as soon as possible. We are not afraid of a general election; we hope that it will come soon. The subamendment, as drafted, is contrary to all parliamentary government principles of a federal state. And at this stage, may I be allowed to read the subamendment:

Through the servile acceptance of nuclear arms stored within the territory of the state of Quebec, in spite of the vigorous protests—

Abandonment of Defence Projects

I think that this subamendment is completely inconsistent. In brief, what our friends of the Ralliement Creditistes are saying is that they are a little against nuclear arms, and that, in a certain part of Canada only. That reminds me of someone who had travelled in Europe and had visited the place des Pyramides where the statue of Joan of Arc was erected. And when he came back, if someone asked him whether it was an equestrian statue, our traveller answered: "It is a little bit equestrian".

Such is the stand taken by the members of the Ralliement Creditistes. They are against nuclear arms, but only a little bit.

If you analyse the observations made by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) this afternoon, and if you consider the terms used in the subamendment itself, without any consideration for constitutional points of view or for national unity—matters which do not seem to concern our friends in the Ralliement Creditistes—you find out that if the subamendment were passed, that would mean that the house decided there would be no nuclear arms, only in the province of Quebec, but it would also mean that our friends sitting in the far corner of the house are in favour of nuclear arms for the rest of Canada.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Balcer: What an inconsistent attitude.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of the fact that there are only a few minutes left, I think we could allow the hon. member for Three Rivers to proceed with his observations.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, if the house adopted the subamendment, would that mean that the house is in favour of nuclear arms in North Bay, Edmundston, Ottawa, but not in Hull?

At once, you can see the inconsistency of the subamendment which I think is absolutely ludicrous. We, Conservatives, have objected to nuclear weapons throughout Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, on Vancouver island as well as in Newfoundland and this before, during and after the general election.

As for our Liberal friends, they are in favour of them today, but they were strongly against them before the last general election.

This afternoon, someone quoted the speech made by the member of Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) during the memorable election campaign in the Labelle constituency where he drew a frightening picture of the La Macaza base. He then stated that the Bomarc base in La Macaza would result in the death of thousands of persons in Labelle and that for that reason, the constituents should vote against the Conservative candidate.

And it is that same member for Laurier who said before 4,500 people during the last election campaign, as evidenced in a newspaper article:

Chevrier. No atomic bomb in Canada ever.

Mr. Speaker, that is what happened during the last election campaign, and I understand the concern of many citizens about the shifting of attitude of this government.

As far as the amendment to the amendment is concerned, I repeat that it is irresponsible, contrary to common sense and that its only result would be to maintain the Liberal government in office. But, what is worse, this subamendment runs counter to Canadian tradition and national unity. In fact, it reveals an anticonstitutional attitude. It is a subamendment that I would describe as separatist, moved by people who claim not to be separatists.

They want legislation which would apply only in the territory of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the way to build a country. Are we going to have ten family allowance acts? Are we to have different rates in the different provinces of Canada? Are we going to set up different federal tax structures in Manitoba, in Vancouver and in Nova Scotia? That would create utter confusion, Mr. Speaker.

Worst of all, sir, is the irreparable wrong that subamendment, and everything it stands for, can do to national unity, to the ties of mutual friendship, respect and pride that every member should be duty-bound to promote in Canada.

We have not been elected to bisect the country, but rather to consolidate and favour mutual understanding not only between the two great races which form it, but also between the different provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I am a member—

Mr. Gregoire: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Balcer: I am a member for Canada, I have been elected in Three Rivers, a city 97 per cent of which—

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Balcer: —97 per cent of which is French speaking. The people I represent do not have any inferiority complex. I am proud of being a French Canadian and—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Villeneuve is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Three Rivers is giving a dishonest interpretation of the subamendment. There is no suggestion of a division in the subamendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Three Rivers has the floor and I would suggest he continue with his remarks.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I am not here to legislate only in matters of interest to my province. I am here to take an interest in the affairs of the whole country. I know for a fact that the province of Quebec will be strong and prosperous inasmuch as the whole of Canada is strong and prosperous, and vice versa.

I am here to lend a hand to all members, be they French speaking or English speaking, who want to work for the good of our country. Indeed, such are the basic principles of the Conservative party which led to the birth of confederation as we know it today.

Mr. Speaker, we are against nuclear stockpiling anywhere in Canada, especially when it is forced upon us by foreigners.

One of the members of the Ralliement Creditistes claimed that he was the spokesman for the province of Quebec in the house. Well, it would be most depressing, to say the least, if this ridiculous subamendment expressed the views of the people of Quebec.

We are glad that the province of Quebec is undergoing great social changes at present. French Canadians intend to exercise all their rights as citizens of Canada, and they are willing to assume their responsibilities. The French Canadians I know wish to play a role of national importance; they will not be confined within a ghetto as the Caouette group advocates.

Mr. Speaker, if the latter had wanted to defeat the government, they would have moved a subamendment which would apply to the whole of Canada. Instead, they propose a division of Canada which would turn the province of Quebec into a reserve.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 8.15 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 (d) of standing order 56, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendment or amendments now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Caouette) which was negatived on the following division:

PENSIONS—ALLEGED DELAY IN PROCEEDING WITH LEGISLATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the house reaches a decision on the main motion I rise to register a grievance. The grievance I wish to raise is that we have been completely unable in the latter part of this session of the House of Commons to get a clear statement from the government that it is going to proceed at this session of parliament with one of its own major pieces of legislation. I refer to the Canada pension plan. Every hon. member in this house knows that the Canada pension plan was a major point in the platform of the Liberal party during the election which the Liberals won on April 8 this year. I do not think it would be out of place to say that if it had not been for the precise nature of that promise, the clearcut way in which it was put, and for the assurance to the Canadian people that the Canada pension plan would be brought in right away, there is every possibility that the Liberals would not have won the election on April 8. It was the keystone in the arch of their program, and I submit that we in this house and the people of this country have a real grievance because of the delay on the part of the government in proceeding with this plan. Moreover, the government is still unwilling to tell us that the plan will be proceeded with at this session of parliament.

It is very popular in the House of Commons, particularly just after an election campaign, to produce the election literature published by other parties. I have in my hand a copy of a leaflet put out by the National Liberal Federation of Canada entitled "Better Pensions for All".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I note the support which there appears to be on the Liberal side of the house for this plank in the Liberal platform, and I hope those on the treasury benches will note the support of the backbenchers and give them a chance at an early date to vote for this plan. I note that that request which I have just made on behalf of the backbench Liberals to their cabinet ministers has been endorsed by the backbench Liberals.

In this leaflet the details of the proposed plan were spelled out quite fully, and I notice in the leaflet these two significant sentences:

> This plan has now been developed. A new Liberal government can act promptly.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that everyone in Canada, both those who supported the Liberals and those who were opposed to them, believed that the Liberals meant this promise, and that they would act upon it in this session of parliament. So when we came here for the opening of the session on May 16 we were not surprised—indeed we were pleased—to hear in the speech from the throne read to us in the other place, as recorded on page 7 of our own Hansard for May 16, the promise that this Canada pension plan would be implemented. The paragraph reads in these words:

> My ministers have undertaken to establish a comprehensive system of contributory pensions. The new pensions will be co-ordinated with the existing provisions for old age security, for the purpose of enabling all Canadians to retire in security and with dignity. While the arrangements required for this great advance in the social security of our people are necessarily complex, the legislation submitted to you will be designed to make the new pension plan operative as soon as possible.

A few days later, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), when taking part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, uttered these interesting words as reported in Hansard for May 20, 1963, at page 57:

> We said during the campaign and subsequently —and, indeed, earlier in this house, in more detail, I believe, than any opposition party ever gave before, what we would do and in what order we would do it. Now we are taking steps to do what we said we would do. The intentions of the government as set out this year in the speech from the throne are not vague aspirations to be acted on some time, maybe never. We have set out simply in the speech the main matters we intend to bring forward during this session.

There you have, Mr. Speaker, a clear confirmation of the Liberal promise during the election campaign to bring in the Canada pension plan, a promise set out in the speech from the throne and confirmed by the Prime Minister in his first major speech in this House of Commons. Despite that kind of assurance, some of us have had previous experience in parliament of the Liberal party. I recall particularly their first announcements and promises to the Canadian people in the field of social security. They were made in 1919, and some of us know how long it took to get some of those promises implemented. We are still trying to get implementation of some of the things promised in 1919.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question. Would he mention a single piece of social legislation promised by the Liberal party in 1919, or even as late as 1945, which has ever been introduced and enacted in this parliament by any party other than the Liberal party?

Mr. Knowles: The Secretary of State seems to be proud of the way in which the Liberals have been prodded by opposition parties into bringing forward some of the measures which they themselves advocated. In 1919 the Liberal party promised old age pensions, unemployment insurance and health insurance. It was seven or eight years before we got old age pensions. It was 21 years before we got unemployment insurance. We are still waiting for health insurance. So I suggest that if the Secretary of State has any more questions he might word them more appropriately.

Mr. Pickersgill: I notice the hon. gentleman did not answer my question.

Mr. Knowles: Because of this experience, some of us began early in this session trying to pin the government down, to secure a firm undertaking that the government would go through with the implementation of the Canada pension plan. The Minister of National Health and Welfare knows what she said when I asked her the first few times about the plan. She told me to contain myself in patience, that I would soon see the bill. I kept on asking her. I put questions to her on this subject on May 20 and May 22, and each time I was told the legislation would come soon. Then, on June 8 the hon. lady went to Hamilton and made a speech before a Liberal organization down there giving details of the Canada pension plan which was to be introduced in the House of Commons. A couple of days later I asked her if she would be good enough to tell the house what she had told the Liberals in Hamilton. She assured me that the details of the plan would soon be placed before us. On June 19, incidentally, the 59th day this government was in office—everyone knows how those first 60 days went by—the minister did succeed in giving notice of the resolution preceding the bill to set up the Canada pension plan. It appeared on our notice paper on June 20, which was the 60th day the present government was in office. And the government was very proud that it had got that far in the first 60 days. But all of this is to be seen in the light of the election promise that Liberal government would be prepared to act promptly in this matter.

On June 21, the resolution was transferred from government notices of motion to government orders and it looked as though we were making progress. A few days later the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) sent his famous letter to the premiers of the provinces about questions of social security beyond old age security and beyond the Canada pension plan, which seemed to me to suggest that a way was being opened up for delay. So I asked the Prime Minister on June 26 whether the result of his letter might be to cause delay in the implementation of the Canada pension plan. The right hon. gentleman assured me that such would not be the case. That is the story over a considerable period of time. There was the promise of action, confirmation of that promise, assurances that if we would just wait we would see the bill and get going. Finally, on July 18, the motion respecting the resolution preceding the bill to bring in the plan was moved by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As hon. members all know, we had that one day's debate, and that is all the opportunity we have had for discussion of the matter in this house.

I would remind hon. members opposite that during the debate of July 18 the hon. lady said some interesting and significant things. She said the plan had been worked out in considerable detail, and I agree with her. She said that, provided the house could move with reasonable expedition in passing this legislation, it would be possible for contributions to the new plan to commence in October, 1964, and for certain of the benefits under the plan to begin in January, 1966. There were two main benefits which were to start in January, 1966. The first was to be payments under the pension plan itself of say, $10 a month, to people who had contributed for a couple of years and who had reached the age of 70. The other benefit would be the right of people to take a pension at an earlier age, such as 65 or any age between 65 and 70.

The point I wish to make is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare made it clear that, in order to get the plan going so that contributions could be made in October of 1964 and so that people could begin deriving benefits by January, 1966, the legislation had to be put through parliament as expeditiously as possible. Yet here we are at the end of October, having waited since July 18, and this house has not been given an opportunity to proceed further with that legislation.

All of us know what has happened in the meantime—the furore which has been raised about the plan, notably by the insurance companies and other private interests who think that pension plans of this sort should not be handled by the government. We know there have also been complaints by some of the provinces which resulted in this question being discussed at the federal-provincial conference held while the house was in summer recess. I recognize that, as a result of what took place at that conference, certain decisions were made and certain changes were made. It was decided at that time, I think partly because of what happened at the conference but partly because of protests which came from opposition parties and from people throughout the length and breadth of the country, to separate the $10 increase in old age security benefits from the Canada pension plan and to put it into effect forthwith. That was a good decision. That increase was brought in on September 30, or at least it was first moved on that date, and now it is part of the law of the land. But one of the by-products of this change has been that nothing further has been done to go ahead with the Canada pension plan itself.

The minister may say there was an undertaking to consult with the provinces and that there is another federal-provincial conference coming up in the month of November to discuss this plan and other related matters. But surely we have the right to know the intention of the federal government with respect to this legislation, which is still on our order paper and concerning which nothing has been done since July 18. Attempts which have been made since we resumed on September 30 to extract from the Minister of National Health and Welfare or from the Prime Minister any kind of assurance that the measure will be proceeded with at this session have been utterly unsuccessful. This is so, despite the fact that the hon. lady herself pleaded, on July 18, for expedition so that the benefits of the plan could reach our people at the earliest possible date. On September 30, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare introduced a resolution providing for the $10 increase in old age security payments she said this, as reported in Hansard at page 3038:

> This present measure is a solid step in the right direction but the government sincerely hopes that the Canada pension plan will be introduced before too long to provide adequately for the retirement of our older people.

During the election campaign there was no doubt about it. It would be done. According to the speech from the throne, it would be done. According to the speech made by the Prime Minister in the debate on the address, it would be done. Throughout May and June the minister told us to possess our souls in patience, because it would be done. But on September 30 the hon. lady merely hopes it will be introduced before too long.

By October 15 I was finding it difficult to possess my soul in patience much longer. So I asked the Prime Minister whether he could give us an assurance that the plan would be proceeded with during the present session. In reply, as is reported on page 3579 of Hansard for October 15, the right hon. gentleman said:

> We intend to proceed with legislation in this matter as soon as possible.

> Mr. Knowles: Would it be possible for the Prime Minister to say whether that "as soon as possible" means this session?
> Mr. Pearson: It depends among other things on the hon. gentleman and all hon. members of the house and how long we take over the legislation we are now considering.

Pension Legislation Delayed

This refers to legislation which had been promised, legislation which was considered so important that it was the keystone in the arch of the Liberal victory in April; it was something many people had counted on; it was legislation which they had been led to expect would be enacted promptly. Yet now it is given such low priority that time spent by hon. members in discussing almost any other matter is allowed to stand in the way of its implementation.

On October 18, as reported at page 3735 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister, because there had been a statement on this subject by Premier Robarts, whether we could have an assurance that the plan would be proceeded with at this session of parliament. His answer was:

I have already indicated that the Canada pension plan will be proceeded with as soon as possible.

I then asked as a supplementary question:

Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that that answer has been interpreted as meaning the plan is to be put off until a later session? Can he not give a definite answer with respect to this session?

To this, the Prime Minister replied that he was not responsible for other people's interpretations. When my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam made an observation to the effect that this interpretation was apparently being made by none other than the premier of Ontario, the Prime Minister replied:

Any interpretation of that kind that the plan will not be proceeded with at this session would certainly be premature.

He did not deny the interpretation. He just said it was too soon to put that kind of interpretation upon it. A few days later I asked the Prime Minister if he would give the house a line-up of the business to be dealt with during the balance of the session, and he indicated he would. It is no secret that one of the things I hoped he would include in that list was the Canada pension plan legislation. I got no satisfaction in that respect. On the orders of the day this afternoon, I asked the question whether in view of the statement which the Minister of National Health and Welfare made to the national Liberal women's federation yesterday, that the plan would be proceeded with either this session or at the next, the Prime Minister could tell us which it is to be—this session or next. He gave the same answer—"as soon as possible".

The other day in another exchange the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that the government is as interested as ever in the Canada pension plan and is discussing the matter with the provinces. Surely, Mr. Speaker, my grievance is quite clear that there is a world of difference between the assurance in the election campaign that it would be proceeded with, between the categorical statement in the speech from the throne that it was coming, between the Prime Minister's assurance in his speech that these things would be proceeded with at this session, between the earlier statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that her career was tied to this pension plan and if the pension plan went down she would go down too, between all of these assurances and the statements we are now getting that it will be as soon as possible, maybe this session, maybe next, and that the government is still interested in the Canada pension plan.

I think that statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare is really the pay-off. This is the government's baby. This is the keystone in the arch of the Liberal success at the last election. This was the one precise proposal. Most of the rest of the things that the Liberals talked about in the campaign, apart from the position they were going to take on nuclear arms, were in vague generalities. Here was something that was precise. But now, instead of its being something about which we can get a firm answer that the government is going ahead, we are told by the responsible minister, the minister who was prepared to tie her career to this, only that the government is still interested in the Canada pension plan. We contend that this house deserves more than that from the government. We contend that the people of Canada deserve more than that from the government. We contend that we have the right to the assurance that this plan is going to be proceeded with at this session of parliament.

As I have already said, the Minister of National Health and Welfare herself gave a timetable when she spoke on the 18th of July. Surely this makes it quite clear that if the plan is not proceeded with at this session, if it is put off until 1964, the whole timetable will have to be pushed along. That will mean that contributions will not start in the fall of 1964 but will start in 1965 or 1966 or 1967. Every year that the beginning of the contributions is put off puts off the first year in which benefits will be enjoyed by people who are reaching the age of 70. If the plan were carried forward as promised it would mean that people who are now 68 years of age could count on an addition to their old age security out of the Canada pension plan when they reach 70 and, of course, people 67, 66 and down could all count on such a supplement. But if the plan is put off it means that the 68-year olds can kiss that idea goodbye. It means it is gone for the 69-year-olds. It means we will have again another round of the whole need for raising the flat rate benefit of old age security itself.

I should like to stress this angle, that the whole question of getting our old age security on a good, firm, sound basis ought to be by means of combining a contributory plan with the flat rate benefit, and unless we do it at a time like this we are going to have to change the relationship, change the calculations, increase the old age security benefit again and go through the whole round with all the difficulties we have had.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that not only was this one of the major promises in the Liberal platform at the last election, but that it is the most important domestic issue that has been placed before parliament. As I say, it was put on the order paper back on the 20th or 21st of June and was first debated on the 18th of July. But now it stands waiting while the government tries to make up its mind whether it is just interested in the plan or whether it is really going to go ahead with it.

A good deal gets said in the course of all this about the position of the province of Quebec and the position of the province of Ontario. The federal government talks more about Ontario than it talks about Quebec, although Mr. Lesage is making it just as difficult to bring this plan into being as is Mr. Robarts. But I should like to make the point that Mr. Robarts' statements have been pretty clear. There was a real fight over this matter in the recent Ontario election and an attempt was made to cast Mr. Robarts in the role of being an opponent of the Canada pension plan. Maybe in some respects he was. Maybe he preferred his plan. But since the election he has given a clear indication that if the Canada pension plan is going to be brought in his government will delay the implementation of the portable pension plan proposed for Ontario. But he has said that if the Canada pension plan is not put through at this session, if it is shelved, then Ontario will have no option but to bring in its plan and to provide for it to become effective perhaps in 1965.

It seems to me that is not a threat on the part of Mr. Robarts. I am the last person in the house who feels any need to defend Mr. Robarts, but I suggest we need to look at this thing fairly. He has not posed any threat. As a matter of fact, he has left the door open for the federal government to bring in its plan at this session. He is trying to hurry the federal government along. I understand that the Ontario government has named its members to a committee to discuss the technical aspects of the whole business with the federal government, and it seems to me that so far as public representatives are concerned, so far as the public view is concerned, the time is ripe for the plan to be proceeded with at this session of parliament.

I urge, Mr. Speaker, that we do not continue to be given these "as soon as possible" answers, that we do not continue to be told that the government is merely interested and, above all, I suggest that the government must not use the excuse that it cannot get on with this business because the house does not deal with other matters as expeditiously as it would like. As I pointed out when I put a question to the Prime Minister the other day, there are 20 or 25 items of business on the order paper. When house business is announced there are never more than four or five referred to. There are another 15 or 20 that are never suggested. We may get some light on the government's intentions on Monday, but so far we have no list of priorities. We feel this subject should be given top priority and that there should be no further delay in assuring the house that it will be proceeded with at this session.

I am prepared to hear the government say that the motion cannot be proceeded with until after the federal-provincial talks have been held in the month of November, but there is no question but that this session of parliament is going to last quite a bit longer than that. I think we are all assuming we will be here pretty well up to Christmas eve, if not longer, and I think we should have the positive assurance of the government that as soon as the November talks are over this plan will be proceeded with.

Obviously some changes are going to have to be made. The resolution that is still on the order paper and which was debated on the 18th of July does not take into consideration the fact that a $10 increase has now been made in old age security payments. It does not take into consideration the opting out that Premier Lesage has expressed on behalf of Quebec. These facts have got to be met. Let us have them met. Let us have a new resolution introduced. Let us have a new actuarial report similar to that excellent one prepared by the government actuary, so that we will have that picture up to date.

In my view the Minister of National Health and Welfare has done a good job in trying to answer attacks on the plan by the insurance companies. The speech that was made in her name in Toronto on Monday, September 30, by her parliamentary secretary, was an effective answer to the insurance companies' attacks on the plan. But in the meantime we read in the column in Maclean's magazine written by no less a friend of the Liberal party than Peter Newman that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has only five other members of the cabinet who still support her on this plan, and at the same time the Prime Minister himself says only "as soon as possible".

This, Mr. Speaker, is not good enough. This is an important item in the Liberal government program, but it is more than that. It is something that now belongs to the House of Commons. It is something that now belongs to the Canadian people. The responsibility for any further delay rests upon the government and I call upon the government for a clear statement that the plan will be proceeded with at this session of parliament.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has raised as a grievance this evening the Canada pension plan and the fact that it has not proceeded through all stages in the house. He has asked as well for a clear statement that the government will proceed with the plan during this session which, as my hon. friend knows, perhaps has only another month or two to run. I should like to draw to my hon. friend's attention the agenda already before the house involving business which must be done, including even supply motions and all the estimates which must be brought forward and discussed.

My hon. friend will realize how little time is left for legislation between now and the end of this session. I ask him to bear that in mind as a framework in listening to the remarks which I should like to make this evening regarding the present status of the Canada pension plan.

There is no suggestion in the mind of the government that the plan is to be shelved. I know my hon. friend has spoken as he has and has raised this matter and sought an assurance from the government because of his interest in this social legislation. I know he does not raise it in an attempt to harm the possibility of such legislation being enacted for the benefit of the Canadian people. My hon. friend knows, I think, Mr. Speaker, that I am not, by nature, a patient individual. Indeed, some misguided individuals in this country have called me precipitate on occasion. Surely then, as the minister responsible for this legislation my hon. friend must realize that my inclination would be rather to press on with the matter. This being the case he will, and perhaps other members will, understand how if I am prepared to be patient, I have the temerity to ask him and other hon. members also to be patient.

In July of this year a resolution which was on the order paper was opened for debate, and a one day debate only was had upon it. This debate occasioned the rather unusual step, namely, the introduction of a white paper on the plan in order that information might be had abroad in the country as well as in the house as quickly as possible concerning the framework of the Canada pension plan. My hon. friend knows the steps of legislation in this house much better than I, and he knows that normally we would have proceeded through the stages of the introduction of a bill in order for this amount of detail to be given. Since it was felt by the government that the details should be available as fully and as quickly as possible, a white paper was prepared and introduced on the first day of the resolution stage. This white paper set out broadly, and in some particularity, the intention of the government in respect of this legislation.

This was a matter which had priority; this was a matter included in the speech from the throne. But, Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, there is a new spirit of co-operative federalism abroad in this country, one which requires and demands further consultation with the provinces than perhaps ever before occurred. I think my hon. friend will agree with most hon. members on both sides of the chamber that such consultation is good. The federal government must bear in mind that its responsibility is to enact federal legislation. But surely, sir, it is clear that when such legislation can be of the type which could collide with provincial legislation in some field it is necessary, so far as possible, to dovetail actions on the two levels.

Until this house rose for its adjournment, no new action had been taken in the pension field in the provinces. When this government came into authority, there had been a recent enactment by the province of Ontario. My hon. friend has made a study of pensions, I know, throughout much of his public career. He is aware of the type of legislation which was enacted, but is not yet in force, in Ontario. This particular type of legislation applies to only about one half of the labour force of that province. It incorporates, so far as it is possible in a province, that principle to which I think members on all sides of the house adhere, the portability of benefits from one job to another. But it is necessarily confined only to the province of Ontario.

It has still another problem which does not attract support to it from many quarters, that is it is not a state plan as such, not introduced, funded or supported in any way by a provincial government, but is a regulatory system only. It requires any employer of 15 or more people to bring into force a contributory pension plan calling for contributions, in most cases, from both employee and employer but without stating the amount of those contributions and setting minimal standards. The minimal standards would call for in some 40 years the payment of about $80 a month to the individual contributor. There is nothing, of course, in the legislation to prohibit any employer-employee arrangement to provide for a greater pension. But because it is compulsory on the group with which it deals, care must be taken not to require too heavy a burden, particularly with the impact all at one time, upon the Ontario employer and employee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at least the principle of a plan which is available to every person in the labouring force of Canada, to all 6.5 million people, is the kind of principle to which this house should be addressing itself.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear; now it is unanimous.

Miss LaMarsh: The figures to which I have had recourse are from a 1960 publication by the dominion bureau of statistics. This indicates that about 1.7 million people in our labour force have some kind of pension plan. This does not mean that they have a full pension plan with a decent standard of repayment, but simply means that they have some kind of a plan. I do not believe that 1.7 million people out of a labour force of 6.5 million is anything near sufficient opportunity for our Canadian labour force.

Within the province of Ontario, were the Ontario legislation to be proceeded with—and I do not suggest it is bad legislation—I would suggest that type of legislation does not go far enough. By virtue of the fact it is not compulsory for all the labour force, it does not occupy the field in so far as legislation for old age purposes is concerned. Therefore, there has been an invitation to Ontario to set aside to some degree its own legislation—this after all is a decision of the Ontario legislature and not even of the federal members from Ontario—in order that a truly universal Canadian pension plan might be brought into being.

My hon. friend has referred to some recent comments by the premier of Ontario. He knows that as a result of the conference which was set up in September of this year between the officials and ministers of each province and the federal government there arose, after two days of discussion, a decision to set up a technical committee to attempt to find a solution to the problems existing as between the Ontario and federal plans. I reported, I believe the other day, and can now tell my hon. friend, that the first meeting of this technical committee will be held this week. It is not a meeting of ministers or prime ministers but of technical people only. This will, in effect, be the third time upon which there has been some kind of dialogue between Ontario and federal authorities in the field of pensions.

The first, brief though it was, was at the conference held shortly after the introduction of the resolution on the Canada pension plan, in which the premiers attended with the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and had some opportunity to deal with this situation. Hon. members will recall that the matter of the municipal loan legislation was also before that meeting, and because there was such a shortage of time it was agreed that there should be a further meeting at the department level. This was held early in September. Following it, as I say, there was a decision to set up the technical committee which is now meeting.

I think it is no secret to any member of this house that in the interval there has been a provincial election in the province of Ontario, and that while an election is in progress there is a hiatus in the provincial or federal field during which no decision can be made. Accordingly, we are encouraged that the technical committee which was set up will be meeting this week and we will have a further opportunity to discuss this matter in depth with all the provinces at the meeting, which is being held to discuss all facets of dominion-provincial relations, and particularly the economic facet. This meeting is to be held here on November 25. Presupposing there was complete unanimity between the provinces and the federal government, this meeting would probably take about a week.

My hon. friend will see, then, that there would be some three weeks left in the life of this particular session. I believe my hon. friend has been watching with some care the developments in relation to the Canada pension scheme and has seen, in fact he referred to it, considerable pressure built up against it in a lobby outside of this House of Commons. While all parties have been committed to the principle of a Canada-wide contributory pension scheme, we do not know and cannot know until a vote is called in the house, how each and every member of the house is committed to either this or some other comparable scheme. It is no secret that members have been receiving a considerable amount of correspondence, and in some cases visitations here and in their constituencies from individuals whose purpose is to see that the plan is not enacted.

Some of the remarks which have been made outside this house have been unhappily most intemperate. I do not attempt now to say that some of the intemperance is not on my own part, but I feel very devoutly about this type of legislation and the necessity for its immediate introduction for the welfare of our people. If I need to make an apology to the people of this country, it is only because I am so anxious they will have this opportunity that I have been perhaps somewhat intemperate in my remarks. But there are others who have far less excuse, others who from their position in years alone might be expected to deal with the matter in a different way.

We have had a type of document sent around the country which says, "let us create a storm"; language which has been careless in the extreme, and which on occasion has gone out of its way to indicate one point of view only, and to leave unsaid all those things which might be said on behalf of this type of scheme.

A government cannot at this stage use public funds or hire any individual to start producing glossy literature. A government has only its spokesmen and its members; but hon. members of the house have not seen the Canada pension plan, and indeed should not until we reach that stage of the legislative process where it is produced. That being the case everyone, and to some extent even the minister concerned, must feel in a vacuum, because until questions are resolved between the provinces and the federal government it is unfair to ask me to be dogmatic about certain points with respect to the plan.

I know members of parliament in all parties are anxious to go out on the hustings and talk to people in their constituencies about the benefits to be obtained, benefits which can only be obtained from a state run, universal, contributory pension scheme, but it is necessary for them to wait until that stage in the legislative process where the bill will be before them.

In the meantime public opinion is being engendered against such a scheme, and we have seen representatives of at least one industry producing material, sending it across the country, and attempting to influence people in a quasi-governmental position in our communities. Many of the individuals who produce this material do so in good faith. They simply disagree violently with this in principle, and as free citizens in a free country they have a right to say so. It may be of some concern to some individuals as to exactly whose money they are using to promote their ideas, but that is not for them to answer in the House of Commons. They have to answer for that somewhere else.

There has been fear in some parts of the country that there may be an intolerable burden introduced upon the shoulders of the manufacturers, and a fear as well that the government has acted precipitously and without understanding the problems involved, and without the requisite amount of work.

Mr. Martineau: That is right.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, someone says that is right. I can only assume the hon. member did not take time to read the very lengthy document which was circulated. Surely no member of the house in any party can object to the way the government has treated all hon. members in this regard. Not only was the white paper produced in both our official languages and sent to every member but, during our adjournment, the actuarial report, prepared after months of work by first class people in our public service, was sent to every member of parliament for perusal and study.

My hon. friend who speaks for the New Democratic party has himself on one occasion during the question period given an indication that a well known actuarial firm in its monthly newsletter referred in glowing tones to the government's actuarial report, and it is a fact that not one solitary voice in this country has demonstrated in any way or even attempted to attack the actuarial basis of the pension plan as being incorrect or fraudulent. The only attack upon this document has been made with respect to certain assumptions which have been made.

I am not an actuary, Mr. Speaker. My knowledge of pensions was practically nonexistent before I took this post, but I have done what I thought necessary and have worked to try to learn everything I could about pensions. However, I should like to make it perfectly clear that I have the utmost faith in those who prepared the actuarial report, and who prepared it without instructions as to what assumptions they would make.

I do not often use this word with approval, but the only instructions given the actuaries were that they were to use conservative estimates, and this they did. They prepared conservative estimates high and low. They showed to all who would read it what the plan would cost and, Mr. Speaker, we did not project it ten years, 25 years or 40 years. We projected it for nearly 100 years so that people could see what the basis was and, bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, not one person has attacked the reason for that plan.

Some assumptions have been attacked, one in particular with respect to the amount of unemployment in the short term. I repeat that no instructions were given by any representative of the government to the actuaries. They were told to use a conservative figure, and they used a figure of 6 per cent. Mr. Speaker, look at the figure produced the other day with regard to unemployment in Canada last month. I suggest to you that 6 per cent is, under a Liberal government, a most conservative figure. Obviously therefore, if there are more people at work there will be produced, at the same rate of contribution, more money for the basis of the plan.

There were other assumptions which were attacked, some with respect to the longevity of our citizens and some with respect to the rate of immigration and the rate of fertility. These are actuarial assumptions and, in effect, as would be the case whether prepared by our actuaries or anyone else, these assumptions are educated guesses, because how can anyone in 1963 know with any degree of certainty what will be the situation of this country in 100 years? We do not know what the flow of immigration will be and what advances will be made with respect to the longevity of our people. But conservative estimates have been made, and high and low figures have been produced to indicate what the contribution rate will be.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in a personal attempt to find out everything I could about pension schemes, and as much as anything else to test my own belief in the public servants who were preparing this plan, I took three weeks during our break this summer and went to western Europe, to countries which are most closely comparable with Canada, to countries with which we must compete, to industrial countries, every one of which has in existence a national contributory pension scheme.

There is no question that the country to the south of us has had a similar type of scheme for some 30 odd years. The countries of Australia and New Zealand have also adopted such schemes, and they have realized, as has been suggested here, that flat rate pensions are not sufficient. I went to find out what the arguments against the introduction of such a scheme had been in countries like West Germany, Britain, France, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, and I found out that the spectres raised here were the same spectres raised by much the same interests in those countries prior to the adoption of their plans. I asked some things of government officials and ministers.

I should perhaps point out to hon. members that these plans have been enacted by almost the whole spectrum of governments in Europe, from rightist to leftist; but I asked why certain things were done, questions which cannot be answered by an exchange of correspondence but only by face to face confrontation. I at least satisfied myself that the people who worked out our plan knew exactly what they were doing. They had recourse to information respecting all these European plans, and we selected and put together what we thought was the best package possible for the people of this country.

Mr. Valade: May I ask the minister a question. Just as a matter of clarification, since she went to find out all the objections in European countries to this kind of scheme, could she explain to the house if she found out the real objections of Mr. Lesage and, if so, could she elaborate on this point?

Miss LaMarsh: I am glad my hon. friend raises this because I regret that I neglected to mention Quebec, in this particular context. Originally the question was asked of me why it was that I was directing fire against Ontario and not against Quebec. I should like to make this clear, because there is a simple answer. I am sure most hon. members of the house know the provisions of the British North America Act amendment which was enacted at the time the flat rate $40 a month old age security was brought into effect. Many people on the benches opposite and on these benches were here then. That rather peculiarly worded subsection says that there is concurrent jurisdiction in the provinces and in the federal government to deal with old age security, but that no federal legislation may affect present or future provincial legislation. Opinions have been taken as to what "affect" may mean—legal opinions from our department and the Department of Justice. It appears clear, however, that if the province occupies the field, covers it for all those in the province, makes it compulsory to all, and provides a sufficient plan, then there is no room for anyone else. There would be no room, in law, for the Canada pension plan, and not only might it be a danger to attempt to enforce it within our constitutional framework because of the social implications, but also because of the legal implications. For had the province of Quebec then attempted to fight off legally the Canada pension plan, it might have been decided to be ultra vires the federal parliament not only for Quebec but for all of Canada.

Accordingly when the resolution was enacted by the provincial legislation with Quebec declaring, as they have every right to do—and hon. members may look at the language—that they would enact a universal comprehensive plan, the federal government, in light of the legal situation and this one narrow piece of the B.N.A. Act, had absolutely no choice but to stand back from the borders of Quebec with respect to Canada pensions.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the hon. lady a question. Does the government consider a resolution expressing an intention as occupying a field?

Miss LaMarsh: I can only say this, that the resolution was passed unanimously by the provincial legislature, and that statements have been made by the premier which indicate that if the federal government acted precipitately to come into the field, a special session would be called and legislation introduced in Quebec. I suggest it really would not matter, because even if the Canada pension plan were first enacted and subsequently a provincial plan were enacted in the province of Quebec, the same effect would follow because of the phraseology of the B.N.A. Act. There is no question that I would prefer, and I think all hon. members would prefer, to have one plan to embrace our country. This is not possible under the present circumstances unless, as they may do, and as they have the right to do, and as I would entreat them to do, the representatives of Quebec within her provincial legislature reconsider the matter and come under the umbrella of one Canada-wide plan. This and this alone is the reason why no attack has been made on Quebec, why no entreaties have been held out to her, because her legal position is so very different from that of the province of Ontario.

I was speaking before about the attacks made against this scheme. I think at least a couple of hon. members have put a motion on the order paper asking for production of correspondence dealing with the Canada pension plan. We in my department have taken a box score of how these have been running. Letters from individuals have run three to one in favour of the Canada pension plan. However, I must confess that from organizations such as insurance companies and trust company offices almost the opposite ratio has been true. It now remains to educate those in the insurance and trust company field.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the hon. lady a question. If the government has given the plan such thorough study as the minister has indicated, why is it now proposed to refer the matter to a committee?

Miss LaMarsh: I thank my hon. friend for his question, with which I was just about to deal. I should have thought from what I have said that it was clear that it was now necessary to educate insurance men and trust company men, and the only way we can educate them—

Mr. Martineau: It is the government which needs educating.

Miss LaMarsh: I realize we cannot get them elected to the backbenches in time to deal with this plan, but we must give them the opportunity to appear before the hon. members of this house, and I would hope of the other place, who would take under their hands the study of this legislation. There has been a request from many sources in the country for a study of the Canada pension plan by a committee of this place. This government has no intention despite this minister's personal desires for precipitate action, to stampede into action which is misunderstood and against which there has been a deliberate lobby of misinformation. Accordingly, there is only one way for the people of the country to understand what this plan is, and that is to lay it before the people's representatives for study. I would hope that that committee would be set up and would call before it those who have made public statements against the principle and the details of this legislation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, may I say to the house that I will, as I have in the past few weeks, make available all the information possible to any and every member of this house in order that they may discuss it with their constituents and with those who would oppose it. The government will take every opportunity to discuss the matter with provincial governments, for we hope that this will lead to close co-operation and the early introduction of the legislation and, in conjunction with the studies conducted by the provinces, provide the house the opportunity for further thorough study.

I still hope this plan can be brought in and passed by all members of this house in order that the timetable which has been referred to will be met. If I may mention the timetable, it may be recalled that the registration was to be in March 1964. We hope that registration will be proceeded with, for its purpose was not only for the Canada pension plan but for a couple of other governmental purposes, namely that of the unemployment insurance commission. It is our intention to proceed with the numbering or renumbering in early 1964, provided we are able to obtain the understanding of the provinces, and to have a thorough discussion of the question in committee. There seems no reason to suppose that we will not be able with care to make the original timetable. In short, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to my hon. friend that I am indeed grateful for this opportunity to clarify a few matters in the House of Commons, and to say that it is the intention of the government and of my ministry to continue with this legislation, which we believe will be for the betterment of all of our Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion (Mr. Gordon) agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

1. Departmental administration, $976,200.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

1. Departmental administration, $9,913,200.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

1. General administration, $5,270,500.

Proceedings reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nowlan: Before the house rises, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the house leader would tell us with what business we will be dealing during the rest of this week?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I would be happy to. It is the intention of the government, as soon as we reach orders of the day tomorrow, to go on with the second reading of the Income Tax Act, and then with the committee stage as soon as the second reading has been adopted. That will be the business also on Thursday. I have spoken to the hon. gentlemen opposite to whom I usually speak about these matters, and I understand there would be no objection, if the income tax measure should not be completed before five o'clock on Thursday, to going on with it on Thursday evening until such time as it is completed. If it should be completed before the end of the evening on Thursday I would arrange to have one of the ministers ready to go on with estimates for the rest of the evening until 10.30. Of course, on Friday evening we will take estimates. What I have in mind would be the Department of Forestry, with the estimates of the Department of Public Works available when the estimates of the Department of Forestry have been completed.

Mr. Nowlan: When the leader of the house suggests we continue on Thursday evening until the income tax measure is completed, he is suggesting, I take it, we go on until the usual hour of adjournment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Knowing how anxious hon. gentlemen opposite are to get on with the business of the country, I naturally assumed we would complete it.

Perhaps I should indicate what business would probably be taken up after the completion of the income tax measure. There is, I think, an understanding in all parts of the house that the motion in the name of the Solicitor General to refer the consumer credit question to a committee could be disposed of after one speaker from each part of the house has spoken for not more than 10 minutes. On that understanding, once the income tax measure has been completed, the government would be prepared to make this the next item of business. We would like to get the committee on the C.N.R. set up if it seemed feasible to get it through fairly quickly. We would like to oblige the hon. member for Brandon-Souris by getting second reading promptly of the two bills respecting the territories so that the committee can go on with them without delay; and there are one or two other matters which the government is prepared to move forward if there is an opportunity, so that we may get on with the Canada pension plan more quickly.

Mr. Douglas: What estimates will be taken on Thursday night?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to consult my colleagues, to see who would be free, and I should also like to consult with hon. gentlemen in other parts of the house.

Mr. Nowlan: Are there to be estimates on Thursday night?

Mr. Pickersgill: Only if we get through with the other business.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 30, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—NEWSPAPER ARTICLE RESPECTING VOTE IN HOUSE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It arises out of an article appearing in the Globe and Mail. I wish to show no disrespect to the Globe and Mail; however, in this article I am listed as one of the members who were absent on a certain vote. On that occasion I was paired, as I pointed out in the house on a number of occasions, with the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), who was one of the delegates to the United Nations. I believe this delegation was appointed by the Prime Minister of this country to conduct very important business at the United Nations. I was here at the building at all times during that vote and during those proceedings. This is my point of privilege. I think it affects myself and the other hon. member. I have always believed one of the most important aspects of a person's character is to keep his word. I believe when a man has given his word to someone, other things should not interfere with the keeping of it.

MR. VALADE—"HANSARD" REPORT OF SPEECH BY MINISTER OF HEALTH AND WELFARE

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): I rise on a question of privilege affecting the members of this house. It arises from the Hansard report of yesterday, at page 4165. I am reported as asking the minister the following question:

> May I ask the minister a question? Just as a matter of clarification, since she went to find out all the objections in European countries to this kind of scheme, could she explain to the house if she found out the real objections of Mr. Lesage and, if so, could she elaborate on this point?

The minister is reported as replying as follows:

> I am glad my hon. friend raises this because I regret that I neglected to mention Quebec—

Now, sir, I take objection to this report because I consider it is not in line with the answer that was given by the minister. As I recall, and this is confirmed by the members around me, the minister said that she forgot about Quebec. This morning I see that in Hansard she is reported as saying "I neglected to mention Quebec." This is contrary to what was said, and as a member of the truth squad I think the minister should really comply with this.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the minister at the moment I think we will just leave it at that.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Durham) presented the first report of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would draw to the attention of the house the fact that the report is not complete or quite accurate. With reference to the resolution passed by the committee requesting permission to sit while the house was sitting, the resolution moved was in these words:

> This committee asks permission to sit when the house is sitting when necessary to meet the convenience of witnesses.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Are you objecting to the motion as presented?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion as presented or as amended? Has the chairman of the committee anything to say?

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, it is my recollection that the hon. member who has just spoken is correct, in that this matter was amended. In that respect I think, with the concurrence of the house, the report should be amended in the detail mentioned by my hon. friend, that this committee be entitled to sit while the house is in session to suit the convenience of witnesses.

Mr. Herridge: When necessary to suit the convenience of witnesses.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to have the report amended as suggested?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the house that the following questions are being answered today: 1,196, 1,207, 1,276, 1,299, 1,302, 1,303, 1,318, 1,325, 1,330, 1,341, 1,370, 1,375, 1,392, 1,399, 1,407, 1,410, 1,421, 1,422, 1,424, 1,441, 1,449, 1,450, 1,458, 1,468, 1,476 and 1,500.

[Text]

If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred questions 1,443 and 1,466, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Question No. 1,196—Mr. Hamilton:

1. To what mileage, by provinces, has the federal government contributed financially in the construction of the trans-Canada highway?

2. What has been the total amount, by fiscal years for each province, paid out by the federal government since the trans-Canada highway program began?

3. What are the provincial highway numbers, by provinces, that outline the course of the highway across Canada?

4. Are there any cases where the federal government was asked to contribute to the costs of building the trans-Canada highway through a city of over 100,000 people and, if so, what mileage and estimated cost in each case?

Mr. Badanai: 1.

|---|---|
| Newfoundland | 540 |
| Nova Scotia | 318 |
| Prince Edward Island | 71 |
| New Brunswick | 390 |
| Quebec | 399 |
| Ontario | 1,453 |
| Manitoba | 309 |
| Saskatchewan | 406 |
| Alberta | 282 |
| British Columbia | 552 |
| National parks | 140 |
| Total | 4,860 |

2. See tables following.

3. The green and white trans-Canada highway signs, which the provinces and the federal government have agreed to use, mark the route from coast to coast. In addition the provincial numbers designating the route are as follows:

Newfoundland, highway No. 1 from St. John's to Port aux Basques.

Nova Scotia, highway No. 5 from North Sydney to Port Hastings, (Canso causeway); highway No. 4 from Port Hastings to New Brunswick border.

Prince Edward Island, highway No. 1 from Wood Island to Borden.

New Brunswick, highway No. 2 from Nova Scotia border to Sussex; highway No. 9 from Sussex to Fredericton; highway No. 2 from Fredericton to Quebec border.

Quebec, highway No. 2 from New Brunswick border to Levis; highway No. 9 from Levis to Montreal; highway No. 17 from Montreal to Ontario border.

Ontario, highway No. 17 from Quebec border to Ottawa; highway No. 15 from Ottawa to Perth; highway No. 7 from Perth to intersection with highway No. 12 west of Lindsay; highway No. 12 from intersection of highway No. 7 to Waubaushene; highway No. 103 from Waubaushene to MacTier; highway No. 69 from MacTier to Sudbury; highway No. 17 from Sudbury to Manitoba border.

Manitoba, highway No. 1 from Ontario border to Saskatchewan border, except for Winnipeg bypass which is on highway No. 100.

Saskatchewan, highway No. 1 from Manitoba border to Alberta border.

Alberta, highway No. 1 from Saskatchewan border to British Columbia border.

British Columbia, highway No. 1 from Alberta border to Victoria.

4. Yes. The city of Ottawa and the city of Montreal. The mileage through Ottawa on the queensway is 9.9 miles and the estimated cost $25.8 million with the contribution from the federal government $7.25 million. The route of the highway through the city of Montreal is not definite at present, consequently mileage and estimated cost figures are not available for that city.

Questions

REPORT OF UNIFORMITY OF LAWS COMMITTEE

Question No. 1,207—Mr. Scott:

Has the government received the report of the uniformity of laws committee concerning amendments to the Criminal Code to protect those about to be tried on serious offences and, if so (a) briefly, what is the nature of the recommendations of the committee (b) what has been the response of the government to such recommendations?

Mr. Chevrier: This question is assumed to refer to the recommendations of the Robert Roberts citizens committee which were referred by Hon. Donald M. Fleming, when minister of justice, to the criminal law section of the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada for the views of that section.

The criminal law section expressed the view that no amendments should be made in the law and no action has been taken by the government.

WORLD FAIR

Question No. 1,276—Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke):

1. Has the government now completed its plans for supporting and directing the world fair in Montreal?
2. What is the purpose of the world fair as it has now been decided upon?
3. If the decision respecting the world fair is final what is (a) its site (b) the date of opening (c) the length of time it will remain open?
4. What is the latest estimate of the costs to (a) the federal government (b) the province of Quebec (c) other provinces (d) the city of Montreal (e) other municipalities?
5. After the fair is held, what future use of the site and its facilities has been agreed to?
6. What commitments have been entered into by the federal government that involve responsibility for the operation and conduct of the world fair?

Mr. Badanai: 1. No. December 20, 1963 is the date limit set by article 10 (1) of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act for the corporation to submit for the approval of the governor in council and the lieutenant governor in council of Quebec its over-all plan for the exhibition, setting forth various undertakings and projects, their estimated cost and an estimate of the total capital costs and operating costs of the corporation in respect of the exhibition.

2. Article 3 (1) of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act is to the effect that in connection with the celebration of the centennial of confederation in Canada in a manner in keeping with its national and historical significance there shall be held in Canada for a period of six months in 1967 a Canadian universal and international exhibition for which registration was accorded by the bureau of international exhibitions on November 13, 1962.

[Mr. Badanai.]

3. (a) Montreal, Quebec, Canada. (b) Friday, April 28, 1967. (c) Six months, closing on Friday, October 27, 1967.
4. Answered by No. 1.
5. Answered by No. 1.
6. See 11 Elizabeth II, chapter 12, an act to establish the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation (assented to 20 December 1962).

C.N.R. LAY-OFFS, MONCTON, N.B.

Question No. 1,299—Mr. Rideout:

1. Is it contemplated that 25 employees will be laid off at Moncton C.N.R. scrapyard due to transfer of work to London, Ontario and, if so, what are the reasons for the transfer of such work to London?
2. Does the railway contemplate the closing of the Moncton scrapyard?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. There is a seasonal work adjustment at the Moncton scrap and reclamation and rail yards. This occurs across the system at this time, as the dismantling and rail laying programs near completion.
2. No.

FARM GRAIN STORAGE—DEPRECIATION AND PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,302—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

1. What is the rate of depreciation allowed farmers on (a) frame farm storage bins (b) steel farm storage bins?
2. What does the farmer receive for storage?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Farmers who claim capital cost allowance under part XVII of the income tax regulations, straight line method, are allowed a maximum of 5 per cent on either type of bin. Those who claim under part XI of the regulations, diminishing balance method, are allowed a maximum of 10 per cent on both types.

2. The farmer receives no remuneration for the storage of grain on farms.

C.B.C. USE OF FILM BOARD FACILITIES

Question No. 1,303—Mr. Thompson:

Will the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation take advantage of the facilities of the national film board as recommended in the report of the Glassco commission and, if so, (a) when will such arrangement commence (b) will such an arrangement minimize the capital program of the C.B.C., and (c) will the national film board be enabled to contract out additional work to private producers as a consequence?

Mr. Pickersgill: (a) The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has for some years made extensive use of the production facilities of the national film board. The board has been one of the major suppliers of film programs to the corporation. Liaison practices between the two organizations ensure that activities are reviewed on both policy and working levels. The effectiveness of liaison is receiving careful attention.

(b) It is unlikely that further utilization of the board's facilities would have an appreciable effect on the corporation's capital program because expenditures for film production equipment represent only a small fraction of the total capital cost involved.

(c) The national film board's policy is to utilize its facilities at the economic operating level. Should the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation increase its requirements from the national film board significantly, it could result in the board increasing the amount of work tendered to private film companies.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES, FORT CHURCHILL

Question No. 1,318—Mr. Douglas:

1. Are civilians employed at Fort Churchill and, if so, what percentage of (a) the Canadian civilians (b) the American civilians are granted (i) officer status (ii) sergeant status (iii) corporal and private soldier status?

2. Are married quarters provided for married civilians at Fort Churchill and, if so, (a) what percentage of the married Canadian civilians (b) the married American civilians, are provided married quarters?

3. What percentage, if any, of the married quarters at Fort Churchill are at present unoccupied?

Answer: 1. Yes. (a) Civilians employed by Canada; (i) 7.6 per cent; (ii) 13.5 per cent; (iii) 45.3 per cent; (b) Civilians employed by the United States; (i) 3.1 per cent; (ii) 5.9 per cent; (iii) 24.6 per cent.

2. Yes. (a) 31 per cent (b) 3 per cent.

3. 7 per cent.

PINE FALLS HOSPITAL, MAN.—INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES

Question No. 1,325—Mr. Slogan:

1. What are the terms of the agreement reached between northern health services and the Pine Falls general hospital for the integration of Indian health services with the Pine Falls general hospital?

2. Has a contract been let for the building of a new wing at the Pine Falls general hospital to accommodate the expanded service?

3. What is the name and amounts of each bidder, and when did tenders close?

4. What is the cost sharing agreement between the federal and provincial governments and the Pine Falls general hospital for the construction of the added facilities?

5. When is it anticipated that integration of the Indian health services at the Pine Falls general hospital will take place?

6. What plans have been made for the use or demolition of the Indian health hospital at Pine Falls?

7. What arrangements regarding medical care have been made or are being planned after the integration of the health services at Pine Falls?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. In return for a special construction grant of $405,000 plus the use at a nominal rental of the existing Indian hospital nurses' residence, the board of the Pine Falls general hospital has undertaken to build an addition providing for 20 beds and expanded service facilities that will enable them to provide hospital care to all treaty Indians of the Pine Falls area, thus enabling the department to close the inadequate Fort Alexander Indian hospital.

2. Yes.

3. Tenders and contracts are the concern of the Pine Falls general hospital and the department has no knowledge of the details.

4. Federal government—special construction grant of $405,000. It is understood that the provincial government is providing a grant of $115,000.

5. Early in 1964.

6. The Fort Alexander Indian hospital will be turned over to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

7. No change from present arrangements.

AIR MAIL TO QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

Question No. 1,330—Mr. Howard:

1. For each month since January 1, 1961, how many complaints has the government or any agency or branch thereof received to the effect that mail marked or posted for "air mail" to the Queen Charlotte islands in fact reached its destination by boat mail?

2. What steps have been taken to correct this situation, and have those steps been successful?

Mr. Denis: 1. Fourteen since January 1, 1961. A monthly breakdown is not available.

2. Each complaint has been fully investigated and remedial action taken. This corrective procedure has reduced the number of complaints. Since January 1, 1963, three complaints have been received.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES LOAN FUND

Question No. 1,341—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Does the territorial government of the Northwest Territories have a loan fund program, similar to the "Eskimo loan fund" operated by the federal department of northern affairs and, if so, who is eligible for these loans, and under what conditions?

2. If not (a) has this matter ever been considered by the N.W.T. council or the commissioner (b) will the commissioner consider bringing this need to the attention of the council at its next session?

Answer: The commissioner of the Northwest Territories informs as follows:

1. No.

2. (a) Yes, for specialized areas such as assistance to trappers and fishermen; (b) the commissioner will consider this suggestion.

LIQUOR SALES, INUVIK, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,370—Mr. Rheaume:

1. What was the total amount of revenue received by the territorial liquor store at Inuvik, N.W.T. during the year 1962 from the sale of (a) hard liquor (b) wines (c) beer and ales?

Questions

2. What was the total amount, in dollars, of beer, wines and hard liquor sold to the Mackenzie hotel, Inuvik, N.W.T. for re-sale to the public?

3. At present, what are the hours for each day of the week that the following outlets are open for the sale of intoxicants to the public (a) territorial liquor store, Inuvik, N.W.T. (b) Mackenzie hotel, Inuvik, N.W.T.?

Answer: This is a question which should normally be addressed to the government of the Northwest Territories. However, the commissioner of the Northwest Territories informs as follows:

Fiscal year 1962-63

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| | (b) Wines | 4,652.80 |

Cocktail lounge: Monday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 12.30 a.m.; Tuesday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 12.30 a.m.; Wednesday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 12.30 a.m.; Thursday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 12.30 a.m.; Friday, 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 12.30 a.m.; Saturday, 12.00 noon to 6 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 11.30 p.m.; Sunday, closed.

RESIGNATIONS FROM NATIONAL MUSEUM

Question No. 1,375—Mr. Fisher:

1. Why did Dr. Jacques Rousseau leave the national museum?

2. Why did Dr. Louis Russell leave the national museum?

3. Why did Dr. MacNeish leave the national museum?

4. Why did Thomas Lee leave the national museum?

5. Why did Dr. Rioux leave the national museum?

6. Why did Huguette Bujold leave the national museum?

7. How many professional persons have left the national museum, each year, in the past six years?

[Mr. Rheaume.]

Answer: It is obviously not possible to weigh and summarize the complex motives which people may have for seeking or accepting new appointments, even if the department or the individual concerned were fully aware of all of them. The answers below indicate what appears to have been the primary consideration for each individual, as far as this is revealed in departmental records:

1. Released, effective February 28, 1959; for reasons see former minister's statement in Hansard, January 20, 1959, p. 76.

2. Resigned, effective October 31, 1963; to accept a research appointment with the Royal Ontario museum.

3. Resigned, effective August 1, 1963, to accept a more attractive appointment.

4. Resigned, effective March 20, 1959; for personal reasons.

5. Resigned, effective October 21, 1958, to accept a more attractive appointment.

6. Resigned, effective March 31, 1959, for personal reasons.

7. 1957, 1; 1958, 2; 1959, 3; 1960, none; 1961, 3; 1962, 1; 1963, 4.

TELEVISION STATION CJOH—FRENCH LANGUAGE REQUIREMENT

Question No. 1,392—Mr. Caouette:

1. What is the nature of the licence held by T.V. station CJOH, channel 13, with regard to the use of the French language?

2. Is this station not required to broadcast in French during a certain number of hours and, if so, in what proportion?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. The licence contains no condition with regard to the use of the French language.

2. No.

NATIONAL MUSEUM EMPLOYEES NOT CANADIANS

Question No. 1,399—Mr. Fisher:

1. How many employees has the national museum had, as of January 1, 1957, 1959, 1961, and 1963, who are or were not Canadian citizens?

2. If the answer to part 1 indicates there is a considerable number of such employees, what explanation is there for having employees without Canadian citizenship?

Answer: 1. All the information requested is not readily available, since no running record of the establishment of the national museum classified according to citizenship has been retained. However, the following information may be helpful:

(a) An earlier parliamentary question (Hansard, July 5, 1961) reveals that on January 1, 1959, six employees of the museum did not hold British or Canadian citizenship; (b) the same answer indicates that the comparable figure for January 1, 1961, was seven; (c) as of January 1, 1963, six non-Canadians were employed at the museum. At the present time, there are four. This is less than 5 per cent of total staff strength.

2. Non-Canadians, if available, are employed where no qualified Canadian citizen can be recruited for any given position.

FRASER RIVER BOARD AUTHORITY

Question No. 1,407—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the situation concerning reorganization of the New Westminster harbour commission and the establishment of a Fraser river board authority?
2. Is it the intention of the Minister of Transport to introduce legislation providing for the establishment of a new authority at the present session?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. and 2. Bill No. S-38 now before the other house would make possible the establishment of a new Fraser river harbour commission under this new general legislation.

ROCK FILL FOR BREAKWATER, LITTLE HARBOUR, N.S.

Question No. 1,410—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What type, size and weight of rock fill is called for in the original plans and specifications for the construction of a breakwater at little harbour, Pictou county, Nova Scotia?
2. Have any changes been made in the plans and specifications as far as the rock fill is concerned and, if so, who authorized these changes?
3. What changes were made, and what type of rock was actually used in the construction?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Three classes of stone were specified for this project:

(a) ballast rock within cribwork to be a durable stone of approved quality having a smallest dimension of not less than eight inches and a largest dimension of not greater than 18 inches; (b) core stone for rock mound approach to be a hard durable stone of acceptable quality having a smallest dimension of not less than six inches, a largest dimension not exceeding 36 inches and having a weight of not less than 165 pounds per cubic foot; (c) armour stone for rock mound approach to be a hard durable stone of acceptable quality, each piece having a minimum weight of 4,000 pounds, a maximum weight of 8,000 pounds and having a weight of not less than 165 pounds per cubic foot.

2. Yes. The changes were approved by the chief engineer, harbours and rivers engineering branch, Department of Public Works.

3. Approval was granted for the use of quarry run sandstone for ballast within the cribwork and for the use of quarry run sandstone in the core of the rock mound approach up to the low water level. Where quarried sandstone was allowed to be used in the work, reductions in the unit prices to be paid for this stone were negotiated before the work was authorized.

FRASER RIVER TRIFURCATION PROGRAM

Question No. 1,421—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the situation respecting implementation of the Fraser river trifurcation program?
2. Does the government intend to proceed with the program this year?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Model study investigations are nearing completion at the national research council. Contract plans and specifications are being prepared for the early phases of the work.

2. Yes, the program will be started this fiscal year.

DISPOSITION OF RAILWAY BRIDGE, FRASER RIVER, B.C.

Question No. 1,422—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to the removal or improvement of the old railway bridge adjacent to the Pattullo bridge over the Fraser river?

Mr. Badanai: The whole question of the present and future use of the New Westminster railway bridge, its relationship to navigation as well as to railway services is being studied but no decision has been reached yet concerning the removal, improvement or replacement of the structure.

LASKIN AWARD RESPECTING SIX DAY WEEK

Question No. 1,424—Mr. Fisher:

Has the Minister of Labour any views and/or has he given the C.P.R. and/or the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen these views on the Laskin award regarding a six day week and, if so, what are they?

Mr. MacEachen: It is understood that Mr. Bora Laskin has made an award on the six day week question submitted to him as referee. His award was made to the parties to the arbitration proceedings and it would not be appropriate for the Minister of Labour to express any views on his award or to seek to interpret it in any way.

PASSAMAQUODDY PROJECT—LOCKS AND GATES

Question No. 1,441—Mr. Coates:

Has the Canadian government received a request from the government of the United States to consent to the installation of locks and filling gates in Canada as a part of the Passamaquoddy bay power project?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As I indicated on October 7 in response to other questions on this matter, the government of the United States has asked to discuss the proposed Passamaquoddy tidal power development with the government of Canada. Officers of several departments of the Canadian government are continuing to study various aspects of the project, but no negotiations regarding the matter are under way between this government and the government of the United States.

Questions

*BONUS FOR WINTER HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 1,443—Mr. Vincent:

1. Does the program to encourage house construction in the winter months provide for the payment of (a) $500 in the case of a single dwelling unit, and (b) $2,000 in the case of a four dwelling unit?

2. Does the payment mentioned in (b) above apply to five and six dwelling units and, if not, for what reasons?

Mr. MacEachen: I would ask that this question stand, Mr. Speaker.

Question stands.

GRAIN SHIPMENTS FROM CHURCHILL

Question No. 1,449—Mr. Muir (Lisgar):

1. How many grain cargoes left the port of Churchill in the current month, to date?

2. What was the number of bushels exported from that port during the month?

3. What was the date of the last shipment?

Mr. Hays: 1. Seven.

2. Of the total record shipment of 22,864,409 bushels exported through this port for the 1963 season, 3,186,143.8 bushels were shipped during October.

3. October 20, 5.40 p.m.

CHANGES IN WELFARE CATEGORY SYSTEM

Question No. 1,450—Mr. Scott:

1. Is the government giving consideration to the abolition of welfare categories, and their replacement by a provincial-federal welfare system that would provide aid on the basis of need?

2. In what ways does the government consider the "current welfare" category system too rigid, as stated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare before the rehabilitation council for the disabled?

3. What steps is the government taking to remove such rigidities?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. The federal government's position on the whole field of public assistance, including the categorical aid programs for the aged, the blind and the disabled, is being carefully studied in the Department of National Health and Welfare, and an interdepartmental committee is developing specific proposals in this area. During the federal-provincial conference on September 9 and 10 there was discussion of public assistance programs in which some criticism of the categorical approach was voiced and support for a broader type of assistance program was expressed. The communique agreed to at the meeting suggested "that the whole field of social assistance should be jointly re-examined, in the hope of developing one general assistance program based on need". It is expected that this question will be further considered at the federal-provincial conference in November.

2. Under the three categorical programs, aid is provided on the basis of a means test taking into account income and assets, with specific age and residence requirements and maximum benefits and, in the case of two of the programs, with provision for precise tests of blindness or permanent and total disability. While these characteristics of the programs result in some rigidity, the programs have the value of being clearly defined and understood and continue to fill an important role in supporting the groups for which they are intended. In some high cost areas however the benefits provided through these programs have not been adequate for all recipients and this has led to the development of measures of supplementary aid. There has also been some feeling that more positive steps should be taken to help persons who fall outside these programs, among them those with disabilities which cannot be viewed as permanent and total but which may prevent employment. The provinces have also indicated an interest in having more flexibility in developing programs suited to their particular local needs.

3. See answer 1, above. The categorical assistance programs have been developed over the years in collaboration with the provinces, and any modification in them would need to be worked out co-operatively. It is hoped that the basis for detailed federal-provincial discussions on this matter will be laid at the federal-provincial conference next month.

GRAIN ELEVATOR CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM, VANCOUVER

Question No. 1,458—Mr. Deachman:

What is the construction program for the grain elevators administered by the national harbours board at Vancouver harbour (a) for the year 1963 (b) for the year 1964?

Mr. McIlraith: (a) In June 1963 works in the amount of $85,110 were completed, consisting of the replacement of car-haul machinery and the installation of a partial dust control system at elevator No. 2. In July 1963 the reconstruction of portions of grain jetty No. 1 was completed at a cost of $223,775. (b) Work is under way at grain jetty No. 3, elevator No. 1 and elevator No. 3 consisting of alterations to and deepening of grain berths, replacement of cyclones and cone sections of hoppers, at a cost of $490,000. Following consultation with the lessee plans are now being completed for an expected commencement early in 1964 of the renovation and deepening of the inner end of grain jetty No. 1. This work will make possible the servicing of larger ships.

In order to ensure that the elevators under the administration of the national harbours board can handle the maximum amount of grain, the board expects to undertake a complete survey of its grain facilities at Vancouver to determine to what extent the capacity of the individual facilities is currently being used, whether the present rate of utilization can be increased and, if so, what improvements should be made and the cost of such improvements.

*ADDITIONAL R.C.A.F. BASES

Question No. 1,466—Mr. Langlois:

Is it the intention of the government to establish additional R.C.A.F. operational and/or training bases and additional radar stations and if so, what are the proposed locations of these sites?

[Translation]

Mr. Cardin: There are no projects at present to establish additional R.C.A.F. operational and/or training bases and additional radar bases.

| 1961-62 | 1,269.52 |
| 1962-63 | 1,421.85 |
| 1963 to date (April to September) | 611.53 |

PSYCHIATRISTS IN CANADA

Question No. 1,476—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many qualified psychiatrists are there (a) in Canada (b) in each province?
2. How many of these work for government services, how many teach in university medical colleges, how many are in private practice primarily?
3. How many psychiatrists are assigned to work in Canadian courts (a) on a full time basis, and (b) on a part time basis?

Mr. Pickersgill: This information is not in the possession of any government department or agency.

CHRYSLER COMPANY TENDER FOR STAKE TRUCKS

Question No. 1,500—Mr. Lambert:

1. Has a contract been entered into with Chrysler Canada Limited for the supply of a number of three ton stake trucks for the armed forces and, if so, what is the date of the contract, its amount, and dates of delivery?
2. Were public tenders called in respect to this requirement or were tenders by invitation?
3. How many tenders were received, and for what amounts?
4. What was the closing date of the tender, and when was the contract awarded?
5. If the tender of Chrysler Canada Limited was not the lowest tender, what were the reasons for awarding it to this tenderer?

Answer: 1. (a) Yes; (b) October 21, 1963; (c) $3,130,600.20; (d) As and when required during period ending July 31, 1964.

2. By invitation.

3. (a) Four; (b) $3,130,017.20, $3,130,600.20, $3,275,252.00, $3,595,543.80.

4. (a) September 9, 1963; (b) On October 18, 1963.

5. The vehicles offered by Chrysler Canada Limited were the lowest priced meeting the requirements of the specification.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C., GRAIN ELEVATOR

Motion No. 101—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports received by the government or any agency or branch thereof dealing with the grain elevator at Prince Rupert, B.C., since January 1, 1959.

Mr. Beer: I am informed there is only one document involved in this motion for the production of papers. It is in the form of a memorandum between officials of the department and, as such, is considered to be a privileged document. I would therefore request the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Howard: In ordinary circumstances I would be agreeable to that request, but portions, if not all, of this particular report are available to some people outside of this house, and in view of this situation it might be advisable if this motion were transferred for debate for tomorrow evening.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreeable that this be transferred for debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DR. LORIS RUSSELL—APPOINTMENT TO NATIONAL MUSEUM

Motion No. 107—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the government, including that through the office of the Prime Minister, regarding the appointment of Dr. Louis Russell some time ago to head the national museum.

He said: I should like to have this stand at the request of the minister. I should also like to point out that the name is Dr. Loris Russell, not Louis Russell.

Motion stands.

DOLLARD HISTORICAL SITE, HAWKESBURY, ONT.

Motion No. 109—Mr. Fisher:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the federal government (or northern affairs) and hydro Quebec, affaires culturelles de Quebec, Ontario department of travel and publicity, Ontario archaeological and historic sites board, and Louis P. Cecile, on the Dollard site near Hawkesbury.

Mr. Laing: We shall be glad to accept this motion subject only to the usual reservation as to consent by the two provinces concerned and the further reservation applying to any privileged documents.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion agreed to, subject to the reservations stated by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN R.C.M.P. AND ALERT SERVICE

Motion No. 112—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the R.C.M.P. commissioner's office or that of the "I" directorate office and the alert service (Marjorie Lamb, P.O. Box 173, Station "Q", Toronto, Ontario), since June 1, 1961.

He said: Perhaps this motion could stand, at the request of the minister.

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH ROLAND COMTOIS, REPENTIGNY, QUE.

Motion No. 125—Mr. Pigeon:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Minister of Justice or officers of the Department of Justice, on one hand, and Mr. Roland Comtois, of Repentigny, constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, on the other hand.

[Translation]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this motion being agreed to. There is no official correspondence.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice what he means by the word "official"?

Mr. Chevrier: Official correspondence is the correspondence which, under the previous administration, was also considered as privileged and confidential.

There is no official correspondence.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, sir.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH ROLAND COMTOIS, REPENTIGNY, QUE.

Motion No. 126—Mr. Pigeon:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Minister of Public Works or officers of the Department of Public Works, on one hand, and Mr. Roland Comtois, of Repentigny, constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, on the other hand.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, the answer given by the Minister of Justice in respect to motion No. 125 also applies to motion No. 126.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works to give me supplementary information.

Does the answer just given by the minister imply that Mr. Roland Comtois did not write to the minister or to an official of the Department of Public Works?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I must say in reply to the hon. member that the term "official" applies in this case, and I am certainly not in a position to say whether or not this individual has exchanged correspondence with me. Since this is an official matter, I am unable to table this correspondence.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the minister?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: These motions, as the hon. member knows perhaps better than I do, are not debatable.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I think that the ministers of justice and of public works are playing upon words. They refuse to table the correspondence when I am entitled to ask for that return as representative of the riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and as a member of parliament.

I say again that the ministers concerned are playing upon words and I ask them to change their mind and to table this correspondence to which I am entitled.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wishes me to put the motion he has two choices. He can put the motion or have it transferred for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to transfer the motion for future debate.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

PENHOLD, ALTA., AIR BASE—PETITION

Motion No. 127—Mr. Lambert:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of a petition from the Alberta air council, together with a list of signatories thereto which was received by the government in 1963 with reference to the conversion of R.C.A.F. station Penhold to a jet training base.

Mr. Hellyer: A check of the files in the Prime Minister's office and the departments of agriculture, transport and national defence indicates that no petition was received from the Alberta air council with a list of signatories. There was a telegram addressed to me from the Alberta aviation council requesting an appointment, and a further letter expressing appreciation for the kindness extended in meeting a delegation. This correspondence has already been tabled.

Under those circumstances I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would agree to have the motion dropped, and if there is any other definition or additional information which comes to his attention he has the right to put the motion on the order paper again, or if he could tell us more about it privately we would be glad to produce the document if it exists.

Mr. Lambert: If I can have the same assurance from the Minister of Transport I will do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIlraith: I would be happy to give that assurance to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Lambert: Then I will withdraw the motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ESKIMO LOAN FUND REGULATIONS

Motion No. 128—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the rules and regulations relating to the Eskimo loan fund.

Mr. Laing: This is entirely acceptable, Mr. Speaker, and is tabled herewith.

Motion agreed to.

ENTERPRISE, ONT., POSTMASTER

Motion No. 130—Mr. Webb:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters and communications that have been received by the Postmaster General or any of the officials of his department since August 27, 1963, relating to the Post Office at Enterprise, Ontario, together with a copy of the application for appointment of Mrs. Clare Stewart to the position.

Mr. Denis: I have no objection to the adoption of this motion and to the tabling of all official correspondence.

Motion agreed to.

PENSION ADJUSTMENTS FOR RETIRED PUBLIC SERVANTS

Motion No. 132—Mr. Martineau:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, briefs, memoranda or other documents exchanged since the 22nd day of April, 1963, between the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance or the Secretary of State or any officers responsible to them, and any public service staff association or any association of retired public servants, on the subject of pension adjustments for retired public servants.

Mr. Benson: That is agreeable, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES—CORRESPONDENCE WITH RUSSIA ON NORTH PACIFIC TREATY

Motion No. 133—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics since January 1, 1960 regarding the matter of the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, there is no such correspondence; and as the same applies to motions 134 and 135, may I suggest to the hon. member that he withdraw these three motions.

Mr. Howard: Do I understand the minister to say there was no such correspondence? Then I will withdraw the motions.

Mr. Speaker: Then this motion is withdrawn, and motions 134 and 135 are withdrawn.

Orders discharged and motions withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH RUSSIA ON HALIBUT FISHERY

Motion No. 136—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics since January 1, 1960 regarding the halibut (Hippoglossus stenolepis) fishery.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the government has no objection to this motion provided it can obtain the concurrence of the other country involved.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion subject to the reservation stated by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Motions for Papers

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

Motion No. 137—Mr. Herridge:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence and telegrams exchanged between the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or their offices and any private citizen in Canada with respect to the Columbia river treaty since May 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE FROM AUDITOR GENERAL REGARDING ESTATES

Motion No. 138—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence sent by the Auditor General to the minister or the deputy minister (taxation) of the Department of National Revenue regarding any revenues which should be collected by the crown in connection with estates of deceased persons since January 1, 1963, and to be more specific, in view of previous decisions on like motions, for only that correspondence signed by the Auditor General, Mr. Henderson, and not correspondence or memoranda directed by employees of the Auditor General's office.

He said: Stand, at the request of the Minister of National Revenue.

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

Motion No. 140—Mr. Hamilton:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the federal government and the provincial governments relating to the new Department of Industry.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry has spoken to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and the hon. member has agreed to the insertion of a few words in the second last line. Between the words "to" and "the" insert the words "the organization and functions of". With that amendment and with the concurrence of the provinces the motion is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion subject to the reservation expressed by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH ROSAIRE ANCTIL, STE. ANNE DE LA POCATIERE, QUE.

Motion No. 141—Mr. Dionne:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963 between the Postmaster General or any of the officials of his department and Mr. Rosaire Anctil, P.O. Box 303, Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this motion being agreed to and to the production of any official correspondence.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO CUT INCOME TAX TO STIMULATE GROWTH

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of a statement made outside the house I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the government has in mind the cutting of income tax in order to stimulate growth.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom the right hon. gentleman was referring when he mentioned a statement made outside the house. May I ask him to give me a little more information?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot give particulars except to say that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, made a speech and the heading of the report is "M.P. Hints of Cut In Income Tax". The report contains this statement:

If various tax incentives and cheaper money policies are not effective, an across the board cut in taxation may be desirable.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the right hon. gentleman that when the government has any announcements to make on this subject it will do so in the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege. That is the reason I asked this question. Did the parliamentary secretary have any authorization to speak in this way on behalf of the government?

Mr. Gordon: On the basis of the extract from the newspaper report which was read it seemed to me that the parliamentary secretary was discussing economic theory in a general way, and I think he has every right to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Parliament by-passed again.

SALE OF RUSSIAN GOLD TO PAY FOR CANADIAN WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance?

Could the minister tell us whether the gold shipments which arrived in London from Moscow yesterday will be used for the payment of Russia's purchases of Canadian wheat?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I am not sure that I understood the full purport of the question, Mr. Speaker. I think it was, will the sale of some 20 tons of Russian gold in London help pay for the purchase of wheat from Canada? I would hope so.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY INTO COST OF FARM MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In his speech at Barrie he deplored the fact that for the last 25 or 30 years Canada has had a patchwork quilt of agricultural policy, and he said that the main plank in his own agricultural policy is an investigation into the cost of farm machinery. Does the minister intend to ask the standing committee on agriculture and colonization to take up again its study, which was begun in 1961 and discontinued, into the cost of farm machinery? If not, what method does he propose to use to carry on an investigation into the cost of farm machinery?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would hope we would use all the information we could get. I would be glad if this would be discussed by the committee on agriculture.

[Later:]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Minister of Agriculture said he was taking all sorts of methods to look into the cost of farm machinery. I want to ask him one question. Is it his intention to ask the standing committee on agriculture and colonization to resume its investigations into the high cost of farm machinery this session?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with what went on in 1961, but I can see no reason that this committee should not look into these costs.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, since it will require a reference from the house before the committee can undertake such a study, would the minister be prepared to move such a reference?

Mr. Hays: I will be glad to take that question under advisement and let the hon. member know.

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE FURTHER FARM CREDIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the minister's statements in the house and several other statements outside the house to the effect that there is not enough credit available to farmers, does he intend to introduce legislation at this session of parliament which will provide further credit for farmers?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of government policy. I certainly hope we will be able to do something for the farmers in this regard.

TRANSPORT

KETTLE VALLEY RAILWAY—DISCONTINUANCE OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport a question of urgent national importance. In view of the board of transport commissioners authorizing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to discontinue passenger service on the Kettle valley line on 60 days' notice, and in view of the widespread concern and indignation of the residents of southeastern British Columbia, has the government given consideration to the rescinding of this order? If not, is it prepared to hear appeals against this unfortunate decision of the board of transport commissioners?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no. The answer to the second question is that I will consider it.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

Could the minister tell us what progress has been made in the inquiry conducted by his department into the increases in the price of sugar, and when does he intend to report to the house about it?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that I have indicated, on many occasions, that the director of research is following from day to day the sugar situation and if he has any reason to believe that proceedings under the Combines Investigation Act are necessary, he will take action.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since this supervisor or director of research does not submit any report at present, does this mean that the minister draws the conclusion that there is nothing irregular with the current increases in the price of sugar?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker, not necessarily, because the inquiry may take some time. Besides, I must remind my honourable friend that there is at present an order against at least two, maybe three, firms selling sugar and their officers, forbidding them to do any price fixing at all; that order was granted in the superior court, in Montreal, at the beginning of the year.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENHOLD, ALTA.—PETITION REQUESTING RETENTION AS TRAINING BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he signed a petition to the government requesting that the Penhold airport be retained as a jet training base?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I did not sign any petitions.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROTECTION AGAINST FOOD POISONING FROM FISH PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Queens asked me a question in connection with a warning by the United States food and drug administration that some smoked fish products from the great lakes contain the botulus organism, and I promised I would give a full reply today.

The Departments of National Health and Welfare and Fisheries have viewed with concern the recent evidence from the United States associating death from botulism with the consumption of specific types of smoked fish. During the past three years nine deaths and a number of non-fatal cases of illness have been shown to be due to the presence in the smoked fish of a toxic substance produced by a bacterium called clostridium botulinum type E. No reports of similar illness have occurred in Canada during this period.

Canadian consumers should be informed that cooking destroys the toxic substance. Therefore any food product eaten immediately after thorough cooking is safe with regard to this type of poisoning. Investigators of the two departments have had this problem under study for about two years. There is evidence to suggest that the practice of packing smoked fish in impermeable plastic wrappers increases the risk of botulism from this product. Accordingly the two departments are considering legislation to prohibit the sale of smoked fish packed in containers sealed to exclude air unless the packaged product has been rendered commercially sterile by a suitable heat process.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister agree with the description of the province of Quebec as a state by Premier Lesage?

AIR TRANSPORT

APPLICATION TO DISCONTINUE PART OF PRAIRIE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question arising out of a report, which I find to be inaccurate, that there has been filed with the air transport board a request by Transair to give up the licence that the minister's department awarded it only last March to operate the milk run on the prairies. I wonder whether the minister could give us an explanation of the situation, particularly in view of the fact that Transair was assisted so much by a crown corporation in taking over this route.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, I would be glad to give an answer to that question. The application is to give up part of the run. The reason for the application is that on one segment of the run the average number of passengers per flight was less than one person. An air line simply cannot operate on that basis. The notices for the hearing have been given today, and it is proposed in the notice that the subject of the hearing will be that the service be varied and that west of Regina the service on this route would be discontinued as of December 31.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): May I ask a supplementary question. Does the Minister of Transport know the circumstances surrounding that application, and that the fares charged by this air carrier are twice those that are charged here in eastern Canada? Before permission is given to give up this franchise will the minister investigate these conditions a little further?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, it is not the minister who does the investigating. I am quite familiar with the facts relating to the operation, nevertheless the allegation made by the hon. member is something that should be brought before the air transport board at its hearing, where it could be dealt with by the board.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—INQUIRY INTO RECEIPTS FOR CHARITABLE DONATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Could the minister inform the house if his department has given instructions to reduce the amounts claimed for charitable donations, as is being done in the province of Quebec, without first making an investigation to ascertain whether or not the receipts are genuine?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Since the minister stated a few minutes ago that he had given no orders to cut charity donation receipts in the province of Quebec, can he assure the house he will also instruct his officials in Quebec not to cut any more of these charity donation receipts without first making inquiries of the people concerned?

Mr. Garland: The hon. gentleman is now slipping in quite a different question from the one asked by his colleague, and under the circumstances I ask that he put his question on the order paper.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries if it is a fact that the advisory committee of the north Pacific fisheries commission will be meeting in Vancouver in mid November.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question. What is the purpose of this meeting, whom are they meeting, and for what purpose?

Mr. Robichaud: They will be dealing with problems affecting the halibut fishery in the north Pacific.

Mr. Howard: May I ask another supplementary question. Can the minister indicate to the house when arrangements are going to be made for this advisory committee to be consulted before negotiations are reactivated among Japan, the United States and Canada for the signing of a new treaty involving the three fishery stocks in the north Pacific?

Mr. Robichaud: At the meeting that will be held in Vancouver this November.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I wonder if the minister of northern affairs could take the house into his confidence and inform us just at what stage negotiations are now between this government and the government of the United States, as well as British Columbia, in respect of the cost sharing arrangement for the paving of the Alaska highway.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): When the arrangements are completed, as we hope they will be successfully, an announcement will be made.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister say, then, that we are to take it from his answer that there are negotiations being conducted on the cost sharing of the paving of the Alaska highway between these governments and the Canadian government?

Mr. Laing: There would be no profit in discussing that today.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: I have a further supplementary question in respect of the one I asked of the minister of northern affairs concerning negotiations with the United States government. In view of the fact that the minister has taken into his confidence the president of the Dawson Creek chamber of commerce, and has told that chamber of these negotiations, will he now take the house into his confidence by telling the members of this house whether or not these negotiations for cost sharing are taking place?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Laing: I only want to make this remark. I understand the hon. member for Yukon has widely circulated a number of telegrams taking full responsibility for the fact that the road was going to be kept open. I was so informed. However, if he wants to share that with me, that is all right. I see no advantage in further explanations today, and the hon. member is aware of the nature of the negotiations taking place. I am quite certain he is so happy it is the intention of the government to keep the road open that he would not wish to do anything to disturb those arrangements.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister got his roads mixed up. He was referring to keeping a road open. The Alaska highway is, of course, open all year round; and I can assure the minister, knowing he will take my word, that I have not sent out one single wire concerning these roads.

REQUEST FOR COPY OF ADDRESS BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, Mr. Speaker, and while its urgency is not too obvious, the urgency is there and time is of the essence. In view of the general interest in the minister's forthcoming address to the eighteenth annual meeting of the Saskatchewan river development association—and there is intense interest—will the minister provide the members of the house with a copy of this address after delivery?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain there is general agreement in this house that the unchallenged authority on water, wherever found and in whatever form, is the hon. member for Kootenay West. I am quite certain that if I could use his ability to assist me in the preparation of this talk, then the distribution which he suggests might be worth while.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

BELLEVILLE, ONT.—CHANGE IN LOCATION OF POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Is the Postmaster General aware, Mr. Speaker, that the location of a post office in Belleville, Ontario, is being changed for purely political reasons, as set out in the notice received by the owner of the present premises?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): I am not aware of that, and I deny the allegations made by the hon. member. At any rate, I will take his question as notice and answer it in a day or two.

Mr. Webb: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of the fact that the proposed new appointee is the secretary of the local Liberal association and a close relative of the present Liberal member for Hastings South?

Some hon. Members: Patronage.

Mr. Denis: I am not aware of that, and I will say the same thing tomorrow or the day after.

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): I rise on a question of personal privilege. I should like to point out to this house and particularly to the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac that there is no nepotism in my family. I am not interested in the genealogical affiliations of any applicant in Enterprise, either.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the answer which he gave to another question of mine today regarding the irregularity of air mail service from the west coast to the Queen Charlotte islands, would the minister be agreeable to consulting his colleagues with a view to having the estimates of his department referred to the appropriate standing committee so that we can thoroughly inquire into all these matters of administration?

[Later:]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I was expecting a reply from the Postmaster General and I wonder will he give one.

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to give the hon. member every detail he asks for during the consideration of the estimates of my department. It is not necessary to have a standing committee for two or three questions, since the estimates will come before the House of Commons.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO PAY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN STAFF MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State in his capacity as a member of the board of commissioners of internal economy. Can he tell us what has happened to the long overdue pay increases for some 10 or 12 tradesmen on the staff of the House of Commons, consideration of which we were told was being given on August 2 of this year?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am afraid, sir, I could not answer that question from memory, but I shall be glad to take it as notice.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO POLICY RESPECTING EASTERN ELEVATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if it is the policy of the Canadian National Railways to dispose of their elevators in the eastern division.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the policy to do so. I should add that there is a question arising as to one of the elevators with which I suspect the hon. member is somewhat familiar. I should like to take this question as notice and give him a more complete answer later.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF NEW AMBASSADOR TO FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could the right hon. gentleman tell us whether he intends to appoint Mr. Georges Emile Lapalme, the present minister of cultural affairs of the province of Quebec, as Canadian ambassador in Paris to replace Mr. Pierre Dupuy who has become chairman of the world fair corporation?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when there is a vacancy to be filled in the embassy at Paris it will be announced in due course.

Mr. Valade: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to fill that vacancy by appointing Mr. Lapalme?

Mr. Pearson: There does not appear to be a vacancy at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REARRANGEMENT OF FISCAL RELATIONSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Does the government intend to revise, on a massive scale, the tax agreements between the provinces and the federal government, as asked last evening, during a press conference, by the minister of youth, Mr. Gerin-Lajoie?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I hardly think, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would expect me to comment on a report I have not seen, or on a subject of that importance on orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: According to the minister, the problem is an urgent one. And that is why—

WORLD FAIR

PROVISION OF CANADIAN FLAG FOR EXPOSITION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday, on St. Helen's island, the 1967 world fair flag was hoisted up; could the right hon. gentleman assure us that Canada will have a truly Canadian flag on the occasion of this exhibition?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to give that assurance.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Friday, October 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for second reading of Bill No. C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker to say the least an omnibus bill such as this has a great many things in it, but this afternoon I would like to spend my time dealing with those aspects which are connected with the Department of Industry. I refer to those parts which propose certain tax advantages and exemptions for the areas designated in the recent legislation concerning the Department of Industry.

I would like to make it quite clear that I believe every member of the house is thoroughly in agreement with the good intentions of this legislation and the general principles behind it, but there are many hon. members, myself included, who take considerable exception to the methods used to attain these objectives and to the manner in which the legislation has been introduced.

Our objections and criticisms can be divided into two general categories. First, there is gross interference with provincial rights; and second, the methods used and the statistical formulae applied leave much to be desired and have resulted in some thoroughly ridiculous situations.

I shall deal first with the question of interference in provincial affairs. Ever since our country became an independent nation in 1867, from time to time its constitution has been open to considerable question with respect to rights vis-à-vis the federal government and the provinces. I agree it is sometimes difficult for even the most acute legal minds in this country to determine with any degree of accuracy which fields lie within the authority of the provinces and which lie within the authority of the federal government. When these matters are brought before the courts and, ultimately, before the Supreme Court of Canada, a decision is made. The first point I should like to make in this regard and I have discussed this matter with others, in this house and elsewhere, who have had considerable legal experience, is that it would seem to me that the government should take a careful second look at these clauses of Bill C-95, because it would seem that a good case could be made for the contention that they are ultra vires.

I do not wish to engage in a legal argument at this time. Indeed, it would be improper to do so, because any legal argument presented here would be a matter of opinion; it would be up to the courts to decide whether or not such arguments are valid. However, the reasoning behind my contention is that, by giving certain tax reliefs and exemptions to certain areas the relevant clauses of this bill are, directing the location of property, namely land and capital, within certain specific areas of the country in the provinces. The legislation may well be tested in the courts and I think the government should take a most careful look at these provisions before the measure leaves this house. An ounce of prevention, as the saying goes, is worth a pound of cure. Perhaps appropriate changes and amendments could be made as a result of a further examination by the law officers of the crown.

Let us assume, however, that this legislation is intra vires and will stand the test of the courts. It is clear it is interfering in fields which normally belong to the provinces. There has certainly been no consultation with provincial authorities with respect to this lgislation. There is ample evidence to support this assertion. For instance, the premier of British Columbia objected violently to his own home town of Kelowna being referred to as a depressed area, and the municipal officials of other places including Brantford, in the first instance, have objected to their areas being designated without consultation. So here we have a government, which has talked so much about "co-operative confederation," setting what does not appear to be a good example by putting forward, in the absence of consultation, legislation which clearly affects provincial responsibilities.

There is another point which might be raised in this connection. I know that the province of Ontario has prevented a price war, so to speak, between municipalities bidding for new industries. I suspect other provinces have enacted similar legislation. I know it has been the practice in the past for some municipalities to offer tax concessions to new industries such as free utilities, or utilities at a reduced rate, for a number of years; tax reductions, and the like. This practice has been prohibited by the province of Ontario and, no doubt, by other provinces. Legislation of the kind now being imposed by the federal government without consultation negates this principle and detracts from the usefulness of the measures taken by the government of Ontario and, as I have suggested, by other provinces. This is a field which has so far been left to the provinces, and the amendments we are considering represent an invasion of that field by the federal government.

The idea behind legislation of this type is a good one. If the minister and those responsible for this bill had consulted with the provinces, the difficulty to which I have referred might have been circumvented and the ground for the objections I am raising might not exist. But this was not done, and I would hope that in future it will be done before legislation such as this is applied.

Another question which arises is that of duplication. Most of the provinces have highly developed departments of industry and economic development. They have done a great deal to help themselves. I have more knowledge of the situation in the province of Ontario than I have of developments in other provinces, but in Ontario a great deal has been done to encourage industry to enter the province. Directorates, with staffs of civil servants and experts, have been set up for this purpose. What do we find in this Department of Industry? I have here a document put out by the department for the purpose of recruiting staff. It looks like Parkinson's law gone mad. There is clearly going to be immense duplication of effort in putting into practice the amendment proposed to the act and it seems to me the government would be better advised to use this department as a co-ordinating instrument and, perhaps, as a means of assisting financially the province in this field, instead of duplicating work which the provinces are already doing.

Another question occurs to me. Why did the government bring in legislation such as this without consulting the provinces and, through them, the municipalities? I think the answer will be found in some remarks which were made in this house a short while ago by my hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) when he very ably pointed out that the occupants of the treasury benches seem to have certain functions of government mixed up. As I recall his observations, my hon. friend referred to one of Mr. Burke's essays on government, an essay which pointed out the necessity of divorcing the legislative function of government from the administrative. Those engaged in discharging the legislative function of government are elected representatives accustomed to consultation and to dealing at first hand with members of the public. Those in the administrative branch, on the other hand, have the task of carrying out the legislative proposals and they are accustomed to doing so in a somewhat peremptory way. It may not be coincidence that a large percentage of the present cabinet—I think it is about one third—is composed of those who do, in fact, have an administrative background—some people might refer to it as a bureaucratic background. It depends, of course, on what one means by these various words but it remains true that a large number of the most important cabinet posts are now held by people who have an administrative or quasi-administrative background. As a result, one finds this kind of thinking: we know what is good for you; we are not interested in consulting people at a lower level; we are imposing this on you from on high. The Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) whose department is the most closely related to these clauses under consideration is, admittedly, a little different from those who are normally thought of as being bureaucrats. Nevertheless, he has an administrative background and I have heard some people refer to him as a "gold-plated bureaucrat". He has this background and this manner of thinking. That is why we can expect not only legislation of the type now before us, but more of it in the future.

Another main heading under which I group these objections to the relevant clauses of Bill C-95 concern the method used to designate those areas which are to receive tax relief. A great deal has been said about this in the house already by members on both sides, and a great many statistics have been produced. Most hon. members who have had any association with statistics—and I am sure the hon. gentleman is among them—know that statistics can be selected to suit the particular results which are required.

Mr. Gordon: The Minister of Agriculture says they are for losers.

Mr. Nesbitt: He may well be right. Anyway, we have all heard the story about the statistician six feet tall who was drowned in a river which had an average depth of three feet. I think some of the statistics used in the designation of these areas might come within the compass of that little anecdote. I do not wish to discuss the formula used by the Department of Industry in designating these areas at great length, but I think it is fair to say that some sort of arithmetical average was used in arriving at these figures and that special circumstances such as arise in the now famous case of the city of Brantford were, clearly, not taken into account. The hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) stated in the course of the speech she made in this house recently that in her opinion the government has adopted a reasonably good method of designating these areas by using statistics of growth and unemployment over a period of time. Referring to similar circumstances in countries outside Canada, she said the real issue in those other countries did not concern the criteria used but the question of how large the areas should be. I have pointed out that the statistical formula which the government has adopted leaves much to be desired because it does not allow for aberrations or unusual circumstances. I think it would have been preferable if a more complex formula had been adopted capable of taking such circumstances into account. But the main issue, as indicated by the hon. member for Northumberland, is to the size of the areas chosen. It was decided, apparently, that the areas covered by national employment offices would be considered as areas which could be designated as areas to receive special assistance. On the face of it, that appears to be a logical way in which to proceed, especially as statistics of unemployment and economic growth over a period of time are the basis for designating these areas. However, I believe there are serious objections to the practical application of this method of procedure.

Let us consider, for example, a large metropolitan area such as Toronto. I drive to Toronto almost every week end and I think it is 24 or 25 miles from one end of the metropolitan area to the other. I do not suppose the government would contemplate for one moment suggesting that if the rate of growth in the east end of Toronto was less rapid than in the west end, special concessions should be given to industry to locate in that part of the metropolitan area which was not progressing as fast as the other. Yet, apparently, this is what has happened in the case of Brantford. The cities of Galt, Guelph, Brantford, Woodstock and Kitchener form part of the same industrial complex in the area concerned, an area of just about the same size as Toronto or Montreal. Merely because it so happened that there were separate national employment offices in these various cities, it was decided it would be possible to designate one city while passing over another. I can tell the hon. gentleman that labour flows freely between these various industrial cities. A great many people who work in one large factory in my own city come from Brantford. Many people in my own district work in Kitchener. The distances involved are not nearly as great as they are between one end of Toronto and the other.

In fact, this whole area is an industrial complex itself and its cities and towns are rapidly growing closer and closer together. I say that this would not apply to places like Windsor, Elliot Lake or Cornwall and other areas which have been designated. These towns are well removed from other industrial centres, and I do not think anyone can find any objection, except the one I pointed out in the first part of my remarks, to these places being designated. But when you take one part of what is essentially one industrial complex and single it out for preference as opposed to the other parts, I find it very offensive and unreasonable.

I realize the government has put itself in a rather difficult position; I think all hon. members realize this. The city of Brantford was designated an area to receive assistance, and it is indeed difficult for the government to repeal this decision. Any reasonable hon. member would accept that. But there is something else the government can do to help matters, and that is this. Since I have pointed out that this whole area of Galt, Guelph, Kitchener, Woodstock, Waterloo, and so on, is all part of the same industrial complex, to make things a little fairer the government could very well designate the whole area as one to receive these tax advantages. In addition to incidentally helping the growth of the area it would certainly do a great deal to disperse industry, instead of its locating constantly in the city of Toronto, which as many people have pointed out is perhaps a socially undesirable thing. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) looks a little shocked at that, but I think we have all heard hon. members from his side of the house in the past say that it is probably a good thing to disperse industry so that cities do not get bigger and bigger while other places do not grow at all. I do not think the minister will disagree with that. I have no objection to the city of Toronto. I am very fond of it; I received part of my education there, and I like the city and its people. But I think he could hardly object to the proposition that it is socially desirable to prevent a city from getting too large, a condition which breeds all sorts of undesirable things.

Mr. Gordon: Would the hon. member permit a question from one who happens to come from Toronto. I am sure he did not mean to imply that it was socially undesirable for people to live in Toronto, did he?

Mr. Nesbitt: That all depends, Mr. Speaker, on what one might think was socially undesirable. Perhaps I have been misunderstood, but what I meant was that I think it is socially undesirable in any province to have one city become increasingly large with a heavy concentration of population in one area, which leads to a number of social evils which you do not get in smaller places.

There are those who have been unkind enough to point out that they think certain municipalities have been discriminated against, and this is attributed mostly to governments. I have heard it suggested in a very unkind way that the special designation of Brantford was a rather refined method of political patronage, in view of the political representation of Brantford. I do not think I can agree with that because I am sure that is not the case. From what we have heard lately in this house I do not think the government could ever be accused of refined political patronage in view of the crude methods we have recently heard of. I think that disposes of that argument.

I should like to deal with some remarks made by the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) when he replied to a question from me, concerning unemployment in the city of Brantford, during the course of debate on a previous occasion. I pointed out that because of the relocation of the Massey-Ferguson plant at Brantford, which is perhaps the principal industry in Brantford, there had been a large amount of temporary unemployment.

This point was also made by other members. The minister replied, as reported on page 3652 of Hansard for October 16:

> The figures I have given to the house related to the current summer months while this high level, or allegedly high level, of construction activity has been going on in Brantford. When these buildings are completed those in the construction trades engaged in building the plants will be laid off. They will be replaced by the people operating these plants, but there will still be the same number displaced in the unemployment roles as those now engaged in the construction industry and who will be laid off when building is completed.

I thought there was something a little peculiar about that so I took the trouble to look into the matter, and I found that the Massey-Ferguson plant at Brantford is being built by a very large Toronto firm. It is an international firm which has a Canadian connection in Toronto called Cunningham-Limp, a hyphenated name. About 90 per cent of those employed in building the plant come from Toronto, so I do not think there will likely be many from Brantford laid off when the job is completed, or an increase of the unemployment roll for the city of Brantford.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it is no use making a purely critical speech in the house unless one tries to offer something constructive in exchange. In summary therefore I suggest this: I hope the government, when it deals with matters such as this in the future, matters which clearly interfere with provincial fields, will consult the provinces and/or the municipalities concerned before it adopts this legislation. Before any more of these areas are designated to receive tax advantages I hope they will be consulted. As I said in the first place, we approve of this legislation; I think everyone does. But it is the methods used to bring it into effect which are under criticism.

Second, I hope the government will have a good look at Bill No. C-95, as to the possibility of its being ultra vires. Then I would also suggest a very careful look be given at the method of designating these areas. The hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) made a very able speech in this connection and pointed out ways in which the legislation could be improved. I hope her remarks will be given consideration.

Finally, because of the big row which has been so widely publicized all over Canada in connection with the designation of Brantford, I hope the minister in question will very carefully look at the whole industrial area surrounding that city. While it may be technically a series of areas, through the use of the national employment office as a base for designating an area I would ask the minister to look at the actual facts of the matter and to designate the whole complex, of which Brantford is but a part. As I have already mentioned, it would include Kitchener, Guelph, Woodstock, Waterloo and the like. I think this would obviate some of the difficulties which have arisen. I shall probably have some more remarks to make when we get to a clause by clause study of the bill in committee. I realize I have wandered a little far afield, but since this bill is so closely related to the Department of Industry and covers so many matters I felt I was entitled to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak on Bill C-95, an act to amend the Income Tax Act.

I only wish to point out to the house the discrimination which may result within some categories of people from that all too well known Income Tax Act. The small wage earners, who cannot afford to hire an accountant to prepare their income tax returns, are those who are confronted with that all too well known problem, that all too well known return which comes at the beginning of the year.

I have here a letter from one of my constituents who is quite surprised that the Minister of National Revenue should send him a letter to tell him that his claim for charitable donations has been reduced to $200. That man is amazed at such a thing, and he tells me that he will not go and see at the Quebec office what it is all about because he thinks it is useless and he asks me what to do. The employees of the income tax office tell him that they have the right to do so and that everything is according to regulations.

In my opinion, an investigation should be made and those people told why supposedly genuine receipts for charitable donations are reduced from $400 to $200. In this case, Mr. Claude Cote, residing at 586 Napoleon street, Quebec city, will get a reimbursement of only $13.15 instead of $45. Several other people are in the same situation.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding, small businessmen, small shopkeepers struggle with their income tax return at the beginning of each year and they cannot even afford to hire an accountant, and even if they do, it is at the price of great sacrifices. And why is that? Simply because that income tax form is too complicated and not easily understood by most people. In fact, nine people out of ten cannot understand the terminology of those famous forms.

I saw yesterday in the Montreal La Presse that the arts faculty students at the University of Montreal and the night students at Sir George Williams University have signified their intention of meeting the parliamentary secretary of the federal minister to ask that their education costs be deductible. At the present time, regular students only are entitled to that privilege. Students of the arts faculty of the university of Montreal and those taking evening courses in any university are not considered then to be regular students by the government. In my opinion, they should be entitled to such a reduction. I would even go as far as to say that family heads should be allowed to deduct from their income tax all it costs them today to educate their children.

It is my considered opinion that the Income Tax Act should be revised and simplified in order that it may be understood by all Canadian citizens who have to deal with this famous problem of the income tax return.

It is the lower bracket salaried workers who are unfairly treated in this, because they have to fill their returns as best they can, since they do not understand all the wording and cannot afford the advice of those experts who always find a way to reduce the tax to a minimum. What is then to be feared in all that? I believe that the victim is always the low salaried worker, the small concern or the small merchant.

If the return forms were simplified there would be much less trouble for the general public, which has nothing but hate and contempt for the Minister of National Revenue. It is precisely because of the complexity and ambiguity of the Income Tax Act that the minister's experts should, in my opinion, try to simplify the language used in income tax returns.

If we had clear, simple and precise return forms that anyone could understand and if the expressions used were more familiar, all Canadians would be proud, at the beginning of the year, to pay what they owe to the government. As it is, the prospect of having to fill out a return in the near future is a nightmare.

Therefore, I feel that it would be possible to avoid such a headache for our constituents by simplifying the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker, as representatives of the people, our duty here is to approve good legislation and fight bad legislation, but especially to improve legislation which needs to be improved and the Income Tax Act is certainly one which could stand improvement.

I feel that all members will support the amendment I wish to bring to this bill in order, once again, to be fair to the small wage earners of Canada and especially those of my riding, where the great majority of people belong to the working class and, all things considered, find it hard to earn a living and have to work both in the daytime and in the evening to make ends meet. And why? To keep our largest industry, the federal government, going.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger) that Bill C-95 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that, in the opinion of this house, the said bill should be redrafted by the counsels, advisers, experts, translators and drafters of the Department of Finance with a view to clarifying, elucidating, explicating, vulgarizing, clearing up, explaining and bringing within the understanding of all concerned the provisions of the said bill, so as to improve the terminology, the lexicology, the phraseology and the punctuation thereof in order to avoid the complications, entanglements, uncertainties and ambiguities which tend to render the Department of National Revenue odious, despicable, despised and held in contempt by the public.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the members of the house will be happy to adopt that amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if this is an amendment or a dictionary. I am wondering also if that amendment is in order. I submit to Your Honour that it is urgent to decide whether it is or not.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. If the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), whose knowledge of the procedure is well known, is only wondering if the proposed amendment is in order, I claim that it is.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might say that offhand the proposed amendment would appear to be anticipating the committee stage, where it is possible to suggest that certain changes be made by way of amendment to a bill before the committee; but if any hon. member has any comments to make before I make a formal ruling I would be pleased to hear him on the point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to encourage amendments at any stage I had hesitated to suggest that what is sought to be done by officials outside the house would be a more appropriate task for the members of the house who are elected for the purpose of legislating, and that the hon. gentleman would have an opportunity when we reached the committee stage to put forward "le meilleur français qu'il désire dans le bill", but that there did not appear to me to be any reason why we should depart from the normal rules and, on the second reading of the bill when we are only considering the principle, seek to anticipate all the details which by our rules are taken up in committee.

For that reason, sir, it did seem to me that the amendment was not in order but, of course, I bow to the Chair in any decision.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I think that precisely on second reading, we discuss the principle of the bill. Well, it is actually a matter of principle for us to make sure that the legislation is drafted in such a way that our Canadian citizens can understand it instead of having to come up against its ambiguous points.

That is why we submit it is actually a matter of principle that the wording of this legislation be simplified so it can be understood. Therefore, I submit that this amendment is completely in order even if it is moved at this stage.

It is unfortunate this amendment might delay the passing of Bill C-95, but I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Secretary of State, that it will take less time to have it simplified now than to wait until we are in committee where there would have to be amendments on every section, one after the other and that, in order to find a more simple wording so that every Canadian citizen can understand the act.

The trouble now is that our legislation cannot be made out, particularly the Income Tax Act. So, we might as well revise it now, at this stage, rather than wait until it is discussed in committee because that would mean longer delays in the passing of the bill.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, all I can say on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde) is that its wording seems still more complicated than the wording of the bill in question.

Mr. Gregoire: So, you do not like complicated things? It was with a view to—

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The arguments which have been submitted on the point of order do not change the opinion which I had, prima facie, upon the point of order concerning the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde). The opinion I had at the time, and which I should like to confirm now, having heard argument, is that there are certain amendments which are proposed, but which would be proposed normally in the course of the debate before the committee. I should like to cite as authority in support of this proposition Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 390, which reads as follows:

> An amendment to the second reading of a bill which covers alleged defects that can be remedied when the measure is considered in committee was ruled out by Speaker Glen on June 17, 1942, on the ground that it exceeded the limits prescribed by the rules and practice of both the United Kingdom and the Canadain House of Commons.

Then, I should like to cite May's sixteenth edition, page 531, as follows:

> The amendment must not be concerned in detail with the provisions of the bill upon which it is moved, nor anticipate amendments thereto which may be moved in committee.

These two authorities confirm and substantiate the principle which I have brought to the attention of the house and which, in my opinion, show that the amendment is not in order and cannot be received at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege, and I draw to your attention standing order 12, which reads:

> —in explaining a point of order or practice, he shall state the standing order—

I should like to know the number of the standing order in question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member reads on the standing order, he will see that one has to state the standing order or authority. For the hon. member's information, I referred to two authorities.

[Text]

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate on second reading I must first express my appreciation of, and my sympathy with, the amendment which has just been moved. I think every one of us who has had anything to do with the Income Tax Act would dearly love to see the language simplified to a much greater extent than has hitherto been possible. I am afraid that from time to time when that has been attempted, the result has been more confusion and less clarification. At least, it is a highly desirable objective, and I should like some day to see it achieved, although frankly I doubt if that can ever be done with a taxation statute as complicated as the one with which we are dealing at the moment.

Before I start on my brief résumé of the criticisms we on this side of the house may have in respect of the income tax bill, and I propose to be brief, I should like to make something very plain to the house leader with whom I have had a preliminary discussion on this matter. There are various members on this side of the house who would like to take part in this debate and who have suggested to me that they would like to speak on second reading. I know that for various reasons it is desirable to proceed with second reading as quickly as possible. I would assume, Mr. Speaker, that we have the understanding which has prevailed heretofore, that after second reading is achieved and when the first clause is before the committee, hon. members will be given a reasonable degree of latitude to discuss the bill rather than be confined strictly to the first clause. This is, after all, a technical bill and one might enforce the technical rule that one must confine his remarks to the first clause. If that were not the case, then I can assure the house leader that various other members will be speaking on second reading. Although I can give no assurance as to what may transpire, if we have that assurance, I think as far as the official opposition is concerned we would not wish to pursue second reading much farther than it is at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can say that I believe there has been no disposition at any stage on this side of the house to be narrowly technical about these matters. I think it has been the custom of the house, on the first clause of these important and complicated bills, to review some of the general considerations that perhaps have nothing to do directly with the principle of the bill and which hon. members want to put forward before they come to a consideration of the details of the bill. It is my understanding that neither the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) nor I would be at all disposed to raise technical points of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you; with that understanding, perhaps we can discuss for a few moments certain aspects of this measure, because before I sit down I intend to make a motion with regard to the second reading of this bill. The bill is a highly technical one and it can be considered in various ways. I propose to speak briefly because obviously if one were going to go into this matter at length, he could spend the full 40 minutes without even scratching the surface of what could be explored.

Looking at the bill in a casual way, which one must do on second reading, knowing that you are simply dealing in general with the principle, I would assume that there were perhaps four parts to it. The first, of course, would be certain technical amendments which are embodied in the bill and which I assume most members would be prepared to agree are of a technical nature, and which I am sure have been recommended by the officers of the department based on experience which has been derived in the administration of the act. I do not believe any time should be spent on a discussion of these technical amendments at this time. When we are in the committee, of course, the technical amendments will naturally be debated and opinions expressed thereon.

Then, there is the second classification which, for lack of a better term, I can refer to as the section dealing with tax avoidance. I am not here speaking of tax evasion, but of tax avoidance. I am thinking particularly of the provision which relates to what I would call, for lack of a better term, dividend stripping, which the Minister of Finance has introduced into the bill. It gives the minister very wide powers. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed at the resolution stage and some of us expressed very forcibly our opinions with respect to it. I will say that the minister has attempted to meet some of the criticisms which were raised by widening the power of appeal which was set forth in the original resolution.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I say that I do not think the power of appeal goes far enough. In fact, I do not believe it is possible to draft a section to give a power of appeal where the minister exercises a discretion. Some of us are conversant with that statement which is common amongst lawyers and which came down to us over a century ago, "The devil himself knoweth not the mind of man". I am sure that no one questions the integrity of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland), for whom we all have great respect and, I am sure, a great personal liking. When it comes to exercising discretion, if the Minister of National Revenue exercises his discretion honestly, and I am sure he would, then there is no appeal. The Minister of Finance has tried to rectify that by widening the power of appeal. I suggest, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment before us does not accomplish that purpose.

One certainly does not have to take my word for this. All he has to do is read the debate which took place at the Canadian Bar Association meeting at Banff a few short weeks ago. The opinions expressed by the tax lawyers and those who are conversant with these problems are to the effect that this is not a proper thing to do under this act. I know how complicated this problem is. I have had some experience, Mr. Speaker, in trying to deal with it myself. I suggest, with all respect, Mr. Speaker, that we do have a royal commission now dealing with the whole problem of taxation. This problem has been in existence for many years, as the minister has said. Undoubtedly, there have been abuses and perhaps the abuses have been exaggerated. However, there have been abuses; but I would suggest it would have been better for the minister to have allowed this matter to stand until the royal commission on taxation made its report. I believe there will have to be far reaching changes made in this act. I was somewhat familiar with some of these not too many months ago. Frankly, I do not believe this is the way in which to deal with this matter. In fact, I say it is a retrograde step.

At one time, as we know, the Income Tax Act was replete with ministerial discretions. You had sections being administered by a minister or perhaps by a deputy minister, and on one occasion decisions were rendered one way and then when there was a change in personnel these sections were administered in another way. In order to eliminate this problem this parliament, not under the government of which I was a member, some years ago abolished the ministerial discretions and established an income tax appeal board. Parliament said that hereafter the Minister of National Revenue is not to exercise any discretion. Personally, after having had some little experience in office, Mr. Speaker, I think that was a proper decision, a proper attitude to take. I think this is a retrograde provision, and I would strongly urge that parliament should not enact it at this time. That is the second area.

The third area deals with tax incentives. The hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) spoke the other day at some length, and with ability and understanding of the philosophical background of tax incentives. I think that if she were starting to write the book of Genesis over again, possibly she would be right in the pronouncements she made as to how the world should be recreated. Or perhaps what the hon. member said would apply if we were in France, where you have a centrally controlled economic situation under their economic boards, or if we were even in Great Britain where the board of trade can say to a new industry, "You will locate in X city or you will not get a certificate," or "If you locate in Y city you will get nothing."

But we have not got that authoritarian control in this country. So far as this party is concerned we do not want to see that degree of control exercised by any government, and I would be very much surprised if hon. gentlemen opposite would like to see control exercised to that extent. But that was the thesis of the hon. member for Northumberland in talking about the benefits of incentives.

I say philosophically if you have the authority and this control maybe—although it is debatable from the economic standpoint—those incentives would achieve the purposes to which the hon. lady referred; but frankly I do not think in the state of our free economy, so-called, we can expect to get the same beneficial results flowing from the incentives to which she referred.

There is another and real criticism of the incentives, and it is that they are discriminatory. Here we are on the verge of what I see as the real crux of the problem in these income tax amendments with which parliament is confronted—the discrimination between the good boys and the bad boys, the discrimination in favour of those which do achieve what the term used in the act says is a degree of Canadian ownership or a degree of Canadian control.

As I said at the outset, I do not intend to debate any of these matters at the moment. This is not the time for that. I am speaking generally now, preparatory to the motion which I propose to make before I sit down; but this is one of the problems involved in this bill, this matter of, if you have a degree of Canadian control or Canadian ownership then you are going to get a tax incentive, a write-off, or various other things. If you have not got that degree you do not get these incentives; you get some, but not others.

The Minister of Finance on that long ago night, which I am sure he would like to forget, when he first brought in his budget told us this was a budget which was going to deal primarily with employment. Does it make any great difference to a man working on a lathe whether that lathe is being operated by a Canadian company which has a degree of Canadian ownership, or whether it does not? Will his dinner pail be all the more full because he is working for one company rather than another? One could go on analysing these things, but this is not the time for such analysis. I am simply pointing out that in the incentives you have this factor of Canadian ownership, and that has particular application when you come to the area of the withholding tax.

I think that is a matter not too well recognized by our friends in the press gallery. They report very accurately when we are absent from this house and report very fully on matters and discussions vis-à-vis parties and their seating arrangements, but I noticed the other afternoon, when the Minister of Finance spoke at some length on second reading, his speech did not attract the attention it deserved. But in my opinion, and in the opinion of hon. members with whom I am associated on this side of the house, these proposals with respect to the withholding tax have a potential, most serious threat to our economy and are matters which should be considered very fully indeed before the house gives second reading to this bill.

It is true that the Minister of Finance on moving second reading the other evening gave a long list of countries to which he said there were special considerations given. And the Minister of Finance was absolutely right. You will find the list of them, or some of them at any rate, given at page 3638 of Hansard for October 16; but what the Minister of Finance did not point out—and I am sure he did it unwittingly—was the fact that these statute measures to which he referred were involved in corporation acts and were matters of incorporation and not of taxation.

I have had several letters from some of the companies to which the minister referred, some of the companies incorporated in these various countries, and all of them have asked me to ask the minister if he can name one act in which there was a discrimination vis-à-vis taxation rather than in the creation of the incorporation statute itself. I would ask the minister when he replies to point out any statute dealing directly with taxation in which there is a discrimination between companies which are owned by one class of citizens and companies which are owned by another class of citizens.

We are here entering into a matter of discrimination between taxpayers. As I understand the law in my not too long association with it, and after all I did practise law off and on for quite a few years—I do not recall any discriminatory tax provisions where taxpayers of one category were treated beneficially and taxpayers of another category were treated prejudicially. I do not think I can recall one at the moment, and I would like to have the minister comment on this point.

Another matter about withholding taxes to which special attention should be drawn is that the statute as we have it before us is clearly anti-American. The United States is the only country which can be affected by this income tax act as we have it at the moment, because under every other taxation agreement—and the minister can correct me if I am wrong; I do not profess to have an authoritative and detailed knowledge of every other taxation agreement—every other tax treaty we have, whether it is with Denmark, Belgium, the United Kingdom, France or any of the other countries in the world with which we have treaties, there has to be notice of abrogation. There has to be a period laid down, usually before June of one year to be effective in December the following year. The only treaty which can be abrogated by either party unilaterally is the American treaty, and that treaty says that when either party makes a tax or changes a tax, then so far as that tax is concerned the treaty is abrogated.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Therefore I am saying this is deliberately—I will not say deliberately, but automatically—an anti-American process, and the United States is the only country affected like this. I would like the minister to tell us whether he has given notice of abrogation to other countries, and to tell us which countries he has given notice of abrogation to, or whether he will simply be abrogating automatically by passing this bill.

The minister may say, and I have heard this suggested in discussions in the corridors, that it is true parliament may pass the act today, the Senate may approve it today, and the Governor General give it his approval, but it does not come into effect until 1965, or at least we will not impose the tax until 1965, and we pray, hope, believe, and trust that the Americans will not take notice of it until we impose the increased tax.

That may be so, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is rather an unusual thing. I am sure no one here would realize once we pass this bill, if it is so construed, that then in any case it can be deemed to be an abrogation of the American treaty. But if it is, what happens? You get automatically a 30 per cent withholding tax. That is the tax which applies in the United States on dividends paid—30 per cent, unless there is a treaty. Although we have heard a great deal of discussion—and with this I do not quarrel—about the fact that there are American controls here and we should do something about them, and I quite agree—although I do not think it has ever yet been proven that economic penetration means political domination; that is a matter for argument—we must not forget that there happens to be a few millions of dollars invested by Canadians in the United States. And if one looks at the figures and balances the populations, which I would like to do if we were in committee, we would get an amazing result following an analysis of that picture. But in any event, what is going to happen with Canadian corporations operating in the United States?

If the 30 per cent tax comes into effect, will they have to retain very able corporation lawyers to change their corporate structure, as they easily can do, and become parents, with their Canadian companies becoming subsidiaries? This is something which can happen, and the Canadian treasury then loses the benefit of the tax and we lose control of the corporations.

This and a dozen other company questions could be raised. I am simply suggesting these as illustrations of what could be done, and why I think this question is more involved and deserves more careful consideration than what has been given to it here previously, and why we should spend more time on it, even in the committee of the whole. This is a matter of paramount importance. This bill should be given the most careful study, and members of the House of Commons should have the benefit of the advice of experts and get the reaction of corporations and people who are going to be affected by it.

We hear a great deal about expanding our markets and our economy. Well, Mr. Speaker, where is the greatest opportunity for expansion but in the United States of America? That is the great market right next door to us, with 185 or 190 millions of population, and I suggest that for Canadian subsidiaries operating down there, and companies which I could name but which I am not going to do at the moment, their future development will be adversely affected if this bill goes into effect.

I feel very strongly that we should give careful consideration to all these matters—more, say, than has been done heretofore. One could continue at length if we were in committee, as we shall be, if the house sees fit to move into committee. But I would hope that instead of sending this bill to the committee of the whole, as would normally follow, we would send it to the committee on banking and commerce where it could be studied further and become the subject of a report from that body.

Therefore, without taking further time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter relating thereto be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): This, of course, is a motion in which confidence is involved and I should like to say a few words about it in replying to the remarks which have just been made by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan).

To begin with, I should like to join with him in his remarks about the suggested amendment made by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde). I must say I sympathize with him and I agree that it would be much better if our taxing statutes were rewritten in language which the ordinary person could understand without the need for calling in tax lawyers.

Mr. Nowlan: Or tax consultants.

Mr. Gordon: I was going to leave it at "tax lawyers". Perhaps that was a matter of personal preference. I think, though, that if the language is to be simplified, the whole act will have to be simplified and a lot of the sections in it will have to be eliminated in the interest of a simpler approach. I hope very much that the royal commission on taxation will be taking this matter into account in its deliberations.

I do not think I should go any further without drawing attention to the remarks which the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings made about the budget—a budget which he stated I would be very glad to forget. On the contrary, the proposals made in the budget are parts of the policy of this government which we want to see implemented just as quickly as we can.

An hon. Member: The remaining parts?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, the parts that are incorporated in this bill. I do not wish to be unpleasant but I do not think the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings is in a position to hold himself out as an expert in the presentation of budgets.

Mr. Nowlan: Much better than you are. At least, I did not bring in a rotten one.

Mr. Gordon: No runs, no hits, no errors. Well, I do not want to get into controversy with the genial former minister of finance but I think, sometimes, that to do nothing is worse than anything.

Mr. Nowlan: The policy of your party was to keep us from doing anything.

Mr. Gordon: In moving that this bill be referred to a committee the hon. gentleman is in effect moving another motion of non-confidence in the government.

Mr. Nowlan: Not necessarily.

Mr. Gordon: We shall accept it as such. At the same time, the hon. gentleman is seeking to ignore the fact that the budget itself was debated fully and at length. He is ignoring the fact that we had two votes on the budget—or three if the supply motion on July 2 is included in that category, as I think it should be. He is ignoring the detailed resolution on the income tax which was debated at length, and he is ignoring the fact that it is high time this bill was passed so that the businessmen of this country may know what the rules are going to be.

There have been 15 votes of confidence this session. I do not pose as an expert in these matters but, surely, that must be something of a record. I wonder how many more confidence motions we need to sustain the government's position.

Mr. Lambert: You are calling the supply motions.

Mr. Gordon: I am talking about this particular motion.

In my statement on October 6 on the second reading of this bill I said that most of the amendments to the Income Tax Act fall into one or another of three categories. The hon. gentleman mentioned four, but one of those concerned certain very technical amendments, so I think we are both right. I do not think many hon. members would seriously question the desirability of plugging loopholes in the act. The proposed amendments which are designed for this purpose come into the first of the three categories I have mentioned. Points of detail have been raised and I will attempt to deal with these when we come to the particular clauses in the bill. But the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings mentioned one item in particular, an amendment designed to stop what is known in the trade as dividend stripping. I am delighted to hear that the hon. gentleman is a member of the trade and that he has some knowledge of this particular operation.

Mr. Nowlan: We also employ consultants to give us taxation advice.

Mr. Gordon: You would do better if you employed accountants. Anyway, it is easy to say: Do nothing about blocking this particular loophole, because there is disagreement as to the best way of approaching this problem. It is easy to say in this particular case that it is unwise to place discretion in the hands of the Minister of National Revenue. It is very easy, as I said a minute ago, to do nothing. But this is an area where very large sums of money are escaping taxation. We do not know when the report of the royal commission on taxation will be ready. We do not know what the commission may suggest as a means of dealing with this problem. We do not know what the reaction of the Canadian Bar Association or others may be to the proposals which the royal commission may make. Therefore, it seems to me that in the meantime we have a duty to stop what has been going on in a wholesale fashion. Not only do I make no apology for this particular amendment; I say it should have been introduced long ago.

The second category of amendments deals with incentives designed to increase employment, especially in areas of slower growth. I was pleased that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings should have referred to the speech made the other day by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Miss Jewett). I thought hers was one of the best speeches I have listened to in this house. It was thoughtful. It showed that a great deal of research had been done. And it was not dogmatic in any way. My hon. friend pointed out on that occasion that there are a variety of ways of providing incentives of the kind now under consideration. She indicated that many different ways had been tried in other countries and that no one pretends that any particular formula is perfect. She suggested, if I recall her words correctly, that it is better to try to do something and then, if abuses are found, or if it is found that the formula can be improved, to correct the situation than it is to wait indefinitely in the hope that somehow or other somebody will come along with a perfect formula.

I was surprised that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings should suggest or imply that he was not in favour of the kind of incentives which can influence the location of new businesses and factories in areas of slower growth. Because one of the things we hope to accomplish by these amendments is to encourage industry to locate in the part of Canada which the hon. member represents and which everyone in the house knows has lagged behind the rest of Canada in economic growth and development.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the hon. member was speaking of days when he was a tax consultant in Toronto. Nova Scotia is not now lagging behind; it is leading the rest of the country.

Mr. Gordon: If the hon. member is serious, I wish he would go to Sydney and Cape Breton and make that statement.

Mr. Nowlan: I have made it. I doubt very much whether the Minister of Finance would dare go to Sydney, in view of what he said about expelling people from the maritimes so they could get jobs elsewhere.

Mr. Gordon: Well, let us come back to earth. I do not believe that remark was very helpful. I have been to Nova Scotia many times to answer that kind of charge, usually made, if I remember correctly, by the hon. gentleman's seatmate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might be allowed at this point to mention to the minister that at this stage of the debate he cannot attempt to reply in general to the comments and speeches made so far. My understanding is that at this point he is referring to the specific amendment proposed by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), and that is all. If he were making a general reply to contributions to the debate he would close the debate, and I would have had to warn the house that he was closing the debate. I assume other speakers would want to get to their feet, so I suggest that his comments be limited to the advisability or otherwise of adopting the proposition made to the house by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

Mr. Gordon: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker, and I am grateful for your advice.

I should like to refer if I may, because it has a bearing on this motion, to the third category of amendments which deal with the withholding taxes, because it seems to me that they have a direct relationship to the proposal to refer this matter to the banking and commerce committee. I am fully aware that these proposals have been criticized by some people in business and financial circles, but I might say that an increasing number of thoughtful Canadian businessmen have been telling me lately that they think that what the government is doing or trying to do in this respect is correct.

Mr. Fisher: These are the thoughtful ones.

Mr. Gordon: They are the thoughtful ones. I think it is understandable that the owners of some foreign firms with subsidiaries in Canada do not like to be asked to take in junior partners, because the interests of those partners would have to be taken into account when company policy was being debated and decisions arrived at.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think we are getting ourselves into considerable difficulty at this point, if the minister continues to reply to arguments vis-à-vis the general nature of the amendments proposed by this bill. I submit to Your Honour that the minister should only reply to the advisability of the amendment to refer the contents of this bill to a committee. The minister will then have full opportunity—

Mr. Macdonald: Closure.

Mr. Lambert: I do not think the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) is in any position to comment. The minister has full opportunity to reply to all hon. members, but it is a rule of the house that when he does so he closes the debate. If the minister continues his reply to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) on the nature of the amendment, then other hon. members should be able to rise again, and the house will be getting into the position that members will be able to speak twice when Your Honour is in the chair. This is not contemplated by the rules.

Mr. Macdonald: A great lecture.

Mr. Monteith: You can stand one.

Mr. Lambert: I suggest that we are getting into a difficult position. I am interested in what the minister has to say, but not at this stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am in full agreement with the comments made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), which are of course, in substance, the same as the comments I made previously. I would ask the minister to try to limit his comments to the amendment, which relates to the advisability of referring the subject matter of this bill to a standing committee of the house.

Mr. Gordon: The reason I was referring to some of these matters in a little more detail than perhaps I should, Mr. Speaker, was because the motion to transfer this bill to the committee on banking and commerce would obviously mean delay in getting ahead with the legislation. The bill contains a number of matters which are vital, integral parts of the broad economic program of this government, and in our opinion on this side of the house the sooner it is dealt with the better. I fully appreciate there are those who would like to see the bill transferred to committee in the hope that there it might be disembowelled, disembodied, dismembered, and destroyed or at least delayed. We however, think that this would be contrary to the best interests of the country.

I hope I am in order, Mr. Speaker, when I say that there are many hon. members of this house who believe that changes are needed and must be made if Canadians are to take full advantage of the opportunities which are ours. Many of us feel we should get on with this bill as quickly as possible, that there is nothing to be gained by transferring it to a committee, in the hope that it may be delayed for some considerable time. So, Mr. Speaker, I urge all hon. members of the house of all parties to oppose this motion, and having done so I would ask them to let us get on with the bill and get it through.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the language used by the minister a moment ago may I ask him a question. Does he think that if the bill is referred to a committee for analysis and study this will result in the disembodiment and destruction of the bill?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Macdonald: You said it, not he.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to enter into the debate between the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) as to whether a bad budget is better than no budget at all. Personally I think they are both bad. With regard to the motion that the contents, the subject matter of the bill, be referred to the committee on banking and commerce, first of all I am forced to wonder whether this is actually something appropriate for consideration by the banking and commerce committee. It seems to me to be going far beyond the usual scope of that committee, of which I have been a member on and off for a decade.

I realize we already have in existence a body studying the taxation structure of Canada, the royal commission on taxation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I am forced to the conclusion that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings must feel that he and his colleagues are incapable of producing relevant amendments to deal with their objections to the bill when it does come before the committee of the whole, which may well be the case. But I doubt whether their inability in this regard will be cured by having it appear before the standing committee. I also feel there is a great deal of validity in what the minister has said, namely that the uncertainty throughout the country with regard to this bill should be cleared up as soon as possible. After all, I recall a previous government which was extremely reluctant to allow any discussion at all, in committee or anywhere else, of one of their rather dubious exercises in extra taxation, namely the surcharges.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief reference to the amendment now before the house. We in the Social Credit party have stated time and time again—in fact it has been our conviction for many years—that a complete revision of our whole tax structure is absolutely necessary if we are to achieve our objectives. We are not convinced that piecemeal legislation or a piecemeal approach to the problem is satisfactory by any means. As I have stated, our position is that a complete revision is essential. As has been pointed out, there is already a body studying this matter in its totality and we are in hopes that when the report is brought down and the recommendations are made many of these matters will be cleared up and many of the inadequacies will be remedied.

With regard to referring the subject matter of the bill to the committee on banking and commerce, we feel that this would not be in the best interests of the country because of the uncertainty that is continuing to plague our national economy. Surely we must face reality in some of these matters. We cannot keep our economy unbalanced for months and months on end. There must come a time when people will at least know where we stand and what the proposals are. I think that the bill should be proceeded with, without referring the subject matter to the committee on banking and commerce.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), who wants to refer the measure to the banking and commerce committee, will not be surprised, I hope, to see that I do not agree with him.

A while ago, he did not stand up to express his opinion; he hesitated to do so and he chose not to commit himself. So, if we had appealed against the Speaker's ruling, he would not have supported us. When he saw that we were bowing to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, he stood up and commended us for our amendment, saying that it made sense, that the forms were indeed too complicated and could be simplified.

Mr. Speaker, we bowed to your ruling to discuss the measure clause by clause, and this is what we intend to do.

I want to thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) who recognized that the forms are complicated, from the standpoint of terminology, and that they should be simplified.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Chairman, as I understand the agreements between the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) and the spokesmen of the opposition parties, at the committee stage, and considering the nature of this bill, we can express our views on the whole of Bill C-95, without discussing it clause by clause.

Personally, I am of the opinion that this is an extremely important measure at the present time.

We heard the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) making all sorts of reserves concerning the bill under study, claiming that we should be very cautious, that the directors of foreign businesses having capital in Canadian industry should not be offended.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) was quite right when he stated, the other day, that the time for speeches is over, that action is what is now required. To my mind, Bill C-95 clearly establishes that the present government intends to act in a positive way, and to find some concrete remedies.

We all know that today, this country's economy is impaired by the fact that 60 per cent of the Canadian manufacturing industry are controlled by non-resident corporations. We must hand back to Canadians the ownership and control of their own economy.

Bill C-95 aims to put back that control of industries into the hands of Canadian citizens, by altering the rates of the withholding tax on dividends of non-resident corporations; the rate would be reduced from 15 to 10 per cent for corporations which will allow Canadians to buy their shares and to sit on their boards of directors.

In order to reach our economic aim, it is essential that Canadians have a voice on the boards of directors within Canadian industry. I congratulate the Minister of Finance for taking concrete steps to promote this repatriation of Canadian interests into the hands of Canadians.

As for those executives who do not want to have Canadians on their boards, well, they will have to pay a higher rate on dividends payable by a non-resident person, as the rate will be increased from 15 to 20 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this bill is extremely important and represents a turning point in the history of Canada as far as taxation is concerned.

It was necessary to act quickly, and I congratulate the government for taking a bold stand in order to encourage industrialists who have invested in Canada to let Canadians have a say on their boards, so that they can have the share which must be theirs in foreign trade.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that the main economic problem now facing Canada is our unfavourable trade balance with the United States. I feel we must tackle the problem energetically, as we are doing at present.

We agree that our aim will not be easily achieved, but we feel that those industrialists will understand the situation if we clearly explain our intentions to them. As a result, in a more or less distant future, 25 per cent of the shareholders and directors of the companies which develop our natural resources will be Canadians.

I submit that this bill will be most useful in that connection and that we will have to adopt similar legislation to increase our trade with the United States so as to remove, as it were, our present trade deficit.

We will then no longer have to stand the unending pressures of American industrialists on our Canadian economy.

Mr. Chairman, the second point I wish to discuss is the review of our whole taxation structures. I gather that the royal commission on taxation is still proceeding with its work, but we all earnestly hope that it will soon submit its report to the house, so that we may be able to overhaul our taxation system. Actually, it is so complicated that it is unfair to salaried workers or owners of small businesses who have no experts at their disposal to take advantage of all the benefits which they could claim under certain provisions of the statute.

I feel that the Minister of Finance is making a concrete gesture in introducing Bill No. C-95.

In fact, he is endeavouring to eliminate certain loopholes that manufacturers or financiers could find in the legislation.

Let us consider, for example, the question of lease-purchase option agreements, where, of course the treasury could be deprived of huge amounts. Surely, we did not have to wait for royal commissions' reports or extensive studies to eliminate such loopholes. In fact, I think that it was up to the minister to act promptly, and he has done so by introducing Bill No. C-95.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the aims of the provisions contained in Bill No. C-95 are excellent. Let us take, for example, the concealment of dividends which is commonly known as "dividend stripping".

Those people have tried everything and even though it may be at times distasteful to give too much discretion to the Minister of Finance and to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland), I think that we should consider first and above all the nation's interest and endeavour to prevent people from cheating the Department of National Revenue, so that all classes of society will pay the government what the government is entitled to. We have to do it, even though certain methods might be distasteful at times; but if they prove inefficient, the government has to step in once more and to introduce new legislation, so as to do justice to every taxpayer.

Personally, I represent a riding where the unemployment situation is extremely serious, and it is with infinite pleasure that I welcomed the announcement of the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) with regard to designated areas, in which the county of St. Maurice-Lafleche has been included.

A point of great account, which it is extremely important to recall in the house, is that out of 66 designated areas recognized by the Department of Labour, 30 are located in the province of Quebec, which means that Quebec is the province which suffers most from unemployment in this country. It also proves that the Liberal government realized that the economic problem in the province of Quebec had to be solved. We have here some positive action, which the members from the province of Quebec should bring to the attention of the house.

It could, perhaps, be said that the legislation is discriminatory. The point has already been raised, and much fuss has been made of the case of Brantford. But none the less, it is an extremely important legislation and a most practical one, which tends to solve the unemployment problem and also the problem of Quebec's economy, where all industrial strength is practically centralized in the Montreal area, the other parts of the province having to bear the consequences of such a situation.

Thanks to this new legislation, several areas in the province of Quebec may, from now on, offer some advantage to industry, whereas they were unable to do so in the past.

Let us take, for instance, the benefits offered to the industrialists by the Minister of Industry and by the Minister of Finance, that is a tax abatement for a three year period and the possibility of a deduction for machinery and buildings over a five year period.

I think those measures ought to prompt industries to set up in the areas where unfortunately the economic situation is not favourable.

In the riding which I represent, we experienced a tremendous economic development in the years 1925-30 because at that time, we had electric power which was the key to our economy; but since the nationalization of electric power, that power can be found everywhere in the province of Quebec, and our region lost the advantages it had before.

Because of this new legislation, we hope that the industries will come and set up in our region where economic growth is very slow. I think that this legislation is not discriminatory, that it is in order and serves the interests of the nation. As was mentioned by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett), this legislation was implemented in other countries and it gave satisfactory results.

I therefore think it is by duty to point out that this legislation is intended to decentralize industry and promote the most severely affected regions.

As regards the methods used for the designation of those places, they may come under criticism. But if we take a map and study the economic divisions where development is too slow, we find that, actually, the places which suffer the most economically in Canada will benefit from those advantages. Therefore, people should not complain about the procedure followed.

Some complaints have been heard that the municipalities and the provinces have not been consulted. In fact, it might be advisable to examine the matter more carefully in this respect. Obviously, the machinery is perhaps not yet sufficiently to the point; therefore, it is important to name a standing committee on federal-provincial relations, which would prevent interference in a field where there may be competition between the provinces and the federal government.

However, even if such a problem has been raised, this is no reason to stop the whole legislation. On the contrary, we should act. If there are abuses they should be remedied but we should not refrain from taking action because a constitutional problem may arise.

Everyone should take his own responsibilities and, in this, the government is acting quite properly.

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: On a point of order, I wonder if the hon. member would pay more attention to the item under consideration. I think he has wandered very far from the bill we are considering at the moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Chretien: I have made a speech concerning Bill C-95, and many other members have raised similar points, so that I feel it is in order for me to elaborate somewhat upon certain points.

In concluding, I would like to say a few words on a question which affects me, and which is of great concern in the province of Quebec. We are unfortunately beset, at the present time, with a rather prickly fiscal problem, and it is that of receipts for charitable donations.

This very afternoon I received a petition bearing 600 signatures asking me to suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should consider that problem, which has been with us, in the province of Quebec, for many years—

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: I should like to deal with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Rosthern. Members of the committee will recognize that we are dealing with the first clause of this bill. I think it is generally agreed that debate at this point is a little wider than would normally be allowed. However, I would recommend that the hon. member who now has the floor should stay as closely as he can to the terms of the bill, though I recognize there is some agreement as far as general debate is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Chretien: Even if I am not quite in order, I had been recognized before the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) submitted his amendment. I was good enough to yield the floor to him, and that is why I feel I should now be allowed to expound, during a few minutes, an opinion which might go somewhat beyond the clause under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I have only one suggestion for the Minister of Finance.

I should like to come back to the excellent suggestion made by the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) concerning the possibility of eliminating receipts for charitable donations and reducing from 17 to 14 or 15 per cent the tax levied at the present time on the first bracket of taxable income. Another suggestion would be to raise the tax basis in such a way that the national revenue would not lose anything and taxpayers would not have to keep on fighting with the officers of the Department of National Revenue, thereby doing away with a practice which could be called a premium on charity.

If we are generous, we will get our reward at the end of our life on earth.

I am of the opinion that the Minister of Finance should examine those suggestions with care, for I am sure there are ways to improve the situation. Maybe there have been excesses, but the situation must be corrected. I submit that the Minister of Finance will succeed in finding a solution because, as I said, words are no longer enough, it is time to act.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-95.

This bill includes many things, but we would have liked it to bring forward some relief to the Canadian people. Unfortunately, taxpayers will not be helped by it. It can be noted that tax exemptions are very few. In fact, there are only a few changes, a few amendments to the various clauses which, on the whole, merely move things from one place to another.

Mr. Chairman, our society is disintegrating and we are too blind to realize it. We can judge of the soundness of society only by the wealth we have gathered. As long as we do not see sticks and clubs, we will remain very quiet, like the Bourbons of Spain a few centuries ago.

I am convinced that Bill C-95 could be improved.

Aware of our duties and obligations toward society, we claim a $3,000 income tax exemption for bachelors. In my opinion, that should be included in the bill. Married taxpayers should enjoy a $5,000 exemption, plus a $1,000 exemption for each child. Unfortunately, this is not in the bill.

Also, we claim a tax deduction on all workmen's tools used by their owners to earn their living. We should also have liked students to benefit from a tax exemption on their tuition fees. A family head should be allowed to deduct from his income tax the tuition fees for his children aged 16 and over. Unfortunately, there is no mention of those exemptions in the bill.

The government does not know where to get the money. That is why it is seeking means to replenish the treasury. I know that the government needs money and that it must find it somewhere. An easy solution would be to reduce the interest rates and to use the facilities of the Bank of Canada to finance public works. That would be two ways for the government to secure the necessary funds without cost. We could use that institution to achieve that end if we wanted to, but unfortunately it is impossible under the present financial system. It is felt that the Bank of Canada should not be put at the disposal of the Canadian people, but where is the money going to come from?

But I would ask the Minister of Finance to look for money where he can find it.

If you refuse to do so, if you have to steal money from the workers in order to give it to the needy, at least be wise enough to take it from those who benefit most from society. At least, leave what is necessary to those who need it to live decently.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to quote a few statistics in support of my remarks.

On page 1039 of the Canada Year Book for 1962, we find that individuals pay the same amount in taxes as companies and their shareholders. Why must they always be granted exemptions that enable them to pile up profits and capital at the expense of other people who are always in debt and have no security?

It was announced that the period between August 1962 and August 1963 would be a year of austerity for all Canada, and special personal income taxes were levied. During the period between August 1962 and August 1963, the market value of the shares of 740 companies or trusts increased from $44,740,-769,022 to $57,351,895,062, that is by almost $13 billion. For whom were the austerity measures meant? And companies are always complaining that their profits are too low, that they fear the future and that they need tax relief in order to survive. What about the private individual?

Do you know that, in 1962, the Canadian taxpayer paid $700 out of his income solely for the administration of the federal government, that is almost 44 per cent of the average salary?

Do you know that interest charges take between 16 and 17 cents out of each tax dollar, and they keep increasing. It is not surprising that Khrushchev claims that communism will one day overcome capitalism.

Do you know that federal and provincial taxes have increased by 3,000 per cent during the last 50 years?

It is unthinkable that a country as highly industrialized as ours, with a large and hard-working labour force with a sufficient number of technicians, experts and engineers, should find itself at the mercy of such an extent that it is virtually enslaved by financial and economical means.

We have no one to blame but ourselves, and our irresponsible governments. Our industries must increase their output, widen their fields of production in order to be in a position to employ all the available manpower and raise our standard of living.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER DISPATCH OF BUSINESS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PERSONNEL

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think there was an understanding that I could have leave to revert to motions to make a motion to establish the membership of the committee on procedures and organization. If that is agreeable I would move the motion now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed that the house shall revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Teillet):

That the special committee on procedures and organization of the House of Commons appointed October 23, 1963, be composed of Mr. Speaker and Messrs. Aiken, Chapdelaine, Choquette, Gregoire, Jewett (Miss), Knowles, Lambert, Lamoureux, MacEachen, Macquarrie, Martineau, Pickersgill, Walker, Woolliams.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nowlan: I presume the order of business for tomorrow is that outlined by the house leader yesterday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. Perhaps I should make provision for the contingency tomorrow evening. If, as I hope will be the case, we have disposed of the bill in committee by five o'clock we will take the estimates of northern affairs tomorrow evening. If, however, we go on as far as eight o'clock before we get into committee of supply, we would take the estimates of the Department of Fisheries and try to finish them. Of course, if we do not finish until 10.30 we will not be able to take the estimates of either department.

Mr. Nowlan: And you will go on with the bill on Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, of course. If perchance this bill is not disposed of tomorrow we will go on with it on Friday.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. SPEAKER—STATEMENT RESPECTING QUESTIONS ON ORDERS OF THE DAY

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the indulgence of the house in order to make a statement on a matter of urgent, general interest to the house.

It is now slightly more than five months since I was given the great honour by all hon. members of assuming the position of presiding officer in the Canadian House of Commons. When I undertook to be your servant I said that "it will be my duty to preserve the precious heritage of this historic chamber, to maintain decorum and order in debate and above all to exercise fairness and impartiality in protecting the rights of every individual member."

As might have been foreseen, the Chair has had its difficulties in attempting to carry out this effort, not because of any undue lack of co-operation by hon. members but because of the very nature of those self assigned functions in the circumstances in which we find ourselves.

There is one area of the work of the house which has caused me grave concern; it is that of oral questions on orders of the day. For that reason, as well as others, I listened with satisfaction to the debate last week leading to the establishment of a committee on procedure and reform with the wholehearted support of all groups in this house.

That committee will meet shortly and will, I have no doubt, conduct its deliberations with the single purpose in mind of improving the techniques and rules of our internal administration, so as to render the best possible service to parliament and to the country. It goes without saying, however, that while deliberations may be conducted and representations may be received, some time will elapse before any proposals can be made to the house from the committee.

The problem of the question period before the orders of the day is not a new one, and it has disturbed previous occupants of the chair as well as many members of the house, not only in the present parliament but in those which have gone before. As long ago as 1956 the then Speaker of the House of Commons was sufficiently concerned, to give a learned and valuable discourse on the rules to be followed on asking questions before the orders of the day. For those hon. members who are interested, as I think we should all be, I can do no better than refer to Mr. Speaker Beaudoin's observations as they are cited at page 2206 in the debates of the House of Commons of 1956.

I wish to state that having read Mr. Speaker Beaudoin's remarks on that occasion I am in complete agreement with them, both in substance and in form, and during the course of my own treatment of the problem I intend to incorporate some of the basic suggestions made by Mr. Speaker Beaudoin into my own remarks.

Mr. Beaudoin was followed in the chair by Hon. Roland Michener, who left behind him a reputation of impartiality and wisdom which has been a source of strength not only to me but I am sure to my hon. friend from Edmonton West, and I am equally sure, to Speakers who will follow us both.

For further study of the subject I can do no better than to refer hon. members to Mr. Speaker Michener's suggestions as found on page 1393 of the debates of the House of Commons of February 26, 1959.

Finally, as the most recent authority, if any were needed, I would direct the attention of hon. members to the very comprehensive statement on the matter by my predecessor, Mr. Speaker Lambert, the present member of this house for Edmonton West.

May I take the liberty of offering a synopsis of the principles stated on these occasions by these most learned and distinguished Speakers. They are as follows:

1. The form of questions is governed by the terms of standing order 39, section 1, providing in part that in putting a question no argument or opinion is to be offered nor any facts stated, except so far as might be necessary to explain the question. (Mr. Speaker Lambert, page 565, October 16, 1962.)

2. Questions should be offered only in connection with urgent and important matters of public concern when, because of immediacy, the regular procedure relating to questions cannot be utilized. (Mr. Speaker Lambert, page 565, October 16, 1962.)

3. An explanation can be sought regarding the intention of the government, but not an explanation of opinion upon matters of policy.

Statement by Mr. Speaker on Questions

(Mr. Speaker Michener, page 1393, February 26, 1959.)

4. Supplementary questions are matters of grace. (Mr. Speaker Michener, page 1393, February 26, 1959.)

5. A minister is entitled to notice, and answers cannot be insisted upon nor is it regular to comment on the refusal to answer oral questions. (Mr. Speaker Michener, page 1393, February 16, 1959.)

It may be opportune at this time to draw the attention of the house to citation 171 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne, from which I have extracted a number of the rules there set forth. The citation may be abbreviated in part as follows:

In putting a question a member must confine himself to the narrowest limits.

In making a question, observations which might lead to debate cannot be regarded as coming within the proper limits of a question.

The purpose of a question is to obtain information and not to supply it to the house.

A question, oral or written, must not:

—be trivial, vague or meaningless;

—multiply with slight variations, a similar question on the same point;

—repeat in substance a question already answered or to which an answer has been refused;

—inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are true;

—contain an expression of opinion;

—be hypothetical;

—be a speech, however short; . . . . nor be of unreasonable length;

—seek for purposes of argument, information on matters of past history;

—ask a solution of a legal proposition, such as the interpretation of a statute or of a minister's own powers, etc. . . ;

—refer to a debate or to answers to questions during the current session;

—embody a series of questions which should be moved as an address or order;

—anticipate an order of the day or other matters;

—raise a matter of policy too large to be dealt with in the limits of an answer to a question;

—refer to speeches made outside the house; but in the case of a cabinet minister, it is permissible to ask the Prime Minister whether such speech represents government policy;

—ask the government's opinion on matters of policy;

—seek information set forth in documents equally accessible to the questioner, as statutes, published reports, etc. . . . ;

—seek information about proceedings in a committee which has not yet made its report to the house;

—relate to matters which passed outside the walls of the house and do not relate to any bill or motion before the house.

We all recognize that the opposition has the right and, indeed, the duty to question the conduct of the government, and every effort should be made in the enforcement of our rules and in their implementation to safeguard that right.

The oral question period is, however, unknown to our rules, and that fact greatly increases the difficulties of the Chair. My authority for this statement is based on standing order 39, which provides only for questions to be placed on the order paper, and standing order 41 which requires 48 hours' notice. Beauchesne's fourth edition deals with this matter in citation 173.

A breakdown of the oral questions amongst parties and groups since September 30 to date shows the following totals: Liberal party, 23; Progressive Conservative party, 574; New Democratic party, 208 and the combined Social Credit party, 222. With the permission of the house, a detailed breakdown of those totals is herewith tabled. If I may have permission, I should like to table it. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: In making these observations, I am fortified by statements made by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition of the present house during the course of the past year or so, and these statements have been very much in my mind since last Wednesday, October 23, when the most interesting debate on the setting up of the committee on procedure and reform took place.

As a private member I recall with great interest hearing the statement made by that most experienced parliamentarian, the present Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. gentleman who, when prime minister said—and it was referred to last week—as found on page 2011 of the House of Commons debates, November 26, 1962:

> As far as questions are concerned, it is not for me to suggest, but I think that the number of these questions could be greatly reduced; and if we were also to have a self-denying ordinance that, under ordinary circumstances, we would not go over half an hour on questions before orders of the day we would save 15 full days in an ordinary session without, as I see it, losing any ground that might be gained through questions or in any way interfering with the rights of the opposition.

That position was restated by the right hon. gentleman on Wednesday, October 23 last at page 3926, when he said:

> Provided the answers given by the government are not evasive, provided they place the facts before us, provided they do not hide and cover up, as was alleged today and last night, I would be inclined to believe that if, in addition to the regular questions on the order paper, we all agreed to the self-denying ordinance to which the Prime Minister made reference, oral questions could very well be limited considerably. To what extent would be a matter for determination and recommendation by the committee. In the United Kingdom the period is an hour and that covers written as well as oral questions.

During the same debate the present Prime Minister referred to his own remarks on the subject in 1962, and I quote him in that reference as found once again at page 3925 of the debates of October 23, 1963. He said:

> We have agreed to a reduction, if it is a reduction, to 30 minutes of the time spent on oral questions on orders of the day.

The leaders of the New Democratic party and the Social Credit party also spoke in that debate and referred to the need for an examination of the practices governing our question period, and the latter reminded us of the practice in New Zealand where a daily 30 minute limit on the question period is observed.

This leads me to a suggestion which I respectfully intend to make now to the house. It is a suggestion upon which hon. members may care to reflect between now and the opening of the house on Monday next. My proposal, which I shall put as concisely as possible, is as follows.

1. In placing questions, hon. members seeking information from ministers will be expected to adhere to the rules governing questions as enunciated by my predecessors and as set forth in the previously mentioned extracts from section 171 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne.

If these rules are not observed by hon. members posing their questions, I would immediately and without further discussion inform the hon. member that the question is out of order, and pass at once to the next question.

At the same time it should be remembered that ministers too have a responsibility not to abuse the question period. In that regard may I remind hon. ministers of paragraph I of citation 181, Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> Questions must be answered briefly and distinctly, and be limited to the necessary explanations, though a certain latitude is permitted to ministers of the crown whenever they find it necessary to extend their remarks with the view of clearly explaining the matter in question.

2. No more than two supplementary questions, which must be genuine supplementary questions and which, I remind hon. members, are matters of grace, might be asked. These supplementary questions might only be asked by the member who posed the original question, as is the case in the house of commons at Westminster.

3. I would take it upon myself to select questioners in rough ratio to the number of hon. members comprising any one body in the house.

4. No more than 30 minutes would be allowed to elapse from the time on the clock when the first question was asked.

5. Although points of order and questions of privilege would not be allowed with respect to any ruling during the question period, any member who felt himself seriously aggrieved might be permitted to raise a question of privilege about a decision of the chair at the close of the question period. Any such question of privilege would have to be concisely stated and disposed of promptly without appeal.

6. These proposals would be on a trial basis only and considered as experimental for the balance of the present session.

I invite hon. members now or next Monday, which might be better, after they have had a chance to consider these suggestions, to express their views.

If these suggestions meet with the general approval of the house, I propose that they be enforced as of next Monday for the balance of this session.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss the direction you have given. As an officer of the house I naturally want to do everything I can to join with you in making the house effective. However, I note that you have engaged in a rather statistical outline and summary, and I feel that the full record should be available. I suggest that a similar record showing the questions asked by the several parties covering the period 1961 and 1962 would be beneficial.

As far as the general purpose is concerned I join with you in a desire to ensure that this house shall be effective and efficient, without denying to hon. members their full right to secure information from the government. I suggest that having available the necessary staff to prepare these statistics, which are very detailed, it would be of great interest to the house, and most helpful in view of your reference to previous speakers, Mr. Speaker Lambert and Mr. Speaker Michener, to see what the situation was during those years.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I am sure the house is grateful to Your Honour for giving such careful thought to this matter of questions on the orders of the day. There has been a great deal of press talk about the length of time which has been taken.

I think two points should be made. The first is that questions are important inasmuch as they are the one method by which members can quickly obtain a response from the government on some important matter. It is the duty of all members of the house, particularly of members who sit in the opposition groups, to question the government from time to time regarding its activities and statements of policy. This is not so true of members who support the government, and the figures show they have not been very active in this regard. That is understandable. On the other hand it is true, I think, that the question period has got out of hand, and many of the questions asked would be better placed on the order paper or left until departmental estimates are before the house.

As far as members of the New Democratic party are concerned, we are prepared to co-operate with Your Honour and with all groups in trying to cut down the question period. We would go so far as to be prepared to limit ourselves to three questions a day, and agree among ourselves who were to ask these questions. We would be prepared to agree to some self denying ordinance. One of the difficulties about setting a time limit is that if ministers insist on reading two and three page replies, the 30 minutes will expire very quickly. If they are evasive and two or three supplementary questions are necessary before we receive the answer we should have been given in the first place, time will again be wasted. But we are prepared to co-operate with Your Honour in any way you think the question period can be improved. If the 30 minutes rule does not work out satisfactorily we can try some other method, but we do wish to expedite the business of the house and we will co-operate with Your Honour in that regard.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): May I join with those who have already expressed their appreciation to Your Honour for having given us this helpful and detailed statement explaining again what this question period is supposed to be, and calling attention to the views of some of your predecessors on this subject. We are grateful for the suggestions you have made with a view to rendering the question period more profitable and efficient.

I am convinced that the question period is one of the most fruitful periods we spend in this house and that there should be no attempt to limit the privilege of obtaining information from ministers of the crown. But I do agree we must co-operate, all of us, in making this period more effective and more efficient. I would have one suggestion to make to you, and it is this. When there are matters of urgent importance which may arise in a particular sitting, the questions which cannot be asked on one day might take precedent over those which might be asked on following days. There could be periods when the more legitimate questions might be dealt with.

I assure Your Honour of our co-operation in this matter. If it means limiting the number of questions we ask we shall be happy to go along with that proposal. If it means a self disciplining through co-operative arrangements among ourselves on a gentlemanly basis, we would be pleased to co-operate. We regard most highly the importance of your position in this house, Mr. Speaker, and at all times you can be assured of our support in the Social Credit party.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we greatly appreciate the six-point suggestions you are making to the house today.

In my view, this period for oral questions could have been cut down substantially if ministers had taken less time on many occasions to answer questions. Then, each member of the house would have received a swift reply to his query.

Members of the Ralliement Creditistes are certainly happy to offer you their full co-operation.

However, we were both scared and reassured by item 3 of your suggestions, in which you said:

[Text]

I would take it upon myself to select questioners in rough ratio to the number of hon. members comprising any one body in the house.

[Translation]

We have confidence in your fair-minded judgment, Mr. Speaker, and I think we can rest assured that although we are sitting far from you in the house, you will recognize us when we have reasonable questions to address to the various ministers of the crown.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, questions, of course, are of particular concern, and rightly so, to the opposition. I think all members on this side have heard with satisfaction the statements that have been made by the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other opposition parties in respect of the proposal you have put to us. We would like to join them, Mr. Speaker, in expressing appreciation to you for the consideration you have given this matter.

Statement on Paving of Alaska Highway

At first reading it looks as if the proposals you have made are constructive and will facilitate and make more effective the question period. The Leader of the Opposition has suggested that the statistics might be extended to cover last year and the year before. I think that is quite a reasonable suggestion for those who are interested in statistics.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Agriculture does not belong to that group.

Mr. Pearson: I might say it is desirable, as your memorandum suggests, to make the questions short and the answers short. I am sure it is the experience of the house that if questions are asked in the correct way, without unnecessary or controversial verbiage, then the answer is more likely to be short. I mention this just to show that there is a responsibility on both sides of the house in respect of making the question period effective. I am sure all members on both sides of the house will do what they can to make it effective. I think your proposals, sir, are helpful, and to that end they will certainly receive the support of the house.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PAVING OF ALASKA HIGHWAY—STATEMENT BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with a question which the hon. member for Yukon raised the other day. On October 29 the hon. member for Yukon suggested that I might not have given full information to the house in the answer I gave to him on October 21 in reply to his question No. 1,235.

In the reply quoted by the hon. member I indicated that of the five subjects about which he inquired, only the question of the Haines cut-off highway had recently been discussed with the United States authorities. On October 29 the hon. member implied that in indicating that none of the other four subjects had been discussed with the United States, my information was not accurate. My answer was in fact an accurate statement, and I tell the hon. gentleman it was intended to be helpful to him.

The hon. member will recall that in his question he referred to "consultations". I used the words "negotiations" and "discussions" instead of the word "consultations", because the former terms seemed to me more precise. I also qualified my reply by using the word "recent", as I assumed that the hon. member was interested in fairly current developments and not in history.

Statement on Paving of Alaska Highway

In the course of his remarks the hon. member read from a letter written to someone by the officer in charge of Canadian affairs in the department of state, Washington. The hon. member did not table the letter from which he read, and I am therefore at somewhat of a disadvantage in fully commenting upon it. According to the part which he did read, this letter mentioned that, and I quote: "Discussions have also been held in the past with officials of the Canadian government", concerning the question of paving the Canadian portion of the Alaska highway. Now I really do not understand this vague reference, but it may refer to some conversations which I understand took place as long ago as 1959 under the previous administration. In any case, as my original reply made clear, neither I nor any of the officials of my department, nor any of the officials of other departments whom we have consulted, have any knowledge of recent conversations of this type.

My hon. friend also quoted from another section of this letter a reference which is factually correct and which is not at all inconsistent with what I said. Not long ago officials of the United States embassy inquired from officials of my department whether a reported statement made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was a new governmental decision in regard to paving the Alaska highway. My officials, on the basis of information supplied to them by the department of northern affairs, answered this inquiry from members of the United States embassy in the negative. I do not consider that a negative response to an inquiry as to whether there has been a change of policy can be termed "discussions", "negotiations" or "consultations" in any normal usage of these words. My answer to question No. 1,235 on October 21 was correct in all respects, with one exception, namely that in the last sentence I inadvertently referred to page 3165 of Hansard when I should have referred to page 3156.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I think I should reply very briefly to the minister. This differentiation which he makes between the words "consultations", "negotiations" and "discussions" is an exercise in semantics, a trait for which my hon. friend is noted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I took no exception to what my hon. friend said, and I do not take exception now. However, I have sought to give him a forthright answer today, and I should have thought he would reply in kind.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Nielsen: I do not think I will sit down, Mr. Speaker. I think I am entitled to reply without commands from the government side to sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member because it is a basic question of privilege, and it is in the interest of everyone to clear it up. However, it would be helpful if the hon. member would say that he either accepts the statement or he does not, because I do not think this is the time to debate it.

Mr. Nielsen: I have no intention of debating it. If members on the government side would not shout across at me to sit down I might be given an opportunity to answer the minister.

The explanation given by the minister today did not deal with that portion of the letter from the officer in charge of Canadian affairs, department of state, Washington, which I read into the record on October 29, as follows:

> Following a recent report of an alleged renewed interest on the part of the Canadian Minister of Northern Affairs and National resources, Arthur Laing, the department requested the embassy in Ottawa to seek clarification from responsible Canadian officials. Upon inquiry the embassy learned that the story was apparently based on a passing comment to a reporter and was not an official statement.

Then followed this portion of the letter which I read into the record:

> The embassy has been informed that this statement reflects the official position of the Canadian government.

This is what the Canadian embassy informed the officials in Washington, according to this portion of the letter which I read into the record. This indicates to me that discussions have been held between the United States officials and the Canadian government, or consultations have been had, whichever word the minister chooses to use. His answer to my question No. 1235 indicated that there were no discussions and no consultations held whatever.

I am quite prepared to accept the minister's explanation, if that is what he wishes the house to believe, but I would implore him to look into that question and perhaps give me a more detailed answer—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have answered completely.

Mr. Nielsen: —otherwise, as was mentioned in your statement today, Mr. Speaker, members who do not get complete answers are going to have to place questions on the order paper over and over again. This is one of the reasons there are so many questions on the order paper. We do not get the information we request and we have to ask the question again.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not want to debate the matter, but may I ask the hon. gentleman to table the letter?

Mr. Nielsen: I have no objection to tabling the letter. The document I have is a copy of—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: —a letter written by an officer in charge of Canadian affairs at Washington.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is certainly not the time to indulge in a lengthy debate over a question of privilege, upon which I assume the minister rose. It seems to me this is a rather useless type of debate at this time, and I suggest we stop right now and get on with the business of the house.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister has asked me to table the letter. I have said I have no objection to tabling the letter, but in view of the decisions which have been made by Your Honour, and the objections which have been taken by hon. members and ministers on the other side in respect of tabling a certain document, particularly one produced by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, I am rather surprised at this request. However, I have no objection.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, has it been considered that the letter which I produced has been tabled? If not, with unanimous consent and at the request of the minister I would ask that the letter be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the tabling of this copy of a letter, as I understand it?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that he has had an opportunity to read the letter which has been tabled he will notice that the officer in charge of Canadian affairs in the United States state department said on the second page of the letter that the contents thereof reflected official Canadian policy. Can the minister say whether Mr. Carlson is correct in that regard?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with this point, and I believe my answers today and on other days clearly indicate that the Canadian government declares policy, not an official in the foreign office of another country.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GREGOIRE—OFFICE ACCOMMODATION OF OPPOSITION GROUP LEADERS

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege which affects the privileges of the members of our party in this corner of the house.

We found out, after inquiry, that two of the three leaders of political parties recognized by courtesy of the house as opposition parties, in other words, the three minor parties, have each a suite of three offices in parliament.

Since the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is the leader of a political party in the house and still has only one office, I feel, Mr. Speaker,—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is of course my duty to determine whether there is a prima facie case of privilege and I have not the slightest hesitation in saying there is no privilege in the question raised by the hon. member. He has discussed this several times with me. This is a question of administration, and if there are not sufficient offices to distribute, I do not know what anyone can expect the Speaker to do unless he vacates his own.

This is purely a question of administration. The hon. member knows this, having discussed it with me, having sent me letters to this effect, and he also knows we are doing our utmost to correct any inequalities and make sure the different leaders of the different groups, if I may use that term, are treated impartially, fairly and on the same basis.

REFERENCE OF CERTAIN REPORTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in compliance with the request by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) and one or two other hon. members opposite, a request which I took to the government this morning, I would be prepared now if I had unanimous consent to move, seconded by Mr. Hays:

That the following reports, namely, 1, the report of the Department of Agriculture for Canada for the year ended March 31, 1963; 2, report of the agricultural stabilization board for the year ended March 31, 1963; 3, report for 1962 of the board of grain commissioners for Canada; 4, report of the Canadian wheat board for the crop year ended

July 31, 1962; and 5, the supplementary report of the Canadian wheat board for 1961-62 pool accounts for wheat, be referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

I might say if this is done it seems to me it would enable the committee to discuss all the matters that have been raised by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I am informed that it is not necessary, because the committee has already been given power to report to the house, to do more than make the reference.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, could the Secretary of State be asked to include also the annual report we have just received from the Minister of Finance concerning the Farm Improvement Loans Act?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to take that under consideration, and it could be referred in another motion later.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Secretary of State that these reports should certainly be sent to the committee on agriculture and colonization, but I doubt very much whether his other statement, that this will cover the items we had in mind, is quite valid. However, I think we should start with an investigation and examination of these reports, and then I hope the government will give serious consideration to the other matters, one of which is to look into bread and milling prices, which is a very important question at this time and which will not come under these reports.

Second, there is the matter which the Minister of Agriculture himself has raised from time to time, namely the cost of farm machinery, a study which the committee on agriculture and colonization began in 1961 and I do not think was ever completed. This would be an excellent study for the committee to carry on at a later date, but the reports which the minister has now proposed referring to the committee are a good beginning. As I have said, I hope the government will consider referring the other two matters to the committee at a later date.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Just very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I want to say I accept the statement of the Secretary of State that within the ambit of all the things referred to the committee it is possible to study the specific subject matter I brought up and asked for unanimous consent the other day. But in accepting this I suggest to Your Honour and to the Secretary of State that the matter of feed grain prices should be given some precedence because of the urgency of the need to look into it. Perhaps the house may take some decision to do something about this wide discrepancy in price, but with that reservation I am suggesting that this can be investigated within the terms of the motion made.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REPORTED ARREST OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, regarding the two Canadians in custody in Cuba, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house whether the Canadian embassy has been able to communicate with them, and what efforts have been made so far by the government of Canada to assure that these men will receive a fair trial and not a mockery of a trial?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian embassy in Havana is in close communication with the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa concerning the recent arrest in Cuba of two Canadian citizens whose names have been given in public and which I need not repeat. The circumstances and background concerning the arrest of these persons are not fully known but are being looked into carefully. The Canadian embassy in Havana is taking all steps appropriate under international practice to ensure that the interests of the two Canadian citizens are adequately safeguarded.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Can the minister state whether the government in Cuba has permitted representatives of the embassy to see these men personally?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wonder if the right hon. gentleman would allow me to qualify the answer I just gave. I believe that is the situation, but a message has just come in saying permission has been asked by the consul for an immediate visit with the Canadian prisoners, and it is agreed by the Cuban government that arrangements should be made for this. We have further asked that we be kept fully informed of any judicial proceedings against the two parties.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is preparing amendments to the Canada Shipping Act and the St. Lawrence Seaway Act in accordance with the recommendations of Mr. Justice Norris and, if so, when does he expect to bring these amendments before the house?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, legislation on both these subjects will be brought before the house. It is being prepared, but at the moment I am not prepared to disclose its contents in answer to questions on orders of the day.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—CONTINUATION OF TRADE PREFERENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the republic of South Africa has left the commonwealth and is pursuing policies which are at variance with everything the commonwealth stands for, is the government giving any thought to discontinuing the commonwealth preferences which we now extend to that country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no immediate consideration is being given to that matter. It has been under consideration in the past, but if there has been any change in the situation in recent weeks or months I will be glad to let my hon. friend know.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question has been answered, Mr. Speaker.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING PURCHASE OF NEW PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question for the Minister of Transport, and he can give the information required in a very few words. Has the board of directors of Trans-Canada Air Lines made a recommendation to the government as to what new jet plane T.C.A. should purchase, and which of the three planes concerned has been so recommended?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, they have made a report to the government.

Mr. Knowles: What about the second part of the question; which of the three planes has been so recommended?

Mr. McIlraith: I am not prepared to answer that question at the moment.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, notice of which I sent to him. I should say that as a result of the caveat which Your Honour has just laid before us I have changed the form of the question somewhat. What action, if any, does the government propose to take in respect of the continuing failure of the British Columbia government or the agency of that government engaged in the construction of the Peace river dam to file an application for approval under the Navigable Waters Protection Act?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the notice just reached me in the house a few minutes ago, and I am not in a position to answer the question today. I will take it as notice, and within the next few days I shall give the information desired.

AGRICULTURE

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he now inform the house whether it is true that he is now prepared to accept the policy of the former minister of agriculture with regard to the growing of wheat in western Canada, namely that farmers can grow all they are able to grow?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, when I make my statements I make them about this government's policy. I do not have any reference to the past.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): A supplementary question. Can the minister clarify the issue, then, with regard to whether the farmers should grow all the wheat they can?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I said in answer to a question the other day that I hoped before seeding time the government would give a clear explanation of the marketing outlook affecting all grains, on the basis of which farmers could make their plans.

SPREAD BETWEEN PRICES PAID AND RECEIVED IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and relates to a question asked last week. With regard to the price paid to western farmers and the price paid by eastern farmers for grain, will the minister tell the house who causes such an increase between the selling and purchasing prices? Has he found that out yet, and would he tell the house what his findings are?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question is going to be discussed by the standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FREEZING OF DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the wide disparity in grain delivery quotas in the west, has the minister given instructions to freeze delivery quotas at three bushels so that those points on the initial quota can catch up to the two and three bushel delivery quotas before proceeding with a four and five bushel open quota?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not given any such instructions. I am sure it is in the interests of all western farmers that as much grain as possible should move through our ports this year, and I have given every freedom to the Canadian wheat board to do that in a way that is satisfactory to the western farmers and that will accomplish the objectives they have before them.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question. How can the minister suggest, for example, that points on the initial quota are receiving fair treatment? How does he expect to equalize deliveries? Some points on the initial delivery quota are only ten miles away from points where there is a three bushel quota. Where is there any parity there?

Mr. Sharp: I have complete confidence that the wheat board is trying to do everything possible to expedite the movement of wheat and to achieve as much equality as can be achieved with that limitation upon them, and I really do not think it would be in my interests or in the interests of the western farmers to instruct them otherwise.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—INQUIRY AS TO EXPANSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Now that the minister has allayed the fears of the people of Prince Edward Island by making a statement in the house regarding the future of the R.C.A.F. base at Summerside, for which I commend him, will he now assure the people of Cape Breton island that the plans for expansion at the Point Edward naval base will now be carried out and that the activities of the base will not be diminished in any way, thus eliminating fears that have arisen in this regard?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any plans for expansion, but I think this is the type of question which might wait until our estimates are before the house.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a question of privilege, with all due respect to you, sir, this is a most urgent and important question to the people of Cape Breton island, who are in fear of the curtailment of activity at this base which will affect the livelihood of many people there. Certainly I do not think the matter should be sloughed off in this manner.

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRY AS TO ORDER IN COUNCIL DESIGNATING RED ENSIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like do direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of an answer he gave to the hon. member for Chapleau in the house yesterday, when he assured the hon. member that a truly Canadian flag would be flown on the occasion of the 1967 world fair in Montreal. Would the Prime Minister inform the house and the country if it is the government's intention to rescind the order in council designating the red ensign as an appropriate flag for Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I said on this matter yesterday and previously.

FINANCE

REGULATIONS RESPECTING SALES TAX INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister published or given wide publicity to the regulations respecting the application of the sales tax increments during the various stages, as he promised to do earlier this session? This matter is becoming urgent, as construction tenders now being called will be affected by the future application of these regulations.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for sending me notice of this question which, strictly speaking, falls within the purview of the Minister of National Revenue. However, I am pleased to advise him that the Department of National Revenue has given wide distribution to the amendments to the Excise Tax Act, explanatory bulletins and circulars. These have been distributed to known or potential licences, to interested associations and to individuals concerned, and have been advertised and made available in all customs and excise ports, district excise tax audit and excise tax collection offices throughout Canada.

SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN TAX ON CHILDREN'S CLOTHING

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance? Could the minister tell the house whether he is considering the advisability of abolishing the 11 per cent tax on children's clothes?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker; not at the present time.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENHOLD, ALTA.—SIGNING OF PETITION BY AGRICULTURE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture concerning the Penhold air base. Did the minister sign a petition that Penhold be not set aside as or made a jet training base?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I did not sign any petitions.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

KITIMAT, B.C.—CLOSING OF OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Inasmuch as today was to have been the deadline for the closing of the unemployment insurance and national employment service offices in Kitimat, B.C., has any extension been made of that deadline, or does the government intend to proceed as was originally declared?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance commission have given no indication that they have reversed their decision to close this office, for reasons which have been explained.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHARGE LAID AGAINST HAL BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has he anything to report to the house with regard to the report of the special counsel retained by him to look into the Norris commission evidence, and is he now prepared to take the house into his confidence with regard to whether the report of counsel states that there is evidence justifying the laying of charges?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to the hon. gentleman's question. Upon the advice of special counsel appointed to consider the evidence in connection with the Norris report, a charge has been laid against Hal Banks in Montreal for conspiring to commit an assault occasioning bodily harm upon Captain Walsh. Mr. Jean Martineau, Q.C., special counsel, will prosecute.

Counsel are considering other charges against the president and certain other officers of the S.I.U. arising out of the Norris report and the recent illegal strike. The charge already laid against Mr. Banks and referred to above will be pressed forward in conjunction with these other charges when counsel have come to a conclusion in regard to them and the necessary preparations have been completed.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the laying of the charge against Mr. Banks, what is the date of the alleged conspiracy respecting the assault occasioning bodily harm? Was that alleged assault committed before or after the Norris report?

Mr. Chevrier: The alleged date is some time in 1957.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has this not been outlawed by effluxion of time? Why not a more recent charge?

Mr. Chevrier: The two special counsel who were appointed were to deal with the Norris report; and the offences under the Norris report, as they were reported to me by the special counsel, dealt in particular with two offences, one of them committed in August 1957 and the other in 1960. My statement dealt in part with that and in part with other offences.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I wonder if the minister can tell us whether there will be a prosecution following the beating up of an elderly couple in my own riding of Three Rivers last year.

Mr. Chevrier: As the hon. member knows, the two counsel who have been appointed are to deal with all the offences, and the matter is under investigation by them.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN ABSTENTION IN VOTE ON RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the Canadian delegation to the United Nations general assembly. Can the minister advise if our delegation abstained on the third committee resolution against racial discrimination, and the reasons for our abstention?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we did abstain in the committee on this resolution because of certain clauses in the resolution which involved matters that are not within the jurisdiction of this parliament.

FLOUR

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would he be able to inquire into the reasons for the recent substantial increases in the price of flour and report to the house in that regard?

OLD AGE SECURITY

REPORTED TAKING OF PENSION INCREASE BY HOMES FOR AGED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of reports of homes for the aged in Ontario and in Manitoba taking most or all of the $10 pension increase recently provided by parliament in higher rents, will the government see what can be done to protect our old age pensioners against this practice?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As my hon. friend knows, the federal government in bringing about the increase in the old age pension had hoped it would be passed to the pensioners to alleviate some of their need. It has been disturbing to notice in the last couple of days that in various provinces this amount is not being passed to the pensioners. While this decision appears to lie within provincial jurisdiction, my hon. friend may be assured that whatever can be done will be done by the federal government to encourage the passing on of this money to the pensioners.

Mr Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister ascertain whether any of these homes are homes which have been built with financial aid from federal sources?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to reply to that particular aspect of his question.

Mr. Knowles: Delighted.

Mr. Garland: I noticed this item in the newspaper today, and I rather suspected there would be inquiries. I am happy to tell my hon. friend that the Fairview project is a senior citizens' home and is not one in which Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of the federal government is involved financially or otherwise. As the house is aware, we have taken steps to see that no increases are to be brought into effect for elderly citizens as a result of the increased pension in any housing projects over which C.M.H.C. has control of the rents. This refers to limited dividend projects and to public housing projects in which there are elderly citizens.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

BELLEVILLE, ONT.—STATEMENT ON CHANGE IN LOCATION OF POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): In reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac about the postmastership at Belleville, I wish to inform the house that charges were made to effect that the postmaster at Belleville, John A. Ireland, had engaged actively in politics contrary to section 61 of the Civil Service Act. The postmaster admitted the charges in a sworn declaration, which reads in part as follows:

I, John Alexander Ireland, do solemnly declare that in the political campaigns of 1957, 1958, 1962 and 1963, I acted as campaign manager for Mr. Lee Grills. I have acted as postmaster Belleville sub office No. 5 since 1960—

Mr. Grills is the former Conservative member of parliament for Hastings South. He was elected in 1957, re-elected in 1958 and 1962 and was the defeated Conservative candidate in 1963. Mr. Ireland's dismissal was approved on October 15 last.

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Postmaster General for that information, but that was not the complaint. While I am on my feet I should like to ask the Postmaster General did he or did he not have representation made to him by Mr. Royce Frith, who I believe is past president of the Ontario Liberal association, on behalf of Mrs. Clare Stewart of Enterprise, Ontario?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that, but I would not wish to prevent anyone from making representations or applying for the position.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO REAPPOINTMENTS TO BOARD OF GOVERNORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a non-controversial type of question of the Secretary of State. I should like to ask him whether he has informed any of the many members of the board of broadcast governors whose appointments expire in the next few days that they will not be reappointed?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): No, sir, I do not think that is any part of my duty. When the government has made up its mind to recommend appointments, those persons will be appointed in the usual way.

Income Tax Act

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. In view of the minister's own expression about the broadcasting industry requiring a period of stability, has he given any consideration to taking this step in order to help settle the confusion which might follow from a complete replacement of the board?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no possibility of a complete replacement of the board, as the hon. gentleman, who is a very well informed member of the house, must know.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR COMMISSION TO STUDY UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Considering the increase of unemployment in Canada and especially in the province of Quebec, does the government intend to establish a commission of experts which would carry out an investigation on seasonal unemployment as was done by the Quebec government?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 30, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Latulippe: Concerning Bill C-95, I was telling the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) yesterday that we were happy about the fact that he has decided to provide tax incentives for the new industries which will be set up in areas designated as depressed areas.

However, I should like to draw his attention on the situation of the small industries which can barely survive at present and which also need tax exemptions to expand. In my opinion, it would be easier to help existing small industries than to establish new ones. If those small industries had the opportunity to increase their capital in order to expand, the local economy would have a chance to improve. Such a move would benefit the whole Canadian economy.

But with all the taxes they have to pay nowadays, it is not easy for our industries to cope with the situation. We are taxed at 52 per cent of the cost value and we are on the threshold of an economical and political disaster. Taxes are a direct cause of the lack of enthusiasm on the part of our investors who tie up close to $7 billion in the banks. It is not a paying proposition to go into business and venture one's future, to work to support unproductive bureaucrats who increase in an alarming manner from year to year.

How can you explain the national debt, which is close to $40 billion, in a country where you have close to one million unemployed people? How can you explain that a country such as ours cannot finance a population of 19 million when France, Germany and Italy, with a much smaller territory devastated by wars, can support over 50 million people with no unemployment and even have to go to less industrialized countries to get manpower?

The answer is simple. Canada is controlled by international finance and crushed under economic slavery. The application of Social Credit techniques would put an end to that situation for the good of everybody. The national debt, now close to $40 billion, should completely disappear forever within ten years if we used the Bank of Canada.

The monetary policy advocated by the Social Credit would change completely the economic aspect of this country. There would be more activity in the field of public works, our industrial processes would improve, the development of our natural resources and their processing into finished products inside Canada would know a new expansion. We would overcome all difficulties in such an economic advance. We would build an economy able to go ahead not only in wartime, but especially in peacetime.

We cannot think any more in terms of old rusted traditions; we must use our imagination to improve constantly economic, industrial and financial techniques for the liberation of man.

We should be in a position to give back to the provinces their taxation share so that they can administer public affairs according to the rights acquired when they entered confederation.

The lack of realism shown by the present government is such that the extremist elements find a fertile soil to talk of independentism. Why? Because the province of Quebec is the last to recover economically.

Here we have a large work force but we are short of capital and processing industries; the unfairness resulting from the present system is obvious to the French Canadian people and gives them an inferiority complex. They feel swamped and dispossessed of their wealth in their own stronghold.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

With the monetary theory advocated by our group, which would put credit in the hands of the consumers, with the large work force and the wealth of Quebec, our province would experience a period of material and cultural prosperity.

But we know that democracy has to struggle to survive, and to conquer it must prove its superiority, protect its rights and help the peoples get rid of tyranny, whatever it may be.

We must feel the evils that the masses endure, talk to them from the bottom of our heart, the minds must be captivated by our minds; coming from the people, we know their aspirations. We must talk to them about their hopes, which are ours.

We must bring harmony and natural understanding between all segments of the nation by securing a decent standard of living for everyone.

Nobody, in Canada, can understand how in an affluent society poverty can exist. Problems and political solutions appear insurmountable; the reins of government are not in the hands of the people but in those of a few professional politicians.

The great complexity of taxes artificially complicated must be simplified in order that the masses may understand them and follow us.

If the people give us the power to solve their problems and regulate their finances, we must do so in the most simple, the most straightforward, the most Christian way, with good sense, tact and moderation, for one purpose: to serve with equity and fairness the most important being on earth, man, and also the most important of Canada, the citizen of this great country of ours.

The last point I want to draw to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, relates to the startling number of bankruptcies and to the extreme losses suffered by our industrialists in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada. Of course, the owners of small businesses were the most severely affected.

In the province of Quebec, for the year 1962 alone, 1,099 bankruptcies were filed in non-summary proceedings. The debtors' estimates totalled $32,159,365 on the credit side, and $69,989,460 on the debit side. The number of closed bankruptcies was 543, with apparent losses of $15,695,662.

During the same year, 1,261 bankruptcies were filed in summary proceedings the debtors' estimates totalled $1,549,215 on the credit side, $10,749,735 on the debit side. The number of closed bankruptcies was 915, with apparent losses of $5,779,801.

In the whole of Canada for the year 1962, the apparent losses amounted to $37,102,192 as regards non-summary proceedings in the case of 1,126 closed brankruptcies out of a reported number of 1,946. As to the bankruptcies of the summary proceedings variety, 1,646 were closed out of 2,351, with apparent losses of $13,764,469.

In themselves, these very dry and impersonal statistics prove however that nearly half of those bankruptcies and losses happen in the province of Quebec.

The situation has become unbearable for the industrialists, big and small, as well as for the financial backers and the big financiers who control the life and development of those industries. That is why it is urgent to do something, to bring forward legislation which will at least guarantee a minimum of security, especially to owners of small industries.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Chapleau:

That the house recommend to the Minister of Finance that he take into serious consideration the need to grant all taxpayers a 10 per cent exemption for all charitable donations on the first $1,000 of income and a 7½ per cent exemption on each additional amount of $1,000 of income, without having to submit charitable donation receipts.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Surely, Mr. Chairman, you are going to give some ruling upon whether it is possible to move an amendment such as this to clause 1 of the bill. On its face it is transparently out of order.

The Chairman: This is possibly the type of amendment which might be moved on another occasion. I respectfully submit it cannot be moved at this time. I should like to cite standing order 59(2) which reads as follows:

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Certainly the proposal now made by this amendment goes away beyond the terms of clause 1, which is before the committee. I suggest, too, that this is a substantive motion covering a new proposal, and for these reasons I submit that the proposed amendment is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, could I say a few words about your ruling?

The Chairman: Naturally I should have liked it better if the comments had been made before I gave my ruling. I was hoping that hon. members would get on their feet to express their point of view or make comments on the admissibility of the amendment. However, I should not want to restrict in any way the discussion on the amendment and if the hon. member for Lapointe has some remarks to make, even at this stage, I would not interrupt him. I must point out though that it might have been better if he had spoken before the Chair made its ruling. However, as I say, I have no objection to the hon. member for Lapointe making comments at this time.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope, sir, you will allow the hon. member for Lapointe to say a word on this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac was supposed to speak on second reading, and, at the request of the Secretary of State, we interrupted our speeches at that stage to resume them when discussing clause 1 of Bill C-95. Inevitably, there would have been more latitude to present such a motion on second reading. After all, this motion is only a request to the Minister of Finance to take the question into consideration now.

The Secretary of State said that during debate on the first clause of the bill—which is presently before us—he would grant the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac all the required latitude, and that is why the amendment is presented today.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this may come within section 59(2), since we are precisely studying amendments to the Income Tax Act. Now, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac suggests a change to be made in the Income Tax Act. Consequently, the proposed amendment refers purely and simply to what we are now discussing, and that is why we maintain that the amendment is in order.

Mr. Gordon: I should like to say very briefly that a number of hon. members have already spoken about this question of charitable donations. I have had a word with the Minister of National Revenue about it, and I have raised this question and all the other proposals and suggestions that have been made during the course of this debate with the officials of my department. I have asked them to keep a record of these, and they will be carefully considered before the next budget is presented.

Mr. Gregoire: I have only one question for the Minister of Finance. Are we to understand, then, that the minister is ready to consider the necessity for amending this portion of the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Gordon: I was not indicating that I thought a formal amendment at this moment was in order. I am sure it is not. I do say that I will seriously consider this point, as well as the others that have been brought up during this debate. I have asked my officials to make a record of them.

Mr. Gregoire: We will accept the word of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly on two aspects of Bill No. C-95. I am sure the Minister of Finance will agree when I say that it was much easier to offer suggestions and criticisms when he was in the opposition than it is today to run his department. I am sure also that he will say it was a lot easier to criticize before he was even elected to parliament. In the light of experience I am sure he has a different view, and probably yearns for those old days.

I am sure that no one questions the integrity of the Minister of Finance. I am sure too that just as he himself probably thought at one time, there are at least a thousand people across Canada who believe they could run his department better than he is doing today.

Mr. Gordon: Good luck.

Mr. Rynard: Yes, I can even remember when the minister was bold enough to say, as an opposition member, that he did not have to wait for the report of the royal commission on taxation; a few lawyers and accountants could fix up the taxing statutes. It seems to me that since that time the minister has made a few amendments and in my opinion made a few more loopholes in the act.

Speaking seriously, I think it is about time, Mr. Chairman, the laws and rules in relation to income tax were made simple enough for the people who pay the taxes to be able to understand them. Well, the critic of yesterday is the minister of today, and the Income Tax Act grows more complicated. No business firm could afford to hire a workman or executive who made similar fumbles in the conduct of business. Some of these fumbles that are apparent in Bill No. C-95 are important, and I will refer to one of them, the 15 per cent withholding tax on dividends of United States companies operating in Canada. This is to be increased to 20 per cent by 1965 if the United States subsidiary has not sold 25 per cent of its shares to Canadians.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, there are three inherent dangers in this provision. First, as soon as the United States government realizes that this provision is in force they will simply retaliate by removing their 15 per cent tax and automatically the withholding tax on the other side of the line will go up to 30 per cent. This will apply to all Canadian subsidiaries in the United States.

Then I should like to know from the minister how in the world he is going to force Canadian investors to buy these stocks. In many cases the investor will receive a lower rate of dividend than he would receive from an investment in a Canadian company. Then if the investment is made, how in the world is the minister going to make the investor hold on to it?

The third danger is that you will scare investors away, and the people of the United States are the big investors in Canada. I submit, Mr. Chairman, this is an anti-American rule. You do this, and you take comfort in the fact that Mexico, France and other countries have done it. It is my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that such restriction should be imposed at the time of the incorporation of the company. Then the restrictions are known and accepted by the foreign investor at the time he makes his commitment, and not after. Here you are trying to change the rules of the game after he has invested his money. In my opinion such a policy must be regarded as evidence of bad faith.

Now, what happens to our Canadian subsidiaries in the United States? On the whole, Mr. Chairman, they are larger than their American counterparts in Canada. They are operating in a big market, about ten times the size of the market in Canada. The Canadian investment is substantial, and I could mention many firms such as Massey-Harris, Moore Corporation and Electrohome as well as the brewing and distilling interests. They are doing well in the United States market. At the moment the United States government is planning on lowering the corporation tax from 52 per cent to 45 per cent, a reduction of 7 per cent, leaving a larger portion of the profits subject to the 30 per cent withholding tax. If the Americans retaliate against our tax hike—and in the light of experience we know they have always done this—it will mean that the Canadian investor will have a larger cut taken from him. Let us take the example of a company earning $1 million profit, a corporation that is taxed in the United States. Under the new tax it will pay $450,000, leaving a balance of $550,000. Then there is the 30 per cent withholding tax amounting to $165,000, before any of the profit is returned to Canada. Then when this is remitted to the taxpayer he pays a third tax, income tax. This is a triple tax, and I submit that triple taxes are bad.

The Canadian operation or subsidiary in the United States is generally larger than the Canadian parent, and the Canadian operator wants a rather better dividend than the American operator because interest rates are higher in Canada. If he does not get this better dividend then he is not satisfied. In my opinion many of the Canadian subsidiaries in the United States will move their head offices to the United States. Not only that, but I believe a United States subsidiary in Canada is in a much better position. It is, as I have said, smaller in relation to the parent company, and it can plow back its dividends for two, three or four years until the tax is changed. Those are my reasons for saying this is a bad tax which will work against the Canadian economy.

I want to dwell for a few minutes on the matter of incentives to businesses in depressed areas. The first point I want to make deals with the basis of picking a depressed area, an area with 50 per cent of the national employment average over an eight year period, and an area of low employment over the summer months from May to October, again on an eight year basis. I understand the figures are supplied by the Department of Labour. This is all done on a statistical basis, and I object to that because it is open to all the mistakes statistics make when they try to analyse human reaction.

In one area I know of, cars full of people go to work in a neighbouring city 50 miles away. They have been doing so for years; and I wonder, especially with the populated areas in western Ontario, how one can pick out a depressed area when people travel back and forth from it, 50 and 60 miles, to work in another centre. Surely there is something wrong when the mayor of a city does not know he lives in a depressed area. The premier of British Columbia did not know his home town was a depressed area, nor did the people of Edmundston know their town was a depressed area.

I have here an article from the Globe and Mail, and I would like to put some extracts from it on the record:

> In this Edmundston sets an example that might profitably be followed by many Canadians elsewhere, who now accept the proposition that it is the duty of higher governmental authority to establish that climate in which enterprise can thrive. Edmundston is undertaking that task on its own, creating a city where, as the mayor put it, their sons will want to remain and industrial executives will want to live. For an area that a welfare minded federal government has declared to be depressed, the climate is remarkably bracing. Would that some of our so-called prosperous areas had as much energetic enterprise.

But over and above all that, this is a direct contravention of provincial-municipal rights, and my own province of Ontario has a law which says no municipality shall offer incentives to industry.

Further, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what research has been done in the depressed areas. By that I mean have they a suitable climate for industry? Is industry likely to grow and expand in them? One has to ask those questions because otherwise you are wasting the taxpayer's dollar. At one time or another many of these areas had a great deal of industry, which has moved out of them. Have the reasons been ascertained why this industry moved out, or do they still exist and are they likely to drive industry out once more?

The tax incentives include tax free holidays, 50 per cent write-off in two years and a write-off of 20 per cent over a five year period. These are hedged in by specific regulations that will be, according to the Financial Post, a source of continuing friction.

Three types of industry will respond to these incentives. One is new industry just incorporated and establishing itself. This is the type needed. Another type is a presently established industry engaged in changing its manufacturing enough to qualify for the incentive, leaving its present location where its move creates unemployment, and going to another area to create employment, with no useful result following the expenditure of the taxpayer's dollar. The third type is the United States industry coming into this country, being subsidized and picking up hundreds of thousands of dollars to establish the very thing which the Minister of Finance decries. He has said the United States already has 60 per cent ownership of Canadian industry, and I think he added "It is later than you think."

In conclusion I say let us spread out our incentives, making it a little more attractive for the workingman, the businessman and the professional man to invest in the development of Canadian industry. Let us give the Canadian people, the people who work in industry, the people who work in shops across Canada, a tax free holiday on money that they put into Canadian industry. In this way Canadian ownership of our factories will be built up and our citizens will have a pride in owning them.

At the same time we should cut out our anti-Americanism with our discriminatory taxes on their investment in Canadian industry. By doing this we will allow our Canadian industry in the United States to flourish unhampered by discriminatory taxes in an area where they have huge markets. This bill is an immature bill, is very discriminatory and should be changed.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I want to dwell on the section about which the hon. member for Simcoe East has just spoken, but before doing so I wish to say there has been a lot of talk in the past about Canadians owning their own industry, and there has been some confusion about the reasons that we must own our own industry.

Many hon. members on this side, and I know most hon. members on the other side of the house, have received a very calm and clear indication from Americans, from the owners and representatives of United States parent companies which have subsidiaries operating in Canada, to the effect that all they want to do is make money. They say if a product can be manufactured more efficiently in Canada and exported elsewhere they will do this. They do not care where their money goes.

I must admit that this seemed a very good argument until I recalled the Korean war, during which time cold rolled steel was put on a priority list and could not be exported from the United States when it was needed for the war effort there. I recall that during those years 40 per cent of the appliances sold in Canada were brought in from the United States.

Quite recently I read the report of Canadian Westinghouse, which had sales of upwards of $129 million with losses between $300,000 and $2 million. It is pretty difficult to say what portion of the expenditures of Canadian Westinghouse were on parts brought in from the United States, but I am inclined to think that United States capital, despite all it says, is isolationist. Capitalists in the United States want their money in the United States where they can always put their hands on it; therefore it is very important for Canadians to own their own industry. It is not an emotional issue.

We have been saying, and hon. gentlemen on the other side when they occupied these seats always said, we must have more industry in Canada, more secondary industry. But we must also acknowledge that we want more Canadians to gamble or risk their money in new industry. Most of us are aware that Canadians are not buyers of shares, except shares of Bell Telephone Company, Hiram Walker or something of that nature. We are great mortgage buyers and great savers.

We have about $13 billion in savings and in transit. If we can judge how much we have in safety deposit boxes, taking as a standard the proceeds of robberies such as that in Brockville, we may have another $13 billion there. We want to put this money to use, but the Canadian has always been known as a reluctant investor. We are cautious, and the reason is that the money we have has been hard come by, and the money we risk in shares is usually money that came by way of dividends and profits. If we do not have that money we are not going to have more money to risk and thereby to expand. The essential thing is that Canadians have to invest in their own industry. Every year $250 million in Canadian dollars goes across the border to be invested in United States industry. We want to have that money invested here.

But I do agree with the hon. member who spoke just before me. I still have doubt that by this differentiation in the withholding tax on companies we are actually going to convince Canadians to buy shares or, for that matter, convince United States shareholders to sell shares because it is the shareholders we must influence, not the companies.

I know that the minister has it in mind to induce Canadians eventually to buy shares in our industries or to purchase back shares from the Americans, English or Swiss who now hold them. I think the incentives should be directed toward the Canadian investor. If we can convince Canadians to take their money out of bricks and mortar, out of those things in which they have always been accustomed to invest, out of mortgages and other very secure investments and invest that money with a little bit of risk I think we will achieve something. We could do this initially in my view by an amendment which I think should have been included. I suggest that we should put the Canadian investor in the same class as a businessman, so that he can deduct his losses from his profits. I think this would be an inducement to Canadians.

I know from several conversations with the minister that his ideas are good. I was one of the first to call him a reformer and I believe he is a reformer. I believe this legislation is good. If the minister has made mistakes he has admitted them. With all respect, I say that every member of the house should support the ideas expressed in the bill and support them very strongly.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I shall not hold up the committee very long, but there is one particular point I want to bring to the minister's attention. I suspect it has already been brought to his attention but I wish to do so again. I refer to the position of part time students in Canada with regard to the deduction from their taxable incomes of the sums they pay in fees. I do not know whether the minister was able to see the delegation which came from Montreal, but I understand his parliamentary secretary did so. That delegation consisted of representatives from the evening students association of Sir George Williams University, the students council of Sir George Williams evening high school and the University of Montreal.

They pointed out to us in the course of their brief and in the course of the interview the anomalous position in which they are placed in relation to the position of full time students in Canada. They are not permitted to deduct from their taxable incomes the amounts they pay in fees and educational costs because they are part time students and are employed.

One of the most striking anomalies is that a corporation which decides that it will finance some of its employees in further educational courses or a corporation which decides it will establish bursaries and scholarships can deduct the cost from their taxable income for income tax purposes. It does seem to me this in itself is a great injustice but it also seems to me very shortsighted because surely there is nothing more important in Canada than that young people, particularly those with the enterprise and determination to go on with their education after they have moved into the adult world and are working for their living, should have every encouragement.

It seems to me that this is one instance where we really have the opportunity for an investment in the improvement of the whole quality of life in Canada. Who knows what will happen, Mr. Chairman? If we can encourage sufficiently those who are uneducated we in this chamber may find ourselves replaced by much more effective members of parliament in the future. I should like to plead strongly with the minister to take this problem under very serious consideration immediately. Across Canada I imagine that these students probably number now some 700,000, inasmuch as the dominion bureau of statistics reported that in 1959-60 there were 664,000.

It is true enough that only some 45 per cent of those are engaged in professional courses leading to degrees or diplomas and 44 per cent are in general or cultural courses, but it seems to me that those who are working toward a diploma or a degree certainly should have some help. I have made some rough calculations as to what it might cost the treasury. I am not sure I am even approximately correct but I would imagine it might cost between $12 million and $15 million. I do not know whether that is a correct estimate, but I should like to impress on the minister the necessity of doing something for these young people who are so determined to improve themselves in a world which badly needs educated people.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks which concern the bill directly and indirectly. I would like to point out that I entirely agree with the remarks the hon. member in this corner of the house made to the effect that the government should consider the deduction of school fees. I think it would help education without impinging on provincial autonomy.

Such a deduction would encourage parents, and even the students themselves, to pursue their studies and acquire a greater degree of specialization which would give them a place in the sun in later life, and prevent their becoming a liability. I would like the hon. minister carefully to study the request made today. At the same time, we would be interested to know the reasons which would prevent the government from acting in this way, and we would also like to know how many million dollars a year such legislation would represent for the government, if the request were accepted.

Mr. Chairman, it would be essential, to my mind, to locate in each area of this country, a representative of the national revenue department, to meet the taxpayers and help them prepare their returns. I think it might be consistent to have, during the months of February and March, i.e. for two months, experts of the Department of National Revenue visit a given area, Joliette, for instance, where they would be at the disposal of taxpayers and companies who would want some points cleared up as well as some advice in preparing their income tax returns.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the government would gain much by doing so, because by informing the people those experts would prevent a number of errors and alleviate the burden of the national revenue department staff which has to check those returns.

I think that if the suggestion were accepted by the government, and some officials of the Department of National Revenue were sent here and there in every province of this country, such action would be very much appreciated by the whole Canadian population.

It has been said many times in the house, that the Income Tax Act is very complicated and even accountants often have to ask lawyers to explain certain points before knowing what to do.

Mr. Chairman, I read in the paper a statement by the former mayor of Toronto, Mr. Leslie Saunders, who expressed the following opinion:

> The delivery of receipts for gifts to charitable institutions, as practised in the province of Quebec "is nothing more than a racket".

Mr. Chairman, the former mayor of Toronto was entitled to his own views, but I do not share his opinion, far from it, I denounce it and I consider that such a statement is damaging to national unity. To my mind, a citizen has no right to make such a statement, which is unfair to the people of the province of Quebec. There surely has been some abuse in that province, as in any other province of Canada. I do not share this individual's opinion at all and publicly denounce it. I think that such a statement is only a "breeding medium" for separatism.

If the idea of separatism is making some progress, these days, it is probably because of statements like that. I am sure that the people of Quebec are just as honest as anybody else.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a notice of assessment which was sent by the Department of National Revenue to a resident of the province of Quebec. This photocopy reads as follows:

After checking, your deduction for charitable donations to the parish has been reduced from $340 to $250.

In my opinion, that is absolutely meaningless. No good reason is given for reducing the deduction for charitable donations. In my opinion, officials of the Department of National Revenue have no authority under the act to reduce arbitrarily the amount of a receipt for charitable donation. Consequently, I object to such a practice.

I feel that the minister should seriously seek means to settle this problem once and for all. Several members have made interesting suggestions in that connection, but I do not fully agree with them. I will come back to that later on.

I should also like to know the total amount of the receipts for several years rejected by the Department of National Revenue. What is the total amount of those receipts? Every year, I am surprised when officials of the Department of National Revenue even go to rectories to check receipts for charitable donations.

In my opinion, it is an insult to so question the honesty of the clergy of the province of Quebec and of other provinces because, I am convinced that the same practice must be followed elsewhere and inspectors from the Department of National Revenue must be sent to check along these lines.

I should like to know whether in fact, the officials of the national revenue department audit the books of the Red Cross, for instance, or of the various community chests in the country. I wonder whether that is done with as much care as the investigations in the clergy houses where direct insults are made to the religious authorities.

I think that our Income Tax Act should be completely revised and adapted, not only to the Protestant denominations which I respect, but also in taking into consideration the Catholic religion. And on that matter, I should like to quote into the record from a speech by Mr. François-Albert Angers.

The story of the famous income tax receipts illustrates once more the troubles resulting for French Canadians or Catholics from a legislation conceived according to the philosophy of the English Protestant majority. Because as it was clearly established by the Tremblay commission, income tax is a matter which should remain entirely provincial, precisely because that is the tax which calls for interference into a multitude of family and private traditions: treatment of the children, concept of the relations between spouses, relations between parents and children, for instance, and the matter of salaries to be paid to the sons of farmers, etc., etc.

Consequently, I think it would be in our interest to revise completely our Income Tax Act and particularly that section.

Like other hon. members who made similar statements, I think we should find some scheme to eliminate those famous receipts. Some contend that there should be an automatic deduction of 10 per cent on the income. I think those people who advocate that system do not realize its impact.

In fact, if the government granted an automatic 10 per cent deduction without asking for charity receipts, that would be detrimental to those in the lower income brackets and the people in the higher brackets would profit from it.

I would prefer a 10 per cent exemption with a maximum of $500 without asking for receipts of course. That would mean that the taxpayers whose annual income is not over $5,000 would not have to ask for receipts every year in order to deduct 10 per cent from their taxable income. I think this is a constructive suggestion which should be taken into consideration by the government.

I just said that if the government granted an automatic 10 per cent deduction, it would discriminate against those in the lower income brackets.

As a matter of fact, before adopting makeshift solutions, it might be advisable to give some thought to the matter. The removal of the 10 per cent exemption for charitable donations would have, of course, the advantage of simplifying the matter, but it would not be the ideal solution.

Let us take for instance, the two provinces with the highest per capita income: Ontario and British Columbia. In the province of Ontario, out of 1,734,782 taxpayers, 1,168,669, or 62 per cent, use formula "A", that is, they claim the $100 exemption without submitting receipts.

In British Columbia, out of 443,252 taxpayers, 349,160, or 78.9 per cent, do not submit receipts for charitable donations. Even in the province of Quebec, the exemptions claimed do not represent 10 per cent of the taxable incomes, but range about 8 per cent. Those figures were taken from the fiscal statistics for 1958.

Mr. Chairman, as I have already said, it is imperative that we come to a solution, for those investigations made in priest houses to check the receipts certainly cost thousands of dollars to the government. I think that if the minister could find a solution similar to the one I am advocating, the Canadian people would be grateful to him.

Mr. Chairman, those were the few comments I wanted to make. On the other hand, I shall have other suggestions to offer when the bill is studied clause by clause.

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, the study of a measure such as the present one is certainly an excellent opportunity for the members of the opposition to express their views, and I think that one of the most important parts played by the members of the opposition is precisely to contribute to the administration of the country by suggesting amendments to the present legislation and by objecting to some extent to those which could be prejudicial to the development of the country.

The introduction of Bill C-95 could have been a fine opportunity for the government to correct certain mistakes made in the last budget by advocating tax adjustments which would have encouraged worth-while efforts, but the government did not make the most of it.

But while this measure is not entirely satisfactory, we have to admit all the same that it effects some improvements and, in many cases, includes an incentive for Canadian-controlled industries, in short, an incentive for investments in our own industries. And there again, it must be recognized once more that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is consistent, that his program for the emancipation of the Canadian economy is going merrily along and that, thanks to everybody, it will probably be such as to give us this emancipation we are all hoping for.

The bill also contains provisions to encourage the establishment of new industries in designated areas through tax reductions to the companies concerned. Here again, I feel the minister should be given some credit for having taken such a step, to enable those areas which, though I am not going to describe them as underdeveloped, are still suffering from chronic unemployment, to grow and to get rid of the evil of unemployment.

However, as far as the designated areas are concerned, I would have liked the government to take into account, in its classification, certain opinions, as it were, of intermediate public bodies which would surely have been invaluable to the departmental officials responsible for that classification.

And I am thinking here of the contribution which municipal councillors could have made in the designation of the areas because, being the government closest to the people, they are certainly in a position to have a better idea of the requirements of the people.

I believe that this tax exemption extended to industries, in designated areas, will bear its fruits a little late, and I am of the opinion that that exemption period of 36 months is not sufficient to ensure the stabilization of industry in those areas.

By the way, this tax exemption in the designated areas bears a strange resemblance to the policy followed by a great many municipalities in granting municipal tax reductions for three years, five years or even for longer periods to industries which decided to set up there. That system turned out to be ineffective because it was temporary, and sometimes it only promoted the interests of some swindlers.

However, I still hope this measure will bring better results and that this experience will be more profitable.

Mr. Chairman, we hear a good deal about designated areas. Statistics show that in the province of Quebec, we unfortunately have—it is not a record to be envied—40 per cent of the unemployed in the country.

It is enough to wonder whether the Minister of Finance should not have so designated the whole province of Quebec, thus allowing for a more considerable development of industry.

The other point I should like to clear up, Mr. Chairman, is the problem of industries already existing in those areas and which are eager to develop through the advantages granted new industries. I am not sure that those industries will have the same tax abatements as the new industries, but I will follow the discussion closely in order to learn a little more about that matter. I consider that the already existing industries should deserve at least the same treatment as the new industries which will set up in those areas.

In our day and age, Mr. Chairman, everything increasingly tends to centralization. It is not with half-measures, such as those advocated in Bill C-95, that we may effectively check that trend.

For several years now, we have been witnessing the invasion of the taxation field by the federal government. The provinces and the municipalities do no longer dare to increase the taxation level and consequently, are increasingly involved in long term loans, thus binding future generations to meet present needs.

The government which is the closest to the people, namely the municipal administration, is the most seriously affected. As I said a moment ago, being better acquainted with the tax-paying capacity of its people, the municipal administration does not dare to increase taxes. This leads us to conclude—and it is becoming urgent—that we should completely review our taxation system with a view to decentralization.

Mr. Chairman, in all sincerity, I would like to make a few suggestions to the Minister of Finance, concerning income tax.

One of those I would like to see adopted is an exemption which, I believe, could be allowed to individuals who possess their own house, their own dwelling; they would be granted an exemption based on the cost of municipal and school taxes, for instance, if a citizen has to pay $500 per annum for municipal and school taxes, he would be entitled to deduct that amount of $500 from his taxable income. I believe that such a measure would be an encouragement to housing construction and, following other measures which have already been taken, it would certainly stimulate construction and encourage people to own their homes.

Mr. Chairman, I am convinced this exemption based on the cost of municipal and school taxes would be much less costly to the departments of finance and national revenue than the present system, which has to cope with difficulties caused by the requirement in regard to charity receipts, about which much was said this afternoon and to which I do not wish to refer again.

I am of the opinion it would be much easier to control this tax exemption than that we have presently; not that I am opposed to this one, of which we may avail ourselves by producing charity receipts, but I am convinced it would be an additional exemption which would certainly be to the advantage of Canadians.

On the other hand, I would bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman, that this tax exemption based on municipal and school taxes already exists in the United States; and if we may say that everything coming from the United States is not good, it must be recognized, however, that we have some lessons to draw from those people as far as economic measures to be taken are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I shall also take the liberty of suggesting to the Minister of Finance or other responsible people, that further consideration should be given to the case of the heads of family whose children are attending university, since the present exemption is utterly ridiculous, when we take into consideration the expenses relating to the education of these children.

I am coming back to another point already raised, I believe, by another member who said—I am sorry to come back to it but I am convinced that it is important—that a particular tax exemption should also be granted to workers and loggers who are forced to lay out money for the purchase of some working equipment. If I am not mistaken, I think that some professionals are granted a tax exemption when they have to buy equipment. It would therefore be fair, natural and normal that our Canadian workers be treated in the same way as some categories of professional people because, in fact, they also have their role to play in the country.

Other suggestions have been made of course, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want to repeat them. However, aware as I am of the good will of the Minister of Finance, I know he will take notes and that probably, in the course of the debate that will follow, will be glad to inform the house of new tax relief with regard to personal income. On the other hand, we understand very well the needs of the government which is faced with an ever increasing deficit and which sees its expenditures go up each year. But unfortunately, we find that those who are most opposed to new taxes are precisely those who want most.

We are now witnessing, Mr. Chairman, a contest between the three government levels concerning taxing, a contest whose costs have unfortunately to be paid, as always, by the Canadian taxpayer.

In the field of industry, people are concerned and inquisive about the future. The tax burden is so heavy it has become an obstacle to development and progress. We are in a vicious circle, Mr. Chairman. As long as we refuse to admit that the present situation is contrary to what existed 50 years ago, namely that the main problem which faces us at the present time concerns distribution and consumption, and not production, there is no reason to roam the world over to find possible markets. We have the market right here in Canada. We must give Canadians efficient means to allow them to play their part as producers and consumers.

Mr. Chairman, may I read here an extract from a speech delivered by Mr. Orland, businessman from Halifax, at a convention of the chamber of commerce, when he said:

> Immediate steps are required to alleviate the fiscal burden before it stifles the economic growth. Mr. Orland calls taxes a major problem which increases all the time, and he blames federal, provincial and municipal governments for "levying all taxes you can think of".
> If taxes go on increasing at the same pace as in these last years, "a disproportionate part of the gross national product will be channelled to government coffers to the detriment of private enterprise".

And Mr. Orland goes on to say:

The frantic efforts made to stamp out economic malnutrition and which consist in blood transfusions from the patient himself are doomed to failure.

The Chairman: Order.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

On the order:

House in committee of the whole on Bill S-28, an act to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada (without amendment).

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): At the request of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), I should like this motion to stand until next Thursday.

Motion stands.

THE MANUFACTURERS LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-43, respecting The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company.

He said: This bill is simply intended to give the company a French name, the name set out in the bill, which is "La Compagnie d'Assurance-Vie Manufacturers". The company is one of those companies which have taken advantage of the statute which permits mutualization. The purchase of the stock of the company has been completed, so that it is now a mutual company. I am informed that there are 14 directors and all but one of the directors are Canadians. This company has a substantial number of policies in force in the province of Quebec, and it is very active there. For that reason, it is anxious to have a French name.

I do not believe I can add anything more, except to assure the house it is a Canadian company and I trust the bill will be referred in the usual way to a standing committee.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I have only one remark to make, Mr. Speaker. Far from being against the suggested amendment, I am in favour of it, but I would hope that the government would amend the federal Companies Act so that any company which seeks incorporation in the future will be forced to have two names, one in English and one in French.

I hope the Companies Act will be amended along those lines. In my opinion, we would not have to deal with such requests now if that had been done in years past.

[Text]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I should like to ask the hon. member what proportion of the company is controlled by this one foreign investor?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I remind the house that if the hon. member speaks now, he will close the debate?

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, the stock of the company has been purchased by the company itself, so there are no shareholders. At the present time, the company is really owned by its policyholders and, in that sense, it is a mutual company. I am informed that the policies in force in Canada have a face value of $1,663,962,000, and of this amount more than $271 million is in force in Quebec. I have not the information concerning the face amount of policies issued to persons resident outside of Canada. It is my understanding, however, that the company is primarily a Canadian company and that most of the policies would be Canadian policies. However, I have no specific information on the number of policies owned abroad, but this information could be provided in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CORRESPONDENCE WITH U.S. RESPECTING UNION TRUSTEESHIP

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, communications and other documents and replies thereto between the government of the United States of America, or any of its departments, and the government of Canada, or any of its departments, concerning the great lakes shipping situation and the proposed trusteeship of Canadian maritime unions since the 6th of July 1963.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a motion for the production of certain papers exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of the United States dealing with the great lakes shipping situation and the trusteeship that has been set up as a result of the recommendations of the Norris commission. The motion has been submitted to the house because of the general principle that parliament is vested with the power to order that a document be laid before it that may be necessary for its information.

I might point out that such a power is broad enough to include documents of a confidential nature if the house believes that it requires their production. The fact the documents are confidential cannot be invoked to block their production, because the necessity for providing parliament with information would take precedence. These documents are being requested because they have been introduced already on a piecemeal basis into the debates of this house. Surely the house cannot be fully informed without their production.

I could cite quite a number of occasions within the last 10 or 15 days when references have been made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and other members of the cabinet to these documents as well as to statements made by members of the United States administration. For instance, on October 15 at page 3525 of Hansard the Prime Minister is recorded as referring to the unhelpful intervention by the United States secretary of labour. He referred also to the statement by the President of the United States which in his view, indicated that the President would co-operate to see that Canadian shipping in United States ports would be free from harassment and sabotage.

On October 11, 1963, page 3441 of Hansard, the Prime Minister is reported as referring to the apparent failure of both the secretary of labour of the United States government and the president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. to appreciate fully the fact that the dispute on the great lakes is essentially a Canadian dispute, although of course it has international ramifications. Then, the Prime Minister also stated that this matter—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to intervene unfairly in the remarks of my hon. friend, but I am sure he is aware that in the discussion of this matter, under this particular procedure, it is not open to discuss anything other than the particular motion. One cannot discuss the merits of any dispute that may have some relationship to the problem. The only issue before us is whether or not these documents should be produced. What my hon. friend is now discussing is not a matter involved in the documents, but a matter of public statements by certain individuals already designated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Martineau: Speaking to the point of order, I may say that the reason I quoted these extracts from Hansard is simply to bring out the fact that the documents and statements have already been referred to in the course of debate in this house. This is the only purpose. It is necessary for the house to know this in order to decide if the documents should be tabled. I am not arguing in any way about the merits of the situation in connection with great lakes shipping or the trusteeship.

I was stating, Mr. Speaker, that the United States secretary of labour had brought this matter within the domain of public concern by issuing public statements. I refer, for instance, to the statement made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) on October 11, as recorded on page 3457 of Hansard, in which the minister refers to a statement by the United States secretary of labour as follows:

> I have expressed through formal channels the continuing willingness of the United States government to seek an accord which will meet fully the public as well as the private interests which are involved here.

Then, on October 8, as recorded on page 3304 of Hansard, the Minister of Labour stated:

> I have discussed this matter with the officials of the labour department... the Canadian ambassador discussed this matter yesterday in the United States... the United States authorities will fully comply with United States law with respect to this situation.

On October 4, page 3203 of Hansard, the Minister of Labour referred to the fact that the discussions have not produced any clear conclusions. This again indicates that there were discussions. On October 3, at page 3149, the Minister of Labour referred to discussions with Mr. Reynolds, United States under secretary of labour, and finally on September 30, at page 3026, the Minister of Labour referred to a meeting at Boston with the secretary of labour.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, it is my submission that in this particular case public policy does not preclude the production of these documents. Indeed public policy calls for their production because, as the Prime Minister himself and other members of the ministry recognized, this is a purely Canadian matter and there has been, in the words of the Prime Minister, both a shocking and unhelpful intervention by the United States in it. Surely under these circumstances public policy dictates that the whole question be brought into the open.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to labour the point but my hon. friend knows perfectly well that the line he is now pursuing is out of order and is not permitted under this particular motion. The question before the house is whether or not these particular documents should be produced. That and nothing else is the issue. What my hon. friend is now doing is to quote from statements made by the Prime Minister and others on the main question itself, this delicate and important question which faces the Canadian people. This part of the problem is not before the house, and any discussion of it is outside the provisions provided for in the procedure now open to us.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order, and with due deference to the minister, I have not been quoting during the last few minutes from anything that was said. I was simply summarizing my own views as to why these documents should be produced, and one of the objections to their production was that public policy demanded they be not produced.

I have simply stated—and this is not a quotation from anyone; it is my own prose such as it may be—that in this case public policy, far from precluding production calls for production, because of the fact that statements made in the house have indicated there has been an exchange of views, correspondence and the rest, between the two governments, and also because it has been declared to be a strictly Canadian matter. If it is a strictly Canadian matter, we want to know why there has been interference, and the extent of the interference.

That is why we want the production of these papers. In summary, as I said before, we have had interference. We have had parts of these documents referred to publicly by those who made them in the United States. They issued statements to the press concerning their views on this matter, and we have had the Prime Minister and other ministers of the crown bring them into open debate in this house. Finally we have the claim of the Prime Minister that this is strictly a Canadian affair.

In view of this situation surely parliament is entitled to a full disclosure, and so far as diplomatic usage is concerned in all these documents or discussions of state between the state department and the Department of External Affairs, some of them have been exchanged through normal diplomatic channels, but others did not take that route and were exchanged directly between the labour officials of both governments, with a follow-up in the press when parts of the documents were sent for publication.

With regard to those parts of the documents that may be privileged or secret communications, naturally I do not want to rob them of their confidentiality; but even in this case the government should give the house an assurance that, because of the fact this is an exclusively Canadian affair, it will ask permission from the United States government to file any part of the documents.

Concerning precedents, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of precedents where documents involving two countries have been tabled in the house. The government is continually tabling international air agreements between various countries. The latest I believe was in November, 1962, when an agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom concerning air traffic was tabled. Last session the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) submitted a motion to the house, which was accepted, for the tabling of correspondence with other countries concerning the drug thalidomide.

We had the precedent which took place this very afternoon when the Secretary of State for External Affairs requested the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to table a copy of a letter from the officer in charge of Canadian affairs in the United States state department to a chamber of commerce, I believe in Montana.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You will have to get a better precedent than that.

Mr. Martineau: I think that is a precedent which goes far beyond normal diplomatic usage, and certainly there was less justification for tabling such a letter than in seeking the tabling of documents which are required for a serious purpose on a vital matter.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, before the Secretary of State for External Affairs attempts to call me to order I would like to draw his attention to the fact that the quotations given by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) are completely relevant to the debate. I say that for the reason that when there are press releases issued by officials of another government usually there has been privileged communication between that government and the country referred to.

Further there has been what the Prime Minister may have referred to as embarrassing statements. I am not too sure if he used that expression, but he certainly used some rather strong language about statements issued by secretary of labour Wirtz and other people in the United States respecting their attitude to the Canadian trusteeship bill and various other problems connected with the S.I.U. Therefore if the normal course has been followed, there has been communication between the United States government and the Canadian government prior to the press releases that were issued by officials of the United States government, and surely this is relevant to the argument that there must exist some related documents that could be produced.

It would be well for us to know if there are such documents in existence. I am not prepared to suggest that all documents be released, but certainly those which relate to the press releases should be forthcoming so that we can see the extent to which the United States government attempted to interfere in a purely Canadian matter. Further, the government has complained recently that the United States revealed confidential information respecting wheat sales. Therefore I cannot see how reference to these press releases can be regarded as irrelevant to this debate.

I would like to remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs of the support the Minister of Labour received when he honestly, openly and frankly came before the house with legislation which we recognized was necessary to deal with a very serious situation. There was almost unanimous support given to the Minister of Labour to deal with that very tough and yet delicate situation. I am sure that a matter so serious as the interference of another government in our internal affairs will receive the same measure and degree of support.

It is obvious to all hon. members that the immediate problem facing the government and the board of trustees is the harassment and picketing of Canadian ships in the United States.

We have apparently reached the point, so far as the Canadian unions are concerned—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. gentleman will not misunderstand me when I rise again on a point of order. It is not that I do not believe the matter he is now discussing is not vital and important. It is. But I submit to him and to you, sir, with the greatest confidence—and I recall the discussions we had last session on this very matter—that on this motion it is not open to any hon. member to discuss the merits of the question which gives rise to the motion itself.

The motion before us is for the production of papers with regard to this matter. It is not open to any hon. member to discuss the matter itself. All he can discuss are reasons, based on precedents and parliamentary practice, why the particular motion to produce certain papers involved in the negotiations between the two governments should be accepted. This is the only issue. My hon. friend is complaining about the picketing in the United States. I am in full accord with such complaints but it is not open to us at this moment, at this hour and under this procedure, to discuss that question.

Mr. Olson: On the point of order, first of all may I say that the purpose of asking for these papers is to provide the house with the information that is vital and necessary in making the decisions that it must make to deal with the situation. It is spelled out in the motion that it is to deal with the proposed trusteeship of Canadian maritime unions. If the house is going to deal with the interference of the United States government and the possibility that the Canadian government was warned that this harassment and picketing was going to take place, then I think members of the House of Commons have the right to have a look at these documents and know all the facts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. We have had three points of order raised on this matter and it is not the first time in recent days. I should like to point out that over the years a number of Speakers' rulings have been made on this particular matter explaining the narrow limits of debate on a motion of this kind. I should point out to the house that under the motion now before us members do not have the right to discuss the shipping situation on the great lakes, nor do they have the right to discuss the merits or demerits of the trusteeship. The only question before the house at the moment is whether or not these documents should be tabled and in the ensuing debate I think members should confine themselves strictly to that question.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, I think what the hon. member for Medicine Hat was trying to bring out was that, because of the situation with regard to great lakes shipping and the trusteeship and because of the exchange of documents it is necessary that these documents now be filed. That was the basis of his argument. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs took absolutely the wrong view in interpreting the remarks of the hon. member, because the hon. member did not even touch upon the merits or demerits of the situation. He said that because of that situation these documents should be filed. That was the crux of his argument.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, in closing I should like to urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to consider the matter raised in the motion, to recall also the support that the house gave the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) when he was faced with a serious situation and to remember that if this harassment and picketing of Canadian ships in the United States goes on further action by the house may be required to deal with that situation. I earnestly plead that the minister take the house into his confidence and give hon. members the necessary information to make intelligent decisions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we will all agree with the last observation of the hon. member who has just taken his seat, that from day to day the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) has given the house all the information on this matter that he could give and, indeed, in his handling of this matter he won commendation from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) for the forthright manner in which he dealt with the problem. I realize that members of the house generally in all quarters have recognized the importance of this matter and have taken a responsible position on the merits of the dispute which, however, is not the issue before us at this moment.

The issue before us arises out of a motion in the name of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau). It is important for us to read the resolution to see what the issue is and what the implications are. The motion reads as follows:

> That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, communications and other documents and replies thereto between the government of the United States of America, or any of its departments, and the government of Canada, or any of its departments, concerning the great lakes shipping situation and the proposed trusteeship of Canadian maritime unions since the 6th of July, 1963.

Mr. Aiken: Would the minister allow me to ask him a question? Would the minister read it again so the house can be sure of it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would read it again if I thought my hon. friend had not already read it carefully, but as I think he has and is not serious in the intervention he has made I will just accord him the same pleasant reaction that he is now giving me. I think it is important for us to see exactly what the issue is. If we were discussing the merits of this dispute the matter would be handled by the Minister of Labour; but it is a matter concerning relations with the United States that is involved in this motion. It is on this account that I, as Secretary of State for External Affairs, am dealing with it.

When this motion was called on the 16th of October I expressed the view, and I reiterate it now, that it would be contrary to diplomatic usage and against the public interest to table all of the confidential papers requested by the hon. gentleman. As the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue well knows out of his rich experience as a minister, the precedents in May, Bourinot, Beauchesne and practically every other textbook dealing with parliamentary practice establish clearly that diplomatic correspondence of this nature cannot be required under these circumstances.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why does the minister say this was diplomatic correspondence? Was it not interference?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was diplomatic correspondence in the sense that it involved, as the Leader of the Opposition well knows, exchanges between the two governments, and in that sense when we talk about the intercourse of one country with another we characterize this as diplomatic intercourse.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister why some of these statements were published in the press and given to the press by those who made them?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will deal with that in a moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why the selective nature of the information?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will deal with that in a moment. With regard to the first point it would, of course, be contrary to diplomatic usage to table these papers at the present time without the prior agreement of the government of the United States. I can tell the house that the concern we have in this matter is shared by the government of the United States. That alone is sufficient reason to encourage the hon. gentleman to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow a question? Has the United States been communicated with and has the United States administration stated that it would not want these documents produced?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have discussed this question with the appropriate persons representing the government of the United States in this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not an answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says that is not an answer. It is not the answer he wanted but it is an effective answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: An effective smokescreen.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is true that documents exchanged between Canada and the United States have sometimes been tabled in the house. I will come to that. He mentioned the air agreement. While this is not the kind of agreement envisaged by my last statement, such an agreement obviously carries with it the implied agreement of the two countries.

But it has been a long established principle that in this house there is absolutely no obligation on the government to produce correspondence or documents when such action is deemed contrary to the public interest, and not only in this house but in the United Kingdom parliament.

Mr. Martineau: Unless the house so orders.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the house so orders then the government will have to consider, in the light of its responsibilities, what course it should take. That would be the situation resulting from a decision of this house of that kind. In the present case, as I have already made clear, the government does not consider that it would be in the public interest to table the correspondence requested by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. It is our opinion that compliance with this motion would be prejudicial to the continuation of informal discussions between Canadian and United States authorities who are attempting to find a solution to this problem. Accordingly, the government cannot agree to the suggestion made by the hon. member.

I think that is a correct statement of the usage and the practice in this house with regard to such a matter. The house has never quarreled with this position. Certainly during this very parliament this kind of defence or explanation was always accepted when it was offered by the administration. Repeatedly the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has asked me questions concerning the negotiations with regard to the Columbia river project. He wanted to know what progress we were making in the matter of price, what progress we were making with respect to other matters having to do with the Columbia treaty project, and I had to tell him repeatedly, and as an experienced and distinguished parliamentarian in this house he always accepted this, that it could not be done. I would say to him: "Of course, my hon. friend knows that while negotiations are under way it is not desirable or in the public interest to give such information". Then my hon. friend would sit down in the gentlemanly way in which he always sits down, and never did he take exception. Nor did anyone else; because it is obvious that if the government were to disclose correspondence between two governments in respect of a matter that is current and which, on that account, may be said to be in negotiation, such efforts would be prejudiced by publication of the documents. I cannot agree with my hon. friend when he says that the government has violated its defence against this motion by the action which he says it has taken from time to time by revealing in bits and pieces portions of what normally could be said to be regarded as confidential. Certainly I cannot accept that statement, and nothing that the hon. gentleman has said justifies this allegation.

What has my hon. friend done, Mr. Speaker? He has quoted from public statements of personalities involved in the matter both in this country and in the United States. I had to take him to task because I thought he was out of order. His course involved a discussion on the merits. But the point I am seeking to make is that the quotations referred to by my hon. friend were not from confidential documents; they were statements made by personalities to the public press or to the communications system in one form or another. Nothing has been adduced here which could be regarded as being a portion of a confidential document, as is understood within the meaning of the words involved in this motion.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister a question. What has he to say with regard to the ruling or the explanation given by Mr. Speaker a few days ago, in which he stated that the confidential nature of documents does not constitute a valid objection to their production?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend does not answer my question by introducing a question of his own on an altogether different subject, which is what he has just done. What I am doing now is to deal with my hon. friend's argument that the government, by bits and pieces, was revealing confidential information which it refused to give under this motion. I am dealing with that argument and saying—

Mr. Martineau: On a point of privilege, I did not make that argument; I simply said that the fact that bits and pieces of these documents had already been referred to in debate in this house was a reason for their full production and disclosure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, I did not take issue with my hon. friend, but I suggest that this is not a question of privilege. I said that he has offered no evidence to substantiate the contention that the government was, by bits and pieces, revealing information that it was denying to the house through another procedure. The statement of the hon. member does not alter the situation when he says it is a purely Canadian matter. It is essentially a Canadian problem, but its final solution depends, as the hon. gentleman knows, upon the co-operation received from another administration in another jurisdiction. It is because of that that my hon. friend would agree, I am sure, on reflection, that it is not desirable to give information involved in processes which do warrant our characterizing the whole dispute as one which has not only a Canadian but a United States interest as well.

My hon. friend referred to the air traffic agreement and cited this as a precedent. He said that we must produce these documents because on another occasion the governments of the United States and Canada tabled agreements which had been concluded between the two governments with respect to air policy. I am sure my hon. friend does not really expect the house to take that argument seriously. The air agreements were concluded and negotiations in connection with them had terminated, and as a result the agreements between the two governments were made public, as is always done in matters of that sort. But my hon. friend forgot to mention that, when we were discussing agreements involving the security of the state not very long ago in this house, even those agreements had been finalized this house decided that they should not be produced.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask a question. Does the minister consider that the present documents involve the security of the state?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not say that. I was just dealing with my hon. friend's argument that every agreement between the two countries was tabled. That was the argument to which I was addressing myself, and I was pointing out the difference between the air agreements and other kinds of agreements, to bolster the suggestion I am now making that the argument made with regard to the air agreement has no application whatever to this situation.

My hon. friend would be the first to admit that while those air agreements were being negotiated any motion for the production of papers in connection with the matters under negotiation would be denied. That is exactly the situation confronting us at the present time. So, Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that the hon. gentleman, in pursuing this motion, really intends us to take his motion seriously. I am sure that his experience as a member of this house establishes a justification for our belief that he knows that in a matter of such vital importance as this, not yet finalized, and involving the relations of the two countries, they would be concerned about the publication of these matters. This motion should not be accepted. I therefore resist it in view of the precedents in support of the position I have taken.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I want to make only a comment or two, if I may, with respect to the reply or the arguments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). The whole nub of his argument that these papers should not be produced revolved around what he classified as the public interest. It is oft times difficult to determine, especially when it is the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is speaking, whether he means the public interest or whether he means the government's interest. He expanded upon this question of the public interest to a point where, if I may paraphrase his remarks now, he said that it was never the practice in this House of Commons to give passage to a motion for the production of documents or correspondence with any other country in the world when the subject matter referred to by that correspondence was currently under discussion, because it might be prejudicial to the then current discussions or negotiations. I take it this was the argument.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think I said "never." I said it was not the practice.

Mr. Howard: The minister points out that he said it was not the practice. In essence, then, I am correct in the interpretation I have placed upon what he said, with the exception of the difference between "never" and "not", which might be a grammatical difference if anything.

We dealt yesterday with some motions for the production of papers, and I am sure that if the Secretary of State for External Affairs would just cast his mind back to yesterday he would find that this house agreed, because of the announcement of a minister of the crown, to produce just such documents and correspondence between Canada and the government of another country, documents dealing with a subject matter currently under discussion and negotiation. I refer, of course, to the correspondence between the government of this country and the government of the Soviet union regarding the halibut fishery, which is one of the fisheries covered by the north Pacific fisheries treaty, which treaty is currently under discussion between Canada, United States and Japan.

Surely the argument that it has not been the practice to agree to this sort of motion falls flat when we see that in substance, yesterday, we did agree to just such a motion. It seems to me that unless there is something which the Canadian government wants to hide, which may well be the case, this should be produced. My hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs shakes his head, indicating, I take it, that there is nothing that this government wants to hide. The other side of the coin is, then, that it must be agreeable to disclosing this particular information. If there is nothing to hide, there is no reason why the government, apart from this nebulous question of public interest about which the minister talked, should not table and make public this particular correspondence about one of the most vital subjects that was ever involved in Canadian-United States relations. To me it would be a simple question—I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs agrees with this—to ask the United States government if they would be agreeable to tabling and making public the particular correspondence asked for in this motion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have already indicated that the proper spokesman of the government of the United States expressed concern about the publication at this time of these documents.

Mr. Howard: Well, I express my concern too. But surely the minister could tell the house whether they wanted to say yes or no. If the United States government said no, I am sure that out of respect for diplomatic relationships, no one in this house would want to press the issue to a conclusion. But in the absence of any indication of that sort it seems to me that all the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has been doing is to use his usual reservoir of words to cover up the facts; that what he means by the public interest is, in reality, the government interest, and that he is trying to hide something from the Canadian public.

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier): The reason primarily advanced as justification for the request for the production of these papers is the statement that there has been interference in Canadian affairs and that it is necessary to know the extent of this interference.

I should like, if it were possible, to see the documents which were exchanged between the C.I.O. and the A.F.L. and the seamen's international union, because it is here that the real interference in Canada took place.

It would seem to me that whenever there is an opportunity for this house to make a jibe at the United States, it does so. In my view it is far more important that we should accentuate those things which would tend to improve our relationship with the United States rather than try constantly to introduce questions which would divide us. I intend to refer, now, to a situation for which I do not say the entire blame rests with members on the other side of the house: blame rests with those who sit on this side, too. But I would say the country is sick to death of the manner in which we are still fighting the last election, and I say the demand for the production of these papers is merely a continuation of the election campaign.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order; as the Secretary of State for External Affairs said a while ago, all that is pertinent to this debate are matters pertaining to the reasons why these papers should be produced or not. The hon. member has strayed far from that particular subject and I ask that he be requested to return to it.

Mr. Klein: It would seem to me to be a prime principle of law that when a person introduces a subject we are entitled to answer that person.

Mr. Martineau: That is not what the minister said. I must insist on a ruling and I am sure I shall be supported in this by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I must repeat what I said a few moments ago—and if it should be necessary to inform the house further, I may say that I am armed with a number of rulings made by previous Speakers. I would again point out that the question before us is whether or not the documents mentioned in this motion should be tabled, and we should confine the debate as closely as we can to that particular question.

Mr. Klein: I am merely trying to indicate what effect the production of these papers could have. The one issue which supersedes all others is the precarious situation which now exists with respect to the wheat deal. It is important that this wheat be delivered. I have a strong feeling that if this correspondence were tabled it might seriously affect the conclusion of the wheat deal which we are so anxious to see completed. We seem to be debating this question on the assumption that this whole matter has now been settled, that wheat deliveries are going along fine and that Canada has no problem with respect to the biggest task which faces the country. Yet only last night it was reported—I forget in which newspaper—that seamen were leaving their ships in United States ports. This indicates the delicate condition of the present shipping situation.

Mr. Olson: Could I ask the hon. member a question? Is he suggesting that there is contained within these documents a threat, or something like that, from the United States government that either we knuckle under or our wheat deal will be in jeopardy?

Mr. Klein: I am not suggesting that for a moment. I do not know what the documents contain. But I do know that filing these documents could not possibly improve the situation; and if it cannot improve the situation, why take the chance that it might worsen it? The question asked on October 16 was asked in connection with the proposed trusteeship. I suggest that the trusteeship is now in effect and that the filing of these documents in such circumstances would be an anti-climax. The only effect the production of these documents could possibly have at this time would be to stir up a situation which this government at this moment has been able to pacify. The situation on the great lakes at this moment is quiet and I say there is far too much at stake for us to do anything that might jeopardize the wheat deal. I think we are living next door to one of the finest neighbours that any country could wish to have and I am certain that were we living north of the Soviet union instead of north of the United States many people would not dare to say about the Soviet union the things they say against the United States and its people. I believe it is in the best interests of the economy of this country, and especially in connection with the employment situation in this country, that we should do nothing at this time to imperil the thousands of jobs which will be created as a result of the wheat deal.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Klein: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): I should like to deal with this question on the basis of the so-called precedents cited by the hon. member who has lately resumed his place, and also on the basis of principle. However, I note that it is now six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, the hour devoted to consideration of private members' business has expired and the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, at five o'clock this afternoon, I was concluding my remarks by quoting the words of a businessman who was wondering about the economic prospects of our country, considering the ever-increasing tax burden.

With your permission, I shall quote another distinguished businessman, namely Mr. Graham Towers, who said at the annual assembly of Canada Life Insurance Company among other things:

> I repeat without hesitation the opinion I already expressed at our last annual assembly: the expenses at all levels of government and the taxes which they bring forth are so high that they are apt to slow down economy, increase costs and the trend towards import, and tend to increase the problem of our international balance.

The United States government, acting on the advice of numerous economists, is contemplating a tax reduction. And yet, its expenses account for only 29 per cent of the gross national product, while in our country it is 33 per cent.

At any rate, the problem is becoming increasingly acute. In fact, it is time to turn aside from the beaten track to give a fair try to new economic and financial doctrines.

Our group advocates something entirely new in this field. We do not claim to possess a monopoly on truth, but we sincerely believe that the steps we suggest should be taken as the situation makes it possible.

New capital, coming from the Bank of Canada, could be put to work a little at a time, for instance in the municipal loan fund, and it would mean new blood for our very ill economic body.

We are convinced that the beneficial results of those measures would prove us right and would open the way to splendid achievements for a stronger Canada, economically as well as socially.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I should like to make a few brief comments with regard to Bill No. C-95, and particularly that section of it relating to the incentive to industry. I think it should be made clear, and I do not believe it has as yet, that there is a large segment of the country for which this provision in the bill will provide no help at all, but that area will be expected to pay for it. I am talking about western Canada. I think it needs to be put on the record that we do not object to this. However, on occasion we have heard some objection in this house when legislation has been passed that benefited only western Canada. I think it should be noted that we in western Canada are going to pay in several different ways for the provision now before us. Since this is the case, I feel we have a right to comment upon whether or not this is the best way to do it. I do not think it is. I do not think the minister has given us enough information concerning the giving of incentives to industry in these depressed areas.

Perhaps there are better ways of accomplishing his purpose. Has he or his department made any detailed calculations as to which method is going to give the taxpayers of this country the most for their money? As I have said, we in western Canada cannot benefit from this particular part of the legislation. We are just going to pay for it. When you consider the effect that the sales tax has had already in a province like Alberta, you will find we are paying double. This year construction is down 30 per cent as compared with a year ago. When you consider that this is a new part of the country, when you consider that we are trying to get new processing and manufacturing industries established in that part of the country, then you realize that we are paying for this provision in a number of ways.

We have heard nothing from the minister, or in the detailed speech by the hon. member for Northumberland, as to other alternatives. Certainly, nothing has been said as to why we do not try other ways, why we do not use direct grants to get industries established in these areas. It seems to me there is an argument in favour of this method because it would do a lot of things. First and foremost, of course, it would provide capital for the prospective manufacturer to get started right away. Second, it would do away with all the red tape. I should like the minister to tell me how many more people he is going to need in his department to administer this incentive provision. How many inspectors will he need, how many clerks, auditors and accountants? This is a very indirect, complicated and discriminatory method of giving help in depressed areas. Can the minister tell me if his department has investigated these aspects, or will this just be another case of empire building within the department, and the provision of more and more men to curb private industry.

Perhaps the department could look into the possibility of providing facilities in those areas to encourage manufacturers to get started there. Has any work along this line been done? What are the costs going to be for what we are going to get out of this particular type of program? Has the department looked into the possibility of providing credit for manufacturers setting up in those areas? It seems to me that this would be a logical and much more direct approach to providing incentives for industries in those areas, and at a far less cost. This method would be better than the indirect method with all its red tape which has been put before us. I say this section of the bill is bad because it is not going to do what we all want it to do. This method will involve a large civil service to administer it. There will be political machinations in connection with it. It is all very well to say that these are going to be designated areas, and not depressed areas, but this manoeuvering has already started. As I understand it, there has already been some political manoeuvring with this segment of the bill.

There are other ways that this could be done better. What is wrong with providing incentives to industry all across Canada, and then additional incentives in these depressed areas? This was the platform of the Liberal party at election time, that they were going to provide incentive to industry not only in depressed areas but right across the country. My Liberal opponent in that election came out and said, "You Tories did not provide the right climate in Alberta. You did not get a pulpmill in Whitecourt." The reason we did not was because the markets were not there and transportation costs were too high. You need some incentive to get that mill in Whitecourt. According to my Liberal opponent this government would do that; but instead it has come up with a very complicated mixture of red tape, and I will be very surprised if it provides any additional jobs at all.

Why not take the direct approach? Why can we not have a simple formula to provide assistance to industry to go into the designated areas? Why can we not have some program designed to increase Canadian participation in industry? There are other things which the government has already done for the designated areas, such as additional assistance under winter works programs and the speed up of government works in these areas. This is fine; we all want to see these areas improve; but this should not be done as a prop or through the form of a subsidy just to keep something going. It has to be something of a permanent nature. There has to be investigation and research to determine that it will be a long term thing, and that it is not just relocation of a plant from one city to another.

When the minister replies I would like to hear him say something with regard to the other methods that are available but which were not chosen. To me it seems a simpler method to give a direct grant to a manufacturer in order to encourage him to go into a designated area, and to provide facilities such as roads and rails.

Another matter which I want to mention deals with the designation of these areas and the criteria used to do so. We have read a long communique outlining how this is being done, detailing so many years unemployment figures and growth rate; but I would point out that there are areas in Canada which have only recently been settled and which deserve some incentive. The whole existence of some of these more isolated areas depends on one industry, and one of the criteria which should be used in designating these areas ought to be an examination of the industry an area already has, and how to prevent it becoming a depressed area in the future. We can do that by providing encouragement for secondary industry, and this has specific reference to certain pulp towns and mining towns which, if they lose the one industry they have, become ghost towns. As an example I refer to Hinton, in my own riding, which is a pulp town pure and simple, and which has been seeking another industry for many years. I think it should be possible for the government to provide incentives so that it would secure a secondary paper manufacturing industry.

The same applies to many towns in northern Ontario. We have to do more than just take those things which are already there. We have to try to develop policies which will prevent areas becoming depressed in the future.

As I have said, all this government has done in western Canada so far has been to cost us a lot of money. We are paying through the nose. We are paying additional sales taxes, and now we will be paying for these incentives for designated areas. We want to be sure that our money is going to be well spent. We do not think it will now, because there is too much red tape involved, and once again I ask the minister why not make direct grants and provide credit and other facilities instead of doing it this way? The job could be done quicker, cheaper and with less red tape. As the scheme stands at present people are not going to know whether it is worth while for them to do anything at all.

I hope the minister's officials have studied what has happened in other countries and which is the best way to provide these jobs for Canadians. In western Canada we have felt over the years that we have been milked a little bit by the industrial east, and our great ambition is that we become more industrialized. We would like to see some incentive in that direction. There is wide scope for this type of incentive, and something should be done to encourage the manufacture of products presently being imported from other countries.

The government can only go so far in providing subsidies or support to try and make a particular area prosperous, because after all manufacturing must depend on the resources available and the supply of raw material. We have the raw material in abundance in western Canada and many different types of industry could be founded on it.

I want to make it clear we do not mind paying an additional bonus to help the east out. On occasion they have helped us out; but we do want to make sure our money will be spent wisely. When he replies I hope the minister does not refer to the speech made by the hon. member for Northumberland, which was a very general, rambling sort of contribution which did not deal with specific instances or give details of the things that should be done. Instead I hope he will deal with this question of direct assistance to manufacturers.

There is one other comment I wish to make with regard to the anti-American segment of the bill. We in western Canada have been dependent upon American capital to develop our resources. I do not suggest this is an exceptionally good thing, but if it had not come in it is very doubtful whether these resources would have been developed to the extent they have been. We want to be sure that this capital will still come into the country. Of course we would like to see American subsidiaries have some Canadian content as they develop, but we do not want to scare them out because we need their capital for development.

Rather than take a negative attitude by increasing the tax on American money, the government should provide some incentives for Canadians to put their own money into the development of Canada. The positive approach would give us better results in the long term, and I hope the minister will give us some answers in that respect. I also hope he will take into consideration, in his financial manoeuverings over the next little while, that we in western Canada also need some incentives. We are just a young developing part of the country and we want our own industrial complex to provide the jobs which machinery is now taking away from our workers, particularly in the agricultural field. It is just as important to prevent areas becoming designated areas as it is to help them once they become designated areas; and I hope the government will take into account the very important old theme that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

Mr. Gelber: Mr. Chairman, Napoleon said every private soldier had a marshal's baton in his knapsack. I suppose every private member has a budget inside his coat pocket, which means that there are probably at least 265 varieties of budgets in this house. I should like to say a word in preface about some of the remarks which the Minister of Finance made in his budget speech. It was an important social document. The Minister of Finance said that it was both the policy and the responsibility of the government to provide for full employment in this country and to have policies directed toward that end. We did not have the provincial governments rushing forward and saying that it was their responsibility. This is a responsibility which the federal government has assumed and this is an important economic and social objective which was enunciated by the Minister of Finance.

There is another aspect of his budget address which has a very important social objective. It is not a major part of the program but certainly it is an indicator of his thinking and a milestone along the road. I refer to the very important provision for the retraining of men 45 and over. It showed an important, social conscience, an objective which can be enlarged upon and a significant departure in the economic policy of the country.

The Minister of Finance said that his budget was expansionist and it is this aspect of his budget and his policy about which I should like to say a few words in light of the legislation now before the committee. I believe it is expansionist. If this country is going to develop we have to encourage an increasing rate of capital investment. We must encourage capital investment. We must assure that we build the plants and factories, the arterial roads, the cities and the whole complex of industrial development.

The budget has provided very important incentives for the development of capital for building the physical plant and the complex in which the economy may develop and prosper. The hon. member for Northumberland, not in a rambling speech but in a very able speech, said that in the policies of the government there were aspects of discrimination. I think that is very true. Discrimination is the choice between alternatives, and the government must select those alternatives which it believes are important for the country and must encourage the development of the economy along those paths.

That is why the government introduced accelerated depreciation allowances. It is encouraging a certain type of capital investment. By allowing depreciation on equipment on a two-year basis the government is giving a most important incentive to investment. Special allowances for particular areas are again discrimination, in the terms in which the hon. member for Northumberland discussed it, in order to improve the productive capacity of slow growth areas. The special incentives offered in designated areas again are an important aspect of the encouragement of private investment in Canada.

It has been suggested that we should copy the policy proposed for the United States, with a tax cut. I maintain that the incentives which the government is providing are in effect an aspect of a tax cut. Instead of across the board incentives, it is providing incentives in several areas to meet special development. This type of discrimination, in terms of the more productive areas of our country, is an important aspect of the budget.

I have some figures here which I think are very revealing. They deal with the relative position of the budgetary deficits in Canada and the United States, expressed in terms of gross national product and adjusted for the two countries in terms of the comparative size. In the year 1960 the United States, in billions of United States dollars, showed a surplus of 1.2. Canada, in terms of Canadian dollars, showed a deficit of 5.8. In 1961 the United States showed a deficit of 3.9 while Canada showed a deficit of 4.8. In 1962 the United States showed a deficit of 6.4 and Canada showed a deficit of 11.1. In 1963 the United States had a deficit of 8.2 and Canada's deficit was 9.9.

This means, Mr. Chairman, that the area for manoeuvring by the Canadian government is that much less. It means we have used up some of that advantage, if there is an advantage, which is being advocated for the United States. We have used up some of that advantage.

There are other aspects in our economy which make our budgetary position less flexible than that of the United States. It seems to me that the government of Canada, in offering these incentives in specialized areas in order to increase the productive capacity of Canada, in order to encourage those areas of the economy which contribute most notably to the gross national product, is following an expansionist policy, and the legislation before us today is an important step along this road.

In terms of investment there has been a lot of discussion about withholding taxes. There is one aspect that has not been mentioned in the house. If the minister is successful in encouraging United States subsidiaries to become public corporations it will provide on the stock exchanges of this country a new series of blue chip stocks. One of the factors which is curtailing Canadian investment in Canadian companies is the limited number of securities in Canadian stock exchanges which can be considered to be blue chips. Some of the prime corporations of the country, some of the most important ones, are United States branch plants and as private companies are not available for direct Canadian investment. Should the minister be successful by this gentle urging through the withholding tax in having some of these corporations become public corporations, it will open up a very important area for investment by Canadians in Canadian industry.

It seems to me that more can be done to encourage investment by Canadians in Canada. We might take a look at our succession duties and do something along the lines we did some years ago when we gave a 20 per cent income tax benefit. We might give a differential benefit in succession duties to encourage Canadians to hold Canadian equities. We might take a look at our taxing policies in relation to insurance companies in order to encourage greater investment of their portfolios in Canadian equities.

The budget has made important steps in the direction of making the economy of Canada more buoyant and more balanced and giving it the direction and leadership which it requires. In the legislation before us today we have new and important directions in Canadian policies which I believe entitle the minister to the support of the house.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I suppose the Minister of Finance is aware that because a point of order was raised when he was speaking on the amendment to the motion for second reading of the bill and because of the tremendous spirit of co-operation that existed in giving second reading to the bill, we really have not had from him the complete review at the second reading stage that some of us had perhaps anticipated. Therefore I would hope that in the relative freedom of the committee he will take the opportunity to do something about it.

I might comment, Mr. Chairman, on how delighted I was to hear the generous spirit expressed by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson. He may remember that a number of years ago the C.B.C. had a satirical program on the various crests and mottos in different parts of the country. The Ontario crest was the three gold balls of the pawnbroker on a black velvet background with the motto, semper non vaca, which meant in substance: We are no milch cows for the west. It seems to me that the hon. member should be advocating something along the same line, some kind of golden cornucopia overflowing with wheat in red on a white background. I do not know what motto I should recommend to him, but certainly the generosity of spirit he displayed is the kind of thing that warms the hearts of all of us in Ontario, particularly those of us in areas of Ontario through which the grain from the west passes.

The point I want to speak about relates to something that has been beaten pretty hard, the question of incentives. I should like to be able to accept, with the grace with which the hon. member for Northumberland gave her analysis, her appraisal of what were the weaknesses of the present set-up for determining designated areas. I think this is one of the sloppiest bits of designating that one can imagine. I am not blaming the minister and I am not blaming the new Minister of Industry. It really relates to the weakness of the federal organization in the statistical and economic field.

We have the dominion bureau of statistics. We have the economics and research branch of the Department of Labour. We have certain statistical work being done in the Department of Trade and Commerce as distinct from the bureau of statistics. Yet in none of these agencies have we really had any concentrated work upon the problem that is involved in determining designated areas.

I can give some excellent examples from my own region to point out the injustice of this particular kind of designation. I would fasten the blame, and I think some blame should be fastened, on the people who were in charge of the Department of Labour in the past, including the senior officials and the minister, for their failure to give the economics and research branch an establishment and directives to go out and collect the information. There is a certain irony in the fact that the best series of statistics and the best analysis we have had of the whole problem were provided by the Senate committee on manpower a couple of years ago. Much of the material was ad hoc to the situation at that time, and this body of material which was established seems to have faded away. At the present time we have a crash program in the Department of Labour to try to meet the situation. The Minister of Industry and his deputy are recruiting as quickly as they can a whole group of people to undertake the assignments set out by the act in the determination of the national effort of area development. When you look at the formula which has been developed here for designated areas, they have nothing to start with in terms of a really precise or flexible economic tool.

I should like to give a couple of examples to show this in relation to my own area. I would argue to both ministers involved—there is really a third minister as well, the Minister of Labour—that the age composition of an area's population is a much more important factor to be considered than just the number unemployed during the summer months. It seems to me that what we want to be concerned with in addition to age composition and the resultant number of people who will be going into the labour force is the possible mobility of certain regions in relation to other regions where there is a better growth potential. One of the specific things we need to know is more in terms of, you might say, individual watersheds of industrial production. We need to know much more about the effect of the establishment of a new plan upon the real growth in a number of jobs.

One of the things which is really ridiculous in relation to my area is that we have made a study, a study encouraged by the federal Department of Labour, although two years ago they were not able to give us any statistical help or the help of any economists. We were not able to get statistical help from the provincial government either, because it was no better fixed—probably worse fixed—in this field than the federal government. We established a commission of an informal kind which was taken quite seriously. It published its report and we now know how serious is the situation. Yet we could not possibly come close to qualifying as a designated area because of the peculiar kind of economic base which we have to our industries.

One of the things which has happened in the woods industry over the last five or six years as a result of the introduction of mechanical techniques is that more and more wood is being cut in the pulp forests in the summer instead of in the winter. As a consequence of this, the summer, which used to be a slack period in terms of bush work, is now a busy period and the winter is the tough period. The winter is also a tough period in terms of people who work in the transportation industry and the grain trade.

This particular transition or change in the woods industry is not really reflected as yet in the statistics under which designated areas are worked out, yet it is a fundamental fact that it is one of the flaws in our economy at the present time. We have a tremendously high number of unemployed in the wintertime. In the summer things go relatively well. We happen to be an entrepot of the west and most of the big traffic from coast to coast goes through because of the fact that we get this summer work in the woods cutting the pulp for our paper mills.

The situation as determined by our northwestern Ontario commission on employment is a rather grim one. It may be put this way in very simple terms. They say that between 1951 and 1961 the twin-city population increased by over 25,000 persons. In other words, we were really in on that great big boom in the early fifties. Young people came in and married, a lot of homes were established, and we are now being flooded by school construction to meet the burst of children in the high schools. Yet although we should be planning and taking advantage of incentives to meet the problems two, three and four years ahead when these people go out into the market, because of the particular statistical base used for this formula we will not be able to take advantage of these incentives at all. This report points out that our population has increased by 35 per cent and that job opportunities have increased in that period by 12 per cent. The immediate result has been an increase in unemployment, particularly since 1956. There are about three times as many unemployment insurance registrants now as there were in 1956, and over six times the number in 1951. The population increase will have its major effect on employment between 1963 and 1970. Here is the point: our crisis is almost on us, but it is not reflected in the present statistics. Yet now is the time in all reasonable terms to establish plants and receive the incentives offered those kinds of projects to get under way. We really cannot get any advantage out of this present formula. The report goes on to indicate that by 1966 there will be at least 1,200 extra job seekers coming each year from the schools. Our present rate of increase in jobs is about half the required rate. It is obvious that our most strenuous efforts will be necessary to meet the employment problems of the sixties, the report concludes.

The hon. member who lives in Guelph—I have forgotten the name of his constituency—raised cain about the problem of Brantford compared with Guelph and Galt. I have some sympathies with him, partly because of the fact that Brantford, if it is an area which can be properly designated, happens to be a fairly concentrated industrial region, where areas are short. On the question of labour mobility, what are we going to do in Port Arthur when people cannot get work and there is also nothing in Fort William? Your nearest industrial centre is 500 miles west to Winnipeg, or 850 to 900 miles to the east down to Toronto or over 600 miles to Sudbury. This is a terribly difficult factor in terms of encouraging people to move and to exchange. As a matter of fact, the mobility in our region has been very high. One of the reasons is that we happen to have the kind of people who came in and settled fairly recently in our area, and who are prepared to go out and look for jobs. Therefore they will head out. But this is going to become much more difficult for these young people, particularly the ones coming along who are not going to be able to take advantage, perhaps because of a lack of talent, of some of the more attractive opportunities. I do not know what we are going to do with these people, and this legislation will not do them any good either. This is one of the main criticisms which I have of the designated area formula.

The other criticism I have again relates to the complete unselectivity of our area. The town of Geraldton is 125 miles away from Port Arthur, deep in the northern Ontario bush. Yet it is in the Port Arthur district. The town of Geraldton has a population of 5,000 people. I want to take another town, the town of Sioux Lookout in the riding of Kenora-Rainy River, which has a population of a little over 2,000 and is about 150 or 160 miles from Kenora, which I understand is the district base for the figures used in the formula. Neither Geraldton nor Sioux Lookout has added any considerable growth in job opportunities in the last decade—particularly Sioux Lookout. I talked to one chap who recently established a lumber mill in Sioux Lookout and he was quite bitter about this legislation, or the intent of it, because of the fact that he will not have the opportunity really to apply it in a tough town, tough in employment terms, which I am sure will probably meet this particular situation, because the town happens to fall in another district. The same applies to Geraldton.

There is one other factor which is not looked at in relation to this formula, and again it comes back to the question of mobility. Sioux Lookout happens to be my home town. The job opportunities have not grown there at all; they have diminished and diminished. But the young people have moved away, and the fact they have moved away gives a false picture in terms of the opportunities of the formula used in terms of growth. It is for this reason that I feel we must request a crash effort on the part of the Department of Industry in particular to make this designated area formula more flexible, and it must take into account more factors than it does at the present time.

One of the advantages which would be gained if this was done, it seems to me, is that we would overcome the psychological block involved in this designated area-depressed area idea. It seems to me that if the formula were more sophisticated there would be less hesitation on the part of groups such as chambers of commerce to see their area designated, and there would be a tendency for them to take a closer look with a deeper insight into the problems of their areas in economic terms.

The last point I want to make in relation to this is one of the most galling features of the federal structure in a federal society. I could give as an example the difficulties we encountered in trying to get this commission started, to obtain support for it and to get a report out. The hon. member for Fort William will, I am sure, agree with me as to the problems we encountered. Businessmen and people in public life in our area were concerned about the tremendous burgeoning of young people in our schools. We could see there was struggle ahead and we decided it was our responsibility to face the situation and do something about it. We went to the provincial government. They said: we do not see any way to help you; you should see the federal government. So we went to the federal government. We sent delegations down and we pounded on a number of doors. The Minister of Labour said: Don't come down here and tell me things are wrong; tell me what is wrong and what you want me to do about it. We responded to that challenge and we began to prepare some material. We needed sophisticated help; we needed the help of some expert economists. But we were able to get the help of one economist from the Department of Labour for a week or ten days, only. We managed to scrounge some funds from one of the provincial agencies and for that we were very grateful. But here again the help was very limited. The province could not come forward with any real assistance as far as statistics were concerned. They are not set up to provide this kind of assistance and there seems to be little indication that they are moving in that direction in Ontario. When we finally got our material prepared, we ran into a difficulty which is inherent in a private effort to get at the roots of the trouble in an area. A number of the people who had shared the work of the commission or who had contributed to it were very discouraged by the prognosis which was reached. They felt that if it were divulged in detail a great deal of harm would be caused to the future of the area. I did not agree with this view. It was not my wish to complain, but I felt one should face up to realities. However, I could understand why they felt the report should be played down. In the event, it was played down and this report never had the impact which could have been expected. But no wonder they played it down. We gave the report to the federal authorities. We said: Here is what we have found; here are our recommendations; what can you do about it?

What did we find? We met with weeks and months of silence. I believe the hon. member for Fort William made various representations. I telephoned, wrote and badgered. Finally, we got out of the deputy minister of the Department of Labour one of the cagiest letters I have ever received, expressing a tremendous amount of sympathy but no real response. In essence, he commended our recommendations but said there was nothing to be done about them. This, to my mind, illustrates the sad state of economic analysis and the tools we have available to do something about the intentions of the government in this field, good as they may be. I think this press release which the Department of Industry put out amounts, really, to a tremendous condemnation of the educational system of our country, or the civil service of this country, or of this expertise we are supposed to have built up, as we have created this huge civil service. I am sure that if we were to take this proposal to the United States, to some of their economists, they would choke on the formula which has been advanced, because of its rudimentary, primary character.

I am not put up by my party to try to amend this particular proposal for designating areas, but I should like to do what a number of other members have done, that is, to appeal for something immediate, something quick, to convert what is one of the rudest rules of thumb I have ever seen to something that is more useful and more understandable than this formula—something which could be applied to many more areas so as to take care of a number of variables which this press release and the statement by the minister seem to have ignored almost completely.

Mr. Greene: I should like to align myself with the hon. member for York South in saying that the budget, which is the precursor of the bill we have before us tonight, will go down in the history of this country as a most important document.

I think it will be remembered largely as showing for the first time the road which I think Liberalism will take in the future. This involves not only what is encompassed within the budget but what is contained in ancillary bills such as the measures setting up the Department of Industry and the economic council. These measures, taken together, indicate I think that in the future this party will devote itself to massive intervention of government in the direction of business and industry for social ends. I think this type of Liberalism has been propounded in the United States very largely by Professor Galbraith and is known there as Galbraithian liberalism. I think this is the first example in Canada of bold Liberal intervention in what was formerly a sacrosanct precinct of private enterprise. I think, also, that in a few years this may lead to something which has been badly needed in this country for many years, namely a clear and definite distinction between the two old parties in this house. I suggest that the party of hon. gentlemen opposite, from the speeches I have heard and, quite properly, by virtue of its historical background, is more inclined to shy away from this type of intervention into the private sector of the economy.

The Leader of the Opposition has often championed the supremacy of the individual. He has often expressed fears about the intervention of government in business affairs because of the fact that it might encroach on the rights of the individual. I am not one who has ever scoffed at this very genuine fear. Yet I think we on this side have determined to face this challenge and accept the fact that it is necessary for government to intervene for the sake of achieving the satisfaction of certain social needs and purposes. I think possibly that in future years this will be one of the great distinctions between the two major parties, the one favouring massive government intervention for social purposes and the other, possibly, favouring a more restricted type of private enterprise with less government intervention. If the parties could divide on these lines I think it would give the electorate a much clearer choice between the parties than has been the case in the past and I think it would be to the political advantage of the nation as a whole.

With respect to the members of this house I think also it might be an advantage, because certainly the massive intervention of government in business and industry and in what were formerly purely private affairs will be a challenge to see to it that these new encroachments of government do not impair the rights and liberties of the individual to too great a degree. It may be possible that in future years it will be the role of the private member to guard zealously against the encroachments of the rights of the individual during this new march of government into an area which was formerly an area of private affairs. If that be the case, that, too, will be to the good, because it is possible that this house will become something more than a private theatre which plays a little act every day before a select audience in the press gallery, which is apparently its main purpose of existence today.

Having stated that proposition, as a member of the party which sits on this side, may I say I agree 100 per cent with the general premise that it is time the government intervened to a very large extent in business and industrial affairs, as the budget and the other bills which I have associated with the budget, are set up to do. However, I must confess that, though I support these measures generally, and support this party, and believe very sincerely that its leadership is exactly what is needed in this country today and is the best possible leadership available, I still do not agree entirely with the details of the measures presented. I am familiar with the precepts set down by Mr. Edmund Burke which are probably those followed by most hon. members. I may say these precepts are so highly regarded by the hon. gentleman in the other place who sometimes writes editorials for one of the Ottawa newspapers, as to be held almost sacrosanct. Burke would say that having encompassed a belief that a bill is for the good of the country as a whole, a member is not a delegate of his constituents but was in parliament to do as he thinks best for the nation as a whole. That was the gist of his great Bristol speech. If we accept that principle then, at this time, I should have to sit down.

However, Mr. Chairman, I believe that in a federal state such as ours a member is to a far greater degree a delegate of his constituents than he is in a unitary state such as Great Britain. I do believe that even though a member may agree with the legislation and with the leadership of his party, he does have a duty to speak for his constituents. When he is a member of the government party, this is always a difficult choice, the choice between duty to his constituents and loyalty to his party. I feel it my duty to point out to the minister, and I hope that my words may have some effect, the slight defect in the measure. as compared with the measure as a whole, which affected my constituents.

I refer in particular to that provision which is, to some degree, to the detriment of my constituents, relating to the designated areas and the manner in which those areas are selected. I appreciate fully that this is something new, a new approach in keeping with the policies and philosophy of this government. They have moved boldly into a new field, and in so doing they have been honest enough to admit that at times they have not achieved perfection overnight. I suggest that in this area there is room for improvement, there is room for development. I am going to take the liberty of suggesting an area in which there is room for improvement. I think the method by which these designated areas have been selected has, at least in isolated instances, brought inequity to certain municipalities. I point, in this case, to an editorial in the Renfrew Advance. It is the follow-up of a great deal of editorial and news commentary in the newspapers in my riding. While I do not hold a slavish respect for the press, at times they are right. I suggest that this editorial is a correct one. The editorial is entitled, "Depressing", and reads in part as follows:

> The "distressed area" legislation planned by the federal government has, like many programs of this government, run into criticism. And whether or not the legislation is any good, very obviously, the reasoning whereby the slow growth areas were chosen for special assistance in Renfrew county are downright silly.
> As pointed out by industrial commissioners here "if Deep River is a depressed area, then Renfrew is a ghost town".
> Deep river, of course, falls within the national employment area centering on Pembroke but it is obviously not a community desperately in need of special tax assistance as proposed by the legislation. Yet it qualifies for special assistance and tax concessions.
> It is probably difficult to define exact areas of need but statistics or not, we cannot see how Renfrew county can be divided into two areas, one prosperous and the other depressed. It is just not possible.

I suggest that the rules of the game, as they were conceived, resulted in just this situation. We certainly have a contradiction here. For instance, the municipality of Deep River, which as hon. gentlemen know is the home of atomic energy projects, probably never had any unemployment. On the other hand, the town of Renfrew has striven valiantly to attract industry. It has appointed industrial commissions, hired industrial commissioners, and has done everything possible to attract industry. It is not easy to attract industry into areas such as the Ottawa valley. I point to the statistics which show that in the year 1894 the population of the town of Renfrew was 2,568; in 1901, 3,153; 1930, 5,019, and in 1962, 8,555.

I suggest that this surely indicates better than any words of mine could that this is a slow growth area. When this legislation was promulgated it was obvious that some means had to be found whereby these depressed areas might be defined so that the benefits of the legislation might be given as soon as possible. It was equally natural that the standard to be used would be the unemployment insurance areas or the national employment service areas, as I think they are properly described. This was a standard that the Department of Labour had used, and with which they had been working for many years.

However, these areas had not been set up in the first place as a means of deciding whether or not an area would get tax incentives. This consideration had not entered the matter at all. Often the areas grew up haphazardly. There is a possibility that some of them grew up through political considerations, or as a result of the facility for travelling for unemployment insurance officers. However, now they are being used to determine who gets the benefits. Inequities are bound to result from this situation, but I hope such instances are isolated and I believe they are.

We must bear in mind that over the past 15 years there has been a tremendous competition, certainly in the province of Ontario, among urban municipalities, small and large, for industry. This had nothing to do with the unemployment insurance areas. It was the municipalities themselves that were competing with one another for industry. Now that we have chosen the unemployment insurance areas as a standard, the result is that some municipalities are preferred over others and in many cases the one municipality is equally as well off as the other by any other test, except the specific test we apply of these unemployment insurance areas. I have cited one example, the municipality of Deep River, which is undoubtedly one of the most prosperous in Canada. It is now in a designated area and entitled to tax incentives. The town of Renfrew, however, with many unemployed, with plants closed and without industries that were once thriving, has been found to be unworthy of incentives. I suggest that there were bound to be some of these areas in which mistakes were made as a result of setting up a definite, immovable, set of statistics as the only guide.

In my humble submission, I think the task of selecting areas is closer to a judicial task. We deplore ad hoc decisions. Let us set up a tribunal to decide each case on its merits. There is a tendency for top level civil servants to fear political interference in such a case. Surely, there are areas in which this type of decision must be made on the merits of each case by an impartial tribunal. I believe that in this land we have grown up to the point that we could appoint that kind of tribunal, if need be, and that kind of tribunal could operate without fear of political interference. This type of tribunal, in making its decisions, would not be bound by eight years or three years. I do not see how you can say with certainty that it is only the statistics for eight years that decide whether or not a community needs help. I have cited these statistics to show that this is one of the older, settled parts of Canada which has grown almost imperceptibly in the last 50 or 60 years. In the case of this municipality the test is, has it not been a slow growth area for 50 or 60 years and not just eight years? Unemployment is not the only test.

In so far as these statistics are concerned, it is difficult to determine what percentage of the unemployment was industrial. We have had to include construction workers, workers in hospitals and in old age homes, people of this nature, who are not separated from industrial workers in the statistics kept by the Department of Labour. The whole purpose of the legislation, of course, is not related to people who work in the service industries, but is to encourage industrial growth.

I suggest that to some degree we have used the production of oranges to determine whether we should grow bananas. I think in so doing in isolated areas errors have been made, and I submit that the Minister of Finance, as I know he will, and also the Minister of Industry, as was inherent in all their speeches on these matters, will see to it that there will be a continuing review held so that a second, third and fourth look may be taken at some of these areas where inequities have resulted. I am sure every attempt will be made to right the wrong so that with two municipalities, one as poverty stricken as the other, as is the case between Pembroke and Renfrew, 40 miles apart, one will not suddenly lose all hope of getting industry which now will go to the other. I have every confidence, from the leadership that this government has shown, that inequities of this sort will be reviewed and righted in the not too distant future.

I would like to point out one other thing to the minister in this regard. There is another area on behalf of which, as the delegate of my constituents, I would like to register a complaint concerning this incentive type of legislation. It concerns the quasi rural areas. I do not believe that in those areas the incentives of quick depreciation and tax incentives alone will bring new industrial growth and employment. I think there are areas where a very special type of aid, possibly capital grants, possibly some other type of help, will be needed if the people in them are to have the opportunity of employment and share in some degree in the growth of this great land in the future.

We have seen that this government implicitly approves of that type of thinking by virtue of the fact that it has given $100 million in capital grants to the Atlantic provinces, where that type of special help, over and above these incentives, was needed. The only problem is that the maritime provinces are a large area. They were able to bring strong representations before this house, both to this government and to the previous government, to sell their needs. In addition they have had powerful cabinet ministers in office, both with the previous government and this government, who were able to sell the needs of the maritime provinces. But isolated areas, whose need I submit is just as great, areas such as those in the west end of my riding, are not able to muster this large group power to show their needs. They are not able to do much more than send one inept voice to this house in order to plead their cause.

In this regard I would point to a few more statistics. The west end of my riding was great lumber country at one time, but now the timber resources are depleted and nothing has come to take their place. I do not think anything will come to take the place of these resources, unless the government helps in some way, and I would point to a few statistics with regard to the west end of my riding to show the need in that matter.

Again we are dealing with one of the oldest settled parts of Canada, close to our great national capital, which one would have thought would have developed and shared in the growth of the country by its very proximity to the national capital, but such has not been the case. In 1930 the population of Eganville was 1,026; in 1962 it was 1,490. In 1930 the population of Killaloe was 560, and in 1962 it was 905. In 1937 Barrys Bay had 1,051 people and today it has 1,442. In 1861 the towns of Brudnell, the townships of Raglan, Lyndock, and Radcliffe had 1,023 people. Today they have 971 people.

The people in this area have largely stayed there. They are third and fourth generation Canadians, most of them of Polish descent. I know there is a great emphasis today, as there must be in our economy, on efficiency, and efficiency dictates that these people move to the metropolitan areas where, for the purposes of efficiency, great industrial plants exist. Efficiency dictates that they get out and leave their homes, but it is the tradition of this party that we do not expect people who wish to remain in their homes, who have stayed in them for three or four generations, to leave them merely for crass economic reasons.

I would point out that these people are efficient people. During the war we had an aircraft industry which came into the outskirts of the area I have been speaking of, the outskirts of Renfrew. I spoke to the head of one aircraft plant, a man who came over from England and who had been running an aircraft plant in England for many years. I asked him how did these people, these Polish people from the west end of south Renfrew, fit into an aircraft factory. I thought they might have been square pegs in round holes, but he told me that in all his experience he never had people more adaptable or who became more quickly expert and efficient in the aircraft industry, even people in Great Britain who had worked in that industry for many years. It was bound to be that they would be self-sufficient and adaptable, because anyone who has scratched out an existence in that country for three or four generations has had to be adaptable.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in these areas we will not only serve these people well but we will serve Canada well if in some measure we develop larger scale incentives for smaller areas such as these, in just the same way as we have seen fit to do for the Atlantic provinces. Just because these people are not in large areas and cannot speak in great and powerful groups, it does not say their need is not the same. Their problem is the same and if there should be, as I agree there should, $100 million for the Atlantic provinces, then there should be similar incentives for areas such as the west end of south Renfrew, which for a period of 100 years has gone forgotten and ignored.

I would that these Polish people had their own Chopin to play a polonaise today to persuade this house of their needs, because if the Polish people in the old country have suffered over generations under the heels of oppressors, surely our Polish people here are suffering just as greatly; because it hurts just as much to die through 100 years of economic attrition as it does under the heels of an oppressor. I urge that the minister take a second look at some of these areas which are in need of very special incentives, and I may say I am sure there are many others of a similar type all across Canada.

Mr. Stenson: Mr. Chairman, I feel compelled to say a few words on the amendments to the Income Tax Act outlined in Bill C-95. I have refrained from speaking as often as I should have, but this legislation affects my constituency as well as many others to such an extent that I feel obliged to say a few words about the act and the proposed amendments. I am referring in particular to section 15.

I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Renfrew South on the statements he has just made. I have always felt that a good many members on the government side must be disturbed about this bill. When the Liberal government selected the depressed areas on the basis of unemployment figures for the summer months instead of the more important winter months, it is apparent many of the designated areas would not have qualified for this special attention if the figures had been taken for the winter months.

I think it was entirely unfair and extremely unrealistic for the federal government to try to design any formula to control the basic trends and developments which, in the course of events, could be rectified by the law of supply and demand. This new action the government has instigated will confuse the issue further through the movement of industry from stronger industrial centres to those designated as distressed areas. This movement will develop new areas of labour distress and in all probability will not solve the problems of those areas which are designated as being in need of new employment opportunities.

The employment figures in Peterborough and other cities that enjoy increased summer activity due to the tourist influx are raised by this activity which lasts only a few short months. This type of employment does not demand a high wage scale. I would not suggest that Peterborough be included among those cities designated by the federal government as distressed areas. We listened to the hon. member for Northumberland make a very good speech last Friday. I know she would not want to see Peterborough designated as a distressed area, nor would I want to see her constituency designated as a distressed area. But this is what is happening in western Ontario around Windsor and Brantford. Cities that have hired industrial commissioners to tackle this problem or which have set up strong committees within their own councils or chambers of commerce are going to find this a hazardous blow to their communities.

Mr. Karl B. Hines, president of Nashua Canada Limited, wrote a letter to the Peterborough Examiner several weeks ago noting the hazards of the depressed area legislation from an industrialist's point of view. He noted that a difference of 130 jobs put Brantford in the depressed area category but kept Guelph out. As the Peterborough Examiner comments:

> Soon after this was revealed, Magnetic Metals of Canada moved from Guelph to Brantford to take advantage of Brantford's preferred position. Its departure could conceivably put enough people out of work in Guelph to qualify that city for depressed classification, and its arrival in Brantford may reduce the unemployment population ratio below the depressed level.

All the legislation is doing is shifting jobs rather than helping to create them. I am only mentioning this to show that areas other than western Ontario are worried about this legislation.

I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he discussed the planning of the new penitentiary at Warkworth with the Minister of Industry and why he did not place it in a depressed area. I am very happy that he picked Warkworth, which is in Northumberland riding, but it bothers me why the government did not see fit to have it set up in a depressed area, for this is what he is asking private capital to do.

I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works where he is going to build the new Royal Canadian Mint. Maybe the hon. member for Renfrew will receive this new building.

[Mr. Stenson.]

To come back to the question of industrial commissioners, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry or the Minister of Finance what help the government is recommending for these commissioners or new industries not contemplating moving to depressed areas. I am told that commissioners trying to secure industries for their particular areas are met with a blank stare and aloofness when they confront members of the government in Ottawa to inquire about federal aid. They are told that new industries should go to the designated areas.

I realize the concern that is prevalent in western Ontario but I can say quite frankly that this same concern, no matter where you go, is felt all across Canada. The formula which is being used shows that a difference of a few tenths of 1 per cent in the unemployment ratio to population is all that is required to bring an area into the designated class and at the same time leave out other areas. If a complete and more realistic analysis were made of the situation, it is entirely probable that Peterborough would be found to be in the same situation as Brantford. A complete section appearing in the Financial Post a few months ago on the city of Brantford indicated that they were experiencing unprecedented development in the growth of their existing industries and the arrival of new ones.

I would ask the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry to reconsider seriously the legislation which they have introduced because I feel that the 50 per cent straight line depreciation which is being allowed companies that are settling in designated areas should be extended to all types of industry, whether or not they are controlled by foreign interests. If this were the case it would provide an incentive for all types of industry, no matter how they are controlled, to expand their production activities and thus provide additional employment opportunities.

We in Peterborough feel that the industries already located there should have as much consideration when they expand or increase their productivity as new industries are being offered at the present time. Why should they not have the same advantage as competitors? I feel the same way about this matter as the hon. member for Wellington South. The clause pertaining to industry should be withdrawn, as it makes for a most discriminatory piece of legislation.

Before I sit down I should like to point out to the Minister of Finance the increased trade this country has received and is still receiving due to the aggressive steps taken by the former minister of trade and commerce. This was accomplished by one man and the staff in his department. One cannot help but wonder what the outcome will be, now that the Liberal government has set up its Department of Industry. We know about the great numbers of staff they are accumulating to deal with these problems, at a tremendous expense to our country, and we wonder whether the results will justify this expenditure when so much was accomplished by so few under the last government.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, in rising to answer some of the questions that have been raised on clause 1 of the bill perhaps I may be permitted to deal with one or two of the questions that were raised earlier in debate. Before doing so may I say I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce would join me in agreeing with the hon. member for Peterborough that the ex-member for Broadview, who at one time was minister of trade and commerce, did do a good job. I should like to see him back in the house some day.

Many suggestions have been made during the course of the debate about ways to improve the Income Tax Act and, as I said earlier today, the officials of my department are making notes of all these points. I am thinking particularly, as I said earlier, of the point made by the hon. member for Quebec West and others about charitable donations. I am thinking about the point made with regard to deductions for part time students and a number of other suggestions that have been made for concessions and assistance to various worthy groups in our society. These will be recorded and they will be studied and considered before the next budget.

I do not think it would be profitable to repeat the remarks I made at the outset of the debate on second reading, which was over two weeks ago, as to the objects and the purpose of the bill. If I may, I would, however, like to refer to one or two of the speeches that have been made. If hon. members will cast their minds back a couple of weeks they will recall the interesting and wide ranging speech made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in which he discussed, among other things, the whole process of budget making. He also referred to the effect that the United States interest equalization tax might have and suggested that Canada might take the lead in finding a solution to the international balance of payments problem. I can assure him that Canada is prepared to take an active part in the studies on international liquidity that are now being undertaken by the international monetary fund, and by some of the more important countries that are associated with that fund, including our own.

On other occasions both the Prime Minister and I have referred to the preparation of the annual budget, the way it is proceeded with in Canada and ways of improving it. There are those who suggested that they prefer the United States system under which the administration makes proposals to congress which are debated fully before the final legislation is decided upon. There are advantages in that approach and there are also disadvantages so far as tax changes are concerned. I suggest that it gives ample advantage, perhaps too much advantage, to powerful lobbyists to block measures which, while perhaps advantageous to the public as a whole, would be restricting the privileges and preferences of certain interest groups. In any event, our system of government is quite different from that of the United States. We do not have the same separation, as all hon. members know, of the executive and legislative arms of government, and for this reason I suggest that their system would not be appropriate for us.

It has been suggested that we should hold public hearings prior to the presentation of the budget and solicit suggestions and proposals in this way. We have given a lot of thought to this. If it were done it would be necessary to create some sort of board or permanent commission of officials to receive representations and have them argued out before that board or commission. I have not been able to think of any way to do this which would not involve considerable duplication and overlapping of functions and administrative machinery. I suggest that periodical public debates and representations from interested groups can be extremely valuable.

Usually, in our country royal commissions are established for that purpose; and I would remind hon. members that the royal commission on taxation is holding hearings at the present time and will probably go on doing so for some months to come. However, I do not believe that some kind of permanent royal commission would be helpful. I do not quite know what the answer is, although I think the question deserves a great deal more thought and study. In the meantime I should like to take this opportunity to invite special bodies, such as the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the consumers groups and all other interested groups and associations, to submit their annual presentations to the government as early as possible, and in any event not later than January 31 of next year. I should like to extend a similar invitation to any individuals who may have representations which they would like to submit. In this way there could be at least some public debate of the proposals which these main associations wish to put forward well in advance of the time when budget decisions are made, and I propose to write to all the principal organizations to this general effect.

A lot has been said during the course of this debate about designated areas, and I would again, with respect, refer hon. members to the speech made the other day by the hon. member for Northumberland. I do not think anyone has suggested that the formula proposed is perfect. A number of criticisms of it have been made. I think it should be remembered, as has been said, that the formula will be subject to change and modification. On the other hand, I suggest to hon. members that if we wait until we get the perfect solution to this or many of the other proposals included in the bill it will be a long, long time before we accomplish anything; and with the greatest respect I suggest that we will make more progress if we proceed with the measures which have been proposed, even though some of them may not be perfect. Then, as we discover through experience their defects, if there are defects, we will proceed to amend them and improve them.

I do not think it would be helpful at this stage of the debate to deal with all the questions which have been raised on the detailed items included in the bill; I think we will make more progress perhaps if we do that when we come to the relevant clauses. However, I should like to deal with a number of the points raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West in his speech the other day, some of which he made before, during the debate at the resolution stage. The hon. member raised the question of the desirability in certain of these clauses to place the emphasis on residence rather than citizenship. This arises in connection with clause 28 which deals with Canadian ownership and control. The hon. member's remarks concern the rule which refers to ownership of 25 per cent or more of the shares of a corporation by individual residents in Canada and to the rule that 25 per cent of the directors must be resident in Canada. The Canadian Income Tax Act taxes on the basis of residence. This concept is well established and understood. To introduce a test based on citizenship would, I suggest, introduce a completely new concept into the Income Tax Act. Moreover, such a rule would require corporations wishing to qualify as Canadian under the 25 per cent share ownership test to inquire into the citizenship status of—perhaps the hon. member did not mean of their shareholders, but at least of their directors.

[Mr. Gordon.]

I have some reservations about this proposal. Residents of Canada have to have homes here and are part of the Canadian community. There is no guarantee that a citizen in the technical sense would be less likely than a resident who is not a citizen to participate in the arrangements based on trustees and nominees of owners to which the hon. member referred. I think in particular when I say this of many of the new Canadians who, for one reason or another, are not yet Canadian citizens in the legal sense but who nevertheless are making a great contribution to this country. I do not think anyone would wish that they be excluded from consideration in these matters.

The next point that the hon. member for Edmonton West raised had to do with associated companies. I think he has raised the same point on other occasions. He suggests that the rules concerning association of companies discourage the successful businessman who controls a company from investing in new companies, because the company he owns and the new companies would then become associated. This association would come about only if the businessman takes a controlling interest in the shares of the new company, which the hon. member suggests is usually necessary. I suggest that the hon. member for Edmonton West is arguing that if a successful businessman puts his money into more than one company, all the companies he controls should enjoy the lower rate on the first $35,000 of taxable income. I suggest that acceptance of this proposal would lead to allowing all companies, or a great many companies, to take the lower rate on the first $35,000 whether associated or not. The lower rate on the first $35,000 of company income was intended to help small businessmen. It is not intended to provide a tax concession to businessmen who hold a majority interest in a number of companies.

The hon. member has argued that the minority shareholders in the associated company are penalized by reason of the association rule. But this is the result of giving control to a person who controls other companies and who chooses to allot the benefit of a lower rate to a more favoured company. The amendment in the bill does not change the principle or intent of the law concerning companies; it is only intended to strengthen the present rule, which has existed for many years, that only one of a group of associated companies shall be allowed the benefit of the lower rate on the first $35,000 of taxable income.

The next point raised by the hon. member was in connection with the ownership of assets for purposes of the new section 71A.

He referred to the requirement that 95 per cent of the assets owned by the taxpayer must be in the designated area, and must be new if the business is to qualify as a new business. The hon. member seemed to suggest that the word "own" or "ownership" should be defined. I am not at all sure that that word can be defined for this particular purpose. I suggest to him that there are well established tests and rules concerning ownership and that it is not necessary to define this concept for other parts of the income tax law. Capital cost allowances are granted to owners of depreciable assets and the Department of National Revenue has not experienced difficulty in determining who is the owner of property for this purpose. The same rules would apply in connection with this section.

I should like to mention one other point which was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He posed the question whether the coming into force of this bill would terminate article 11 of the Canada-United States tax convention. There can be, no doubt that the increased rate of 20 per cent is not imposed until it is actually withheld from dividends. Article 11 of the Canada-U.S. tax agreement is specific in saying that tax must be imposed. It was desired to give advance notice of this change in the tax rate and the effective way to do this is to pass the necessary legislation now but to provide for it to go into effect at some future date. The date provided is January 1, 1965. Not only does this arrangement give companies time to rearrange their affairs if they wish to do so, but it also provides time for negotiations to be entered into with the United States with a view to the revision of the Canada-United States income tax convention to take account of Canada's new tax policies and the special circumstances which have made these changes desirable. Preliminary steps have been taken in connection with these negotiations, but obviously they cannot proceed very far until the tax changes proposed by Canada have been enacted into law.

I think I said that was the final point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West with which I wanted to deal. However, I should like to say a brief word about the remarks he made in connection with the right of appeal from ministerial rulings relating to dividend stripping. With respect, I disagree with the hon. member's interpretation of the effect of this section. The bill gives the tax appeal board or the exchequer court a specific right to vacate the direction of a minister if the board or the court on consideration of the relevant facts reaches a conclusion which is different from the conclusion of the minister. In arriving at this conclusion, the relevant facts may be reviewed and findings made thereon.

I do not like being in the position of proposing new discretionary power for my colleague the Minister of National Revenue, but we are confronted with this situation: there is a wide open loophole in the tax law as it stands at present. The royal commission on taxation has not yet reached a conclusion as to how it might best be dealt with. I had lunch with the chairman day before yesterday. So we face this position: We can leave things as they are until the royal commission has considered the subject and reported, or we can close the loophole now and stop this milking of the treasury though not in the way we would, perhaps, prefer to do it—an effective way, notwithstanding, and a way we would hope to change as soon as the report of the royal commission has been received, provided a satisfactory alternative is recommended. It seems to me we are confronted with two evils, but that one of the evils is a lot worse than the other.

I should be glad to deal with the various other questions which have been raised by members of this committee as we come to the appropriate clauses in the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: Before the minister proceeds, may I say I think the hon. gentleman will agree with my contention that, once ministerial discretion has been exercised judiciously, it is very difficult to get that decision upset on appeal. Once the minister or, in fact, the department, has exercised its discretion it is very hard to upset the ruling, provided the discretion has been exercised on the proper facts and exercised judiciously.

Mr. Gordon: If it has been exercised judiciously on the basis of the proper facts I would have to agree with the hon. member that it would, indeed, be difficult to get the decision reversed. But what is the alternative? Should we leave this door wide open until we have a report from the royal commission, or should we do something now to close the loophole? That seems to be the dilemma we encounter.

I was about to say that if members of this committee would not think it unusual or improper I should like to venture an observation or two about clause 1 of this bill. This particular clause—and I suggest hon. members might like to read it, or look at it—is designed to plug a loophole. The amendment is to section 5 (1) (a) of the act which requires that income from employment including value of board, lodging and other benefits received by virtue of the employment must be included in an employee's income. An exception is provided for benefits received by an employee from his employer's contributions to certain insurance or retirement plans, such as a registered pension plan, a group sickness plan and, as the law reads at present, to a group life insurance plan. The amendment inserts the expression "group term life insurance plan" in place of the present words "group life", in this list of exceptions. The effect of the amendment is that the benefit derived by an employee through his employer's contributions or premiums under a group life insurance plan will in future be excluded from income only if the employer's contributions are to provide term insurance.

It has been intended in the past that this exemption from income would apply only for term insurance and generally this has been the kind of insurance provided under employees group life insurance plans. However, recently there have been indications that some employers were arranging to provide a few key employees with substantial tax-free benefits in the form of permanent type life insurance policies with cash surrender values. This amendment is intended to make sure that this kind of benefit does not go tax-free.

The expression "group term life insurance policy" is defined in clause 27 as a group life insurance policy, under which no amount is payable except in the event of the death or disability of the taxpayer.

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Chairman, not having had the chance yet to express my views in the budget debate, I take this opportunity to make known the representations I received from the voters of the riding of Kamouraska following the budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance.

At the beginning of my remarks, I will first point out the disastrous results of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. I will dwell on this a little and then I will mention some decisions taken quite recently about depressed areas or other matters, but I will insist especially on the government's decision to tax building materials and manufacturing equipment.

That decision is unfair in many respects.

In spite of numerous protests, the government decided to reduce the 11 per cent tax to 4 per cent, with the avowed intention to increase it eventually to 8 per cent, then to 11 per cent.

Considering that the budget has already been greatly amended, I still think that the voters of the county of Kamouraska and all Canadian voters would be quite happy if the minister could find another solution and did not implement his decision to increase the tax up to 11 per cent.

In view of the amendments already made and the numerous representations coming from here and there, we are still hopeful that the minister will reconsider his original decision and that this famous tax will finally be abolished.

We have every reason to believe that the minister's advisers are not much aware of the importance of the wood products industry, because they would not have advised him to levy a tax on machinery required by that industry. While I am speaking of advisers, perhaps I might venture to give some advice to the Minister of Finance in the preparation of his next budget: I urge him also to consult labour and farm organization leaders, and representatives of Canadian families, instead of consulting only the representatives of high finance.

Of course, in the field of forestry, large companies are concerned when it comes to the payment of taxes on operating equipment. But there are also thousands of medium and small businesses, which can hardly live and often suffer heavy losses and even must be closed following such a disturbance in the organization of their operations.

We know perfectly that when a firm has to pay a 4 per cent tax on the purchase of a bulldozer costing say $30,000, its operating costs will be increased and this will be taken into account when the finished product will be sold and competition will thus create difficulties in many cases.

In short, such a tax will have unfavourable repercussions in the building field and will inevitably cause a price increase—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Dionne: I am sorry—

[Text]

Mr. Macaluso: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. These remarks are completely out of order. The hon. member seems to be talking about the sales tax bill rather than the income tax bill which is presently before the committee. I hope therefore that the Chair will kindly bring the hon. member back to the income tax bill which is under discussion.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, just a word on the point of order. A while ago, the hon. member for Renfrew spoke about everything under the sun except Bill No. C-95, but nobody objected.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: There has been some general agreement that on this first clause hon. members will not be limited too strictly, but I think it might be worth while if we were to stick as closely as possible to the measure under discussion.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne: Of course, I would have much to say on this matter which I did not have the opportunity to discuss during the budget speech debate. Because of the many objections which could be raised, I will restrict my remarks to the matter under study.

I realize that we are now considering various steps to relieve unemployment. Following various investigations, some areas have been designated as depressed areas. I find quite ridiculous that after three centuries, during which our people have worked and toiled on Canadian soil, certain areas in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada have to apply to the minister and state all kinds of reasons in order to be recognized as depressed areas and obtain some assistance from the government to get out of an unbearable situation created by a rather senseless system.

I know that few people understand this bill. It is too complicated; it is like a maze designed to confuse the people of Canada.

The granting of tax exemptions to companies which have 25 per cent Canadian ownership will not bring about new industries unless the latter have guarantees that they will be able to sell their products. Otherwise, how could an industry be interested in establishing itself in a given area? However, before there is any question of selling products, one must determine whether purchasing power is high enough in Canada.

Some will say that this is irrelevant but I can connect my remarks to the debate. For instance, the people in the lumber industry are being forgotten. On the other hand, when he goes to work in the United States—if I may be allowed to bring this up in the house—in order to earn some $1,500 and then comes back to Canada to get enough unemployment insurance stamps to live on during the off season, he is required to pay income tax on what he earned across the border. For instance, suppose he earns $1,500 in the United States and $1,000 in Canada, he only gets a $2,000 exemption and pays taxes on $500. He is no longer forgotten when the time comes to collect taxes. Let us see to it that the act is amended so that workers can live a decent life when they are going through hard times.

To restore economic stability in Canada, it will not be enough to reform our tax structures, our industrial structures or what have you.

A reform of morals and institutions is certainly needed, but all those reforms will remain useless and ineffective as long as a real monetary reform is not effected.

The financial system involves taxation which annoys everybody, whereas a monetary reform would result in the distribution of a national dividend based on the difference between total production and total purchasing power. If you look into the possibilities you will see that it is just plain common sense.

Manufactured products would be more easily and entirely disposed of, so that industries would be more interested in developing the country. It would not be necessary to discuss for weeks to try and take a little money from this one to give a little more to that one, that is, the system of robbing Peter to pay Paul. This is a topsy-turvy system.

We are attempting, with great difficulty, to overcome a disastrous economic situation which is leading us to ruin.

That is why we are unable to solve the unemployment problem which has been with us for too long.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I rise to take part in what has been so far a very interesting debate on Bill No. C-95. This measure has been the subject of continual controversy which dates back to the budget. I was interested in hearing the hon. member for Renfrew South refer to the budget at the opening of his speech as one of the great documents that will go down in history. It will never be forgotten, Mr. Chairman. It was the most irresponsible, ridiculous budget that has ever been introduced into the parliament of Canada or perhaps ever will be introduced into the parliament of Canada. Certainly it was ill conceived and certain portions of it were hastily withdrawn.

However, this one provision dealing with foreign investment we see again in Bill No. C-95. Today we are facing a problem in Canada in trying to get Canadian development by Canadians. We see the provision in Bill No. C-95 which is designed to encourage development in specific areas, depressed areas as they are called, across the country. On the other hand, we see a provision in Bill No. C-95 which is designed, to some extent, to discourage foreign investment in our country. We certainly have conflicting purposes here. On the one hand, we are trying to encourage development and on the other hand we are trying to limit investment in the developing industries of this country. Some experts may have suggested to the minister that the government should interfere more with investment in Canada. Other experts may say that the government should adopt greater measures of control over the developing industries of Canada. I do not believe Canadians want this. Canadians are becoming more and more concerned with government controls, and want less and less interference from the government and a greater opportunity to contribute to the development of Canada.

At various times the minister has said that he does not like this power of discretion that results from the implementation of Bill No. C-95. However, he sees no other way of getting around the problem. This results in a further increase in government interference with Canadian industry. The government seems to think that it can run and develop Canadian industry better than private enterprise. The Canadian wants a chance to share in this development of Canada. He wants a chance to aid in the development of Canada. Above all, he wants a greater opportunity in Canada for all Canadians.

These provisions will result in the slowing up of Canadian growth because we are trying to discourage foreign investment. How will this provide greater opportunities for Canadians, Mr. Chairman? The most recent edition of the Financial Post estimates that our gross national product will increase by something like 6 per cent this year. How does this compare with a 9 per cent increase last year? Their forecast for the coming year is only a possible 3 or 4 per cent, and I ask how does this hold out any great opportunities for Canadians to participate in industry? I suggest it does not.

I suggest that most parts of this bill are highly impractical. The Minister of Finance is stubbornly, doggedly hanging on to the remaining part of his budget; otherwise he would scrap the whole bill. It singles out foreign companies, which have less than 25 per cent of their shares on Canadian stock exchanges, for a greater rate of tax. How can we determine the nationality and the residence of invested capital? Even if this bill passes, how long will the government have to continue to keep a careful watch on the percentage and Canadian residence of investment in various stocks? I would be quite interested to hear what Mr. Kierans had to say about this particular clause. To me it seems very impractical, if not bordering on the impossible.

Think of the growth in the number of civil servants required to police this part of the bill. Here again we see Parkinson's law in action, greater and greater bureaucracy, and greater and greater control over the development of Canada.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

When one looks at Canada's growth over the past 10 years he must realize that foreign investment played a major part in it. Coming from Alberta it is perhaps natural that I should look at that province. We were fortunate enough to have oil and gas below ground and had United States capital coming in to develop new industry. There has been a great growth in the service industries, and I see no harm in foreign investment in those industries.

Last week I noticed an article in the Globe and Mail for October 23 headed, "Tax plan called a bar to realty investment." Our real estate boards have met and condemned this tax plan in Bill C-95 because they say it will limit investment in real estate throughout Canada. Many more service industries will be affected, and I see no harm in allowing foreign investment to develop these industries thus providing jobs and work opportunities for people all across the country.

I spoke on the resolution stage of this bill about the need for greater capital being loaned to Canadians. In this way we could give them an opportunity to share in the development of Canada. I suggested that the development bank should be transferred to the new Department of Industry where the people running it could work in close liaison with that department. This is a prime necessity. If we want Canadians to invest we must help them, show them, and provide the necessary capital for them to get into business.

In this bill we see a tightening up, or a penalty clause for foreign investment on the one hand; but yet if foreign investors do come into Canada and locate industries in depressed areas we will give them a big helping hand. In effect this does nothing more than complicate the tax structure of the country. At present there is a royal commission studying it, and the tax structure has been said to have become too complicated. Certainly Canadians generally will agree with that contention. We want a greater simplification of the tax structure instead of giving incentives with one hand and taking them back with the other. You may keep the pot boiling by doing this, but it adds nothing to create opportunities and provide jobs for Canadians. It only increases bureaucracy on the part of the government and encourages creeping socialism; and Canadians have said from time to time that we have gone too far in that direction and should give private enterprise a greater chance to develop the country.

It is interesting to note that in U.S. News and World Report of October 14 last, on the page headed, "Business around the world", world bank chief Mr. Woods made that plain in his speech on September 30 at a meeting in Washington of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund. I think the minister attended that meeting or had representatives there. The article says:

> In blunt terms he criticized countries that permit wild inflation.

What has been the position here since April 8? The cost of living went up by three points, while under the former administration it increased by only six points in six years. I do not know whether this would be termed wild inflation, but it is certainly rapid inflation. What are we doing to stop it? We are doing very little in the budget and nothing in Bill C-95. The article continues:

> He hit hard against the grabbing of private businesses by governments.

Under this bill we will have greater control and greater bureaucracy. Mr. Woods went on to say:

> Progress will come fastest in countries that attract private capital.

What are we doing under Bill C-95? We are discouraging foreign investment. Mr. Woods went on to say:

> ...give private enterprise a chance to flourish and expand. These ideas... brought a few cheers.

I do not know whether the minister was one of those who cheered, but there certainly is mounting concern throughout the world at government bureaucracy, and at governments placing their peoples in strait-jackets, not allowing them to expand industry and create work opportunities.

We have heard a lot of talk about depressed areas. How are they decided? The Minister of Industry has circulated a sheet of paper outlining the depressed areas and how they were placed in that classification. He said they were basically areas of slow economic growth and that N.E.S. figures were used.

In this connection it was interesting to hear the hon. member for Renfrew South speak of his area as a possible depressed area. He led us to believe that its timber resources were now depleted and that it should be considered as a depressed area. He said that with that vast depleted forest industry one part of his constituency had been left in a depressed state; but it is interesting that in the 1961 census for Canada, under the heading forest products, the total value in Renfrew county was $916,519, the greatest total forest value of any county in the province of Ontario. The next county in Ontario had only half that forest product value in a given year; yet he led us to believe that his county was a depleted forest area.

I only point this out to illustrate the difficulty of trying to put your finger on one part of the country as a depressed area, and on another as not. One part of my constituency actually made application to the previous government to be considered as a manpower surplus area which needed incentives, but almost overnight that area has now been told it is no longer a manpower surplus area and cannot be considered under the new depressed area legislation. It has no opportunity to appeal that decision. The minister was invited out there but he did not come. He said he was looking at statistics.

I am not like the Minister of Agriculture. I do not think statistics are for losers, but I do not think they paint an accurate picture of a given situation. In any case they do not take into consideration many of the feasible and practical applications that actually are at work in the economy of given areas of the country. Certainly much thought must be given to determining depressed areas. I was interested in the suggestion that an area development agency would be set up in the Department of Industry to assist in the economic development of the designated areas. Has this development agency been set up yet? What is the representation on it? I should like to see the representation contain members from Alberta and western Canada generally. Certainly when one looks at the 1961 census figures he realizes that Alberta has grown faster populationwise than any other province in Canada. Why has it? Because of the development of industry which has been financed to a large extent by foreign investment.

Certainly there should be men from Alberta on the development agency. Maybe they could offer wise counsel and wise advice when consideration was being given to what and where should be a designated area. With respect to part of my constituency, I could quote the census figures to show that in 1921 there was a certain population, that in 1931 the population was nearly the same, that in 1941 it had not grown and that in 1951 and 1961 the population was the same. Over a period of 40 years the population remained the same. Would you not determine that area as being one of slow economic growth? Would you not determine that area as being one certainly in need of industry incentives?

Apparently the minister did not wait to establish the area development agency before he picked what he called depressed areas. I think he should have. He should have taken counsel from all across Canada before making these rapid-fire decisions. This is all part of the 60 days of decision and perhaps the only part they have not yet withdrawn.

I look at the list of designated areas and I wonder what similarity there is to the patronage list of the Postmaster General. I wonder what similarity there is between that list and this list. I am inclined to think they may be a whole lot closer than you and I would wish them to be.

I have referred to the area extending from Drumheller east to the border, an area that has certainly had the slowest economic growth of any part of the province of Alberta, an area which has had a slow population growth in comparison with any other part of Canada. Certainly this area should be considered as a designated area from the point of view of offering incentives to industry to establish there.

We look at another clause in the bill concerning lease rental and lease option arrangements. The minister says he wants to plug these loopholes. The plugging of the loophole he is trying to plug in this particular case will do nothing to provide opportunities for Canadians. It will do nothing to provide jobs for Canadians. All we have to do is to go out across the country and look at the situation. Contractors make their bids on jobs and if they get a contract they are prepared to go out and rent the equipment to do the job, in the hope that in many cases the rent can be applied against the purchase price of the equipment if they should desire to purchase.

But the minister says: Oh, no, this is a loophole we are going to plug. Certainly it may be abused in many cases; but I should like to see a piece of legislation that has been passed by this house that somebody will not abuse. If there ever was such a piece of legislation it would put us in a strait-jacket so that not one of us could do anything. That is just about an impossibility. While to some people there may appear to be a loophole, it is still a great aid to contractors throughout the country in making their bids on and taking jobs that are perhaps a little larger than their present equipment allows them to take.

It is interesting to note that on the one hand the Minister of Finance is trying to control the rental of equipment by agreement. Actually he is not going to be too successful in doing this because contractors will get around the provisions. They will buy the equipment. All they will have to do is to buy the equipment in the year in which they rent it and this will defeat the minister's objective in including this clause.

It is interesting to note his action with regard to rental agreements on machinery generally, including farm machinery. It is interesting to note his observations in this regard and those of the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture said in a speech not long ago that one of the main problems of farmers today is the high cost of farm machinery. He went on to say that he thought rental depots should be set up across the country so that farmers could rent their equipment for a given job rather than buying it.

Again we have two ministers with somewhat conflicting ideas on a given subject. It is not the first time we have seen two ministers in the same spot. I can remember the Minister of Labour offering $500 for new home construction and the Minister of Finance taking away $800 through the sales tax. Whether the same thing will apply in this instance I do not know. As a farmer, if I want to rent machinery to do a job I want to have the opportunity to let the rent apply on the purchase price of the machine if I decide to buy the machine. I see nothing wrong with that. I think it is a good thing. I think if a person has to put out half the price of a machine in rent he should be able to allow that rent to apply as the down payment on the machine, if he decides to buy it. There is nothing wrong with that.

The loophole that the minister is trying to plug in this regard will still exist. He will not be successful in plugging it. He will just make it more difficult for contractors, farmers and all those who wish to rent equipment rather than buy it for the purpose of taking on any job or contract they may be bidding on. In fact, if the minister plugs all the loopholes he is trying to plug, even if it were feasible to plug them all it would not increase the general revenue of the country to any great extent. It would increase it by far less than 1 per cent of the deficit the government is going to have this year, and certainly it is going to be a large one. We are all well aware of that.

Actually the minister issued a grave warning that Canada's political destiny is at stake. He issued this warning in his initial speech in introducing Bill No. C-95. Canada's sovereignty is at stake if the present cabinet does not take a stand on many issues with which it is confronted involving labour, wheat sales, finance, nuclear weapons, and so on down the line. Certainly job opportunities must be provided for Canadians. In my opinion Bill No. C-95 does not measure up to the need for greater resource development in Canada. At best Bill No. C-95 does nothing more than legalize patronage. I suggest that is what is happening in the naming of these depressed areas. It is nothing more than legalized patronage. It is nothing more than a continuance of the Liberal party plan—more bureaucracy, more socialism, more patronage.

Canadians want none of these things. Canadians want a more simplified income tax form, more opportunity and a chance to share in the commercial growth and development of the resources of Canada. I am disappointed with Bill No. C-95. It does not do the things that I think Canadians want. It does not provide them with the opportunity to have a part in the development of Canada.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on clause 1 of the bill and to comment on something that the minister has said several times today. He said that basically it does not matter what you do as long as you do something. I must admit that I like to see ideas tried. I like to see progressive legislation brought forward. I think we have to try new ideas and make new efforts from time to time. Otherwise our legislation and our national economy become stale. I think that this particular theory of "Don't just stand there, do something" is a very good one in military circles, where action of some kind must be taken or you will be shot down. But in matters of finance and taxation one has to move very slowly. I think the minister moved much too quickly and as a result has got himself into some difficulty.

There is one intriguing part of this budget I should like to mention tonight in connection with income tax. It was introduced by the minister in these words, to be found at page 1007 of Hansard for June 13:

> The source of revenue which we shall seek on a non-recurring basis relates to the income tax on corporations. It is desirable that corporations should pay their income tax as their income is earned to a greater extent than they do at present.

I must admit that what has intrigued me about this particular paragraph, the import of which is now clause 13, is that it is a tax increase which is not a tax increase. It is the old hat trick where there is an increase in taxation which is in fact not an increase. It has made me wonder how the minister could draw this rabbit out of the hat to the extent of $220 million in corporation income tax without increasing taxation.

I have looked into this matter and, after investigation, I am led to the belief that it was just a gimmick and in fact will not do what it is intended to do. I think the minister intended to use this means to raise another $220 million revenue without damaging the corporation tax structure or increasing corporation income tax, and he did it by the simple expedient of making the tax payable earlier. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, making the tax payable earlier is no different, in the circumstances in which it has been introduced, from paying more tax. It is called a non-recurring tax, and certainly it cannot recur. Because instead of starting to pay tax at the end of June in each year when returns are filed, the tax is now payable two months earlier, or at least the payments are started two months earlier.

There are two difficulties in this connection. The first difficulty is the accounting one. I do not want to take issue with the minister on the subject of accounting, but I am told that the taxation at an earlier date, even if the returns do not have to be filed until later, is going to cause a great deal of difficulty for accountants who are doing work both on personal income tax and corporation tax. In any case the accountants—

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Benson: Could he explain to me how one can cause an accounting problem merely by corporations paying their taxes faster?

Mr. Aiken: Yes, Mr. Chairman. My information is that accountants are required to make an estimate or calculation of the income tax due by April 30, because that is the date on which the first payment is made. On that date a calculation of income tax must be estimated by the accountant. I am saying to the parliamentary secretary that I am told—and I have to go on what I am told—that at this time most accountants are deeply involved in personal income tax matters and—

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Aiken: May I just finish; I will be glad to have the parliamentary secretary correct me if I am wrong. I am told that at this time accountants are very much involved in personal income tax matters, and that they must make estimates for a good many of the corporations in connection with payments which begin at the end of April. The second difficulty is that in fact the tax becomes payable earlier, and while it is non-recurring in the year in which this tax now becomes payable, there is an additional $220 million payable, and payable at a time when a good many of the corporations involved are making expenditures for the current year's business. This is money which could very well be used to prepare for the year's business rather than to make earlier payments of income tax. I am advised that the earlier payment of tax does in fact increase the revenue, although it does not appear to. I would be glad to answer the parliamentary secretary now.

Mr. Benson: I have another question, if the hon. member would permit it. Does he not know that all that is required in order to calculate one's instalment of tax is merely to take one eleventh of the previous year's tax and pay it each month? This involves no accounting difficulty except a simple division, and as a practising accountant I can see no serious problem.

Mr. Aiken: Then, I do not know why the clause has been written in the way it has, because there are two alternatives and I presume the alternative which is better for the taxpayer is the one he will adopt. He can either pay on the basis of the last year's tax or he can pay on the basis of his estimated tax for the current year. If he just chooses to pay on last year's basis, this is perfectly all right, but it may not be to his benefit as a taxpayer. He may be a fairly new taxpayer and may have increased or decreased his business substantially. He may have branched out into new fields, and if he only pays his estimated tax for the previous year then I ask why the alternative is put into the clause. Because he can do it on either basis. I am told that as a matter of practice this causes difficulty. However, I do not want to argue with the parliamentary secretary about it because he has his opinions and I will be glad to hear them; but I have to rely on things people who are in the business tell me.

On page 1003 of Hansard for June 13 the minister mentioned tax incentives for industry. He said:

> This means, Mr. Speaker, that we have no alternative but to look to our tax structure not only with a view to providing incentives for increased employment and industrial growth, but also in a search for additional sources of revenue.

It was our understanding at that time that the minister intended to produce tax incentives in order to get industry going. These incentives have in fact not been incentives at all but the reverse. We have had tax increases, and on the particular item we are discussing the accelerated payment of corporation income tax is a tax increase regardless of how you go about it. The corporations have to pay $220 million more to the government, and you cannot call it anything else but a tax increase for that particular sector of the economy we are trying to help.

I do not want to go into the increases in sales tax; in fact I could not do so. Nor shall I discuss the question of the increase in taxation to finance the old age pension, part of which will come from the corporate field. Nevertheless, I do want to point out at this time that there have been very few incentives in corporate income tax; on the contrary there have been tax increases at a time when we ought to be encouraging industry.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that we all want to proceed with the bill. There are other matters to be discussed at the time we reach them clause by clause, but I should like this particular point clarified. I am not a believer in miracles, but I do know that the minister has tried to produce one here. However, I say a tax is a tax.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act.

I must say, at once, that this bill has not impressed me much. We must admit, and nearly all those who have spoken before me have done so, that the Income Tax Act is a rather complicated document, quite difficult to understand and to sort out. I think that the amendments which the government intends to bring will only make it more complicated.

In studying this act, I had the impression that it resembled abstract art. Abstract art, Mr. Chairman, represents something which cannot be easily understood. An abstract painting, an abstract sculpture represents something that anyone can look at and then find in it very different meanings.

The Income Tax Act is just like that painting; everyone can study it and find in it different aspects and meanings. That is why those lucky enough to have at their service people who can spend long hours studying that abstract measure, can succeed in finding ways to evade some taxes.

We have heard of some proceedings instituted against some companies, some businessmen who allegedly succeeded in evading taxes they should have paid to the treasury. And again recently, some politicians took the liberty of doing such a thing.

Mr. Chairman, if you study the Income Tax Act and consider it in relation to abstract art, as I did, you can see that the present government's actions look strangely abstract too.

The government's actions are often out of touch with reality. Indeed, as reported on page 4183 of Hansard for last October 30, no later than yesterday, the hon. member for Lake St. John put the following question to the Minister of National Revenue:

> Could the minister inform the house if his department has given instructions to reduce the amounts claimed for charitable donations, as is being done in the province of Quebec, without first making an investigation to ascertain whether or not the receipts are genuine?

The minister's reply was negative. Then, who ordered officials of the taxation division to reduce the amounts claimed for charitable donations as they did throughout the province of Quebec, at least this year? Who gave them such instructions? If they took it upon themselves to act in that fashion, without getting any orders from a member of the government, I wonder where we are going and what has happened to cabinet responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, in the budget speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in this house on June 13 last, we find quite another story. As reported in the fourth paragraph, second column, on page 1004, the Minister of Finance stated:

> The government is directing the Department of National Revenue to tighten up its administration of the law and to pursue a policy of vigorous enforcement.

This is the order given by the government to the Department of National Revenue. We find that this order has been carried out to the letter merely by looking at the situation that prevailed last summer in the province of Quebec. I refer to the province of Quebec because I am more familiar with it, and more especially my riding. Our workers, our miners, our lumbermen, in short all our fellow citizens have seen their receipts for charitable donations reduced by half and sometimes more. They were entitled to them, because the law provides for an exemption for charitable donations, up to 10 per cent of the net income. Besides, this is stipulated on income tax forms.

Why were those exemptions reduced this year, Mr. Chairman? The answer is to be found in the same budget speech. Here are the words of the Minister of Finance which are taken from the same page as the previous quotation:

> There is a double purpose here. One is to increase our revenues—

Well, Mr. Chairman, that is the reason. Claims made for charitable donations were reduced to increase government revenues this year and, next spring, we will be told—as I imagine was often the case in the past—that it is thanks to the Liberal party that the country's revenues have greatly increased. However, nothing will be said about the fact that this increase was achieved at the expense of our workers.

Mr. Chairman, we should put an end to this kind of thing as soon as possible. I appreciate that the government has the right to increase its revenues but instead of depending on those who already have very little, it should seek the additional income somewhere else.

The Creditiste group, of which I am a member, made various suggestions during the last session and this session in order to facilitate to the government the administration of the country without further taxation.

I can see smiles on the other side of the house. While the government laughs at the suggestions of the Social Credit, families cry all over Canada because the government has no solution to offer them. Instead of laughing at the proposals of the Social Credit, the government should endeavour to run the country in such a way as to respect human values. The old regimes have failed: that has been established. We have a monumental debt. Each year we must pay extravagant interests to the financiers who profit by that system.

Mr. Chairman, it would be a good thing if a way could be found to allow the worker to decide for himself how to look after his income. I would have hoped that Bill C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act, would do more than it promises to do to lighten the Canadian taxpayer's burden. As a matter of fact, the bill only provides for ways and means to levy greater sums of money which the government could easily obtain elsewhere. All it would have to do would be to use the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I do hope that in the course of the debate to follow, during which the bill will be discussed clause by clause, certain suggestions will be made so that this legislation can be more readily understood by the Canadian people, something which would increase their respect for the government.

[Text]

Mr. Hales: Having spoken once before on this bill after the minister had introduced it on second reading, my remarks now will be brief, but I should like to take a little of the time of the committee in order to deal with two aspects of the measure before us, namely clause 16 having to do with designated areas, and the clause having to do with the withholding tax.

When I spoke before on the clause dealing with the designated areas, I brought to the attention of the minister and of the house five reasons why I felt this legislation was ill conceived. I felt at that time, and I still do, that it was discriminatory. I felt the criteria used to select the areas were unfair and impracticable. Third, I felt it was a contradictory piece of legislation; fourth, that it disregarded municipal and provincial autonomy and, fifth, that industrialists are not satisfied with these particular provisions. I am not going back over this, other than to make a few remarks concerning some of those members who have spoken from the government side on this particular section of the bill. I was astonished to see so few members on the government side rising to defend their minister with regard to this particular section. In view of the amount of criticism there has been throughout this country, the editorials and comments in the newspapers concerning the designating of depressed areas, I would have thought there would be a number of members on the government side rise to defend their policies, their government and this piece of legislation.

The hon. member for Northumberland made a very comprehensive speech on this subject. It was the result of a great deal of research and study, I am sure. However, it was very philosophical in its outlook and was very theoretical. In my humble opinion, it lacked the practical touch.

In so far as the criterion being used in connection with these designated areas is concerned, the fact that the six summer months have been chosen as a basis is absolutely wrong in principle. Tonight the hon. member for Port Arthur gave reasons why these summer months are not practical for his area. The hon. member for Jasper-Edson gave us very good reasons why this criterion was not suitable for western Canada. The fact that the summer months were chosen would make a real difference in the riding of the hon. member for Niagara Falls. I am sure she would like to see some industries in her riding. However, her area would not be designated, because during the summer months there is a great influx of tourists with the resultant high employment. Her riding, therefore, would be ruled out. The same situation would apply to summer resort areas which have high employment during the summer months. They would not be able to qualify under his criterion.

Brantford, Ontario, qualified for designation because it is primarily an agricultural implement manufacturing city. This industry is busy during the winter and early spring in order to provide farm machinery for summer use. They lay off their men in the summer and therefore this area qualified under this criterion. At least, this is one of the reasons for its qualification. I say, therefore, that if we are going to use unemployment figures, the only fair way to do it is to take the 12 months rather than take the six months in summer or six months in the winter.

The minister has told us in his press release that this method of designation will be reviewed at the end of the year. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is too long a period. I feel this method should be reviewed in a shorter period of time, possibly four months or at the most six months. A year is a long time when you consider that one area could be given incentives which an area close by would not receive.

I was interested to note that the hon. member for Renfrew South has been experiencing the same problems as the hon. member for Wellington South. He intimated tonight that the criterion was wrong. He begged of his own minister to review the situation in his area. Pembroke has been designated as a depressed area while Renfrew has not been designated. The same situation exists as between Guelph and Brantford, which are only some 40 miles apart.

I come back to the fact that the criterion is wrong in principle. It needs to be corrected, and it needs to be corrected right away because there is a serious situation in many parts of the country. I feel that this is the reason Liberal members have not risen in their places and spoken in defence of this provision relating to designated areas in this legislation.

There is another factor which should be considered in connection with this criterion. I refer to the mileage factor. I feel that a distance of about 100 miles should separate these areas and that this would overcome many of the problems. When you designate one part of a highly industrialized area and do not designate another part which is separated by only 30 miles, you are bound to have trouble. This has been the experience in southwestern Ontario. It is conceivable that you can give an industry pie in the sky; you can give an industry everything it wants, but there are certain fundamental things required in order to start a business. For example, if Canada Dry wanted to start a factory in my community we could give them free land, railway sidings and tax concessions, but they still would not come into that area unless the water was of the particular type they wanted for manufacturing their product. I say, therefore, these incentives can only go so far, because an industry that wishes to locate in any particular area considers many other things than the incentives this government is going to offer.

These industries even go so far as to hire a firm of consultants. They say to the consultants: We want to locate in Canada; we will leave it to you to pick out the best location you can find for us, bearing in mind the closeness to the raw product, closeness to our market and our labour supply, as well as other items. This principle of incentives, therefore, does not work as well as the government thought it would.

The minister has said that he realized the formula was not perfect when he advanced it. I remind him that it is dangerous to jump in and do these things without giving thought to them. Often the results to the communities are costly. The result to my community has been costly because we have lost a very good industry. I am sure there are other parts of Canada that have had a similar experience. These are the remarks I intended to make in respect of the designated area section of the bill.

In so far as the withholding tax provision is concerned, I do not know of any piece of legislation that has drawn as much attention from those in financial circles as this withholding tax provision. It was unfortunate that the government did not see fit to send this bill to the banking and commerce committee so that these firms could present briefs to the committee. However, this move was voted down the other day. I feel that we should review first the details in the resolution concerning this withholding tax. Discriminatory tax treatment of foreign investors in Canada was proposed in the budget of June 13, 1953, and it disregarded one of the most fundamental principles of Canada-United States fiscal relations, namely the capital flowing between the two countries. The minister, in his zeal to expand export markets and help solve the balance of payments problem, took into consideration the fact that so much of our export industry is owned by United States parent companies that United States subsidiaries would be competing with their own products in their own domestic market. The minister believed that their problems would be eased if the Canadian subsidiaries were owned, at least in part, by Canadian investors.

He proposed two things, as I see it, in this regard. First, as an incentive, he is attempting to make the sale of Canadian bonds in the United States easier by cancelling out the withholding tax on interest. He would also reduce the dividend withholding tax from 15 per cent to 10 per cent for foreign companies which have made a reasonable proportion of their equity shares available to the Canadian public by 1965.

The second step might be referred to as a fine or penalty. For those companies which do not choose this incentive, the withholding tax will be increased to 20 per cent for foreign controlled companies which do not make such shares available by 1965. The original budget proposal, which called for a degree of Canadian ownership or control, stated that 25 per cent of the shares of foreign subsidiaries were to be held by Canadian residents. The amazing thing is that the minister himself has conceded there is simply not enough Canadian capital available in Canada to buy 25 per cent of all foreign owned companies.

The Globe and Mail under date of October 2 stated:

> The test will not be whether a company is 25 per cent owned in Canada, but whether at least 25 per cent of its shares are available for public subscription... It is one thing to ensure that shares in foreign owned companies will be available to Canadians, and quite another to ensure that Canadians will buy them.

In addition, there is an acute reluctance on behalf of Canadian businessmen to invest in anything other than a sure bet.

The overriding objection to the minister's scheme, however, is that it is punitive. In so far as the United States is concerned he is taking a gamble in that the United States-Canadian tax convention specifically provides that the paragraph of the agreement setting the 15 per cent withholding tax on dividends paid by United States subsidiaries to Canadian parent companies may be terminated without notice, by either country raising the rate of withholding tax above 15 per cent. Furthermore, the United States internal revenue code makes allowance for a 30 per cent withholding tax if this paragraph is terminated. It looks as though the finance minister seems to hope that he can persuade the United States to leave its withholding tax at the present 15 per cent, but it is a pretty shaky hope at best.

In addition, the normal procedure a country follows when adopting restrictions of this nature is as follows: A company seeking incorporation is required to meet specific standards relative to domestic equity participation. At that time the company has the advantage of being known and accepted by the foreign investor before he has made a commitment. It is believed that the adoption of such a policy as announced by the minister will be regarded by foreign investors as an act of bad faith, because Canada is attempting to change the rules after the non-resident has invested his capital in the country.

Because of these budget proposals, together with the United States proposal of imposing an interest equalization tax, the Canadian and American committee, at its regular semi-annual meeting on September 27 and 28 stated:

> For the first time in their histories, the Canadian and American governments have each proposed to institute a measure which—however different in their origin and nature—will have much the same effect: impairment of capital flows between the two countries.

The committee discussed the damage already done and the further harm these proposals will inflict if put into effect.

> First, they would have both direct and indirect effects on the cost and efficiency of capital for industrial development in both countries.
> Second, they will tend to inhibit and to complicate the development of closer and freer trading relations between the two countries.
> Third, the tensions and uncertainties produced in financial relationships will undoubtedly spread —indeed, are already spreading—to other aspects of Canadian-American economic relations.
> Fourth, non-discriminatory treatment of foreign investment has long been a principle which Canada and the United States have been endeavouring to induce other nations to apply in their treatment of Canadian and American investors in their economies. If Canada or the United States now breach this principle, they can hardly expect other countries to honour it.

In conclusion they say:

> In today's world, neither Canada nor the United States can afford to forgo any of the advantages they have long derived from the North American common market for capital resources.

Those are the remarks I have to make on these two clauses of the bill at this time. When we get into more detailed clause by clause examination I will have something more to say in this regard, but it seems as though this is another case of where the government has jumped in before it studied the legislation thoroughly, and it is a very serious matter for investors and communities when these errors in judgment are made. They become a costly venture for those concerned.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, we have covered a lot of subjects today and it is now getting close to 10.30 p.m. I think hon. members of the committee will have noticed that we are beginning to go over the same ground again, and I wonder if they would be willing at this point to pass clause 1 of the bill just to show that we have accomplished something in a long day.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak very long and even if some members of the government have some more or less unkind remarks to make when we rise, I wish just the same to make a few suggestions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon).

Following representations made on both sides of the house, there is no doubt that the measure under consideration is far from perfect. I would not have any reason to speak in this way if the objections raised or the loopholes mentioned came only from this side of the house, but we have heard today some members of the government criticize this measure.

It is for that reason and in order to offer two constructive suggestions, that I intend to make a few remarks, knowing that I will be finished before 10.30.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that we are again studying a hastily drawn up measure. In fact, I think that the provincial and municipal authorities, which are surely interested in it, should have been consulted; but as we noticed on several occasions since the beginning of this session, the present government simply prepared a bill and then told the municipal and provincial authorities concerned: Here is what we have decided, you will have to agree to it since we have reached the conclusion that it is in your interest.

Mr. Chairman, allow me to remind the house that, in the past, there was some competition between the various municipalities wanting to encourage industries to settle within their limits.

To do so, municipal councils were offering advantages with which other municipalities could not compete, and throughout the province, every municipality was trying to outbid the others; but this was unfavourable for some of them who could not be as generous as others to attract industries. This happened in Quebec as well as in Ontario. The provincial governments were even forced to pass legislation in order to prevent this unfair competition between the various municipalities, in the interests of all concerned.

Mr. Chairman, it seems that the small industry was not given all the necessary attention in the drafting of the bill under study. In fact, I wonder if the small industry is not needlessly taxed or placed at a disadvantage from the standpoint of competition.

However commendable it might be to urge certain industries to settle in particular areas and to wish that the Canadian people control its own industry, in short its own economy, it remains nevertheless most important that such control be not established to the detriment of those industries which are just starting their operations in this country, or those small ones which are a family affair.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it would have been wise to extend certain privileges to the small industries and to family industries which, especially in the province of Quebec, are an important part of our national life. Indeed, on account of the provisions of the new legislation, small industries and family industries will often find themselves in an inferior position to compete with new industries or the markets of the province and of the country at large.

It seems to me that those industries which have played a major role in our economic expansion should have received more consideration from those who prepared the present legislation.

In my opinion, to be fair to this important area of our economy, the minister should take the time to have his officials make a more thorough examination of the situation to provide those smaller industries with all the protection they need.

I should also like to say a few words concerning income tax itself. Once again, I urge the minister to give special consideration to the exemptions granted to our factory workers. It seems to me that we would have the opportunity now to make a readjustment as well as a complete review of tax rates and exemptions as regards the low bracket workers. By refusing them the protection they are entitled to, we are cheating people of this group who have but modest resources.

I think the minister should keep on with the work he has begun and pay particular attention to that problem in his amendments to Bill C-95.

Since he has already cancelled certain decisions he had taken and since he has also reconsidered certain parts of the legislation, I am of the opinion that it would be beneficial to bring forward a well thought out measure that would not be so detrimental to people from all walks of life.

Mr. Chairman, those were the few remarks I wanted to make.

[Text]

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Chairman, may I call it 10.30?

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

The Chairman: There is a minute or two left. Perhaps the hon. member might begin his remarks.

Mr. Skoreyko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was very much interested indeed in listening to the Minister of Finance a moment ago when he said that this had been a long day indeed and we should pass clause 1 before we conclude today's sitting. I suggest that there are many features about the bill before the house, including 28 amendments, and that they all require considerable discussion. I am speaking specifically on clause 1, although I serve notice on the minister now that at a later time I intend to move certain amendments which I think are required and necessary for the benefit not only of the people of my area but the people of Canada as a whole. May I now call it 10.30, Mr. Chairman?

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Would the house leader let us know what estimates will be taken up tomorrow? We know the other business, which we presume will be the Income Tax Act. Could he inform us whether he is insisting on a supply motion on Monday and Tuesday? I am thinking of his members who like to be away sometimes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre becomes increasingly helpful as time goes on. He is quite right in his anticipation of a supply motion on Monday, and also of the first business for tomorrow, which will be the continuation of the discussion on the first clause, and I hope the proceeding to the other clauses of the income tax bill.

As I indicated earlier, there was an understanding that when we had completed it we would call the motion in the name of the Solicitor General and that there would be one speaker from each group for not more than ten minutes each. If we can get the C.N.R. committee set up after that, with very little debate, it will be a great help generally because we will be able to get on with a lot of the railway legislation once that is done.

In addition, we would like to get the two bills respecting the Northwest Territories through second reading tomorrow, so they can be sent to committee where a number of hon. members want to examine them in detail. If all these matters are finished before five o'clock we will take the vocational training resolution for the rest of the time until five o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: I am sorry I asked the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just wanted to indicate some of the more urgent things to which the government would like the house to give attention.

Mr. Knowles: What about the Canada pension plan?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Canada pension plan has its place in the scheme of things, and if the hon. gentleman could exercise some influence on some of the members on the other side of the house he could bring it forward a lot faster.

Tomorrow evening, as I indicated earlier, it is the intention to call the estimates of the Department of Forestry, and when they have been completed the Minister of Public Works will be available to complete his estimates. If both these departments should be completed before 10.30 the government would be prepared to call any other department that is now open.

Mr. Nielsen: Let us have the Post Office Department.

It being twenty six minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 1, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NO SITTING ON REMEMBRANCE DAY—SUPPLY MOTION ON NOVEMBER 12

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted to say a few words about the business of the house. I have made some inquiries, and to enable as many hon. members as possible to be present in their constituencies on Remembrance day I believe there would be unanimous consent if the house met on Tuesday, November 12, at 11 a.m., and it was understood that the supply motion would take one day instead of two. Of course there would be that extra time in the morning and the vote would be taken at 8.15 p.m., as is the usual circumstance on the second supply day. If there is unanimous consent it could be made an order of the house now, so that hon. members may make their plans for November 11.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we agree entirely with that proposal. The suggestion came from the hon. member for Vegreville that November 11 should be celebrated in keeping with the traditions of our country, and we are certainly happy that the house leader has come to this conclusion, which is contrary to that which the Prime Minister made the other day, that we sit on Tuesday at 11 o'clock and have that day for supply.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHURCHILL—REFERENCE TO HEADLINE IN TORONTO "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege which will be very briefly expressed. I draw attention to today's issue of the Globe and Mail which has a headline "Bases in France was P.C. error, Churchill says."

I made no such statement, Mr. Speaker. The record of the proceedings of the defence committee will be available early next week, and if anybody can find words in the record to that effect I will then make a suitable explanation to the house. I think the committee and members of the press who were at the committee proceedings will bear me out that no such statement was made by me at that committee hearing.

FINANCE

MUNICIPAL LOAN FUND—TABLING OF AGREEMENTS, ORDER IN COUNCIL AND REGULATIONS

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement concerning the Municipal Development and Loan Act. Hon. members will recall that the purpose of this act is to promote increased employment in Canada by financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to enable municipalities to augment and accelerate municipal capital works programs. The act provides for the establishment of the municipal development and loan board to administer the loans to be made under this act. It also provides that the board may enter into an agreement with any province wishing to do so, to make loans to such a province or to an agency designated by it, for the purpose of enabling that province in turn to make loans to its municipalities. Such loans are to be on the same terms and conditions as would apply in the case of loans made by the board direct to municipalities.

I wish to announce that the board has signed agreements with the governments of the four provinces which have elected to administer their share of the loan fund, namely Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. In accordance with the terms of the act, the form of the agreements was authorized by the governor in council and, with the permission of the house, I wish to table copies in French and in English of the relevant order in council, P.C. 1963-1584 dated October 24, 1963. I wish also to table copies of the agreements between these four provinces and the municipal development and loan board.

The six other provinces have elected to transmit municipal applications for loans for approved projects to the board. Under this arrangement the administration of loans will be between the board as lender and the municipalities as borrowers. I wish also to table copies, in English and in French, of the Municipal Development and Loan Act regulations,

P.C. 1963-1594 dated October 31, 1963, which parallel the provisions of the provincial agreements.

In order to administer loans to municipalities in the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, in accordance with section 6 of the act, the board has entered into an agreement with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the use of its branch office personnel, facilities and services.

The signing of agreements by Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and the making of the necessary regulations and arrangements with the other provinces, has cleared the way for operations under the act. The board is now prepared to process applications.

I should like also to announce that the governor in council has prescribed an interest rate for loans made by the board. For the last quarter of 1963 an interest rate of 5¼ per cent has been established. This rate will be reviewed quarterly. Because repayment of 25 per cent of the federal loan may be forgiven for projects completed on or before the 31st day of March, 1966, the effect will be to provide funds to municipalities at an effective rate ranging from 2.05 per cent on a 20 year loan to zero interest on a loan of only 10 years. This is the feature we expect will prove most attractive to municipalities and encourage them to accelerate their capital spending.

The chairman of the municipal development and loan board is Dr. K. W. Taylor, special adviser to the privy council. Mr. Jean Miquelon, under secretary of state is vice chairman. The other members of the board are Mr. R. B. Bryce, deputy minister of finance, and Mr. Stewart Bates, president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Mr. J. C. Kerr is executive director and secretary.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): This statement seems to be one in a long series of announcements in respect of this municipal loan fund that the government has been making from time to time over the past number of months. I think it has been their intention to bring into focus this policy of the municipal loan fund to provide the answer to the unemployment situation in Canada. I can well understand why they are making this announcement and framing this particular municipal loan fund in this way, because to date the government have not brought forward any policy to deal with unemployment in this country in a constructive way.

I am not one who wishes to be a pessimist in respect of this matter, although it is a very serious matter in this country at any time when people are unemployed. However, I do want to point out that in my opinion the municipal loan fund is not going to create any new jobs in this country at all. That is borne out by the fact that the municipalities are not going to take on any new projects. The municipalities are not going to incur new debts, because the capital debts of the municipalities are pretty high now. However, they are going to take advantage of this in simple projects for which they had anticipated and planned. They will be able to get a lower rate of interest, and of course the forgiveness clause is an asset to the municipalities also. Therefore in that respect the municipalities are going to benefit as a result of this. But as far as jobs are concerned I want to say now that in my opinion this municipal loan fund will not provide any new jobs at all.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, we in this party are pleased that the government have concluded arrangements with the provinces in this matter. I suppose this is a good example of co-operative federal-provincial action; four provinces have gone one way and six another. Nevertheless we are pleased that these arrangements have been made. The only criticism we would make would be that made at the time the bill was given second reading, namely that the fund is really too small to make a very great impact on unemployment. It is useful for municipalities who can afford to borrow, and there are reasonably favourable interest rates. But we repeat what was said earlier, that for a dramatic impact on unemployment in Canada the fund should be larger and have more forgiveness clauses than it has at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the announcement just made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) on the implementation of this new municipal development and loan board because on many occasions we advocated the setting up of that body in the past, and we consider it is a move in the right direction.

It seems that this board will surely be helpful. If you consider that the rate of interest is 5¼ per cent, that in itself is an improvement on the money market rate.

I note that the government has concluded an agreement which avoids intruding upon provincial autonomy, and that is an excellent thing indeed. On the other hand, I submit that this might not resolve the acute unemployment problem we have at present, and

I point out that our group made very definite suggestions to set up a real municipal credit bank, which would be much more practical.

But, as I just said, it is a move in the right direction and I hope that before long, with the experience gained from the municipal development and loan board, we will be in a position to set up a real municipal credit bank which could more effectively alleviate the burden of municipalities which have to undertake improvement works.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we listened with interest to the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) concerning loans to municipalities meant to create new jobs in Canada.

We doubt that such a step will result in full employment, but no one can deny that it will help to provide work for a number of unemployed who are now going through hard times.

On the other hand, there is one feature we do not like, and that is the 5¼ per cent interest rate. This means that a municipality which is being granted a $100,000 loan at this time will have to pay back over $200,000 inside twenty years. In so doing, it is mortgaging future generations, putting liabilities on our own children.

I appreciate that, on account of the present financial system, we have to act that way, but what we suggest to the Minister of Finance is to utilize the Bank of Canada, which is our own body, to grant loans to the municipalities at a nominal interest rate which would not exceed administration costs, that is about 1 or 1¼ per cent, then the municipalities could look at the future with confidence.

I realize that under the present system the Minister of Finance cannot do otherwise but, as someone said yesterday, it is time, it seems, to turn aside from the beaten track and to create something new in our country, in order to lighten the burden of the municipalities as well as that of the provinces and even of the central government, in short to relieve the Canadian people.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ENGLISH DEBATES—REFERENCE OF SURVEY TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): If there is unanimous consent I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince:

That the report of the survey of the English debates reporting branch of the House of Commons tabled by Mr. Speaker be referred to the standing committee on debates for immediate consideration and report.

Motion agreed to.

SUGAR

PRICE INCREASES—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster:

That the house adjourn, under standing order number 26, for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the constant increase in the price of sugar.

Since January 1 of this year sugar prices have changed more than 90 times. Since this session of parliament started 26 members representing all parties have asked 40 questions on the matter of sugar prices. This large volume of questions on the one subject reflects the concern of many thousands of people in the country, particularly housewives.

To most of these questions by members the government has said in effect "We can do nothing". We do not feel this answer is good enough for a matter of this importance. The people expect some action from the government on a matter which they cannot handle themselves. Other governments have done something about it. The government of the United Kingdom has a sugar control board which makes long term contracts. The United States—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether Your Honour would consider the request of the hon. gentleman before he embarks upon a debate. I think that is the usual procedure.

Mr. Prittie: On the point of order, I was merely trying to point out the need for debate at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with great interest, of course, to the remarks of the hon. member. I think he is entitled to make a short explanation. Was he just about to conclude that short explanation?

Mr. Prittie: Yes, I was, Mr. Speaker. I pointed out that we have had the reply from the government that nothing can be done, and that other governments have taken action. I suggest finally that we should give some consideration to consumer support prices in the same way we do with regard to producer support prices. The important point is that this matter needs to be aired in the house and not merely in the question period.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does Your Honour wish to hear any argument on the point or is Your Honour prepared to make a decision without argument?

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to make a decision. It may not be very popular, but it is my duty. There are at least two points to be considered. One is urgency and the other is opportunity. Under the heading of urgency may I say that this matter has been talked about, considered and discussed. It may not have been done too thoroughly, but at least it has been raised over a period of several days.

An hon. Member: Just like the price.

Mr. Speaker: The question of opportunity is, of course, easier to deal with. Surely there will be an opportunity next Monday at the latest. Therefore in the circumstances I do not think that the motion of the hon. member justifies the conditions set out in standing order 26 for the adjournment of the ordinary business of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance. In view of the opportunities which will be available presently I do not believe the motion comes within the conditions required and the general understanding of standing order 26 in accordance with the precedents. Therefore I do not believe the motion is in order.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): On the point of order, may I point out with reference to the question of opportunity that the opportunity of dealing with this matter on Monday to which Your Honour has referred lies almost solely within the purview of the official opposition, since they have the right to move the amendment to the supply motion and that amendment will govern the debate which follows right up until the vote is taken at 8.15 on Tuesday evening. Unless the member is fortunate enough to catch Your Honour's eye subsequently in the very short period between the taking of the vote and ten o'clock, there is really no opportunity to discuss this matter. Therefore the supply motion does not give members in all parts of the house an equal opportunity to raise a matter of such urgent importance as we deem this to be.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the point just raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam I would point out that one of the friends of the hon. member who has just sought to adjourn the house was recognized on a grievance as recently as last Tuesday, and did not see fit to raise this question. So this suggestion that there is no opportunity to do it does not appear to be in accord with the actual and very recent facts in this house. It does seem to me that Your Honour's ruling is completely in accord with the practice over the years.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that this motion is somewhat like one I had last Thursday week, and I delayed it until last Monday or Tuesday so that we could debate it. We all know that the amendment then proposed dealt with nuclear arms and not with agriculture, and after that I did not have the opportunity of catching Your Honour's eye for grievances, when debate turned to the pension plan. The agricultural business is still not discussed, and the St. Lawrence seaway is freezing up. If it keeps up this way the same thing will happen with respect to a discussion of sugar prices, and I believe the question should be discussed today in the house.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, to supplement what the Secretary of State has already said, the opportunity arose for the hon. gentleman in question to speak on this question on the estimates of the Department of Justice, which were before the house last Friday night. That opportunity was taken by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra to discuss this subject, but neither the hon. gentleman nor I believe any member of his party or any other hon. member of the house took part in that discussion. I suggest that those estimates will be coming up again in the very near future and that they will provide an opportunity for all hon. members to discuss this question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this has taken a strange turn. You made a ruling, and following the ruling various members of the other parties have been making statements respecting this matter.

The failure to make any statement at this time is not to be taken as the attitude of the official opposition against this motion. We have been inquiring about this matter ever since the month of March, but without success. However, I suggest that if there is going to be difficulty discussing this matter on the supply motion on Monday or Tuesday, now that the Minister of Agriculture is back in the house possibly the committee on agriculture should deal with this and discuss it at length, because it needs to be discussed and considered. The rise in the price of sugar is beyond anything that can be excused, and this government has done nothing.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REFUSAL OF U.S. WORKERS TO LOAD CANADIAN SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Labour whether he is in a position to advise the house as to whether there were any Canadian ships in United States ports that have been refused loading opportunities, and whether there are ships designed for Canadian trade in United States ports which have been interfered with, which according to the press is a fact. Then I ask the further question, has he been in touch with the United States administration in the last couple of days in this regard, to protest against what is being continued, and what are the prospects of the objections taken being seriously recognized by the United States?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the harassment of Canadian shipping in United States ports, the most recent incidents that have come to my knowledge occurred on the past week end, involving three ships, the John Ericcson in Chicago and two others which were subsequently cleared either at United States or Canadian ports. There was a report this past week that a picket had appeared against a Canadian ship at Toledo, but apparently that ship has successfully cleared the port. We have been keeping a very close eye on this matter, and to my knowledge those are the only incidents reported.

I have made no representations within the past two days to the United States authorities, although I understand that the Canadian ambassador in Washington has been following this matter, and for details I would rely on my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Possibly the Secretary of State for External Affairs could bring us up to date on this matter.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister indicated the other day, this matter has received the attention of the Canadian embassy. Our ambassador is following the matter continuously. There is nothing more to report except that our ambassador in Washington has very recently indicated the continuing concern of the Canadian government in this matter.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INJURY TO SEAMAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the acting minister of justice or the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice whether the minister has yet received a report from investigators concerning the injuring of a seaman on the train going back to Toronto several days ago, the man who was taken off the train and hospitalized in Smiths Falls, and other reported incidents of a similar nature.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer the hon. member's question at the moment, but I will bring it to the attention of the minister—

Mr. Pugh: Only a week has gone by.

Mr. Macdonald: —and I am sure we will have an answer for him.

SHIPPING INDUSTRY—REVOCATION OF APPROVAL RESPECTING VACATION PAY ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him, in view of his announcement revoking the vacation pay plan, if he can tell the house whether the money that was in the hands of the S.I.U. has now been turned over to the employees.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I am sorry; I did not get the first part of the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Starr: I would like to repeat it. I asked the minister if in view of his recent announcement revoking the vacation pay plan of the S.I.U., has the money in their hands been turned over to the employees yet?

Mr. MacEachen: I would like to take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—NUCLEAR ACTION WITHOUT CONSENT OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the proposal made by General Norstad that nuclear action should be vested in the heads of the governments of the United States, Great Britain and France, would the Prime Minister give to parliament and the country an unequivocal assurance that Canadian forces under NATO will not be involved in nuclear action without the prior consent of the Canadian government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I can certainly give that unequivocal assurance. The proposal of General Norstad, which I have read only in the press, seems to be one this government could not in any circumstances support.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL—PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

Could the minister tell the house whether there have been any changes in the lay-off at the Falconbridge nickel mine.

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter of course is one for the authorities operating the mine. As I have stated in the house, the employees have made proposals with respect to the sharing of future employment at this particular mine. The federal government told the employees that the unemployment insurance commission was prepared to co-operate with that aspect of the proposal which involved federal activity.

My colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has been directly in touch with the management of the mine, and I myself have directed inquiries to the mine expressing concern at the prospective lay-offs and assuring that we were ready to co-operate in the proposal made by the employees.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the number of personnel involved who are purchasing houses under the National Housing Act, could the minister give his assurance that a moratorium will be declared on payments and that no foreclosure actions will be brought against these people who are purchasing homes under N.H.A.?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take notice of the hon. member's question.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister arrived at any decision with respect to the request for emergency financial assistance to B.C. fishermen who are facing extreme hardship because of the very stringent closure regulations imposed this fall?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the last part of the hon. member's question I must say that the extreme hardship facing some of the B.C. fishermen is not entirely due to very stringent closure regulations imposed this fall, as the best part of the fishing season was lost through voluntary restraint by the fishermen concerned. The closure regulations referred to were essential for the conservation of our salmon resources on the west coast.

With respect to emergency financial assistance, I must state that there are no existing provisions within the department for such assistance, and therefore I cannot give an affirmative reply to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): As a supplementary question, I would like to ask the minister if he recalls that both during 1962 and earlier this year, 1963, it was the contention, by way of a promise of his party, that everything possible would be done to assist fishermen to obtain full time employment by dredging of streams, rehabilitation of salmon spawning waters, the building of harbours, breakwaters and the like; and whether the minister has forgotten this particular promise.

Mr. Robichaud: No, I have not forgotten such a promise, and everything is being done to help the fishermen from coast to coast. It is not our fault that they did not fish.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I would like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he is aware of the fact that those who were fishing during the period of the strike, those not on strike, had smaller catches than average.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, it is true the catch was not comparable to the 1962 catch, but the fact remains that during the best part of the fishing season all fishermen on the B.C. coast were on strike, although some started to fish a little earlier than others.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN SALARY OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of the widespread report that there has been an increase of from $20,000 to $35,000 or more in the salary of the president of the C.B.C., Mr. Ouimet, will the minister state whether in fact his salary has been increased recently, and if so by how much?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): The answer is no.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS—POSSIBLE REVOCATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I gave him notice.

Following his meeting yesterday with Mr. François Nobert, of Three Rivers, and Messrs. Demers and Lemieux, engineers, is the minister in a position to state whether the government intends to set aside the authority given by the former government for the building of a bridge on the St. Lawrence river between Three Rivers and Ste Angele?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not ready to make any such statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

In the circumstances, could the minister make an official statement to clear up any doubt concerning the carrying out of this project?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting with the secretary of the Trois Rivieres Bridge Corporation, and as well a meeting of the engineers of that corporation took place with engineers representing the various federal government departments directly involved. There was a discussion of technical and related matters between the authorities. A further meeting will take place as studies of the problems concerned proceed.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell us if he is reserving the same fate for the Three Rivers bridge that was accorded the Gaspe railway?

Mr. McIlraith: No, but I have been somewhat appalled at the treatment this subject received from my predecessor in office.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REPORTED ARREST OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It refers to the arrest of Ronald Lippert of Kitchener, which is in my riding, and his associate, both air line pilots, by President Castro of Cuba charging them with sabotage. Will the minister look into this serious charge and extend every assistance to these Canadians?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I indicated, in answer to a question put by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, that the Canadian consul had interviewed the two Canadian prisoners. We are following the matter carefully. The latest report is that they are being well treated. We are now awaiting further information on the nature of the specific charges against them.

FINANCE

MUNICIPAL LOAN LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION TO SCHOOL BOARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has received a letter from Mr. L. I. Thorson, executive secretary of the Saskatchewan school trustees association, requesting that local school boards be entitled to share the benefits of the municipal development and loan fund. Is he now prepared to consider extending the benefits of this act to school districts?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is a question for the order paper.

SUCCESSION DUTIES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED EXEMPTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question either to the Minister of Finance or to the Minister of National Revenue. Has either one knowledge of the recommendations made by the association of trust companies of Canada requesting that exemptions in regard to estate taxes be increased from $60,000 to $100,000, and is it intended to put this proposal into effect in the near future?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did see something in the newspapers to this general effect, and this is one of the things which will certainly be considered in due course.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF TRANSISTOR RADIOS IN GALLERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. Will he advise the house whether active consideration is being given to installing a small transistor radio under each seat in the galleries so the simultaneous translation of speeches in the house may be heard? This is a system that does not require the use of wires, and worked with a great deal of effectiveness at the national Liberal women's convention in the Chateau Laurier.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will put that question on the order paper in due course.

INQUIRY AS TO OCCUPANT OF ROOM 645N

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State?

Since some members of the Ralliement Creditistes must double up in their offices in the main block of the parliament buildings, could the Secretary of State inform the house by what right a certain individual who is not a member of parliament occupies room No. 645N?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I will look at the question when it appears in Hansard to see what I can say by way of reply.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OLSON—ARTICLE IN "GLOBE AND MAIL" RESPECTING MEMBERS' OFFICES

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. On the front page of the Globe and Mail today there is a headline which reads "House Speaker accused of flagrant injustice." The headline goes on: "Refused three connecting offices, Caouette calls it national shame."

I should like you to know, Mr. Speaker, that in keeping with the practice that has been followed in this house of granting more than one office to the leaders of groups I, along with our whip, made a reasonable offer to exchange four rooms with the hon. member for Villeneuve and his group for four other rooms. They chose to reject this offer. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I wish to accept all the responsibility for not moving out of the office adjacent to the office now occupied by the hon. member for Villeneuve, and to absolve you and all of the other officers of this house from what the hon. member for Villeneuve has called a "new national shame", "outrageous injustice" and "ignoble treatment tolerated by the authorities of the federal parliament."

[Mr. Cowan.]

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question of privilege on which the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) has risen, I wish to state that the title of the article published this morning in the Globe and Mail is not the same as the title of the statement I gave yesterday to the press.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat asserts that he has offered us some offices; well, I must say that neither he, nor the members of his group are entitled to offer anything of the kind. Actually, it is only the House of Commons authorities who are empowered to allocate offices, and this very question was discussed in your own office, Mr. Speaker, in the presence of the Sergeant-at-Arms. At that time, 14 offices had been allocated to us but now we only have 12 offices for 13 members. Two members of our group are sharing the same room.

We did not ask for any changes, except for the addition of an office, adjacent to my own room, on the sixth floor. That is all we have asked for, and two of our members are ready and willing to stay in the same office.

However, the hon. member for Medicine Hat wishes to bring about considerable changes; he would like to see some of the members, who are actually in the west block, move to the centre block.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I am still speaking on the question of privilege.

My hon. colleague for Medicine Hat would also want to see the members of our group who are at the moment in the central building, move to the west block. Now, it is not the responsibility of the hon. member for Medicine Hat to settle that matter.

All we want is a sufficient number of offices for all the members of our group, so that we will be on an equal footing with all the other parties in the house.

We merely ask for justice, and we do not want this question of privilege to be misinterpreted. We do not ask for special favours, we merely ask for a just and fair treatment.

[Text]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to say a word on the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It would be very interesting for the house to ascertain if it was the staff of the House of Commons who were employed to remove the picture of the hon. member for Red Deer from the office of the hon. member for Villeneuve.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE OF TREATY TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise with a certain degree of fear and trembling, Mr. Speaker, but I think I am justified owing to the fact that I have a number of constituents who have to make preparations to appear before the external affairs committee, that is with regard to leave from employment, domestic arrangements and so on. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house if he expects the Columbia river treaty will come before the committee prior to Christmas?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We shall have to wait and see.

TRANSPORT

GASPE—INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF RAILWAY PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to take action following the brief submitted by the Gaspe North chamber of commerce, requesting the construction of the Gaspe railroad as soon as possible?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is a matter with which I cannot deal on orders of the day but I will look into it.

OLD AGE SECURITY

ACTION BY PROVINCES NULLIFYING RECENT PENSION INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the increasing extent to which the recent old age pension increase is being nullified by provincial action would the minister consider making an appeal to the provinces to delay their hand in this matter until it can be discussed at the federal-provincial conference which is called for November 25?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would be more than happy to do so, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR FINANCING OF EXISTING HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Many people in Waterloo North and other places across Canada are intensely interested in the possibility of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation making loans on older homes. Knowing the minister's interest in this question when he sat on this side of the house could he tell the house if he intends to introduce amendments to put such a plan into effect?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose the short answer to my hon. friend's question would be, we must put first things first. However, in view of his great interest in this subject and his courtesy in giving me notice of this question, I may tell him that it has been the policy of this government to take all steps possible to ensure that sufficient new homes are built to meet the needs of Canada's rapidly growing population, and to ensure that these homes are available with the lowest possible cash down payment.

Toward this end, since June the government has reduced the monthly carrying charges by lowering the National Housing Act interest rate, and has lowered the down payment by increasing the amount of loan available. In addition, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been authorized to make direct loans on a very substantial scale in the last quarter of this year in support of the government's winter incentive housing program.

I am happy to inform the hon. member that this program is proceeding very well indeed, and that total housing starts for 1963 will exceed those of 1962. To support this program it will be necessary for the government to make available to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approximately $250 million in 1963 for National Housing Act lending. This is additional to the money invested for National Housing Act purposes by Canada's lending institutions. As long as massive support is required from public funds for the new housing program, it would be difficult to extend the facilities of the National Housing Act to all existing housing.

I can assure the hon. member that this matter is given frequent and sympathetic consideration, and when it is possible to announce a change in policy that announcement will be made in this house in the usual way.

Income Tax Act

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him what plans are afoot to replace Colonel Jones, who I understand recently resigned from the position of acting deputy minister of citizenship and immigration.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of departmental administration. I cannot answer the hon. gentleman's question except to say that an appointment of a new deputy minister to this department will be made very shortly.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 31, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, at the adjournment last evening the hon. member for Edmonton East was speaking, and he has been kind enough to give way to me, an act which I appreciate very much, knowing as he does that I have an appointment very shortly. Today I am just going to review very briefly and as succinctly as possible the budget situation. I am going to refer to some of the suggestions and plans made by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister who a few days ago visited Vancouver and placed his views before the people of the province of British Columbia. In view of his propinquity to the Prime Minister I am sure those views represent a degree of official thinking.

I am not going to deal with the budget in detail. I think it can be said that the budget introduced by this government pursuant to the Pearson plan which was four years in preparation has been subjected to more criticism than any other similar document or plan which has ever been presented in Canadian history. The trouble with it is that the Minister of Finance says this has been covered over and over again. I ask, what has been covered? The budget that was born with hope has become abortive with the passing months. It is difficult to know just what remains today of the budget, for as soon as various sections were assailed the government withdrew them. This has been a budget noted not for what it provided but for what has been withdrawn from it.

The minister said there had been 15 votes of confidence this session. Well, they have not been votes of confidence on the budget submitted by this government. The longer the delay in finally presenting the bill in question to implement the budget, the greater the withdrawals and retreats, the alterations and changes. The minister stated that business people in Canada should know what the budget will do, and that this bill should be passed. Certainly business people and people in general have been asking over and over again what manner of nonsense activated the Minister of Finance in bringing in the budget in question. This bill is to implement some of the remaining remnants of the budget which was introduced with such cavalier arrogance only a few months ago.

This budget which was introduced rocked Canadian business. It interfered with the operations of Canada's capital market. It shook up the stock exchanges of Canada. It destroyed confidence, and all of this in a few months. The Minister of Finance smiles. I am not going to read what Mr. Kierans thought of it, and he is one who certainly has not been a supporter of this party and is today a minister in the government of Quebec. Any time the minister feels like smiling over the debacle of his budget I need only refer him to a reading of the views of Mr. Kierans.

This budget which was produced went underground; now it is coming back to the surface in bits. It brought about an erosion of relations with the United States. Never in the history of this country has a document such as the budget done more to harm our relations with the United States. All the honeymoon of Hyannis Port was dissipated in a few short weeks when, without any justification, a 30 per cent sales tax on foreign purchase of securities was introduced in this house by way of suggestion.

Then the next plan was to buy Canada back, and the government is trying to do this on the instalment plan. Over and over again the minister used to speak of buying Canada back. While on the one hand one minister takes that stand, the other minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, goes across the country speaking about free trade with the United States. He invites investment in Canada. The Secretary of State for External Affairs says we will welcome the new co-operation and partnership between the United States and Canada in connection with development. While these hon. gentlemen speak in that way the Minister of Finance does everything possible to undermine and destroy the probability of investment within our country. He speaks of confidence. I ask, how many changes have been made? Here is a government which introduces a budget and then has no confidence in its own financial policy. It withdraws, it revamps, it revises, it removes whole sections. There is little of the original budget left intact.

I am not going to deal with the budget in detail except, so far as it is necessary, to refer to two or three portions of this bill which are completely unworkable. Neurotic nonsense is comprised in clauses 28 and 16. Clause 28 deals with the degree of Canadian ownership and control, and the hon. member for Simcoe East dealt with this matter yesterday. I ask anyone to read section 139A of the act and make any sense of it at all. That section can only detrimentally affect Canada, investment in Canada and the expansion of Canada. With regard to clause 16, which is amending section 71A relating to manufacturing or processing businesses and the action to be taken in that regard, subsection 3 is entirely unworkable; and if the interpretation which has been given to it is correct it is meaningless in so far as achieving the purposes for which it was intended.

The businessmen want to know, he said, what the rules are. Sir, no government in so short a time has revamped and retreated in the way this government has done. Here is all that remains of Bill C-95. The minister said it has been fully debated. We discussed the budget. It was debated and voted on, and then the minister's own colleagues showed they had very little confidence in their own budget. In fact they voted non-confidence in it by the changes which were made.

I was very much interested to read the views of Mr. Bruce Hutchison, who in a sense is the philosopher and soul of Liberalism. He was here in Ottawa recently, and he wrote a series of articles on the Ottawa scene. He felt there were differences within the cabinet. He said the cabinet is apparently divided between those who are practical and those who are theoretical. He writes this:

> To say that the government is turning to the right would be a misleading definition but certainly it is turning toward more practical policies as the real power of the inner cabinet is flowing from the academic to the practical men.

I do not want to engage in a Gallup poll to find out which are the practical ones and which are the academic ones. Oh, the Secretary of State identifies himself as being that. Now is there anyone else who wants to join with him by way of identification? The hon. gentleman, for one, has admitted he is not practical. What about the Minister of Finance? Is he in the academic group? The article goes on to say:

> There is the nagging problem of the budgetary deficit likely to be as large this year as last, or larger. If it lives by debt in the present magnitude, says Mr. Gordon, Canada will land "on the rocks." How is he to arrest this rake's progress? By cutting costs? By higher taxation? Or by waiting for economic growth?

Then it goes on:

> Canada's economic relations with the United States are gravely misunderstood by most Canadians, including some members of the cabinet—

This is the man who worships this government. He says some of you people opposite are impractical and you are getting behind. I wonder if the Minister of Finance is in that group. I hope he stays in his place. I do not like to see him criticized. I made a forecast recently that he would be out. The only reason he is still in is because I made that prediction.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that the reason you did it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I have not yet got any of that practical sense which characterizes the Secretary of State at all times. That would have been his way of going about it. But I am glad the hon. gentleman admits that in the conclusion I just came to I was speaking correctly.

Do you remember how the businessmen across Canada used to worship at the Gordon throne? They said "There is a man. There is a leader." During the four or five years when we were in office they said "We will put him on a pedestal. He has a plan." Does the minister remember that?

An hon. Member: He fell off the pedestal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He now joins the ranks of the academic. Remember, Mr. Hutchison was down here; he saw the Prime Minister, and it has leaked out that he whispered in the Prime Minister's ear that Gordon must go. That is the report which is general across the country. Well, he says that certain ministers are growing fast.

An hon. Member: Fat?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to argue that. I am just quoting Mr. Hutchison. He says certain ministers are growing fast. If I asked for a Gallup poll on that, they would all be standing. But Mr. Hutchison says this government is changing from the academic to the practical. Well, what have they done about relations with the United States? I remember that the Prime Minister said on March 27 in Regina:

> A new Liberal government will not as at present irritate them—the United States—gratuitously in a way which hurts our own country.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs put it in more grandiloquent language when he spoke to the Lions International in Miami:

> Investment from abroad is as welcome today as ever. I assure you it will always be fairly treated in Canada.

While he was saying that, the Minister of Finance was plastering a 30 per cent sales tax on securities. The Secretary of State for External Affairs—I have a great affection for him; he is a dilettante with language; he can make you believe anything when he gets up with his smile—went on to say:

> We want to provide for effective and harmonious participation for foreign investment in Canada.

No wonder Bruce Hutchison says the division between the practical and the academic is rapidly disappearing by the removal of the academic from power within the cabinet.

Then there is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who had this to say in Chicago on June 20. He is reported as follows:

> Mr. Sharp said last week's Canadian federal budget dealing with foreign investment in Canada set guide lines for United States investors in Canadian enterprises and proposed legislation to permit closer partnership.

I do not intend to quote what every financial paper in Canada and the United States has said, that this drives out investment. What has been the result of their actions? What is their idea of Canadian-United States relations? The Prime Minister gave his definition when he spoke at the Iron bridge as reported in the Kingston Whig-Standard on August 20:

> As free people in what is left of the free world we are all fortunate in having as our neighbour a great democracy. It has to lead us.

On one hand one of them says "Let us restore to Canada the right to determine her economic future" and on the other the Prime Minister says "We want to run our own affairs but we shall have to let them lead us".

Mr. Nielsen: By the nose.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then there was the budget. Do you remember how it came in? Everybody was agape. The four year plan we had heard so much about was opened. Somebody once said in this house—his classical information was not very correct—that the Minister of Finance opened Pandora's box and out stepped the Trojan horse. That was used many years ago, that particular phrase, but certainly when the treasury box was opened on the day of the hon. gentleman's budget, out stepped a Trojan horse, the Trojan horse which was going to control United States investment from within.

What a record it has been. President Kennedy decided to impose a tax of up to 15 per cent on Canadian stock issues floated in the United States. He did so. Then what happened? There was another pilgrimage to Washington. Down they went for what the Prime Minister described as diplomatic discussions. They said "You can't do that to us".

Then hon. members will recall all that was said about the car parts. For three long years we heard about the hundreds of millions of dollars which these car parts would produce for Canada if manufactured here. They said "We are going down there to tell the secretary of commerce and the administration in Washington exactly where we stand". Three or four ministers went down. Then they came back and said the United States did not understand them. Then the United States congress killed a United States defence order for the Canadian Caribou transport plane. "Buy Canada back" is what the Minister of Finance says. The Financial Times in an article on August 19 said this:

> Ironically, what Mr. Gordon had to change was the Liberal economic policy of the "boom decade" of 1945-1955. This resulted not only in an almost complete surrender to the need for foreign capital which permitted it to enter Canada on its own terms, but in an indifferent commercial policy which failed to prevent foreign imports from seizing sizeable portions of the domestic market.

From 1945 to 1955 they gave Canada away, and now one of their ministers is talking about buying it back. Do I overstate the case? I have to leave in a few minutes, so I will have to give my speech in serial form, as the budget was introduced. We have been getting it by sections. First they produce a bit and then there is criticism. Then they withdraw; then they substitute.

Somebody will say that I overstate the case. I am going to call the best possible witness. I wish to refer to the Canadian-American committee, an organization with quite a few Liberals in it and the odd Conservative. I look at the list of names of the members and I am going to take the first one. I know that hon. members will want to look at some of the others. The first one is Robert M. Fowler, president of the Canadian pulp and paper association and one of the proud bastions of Liberalism. We were always wrong when we were in office. We were anti-American. There is quite a collection of names here. This is interesting. One of the members is Donald Gordon, chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways. He joined in the work of this committee.

I might as well give some of the other names: Harold S. Foley of Vancouver; Mr. Heffelfinger of Minnesota; Vernon Johnson of Montreal; David Kirk of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Ottawa; W. S. Kirkpatrick—there are some Conservatives here—of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company; Herbert Lank; M. W. Mackenzie, chairman of the board of the Canadian Chemical Company and always a devoted friend of the government of today; Norman MacKenzie of Vancouver; Jean Marchand, president of the confederation of national trade unions, and so on. Here is Senator McCutcheon.

Mr. Pickersgill: A great Liberal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There had to be the odd Tory in the whole lot. I wanted to show the mix. What did these people say? Mr. Fowler is the first on the list of signers of the statement.

The Canadian budget of June 13, 1963, proposed a number of measures having adverse implications for United States private investment in Canada. Regardless of the reasons which impelled the Canadian government to take this step, its net effect will be to impose discriminatory tax treatment of foreign investors in Canada, thereby negating one of the fundamental principles of a free capital market.

They are still doing it. Troubled Canada. I wonder how often the Minister of Finance reads his theorizing of past days. Troubled Canada.

Although the proposal was substantially modified both administratively and substantively during the weeks following the presentation of the Canadian budget, the remaining provisions still clearly involve not only administrative complexities but also discriminatory tax handicaps for a broad range of Canadian industries.

Many of these men are supporters of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister cannot disavow this. He kept telling us "The Minister of Finance has got a plan. Just wait. We are not going to act spasmodically; we are going to act effectively. We have got a plan." What did the Canadian-American committee say?

In consequence, they—

The discriminatory handicaps.

—have already generated uncertainties with respect both to business conditions in Canada and to the outlook for the Canadian balance of payments—Indeed, even before the implementation of these two proposals—

The Canadian and the subsequent American one.

—they have had adverse consequences upon both economies through the confusions and uncertainties which they have generated. The damage already done and the further harm they will inflict if put into effect are of four kinds.

Then the statement sets out what will happen.

—they will tend to inhibit and to complicate the development of closer and freer trading relations between the two countries.

While the minister does this the Minister of Trade and Commerce is giving an interview the day before yesterday, as reported in La Presse of Montreal under the headline "Free Trade With the United States" with a question mark after it. "This is not Puerto Rico", he said. While the one interferes with our trade and expansion the other, who may be the practical one, talks of what is going to be done to bring about closer relations. The statement of the Canadian-American committee goes on to say, and I emphasize this:

—the tensions and uncertainties produced in financial relationships will undoubtedly spread—indeed, are already spreading—to other aspects of Canadian-American economic relations. A retreat from interdependence in one area will inevitably precipitate retreats in other areas.

Sir, can you imagine a stronger, a more incisive, a more definite criticism of the very things we are asked to pass? What remains in this bill are the remnants of a budget that has been chiselled down, altered and changed. Yet there are two items still in the bill that are part and parcel of what Bruce Hutchison has called the academic philosophy and economic quackery that have found a place in the budget.

I am not going back over the circumstances under which the budget was prepared. It was generated in suspicion of the civil servants. The three whiz kids were brought in, but even after all the examination that has taken place these dangerous items that were pointed out by the Canadian-American committee still remain in the bill.

A Canadian delegation went to Washington in September to seek some kind of new deal to balance our trade. When they returned it was said they had found that the United States showed no understanding of the Canadian problem. There has been a frightful degradation in our relations with the United States in a few months, all of it going back to the tinkering that went on in the preparation of the budget.

The Prime Minister spoke in Halifax on October 22 and said, to use his words, "There is a continuing dialogue going on between the United States and Canada". I am not going to argue about the fact that it is a dialogue in which the Americans tell us what we should do and as a result of which we, because of the theoretical bungling of these makers of the budget, entered into schemes that had never been weighed by economists or by civil servants. Dialogue. When they went down there a high official, speaking of the Canadian idea that was presented, said "Their ideas are screwy".

You will remember, Mr. Chairman, how a few short months ago all was going to be changed. There was going to be no more trouble. In a matter of six months Canada's position in relation to the United States and internationally has been degraded as never before; all because, according to Bruce Hutchison's definition, the theorists took over and the practical men were kept in the background. But these practical men are coming to the fore, Mr. Chairman. What is going to happen to the theorists? Rumour has it there are going to be some changes, some translations, some removals, some alterations, some revisions. It is too bad they did not take place before we had this legislation brought before us.

I said I might be dealing with some of the other clauses, and stated I would give a general outline of what we are being asked to do in passing this bill. The Minister of Finance has said that we have had a number of votes on this legislation. We do not expect to defeat the government on it. Even if it would completely destroy the economy of Canada some of my hon. friends sitting to my left would support the government on it.

You may take it, sir, that my hon. friends in the New Democratic party, who regularly utter those pious ejaculations that they alone keep parliament going, would possibly not vote on it; and when it comes to the party headed by the hon. member for Red Deer, his banner bears this strange device "Right or wrong; always right." The government has nothing to fear.

We have opposed these sections of the budget which are translated into the bill before us. We shall continue to do so, but we will not in any way hold up the legislation. We have tried to do that which business in every part of Canada has asked be done, business which just a few months ago was the best friend of the Liberal party, but we have not succeeded.

I have simply spoken to summarize the situation, and to point out that the provisions which will close the loopholes of evasion receive our support, but those that deal with the question of investment are ill adjusted, ill considered and dangerous to the economy of Canada.

We have had our say on this. The government will now go ahead, with the assistance of its allies, and pass the bill, but business has warned against it. People who ordinarily would not take a partisan attitude, such as those on the Canadian-American committee, have warned against it. We have warned against it; but now the government, in the discharge of its responsibilities, will put these measures into effect, and as a result the change from the theoretical and the academic to the practical will be once more intensified.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped we might get down to a discussion of the clauses of the bill one by one, and that we might even pass clause 1, but the Leader of the Opposition has chosen to repeat, with very little change, a speech that we have heard on several occasions in this house. It seemed to me he was replaying an old record that is getting cracked.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

I must say I was surprised that, on this week of all weeks, he referred again to those of us who on occasion have expressed our views in books. He did not mention biographies, but I suppose a good many of us were thinking of a recent biography when he made that particular crack.

The Leader of the Opposition said little about the bill, and to me it appeared that he was just indulging in another of his political offerings. In the course of it an hon. member opposite sent me a verse which I think is appropriate, and with the permission of hon. members I would like to read it. It is very short.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The authorship?

Mr. Pickersgill: You do not have to give the author. You take the responsibility for it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, the author. If the hon. gentleman produces a document he has to give the authorship.

Mr. Pearson: Shakespeare.

Mr. Gordon: I think, as the Prime Minister has just said, this is a Shakespeare piece but I cannot vouch for it. If I am allowed to read it then perhaps some hon. gentleman opposite might know the author. I think it is appropriate in the context in which I read it; because as I have just said I was rather disappointed that the Leader of the Opposition should make another of his political speeches at this stage in the deliberations of the bill. This is the verse:

> I went to him and "Sir," I said
> "I really beg your pardon,
> But what is it you actually do
> With the mole-hills in your garden."
>
> "I'm making mountains of 'em, child
> For lawyers and physicians
> For soldiers and committee-men
> Old maids and politicians."

Mr. Diefenbaker: You should have quoted "Man, small man, drest in a little brief authority."

Mr. Gordon: That is perhaps the small man's Shakespeare. I do not intend to speak for more than two or three minutes, but a lot has been said about the budget and the other economic measures the government has sought to introduce. I would like to remind hon. members—

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I might rise, Mr. Chairman, I have to go to a luncheon which the Governor General will attend, and I will take the hon. gentleman's speech as read.

Mr. Robichaud: Small again.

Mr. Pickersgill: It isn't necessary to be rude about it.

Mr. Gordon: I hope the Leader of the Opposition has an excellent lunch, and I hope the Governor General has a nice time too. Now I want to get back to the budget and the other economic policies that the government has sought to introduce. I would remind hon. members that the Liberal party was elected on a progressive platform, and that this has been a great week for the government, the Liberal party, and for Canada.

I would remind hon. gentlemen opposite of some of the measures that have been brought to fruition within this last week. We were pleased and proud to be able to announce today that the municipal development and loan fund has now been approved by all the provinces, that it is now in operation, and that the money provided by parliament is now available to municipalities throughout the country to provide more jobs this winter.

I would remind the right hon. gentleman who is now having his lunch that we were delighted a week ago to be able to announce the automobile policy which some of us on this side have advocated for quite some time, and which we believe will not only be a move in the direction of correcting the very serious imbalance in our balance of payments but in addition, and of even more importance, will provide thousands of new jobs for the people of our country.

Some of the main budget proposals that are incorporated in Bill C-95 have been approved in principle by a large majority of the House of Commons. As I remember it, the vote was 126 to 78 on second reading.

Mr. Knowles: There was no vote on second reading.

Mr. Gordon: Well, on the amendment. If I remember correctly, on second reading nobody voted against it.

Mr. Churchill: It was "on division".

An hon. Member: You were afraid to vote against it.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the minister has made an error.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nobody voted against it.

Mr. Churchill: It was "on division", which indicated there was not unanimous consent.

Mr. Pearson: Why didn't you call for a vote?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I did not mean to get into a childish wrangle as to who said what at what time. The fact is that the bill has been approved in principle.

I would remind hon. members of what this bill seeks to do. It seeks to plug some flagrant loopholes in the Income Tax Act. It provides very important incentives designed to increase employment and production in those areas of the country that have suffered from slower growth. I did not find that there was much support for the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings when he suggested this provision did not apply to his part of the country. I think most people from the Atlantic provinces feel that industry should be encouraged to locate in those areas. Certainly I believe so.

Third, this bill provides for certain changes in the withholding taxes on interest and dividends that are designed to make it easier for Canadians to borrow in the United States at lower rates of interest than would otherwise be possible, and at the same time to encourage those with substantial investments in this country to take steps over a period of years that would gradually make it possible for Canadians to be included in their enterprises. These are policies that we on this side of the house are very pleased about, and I for one am proud to have brought in a budget which incorporates them.

Having said that, I hope we can get back to clause 1 of this bill.

Mr. Skoreyko: I started to make my remarks last evening, Mr. Chairman, and I promised the minister then that I would only take a minute. I intend to pursue my argument later during the clause by clause study of the bill. I am very concerned with the section to which the Leader of the Opposition made reference a moment ago, clause 71 (a).

In recent days a matter has been brought to my attention, and I should like to place it before the minister. It is apparent that a group of businessmen have formed a company for the purpose of manufacturing boilers in Brantford. They were told by their advisers that they should immediately consult with the tax department to determine whether used machinery could be purchased for the production of these boilers, and if this were done whether the firm would qualify for this special assistance. They were told, sir, that 95 per cent of the equipment had to be new.

I know that the minister is closely connected with business. He is a business consultant.

Mr. Gordon: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I should like to point out to the hon. member that I am not a business consultant; that I have no business connections. I severed all my connections when I took this post.

Mr. Skoreyko: I apologize, Mr. Chairman. I only made that reference because I knew the minister had previous experience in the business world. I am just wondering if the minister would not reconsider this particular provision. In view of his experience in the business world he can appreciate the fact that many firms starting in business today must, to some extent at least, acquire used equipment. I hope that later on in the debate I shall be able to deal with this point in greater detail. At the moment I leave this for the minister's consideration.

The other problem with which I wish to deal concerns the selection of one spot in the province of Alberta as a designated area. I refer to the town of Blairmore. I appreciate the fact that the town of Blairmore has experienced many difficulties in the last few years, mainly because of a lack of markets for coal, but I suggest there are other areas in Alberta that might well be considered in the selection of these designated areas. I think my colleague the hon. member for Jasper-Edson made reference to the town of Hinton. This is a relatively new town in which some 3,000 or 4,000 people are employed. The only industry there is the pulp and paper industry. Should anything happen to the market for paper we would have a situation with which it would be hard to cope. I would ask, then, that the national employment service re-examine their initial submissions to the minister to see if some more of these cities—I do not want to mention any more by name—in the province of Alberta should be designated.

Mr. Kindt: I just want to add a word or two about the slow growth area of the Crowsnest pass. It is not only the town of Blairmore which is within the area of the unemployment office located at Blairmore. In other words, this particular unemployment office looks after Pincher city—not Pincher Creek, but Pincher city—Cowley, Lundbreck, Burmis, Frank, Bellevue, Hillcrest, Blairmore, Coleman, Fernie and so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: All aboard.

Mr. Kindt: Well, it is only fair that the people out there be informed. If the government is not going to inform them then it is my duty to do so. I say to the Minister of Finance that so far he has failed in his duty. I am taking this opportunity, on the floor of this house, to bring this to the attention of the people out there. They have been writing me about it. I hope that what I have had to say will clarify the matter, in spite of the smiles and so on of the minister to your right.

I should like to comment on one other problem, and that is the stipulation that 95 per cent of the equipment of a factory must be new in order to qualify under this provision. The Minister of Finance knows that when an industry is started especially if it is a small industry, it must rely on second hand equipment. As my hon. friend knows, there are many costs connected with setting up a new business. If these new industries which wish to locate in areas of slow growth must buy new equipment in order to qualify for these benefits under the act, many of them will be prohibited from locating in slow growth areas through lack of capital. I suggest to the minister that he take this particular provision under advisement and reconsider his position in respect of the amount of second hand equipment that is permissible for qualification.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, it is unlikely that I can add very much in a material way to this debate. I am not so naïve as to think I can, since this is my first attempt at participating in the debates of this house. I should like, however, to comment on the magnitude of the estimates that have been brought forth by the Minister of Finance.

The figures stagger a layman such as I am. If my memory serves me correctly the minister said that the revised estimates were up $6 million over the original estimates, yet certain items had been erased or removed. We all realize that costs in general are going up, but are they going up this much? There is no question in my mind but that the present government have done some things. They have certainly increased our taxes; there is no question of that. Excise tax is up and income tax is up.

Going a little further, I should like to comment on the fact that over the past many years much discussion has taken place about federalism and whether or not it works. There was a period when some governments centralized while others did not. It turned out actually to be a tug of war between provincial and federal politics. Some federal governments centralized and others did not. I am led to believe from what I have read that the Liberal party was supposed to be by tradition a provincial rights party. However, recent actions by this party have proven correct the statement made by the hon. member for Northumberland about the need for more centralization in government; and, indeed, in her remarks in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne another word was used to describe the situation. I refer to the word "collectivism".

Since then we have had issued, or seen issued, a tremendous proliferation of bureaucracy, with boards, departments, agencies, etc., which in my opinion has caused much unnecessary money to be spent. For example, we have the designated areas—some people call them distressed, others call them depressed—and these areas were designated before the people in them knew what was going on; they had to read about it in the newspapers. We also have our new Department of Industry, and I wish it well. Our Canada pension plan is costing more money. Then we have the municipal development loan fund.

Miss LaMarsh: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question. Could he advise the house in what way the Canada pension plan, a matter which to date has received only one day's debate on the resolution, is costing the country more money?

Mr. McCutcheon: I will come to that in a moment or two, if the hon. lady would permit. I should like to refer to an editorial in the Financial Post for September 28, which states:

> Why doesn't Ottawa give the taxpayer the unvarnished truth? Why not tell him that when the pension scheme is going full blast it will cost another $850 million a year on top of the $750 million now being collected to pay for our existing $65 a month?

Then it indicates that now the pension has been raised to $75 a month it will cost $865 million.

Up to now no one that I have heard in this house has offered any suggestion as to ways and means of cutting down costs. What has happened to the Glassco commission report? What has happened to its findings?

Mr. Pickersgill: What has that to do with this bill?

Mr. McCutcheon: May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. McCutcheon: When we broke off for lunch I had just commented on the fact that during my short stay as a member of this house no one, to the best of my recollection, has ever suggested that we should attempt to reduce our overhead expenditure. All our spending seems to be justified by a sociological approach; the idea seems to be that if we dump some money here it will have a magical effect on the economy somewhere else. This seems to me an artificial approach, and I should like to ask when this government will realize, as the business community has already realized, that it is impossible for anyone to spend himself rich.

What has happened to the findings of the Glassco commission? Last November, a year ago, my right hon. friend from Prince Albert, who was then prime minister, said the government was prepared to adopt most of the suggestions made by the commission. He instructed the minister of trade at that time, who bears the same name as myself, to take charge of implementing the proposals. Things were being accomplished. The commission showed that it is possible to effect a reduction in the expenditures of this government of between $300 million and $450 million a year. An editorial writer has suggested this could mean a reduction in taxation amounting to as much as $440 million. Let us examine some of the savings which were proposed. The replacement of servicemen by civilians in non-combatant defence department jobs wherever possible was thought likely to save $20 million. Here is a recommendation which appeals to me; an improvement in methods of paper work and office procedure could save $50 million annually. What has happened? Nothing that I know of. I should like to read, in this connection, a paragraph which appeared in the London Free Press of September 9, 1963:

> All sorts of reasons can be given why specific recommendations can't be carried out. But no alternative suggestions for cutting a way through the administrative jungle have been heard. And no real improvement in the federal government's financial position is possible without savings somewhere.

The Vancouver Province also had a comment to make on this situation in an article which appeared on September 17, 1963:

> It now seems that Mr. Pearson's Liberals may allow these recommendations to gather dust in some government pigeonhole.

We hear figures running into millions of dollars bandied about freely in this house. They are so huge, so astronomical, that I cannot fathom exactly what they mean. So I must come down to my own level, the level of a common person dealing with hundreds or thousands of dollars. In my constituency, for example, we have a village where there is a post office in rented premises. The post office is in the town hall in this small community. I mention this point because it relates to what I have previously said about the proliferation of bureaucrats under this government. A few weeks ago the council of this municipality approached me and said "We are receiving a small rent from the Post Office Department for space in our town hall; just a few hundred dollars a year, but it helps us maintain the village hall in this community. But the federal government has sent some people here and they say we must have a new post office. We really do not want one and we should like to continue on this rental basis. It will save us some money as taxpayers, and the post office is adequate for our needs."

Well, we have a bureaucracy. There is no question about that. I wrote to the Postmaster General enclosing a copy of the minutes of the council meeting in this small place and pointing out their wishes to him. I received a very nice reply from the Postmaster General, and I should like to quote one paragraph from it to show what I mean about bureaucracy.

> I should explain that in communities such as this it is the responsibility of the Department of Public Works to provide us with our accommodation. It is the prerogative of that department to decide whether the accommodation will be provided by leasing or by the construction of a crown owned building and we cannot direct the action which they take.

To me it seems strange that the Postmaster General himself cannot handle such a simple request, a request which concerns his own department, but has to succumb to the rigidity of bureaucracy and turn over the request to the Department of Public Works. Not only has this government increased the degree of bureaucracy in this country, but it seems to have made it more rigid as well, coming into conflict with the recommendations of the Glassco commission in the process.

I should like to close by reading a comment which appeared in the Amherst Daily News on September 18, 1963:

> Mr. Walter Gordon used to warn us that unless the national budget soon moved toward balance, Canada would find itself "on the rocks".
> Now, with Mr. Gordon our finance minister, hardly a day passes without a government promise of some new expenditure.

As far as I am concerned this newspaper quotation seems to sum up the situation perfectly. I have one more from the Edmonton Journal of September 19:

> —it lies within the power of our own federal government to make two moves which would help to keep the economy moving strongly upward in 1964.

I mention the first one with my tongue in my cheek.

> One is a change in the ministry of finance. The other is the introduction of economies in federal spending. The latter would give some real evidence of government determination to start reducing the deficit position.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise a point of order. In view of the fact that the address we have just heard was the maiden speech of the hon. gentleman, on which I congratulate him, no one on this side raised a point of order with regard to the fact that he encompassed a very broad subject matter, much broader than he would have been permitted to do even on the resolution stage. However, I would hope that the more senior members of that group would not consider this a licence to follow the same broadness of subject matter at this particular time. May I also say that some three hours and three speakers ago the Leader of the Opposition solemnly undertook that we would now proceed to a point by point consideration of the various clauses in the bill, and I would hope that particular promise could now be lived up to.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder what your ruling would be on this bogus point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: If points of order are to be raised in the house they should have some basis in fact. There is no point of order here at all. It is simply one member's opinion with regard to the debate, and it deserves absolutely no attention.

Mr. Macdonald: On the point of order, if there was no point of order, as the hon. member said, there was no basis for him rising and speaking.

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest that we return to the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I still have a few remarks which I would like to make in connection with the municipal development and loan board.

The legislation seems to be filled with so many inaccuracies and defects that it is my duty to take a few minutes to point out some of these irregularities.

As you know, this measure of federal assistance to municipalities is intended to relieve unemployment. According to this legislation, $400 million will be divided among the various provinces in order to assist municipalities.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: On a point of order, may I raise the question as to what the municipal development and loan fund has to do with Bill No. C-95 which we are now discussing, and which comprises amendments to the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Churchill: It was mentioned by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ricard: As my hon. friend has said, it has been mentioned by the Minister of Finance, and I see nothing but a disguised measure of closure in trying to prevent me from speaking on this matter.

Mr. Macdonald: Shame.

Mr. Ricard: However, I shall continue and put on the record the few remarks I wish to make with regard to the measure before us.

Mr. Macdonald: Another broken promise of your leader.

Mr. Ricard: Of the government, yes.

Mr. Macdonald: Of your leader.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, if one looks at the way the bill was drafted, one can find several flaws. To give one example, the communities that need the least assistance, in proportion to the number of unemployed to be found there, will actually be the ones to get the most. For instance, if we consider the amount of help Ontario and Quebec can get, we see that Ontario will be able to obtain $160 million, while Quebec will only be granted a loan of about $115 million.

Statistics for the month of September show that Ontario had 72,000 unemployed, while there were 108,000 in the province of Quebec.

If you take the maritimes, with a total population of approximately two million, you find that this part of the country, which usually has the greatest number of unemployed, is the one that will get the least assistance from the federal government.

To give the house some further information, I might say that the maritime provinces will only be able to receive around $40 million. On the other hand, the prairie provinces, where there is hardly any unemployment, will be entitled to $70 million under this measure designed to curb unemployment.

Mr. Chairman, I will have to say it again, not for the pleasure of it but rather because it is my duty to do so. We are studying at present a piece of legislation which was prepared in a hurry and which does not take the needs of the people into consideration.

In order to illustrate what I mean I should like to refer to a recent newspaper report which gives the opinion of the Quebec minister of municipal affairs, Mr. Pierre Laporte, who said, as reported in La Presse of October 30 last:

> I repeat that the provincial government still considers that agreement as an expedient.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you will agree with me that if the minister for municipal affairs of the province of Quebec feels that this measure is only an expedient, it means that the provinces expected much more from a government, from a Minister of Finance who had led us believe that, once in power, they would quickly solve all our problems and would eliminate unemployment by granting the municipalities and the provinces all the help they expected. But the facts must be faced and they are not as reassuring as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) would like us to believe. And we are unfortunately obliged to point out again and again to the minister the defects in the act.

If the government had thought things over instead of acting with such haste, if they had really considered some fair legislation before presenting it to the provinces, they would have first prevented a general outcry on the part of four of them and then, they could have set criteria much fairer for the municipalities.

Without entirely discarding the demographic criterion, I think it should be replaced by the average number of unemployed people. Seasonal unemployment could be taken into account in order to apply suitable remedies.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation originally designed to alleviate unemployment only takes into account the location of unemployment in its enforcement, and if the minister actually wishes to serve the people in general, if he really wishes to help the municipalities and the provinces, he will act as he did before, he will withdraw this legislation and direct his officials to study all its features in order to offer to the house and the population a measure which will actually be free from the shortcomings and the flaws which we find in the legislation which we are being asked now to carry.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the minister, if he is really prepared to discharge his responsibilities, will take into consideration the few remarks I just made and that he will review thoroughly this measure so that it serves the purpose for which he intended it at the outset.

[Text]

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Douglas: Before clause 1 carries I should like to say a few words. The measure before us has two main features, and I want to say only a few words about each of them.

The first feature has to do with giving certain tax concessions to those companies 25 per cent of whose shares are owned by Canadian residents. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings describe this the other day as an anti-American measure. I have the feeling that the Conservative members have great difficulty in making up their minds as to what they think about the government's handling of Canada-United States relations. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday they accuse the government of being subservient to the United States by taking instructions from Washington, and on Thursday, Friday and Saturday the government is anti-American because it is endeavouring to do something about restoring some control of the Canadian economy to the Canadian people.

I think the House of Commons has to face seriously the fact today there is no country in the world which has so much of its economy owned and controlled outside ias own borders as Canada has. In the opinion of the New Democratic party the measure which the government is proposing is feeble, and we think it will be ineffective in really finding a solution. It is going to involve the investment of large amounts of Canadian capital to get control of 25 per cent of certain foreign concerns. which will really give Canadians no effective control and will use this capital to attain a purpose which in the long run will not achieve very much.

We feel the government will have to take much stronger measures if we are to make any progress toward acquiring a greater measure of control over the Canadian economy. If the government gets around to bringing down the Canadian development fund legislation and that is established, we hope it will use it or another fund for the purpose of acquiring some public investment in some of these foreign controlled concerns. This has now become common practice. In the Scandinavian countries, West Germany, France and Italy this has become one of the means by which government has been able to exercise an influence on large corporations, and this would be particularly beneficial in dealing with corporations that are foreign owned or foreign controlled. But as a step, a very feeble step which may prove ineffective, and as a gesture toward giving Canadians some measure of control over foreign controlled corporations, we will certainly support this measure.

The other measure has to do with giving tax incentives and concessions to corporations which are willing to go into underdeveloped areas. I cannot agree with the speaker who says a sociological solution to the problem of underdevelopment and unemployment does not make sense. In almost every country of the world which is experiencing economic growth and a high rate of employment this is exactly the kind of measure which they have introduced.

I had the privilege of visiting Sweden with some university people during the recess, among them two economists, and in Sweden one of the reasons they have been able to maintain a high rate of economic growth and keep unemployment to a minimum is that they have sought to direct investment into those areas which had surplus labour and surplus social capital investment which was not being used. This has worked out very well.

They argue, and I think they are right, that this cannot be done entirely by tax incentives. One of the things their labour market board is able to do is control the building of new industries. They have set up a national labour market board on which the government, industry and organized labour are represented, and they have labour market boards in 25 separate districts. The companies co-operate by supplying information to the labour market board every six months on any intended lay-offs, any increase in their labour staff, and what their general labour situation is likely to be, projected three years in advance.

Having that type of information the labour market board is able to direct industry. It does this by requiring an industry which wants to open a new plant to get a starting licence. Even to build a house or office building they require a starting licence, and when the labour market board decides that in a certain area labour is being utilized to the full and there is a shortage of housing and municipal facilities, it refuses to grant a starting licence in that area but will grant it in some other area.

They have set up special funds from which they make loans to corporations to move into undeveloped areas. A very good example of a community we visited was Norrköping. This was an area which some ten years ago constituted the textile centre of Sweden, and when Japanese textiles began to flow into the Swedish market the textile industry of Sweden was threatened. There was the usual cry for protective tariffs, but after consulting with industry and labour the government decided it would impose no protective tariffs. Japan was a good customer of Sweden, and if Japan was prepared to buy Swedish goods the government decided it should allow Japan to ship its goods into Sweden so it could earn the necessary krona to buy Swedish goods.

This meant that several textile mills were closed. The labour market board moved into the area and converted one of the large mills into a technical training school which is still in operation. The board retrained thousands of workers. Those who did not want to be retrained were given financial assistance to move to other communities where jobs were available, but those who were retrained were employed in new industries which the government induced to come into the area, companies which now manufacture metal goods, radios and television sets, and the area has become one of the main metal work centres of Sweden. This was all due to tax incentives, low interest rate loans and the retraining program.

There is no doubt a great deal can be done by means of tax incentives and concessions to persuade companies to go into underdeveloped areas where there is surplus labour. One of the most effective ways by which this has been done in Sweden is that the government allows a corporation to take up to 46 per cent of its profits and deposit them in the Bank of Sweden. They can be withdrawn at any time, but if the corporation withdraws them it pays income tax on them and also pays a surcharge. If it is prepared to leave this money on deposit in the Bank of Sweden, on which it gets a return, it may spend that money any time the department of finance and the labour market board decide that additional investment is needed. The government retains the right to determine when and where that money will be spent for plant expansion or for the erection of new plant facilities. In this way the government has been able to control investment and to direct investment into areas which otherwise would be completely bypassed.

One of the things we have to recognize is that there is another reason for directing investment into underdeveloped areas. When a corporation goes into a crowded area and puts up a factory, workers have to be moved there, houses have to be built, schools, hospitals and other municipal facilities have to be constructed, and in many cases this means five to ten times as much social capital has to be invested to equate with the private capital which has been invested, whereas it may be that only a few miles away is another centre with surplus housing, surplus labour, and adequate community facilities. Therefore the idea of trying to attract industry by various forms of incentives and concessions makes a great deal of sense.

However, I hope the minister and his colleagues will take another look at the method which the government is proposing to use for attracting industry into underdeveloped areas. The formula which is being used as a criterion for determining designated areas is a mathematical monstrosity. I will not go into all the criticisms of it, but it seems to me it completely fails to assess what is the kind of area that requires this assistance. If one looks at the list of designated areas it is rather significant that with the exception of Blairmore, Alberta, there is not a single designated area west of the great lakes.

Now, does this mean that we are not going to direct investment into the prairies and British Columbia? Certainly the potential is there. We are facing a technological revolution in agriculture. Thousands of young men and women are being forced off the farms as the farms become larger and farm machinery is more extensively used. These young people would normally gravitate to the towns and cities in western Canada to become part of industry.

However, under this method of designating areas these communities are completely overlooked. It seems to me that to use as a criterion unemployment from May to October over an eight year period is to overlook completely the age of the people in the community; how many young people are going out to seek jobs over the period of the next few years; the social capital invested in that area; the number of young people in the surrounding countryside who will in all probability move into an industrial area to live. It is a great mistake to leave these matters out of consideration.

I think this is probably one of the difficulties in having one department setting the criterion and another department evaluating and giving the tax concessions. I am sure that with a few months experience the Department of Finance will very quickly discover that this formula is not satisfactory at all. I am not quarreling about the places that are named as designated areas. I think most of them are areas that need immediate consideration. However, I hope the government will apply some more flexible formula for giving tax concessions to companies moving into areas that require industrial development or have employment problems.

I want to say that so far as we are concerned we are supporting this legislation. We support the legislation with reference to foreign control of our industries. We think it is weak, we think it may prove ineffective, but we welcome the fact that the government is at least moving in this direction. We think the experience will give the government the necessary courage to invoke much stronger measures.

With reference to the legislation to encourage corporations to go into underdeveloped areas, we welcome this legislation. We only hope the government will try to produce some more flexible formula so that it will have a wider and more general application.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-95, which contains a total of 30 pages and does not seem to be too well understood by most hon. members, no matter on which side of the house they sit. The bill is full of intricacies and ambiguities. In fact, I think that this is the most intricate bill hon. members have seen in a long time.

Anyhow, since the beginning of the discussion on this bill, we have heard suggestions and we understand that its purpose is to grant tax exemptions to certain new industries which would set up in so-called underdeveloped or depressed areas.

Now, I represent a region which was designated as a depressed area about three weeks ago. The main industry in that region is the mining industry and even if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) or the government would urge new industries to set up in our region, I think that first, they should think for instance, about changing our climate and the distance between us and the large centres such as Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers and Valleyfield.

In fact, the management of Noranda mine, one of the largest companies in our region, have set up a zinc refinery in Valleyfield, precisely because the towns of Rouyn and Noranda were too far from the large communities. So, this legislation will surely not prompt new industries to set up in our region.

However, there is another way to hasten the solution of the problem facing us in northwestern Quebec, and it is to increase the price of gold. That would probably create some 30 new mining industries in the district, and it would enrich the federal treasury. In addition, it would help fight unemployment, which is fairly high in our area, and it would contribute to the economic development of the district. Then, the government could boast of having introduced legislation to help a depressed area.

Mr. Chairman, one of the clauses of this bill provides that the government will make tax concessions where there is relocation of secondary industries.

Now, just a few weeks ago, a bill was introduced in the house to amend the personal income tax. How does the government conciliate moves like that?

On the one hand, it gives tax incentives to industry and, on the other hand, it increases the personal income tax to reduce the purchasing power of individuals.

It seems that nothing worth while is being done, that no positive solution is being offered, no solutions likely to solve this problem which is becoming more and more acute and serious.

The problem will not be solved only by introducing measures that are more or less senseless. At this very time, some small Canadian industries are on the brink of bankruptcy. We are not helping small industries; there is no provision in this bill to give them assistance. Why not help those that are already in operation? It seems to me that this would be a more logical solution than the one now being suggested.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Chairman, while on the subject of personal income tax, I shall refer to a notice of assessment forwarded to me by one of my constituents.

I refer to notice of assessment No. 0839136, in the name of Mr. Jean Guy Trepanier, 187 Saguenay St., Noranda, P.Q. As indicated at the bottom of the notice of assessment, here is the decision of an income tax official:

The deduction claimed for charitable donations has been reduced from $511 to $200.

This income tax official admits having in hand the receipts for charitable donations and arbitrarily decides to reduce the amount from $511 to $200. This is in connection with personal income tax.

Mr. Chairman, in the newspaper—

Mr. Habel: Could the hon. member for Villeneuve tell us what was the net tax amount owing?

Mr. Caouette: In reply to my excellent friend from Cochrane, the federal tax amounted to $349.

Mr. Habel: No, I mean what was the net amount of taxable income?

Mr. Caouette: The net taxable income is not mentioned on the assessment notice.

Mr. Habel: It could throw light on the situation.

Mr. Caouette: No, it could not throw light on the situation. I will answer the hon. member for Cochrane by saying that it could not change the deduction, because the deduction claimed for charitable donations accompanied by receipts has been reduced from $511 to $200. One thing is certain, however, it was not larger than 10 per cent; it was scarcely 7 per cent. That, I know.

We suggest to the Minister of Finance and to the Minister of National Revenue to free the Canadian citizens from the petty annoyances which stem from arbitrary decisions of federal officials, and to generalize that measure in order to increase the buying power of the Canadian consumer. If this buying power were increased, the Canadian industry would be promoted and would make great strides, while today it finds itself paralysed, because its stockrooms are overfilled and it cannot sell its production as it would normally.

That is indeed the crux of the matter. We are not confronted with a need for greater production, but with a problem of distribution of existing production.

Inventories, annual production, excess production, we have all that. No Canadian alive today has to worry about finding clothes, houses or what have you. But all, without exception, wonder how they can buy these things. Our industry, as well as our taxpayers, are faced with possible bankruptcy.

Canadians today are in debt and mortgaged for years to come. Business too is saddled with mortgages and loans for years to come. The government tells us:

> Companies which will settle in depressed areas will benefit from tax exemption.

Mr. Chairman, in La Presse of October 26, 1963—which is very recent—I find an item regarding Reverend Father Emile Fournier, bursar of the religious order of St. Vincent de Paul, who was lecturing at St. Foy, P.Q. I quote:

> Reverend Father Emile Fournier, bursar of the Brazil missions for the St. Vincent de Paul order, stated, last evening, that capitalism, not communism, and ideological conflicts, is the worst danger for Latin America.

Yet, nobody thought of calling Father Fournier a communist. And I quote further:

> Speaking before the members of the Richelieu club, Reverend Father Fournier said that more particularly in Brazil, where he himself lived several years, the whole population is literally starving, beside a handful of wealthy families. The people are exploited by capitalism.
>
> "Nine people out of ten are living in extreme poverty, and are kept in that condition by a group of extremely wealthy individuals who only make up 3 per cent of the whole population."
>
> The reverend father stressed that the annual average income of people in Brazil was $250.
>
> The lecturer also said that Brazilians are Christian in principle. But that education in the faith is poor because of a lack of priests.
> The time has come for French Canadians to assume their responsibilities and to help a country, the history, language and culture of which are very close to theirs, concluded the speaker.

Mr. Chairman, we have in Canada today an increasing number of unemployed people who live in the most abject poverty. Of course, here, in parliament, we perhaps do not see that poverty, but when we go home, in our constituencies, we discover that undeserved poverty existing amid abundance.

It is said that there is no want of means of production. It is true. But what is even truer is the fact that the means of consumption are inadequate, that there is a shortage of buying power in the hands of consumers.

It is to this problem that the Social Credit offers a solution. There are those, especially in parliament, who smile when they hear about Social Credit. But the Canadian population smiles less and less, for it realizes that Social Credit brings a solution that can definitely settle the problem. It is the only means by which all those problems could be tackled, here, in this house, but the solution is being refused.

Let us launch an effort, let us reform industry, let us exempt some from taxes and increase taxation on others, let us try and reform the institutions, let us try everything. But let us not interfere with the monetary question, the matter of the necessary money and credit, let us not try to balance the Canadian economy according to the tremendous physical capacity at our disposal.

When we say it is time to make financially possible what is physically feasible in Canada, we are perfectly right. The Liberals and the Conservatives, one after the other, did effect this "financially possible" in face of the "physically feasible" during the war years. No one was told in Canada that we were short of the necessary credit to make guns and shells. The minister of finance in the years 1941-1942, the hon. Mr. Ilsley, used the Bank of Canada at the time to create new credit in the country in order to make armaments and put Canada on a war footing.

Well, today, we of the Social Credit think that the time has come for the Minister of Finance to order the Bank of Canada to create the credit necessary to put Canada on a peace footing, on a basis of security, with personal freedom guaranteed to all Canadians living in the country and building it up.

Mr. Valade: Would the hon. member for Villeneuve allow me a question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Valade: When the hon. member for Villeneuve mentioned the Social Credit philosophy, was he speaking of the philosophy advocated by Gilberte Cote-Mercier and her group, or was he putting forward a new philosophy.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, in answer to my hon. friend from St. Mary, I shall say that in the world, there is only one Bible, but there may be 800 denominations. But all of them are related to the same Bible. The Social Credit philosophy we advocate is the authentic philosophy of Major Douglas. No matter whether Mrs. Cote-Mercier or Mr. Even wear white berets, if they advocate the same philosophy as Major Douglas, we quite agree on that philosophy.

[Text]

Mr. McIntosh: Before clause 1 carries I should just like to ask the minister a question concerning the write-off of a $5,000 automobile. This does not appear to be relevant under any other clause, so I will ask it at this time; I do not intend to make a speech. I understand from what has been said previously that a company can write off an automobile costing less than $5,000, say $4,999. What happens if the automobile costs $5,001? Can a company then write off $4,999 and pay tax on the other $2, or do they pay the full tax on the $5,001?

Another question concerns the automobile which may cost $4,999 in eastern Canada but which will certainly cost more than $5,000 in western Canada, owing to freight rates and so on. This regulation seems to me discrimination between eastern and western Canada, or western companies as compared with eastern companies. I should also like to impress on the minister that there are other factors which should be considered in this $5,000 write-off.

I do not disagree with the principle behind the regulation, if it is a regulation. I know what the minister is trying to do. He is trying to stop companies from buying Cadillacs, and so on, and I agree with that. But there are problems which arise from this unless we receive some explanation. For example, in the province I come from there is a provincial education or sales tax of 5 per cent. In the province west of where I come from there is no sales or education tax. So the matter does become a problem.

Mr. Southam: Or to the east.

Mr. McIntosh: Yes, to the east, or it could be other places. So there are a few problems in regard to this write-off on automobiles, and I should like the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Finance to explain to the committee a matter which concerns some of these companies.

Mr. Garland: Perhaps if I told the hon. gentleman that the regulations have been published and have been available for some time he would be satisfied. The specific answer to his first question is, of course, no. The other matters he has referred to are taken care of in the regulations, which are available on request.

Mr. McIntosh: I wonder if the minister will give us some details. I went home about a week ago, and this matter was of concern to many automobile dealers out there. Apparently they had written to the Department of Finance and were promised an answer within a very few days, but they had not received one. I do not know when the regulations came out, but I should like a statement on record in this house so I can go back to the dealers and say that this is what the minister said.

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I can amplify what the Minister of National Revenue said, the $5,000 ceiling was decided on so that it would include as eligible for write-offs practically any car manufactured in Canada; in fact almost all of them. The whole amount can be written off. If a car cost more than $5,000 it would probably be an imported car and nothing could be written off. The purpose was to encourage people to buy cars made here and to discontinue a practice under which the treasury has been financing approximately 50 per cent of all these high priced cars.

In answer to the second question, the regulations have been published and they make it quite clear that there is no discrimination in favour of people who live closest to Oakville, Oshawa, or other points in Canada where motor cars are produced. In calculating the cost for this purpose, freight charges and provincial sales taxes are excluded from the computation.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On clause 4.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there is one point on this clause which has always bothered me and I should like to ask the minister for a short explanation. I have always wondered what would happen in these cases if the option has been exercised. I realize that what the minister is trying to get at is a colourable transaction whereby there is in actual fact a lease, and that has been the intention of the parties. But they have covered it in the guise of a lease option, though they have never exercised the option. In other words, no overt step has been taken to exercise the ownership and acquisition of the assets. I realize this was a loophole. But what happened when there was such a transaction on the face of it, and when subsequently the option was exercised indicating that it was a bona fide transaction? I do not like to see everybody classified as a wolf because they happen to be covered with sheep's clothing: They may truly be sheep.

Mr. Gordon: There may be taxpayers who acquired property before 1963 taxation year under the lease option arrangement and who had property established for tax purposes under the rules contained in section 18. Where the capital cost has been established in this manner it will not be disturbed by the repeal of section 18. The taxpayer concerned may continue to deduct capital cost allowances as if the section had not been repealed.

Mr. Lambert: Does not the minister think that with this provision he has now closed the door on an important area of business operation. The hon. gentleman has had some connection with business and he must realize the value of lease options. I am thinking not so much of their value from the point of view of taxation relief, but of their financial value. Does he not think we have here, for the sake of administrative convenience, closed off an important method of business development?

Mr. Gordon: I do not think the hon. gentleman need worry about that. It is still perfectly open to businessmen to rent or lease a property and to write off the amount of the rental paid.

Mr. Lambert: That may be so, but I am speaking of an option for a businessman to buy a property—that is, a lease option. I do not care how you want to describe it, but a rental agreement with a right to purchase is a lease option.

Mr. Gordon: The only thing which stopped that practice before was section 18, which we are now recommending should be repealed. There is nothing to stop people doing what the hon. member has suggested.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6.

Mr. Lambert: On clause 6, I think there were some questions asked by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George who had something very pertinent to say in this regard during the resolution stage. I would refer the minister to pages 2494 and 2495 of Hansard where he will find some questions which, so far, he has left unanswered. With all due respect to the minister, I think his hon. friend did raise some very relevant matters to which the committee should have an answer before it can agree to go further.

I can see what the minister is trying to do. He is dealing with a straight marrying of a loss position company with one which is in a favourable position, or one with some excess profits, in an attempt to average out. I hold no brief for tax evasion. On the other hand, I hold no brief for the man who unwittingly makes himself subject to income tax. A man who is astute enough—and I do not use this adjective in a derogatory sense—to develop his business without exposing himself to taxation, is surely not to be blamed for so acting, especially when one considers that the income tax legislation contains a multitude of provisions which are contrary to the principles which govern ordinary conduct. Why should such a perfectly laudable objective be caught up in a wide sweep such as the minister is trying to make at the present time? I am sure that to business consultants, chartered accountants and lawyers primarily concerned with business the matters raised by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George are very important considerations. We must be careful not to sweep out economic development purely on the grounds of administrative convenience.

Mr. Gordon: With the greatest respect, I do not think my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George asked any questions about this clause. Perhaps we could ask him. There he is.

Mr. Turner: As one who has been drawn unwittingly into this debate, let me say that at the resolution stage the two matters in which I was interested were, first of all, the question of surplus strips. I may have had something to say about the retroactive nature of the provisions affecting surplus strips. Second, I may also have touched on the problem of ministerial discretion. If the hon. member is speaking of my comments on those subjects, I suppose he is referring to my speech with accuracy.

Mr. Lambert: I think the hon. member's remarks were related to the loss position.

Mr. Gordon: Very well, let me say a word about the loss position. The purpose of this clause is to prevent a company with a loss-carry-forward entitlement from changing hands, thus permitting a new owner to introduce into that business an entirely different business after the date of the budget, and having this entitlement applied against the profits of the new business enterprise. That is all. It is not intended to have any retroactive effects. It is not intended to apply if there is no change in ownership, and I believe there is no ground for the fear which has been expressed by the hon. member with regard to this clause.

Mr. Lambert: Except to the extent that if there is an entitlement of carry forward a loss position and there is subsequently a situation created whereby the loss position is wiped out, surely there is an element of retroactivity.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member is correct. This will wipe out the loss credit position if there has been a change in ownership. The reason, of course, is obvious. People with profitable businesses who were paying taxes on their profits were making a practice of acquiring companies, often shells which had nothing in them but which were in possession of a loss-carry-forward entitlement, for the purpose of applying this entitlement against their profits and thus avoiding the payment of tax. That is what this clause is intended to prevent. I am prepared to admit that in theory, certainly, if you look upon the corporation which has the entitlement as being a separate entity, it does lose its rights, where its ownership has been transferred to somebody else. However, that is the very thing we are trying to stop.

Mr. Lambert: One case does occur to me where a good deal of hardship could result. I am thinking of two companies which are engaged in a related activity or business. One is in a loss position and the other is carrying on a profitable operation. The company which has the profitable operation is a substantial creditor of the business which is not so successful. In order to minimize its losses, the successful corporation buys out the business which is not successful, and is in the loss position. It is in a case such as this that the successful business would be prejudiced, because there is no distinction in the amendment on the basis of related businesses.

I will agree with the minister that there is some justification if a contracting company suddenly decides it is going to buy out a realty company or some such other extraneous operation solely to even out profits, but surely a legitimate case can be made for those within the same type of business. In the first place, it may be a substantial creditor of a debtor company. We have seen many businesses grow as a result of these mergers. If the minister wants names I can name him some very successful growth businesses that were built up because the one participant that had active, intelligent management and appropriate financing picked up a number of ancillary companies which were its debtors. In a very few years these were built up into very successful businesses. If the proposed provision had been in force such would not have been possible. May I say that these companies have contributed to economic development in certain sectors that are very well known to the minister's officials, though perhaps not to the minister.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I do not know the particular example about which the hon. member is talking, but I should like to try to put the matter this way, in more general terms. If one individual or one group controls two companies, one of which is making losses and the other is making profits, they are in a position that they can concentrate their activities on the company they now own which is making losses, and transfer the profitable business to it. They will not come under this section because control of the loss business will not have changed hands, so they can do this.

But if you are talking about two companies that are not related and one is profitable and the other is not profitable, what we are trying to stop, as I was saying, is the company which is making profits buying the losses of the other company and thus avoiding the payment of taxes on the profitable business, which they have been doing in the past. That is what we are trying to stop and, of course, we think it should be stopped.

Mr. Lambert: I think the minister is using a yard wide broom to collect a foot of dust.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, would the minister give me an explanation as to the point I raised on second reading, why this has not been incorporated in the act as a permanent change? We have been carrying it forward from year to year, much to my mystification.

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member has a good point and if he will bear with me I will try to fix it up in the next budget.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—"Taxable corporation" defined.

Mr. Lambert: This point is somewhat more limited than the general objection I have raised with respect to the so-called Canadianization—I cannot call it national distinction—of a taxpayer. Why is it that here we are now getting the little toe in the door, in that there is a suggestion that if the shares of a corporation are listed on a Canadian exchange the corporation is now deemed to be a taxable corporation within section 38? Not too much has been said by the minister in this regard. I would appreciate it if he could tell us why there is this provision that the mere listing of shares on a Canadian exchange shall be deemed to be a partial fulfilment of the requirement of residency, one to which, incidentally, I do not necessarily adhere.

Mr. Gordon: Of course you have to do more than just list the shares. A very substantial part of the business has to be in Canada. This is a relieving amendment. As the sidenote indicates, a taxable corporation is defined and the definition is broadened so that it will include the kind of company described in paragraph (b), and to provide that the dividends from this kind of company shall be deemed to be from a source in Canada. There are companies which, for one reason or another, do not qualify but which do all their business in Canada and in which it is desirable to encourage Canadians to invest. They do not invest in these companies to a large extent because they cannot get the 20 per cent dividend tax credit unless the company is a Canadian corporation. The companies described in paragraph (b) are companies which, although not resident in Canada in the sense that their head offices are not here—the Hudson's Bay Company is a good example—carry on substantially all their business in this country and have their shares listed on the Canadian stock exchange. It is desirable that Canadians should increase their share ownership in this kind of company, and the purpose of the amendment is to remove the tax deterrent to the acquisition of such shares by Canadians. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. Lambert: In this connection I am wondering why the arbitrary figure of 85 per cent has been selected. If I recall correctly from my business experience, the provision in the United States tax law is 75 per cent.

If I recall exactly, this permitted them to incorporate companies in the Dutch West Indies which were rather large operations. I may say this is one of the tax havens found throughout the world, and if the United States can take advantage of it I do not know why Canada cannot similarly take advantage of it, where operations could be conducted on scores of millions of dollars a year, with headquarters in the Dutch West Indies, provided that 75 per cent of the revenue comes from abroad. In such a case a company could operate in the United States and could operate in Canada, with the bulk of its operations in Canada, yet it got the benefit of both worlds, Canada and the United States, with about 2 per cent income tax payable in the Dutch West Indies. Why was this 85 per cent selected?

Mr. Gordon: I am sure the hon. member would not like us to become the Dutch West Indies of the northern hemisphere. There is no significance to the 85 per cent. It would be quite satisfactory to me to make it 90 per cent. The only reason I did not make it 100 per cent is because companies of that kind presumably have had offices and may have a little business going on somewhere else, but the purpose was to indicate that substantially the whole of their business should be in Canada, if they were to qualify in this way. I would not like to make it less than 85 per cent, but I would have no objection to making it more than that.

Mr. Lambert: This is an amending provision and the minister uses the word "substantially", but he comes down to 85 per cent. As the one making the change, the burden is on him to establish why there should be this level of 85 per cent as against, say, 75 per cent. What are the compelling reasons to make it 85 per cent?

Mr. Gordon: Just that 85 per cent is more substantial than 75 per cent. I cannot do better than that. I would prefer it to be higher.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 10.

Mr. Lambert: Would the minister give us an explanation why he is repealing this section? I agree it was experimental in its inception, but it was the burden of a good part of my speech on the resolution stage. This was an incentive based on sales, and I would put it to hon. members that in so far as business is concerned the success or lack of success of any business is ultimately on sales.

Mr. Gordon: Profits.

Mr. Lambert: Well, sales and profits. You are not going to have profits if you do not have sales, and the selling philosophy after all is the ultimate factor. The minister is well enough versed in politics to know that unless he can sell the philosophies of his own political party he might as well stay at home. There are other points I might indicate where, unless you are able to sell, you might as well not start your operation.

There is no point in developing factories and commercial establishments to produce goods if you are not going to sell them, and of course we anticipate selling them to cover something more than their cost. Again I ask, why was this abandoned?

Mr. Gordon: This is being abandoned because this particular concession has been strongly criticized on various grounds. I will mention four of them.

Mr. Lambert: The burden is on the minister.

Mr. Gordon: Yes, the burden is on the minister, and I do not mind this particular burden because I remember a year ago criticizing this particular form of incentive very strongly. These are now criticisms that have been received, quite apart from my own efforts in that regard.

First of all, since dollar sales were the measure upon which the concession was calculated, the emphasis was upon sales volume rather than upon efficiency. Thus taxpayers had an incentive to increase prices or to achieve increased sales in uneconomic ways in order to earn some forgiveness of tax. There was a certain amount said during the last few days about the price of sugar, and if this section remains, then because the sugar companies will be increasing the dollar value of their sales—

Mr. Lambert: Abroad?

Mr. Gordon: No, in Canada—it has nothing to do with exports—they would get a tax incentive, which seems to me to be quite out of order. This surely is not the intention, to give these people a tax incentive because they raise prices.

Second, this provided an incentive for taxpayers to arrange to have high sales in one period, if they could, and low sales in another, or otherwise manipulate their sales.

Third, it was so complicated in the way it had to be worked out that many taxpayers said it was not worth their trouble to try and qualify.

Fourth, the value of the incentive was very low. For example, the illustration used in the 1962 income tax bill showed a company with sales of $1 million, which increased its sales by 10 per cent, and it would receive a tax concession of $1,230. But the main criticism is that this concession, being based on the dollar value of sales, would give a bonus to companies who increased prices for one reason or another, and which, if you like, made windfall profits because of the devaluation of the dollar; and I cannot believe it was intended to give people a bonus for that sort of thing. Actually the incentive was proposed in the April, 1962 budget, at a time when devaluation was not contemplated.

Mr. Lambert: It may be that the minister has set up the bogies, but regardless of that I would put it to him that the ultimate test of competitiveness is in your sales price. It is true that in certain limited competition industries, such as the sugar industry, there may be possibilities of windfall profits; but even using the dollar value as the criterion, if they are going into the export market with the devalued dollar, surely to goodness because the devaluation provided an additional incentive for income and increased sales of a dollar value for exports, why should that be a criterion to throw out section 40A. This was cited by the minister as one of the reasons, but on the basis of short experience I would have thought he would have been prepared to give this incentive at least one or two more years trial.

This is shutting the door on one of various means of expanding the Canadian economy. This is in complete antithesis to those things which the minister has been preaching to us. The parliamentary secretary whispers to me that it was just no good.

Mr. Benson: That is right.

Mr. Lambert: On what basis? On what period is he able to judge? He has not had the experience with respect to operations based on tax reports. I would have thought it would have been better, and I would have been prepared to accept the minister's evaluation of all this, if he had said that on three years' experience this incentive was not deemed to be a successful method. There is no one method that is going to be the cure-all. I am sure the minister will agree with that.

Here was a method which no one claimed to be an absolute cure-all. Perhaps it was limited, but why kill it? I suggest this action is premature, and that there was insufficient evidence that this was not a proper method by which we could encourage economic growth. In other words the minister is subscribing to the philosophy that unless you have a 100 per cent painkiller, then you had better get it off the market. Even if only 25 per cent of business could take advantage of the incentive, why kill it?

Mr. Olson: The minister has answered the question I intended to raise on this clause; but the hon. member for Edmonton West is now suggesting it is a little too early to kill it. Therefore I would like to quote a short piece from some communications I have received respecting this particular clause, so that it may add some evidence to the reason for the repealing of the section:

> Section 40A was enacted in 1962. It was intended to give a tax incentive where a manufacturing and processing corporation had increased its sales above a level determined in accordance with another complicated formula.
> Section 40A has been—

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is quoting from a document. Would he please identify it and, if need be, would he table it so that we may know he is not picking something out of the air?

Mr. Olson: I take full responsibility for this quotation from a communication that was sent to me.

Mr. Lambert: By whom?

Mr. Olson: Whether I choose to table or give the rest of it to the house should be my privilege.

Mr. Lambert: Oh, no.

Mr. Olson: May I go on?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member takes full responsibility.

Mr. Olson: It says:

> Section 40A has been a dismal failure. All that section 40A ever did was encourage corporations to raise prices.
>
> A corporation could qualify for the tax benefit merely by raising the level of its sales by an increase in prices.

It goes on to say:

> Here was a built-in inflationary device.

So I suggest there is quite a lot of evidence available to indicate that this section could be repealed.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 15—Special tax rate.

Mr. Lambert: This is related to the withholding tax, and with all due respect to the minister I have some difficulty in reconciling his replies with some of the questions I put to him the other day. He indicated yesterday that the question of abrogation of article XI of the tax convention between Canada and the United States depends upon the imposition of a tax. The question which I raised the other day was to the effect, had he had the assurance of the officers of the treasury, and had he had the assurance of the authorities in the United States government that they would not deem this to be a de facto abrogation as of now, and not wait until the imposition of the tax after January 1, 1965, as envisaged by the minister?

This is the point that is of primary concern. I think the minister will recognize that there are a number of business interests in this country, and it has been suggested to me from my reading that although it may appear strange, the investment per capita by Canadians in business in the United States may be at about the same level as the per capita investment by United States interests in Canadian industry. If this were to be a de facto abrogation within article XI of the taxation convention, then immediately the United States government could boost its rate of withholding tax to 30 per cent, that is a 30 per cent withholding tax on dividends payable to Canadian parent companies by United States subsidiaries, wherein the majority of the income earned by the Canadian parent is from the United States subsidiary.

Of course, we all realize just how quick the reaction to this provision would be the establishment of so-called Delaware corporations. This would mean that what has been a two-way street would become entirely a one-way street, and any investments Canadians might have in the United States would become a mere fragment of what they are now. It must be recognized that there are a number of Canadian corporations, and we hope there will be more, that are extending their operations into what is potentially a good market for Canadian expansion.

I should like to have this assurance from the minister. It is not sufficient to say that when the tax is imposed we will know the reaction. We would like to know if we have an assurance from the United States authorities that the passage into law of this bill will not be deemed to be the imposition of a tax. With all due respect to the minister, the fact that the tax would become operative as of January 1, 1965, may be interpreted, under the terms of this legislation, as the imposition of a tax on dividends as of January 1, 1965.

Mr. Gordon: I think perhaps the hon. member is talking on clause 23 of the bill and not clause 15, but perhaps I might answer the point he has raised now while it is clear in our minds. I do not want to be asked to mention individuals in the reply I am about to make.

Mr. Lambert: I have no thought of individuals.

Mr. Gordon: We have had some preliminary conversations and discussions with the appropriate officials in Washington on this point. One of the more senior officials suggested to me, within recent weeks, that before we got down to a discussion of this problem it would be best to wait until the bill was passed. He said, after all, this particular thing does not some into effect until 1965, so we have lots of time to discuss it.

Mr. Olson: This clause appears to me to be another example of what might be called piecemeal legislation. If I understand it, all it does is raise from 15 per cent to 20 per cent the tax on most non-resident owned investment corporations. I should like to ask the minister if he has given any consideration to introducing some legislation to provide a different plan for attracting foreign capital on a permanent basis? In other words, will he induce foreign capital to come to Canada and become Canadian capital?

Mr. Gordon: All I can say is that this amendment provides that there be no withholding tax at all on certain investments in Canadian bonds, which is the way in which most of the capital comes to Canada. These non-resident owned investment corporations are a special kind of company which is defined in section 70 of the act. They are used by non-residents to hold portfolios of investments in Canada. The rates of tax on these companies must be increased in conformity with the non-residents withholding tax; otherwise the non-resident companies could use this special type of company to hold their shares in subsidiaries in Canada and thus arrange to have their dividends from these subsidiaries taxed at the 15 per cent rate. It is needed, if we are going to have the change in the withholding tax that is recommended in the later section. This particular provision is needed to make the thing consistent.

Mr. Lambert: In commenting on the minister's reply of a few minutes ago I may say, and this applies to this and other sections of the act, that I am very concerned that the action of this legislative body in passing a law shall not be deemed to be an irrevocable act. The minister himself realizes that we do not pass amendments to acts, or we do not pass bills, so that later we can merely repeal or amend them.

Mr. Gordon: I hope not.

Mr. Lambert: We can say—

Mr. Gordon: Except in 40A; I must say I thought that was a good thing to yank back.

Mr. Lambert: It seems we are on extremely thin ice in accepting an unofficial assurance the minister might have received, that there is plenty of time to think about this within the terms of the tax convention, the possible abrogation of the treaty and the automatic imposition of a 30 per cent level of withholding tax by the United States authorities. Once the Canadian parliament enact a law, this is not merely an expression of opinion. It is an overt act on the part of the Canadian government. This is where I think the minister's argument is just a little thin.

I know the minister has given warning about other matters, for instance in the field of business expenses, as did his predecessor. There are other fields in which the Minister of Finance has given a warning without introducing any legislation. Really, this and all the other related provisions to which I am referring are warnings. Suppose the minister's negotiations are not as fruitful as he expects? What is he going to do? Is he going to come back next year and say: I was not quite as successful as I hoped, would you please amend the act? This is not good enough to maintain the confidence of the business community.

This is the reason I asked the minister if he can give us that assurance, that the passage of this legislation will not be deemed by United States authorities to be the imposition of a new level of taxation as of the coming into effect of this amendment to the Income Tax Act? It is not too much to ask. I think we are entitled, as is the business community of this country, to know just what is going to happen. After all, there is certainly enough uncertainty.

Mr. Gordon: Well, there is a lot of uncertainty, particularly about the changes that were made in the December 1960 budget. After hon. members requests, the withholding taxes were changed in that budget and this left a good many of the tax agreements up in the air.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Lambert: But they were renegotiated.

Mr. Gordon: They were not renegotiated with the greatest respect. They still have to be renegotiated. Notice has to be given prior to June 30 in any year, and then they have to be renegotiated. Despite the fact that these changes took place—

Mr. Lambert: There was no complaint.

Mr. Gordon: No, there was no complaint because the increased tax has not been collected. It cannot be collected under the agreements about which I am talking, and there are seven or eight of them. In this case we intend to collect these taxes now. The hon. member suggests it would be better merely to give a warning that we intend to do something in the future. I think the way to give a real warning is to put it in the act; then people are likely to take some steps, and to take this more seriously than they would if they were just exhorted to do it.

I want to be quite clear. I am not in a position to give a categorical assurance as to what the United States administration will do when we get down to negotiating this particular matter, because I have not gone into it in that detail. They have suggested that these negotiations be deferred until the bill is passed, so I am not in a position to give that assurance. However, I would remind the hon. gentleman that, as we all know, there is a difference between the total amount of United States investments in this country and the amount of Canadian investment in the United States. United States investment very greatly exceeds Canadian, and these people will be reasonable and keep that in mind when we renegotiate the matter.

Mr. Lambert: The minister agrees, of course, that the sums per capita are not that far apart compared with the global amount, taking into account the difference between a population of 200 million and one of 19 million.

Mr. Gordon: With respect I suggest that that is a completely irrelevant point. I thought the hon. gentleman was asking me whether I could give him a specific assurance as to what the United States administration was going to do about this tax treaty, and my answer is that I cannot do so.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 16—Exemption of income from manufacturing or processing business in designated areas.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the various stages of the bill, particularly to the clause by clause discussion. I would say that the Minister of Finance has been rather wildly shuffling the financial cards of the country and has taken a very dangerous method to try and deal Canada a better hand at this time. I am strongly of the opinion that the chances are that the hand will not be a better hand.

Clause 16, which deals with the exemption of income from manufacturing or processing business in designated areas, is not, as it exists, good legislation. The dangers of the clause have been ably pointed out to us by the hon. member for Wellington South. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is discriminatory. The industries which can take advantage of the designated areas will get a free ride on the financial income tax bandwagon whereas the industries in a non-designated area or in close proximity to a designated area will have to pay more income tax than ever. There is no doubt about that, because the Minister of Finance will have to demand from the country as a whole vast amounts of money for the next fiscal year. Therefore I submit that industry in non-designated areas will have to pay more income tax in order to give these new industries moving into designated areas the advantage that the Minister of Finance has promised them in clause 16.

Second, the clause is contradictory in that it contravenes municipal autonomy. Third, the measuring stick in the criterion is unfair; it is certainly autocratic and there is no doubt it is impracticable. We should be using, I submit, a 12 month period to measure the extent of employment in a given municipality which may now become a designated area merely by virtue of a six month period of unemployment in the summer or the winter. The barometer is not ample enough.

Fourth, it is certainly an affront to provincial and municipal autonomies. There are four levels of government in this country, and two of the most important levels are the minor municipality and the major municipality; that is, the township, village or town, and the county. They should certainly have the right to apply and should be the first to know whether these measures should be taken within their boundaries. In fact, I have had in my riding some suggestions from some quarters to the effect that our area be considered to have a lower degree of industrial and commercial activity compared with others, and I did suggest to the people who brought the subject up that we had not asked for any such measures. We have learned in the past, especially in southern Ontario, that we are self-supporting and that our efforts in that regard should be taken into consideration.

Fifth, this clause is not satisfactory to the great majority of industry. That goes without saying because we know the righteous howls of protest which are coming from established industry in the environs of municipalities which have been designated.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary:

> That section 71A (1) (b) be amended by adding: "except that the provisions of this section shall apply only where the municipality in which such taxpayer carries on business has requested the benefit hereof, and that municipalities receiving such benefits must not be closer to each other than 100 miles".

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, this amendment changes the basic concept of designated areas as defined in this particular clause of the bill. It does not refer to the bill as such.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, is the parliamentary secretary speaking to the amendment or to the validity of the amendment?

Mr. Benson: I am speaking to the amendment. The concept of designated areas, Mr. Chairman, as defined in this particular clause of the bill was worked out very carefully in consultation between the Department of Industry and the Department of Labour. It was put into the bill on the basis that areas which were lesser developed or which needed economic incentives would be granted these economic incentives on a logical and proper basis, bearing in mind the employment statistics over a period of years, and without any possibility of the sort of patronage which might develop if one were going to have varying criteria and municipalities coming to the federal government with their hat in their hand, as they did under the surplus manpower areas legislation of the previous government.

I have heard a great deal of talk over the past several days about this particular part of the bill being discriminatory. It certainly is discriminatory and is intended to be. The intention of this part of the legislation is to encourage industry to move into areas in Canada which need economic development.

We have heard members opposite saying, for the past few days, that it is unfair for the federal government to choose particular areas for designation when they were within a short distance of other areas with a better record of growth. They say it is unfair because it would attract industries from those other areas. The proposal is criticized because, it is said, it in some way over-rides municipal autonomy. I believe the bill as presented to the house is written in such a way that people across the whole of Canada are fairly treated. The areas designated are chosen on a legitimate basis as a result of the consistent application of facts set out by the Department of Labour. No area can claim it has been unfairly treated or that different criteria have been used in one place as distinct from another.

I believe that if the federal government had waited to consult with all the municipal governments on this matter, and with all the municipal councils, as I have heard it suggested should be done, we would never have had such legislation as this passed in Canada. This measure is designed to encourage industry to move into areas which need them, and it is my belief that members should not support an amendment which would, in effect, force the municipalities to come cap in hand to the federal government and ask for help.

Mr. Winkler: After listening to the parliamentary secretary, I think he and his minister should re-examine exactly what they are doing. He has said, in effect, that the whole measure is meant to be discriminative. He told us it would be better to withhold the entire measure than to consult the provinces and the municipalities. I think he was placing the emphasis on the municipalities.

In the years prior to coming to Ottawa as a representative, I had the pleasure of working with business people in my own home town in Ontario. Anyone who has had a similar experience will know very well that provincial legislation prevents municipalities from competing for industry. Municipalities are not able to offer certain attractions such as tax relief; nor are they under provincial law allowed to use these as inducements. However, here we find the federal government offering such incentives—incentives which, as I have said, the municipalities themselves are not allowed, by law, to offer in my own fair province. Is this not extremely discriminatory?

I do not know whether the amendment now proposed will serve the precise purpose which it is intended to serve. Possibly it has been put forward because of the situation at Brantford. This is the reason I have chosen to take part in this discussion. I do so because this situation is mentioned in an article which I intend to place on record. It has been stated in the house on a couple of occasions that on the very day on which it was publicly announced that Brantford was to be declared a depressed area, industry in that city was advertising in cities less than 30 miles away for skilled, semi-skilled and unskilled labour. Does that not make the decision with regard to Brantford ridiculous? There is much more in this than meets the eye. I have endeavoured to impress on the government the odd methods they are pursuing with regard to their practice of patronage. This is evident in other pieces of legislation, too. Since this measure was instituted they have possibly thought twice about it, and declared the odd other area as depressed for the purposes of the bill. But to designate one area, so closely located to another, as being depressed while doing nothing about its neighbours is an unfair thing to do, whether the reasons are economic or political.

Today, there is no industry which would not like to have some tax concession to enable it to expand or to become more competitive so as to do better in either the home market or the export market. But this government has seen fit to restrict this expansion in various ways. Were it not for the restriction on debate I should be glad to go into this aspect at greater length. However, all this has another connotation for the riding of Grey-Bruce, a constituency which for long supported the thinking of the party opposite. I should like the hon. gentleman, and the Prime Minister, who is now sitting near him, to pay particular attention to this. I am reading from an article which appeared in the Hanover Post on October 17, 1963:

> As parliament reopens, there are other financial problems beside pensions arising to plague the Pearson government. When the government announced plans for aiding depressed areas by making tax concessions to new industries establishing plants there, the proposal went through without much discussion.

The paper is, of course, referring to the first stage of discussion.

> But implementation of the proposal has brought practical difficulties. One of the areas labelled as depressed is the city of Brantford, Ont., and Brantford has obtained a new industry which had almost decided to locate its plant in Guelph, about 30 miles away, the principal factor in the final decision being the tax advantages offered because Brantford has been labelled a depressed area.
> Guelph and other municipalities in the general area are rightly annoyed, but when representatives of seven municipalities in the general area went to Ottawa to remonstrate with the government, they received no satisfaction.

I suppose that in this respect the situation is as described by the parliamentary secretary. The government could not listen to every municipality in the country before making its decision. Nor, apparently, could it listen to the provinces.

> C. M. Drury, Minister of Industry, told the delegation that the decision about making Brantford a depressed area had not been made hurriedly and he would not promise to remove that city from the list of those areas qualified for special treatment.
> The delegation had asked that nearby cities be given the same consideration (tax decision?) as Brantford if the government would not alter Brantford's status. This seems to be a reasonable proposal, but it did not impress Mr. Drury. Industrial centres in the same general area as Brantford, such as Guelph, Galt, Kitchener and Waterloo, are subject to the same influences industrially, and there seems to be a lack of equity in the dominion government's favouring one of them at the expense of the others.

Now listen to this:

Brantford has a Liberal as its member of parliament while the other centres mentioned are represented by Conservatives.

That is the part I want the government to listen to, because I shall have something more to say about it at a later date. The article ends: "Looks like the Grey Prison Farm decision."

Mr. Caouette: I am grateful for the courtesy the official opposition have extended to us in not sending us a copy of the amendment. We cannot study it. We do not know exactly what they mean and we would appreciate having a copy so that we could see exactly what it contains.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the statement of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) is correct and applies just as well to the province of Quebec.

In my opinion, this clause is discriminatory to our country since it establishes a distinction between certain areas. The minister should move an amendment to change the clause.

Besides, this section infringes upon provincial autonomy. It is just like putting shackles on certain municipalities. The government should propose an amendment to change the entire clause in order to treat all areas of the country equitably and to stop such discrimination.

I believe the government should mend its ways. Moreover, I am not the only one to make observations along this line, since members on this side of the house generally agree with me on the attitude of the government regarding this particular clause. It has not been adequately thought out, it is contrary to the spirit of provincial autonomy, contrary to common sense, since it is discriminatory.

[Text]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I merely want to raise a point of order or a point of privilege. I am not sure which. We are being asked to vote on an amendment we have not seen. I have not got a clue as to what it is. I wonder whether it would be possible for us to be given a copy of the amendment.

The Chairman: The Chair will read the amendment again for the benefit of the hon. member who does not have a copy. Mr. Alkenbrack moved:

That section 71A (1) (b) be amended by adding: "except that the provisions of this section shall apply only where the municipality in which such taxpayer carries on business has requested the benefit thereof, and that municipalities receiving such benefits must not be closer to each other than 100 miles."

Mr. Langlois: We have been told that there is a little bit of discrimination on the part of the government but certainly the setting of this arbitrary distance of 100 miles is also a form of discrimination. In some areas industrial centres are more than 100 miles apart but in other regions they are closer than that. Actually the amendment is imposing a restriction of 100 miles, which is also a form of discrimination. What is the logic in setting the distance at 100 miles? If it is necessary to make it 50 miles for some municipalities we should make it 50 miles. Why set a distance of 100 miles between each municipality that may ask for this assistance? In my view this is also a form of discrimination.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the speech made the other day by the hon. member for Oxford which has to do directly with this question of the distance of 100 miles. He said that rather than using a more or less bureaucratic statistical method to establish designated areas it would be much better to look at the matter from the point of view of a metropolitan area. He pointed out that Toronto is a large area extending for some 24 to 30 miles, I believe he said. There is no question that this legislation might well apply to certain portions of Toronto. He compared the situation there with the city of Brantford which has been named as a designated area. The city of Brantford is one of a number of cities in an area of roughly 24 miles. Why pick it out on a statistical basis? Why should all the other towns in the immediate area of Brantford not be named also?

I think his point was very well taken that under the present method the economic set-up is interefered with. As he suggested, within this area of 24 miles there is no question that the chambers of commerce and the town councils have gone out for business. Their efforts in this regard are upset by this form of discrimination when you simply say to them: We will name you on a statistical basis in a bureaucratic manner; we will not even consult you; we will simply name you. This method discriminates against all the other cities which are within a very few miles of the designated city. They are an economic unit and there is no question that they should be treated as a whole.

Offhand I would say that certain areas within Toronto might well want to apply. There are areas which for one reason or another feel that they are not getting the benefits that other portions of Toronto are. This might seem to be logical, but if you look at the matter closely you will see it is not logical at all but crazy to suggest, for instance, that one portion of Toronto should be named. It is a metropolitan area. Various municipalities joined together as a metropolitan area because of the benefits and advantages with regard to labour, industry, employment and so on.

The same reasoning should be applied to cities which are contiguous and form part of an economic unit. It has been pointed out, and it is quite reasonable, that today labour has a good deal of mobility. In other words, you might reside in the city of Brantford and work close by in one of six or seven other cities. I think that the amendment providing for the distance of 100 miles is completely within reason and for these reasons I support the amendment.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, several questions have been asked about this particular clause. The objection which the amendment has been designed to eliminate is the designation of areas as depressed or distressed, or areas of future opportunity or whatever you may call them, where the municipalities and areas themselves do not ask for it. We recall that when the former government brought in somewhat similar but certainly not as drastic legislation there were great cries from the opposition of that day about designating distressed areas and calling them distressed or depressed. Some municipalities might have such a degree of pride that they would wish to try to get along by themselves rather than be branded distressed areas. Under the present situation the government is almost saying to an area: You are looking rather seedy so here is a little money to help you out.

I know that this is the basic objection to the legislation and this is what the amendment has been designed to cover. The municipality itself must say that it feels the advantages of the legislation will outweigh any disadvantages that might come about by the municipality being branded a distressed area. There is always the possibility that such a designation might have the opposite effect to that which is intended. Undoubtedly the intention is to give some assistance to the area which has been designated but the effect might be the reverse if businesses which might otherwise go there would not go because of the designation. They might feel it was not the kind of community in which their employees might like to reside. Communities certainly have to consider these matters.

As far as the distance of 100 miles is concerned, I am not sure whether I would want to go that far. I know that the hon. member for Wellington South, who has been so interested in this matter, would have been quite agreeable to setting the distance at 100 miles, and I believe it was his idea. This would eliminate the possibility of an industry moving from one area to another as happened in the change from Guelph to Brantford.

I do think the municipalities should be consulted in a situation like this. They should be given the opportunity to decide whether or not they want to be designated. In supporting the amendment we believe they should have the opportunity so to decide by resolution. If they decide that the benefits will outweigh the disadvantages, then the legislation should become effective. While I have some doubts about the distance of 100 miles, I certainly support the principle of the amendment.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, on page 14 of the bill there is a marginal note reading "business in a designated area". Subclause 3 reads:

> For the purpose of this section, a person shall be deemed not to have been carrying on a business in a designated area in a fiscal period unless—

Then there are a whole lot of qualifications.

An hon. Member: It will not be long, just five minutes.

Mr. McIntosh: Do you want to take up the five minutes? When speaking on this bill on another occasion the hon. member for Edmonton East pointed out that it seemed that under the bill someone starting up a new business had to have machinery which was 95 per cent new. That is the understanding that some of us have on this side because the minister did not deny it. The amendment to section 71A (1) (b) adds these words:

> "except that the provisions of this section shall apply only where the municipality in which such taxpayer carries on business has requested the benefit thereof, and that municipalities receiving such benefits must not be closer to each other than 100 miles."

That is the understanding some of us on this side of the house have because the minister did not deny that fact. I would say that the capital cost allowance for new depreciable property seems to be a further protection for big business, and there seems to be a discrimination here between those with a good line of credit and those with a limited line of credit. In other words, there is a further imposition on small business, and particularly on the small manufacturer who wishes to purchase a less expensive type of furniture or possibly used machinery.

From experience I can say that a small businessman who starts up with limited capital and limited credit cannot afford to go out and buy new machinery, and every year when his income tax return goes through it seems that if he has made any profit the income tax people take his bank account and leave him with his accounts receivable and inventories.

When I talk about manufacturing I am thinking of cases in the smaller settlements of western Canada, where possibly a manufacturer may wish to start up a soft drink factory and the potential for customers is not too great. He may know some other company in a larger centre which is going to enlarge its plant, necessitating the purchase of new machinery, and he buys the machinery it is replacing.

As I said before it seems to me that this is discrimination, to put this stipulation in the bill. Seeing that the minister did not answer the hon. member for Edmonton East—

Mr. Macdonald: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McIntosh: Certainly.

Mr. Macdonald: If the hon. member—and this could apply equally to all hon. members on the opposite side—has any confidence in the amendment, maybe we can vote on it now, and put an end to their filibuster of their own amendment.

Mr. Pigeon: We don't have to receive orders from you.

Mr. McIntosh: I wonder if the hon. member who has just spoken would elaborate a little bit on his remark?

Mr. Macdonald: The best answer is for us to vote on it, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Pugh: I have a few questions to ask yet.

Mr. McIntosh: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think I can safely say all hon. members of the house are in favour of the amendment, or the other amendment qualified by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Turner: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. McIntosh: Certainly.

Mr. Turner: The hon. member referred to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce whose complaint, as I understand it, was that if we were going to treat one municipality in a certain way we should treat them all in the same way. How about this subamendment putting the prohibitive distance of 100 miles between areas? How can it achieve that result?

Mr. McIntosh: I do not think he had anything to do with the subamendment, except that he spoke on it. But it does seem very odd to us, as the hon. member for Grey-Bruce pointed out, that in this one particular locality where there is a Liberal sitting member it should be a designated area for assistance under the income tax bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does that apply to Blairmore, Alberta?

Mr. McIntosh: And I understand an area with a Liberal minister, also. These are things which the people of Canada want the government to answer. If our accusations and insinuations are wrong I am quite sure some people on that side of the house will get up and give all the other areas around Brantford an explanation or an answer to the question put by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to say a word at this time?

Mr. McIntosh: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since there is such an obvious desire to co-operate and get this bill through today, I was wondering if there would be general agreement to have the committee sit for the next hour and complete the bill?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I have been in the house since 1958 and I understand there are rules and regulations by which we are guided and which we are expected to follow. Since the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has become house leader I think, if one went back on the record since the session started, he would find there have been more requests from that one member to change the rules and regulations than there were in the preceding five to ten years. May I call it five o'clock.

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills and private bills.

Criminal Code

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PROVINCIAL LOTTERIES

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-36, to amend the Criminal Code (provincial lotteries).

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is probably the umpteenth time that I rise to speak in this house to try and convince the government that it should welcome the request it has received several times in the course of many years to amend the Criminal Code in order to authorize provincial or national sweepstakes.

During the debate on the Income Tax Act, when one of my colleagues raised a certain point, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) asked that the question be put to a vote. He was accusing opposition members of engaging in a filibuster because they were expressing their views on the value of the proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will keep his colleagues from engaging in a filibuster in regard to the bill I am introducing and also that he will ask them to allow the question to be put to the vote. I suggest also that he asks his colleagues not to drag on their remarks so that by the vote, people will be informed of this viewpoint on that matter.

Bill C-36 seems to be agreeable to all the population, or at least to the majority of the people of the province of Quebec.

Its provisions differ somewhat from those of similar legislation introduced in the house these last four or five years, since its main purpose is to amend section 179 of the Criminal Code by adding an exception to the qualifications pertaining to the setting up of lotteries.

In short, the bill aims at adding an exception which would read roughly:

> That the Criminal Code authorize provinces that so wish to proceed to the establishment or setting up of provincial lottery systems, to help hospitals, social security systems or other organizations whose purpose is to improve the well-being of Canadians.

If this bill is passed, and I hope it will be, it will satisfy the needs of the people.

Objections are being raised across Canada, especially in some areas of some provinces, sometimes for quite justified reasons, but often for highly questionable reasons; but citizens nevertheless oppose the plan for a national lottery to be set up by the government. And that is what prompted me to introduce a bill drafted in such a way as to respect mentality, denomination, in some cases, even the chauvinism of some people about lotteries.

I am also of the opinion that if that bill was agreed upon, it would help to a large extent, in the province of Quebec, to solve the fiscal problems which now face Mr. Lesage and his government.

And if the government makes no move to block the bill through useless discussions, I think we may one day speak of the Pearson plan. However, if the government consciously kills the bill, we will refer to the three P's: Pearson, plan and patronage.

Consequently, I feel it would be better—

Mr. Habel: Are you speaking of patronage?

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) wishes to ask me questions about patronage today, I am in a better position to answer him now than I was last week. For the time being, I would rather deal with the subject under discussion and ignore the nonsensical remarks of the hon. member for Cochrane. I will come back to them later if he wishes me to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I could speak at length on this bill. I could give you its history or expound a philosophical study or thesis on the morality of such a legislation.

I could also give you statistical data to establish a comparison between Canada and the 70 countries that have already enacted similar legislation.

Of course, I could quote a number of documents to support my point and to show the advantages of a lottery such as the one which is proposed in this bill. But I think that would be a waste of time.

During the past several years, we have heard in this house the views of members from all parts of the country, from coast to coast.

In this session, after the movement had been launched by the Conservatives when they were in office in 1958, we have stirred up interest for this bill. I notice that on the order paper, for example, we have several similar bills, one in which the wording is different, that is Bill C-21, introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). We have also Bill C-24, introduced by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), and then Bill C-44, under the name of the Creditist member for Beauce (Mr. Perron). As for the last one, even though I am greatly pleased to see it on the order paper, I find it is a plagiary, complete with periods and commas, of the bill that I am introducing today.

In the past, members who had gone through the election mill have appealed here on behalf of a lottery. The former member for Calgary South, Mr. Arthur Smith, a Conservative, the Liberal member, Mr. Merv. Hardie, and the member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. J. F. Browne), introduced bills of their own. I mention their names as a token of esteem for the work they did in that field and also to remind the house that members from all parts of Canada appealed in favour of lotteries.

Which goes to prove that the majority is in favour of lotteries. Not only members of parliament but public bodies are interested. For instance, the 800 chambers of commerce of Canada are in favour of the project. At a recent congress of mayors and municipalities held in Ontario, the federal government was asked to set up a lottery. Recently, we had the opportunity of seeing how interested the public is. I should like here to express in particular, the admiration I have for Mrs. English, of Calgary, who has set upon herself to get one million signatures in Canada in favour of sweepstakes. She worked a great deal for that cause travelling all over the country. I wish to pay a special tribute to her. There is also the survey conducted a few years ago by the paper La Presse which revealed unequivocally that 89 per cent of the people in the province of Quebec were in favour of a lottery.

I do not understand why the government should ask some members to extend the debate until six o'clock so as to kill the bill, when it should recognize that this bill is logical and acceptable. In fact, it merely suggests an amendment to the Criminal Code in order to enable the provinces wishing to do so to pass legislation allowing them to establish a lottery.

We respect the convictions and conscientious objections of certain persons from different areas of this country.

The statutes of the province of Quebec contain since 1935 an act concerning the establishment of a provincial lottery. In 1949, Mr. Duplessis called for the establishment of a provincial lottery at a convention held in Chicoutimi. At that time, Mr. Jean Lesage, the present premier of the province of Quebec, was a member of the federal cabinet and he had declined to proceed with the request made to him by Mr. Duplessis.

Well, today, the situation has changed. It is now Mr. Lesage who is asking the ministers in Ottawa to establish a provincial lottery. Recently, some federal ministers and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) in particular stated that one must be Liberal in Quebec as well as in Ottawa. If that is true, I wonder why the Liberals of Ottawa turn down the request of the Quebec Liberals.

I hope that the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) who will speak later will tell us whether he intends to act upon Mr. Lesage's request to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. Boulanger: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Valade: Certainly.

Mr. Boulanger: You said that Mr. Lesage has submitted an official request. Could you be more explicit?

Mr. Valade: It is a fact that Mr. Lesage made a request a few years ago. He wrote, I believe, to the Minister of Justice to that effect asking him to consider a bill authorizing a provincial lottery. At that time, a federal-provincial conference was to be held and during that conference, the project was to be discussed. There was no federal conference and when Mr. Lesage came to Ottawa in September last, he did not mention it, but all the same he had advocated such a bill at political meetings even if he did not mention it on that occasion as he had promised.

I understand that Mr. Lesage is playing politics with this matter while we, Conservatives, would like to pass legislation. We are certainly not playing politics since we are advocating this legislation.

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked a question and the hon. member did his best to answer, but he is far from being clear and precise. He has just admitted there was no official demand made to the government.

Mr. Valade: It is not a reason to rise on a point of order. Should the hon. member wish to ask me a question, I shall answer him by recalling the promise that his colleague, the hon. member for Dollard, made during the last electoral campaign, on the occasion of a political rally in northern Quebec.

Mr. Boulanger: This is not an answer.

Mr. Valade: The hon. member for Dollard said that should the Liberal party be elected, we would have provincial lotteries.

I am very happy to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) applaud, for he himself, when he was occupying the opposition benches, demanded lotteries. I am anxious to see whether he shall induce his friends not to kill the bill. We shall then know whether the minister applauds simply to make noise or if he really desires a lottery such as we request.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): May I ask a question?

Would the hon. member for St. Mary be able to explain why, from 1957 to 1963, when his government enjoyed a record majority in the House of Commons, it did not follow through with that resolution?

Mr. Valade: It gives me pleasure to answer that question. First of all, we did not have an overwhelming majority at that time but rather from 1958 to 1962. We had then inherited from the Liberals the unemployment problem and we did not have time to deal with lotteries. But since, the Conservative members settled down to work. Besides, if the minister will refer to the order paper, he will note the complete lack of such bills in the name of hon. members of the then opposition. It is easy to say that we did nothing during these four years, but the Liberals were in office 22 years and there was never any mention of lotteries on their part.

When Mr. Lesage was a member of the federal cabinet, while Mr. Duplessis was premier of the province of Quebec, there was a request to amend the Criminal Code in order to allow lotteries to be held. The Liberals, who were then in office, refused. I recall at this point the promises made by the Liberals during the last electoral campaign. The hon. member for Dollard had reached a point where he had nothing to lose in making so bold as to promise that, once in office, a Liberal government would grant lotteries to the province of Quebec.

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. member for St. Mary.

Mr. Valade: If the hon. member for Dollard would let me recite what he promised, he could ask me a question when I am through. I think it would be advisable for him to follow that course.

Mr. Rouleau: My question is related to the one asked by the hon. member for Mercier. Is the hon. member for St. Mary aware that when his party was in office, the premier of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, asked that the holding of provincial lotteries be permitted? Could the hon. member tell the house when the premier of Quebec made a similar request to the present government?

Mr. Pigeon: During the last electoral campaign, at the time of the famous 12 month ultimatum.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I am ready to answer that question. I remember the numerous ultimatums delivered by Mr. Lesage who, during the election campaign, even said he would deliver an ultimatum to the federal government if the latter did not, within 12 months after its coming into office, amend the Criminal Code so as to legalize lotteries. The hon. member for Dollard can confirm or deny what I am saying, but I have enough information to prove that Mr. Lesage stated over and over, during the election campaign, that if he were elected, he would give 12 months to the Liberal party to legalize lotteries in the province of Quebec. Besides, I suspect the hon. member for Dollard of trying to prevent me from quoting a newspaper article mentioning him. Without further delay, I quote an item published in Montreal-Matin of May 3, 1963—

Mr. Rouleau: It is not the Reforme.

Mr. Valade: No, not the Reforme. This is a more honest newspaper than the Reforme. This article says:

> As for the Liberal member Guy Rouleau, he promised during the election campaign that a Liberal government would pass an amendment to the Criminal Code for the setting up of provincial lotteries.
> Mr. Rouleau being in Vancouver, I could get in touch with Mr. Valade only.

Now, if the hon. member for Dollard is not satisfied with this quotation, I will ask him to deny it officially. Can the hon. member for Dollard, who constantly interrupts me, deny that he promised provincial lotteries, if his party was elected? He will be able to speak later on, but till then, I would ask him to state clearly whether he promised that the Liberal party, if elected, would amend the Criminal Code so as to authorize the province of Quebec to pass its own legislation for the holding of lotteries.

Mr. Speaker, it is now up to the hon. member for Dollard to answer, and I hope that when he speaks in turn on this bill, he will not take advantage of the situation to talk it out.

Mr. Boulanger: It is not him, it is you who are talking it out.

Mr. Valade: I hear the hon. member for Mercier. We should be happy to know his contribution in favour of lotteries. I advise him to prepare a bill, if he can do it, and we shall be happy to discuss its merits.

Mr. Speaker, there are of course many things I could say with respect to lotteries. First, the purpose of lotteries is to help hospitals.

The benefits we would derive from them could pay for hospital insurance.

We could also include in those benefits the cost of the promises made by the people who were formerly in the opposition and who are now in office. In this connection, I remember the speeches of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) who is now Secretary of State for External Affairs, and also the claims of the Minister of Public Works (Mr.

Deschatelets) who, at that time, requested that mental and tubercular patients enjoy the benefits of hospital insurance.

I am convinced that if we had a provincial lottery, that would enable the province of Quebec to help those two groups of patients.

Through this legislation, we could probably succeed in reducing taxes in the province of Quebec. Heaven knows how heavily we are being taxed in that province since the Liberal government came into power.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of establishing a lottery would be to prevent underhand lotteries or rackets which are conducted in every Canadian city. We read every day in the papers about people being arrested and prosecuted for operating illegal lotteries.

Several judicial authorities have declared themselves in favour of the establishment of state or provincial lotteries so as to check rackets and illicit lotteries.

I would like to take this opportunity to quote an excerpt from the May 3, 1963 issue of La Presse, which reads as follows:

> Mr. Justice M. Andre Blain favours the establishment of lotteries "for the sake of the human race".

I could quote many other judicial authorities to prove my point in this respect.

When we propose the adoption of a lottery legislation, the biggest objection relates to morality. I cannot understand that such a question could possibly be raised nowadays. Public opinion on lotteries has greatly evolved in the last 20 years.

In this connection, I would like to quote the opinion of certain church authorities, especially that of Cardinal Griffin, who had this to say on the subject:

> The important point, what is immoral is the abuse and not gambling in itself, and in that respect, there are many puritan opinions which would have to be rectified.

In my opinion, these words of Cardinal Griffin bear repeating: "many puritan opinions which would have to be rectified."

I believe that when we talk about morality, there are indeed highly puritan opinions which need to be rectified.

It is for that reason that we must be realistic. I had the opportunity to realize that in some areas there are groups of citizens who exert pressure who object to the establishment of lotteries simply on moral grounds. It is for this reason that I moved the bill, because it respects those regional trends—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must interrupt the hon. member and inform him that his time has expired. The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. Valade: If I may have a minute or two, Mr. Speaker, with unanimous consent, I will conclude my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent?

[Translation]

Mr. Boulanger: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to remind the hon. member for St. Mary that there is precious little time left before six o'clock and that if, as he said himself about 20 minutes ago, the bill is talked out, he will have to take his share of the blame for that.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I realize that the hon. member for Mercier will not be speaking on this bill since he is unable to do so. However, concerning the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say—

Mr. Boulanger: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I want the hon. member for St. Mary to know that when I mentioned that time was going fast, I did so as tactfully as possible.

Now, the hon. member said I would be unable to speak on the lottery bill, thereby insinuating that I am not competent enough for that, and I would ask him to take back those words.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I could talk on the question of privilege and say that when the hon. member interrupted me he goaded me, so to speak, implying that if I talked on my own bill I would talk it out myself. He attributed to me a totally wrong intention. The implication of the hon. member was of a kind likely to discredit me in the minds of those who will read Hansard. That intention never entered my mind. That takes care of the question of privilege.

As for the point of order, I should like to ask the house to allow me to complete my remarks, as it will take me only a few minutes—

Mr. Lambert: Agreed.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for St. Mary will realize that the house has given him extra time already. I am sure he would want to finish what he has to say within a minute or two.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I thank the members for their kindness. If, for technical reasons, it is impossible to have a vote on this matter this afternoon, I ask the government to submit the problem of lotteries to a special committee of the house for study and order that committee to submit a report before the end of this session, so that the members may study it and the house may reach a definite decision on that matter.

I, therefore, conclude my remarks by reading part of an article by Andre Laurendeau, which appeared in Le Devoir on March 14, 1962:

> This is a field where the provincial state of Quebec wants to act and could act. What prevents it from doing anything is solely the moral judgment rendered on lotteries by the Anglo-Canadians and the section of the Criminal Code which translates that judgment into judicial terms.
> This is the reason why it seems to us that the obstacle should be removed. The provinces should be free to do as they wish.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the house will have the opportunity to vote, in order that we may know the views of the members on the matter of lotteries. If the house cannot take a vote, I again ask the government to consider favourably the establishment of a special committee to look into the matter.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, this is the third occasion in less than a month on which the question of lotteries has come before the House of Commons. I regret very much that the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) should have prefaced his remarks by asking members on this side not to filibuster his bill. No member on this side of the house has any intention of filibustering his bill—any more than the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), who spoke from the other side of the chamber a little while ago, when he said he was not filibustering the income tax bill but was speaking in favour of the measure.

I am 100 per cent in favour of the bill introduced by the hon. member for St. Mary. In rising to speak in this debate I wish to make a contribution which I did not deliver when speaking on the bills introduced by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) two weeks ago.

Since the last occasion when this subject was discussed, the Cambridgeshire has been run in Britain and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been distributed to successful prizewinners on this side of the water. Their names have appeared in daily and weekly newspapers throughout the length and breadth of the land. When one finds people in such small places as Meaford, in Grey county, Ontario, holding tickets on the Irish sweepstake, he realizes how widespread is the purchase of such tickets throughout the dominion. Since the distribution of those tickets there have been prosecutions in the province of Ontario in connection with such small matters as bingo games and raffles. I hold in my hand a cutting from the Toronto Star of last Tuesday in which there is an account of a Canadian Legion branch being fined $225 for raffling a boat, motor and trailer valued at $1,800 at a dance hall on August 1. In the course of the trial, Magistrate Butler, an experienced member of the bench, told the lawyer for the Canadian Legion branch concerned that the remedy for the situation in which his clients and others found themselves lies in the hands of the members of parliament who could change the law. When an experienced member of the bench describes the present situation in Canada as a situation needing a remedy he is describing it as a blight on the body politic. When it comes to the question of lotteries, we can go back to July 8 when the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm asked the Minister of Justice whether or not any action would be taken with regard to lotteries in Canada. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) as reported in Hansard of that date replied:

> I have, indeed, examined the voluminous file on lotteries of which the hon. member is speaking and I notice that during the six years when the hon. member's party was in power it did not take any decision on this issue. I hope it will be possible for me to make certain representations in due time.

I notice that no time is definitely referred to in that reply. We were not told when these representations would be made. I should like to say I do not like the answer given to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm any more than I liked the reply given by an hon. member on this side of the house this evening when he said that in the previous four years or six years the government supported by hon. members opposite had taken no action with regard to lotteries. Let me point out that for more than three years before the present government took office illegal actions were being committed on the St. Lawrence in the world of shipping, but the government of that day took no action against the S.I.U. However, we are in the process of clearing up that situation. The previous government during all the years it was in office took no action with regard to the pay of members of the House of Commons, but when the present government came to power it did take action and I believe all members of the house and of the other place are satisfied with the attitude this government took.

When we are considering this question of lotteries I do not think we should take the attitude: You did not do anything about it, therefore we will not. We have these two precedents, the precedent of the S.I.U. situation and of the pay of members of the House of Commons and of the Senate. And I believe that within the lifetime of this session of parliament there will be a change made in the lottery laws in accordance with the desires of such forward looking members as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, the hon. member for Acadia and the hon. member for St. Mary.

I should like to refer to some comments made recently by hon. members opposite with regard to widows applying for post office business in the province of Ontario. It seems that one of these women, a widow, is being condemned for her enterprise in soliciting an appointment which has come to her. But I have heard no one make any comment about a poor widow in London who was convicted on October 25 for selling lottery tickets, as her husband had been doing for 20 years prior to his death. If we are to become exercised about the financial position of widows in small towns in eastern Ontario, why cannot we be so exercised about widows in a big city in western Ontario?

Speaking on the bill introduced by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm I mentioned that after making an earlier speech on the subject of lotteries I had received a tremendous number of letters, telegrams, telephone calls and personal visits commending my statements with regard to the desirability of licensing lotteries. The only protest I received was from a minister of one of the Protestant denominations of this country; it was a three page letter which, I assure hon. members, contained more heat than light. I do not like reading speeches, but I should like to read some comments here because I intend to quote biblical references in answer to that great body of Christians who are fighting against the licensing of lotteries by using, practically, only moral grounds. In the 18th verse of the 18th chapter of Proverbs, in the Old Testament, it is stated: "The lot causeth contentions to cease, and parteth between the mighty". Well, if the lot causes contentions to cease, the sooner we introduce lotteries into this country and get rid of the contention which exists with respect to this law among the ten provinces which make up Canada, the better for all concerned. With regard to biblical and religious answers to that group of moralists who are seeking to put Canada in a strait-jacket, I would simply state that the question of lotteries in Canada is completely overshadowed and almost blotted out of human consciousness by the great cloud of hypocrisy that has been built up throughout the years by those who have taken on the self-imposed task of acting as their brothers' keepers by arguing against the continuous demand of the people that lotteries should be legalized.

I know that definite protests have been received by members on this side of the house from at least two prominent communions of church-going Canadians asking that every effort be made to see that this bill, and others like it, are not allowed to become law. Now I consider myself as regular a churchgoer as many, and more regular than most, and I ask those who are objecting to this bill on religious grounds if they have for a single moment considered the role of lots or lotteries in the lives of the people who have given us the greatest treasure of all—the Bible.

Is St. Matthias held in less esteem than the 11 disciples who remained following the betrayal of Christ by Judas? Of course not. But how many realize that St. Matthias was chosen by lot to fill the post vacated by Judas Iscariot? Under the guidance of Peter, as recorded in the first chapter of the Book of the Acts written by Luke, the doctor, the apostles, numbering about 120, nominated two to the vacant discipleship and then in the 26th verse we read "They gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles."

Would those who seek to deny Canadians the right to participate in lotteries condemn the 120 apostles mentioned in the Book of the Acts, for choosing that saint, Matthias, by a system that is condemned in this country today?

There are many, many references through the Old and the New Testaments to the "casting of lots". It was evidently an established manner of living among the ancients and one can read of all manner of decisions being made by the resort to chance. Without a doubt the best-known episode in the long history of casting lots or conducting lotteries, took place at the foot of the cross on Calvary almost two thousand years ago. In no less than three of the gospel accounts of the crucifixion direct mention is made of the casting of lots. In Mark 15, verse 24, we read:

> And when they had crucified Him, they parted His garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take.

In the 19th chapter of the gospel according to St. John, verses 23 and 24, you will find it written:

> 23. Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took...His coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout.
> 24. They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the scripture might be fulfilled, which saith,...And for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

In the book of Matthew, chapter 27, verse 35, that disciple wrote:

> And they crucified Him, and parted His garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots.

Who was the prophet to whom Matthew, Mark and John referred? Why, none other than David, king of Israel, who more than a thousand years before prophesied in the 22nd psalm: "They cast lots upon my vesture".

I am not one to hold up to the world the action of the four Roman soldiers at Golgotha as an example to be imitated, but I do emphasize that the great prophet David recognized that the casting of lots was an integral part of life of his day and age and he knew that the practice would not be stamped out by religious fanatics during the thousand years between his reign and the crucifixion. And please bear in mind that after the casting of lots by the soldiers to govern the division of our Lord's garments, about 120 apostles resorted to chance in selecting the thirteenth disciple.

Since it is evident that all ranks of the population in Jerusalem relied on lots, why are some religious communions in Canada 2000 years later endeavouring to maintain a ban on lotteries? If it was good enough for the disciples, surely it could be adopted with profit by those who seek to follow their teachings and who might very wisely also endeavour to follow their example.

In directing these few remarks to those religious organizations which are making efforts to relegate lotteries to limbo, I would point out that nowhere in the Bible is the practice of divorce praised by our Lord. As He went about doing good, in great contrast to many modern teachers who just go about, He was asked about divorce in the 19th chapter of Matthew. His listeners advised Him that Moses had allowed them to practise divorce and the Lord remarked in forthright terms:

...Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives.

In all sincerity I ask those who are opposing the passage of this bill, if Moses took cognizance of the desires of the people and amended the moral law, why can you not take cognizance of the desires of the people and support those who wish to re-establish in this country a practice which was widespread in the time of Christ and which He did not condemn? If the busybody do-gooders who are seeking to confine Canadians within a legalistic strait-jacket with regard to their mode of living wish to follow old time practice they should leave the question of lotteries alone and endeavour to upset Moses' action in allowing divorce.

We have heard arguments in the house over the past several weeks that we should follow the example of Great Britain by removing the desks from the House of Commons and becoming more of a clublike organization than we are. We are told that in Britain they do it this way and in Britain they do it that way and in Britain they do it the other way and we should follow their example.

In two previous discussions on lotteries in the house I made a passing reference to the national premium bonds in Great Britain.

Mr. Valade: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cowan: Certainly.

Mr. Valade: The hon. member's Biblical citations have really been amazing to me, but I wonder whether he would discuss the purpose of my bill which is to amend the Criminal Code with a view to permitting the provinces to pass their own legislation in this regard. I would really be interested in knowing if there are some citations from the Bible to support my demand.

Mr. Clancy: Is the hon. member going to continue so he can call it six o'clock? Let us vote on the matter.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Yorkton I would point out that on both previous occasions when I spoke on the lottery bill I sat down in ample time to allow a vote to be taken and I shall do the same thing today, I assure him.

I wish to refer to the fact that Great Britain has national premium bonds, and has had since 1957. The practice of making monthly draws in Great Britain was instituted by the Right Hon. Harold Macmillan in a speech in the House of Commons on the 17th of April, 1956.

Mr. Clancy: We know that.

Mr. Cowan: If Great Britain is making use of premium bonds, which is nothing but another form of lottery, and all members of the house are asked to follow the example of the British house by removing the desks and having a more clublike atmosphere, I also hold up the example of Great Britain in that regard.

I also pointed out that in 1956 Lady Tweedsmuir, a member of the British House of Commons, asked the Right Hon. Harold Macmillan if he would allow these bonds to be sold in the commonwealth so that Great Britain could bring in—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I must raise a point of order. The hon. member is discussing ways of applying lotteries and he is making comparisons with other countries, but the principle of my bill is to amend the Criminal Code to allow the provinces to pass their own legislation. I should like the hon. member to speak on the merits of my bill and not fly away from it into the words of pious Biblical personalities. I should like him to comment on the principle of my bill.

Mr. Cowan: As I stated when I began to speak, I am 100 per cent in favour of the subject matter of this bill and I certainly hope it will pass with an overwhelming majority. However, having referred to the action of the British government in introducing premium bonds I again want to refer to those moralists who are opposing lotteries in this country and to point out that the Right Hon. Harold Macmillan in the course of the discussion there stated that the purchase of these bonds appealed to those members of the community who are not attracted by the reward of interest but who do respond to the incentive of fortune.

I believe that this opportunity also should be given to the Canadian people as well as that of buying lottery tickets which would be legalized by the bill of the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade).

I should like to make one further quotation and there will still be time to have a vote. Dr. Morton, a professor at Osgoode hall, Toronto, investigated in 1957 the question of gambling in Canada and reported that he was puzzled by the approving attitude of many people, some of them clergymen, who violently opposed public lotteries but favoured "Ernie", the monthly premium bond draw in Great Britain, a nation that has the safest gambling in the world. "Ernie" is the short form for electronic random number indicating equipment which is used to make the draw on all one pound premium bonds in circulation, but only 4½ per cent interest on all the bonds in the draw is involved, not the bonds themselves. I say to hon. members that I am in favour of this and in order that there may be time for a vote I shall cease my remarks at this moment.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic party who are in attendance in the house this evening are unanimous in their contention that this subject matter should come to a vote with the least possible delay. Taking a bipartisan approach I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Fane) that the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I only wish to make a few remarks.

The matter under consideration has been submitted to the house for several years. In fact, during each session various bills are introduced in order to amend the Criminal Code and thus enable the federal and provincial governments to organize state and provincial lotteries.

[Text]

Mr. Clancy: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is it fair of the hon. member to deny the right of a vote on this matter?

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think that the motion has to be put without debate. I believe the rules of the house are that the motion has to be put without debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The motion that the question be now put is a debatable motion.

Mr. Valade: But the hon. member was not talking on the motion. He was talking about lotteries.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I was coming to the motion. And since they ask that the question be put, surely we must be entitled to make some remarks in this regard.

In my opinion the successive governments never paid that question all the attention it deserves. From year to year, from session to session, promises were made to the effect that in the near future the government in office would give that controversial question serious consideration. But there is still no sign of action along this line.

It seems that strong pressures are being exerted on the federal government to preserve the status quo. I am absolutely opposed to the establishment of a lottery at the national level, but as far as provincial lotteries are concerned, I am 200 per cent in favour.

The one thing which seems to delay the amendment of the Criminal Code to authorize lotteries is the pressure exerted by certain groups which are against any kind of lottery. Now, if the federal parliament were to amend the Criminal Code so as to leave the provinces free to set up lotteries, those pressures would be brought to bear upon the provincial governments which, I am sure, are fully capable of taking their own decisions in that respect. Mr. Speaker, if there have been pressures against the amendment of the Criminal Code, there have also been pressures in favour of a change. One of the most distinguished persons to speak in favour of lotteries was most definitely Premier Jean Lesage of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, provincial revenues are so low compared to expenditures that we have not the right to prevent the provinces, through inertia on our part, from trying to raise revenues from other sources or to prevent great amounts from flowing out of the country.

Mr. Speaker, because certain groups from a province object to this bill, there is no reason why all other provinces should deprive themselves of revenues. The province of Quebec wants to institute a provincial lottery; it has expressed this wish through its prime minister, its associations, its newspapers, etc. Are we going to say "no" to the province of Quebec? What reason are we going to offer for such a refusal? Should the Criminal Code be amended so as to allow provincial lotteries, those provinces will not have to institute them, they will be free to do what they please about it.

How prudish can you get? Mr. Speaker, what is wrong in conducting lotteries? Is it worse than horse racing where bets are legalized and certain individuals make millions of dollars? Are those profits used for charitable works? Yet, those racing tracks are operating throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by saying: "Let us get something done, let us give more freedom to the provinces".

Mr. Gerald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I think that—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression Your Honour was just ready to announce a decision on the point I raised that the motion should not be debated.

Mr. MacNaught: He made a ruling on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I refer to standing order 32(1)(c) which states:

The following motions are debatable:
(c) for the previous question;

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, first I want to comment on the motion that was put by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker I think as a result of the motion put by the hon. member for Skeena, which was properly seconded, the effect of which is that what is to be debated is the advisability of deciding the previous question. That is a debatable motion, and if it were to be resolved in the affirmative then the motion put by the hon. member for St. Mary that there should be second reading of his bill is what would be voted on without debate. Therefore that motion having been put I would submit to Your Honour the ambit of debate was extremely narrow and could not be on the principle of the hon. member's bill.

Mr. Deschatelets: I would like to elaborate on the different points raised by the hon. member, but seeing it is six o'clock may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock I must advise the house that the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired. As the business to be considered at seven o'clock will be the estimates of the Department of Forestry would the house agree to go into committee of supply now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

1. Departmental administration including $24,000 for grants in aid of forestry research, $1,060,700.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, it is a great privilege for me to present the estimates of the Department of Forestry. For some years, I have enjoyed close associations with forestry and the forest industries of Canada, more particularly in British Columbia.

It is natural that my associations with the industry have sharpened my appreciation of the importance of forestry, not only to regional economies but to the development of the nation. I speak not only in economic terms when I make that statement, although we all have some knowledge of the importance of forestry to the economy as the largest earner of foreign exchange, as the principal source of employment, that is in the manufacturing industries, I regard it rather as a unifying influence in encouraging the exchange of ideas between governments, between organizations and between individuals. We have 11 governments, the ten provincial and one federal government.

While we have problems arising out of the fact that the topography in different parts of Canada varies and the weather conditions vary in the different parts, in bringing together the forestry associations and the forest communities as well as the governments of the provinces, I think we constitute a unit through which you can seek joint solutions of common problems. Perhaps the greatest contribution that the federal Department of Forestry can make lies in the continuing development of this new department as a meeting place for the exchange of ideas on problems of mutual interest. Equally important, it may well serve as a clearing house for the flow of information that is necessary, not only for the well-being of forest resources but of other industries that are so dependent on these particular resources.

Having regard to the importance of forestry to the national economy and to the role that the federal Department of Forestry plays, I think that those of you who have had an opportunity to study the estimates will agree that, to say the least, they are modest. If anything, they are on the low side.

The current estimates, as you will see, total less than $18 million, $17.8 million to be exact, of which roughly $16.5 million form the main estimates and only about $1 million the supplementary estimates. This total is less than $1 million—some $900,000—higher than it was in 1962-63. It is less than $7 million higher than 1960-61, the year in which the department was established. This is the year in which the department functioned for approximately five months. It is worthy of note, I think, that of the $6.9 million which represents the increase over the first partial year of the department's operation, $4.5 million has been allocated to federal-provincial forestry agreements. This leaves only $2.4 million for administration, capital expenditures and an increase in research.

I see here some members of this house, who were members of parliament, when the Department of Forestry came into being. I see one hon. member opposite who played a very important part in bringing the new department into existence. As you will see from a reference to Hansard, the raison d'etre for bringing the new department into existence was research. The significant thing is that although the department has been in existence now for roughly three years, the budget for research has been increased by less than $1 million per annum. In contrast I refer to the debate which took place on July 11, 1960, when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle introduced the bill establishing the forestry department. In the speech introducing the bill, he expressed the hope—more than a hope, the decision—that within five years the research appropriation of the department would be doubled. In contrast with that hope, when we are now approaching the end of the year, the increase is less than 15 per cent.

In citing these figures and in dealing with the estimates tonight I would ask the members of the committee to recall that these estimates were prepared by the first minister of forestry, the distinguished member for Victoria-Carleton. When I say that there has been this very modest growth, I am not in any way reflecting on my hon. friend the member for Victoria-Carleton. We have been friends for many years and I have a high regard for his abilities, and his good intentions. I want to express appreciation for what he did during the first year or so that he was in office. But his difficulties—and they were not circumstances which he could control—arose out of the so-called austerity program that was introduced just when the new department was getting going. There was a freeze and the department was not able to recruit the staff which was needed. My reason for mentioning the slow growth is because I want to emphasize to members of the committee the fact that the accomplishment has fallen far short of the hopes expressed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle when he, in his capacity as minister of northern affairs and national resources, introduced the legislation which brought the department into existence.

If one examines the staff estimates of the department's research element, I am sure one would find that there is real cause for concern. In 1960-61 the research element of the department numbered 826 positions. This year the number is 943, an apparent increase of 117. But I would point out that 44 of these were transferred during the second year, 1961, from the Department of Agriculture. Therefore the real increase is 73, or less than 9 per cent. The research staff has certainly suffered a withering process during the intervening period. As a result, at the end of April or first of May this year the research element numbered less than 850 persons; and allowing for 44 transfers from the Department of Agriculture the adjusted figure of 804 is 3 per cent under the authorized establishment of 1960-61.

Happily, Mr. Chairman, I can record some progress in this area, because some weeks ago treasury board authorized recruitment up to 93 per cent of our current establishment, and the department is now working actively to fill the vacancies. We have had some encouraging responses and it is our confident expectation that within a few months the additional support which we need will be available.

Turning now, for a few brief introductory comments, to the votes themselves, vote No. 1 provides for the departmental administration and the proposed $1.06 million represents an increase of $4,000 only over last year in spite of increases in salaries. Certain intra-vote increases have partially offset the decreases, but the net result is that there is an over-all increase of only $4,000. The professional and special services vote is up by some $10,500, and this is accounted for by the fact that $20,000 is needed for an economic survey of North American timber requirements. Some time ago Canada, as part of the FAO program, undertook a joint study of the timber resources of North America, and $20,000 is required for that purpose.

Grants in aid of forestry research show roughly a $19,000 increase, but this again is merely a paper increase. It reflects a consolidation of certain grants, more than one, into one vote. Telephone and telegraph expenditures are a very good example; they have been transferred into another slot and as a result there has not been a substantial increase.

It might be opportune at this stage to refer to the economics division of the Department of Forestry. That division is financed through vote No. 1, the administration vote. I sincerely believe that it is definitely in the national interest that we have a greater development in the field of forestry economics. It is a specialized field and this is one field which presents real difficulty in recruiting. We have a limited number—I know this from sad experience, having tried to recruit them when I was in industry—of forest economists in Canada, and it should be the job of this federal department to encourage more of this particular type of specialist. A live, active economics division in the Department of Forestry was contemplated when the department was set up. Such a division could make an invaluable contribution to the Canadian economy. For example, a current study is being made with regard to private timber management, and this study is being done in conjunction with the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue. This type of work is not only invaluable to legislators; it is invaluable to economics organizations, and it is certainly valuable to most departments of government.

Another area which required vigorous exploration, in my opinion, is market research, and I apply that not only to market research in home markets but also abroad. The federal Department of Forestry I believe can provide a much needed service in this field without coming in conflict with the Department of Trade and Commerce or the new Department of Industry or any other department. I say that because market research in forest products and forest products fields necessitates a thorough knowledge of forestry and forestry practices, woods species and the products which can be made therefrom. It also necessitates, to do an intelligent market research job, a knowledge of consumer demand, of possibilities of use for new products, and the use of certain tree species to produce new products. So that one of the shortages that I see, which I hope will be corrected before too long, is in this field of market research; and forest economists. If we can recruit them, with the right training they can make a great contribution to the Canadian economy.

Finally, our economists must work to provide meaningful information for long term planning in the field of research. It is no good conducting research unless you know it is going to produce some beneficial results, and you are not going to get very far with research unless you can persuade the executives that they are going to get, in the long run, sound financial returns from the investments they are making in this research.

I would close my general observations on the administration vote with a reference to the information division. Here again I think this is a field in which the federal Department of Forestry can make a great contribution. In order to get full value for money spent on research you have to disseminate it and see that it reaches the right people. Therefore, it is necessary to communicate our findings—that is, the findings of the research branch of our department—to a scientific community, and in this respect I believe we are being fairly successful. At least, from visits I have made to different parts of the country, from Newfoundland to British Columbia, I would say the dissemination of this technical information by my department has been quite successful. We must also use our information services to distribute the information to the forest-based industries in different parts of the country. Finally, more than ever we need to bring home to the people of Canada, the general public, the degree to which Canada depends on her forest resources, and the personal stake that all Canadians have in the forest resource in terms of employment, standards of living, recreation, and so on.

We have all been thrilled during recent weeks by the announcement of the wheat deals with Russia, China and other countries. The news was a great relief, I know, not only to the prairie farmers but to transportation companies, dockworkers and others —the news that a billion dollar deal had been negotiated with Russia, some $600 million of which was in wheat. But how many people in Canada realize that, unheralded and unsung, we export $2 billion worth of forest products every year? These are our largest earners of foreign exchange, yet I doubt if even one person in a hundred in Canada has any realization of that significant fact.

My department has recognized the importance of the information function, and several months ago the deputy minister arranged for the division to report directly to him for policy guidance. I have seen at first hand the benefits of this move. We have a nucleus of well trained personnel, and our effectiveness can be increased further if we put our minds to it.

The reference to my deputy minister leads me to interject that I had hoped he would be with me when these estimates were presented, but he left today to take the chair of the committee on forestry at the FAO conference which opens in Rome early next month. He will be the chairman of the forestry committee of the conference. He is, as many hon. members know, a distinguished forests scientist, with broad experience in business before he joined the department in 1961. In addition he had served as dean of forestry at Laval University. I wish all ministers were fortunate enough to have a deputy minister of that calibre.

Returning to the estimates, hon. members will note there is no change in vote 5 relating to the federal-provincial forestry agreements. This is the second year of a two year program closing on March 31 next. We are reviewing progress in this area and shortly will be in a position to consider future courses.

Turning for a moment to the supplementary estimates, the committee will note vote 11a in the amount of $170,000—the vote to continue the spruce budworm spraying program in New Brunswick. The decision to continue the program during this year was based on a survey of the benefits derived from last year's operations.

The activities of the forest research branch are provided for in votes 15 and 20. In vote 15, the operations and maintenance estimate of about $1.98 million includes a very small over-all increase of $10,000. The largest increase is $29,000 for salaries and wages.

Vote 20, the capital vote, is reduced by about $87,000 to $234,000, since, as might be expected, capital votes are subject to fluctuation. They usually fluctuate upward, but in this case they are fluctuating down. There are no very substantial expenditures in this capital field. The largest is for our research laboratory at Petawawa. Some $50,000 is being spent there. I should like to encourage any hon. members who have a special interest in forestry, or a special knowledge of forestry, to visit this laboratory. We have there a group of well trained and dedicated forest scientists who are not working for the money they can get out of it; they are doing a job for Canada and it would be well worth while for interested members to go up there and spend a few hours with them.

I mentioned earlier my concern about a seeming lack of emphasis on research operations, proper. In the past two years, funds for this purpose have increased by less than $.25 million. Of this amount, 70 per cent went to insect and disease research, 18 per cent to forest products research, and 12 per cent to the activities grouped as "forest research". Some hon. members may have read the comments on the new Department of Forestry which are contained in the Glassco report. I know I read them and re-read them with interest long before I thought I would be presenting the estimates of the Department of Forestry. As hon. members may know, there were comments in the report to the effect that the distribution was wrong. A question was raised because 50 per cent was spent into research on forest insects and forest diseases, 35 per cent on what they call forest research and 15 per cent only on forest products research. There are several explanations for this. One is that a great deal of this type of research work is carried on by the pulp and paper research institute in a building which was provided by the federal government on the understanding that the pulp and paper institute would supply the staff. However, I should like to compare our figures with those of the United States. The United States spend some 16 per cent on insect and disease study, 60 per cent on forest research, and 24 per cent on forest products research. I am not suggesting that this lack of balance is bad, but I am suggesting that we can, and must, if we are to survive as a forest nation, looking forward 50 years from now, spend more in all these fields. It may well be that it is desirable to change this ratio. But the important thing is that we should be doing considerably more.

I mentioned the forest research branch. That title is really a misnomer. Forest economists and those in the forest products research branch are always doing research into the field of forestry. But over the years, when this branch was a division of the Department of Agriculture, it had the name "forest research branch" attached to it and the name has stuck. I believe we could with advantage give it a new name, but that is not as important as is the need to decentralize. Today we find all our branches reporting to the deputy minister. There is no assistant deputy minister in the picture. This is a situation which should be corrected and it will be corrected very shortly.

We must pursue an integrated research program and I may say that with the approval of treasury board we are examining the department's organization in an effort to carry out the lessons which have been learned during the first two or three years of the new department's life.

There are two or three other votes to which reference might be made. Vote 25 relates to the maintenance and operations of the forest entomology and pathology branch. The proposed estimates of $3.4 million will result in an over-all increase of $41,000 in comparison with last year. Salaries and wages will require an additional $32,000, while the overtime allotment is increased by $9,000. The $28,000 increase in professional and special services is mainly accounted for by a payment to the commonwealth institute of biological control. This item formerly was carried in the Department of Agriculture estimates and provides for the acquisition of collections of parasites, and predators which we need to combat forest pests, and for the receipt of research material from other countries. This is not just a contribution to the commonwealth institute. We get good value, as I am sure the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and others with knowledge of this subject will confirm.

During the relatively short time I have been minister, I have had inquiries seeking information on the department's policy in selecting locations for laboratories. I mention this because the Glassco report commented on the fact that our laboratories were removed from research and from academic institutions and suggested this was undesirable isolation. In principle, I expect that any man of science would agree with that observation. But it must be remembered that the federal Department of Forestry is a unique organization. Responsibility for managing the forests lies with the provinces. When we undertake research, this work has to tie in with the work being done by the departments of lands and forests of the various provinces. We have a research unit in Fredericton, another in Quebec, another in Vancouver, and another in Winnipeg. We also have units located in parts of Newfoundland and in other parts of the country, units which are not directly associated with any other institution. But the answer for that is that under our constitutional set-up and division of jurisdiction, it is of the utmost importance that our research officers work in close harmony and proximity with the forest services of the different provinces.

Speaking of British Columbia, it was my pleasure and privilege to lay the cornerstone of a large new research centre in Victoria in August of this year. The construction of that centre began in April of this year and we hope it will be in service within the next 12 months. It is a building which represents an expenditure of roughly $3 million. There was an amount of $196,000 in the main estimates filed in February of this year, but we are making such rapid progress that we have had to transfer over $600,000 from another part of the estimates to take care of the accelerated construction program in Victoria. This laboratory will provide accommodation for all branches of the department in British Columbia other than the forest products research laboratory which is located on the campus of the university.

I might say that in the construction of the research centre at Victoria every effort is being made to incorporate construction features which will make the maximum use of wood. I must say frankly that I was rather horrified when I looked at the first set of plans and found that the flagpole for a forestry research centre was going to be made of aluminum. That flagpole did not stay in the picture very long.

Two other votes, Nos. 35 and 40, deal with forest products research. There is a slight increase there of some $30,000 which is accounted for by the salary increases which met with such enthusiastic applause in the short parliament of last year. There is another item in the supplementaries which is worth mentioning. It is an amount of $1,000—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the customary privilege could not be extended to the minister to allow him to complete his statement.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson: I thank members of the committee. I think it is worthy of mention that a forest products research advisory committee has been set up for the first time in Canada's history. In my opinion it is to the credit of the lumber and plywood manufacturers that in the main they pay the expenses of their delegates and representatives on the committee. They attend two meetings a year and travel from all parts of Canada to do so, and the expenditure by the government for this purpose is only $1,000.

There is a slight increase in the forest products research branch, but it is less than $1,000 compared with last year.

One thing that has bothered me is our forest products research publications. The difficulty arises in getting publication in the two official languages. It is not for lack of trying. As I mentioned earlier, my deputy minister is a distinguished French Canadian scientist. The problem arises out of the fact that it is not sufficient to have anybody as a translator but rather you must have somebody with a knowledge of the scientific terms and phrases that are used, and you just cannot get enough of these people no matter how hard you try. Their numbers are limited and we get a modest share, but not enough to do the job we would like to do in this important field. We are working on the problem and my deputy minister is giving special attention to it.

The translation of our papers from the French in which they are written in some cases into English, and from English into French, is a very technical operation. If any hon. members have any suggestions as to how we can find an answer to the problem we would certainly welcome their suggestions.

Mr. Douglas: Are the salaries the problem? Are they too low by comparison with private industry?

Mr. Nicholson: No. The problem is that the forest scientist, if he is a real scientist, does not want to be a translator. He wants to do research work. He is not interested in becoming a translator. That is the basic problem.

This concludes my summary of the forestry estimates. I have taken a little longer than I anticipated and I want to thank hon. members for their indulgence in extending the time. It is my hope that the committee has found my remarks informative. I have tried to identify some of the problems confronting us. I feel that the new department has made progress in certain fields. There is much to be done. Many hard decisions will have to be made and we will have to do our best, with the support of parliament, to persuade the treasury board to provide us with a little more money to do the important job that lies ahead of us.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief. I have another engagement tonight and I appreciate very much the hon. member for Qu'Appelle allowing me to speak at this time. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the Minister of Forestry. I served on the committee on mines, forests and waters where the creation of this department was discussed, and it was as a result of the recommendation of that committee that the Department of Forestry was born. Naturally I am deeply interested in the work of the department not only because I had a hand in its creation but also because there are great problems pertaining to forestry in the constituency of Macleod.

I should like to call those problems to the attention of the minister tonight. He spoke to us about the subject of research. We all know that in the field of forestry there are two types of research, physical and economic. I shall deal only briefly with the question of economic research.

I would hope that the minister in his wisdom would undertake a project in the Crowsnest pass area of Alberta to determine for the people there the feasibility of a pulp and paper mill. They have spent a lot of time in discussing the matter. They have looked at the physical problems and have talked about the economic problems. But they need help from the Department of Forestry.

I urge the minister, who comes from our sister province of British Columbia, to come to the Crowsnest pass area and we will show him everything we have there. The chamber of commerce in the Crowsnest pass area is headed by Mr. Duguid, a very efficient president, and his capable secretary, Mr. Caldwell, who will place at the minister's disposal every bit of information they have to facilitate a study and bring out the facts concerning the possibility of a pulp and paper mill in the Crowsnest pass. If I should happen to be in the area at the time, nothing would please me more than to drive the minister around and show him what we have. I am sure that as the result of a common understanding among all of us the future of that area would benefit. That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity of speaking at this time.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity of welcoming the new Minister of Forestry on the occasion of his bringing forward the estimates of his department for the first time. I do so very sincerely, and I also wish to extend to the officials of the department my great appreciation of the opportunity I had of working with them. I do so not only because of the excellence of their scholarship and their dedication to their work but also because of the fact that they go far beyond the call of duty in basic research involving forest production, entomology, and also in applied research. Any person who has made a visit to the various sections of the department and has seen men who are content to work alone, singlehandedly against the problems they face, knowing full well it may take many years to get the answer, but that possibly that answer can forward the knowledge of science one inch, anyone who has seen these men who are prepared to isolate themselves from the rest of scientific groups to carry through their task to its conclusion, whether it be affirmative or negative, must be aware of their devotion to duty.

As the minister recognized, I had the pleasure of introducing second reading of the bill which brought this department into being. As he put it very clearly and dramatically, this is Canada's biggest industry, and because of the peculiar circumstance of the division of jurisdiction the problem of the Department of Forestry has to be dealt with in a peculiar manner.

I intend to come to that part of my remarks at the end, but on this first item, I am going to go back, if I may, to deal with one or two of the subjects the minister raised before I go into the peculiar characteristics of running the forestry department. I think the house sat and shared its sympathy for the minister in the problem of research personnel. No section of the government of Canada has more being done in it than the forestry department, and with less personnel.

The job of a minister in fighting for his division, branch or department, as the case may be, is to present the facts with all his skill and with the hope, as the minister said, that his colleagues will see the virtue of putting support behind this particular type of operation. I hope that the dreams we had when we started the department over three years ago will not fail to be realized. We hoped we could double the research personnel in five years, but this is far from being accomplished. We hoped we could extend the extension services into every nook and cranny of the forest industry, not only among the large, integrated operations that exist in the industry but right down to the smallest saw mill operator in any part of Canada.

We hoped three years ago that we could bring to the provinces some of the leadership that seems so necessary at the chaotic level of the marketing arena. I do not think there is any question that in the management of these resources by the provinces—because under the constitution they do have ownership and the right to control these resources—each of the provinces has done a particularly fine job. So, there is no question of complaint as to the responsibility. But the fact remains that we no longer are dealing with an industry which has a problem of marketing within the provinces, but are dealing with an industry where the world demand factor is growing steadily, and the work done by the forestry committee of FAO has demonstrated over and over again that this demand factor is rising.

It is true that sometimes over a period of five to 10 years there is a drop in demand because of temporary over-capacity to produce in relation to that demand, but eventually the long term curve takes hold and the future demand for our forest products, particularly on the pulp and paper side, is exceptionally bright. But because our organization is such that theoretically we have 10 separate management organizations this emphasizes the necessity of the federal government, with its particular interest in the marketing of these products, to try and bring the 10 governments that manage these resources together, in some sort of arrangement where they work together to achieve the opportunities thaat are there. I would be interested to hear from the minister some sort of report of the meetings that have been held between the federal government and the provincial governments, because it is in this field that there is so much to be done.

I think the minister would agree with me we have no complaints on the score that the federal government has stepped up the money to the provinces under the agreements entered into. As the figures show, the amounts have jumped from $3 million to $8 million a year in aid to the provinces under five different types of agreements with them, starting out with inventories and going down to stand improvement agreements. But even though this is a good start and is draining a considerable portion of the money from the department, there are still major problems on the production side.

I think the minister is aware of the Kennedy royal commission report in 1947 and the Ontario conservation report some five years ago, which indicated that some six million to eight million acres of Ontario farmland should be transferred over to the forestry side of the economy. As a person who is interested in all resources I naturally hoped that this type of operation would come under the aegis of agriculture, because in the intensive type of production that will be required in the future, the farmer is the logical person to do that type of work. What I am suggesting is that here we have the leaders of thought advocating that this has to be done, and by all the rules of good land management the forestry use is the best use of land which in many areas is marginal.

Therefore I would like to hear what progress has been made in working out with the province of Ontario some form of much more rapid progress in tackling this problem of reforestation in that province. We here in Ottawa live in the centre of the Ottawa valley and we know that on both sides of the river the problem is the same. This is one of the first areas in which the reforestation program should be stepped up. When I mention the province of Ontario, naturally I do not overlook that this also applies with equal weight to the provinces of Quebec,

New Brunswick and to parts of Nova Scotia. As the minister knows, it is not so much a problem in the west.

I noticed in the estimates the increase in money spent under these agreements, and I would hope some time, through questions and answers, we could find out just a shade more about what type of forest agreements are being made with these provinces, whether they are crown forest or county forests, and how much is going into woodlots and that type of thing.

Having dealt with the more or less orthodox part of the Department of Forestry I think we can say we are well satisfied with the work that is being done between the federal government and the provincial governments in relation to these agreements, and the friendly attitude that exists on both sides. I also think we are extremely well pleased as Canadians, as I said earlier, with the tremendous quality of the research work being done, both basic and applied. However we still think much more has to be done in extending it, but in his remarks the minister showed he is well aware of that.

I do not want to prolong my remarks, but I would like to suggest, if it has not already been done, that a great opportunity exists for the minister to achieve giant, forward steps, for forestry and the whole forest industry, by recognizing that machinery now exists through which he can guarantee to the forest industry of Canada the maximum advantage. I am referring to the machinery known as ARDA, the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. Looking at it for the moment as simply a matter of the best use of land and water, forestry is the long term solution to the problems that now beset what is called the agricultural industry.

I think it will be recognized that this solution must, by the very nature of the growth of a tree, be a long term solution, but I would hope the minister will make himself fully aware not only of the terms of the ARDA legislation, which is administered by the Department of Agriculture, but will also make himself fully aware of the philosophy behind ARDA. Speaking now more or less on the agricultural side, as opposed to the forestry side, I would point out that forestry was one of the main hopes of those who drafted that ARDA legislation. I am not downgrading the other uses of land and water for wild life conservation, recreation and so on; but in forestry lies the main economic hope that we can do something to redevelop many of our areas which at present do not give Canadians a high standard of living. I am not going into the details of why that is so, but it is well understood.

I hope the minister takes this suggestion in the spirit in which it is offered. In a department full of highly skilled personnel, which does not require too much time on administration, he has ample opportunity to make certain there is someone on the forestry side positively and always aggressively trying to be part of the ARDA concept. He should press his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, to be in on the ARDA discussions. He should accept no excuse from the Minister of Agriculture because, in the formal sense, agriculture is completely intermarried with forestry. If he does that, then not too many years from now we will see many, many times more farmers on the land than at present, because forestry will give a higher return per acre than any other use.

Therefore I put some feeling into this plea to the minister, that he should not let the Minister of Agriculture be the only person interested in ARDA. The door is wide open in its philosophy and principles, and if the minister, on behalf of those who believe in the ARDA approach, makes certain he is always putting forward the viewpoint as to how forestry can do so much to help solve these tremendous adjustment problems, he will be taking the right approach. I refer to the type of living of many people now in the marginal agricultural areas, and he should not forget that the human factor in these problems is our main concern.

Now, the next suggestion I want to make relates to something traditional in any discussion of forestry and has been referred to already by the minister. This is the question of marketing. This is going to be one of the most difficult tasks because in the field of marketing the jurisdiction in relation to the forest industry lies almost entirely with private enterprise. Outside of the timber board in Saskatchewan and perhaps one or two other areas about which I do not know, I believe private enterprise has the responsibility for selling all forest products. However, we have a federal interest, and a big one. We have an important forest product section in the Department of Trade and Commerce.

If hon. members recall what I said when I introduced the bill establishing this department, I noted that there had to be the closest liaison between the economic division of the forestry department and the forestry division of trade and commerce. I believe this was a good suggestion. However, the difficulty arises as a result of the fact that all you can do with private business is persuade, and at times persuasion has its limitations. If you have a strong national organization such as exists in the pulp and paper industry, you can make some forward progress. However, the pulp and paper industry has developed traditions in its marketing which do not always jibe with the good of Canada.

I am referring to the fact that many of our pulp and paper mills have their production tied up to some newspaper either in Canada or outside of Canada, mostly outside of Canada. They are not free agents, and therefore, cannot take advantage of the opportunities available to their products in other countries. This tradition is continuing. We see a situation where foreign companies are coming into Canada to get timber rights, and establish a mill in order to satisfy their own demands. There is an integrated set-up in the pulp and paper industry, and in other industries as well, which imposes particular problems on the minister. He has to think his way through the situation to see how he can manage to lead private enterprise to conduct its own business, and yet put in front of them the financial rewards that will be greater than those they are receiving now if they adopt new approaches. He can direct their attention to the new types of trade patterns that I see in the future.

The previous government was studying this problem. One of the things we did, and which I bring to the attention of the minister, was to amend the Combines Investigation Act to give these companies the right to combine.

Mr. Nicholson: Perhaps the hon. member for Qu'Appelle will recall that I presented the brief for the forestry industry which brought about that amendment.

Mr. Hamilton: I well remember. I hope the minister sees the possibilities that lie in that amendment. You cannot force these companies, under the free enterprise system, to do what you think is right. However, if you lead them the right way, as you know, you may be able to get that type of action which I think will be a good thing. I do not want to go into detail on this for very obvious reasons. I think the minister should be allowed the maximum freedom of movement in trying to lead these industries into fields where there are greater opportunities for themselves and for Canada.

I am going to be critical, if I may, not in any personal sense, and not of the minister or the department, but of the fact that I sense, if I read the situation correctly, there is a tendency towards apathy in connection with some of these difficulties we face. I wonder, for instance, just what has been done to see that the trade and commerce officials are doing the same thing for the forestry industry that they are doing for other industries. I refer to the trade promotional drives. I sense, in looking at the reports and in reading what is available, that there is apathy. I do hope I am wrong and that they are working just as hard for the forest industry as they are for some of the other industries.

Then, the next problem I mention is the question of co-operation with the provinces. I think it is lagging. I know there has been one meeting, and I watch for all the references I can as to what is happening. I would suggest, to put my criticism in a positive way, that there is a need for a strong initiative on the part of the federal government to bring the provinces together in so far as those departments interested in forestry are concerned. We have had a tradition, in the field of agriculture, of regular meetings with the minister. This pattern applies to other segments of the resources side of government activity. Will there be an annual meeting of forestry ministers? Will there be a frank discussion, preferably behind closed doors, about these touchy problems of taxation, for example? Here you have an industry caught in the centre, and the minister knows this better than I do, of a tax war between the provincial treasurers and the federal Minister of National Revenue. There is also a question as to the type of taxes to be imposed by provincial governments.

The problem has been presented many times and this is one of the reasons I think a minister working full time for this department, could profit from a meeting with his colleagues in the provinces and a frank discussion of these things. This leads me to the big suggestion which I hope is in the mind of the minister, namely that the forestry industry in Canada, provincial, federal and private, is under legitimate attack today because it has not developed what I would call a genuine national forest policy. I cannot put the responsibility on any one group because they all know the problem has to be met and they await leadership. The provinces own these resources and maintain them. They are jealous of any interference. Private industries usually operate through the provinces, and they do not want interference from government. Can the minister be sufficiently diplomatic to make all these three divergent groups work together and co-operate in the type of program that is of advantage to all, and yet still retain the jurisdictional rights of each while giving each the maximum freedom.

I am suggesting that there is a precedent to this type of approach. I refer to co-operative federalism. I do not want to go through the list of things that have been accomplished by using this approach. However, there was the working out of the roads to resources program, the planning of the resources for tomorrow conference, establishing the Canadian committee of resource ministers, the ARDA program, the evolving of co-operation between the ministers of health and labour across this country. All of these touchy problems were resolved by this method of co-operative federalism. Today, in spite of the growth towards co-operative federalism in the last four or five years, we have been surprised to see during the last six months a direct infringement into the provincial field which has caused a furore concerning the municipal loan fund, the pension plan, the Department of Industry and even the expected scholarship plan. This shows that at least many of the minister's colleagues in the government have no knowledge of the forward progress that has been made in the last five years. In the Department of Forestry there is no question of divided jurisdiction, because jurisdiction lies with the provinces. I would say, therefore, it would be well for the minister to use the co-operative federalism machinery that was established by the previous government in solving this touchy problem.

I think that with the obvious maturity, responsibility and business background of the minister, there is a good chance of making this project work. I do think that there are enough facts before us now to warrant a meeting with the provinces to see if we cannot move towards these objectives that we all want. This means working together on overseas markets, working together to use the undeveloped areas on the northern prairies as well as the interior of British Columbia which could stand more pulp and paper mills. The minister knows the other places where you get pulpwood. If we are going to make the maximum use of our resources, get the maximum opportunity that is offered by our export markets, we have to use the co-operative machinery developed under ARDA in connection with forestry. I hope I have not bored the house too much with these remarks but I wanted to keep them to generalities under vote No. 1 in the hope that I can add something positive to the discussion today. I want to thank the committee for giving me such close attention.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to congratulate the minister on his appointment. We all know he has had considerable administrative experience generally, and a close association with the forest industry in British Columbia. We all wish him well in all he undertakes to promote this industry. I cannot lose this opportunity also to pay tribute to the devoted technical staff of the Department of Forestry who carry on this very important work, behind the scenes as it were, almost unrecognized by a large percentage of the Canadian people. I sometimes get quite annoyed when I see the attention which is given to some trivial and frivolous matters, and possibly a lack of interest in basic questions like we are discussing this evening.

I also want to pay tribute to all those co-operative organizations in Canada who played their part in promoting the welfare of the forest industry of Canada. For example, the Canadian forestry association, with whose work in British Columbia I am well acquainted. Last year they trained some 800 youngsters at Evans lake, giving them short courses in subjects related to forestry. They have also carried on other excellent work. Then there is the institute of Canadian foresters, and there are numerous growers organizations, conservation organizations and local bodies. All have played their part in the promotion and development of forestry policy in Canada.

I think it is essential that if the forest industry is to receive its proper development in the country we should have the participation of a large percentage of the Canadian people through their organizations and so on.

I must say I listened with interest to all the minister said, and will make a reference or two to his remarks as I proceed. I also listened with interest to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and I want heartily to endorse the plea for a close association between forestry and agriculture, particularly in the development of the ARDA program. I know that program has been very close to the hon. member's heart and I willingly give him full credit for all that he did in initiating that program, one which I hope will be continued and extended in the days ahead.

The estimates of this very important department provide an opportunity for us to discuss the role of the federal government in the development and conservation of our forestry resources. The objective, as I see it, of the government's forestry policy should essentially be to acquire for Canada as a whole the greatest possible present and future benefits in the development of our forest resources in relation to the development of all our other natural resources.

I have a particular and personal interest in this subject as the result of my life's experiences. I have lived in the woods all my life, and some members of this house seem to go and hide in the woods on occasions when they are here. I am an old logger, Mr. Chairman, and cut my first log in 1906. I also have the honour to be one of the surviving charter members of the royal and ancient order of upper Arrow lakes cedar savages, so I think I have laid the foundation for my qualification to speak on this subject.

For some seven or eight years, on behalf of this party—because this party has always been particularly interested in the conservation and development of our natural resources —I have moved motions urging governments of the day to call a federal-provincial conference for the development of a national forest policy in co-operation with the provinces. On every occasion annually, when my motion was the subject of debate in the house, in ordinary language it was loved to death. However, on February 12, 1958, the former prime minister, now leader of the official opposition, announced that a national conference on conservation would be called. We in this group were delighted with this announcement, as were a good many other people too. The former government did do some very worthwhile things, and I think we should give them credit for them. This is true particularly in the field of natural resources and agriculture. They got on to rather thin ice on some other subjects, but I will leave that to another occasion.

As the result of this announcement the provincial premiers were invited to participate in preliminary discussions for the planning of such a conference. I am very glad to say that all the provinces responded favourably and the first meeting of the national steering committee, consisting of ministers from all provinces and from the federal government, was held on November 17, 1958. These were the first steps taken toward the development of a national policy. At this meeting it was agreed to hold another conference on Canada's renewable resources. A research secretariat worked for almost three years to plan and prepare for this conference, and I followed the course of that steering committee with great interest.

The resources for tomorrow conference was held in Montreal from October 23 to 28, 1961. Some 700 delegates representing federal and provincial governments, universities, industry, and numerous organizations across Canada, attended. I think it was an historic event in the development of policy with respect to natural resources in Canada. This conference came to a number of important conclusions, and I mention these, Mr. Chairman, because there are some hon. members in the committee not well acquainted with the developments over recent years with respect to this policy. It was found, as many of us had contended for years, that there was a lack of co-ordination between governments and also between departments in governments. I have noticed this lack of co-ordination on occasion between the wild life branch both in Ottawa and in British Columbia and, say, the forestry service. This frequently occurs. It has also occurred in the Department of Agriculture in cases where it plans without consultation, and things like that. This lack of co-operation has created serious deficiencies in policy in resource development and management. While the conference recognized the existing system of Canadian federalism, in which the ownership of natural resources largely rests with the provinces, it also recognized that fiscal monetary and trade policies are the direct responsibility of the federal government.

The interesting thing in the development of this conference was the clear understanding almost from the first of the responsibilities of the respective governments in this field. The conference developed a much greater appreciation of the responsibilities of federal and provincial governments and the need for a continual exchange of views between governments and their administrative personnel. The members of this group have dealt with that aspect of the problem over and over again throughout the years. To this end it was agreed by the participants to the conference that there should be some provision for a continuing review of resource policy and problems between federal and provincial governments. Therefore, these governments later agreed to the formation of a resource council. The establishment of this council, which was another interesting step in the development of this policy, was announced on February 6, 1962 following the final meeting of the resources for tomorrow conference steering committee. This has set an example for other departments, in my opinion, Mr. Chairman.

The Canadian council of resource ministers represents a new co-operative approach between federal and provincial governments to the problems of resource development. The council was established on the basis of equal participation of federal and provincial governments with a rotating chairmanship—an excellent arrangement. This arrangement provides for the first time in Canadian history an intergovernmental forum within which resource policies can be studied and co-ordinated. I notice that the minister in his opening remarks mentioned that the resources for tomorrow conference had been a unifying influence, and anyone who has followed the course of the conference, and of the council appointed since, realizes that it has been a splendid unifying influence around the common objective.

Recently in Montreal the Hon. Rene Levesque, of the resources ministers council, said that effective co-operation in the development and the uses of our natural resources through federal-provincial co-operation could be the most effective guarantor of Canadian unity in a workable confederation of provinces. We agree wholeheartedly with this statement of the minister, and endorse it completely.

I want to emphasize this fact, and I have kept in fairly close touch with what has been going on with respect to the council, that the working of the council and the spirit and purpose of the council has set an example for other departments of federal and provincial governments to follow. It has been mutually advantageous. They are doing constructive work and approaching the common problem in the right spirit and with the correct purpose. I must say that in the formation of this council we have laid the requisite foundation upon which to build a sound forest conservation and development policy for the provinces and for Canada as a whole, based on the principle of co-operative federalism, and it should be given effect to because they have recognized the problems. They have agreed on the principles on which the council will work and on the need for action in this direction. In my opinion government forest policy must be directed toward the greatest benefits for the largest number of people. The federal government is responsible, together with the other governments, for the development of forest policy with respect to both the publicly owned and the privately owned sectors of the economy. Although the greater part of Canadian forest land is public property, all governments have responsibilities and authority related to public and private ownership. For instance, their responsibilities for providing benefits for the people as a whole may justify regulation of the practices of the private owners where their policies conflict with the public interests; on the other hand, the government's authority with respect to taxation, land use and education policies should be exercised to aid and stimulate the practices of private owners where those practices contribute to the general welfare. In the development of this forest policy we have, as a result of the exercise of the principle of co-operative federalism, an opportunity from the viewpoint of members of this group to demonstrate what can be done in building a sound democratic society on the basis of what we call a mixed economy, the public and the private sectors both working to the general advantage.

I think the report the minister has made to the committee clearly indicates the scope and value of the department. For years we urged the establishment of a Department of Forestry. There were a good many who thought it was satisfactory to have this organization remain merely a branch within another department. But anyone who reads the annual report of the department, anyone who has read the publications of the forests products branch, will realize that this department is most necessary at this time. If I may introduce a personal note, may I say that the present director of the forests products laboratory in Vancouver is well known to me. I knew him as a boy. He used to travel several miles to come to my little log cabin in the woods at week ends when he was let out of school because he thought I made the best hotcakes in the district. I am very pleased that this young man who grew up around the Arrow lakes should now be director of a forest products laboratory. I am referring to Dr. Joseph Gardner.

I wish, now, to make a few suggestions to the minister with respect to federal forestry policy. I think there is need for a continuing review of forestry policy. During the past 15 years, to the best of my knowledge, the forest industry in Canada has been studied by at least seven royal commissions in the provinces. In addition, studies have been made by private industry and by other organizations. There is a growing public interest in sound forest management policy. There is no question about that. In view of the fact that forest policy to date has been the result of a large number of inter-related policies—it has grown up over the years on the basis of piecemeal legislation—it is desirable, in my view, that the present policies be reviewed in order that all sections may be correlated to meet the current political and economic developments. It is now time for government to take a searching look at our legislative policies and practices to devise a co-ordinated policy that will meet present needs and trends. I think this would be most appropriate in view of the excellent co-operation the federal government is getting in connection with this question from the ministers council of the provinces.

My second suggestion concerns the need for the development of public understanding and appreciation of the role the forest industry plays in the development of our economy, the maintenance of our water resources, wild life population and the provision of recreational facilities. This is, of course, in addition to the major economic role which forestry plays in Canada. In making this suggestion I am not reflecting on the present information and public relations branch of the department one iota. I give them full credit for what they have done. However, while there has been an excellent service, a greatly improved service throughout the years, especially to those interested in forest management and operation, I still think there is a need for an extension of the public relations work so as to reach the public as a whole. I think there should be a much wider appreciation of the value of the industry to Canada, and I am suggesting that the information and public relations branch should broaden its activities. I believe the minister should give consideration to the extension of these services so that it would be possible to inform and interest both the public generally and students in our universities, high schools and public schools.

I am a firm believer in the principle of the conservation of our natural resources. I believe this principle should be instilled in our young people, commencing at public school level. It is surprising how little appreciation there is among children in some of our city schools of the value of our natural resources, of our land, our wood and our water, in our daily lives. They live on asphalt. They live, many of them, in apartments. They live an unnatural life in many respects and I think we should do everything possible to inform them of the beauty and value of our lands and forests. We should do all we can to obtain the co-operation of the voluntary organizations in this respect. I hope, therefore, that the minister will extend the good work of the public relations branch and I believe a good deal could be done by seeking to interest young people in public schools, high schools and universities.

The minister clearly indicated—one would not expect him to mention figures or to speak too frankly in this connection—that he believes his department should have additional funds in order to fulfil completely the role it has to play in Canada.

Mr. Douglas: Is there any minister who does not?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, but I think this case is so different from that of the Department of National Defence. The minister was most modest in his implications. I am sure all members of the opposition will do their best to support the hon. gentleman in his plea that this important department should receive some additional funds. When one considers that the total amount involved here is some $17 million as against roughly $1.5 billion for defence, I think we have things a bit out of perspective in this country. Surely we can provide the funds necessary to pay our technical staff well, extend the information services and improve the position of the department generally.

I wish to turn to another facet of the policy of this group to deal, generally speaking, with policies with respect to the private sector of the economy. I wish to say a few words about a development in forestry under private ownership in Canada, and to take the opportunity in this connection to bring to the attention of the committee the good work which has been undertaken by the Canadian tree farmers association. In 1959, a group of individuals, some wealthy, some of modest means, and some poor, got together and incorporated with a federal charter, the Canadian tree farmers association. They had two things in common, they owned forest land on their farms and they wanted to improve their income from marketing conditions. I have the honour to be a director and vice president of this lively and vigorous young association, of which the hon. gentleman already knows something.

I remember when the minister, in his former capacity, presented a brief to the then cabinet on behalf of the forest industries, urging improvements in marketing facilities. I should judge the brief was presented to good effect and I trust that when others now present briefs to the minister they will get an equally favourable response to their representations. In its short life, this association has inspired original thinking about our private forest resource by emphasizing the potential productivity of these private forest lands and the important role that private forestry can play both in our wood using industry and in our agricultural economy. That was mentioned this evening by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. There is a close relationship.

The purposes of this association are enumerated at length in its charter and they may be summarized briefly as follows: Stimulating co-operative action between producers, industry and government based on co-operative and individual initiative to obtain maximum productivity on private forest lands in perpetuity, on sound management principles, and to overcome obstacles to the marketing of wood from private lands, which exist primarily in some sections of eastern Canada.

This association's achievements in its four-year history are quite significant. From a modest beginning of less than 100 members in 1959 membership has increased by one-third each year, from year to year, and it now has members in all parts of Canada. Its Ontario members are now organizing as an affiliate of the Ontario federation of agriculture. I had the honour to be present and speak at the meeting in Carleton Place a week or two ago that dealt with this subject. It will work as a part of agriculture in the same way that private forestry on this scale is classified in most European countries.

What interested me at this and other meetings of farmers in Ontario which I have attended in recent months is the growing interest of young farmers, many of whom realize that they have a number of acres of marginal land on their farms which are better adapted to the production of timber than agricultural crops, and there are others, of course, who wish to go in for planting and things of that sort. I was impressed by the interest of the younger people who want to find a way of farming the land their fathers owned more efficiently and to greater benefit.

Two years ago the association introduced its monthly publication, The Tree Farmers' Guide. This is a very interesting publication with news and ideas for the woodlot owner to help him to increase his income from this part of his farm. There are a lot of other people who are interested too. Persons who live in cities are finding this a very interesting sideline and hobby, and in many cases it is of some profit to them.

This association has been very successful in creating interest among the growing numbers of urban residents who own farms devoted to wood production. It is answering the search by these people for knowledge on how to manage their forest properties. There is a need for more, well informed forestry extension services and we ask the minister to give consideration to that.

In the Scandinavian countries private land forestry is an integral part of agriculture. These countries have been eminently successful in developing their forest based industries. Farmers co-operatives have played a very significant part in this success story. The farmers forest co-operatives in the Scandinavian countries particularly have entered the wood processing phase by owning and operating paper mills and saw mills of some size. The farmers in these countries conduct their own wood product exporting activities. This is from privately owned forest lands in the Scandinavian countries.

The Canadian tree farmers association has a strong base in Quebec where it originated and expanded, until now it has membership in all provinces. The government of Quebec, and we give them credit, have taken the initial steps to develop and encourage private land forestry related to agriculture. They have established marketing boards for farmers' pulpwood under their marketing legislation. This has provided the farmers of that province with a quota each year for the sale of pulpwood. I think the Saskatchewan government has established a timber marketing board of a similar nature, but to meet different circumstances. It has set the price for sale to the pulp and paper industry, and on an increasing scale so that the farmer receives a more equitable price for his wood. At the same time, the Quebec legislation provides a means by which the farmer's annual cuts may be limited to the growth of wood on his farm. The farmer must be prepared to accept this control in return for an improved market for his wood. I think this is a very good principle indeed. He is given security of market in return for sound management of his private land.

I also want to bring it to the attention of the house that the Quebec government is co-operating under ARDA through agreements to study the problems of private woodlot forestry in that province. Incidentally, under ARDA the federal government will pay half the cost of salaries of increased forestry extension services for farmers, and I hope they take advantage of that clause in the act. The Quebec model in marketing and co-operation under ARDA should be followed by other provinces which have a marginal land use problem. We have some in British Columbia as a result of clearing unsuitable land in the early days.

Let me say that the work of the Canadian tree farmers association has been described and praised in a number of national publications during the past year. I will give these references for the benefit of any who may be interested in this important rural development activity, and it is going to be more and more important in the years ahead. The Rural Co-operator of the 8th of January, 1963, contained a two page story about the association's policies and activities. The Financial Post of the 15th of June contained a full page story about tree farming, which was written by one of the association's officers. This article quoted extensively from a brief which the association presented to the Senate land use committee in November, 1962 entitled "The Case for Expansion of Private Forestry in Canada".

This brief was well received across Canada and received considerable praise from numerous members in the other place. I commend it to hon. members if they are interested in how to put 57 million acres of private forest land in Canada to work for the owners to the advantage of the Canadian people, to reduce unemployment and to improve the standard of living in those rural municipalities which at present have large areas of marginal land.

The Family Herald of the 1st of August, 1963 contains a thought provoking challenge to the private land owner and to every provincial government in Canada. This article was written by the secretary treasurer of the Canadian tree farmers association. In this article there was included an eight point program for greater income from the farm woodlot. However, I will have to deal with that program at a later date because I see my time is rapidly passing.

I suggest to the minister that consideration should be given to assisting the Canadian tree farmers association in publishing their monthly paper or bulletin, as we might more properly call it, The Tree Farmers' Guide, and that this assistance might be given either through the Department of Forestry or the Department of Agriculture in similar fashion to that now given to the agricultural institute of Canada. I think the department assists some of their staff in the preparation of articles and lends them some of its staff for a few days when publication is about to take place.

I urge the minister to give consideration to that because this work is being undertaken on a voluntary basis by an increasing number of persons who are interested in developing this aspect of our forest resources in Canada. Finally, I want to say once again that the members of this group will welcome all the minister's undertakings for the development of sound forestry policies in Canada that will be to the advantage of this and coming generations of Canadians.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I just want to take a few minutes of the time of the committee this evening to make some observations with respect to the estimates now before the committee. We have listened tonight to a number of speakers who have delved into the problems of the forest industry to a considerable extent. Possibly some of them spoke from personal experience in the forest and lumber industries and I am sure that we appreciate the observations to which we have listened.

First of all, I should like to join with other hon. members in congratulating the minister on taking over this portfolio. I think it is most appropriate that a member from British Columbia should be chosen to fill this very important post. His experience in the past will no doubt be of tremendous value as he applies his energies and interest to this comparatively new department, and I am sure we all wish him well in carrying out this responsibility.

I am sure we all have an understanding and appreciation of the importance of the forest industry in our national life. Those of us who come from provinces where it is of vital concern provincially also take a wider view because we know it has a tremendous bearing upon the economic welfare of our entire nation. I was very interested to receive a copy of a booklet entitled "The Pulpwood Harvest" published by the Canadian pulp and paper association. In the first section there are a number of very interesting factors which are brought to our attention. I believe the facts are very pertinent and I should like to refer to three or four very brief paragraphs. The first section calls attention to the fact that Canada is after all a forest country with more than half of its land wooded and suited only to the growth of trees. It goes on to state:

> Directly and indirectly, the forests generate a major portion of the income of her people, and their influence in shaping the economic, social, and cultural progress of the nation has been immeasurable.

The third paragraph is as follows:

> The story of forest problems and forest operations best begins with the story of the forests themselves. They comprise a belt, generally from 600 to 1,000 miles wide, which extends from the Atlantic, curves north on the prairies, and dips south to cover most of British Columbia. This is the vast and bountiful reservoir from which pulp and paper and the other forest industries draw their raw material.

Further along it says:

> During the years since then, the forests have remained a great bastion of Canadian commerce. From them, today emanates more than one quarter of the production of Canada's primary industries. Shipments of forest products comprise more than a quarter of the nation's exports, and of this amount pulp and paper accounts for about 70 per cent.

The final paragraph says:

> The forest, thus, is a resource which pours out bounty to all Canadians at the rate of more than a quarter of a million dollars every hour, day and night. It is a resource in which everyone has a stake, and which every Canadian should seek to use wisely.

These brief quotations from this book once again emphasize the importance of this industry to our economy.

Forestry plays a tremendously important part in the provincial economy of British Columbia. I have with me a copy of the budget speech dated February 8, 1963, presented by the Hon. W. A. C. Bennett, premier of British Columbia and minister of finance, and on page 13, dealing with provincial wealth, it points out with respect to natural resources that the present value of inventory so far as forestry is concerned is $3 billion. Revenue from lands and forests in 1962 amounted to $34,840,374, and it is estimated that it will amount to $38 million in 1964. Therefore we in British Columbia are especially interested in this particular phase of our economy and, as I have stated, I think it is suitable and proper that an hon. member from British Columbia was chosen to head the Department of Forestry.

When he introduced his estimates I listened for some references by the minister to the recent conference which was held, and I hope that before the estimates pass he will give us some insight into what happened at that conference. It may be that all the details cannot be passed along to us, but we would welcome a summary and a reference to the attitude of those who participated in it and what they anticipated so far as the combined efforts of federal and provincial authorities are concerned.

The minister stated that his department would facilitate the exchange of ideas. Like every other industry I suppose each area has its own problems which must be faced and solved, in so far as they relate to each specific area, but there must be some areas in which the problems are identical and the exchange of ideas in various fields would be of value to the various provincial administrations. We think of the conservation problem, and in this same book to which I have referred, dealing with forest problems it states:

> The task facing Canada is to manage the forestry so as to provide harvests in perpetuity, and at the same time to increase their productivity.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has referred to the need for conservation. We have heard him speak on this subject many times, and reference has been made to the problems of protection of the forests from insects, disease and so on. Here again it seems to me an exchange of ideas would be very beneficial.

The main thought tonight has been devoted to the field of research connected with wood products. The federal Department of Forestry could be a clearing house for information in this respect, providing an exchange of ideas that would be of mutual benefit to all concerned.

The minister referred to the problem he faces in building an adequate research team. For some years past the various provincial governments have developed research agencies of their own. Universities and private industries have co-operated in research, and I think all the information which they produce should be fed into the federal department where it will be available to all interested in these affairs.

The department is relatively new and perhaps that is one reason the minister is having difficulty in recruiting the necessary personnel. It may be that young people must be made aware of the opportunities for careers with the department in this important, and I imagine, fascinating activity. But naturally it will take some time for them to become aware of this and for them to prepare themselves to take their place in such a research department. There is an increasing awareness that there must be a scientific approach to management and marketing in regard to forestry and forest products.

I indicated I was just going to take a few minutes, and in conclusion let me once again wish the minister and the officials of his department every success in their endeavours to increase the usefulness of the department within the bounds of its constitutional possibilities.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I examined with interest the estimates of the Department of Forestry.

As we are newcomers in this committee, we realize that this department is not very large, as indicated by its budget, which is a little over $1,000,000 per province. However, at first glance, one can easily recognize the impressive work done by such a small department.

First of all, I must congratulate the minister and all his officials for having carried out this enormous task.

I note that this department was created only a few years ago, but it is fitting to say in this case that one does not have to be advanced in years to show one's mettle.

It is a matter of course that forestry matters come under provincial jurisdiction, but I hesitate to appeal to the federal government when it comes to provincial matters. Indeed, I always fear for provincial autonomy, because too frequently in the past the federal government has intruded gradually in some fields coming under provincial jurisdiction until it has almost taken them over.

On the other hand, we have to admit that the creation of such a department was essential, in order to give the provinces necessary leadership for the future in view of Canada's development. The local, and even the domestic market, are no longer sufficient. It is necessary to look to the international markets; this is why the federal government must step in and co-operate with the provinces so that we may be able to compete against other countries on those markets.

When the minister states that we have exported over $2 billion worth of forest products, this shows the efficiency of this essential federal-provincial agreement.

If there were not, under present conditions, an ever-increasing understanding between the provinces and the central government, the present flow of our forest products into foreign markets, would sink to the national or even local level. That is to say that our group unreservedly supports any effort the department is now making in the forestry field.

By multiplying those meetings we shall, as I mentioned earlier today, ultimately become known on the world market as merchants in tune with modern times. I shall mention here the work which should draw the department's particular attention, that is the reseeding of suitable woodland.

And here, I want to say a few words about my district—my constituency—because we are partly a farming area, but mostly a forest district. When we look at this expanse of land —where, 20 or 30 years ago, there were only forests, a hundred miles around, and where today there is only desert and waste land—we may wonder why it should be so. The answer is simple enough. People and governments without foresight failed to look after the reseeding of our forests. Whether the woods were razed by lumberjacks or by fire—and more particularly in the latter case—I would like the government to intervene and transform those wide plains again into forests which tomorrow will give food and work to our people.

Mr. Chairman, we are 30 years behind the times in the field of forestry. If, thirty years ago, we had taken the steps we are taking today, instead of having waste lands now where there used to be fine forests, we would have timber available and that product would play a role in our economy, that of supplying our paper mills. That goes to show that the seeding of land which now seems unproductive is of major importance for the forest industry.

Previous speakers have pointed out that something has been done through ARDA. That is a first step towards the recovery of our land because if ARDA is useful to agriculture, I think it should be used more extensively in the case of forests.

I should not want to imply that the federal government should impose its views on the provinces in the field of forestry. Far from it, but I feel that there should be closer co-operation and that seminars should be held, courses given and interprovincial conferences called more often to give a more efficient orientation to the seeding operations under ARDA. Since, as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) stated a while ago, costs are divided equally between the federal government and the provinces, I feel that the latter should take advantage of the offer made by Ottawa.

A few minutes ago, it was stated that the province of Quebec has a fine plan for the restoration and improvement of our forests which is already being put into practice. I must agree that the province has an excellent plan to that effect.

But when you visit the province of Quebec, you will notice that we will lag behind for a long time. This is the reason why, as I said earlier, the federal government should pursue its educational campaign, I do not mean its imperative action, but its educational action and this in order to accelerate this promotional work in the forestry field in every province, especially in the province of Quebec.

I am convinced that with proper co-operation the province of Quebec will know how to use one of its most important resources without leaving those large expanses of treeless lands to grow wild.

We are now supposed to log 30 year old stands, but to find thick stands, we have to go hundreds of miles north, because we have neglected reforestation.

I would like to point out another aspect of the question, that is, the squandering of our forest resources. Thirty years ago—I am going back 30 years, because I am a little bit younger than the hon. member for Kootenay West—I myself cut down trees in the forest while attending high school. It was my holiday exercise; and every year I spent two months in the forest cutting down trees. It is an excellent exercise; I would advise our young university students to try it for themselves, having improved their minds, they will soon find out that such an exercise strengthens muscles and steadies nerves.

However, I must point out that there is a drawback. If you work in the forest during the summer, beware of mosquitoes of all kinds; close your eyes, protect your hands and your face, otherwise, after a little while you will be bleeding from numerous bites.

As I was saying, 30 years ago I worked in the forest, and during my holiday period I became an apprentice lumberjack. I saw woodsmen, as they were then called, bring down the forest tree by tree; however, they were very careful to spare young shoots, and our foremen never tired warning us not to damage them. When we had cleared the way in given areas of the forest, the young saplings were untouched, ready to grow and to allow a new cutting in ten, 11, 12 or 13 years at the most.

When I look at the cutting methods of today, and compare them to the methods of 30 years ago, I feel that in days gone by, people did not cut a forest, they harvested it. If you went into the woods today, you would soon see for yourselves what I mean. I went back myself last summer, and I must confess that I was confronted with a terrifying sight. Modern machinery has played havoc. First of all, where you had 300 or 400 workers, you only have 75 today, because machines do everything, sweep away everything. For one spruce tree cut down, 25 are destroyed.

Government officials do not seem to be aware of that slaughter, either because they do not go themselves in the field to see the damage, or because the ministers or the deputy ministers do not go into the forest often enough to see for themselves this terrible havoc.

Nowadays, as far as pulpwood is concerned, they have got to a point where they cut that wood in 8 foot lengths to make what is normally called the end tod. Can you figure all the waste. To get some wood, they waste two thirds of the forest in order to get one third.

I draw this fact to the attention of the house because I know the minister is not aware of it. You smile, but that is because you are city dwellers. But we are now talking about forestry, a field about which you know nothing, you city people.

I am sure the minister will have constructive suggestions to make in that field because it is a national misdeed, from a forestry point of view.

If you go through a forest where the trees were cut down, you see there is nothing left because the spruce are cut down and then hauled out of the woods, pulling out all the young growth, so there is nothing left.

If something was done about it, if only a new seeding was done, but no, everything is left as it is, with the result that what is growing up now is only second, third and even fourth class wood, while really productive wood is choked under and finally dies among all that mess.

We might have a forest in seven, eight or ten years, but it will be a third class forest.

That is why I wanted to bring those conditions to the minister's attention and to denounce this misdeed. It has been denounced to the provincial government, but what is happening today?

Timber limits have been granted to all sorts of strangers to our economy. Foreign companies came here to get the raw product and went away with the best in our economy. That was all they were interested in.

Mr. Chairman, we have recently read in the press that the Catholic farmers' union in Quebec which means the Quebec farmers, was launching a campaign for the rehabilitation of our forests. There is a reason for this, because those people are responsible people. They want to reconquer our forest in order to put it back in operation, and take it away from those who were destroying and abandoning it.

As I say a forest is a crop. If nobody cares to make it reproduce itself, it will create wasteland, and that is what has been happening for the last 30 years, because forest operations have been made too easy in our district.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, all kinds of rights were granted. People went into the woods without bothering about anything. Money was easy to earn and the crop easy to harvest. Workers left everything behind them, even their land, to go into the lumber industry. Today, we find our farming industry cut down by 50 per cent, while the forest has been destroyed forever in a proportion of 75 per cent. That is why we have to start again practically from scratch as regards forestry, as we have to start from 60 per cent in the agricultural field. Those are the benefits of industrialization in our area.

Mr. Chairman, I am not blaming only the large or small industries, but almost everybody and everything, and more particularly the lack of education. Indeed, what is most important is to educate each operator and each worker who would work at that crop.

In the past, the operations destroyed everything, with the blessing of the various governments, and today, the few dollars that were saved have been paid in taxes. As for the operators, they went back across the border with all our profits and our money.

Therefore, it is through education that we shall succeed in taking the first step which will enable us, first, to save our forests and then, indirectly, to assist our agriculture.

That is why we must have a joint federal-provincial forest policy, to help the provinces in all their forest research, as well as in the protection and development of our forests which, with agriculture, remain one of our two greatest natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to go on any further, but I wanted to make those two points in the presence of the minister.

I am sure that the Minister of Forestry will take due note of my remarks, because they are based on the limited experience I acquired both in forestry and in farming. The minister can be assured that I expressed my views most sincerely in order that my suggestions may benefit not only my area, but also my province and the whole country.

[Text]

Mr. Granger: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to congratulate the minister on the occasion of his first presentation of the estimates of his department. I welcome the opportunity to join briefly in this debate, because forestry is one of the great industries of the province from which I come and of the district I have the honour to represent. Grand Falls, in the southern part of my riding, has some great pulp and paper mills which have led to a high degree of industrialization in central Newfoundland. They have been directly responsible for the employment of many people and the production of products which bring us many millions of dollars. Further north, in Labrador, there is one of the great forests not only of eastern Canada but of North America, perhaps one of the greatest forests in the world.

This summer the Minister of Forestry visited Newfoundland. I was fortunate to be able to be with him in Grand Falls, Gander and the Goose Bay area. After watching him and the officials with him, both from his department and from the provincial department of resources, I came to the conclusion that we had a minister who knew the woods and the trees and could see both, and that the officials who were with him from Ottawa and St. John's were men of high ability and deep dedication. It was my pleasure to accompany the minister as we flew up the valleys of the Goose river and Hamilton river, where he saw for himself, as I have said, perhaps one of the greatest stands of timber in the world. I know of his interest in the woods industry and in timber, and that he and his officials will do their best in this new department, which is so important to Canada's greatest industry.

I listened with much pleasure and interest to the speakers who followed the minister, as they covered the industry on a national scale. I feel that all members of this committee are deeply interested in this great industry and that the good will of all go to the Minister of Forestry as he endeavours to promote, both at home and abroad, an industry which means so much to so many thousands of Canadians.

I would ask, speaking now provincially and perhaps locally, that he bear in mind the particular problems in the district I represent. One of the great problems we face in Newfoundland is the development of Labrador timber, where a short shipping season heretofore has discouraged the development of these huge forests. However, perhaps the introduction of these huge new barges which we produce on the west coast, and the lengthening of the shipping season through the judicious use of icebreakers in Hamilton inlet, may together bring forward this development which is bound to take place. If the new Minister of Forestry and his officials can hasten this development they will have done a great service not only to the province of Newfoundland and to Labrador, but to all Canadians, who would benefit from the trade which would result.

There are very good reasons other than the general economic ones why such a development in Labrador is desirable. I think it may be said that most of the population of the Goose Bay area depend upon the defence installations there for their livelihood. Although there is no indication at present that these bases are to close, or anything like that, it is wise to look ahead and consider possible alternative employment should the need arise. The proximity to Goose Bay of these huge forest reserves must make all of us realize the desirability of preparing for development there. This may become desirable for the sake of economic growth generally and, in particular, for the sake of the people who live in this area. The province, also, would benefit because there is no doubt the development of the timber industry in this area would lead to a significant increase in the production of pulp and paper in Newfoundland.

With these few remarks I will cease, once again wishing the minister and those who work with him well, as they seek to serve Canada by improving its greatest industry.

Mr. Kennedy: I should like to hail the minister as a former maritimer. As one who grew up among the trees in Nova Scotia, I know that once having been a maritimer he will always be a maritimer at heart. I have a series of questions to direct to the hon. gentleman concerning the application of sales tax on machinery used for production, and on lumber. I hope my questions will not embarrass the minister. I have no doubt he has heard something about the subject from the lumber industry, as have most of us. This tax will, in time, increase the cost of production and I am wondering what effect it is likely to have, in the minister's view, on competition with other building products. What effect will it have on our exports of lumber? Will it cause some diversion of demand from wood products to other building materials? Also, what effect is the tax likely to have on the small operator whose administrative ability to handle this new tax is limited? I should be glad if at any time while the estimates are before the committee the minister would be good enough to answer these questions and make some comments on this subject.

Mr. Nicholson: Perhaps before replying to the other hon. members who have spoken in the debate I could answer the particular questions put by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants. The simple answer to his question is that the other competitive building materials are paying the same tax, so the reimposition of this 11 per cent sales tax has left the forest products at no disadvantage from a competitive point of view.

Mr. Kennedy: I realize that, but the other building materials were taxed before. This is new to the lumber industry.

Mr. Nicholson: The 11 per cent applies to all building materials. It had been removed from certain building materials and is now reimposed; so, in this sense, competition still exists. But I think there is something which the hon. member should keep in mind. When there is a need to get more money to help balance the budget or at least, to move in that direction, the first thing to do is, of course, to look at the possibility of increasing taxation. But I am sure the hon. member would agree that it would be difficult to increase taxation in areas where profits are likely to be made out of the new municipal loan fund, out of the extension of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation benefits and so on, without removing the exemption. If there is any industry which is going to make a profit out of the new funds which are being put into circulation, it is the manufacture of building materials. If the industry is to get that profit then, surely, it is reasonable that the tax handicap under which the other industries operate should be shared. They are all paying this 11 per cent. It is not reasonable that one would reimpose this 11 per cent tax before seeking any general increase in taxation levels.

I may say that, having been associated with the forest industry, it is not surprising that I received a large number of telegrams and letters on this subject from firms in all parts of Canada, but primarily in British Columbia. I thought the best way to answer them was to go west and sit around a table with those who were complaining. I agree that one particular group, the manufacturers of prefabricated houses, did have a justifiable complaint, because in that case there seemed to be some duplication of taxation. I endeavoured to correct that situation, and it was corrected.

I would also ask the hon. member to bear in mind that 70 per cent of our forest products are exported. In relation to this percentage of our products which are sent abroad, the exporters enjoy the benefit of the devalued dollar. It seems to me that if there is any segment of the Canadian economy which cannot complain about the reimposition of the 11 per cent tax it is the manufacturers of forest products. I have told them so and I say, in all fairness that they seem to agree, at least so far as the west is concerned. Of course, the 70 per cent of the forest products which is exported includes pulp and paper products but also includes large exports of lumber, from British Columbia. A number of the people there finally, did acknowledge that they were not as badly off as they had thought they were and that it made more sense to reimpose this tax than it would have done to impose higher taxation generally. I do not wish to enter upon a detailed discussion of the budget or any aspects of the budget during the discussion of these estimates, but I have tried to answer hon. members' questions as frankly as I can. I do not think there is anything further I can usefully add to what I have said.

Mr. Cardiff: I rise only to ask the minister a question to which he, or one of the officials of his department may have an answer. Disease has got into our soft elms in our part of the country. I do not know whether it has spread throughout other parts of Canada or not. It affects a large number of our elm trees, not only those growing in the swamps but those growing along the roadside and in the fields. However, these last named are not affected to the same extent as the trees in the swamps. It seems to be a worm working under the bark. I do not know whether anything can be done to control it or whether any attempt has been made to find a cure, but it seems that eventually this disease will ruin all the soft elms. This has been going on for the last few years and it is getting worse instead of better.

Mr. Nicholson: I take it the problem to which the hon. member is referring is what is known as Dutch elm disease. This is a fungus which gets under the bark of the tree. We have had this problem in Canada for nearly 20 years. It came from the United States, beginning in Wisconsin and working its way east.

Shade trees are not normally a problem for the federal Department of Forestry. They are usually planted by municipalities and therefore are the responsibility of the provinces. However, the federal government research staff has done a great deal of work on this problem. It is one of the particular responsibilities assigned to our forest research laboratory in Quebec. Unfortunately we have not yet discovered a cure for this disease. However—and I gave the house this information some weeks ago in answer to a question —the hon. member will be glad to hear that we feel we may have developed a species of elm which is resistant to the disease. Of course, only time will tell, but we are encouraged by the results which have come out of our research laboratory in Quebec.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I should like, first of all, to express my congratulations to the minister on his appointment, and to wish him at least a reasonably smooth passage in piloting his estimates through the committee on this first occasion.

As those of us who were members of the mines, forests and waters committee in 1959 will recall, the minister, as president of the British Columbia forests industries council, took an active part in preparing and making the presentation on behalf of the industry in British Columbia. Out of the statement made to that committee came the recommendation which led to the creation of the Department of Forestry. At that time we had the active co-operation of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle who was then minister of northern affairs and national resources, and we were encouraged in that committee, as I am sure the minister will recall, by the then minister to delve into every aspect of the forest industry in Canada in order that the committee might see if it could not bring back to the house recommendations that would be of value to the future growth and prosperity of Canada's greatest industry. It is encouraging that the government has selected as Minister of Forestry, one of its number who took an active part in making the presentation on behalf of the British Columbia industry at that time. However, I think it is only fair that I should couple my congratulations with a warning to the minister.

He made a speech in Williams Lake very recently in which he referred to the widespread enthusiastic and non-partisan support for the establishment of the Department of Forestry. I know he was not in the House of Commons at that time but I know that outside the house his support was enthusiastic.

However, if he will go back to Hansard for that period in 1960 when the department was created and consult the speeches of the member who is now Minister of Justice, and the speeches of the member who is now Prime Minister, he will find there something less than enthusiasm for the Department of Forestry. They did not oppose it; but then, again, they did not altogether support it. As a matter of fact, he will find that the present Minister of Justice said in one of his opening statements that he was neither opposing nor supporting it, but the one thing about which they were very firm was that there should not be a separate minister. Therefore it is somewhat reassuring to those of us who disagreed that we find the hon. gentleman in the position he now holds. I can only suggest that in his associations with his cabinet colleagues he should retain a certain vigilance for self-preservation, because they opposed the appointment of a separate minister of forestry.

The minister has just made a very interesting defence of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. The defence did not extend, because the question was not asked, to the inclusion of production machinery, which was also covered by the imposition of the tax. If the minister will cast his mind back to the submissions of the forest industry in 1959, particularly the submission from the British Columbia industry, he will recall that a section of that submission contained an appeal for tax relief, for tax incentives for the industry.

[Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke).]

The former administration responded to that appeal by exempting two thirds of the logging tax in the provinces of British Columbia and Ontario. There was a rebate given on the logging tax in two of the provinces. The 11 per cent sales tax on building materials did not exist; the exemption on production machinery existed and certain extensions for the logging industry were introduced in 1959, particularly with regard to fuel oil for the production of power and diesel oil used by the logging trucks.

When the industry came to Ottawa it was not looking for an equalization of taxation. They did not want an 11 per cent tax tacked on which would be balanced out by the 7½ per cent discount on the Canadian dollar in the export market, or the advantage they had because of the discount. As I recall the submissions of the British Columbia forest industry at that time, they were not looking simply for the retention of the status quo. They did not want something given with one hand and taken away with the other. They said that the industry, in order to develop and expand its export markets must have an advantage and must not be left in the same position as it was before as the result of two government actions.

Therefore I do not believe that the minister's argument stands up. You cannot add on an 11 per cent tax and then say that is compensated for by the discount on the dollar because there is a 3 per cent advantage. I recall that the British Columbia forest industry was not interested at that time in a 3 per cent advantage. They felt they needed more in order to improve their competitive position in the export markets which are so vital to them.

With regard to production machinery, the minister is undoubtedly aware of the plans for the development of the interior of British Columbia and the projected pulp mill developments at Prince George and Kamloops. The 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery has added to the capital cost of these developments. It means that the people who are investing their money in this type of development are going to have to find more money. They will have to pass on their additional capitalization costs in the cost of their product, and they claim to be in a tough competitive world and to need every advantage they can get.

I know that the minister is not responsible for this action, but I do think that what it highlights is that it is absolutely essential that the Minister of Forestry must consult, as I am sure the present minister will, with the Minister of Finance very closely to consider the effect of taxation policy on our greatest industry. I do not think that sufficient consideration has been given to this aspect. I read the release from the minister's department on the recent conference with the provincial ministers of forestry. In the minister's own statement tonight and in that release a very substantial emphasis was placed on the value of research in all fields, product research, entomological research, forest biological research and so on. Nobody is going to deny the essential importance of all this work. No one in the house would challenge for a moment the importance of this work. But in any such conference I think there should also be consideration of taxation policies at all levels of government as they relate to the forest industry. This is fundamental. I have no doubt that informal discussions have taken place, perhaps between the federal government and a single province in an informal manner over the years.

I recall that taxation policy did enter into the discussions of the mines, forests and waters committee in 1959. This is an important area. I do not think any government should impose taxes in the form in which they were imposed by the budget in June because they are bound to have a direct effect on the one industry in Canada which in all its various phases employs more Canadians than any other single industry.

It is essential that taxation policy must take into account the special requirements of an industry which not only is so essential to us in our domestic development, for example, in the field of construction, but is so important to us in the export field. Even now there does not appear to be sufficient awareness of this necessity.

There is one other field to which I feel sure the minister will be devoting a great deal of attention. I imagine that the department has already considered the matter in some detail and depth. The minister mentioned in one of the departmental releases the question of forest fire protection. In one of his speeches he also mentioned one officer who is apparently doing a gargantuan task in British Columbia, because he is one man trying to cover the whole province. I wonder how much thinking has gone on with regard to the establishment of a national force to supplement provincial forces in times of grave emergency.

Despite the fact that the ten year average of acreage burned in forest fires is approximately 2,700,000, we know from the publication of the dominion fire commissioner that in 1961 there were 9,300,000 acres burned, an increase of almost 400 per cent in that year. We are all very conscious of the dreadful problems that confronted the province of Newfoundland and also the problems of British Columbia in this regard two years or more ago. On such occasions the federal government, if requested, normally send in units of the army but these units of the army are not specially trained for this purpose. As the minister well knows, firefighting is not only a hazardous occupation but it is one in which the firefighter, if he is to be effective, must have skilled direction. He must have had training and the opportunity to have learned how to survive while fighting forest fires. Dead firefighters are not effective. The dangers are very great. The inexperienced can do little good. We know that at the time of the Newfoundland fire the forest officers in national parks had to be diverted from their work and sent to Newfoundland to provide their skilled services.

If it is not economically feasible at this time to develop a separate force, then I hope that within the armed services we can have units of the army trained in fighting fires, so that a corps of trained men can be available, ready to be sent to fight fires and play a more effective role, with their safety better guaranteed, and less risk of endangering lives needlessly.

I have been somewhat critical of the government's policy, but I hope the minister realizes this is not in any personal sense. I do feel that some decisions which have been taken, particularly in the field of taxation with respect to the forest industry, deserve reconsideration. I say this because if the problems that the industry advanced to a committee of this house in 1959 were as real and as urgent then as the industry claimed, I cannot believe all these problems suddenly disappeared in the course of four years. In fact it seems to me there is a necessity for a continued program of special tax legislation geared to meet the requirements of the forest industry.

Item agreed to.

10. Grant to Canadian forestry association, $25,000.

Mr. Hamilton: There is one question I would like to ask the minister on the basis of the item we have before us. If one looks at these tables carefully he will find that in almost all these votes a number of personnel have received certain salary adjustments. Was this because of classification or because of salary increases?

Mr. Nicholson: Salary increases. They were not substantial.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Forestry.

Mr. Nicholson: I had contemplated making some remarks in reply to constructive suggestions put forward by members in all parts of the house. I wish to say thanks to all the speakers. I appreciate their suggestions greatly, as well as their good wishes and congratulations.

I should have said earlier that the federal-provincial forestry conference which took place on October 21 and 22, to which reference was made by two or three speakers tonight, was in my humble opinion, and in the opinion of the 10 provincial ministers who attended, a highly successful affair.

It was the first one of its kind, and to answer a question put by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, they suggested that meetings be held at least once a year. ARDA, among other matters, was discussed at some length, and has general support, particularly in the provinces of New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario.

There was also general agreement that on the whole the federal-provincial forestry agreements which have been in effect for the past 12 years have been successful. The ministers did plead for greater flexibility because of the different topographic and geographic conditions that exist in the east, and which differ from those in the west. More planes may be needed in a province like British Columbia, and more access roads in Ontario and Quebec, where the terrain is entirely different. There was unanimity on the general merits of these agreements.

There was also unanimity on the submission that there should be greater research, and there was assurance of full co-operation among all 10 provinces. One could not have asked for a better atmosphere or for more co-operation. Of course there were a few disagreements, and that is why the meeting was held in camera. It was closed to the press. Some hon. members have commented that they did not see any publicity about it. A press release was issued on the second night of the conference, and there was a press conference; but as hon. members will recall, we had some competition that day. It was the day the S.I.U. visited parliament hill, and they, rather than the 11 ministers of forestry drew most of the members of the press.

Mr. Hamilton: Was there any discussion at this conference about the relative merits of putting federal money into the provincial agreements, as opposed to expanding the research services?

Mr. Nicholson: No, they wanted more money for both, but I was not in a position to commit myself. I told them their views would be taken into consideration and placed before my colleagues in the government.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

One other matter to which perhaps I should have referred earlier was raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West, among others. He stressed the necessity of interesting the youth of Canada—of educating them in the importance of the forest industry. This is of the utmost importance. I cannot commend too highly the junior forest warden movements in certain provinces, particularly Ontario and British Columbia where they have had great success. There has also been work of a similar nature by 4-H clubs in Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and I commend this work very highly.

Mr. Pigeon: Two years ago the provinces signed an agreement to build roads to forests, and I would like to know if the provinces, particularly Quebec, expressed their views about renewing this agreement?

Mr. Nicholson: I can only refer to the press conference and the statement that was made on the subject. It was stated by the 10 ministers, including the minister from Quebec, that the federal-provincial agreements had on the whole been successful. The Quebec minister agreed that these agreements, which cover not only access roads but forest inventory and reforestation, had been more or less satisfactory. He said that the province of Quebec was willing to consider renewal of the agreement on the same general basis as the other provinces, but he said there had been certain reservations made by the premier of Quebec with regard to federal-provincial agreements generally, and these would have to be the subject of further discussion with the federal government.

Mr. Pigeon: I asked the question because Mr. Arsenault, the former minister of forestry, was opposed to these joint progams.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The committee of supply will now proceed to the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian good roads association, $10,695,000.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, as I rise to speak on the estimates of the Department of Public Works, I wish first of all to congratulate the minister (Mr. Deschatelets) for the honour his leader has conferred upon him, by asking him to take the lead of one of the key departments.

However, I am saddened by the thought that the Prime Minister had some misgivings about the qualifications of the nominee, and about the time he might be ready and willing to spend on matters coming under his jurisdiction. It is also a pity that the Prime Minister has seen fit to remove from the scope of that jurisdiction the administration of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I would have liked us to remain faithful to tradition on that point. Things being what they are, I can only extend my heartfelt sympathy to the minister, who probably also feels some regret at seeing his powers and responsibilities thus whittled away.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for the courtesy with which he has always listened to my suggestions about changes to be brought to inscriptions and signs on parliament hill, inside parliament itself and within various federal buildings. When I suggested replacing signs in one language only by signs written both in English and in French, the minister followed in the footsteps of his predecessors, who never failed to comply with my requests.

Actually, Mr. Chairman, it is not without a certain pride that I remind the house that when I came to Ottawa in 1957, as a member for the St. Hyacinthe-Bagot riding, most notices on doors and elsewhere on parliament hill, were written in one language only, that is to say in English.

At that time, I tried hard to make some recommendations which resulted in those bilingual notices that can now be seen almost everywhere, instead of unilingual ones.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to mention the fact incidentally, because I think it is better to keep in the background while working and then succeed, than to make a lot of noise, as has been heard for the past couple of years, with only indifferent results.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the officials who assist the minister in his work. They are most understanding and have always given me a maximum of co-operation when I approached them with requests. Indeed, I know from my own experience that when reasonable requests are made to the Minister of Public Works or his officials, they are always quite ready to help and have only one object, that is to give the best possible service to the people.

And how could it be otherwise, when we consider that, since I have come to the house I succeeded in convincing the officials of that department that certain projects should be carried out in my riding, at a cost of $1,200,000? Mr. Chairman, I point out those facts without boasting and without excessive humility, whether it pleases my good friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) or not.

I think that without the co-operation of the present minister's predecessors and of the officials, I certainly would not have achieved such results.

In his introductory remarks on his estimates, the minister made a brief review of the situation he found in his department when he took over. He indicated that the estimates were prepared by his predecessor and he did not see the need for a detailed analysis of them. But we would have liked him to take a little more time and give us the reasons for the statement he made on October 18 last, as can be seen on page 3760 of Hansard where the minister stated:

> However, we have slightly changed those estimates and to enable the house to get a better understanding of the various projects and amounts you are called upon to approve, I intend to give you some essential explanations and I will do it alternatively in French and in English.

Mr. Chairman, may I point out that I have read this statement of the minister several times, and it may be that I cannot read between the lines, but I find no justification the minister might have given for the cancelling some items or affecting additional amounts to other projects. In fact, the minister told us he had cancelled some $2.5 million, while he asked us to pass additional projects for some $6.3 million.

We would have liked the minister to tell us—and we were entitled to know—which projects he thought it was his duty to cancel and what additional projects he added, as well as the reasons justifying those cancellations or additions to the budgetary estimates for the current year.

I find it a little difficult to understand why the officials, after thinking out the plans of the previous administration, were not somewhat aggrieved at the decision of the minister to make such large cuts in the estimates they had prepared for the year 1962-63. Those officials are known for their broadmindedness and their impartiality as well as for their desire to serve the people, and surely until the time the present minister took over the department, those officials did their best in the preparation of their work.

Unless the minister gives us the reasons why he decided to make the changes, we are entitled to wonder on certain obscure points.

Mr. Chairman, as it is the first time that I address myself to the Minister of Public Works since he assumed his post, I shall avail myself of the opportunity to utter a few requests in order to improve the postal services in my constituency. Those requests will also tend to reduce unemployment which prevails in my constituency, for, as you know, Mr. Chairman, my constituency is not different from the others.

Among all the provinces in this country, the province of Quebec unfortunately holds the sad record of having the greatest number of unemployed.

I trust that the minister, who, also, comes from the province of Quebec and wishes sincerely the good of its inhabitants, will not hesitate to give me his help and his co-operation in order that, together we may secure employment for the heads of families who surely need work to meet their responsibilities.

In order to reduce unemployment in my constituency, I suggest to the Minister of Public Works to build post offices in the villages of St. Denis sur Richelieu and St. Rosalie, in Bagot county, St. Damase, in St. Hyacinthe county, and in Upton, in Bagot county. Those four places are big enough and important enough, it seems to me, to have their own post offices. In so doing, the minister would certainly enhance the pride of the citizens of those municipalities. In any village or rural community, people are always proud to say: we are important enough to have our federal building. That is why I am asking for the minister's support in this field.

I have another suggestion to make to the minister. It has to do with giving a slightly more bilingual appearance to the uniforms worn by messengers and persons who run elevators one comes across in the parliament buildings. As a matter of fact, I sent a letter to the minister to this effect.

At the present time, if you look at those uniforms, you only see three letters, "D.P.W.", which stand for "Department of Public Works".

I should like to see the practice which is applied to the uniforms worn by the parliament buildings' constables also adopted in the case of those employees of the Department of Public Works, that is to say, place on one side or on one shoulder, for instance, the letters D.P.W. and, on the other one, the letters M.T.P. to identify employees of the Department of Public Works. That is a suggestion I offer to the minister, and since we know he also wants to do his share in the field of bilingualism, he will surely not miss an opportunity to follow that suggestion.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I must, much to my regret but it is imperative, come to another matter which will probably not please so much the Minister of Public Works. It is about patronage that I want to talk to the minister for a few moments.

Mr. Caron: That is a fine matter.

Mr. Ricard: According to the information in my possession, it has been decided lately to increase from $5,000 to $15,000 the amount of contracts awarded on invitation only. I would be happy to learn from the minister whether this information is true and if it is, could he tell me who supplies the list of tenderers for such work.

Moreover, I wonder if the minister could tell us who is responsible for supplying the names of persons who could become inspectors on the building site of sustaining walls. And before going further, may I remind the minister that I sent him two letters recommending some persons who could act as inspectors on these building sites.

The people I recommended are qualified and they have a vast experience in that field, having already held the position of inspectors for several years, in addition to their experience they have earned a reputation for impartiality. Unfortunately, and to my great surprise, I have learned that people other than those I recommended were chosen to supervise the construction of the retaining walls in St. Denis sur Richelieu and St. Charles sur Richelieu.

Mr. Drouin: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Ricard: Certainly, but when I have completed my remarks which will only take me a few minutes more.

I should like very much to know why the people I recommended were not hired and from whom did the Minister of Public Works get the names of the people concerned.

Maybe he could also tell me what is the part played by my opponent in the last general election, Mr. Jean Leduc of Ste. Pie. According to the information I have, the property purchased by the Department of Public Works as a possible site for the penitentiary that was to be built in Ste. Pie, was the scene of a dramatic sale of hay last summer. I am informed that Mr. Leduc was the person authorized to conduct the sale of hay. Since this individual was defeated in the last general election, it is very strange that he should carry out a duty which, in my opinion, should belong to the representative elected by the people. I should like to know very much who gave him this authority and who recommended him as such.

Could it be that there is a list of consultants as there is in the Post Office Department where I saw the name of Mr. Leduc?

Actually, I would not be surprised if his name should appear on another list, and it is for this reason that I would like the Minister of Public Works to confirm or deny my statements.

Mr. Pigeon: It is likely the same list.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, the minister is aware that a penitentiary was to be erected in my riding, more specifically in the parish of St. Pie de Bagot. I can only mention the matter this evening, since I will have an opportunity later on to discuss it when we examine the various estimates of the department.

As I have not as yet succeeded in securing a satisfactory reply from the Department of Justice, I would appreciate it if the Minister of Public Works, who is undoubtedly aware of the situation, since it is his department which acquired the land, would supply me with certain information.

For instance, what use will be made of that land which was purchased at the price of $83,000? What are the reasons which motivated the transfer of the proposed penitentiary to another riding?

I feel that the question concerns the minister since the construction of penitentiaries comes under his department.

In view of the fact that I have been unable to get a satisfactory reply from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), I hope the Minister of Public Works will be more co-operative than his colleague and provide me with all the information I am entitled to since it would be interesting to know why, after last April 8, it was suddenly decided to give up the proposed construction of a penitentiary at St. Pie de Bagot.

Mr. Chairman, I have here some documents which prove without question and according to the plans of the Departments of Justice and Public Works, since there is a double jurisdiction in the matter, that the work should normally be under way. Why has it not started? I was unable to find out up to now, and I ask the minister to tell me.

With further reference to the selection of inspectors and to their duties, I would like the minister to tell me also whether the inspector who represents the federal government on the building site of a retaining wall must remain on the spot or whether he may stay away and, in that case, for how long during the day. I am asking the minister whether an inspector may leave his job and meet at the same time the requirements of the Department of Public Works.

If I seek that information, it is in the interest of the Department of Public Works and of the general public. In fact, I would say that in order to do his work properly, a supervisor should be on the site all day long and not only part of the time.

The answers to those few questions will put me straight and enable me, at the same time, to relay information to those who ask me for it, because I make it a point to keep the minister aware of the way the work is proceeding with regard to the erection of the retaining walls. Those are all questions that people are asking themselves.

I would not want to offend the minister but I must tell him that patronage is being practiced on a large scale and that probably he would not put up with it if he really wanted to stop it. However, I feel duty bound to tell him. A lot of patronage is going on now with regard to the work at St. Charles and at St. Denis sur Richelieu. I would not want to stir up memories, but—

Mr. Drouin: I understand why—

Mr. Deschatelets: May I ask a question of my hon. friend?

He just mentioned the work under way concerning the sustaining walls. The hon. member asserted that some sort of patronage was taking place. I would like to have more details in order to be able to reply adequately. I do not suppose my hon. friend would make such assertions without knowing certain facts. I ask him then to give me a few facts.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I would have preferred not to mention that. I merely wanted to warn the minister in private. But since he raises the question, I have no alternative but to justify my allegations.

I will refer to letters which I wrote to him under date of June 24, concerning the appointment of inspectors. I recommended three persons for St. Denis and St. Charles, but none of them was hired. Those who were hired as inspectors had been recommended by Liberal organizers in both the above-mentioned villages. This is one example, Mr. Chairman. If you want more I could state others because, in my opinion, one can achieve the same purpose without bringing up the past.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, before starting my remarks I should like to congratulate the Minister of Public Works on his appointment to this department.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it 10.30?

PRIVILEGE

MR. PIGEON—CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS RESPECTING CHARGE AGAINST HAL BANKS

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of privilege.

Mr. Martineau, a Montreal lawyer who has been appointed by the Canadian government to study the Norris report contradicted the Minister of Justice, who, with regard to Mr. Hal Banks, and in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), made the following statement on October 31, 1963, which may be seen on page 4215 of Hansard:

[Text]

A charge has been laid against Hal Banks in Montreal.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau, as reported by all newspapers, including the Montreal Star, stated that no charge had yet been laid against the chairman of the S.I.U., whereas, last Thursday the Minister of Justice maintained that charges had been brought against him.

To my mind, the statement of the Minister of Justice was ill-considered and irresponsible.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the complaint of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm was not a point of privilege because it does not affect the rights of hon. members. The hon. member tried to point out a contradiction between a statement made by a Montreal lawyer and the one I made last Thursday in the house.

Now, as I said last Thursday in the house, charges have been brought against the people concerned.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied with the answer given by the Minister of Justice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT AS TO GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR REMAINDER OF SESSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that it would be helpful to the members of the house if I made a statement at this time on government plans for business during the remainder of this session, which it is hoped will come to an end before Christmas.

It is impossible, of course, to be definitive about business during the next two months, or indeed about the priority which should be attached to business, because things may develop during that time which will require a change in the order we have in mind now, and which indeed may require additional or new legislation to be brought in. But subject to that qualification I should like to make a statement in as great detail as possible about what the government has in mind in the matter of business for the remainder of the session.

The most urgent business is to complete the consideration of estimates. It would not be possible, in our view, to end the session without all essential work being completed. I know that in some respects it is housekeeping work, but it is housekeeping for which this house is responsible to the taxpayers of the country. In addition, the discussion of estimates also provides opportunities for statements of departmental policy. For example, it is our intention that in introducing the estimates of the Department of Agriculture the minister will announce improvements in policy which this government proposes to undertake for the benefit of farmers.

If I may now turn to legislation, the first priority is to complete the bill amending the Income Tax Act. Equally urgent is the bill concerning the surcharge on imports order. We also intend to proceed soon with the very important resolution on the amendment of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act; and we hope, and I am sure all hon. members hope, that there will not be much delay in getting subsequent legislation on this matter through all its stages.

The next major measures which we hope to bring forward during this session will be, first, that dealing with the redistribution of constituencies in order that the people of Canada should in the sixties have a properly representative House of Commons based on the population distribution according to the last census. It is urgent that this legislation be completed at this session. Then we would propose to press on next with the amendment of the National Housing Act. This may be as far as we can realistically expect to go, before the recess, with our major legislative proposals; but if the house moves faster than perhaps we have any right to expect at the moment we will be ready to proceed with major railway legislation arising out of the MacPherson royal commission.

The house is aware, however, that in addition to these items in the government's program there is a considerable amount of legislation which, while urgent and important, is, I hope, largely of a non-controversial nature. Indeed, some items are matters held over from the unfinished business of the last parliament. It is important, for example, to complete very soon the legislation dealing with the Northwest Territories and the proposed Nunassiaq territory. The C.N.R. financing and guarantee bill is urgent. So is the amendment of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, the Canada Elections Act, and the acts dealing with the world exhibition corporation and the national centennial. Then there is the amendment to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act and the Overseas Telecommunications Act, and of the Railway Act in respect of the grade crossing fund.

Other measures which should be completed, if it can be done quickly—and, Mr. Speaker, some of these measures are now before the Senate—are those dealing with the harbour commission, the Carriage by Air Act, the Bankruptcy Act, the Ontario harbours agreement, amendments to the National Harbours Board Act, the Admiralty Act and the Aeronautics Act. We further hope to bring forward legislation dealing with the continuation of small business loans; with the establishment—and this is an urgent matter—of an Indian claims commission, with statutory salaries, with the amendment of the Citizenship Act and with the Blue Water bridge authority for the bridge between Sarnia and Port Huron. The government also wishes to introduce legislation to implement some of the recommendations of the Glassco report. So no one need be in any doubt that there will be plenty of work before the house.

I have indicated as definitely as it is realistic to do at present, the general order in which the government intends to proceed. There remain, however, five topics to which reference was made in the speech from the throne at the beginning of the session but which I have not mentioned in this list of priorities. I should like to review very briefly the status of each of these. First is the Columbia river situation. As is well known, this has been the subject of lengthy negotiation with the province of British Columbia and then with the United States government. These negotiations are very well advanced now, but they do not appear at the moment to be at such a stage that we will be ready to bring the matter before the house this side of Christmas, though this situation may change.

Three of the remaining proposals are certainly ones which will take a great deal of parliamentary time, and there is no realistic chance now of completing them in this session. I suggest that the way to handle them is to leave these items over for next session. They are matters concerning the Department of Agriculture, the establishment of a Canadian development corporation, and the recasting of unemployment insurance in the light of the state of the fund and the recommendations of the Gill committee.

I wish to refer finally to the subject of pensions. The most urgent part of the proposal, having to do with the $10 increase in existing pensions, has now been implemented by parliament. Our contributory pension plan deals with matters for which Canada and the provinces share jurisdiction, and we are proceeding in co-operation with the provinces. There has already been discussion at two conferences. Technical consultations with Ontario and Quebec are now taking place and a federal-provincial conference is being held later this month beginning on the 25th and going through, I think, to the end of that week.

Regarding that conference, I may say I have been in consultation with the premiers of the provinces in connection with the agenda and other arrangements. I wrote to all the premiers over the week end with proposals based on the suggestions they have made and about which we have been exchanging views for some time. The letters will all have been received by tomorrow, and I will at that time table them in the house.

In the circumstances I believe it would be inappropriate to proceed with further legislation on pensions until after the conference, and in view of the limited time remaining to us this clearly means that the legislation cannot be completed by the end of the year. This is complex legislation which ought to be, and will be, thoroughly examined and fully debated. As any discussion before Christmas would be bound to be inconclusive, we will proceed with the pension legislation early next year in the next session.

I wish to make it clear that we are following this course because of the proper requirement of federal-provincial consultation. There is no slackening in the determination of this government that Canada should have a national contributory portable pension plan which is needed for the security and welfare of Canadians. That is going to be done and will be done as quickly as can be.

These are the proposals that I now make to the house. I do not expect they can be referred to in detail at this particular moment by the leaders of the other parties, though they may wish to make comments on them, but I would suggest that they be used as a basis of discussion with the house leaders of the other parties in case they may have some views to bring forward in connection with them. Meanwhile I put them to the house for discussion.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the house will appreciate the full report given by the Prime Minister respecting the balance of the session. Let me say at once that in so far as the estimates are concerned, I think there will be general agreement that they should be proceeded with in the manner indicated by him. Last February we found ourselves in the position of being defeated before the estimates could be dealt with, and naturally these estimates, covering in the main as they do matters which we had ready and explanations that we intended to make, will receive that same degree of co-operation in securing their passage through parliament that has been evidenced in the case of the estimates of several departments which have already been before the house.

The Prime Minister has said that there is plenty of business. In looking over the order paper I can only conclude that there is not very much business of immediate importance, except two or three matters to which he alluded. I was particularly interested in hearing about the Columbia river project. We were told that arrangements had been made with regard to this matter. All was in a happy state. Agreement had been arrived at with British Columbia. Indeed, with the new era of Canadian-American relations this was one matter that would be ready for this session. However, the best laid plans of mice and men "gang aft a-gley". We now find that the Columbia river project is in a state of suspended animation.

Then there is the Canada development corporation. This was something that represented a great step forward for Canada and its economy. We have not heard much of it lately. It is still on the order paper. It had priority earlier, but it now becomes of secondary importance awaiting the new year.

Then there is the Canada pension plan. It has had its ups and its downs. When the Prime Minister says that the government believes in a national portable contributory pension plan well and securely laid, there is no disagreement over here. The trouble with the plan that was placed before the house and is today on the order paper is that it was not workable and there was no consultation. Indeed, the government have put the cart before the horse. They went ahead with the plan and they were going to shove it through come what may. The provinces demanded consultation, as did the opposition. But now, after this wonderful plan had been conceived and produced in part, we have to wait until the new year because there have been no consultations.

There is one thing that seems clear. The ill digested and ill considered plan that was brought before the house is now as dead as a dodo, and in its place a plan is going to be evolved, following consultation, which will be well and securely founded. That is the kind of legislation for which we asked, and we are glad that the government at last has seen the error of its ways in this regard and is going to produce this kind of legislation instead of the monstrosity that was laid before the house earlier this year.

In so far as the other matters mentioned by the Prime Minister are concerned, the technical and vocational training, the income tax legislation and the surcharge legislation, those are matters of importance. They have been considered already at some length. Certainly there should be no great delay in the passage of two of them through parliament. In so far as the surcharge legislation is concerned, we shall deal with that matter when it is before the house.

I could make reference to many other items mentioned by the Prime Minister. I simply say it is always helpful to have a plan; it is always beneficial to have an objective. The Prime Minister has given us both, and that has been done throughout the years. As so often happens, other things find their way into the agenda and these plans, however desirous all of us are for the conclusion of this session before Christmas, may not be brought to a conclusion in relation to each and every one of the matters to which he referred. I was glad to see the redistribution measure on the list because it is one that will require co-operation from all parts of the house. Since we gave the lead in this regard, it will be taken out of the realm of partisan politics. In the setting up of the Indian claims committee, the government will be carrying out a project which we had ready.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this session began, as all sessions do, with a speech from the throne. The purpose of that speech was to let parliament know what the program of business was for the ensuing session. We have not made much progress on the speech from the throne that was read to us in the other place so, in effect, today we have had another speech from the throne given to us by the Prime Minister. I hope we get along better with this revised bill of fare than we did with the one with which we started this session. In fact we welcome the statement of the Prime Minister. I am glad he has taken the house into his confidence by letting us know what the government's plans are so far as the business for the balance of this session is concerned.

We too welcome the fact that redistribution is high on the list so that this important matter, important to the people of Canada, might be dealt with before this session concludes. I was a little concerned, and some of my colleagues were, by the Prime Minister's use of the word "recess". Perhaps he might explain later whether he plans a Christmas recess or prorogation at that time. Perhaps it was a slip of the tongue, but at any rate he may clear that up.

We are dismayed that even at this late stage of the session, the 82nd sitting day, the government is still unprepared to go ahead with two of the major planks in its election platform, the Canada pension plan and the Canada development corporation.

We all remember that in the last election campaign the Prime Minister's cry was that the Liberals had a pension plan that was ready, and that the Liberals could act quickly on this matter. At least one thing is clear as a result of this statement. The Prime Minister can no longer say, as he has said a half dozen times in this session, that the Canada pension plan is being delayed because he cannot get the co-operation of members on this side of the house. It is now clear that it is a deliberate decision of the government to delay action on this important legislation.

This is not the time to debate the Canada pension plan even to the extent the Leader of the Opposition debated it a moment ago. But I wish to say I do not agree with the comments he made about it and I think it is unfortunate for the Canadian people that this plan—some improvements could be made in it but it is basically a good one—has been delayed to next year, especially in the light of the promise which was made that it would be dealt with at this session. I hope this will not be like some of the promises in 1919 which were put off from one election to another.

With regard to the business ahead of us we in this party, Mr. Speaker, will try to co-operate in getting it through.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we welcome this statement by the Prime Minister, and simply say that this formidable outline of legislation that we have to look forward to will be welcomed not only by the house but by every Canadian citizen. There is certainly a tremendous backlog of work that needs to be completed, and first of all I say it is most important that we get Canada's parliament in tune with the fiscal year under which the government operates. For the past couple of years this has been thrown completely out of kilter due to elections and it is essential that we have a budget next winter, soon after the new session opens, so that it will be introduced before the end of the fiscal year. In this regard it is essential that the estimates be brought in as quickly as possible.

The second important thing which ought to be impressed on us this afternoon, after having listened to the proposed program, is that we in this house should get down to work.

Mr. Smallwood: Why don't you do it?

Mr. Thompson: It is not only the government which has a responsibility in this regard. It is also the business of the hon. members who sit on this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, if you would please ask these people who sit behind the Leader of the Opposition to be quiet, perhaps we could talk a little bit of sense.

Mr. Winkler: You are talking from the wrong side of the house.

Mr. Thompson: In the Canada pension bill we have a piece of legislation which affects the future welfare of every Canadian citizen, but I think the government has learned through bitter experience during the past few months that this kind of legislation cannot be drawn up in a back room, and that it must be carefully brought before the public scrutiny prior to its enactment. The federal-provincial conference which will take place in a few weeks is a good thing, but it is also very important that the broadest possible consultation be had in order that we get the type of pension act that the country needs and which every Canadian expects from the government at this time. It is important that consultation and discussion be held in every part of our social and economic structure so that we do get the right kind of legislation.

Nothing much was said about the municipal loan and development fund, but we hope the problems connected with it will be solved at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference. This reminds us that the most urgent economic problem facing us today is that which confronts our local and municipal governments financially; and in addition to plans already announced I hope other plans are being made at this stage for a full municipal development bank, so that our social capital needs might be met more effectively than they have been in the past, which needs the municipal development and loan fund hardly begins to meet. I might add here just a remark about the Canada development corporation because, while it is important, it is more urgent that we do something to meet the needs of our local governments in so far as their capital requirements are concerned.

The technical and vocational training program is to come before us during the next few weeks, and I agree with the Prime Minister that this is something so urgent that we should pass the legislation as quickly as possible.

It is of interest that three royal commission reports have been mentioned, reports that have been gathering dust for quite a long time now and upon which no action has been taken. Specifically they are the MacPherson report, the Glassco report and the Gill report, and we would also welcome hearing something about the O'Leary report as well. Royal commissions have more value than just to have their findings shelved away in some dust-gathering corner.

Then there is the Columbia river program. We had hoped this might be brought before the house this session. It is one of the greatest development programs Canada has tackled in recent years, and it is urgent that the federal parliament meet its share of the obligations as quickly as possible.

Last but not least is the problem of redistribution, but again this is something that has been put aside for many months. We look forward to legislation being introduced to set up the necessary commission and thus permit a more equitable election process before we come to the next general election. We are very pleased and happy that we have this program before us, and I am sure it gives us new hope and courage to go forward and meet our responsibilities.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we have heard with great interest the new plan introduced by the Prime Minister in respect to procedure from now until the end of this session.

Of course, we in this corner of the house, like everybody, are anxious to get to Christmas at the same time as the others. Indeed if this new parliamentary procedure enables us to accelerate the work which is our responsibility, the quicker we will do it.

Now, if slowness has been the characteristic of this parliament to date, I do not believe it is so much because of the opposition as because of the government party, which got somewhat mixed up with its "operation 60 days", promised at the April general election.

The Prime Minister said a little while ago that the government's object is to save the money of the Canadian taxpayers. This is a commendable end, but the government should come to a decision and introduce its legislation in the most definite and complete way so that it would be acceptable to the opposition.

For example, the Prime Minister just mentioned the Income Tax Act which has to be amended. We all know that, contrary to what the "operation 60 days" was supposed to bring in, that is tax reduction, the government brought in instead an increase in tax. This is not the same thing.

If the promises of the "operation 60 days" had been lived up to, I do not think that we would be facing as many difficulties at this time.

The same remark can be made with regard to the legislation concerning imports. As for the redistribution of constituencies, based on the population of each province according to the last census, that is a commendable undertaking, but that question should be referred to a committee which could later report to the house.

The National Housing Act was also mentioned. Of course, there are still thousands of Canadians who do not own their own homes and that measure should be pressed on in order to make that possible for the small wage earners. We were told that legislation dealing with the Northwest Territories, as well as the bill concerning the world fair, would be studied.

We will also have to consider legislation concerning the Columbia river. I know it is through no fault of the present government that this question is not settled; the Conservatives should have solved the problem when they were in power the first year that the matter was brought up in parliament. In view of the fact that they did not accept their responsibilities and that they are trying to pass on the blame to this government, that proves, in my opinion, that the two old parties are exactly identical.

Another thing that the Prime Minister should have acted upon immediately instead of just including it in the famous 60 days of decision, is the appointment of a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada as the Liberals promised.

I feel this question should not give rise to a debate, because it is up to the government, to the Prime Minister, to appoint a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. The Prime Minister already has a name on his list. Are people from western Canada or from the maritime provinces opposing the appointment of a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada to help the farmers in our part of the country? The Prime Minister is aware of the fact that when hon. members speak of agriculture, they talk first and last about wheat.

There are other things than wheat in Canada. I will admit that wheat is an important production, but the farmers who grow other crops should also be represented in the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, those are supplementary matters which, to my mind, should be solved before the holidays. In any case, our group is ready to co-operate with the government in order to adopt as quickly as possible the required legislation. On the other hand, the government should submit to the house something definite and concise to promote the development, the growth if you will, of the whole Canadian economy.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE QUORUM OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-103, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 to 1960, with respect to the quorum of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, this bill is based on the generally accepted notion, expressed the other day by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), that the first duty of members of the House of Commons is to be here. The bill would increase the quorum of the House of Commons from the present ridiculously low figure of 20 members to a more reasonable figure of 50 members.

Mr. Churchill: We threw this out 10 years ago.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the house that the following questions are being answered today: 1,172, 1,213, 1,314, 1,333, 1,339, 1,347, 1,348, 1,360, 1,367, 1,381, 1,391, 1,412, 1,414, 1,417, 1,439, 1,448, 1,451, 1,454, 1,455, 1,456, 1,469, 1,471, 1,477, 1,490, 1,491, 1,494, 1,497, 1,509, 1,513, 1,534, 1,535, 1,537, 1,539, 1,542, 1,543, 1,548, 1,555, 1,556 and 1,581.

[Mr. Caouette.]

[Text]

Mr. Speaker, if question 1,094 could be made an order for return the return will be tabled immediately. If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred questions Nos. 1,443, 1,446, 1,499 and 1,515 I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK LOANS OVER $100,000

Question No. 1,172—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the industrial development bank granted any loans of $100,000 or over since January 1, 1958 and, if so, (a) to whom and in what amounts (b) in each case, who recommended the grant of the loans?

2. Since January 1, 1958, has any person not a member of the executive committee of the industrial development bank, or not a member of the board of directors of the industrial development bank, or not an official of the Bank of Canada, of the industrial development bank, of the Department of Finance or of the Department of Trade and Commerce, given any advice with regard to whether or not a loan should be granted and, if so, what are the names, addresses and occupations of all such persons, and what advice did they give with respect to each loan?

3. Has any consideration been given to changing the relationship that exists at present between the industrial development bank and the Bank of Canada and associating the industrial development bank more closely with the Department of Trade and Commerce and, if so, what are the details of such consideration?

Mr. Benson: 1. The number of new loans made by the industrial development bank in each of its five fiscal years ending September 30, 1958 to 1962, classified according to the size of the loan, is shown on pages 16 and 17 of the bank's annual report for the fiscal year 1962. The size classification shows separately loans over $100,000 to $200,000, and loans over $200,000. In these five fiscal years as a whole the number of loans made over $100,000 was 532, and the total number of loans made was 5,360. In the fiscal year 1962 the numbers were 162 and 2,085 respectively.

It is contrary to public policy to reveal information regarding individual loans.

2. Yes. The bank secures information concerning potential loans and receives representations on them from a variety of sources, including the interested parties, but it is not considered desirable, in the public interest, to reveal from whom such information or representations are secured or received, or what the content of them is. In any event, records are not maintained that would enable the question to be answered.

3. Any important change in relationship such as that outlined would be a matter of government policy and would of course be announced as such.

CANADIAN-JAPANESE TRADE

Question No. 1,213—Mr. Scott:

1. At the recent Japanese-Canadian trade conference in Ottawa, were representations made by Japan in opposition to the Canadian system of "voluntary" quotas on Japanese imports into Canada?

2. What was the nature of such representations, and what goods and commodities and products were involved?

3. What was the total value of exports from Japan to Canada in the first quarter of 1963, and how does this compare with the same period in 1962?

4. Briefly, what goods, products and commodities make up Japanese exports to Canada, and which of these are under quota?

5. What was the total value of exports from Canada to Japan during the first quarter of 1963, and how does this compare with the similar period in 1962?

6. Does the government have knowledge of other countries imposing similar quotas on Japanese exports and, if so, what are the names of the countries?

7. Does Canada have a trade surplus with Japan and, if so, what was the amount of the surplus in the years 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962?

8. What was the nature of the government's response to the representations referred to in subsection 1 of this question?

Mr. Benson: 1. The Canadian-Japanese ministerial committee is not a negotiating body at which formal representations are made. The committee is intended to provide an opportunity for a free exchange of views between the ministers of the two countries on matters of common interest.

During the recent meeting in Ottawa, Japanese ministers explained some of the problems inherent in applying the Japanese system of restraints on exports of certain products to Canada; and they asked that the restraints for individual products should be discontinued as they become unnecessary. Canadian ministers explained the difficulties which had been caused in Canada by sharp and disruptive increases in imports from Japan and certain other countries in recent years. They agreed with Japanese ministers that restraints might well be removed when they had become clearly redundant. Canadian ministers also asked that Japan take all possible steps to remove quantitative and other restrictions being applied by Japan on imports of a number of important products which Canadian exporters might be able to sell to Japan.

2. See answer to (1). The discussion related generally to the products on which Japan maintains export restraints.

3. After increasing steadily since the signing of the 1954 trade agreement between Canada and Japan, Canada's imports from Japan have declined somewhat this year. In the first quarter of 1963 they totalled $23.5 million, compared with $26.6 million in the same quarter of 1962.

Questions

4. Canada's total imports from Japan in 1962 were valued at $125,358,920. Principal imports were:

| | Value ($000) |
|---|---|
| Fresh oranges and mandarins | 1,884 |
| Fresh fish | 1,050 |
| Canned tuna fish | 1,932 |
| Manufactures of cotton | 1,263 |
| Worsted and woollen fabric | 2,055 |
| Fabric of synthetic fibres | 3,376 |
| Nets and netting for commercial fishing | 1,429 |
| Cotton fabric | 7,657 |
| Wearing apparel | 14,169 |
| Lumber of mahogany | 1,851 |
| Plywood | 5,516 |
| Oil country goods of steel | 2,825 |
| Bars, rods, plates, sheets, pipes and wire of iron or steel | 7,739 |
| Tables knives, forks and spoons | 1,230 |
| Domestic sewing machines | 1,816 |
| Tape recorders and parts | 1,136 |
| Transistor radios | 5,150 |
| Earthenware floor and wall tiles | 1,286 |
| Tableware of china and other earthenware | 2,389 |
| Mechanical and other toys | 3,617 |
| Re-usable import packing | 1,829 |
| Waterproof rubber footwear | 1,656 |
| Canvas footwear | 1,416 |
| Other plastic and rubber footwear | 1,031 |
| Jewellery | 1,245 |
| Cameras and parts; and other photographic accessories | 3,355 |
| Optical instruments, including microscopes and parts | 1,587 |

A detailed list of exports to Canada subject to restraint by Japan during 1963 is contained in an appendix to Hansard of Friday, June 7, 1963. At the recent meeting here, Japanese ministers stated that the products on which export restraints are applied represented 27 per cent of the total value of Japan's exports to Canada in 1962.

5. First quarter 1963—$64.4 million. First quarter 1962—$49.1 million.

6. Japan applies restraints on exports to several countries including the United States, the United Kingdom and certain continental European nations. Several European countries apply quantitative restrictions, some of them discriminatory, on imports from Japan.

7. Canada has a trade surplus with Japan. The amount of this surplus was as follows on the basis of trade statistics published by the dominion bureau of statistics:

Questions

| | ($ Million) |
|---|---|
| 1957 | 77.7 |
| 1958 | 34.8 |
| 1959 | 37.0 |
| 1960 | 67.6 |
| 1961 | 115.0 |
| 1962 | 89.2 |

USE OF GRAIN ELEVATOR, BAIE COMEAU, QUE.

Question No. 1,314—Mr. Smith:

Have all necessary steps been taken to ensure that the maximum facilities of the Cargill Grain Company elevator at Baie Comeau will be available for the shipment of Canadian grain to Russia and other European countries and, if so, what were such steps, and on what date were they taken?

Answer: The Cargill Grain Company elevator at Baie Comeau has a licensed capacity of 12,898,000 bushels. They are licensed to use 40 per cent or approximately the capacity for five million bushels to store foreign grain. The remaining capacity of over seven million bushels is available for the handling of Canadian grain.

To date this has proved ample capacity to discharge the Cargill Grain Company's commitments as agents of the Canadian wheat board in the movement of grain under the Canada-U.S.S.R. trade agreement.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD OFFICE, NEW GLASGOW, N.S.

Question No. 1,333—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the government to close the national film board office at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia and, if so, when will this action be carried out?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am advised by the national film board that it is not the intention of the board to close its office at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

LANGUAGE PROGRAMS ON C.B.C.

Question No. 1,339—Mr. Howard:

1. Is there a program on the English language section of the C.B.C. which consists of lessons in the French language and, if so, what is the cost of operating such a program, and if there is not such a program, what is the reason therefor?

2. Is there a program on the French language section of the C.B.C. which consists of lessons in English and, if so, what is the cost of operating such a program, and if there is not such a program, what is the reason therefor?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Yes, both radio and television services carry programs which seek to instruct English speaking Canadians in the French language.

National English television network: "Chez Hélène", for pre-school age children, a quarter hour program five days a week, now in its fifth season. "Speaking French", for adults, a weekly half hour program at Sunday mid-day returns for its fourth year January 1964.

National English radio network: "Time for French", for adults, a weekly half hour program returns Saturday, November 2.

Atlantic region school broadcasts (radio): "Parlons Français", a weekly program of conversational French for students grades 5-9, to four Atlantic provinces.

Newfoundland school broadcasts (radio): "French for Beginners", weekly "Junior French", weekly.

Nova Scotia school broadcasts (T.V.): "Cours Élémentaire", for beginners, twice weekly. "Cours Première", for more advanced students, twice weekly.

Prairie region school broadcasts (radio): "French for Beginners" and "Le Quart D'Heure Français"—a total of 13 weekly programs for Manitoba schools. "Ici Le Francais"—weekly to Saskatchewan schools.

Edmonton (T.V.): "En France comme si vous y étiez", weekly series on CBXT.

B.C. school broadcasts (radio): "First French", elementary French, weekly. "Ecoutez", intermediate French, weekly commencing January 6, 1964.

Vancouver (T.V.): "En France Comme Si Vous Y Étiez", weekly series on CBUT.

2. Yes. The C.B.C. radio network carries a weekly series of school broadcasts of lessons in the English language prepared in collaboration with the Quebec department of youth and the Quebec department of education. It is designed for grade 5 and 6 public school students.

1. and 2. It is difficult to give a specific answer as to costs since, in the case of the school broadcasts, these are shared with the various provincial departments of education. The latter provide the performers, writers, etc., and the C.B.C. provides the production staff, facilities and the distribution to the C.B.C. and affiliated stations.

RECOMMENDATION OF COMMISSION ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Question No. 1,347—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with respect to the recommendations of the commission of inquiry, appointed on June 25, 1959, to inquire generally into all matters arising out of unfulfilled provisions of treaties 8 and 11 as they applied to Indians of the Mackenzie district?

Mr. Munro: The recommendations of the committee of inquiry were studied by an interdepartmental committee and the report of this committee is being reviewed.

CANADIAN CHINESE DETAINED IN HONG KONG

Question No. 1,348—Mr. Howard:

How many, if any, Canadian citizens of Chinese origin are being kept in Hong Kong and not allowed to return to Canada because their passports and other similar documents were taken from them during the course of, or arising out of, the investigation into Chinese immigration matters which was announced in Parliament on January 14, 1960?

Mr. Munro: None.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 1,360—Mr. Mather:

What is the estimated date for completion of Vancouver international airport facilities?

Mr. McIlraith: It is assumed this question refers to the proposed new terminal building. Given continuing good weather and no delays arising out of labour difficulties, completion should take about three years from the time of start of construction.

RICHARD HACHEY, MONTREAL—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIM

Question No. 1,367—Mr. Douglas:

Have representations been received from Mr. Richard Hachey of 2102 Vauquelin street, Montreal, concerning entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits and, if so, what is the nature of these representations, and what answer has been made?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes. Mr. Hachey's representations were in two parts: (1) because he had been deprived of the dependency rate of benefit following the discovery that his wife, whom he had claimed as a dependant, did not qualify as such under the legislation, and (2) having failed to notify his local office of a change of address, benefit was suspended until it was determined if he had fulfilled the availability requirements of the legislation.

With regard to the first matter, he was requested to apply for the dependency rate in respect of his three year old child in place of his wife. This he failed to do.

Respecting the second matter, an investigation disclosed that Mr. Hachey had continued to fulfil the availability requirements despite his change of address, whereupon the suspension of benefit was lifted and all benefit due paid to him on the 10th of October.

EXTENSION OF DOCKING FACILITIES, B.C.

Question No. 1,381—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to providing added docking facilities at Fraser river and Surrey docks in line with the increased export of grain from Pacific ports?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not according to any information in the possession of the government.

CONSTRUCTION OF AIRPORT, MALARTIC, QUE.

Question No. 1,391—Mr. Caouette:

Has the government received any representations in connection with the building of an airport at Malartic, in the county of Villeneuve and, if so, what consideration is being given to these representations?

Mr. McIlraith: On September 17, 1958, the Malartic chamber of commerce asked for advice and information for use in the development of a municipal airport. On May 21, 1959 officials of the department visited Malartic and inspected a number of suggested airport sites and one of these was subsequently recommended to the chamber of commerce for development. The chamber was informed that if any further technical assistance was required it would be provided upon request.

On March 12, 1962, a delegation from Malartic, including the mayor, the president of the Malartic chamber of commerce and local residents presented a brief to officials of the department which was based on the premise that the Val d'Or airport, operated by the Royal Canadian Air Force would be closed to civil aircraft. The delegation was informed that there was no current question of closing the airport to civil traffic in the foreseeable future.

As long as the Val d'Or airport, which was developed at federal expense, remains available for civil use, an airport at Malartic would be considered a local airport for which the prime responsibility for the development would rest with the town of Malartic. As the town has not requested cost sharing assistance for such an airport, no consideration is now being given to the matter.

R.C.M.P. PHOTOGRAPHS OF POLITICAL SPEAKERS

Question No. 1,412—Mr. Caouette:

1. Do the Royal Canadian Mounted Police photograph speakers at political rallies and, if so, were such photographs taken at the demonstration against nuclear weapons in Quebec city on October 12 last?

2. Was the Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, photographed by the R.C.M.P. when he spoke about nuclear weapons in the past?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. No.

2. No.

SNYE CROSSING, FORT SIMPSON, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,414—Mr. Rheaume:

1. What is the total amount that has been spent from 1953 to the present on maintenance and repair to the Snye crossing from the island to the mainland at Fort Simpson, N.W.T.?

2. For each year since 1953 to the present, how many days was this crossing impassable?

3. What are the estimated annual expenditures to maintain and repair this crossing for 1963-64 and 1964-65?

4. What companies or agencies carried out the work for each year since 1953, and by whom was such work planned and supervised?

Answer: 1. $56,900.

2. No records kept; estimates: vehicle traffic: 50 days per year average. Boat and pedestrian traffic: 10 days per year average.

3. 1963-64: $3,600; 1964-65: probably about the same amount.

DRUMHELLER, ALTA.—CLASSIFICATION AS DEPRESSED AREA

Question No. 1,417—Mr. Woolliams:

1. Was the city of Drumheller classified as a depressed area so that industry would enjoy the special depreciation and tax benefits?

2. Was the area removed from that category and, if so, for what reason?

3. What is the unemployment figure to date as set out by the national employment office at Drumheller?

4. How many people are unemployed in East Coulee, Wayne, Nacmine, Midlandvale, and Newcastle that are not receiving unemployment insurance benefits?

5. How much coal was mined in this area in 1961, in the months of August and September, 1961?

6. How much coal was mined in this area in 1962, in the months of August and September, 1962?

7. How much coal was mined in this area to date in 1963, in the months of August and September, 1963?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The locality of Drumheller, including local improvement district No. 42, is included in the special capital cost allowance program for new products. Applications for accelerated capital cost allowances in respect of new depreciable property will continue to be received under this program until December 31, 1963, when the program expires. Under the proposed measures of tax and depreciation benefits to new manufacturing and processing enterprises in designated areas, the Drumheller national employment service local office area has not met the criteria of unemployment and slow economic growth in order to qualify as a designated area.

2. See answer to question 1.

3. The total of persons registered for employment with the Drumheller office of the national employment service on September 30, the latest date for which data are available, was 197.

4. Data are not available.

5, 6 and 7.

REMOVAL OF STRONTIUM 90 FROM MILK

Question No. 1,439—Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

In view of the four and five fold increase of strontium 90 in milk reported by the Department of National Health and Welfare, has the department any plans to inaugurate in conjunction with the provinces, a program to remove strontium 90 from milk by utilizing the method successfully employed elsewhere?

Miss LaMarsh: No. While there has been a substantial increase in the concentration of strontium 90 in milk, this was expected as a result of the extensive atmospheric weapons testing programs conducted in 1961 and 1962. It is also expected that peak levels have already or will occur very shortly and that thereafter the concentration will decrease substantially again. The department has constantly emphasized the importance, in assessing the significance to health, of comparing reference standards with averages for extended periods, such as a year, rather than with individual values. On this basis values reported to date are well within acceptable limits.

*HOUSE CONSTRUCTION IN WINTER MONTHS

Question No. 1,443—Mr. Vincent:

1. Does the program to encourage house construction in the winter months provide for the payment of (a) $500 in the case of a single-dwelling unit, and (b) $2,000 in the case of a four dwelling unit?

2. Does the payment mentioned in (b) above apply to five and six dwelling units and, if not, for what reasons?

Mr. Byrne: 1. (a) Yes. (b) Yes.

2. No. The incentive applies only to residential structures containing not more than four self contained units since construction of large multiple housing accommodation is normally carried out throughout the year.

*RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 1,446—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

Did the Secretary of State recently receive or take notice of a letter from eight federal government employees alleging racial discrimination in the federal civil service, and, if so, (a) has the Secretary of State investigated the allegations and (b) what steps are being taken with respect to such representations?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, a search has been made of the departmental files and the civil service commission files, and no such letter appears to have been received.

QUOTAS ON IMPORTS FROM CERTAIN COUNTRIES

Question No. 1,448—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government concluded the negotiations mentioned by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in Hansard, May 23, 1963, concerning the persuading of Portugal, Israel, Hong Kong and Formosa to accept quotas on certain exports to Canada?
2. If so, in the case of each country, what is the nature and size of each quota, and what goods and/or commodities are covered by the quota?
3. How long will such quotas be in effect?
4. How will exports to Canada under these quotas compare with exports to Canada prior to such quotas?

Mr. Benson: 1. Yes.

2. See table following.

3. The present understandings relate to the periods shown in the answer to No. 2.

4. See answer to No. 2.

Restraints on exports of certain products to Canada

Estimates have been made for imports from the Republic of China in those cases where the import statistics published by the dominion bureau of statistics give insufficient detail.

PUBLICATIONS—RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Question No. 1,451—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government received requests and representations for action to implement the recommendations of the royal commission on publications?

2. If so, how many such requests and representations were received and from whom were they received, giving date, name and, briefly, the nature of the request or representation?

Mr. Pearson: 1. Yes.

2. Three. 22 April 1963, Mr. Hugh MacLennan, 1535 Summerhill ave., Montreal 25, P.Q. 18 Sept. 1963, Mr. F. B. Walker, assistant publisher, Family Herald, 245, St. James st. West, Montreal 1, P.Q. 30 Sept. 1963, Mr. C. H. Thorn, managing director, Modern Homes & Publications, Ltd. 96 Kingsway, Vancouver, B. C.

Urging implementation of the report.

PERSONNEL HOUSING, JOINT TRACKING STATION

Question No. 1,454—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Have representations been received by the Canadian government from the government of the United States or any branch thereof for the construction of houses to be used by personnel associated with the joint Nimbus satellite tracking station project?

2. Has a decision been reached, and will Canada provide the housing required?

3. What is the scheduled date of construction of the Nimbus satellite tracking station project?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. No.

2. N/A.

3. There is no scheduled date of construction. The United States national aeronautics and space administration has advised the Department of Transport that the whole Nimbus project, of which the proposed tracking station at Cape Breton is a part, is being restudied in the United States and the Department of Transport have been asked to take no further action until the restudy has been completed.

SALES OF CANADIAN SECURITIES TO U.S. INVESTORS

Question No. 1,455—Mr. Scott:

1. In each month since President Kennedy's announcement of the equalization tax, what have been the total sales of (a) Canadian bonds, and (b) Canadian stocks to American investors, and how do these figures compare with the same figures in 1962?

2. Has the Canadian government made representations to the government of the United States of America to have the retroactive feature removed and, if so, what were the responses, if any, received to such representations?

Mr. Benson: 1. Complete figures for total sales of Canadian bonds and Canadian stocks to American investors are not yet available for any calendar month since President Kennedy's announcement of the proposed interest equalization tax.

2. The nature of the discussions between the Canadian and the U.S. governments concerning the imposition of the proposed interest equalization tax and the results of these discussions were revealed in an agreed press release issued on July 21, 1963, as follows:

Ottawa, July 21, 1963: The Honourable Walter L. Gordon, Minister of Finance, issued this afternoon the following statement which had been agreed between representatives of Canada and United States meeting in Washington during the weekend:

"Representatives of Canada and the United States met during the week end to appraise the impact on the Canadian financial markets of the proposed United States 'interest equalization tax'.

The two governments recognized the need for effective action to improve the balance of payments position of both countries and are both equally determined that such action shall not impair the intimate economic relationships between the two countries, nor impede the growth essential for both economies.

For many years the capital markets of the two countries have been closely interconnected, and United States exports of capital to Canada have financed a substantial portion of the Canadian current account deficit with the U.S. This need continues. A portion of these flows must be supplied through the sale of new issues of Canadian securities in American markets. U.S. officials had considered that ample flows for these needs would continue under the proposed 'interest equalization tax'. However, Canadian representatives stated that this would require a very substantial rise in the entire Canadian interest rate structure. It was recognized by both governments that such a development would be undesirable in present economic circumstances.

In the light of this situation U.S. officials agreed that the draft legislation to be submitted to the congress would include a provision authorizing a procedure under which the President could modify the application of the tax by the establishment from time to time of exemptions, which he could make either unlimited or limited in amount. The President would thus have the flexibility to permit tax free purchases of new issues needed to maintain the unimpeded flow of trade and payments between the two countries, and to take care of exceptional situations that might arise in the case of other countries. U.S. officials made clear that this did not modify their proposals regarding the taxation of transactions in outstanding securiites; over the past year such transactions between Canada and the U.S. have not been a major factor.

The Canadian authorities stated that it would not be the desire or intention of Canada to increase her foreign exchange reserves through the proceeds of borrowings in the United States, and it is the hope and expectation of both governments that by maintaining close consultation it will prove possible in practice to have an unlimited exemption for Canada without adverse effect on the United States.

It was agreed that active consultations would continue to strengthen the close economic relations between the two countries and at the same time facilitate measures for making the maximum practicable contributions to economic expansion and the strength and stability of both currencies."

The conversations which were conducted in the United States treasury on Saturday and Sunday included for Canada Ambassador Charles S. A. Ritchie, Louis Raminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, Wynne Plumptre, assistant deputy minister of finance, and A. E. Ritchie, assistant under secretary of state for external affairs; for the United States Douglas Dillon, secretary of the treasury, George Ball, under secretary of state, Robert V. Roosa, under secretary of the treasury for monetary affairs, and Stanley Surrey, assistant secretary of the treasury.

CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITION 63-P-ID-68

Question No. 1,456—Mr. Bell:

Was civil service promotional competition No. 63-P-ID-68 for branch administrative officers in the Department of Industry open only to employees appointed by the civil service commission and, if so, why were these appointments for a new department not made available to other government employees such as those employed in crown corporations?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have been given the following answer by the civil service commission:

Yes. This closed competition was open only to employees appointed by the civil service commission. Before conducting a closed competition the commission, pursuant to section 34 of the act, is required to determine the division or branch of the public service and the class or grade of position, if any, in which prospective candidates must be employed in order to be eligible for appointment. When determining the area of this competition the commission based its decision on previous experience, which indicated that the response should be sufficient if it were restricted to employees who have been appointed by the civil service commission, and on the need for filling these new positions at the earliest possible date.

BANK STATISTICS

Question No. 1,469—Mr. Caouette:

1. What was the value of goods and services produced for each of the last five years?

2. What was the actual cash in the hands of the chartered banks of Canada for each of the last five years?

3. What was the amount of the bank notes of the Bank of Canada in circulation for each of the last five years?

4. What was the amount of the deposit liabilities of the chartered banks for each of the last five years?

5. What was the amount of the general loans made by the chartered banks for each of the last five years?

6. What was the total paid up capital of the chartered banks for each of the last five years?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Gross national product (millions of dollars): 1958, 36,048; 1959, 38,430; 1960, 39,437; 1961, 40,511; 1962, 43,646.

2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. The figures requested appear in the monthly statement of assets and liabilities of the chartered banks published by the Department of Finance and in the monthly statistical summary published by the Bank of Canada.

R.C.A.F. TRAVEL EXPENSE CLAIMS

Question No. 1,471—Mr. Matheson:

1. Are officers of transport command of the Royal Canadian Air Force still subject to the detailed rules with respect to control and review of travel expense claims as criticized on page 166 of volume II of the Glassco commission report and, if so, what specific information is presently required under treasury board rules as defined by the comptroller of the treasury's office in connection with hotel and other travel expense claims?

2. Has the Royal Canadian Air Force received complaints to the effect (a) that such a method of presenting claims is time consuming and uneconomical, and (b) that in certain foreign countries R.C.A.F. officers are compelled to seek accommodation unbefitting a serving officer of Canada, if they seek to come within the scale allowed by treasury board officials?

3. If the answer to (1) is yes, is the government giving consideration to making control of R.C.A.F. travel expense claims a departmental responsibility?

Answer: 1. Officers of transport command are subject to the same directions as all officers of the forces in respect to travel claims. These directions are set out in the Queen's regulations for the Royal Canadian Air Force. Normally the costs of accommodation and meals are covered by a per diem rate. Where this rate is unsuitable the minister may authorize a higher per diem rate or actual expenses for accommodation and meals in accordance with the public service travel regulations. In this case receipts for accommodation must be submitted and costs of meals must be listed. No change has been made since publication of part II of the Glassco commission report.

2. (a) Yes, as to the necessity of seeking headquarters approval of special rates or actual expenses.

(b) No.

3. Subject to the directions contained in the Queen's regulations this is now a departmental responsibility. A review is being made of the travel regulations applicable to the public service under the direction of the treasury board and when this is completed, the regulations applicable to the forces will be examined in the light of any changes made in the public service regulations.

COST OF MENTAL ILLNESS

Question No. 1,477—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the direct cost of mental illness in Canada for the last year for which figures are available including hospital care, medical care, and medication?

2. What is the indirect cost of mental illness in Canada for the last year for which figures are available as a result of loss of earnings by patients in hospitals and patients from industry?

Answer: 1. The cost of medical care distinct from medical care given in hospitals and of medication distinct from medication given in hospitals for mental illness is not known.

The cost of hospital care given to mental in patients has been estimated at $158,469,000 for 1961. Of this total, $132,206,000 was reported to d.b.s.; the remaining $26,263,000 was estimated to take account both of the costs of public mental hospitals failing to report expenditure data to d.b.s. and of the costs of other hospitals giving (some) mental care but not asked to supply d.b.s. with (separate) financial figures. This latter group is comprised of private mental hospitals, federal psychiatric units and public hospital psychiatric units. The estimates in all cases were based on the days of in patient care provided to mental cases by the institutions in question.

2. Not available.

BUTTER CONVERTED TO BUTTER OIL

Question No. 1,490—Mr. Peters:

1. How much butter, in pounds, has been converted into butter oils during the years 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962?

2. What sales have been made for the commodity butter oil, for each of the above years, and at what price?

3. For what purpose was the butter oil purchased?

Mr. Hays: 1. 1957, nil; 1958, nil; 1959, nil; 1960, 20,581,225 pounds; 1961, 51,358,428 pounds; 1962, 33,035,777 pounds.

2. 1957, nil; 1958, nil; 1959, nil; 1960, 986,485 pounds at 78½ cents per pound, basis Toronto and Montreal; 1961, 709,300 pounds at 78½ cents per pound, basis Toronto and Montreal; 1962, 353,437 pounds at 65 cents per pound, basis Toronto and Montreal.

3. For domestic manufacturing purposes.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR GRAIN EXCHANGES

Question No. 1,491—Mr. Langlois:

1. What responsibility, if any, has the federal government for the licensing or control of operations of the (a) Winnipeg grain exchange (b) Montreal grain exchange, and (c) Toronto grain exchange?

2. What are the functions of the above mentioned grain exchanges and, is there any federal control over prices set by these exchanges?

3. If federally licensed, on what date did each exchange commence operation, and what agency granted the license?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1, 2 and 3. The federal government has no responsibility in relation to the operations of grain exchanges.

PLANS TO ENLARGE OR ESTABLISH NEW MEDICAL COLLEGES

Question No. 1,494—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government discussing with the provincial governments, the medical colleges and the Canadian medical association the advisability of (a) increasing the size of the present medical colleges, or (b) the establishment of new medical colleges with a view to making it possible to meet Canadian needs for doctors in the 1970's as a result of the rapidly increasing Canadian population?

Miss LaMarsh: Several of the briefs presented to the royal commission on health services dealt with the need for the training of health personnel and the royal commission has instituted a number of studies with this in mind. It is expected that the royal commission will be making recommendations in this regard to which the government will give careful consideration.

AUDIT CLERKS, NATIONAL REVENUE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,497—Mr. Laprise:

How many audit clerks are there to check income tax returns in the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue (a) in Canada (b) in the province of Quebec, (c) in the Rouyn office?

[Translation]

Mr. Garland: The question presumedly has to do with assessors since there are no audit clerks in the taxation division.

(a) At present, the division has 2,254 assessors; (b) 430 in the province of Quebec; (c) 13 in the Rouyn office.

*AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Question No. 1,499—Mr. Fisher:

1. At what stage is the Auditor General's report for the year ending March 31, 1963?

2. Has the Minister of National Revenue or the deputy minister (taxation) been shown a draft or any portion of a draft of this particular year?

3. If so, under what authority (statute, etc.) was the Auditor General empowered to do this?

4. Does the Auditor General consider it his responsibility to inform a department that it must or should collect revenue, including instructions on how it is to be done, or should he report such matters first to parliament?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the assistant auditor general that:

1. The first draft of the report has been considered by the Auditor General and his senior officers, and a second draft is now being given consideration.

2. No. (However, as in previous years, where it is deemed necessary in order to ensure factual correctness and that notice is being taken of all material facts, copies of some draft paragraphs will be shown, in confidence, to the deputy ministers or other senior officers of the departments concerned).

3. The practice of showing some draft paragraphs of the report, in confidence, to deputy ministers or other senior departmental officers is one of long standing, though not specifically provided by statute.

4. No, the Auditor General does not consider it his responsibility to inform a department that it must or should collect revenue, including instructions on how it is to be done. However, if in the course of the audit it is noted that a department has failed to take appropriate collection action, the Auditor General or one of his officers would bring this to the attention of the department, and request an explanation. In the light of the explanation given, the Auditor General would then decide whether this reporting responsibilities under section 70 of the Financial Administration Act required him to include reference to the matter in his next annual report to parliament.

CLOSING OF FILM BOARD OFFICE, NEW GLASGOW, N.S.

Question No. 1,509—Mr. MacEwan:

Has the government received a resolution from the New Glasgow area film council, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, asking that the national film board office at New Glasgow remain open, and not be closed in November and, if so, what action does the government intend to take in regard to this important matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am advised that the national film board has received such a resolution.

As already stated in reply to question No. 1,333, it is not the intention of the national film board to close its office at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

TAX EXEMPTION, CANADIAN ECONOMIC FOUNDATION

Question No. 1,513—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Was the Canadian economic foundation given the right to receive contributions which are deductible for tax purposes and, if so, on what date was the right granted?
2. What reasons were advanced by this organization to the minister in its request that it be granted such a right?
3. What were the government's reasons for granting such tax exemption status to the Canadian economic foundation?
4. What are the principal aims of the Canadian economic foundation and do they include participation in political activities?
5. Is the government reconsidering the tax exempt status of the Canadian economic foundation?

Mr. Garland: 1. The foundation was advised on January 30, 1963, that contributions would be deductible for tax purposes, subject to review from time to time.

2. The Canadian economic foundation was incorporated without share capital under the Dominion Companies Act by letters patent on March 8, 1962, the purpose of which is stated to be to conduct research and to inform the people of Canada generally in a better understanding of the proper relationship between government, business, industry and labour in Canada operating under a free competitive enterprise system.

[Mr. Benson.]

3. The application submitted by the foundation stated the work of the foundation was entirely educational, which is a charitable purpose in law.

4. To educate the public on how our economy works. The material submitted does not indicate participation in political activities.

5. Yes.

*MONTREAL OFFICE, PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER

Question No. 1,515—Mr. Pigeon:

1. What was the cost of providing for the office of the Minister of Public Works in Montreal?
2. What are the names, titles, functions, and working conditions of the personnel attached to the minister's office in Montreal?
3. Are these persons appointed by (a) the minister (b) the civil service commission?

[Translation]

Mr. Badanai: 1. $1,538.00.

2. Mr. Joseph A. E. Cournoyer-Morin, assistant private secretary, does the usual work associated with such a position, that is correspondence, interviews, etc. Mr. Pierre Dequoy, clerk grade 3, helps Mr. Cournoyer-Morin and supervises the office work. Miss Lucille Saint-Jacques, clerk grade 3, a receptionist, does some typing and office work. Miss J. Robitaille, part time stenographer, does secretarial work. All of them have the same working conditions as other civil servants.

3. By order-in-council.

CLINTON, ONT., POST OFFICE

Question No. 1,534—Mr. Cardiff:

Has the contract been let for the new post office at Clinton, Ontario, and, if so, (a) what is the contract price (b) what progress has been made, if any?

Mr. Badanai: No. (a) and (b) not applicable.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AGREEMENTS WITH AMERICAN STATES

Question No. 1,535—Mr. Dionne:

1. Are negotiations continuing with the four American states which have not yet signed agreements with respect to unemployment insurance?
2. Are any delays being experienced in such negotiations and, if so, what are the reasons for such delays?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. With Maine only. Efforts have been concentrated with Maine, because the largest number of Canadian woodsmen are employed in that state. New Hampshire requires an amendment to its legislation before it can enter into any agreement with Canada.

The movement of workers from Canada to Iowa and Alabama, and vice versa, is so small that reciprocal agreements with these two states would be of little practical value.

2. No.

Questions

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

Question No. 1,537—Mr. Thomas:

Will the government consider additional encouragement and stabilization for the sugar beet industry in Canada, with a view to (a) expanding our domestic production of sugar (b) creating more job opportunities in Canada (c) improving our external balance of payments?

Mr. Hays: At present the price of sugar beets grown in Canada is stabilized under the Agricultural Stabilization Act by a deficiency payment program. This program is based on the relationship between the average declared value of imported raw sugar and the price received by Canadian producers for the sugar in their beets and it is considered that the policy effectively protects Canadian producers against downward fluctuations in world sugar prices. The current level of support is 109 per cent of the base price which is the 10 year average price that Canadian producers have received for their beets. The support program and level is reviewed annually.

It is considered that current sugar prices should be adequate to provide for any reasonable and economic expansion of the domestic beet sugar industry.

REFUND CLAIMS FOR TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 1,539—Mr. Ricard:

From June 14, 1963 to October 26, 1963, following the change made to the tax rate on building materials from 11 per cent to 4 per cent, how many persons claimed refunds, and what was the total amount of these claims?

Mr. Garland: Information not available. Refund claims are not filed nor are they tabulated by the department according to commodities. Adjustments made by licensees in the course of business are recorded in their accounts and subject to audit but are not recorded as refunds by the department as they do not involve the filing of claims or payments from the consolidated revenue.

STAMP SALES AND COSTS

Question No. 1,542—Mr. Belanger:

1. What was the amount paid by Canadians for postal stamps of all denominations during the fiscal year 1962-63?
2. How much have these stamps cost the government of Canada or the Post Office Department?
3. To whom have the amounts mentioned in the preceding question been paid?

Mr. Denis: 1. $91,723,497.24.

2. $1,286,834.

3. To the Canadian Bank Note Company, Limited, Ottawa, the British American Bank Note Company, Limited, Ottawa and the International Envelope Limited, Montreal.

CO-OPERATION IN MANAGEMENT OF MONTREAL HARBOUR

Question No. 1,543—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the government intend to amend, in the near future, statutes relating to the Montreal harbour and the national harbours board, in order to promote increased co-operation between municipal, provincial and federal authorities in the management of the Montreal harbour?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: Since this is a question of government policy, any announcement in that connection would be made in the usual manner.

GROUPING OF TOURIST INDUSTRY AGENCIES

Question No. 1,548—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the government intend to examine the possibility of grouping under the authority of the Department of Industry all boards and departmental branches which deal with the tourist industry in Canada?

Mr. Drury: Under the provisions of the Department of Industry Act, the duties, powers and functions of the minister extend only to matters relating to manufacturing industries.

DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST BARNABE GARCIA

Question No. 1,555—Mr. Martineau:

1. Was a deportation order issued against Mr. Barnabe Garcia and, if so, for what reasons?
2. Did Mr. Garcia lodge an appeal against this order?

Mr. Munro: 1. Yes; under section 19(1)(e)(x) of the Immigration Act in that he came into Canada as a member of a crew and, without the approval of an immigration officer, remained in Canada after the departure of the vehicle on which he came to Canada.

2. Yes.

CHRYSLER COMPANY TENDER FOR STAKE TRUCKS

Question No. 1,556—Mr. Lambert:

1. With reference to the reply to question number 1,500, what were the names of the four firms who tendered, indicating the amount of each firm's tender?
2. In what way did the vehicles offered by the lowest tenderer not meet the requirements of the specifications?

Mr. Drury: 1. General Motors Products of Canada, Oshawa, Ontario., $3,130,017.20; Chrysler Canada Ltd., Windsor, Ontario., $3,130,600.20; Ford Motor Company of Canada Ltd., Oakville, Ontario, $3,275,252.00; International Harvester Company, Hamilton, Ontario, $3,595,543.80.

2. The vehicles offered by the lowest tenderer were rejected because of capacity deficiencies in the rear axle and rear springs.

Order for Return

SALARY OF C.B.C. PRESIDENT

Question No. 1,581—Mr. Martineau:

1. What is the present salary of the president of the C.B.C., Mr. Alphonse Ouimet?

2. How long has he been receiving this rate of salary?

3. When did he receive the last increase of salary?

4. Is consideration being given at the present time to increasing his salary?

5. Have any of the other executive officers of the C.B.C. recently received salary increases and, if so, which officers have received increases, giving in each case, the amounts of such increases?

6. Is consideration being given at the present time to increasing the rate of salaries being paid to its executive officers?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. $20,000.

2. Approximately 9 years.

3. July 1, 1954 as general manager.

4. Yes.

5 and 6. It has not been customary to require crown corporations to disclose information which is basically related to their administration and management. There is the additional consideration that disclosure of such information could adversely affect the C.B.C. in the competitive business in which it is engaged.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

FEDERAL CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS, MACKENZIE DISTRICT AND FORT SMITH AREA

Question No. 1,094—Mr. Rheaume:

1. What federal construction projects including roads are planned for the 1963-64 fiscal year in (a) Mackenzie district and (b) Fort Smith area?

2. How many of these projects, in each of the above areas, will be carried out by (a) Department of Public Works (b) Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and (c) private contractors?

Return tabled.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege involves starred question No. 1,349, which has been on the order paper for three weeks now. It asks a very simple question, namely what is to be the site of the Canadian world exhibition, when the decision was made to select this site, who made it, and under what authority. Surely a simple question such as that should be within the knowledge of whoever is the minister responsible, and it should have been answered by now.

Mr. Drury.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROCEDURE RESPECTING QUESTIONS ON ORDERS OF THE DAY

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members may recall that last Thursday I made certain tentative suggestions to the house by way of experiment. Today being Monday it would be very helpful to the Chair if I could have an expression of opinion or have those suggestions adopted for future conduct of business in the house.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps that could remain until just before the orders of the day are called and could be discussed then, because I think there will be some discussion on your suggestions.

Mr. Speaker: We have reached that point in our proceedings; I was about to call orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, the official opposition has looked into this matter, and while entirely in agreement with the objective cannot accept in their entirety the various suggestions which you made. There was no consultation with the Leader of the Opposition by the Speaker or anyone on his behalf before this matter was brought before the house by Your Honour.

We think that in general these are matters which should be considered by the committee and that an early report, an interim report, could be made by the committee respecting these various ideas and views expressed. The responsibility for maintaining the rules rests on the Speaker. Your Honour has set forth clearly and definitively the rules which apply to questions asked before the orders of the day. We had an experience with the last occupant of the august position you now occupy; he endeavoured to enforce the rules very strictly and definitely, and one just has to read what took place in order to have an answer.

Mention was made by Your Honour of the number of questions which were asked, and I suggested that Your Honour might go back into 1962 and 1961 and have placed on the record something of the experience of those two years. The other day I stated that the trend in recent years has been in the general direction of an increase in questions. Yesterday, casually reading one of the political quarterly reports of 1962, I came upon a reference to a book "Questions in Parliament" by Chester and Bowring, 1962. I did not expect that volume to be in the library, but it was. That shows the trend in the United Kingdom.

Because, Mr. Speaker, you placed on the record the numbers of questions asked, which might lead some to believe that this parliament acted differently from other parliaments, I looked up what had taken place in the United Kingdom since 1902, when a change was made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. gentleman give me the page?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should be glad to give the page numbers. I am glad the Secretary of State has this copy because apparently he did not read this particular portion during the statement he made recently. This is page 87, and here he will find set out the change that has taken place in the United Kingdom. We are shocked at the number of questions in this parliament. Well, making allowance for the fact that the United Kingdom house has 630 members, here is the general outline of developments there; the rest can be filled in later. In 1903, following the change in the rules, the number of starred questions was 2,544 and the number of unstarred questions was 110.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the right hon. gentleman has made an error. There were 1,992 unstarred questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, the record in 1902 was the record during the period when the changes were made in the rules. That is why I started in 1903. I have no objection to the 1902 figures. Let us go back to the year before that. In 1901 the total number of starred was 6,448. In 1902, up to May 5, the number was 2,917 and, after May 5, 2,415. Then the rules were changed. Let us now take the year 1950. The number of starred questions in 1950 in the British house was 7,971, and it rose all the way to 14,700. In 1959-60, the last date for which figures are available, the number of starred questions was 10,161 and the total number of all questions, starred and unstarred, ranged between 1950 and 1960 from 9,861 to 13,471.

This is a revealing situation. The reasons for the increase are set out at page 90. It says fluctuations of this character are to be expected in most forms of parliamentary activity. In part they reflect the political problems attracting the attention of members at different times and, in part, they reflect the size of the government's majority. It says that a vigorously led opposition facing a government with a small majority will try to harass ministers in all possible ways. That was the conclusion reached. In the United Kingdom, the question period is jealously guarded and zealously preserved. It has been described as the grand assize of the nation.

Now, sir, I come to your suggestions. I do not intend to go into them in great detail. A debate similar to the one which took place here when we were discussing the setting up of a committee occurred in the United Kingdom in 1959-60, at which time Mr. Butler proposed to reduce the number of oral questions which might be asked by any member on any one day from three to two. I should like to deal with the statement you made, Mr. Speaker. First there is the principle:

> The form of questions is governed by the terms of standing order 39, section 1, providing in part that in putting a question no argument or opinion is to be offered nor any facts stated, except so far as might be necessary to explain the question.

There would be no argument about that.

> 2. Questions should be offered only in connection with urgent and important matters of public concern when, because of immediacy, the regular procedure relating to questions cannot be utilized.

There is no question about that.

> 3. An explanation can be sought regarding the intention of the government, but not an explanation of opinion upon matters of policy.
> 4. Supplementary questions are matters of grace.

Well, Your Honour refers to Mr. Speaker Michener in that regard. I do not find that in the United Kingdom supplementary questions are in that position. After all, we do not follow the United Kingdom in every way in our parliamentary procedure, though we regularly quote May on that mother of parliaments.

Now, sir, we come to your own proposals:

> 1. In placing questions, hon. members seeking information from ministers will be expected to adhere to the rules governing questions as enunciated by my predecessors and as set forth—

And so on. To this I give 100 per cent support, because questions must be within the rules.

> 2. No more than two supplementary questions, which must be genuine supplementary questions and which, I remind hon. members, are matters of grace, might be asked.

I think this is one part of your recommendations which could go to the committee.

> I would take it upon myself to select questioners in rough ratio to the number of hon. members comprising any one body in the house.

What does that mean? It means that the Liberal party would have 15 minutes and we would have 11 minutes. Sir, the 30 minutes would be used up very quickly if you proceeded on that basis to allocate the time during which members of the parties might ask questions, and the question period would become a simple routine. If members supporting the government started in to ask questions and you called on them in proportion to the total membership of the house, the opposition would find itself in a position where its rights had been greatly curtailed.

> No more than 30 minutes would be allowed to elapse from the time on the clock when the first question was asked.

I mentioned the other day that I thought we should be able to cover the most important questions in 30 minutes, but it would all depend on whether they were answered. It would also depend on whether Your Honour was allocating the questions on the basis set out in paragraph 3. In the United Kingdom, where there is a restriction on the right to ask questions which come within the rules, if a member is not satisfied with the answer he gets from the government he has a recourse. But you, sir, in setting forth your plan, say in effect that questions of privilege or points of order cannot be raised during the 30 minutes. On one hand we have a rule that points of order or questions or privilege must be raised immediately; on the other hand, you suggest the substitution of a new formula of procedure.

We want to co-operate fully, but if there were to be any limitation there would have to be a change made so there would not be an automatic adjournment of the house at ten o'clock at night. Whenever a member of the U.K. parliament finds that his question is not properly answered, or not satisfactorily dealt with, he has the right to rise and announce that at the end of the day's sitting he intends to raise the subject. If the time is limited to 30 minutes and the right to raise points of order or privilege is denied, I submit with the greatest deference that a change would have to be made so that we would not be at the mercy of the government in the discharge of our responsibilities. In these circumstances this part of your suggestion should, I think, go to the committee.

Your Honour suggests that though points of order or questions of privilege would not be allowed with respect to any ruling of the Chair, any member who felt himself seriously aggrieved might be permitted to raise a question of privilege about a decision of the Chair at the close of the question period. If that were the course followed, the half hour would not be the length of the question period, and there would be no effective saving of time in this regard.

For my part I offer you the fullest co-operation, Mr. Speaker. Personally I have tried, though I may not always have succeeded, to keep within the rules, as I know hon. members opposite have tried. I regard it as of primary importance in order to maintain the prestige of parliament that we do not abuse the rules.

This being so, I think the various suggestions Your Honour has made should go to the committee, except that one relating to the strong enforcement of the rules. If you follow that you will have my fullest co-operation in every way.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): It appears, Mr. Speaker, that you are not going to get any help from the Pharisees in driving the Pharisees out of this temple. In these circumstances there is not much point in my comments on behalf of my colleagues, or for this group. The former prime minister has indicated that he does not see eye to eye with your proposals; therefore there is little point in making further comments, except to say that we were prepared to co-operate with regard to the idea of the half hour, though we were somewhat concerned over the suggestion to call hon. members in proportion to the size of the groups to which they belong. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, that can go to the committee now.

We would like to assure you that we will give our co-operation, but we would also like to appeal to you not to be discouraged by the response you have had to your suggestions. If you should get tough and rough, as long as we see the elementary fairness that I think we will see we will be prepared to go along with that. I suggest that in view of what has been said, particularly by the previous speaker, the burden is now upon you, Mr. Speaker, and we will look forward to seeing you bear that burden.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the official opposition has gone to great lengths to point out what has been the practice in the parliament of the United Kingdom. I would say there is an ample record of other parliaments, equally based on the traditions of the mother of parliaments that we follow, where they have very successfully limited the question period in fairness to all members of the house, even where there are more than two parties.

I believe the proposition that you have made is a sound one and that we should give it a try. We will co-operate with you, sir, in carrying on the business of the all-important question period, recognizing that you have the responsibility for the effective and efficient functioning of the house. I believe we should also give our fullest support to the committee, because it is made up of members of all parties in the house, and that we should make every effort not only to co-operate but to work together to make our functioning here more effective.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, as I said Thursday when you brought forth your six-point suggestion, we are ready to co-operate to the fullest extent possible toward the application of the proposals you made last week.

However, we pointed out on that occasion how important it was that we got clear and accurate answers to our questions.

I heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) mention that this new procedure might cut down on the time of the members of his party and prevent them from asking some questions. In my view, many questions are asked that should not be asked, and this applies particularly to the Conservatives during the past several weeks.

Such a procedure would help improve the situation and shorten the time taken up by the question period.

We have been here for an hour and ten minutes already and the orders of the day have not yet been called.

Mr. Speaker, we believe the proposed thirty minutes would be sufficient, provided each group is recognized and has an opportunity to ask questions and the minister concerned answers accurately and does not beat around the bush, so that the house may be well informed when members ask questions.

As I said last Thursday, we are willing to give you our full support and to co-operate with you.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank you for your very sincere, if unsuccessful, effort to speed up and make more effective the work of the house during the current session.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just plain nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Order. At this time I should like to thank the Leader of the Opposition for his helpful remarks. Perhaps he is right. In matters of serious importance such as this perhaps the best method to follow is to make haste slowly. I do hope that the committee on procedure and reform will activate itself within the next few days; then we can consider the matter very carefully. With the co-operation of hon. members, shall we start with orders of the day?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with the successful coup in South Viet Nam. In order to ensure that the Canadian decision on recognition will not be a mere formality or an automatic following of other countries in this regard, is he able to say that such recognition when considered will not be done hastily but only after a full investigation of the surrounding circumstances leading up to the revolution?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the government will give the fullest consideration to the recognition of the new government when it is firmly established in South Viet Nam. The government does not have before it all the facts which it considers necessary to make such a decision, which will neither be made with undue haste nor lightly.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that we do not have any direct diplomatic or trade mission in Viet Nam and also because of the fact that there are a large number of Canadian personnel in the country, not only in Saigon but also in the rural areas, what information can the Secretary of State for External Affairs give us about the safety of Canadian nationals in Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman perhaps has not recalled, we have a representative on the international supervisory commission, a commission made up of representatives from Canada, India and Poland. We have received information from our representative. The events of last week in South Viet Nam were surrounded, of course, by great confusion. However, I can tell the house that according to information so far available, no Canadian lives were lost in the events during the last few days in South Viet Nam.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED WALKOUT OF LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a proper, brief and urgent question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister any information to give the house—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member was kind enough to send me a copy of this question. May I suggest to him that the first part of the question is in order and that the second paragraph be dropped.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I will willingly sacrifice the 30 seconds involved. Has the minister any information to give the house in respect of the reported walkout of longshoremen employed in the ports of British Columbia?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it appears that arising out of the settlement made last August it was agreed that certain retroactive wage payments should be made to the longshoremen. I am informed that the purpose of the walkout is to speed up the process of payment, and that at the present time Vancouver officers of the Department of Labour are close to the situation and will render any assistance possible in the resumption of work.

CHARGE AGAINST HAL BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO ARREST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice arising out of the answer he gave to a member's question on Thursday with reference to the charges laid against Banks. Is the minister sure that a charge has been laid against Banks? If the answer is yes, then I ask him why Banks was not arrested at that time, and why is he not out on bail according to legal practice.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that the first part of his question was very good, but the second part was completely out of order.

Mr. Woolliams: May I rephrase the question and put it in this way. Why was Banks not arrested at the time the charge was laid, and why was he not released on bail?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the part that the Speaker said was out of order, but the hon. member got it in. So far as the first part of the question is concerned, my statement in the house on Thursday was quite clear and it stands as it was made.

Mr. Woolliams: On a question of privilege, surely that is a proper question, and surely the House of Commons is entitled to know the answer. The Minister of Justice stated on Thursday that a proper charge involving an indictable offence had been laid against Hal Banks, and surely the House of Commons is entitled to know what the situation is. According to newspaper reports Banks has now disappeared, and surely we are entitled to know how he happened to disappear before he was arrested and why he was not brought before the bar of justice and a proper application made for bail, so that if he was to be at large he would be at large under a proper bail order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Woolliams: My hon. friends say "order". I do not know how many Speakers there are in this house or what colour they are, and so on.

Mr. Chevrier: I am just wondering whether this is a question or a speech by the hon. member for Bow River. I did say on Thursday that on the advice of counsel appointed to consider the evidence in connection with the Norris report, a charge had been laid against Hal Banks in Montreal for conspiracy to commit an assault occasioning bodily harm upon Captain Walsh. Now, this is a fact, whether my hon. friend likes it or not, it is a fact. I do not believe it is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice to give a blow by blow account to the house as to the intentions of the special prosecutor or the police so that those who may be charged will know exactly what the next blow is. I do not believe that is my responsibility, and I have no intention of doing so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question. Counsel was appointed in the person of Mr. Martineau. Who laid the information? What date was it laid? How was it that the prosecutor himself, specially appointed to look after this, had no knowledge of the laying of the charge?

Mr. Chevrier: In so far as the last part of the question is concerned, I cannot accept that as being factual; because I have before me a statement which appeared in the Toronto Star of November 2, quoting Mr. Martineau as follows:

> Today Mr. Martineau told the Star that all he said was, if the minister said a charge had been laid, it must be correct.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He said it had not been.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Surely the house is entitled to know whether a charge was laid, before whom the charge was laid, on what date the charge was laid, and whether or not a warrant for Mr. Banks' arrest has been issued.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of those questions have already been answered. The charge was laid in Montreal. It was laid against Mr. Banks. It was laid on October 23, and on October 31 search warrants were issued arising out of these charges. In so far as the last part of the question is concerned, I do not believe it is in the public interest to give that information.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I wanted to ask the Minister of Justice if a warrant has been issued for the arrest of Hal C. Banks, and whether any attempt was being made to apprehend him. Apparently, however, the minister takes the view that this information is not in the public interest. I think it is. I think it is necessary for the Canadian people to know this matter is being pursued.

Mr. Chevrier: I have indicated on two occasions now that I do not believe it is in the public interest to answer that question.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question. Surely it is in the public interest to ask why Banks was not arrested.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not in order to argue with a minister who declines to answer a question.

Mr. Woolliams: I was not arguing. I am asking a supplementary question; why Banks was not arrested?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, you have already declared that question out of order.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest respect, I should like to hear from the Chair why that question is out of order, except that the minister is hedging?

Mr. Speaker: I could take ten minutes to give detailed information to the hon. member, but I do not propose to hold up the house. If he would look at page 147, citation 171 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, he would find a complete and detailed answer.

[Later:]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. Would the minister know where Hal Banks is at this moment?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington South.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I will leave my question until tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Is it true that the government does not intend to give effect to the recommendations of the Norris report, because Mr. Banks is a friend of the Liberals at election time and a subscriber to their campaign funds?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is obviously out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Last Thursday the Minister of Justice stated that charges described as charges of assault, therefore criminal offences, would be laid against Hal Banks; how can the minister account for the fact that today it is not in the public interest to disclose whether a warrant for arrest was delivered against Hal Banks?

It is absolutely compulsory, when the Minister of Justice lodges a complaint for assault against an individual—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is repeating a similar question in another way, and is out of order.

REFUSAL OF U.S. WORKERS TO LOAD CANADIAN SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour if he is in a position to give a report to the house respecting the picketing of the unloading of Canadian ships in Chicago over the week end; whether there has been any communication with Washington in the last couple of days in this regard, and also whether there is co-operation on the part of Washington in preventing this injustice to Canadian ships.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not received a report directly with respect to this incident, which I shall attempt to have investigated as quickly as possible. With respect to representations to Washington, this is a matter for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I ask that minister whether in the last two days he has been in communication with the administration in Washington regarding the blocking of the unloading of two Canadian ships, the Col. Robert R. McCormick and the Mondoc at Chicago where longshoremen refused to cross a picket line.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have been in touch with our embassy in Washington, and I am waiting for a report on this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED CENSURE RESPECTING CERTAIN POLITICAL BROADCASTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Is the Secretary of State aware of an alleged censorship imposed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation upon certain political matters, separatism for instance, and does he intend to hold an inquiry into this matter? Would other matters be also censored by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on previous occasions in the house, it has never been the view of any government, I believe, that the government is an appropriate body to censor broadcasting, and I hope we never have government censorship of broadcasting in this country. Successive governments have appointed eminent citizens to be the governors and directors of the broadcasting corporation and the responsibility for what is broadcast is on their shoulders where it should be. In my view they should be held accountable to the whole of parliament and not to any part of parliament for the discharge of those functions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Does the Secretary of State intend to convene the sessional committee on broadcasting this year during this session?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe there is no sessional committee on broadcasting under our standing orders, and it would appear to me that there is so much work going on in committees at the present time that there would hardly be room for an additional committee at this session. But I do hope to have the approval of my colleagues to recommend that at the beginning of the next session we should have a select committee on broadcasting set up.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Since November 11 is just one week away, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Liberal member for Lotbiniere was stating government policy at Drummondville last Saturday night when he said that Canada should end the monarchy, as stated in the report in this morning's Montreal Gazette?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that this question is in order. If the hon. member were referring to a statement made by a cabinet minister then he would be entitled to ask the Prime Minister for an explanation, but not with regard to a statement by a private member.

SUGAR

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING REASON FOR PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if his attention has been drawn to a statement by Mr. Arthur E. Beeby, executive vice president of Salada Foods, to the effect that the recent series of increases in sugar prices cannot be explained on the basis of supply and demand; that there is no world sugar shortage, and that the rising cost of this staple food item on world food markets is not the result of demand but of speculators. I wonder if the minister would care to comment on that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member asking a question for information or is he giving it?

Mr. Howard: I am glad you asked me that, Mr. Speaker. I am asking a question for information. I do not have any high hopes of getting it from the minister in view of his previous answers to this question, but I will try.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I have not seen the statement, and in order to comment intelligently upon it I think I should be given the opportunity of seeing it.

In so far as the hon. member's statement is concerned that he has received no replies to questions put to me with reference to sugar, let me tell my hon. friend that this is a matter which falls under the jurisdiction of not one but several departments. In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, it falls under its jurisdiction in connection with the Combines Investigation Act. In so far as that act is concerned, there must be proof that there has been a combination or a merger to increase the price. There is in existence, as I indicated to my hon. friend some time ago, a court order in Montreal enjoining not only certain eastern sugar refineries but their directors as well from fixing an increase in prices. All that needs to be done is to invoke that order, provided it can be established that there has been a fixing of prices.

Mr. Howard: Is it not a fact that such enjoining or prohibiting orders are not as good as the paper they are written on, because they can be gotten around by any corporation which so desires?

Mr. Pickersgill: This is just a speech.

Mr. Howard: This is undoubtedly what has happened in this case.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not wish to be on my feet continuously giving lectures to the house. Statements should be short, concise and to the point. However, one way not to ask a question is to start with "Is it not a fact?"

WORLD FAIR

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF PRELIMINARY EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a rather brief question to the Minister of Public Works.

Is it the intention of the federal government to pay to Mr. Dupuy the $275,000 he has requested in a letter to the government in order to meet the expenses incurred, from September to October, for work done on the 1967 world fair site?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, all requests coming to us from the world fair authorities are considered and when it is possible to carry them out, we do so without delay. My hon. friend can be assured that the same policy will apply in this case as in all the others.

Mr. Pigeon: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Does the government intend to invite the 31 countries which are members of the international bureau of world fairs to hold their semi-annual meeting of May 1964 in Montreal instead of in Paris?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker will decide, not you. Take your time.

Mr. Speaker: This is a reasonably important and urgent matter. If the minister is in a position to answer, let him answer. If not, he can easily take it as notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, since I am responsible to the house for the world fair, I will pass on to the corporation my hon. friend's question and provide a reply as soon as I have one.

Mr. Pigeon: I wish to thank the Minister of Public Works.

[Text]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MEMBER FOR NOTRE DAME DE GRACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I should like to direct a question to—

Mr. Caouette: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. In order to maintain decorum in this house it is necessary that the Speaker recognize one member at a time. The hon. member for Acadia stood up first.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; it is always nice to be recognized, and now I should like to be heard.

I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of what happened in 1953, when the Liberal member for Qu'Appelle resigned because he had violated the spirit of the law, is it the Prime Minister's intention to ask for the resignation of the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace who, according to the Montreal Star—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is definitely out of order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I rise on a question of order. It is not out of order. It is a very urgent matter. The Montreal Star points out that according to the MacKay report the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace acted in a way detrimental to the taxpayers, the very people who elected him. I think he has no alternative but to resign.

Mr. Woolliams: They want to hide the facts.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the purpose of this question, and I am sure all hon. members will appreciate the situation in which I find myself in having to deal with this question and rule it out of order. However, according to all the parliamentary authorities this is not a matter concerning any activity inside the house, but is a matter which arises outside the house. We cannot go back into the past history of all hon. members at the present time. At the time these events took place the hon. member was not a member of parliament, and for this and several other reasons I must declare the question out of order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I would agree with that, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to point out that at that time he was representing the taxpayers on the city council, which is nearly as bad.

INDUSTRY

CONSIDERATION OF FRENCH CANADIANS IN DEPARTMENTAL APPOINTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry a question?

Since a high position recently became vacant in his department, could the minister state whether he intends to take into consideration the fact that some French Canadians have the required qualifications to fill that vacancy?

[Text]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRENTON, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ORDER FOR RAILWAY CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour if he is now in a position to answer the question I asked him on Monday last?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, and the requests that were contained in this communication will receive and are receiving careful consideration.

PUBLIC WORKS

REPORTED CONTRAVENTION OF ELECTION ACT BY MINISTER'S ASSISTANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is the minister aware that his executive assistant, the former member for Rimouski, is listed in sessional paper No. 1B, tabled by the Secretary of State, as having broken the law in that he failed to keep certain sections of the Canada Elections Act? Will the minister look into this before the Minister of Justice or the Secretary of State lays charges against him?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this. I am going to inquire and report later on.

SUPPLY

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

LACK OF MEASURES TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, at this time when there is an opportunity for the opposition to move a motion of non-confidence, I rise to bring your attention and that of all hon. members to a very serious matter. It may be that the succession of balmy days and unseasonable warm weather of the past few weeks has lulled some of the members of the treasury benches into ignoring this situation, and has dimmed their eyes to the fact that winter is just around the corner. As various members of the government go about their business in the bull ring, down in Washington, or possibly New Orleans and elsewhere—wherever duty calls them—it may be they have forgotten winter brings special problems in this country.

We have waited for quite a number of weeks, indeed months, to see what positive and definite action the government was preparing to take in respect of this matter. We are now in the first week of November, and the government has failed and is not prepared to deal with winter unemployment, or indeed with unemployment as a whole. It has become quite evident that since the government took office it has failed to deal effectively with this very serious problem. It has not brought forward any measure that would have an immediate effect upon winter unemployment, or unemployment as a whole.

During two successive election campaigns members of the government promised full employment. They promised this when they were in opposition also, and I refer first to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who said at Inkster, Manitoba, on February 25, 1963, that, "the biggest domestic issue is unemployment." Again, speaking at Montreal on March 6, 1963, he said:

> The first objective of a Liberal government would be to initiate a mass program of economic development to increase income, expand social progress and to reduce unemployment which he described as the most serious problem facing the country today.

Mr. Benidickson: It has gone down.

Mr. Starr: This was one of the prime concerns of the members who now occupy the treasury benches. The Minister of Finance, speaking on this subject at Windsor, Ontario, on February 28, 1963, said:

An average of 250,000 new jobs will be needed annually in the next four years. This figure is 2½ times greater than the average provided during each of the last six years.

Again on the same date, in the same city, he said:

One of the objectives of a Liberal government will be to straighten that (unemployment) out.

Some of those who now sit on the treasury benches do not seem to have looked at the subject in the same light, because we have the Minister of Trade and Commerce saying at Vancouver on February 25, 1963:

Canada can never eliminate unemployment.

He went on to say:

People who say that we are going to eliminate unemployment simply don't know the country.

I do not know whether they have since got together on this subject, but since then we have not heard a word from the members of the government, either inside or outside the house, respecting this serious and important matter. In other words, they have lost interest in the situation.

Someone, I think it was the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, interjected a moment ago that unemployment is down. That is right. According to the d.b.s. statistics there were 10,000 less unemployed in the month of September as compared with September last year, but in percentages this means that last year we had a figure of 3.9 per cent of the labour force unemployed, while this year it is 3.7 per cent.

Surely the members of the government are not taking credit for something they have not done anything about? Surely the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys will agree that whatever policies were instituted by the former government are now bearing fruit? It is very brazen on the part of the government to take credit for a very small decline in unemployment, particularly in the face of its inactivity and failure to do anything about unemployment. But we are not in the winter months yet. However, I will deal with that matter as we go along.

What has been done by the government to deal with winter unemployment in particular? First of all, the Minister of Labour made a statement to the house, reported on page 821 of Hansard for June 10 of this year. In the body of his statement he said:

The stimulation of employment and the reduction of unemployment are major problems which the government is determined to tackle vigorously.

Then he went on to show how the government intended to tackle those problems vigorously, and the minister set out some nine points. Let us look, Mr. Speaker, at the bright new ideas which this new Liberal government had for tackling winter unemployment. First, training of the unemployed. That was an unheard of policy. This had never happened before. They had forgotten that we undertook this policy in 1960 in co-operation with the provinces; that we increased our proportion of the cost from 50 to 75 per cent; and that the number of people trained in Canada had multiplied ten times since that time, owing to this policy. But the government said that this was a new and bold step toward eliminating unemployment, and also seasonal unemployment, and they were to do it by increasing from 75 per cent to 90 per cent the federal share.

Second, training of unemployed workers. That involved an amendment to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. This was again something new, bold and imaginative. All the government did was to take advantage of the facilities provided by the former government, which enabled new schools with a 139,000 student capacity to be built in the country to train young people.

Third, re-employment of older workers. The minister stated at the time that the program would be enlarged upon and all the details worked out. Well, Mr. Speaker, the details have been worked out now and those in charge of policing the matter are having a difficult time. The policing of those who hire workers aged 45 and over for a certain period of time, for which they are recompensed at $75 a month, is proving to be an almost insurmountable obstacle to overcome. This is nothing but a gimmick. It is a gimmick which probably will not work and which probably will not give benefits to those who actually need them.

Capital assistance for technical training facilities was the fourth idea. This has been going on since 1960, when we passed the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, which has had a great deal of success.

The fifth item was technological change and manpower development. We introduced a bill into this house which never passed owing to the obstruction of the Liberal party which was then in opposition. They have now done away with this bill and are going to tackle the problem through agreements with the provinces.

Another new gimmick was number six, the only new gimmick outside of the hiring of older workers, namely the promotion of winter house building. A $500 bonus is to be paid if a house is built during the month of December, through March, inclusive. Well, it remains to be seen how much employment this will bring about.

The seventh measure was supplementary federal government winter construction. What does that amount to? The amount of $7 million is being provided for this. How many new jobs will $7 million provide in this country of ours?

Unemployment Measures Lacking

Then number eight, the extension of the municipal winter works incentive program. Here is a program which the Liberals used to call peanuts, a bagatelle, when it was first introduced in the house. This is the program that stimulated over $1 billion worth of projects undertaken by municipalities. This is the program that, on average, in the last two years gave temporary employment during the winter months to some 150,000 Canadians each and every winter for the past two winters. The government say they are going to extend the winter works program. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said in Moncton, New Brunswick, on February 27 of this year, when he was vying for votes across Canada:

> A new Liberal government would create jobs where they are needed, through municipal winter works, and would have to step in and do more than what has been done in the past in this field.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what have the government done? They have increased the amount of money which could be paid to the municipalities for the construction of a municipal building from $50,000 maximum to $100,000. But what did the government do on the other hand? They cut down the program by six weeks. These are six of the most productive weeks for the municipalities, because of the heavy winters in certain parts of the country. They are six weeks which the municipalities begged for; the former government was willing to co-operate and granted them the six weeks, but now this government cuts them out. This is what they mean by extending the program. This is what they mean by providing more employment. This is not working in the right direction but in the wrong direction. By doing what they are doing they are curtailing the activity of those who might be usefully employed in the winter months. In fact, they are creating unemployment in the winter months as a result of their policy.

This, Mr. Speaker, is just about the gist of the whole program they have put before the people. They played it up, framed it and made a great hullabaloo about it, which actually means nothing more from the point of view of new jobs than that undertaken in the past. In fact, it may have the effect of curtailing the whole program.

The municipal loan fund was introduced in this house, and the government made a great play about it. As a matter of fact, when the Prime Minister spoke to the mayors and municipalities at the time, he said in as many words to the municipalities "Come and get it; we are going to give you $400 million". Well, Mr. Speaker, the provinces came to Ottawa and told the Prime Minister how they wanted to get it. It was not in the way the Prime Minister wanted to give it, but they told him how they wanted to get it, and they got it. This loan fund, as I mentioned earlier, has been built up as an instrument to create some 30,000 jobs a year. I say to you right now, Mr. Speaker, that this is nothing but a hoax, a hoax perpetrated with the aid of newspapers and periodicals and advertisements. However, this fund is good for the municipalities, not for the creation of any new jobs. This is going to give municipalities loans they would normally get in the conventional market, but for about one half of 1 per cent less than when they issue ordinary debentures. It also gives them an advantage because there is a forgiveness clause. But will they undertake any new projects as a result of this loan? I say that because of their financial structure, their financial position and the per capita debt they have now incurred, they are not prepared to undertake any new projects other than those that are absolutely necessary and which have been planned and are now on the planning boards. I understand the city of Toronto are going to take some $40 million for the construction of an addition to their subway system. This addition to the subway system is nothing new; it is a continuation of a plan which has been in existence for years, and they would have undertaken this work regardless whether this municipal loan fund had been put into effect by the government or not. They would have borrowed the money in the regular, conventional market from which they had borrowed previously. However, they are going to get it at a cheaper rate, and when they have completed the work in a certain period of time, under the forgiveness clause they will get back 25 per cent. But it will not create any more jobs than would have been created in any event. I venture to say that the whole $400 million will not provide more than a handful of new jobs.

The municipal winter works program has stimulated a great deal of work in the municipalities, and it is a program which they welcomed. This program has brought about over $1 billion worth of projects in the last five years, and as I mentioned earlier has provided jobs over a period of some 45 days average, to some 150,000 Canadians in the past two winters. But this program the government has taken upon itself to do away with to quite an extent; it has decided to curtail this activity.

From the statements made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) there is some doubt in the house whether the municipal loan fund will be available to municipalities who will participate in the municipal winter works incentive program. When each minister was questioned separately he gave a somewhat different answer, but when both were questioned in the house and the answers compared I notice that the Prime Minister had to come to their assistance and make up his mind about this policy. The Minister of Labour stated at that time that those who participated in the municipal winter works program will also be eligible to apply to the municipal loan fund to finance those projects.

The government has gone about this business of applying policies meant to provide employment—in essence our policies—in a way which makes them what is commonly known as Indian givers. Let us take the municipal winter works program as an example. They have increased the building amount from $50,000 to $100,000 but they have cut back the program by six weeks. In addition, they have placed a 4 per cent sales tax on the building materials which the municipalities are to use. They give with one hand and they take away with the other. Another example occurs to me in connection with housing. They offered a $500 bonus for each new structure completed in the winter months. At the same time they have imposed a sales tax on the building materials to be used in the construction of these houses. The same is true with regard to the plan for the expansion of our industry, in which everybody seems interested. In this field they have imposed a sales tax to be used on the machinery necessary before this expansion can take place. Instead of creating jobs hon. gentlemen opposite are doing their best, it seems, to curtail them—and it has all been done by careful planning and by design.

Let us consider another area in which the government has intervened. They adopted the provision we made relating to auto parts and made a few minor changes. Then they tried to sell the idea to the United States. They went to Washington. Not only were they unable to sell their own scheme but they almost succeeded in reversing the results which we had been able to achieve. In this connection, I should like to refer to the Financial Post of November 2 in which it is stated:

> Already the first auto parts export incentive program, based on duty remission on imported automatic transmissions and engines has raised exports markedly. The increase was from $26.7 millions last year to $35.3 millions this year.

This program was well on its way to success. It had been accepted by the automobile manufacturers both in Canada and in the United States. There were no protests from the government of the United States. There were no complaints. Why is it that this government, involving itself in exactly the same area as we had explored, should get itself—and not only itself, but Canada—into a great deal of trouble? I think the answer is plain. It is because the present government has been unable to produce a practical, common sense program which would appeal to business, to the provinces and to our neighbours in the United States. They still have the arrogant attitude of past Liberal governments—the attitude that no one knows except themselves. They still think there is no need for consultation, that all they need to do is to issue statements from Ottawa and everyone will jump. Well, everyone is not jumping these days. The provinces are jumping, it is true, but they are jumping in protest. It is time they began to retrace their steps and started it again in a common sense way, as should have been their approach in the first place.

I think the reason for the present situation is that the government are relying on theory and on textbook economic schemes which have little or no relation to reality. This shows everything they have touched. They have rushed in, and then they have backed out, leaving the mess lying around. Some of the most important things on the agenda have been left in abeyance. These are the promises which were made during election. It is true they want to give a little time to them, to show they intend to keep them. But in reality these schemes are unworkable. I say it is time this government got back to common sense in its administration. The provinces have the right to expect this. Business, industry and labour have the right to expect it. And, finally, the Canadian people have the right to expect it.

When we were in office we provided incentives to industry in order to stimulate production and create new jobs. If we compare the figures, it is evident that the things we did, the action we took, paid off. They gave a new impetus to the economy. I suggest the present government is still riding on the effects of that impetus and that it is brazen for any occupant of the treasury benches to say things are better as a result of anything they have done since they took office in May of this year. Nothing that has been tried by them has worked out. Nothing they have done has created new jobs.

Hon. gentlemen opposite criticized us for the measures we took to stimulate the economy and for the deficits we incurred to that end. I say, now, that this government is incurring even greater deficits. In doing so they have imposed, in the short space of time which has elapsed since May, two new taxes on the peole of this country—4 per cent on building materials and, now, 1 per cent on income tax. This has all been done in the space of six months since they took office, and despite it they will have the biggest deficit of any government since the first world war.

Let us turn, for a moment, to what are known as the slow growth areas. During our term of office certain measures were taken in this field and no complaints were received from any of the municipalities. I understand that the organization which will now be responsible for this situation is to have 35 divisions included within 10 branches designed to promote industry and develop a multitude of measures which are now being promoted by industry itself. I want to point out that as result of Liberal policies between 1945 and 1955 there is now close integration between the economies of Canada and of the United States. This being the case, the present government would be better advised to put forward plans and programs of a positive and constructive nature which would attract the support, or at least receive the acquiescence, of the United States rather than carry out the type of guerrilla warfare we are now carrying on in this country. I invite the government to look at the facts which they themselves were instrumental in creating. I would ask for a return to realism, a return to common sense in these matters.

Finally, in view of the fact that the policies which they have produced up to now, policies which they claim are meant to deal with unemployment in this country, are proving to be self-defeating, abortive and negative, and since they have failed to produce any effective policies to deal with winter unemployment in particular, I should like to move, seconded by my hon. friend from Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau):

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"This house regrets the failure of the government to introduce any effective new policies or programs to reduce substantially unemployment in Canada, and in particular to alleviate winter unemployment, so as to achieve the promised full employment as undertaken in the Liberal party election promises."

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): The amendment moved by the former minister of labour (Mr. Starr) is a familiar one. I imagine there has not been a year since the 'thirties when some want of confidence motion has not been produced in these general terms. As a consequence, this is a topic which has been well thrashed out and kicked around.

It seems to me the former minister of labour was trying to make a distinction along these lines: there has been some amelioration of the unemployment situation this summer, but if there is an improvement the government of which he was a member deserves much of the credit. However, he contends that the basic approach of the Liberal party since it took power has given no indication that they have any fundamental policy which is likely to solve the unemployment problem in the long term. It seems to me that if I am giving anything close to an accurate paraphrase of the gist of the hon. member's remarks he was, in effect, acknowledging that the government of which he was a member did not have a fundamental approach to this question of unemployment, and its solution. The call from almost everybody in politics, particularly at election time, is for the unemployment problem to be tackled. I suppose everyone, if they are in politics, has gone into a tremendous amount of detail in their thinking, whether it be their thinking about their own particular region or the country as a whole, in trying to respond to this particular problem.

It does not seem to me that it is soon enough to judge really whether some of the things introduced by the present government, or in the stage of being introduced, are going to have a marked effect. For example, the municipal loan fund has been called an utter hoax by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr). I think this is the kind of hyperbole you get in House of Commons debates. It may be an utter hoax, but in his analysis of it I have not really got from him just why it is an utter hoax and how he can be so positive it is an utter hoax. Yet I can appreciate his reason for making that statement. I can remember that when he was on the government side and introduced such things as the winter works program somewhat similar phrases were bandied about as to the contribution it was likely to make to the situation.

The problem that we see in the unemployment situation really relates to something to which the hon. member referred, namely whether you take a piece by piece approach to it or whether you try to make some all-out approach throwing all the resources of the government into the solution of this particular problem. It seems to me that our practice has been a very empirical one in Canada. We have tended to take a piece by piece approach. Perhaps in the light of how pieces of legislation relating to employment matters move through the House of Commons, this has seemed sensible.

One of the most disturbing things at the present time is the callousness that exists in the country about unemployment. If one happens to live in an area where there is a good situation, concern tends to disappear very quickly. I am disturbed at the present time over the situation in my own area. We have had an excellent summer. With the prospect of the big grain movement out of the west through our ports, and all the fillip that gives to the transportation industry there is a relative optimism that I think may be unfortunate in that it is going to cause us to set aside some of our concern and worry. In other words, the edge has been taken off something that we were very conscious of right up until last spring.

In many ways I think that this callousness is bred right into the kind of society we have today. When you have a lot of people with good incomes who are enjoying a high material standard of living and who can see progress in terms of their leisure time activities and the amount of money they have to spend on cottages, vacations and dress, it seems it is very easy to forget the growing number of people in Canada who are becoming almost unemployable. It is also very easy to forget those pockets in the country where it does not seem that any of the existing programs are really going to help.

We as a party have contended for a number of years in the house that some cabinet minister needed to accept the basic responsibility for employment measures that would meet the situation. It has been my argument that it should be the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen). I have always thought it regrettable that this portfolio has been considered a minor post and that the two big posts of power in the government relating to these matters have tended to be finance and trade and commerce.

We have an indication from the new government that the Department of Industry is to play a fundamental role in this field. Here again we are not exactly sure just how much stature that department is going to have, because while it is going to build up a new administrative framework of a very ambitious kind we also know that the Department of Labour is expanding its administration in order to meet other parts of the unemployment problem.

We really have no indication of the government's detailed plan in the field. This is particularly noticeable as far as we are concerned in terms of the analysis of unemployment that one finds made today by economists. They mark out structural unemployment, technological unemployment, cyclical unemployment, seasonal unemployment, short term unemployment, social unemployment, which has existed because of the difficulty in moving and the lack of mobility, and frictional unemployment. It does not really matter how you define or classify these various kinds of unemployment. The point is that it is a complex matter and that because of the regional nature of our economy and the winter season it has to be analysed as a complex. It seems to us that the response of the government needs to be co-ordinated and to be very clear, and under the direction of one person who is responsible and can answer to the house.

It is for this reason that we welcome the opportunity to have a discussion of the matter. We hope that as a result of the discussion we will have a statement, not from the Minister of Labour necessarily indicating perhaps that it is his responsibility but from the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) indicating where the government is planning to go. I think that the hon. member for Ontario and the official opposition may be expecting too much too soon in terms of measures to meet unemployment over all. I think that the suspicions he and his party have in their minds are naturally larger than ours partly because they have suffered so recently the frustration of losing power, but nevertheless this is very understandable when we consider the slow pace at which the government is moving with regard to the Canada development corporation.

We have had a disappearance of what seemed to be an indication in the thinking of the Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition of something that is intrinsic to our approach to the whole problem, namely that the government through welfare services has an opportunity and a responsibility to put the kind of floor or base under the economy, and to extend it, that will encourage the kind of spending that is one of the great factors in cutting down unemployment. One of the remarkable facts that the remaining free enterprisers, who are really basic and very few today, just ignore is that the tremendous swings we used to get in unemployment have largely disappeared. Every reputable analyst I have encountered gives a great deal of the credit to social security systems, and there is no indication that Canada has overspent on its social security. In fact, one of our arguments is that a medicare scheme would be a great stimulus to the economy. We feel that the welfare state is a state that gives a basic assurance that the neglected, the poor and those who are short of talents and opportunities will not only have some kind of a base but will be living in an economy that will have a guaranteed basic level. We have had no indication from the government, however, with regard to where the whole welfare program, such things as the pension plan and medicare, may fit into their total economic approach to the problems of today.

There is another aspect of the unemployment situation that would be funny if it were not so paradoxical. I can point this up best by the reaction to the announcement in connection with the frigate program. Everyone who comes from an area where there is a shipyard that likely would have prospered from the frigate program is very much concerned over the cancellation of the program. When there were indications that the air base in Prince Edward Island was going to be reduced or its whole role perhaps changed, people got worked up. The other day we had a notation here in a debate about the airport at Penhold, Alberta. From the taunts that were thrown at the hon. member for Red Deer by the prairie members of the official opposition, I would assume they were taking the attitude that somehow he was letting the side down by not going along with the plea that the Department of National Defence had a responsibility to extend its plans along these lines, because of the basic jobs that would be offered in the area, even though the program itself might not be defensible as a defence project.

Now, all of us tend to be guilty of this concern with our own area and the jobs there. But there is a fundamental difficulty that we have not had pointed out to us by the government in connection with this problem. Where does the government figure defence spending fits into its economic plan and its pursuit of full employment? It is quite apparent that defence spending gives an underpinning to the economy of the maritimes, and it is very important to the maritimes. The question is, if this defence spending is not effective in terms of defence systems, is it worth while continuing it just to keep that underpinning there? I have heard some dreadful stories about the efficiency of the naval shipyard in Halifax. I have heard some terrible stories about the situation on some of our defence bases, particularly in the maritimes, in terms of the actual work that is carried out. Yet, these bases and these jobs seem to be fundamental to the confidence of the economy in that part of the country.

It seems to me that this is a typical example of our shortsightedness. I think we need these jobs in the maritimes, we need the work for the people there. We should not make the determination on the basis of keeping bases going that might not be useful, but make the determination on the basis of the over-all responsibility of this federal government in this field.

Now, Mr. Speaker, everyone has had the experience, I think, if he has been a member of parliament for a few years, of the kind of pressures that come when the government, or any government agency, indicates that a number of employees are going to be laid off. I know that I get telegrams from Moncton, Transcona, my own constituency, Vancouver and the prairies, in connection with any layoffs on Canadian National Railways, a government agency. This points to the fact that so many people in Canada, including members of parliament, respond to this feeling that there is an onus on the government of Canada to keep this kind of thing going in order to keep the job situation from getting worse.

I point out to all hon. members that we are caught in a paradox when we do this kind of thing. When I respond to the word that 100 people have been laid off from the shops at Transcona, I want to know why. The fact of the matter is that we are not sure, and we should be sure, what the total responsibility is that the government will accept in matters such as this. I suggest that in the area of defence spending, particularly on bases, and through bases to the jobs they create, as well as government agencies such as the Canadian National Railways, through the direction of government spending on such things as Department of Transport ships and the kind of contracts the government can let for construction, we should have some kind of master plan to indicate that we are going to approach the matter for the good of the whole country rather than just try to meet each little area problem by some kind of short range solution.

One of the other facets of the unemployment situation for which I think the hon. member for Ontario deserves both credit and —I will not say blame, it is not quite blame —relates to the vocational and technical training program. Certainly, the former minister did not foresee what the consequences were going to be when he introduced this scheme which provided for a contribution towards the capital costs of vocational and technical schools across the country. I do not believe the government ever realized that there was going to be such a tremendous response as there was, particularly from the province of Ontario. As I recall the situation, more federal money was taken up in two years by the provinces than the minister had anticipated would be taken up in ten. No doubt this is a mistake in forecasting, but one of the consequences is that all across Canada, particularly in Ontario today, we have a new group of schools most of which are serving students of the secondary age. I say "age" here rather than secondary school field because they do have a concentration upon composite schools and upon shops.

In many of these schools there has been established an adult training plan to educate people both in the evening and during the day. This is supervised to a degree, or at least planned and encouraged by the national employment service in co-operation with the local school boards. But here again, Mr. Speaker, we have no clear-cut plan. No one really seems to know the efficacy of such training as is taking place. I have talked to a number of people who have taken welding.

We now seem to have a surfeit of welders in most parts of the country, largely because this is an easy course to teach. When I say "easy", I mean it is easy in terms of instructors and the cost of teaching. However, no one has come up and set any standards. They seem to vary from one region to another, one community to another and one province to another. There is no clear pattern right across the country as to how we are meeting the challenge of unemployment. These people, when they are taking the courses are provided with the equivalent of unemployment insurance. There is a good response, initially, to many of the courses.

However, we have no indication at all that they are really effective. We have no indication at all that the people who are trained really move off into the field for which they were trained. Many of us have a suspicion that many of the courses are a pleasant form of welfare, and we are not sure that this is a form of welfare that has, going along with it, the real objective that should be part of a program, that is to elevate the skills of our people across the whole country.

Here again, we have not any federal agency of education. It is certainly arguable, in view of the prejudice that exists on this subject, particularly in the province of Quebec, whether we are going to have one. Considering the fact it is recognized now that unemployment is linked with our educational system, it seems to me that we can gain two advantages out of an educational program. The first would be to lift the level of skills across the country, and the second thing we would get from it is the psychological satisfaction there would be on the part of those people who are part of the work force if they knew that the quality or calibre of the training they were going to get was likely to have some recognition right across the whole country. At the present time, nothing like this exists and as a consequence we cannot say there is any educational officer in the federal government who has a picture of what these training programs are doing. There is not any official in the federal government who can tell you what has been the consequence of this massive building program that was followed out under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

I have been involved, Mr. Speaker, in the problems of the railroad community. Over the past decade railway workers have gradually shifted and changed from being one of the most confident and optimistic groups of workers into one of the most pessimistic. They have tried, and are still trying, through their union organizations, to take a number of steps to give people greater security in the face of the technical changes that are occurring such as the master agency, centralized traffic control, terminal runthroughs, and a lot of other different phrases used by the railroads. I understand that on the northern line of the Canadian National they are running some freights with as many as 280 cars, that is 280 box cars. When you realize that a decade ago a 60 car train was quite a sizeable train, you can see the scale of the improvement in productivity, you can understand better the impact upon the railroad workers.

Well, in the past railroaders have tried to meet these things in their negotiations with the railways by a definite fund that will, as a result of the contributions of a certain small percentage, help those people who are separated from those jobs. But again this has been supposedly in effect for a year, and it has not been nailed down as yet. We happen to have a discussion going on at the present time in a microcosm of this house on what responsibilities the railways should bear in the separation of people from their employment after many years in it, and the responsibilities for retraining, movement of personnel, and the loss of real estate values to someone in a community whose whole economic basis disappears.

Again it seems to me the trade unions and the railways are approaching this realistically from the point of view of their own interests. The trade unions want very much that the railways should accept these responsibilities, and of course the railways are backing away from this and are saying this would discriminate against them as an industry, and that really the responsibility lies with the government. Of course basically this is what the trade unions come back to, because if the railways are not going to be forced into accepting the responsibility, then the unions say the government should.

If the government should accept the responsibility in this particular case, as I believe it should, then we need to fit that into a much larger picture. The unemployment that has been caused by technological change is the most disturbing of all to the Canadian people. I repeatedly find in areas such as pulp mills, in the woods, on the railways and in shipping, where technical improvements have cut out so many jobs, that the workmen who remain have lost confidence and begin to feel insecure. Those who lose out cannot really understand it.

I might mention I had a letter the other day from a man who said we could solve our unemployment problems by simply forcing the railways to run trains no longer than 40 box cars. This of course is in the spirit of the people who tried to break up looms early in the industrial revolution. Today we have a more enlightened response than that kind of suggestion, but we have not had any indication that the present government, or for that matter the previous government, has any real appreciation and any real plan for it.

In case my friends in the official opposition object to that, I will acknowledge there was a bill before us last session, which was not passed, but which set out to do something like this. However, I looked at it very closely, and it was a mystery. Indeed the foreshadowing of the debate we had on it was even more mysterious. It did not seem to me that the former government revealed it really had a clear analysis of the impact of technological change on the work force, nor that that particular measure would have done a great deal to meet the over-all problem.

We feel that this is the most crucial part of the unemployment problem today; that the rate of automation and technical change, which is going along almost imperceptibly, particularly in our primary, basic industries, is just tearing the heart out of the old job creation picture which we had. Small communities throughout the country are crying for secondary industry because they think it will work some magic, and each community is willing to outcompete another in terms of tax concessions, free land, and things like that in order to attract secondary industry.

The government has taken its own step through the creation of the Department of Industry, which might do something about this particular problem; but generally it has shown no indication that the problem of technological unemployment, usually caused by the introduction of labour saving and labour changing methods, is of great concern to it. This is the area in which we believe the lead should be given.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

That the amendment be amended by inserting therein, immediately after the words "winter unemployment", the following words:

"and also the failure of the government to propose any plans for the fundamental economic and social changes required to deal with the chronic and growing problem of unemployment caused by automation and technological change,"

So that the amendment as amended would then read:

This house regrets the failure of the government to introduce any effective new policies or programs to reduce substantially unemployment in Canada, and in particular to alleviate winter unemployment, and also the failure of the government to propose any plans for the fundamental economic and social changes required to deal with the chronic and growing problem of unemployment caused by automation and technological change, so as to achieve the promised full employment as undertaken in the Liberal party election promises.

[Mr. Fisher.]

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I am happy—this is a way of speaking—that the house is given the opportunity today to deal with the unemployment problem which is prevailing in Canada at the present time. And this opportunity is due to the former minister of labour, the hon. member for the riding of Ontario (Mr. Starr).

While I was listening to the amendment he was moving, I was reminded of this famous sentence which served as a political slogan for the Conservative party during the 1958 election campaign: No one shall suffer. And I notice that the Leader of the Opposition is in the house at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, when I consider that after six years of Conservative administration and six months under the present Liberal government, the situation is still the same, if not worse, I cannot but think that our poor unemployed in Canada have given rise to a lot of talk, but that very few positive steps have been taken in this house to settle their problems,

But, Mr. Speaker, is it possible here, in this house, to take steps to halt unemployment?

As the saying goes:

Grasp all, lose all.

Well, I believe that this government have simply grasped all when they decided to invade fields which are under provincial jurisdiction, and they are now feeling the consequences.

I am one of those who believe that provincial and municipal governments are the administrative bodies best suited to solve the problems of employment and economic development in this country.

Mr. Speaker, we have been told about planning. Well, in that field also, it is impossible for the federal government to implement a successful planning unless they make sure first of the full and complete co-operation of the provincial administration. This is the reason why I say that the federal government should not consider imposing planning. On the contrary, it should consider first giving back to the provinces the sources of revenue which they need, because they alone are in a position to solve the unemployment problem and to provide the economic development needed in our country.

We have seen the Conservative government during the previous six years initiate a winter works program which seemed at the beginning to have a chance of meeting with some success.

Well, after six or seven years of experience, we are now in an absolutely desperate position where the municipalities can no longer use that process as a result of the heavy debts which they have incurred in that connection.

It must also be considered that the regulations in effect when this system was set up was altogether discriminatory to the various areas of the country, since it did not take into account the climatic conditions and favoured the regions blessed with a good climate at the expense of others.

It should be pointed out to the house that the more northerly areas of our country could not benefit from the same advantages as those located in a better climate.

I think that we are faced at present with a dead-lock and I am convinced, like most Canadian people, that this formula was nothing but a poultice which provided no solution to the problem and did not serve its purpose.

Those who advocate the carrying out of extensive public works as a solution to unemployment may seem to be right, but I feel that this formula is objectionable in that it takes over by means of taxation the taxpayers' money and savings in order to invest them in projects and programs that are mostly unprofitable, and by this I mean that they are not productive nor self-supporting.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the economic philosophy of our two old traditional parties, I feel it was a mistake to believe that deficits and large scale public works would stimulate the national economy. In my opinion, it is only through industrial investments that we will solve the problem.

I feel that the two traditional parties must admit that the formula they both supported has resulted in failure and that they must look for new solutions.

We have advocated the establishment of a municipal development and loan bank but the government has converted that idea into a municipal loans fund which will slightly improve the situation but which will not solve the problem, far from it. It will increase the municipalities' indebtedness even if the government promises to write off 25 per cent of the costs if the work is completed within a certain time.

Mr. Speaker, a short while ago, we heard a summary of the promises made by both the Liberals and the Conservatives during the last election campaign.

Both had pledged and are still promising to settle the unemployment question. They promise full employment through the creation of 200,000 jobs every year.

I think that in order to create 200,000 jobs, they must bring about a drastic change in their concept of the economy of our country and recognize that here, in the hub of the country, they necessarily cannot have a complete view of the needs of the various regions of our great Canada and that it is very urgent for them to rely on provincial government institutions.

That must be the basis, Mr. Speaker. I believe in it and I am more and more convinced that I shall not be the only one to hold that opinion.

As for us, in the province of Quebec more particularly, we have in the past advocated that the provincial government should have its own sources of revenue, taking into account its inherent responsibilities.

The Union Nationale government wanted its autonomy. We now have a Liberal provincial government and it also wants its autonomy. I think that when the conference is held here in Ottawa, at the end of November, this government will have a rough time with the various provincial governments which will come here, fortified by a clear cut and definite mandate which was recently renewed for nine provinces out of ten and gang up on a newly elected minority government to have their demands granted.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is time, today more than ever, for the federal government to realize that the provinces, 100 years after confederation, have the administrative structure and the qualified people to assume the responsibilities which have been vested in them through the confederative pact.

It becomes increasingly necessary that the federal government should recognize that situation and waive some of the responsibilities that it has seen fit to assume during the past 20 years, when the provinces were not able to assume those rights and responsibilities. The federal government therefore acted for them at the time.

Now the country is developing and the provinces feel that they are able to act on their own. Under the circumstances, the federal government must therefore give them back their sources of revenue along with the responsibilities that go with them. As a result the federal government will be greatly relieved and in a better position to devote more and better attention to the problems which really come under its jurisdiction. It can work more efficiently with all the skills and facilities available to it, if all its efforts are concentrated on those problems that actually and exclusively fall within its jurisdiction.

The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) has mentioned earlier the technical training given to workers in order to fit them into the new jobs being created in the economy of this country.

It is a very good thing to be willing to spend large amounts of money to give our workers the technical training which is becoming more and more necessary nowadays. But I feel that we must also remember that if we spend enormous amounts of money—in Quebec, that is what is happening in the fields of education and vocational training—we must also increase the number of jobs, otherwise we will be faced with the same situation that prevailed in the past, that is to say these men with all their qualifications and university degrees will cross the border, looking for higher salaries than those offered in this country, or they will just leave to find a job they cannot find here in Canada.

I think the only criticism that can possibly be made against the Quebec provincial government with regard to education, a field in which it has invested a considerable portion of our savings, is that it has neglected to develop at the same time our secondary industry, which could have been in a position to absorb the qualified people who are being created through education.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not succeed in the near future to promote the development of our industries in Canada, we should be prepared to see our children and our brothers, as well as all the savings that will have been invested in the development of education—we should be prepared to seeing all that wealth represented by our qualified young people go abroad and give other nations the benefit of their skills. I admit that they will be wonderful diplomats, excellent representatives of Canada abroad, but that will not bring us the solution we are looking for now.

To solve the unemployment problem, Mr. Speaker, it is imperative to develop industry. How can we succeed? I recognize that the present government is making endeavours along that line, which the official opposition refuses to recognize, this of course being part of the line it has chosen. But I for one appreciated the attempts made by the Conservative government last year to stem unemployment and I also recognize the attempts made this year by the present government in that direction, for which I thank and commend it.

As far as the automobile industry is concerned, the task is obviously a ticklish one, and it indicates to the government the difficulty of the problem we are facing today. That is due to the fact that in the past no efficient measure was taken to prevent foreign control on our Canadian industries. So, today, we have to beg our neighbour to the south for permission to increase production of automobile parts in Canada.

I think this is an outrageous situation for us to be in—it is a depressing and shameful situation. We should be an independent country; or rather our country is supposed to be independent and, as such, it has no permission to ask any foreign authority to set up industries, even though these industries might be competing against American industries established here.

The government plans to set up a Canadian industrial development corporation. At first sight, at least, such a project is an attractive one.

According to the resolution on the order paper, the government plans to provide the Canadian industry with a $1 billion fund to set up new plants, to develop existing industries and even to purchase and refloat enterprises which are on the brink of bankruptcy. However, one thing worries me about that resolution. It implies such weakness in our present system that in order to ensure the success of the program, the government has to help industrial development by lending huge amounts of money which brings about still more taxation.

Why were Canadian industries unable to develop without relying on the government's taxation system to secure funds, Mr. Speaker?

This goes to show that our present taxation system is all wrong and that it is urgent for the government to re-examine it from top to bottom, so that the savings or profits made by industry may be reinvested in other fields in Canada to promote greater development of Canadian industries as a whole.

It is not only for the sake of the industries that I should like them to have some protection but because this would enable them to keep their profits and reinvest them in other fields, thereby increasing the number of new jobs and ensuring diversified production throughout the country. Then we would be helping not only industries as such, but especially the people of Canada, since there would be more employment opportunities and, as a result, the government would increase its revenues even though taxes would be lower.

Mr. Speaker, that is one of the means—I would even say it is the only means—we have at our disposal. If we are to respect private enterprise, that is the only way we have to let private enterprise show what it can do.

Since there is a great deal of talk about ultimatums, I suggest that the government should consider the advisability of providing private enterprise, as an ultimatum, with the development possibilities it wants, but on condition that those possibilities would be properly used in the best interests of Canada and the Canadian people. I feel that the government should consider using such a method in order to solve the problem of industrial development in the country.

Of course, this corporation that the government proposes to set up involves a great danger, because we will be dealing with human beings, those who will administer this legislation and will have an instrument for patronage. It is forbidden to speak this word in the house, because while the government claims it does not dispense patronage, the previous government said the same. Yet, we have a right to have misgivings.

I suppose that this system of administration with capital will be most attractive but, on the other hand, it will help to improve the situation, to set up worthwhile industries and even to establish an industrial complex.

But, for all practical purposes, this political party will have to be watched closely because we know what its supporters can do. Certain things happened in the past and we are not ready to be taken in by the good will and the behaviour of the present government. I am willing to trust the government but on certain conditions.

I heard somebody say that there should be additional deficits. It seems that the two old-line parties are competing with one another to see which one will have the largest deficit, which one will be the first to reach a $1 billion deficit.

I remember that last year the minister of finance, who at that time was the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), said that he did not want to be the one who would have the privilege of reaching the record deficit of $1 billion in a single year. That is why if I consider the economy of the country with respect to deficits, I realize that our situation is fairly desperate.

If tomorrow another political party could replace the two traditional parties and provide a solution, I am sure that if the Canadian people could have that hope, they would immediately demand an election.

Mr. Speaker, we have to support both old-line parties for still some time, only long enough for the Canadian people to realize that there is no hope in any of them. But unfortunately, the people have not yet sufficiently realized it. However, by watching the present government and taking note of the criticisms of the official opposition, the people will realize that neither of the old-line parties offers a solution to our present difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by making a suggestion. It is obvious that our suggestions are paid divided attention and that we are considered with some amusement. We are taken for newcomers, for inexperienced people from the north who do not have ten, 15 or 20 years of experience in the house and in the administration; but let me tell you that we come from the people who are now suffering and who have suffered in the past from the lack of understanding on the part of their administrators. I can assure you that at the present time people are desperate because they do not see the slightest hope of a solution.

I should like to suggest to this government that it turn this municipal loans fund into a bank which would accept municipal bonds as a guarantee for loans; then it would issue credit, but not credit from taxes or from a consolidated fund, but credit based on the production potential of the Canadian people as well as on natural resources contained in the ground.

That is a suggestion, and it is not the only one. Since it applies to a field which is uneconomic, I would add this: let us make the industrial development bank more flexible and get rid of that famous formula which is only a mirage, a cover to hide problems, or a bait offered to the people.

This bank would probably become an agency which would make it possible to solve a part of the problem if the government would change its managing procedures in order to provide for the necessary credits not only for industrial development but also for the establishment of new industries. Better still, that bank should be prepared to take the risk of losing 10 per cent of approved projects, but it would also succeed in setting up new industries which would expand and enable Canada to have a better place in the industrial field. It would be better to succeed in 85 per cent of projects aimed at the establishment and expansion of industries, even if there is a risk of incurring some losses.

A diversified industry would allow us to close our doors to imports and would solve the unemployment problem from which we are suffering.

There is another way which I would like to mention in order to promote the increase of capital investments in industry—and I make this suggestion not without some reserve since I did not have the pleasure of discussing it carefully with my colleagues. But coming from the working class and having worked with many of that group, I can say that it is now an accepted fact that they should not only benefit from industry in the social field, but that they should also invest in those very industries. They recognize it is their duty to share the hazards of capital investments.

Thus, it might be advisable for this government to investigate the expediency of granting a tax reduction on a certain percentage of either the savings or the salary which a worker would invest in industry through the purchase of shares or bonds. It might possibly be wiser for them to take advantage of buying bonds since the latter would warrant investments.

This suggestion I make with all deference to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). In my opinion, they could take such a step to encourage workers to take an active part in the development of industry by investing of their own accord part of their savings.

We wish our industry to become Canadian, and this will be achieved inasmuch as Canadians individually are willing to invest in it part of their savings. But in order to do so they must have work first, they must earn wages and they must not carry a tax load such as the one we are preparing for them.

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I take part in the debate on the subamendments and amendments that were submitted regarding the question of unemployment and more particularly since I represent a riding where the number of unemployed is high and the unemployment situation is the main problem throughout the country.

My constituents, who are working people, find it hard to make both ends meet; unemployment is really a problem that concerns everyone of us. We should try together to consider the various aspects of that problem in order to find a solution; it is all very well to say that it is one of the main problems we have to approach and that the Liberals have promised to act upon it during the election campaign.

They are being blamed today for being too slow; quite so, but I think all parties should get together in order to solve the problem. It is claimed that the Liberals have no plan whatsoever whereby they could check unemployment in Canada and that they take a long time to find proper solutions.

Mr. Speaker, if we pause in retrospect, we, who have been in this corner of the house last year under Conservative administration, may wonder whether the Conservatives had found a formula with which to put a stop to unemployment. No. They preferred putting the matter off and letting someone else bear the heavy burden that rested with them. Will this government also reject their responsibility by putting off as much as possible the day of reckoning or the time to take a definite stand regarding the unemployment situation?

Mr. Speaker, here again formulae are being suggested that will come to nothing and that will by no means solve the problem we have to tackle.

Let us consider for instance the $500 grant that has been offered for the winter building of houses; that is all very well in the opinion of our Canadian fellow citizens, but when we are aware of the fact that on account of the 11 per cent tax imposed upon building materials, every new house will cost from $800 to $1,000 more, we wonder whether the grant is something worthwhile.

In fact, who is going to pay once more? Who will have to bear the loss? Obviously the buyer of the house; he will be the loser once more and merely because an effort will have been made to provide some work in order to put a stop to unemployment.

And what about the statement made last Saturday over the radio, in Ottawa, to the effect that contractors were putting off work until December? They lay off their workers in November, making unemployed out of them. Yet, the idea was to check unemployment.

Such measures result in unemployment; they are known as yokes.

Mr. Speaker, it will no doubt be said: "But yourselves, the Creditistes, the members of the Ralliement Creditistes, what can you do?" Only Social Credit has a solution. There is no miracle involved, but we have what is needed to check unemployment, not only to try and check unemployment, but to check it. We are the ones who have this formula. We set it forth in our speeches last year, and we shall repeat it again this year. We shall explain how we would manage to check unemployment in Canada.

Social Crediters are not confused by the progress of automation. Automation does not frighten us. On the contrary, we are happy about it, and everybody should be happy, since, at last, the individual shall be able to live on earth not as a slave but as a reasonable person, as a human being entitled to every respect.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at the animals, at the birds, we find they have no diplomas and they do not worry about their next meal. They do not have to worry for Providence looks after their needs.

But we, who have an intelligence and a cultivated mind, who hold diplomas, who have a soul to save, we have to struggle with the problem of providing for our food, and that problem becomes of such prime importance that we forget why we were born.

Mr. Speaker, we should not dwell on that problem; we, too, should rely more on Providence.

The problem facing everybody today, throughout the country, is a problem of finance. There is a lack of financial means, and, because there are no financial means, there is no work. Now, when there is no work, there is unemployment. We are in a vicious circle, we run around as a dog trying to catch its tail. In brief, we are getting nowhere.

They should tell the people that they are unable to settle this problem. Social Credit has the formula to do it, and I am convinced that at the next general election, the electors of the whole country, who are in a position to judge the present attitude of the two older parties, which cannot find a solution to the problem, are going to make a thorough change and try something new. They have nothing to lose, it is true.

It would be worth while to elect a government which would enact legislation for the benefit of man who should be our prime concern. In fact, we must constantly bear in mind the ideal of our constituents; we must think about it 24 hours a day. All members must think of their respective constituents.

One thing that I cannot stand is that in a country as rich as ours—and no one denies that—we have to live as beggars and as paupers of the worst kind.

When one travels throughout Canada, one sees vast expanses of land and forest which remain undeveloped. On the other hand, certain communities have slums as is the case in my riding. Such a situation is intolerable. Our cities could stand a lot of improvement, if it were not for the shortsightedness of our governments.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fine thing to govern but what must one do in order to govern? One must be provident; that is the first qualification of any government.

Instead of providing work for our carpenters and other workers who have little education, the government has decided to impose an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. Instead of that, it should have advocated slum removal and provided an 11 per cent reduction on the cost of all building materials to help the building industry.

If the government had acted that way, the economy would have started going again and that would have given temporary work to our unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, the newspaper Le Devoir of October 5, 1963 carried an article on automation. And I ask hon. members to take good note of what is said in it because it is a serious article, one of substance:

Automation would involve the suppression of 40,000 jobs each week in the United States.

Well, they also are affected by automation. Every week, 40,000 more unemployed. What will they have to do to straighten out that situation? And the article goes on:

Protesting against what he called the deliberately blind official optimism—

That, Mr. Speaker, is the stand taken by this government which sees the problem but still believes or at least hopes that it will solve itself in time.

And I continue:

Protesting against what he called the deliberately blind official optimism and the childish myths, Mr. J. I. Snyder, president of a large industrial American firm and considered as one of the main experts of the nation on automation matters, stated on Thursday that automation involves the suppression of some 40,000 jobs each week in the United States.

Before the Senate subcommittee on labour, Mr. Snyder (whose own concern manufactures automated equipment) challenged the allegations of the department of labour that the improvement of the productivity (of which automation is one of the factors) would eliminate some 200,000 jobs every year in the manufacturing industry.

—200,000 jobs, Mr. Speaker, that is a tremendous figure.

And I continue:

Myths exploded

"I think that would be to dangerously underestimate the real impact of automation on employment development in the United States" said Mr. Snyder who added: "Development of automation involves directly or indirectly the suppression of some 40,000 jobs each week and that means not only 40,000 more unemployed, but much more than that if you take into consideration the workers who, down through the future years, would have occupied those jobs, had they been maintained".

The expert denounced the intellectual laziness and the lack of courage of the public powers and of certain financial quarters who kept alive the myth that "automation will give rise, in other sectors of employment, to opportunities which will largely offset the job cancellations."

There may be a danger that Canada will be facing that same kind of unemployment within a couple of years if we do not make provision against that plague.

Crisis feared

"It is obvious that things do not work out that way. First, the present technological developments involve the creation of only a few new jobs as compared with the number of jobs washed out.

Then, it must be recognized that to rehabilitate workers is far from being so easy and simple as some people have claimed. Finally, workers that have been cast aside by progress are generally, in view of their low degree of education, their temperament, their age, etc., the most difficult to rehabilitate, the least inclined to move to some other town or area."

Mr. Snyder said, in closing: "If we do not want to be up against a terrible unemployment crisis within four or five years, it is important that teams of sociologists and economists be mobilized without delay to prepare drastic solutions to deal with an unprecedented problem.

Mr. Speaker, when I hear statements such as that one, I cannot help but think that, due to unemployment, there are sometimes whole families in extreme poverty just because automation makes it impossible for the head of the family to earn his daily bread and that of his children.

Unemployment Measures Lacking

It is a pity, Mr. Speaker. It is about time that we should stop and think about progress. When I read unemployment statistics, it is not so much the figures which frighten me but the implications of these figures, because the number of the unemployed in the province must be multiplied five or six times if we really want to know how many people live in the most dreadful circumstances.

I think that here, this year, we should face up to our responsibilities, all together without any partisanship, to try and solve the problem without one government wanting to take credit for it more than another. The facts are here, Mr. Speaker, then let us try and solve the problem all together, putting aside the fact that we belong to a party. We are here as the representatives of our constituents and we should be conscious of all the responsibilities which rest upon us.

The Social Credit party will not work wonders once in office but, precisely because respect for man is the basis of its philosophy, it will not consider only figures offered by statistics but will try to give one and all good living conditions, security and freedom.

Today, there is much talk about freedom and democracy. When I see so many unemployed, so many men who would like to work, who do not even think of going to some industry to offer their services. Where is freedom, Mr. Speaker, when a man is not able to work?

I maintain that one of man's first natural rights is the right to earn a living to support his family.

Moreover, to promote our economy also I think that the present problem will again be submitted to the house in January—I hope that taxes will be reviewed in order to find out means to give a new impetus, a new development to Canada, even if this would get our country in debt for the next ten years.

Let us think of the future. Under the present set-up, you just have to run into debt. Then, instead of attempting to get in debt little by little, by keeping people in extreme poverty, put the tiller hard over once and for all, and come January, present us with altogether new legislation. Our farmers, our labourers must find employment in order to earn their livelihood. I am ready to vote for that; I will be backing you.

Under the present set-up, endeavours have been made to take back control of the economy. But you know that the crucial problem is the financial one. The evil should be fought where it is.

First let us admit the complication of the unemployment problem. That is precisely why it is recommended to the members of this house not to try and blame somebody, but rather to suggest solutions.

[Mr. Plourde.]

We, in this corner of the house, are going to put forward solutions for the unemployment problem; we are going to tell you how to act to stem unemployment. You members of the other parties should do the same. You should suggest solutions to the government; then it will be able to develop a program and take a step in the right direction.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to mention again to the hon. members that they committed themselves, during the election campaign of last May, to stop unemployment once in power, and in my opinion, it is about time that they seriously think that over and introduce an adequate legislation in that connection.

I noticed that the Prime Minister did not talk today about the problem of unemployment. There are still two or three problems which remain to be studied in this house, and the problem of unemployment has not yet been mentioned. We, in this part of the house, expressly make it a point that steps to relieve unemployment should be taken as soon as possible.

There is another thing for which we care and which we would like to be settled as soon as possible: it is the family allowances. By granting the requested family allowances, we would alleviate hardship among the people. That is logical. Let us be generous then with respect to family allowances.

I have been associated with an orphanage which gets $4 a day from the government for each orphan. The state pays $6 per month to the mother of a family in such circumstances. What a difference. An orphanage gets $4 a day to buy shoes, clothing, etc. for a child whereas a family gets $6 monthly for the same purpose.

The family allowance program should be drastically overhauled. Allowances should be $30 a month at least. Mr. Speaker, what is a dollar a day to develop the country and to encourage mothers to raise larger families? The day we have a large population, we will be able to speak of independence and to defend ourselves without relying on the United States as is the case at present.

Where does the strength of a country lie? In its faith in the future. We shall have faith in the future, Mr. Speaker, when the government will promote the welfare of the family which is the basic unit of society.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine.

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I believe that all members of the house in the next two days will turn their whole attention to the extremely serious unemployment problem.

I would like most of all that we try to look into problems with objectivity. I think that members of the opposition, as well as my colleagues on this side of the house, will mostly express their views by suggesting solutions to such a serious problem as unemployment.

I have heard this afternoon several members blaming the government for its inaction and its apparent inability to solve the unemployment problems since it came into power.

I intend in a moment to state more objectively what the government has done and what it intends to do. I could also, perhaps, from a strictly personal point of view, state my opinion on the long term policy of the government in the economic field.

Mr. Speaker: As it is six o'clock, it is now time to take recess.

[Text]

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I think I may start my remarks by paying a particular tribute to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) who, I think, is held in esteem by all hon. members in this house.

We heard him answer, with great tact and felicity, all questions hon. members wanted to ask him. We heard him discuss the problem of trusteeship for the seamen's unions, and, during the intercession, saw him try hard to find a private solution for that extremely serious problem which might have led to a settlement. We have seen him rise in this house to explain his position at the time of the seamen's strike or during the dockers' walk-out. He took a very firm attitude, and I think that all hon. members here are proud that Canada should have such a Minister of Labour.

I would be remiss, at a moment where an amendment is being discussed in connection with his department, not to take a few minutes in order to stress those facts.

It has been said, this afternoon, that the government had not taken all necessary measures to relieve unemployment. That statement is partly true and partly false. It seems to me, that to be fair and truthful it would be well briefly to list the various measures announced by the government since it came into power. All that legislation was more particularly aimed at relieving winter unemployment and all unemployment in the near future, and some provisions aimed at putting an end to unemployment over a longer period.

All members will readily agree that unemployment is actually the most serious problem at the present time. It is the source of many of our difficulties as I will show later on.

Allow me to read a list that I put together very hastily showing what the government has done or intends to do in the near future in order to alleviate unemployment. It was never claimed in the house that these measures would altogether solve the unemployment problem.

Some special measures were first announced to help areas called designated areas. Those measures affected 35 areas—10 or 12 were added subsequently—where the federal government will pay 60 per cent of labour costs for winter works and provide an additional sum of $7 million for emergency winter works.

An assistance program has also been announced for new industries in those areas whereby income tax will only be collected three years after the new firms have been established, and special depreciation has been provided for new equipment and buildings.

I think those measures are already producing results in those areas. In my riding of Iles-de-la-Madeleine, for instance, if I may be allowed to refer to it for a moment or two, winter works for more than $600,000, will be carried out which will do away with all unemployment there for seven or eight weeks. Should weather permit, we might be able to extend the projects into January and February.

The government, after much difficulty, had its municipal aid legislation adopted. That measure will help municipalities to carry out immediately certain projects which otherwise would have been delayed.

The special allowance of $500 for those who build houses in wintertime will allow us, I think, to reduce unemployment during winter.

The important wheat sales now taking place will undoubtedly increase employment in the field of transportation and in certain allied industrial areas.

The new government policy concerning the importation and exportation of automobile parts will help the economy of this country.

The new regulation governing technical training will also help.

The new policy pertaining to assistance for older workers will stimulate the re-employment of workers 45 years and over and will likely allow a certain number of those workers to go back to work.

Unemployment Measures Lacking

The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, by a more generous policy concerning loans, will help the economic development of some areas.

The announcement of an investment of $100 million in the Atlantic development board will help the Atlantic area.

The creation of a Department of Industry and of an economic board will probably, in the long run, enable the Canadian government to solve this problem.

I am not entirely satisfied with the situation and I do not think any of us is. But there are probably a number of proposals which will be brought forward and which will enable us to see the day when there will be in Canada what is called in other countries and has been called here full employment.

We have been talking about full employment for a long time in our country. I have before me a report published in 1945 under the title "Employment and Income". This report has been called the "white paper on full employment". Here is what we can read in it:

[Text]

In setting as its aim a high and stable level of employment and income the government is not selecting a lower target than full employment.

[Translation]

As far back as 1945, this was the policy of the government. Since then, there has been much talk about full employment and unemployment. And if the hon. members would look at the House of Commons debates index, they would notice that this has been the most discussed subject for five or six years.

In fact, a special committee on manpower and employment has been established in the Senate and sittings took place in 1960 and 1961. This committee submitted a voluminous report on the employment problem.

The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that even though one knows the unemployment problem, its details, its various forms, as an hon. member of the opposition mentioned this afternoon, a basic decision has never been taken, namely whether governments, federal and provincial, should interfere in the direction of the economy.

All kinds of solutions have been suggested, all aspects of the problem have been considered, but when one reads all these reports, one is always under the impression that there was a gap at a certain time and that the government was never able to make up its mind and really step into the economic field. I think that is the crux of the problem.

We could discuss ad infinitum the causes of unemployment and the solutions we think possible, but as long as governments, all of them, will not make up their minds to step in in order to stem unemployment and apply a policy of full employment, Canada will experience, as she has in the past, long periods of unemployment.

All the reports I studied, especially the Senate report I just mentioned, reflect worry about what the economic situation will be between 1965 and 1975, when there will be a significant influx of people on the labour market.

That is the heart of the problem and it is up to us to decide whether we really want to step in. As long as we go on thinking that private enterprise can solve the unemployment problem all by itself, that important public works, unemployment insurance and assistance will be able to help the jobless for some time, we will never solve definitely the full employment problem.

Everybody admits that a certain level of unemployment is acceptable—although people who suffer from it do not—say 2 or 3 per cent, but a higher rate of unemployment, like ours, is not normal. Now I think that the unemployment situation in Canada is the source of other difficulties which are also very serious.

Unemployment in Canada is mostly rampant in the maritimes, in British Columbia and in Quebec. These are the three areas of this country which are usually hit the hardest by unemployment.

But I will point out, if I may, that it is these areas or these provinces which seem to have always some criticism to make with respect to the action or the inertia of the federal government. It is these provinces which find it difficult to get along with the federal government, and I believe that, as far as my own province, the province of Quebec, is concerned, unemployment and the economic situation of its population are probably the main cause responsible for the uneasiness which prevails in the federal-provincial relations and in the relations between French speaking and English speaking Canadians.

In my opinion, nobody questions the responsibility of the federal government to ensure full employment. It seems that it has been said a long time ago that full employment is at first a responsibility of the federal government.

On the other hand, some provincial governments are willing nevertheless to help relieve unemployment in their section and I believe it is urgent that both the federal and provincial governments agree on the policies which should be implemented in order to solve the unemployment problem.

The problem does not have the same acuteness throughout. Thus it is obvious that in Ontario, unemployment is less critical than in the province of Quebec, the maritimes or British Columbia, and too many steps are taken by the federal government at the national economic scale, that is they apply indiscriminately to all the areas of the country, thus often creating a surplus of jobs in some areas while others suffer from under-employment.

I am glad that the government has decided to set up so-called "designated areas". It is a sign that the government now recognizes that certain districts are worse off than others in Canada and that certain nation-wide programs will not be as successful there as elsewhere. It still remains that those measures will not be effective unless there is close co-operation between the federal government and the provinces.

I should like to point out that we are no longer in the same situation as we were between 1945 and 1957.

At that time, the central government was powerful and the provinces did not question its jurisdiction in several fields. The provinces have come a long way since then.

Several provincial governments are well aware of local and regional problems. The federal government will then have to take the necessary steps to come to an agreement with the provinces.

In 1963, it is no longer possible for us, in Ottawa, to act as though we were always right.

Mr. Speaker, I could also take the economic council as an example. My remarks will probably be interpreted as a criticism of government policy, but I should like to say a word about that just the same.

I could say a lot of things about the role that can be played by the economic council which was set up recently. In particular, I feel that one of the two major aspects of economic activity has been neglected.

The economic council for the most part takes into account private enterprise which has an important part to play in economic activities, but public enterprise is practically always ignored.

Now, it is the federal, provincial and municipal governments, as well as crown corporations, both on the federal and provincial levels, which are responsible for the economic development of the country. And if private and public enterprises do not meet at the superior economic level to make decisions about economic planning, then public enterprise is being ignored, because the necessary intervention of the public powers in economic matters is being overlooked. This is exactly what I was saying earlier. This course was not chosen. On the contrary, it is still believed that only private enterprise can solve our problems. Now, it has been proved that private enterprise is unable to do so and that far too much is expected from it. But private enterprise, assisted by public enterprise and co-operating with it, can succeed in reaching this level of economic activity which will ensure full employment.

That is what happened in Europe. The old continent went through the same phases as we did. Before the war, Europeans believed that private enterprise could solve any problem; yet, after the war, even private enterprise realized that it needed government assistance. In my opinion, the European experience is extremely valuable. Why, then, did we not take the same option here, in Canada? Because we refused to make a definite choice in favour of government intervention in the economic life.

I now have to blame the members of the opposition—I think I am entitled to it, since I have tried to be impartial. I would like when economic legislation is discussed, legislation meant to cope with unemployment or to promote the economic activities of the country that, the two main parties, among others, would agree on the urgency of improving the economic conditions in Canada, especially in the province of Quebec. As I said earlier, as long as in the province of Quebec unemployment will be twice as high as in Ontario or as long as the personal income per capita will be 37 per cent lower than in Ontario—and I do not want to continue along on that line—as long as we remain on a lower economic level, we will feel unhappy.

I was greatly pleased with the speech which the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) delivered last Tuesday. I would hope that his party would support him when he states that we, of the province of Quebec, consider ourselves as equal partners. Those are not the exact words he used but we would hope that everybody would have the same attitude towards us. At a time when we are discussing economic matters, I feel that his party should support the government so that we would not have to delay until the next session the adoption of legislation which is essential to the economic development of Canada and of the province of Quebec in particular since, as I said before, that is a basic condition of agreement between French and English Canada.

I did not like at all that part of the speech made by the hon. member for Three Rivers, who came back with the old line on mutual understanding. We heard all that from 1945 to 1960. The period of "bon ententisme", as defined by the hon. member for Three Rivers, is over and, to be perfectly honest, I am surprised that the English speaking press could find his speech praiseworthy.

I think there they tried to shut their eyes. I could very easily tell you and we could very easily tell you that everything is getting along fine and that there is no problem, but I would be dishonest if I were to tell you that. I believe we should all work together, and that is important, because all members of this house are aware that there exists serious unrest in Quebec. There are in that province people who think it is possible to solve in some other way the problems now facing us.

Incidentally, let me tell you that people often confuse nationalism and separatism. There is certainly a nationalist crisis at the present time in the province of Quebec. We are probably all nationalists, that is we want the situation to improve in Quebec to a point where we shall really become equal partners with the rest of Canada.

We may be nationalists, but we are not separatists, and those who identify separatism with nationalism are doing a disservice to the cause of Canadian unity.

There are in the province of Quebec a small number of separatists. We know them and they have been identified. Maclean's magazine and the C.B.C. have made a survey, the results of which were published last week.

The problem has been set I think but it seems to me extremely important that we establish a distinction between nationalism and separatism.

When it is claimed, in this house or elsewhere, that all nationalists are separatists, direct offence is given to the people of Quebec.

I perfectly realize that most of my colleagues are beginning to understand the problem but I would not want us to put the matter off. On November 25, there will be here in Ottawa, an extremely important federal-provincial conference for the future of confederation. I believe that it is up to the federal government—I have said so outside this house—to take action in order to save confederation.

We want to become equal partners here in this country, but really equal. We have faith in Canada, we fought for Canada on several occasions and has a witness, General Foulkes, not said before the defence committee that the French Canadians, during the last war, had probably been the best soldiers?

We are in our own country, here; we want to be at home in the province of Quebec and in the other provinces of Canada but we want to feel at home everywhere.

We want to do our share, we realize now that in the province of Quebec we have to make exceptional efforts and that may be the reason why, at times, we are asking for a lot.

We shall get along, I think, if both sides have but one aim: keep Canada together, because Canada without the province of Quebec would not survive. And the province of Quebec, without Canada, would not survive either.

There is but one solution to our problems, that is to live together. We shall continue to have misunderstandings, to experience difficulties, that is normal; but I think that if we can overcome the present difficulties, we shall celebrate together confederation and we shall continue, French and English Canadians, to work for a better Canada. In my opinion, there is but one way to achieve this and that is to deal immediately with the fundamental problem, unemployment. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the government has already made an effort and that if, with the help of the hon. members, we can have that measure adopted, then we shall have done a great deal for Canadian unity.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister from Iles-de-la-Madeleine.

Mr. Denis: Minister.

Mr. Pigeon: I am sorry. I would not want anything to offend the Postmaster General or any of his colleagues. Please accept my apologies.

Could the hon. member tell the house whether one of the possible means of solving the problem would be for instance, in the course of the federal-provincial conference, to grant to the provinces, and more particularly to Quebec, larger sources of income with which to build sewers, schools, roads, etc.? Could the hon. member tell us if such a method would not help solve the unemployment problems?

Mr. Sauve: It seems to me that I have insisted quite enough on the need for decentralization, and on the fact that provincial governments might solve certain local problems with greater ease than the federal government.

I feel sure that thanks to the spirit in which it is carrying on business at the present time, the federal government, together with the government of the province of Quebec and of other provinces, at the November 25 conference will come to an agreement of sorts, concerning the sharing of taxation revenues. If I were less sure of the fact, I would probably be rather unhappy in this house; every bit as unhappy for instance as my hon. colleague of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm might be, and as many other members besides.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) on the forceful speech he has just delivered but most of which was unfortunately irrelevant. That is why I shall not try to follow along the same lines. However, I was happy to hear him state in connection with unemployment and the economic situation, that he was not entirely satisfied with the action taken by the government of which he is a supporter. I am glad he said that because, last year, when the number of unemployed was about the same as this year, he bitterly criticized the government for what he called its inaction.

We have today the same situation which. far from improving, has become worse since the hon. members opposite—

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Martineau: —have come into power. The hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine dealt with the problem mainly with regard to the province of Quebec of which he spoke very feelingly, and I commend him for it.

If we look at the figures issued by the dominion bureau of statistics and compare statistics for August and September 1962, with the figures for the same months in 1963, we find that in August last year there were 96,000 unemployed in the province of Quebec, whereas there were 97,000 in September.

This year, that is in 1963, in the province of Quebec, under a Liberal regime, in Ottawa as well as in Quebec, we still unfortunately, find Quebec reaching the highest level of unemployment, namely 108,000 in August 1963 and still the same figure in September last, that is 5.5 per cent in August and 5.7 per cent in September.

Then I hope that as a result of his argument, the hon. member for Iles-de-la Madeleine, will find sympathetic support among the members of the government, several of whom come from the province of Quebec, who have been listening in silence.

The hon. member said that our party, that we, of the opposition, should support the government and not cause delays in the passing, to use his own words, "of legislation essential to the economic progress of our country" which are brought forward.

I perfectly agree with that. But may I ask the hon. member where are those measures? What are they? Far from relieving unemployment in the province of Quebec, they only increase it? If he has an answer to that, it is that among those now occupying the treasury benches, there are better economists than those who usually show off.

Mr. Deschatelets: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to hear the Minister of Public Works now, but if there are a few minutes left at the end of my observations, it will be a pleasure to reply to the hon. minister because that is a matter of courtesy.

Mr. Caron: It is only to enlighten you.

[Text]

Mr. Martineau: I have been looking over the subamendment. I think it would be unfair to say the members of the present administration are not conscious of the problem of unemployment. As a matter of fact, when they were on this side of the house they spoke of nothing else. They could think of nothing else and could find no other subject on which to entertain the house than the subject of unemployment.

Today they do not care to speak about it. It is swept beneath the rug. Unhappily, though, the problem is still with us; it has not been solved by those masterminds opposite. If anything, it is likely to be more serious than ever during the coming winter months, precisely because of the failure of the government to take effective new measures to deal with the situation. When I say hon. gentlemen who now grace the treasury benches have a concern for unemployment, I should have said they had a concern about unemployment when they were over on this side of the house. One of those who expressed the most concern was the gracious Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that at that time the hon. member for Essex East was the main critic of the official opposition in matters of labour, employment and unemployment. As a matter of fact, he made several contributions on this particular subject which are recorded in Hansard. I cite a few extracts at random from the inspired words of the hon. member for Essex East, now Secretary of State for External Affairs. I might say that he was vastly concerned with the problem, so much so that on the 2nd of February, 1960, as recorded at page 645 of Hansard, he had the audacity, I think, to single out Canada as "the one country in the western world where, in spite of our resources and great industrial capacity and the capacity of our people, there has persisted continuously since the fall of 1957 the most serious unemployment problem of any country in the western world".

Sir, if the situation then was as described by that hon. member, then I say it is every bit as serious now because statistics prove there has been no improvement since. In the course of the same speech the hon. member said that this situation was an indictment of our society. I should like the hon. member who is now a member of the government, to note these words because they are words he could very usefully repeat to his colleagues in the cabinet now. At that time he said:

> I say to this government, the same vigour that it demonstrated in the course of the elections, when it talked of unemployment, it ought now to demonstrate when it comes to consider what should be done about it.

The chickens are indeed coming home to roost, Mr. Speaker. I could use word for word the same flamboyant epithets which the Secretary of State for External Affairs was so fond of using when he sat on this side of the house to castigate the lack of action on the part of the government then. Let him now instigate action on the part of the government of which he is a member, that very government which rode into office on the promise that they would rid the country of its principal problem, unemployment. What have they done? In terms of effects and results they have done just about nothing.

With regard to the winter works program, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) this afternoon related how that program had been initiated by the previous administration, how it had been ridiculed by members of the opposition at that time, how a great number, perhaps a majority of municipalities throughout the country availed themselves of its provisions, and how it had created year after year since its implementation hundreds of thousands of new jobs for Canadians. This one measure initiated by the previous government to combat unemployment achieved striking and complete success and has borne rich fruit for the citizens of Canada.

Yet at that time the hon. member for Essex East could find no other words to describe that splendid and successful program than "that anaemic child of the government". It might have been anaemic in the mind of the hon. member, but certainly in comparison with some of the measures the present government said they would implement, and never have, it was indeed a vigorous child that produced hundreds of thousands of new jobs. Some hon. members on the other side scoff at that. They do not seem to believe. Let them cite one single measure introduced by them which has produced hundreds of thousands of new jobs for Canadians. They have not produced a single one as far as I know.

I could go on at some length recounting the utterances of members of the government at the time they were in opposition with regard to the measures they would propose when they came into power. Again, on the 2nd of February, 1960, the hon. member for Essex East made certain suggestions. For instance, he said that responsibility for unemployment must be transferred from the Department of Labour to the government as a whole, particularly to the Department of Finance, including the Bank of Canada, under a vigorous ministerial chairmanship.

I can understand why the government has discarded this proposal when one considers the dismal failure of the budgetary proposals made by the Minister of Finance to resuscitate, as he said, the Canadian economy. That is one proposal which members then in the opposition insisted upon strongly in order to restore our economy; but today there is not the slightest inkling that the government is anywhere near adopting such a proposal.

The opposition of that day said: Let us adopt a national advisory board on economic development. They have established something like that, but it has not produced any jobs yet. I can quote as my authority none other than the speaker who preceded me, the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve).

Another proposal made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs was to set up a special parliamentary committee to deal with the problem of unemployment, and assess the facts. When some of the members now in the opposition propose the setting up of a parliamentary committee to deal with unemployment the only thing we hear is, "No, that is no good, because as the opposition you will use it in a partisan way,"—as if the hon. member for Essex East on that day had any other idea than to use the committee precisely in a political way. The proof of that is that today the government refuses to set up such a committee.

The opposition of that day were very fertile and prolific in proposing solutions to the problem. They said: Let us call a federal-provincial conference on unemployment. I know a federal-provincial conference has been called, but it is not to deal with employment or unemployment. It is to deal with relations between the provinces and the federal government, which have reached a very low ebb indeed since the 22nd of April last.

Here is another proposal made at that time which I commend especially to members of the cabinet. It was proposed by no other authority than the hon. member for Essex East that a leading businessman be appointed to provide leadership in supplying jobs. I think that would be a very good proposal and I have the name of a leading businessman, a chartered accountant by profession, to suggest. He is the present Minister of Finance. In a private capacity I think he could perhaps do a lot better than he has done as Minister of Finance. I am sure of one thing: He could not do any worse, and he has got a lot of help.

The opposition of that time spoke of that anaemic child, the winter works incentive program. They were not satisfied with the 150,000 to 200,000 jobs provided every winter by that program. They said: Let us make modifications to the winter works program. Where are these modifications? I know the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) is looking at me as if to say I do not know very much. I know that in his wisdom and following the dictates of his advisers he has proposed that with respect to the winter works program in certain designated areas—and the subject of designated areas is a very touchy one—the federal contribution be increased from 50 to 60 per cent. As far as I can see, that is the main modification that has been brought forward by the government, which was going to revamp completely that great, successful program initiated by the Conservative government when it was in power and which has contributed greatly to the maintenance of a decent amount of employment throughout the country in the winter months.

These are some of the main proposals. There is one more proposal which is dear to the heart of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He also proposed that the excise tax on automobiles be abolished. Our government did that. It did not require a Liberal government to be in power for that to be done.

These are some of the measures that were proposed by the former opposition members now occupying the treasury benches. As you can readily see from the summary of the measures that I have put before you, Mr. Speaker, none of them has been implemented in an effective way by the present government, which has been noted not for its drive or its constructive proposals but more for its confusion and its dilly-dallying.

[Translation]

The Minister of Justice, when he was on this side of the house, was also quite prolific and proposed means to deal with unemployment.

I remember a brilliant speech he made at the time he was but the member for Laurier, on March 2, 1960, and which is to be found beginning at page 1651 of Hansard.

The hon. member for Laurier had proposed some 25 measures to remedy the unemployment situation. Well, his government has been in office for six months—it is no longer a matter of 60 days but rather of several hundred days—and the proposals the hon. member was enumerating at that time to deal with unemployment have not been adopted, except those the Conservative government, which was in office until April of this year, did adopt.

I am quite sure the minister has not forgotten that eloquent and vibrant speech, and I do not have to insist too much and set down the proposals he put forth. The fact remains that, the moment these hon. gentlemen are given full authority to act, they seem to forget all about those suggestions, recommendations, measures and means. They hang on to obsolete ideas or extend a recovery program launched by the previous administration.

And even the present ineffable Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) who was then member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, ventured to make some remarks on the unemployment situation. As we may see on page 4167 of the official record for May 23, 1960, he was shocked to see such a great number of people at the unemployment insurance office in the city of Montreal.

He had good reason to be shocked, but he might use his camera today and take the same photos—or even let him forget his photographer's talent for a few weeks and try the same experiment the next few months. He will see then that the situation remains exactly the same, because the government of which he is part has been unable to elaborate a program to remedy the present situation.

As we may read on page 4169 of Hansard for May 23, 1960, the present minister said then:

> What did the Conservative government do to try and maintain employment at a reasonable level in Canada?

And now we may ask: "What did the present government do to try and maintain employment and jobs in this country at a reasonable level"?

And the hon. member added:

> What interest did this government show in avoiding a deterioration of the employment situation to the point I mentioned a few moments ago when quoting the last figures?

Indeed, what interest does the Liberal government show in this problem?

And the hon. member said further:

> To what extent did the government listen to the admonitions and warnings which it so frequently heard from the opposition?

Mr. Speaker, why do those gentlemen, who have a good memory and are not without intelligence, not pull themselves together and recall the words and suggestions they made at the time when they were sitting on this side of the house?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Unemployment Measures Lacking

Mr. Martineau: When I have completed my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

I think, Mr. Speaker, I should continue along the line on which I started. There is another prominent member of the administration who had a lot to say about unemployment. He was, Mr. Speaker, the golden haired boy of Liberalism, the white hope; he has become a bit gray now, I will admit. I am referring, of course, to that brilliant economist the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). He had quite a few comments to make before he entered this house, and particularly before he became a member of the administration.

In October, 1960, Mr. Speaker, he published in the Toronto newspapers, as for instance the Toronto Star, what he called a "bold program" to solve the problem with which this country is now faced, mass unemployment. The minister then stated, as an example, that mere talk could only waste time and what was needed was action. Imagine those words coming from that source. He said that what was needed was a concerted policy to attack this evil thing that sapped the will and the spirit, not only of those who have no jobs, but all the rest of us who may become fearful for the future. At that time the minister urged a concerted policy; but what indication has he given to us today of a concerted policy, a comprehensive policy, something that makes economic sense? He has not given us any indication of that. He has given us exactly the contrary.

At this time I believe it would be helpful to table a copy of "Walter Gordon's Solution". This appeared in the Toronto daily Star for Saturday, October 15, 1960. "Twelve Golden Rules to Achieve Full Employment", by Walter Gordon, the then rising star of Liberalism and noted economist, who has now become the quiet and subdued Minister of Finance. I should like to table these rules, because I am sure that they would serve as a reminder to the government of its sins of omission and commission and its absolutely incomprehensible indifference to the admittedly grave problem of unemployment. They talked a lot about this problem in the days before the election, Mr. Speaker, but now that they are in a position to do something about it, what do we get? There has been no action, no sensible action. I wish to table these 12 golden rules which are Walter Gordon's solution to the problem. Well, we know what that problem is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member realizes, of course, that he cannot table that kind of document. He can leave it on the table if he wishes, but it cannot form a part of Hansard.

Mr. Martineau: I am satisfied to leave it on the table. I hope that hon. members opposite will go around the table and take a look at it. Possibly it will be impressed upon their minds.

An hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Martineau: Yes, I will read it a little later.

I was going to say that in those days, contrary to his present practice, the minister was quite loquacious. He used to make a lot of speeches during the years 1960, 1961 and 1962 concerning what would be required to solve unemployment. For instance, at one time he said that one of the reasons for unemployment was tight money. Well, Mr. Speaker, I seem to recall 1955 and 1956. I seem to recall businessmen in this country complaining bitterly over the fact their sources of credit had been cut off by the banks and the financial institutions, as a result of the policies of the government. It was this same tight money government that was driven out of power, you will recall, in 1957. The Minister of Finance describes tight money as one of the causes of unemployment. Indeed, it was, but he failed to mention the origin of that tight money, which was the policy of the former minister of finance, Mr. Walter Harris.

The minister went on to say that what was needed to bring about an end to unemployment was really not an end of tight money but it was, on the one hand, the cutting of taxes, and on the other hand the balancing of the budget. He said we had to decrease our deficit, and that if the budget had been balanced in 1958 or 1959, either by increasing taxes or by reducing expenditures, the need for such a rigidly tight money policy would have been greatly removed. Then he added that neither of these alternatives would have been popular, but they would have been wise.

Then, the Minister of Finance made a speech in Quebec city which was reported in the Toronto Star of November 24, 1960. He called for a cure for unemployment, and I quote from the newspaper article:

> Temporary cuts in personal income taxes, lower interest rates and a reduction in the premiums on the Canadian dollar are the fastest and most effective cures for unemployment, economist Walter Gordon said last night.

The present government, despite the expert advice freely given by men like the Minister of Finance, when he was outside the house or sat in opposition, has not seen fit to cut the income tax or other taxes. As a matter of fact, we know only too well that, contrary to the promises it made, there has been an increase in personal income tax. We have also seen the monstrous imposition of a tax on building materials and production machinery, and we have had the Minister of Finance forecast that his budget deficit will be the highest peacetime deficit in Canadian history.

There is the difference between the pragmatists, men like the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and a few others, and the theorists, the idealists, the impractical dreamers; and in this government it is the impractical dreamers who have got the upper hand, because how else could the government have got the country into the rudderless mess which the London Economist spoke about some few days ago?

These are some of the attitudes the government has chosen to adopt, and under those circumstances it is not surprising that there has been no improvement in the economic and unemploment situation. To illustrate that, I quote from the dominion bureau of statistics' bulletin of October 25, 1963 where it states:

> Employment declined by an estimated 181,000 to 6,565,000 between August and September.

That is the net result, a decrease in employment under a government that was elected to promote and expand economic activity. It is a dismal record.

The Montreal Gazette of September 14, 1963, stated that the Liberals' job rise was off target and that unemployment continues to persist on the seasonally adjusted basis at between 5 per cent and 6 per cent of the labour force. There is no improvement there, and it is no surprise that the Prime Minister stated not very long ago that unemployment was such a fundamental problem that the federal government could not cope with it. It is only too apparent that the present government cannot cope with the problem.

The situation would be infinitely worse if some of the forward looking, progressive measures that were adopted by the previous government had not been implemented. I speak for instance of the winter works incentive program, which has been continued by this administration, and which has provided 150,000 to 200,000 jobs a year since 1960. I speak also of the launching of the vocational and training program on a scale such as this country had never seen before.

We also called a conference of leaders of industry and labour to meet with the government, and one recommendation made by that conference led to the establishment of the national productivity council. What has this government seen fit to do about that council? It has abolished it. That was an instrument which did good and important work to increase the productivity of our workers, and that is one of the main requirements if we are to keep abreast of our competitors. I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce will agree with me there.

We also set up the Senate manpower inquiry, and through successive budgets adopted sensible, reasonable incentives for industry through tax concessions of various sorts that gave a good impetus to industry in so-called surplus labour areas. Those measures were infinitely more logical and better applied than the hit and miss incentives for designated areas announced recently by the Minister of Finance, and which have caused a great deal of confusion among organized and established industries. The case of Brantford is only one in point. Just a few days ago the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) pointed out how unjust it was for regions such as Pembroke to get the advantages, when a sister town in Renfrew South did not benefit from them. The same holds true for many other areas throughout the country.

It was our government which also launched the great export drive that pushed Canada's exports to new all time highs. This was due to new, liberal and sensible ways which we adopted to finance trade exports, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows that if our exports are showing increasing gains it is due to those types of measures.

One of the measures which was ridiculed by members of the government when they sat in opposition was devaluation of the dollar. Everybody knows that devaluation, adopted by the previous government, was an act of great courage unparalleled in political government in Canada—because it was adopted in the middle of an election campaign—has brought great benefit and was a major incentive to exports.

Mr. Pickersgill: Adopted? It was forced on you.

Mr. Martineau: The Secretary of State seems to think that is not so, but let him read some of the words of his colleague, the Minister of Finance when he wrote his treatise, "Troubled Canada", in which he advocated devaluation as one of the measures that had to be taken.

The measures now being put forward by this government are weak and anaemic. They do not respond to the gravity of the situation. The Minister of Labour has announced his nine points program, but this afternoon the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) pointed out the weakness of that program. As another masterpiece of economic recovery we had the budget of June 13, the main features of which were increased taxes; and now there has been evolved, by the brains trust that surrounds members of the government, the municipal loan development fund. This is a measure of doubtful economic impact because it imposes new charges on the municipalities that they can ill afford to bear.

The works to be financed by the municipalities under that fund are works which, by their very nature, will be tremendously costly, and most municipalities have already reached a borrowing point beyond which they can ill afford to go. The government hopes to have the municipalities and their taxpayers finance this plan to cure a problem which, if it is to be cured, must be approached on a comprehensive and co-ordinated basis by the government, and that is why most financial critics do not agree with it. Only today John Meyer had an article about it in the Montreal Gazette, and said he felt the municipal loan fund would not provide the jobs which the government expects it to, and would place new burdens on the municipalities.

Members of the government made a lot of hay, or shall we say, a lot of noise about the national economic council.

[Translation]

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne), the father of the economic council, is not in the house tonight.

I have noticed the well-justified criticism of that measure by the hon. member from the Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve).

With much fanfare, the President of the Privy Council brilliantly introduced that legislation in the house and had it passed. That newly established council is one of the organizations of our country. However, the President of the Privy Council maintains a complete silence on the matter. Is he ashamed of it? Why does he not submit a report on the business of that council?

That council was designed with the idea of co-ordinating all activities and "live forces" of the country in order to achieve full employment. Mr. Speaker, we have not seen anything up to now which could justify such hope.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, if we want to solve the unemployment problem, we must not aggravate our relations with our neighbours to the south, which is what the gentlemen sitting on the treasury benches are doing now. On the contrary, we must strive to resume friendly relations with that great country so that agreements can be reached, and we have not been given any indication of that so far.

We must also set up a better system of consultations with the provinces about unemployment as well as economic matters. I would suggest that a conference be called specifically to study and recommend measures to be taken with regard to unemployment and economic development.

To that end, we could propose appropriate amendments to the winter works program, creating thus, as I said a short while ago, many jobs throughout the country.

For instance, instead of having only the designated areas benefit from the federal contribution of 60 per cent towards the cost of labour, that measure should be extended to all sections of the country and thought should also be given to the possibility of having the federal government pay for part of the cost of machinery and materials used by the municipalities in their winter works program. That would surely be an efficient way to fight unemployment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Text]

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, one of the great wonders of mankind is that one never becomes too old to learn. We note today that after six or nearly seven years on the treasury benches, during which period the present official opposition, and particularly their front benchers, took the attitude that there was no unemployment problem in this nation and repeatedly refused to recognize the existence of unemployment as a problem in our nation, they have suddenly discovered now that there is a problem of unemployment.

Mr. Lambert: That is a lot of tripe.

Mr. Regan: There are many ideas on how government should be carried on, Mr. Speaker, and the idea of the previous government as regards the unemployment question was what is known as "government by heads in the sand". We now note, as I say, that hon. members opposite have withdrawn their heads from the sand, as the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) has just demonstrated, and discovered that there is such a thing as unemployment in Canada. Having spent such a long time without noticing this fact, it seems that the hon. member is only now catching up on his reading, because despite what he considers and describes as a very serious problem of unemployment, he used the better part of his 40 minutes to recite and review speeches and books written by Liberals during the past six years.

Mr. Lambert: Read the amendment.

Mr. Regan: I am glad to see that he is at least catching up on his reading in that regard.

I was greatly surprised this afternoon when the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) chose as his topic for this motion of non-confidence that of unemployment. I think it is somewhat ironic that the hon. member for Ontario, who was minister of labour during the years when unemployment was so great a problem, when it grew and grew in size to monumental proportions, should come here after six years of being unable to contain or solve the problem and now criticize the government of this day for not having completely solved the problem in the six months during which they have been in office, despite the fact that each one of those six months has shown a decrease in unemployment in this country.

Unlike those who subscribe to the "heads in the sand" theory of government, we in the Liberal party recognize that unemployment is still a problem in this nation, a problem which we inherited last spring. Indeed, it is a major and tragic problem. In my view there is nothing so important to the dignity of the working man in this country as the matter of finding a job. I can think of nothing more tragic than a man with a family to support who is willing to work, who wants to work, but who cannot find work. I suggest that this government has taken a great number of measures, some of which, as the hon. member pointed out, have not yet borne fruit, because these things cannot all be accomplished in six months. But they have taken very significant steps to curb unemployment and create new employment. Just to mention some of those steps in passing, there is the extension of the winter works program, which has been altered to make it much more effective. We have incentives to new industry, such as the tax holiday and increased depreciation; and I think another very significant step is the municipal loan fund, which can result in a great deal of extra employment in this coming winter. Perhaps the most significant thing of all which has been accomplished by the new administration in this regard is the very coming into power of this government, which has restored business confidence in the country.

Mr. Brewin: What a dreamer.

Mr. Regan: There is no question but that the wheat sales have helped create some employment. There is also no question that the wheat sales have helped to create an atmosphere which will encourage business to expand and commence new enterprises, which will in turn create employment. The government of indecision which went out of office last spring was one which did not inspire this business confidence, and as a consequence we were not able to have an atmosphere wherein new jobs became plentiful.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that if we were to dissect this question of unemployment and analyse it we would find, in looking at the problem as a whole right across the country, that the disturbing thing is that there are large and severe pockets of unemployment. This matter was mentioned by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) earlier today. Unemployment is not spread evenly across the country; there are certain areas in which it is a very serious problem. By the same token there are many non-skilled workers amongst those who are unemployed. On the other hand, there are jobs in some areas going begging for lack of skilled workers. There is also the problem of the worker whose skill has become unusable because of technological change in industry, and who today is unable to find employment.

With reference to this question of unemployment in certain areas, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government's program in establishing the Department of Industry and area development incentive is of very significant importance. I would further suggest, speaking as a maritimer, if I may be allowed to do so, that the funding of the Atlantic development board and the revitalizing of that organization by enlarging its membership is a very progressive step toward helping create employment in the maritime provinces.

Turning to the question of skill of the workers of this country, the program of vocational training started by the previous government was a good one. I would hasten to point out that it was not a new or original concept, as vocational training had been participated in by federal governments as far back as 1919. Nevertheless I think we need to extend and develop the training and retraining of our workers. It is important to make full use of the national employment service. One of the more significant accomplishments of the present government, something which I hope will merely be an initial step in a new direction, is the assistance which has been granted to older workers in order to encourage employers to employ people over the age of 45. This is new territory for government in this country, and I think this initial step will certainly be helpful. I think the question should be closely studied because much more can be done to encourage the employment of those who as a class, have greater difficulty in obtaining employment. We should attempt increasingly to assure that young people do not enter the labour market until they have the necessary skills. There is certainly a continuing problem, not only in this country but in every major country in the western world caused to a large extent by changing technological processes, and the fact that fewer workers are needed today to handle machines than in the past. I wish to point out that assistance on a strictly regional basis is no permanent answer because it does not really solve the problem; it merely transfers employment from one area to another. One example is the competition for shipping between the St. Lawrence seaway and the Atlantic ports. I do not see that merely transferring the handling of goods from the port of Halifax, which has handled them in the past, to some inland port will help the over-all economy in any way, particularly when we consider the fact that the goods will be carried from Toronto or some other port to the west by ships which are foreign-owned and that wages will go to foreign seamen rather than to employees of the C.N.R.

Sometimes, of course, the transfer of labour can help, for example when it creates an immediate area market which in turn can create new jobs. Nevertheless, wholesale retraining and the provision of an effective and realistic education program is the only long range answer to unemployment. This should be taken together with the point to which I referred earlier—keeping young people out of the labour market as far as possible until they have acquired skills. I will be the first to admit that this calls for much more investigation and participation by the government than has hitherto been the case because, of course, there are obvious pressures—a young person cannot readily stay at school if his family economic circumstances are such as to make it necessary for him to leave school in order to find whatever employment is available.

I think the answers lie, also, in the field of the export and manufacture of new types of goods. We must export more than we have in the past and, as has been pointed out many times in this house, this is tied up with the foreign ownership of such a large proportion of industry in this country. In addition, we must see to it that we manufacture, here in Canada, types of goods which we presently import from other areas. These measures must at all times be linked with the realization that employment should be shared among as many people as possible. Walter Reuther, who is perhaps the most able labour leader in the United States, has recognized that labour today, both in his union and elsewhere, must follow a policy of less overtime and a larger working force. Employment must be spread, and spending power must be spread.

I think it is important that both unions and management in Canada should keep this concept in mind; unions in reaching their collective agreements must try not only to protect those who are already employed, but to recognize the position taken by Mr. Reuther and see to it that the way is open for as many people to be employed as possible.

I wonder if I might turn for a moment to the maritime area and the maritime economy. I agreed with many of the remarks made today by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). He mentioned that, in the past, military spending has been used to assist financially the economy of certain areas. I think that is true. I think it was done on a large scale under the previous Liberal administration. I will point to the building of Camp Gagetown in New Brunswick at a cost, I am told, of about $40 million. Ever since, that camp has pumped a great deal of energy into the economy of the province of New Brunswick. There is no doubt that the basing of a large portion of the Royal Canadian Navy in Halifax has helped develop the economy of that city. Over the years, this military spending has given Halifax the buoyancy to develop its economy still further. With each passing year the economy has become more diversified and in better over-all condition. The presence of the navy and the existence of other military bases in the area led in turn to the establishment of the Fairey Aviation Company, when the Liberal government was in power, and the Cossor plant, both large employees of labour, and to the modernization of the shipyards. These companies, together with the government, created in turn an immediate market in the Halifax area which enabled that city to reach a sufficient size to attract further industries. Although our economy would be in a sorry state if military expenditures were withdrawn at the present time, nevertheless the development of our economy is such that, with each passing year, it becomes more self-sufficient.

I must say I strongly disagree with the hon. member for Port Arthur in at least one respect. He made some comments about the shipyards at Halifax being inefficient. I believe he attributed those comments to someone else. I suggest the Halifax shipyards can hold their own with any in Canada. They are the shipyards which first built destroyers in this country. They have not only been the leaders in this industry, but in time of war they undertook all kinds of difficult repairs under the most adverse conditions that could be imagined.

Turning from the home area I should like to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) suggesting that to a large extent the combating of unemployment should be left to the provinces. At the risk of being branded a centralist, I cannot agree with this notion at all. We have a centralized economy. Workers are transferred by many companies from province to province and from one coast to the other. Goods manufactured in any part of Canada are marketed throughout the entire nation, and to combat unemployment in an economy of this type I suggest we need centralized direction of the measures being taken. I do not say the battle against unemployment should be fought only by the federal authorities. Certainly, the provincial governments have a large responsibility. But the measures taken must to a very large extent be given centralized direction from Ottawa. Unemployment insurance payments and family allowance payments have provided a cushion against recession in the past, along with other measures, and prevented the economy from sinking into depressions such as existed in the thirties. However, we must strive to find new ways of lessening the impact of major employment changes both in Canada as a whole and in specific areas. Whenever it is necessary because of large scale changes in employment and types of employment, it must be the role of government to see to it that we phase out old programs and phase in new ones so that the blow to the economy is not as serious as it might otherwise have been.

I submit that this government has brought forward good new measures and policies. It has begun the monumental task of overcoming unemployment in this country, a task which involves the dignity and security of every Canadian worker. Let us continue this battle until it is successful and place Canada in a position to profit from new sales and expanding trade in an era when living standards are rising throughout the world.

Mr. MacEwan: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he consider the cancellation of the general purpose frigate program has been of assistance to the workers in the Halifax shipyards to which he referred.

Mr. Regan: I will be happy to answer that question. I do not consider that the expenditure of government funds for military defence should be used as a relief measure. I submit that as long as this government does as has been indicated, and sees to it that new and efficient programs designed to produce appropriate and effective weapons come forth in the days ahead, the nation as a whole and, indeed, my constituents recognize there is little to be gained by manufacturing weapons which are already obsolete.

Mr. Webb: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Regan: A privilege.

Mr. Webb: Is it the the hon. member's view that a government that imposes a new 4 per cent sales tax on all building materials, a government that reduces the extent of the winter works program by some two weeks, a government that fires a widow and hires a person who has three other jobs, is carrying out policies that will help to relieve unemployment?

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I do not know much about the widow but I will try to answer the first two parts of the question, if I may be allowed to do so. I believe the first part of the question dealt with the establishment of the sales tax. In that regard I would say that sometimes a government is forced to come to very important decisions and in this instance, with the fantastic deficits built up over the years and the shaky situation of our economy, the government recognized that in order to help to re-establish the confidence of business in the government of the day it would be necessary to come closer to a balanced economy, which will be done in due course.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What is your deficit going to be this year?

Mr. Regan: I would also say—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What is your deficit going to be this year?

An hon. Member: Oh, shut up.

Mr. Regan: I would also say in that regard that it is interesting to note that construction this year is up some 15 per cent.

Mr. Douglas: They are just getting in before the 8 per cent sales tax comes into force.

Mr. Regan: With reference to the second part of the question—what was the second part of the question?

Mr. Douglas: Stay away from the widow.

Mr. Regan: I cannot remember it. The question was very involved and I had difficulty in following it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to cut short a member who was so amusing. I am afraid I have left most of my best jokes at home. However, if my Liberal friends across the way follow their usual habit some of the things I may say favouring the former administration are liable to meet with as much merriment as the last speaker's explanations did.

Unemployment Measures Lacking

To begin with, I should like to point out to all hon. members that the Conservatives have been very restrained with regard to the question of Canada's unemployment problem. I am sure that most of us have a genuine concern for those people who are unable to find work for short or long periods of time, and I have no doubt that over the last several years most members of the house have had this feeling. There is a difference, however, between taking up the subject with the prime objective of trying to add something to government plans which may assist them, and taking up the subject because it happens to be a good political football, no matter what the consequences to the unemployed.

It does not take much memory for those of us who have been in the house in the last five or six years to recall the fact that unemployment was an almost daily subject of questions from the opposite side of the house. At that time the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), now Secretary of State for External Affairs, had his own bureau of statistics which he quoted daily at great length, and every day in one form or another he brought up the question of unemployment. I need not remind the house that the Chair was not exactly strict. The government had an overwhelming majority and we had a Speaker who was very kind and tolerant. The objective was at all costs to avoid any pretence or show that the opposition was being strangled. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that nothing short of strangling would have stopped the hon. member for Essex East bringing up the subject of unemployment every day.

He did not bring it up in a manner calculated to put before the government of the day some helpful solution or hint as to policy, some course of conduct that might aid or ease the situation. Every day his questions were so framed as to try to give the people of the country the idea that there was unemployment in ever increasing numbers and that the government was doing absolutely nothing. In short, if ever there was a prolonged, sustained and deliberate attempt to undermine the confidence of the people in the government, the opposition of that day was responsible for such an attempt. I suggest it would do hon. members a lot of good to look at the present situation and the restrained way in which the opposition has considered this question, and contrast the way the former government used to handle the situation as compared with the attitude of the present government. Because, if they do, they will then have some idea of why the opposition has chosen to bring up the subject of unemployment on a supply motion, so that there can be a full and complete debate.

It can be said of a subject such as unemployment that it is so wide ranging there is some possibility that some of us may miss the target, and that there are so many aspects that some of them will not be discussed in detail. On the other hand, this debate does provide scope for those hon. members who wish to put forward ideas involving positive schemes to help the government in creating more, better paying and longer lasting jobs for Canadians.

If we are to consider whether there is merit in any scheme so brought forward, I think it is not out of place for me to bring to the attention of the house what I consider to be the general scheme and plan of attack that the previous administration had been following for several years. Certainly a little reminder along this line seems to me to be absolutely essential, bearing in mind the speech made by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). That hon. gentleman has quite a command of the English language. He has a habit of speaking like a college professor, almost humble at times but at the same time seeming to exhibit great authority with regard to the subject, as one who has done considerable research and who is thinking deeply about the problems besetting us.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, that in listening to his remarks today, part of them did seem somewhat like an analysis of some of the problems of unemployment in this country, but I suggest that it was all too shallow. The hon. member made a long speech which touched but gently and very lightly on some of the most obvious headings under which this subject can be discussed, without probing deeply to find out if any of these topics had a bearing on unemployment, which had the strongest bearing, which needed government attention and which had had the most government attention. Certainly the hon. member made a speech which sounded very wise, and I am sure it will be taken to heart for about as long as he spoke; because it sounded good. There was much more of art than matter in his speech.

The question of unemployment can be discussed under several headings. I can only speak of the actions which were being taken by the government at the time I entered the house in 1958. I can well recall when the unemployment situation started to get better. The short term project of pouring government money into housing was the first step taken. Here was a way that jobs could be provided immediately and results achieved at once for government funds spent. At the same time the government tried to press on with public works projects. Some which had been planned before were speeded up, and every department scraped around to try to find more government projects which could be proceeded with immediately, instead of in the years to come.

I will admit that those are short term measures. There was some unemployment in 1958. In fact, it soon became apparent that as the effects of automation hit this country year after year, we were going to continue to have a serious unemployment problem for some time. Automation was throwing people out of work faster than we could put them to work. At the same time, the new and revised industries in other countries, such as Germany, Italy and Japan, were flooding world markets and pushing us out of our traditional selling places. They were going farther than that. They were making serious inroads into Canadian markets, so that our own manufacturers had a more difficult time trying to hold their own, without considering expansion.

This is the heart of the problem, automation, Mr. Speaker. In order to compete successfully against their competitors, Canadians had to put in that type of machinery and institute that type of process which their competitors had. This required smaller and smaller quantities of labour to produce larger and larger quantities of goods. At the same time, the market was shrinking and we had ever increasing demands for jobs. Certainly, no one in the government of that day took the problem lightly. I sometimes felt that some people did not grasp the full impact of the size of the problem. However, many minds worked very hard on it. I may say, sir, that there were some good debates on the subject and some worth while ideas were brought forth. I can honestly say that I believe every avenue of governmental activity, every method of government assistance to industry that sounded at all practical, was taken up. Some of these schemes were put into force, while others were merely in the planning stage.

While providing this new machinery to meet automation, we had to concentrate on the problems of Canadian businessmen in getting the necessary capital. This was at a time when our country had its balance of payments difficulties. There were new and increased demands, and yet heavier borrowings in world markets. We set up planning boards combining business, labour and government, to study how we could attack the problem. We increased the powers and the lending capacity of the industrial development bank to try to ease the money situation. We provided small loans for businessmen. We instituted a winter works program to try to spread the work around the year. We increased farm loans and brought in various extensions to farm legislation in the feeling that if the farm economy is healthy it helps the whole economy of the country. In fact, no avenue of short or long term assistance was overlooked.

The shipbuilding industry was hard hit, so we put in shipbuilding subsidies. The coal mines of Nova Scotia were in danger of closing so they were given rail subsidies. There was a feeling that, the greater the total development wealth of the country the better was our chance of surviving as an industrial nation. A program of national development was therefore instituted. There were roads to the north, new airports, new government buildings to open up new possibilities and fields of wealth. There were the forest access roads to open up new forests.

Co-operation with the provinces was not overlooked. Since this is a federal system and the provinces have their responsibilities, powers and opportunities to take care of so many of these problems, the provinces themselves were given a larger share of tax revenue to enable them to carry out broad, ambitious schemes. We had to attack unemployment, not remotely but in every manner in which it could be influenced by governmental activity, every potential activity in the country.

I should like to refer to the extension and expansion of the efforts of the Department of Trade and Commerce, which was one more cog in the strengthening of this machine. It is no accident that the Department of Trade and Commerce increased the number of its representatives abroad. It was the result of careful planning that brought these representatives home to train them in new roles and send them out to these new countries with a new dedication, a new purpose and a new spirit. No longer were they acquiescent representatives, but active, aggressive salesmen alert to the opportunities for Canadian businessmen.

Along with these opportunities for sales, the government assumed a greater responsibility. It was not a case of saying: Here is your chance for a sale, make it if you can. Certainly some of these potential sales carried a great deal of risk. There was a chance the customer would not be able to pay. You can always find more customers if you can give credit. The government was responsive by helping to give export credits insurance to those who made their own scheme. All of these measures were directed toward the industrial development and expansion necessary to provide jobs.

There were other methods taken. There are other problems to be faced. We had a lot of depressed areas. Special legislation was introduced to try to spread the benefits of government assistance across the nation in an equitable way. We found that in coping with the demands of automation for new machinery, we had to provide new pools of labour. Canada had been a supplier of raw materials for years, and suddenly we found ourselves in a machine age. We had to buy the new machines and provide the money to do it. Then we found we had to supply the skilled workers, and we did not have them. It came as a bit of a shock to find that Canadians were amongst the poorest educated people in the world. It had always been so easy to make a good living in this country, in this land of opportunity, that there was not the pressure on young people to develop skills. Once we found ourselves in this era we had a call for skilled help, just as they had in Europe. We found we were unable to provide it. While every day there were long columns in the newspapers for jobs wanted, people searching for work, there were other long columns of employers desperately searching for skilled workers that we could not provide.

This, of course, gave rise to the training scheme. While education is a provincial responsibility, it became apparent that the federal government would have to intervene if we were going to meet this problem. We had to take on that responsibility as part of the job of getting Canada rolling and ready to take its place in this new industrial age.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 5, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE RESPECTING HAL BANKS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege affecting the hon. members of this house. My question of privilege is on two grounds, and refers to a statement made yesterday by the Minister of Justice with reference to Mr. Banks.

My first point of privilege is that the minister misinformed the house with reference to the issuance of a warrant and the date of a warrant for Mr. Banks' arrest. My second point of privilege is that the minister said it was against public policy to disclose those facts. In answer to my point of privilege yesterday and to questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition, myself, the hon. member for Medicine Hat and the hon. member for Winnipeg North, the Minister of Justice, when pressed after several questions, replied as follows, as reported on page 4354 of yesterday's Hansard:

> Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of those questions have already been answered. The charge was laid in Montreal. It was laid against Mr. Banks. It was laid on October 23, and on October 31 search warrants were issued arising out of these charges. In so far as the last part of the question is concerned, I do not believe it is in the public interest to give that information.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us deal with the facts. Since listening to the Minister of Justice yesterday I have had the courthouse records checked. I say that with regard to the major point on which we sought to get information yesterday, the question of the date, the Minister of Justice misinformed the house.

Here are the facts, as gained from searching the courthouse records. On October 23 an information was laid by Joseph MacLeod, R.C.M.P., that Ernest Paul Carsh, Eldon Richardson alias Jack Richardson, Hal Banks, and Jack Caspar of California and other persons unnamed did conspire to commit bodily harm.

May I pause here. Several days ago we asked to be told the date of the alleged offence. The Minister of Justice stated it was around August, 1957. According to the charge it was a continuing offence from January 1 to August 31, 1957.

And now we come to the most important point. According to the answer, the search warrant was issued on October 31. On what date was the warrant for arrest issued? This may seem to be quibbling about time, but time is of the essence when a man such as Banks is at large charged with a criminal offence. On October 23 a warrant was issued for their arrest. Search warrants were issued by Judge Trottier for the homes of Carsh, Banks and Richardson and for S.I.U. headquarters. In brief, on October 23 a warrant was issued for the arrest of Banks. In other words, at the time Banks was here on parliament hill there was a warrant issued for his arrest, but it was not executed.

As to the other warrants of October 31, let me explain the circumstances briefly. On that date search warrants were issued. For what? They had nothing to do with the conspiracy charge. In this regard I say the Minister of Justice misinformed the house. On October 31 search warrants were issued. No charges were laid. They were in respect of the alleged violation of section 268 of the Canada Shipping Act, enticing to desert. Involved as subjects of the allegation were 16 sailors of the motor vessel Franquelin, Montreal registry. Nothing was found at Banks' home. In other words, at the time the charge was laid on October 23 there was a warrant issued for the arrest of Banks. The Minister of Justice left the impression that this warrant was not issued until October 31.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the statement as you read it before.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am listening intently to the hon. member, but I would remind him this is not the time to make a speech. Please try to present your question of privilege as concisely as possible.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry if I have been sent down the wrong path, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is that the minister misinformed the house about the date. He said the charge was laid on October 23 and that on October 31 search warrants were issued arising out of this charge. We ask why Banks was not arrested. I point out once again that there was a warrant in force for the arrest of Mr. Banks contemporaneously with the laying of the charge.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I doubt very much whether the point the hon.

member for Bow River has raised constitutes a question of privilege. However, whether it be a question of privilege or not, I feel that what he has said should be answered.

I say at once that I did not misinform the house. I think what happened was this; the hon. gentleman did not read correctly the information which I gave to the house and he misinterpreted, either willingly or unwillingly, the information which I gave yesterday and prior thereto.

Let us see what the facts are. On Thursday last, when I rose to answer a question put by the hon. member for Ontario, I stated that a charge had been laid against Banks in Montreal for conspiracy to commit an assault occasioning bodily harm to Captain Walsh. That charge was laid on Wednesday, October 23, 1963 and not on October 31, as my hon. friend said a moment ago.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: He did not.

Mr. Chevrier: That is the only charge that has been laid against Banks to date, although other charges against Banks and certain other officers of the S.I.U. arising out of the Norris report and the recent illegal strike are being considered.

At the same time that the charge was laid against Banks, similar charges were laid against men by the names of Richardson and Carsh. On Friday, November 1 and Saturday, November 2 search warrants relating to such charges and to possible conspiracy to contravene the Canada Shipping Act were executed upon various premises, including Banks' residence and the S.I.U. halls in Montreal, Toronto and Thorold. In some instances the search warrants were taken out at or about the same time that the charges were laid against Banks, Richardson and Carsh, and in some instances just before the searches were executed.

Warrants for the arrest of Banks, Richardson and Carsh were issued contemporaneously with or immediately following the taking and swearing of the informations relating to the charges. In the case of Banks such warrant, I have been informed by the special crown prosecutor, was executed at two o'clock this afternoon and Mr. Banks was put under arrest at that time.

These warrants were not executed immediately upon being taken out.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friends ask why, and I think they have a right to know why. That arises out of the question put by the hon. member as to why the warrant was not executed when Mr. Banks was here on parliament hill. It is my recollection, though I may be wrong—I will have to check—that they were not issued until after that time. They were issued some days later.

In answer to the question which was put, the first concern of the government in the matter of the strike was to get the men back to work. Having got the men back to work and having got the ships and the grain moving, the next concern of the government was to keep the men on the job on the ships. I thought, rightly or wrongly, having regard to these circumstances, that when the trustees were entering upon their duties as trustees of the union I should not, when one department was acting in one direction, attempt to interfere with the duties of those trustees. That explains the reason we did not proceed. I did not consider it would be good timing at that time. As minister I was bound to take into account the whole situation, and with all respect to members of the house I have taken that situation into consideration.

Having regard to the fact that the matter has been disposed of in so far as the arrest at least of one person at two o'clock is concerned, I should think, Mr. Speaker, that that disposes of the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the general interest in this matter I have allowed the discussion to go on a little longer than is perhaps justified. However, I am sure hon. members will not object if I call to their attention Beauchesne, fourth edition, citation 104, subsection 5:

> As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity. If he is not so satisfied he may allow the member to make a statement with a view to ascertaining whether or not a prima facie case can be made out. The right of making complaint of a breach of privilege is open to any member of the house, and, even if an individual member alone is affected, is not confined to that member.

Then if we go to citation 113, which it may be useful to recall at this time, hon. members will find the following:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters that should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

Then it goes on, and the point at issue is this, and I quote from the same citation 113:

> But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

It seems to me that those words apply to the present situation almost word for word.

I am sorry, but I do not see a prima facie case of privilege in the matter raised by the hon. member.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE TO POLAND

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that on behalf of the government of Canada I have this morning signed a long term wheat agreement with the government of Poland. In connection with the negotiation of the agreement it has been my pleasure to welcome to Ottawa Mr. Trampczynski, the Polish minister of foreign trade. Mr. Trampczynski, who I am pleased to say is in the gallery this afternoon, signed the agreement on behalf of his government.

The agreement is for a period of three years, during which Poland will purchase and Canada will supply 1.2 million metric tons of Canadian wheat, that is about 44 million bushels, for shipment in the following quantities: In the first year of the agreement, 400,000 metric tons, of which a minimum of 200,000 tons shall be shipped between the opening of navigation and July, 1964. In the second and third years of the agreement a combined total of 800,000 metric tons in such yearly amounts as the buyer chooses, provided that the quantity purchased in each of these years shall not be less than 300,000 metric tons.

Purchases under this agreement will be facilitated by the extension of credit arrangements under the Export Credits Insurance Act providing, as has been customary in all the transactions with Poland, for payment over three years. Poland has been a regular customer for Canadian wheat, having made its first purchases in 1955 under credit arrangements. Since that year Poland has purchased wheat from Canada annually, and these purchases have totalled 73 million bushels. The important new agreement signed today is evidence of the desire of both governments to provide for the continuation of this trade on a regular basis.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Canadians I should like to join with the minister in welcoming the minister of trade of Poland to our country, where he put into formal arrangements the long term agreement covering the continuing trade that has been going on for a number of years.

Mr. Pearson: Since 1955.

Mr. Hamilton: However, I would like to make one or two observations, and the first is that this is the second occasion we have had such an announcement made outside the house. It is understood that when parliament is in session, announcements like this should be made to the members of parliament first, but the minister is new and I know he has to learn.

The second point I want to make is that I trust and understand from the announcement, although it was not too clear on this point, that the price arrangement will be the traditional one, namely that the price will be set during the term of the first contract and each succeeding contract will be negotiated at the price existing at that time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members of the house and the people of Canada generally will be pleased that the Canadian wheat board has been able to secure another agreement for the sale of wheat. The prairie farmers are now receiving the benefit of the long years they struggled to get a wheat board as the sole marketing agency for handling their grain.

If anything were needed to prove the value of such an agency, I think the events of recent months have gone far to do that. I believe it was Winston Churchill who once spoke about the new world setting out to redress the balance of the old.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was Canning.

Mr. Douglas: I think in our case the communist world is setting out to redress the financial imbalance of the western world, and we can be very thankful that the large purchases from east of the iron curtain are going to help Canada move this year toward a balance of payments.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, this is another of the wheat deals that have been announced in the house recently, and we are happy to see a further sale of 44 million bushels of Canadian wheat. It is worthy of note in this particular case that the arrangements between the Canadian government and the Polish government back in 1955 actually set the stage for credit arrangements that have been so useful to the Canadian wheat board.

There is just one further thing I wish to mention at this stage, and that is that there is a problem in eastern Canada respecting feed grain. I hope the minister responsible for announcements by the Canadian wheat board, and others across the way, will take this matter under consideration at once, refer it to the committee on agriculture and colonization, and get that committee active so that we may make certain there will be adequate stocks in position, and at a reasonable price, for the ensuing months.

Sale of Wheat to Poland

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, this new sale of Canadian wheat to Poland gives proof that several countries are interested in securing some of this important wheat production we have in Canada.

It seemed to me, as I heard the Minister of Agriculture make the announcement with respect to the agreement signed this morning between the Polish government and the Canadian government for the sale of 44 million bushels of wheat, that he could also have informed us of a meeting between himself, the officials of his department and eastern farmers with a view to reaching an agreement with eastern farmers for selling wheat to them under similar terms.

There is another very important point. When the Minister of Agriculture meets delegations made up of visitors from foreign lands, he could perhaps take this opportunity to point out to them that we have in eastern Canada surpluses of apples, potatoes, wool and lumber. We even have gold and copper we could export, and then steel, milk and foodstuffs. Why not offer those buyers, at the same time, the things that are available in Canada?

I am merely urging the Minister of Agriculture to consider the field of agriculture not only in terms of wheat but also in terms of Canadian products in general.

We sincerely approve of this new wheat sale to Poland, but, as I said, the same opportunities should be given to eastern farmers.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his statement on the sale of grain to Poland. He said that this grain would not be shipped until the open season. Is there an inference that maritime ports are to be scrapped the minute summer comes? If not, will the minister give every assurance that maritime ports will take part in this grain activity all year round?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can certainly give assurance to my hon. friend that we will need all our ports operating at full capacity from now until the Russian contract is filled. Thereafter I would hesitate to be definite, but I would say that the prospects are much better now than they have been at any time in the last six years.

[Mr. Olson.]

PUBLIC SERVICE

GLASSCO COMMISSION—IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, recently I promised the hon. member for Danforth and the hon. member for Calgary North that I would make a statement this week with respect to the implementation of certain recommendations of the royal commission on government organization. The government's intentions have already been made known with respect to the development of a common procurement agency, as recommended by the royal commission, and the realignment of duties and functions affecting the printing bureau. This present statement covers a considerable number of additional recommendations on which decisions have now been made.

The additional recommendations of the royal commission which have now been approved cover a wide range of subjects dealt with in the first three volumes of the report. They include recommendations dealing with financial management; personnel management; purchasing and supply; transportation; telecommunications; printing and publishing; the "make or buy" problem; legal services; economic and statistical services; public information services; education services; health services; lending, guaranteeing and insuring; post office; and other services. As the full list of recommendations now approved, including those covered by this latest decision, is relatively long, numbering more than 60, I wonder if the house would agree that instead of reading them all I might table the list. My office will be ready to provide this list to all those hon. members who may ask for it. An opportunity will be presented, in the consideration of the estimates for 1963-64, to discuss the details of these recommendations if any member wishes to do so.

I should point out, of course, that this list does not by any means represent all the recommendations made by the royal commission under the headings I have mentioned. It does represent those recommendations which the government, under the procedures it has established, has been able to review to date, and with respect to which the government has indicated its agreement in principle. Having accepted them in principle, the government will now work toward their implementation.

The process of review of the recommendations of the royal commission is continuing and, as further decisions are made by the government, the house will be informed from time to time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the tabling of this list?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman assumed the position of President of the Privy Council and took over the administration of the bureau of government organization, it was felt by many that he had little enthusiasm for the recommendations of this commission. Today we have had a list of generalized items, but it is impossible to say how far the government has gone. On its face it appears that the purpose for which this commission was set up, namely to bring an end to waste, extravagance, duplication of services and red tape, has been lost sight of by this government.

The hon. gentleman mentioned that some 60 items are dealt with. Those will have to be studied. Having regard to the experience of the past it may be a list barely touched in any way. I can only say that on the basis of the experience we have had, this government is giving but lukewarm support to the recommendations which were made, which were designed to bring about the changes I mentioned a moment ago as well as to end the governmental administrative jungle that has accumulated through the years and has mushroomed since the second world war.

It is now clear, on the basis of the experience we have had, that except for minor changes the commission report in the main is going to be pigeonholed. These items which are referred to are, generally speaking, the insignificant recommendations. There are some recommendations which naturally will not be accepted, but I would say to the minister that in mentioning that 60 cases have been considered, from the experience we have had to date the dribbles have been proceeded with by the government but the major reasons for the recommendations and the recommendations themselves have been neglected.

However, we will have an opportunity of looking over this list in detail when the estimates are before the house. In the meantime I think Canadians as a whole will feel that this is just another example of 60 days of promises without carrying those promises into effect. What has been done is merely to touch the edge and to pretend that the recommendations are being carried out.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the minister's statement was almost useless to us in that he did not give us any kind of framework on which the government is approaching this matter. He has given us a list. We will have to look at the list to see whether it contains anything significant. He gave us no indication as to what estimates will be affected; I suppose these changes will apply to almost every department. Does this mean that we will have to hare from one department to another on the estimates in order to find out what is going on, or is the government prepared to make some provision when discussing the estimates to enable us to quiz the President of the Privy Council and Mr. Davidson, who is advising him, and get the picture once and for all of all the changes relating to this royal commission? That is all we have to say at this time.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we are glad to see that the government is taking some action toward clearing up the accumulated government jungle which has gathered during the last few years. We hope that this is a sign of better things to come.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I think it requires quite a stretch of the imagination for us to be able to congratulate the government following the statement just made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne), since it was devoid of meaning and had no other purpose than to announce something about which we had not been previously advised. It had to do with some sort of reform.

We would rather wait before offering our congratulations, since before throwing bouquets, we want to know why. Otherwise, we might be inclined to throw in the vase also.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order to suggest most respectfully to Your Honour that the attention of the house be drawn at an early date to the rules respecting comments on motions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would also rise to say that statements made by ministers might very well be avoided altogether if they do not contain more information than this.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. My question arises out of the list that he tabled today. Can the hon. gentleman assure us that in making these changes in government organization there is no conflict with the right of collective bargaining which the government has undertaken to give to its civil servants? In other words, is there liaison between the bureau of government organization and the committee studying the question of collective bargaining for the civil service?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that liaison exists at present, and I am not aware that any conflict has arisen out of the implementation of these recommendations.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE SALARIES OF SENIOR EXECUTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State and ask him whether the article in today's Ottawa Journal by that eminent reporter Richard Jackson—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to see the general applause in that connection—that salary increases are in the works not only for Alphonse Ouimet but for the whole senior executive echelon of the C.B.C. is correct. The report goes on to say that $35,000 or $40,000 will be the salary, and that this matter is before treasury board. Is that correct?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the advantage, as does the right hon. gentleman, of advance copies of the Ottawa Journal, so I have not yet had a chance to read the observations of that eminent friend of the right hon. gentleman. The right hon. gentleman reminded us yesterday that in asking and answering questions we should obey the rules. One of the rules is that a question cannot be asked or answered with respect to the accuracy of newspaper stories.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I ask the hon. gentleman this. Is it not a fact that there is before treasury board a proposal for an outrageous lift in the salaries of the head of the C.B.C. and other officials?

Mr. Pickersgill: As you reminded us last Thursday, Mr. Speaker, adjectives like "outrageous" are out of order when questions are asked. Of course there is no suggestion before treasury board of any outrageous increase in anyone's salary.

[Mr. Knowles.]

UNITED NATIONS

PROPOSED STUDY OF CREATION OF NUCLEAR FREE ZONES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A report from the United Nations indicates that the Polish government has approached Canadian representatives to enlist support for a resolution calling for a detailed study by the Geneva disarmament committee of the possibility of creating nuclear free zones in various parts of the world. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if such a request has been received by the Canadian government or by its representatives at the United Nations, and whether the Canadian government will support such a resolution.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There have been consultations between members of the Canadian delegation and certain countries at the United Nations with respect to the proposal for nuclear free zones. The Canadian government has already made clear the criteria which it believes must be accepted before we could agree to such a proposal. These criteria are now being examined and the whole question will be judged accordingly.

Mr. Douglas: Would the minister care to indicate the criteria which we are setting forth as the conditions upon which we would support such a motion?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, I should be glad to indicate that the consent of the countries concerned in the proposed zones is an essential consideration.

Mr. Douglas: Is one of the other criteria this, that there be an assurance that the step would not disturb the existing east-west military balance? If so, is it one which rules out Europe, Asia and the Pacific, at least?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the hon. gentleman would be the last person to suggest that considerations of this nature should not be borne in mind.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNIONS—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of a number of press reports this morning describing some of the activities of the trustees who are now in charge of the maritime unions. When does the minister anticipate bringing a report to parliament so that members here may be fully and accurately informed of the progress of the administration of this trusteeship?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): A week ago yesterday I spoke to the chairman of the board of trustees, as I indicated I would do in a reply I gave earlier to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, with respect to the provision of interim reports to the House of Commons. The chairman of the board of trustees indicated his readiness to provide such reports, but felt he ought to get settled into his job before he undertook to make his first report. This, I thought, was reasonable.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Is it the Prime Minister's intention to invite observers from the political parties in the opposition to the federal-provincial conference which will take place at the end of November, in order to make it easier for them to understand the problems which will arise in the house later on?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I think this is a most important and urgent matter, as the federal-provincial conference is to take place two weeks from now and the question, if put on the order paper, would not be answered before the conference. Anyway, I think it is possible for the Prime Minister to answer when asked whether he proposes to invite observers and not whether it is an actual fact.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member has a point. If the Prime Minister is prepared to answer there will be no objection.

[Translation]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? On July 16 last, I asked the Prime Minister the same question according to page 2235 of the official record, and he answered that this was a most interesting proposal, but that he had to consult the provincial governments before making any decision. Does the Prime Minister still think such proposal interesting? If not, would the reason be that he did not consult the provincial premiers?

[Text]

WORLD FAIR

PROPOSED SHARING OF TRANSPORTATION COSTS OF VISITORS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the President of the Privy Council?

I would have liked to address him as "Sir Maurice", but this is contrary to the standing orders.

I would like to ask him whether it is the intention of the government to agree to the suggestion made by the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Drapeau, asking the federal government to pay part of the travelling expenses of Canadians who will be going to Montreal to visit the world fair?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I feel quite sure that my hon. friend will be knighted before I become Sir Maurice, particularly if I am to be knighted by those who have suggested it.

As for the second part of the question, I think it should be put on the order paper.

[Text]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO TERMINATION OF JOINT PLANS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. He said, yesterday in Toronto, that the federal government should withdraw from the joint programs; could he tell the house whether he was expressing the views of the present government?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I only repeated yesterday what the present government itself has often said.

[Text]

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REPORTED RECOMMENDATION THAT U.S. PLANES BE PURCHASED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister confirm a report that Trans-Canada Air Lines has now recommended the purchase of United States DC-9 jet liners in preference to the Caravelles which would have been built in Montreal?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): That is a loaded question. I should be happy to give an answer on the subject if the hon. member would obey the rules of the house and put it in the proper form.

Mr. Martineau: I do not know what the minister means by a loaded question. Perhaps he means he would be embarrassed to answer it, or that he wishes to avoid it. In any event I will ask him a simple, direct question. Has T.C.A. made a recommendation with regard to its acquisition of DC-9 jet liners?

Mr. McIlraith: I would ask the hon. member to rephrase his question.

Mr. Martineau: I think the minister is being most unreasonable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is no time at which to enter upon a debate. The minister was, I think, correct in calling attention to the wording of the first question. The second one in my opinion could easily be placed on the order paper. It is not so pressing as to come within the rule.

Mr. Martineau: On the point you have just raised, Mr. Speaker, may I say this involves an order worth $200 million and is of serious concern to the national economy. In view of the reports in the papers I should have thought the minister would be glad to clarify the situation.

Mr. McIlraith: I am very happy to clarify this situation, but I will not answer loaded questions employing a technique usually found in some of our police courts. If the hon. member wishes to know whether Trans-Canada Air Lines have presented their report to the government, which is the technical evaluation of their aircraft selection committee, then the answer to that question is yes. But I will have no part in answering the other half of these loaded questions.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister a supplementary question, then. Does the government intend to act according to the recommendation contained in the report?

Mr. McIlraith: The matter has not yet been submitted to cabinet.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) is in a position to answer the question of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue.

[Mr. Martineau.]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport with respect to the purchase of aircraft by Trans-Canada Air Lines. Would the minister tell the house whether he intends to wait for the directors of T.C.A. to appear before the sessional committee of the house before choosing the aircraft which will be used by the air lines?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. As to purchases made by T.C.A., it would not be my intention that a decision should necessarily be deferred until the committee meets. I might add that I hope the committee is set up soon.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): A supplementary question. I wonder if the minister could tell us whether he intends to wait for the report of the cabinet committee which at the present time is investigating the possible merger of our two major air lines.

Mr. McIlraith: I am not aware of any such cabinet committee.

[Later:]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question has been partially answered by the answer to the question submitted by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, but I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Considering Canada's huge adverse balance of trade with the United States, would the government give consideration to not purchasing $200 million worth of United States built DC-9 jet aircraft for T.C.A. passenger service, as suggested in the Ottawa Citizen today?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the government in studying this matter will consider all relevant factors.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN CHAIRMANSHIP OF BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the financial irregularities disclosed in the MacKay report, does the Prime Minister propose the appointment of a new chairman for the banking and commerce committee?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Surely that question is out of order. If the hon. member has any accusation or charge to make against a member of this house perhaps he would make it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of the question and the statement in reply, may I say the hon. member knows there is procedure provided under standing orders for making charges; also that the Chair is subject to those standing orders, and cannot allow a question in the form asked by the hon. member. On the other hand, if he wishes to prefer charges he knows what to do. But I believe the answer of the Prime Minister was quite correct.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of laying charges—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I think the charges are amply laid in the Montreal Star of October 31. I should like to rephrase my question to the Prime Minister if I may. Can we take it then that the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace qualifies as chairman of the banking and commerce committee because of his handling of certain real estate transactions and the profits thereon?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

PENSIONS

BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS—REQUEST FOR INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises from a number of inquiries I have had from recipients of old age assistance and disabled and blind persons pensions who are wondering whether they will receive a $10 increase before Christmas similar to that given to old age security pensioners.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend is aware that I have been asked similar questions several times, and I have replied to the same effect, that this matter is up for discussion at the conference to be held on November 25 between the dominion and provincial governments.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR ENCOURAGEMENT OF FRENCH SPEAKING IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can he tell the house if the officials of his department do as much advertising to attract French speaking immigrants as they do to attract English speaking ones, particularly in view of the fact that 20,000 English speaking immigrants came to Canada compared to only 2,800 French speaking ones?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, personally, I am sure that no discrimination is shown by the officials of my department in favour of one group against another. However, if any evidence of discrimination came to my notice, I would put a stop to it. Moreover, I must assure the house that I have the firm intention of seeing to it that the same insistence is shown and the same efforts are made to favour the immigration to this country of any suitable group.

[Text]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES ROAD—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING MAINTENANCE DURING WINTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, has the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the government caused negotiations to be opened yet with the United States, or will negotiations be opened with United States concerning the ground or road communications network in the Yukon and Alaska?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend gave me notice of his intention to ask this question. On October 25 a note dated October 24 was directed to the government of the United States, through its embassy in Ottawa. In this note the government of Canada indicated that the Department of Public Works had been granted authority to negotiate directly with the state of Alaska for the rental of road maintenance equipment in order to keep open on an experimental basis during the approaching 1963-64 winter that section of the Haines road not now kept open under other agreements. Late yesterday the United States government indicated its willingness to enter into such negotiations.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question. In those negotiations will the representatives of the Department of Public Works present the case for the use of Canadian equipment and Canadian labour in the maintenance of the Canadian section of this more than two thirds Canadian road?

Inquiries of the Ministry

SUGAR

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING REASON FOR PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Skeena asked me to comment on the statement made by Mr. Arthur E. Beeby, executive vice president of Salada Foods, having to do with sugar price fluctuations. The hon. member referred to Mr. Beeby as having said in effect that "the recent series of increases in sugar prices cannot be explained on the basis of supply and demand, that there is no world sugar shortage", and that as a major Canadian buyer of refined sugar he was forced to the conclusion that the rise in cost of this staple food item on world markets did not result from demand but from speculation.

I asked the director of research in the combines investigation branch to inquire into this situation. The director communicated with Mr. Beeby and he has advised me of the following and has also obtained the permission of Mr. Beeby to disclose what I am about to say.

In his statement Mr. Beeby was not alleging any fact that in his opinion discloses a breach of any provision of the Combines Investigation Act. He also did not purport to suggest that the government can adopt any measure that can control or influence the price of sugar in the world market; nor did he suggest any step that the government might take to affect the domestic price of sugar in Canada. He stated that his purpose in issuing the statement was to warn Canadians of the fact that as a manufacturer his company is faced with rising sugar costs, which he considers Canadians are helpless to control and which will inevitably affect the price of his company's products.

This statement was reread by the director to Mr. Beeby, and he said that he agreed with it.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question. Since the government has not been able to secure from Mr. Beeby a policy to deal with this shameful profiteering, what does the government propose to do about it?

Mr. Chevrier: I understand that the hon. member is going to raise this question as a grievance this evening after 8.15. I have been given that indication, and if he does so I will be delighted to deal with the problem. To answer the hon. member's question, he knows quite well that the most effective way in which to deal with this sort of problem is by means of price control, and if I understand the constitution of this country aright that is a matter which falls under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

OTTAWA—REQUEST THAT PUBLIC SIGNS BE BILINGUAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Could the federal government suggest to the city of Ottawa to turn its cultural policies towards practical bilingualism?

Ottawa being the capital city of Canada, would it not be advisable to have street indications and all other public signs made out in both official languages?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as it is within the authority of the federal government we will do everything we can to increase bilingualism in this country.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STORAGE SPACE IN MONTREAL FOR ONTARIO CORN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a telegram under date of November 1 from the president of the association for the development and protection of eastern agriculture requesting immediate storage space in Montreal national harbours board elevators for 200,000 bushels of Ontario feed corn? If so, what steps is his department taking to assure eastern poultry producers and feed mill operators that adequate space will be available to store Ontario corn that is now being harvested, and thus eliminate the necessity of importing higher priced United States corn?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the hon. gentleman did not give me notice of this question. I have no recollection at this moment of the telegram having been received, but I will be glad to look into it.

SHORTAGE OF WATER IN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles Lamb (Victoria, Ont.): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has done anything in connection with the severe water shortage. I know it has become a great burden to many farmers in Ontario.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): This morning at a quarter after ten I was speaking to the minister of agriculture for Ontario. He said they were right on top of this situation, but if they needed help they would call us and I assured him we would be standing by ready to help.

HOUSING

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL—PROPOSED MORATORIUM ON N.H.A. MORTGAGE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Yukon raised the question of a moratorium on mortgage payments for homes purchased under the National Housing Act by Falconbridge employees.

I am sure the hon. member will understand that it would not be possible to arrange a blanket moratorium on all National Housing Act mortgage payments for employees of Falconbridge mines who may become unemployed. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation does not normally make a practice of postponing monthly payments. If a borrower is unable to make the monthly payment due to reasons beyond his control, the corporation is prepared to discuss the problem with him, and it is usually possible to make an arrangement mutually acceptable to the borrower and the corporation. Such an arrangement may involve a partial monthly payment only. The extent of this type of assistance given depends on the consideration of each individual case, and only such assistance as each case warrants is given. It is for this reason that borrowers in difficulty are encouraged to discuss their problems with representatives of the corporation.

I should like to assure the hon. member that each case will be considered with sympathy on its own merits.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONG KONG—CONTINUATION OF EMERGENCY RELIEF MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of recent announcements concerning increased assistance to commonwealth countries, can the minister inform the house if the government has now decided to continue the emergency food program to Hong Kong, which was cancelled by the present administration? An answer to this question was promised on July 24 last.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am sorry if there has been any delay in bringing this question to my attention. I shall take it as notice.

TRANSPORT

RICHELIEU WATERWAY—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence.

There has been no mention of the proposed deepening of the Richelieu river for some time now. Does the minister, who used to be one of the promoters of that project, still care about it? What is he doing now to have it implemented in the near future?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

PUBLIC WORKS

REPORTED CONTRAVENTION OF ELECTION ACT BY MINISTER'S ASSISTANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Yesterday I was asked a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre concerning my executive assistant and certain sections of the Canada Elections Act. I wish to say that my executive assistant is now taking the proper steps to file his election expenses and so correct this situation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am very glad to know that the law is going to be kept by this gentleman.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, November 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Starr, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Fisher.

LACK OF MEASURES TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, last night I had completed about half my speech, but at closing time there are not nearly so many members in the house as I find now. Rather than see them all move out in such droves, perhaps I should appeal to them in the language Shakespeare used in the first scene of Hamlet, when Bernardo said:

> Sit down awhile,
> And let us once again assail your ears,
> That are so fortified against our story—

I shall try to keep my remarks as brief as may suit the occasion, Mr. Speaker. I think I dealt pretty generally last night with what I believed to have been the pattern of the provisions the government undertook in dealing with the problems of unemployment. In essence, I think we said that the country had been changing from an agricultural country to a manufacturing one, and that we had the attendant problem of training people, finding markets, finding money, and all that was involved in such sweeping changes. I referred to the many dramatic actions by the former government. If we refer to the subamendment we find that it reads in this way:

> —and also the failure of the government to propose any plans for the fundamental economic and social changes required to deal with the chronic and growing problem of unemployment caused by automation and technological change.

I outlined, Mr. Speaker, the steps taken by the previous government, which were fundamental, in relation to the economy and the social strata of the country. Certainly we went beyond what was thought daring a few years ago. The government recognized the need to create an economic atmosphere to get private enterprise to flourish. We went beyond that. We found many fields in which the government had to give the lead, had to provide the money, had to take steps to find new ways to push private enterprise into new methods of doing things.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that no one in this house would take me amiss if I were to say that we could add to that subamendment proposed by the New Democratic party the words "similar to the type of legislation brought in by the previous government." Considering how far we have gone, the wording of this subamendment cannot, by any reasonable stretch of the imagination, be taken to suggest socialism. We know that the concepts of government and of the needs of the country are changing so much that this subamendment merely describes the sort of bold, imaginative action taken by the previous government. I trust that all who are acutely aware of the problem of unemployment in this country will have no hesitation in backing it.

I know from having observed what has happened that a bond of friendship seems to have sprung up between the present Liberal administration and the Social Credit group. There is a strong suspicion in the house that they are going to be anxious to sustain the government. I know, on occasion, how pleased the government has been to find that little group of friends. I do not want to burden Shakespeare with the entire responsibility for my speech, but there are some words that appear in "Timon of Athens" which I thought would be appropriate when the Liberals are considering their friends the Social Crediters. These lines are as follows:

> O! what a precious comfort 'tis, to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I remember when the Social Crediters supported us, and when the New Democratic party supported us. When they thought they detected a rift in the Conservative party they thought it might be the appropriate moment to strike. They hoped that the trouble in our party might lead to further gains for theirs. They were sadly mistaken. Certainly this time I believe they must think carefully before they strike so recklessly again.

I know no member in this house can look at the actions taken by the present Liberal government and feel satisfied that any strong action has been taken against unemployment. Perhaps the words used by the Secretary of State on April 22 of this year, when the Liberals took office, were prophetic and reflected the real attitude of the members of this government. When he was asked what his feelings were, he said it was nice to be employed again after all those years of unemployment. I am sure we get the feeling that many members of the cabinet believe they have now licked their unemployment problem.

However, it is the unemployment problem of the country that requires action. Certainly there have been many dramatic experiments, shall I say, in connection with the budget. I could have said "horrible experiments". We were looking for something exciting, but we had something quite exciting in a different way. I think it was the first time in history that we nearly had a hanging after a budget. It was not just the people of this country who wanted to hang the Minister of Finance, but the Liberal backbenchers as well. I think the Prime Minister wanted to hang him, too, because of the embarrassment he had caused. There is nothing about this government that would give any hon. member of this house confidence in it, or the belief that it is capable of introducing legislation or instituting programs that are going to meet this ever-growing problem.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Ontario, the best that can be said of this government is that they have had the good sense to follow much of our program. Whenever they failed to follow the Conservative program they did not get anything done. In so far as the vote tonight is concerned, it is not a question of whether this party will vote against the government; it is a question of whether all opposition parties will vote together against the government.

I suggest they should. I know the amendment will cause considerable soul searching. However, I remind the small groups that they voted for what they thought were the interests of their parties the last time, no matter what it cost the country. They failed to serve the best interests of the country, because after that vote on February 5 last this country was saddled with this inadequate Liberal government. I am suggesting they do a little soul searching now to see if they cannot find it in their hearts to vote in the best interests of the country this time.

I should like to call once more upon Shakespeare, since his language is much better than mine, to explain the dilemma in which these small parties find themselves now. If the house will bear with me, I was not able to learn this well enough to give it without reading it. It is the famous speech by Hamlet, the soliloquy "To be or not to be," Shakespeare in a modern version:

To vote or not to vote; that is the question,
Whether 'tis nobler of this house to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous government
Or to take sides against a sea of bunglers
And by opposing end them; to vote; to defeat;
No more; and by a defeat to say we end
The confusions and the many rude shocks
Our economy is heir to, 'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wish'd. To vote; to defeat;
To defeat, to fight another time; ay there's the rub;
For in that fight of ballots what defeats may come
When we have shuffled off this parliament
Must give us pause. There's the respect
That makes travesty of such a life;
For who would bear the government of the time
Their terrible mistakes
Their contempt of parliament
The death of hope, the laws delays
Their insolence in office and the spurns
Of good advice that these unworthies make
When he himself might order bring
With a bar vote. Who would Gordon bear
But that the dread of something after dissolution
The next election from whose wars some will not return
Puzzles the will, and makes us rather bear incompetents
That we have, than risk others that we know not of.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, I will get lots of good advice from various parts of the house that if I can only even borrow from language like that, then perhaps I have more future as a poet than a politician. I hope the Social Crediters, the Creditistes and the New Democratic party will all be voting with the Conservatives tonight against the government, and I may say that this matter of a mid-winter election strikes fear into the hearts of none stronger than it does into the Liberals. I had hoped at this stage to hear some advice like Macbeth gave the witches, "Stop, you imperfect speakers, tell me more", but I am afraid my course is run.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have before us an amendment and a subamendment, motions of non-confidence against the government, based on allegations that the government has produced no effective new policies or programs to reduce unemployment, and in particular to alleviate winter unemployment, combined with the further suggestion put forward by the New Democratic party that the government has failed to bring forward any plans to deal with the chronic and growing problem of unemployment caused by automation and technological change.

The amendment was introduced by the hon. member for Ontario, who in the course of his attack on the government made no mention whatsoever of current employment and unemployment statistics. Of course that was a deliberate omission, because the figures on employment and unemployment do very little to support the case against the government.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege. I am sure the Minister of Labour would not want that to stand on the record, because if he read Hansard he would see that I referred to the latest d.b.s. statistics showing there was a decline of 10,000 in the numbers unemployed, to 3.7 per cent of the labour force as compared with 3.9 per cent last year.

Mr. MacEachen: I regret if I have misquoted the hon. gentleman, but I accept his correction. Whether quoted or not, whether given in detail or not, the figures do very little to support the hon. gentleman and the case he put forward in the house yesterday.

The motion put forward by the hon. member for Ontario is an invitation to us to tell him and the house exactly the situation that prevailed in Canada when he and other members of his government left office last April. Last April, 7 per cent of Canada's labour force was unemployed. In the Atlantic provinces 14.1 per cent of the total labour force was unemployed, and in Ontario the figure was 4.5 per cent. For the benefit of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue in the province of Quebec almost 10 per cent of the labour force was unemployed, while the figures for the prairies and the Pacific coast were 4.4 per cent and 6.7 per cent.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. minister permit a question?

Unemployment Measures Lacking

Mr. MacEachen: No, I will permit questions at the end of my speech.

The trend has been downward in unemployment since that time, but what ought to be emphasized is that in the past six months total employment in Canada has shown a very strong advance. That is the important figure, and the most important statistic here is the year to year change. Unemployment as of September was 250,000, or 10,000 less than last year, and hon. gentlemen opposite seem to regard that as a very slight improvement. I regard it as a significant improvement, because it represents a complete reversal of the economic outlook that prevailed in Canada when this government took office. I hope to be able to say something more on this particular point later.

The statistics we have today may appear slight to hon. members opposite, but they underline two facts; that we reversed the unfavourable economic outlook, the unfavourable employment prospects that prevailed in Canada as of last April, and we improved the situation over last year.

It is true that Liberal members when in opposition introduced motions of non-confidence on the question of unemployment, but we presented those motions in periods of rising unemployment. Today and yesterday we have had motions put forward, not in a period of rising unemployment, but in a period of declining unemployment. That represents the difference between the two parties, unemployment rising under the Progressive Conservatives and decreasing under the Liberals.

In moving this amendment yesterday I hope the hon. member for Ontario will not think we will forget his performance, and the performance of his government, as they grappled unsuccessfully with the problem of unemployment throughout their whole period of office. Through this amendment he is asking us to visit with him, and with the other members of the former government, the scene of their major crime against the people of Canada, their failure to deal effectively with the problem of unemployment.

What was the performance of the former government? During that period there were excessively high levels of unemployment. Over the past five years unemployment averaged 6.6 per cent of the labour force all year around, and in that period of five years the winter rate was up to 10.1 per cent, while the summer average was 4.3 per cent of the labour force.

In the period from April 1, 1957 to March 31, 1963 the federal government, composed of hon. gentlemen opposite, paid out more than $300 million under the Unemployment Assistance Act, $300 million representing the extent to which the unemployed of Canada were depending upon social assistance for a livelihood.

What happened to the unemployment insurance fund in that period when the Conservatives were in office? During that period the fund virtually disappeared, when the high levels of benefit payments represented the excessively high levels of mass unemployment. I do not intend to deal in detail with the benefit payments out of that fund each year, but they ranged from $385 million in 1958 to $513 million in 1961, all these figures indicating the excessively high levels of unemployment that prevailed in those years. That is the situation which this government faced when it entered office.

There have been recent improvements in the employment situation. The total employment picture has strengthened. Unemployment has decreased compared with the previous year and the prospects are that the Canadian economy will grow stronger in the months ahead. But the current labour market, with 250,000 persons unemployed, still reflects a high level of unemployment, a high level of unemployment which this government is determined to reduce, and with that object in mind has already put forward a number of major and effective programs to deal with the question. In the course of my remarks I will be referring to a number of these new and effective programs.

I point out this is a statistic which my hon. friend used to put on the record with regularity, that in September of this year employment in Canada totalled 6,565,000. Employment is greater by 180,000 than it was a year earlier. The Minister of Labour tends to be held responsible in this house and elsewhere for the whole problem of unemployment, and no doubt he does carry a full share of responsibility for this problem. But it ought to be apparent to all hon. members that a full range of policies is required to deal with unemployment, involving fiscal, monetary, trade and other relevant measures to stimulate employment and economic growth generally. I hope to be able to say more when introducing the estimates of the Department of Labour about my conception of the most effective way in which the Department of Labour can discharge its functions in co-ordination with other departments of government to deal with the problem of unemployment; but for the moment I am satisfied that the present government, in calling parliament together as quickly as possible following the election last April and introducing as quickly as possible major legislative measures to cope with unemployment, has kept faith with its determination, as expressed to the electorate, that its foremost object on taking office would be to overcome unemployment.

Yesterday the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) spent most of his time talking about the municipal winter works incentive program. In fact, the main point in his speech was that the changes which had been made by the new government had served to reduce the effectiveness of this program. He stated that the changes made would curtail the activity of those who might be usefully employed in the winter months. We did introduce new ideas into this program. We announced our intention to carry out this program at the earliest date ever. We decided that in order to reach its maximum effectiveness it ought to be concentrated within a period of six months. We decided to increase the contribution for municipal buildings under this program by $50,000 and we increased the federal payroll cost from 50 to 60 per cent in designated areas and areas of high winter unemployment. Each of these improvements is known to members of the house.

Yesterday the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), in referring to this program, used the words—they were not his own words in the beginning—the "anaemic child of the government".

Mr. Martineau: That was the minister of external affairs.

Mr. MacEachen: Let us see how this child is doing under its new parents, Mr. Speaker. I have before me the forecast for the program this year, November 1, and the similar forecast for the program last year, October 15, 1962. I want to put on the record these comparable statistics because they reveal how the child is doing. As of October 15, 1962, the applications approved were 1,450; on November 1, 1963, applications approved were 2,416. As of October 1962, estimated jobs involved 30,500; as of November 1, 1963, they involved 59,038. In October 1962 estimated man days of work to be provided, 1,650,000; this year the figure is 2,829,505. The estimated total of payroll costs last year was $25 million; this year the estimated total is $44 million. The estimated federal contribution last year was $12 million; this year it is $22 million. The estimated total cost of projects during the effective period last year was $83 million; this year it is $135 million. So these facts in themselves justify the efficacy of the improvements made by this government. They indicate the full health of the child under its new parentage, and they certainly present a strong justification for the defeat of this unsupported motion of non-confidence against this government.

The hon. member for Ontario spoke about winter unemployment. As I have indicated already, we have strengthened and made more effective the municipal winter works incentive program, with good results. We have introduced a new bonus program, an incentive payment of $500 to the first purchaser of a winter-built house. This is a new program. The hon. member for Ontario calls it a gimmick. He said at one time in his speech that it will be ineffective, and at another time said it remains to be seen whether or not it will be effective. I believe this new experimental program will be effective. The response to date is encouraging. It will have a significant effect in increasing winter employment and in stabilizing employment opportunities in the construction industry. It is a new and effective program.

To meet the problem of unemployment this winter we have brought forward an accelerated winter construction program. This is an entirely new concept because it involves the bringing forward of projects not provided for in the regular estimates and for which justification exists on other grounds. The hon. member for Ontario asked how many new jobs $7 million would provide in this country of ours. Well, of course, he misses the point. This program does not apply to "this country of ours"; it applies to the designated areas, including 10 per cent of the paid workers of Canada, and also to areas of high winter unemployment, some of which are included already in the designated areas. These programs will be brought forward and undertaken this winter in these particular areas, and combined with other programs of the government this accelerated winter construction program will have a significant effect in reducing unemployment and in creating jobs this winter.

May I turn for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to another phase of the program of the government. We have designated certain parts of the country for special help. This is evidence of our policy to help areas in Canada most in need of help. It ought to be evident to hon. members of the house that any policy or incentive applied universally across the country will tend to make the economically strong parts of Canada stronger still. Such an approach will not help deal with areas of slow growth or high unemployment.

It has been said that this program of designation is discriminatory. Of course it is discriminatory. It is intended to be discriminatory in the sense of providing special assistance to areas of high unemployment and slow growth.

Yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked that special consideration be given to programs of this type. It is because we share that view that we have designated 35 areas in Canada as now eligible for special stimuli under a new government program. A number of specific measures to promote development in these areas have already been announced by the government. They include tax exemptions for a three year period for new manufacturing and processing industries which locate in those areas. They include accelerated depreciation allowances on new machinery and equipment and an accelerated write-off of the capital cost of new industrial buildings in a five year period. These are the most powerful tax incentives ever offered by any Canadian government to assist in locating industries in areas of slow growth. Combined with the area development agencies and the new Department of Industry, these measures are bound to have a marked effect in accelerating growth, in reducing unemployment and in increasing total employment in these areas.

Besides these fiscal measures, provision has been made for the speeding up of government construction programs during the winter months and for an increase in the federal contribution to the municipal winter works incentive program from 50 per cent to 60 per cent. In addition, we have taken steps to strengthen the personnel of the national employment service. Surely, the effective use of manpower in Canada requires a strong national employment service equipped with the resources to make its contribution felt in the development of manpower policies. The former government applied austerity to the national employment service. We lifted that austerity program. The former government failed to maintain the national employment service at its proper establishment. We have added a large number of new positions to the service. For almost two years the national employment service in Canada was "frozen", and in April of this year there were vacancies to the number of 264 positions in the establishment of the service. This is how the government of Canada was treating the national employment service at a time of high unemployment, although the government of the United States, realizing how effective unemployment service could be in combating unemployment, had increased the total complement of its agency by more than 4,000. In order to make the services of the organization more effective we have added 362 new positions to the national employment service. We think this is a sound step because it will allow us to administer the new manpower policy and to establish the new programs we have undertaken, namely the older worker training program, the winter building program, and so on. We intend to support the national employment service and we have under consideration at the present time the recommendations of the Gill committee, with the further strengthening of that organization in mind.

I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will excuse me if I refer to the way in which the new government has strengthened the training program for the unemployed. It is true the former government did something in this field. I recognize that. We have taken steps to make the program more effective and we have extended for a further period the capital cost program under technical and vocational training, so that many more millions of dollars may be spent in building facilities and in adding to the training of our youth for the requirements of the sixties.

Now may I say a word about the incentive program for older workers. This program was designed in an effort to combat the prejudice against the re-employment of older workers. It is a new program. It is experimental and I think it fills a real need. As we all know, it is very hard for older workers who have been out of employment for a long time to re-establish themselves. Yet many of them are highly capable and have many years of useful working life ahead of them. Given an opportunity, they could bring their valuable qualities to the job—judgment, stability, less frequent absenteeism and reduced turnover and accident rate. The purpose of our program is to make it possible for employers to take these older workers and give them, if possible, training on the job or, at a minimum, to rehabilitate them to the point at which they become competitive in the labour market. If we succeed in doing this for any person I think it is a significant contribution to his future. The hon. member for Ontario says that those in charge of policing this program are having a difficult time—that they are encountering insurmountable difficulties. Well, the program has been in effect since Friday last, and on Monday the hon. member talks about facing insurmountable difficulties. That is hardly informed criticism. The hon. member for Ontario also said the program was a gimmick. That is his favourite description of a new program which he has not taken the trouble to understand or to study in detail. This is not a gimmick. It is the use of an incentive in a definite way to meet a definite problem.

As an indication of our determination to deal successfully and effectively with unemployment I should like to refer to the supplementary estimates, estimates D, which, in total, amount to $74 million, $60 million of which is being asked for to support the programs I have mentioned. By asking for this large amount—not a disproportionately large amount in terms of the problem to be solved —the government has indicated the seriousness with which it regards the unemployment situation.

I do not intend to deal with the municipal loan fund. The hon. member for Ontario regards this as something which will create no jobs at all. We take a different attitude. We think this program, which is now in effect, will have a significant impact on employment opportunities. It is a new program and it deserves the support of all hon. members so that it may attain its maximum effect in reducing unemployment. We have established the Atlantic development fund. Surely, a fund of the amount of $100 million to be employed wholly within four provinces of Canada is bound to have an impact on employment in the immediate future. Then there is the provision in the supplementary estimates for a contribution by the federal government of 90 per cent toward the construction of the trans-Canada highway. This has already had a marked effect on employment. It is another new program, as is the municipal loan fund.

The newest program of all to which I should like to make reference with respect to its employment possibilities is the success of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) in negotiating this large sale of wheat and flour to Russia.

An hon. Member: We thought the wheat board did that.

Mr. MacEachen: Well, it has been done and it will have direct employment consequences. It is going to increase the number of men employed and the number of hours worked in the flour mills of this country. It will increase the number of men and the number of hours worked on the railways. It will increase the number of operators and the number of hours worked in connection with water transportation and handling of cargo at the ports. To some extent it will increase farm employment in Canada, especially in the western provinces. These are some of the direct effects of this particular sale of wheat and flour. The indirect effects will be substantial. Demand, generally, will be increased as a result of the increased spending power which will be generated within the economy. I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that this single sale will, in itself, add at least 20,000 or 25,000 additional jobs to the Canadian economy in the next 12 months.

An hon. Member: In the eastern provinces?

Mr. MacEachen: In all parts of Canada—in the constituency of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) as well as of others in the maritimes, in Quebec and in the west. This is a universal program which will increase jobs everywhere and its effects will become more apparent as time goes on.

May I turn for a moment to the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) in which he belaboured the government for its failure to propose any plan—I omit certain words—to deal with the problems of automation and technological change. I cannot accept the view set forth in the subamendment as being an accurate description of the policy of the government and the plan which it has already made clear with respect to meeting the problems posed by automation and technological change.

It seems to me we have taken two major steps. One has been in the field of training in industry. The hon. member for Ontario admitted yesterday that very little indeed has been done in the highly important field of training employees in industry. We have increased from 50 to 75 per cent the federal contribution to provincial costs in respect of training in industry. We think this will provide an additional stimulus to undertake the basic training of employees in industry.

It is a fact that in Canada today there are persons in the labour force whose skills are becoming obsolete and who are unable to acquire new skills because they do not have the basic education to allow them to do so. We are going to do something about this. We intend to do something about apprenticeship training and about retraining so that as one set of skills becomes obsolete a new set is acquired. That will be undertaken through this program.

The hon. member for Port Arthur may not have noticed that in the set of supplementary estimates tabled recently in the house provision has been made in a vote of the Department of Labour for a new manpower consultative service. In supplementary estimates A, page 12, he will notice that the government is asking the House of Commons for a special vote to provide for the establishment of manpower consultative service to assist in and encourage the establishment of manpower adjustment by employers and workers, and to authorize payments in accordance with agreements entered into with the approval of the governor in council by the Minister of Labour with provinces, employers and workers in respect of labour mobility and assessment incentives.

The purpose of this program is to cope for the first time in any country in this way with the problems of automation and technological change. We think that in putting forward this program which has been developed in the Department of Labour we are doing something in the way of pioneering work. The principles of the program are simple but constructive. Appropriate plans will be developed at the plant level in advance of anticipated worker displacement. These plans will require advanced research and advanced assessment at the plant level, and this new manpower consultative service will assist employers and unions where they operate in a plant to assess prospective technological change, and will assist them to develop plans in order to meet the problems posed by technological change.

A direct effort will be made with government assistance to anticipate the need and to prepare for it in the way of programs to provide employment for displaced workers. At the same time, where transfer of workers displaced by technological change is not possible within the plant or within the community, re-employment incentives of another kind will be made available.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the terms of the subamendment which belabour the government for its failure to deal with the problems of automation and technological change. We are taking two very important steps in this field and we think these steps will be effective and useful.

At the beginning of my remarks I stated in commenting on the present employment situation that the economic outlook that had prevailed in Canada last spring has been reversed, and that the advice available in the Department of Labour last spring projected not decreasing unemployment but increasing unemployment for September of this year. The former minister of labour, the hon. member for Ontario, said yesterday that the government of which he was a member had provided incentives to industry and that the present government is still riding on the effects of that impetus. That is an absurd contention and it ought to have been apparent to the hon. member for Ontario.

All I ask him is this: Did he ask his officials last March and April what the projections were for unemployment in September of this year? If he did he would have received precisely the same advice I received when I entered the Department of Labour, and that was that on the basis of the advice available the six month projection was that unemployment in September of 1963 would be greater than unemployment in September of 1962 and that the total advance in employment would not be as significant as it has turned out to be.

Therefore, whether we are riding on the impetus provided by the former government, which I doubt and deny, the fact is that the prospects known to members of the former government last spring called for higher unemployment this fall and a less rapid advance in total employment. The outlook today is different. Employment over the year has increased from September to September by 180,000 and instead of an increase in unemployment as was projected there has been a decrease. That is in accordance with the advice I received on entering the department and in accordance with the facts that are generally known in the house today.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask hon. members to defeat these amendments because the present government called parliament together immediately to deal with the problems of unemployment and has brought forward a number of new and effective programs to do so. The policies of the new government have reversed the economic outlook that prevailed in Canada last April to the extent that there has been a marked increase in total employment and a significant decline in total unemployment. I also feel that the outlook for Canada is good. It will remain good and become stronger, provided the government is permitted to continue to implement the policies which it has begun.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could address a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Lamontagne: Do you want to answer the question?

Mr. Starr: I am going to ask a question, if you do not mind. In view of the programs which the minister outlined in his speech which are yet to begin, to what policies of the present government does he give the credit for the decline we have experienced in the last few months?

Mr. MacEachen: I did not hear the question.

Mr. Starr: I will repeat it. In view of the policies he has outlined, which have yet to begin—

Mr. Pearson: They have begun.

Mr. Starr: The Minister of Labour said they have yet to begin. To what policies does the minister give the credit for the decline in unemployment in the last two months?

Mr. MacEachen: I am glad the hon. gentleman accepts the fact that a reversal in outlook has taken place. I think the people of Canada realize they have a government that will manage the affairs of the country properly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: You do not need any policies?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising to ask a question?

Mr. Slogan: Yes. I wonder if the minister would add to his rosy prediction that, in the first year of Liberal government, the gross national product will exceed the 8 per cent record of last year under a Conservative government?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Saint John-Albert rising to ask a question?

Mr. Bell: No, I was claiming my place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Ricard: I should like to ask a question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Labour deny the fact that there is more unemployment now in the province of Quebec than there was in September of last year?

Mr. Caron: He speaks for Canada.

Mr. MacEachen: I never deny the facts, whatever they are.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think I share with a good many members on this side of the house, a high regard for the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen). However, I must admit I was disappointed with the speech he just made. It seemed to me his remarks were rather political and very complacent. I do not blame him for making political remarks in the house, but I do not think this is the time or the occasion for complacency. The minister repeated to us, if I may borrow a phrase of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), a number of gimmicks that had been introduced by the government or, if the minister does not like that word, a number of incentives that have been brought into effect by the government. No doubt some of these are meritorious.

He also gave us figures relating to the expansion of employment. Of course we welcome the expansion of employment. However, he did not seem to recognize that there is a continuing need for a sufficient expansion of employment to provide full employment. The question is not whether we have expanded employment, which undoubtedly we have, but whether we have expanded employment to the extent where we can provide full employment in this country for all those able to work. This I say is the objective, and in that respect at least the government has failed so far. I listened carefully to the speech delivered by the minister, and I regret that he does not seem to have answered the rather searching questions put by one member from his own side of the house, the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve). I refer to page 4374 of Hansard, where the hon. member is reported as saying this:

> The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that even though one knows the unemployment problem, its details, its various forms, as an hon. member of the opposition mentioned this afternoon, a basic decision has never been taken, namely whether governments, federal and provincial, should interfere in the direction of the economy.
> All kinds of solutions have been suggested, all aspects of the problem have been considered, but when one reads all these reports, one is always under the impression that there was a gap at a certain time and that the government was never able to make up its mind and really step into the economic field. I think that is the crux of the problem.
>
> We could discuss ad infinitum the causes of unemployment and the solutions we think possible, but as long as governments—

I think he included this government.

> —all of them, will not make up their minds to step in in order to stem unemployment and apply a policy of full employment, Canada will experience, as she has in the past, long periods of unemployment.

I ask the minister to pay heed to the words of his colleague from Îles-de-la-Madeleine. The hon. member went on to say this, and this is the last time I am going to avail myself of his speech for the purposes of my own:

> As long as we go on thinking that private enterprise can solve the unemployment problem all by itself, that important public works, unemployment insurance and assistance will be able to help the jobless for some time, we will never solve definitely the full employment problem.

It is my submission that the minister, in his speech, failed to come to grips with the problem and indicate to this house the way the government accepted the responsibility which, quite rightly in my view, was put forward by the hon. member who spoke earlier in the debate. It seemed to me that when the minister referred, as he did, to the subamendment introduced by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) he missed the import of it. I call attention to it. What we regret in the subamendment was the failure of the government to propose any plans for the fundamental economic and social changes required to deal with chronic and growing unemployment. The minister dealt with palliatives some of them good, some of them effective, but perhaps not to the degree he felt they were. He failed to tell us what proposals there were for the fundamental economic and social changes required, if we were to really deal with the situation.

I noticed that several other members who spoke in this debate took the opportunity presented by it to speak of the needs of their particular regions, and the problems of unemployment as they affected those regions. In this particular I want to follow the example of those who have preceded me in the debate, and take the opportunity to present to the house and to the government the urgent needs of the metropolitan area of the city of Toronto. All those needs are connected with this amendment, and if their solution was taken seriously by the government it would put an end to the problem of unemployment where it is most acute, and that is in the large urban centres of Canada. If the government would deal with the problems of the metropolitan area of Toronto, I presume they would deal also with the problems of the other large urban centres. In so doing, they would go a long way toward tackling effectively this problem of unemployment.

What does the metropolitan area of Toronto most urgently need? It needs a public low cost housing program on a fairly large scale, a larger scale than we have ever had before. It urgently needs hospitals and hospital beds. It urgently needs rapid transit subways to deal with the burgeoning population and the expansion of suburban areas. These are not exclusively problems of the federal government. Indeed, primarily they may be the problems of other levels of government. However the leadership of the federal government is needed in each of these fields. Leadership, in these terms, would be an effective means of ending unemployment.

I suggest that the government has good reason to be concerned about these needs and should consider carefully the needs of the metropolitan area of Toronto. It was only in April, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal tide surged over that area. When the tide had subsided there were only two hon. members, my colleague from Danforth (Mr. Scott) and myself, who survived. I would have expected a very dynamic interest in the problems of the metro area on the part of this government.

What do we find? Despite the urgent requests of the mayor of Toronto and the members of the board of control, the Prime Minister announced that the effective date of the winter works program would be from November 1 to April 30. I will not use my own words to describe that decision, but Controller Lamport of the city of Toronto, a well-known Liberal, is reported as saying that the government had ignored Toronto's special problem in setting the deadline of April 30. He pointed out that although the national figures do show a decline in unemployment, and I must say it is a very small decline, the situation is worse in Toronto than it was a year ago. Taking the figures for September, he pointed out that unemployment had increased over 4 per cent during that period.

A gentleman by the name of A. V. Piggott, who was chairman of the employment advisory commission of Toronto, a well-known businessman who has also taken a leading part in the field of social welfare, is reported in the Toronto Star of October 25 as saying that the situation in regard to unemployment was desperate. He said that there are now 100,000 to 125,000 jobs open in Toronto but the 125,000 unemployed cannot take those jobs because the openings were all for skilled workers. I dare say that is the experience of many members of this house. People come to ask for jobs, and the only jobs the member can find are for skilled personnel. These people however do not possess the basic skills required. I ask the government to note this. Mr. Piggott said he felt a terrible sense of urgency after visiting the United Kingdom and Europe and seeing what they are doing by way of retraining workers and by way of national economic planning. Mr. Piggott said he felt a terrible sense of urgency after realizing this situation, a sense of urgency not apparently shared by the government. However, I hope this motion will renew a sense of urgency on the part of the government today.

I was saying that the metropolitan area of Toronto urgently needs hospitals. I commend to the government an article in the Toronto Star of October 30 by the science editor who said that even if we built 10 new 200-bed hospitals the metro area would still be short of hospital space. In some suburbs like North York the present picture is so bad that, instead of the five beds per thousand residents, which is accepted as the proper standard, there is only half a bed per thousand residents in that area.

I know the government is giving consideration at the present time to the urgent requests of the metro executive to increase the government's contribution to the cost of adding the urgently needed hospital beds, as the province of Ontario and the metro council of Toronto have done. I urge the government to move quickly in increasing its contribution so that the urgently needed hospital construction be got under way soon, so that not only will the urgent need of beds for prospective patients be met but that winter unemployment can be substantially reduced.

I mentioned the subject of rapid transit construction, which I say is urgently needed. This is a major work in providing and creating employment. I would like to say in respect to this that plans, of course, are already in existence for the construction of rapid transit subways in the city of Toronto. I doubt if any people but the patient workers of the metropolitan area would put up with the sort of situation where it takes them an hour, and sometimes more than an hour, to get to their place of work in terribly overcrowded streetcars. This has a serious effect on their lives, and the construction of a subway would not only give them greater leisure but would add further social benefits in the construction that would grow up around these more adequate transit facilities.

Again it may be said that this is a problem for the metropolitan area itself to deal with; but if the federal government would call the leaders of that large area into a conference with the leaders concerned with this matter in the provincial government and say, "We will accelerate that program and make it possible for you to go ahead with the program, and thus avoid spreading it out, as happens when the resources of the metropolitan area alone are to be relied on", this would have an immediate and very valuable effect in dealing with the problem of unemployment.

I want to deal briefly with the question of housing. We do not need housing in the metropolitan area of Toronto, and in other parts of Canada, simply to provide work, but it is doubtful whether there is any form of construction, meeting the needs of people, which would have a more valuable effect in dealing with the question of unemployment.

Yesterday, the Ontario federation of labour, meeting at Niagara Falls, produced a brochure for its 1,000 delegates in which it described Canada as a backward nation in the field of public housing, and spoke of the housing blight in Toronto as the worst in the province. It went on to say:

> The Toronto situation is of course the worst in magnitude and here the municipal authorities as well as other levels of government have made the biggest headlines with the minimum of results.

This is not the occasion to go into great detail on what is required in the field of housing. In the area from which I come a badly needed change of policy would provide assistance from various levels of government for the rehabilitation and saving of existing housing, thus retarding its returning to a slum condition. In many other jurisdictions such financial support is available, and it has the effect of providing employment where it is needed.

If the government is serious about dealing with the problems of this large metropolitan area, and if it is also serious in seeking full employment, then I suggest the first thing it should do is get together with these other levels of government and make the plans necessary to meet these urgent needs of housing, rapid transit, and hospitals. If it would do that, then it would solve the problem of full employment, or at least go a long way towards solving it in that particular area.

I shall conclude my remarks by referring to a statement of policy approved by another political party, the British labour party, called "Labour and the Scientific Revolution." I know some people will say we should not listen to this because it is a socialist policy. I suggest it makes good sense and I commend it to the government and members of the house. This is what it says:

> In this new age of the computer and automation, as we can already see in the United States, the consequence of accepting rationalization and labour-saving techniques, whilst at the same time rejecting the need for central planning, is to abandon full employment. In short, planning without automation equals stagnation: automation without planning equals chronic unemployment.
> From now on, we must frankly face the fact that any boy or girl who enters industry during the 1960's may well find his or her skill rendered obsolete more than once in the course of working life, with the result that a choice must be made between accepting whatever unskilled job is available or retraining in a new skill...
>
> What we must develop, therefore,...is a completely new attitude to technological innovation and to redundancy as well...
> This will require an enormous expansion of our adult training facilities. Both in the planning of this expansion program and in creating the new climate of opinion in industry which must accompany it, the trade unions will play a crucial role.

I suggest that all the training programs we have heard of, excellent though they are, do not constitute that enormous expansion of adult training facilities which is needed to cope with this problem.

The statement goes on to say:

> As the scientific revolution proceeds, the wealth of the nation will increase and we shall be able not only to raise our own living standards but to contribute much more to the attack on world poverty....
> The prospect that the scientific revolution opens before us is a working life which is secure and interesting, in a society where machines are subordinate to man; a world in which hardship and suffering are progressively eliminated and the whole range of man's culture is available to enrich the lives of us all. This is the true socialist vision which, in the past, want and ignorance have held from our grasp.

I do not apologize for the use of the word socialist. I think that is an apt description of it, and that is why we are proud in this party to call ourselves socialists and claim some part of this socialist vision.

> But can we in fact break through the resistance and obstacles that confront us? We are confident that we can. In our factories and workshops we have perhaps the most skilled and mature working population in the world.

They are speaking of Britain, and what they say is true of Canada.

> In our schools there is still a vast untapped potential of scientific and managerial skill. What is needed to meet the challenge of the scientific revolution is not a new scientific elite but a collective determination to succeed—and a government which will liberate the nation from its present frustrations so that together we can create a new and better Britain.

I substitute the word Canada for the word Britain, and suggest these words are applicable to Canada.

The reason I and other members of my party propose to support the amendment and the subamendment is because we do not believe the government has shown this vision and indicated that collective determination that is required to deal with the size and enormity of our problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for Sherbrooke.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, allow me to open my remarks by—

[Text]

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the house should appreciate in view of the fact we are now discussing two amendments, one proposed by the official opposition and the other by the New Democratic party, which represents the third largest group in the house, that the members of the government should be permitted to speak to defend the government position, certainly in equal proportion to those who are speaking from the opposite side of the house.

Mr. Smith: Order.

Mr. Byrne: Surely the house must agree, if we believe in debate being anything but a complete farce, that the government must be in a position to defend its policies in equal proportion to speakers from the other side of the house. If we carry on under the proposal we have—

Mr. Knowles: What is your point of order?

Mr. Byrne: There cannot be a point of order on a point of order. Surely the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) knows this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. If the hon. gentleman has a point of order would he say what it is.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, in essence it means that under the schedule we are following the opposition will have twice the number of speakers that the government benches will have. There will be six, perhaps nine, as opposed to three from the government benches. I feel that that is certainly a logical point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I recognize that there is come difficulty in being able to apportion time to the different parts of the house. The Chair is having some difficulty in this regard but I think it is doing its best under the present procedure. Until some agreement is reached between the different groups I think we will have to rely on the Chair to do the best possible. I now recognize the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine).

[Mr. Brewin.]

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, it is probably not too flattering for the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) to hear it said, in this house, that he was not able to explain clearly the viewpoint of his party, and by one of his own followers at that.

In opening my remarks, I would like to borrow a few lines from the famed French fabulist, Jean de la Fontaine, and to adapt them to this debate. Paraphrasing his "Animals sick with the plague", I would say:

> An evil which strikes terror in all hearts, > and that an irate Providence invented to punish the crimes of the old parties, > Unemployment, if its name must be known."

Mr. Speaker, for two days now, you have seen that the old parties, Liberal as well as Conservative, are fully conscious of the problem they have had to put up with and have been unable to solve once in office. We have even seen the Conservative members hold the present Liberal administration, which came into office only a few months ago, entirely responsible for unemployment—there are approximately 250,000 unemployed at present in the country.

I should like to quote, if I may, for the information of the Conservative members and their leader in particular, some d.b.s. statistics for the years 1957-1958 and so on, when the country had a Conservative administration.

In 1957, there were 328,000 unemployed in this country, that is 5.7 per cent of the labour force; in 1958, there was a small improvement, because the Conservatives worked to stem unemployment: 579,000 jobless in Canada, that is 9.7 per cent of the labour force; in 1959 there was an improvement: 578,000 unemployed, that is 9.5 per cent of the labour force; in 1960, there were 545,000 jobless, or 8.8 per cent of the labour force; and in 1961, the grand crowning-piece of the Conservative administration, we had 693,000 jobless, representing 10.8 per cent of the labour force.

Today, Mr. Speaker, here is the amendment introduced by the official opposition party:

> "This house regrets the failure of the government to introduce any effective new policies or programs to reduce substantially unemployment in Canada, and in particular to alleviate winter unemployment, so as to achieve the promised full employment as undertaken in the Liberal party election promises."

I admit that the Liberal party as well as the Conservative party committed themselves, one after the other, during various election campaigns, to settle the unemployment problem; but of two evils, I choose the lesser because I do not want to go back to that period when—in 1961—there were more than one million unemployed in this country and the Conservative government of that time could do nothing about it.

During the 1958 election campaign, the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said: I will not sleep as long as there is a man out of work in Canada.

Has he slept?

We do not know that but we know, Mr. Speaker, that many people were starving while he was awake.

That is why in 1962 and 1963 the Canadian people decided to choose a lesser evil—but an evil just the same—to put an end to the ultimate shame of living in the country with the highest unemployment rate, as reported in Quebec city's Le Soleil on Wednesday, July 17, 1963:

> Unemployment in Canada reached the highest rate in all the great industrial nations, even after the United States.

Mr. Speaker, if what is found in the amendment moved by the present Conservative party is all that is offered by way of a policy to check unemployment, we will not go along with that, because neither the Conservatives nor the Liberals have found real solutions to the unemployment problem in Canada today.

Mr. Speaker, all kinds of solutions are being suggested at the present time, those contained in the Gill report and those proposed by the present Minister of Labour in his offensive against unemployment.

If we briefly analyse those cures, we find that the Gill report proposes to amend the enforcement of the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to help the workers.

One readily realizes that this is merely a measure to relieve the present unemployed but not to prevent an increase in the number of jobless.

It is one thing to find work and another to give some assistance to unemployed workers.

I would even say that in certain areas unemployment insurance is no good, because it encourages unemployment, especially in those areas where salaries are low and it is felt that it is better to draw unemployment insurance than to work.

Among other remedial measures proposed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) there is the increase from 75 to 90 per cent in the federal assistance to vocational rehabilitation; this is a worthy and sound solution, but it will certainly not solve the present unemployment problem, at least for several years to come.

The Minister of Labour proposes to raise from 50 to 75 per cent the federal assistance to the retraining of workers who are threatened with unemployment. We admit, Mr. Speaker, that such a step would somewhat palliate unemployment, in that workers displaced by automation would move to another community where a job may be waiting for them but, there again, that will do nothing to change the increasing number of new workers who enter the labour market, a situation which calls for the creation of at least 200,000 new jobs every year.

In general, the other suggested cures would only fill the existing gap; they do not take into account the labour surplus which will result from the increasing spread of automation.

Those measures are what I would call poultices. They remind me of the plugs which are used to patch up rusted piping and which only increase the pressure elsewhere in the pipe which has been weakened by rust.

As long as the Liberal government, just as the former Conservative government, will not realize that a piecemeal policy is not what is needed to solve unemployment, that an altogether new policy is necessary, because the present one is no longer suited to put to work the mass of the labour force available, we will continue to be faced with the same problem.

As long as the government refuses to tackle the underlying cause of the evil which gnaws at the labour force, we will not succeed in finding means to stem unemployment, as we would hope, and as is the case now in Germany where even 74-year old women work in stores as assistants while manpower is sought from everywhere.

In France, there is a shortage of manpower.

I wonder whether it would be possible on a continent as rich as America to find means of solving unemployment due to automation.

During last night's debates, we listened to a few suggestions, one of which astonished me. It came from a Social Credit member. Let me quote an extract from the speech made by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde) to the effect that one measure only could solve unemployment. Here is what he said:

> I hope that taxes will be reviewed in order to find out means to give a new impetus, a new development to Canada, even if this would get our country in debt for the next ten years.

Mr. Plourde: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I want to point out to the hon. member for Sherbrooke that this suggestion implied the present system and not a protracted study which would leave the people starving under the present regime.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Quebec West will allow me to finish my remarks, he will understand my idea. I mean that this suggestion, even if it implies the present system, is bad, because it is not by increasing the national debt that Canadians will find relief. It is mostly by trying to reduce it that we will succeed. When Canadians pay less in taxes, taxes which serve only to pay interest on the national debt, taxes taken, in the final analysis, in the pockets of the taxpayers and which will deprive them, consequently, of an increased purchasing power, only then shall we be able to try really and stem unemployment.

A considerable increase in the redistribution of wealth within our country would create new jobs and even an improved standard of living.

A suggestion which bears a great resemblance to the Creditiste doctrine is the step taken recently in the United States by President Kennedy in order to reduce by 11 per cent direct income tax for the workmen and the American people. That measure will increase the purchasing power of American consumers, thus creating a demand for production, which in turn will increase employment and prevent unemployment. One is justified to wonder why there is no unemployment in wartime. The reason is that in wartime we experience an increased purchasing power, while in peacetime everything operates slowly and everybody then experiences a period of unemployment like the one we have had since the war and especially since the beginning of the Conservative administration in 1957.

The solution will only be found when measures dealing with developments in the automation century will have been understood and applied. Automation is getting more and more scientific and it will increasingly shove labour aside.

To advocate that to settle unemployment it is necessary to curb automation is false, because automation is the direct and beneficent result of the human mind in operation. In my opinion, if we curb automation, we thus curb the human mind in action.

We know that automation is the direct cause of unemployment, since it has supplanted the workers who were employed to produce what the machine now makes without them. All right. But the concern should not be that the worker will lose his job, but that as a result of his loss of income, he will no longer be able to buy the commodities that the machine will continue to produce. We are faced with this dilemma: either the machine goes on producing the goods that were produced by man in the past and that he could buy with the salary derived from his job, or we face up to the existing over production.

[Mr. Chapdelaine.]

The answer to the problem of automation is to make it possible for the workers to own the machines replacing them. In this way, man will be able to live on the goods produced by the machine which he owns, while at present, in opposition to this, production is increasing and the purchasing power is low and, according to all indications, will get lower and lower. The problem is not one of production but of distribution.

If only our present government, as well as other governments throughout the world would realize that it is not with second-class measures that we are going to solve the problem of unemployment, but by getting at the heart of the matter, that is the lack of purchasing power in the pockets of the consumers who alone can absorb the goods being produced; if only the government realized that it is not a question of greatly increasing the present money supply, if the government realized that such a thing could be done without printing money indiscriminately, as some people might have thought when somebody tried to explain the Social Credit doctrine by using the wrong terms, because those social allowances we have now might well be called dividends, then the government would be getting nearer to the Social Credit theory. But we do not believe you can provide everybody with a livelihood without taking into account the production capacity of this country.

If the government would understand that instead of leaving to the chartered banks the power they have at present to create 12 times as much money as they have on deposit in the Bank of Canada; if the government would gradually take back the power that we, Canadians, have given the chartered banks through the federal government for the operation of public services, little by little Canadians would have less money to pay back as interest on bonds and, as a result, the government would not have to levy so many taxes, which are used only to pay the interest on the public debt. The national debt has reached such a level that we have $900 million a year to pay as interest alone.

Let us just suppose for a moment that, in the country, Canadians no longer have to pay the government $900 million each year because that amount is no longer required to pay interest on the national debt, and let us suppose that the money were distributed as spending power.

That money would be left to the consumer in the form of purchasing power because it would not have been taken from him through taxes. Then you would see the Canadian economy moving again. And there would be no need to dream up all kinds of second rate solutions to solve the unemployment problem.

I respectfully submit that these are not lunatic theories but indeed rather concrete theories forced upon us by reality and to be applied sooner or later. As a matter of fact, if we fail to do so, we will have to keep on borrowing and paying back, over periods of 20 to 30 years, for services we will have used but for which our children will have to pay because their fathers will not have been wise enough to put their affairs in order while they were living.

Mr. Speaker, I feel we might accept for the time being the measures submitted by the government. On the other hand, governments, whether Liberal or Conservative, will gradually have to reach the conclusion that a reform of Canada's monetary system is necessary if the economy is to develop normally in a country as rich as Canada.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the question which has been debated since yesterday, namely that of unemployment, is one which follows naturally from a situation created by an obsolete economic system, by a system which is no longer suited to the present needs, and this precisely at the time when we speak of full employment, when we hear the representatives of the various political parties in this house speak of the ideal to be pursued, that is full employment, in brief, at the very moment when the number of unemployed is going up.

The hon. member who rose before me, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) quoted a little while ago figures on the number of unemployed in Canada. He said that our country had respectively in 1959, 1960 and 1961, 578,000, 547,000 and 693,000 unemployed.

Now, last week, I put on the order paper question No. 1,469, which reads as follows:

[Text]

"What was the value of goods and services produced for each of the last five years?"

[Translation]

And here is the answer I was given:

In 1958, the value of goods and services produced in Canada amounted to $36,048 million.

In 1959, it was $38,430 million, that is $2,400 million more than in 1958.

In 1960, at the time when Canada had 547,000 unemployed, the gross national product amounted to $39,437 million, that is an increase of $1 billion over the production of the preceding year.

In 1961, when our country held the unemployment or lack of employment record, our gross national product reached $40,511 million, that is an increase of $1,100 million over the year 1960, although the number of unemployed reached the figure of 693,000.

In 1962, without any decrease in the number of jobs, the gross national product amounted to $43,646 million, that is an increase of $3,135 million over that of the preceding year.

Here we have an instance of the economical paradox in which we live, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, at the very moment when the situation of the unemployed remains unchanged, our national production is increasing, and that, without any participation of the arms and brains of our Canadian citizens. That is the problem confronting us today. At the very time when we hear some hon. members, even ministers and leaders of the opposition or of the government, talk about their good intentions with regard to unemployed Canadians, our national production is increasing while the number of the workless remains stationary, when it does not increase.

What solution is suggested? None whatsoever. At this time there is much talk of economic planning. We have no plans, no guidance, we lack government leadership in all spheres of economic life.

There is a lack of government leadership, while we are under pressure from various Canadian organizations, which ask us to intervene in a given sector of private enterprise, in a given field of our national production. The government is urged to make decisions for private enterprise, to levy more taxes on personal initiative, so as to be able to invade sectors where it should not step in at all.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde) mentioned yesterday the evidence given by Mr. Snyder, president of a large American industrial concern. He even quoted the concluding remarks of Mr. Snyder:

If we do not want to be up against a terrible unemployment crisis, within four or five years—

Since the article was written on October 5, 1963, that would take us to 1968.

If we do not want to be up against a terrible unemployment crisis within four or five years, it is important that teams of sociologists and economists—

Mr. Speaker, when I see the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) in his seat, I suggest to the government to mobilize the hon. minister and also the sociologists or economists who are members of the government team. I suggest to mobilize them not to let them sit in their place without offering any solution, but, as Mr. Snyder put it:

—teams of sociologists and economists to prepare drastic solutions to deal within an unprecedented problem.

Unemployment Measures Lacking

Mr. Speaker, we need drastic solutions, not bogus solutions. And what is that unprecedented problem? It is that automation will involve before long, in the United States, the elimination of 40,000 jobs each week. And we in Canada will feel the impact of that situation, even if it originates in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, it is not full employment which will offer a solution to the problem of automation, because it is evident that the more we use machinery, the greater the number of our unemployed people.

The question is to decide whether the use of machines in Canada is to penalize men, women and children or whether it should assist and serve the human person in Canada.

That is the question.

Mr. Speaker, why is it always necessary to offer the Canadian people a dish of oats as you would to horses to round them up in a corral? Why not enact legislation fitted to human needs?

Why not come up with bold solutions—and again this is where economists and sociologists would have an important role to play—since solutions half a century old can no longer meet the requirements?

This is neither 1867, 1912 or 1934 but 1963. Means of production have changed. There has been progress everywhere in the world except as far as the monetary system is concerned. In Canada and in other countries professing their respect of democracy, human rights and the right of every man to live decently in a country of his own, the monetary system has remained unchanged.

Mr. Speaker, it is our duty to create an economic context which would permit the accomplishment of the human personality and would make it possible for every human being to live his life according to his aspirations, and his talents. Then, we would see the whole of Canada achieve the high level of culture and the high standard of living sought by every Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, when the Social Crediters come up, in this house or outside, with a suggestion to boost the Canadian economy or even with something new, because we do need something new in Canada, and they maintain that the monetary system is without the shadow of a doubt what is preventing the economic recovery of this country today, they are right. Our monetary system is not adapted to the people's needs, and that is why, from one end of the country to the other, in all our provinces, we are faced with the same financial difficulties that prevent us from getting out of that rut that enslaves us.

Mr. Speaker, we are talking about monetary reform when the governments which have followed one another for the past 25 or 30 years have only been concerned with the reform of morals, institutions and private enterprise, with the interference of the left-wing and right-wing parties, the interference of the government with the people's way of life, the interference of the government with private property and private industrial planning.

Earlier, we have heard again a socialist colleague asserting that in order to boost our economy it was necessary to resort to socialism, planning, yokes and strait-jackets in Canada. We do not share that view. We believe that what exists in Canada today is not due to the initiative of the federal or the provincial governments but rather to free enterprise, to private planning which, in 1962, succeeded in creating in Canada a gigantic production of goods and services valued at $43 million. The government does not produce; on the contrary, it prevents production. And that is so true that recently it was decided to exempt from income tax any new corporation that would settle in underdeveloped or depressed areas.

Mr. Speaker, if the government does that, it is because it understands that private enterprise in Canada is now being taxed to the limit, and that is precisely the obstacle in the way of that economic development which this country needs at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, the monetary reform advocated by Social Credit is not at all mysterious.

A little while ago, the hon. member for Sherbrooke said that unemployment insurance is not much good. I agree, but when he goes on to say that unemployment insurance is an encouragement to laziness, then I do not agree with him. If there was no unemployment insurance at the present time, all our unemployed would literally starve in an immensely rich country.

Today, at noon, we heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) say that he had concluded a great sale of wheat to Poland. We made wheat sales to China, the U.S.S.R. and also Czechoslovakia, Mr. Speaker, but that did not create a single job in all Canada.

Why? Because, as I said, automation is the current problem. Now, as private enterprise and others in Canada use more and more machines instead of men, production will go on increasing year after year, and also the number of unemployed.

There is only one warranted and possible solution, and it is the following one: as machines, progress and science replace men at work, the government ought to order the Bank of Canada to give back to men, women and children a purchasing power which will enable them to buy what is produced by machines, progress and science. Then we will respect the human person and at the same time machines, progress and science.

Mr. Speaker, the monetary reform proposed by Social Credit is extremely simple: to make financially possible what is physically realizable, desirable and morally good.

In that connection, a man very conversant with the monetary policies of Canada made a statement on October 24, 1963 or during the week of October 24. I am referring to a lecture by Mr. Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, reported as follows in an article written by Mr. Laurent Lauzier of La Presse in Montreal:

> At the beginning of the week, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, gave a most useful talk in which he explained the true role of monetary policy in the Canadian economy.
> At this time when very different theories are being advocated concerning this delicate and complex question which seems to be the fundamental cause of the money crises our country has gone through, these past few years, it became imperative for this official to state the principles he follows in this field and to define the true meaning of monetary policy as an instrument to control our prosperity.

How can we speak of an instrument to control our prosperity when we have thousands and thousands of unemployed and needy families in Canada? And now we are being told about "an instrument to control our prosperity".

It must be admitted, Mr. Speaker, that the instrument to control our prosperity has unfortunately been a failure throughout Canada.

"The instrument to control our poverty" would be a more appropriate term in the circumstances.

Mr. Lauzier goes on to say in his article:

> Mr. Rasminsky does not share the views of those who credit money management with a magic power, in the best as well as in the worst interests of our society. He gives it a much narrower scope. According to him, the monetary policy is not enough by itself to cure an economy beset with many ills, any more than a single medicine can succeed in restoring a sick person to health.

We appreciate this statement from the governor of the Bank of Canada. On the other hand, if the monetary policy alone is not sufficient to cure a deficient economy, what has the governor of the Bank of Canada to answer, for example, when we are asking the government to adopt more generous social measures.

What is lacking in Canada? Are we short of resources? Are we short of labour? No, we have from 500,000 to 600,000 unemployed. Are we short of brains, ability or goodwill? Mr. Speaker, we have all that in Canada. What we need, and the government is aware of it day after day, is money. We are suffering from a shortage of money and credit, from this chronic evil which prevents the government from taking action to enable Canada to develop as it should in 1963.

Mr. Speaker, we have all that in Canada. But what is wrong, and the government realizes it more every day, is that it suffers from a chronic lack of money and credit, which prevents it from taking action to help Canada grow and prosper as it should in 1963.

And that is all Mr. Rasminsky's doing, that remarkable economist, chairman and governor of the Bank of Canada, who puts his nose into all sorts of things he does not seem to understand at all. But he can understand that monetary policy—

> May contribute to correct a difficult situation—

There he admits that from 1929 to 1939, conditions were difficult for us. At that time we had thousands of unemployed in Canada, we had no social legislation, no family allowances and no old age pensions, in short we had no social security whatever, and the jobless were struggling along in abject misery at the time.

And in the years 1933-1934, when we had hundreds of thousands of unemployed, they destroyed wheat in western Canada, potatoes in eastern Canada, they threw thousands of bags of flour into the great lakes, milk into the sewers, and the same more or less happened all over Canada.

Now, at that time, the government had no solution. Yet suddenly, as if by magic—to quote Mr. Rasminsky—under the 1939 government and the leadership of the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, they succeeded in finding millions of dollars to organize war and put Canada on a war footing overnight. As if by magic, the number of unemployed decreased and then vanished completely in Canada, as jobs were created by the war industries.

Is the situation today not equally urgent and does it not require that the problem be considered quite earnestly.

Mr. Rasminsky exclaims:

> It can contribute to correct a difficult situation or act as a stimulating factor on the economy...

"Act as a stimulating factor". He admits that it can be a stimulating factor for the economy.

> —when circumstances allow it.

Would the present circumstances not allow it? This is where Mr. Rasminsky forgets to state what are those circumstances.

> —but it may show itself powerless and even inefficient if it is used to solve problems which are unrelated to its function.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all the problems today, and everyone knows it, are essentially financial problems.

Unemployment Measures Lacking

In all fields where industry and the government want to take action, we are faced with a shortage of money.

There is no inflation at the present time in the country, it is rather deflation which is prevailing. Our production amounted to $43 billion in 1962, compared to a national income of approximately $32 billion. That is not inflation.

Inflation would be an inexistent production and at the same time an abundant purchasing power. That would be inflation. But when I think that we have no purchasing power and a production of $43 billion only for 1962, I say that we are living under deficit conditions and that there is deflation at present instead of inflation.

I continue this quotation from Mr. Rasminsky's speech:

> In other words, the governor of the Bank of Canada admits that the monetary policy is not a panacea.

We never stated that the monetary policy could graft a new leg onto a man with a wooden leg. We know that. It is not necessary in order to grasp that fact to have Mr. Rasminsky's knowledge in monetary matters. Our monetary policy, must be truly representative, it must reflect the goods and services produced in Canada. That is all there is to it. That is precisely what the Social Crediters have said for a long time. With all due respect to Mr. Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, Social Crediters maintain that when the government borrows from a charter bank one billion dollars for public works or for other projects, and when it undersigns bonds or debentures at 5 or 5½ per cent, maturing in 20 or 25 years, new credit is created by the banks; in 25 or 30 years, that credit must be reimbursed together with the interests, which by then will come to a greater amount than the borrowed capital. Which means that we shall have to reimburse over $2 billion for a loan of $1 billion made in 1963. Our children will probably have to carry the load of the national debt that we are creating today.

I feel that at the moment our prime duty is to prevent the existing system not only from undermining our savings, but also from burdening the future that our children will inherit in 20 or 25 years from now.

Mr. Speaker, under the present system, Canada will never be able to repay its national debt, because it is made up of a credit created by banks, added to an interest which was never created; and that is what makes up the national debt which, at the present time, is costing us $1 billion every year as indicated by the Minister of Finance when he introduced his budget—

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Choquette: You have been shouting that for a long time.

Mr. Caouette: And for 20 years, my dear friend, you have failed to understand. That is why we keep repeating it.

Mr. Choquette: You have been shouting that for 20 years.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) say that we have been shouting that for a long time. I may say that the Bible has been preached for 2,000 years and there are still millions of people like my friend for Lotbiniere who go to the devil every day.

Mr. Speaker, the governor of the Bank of Canada continues:

> —he recognizes that the monetary policy is no cure-all and that its impact on the Canadian economy is far from being as important as certain people believe.

It is on this point that I should like to have explanations from the governor of the Bank of Canada in order to see whether the monetary question has no impact on the economy of a nation.

When we hear about a contributory pension plan to which everybody would be a contributor, when you see that today the province of Quebec with Mr. Lesage's government has to deal with feasible undertakings and new potential as, for instance, the steel industry which would have as a corollary an automobile industry, what are the problems which the premier of the province of Quebec must cope with?

He must deal with a monetary problem exactly the same as we have here in Ottawa. It is that problem or that situation which the federal government does not dare touch, does not wish to touch and does nothing to hold in check or at least try to improve the monetary conditions in Canada.

The minister of education of the province of Quebec said: "We do not have enough money." Some 15 years ago, we heard the premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Maurice Duplessis, state: "We are not manufacturers of taxes, we do not manufacture the money." Those words were said by the premier of the province of Quebec at that time.

Mr. Choquette: Would the hon. member for Villeneuve tell us, supposing the Social Credit theories were applied, in what proportion does he think unemployment would come down?

Mr. Caouette: In reply to my very good friend, Mr. Speaker, I say: a hundred per cent, because the financial problem would come in second place then, whereas today it is the financial problem which prevents the economy from getting off the ground.

Mr. Choquette: There will always be unemployment.

Mr. Caouette: That is right, but it would be extremely low because maximum employment would be achieved by putting into practice the Social Credit doctrine. And I know that my hon. friend from Lotbiniere understands what I mean. If Social Credit is wrong, why does not the government offer us a solution, not an unrealistic solution which does not lead anywhere, but a true solution which will contribute to create and give new strength to the Canadian economy in general.

Mr. Speaker, the governor of the Bank of Canada adds:

In that respect, the diagnosis formulated by Mr. Rasminsky is one of the most realistic ever to come out of the federal capital. Canada's true economic problem is not a monetary one, it is related to its industrial production level.

Here Mr. Rasminsky spoke either in bad faith or through ignorance, or both.

Mr. Speaker, I have just given figures showing that our national production had reached $43,664 million in 1962, and we hear the governor of the Bank of Canada say that Canada's industrial production is not high enough. Then I say that the governor of the Bank of Canada is a public liar and nothing else.

If you compare the abundance of our natural resources with the high level of unemployment we have, you must admit that the output of our economy is definitely insufficient and that it is the main cause of our trade deficit.

What is the reason of that deficit? Instead of processing our raw material in Canada and then exporting it to the United States where people would be interested in buying our finished products, we export our raw material to be processed by the Americans and then sold back to us as finished products.

It is because we have failed to face up to our responsibilities as representatives of the Canadian people that our general economy is 90 per cent under American control.

There is not a single monetary measure that can solve this problem. Perhaps not in a permanent way. But let us at least try this one and, eventually, should reforms be necessary in order to achieve this goal, we shall deal with them in due time.

The latter depends chiefly on our ability to produce more.

Mr. Rasminsky says: "Our ability to produce more".

We have from 400,000 to 500,000 unemployed people in Canada. We have capable people available for work and we are being told that we lack the ability to produce, when our production amounts, and I say it once more, to $43 billion in products and services, and when one thinks of the number of unemployed people we have—

An hon. Member: What does Mr. Rasminsky produce? Do you know?

Mr. Caouette: Somebody asks me: "What does Mr. Rasminsky produce?" I am wondering about this myself. Apart from the debts that we have in Canada, that is the only thing he can do.

Since his appointment to the important position which he holds at the present time, Mr. Rasminsky delivered this week his first lecture.

He should have cancelled his first lecture, since it would probably have prevented him from saying such nonsense in Montreal.

It must be that he deemed it essential to intervene at last in the discussion in order to clarify a situation which threatened to become more and more confused.

We have confusion already. We are here since May 16, 1963, and confusion is prevalent. The Prime Minister feels that all is not going well in this house, that there is filibustering on the part of the official opposition.

We are wondering what is the government waiting for to take the steps which would likely get the Canadian economy moving again.

Nobody seems to know anything. If you write to the minister or his deputy you are told that they do not know; the minister does not know anything nor does anyone else and, in the meantime, the people are burdened with a national tax budget of over $6 billion a year.

Mr. Speaker, the governor of the Bank of Canada carries on, or rather the newspaperman:

Let us hope that his message will be carefully scrutinized, by all those who take an interest in the part played by the monetary policy in our economic life.

He shows a sense of restraint and reality we are not too accustomed to see, and that should give our politicians food for thought, especially those who rely on drastic monetary reforms for the welfare of all our people.

We are among those who insist upon a drastic monetary reform, and that does not mean taking away savings or money from people who have some, but restoring a perfect balance between purchasing power, which is in the hands of consumers, and total production, which is the result of our common efforts in Canada.

We have workers, farmers, labourers, white collars, professionals, we have people from all social classes contributing to Canada's total production, whether in the form of good or services, and all those elements are required if the economic and social affairs of a nation are to run smoothly.

But there should be no impediment to the carrying out of a major program. We, of the Social Credit, suggest at this time that this impediment is to be found in our obsolete monetary system, which no longer meets the needs of the Canadian nation. When this system is changed, reformed so that every Canadian gets his fair share of our tremendous national wealth, we shall then have discharged our responsibilities, we shall have the satisfaction of having fulfilled our duty.

Mr. Speaker, may I remind you that it is six o'clock.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, before the six o'clock adjournment, the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) asked me whether there would still be unemployment if the Social Credit theory were applied. My answer is no and this is the reason why. Because of automation, the use of machinery and the progress of science, the unemployed would no longer be called "unemployed" but "retired". That is the difference between the present system we tolerate and the application of Social Credit principles.

What does Social Credit advocate? First of all, there is a reform of the monetary system to make the Bank of Canada the sole creator of new credit and to force the chartered banks to keep reserves equal to 100 per cent of the loans they make, as is the case at present for the caisses populaires. The banks would continue to lend exactly as at the present time, but instead of creating fictive loans, they would lend their depositors' money. It would be something concrete and not mere figures as is the case today.

We suggest the setting up of a credit control board responsible for maintaining a perfect balance between money supply and outstanding credit on the one hand, and the gross national product on the other hand.

To maintain this balance, we suggest that a national dividend be distributed among all Canadian citizens. This dividend would be based on the difference between production on one hand and purchasing power on the other. That would not in the least create inflation, but would establish a perfect balance between the purchasing power and the goods and services offered and produced in Canada. The payment of a dividend does not mean inconsiderate creation of money, without limit, but rather a dividend always closely related to the difference between production and purchasing power. This would then be social dividend because it would reach every individual in Canada and would be at the service of everyone. It would be socially besides being economically just.

Because of the consequences of automation, I do not see, Mr. Speaker, any other means to reach Canadian consumers, to enable them to purchase the things they need, the goods and services produced by the Canadian people.

That new purchasing power would not only do away with inflation but would always maintain a reasonable balance between, on the one hand, what consumers need to buy and, on the other hand, what producers have to offer to the consumers.

We are also suggesting a compensated discount to allow for an increase in purchasing power which would not necessarily amount to an increase in the money supply. Such a compensated discount was actually in force during the war years when the Liberal government of the day granted a two-cent a quart discount on milk, which was given to milk consumers and paid to milk producers or distributors.

Those are measures which are really different from what we have now. Those are measures which tend to bring a smile to the faces of those who have absolutely no solution to offer to deal with the present economic uneasiness.

Social Crediters feel they have that answer, and we are convinced that if economists of the Liberal party were to take the trouble of studying the proposals made by Social Credit, our national affairs could be run much more efficiently.

In the past, the Liberals as well as the Conservatives have beaten around the bush in a pitiful way within the framework of a system which no longer suits the needs of the nation.

Should we assimilate man, force him to put up with that system, or are we not duty bound to create a system which shows some respect for the individual?

Are systems meant to punish men or are they not designed to serve mankind?

If systems must exist to serve man, it is time that we, members of parliament, those responsible, took action.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wish strenuously to object at this time, before any other speaker is recognized, to the way the time has been allotted in this debate. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) rose in the same regard before supper and I am substantially in agreement with the remarks he made at that time. I feel we have a quarrel with the government in that we should be given an opportunity now to reply to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen); but nevertheless I feel it is very unfair that six members from the minor parties have been heard in this debate while only three members from the official opposition and three members from the government side have been heard. I hope you will take this into consideration in the other important debates in the future.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, the point of order—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I intended to raise this point—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are two members talking and I can only listen to one at a time. I believe the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) was on his feet before the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) so if he is rising on a point of order I would ask him what is his point of order.

Mr. Byrne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The point of order raised by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) is the very one I raised earlier this afternoon, but when the hon. member says that the official opposition should have the right to answer the minister, then I certainly take exception to that suggestion. After all, it is the government that is defending itself on a want of confidence motion, and the minister was replying to the charges made by the former minister of labour, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr). I submit that this is a case—

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Byrne: —where the rules clearly provide that a government member should be heard at this time.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member raises his question of privilege I think I should give the facts to the house. There have been three speakers from the Conservative party, three speakers from the Liberal party, two speakers from the New Democratic party, two from the Social Credit party, and two from the Ralliement Creditiste.

Mr. Bell: We have 95 members. Surely we are entitled to more time than that.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises from a ruling Your Honour made in this house on October 29, 1963, and I wish to refer to it, as reported in the first column of page 4151 of Hansard:

> There should not be a list of speakers with an order of precedence in the House of Commons.

That is citation 121 of Beauchesne. I would respectfully call to your attention, sir, that just now you referred to a list, and that list was at the Speaker's chair this afternoon when I approached the chair. The list was shown to me and the occupant of the chair at that time complained about the very point brought up by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) and now by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell). The occupant of the chair made that complaint when I approached him about this list. Once again, the first sentence of your ruling on October 29 is:

> "There should not be a list of speakers with an order of precedence in the House of Commons".

On a point of order, sir, you have now referred to a list.

Mr. Byrne: I do not know that I want to be lectured by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis), but he must admit that there was no suggestion of a list.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We do have to have a certain sequence, even if I have to take the brunt of it.

Mr. Nielsen: I should like to speak on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. I heard the statement made by the Speaker with regard to the sequence of speakers in this house. There have been three from the Liberal party, three from the Conservative party, two from the New Democratic party, two from the Social Credit party, and two from the Creditistes. This means that with less than half of the number of members of the official opposition the three splinter parties in this house have taken up more than twice the time taken up by the official opposition. It seems to me that a more proportionate distribution of time should be awarded in this house.

It has been suggested by Mr. Deputy Speaker that this is a matter for agreement among the whips of the parties in this house. With this I disagree. I think Your Honour has the responsibility of determining the order on a fair and reasonable basis according to the time to be allotted to the members of various parties who wish to speak on a resolution such as this. It seems to me that the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr.

Division

Bell) should be recognized. After all, he has only 60 seconds left in which to speak. The Minister of Labour was the last one to speak on this subject and it appears to me, therefore, a spokesman for the official opposition has a right to comment on the material the minister used in his speech. To deny this right to the official opposition is to take away the fundamental right of an opposition to exercise its responsibility—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Nielsen: —to oppose where opposition is necessary. After all it is an amendment put up by the official opposition which is under discussion at this time. The Minister of Labour spent 30 minutes, before the recess, in explaining the theories of his government with regard to this matter. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert should have the right to speak now on behalf of the opposition.

Mr. Byrne: The official opposition having accomplished what it set out to do, to prevent me from speaking—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The time has arrived for the Speaker to have his say. It being 8.15 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to standing order 56, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendments which are now before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

The question is on the amendment to the main motion.

Mr. Beer: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Rynard: I was paired with the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members for the ridings of Timmins (Mr. Martin), Danforth (Mr. Scott), Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) and Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) are not paired but are absent on official business.

An hon. Member: That is for the Globe and Mail.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the main motion.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Starr) which was negatived on the following division:

During the taking of the vote:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I did not observe that the members of the official opposition had finished voting. I and my colleagues who have not voted would like now to have the opportunity of having our vote registered in favour of the amendment.

Division

Mr. Olson: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I must say that this is a very unusual situation. I am searching frantically for a precedent. There is a way, I think, that might be adopted. With unanimous consent permission could be granted, but without unanimous consent it would be difficult.

Mr. Olson: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that there is not unanimous consent of the house. Second, it is incredible that 12 members could miss a vote when Your Honour called it.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will realize that it is most unusual to raise a point of order during a vote and before the result is announced. Unless we have unanimous consent there is nothing the Chair can do in this situation except wait for the announcement by the Clerk.

After the taking of the vote:

Mr. Rheaume: I wish to raise a grievance—

Mr. Cardiff: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Beer: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Rynard: I was paired with the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Douglas: Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Fisher: Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, if I had the opportunity to vote, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Winch: The same thing goes for me.

Mr. Knowles: If I had a chance to vote, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Peters: I also would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo - Cowichan - The Islands): I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Brewin: Me too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mather: I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): I would have voted for the amendment.

[Mr. Douglas.]

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—FAILURE TO PROCEED WITH LEGISLATION—PATRONAGE

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring a grievance before the house at this time. Simply stated in general terms it is that as a result of the inability of the Prime Minister to establish legislative priorities, and to prevent his cabinet colleagues from intentionally denying and withholding essential information from opposition members, he has prejudiced the integrity and purpose of parliament.

I intend to document my grievance and in the course of it will lay before the house a story of patronage, a story of ministerial untruth, a story of inaction, a story of what I call 60 days of so-called decision, followed by 60 days of frenzy, followed by 60 days of subterfuge.

Mr. Macdonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, judging from what the hon. member has said this seems to be the same insubstantial and nonsensical grievance which the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) brought before us some two weeks ago, and I would submit to you, sir, that it would not be in order for the hon. member to continue that discussion at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I must say I have not heard enough of the speech of the hon. member for Northwest Territories to reach a decision. It seems to me he was merely breaking into his introduction.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Speaker, all of these items I have mentioned have worked a peculiar hardship on the Canadian north, and that is why I want to be the one who leads off the grievance period. There are perhaps some other reasons why I should. For one thing, I am a backbencher, and for another I am new to parliament. For another thing I am rather young. As a matter of fact I can still be hurt. You see, I still essentially believe in democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I am not a cynic, and perhaps this is because I have not been betrayed, or lied to, or conspired against. I have not, as a matter of fact, sold myself out. I have never had my hand in anyone's till. In short, Mr. Speaker, I have had none of those wonderful experiences that go into the formation of the kind of politician for whom the present government seems to have endless respect.

I have said that the Prime Minister has failed to establish legislative priorities, and I say there is one other person involved here too, and that is the house leader, the Secretary of State. I say that these two are to blame and the other members of the treasury benches do not have to take as much blame because it really is not their fault.

For example, I think the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Benidickson) if he had the ear of the cabinet and the confidence of the house leader, would have introduced legislation long before this under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, and would thereby have set at ease the worries and concerns of the many communities in Canada who wonder whether or not this program is to be extended.

I know too that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) is most anxious to bring forward legislation to establish the Indian claims commission. Indeed I was at a conference with the minister in Winnipeg when he categorically promised the Indian people that the new era was about to dawn because he would see to it an Indian claims commission was established very soon, and certainly prior to Christmas.

I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) also would have introduced, and got beyond second reading, the Canada pension plan. I want to digress momentarily at this point, but I can assure the hon. lady I will be coming back to her later. She likes to call herself the mother of all pensions, but after listening to what the Prime Minister told us yesterday I wish to say this surely will be the longest legislative pregnancy ever on record.

Mr. Macdonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have been listening carefully to the hon. member and he has failed so far to raise any specific grievance.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Speaker, the failure of the government to introduce legislation has worked a particular hardship on the Northwest Territories, and I propose to bring this right close to home now. As hon. members may or may not know, the territorial council of the Northwest Territories is composed of nine members, five of whom are appointed by the governor in council, and who live in the south. They serve council terms at pleasure. Four members of the Northwest Territories council are elected, and they are elected for a three year term. The commissioner of the Northwest Territories is head of the council, and is a federal government official answerable to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

My point is that the terms of the elected members of the Northwest Territories council expire two days from now, on Thursday, November 7. At that point, because of the failure of the government to bring forward legislation, those four elected councillors will no longer have elective status as of Friday morning, and they themselves will have no opportunity to go back to the people of the Northwest Territories and seek a new mandate. Similarly, the people of the Northwest Territories will no longer have elected councillors to whom to go. They will have no way democratically to express to a democratically elected representative a wide range of problems relating to Northwest Territories matters.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the hon. member a question, not to interfere with him, but to assist those of us who are interested in following on the debate. Is the Northwest Territories a specific grievance, or what is? I ask because we would appreciate co-operation from him. If he would state what his grievance is then we can plan to take part in the debate.

Mr. Rheaume: At the beginning I gave a general grievance and illustrated it with the particular hardship this is working on the Northwest Territories. My grievance is that the government, through its failure to introduce urgently needed legislation and bring it forward in a consistent manner, is working a hardship throughout this country and, in the case of my particular constituency, it will result in the inability of elected councillors to go back to the people—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order at this point. I submit to Your Honour that there is legislation on the order paper, that the government has repeatedly sought to bring forward, to deal precisely with the matter which the hon. gentleman is now referring to.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I believe I have the floor. Under the well established rules it is not possible at this grievance period to bring up matters connected with another matter on the order paper that is set down for consideration at another time. Therefore, it seems to me that the trend of the hon. gentleman's statement at the present time is completely out of order and the house is entitled to know what is the specific grievance of the hon. gentleman so that we can train our minds to it. He is not entitled to make the kind of speech at this time that one makes during the budget debate or during the debate on the speech from the throne. The hon. gentleman should be called to order. I submit that the Chair should insist that he obeys the rules as do other hon. members and state his specific grievance, and state it clearly so that it can be understood by the house and replied to by the government.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, if the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) intends to live up to the commitment he gave this house on July 8 and subsequently, that the matters contained in Bill No. C-83 and Bill No. C-84 would be referred to a standing committee, then there is no possibility that this legislation can get through the house prior to this Friday, at which time the elected members of the Northwest Territories council lose their status. That is the fault of the house leader on the government side.

My point is that the onus is on the government to cause the legislative election machinery in the Northwest Territories to commence rolling. Nothing has been done under the existing legislation to allow for this. The chief electoral officer has not caused any enumerations to be carried out in the Northwest Territories. He has not called for nominations. In fact there will not be an election in the Northwest Territories prior to this Thursday; yet the present law calls for it. I can only suggest it is because the Secretary of State is not concerned about that part of the country.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Rheaume: To take this up—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request a ruling on the point of order I raised.

Mr. Speaker: I am, of course, doing my best to be fair and impartial. I should like to hear further comment from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order which has been raised it is my submission that this point would apply only if it were the intention of the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume) to found a substantive motion or deal with something which would in fact anticipate legislation which it is proposed to introduce. But surely, if the hon. member is not to be permitted to deal with any matter in the form of a grievance, for the purposes of discussion, a matter which happens to be on the order paper, then the range of subject matter which he is allowed to discuss would be so curtailed as to make the use of this ancient privilege of no value at all. My submission is that it is not a grievance on which any motion will be founded; consequently the point of order which the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) has raised is not applicable to this particular grievance.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, the grievance I raised on October 22 dealt with some 1,200 matters which were on the order paper. It seems to me that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) is indulging in his usual tactics of obstruction and of preventing hon. members from exercising their right to air grievances.

On the point raised a moment ago by the hon. member two seats back, about not being able to raise the same grievance, there is no rule in the book that I know of which prevents an hon. member following on with the same grievance; it is still the subject of a grievance. The hon. member for Northwest Territories has raised this dual grievance: the fact that this legislation is being blocked by inactivity and failure to act on the part of the government; and the patronage which exists in several departments in the government. The hon. member is speaking on both these grievances, and I fail to see why he should not be allowed to continue.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I gather from what the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) said that he has now acknowledged that the hon. member for Northwest Territories is about to repeat the debate which was concluded several weeks ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh no.

Mr. Macdonald: I should like at this point to put before you the authorities upon which I based my original point of order. Perhaps at the same time I should deal with the authorities supporting the position taken by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill).

Mr. Woolliams: What page?

Mr. Macdonald: With regard to the fact that this will anticipate legislation coming before the house, may I make reference first, for the benefit of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), to citation 149 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which indicates the rules of debate which should be followed not only in connection with the government business before the house but in connection with grievances brought up at such time as this. If I may refer more particularly to this rule, it says:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 35; it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:—
> (d) anticipate discussion on a motion set down for future consideration;—

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the matters with which the hon. member for Northwest Territories is seeking to deal are matters which are the subject matter of two motions at present on the order paper, and as such his reference to those matters at this time is contrary to the rules of debate and he should not be heard. On the second point—

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Macdonald: I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker—may I refer to citation 234 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which deals with the question of grievances being brought up at this time.

> The ancient doctrine that the redress of grievances should be considered before the grant of supplies is maintained in the House of Commons of Canada—
> (2) It often happens, on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for committee of supply, that members air grievances without moving amendments. A member may speak on railway rates, another on naturalization, and so on. Five or six different matters may then be brought to the government's attention. Once debate is concluded on one matter and another matter intervenes, members cannot again discuss the former.

I would also refer to Beauchesne, citation 148.

Mr. Woolliams: What page?

Mr. Macdonald: Page 126, paragraph (1). Perhaps someone will explain to the hon. member for Bow River that the citations in Beauchesne follow each other numerically and that citation 148 follows 147 and comes immediately before citation 149.

> It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.
> It is irregular to reflect upon, argue against, or in any manner call in question, in debate, the past acts or proceedings of the house, on the obvious ground that, besides tending to revive discussion upon questions which have already been once decided, such reflections are uncourteous to the house—

I submit that what the hon. member is doing, as indicated by the hon. member for Yukon—I suppose the house should be thankful to the hon. member for Yukon for having indicated it, because the hon. member for Northwest Territories did not—is that he is trying to revive, as I said at the commencement of my point of order—

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege—

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest that we hear the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) out and then come right back. The question is sufficiently difficult without our getting involved in who has the right to speak first. I should like to hear the hon. member finish his point of order.

Mr. Macdonald: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member had indicated, or had indicated through the hon. member for Yukon, his intention to discuss at this particular time a subject matter which was discussed at the same stage of the proceedings in this house two weeks ago. That matter was very fully discussed at that time. If the hon. member was then in a position to speak on it he should have done so, but the debate on that matter was concluded. Hon. members will recall that this house had a very full discussion of an entirely different grievance at the same time last week. In other words, the subject matter of the second half of the hon. member's so-called grievance was fully considered by the house, and debate on it concluded. Debate on another subject was then picked up. If I may refer again to citation 234(2) of Beauchesne, accordingly that subject matter has been concluded and the hon. member cannot now make reference to it.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, if I may just reply to the hon. member for Rosedale, I think he has attempted to raise two issues which can be met very simply. Citation 149(d) states:

> —anticipate discussion on a motion set down for future consideration;—

As I understand the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume) he is not trying to anticipate discussion. He is not going into the meat of this particular bill; he is simply stating that his grievance is that the government, through its mishandling of the machinery of parliament, has not yet put this motion down so that it can be discussed and proceeded with. He is not trying to anticipate discussion of the motion itself; I think that is quite plain. I do not think the hon. member for Northwest Territories is bound by what the hon. member for Yukon has said, although his efforts were very well directed.

With regard to citation 148, that it is not possible to revive a debate already concluded, a grievance is not a debate which can be concluded. There was a debate on an issue raised at that particular time; but on all these matters I submit with deference that the debate is never concluded. What was brought up by the hon. member for Yukon on the other occasion during the course of a grievance which had been introduced was not a matter which of its nature is a motion debate on which can be concluded. Consequently, this would not prevent the hon. member for Northwest Territories, even if he wanted to, which he does not, from discussing the same subject.

Mr. Macdonald: If I may reply to that, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald: I believe I am entitled, under the rules on a point of order, to reply to remarks made about a matter upon which I have already spoken.

Failure to Proceed with Legislation

Mr. Gregoire: On a question of privilege; on a question affecting the privileges of all members—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Kindt: Is there going to be any order in this house or do we need to have a new Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pickersgill: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order. On the question of whether the debate has been concluded or not I, also, have read citation 234 and, as is so often possible, not one interpretation but two or three may be taken from it. There is one sentence which has not been referred to and it appears in the middle of the second paragraph of the citation:

> Once debate is concluded on one matter and another intervenes, members cannot again discuss the former.

No decision was reached two weeks ago, if I recall correctly, on the matter raised at that time by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). There was no vote taken as far as I remember. There was not even a motion proposed. So the matter has not been concluded, in that sense. At the same time, if one looks at the end of paragraph 1 of citation 234, he will find these words:

> When such motion is proposed, it shall be permissible to discuss any public matter within the powers of the federal parliament or to ask for the redress of any grievance; provided that the discussion shall not relate to any decision of the house during the current session, nor to any item of the estimates, nor to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of ways and means, nor to any matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper.

This would seem to bear out the view of the Secretary of State. On the other hand, if the debate was in order two weeks ago—and the debate did take place—it did deal with, not one matter placed on the order paper but perhaps a thousand, if one can refer to questions and things of that kind. Therefore, in the circumstances I feel the benefit of the doubt, at least, should be given to the hon. member for the Northwest Territories.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I wish to call your attention on the fact that a few moments ago the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume) also rose on a question of privilege and was not given the opportunity to speak. I myself have risen on a question of privilege at that moment and I was not allowed to speak.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Now, section 17 of standing orders reads as follows:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

That procedure was ignored twice this evening.

[Text]

Mr. Rheaume: If I may continue before there are any further interruptions from the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), let me say I can assure him that as long as patronage continues I shall raise the subject on every occasion.

I wish to speak now of the serious situation whereby the Northwest Territories people are deprived of their elected territorial councillors, a situation which is all the more serious when we consider that control will now pass almost totally and completely into the hands of the federal government over even territorial matters. It means we may see a new era of patronage and a new era of carte blanche on the part of this government which has taken the position several times in this house that they know what is best for the people. I need only give as an example the statement which the minister of northern affairs (Mr. Laing) made to the effect that the Eskimo people of northern Quebec would be told what is going to happen to them, that they would not be consulted because they are, after all, primitive people.

As of Friday, when there will be no elected councillors, there will be no one in the territories who can fight for them to remedy those grievances which would normally be of a peculiarly territorial nature. There will be no councillors answerable to the people of the north, and this is all the more serious in view of the denial of information which I have experienced when attempting to find out what is going on in the Canadian north. On one hand we have a government which fails to take action under the existing legislation to ensure that there is representative government in the territories, and on the other hand they fail to bring in new legislation which would provide for it. Then they go on to deny information to the existing representative of the Northwest Territories.

I want to talk about patronage in the Northwest Territories because it ties in with my statement earlier about the federal government assuming complete power there—that we need protection from this new spirit in the north, as the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare termed it, though I would say that the new spirit is one of blatant patronage. I would refer to an article in the Edmonton Journal naming the mayor of Yellowknife as the proposed new commissioner of the Mackenzie territory when the Secretary of State thinks fit to bring the legislation forward. This person has been an executive officer of the Liberal party in the Northwest Territories. Speculation is rife in the Canadian north that he actually wrote the article for the Edmonton Journal. It is common knowledge in the Northwest Territories that this person is in line for the appointment.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think this particular reference is really on the point.

Mr. Rheaume: My point is this, that the federal government, since there are no elected councillors, or will be none after Friday, have complete control over the affairs of the Northwest Territories and speculation is rife that an executive officer of the Liberal party will be named to that position which will give him peculiar and total power over the residents of the north, without any elected people being there to protect them. When I asked the minister of northern affairs if any commitment had been made in this regard he said, no. But a few days ago this officer was approached to represent the Northwest Territories at the centennial conference at the same time as the already appointed commissioner of the Yukon territory was brought in to represent that area; so here we have these two people representing the Yukon and the Northwest Territories respectively. So it is a legitimate assumption for me and others in the north to believe there is a commitment in this respect. The minister of northern affairs, discussing this, said they were prepared to take recommendations from any source as to the new resident commissioner of the Northwest Territories. I want to know whether he is prepared to ask me for suggestions and to honestly and seriously consider any suggestions I have to make, since after Friday I will be the only elected person from the whole of the Canadian Northwest Territories.

I want to refer briefly to the consultants list, the list that everyone denies, the list that I, among others, have seen, because it, too, appears to be a serious matter in relation to the Canadian north. The list as I read it shows the defeated Liberal candidate in the last election of the Northwest Territories, as a consultant.

Mr. Denis: I have yours here. I have your list. You did not complain.

An hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Rheaume: The same person who is listed as a consultant was appointed by order in council as a paid consultant to the centennial commission. So, in effect, the defeated candidate is not only on the list the Postmaster General has, but is, in effect, a civil servant, thereby dispensing patronage in the north. This hardly surprises any of us who read the roster of those who were invited to Ottawa recently from all over Canada, because it consisted largely of defeated candidates and their wives in the instances where those defeated candidates had gone into some kind of honest employment.

I want to refer now to something which could be described as an abuse of power. I refer to the recent trip taken by the minister of northern affairs through the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, a trip which cost the taxpayers $16,402, a heroic voyage overland to the Arctic with nothing to protect him but a DC-3 and 16 or 17 staff. I asked in my question which I put on the order paper as to the functions of the people who went along. I asked this question in all seriousness because I have seen many ministerial visits to the Canadian north during the time I have lived there. I can say this is the first time a minister of the crown travelling in an aircraft at the expense of the taxpayers has made a point of holding executive meetings of the Liberal party of the Northwest Territories which were planned and advertised in advance of his trip. I was in the Canadian Northwest Territories when we had visits from former ministers such as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and, more recently, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that at no time did these ministers ever hold Liberal executive meetings.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Rheaume: I should have said "Conservative". Hon. members opposite can laugh but that does not change the fact that the major purpose of the minister's recent trip was to hold organization meetings of the Liberal party at the taxpayers expense. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned earlier that we get frivolous answers to our questions and that they deny and withhold information. Let me give an example from the same question relating to this epic voyage. I asked what was the function of the staff members that the minister had taken along with him. This is what I got by way of an answer: "Mr. Cote, deputy minister; Mr. Sivertz, commissioner of the Northwest Territories".

It was obvious from my question that I was asking what function these staff officers performed on that journey. It was a very legitimate question in view of the extensive political activity that the minister and his assistant engaged in. I certainly knew that Mr. Cote was the deputy minister. I simply say that if ministers of the crown wish us to continue to place extensive questions on the order paper because they choose to give us frivolous answers we can do that, but on the other hand we do not want to be lectured by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) that we are putting too many questions on the order paper. At this point I should like to say—

Mr. Pickersgill: Read it. Gene Rheaume, Northwest Territories; Erik Nielsen, Yukon.

Mr. Rheaume: —that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) has issued instructions to his staff to give as little information as possible, to dry up the sources of information ordinarily available to the elected representatives of the people. The people in charge of the particular programs we are seeking to find out about are not the ones who are answering the questions we ask in the house.

I want to refer to another example briefly. I put question No. 1,340 on the order paper as you had asked us to do, Mr. Speaker. It was a five part question seeking detailed information about the school and hostel program in the Northwest Territories. The first question was:

> On what basis does the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources plan for the establishment of schools in various settlements of the Northwest Territories?

This was the answer:

> On the basis of school age population.

This is a completely frivolous answer, Mr. Speaker. It is no more valid than if we had asked why a hospital was built somewhere and the answer given was "to treat sick people". If the minister chooses to have his staff dry up our sources of information, then the only thing we can do is to continue to raise these grievances.

I do not intend to bring the matter before the house tonight, but I have good reason to believe it is not only the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who has taken this position. Another example is found in questions I have asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I put a motion on the order paper in June for the production of the treaty signed with the Indian people and I have not yet received it.

I have said that the Prime Minister must take the bulk of the responsibility for the situation as it now exists, and that the house leader on the government side shares an almost equal responsibility. Since this matter was raised two weeks ago, as the hon. member for Rosedale rightly points out, nothing has been done about it. We have received no apology from the government side. So far as patronage is concerned, I can only assume that the Prime Minister approves and supports the kind of thing his colleagues in the cabinet are doing. This is the Prime Minister who promised when he took office he would excite the daring and give new promise to the timid. To date the most daring and edifying act of his cabinet has been to fire a widow from a post office in Enterprise, Ontario.

If the Prime Minister is unable to control the blatant patronage on the part of his ministers, I can only assume that with people all over Canada we will watch parliament disintegrate through the drying up of information to opposition members and that the man whom we were told could straighten out the United Nations cannot even run his own cabinet.

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I must reply to the charge laid by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume) with regard to those famous lists—

[Text]

—the famous consultant list they talk about so much. I happen to have in my hand the Tory list.

Mr. Fisher: Table it.

Mr. Denis: I have no objection.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read it.

Mr. Denis: I am going to read it first and I am ready to table it.

Mr. Rheaume: On a point of order—

Mr. Denis: I am ready to table it.

Mr. Rheaume: On a point of order, I must insist that the Postmaster General table this and any other lists he may have in his possession, if he intends to enter into debate on the very matter he is now discussing.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: You do not like it.

Mr. Pickersgill: You can't take it.

Mr. Denis: Are you scared?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for the Yukon on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: My point of order is this. When we attempted to discuss the content of the Liberal patronage list of the Postmaster General we were prevented from doing so. We tried to have it tabled and we were prevented from doing so. I have heard the Secretary of State give instructions to the Postmaster General to read this list. That is what he is trying to do. Surely if the rule applies to this side it should also apply to that side.

Mr. Denis: If my hon. friends are as pure as they think they are they will not object if I talk about their own list. This list is even worse than the Liberal list—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Denis: —because there are more Conservative members on it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Denis: Northwest Territories, consultant, Eugene Rheaume.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lapointe on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I think that, if the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) wants to talk to this house about a schedule or list, it would be normal to table it.

Mr. Deschatelets: After reading it.

Mr. Gregoire: And, under the circumstances, I believe that it would also be proper —as the Postmaster General would be asked to table his list or schedule too—to ask the whip of the Conservative party, who also has a list, to table the latter, so that the hon. members may see the two lists. Mr. Speaker, I think that this would be the normal procedure, and would ask you for a ruling on the matter.

[Text]

Mr. Denis: Constituency, Northwest Territories; consultant, Eugene Rheaume.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish hon. members would assist the Chair. If they have points of order, please make them short and to the point so that the Chair can follow these various points.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: You are next.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Don't you like your name?

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have no difficulty in deciding between two Conservative members who both want to speak. I will listen to the first one.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question of privilege, please state it and state it quickly.

Mr. MacInnis: My question of privilege is that as a member of the house I am entitled to hear what is being said and if there is no order on the other side of the house I am denied that privilege by those on that side of the house.

Mr. Nielsen: I raised a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Again?

Another hon. Member: You are next.

Mr. Nielsen: —which Your Honour inadvertently did not decide. The Postmaster General has risen to his feet and has done precisely that which I had asked Your Honour to prevent as a matter of order. It seems to me I am entitled to have my point of order decided before—

An hon. Member: Before he reaches you.

Mr. Nielsen: —the Postmaster General rides roughshod over the rules of the house on the advice of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for the Yukon knows perfectly well—at least, I hope he does—that he has given me the conclusion without giving me the preamble. It is rather difficult for me to decide whether or not the Postmaster General is in order until I have heard at least ten words. So far he has not been able to say more than ten words.

Mr. Nielsen: He has already read from the list.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Denis: Northwest Territories, consultant, Eugene Rheaume, care of Progressive Conservative campaign headquarters, box 667, Yellowknife.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have asked Your Honour to rule according to the rules of the house that when a minister on the treasury benches produces a document he cannot read from it without tabling it.

Mr. Denis: I am ready to produce the document. Northwest Territories—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the minister take his seat. Once more the hon. member has jumped to a conclusion. I am not entitled to anticipate any more than the hon. member for the Yukon is entitled to anticipate, and if we were to hear the Postmaster General for another minute or two I feel reasonably sure he would be about ready to table the document.

Mr. Denis: I am ready. The next is constituency, Yukon; Erik Nielsen, M.P., care of Progressive Conservative Headquarters, Post Office Box 778, Whitehorse, Yukon; consultant.

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Gregoire: In the constituency of Lapointe, who is the consultant?

[Text]

Mr. Denis: This page comes from the Tory list. I do not mean it is wrong. I do not mean that they are doing business with that. I have not got all these details in mind, personally. There are the names of members of parliament and defeated candidates, but you never put Conservative campaign headquarters or Liberal campaign headquarters. The names that are on the list could be obtained from a returning officer any time.

An hon. Member: Or from Santa Claus.

[Translation]

Another hon. Member: Say it in French.

Mr. Denis: The only thing—

[Text]

Any time you want, all you have to do is put one name after the other. The only purpose of the list is to put "My dear Mr. Jones", instead of saying, dear Mr. So and So. It is a list for secretaries in order to prepare letters, and to speed up matters for the ministers to sign.

An hon. Member: Christmas cards.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis: It would be improper, for instance, to address the Leader of the Opposition this way: "My dear John". It might be improper also to refer to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm by saying "Honourable Sir".

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order. Despite the levity that seems to prevail here this evening, I do this quite seriously. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is now being demonstrated it is important to pay attention to the rules and practices of the house. I think the point of order that was raised earlier this evening should have been settled more clearly. The hon. member for Northwest Territories should have been given the opportunity to speak, as he was, but he should have been called upon to be more specific as to the grievance he was raising. I sat here saying nothing but trying to give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt. At one time, I thought he was talking about unsatisfactory answers to questions on the order paper. Then, I decided he was talking about a grievance that the people of the Northwest Territories have generally. Then, he got over into the question of a patronage list, or whatever you call it, that the Postmaster General has.

Everyone knows that when a member does this, talks on two, three or four different subjects, it messes up this whole grievance period very seriously. Now, the Postmaster General has been given the floor, and quite properly. What is he talking about? Is he talking about unsatisfactory answers to questions on the order paper? Is he talking about the general grievance of the Northwest Territories and the fact that Bills Nos. C-83 and C-84 have not been proceeded with; or is he talking about the Postmaster General's list of consultants? This was the subject of a point of privilege on two or three other occasions, in spite of Your Honour's ruling at one time that there was no point of privilege. He proceeded, and I did not raise a point of order as long as he was talking merely about the alleged consultants, Liberal or Tory, in the Northwest Territories, because that seemed to be related to the Northwest Territories. Now, however, he seems to be naming the consultants, Liberal or Tory, in other parts of the country.

Mr. Chevrier: No Liberals.

Mr. Knowles: The point is that we are fast getting into a debate on the list of consultants, Liberal or Tory, and that is not the issue the hon. member for Northwest Territories raised. The issue raised was the Northwest Territories, the fact that Bills Nos. C-83 and C-84 have not been proceeded with, and the resultant lack of representation for that area.

I think the confusion we are in now arises because the hon. member was not called upon to stick to a specific subject, name it and keep to it. The Liberal benches applaud, but they are compounding the issue now by bringing out the patronage list. I think you are called upon, Mr. Speaker, and it is a very difficult decision, to tell the house what it was the hon. member for the Northwest Territories really raised. When you have decided that, then if there are other members who wish to speak on that subject, they have a right to the floor next. If anyone proposes to change the subject, he must wait until all who wish to do so have spoken on the grievance that was raised.

Really, I have given Your Honour a tall order, to try to define what it was specifically the hon. member for the Northwest Territories raised. My point in raising it is to try to emphasize that we should, in this grievance period, follow the rules more strictly.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word on this point of order the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has raised. In doing so, I may say that I feel the whole house should be grateful to him for bringing us back to a sense of order and reality in this house. It is extremely important, it seems to me, if we are to conduct the business of this country as the people expect us to conduct it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: On this occasion, I would urge Your Honour to consider very carefully what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said. For the benefit of other hon. members who may wish to speak on the grievance, it is important that Your Honour should define the grievance so that we will know what it is that is before us. If the grievance is the failure of the government to bring forward legislation concerning the Northwest Territories, then since a charge was made against me I am entitled to reply to it. If that was just a little buckshot and the grievance was something else, then of course I am not entitled to rebuttal. I am entitled to know, as every hon. member is entitled to know, what we are debating and have it properly and narrowly defined under the rules. I think we all owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac rising on the same subject?

Mr. Webb: The same subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is the subject?

Mr. Webb: Patronage, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Order; has the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam some point of order?

Mr. Douglas: I should like to know just what the grievance is, so that we can proceed. If the grievance is the priority of the legislation, which is what I understood the hon. member for Northwest Territories dealt with, I should like to follow it. I am not aware that his grievance was patronage, and if it is not patronage, then the hon. member who has just taken the floor, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest is not following in sequence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; first of all, I want to tell the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I agree with his remarks. This evening we were perhaps a little lenient. We were dealing with a new member attempting to raise his first point of grievance. It seemed to me that he should be given as much consideration as possible.

I did endeavour, however, throughout his talk to try to focus on the main grievance. I was unable to come to any definite conclusion as to what it was, but I do know that it was not the subject of patronage. Furthermore, as the hon. member for the Northwest Territories spoke it seemed to me that he was directing his attention more to the question of delay in bringing forward legislation concerning the Northwest Territories. This, of course, is very close to the borderline.

I think we have spent enough time on the grievance raised by the hon. member for Northwest Territories. I do think we should get on to a different sort of grievance.

Mr. Webb: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should like to speak. Here, we have a young widow, the mother of five children and their livelihood is being taken away from them by this government. I think it is important, sir, that we should speak on this subject tonight. I did not intend to speak on this subject tonight until an editorial was brought to my attention in which the Postmaster General stated—

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member raised a point of privilege, but he is now outlining a grievance. In the circumstances, having already recognized the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has the floor.

Mr. Webb: My name was mentioned by the Postmaster General in this editorial. This is my point of privilege, and I should like to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand the hon. member is now speaking to a point of privilege?

Mr. Webb: Yes, Your Honour.

Mr. Fisher: What is it?

Mr. Webb: My name is mentioned in an editorial in today's newspaper referred to by the Postmaster General. This editorial states, in effect, that the Postmaster General stated to the press: Why did not Rodney Webb, Hastings-Frontenac, come to me personally with a protest over the change instead of writing a letter to an official of my department? I say to you, sir, that last Thursday the Postmaster General came across the house, and followed me out into the lobby, and suggested I forget this whole matter.

Failure to Proceed with Legislation

Mr. Denis: On a point of privilege—

Mr. Webb: At which time, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Postmaster General on a point of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Not only do I deny categorically the assertion of the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac (Mr. Webb), but it is just the opposite. He is the one who said to me: "If you settle this case, I have five more, and I will let them go".

[Text]

Mr. Webb: At which time I said to the Postmaster General that I had six other cases—

Mr. Chevrier: Says I to him, says he to me.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question of privilege. This is a dispute as to facts, and under the rules we must take the statement of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General has denied the fact as alleged by the hon. member. The hon. member has another recourse under our standing orders, but until he takes that recourse I must take the statement of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Webb: On a point of privilege—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would be the last to interrupt these proceedings this evening, and I have said nothing on the matters that have been discussed but I point out to you, sir, that a ruling just made by you denies equality of members in this house. A statement was made by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac (Mr. Webb) that the Postmaster General had met him, called him outside the house—

An hon. Member: The Postmaster General denied that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely Your Honour does not say the Postmaster General, because he happens to be a minister, must have his word accepted as against another hon. member? I think Your Honour might well clarify what you had in mind, because to make such a decision would not be accepted by any member of the house, that a minister's denials shall be accepted as against a private member's affirmation of fact.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, an additional proof of my statement is that nothing has been changed concerning the appointment of the postmistress in that locality.

Now, contrary to what the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac said, not only did I make no proposal to him but the fact that there has been no change proves that what I am saying is true.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the right hon. Leader of the Opposition will understand that in the confusion of the moment it is not always possible to be as clear headed as one would like, but referring to citation 113 in Beauchesne's fourth edition I think we have the case covered in these words:

> But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege. An attack in a newspaper article is not a breach of privilege, unless it comes within the definition of privileges above given, and then a member is bound to lay on the table the newspaper in which the article complained of appears.

If I may rest the case there, I suggest if we could get on to another grievance it certainly would be helpful.

Mr. MacInnis: On that same question of privilege, may I draw Your Honour's attention to the same question that came up—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have already decided there is no question of privilege. So, if there is another grievance I would be glad to hear it.

LOBBYING—ALLEGED PRIVILEGED POSITION OF CERTAIN CORPORATIONS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes left I will raise a very simple grievance. It relates to the situation that exists in the other place in so far as the holding of directorships, being consultants, or being held on retainer by certain companies, particularly certain finance companies, are concerned. My grievance is that we have at present a number of items on the order paper that have been referred to committee.

We also know from past experience one of the hon. gentlemen in the other place has tried to introduce legislation that would have something to do with making interest rates more clear and with setting a ceiling on them. I think it is unfair, unsound and undemocratic that people should have the opportunity to sit in judgment, and to scrutinize such legislation before it can become law, at the same time that they are either directors, presidents, consultants or held on retainers by some of the very companies going to be affected by such legislation.

My grievance is as simple as this. I want to draw it to the government's attention, in particular to the attention of the Prime Minister, because it is time we should consider this point very seriously, that implicitly built into our parliamentary structure at the present time is a form of special privilege or lobbying that is to the advantage of certain corporate organizations that are able to retain members from the other place on their boards of directors or as legal retainers.

I suggest this form of lobbying should be brought out much more into the open, and the government and Prime Minister should consider some kind of legislation to put very strict limits on it. This point deserves real consideration, particularly because the house is now concerned with legislation relating to consumers finance.

I would appeal to backbenchers on the government side who have taken an interest in this, and who have also given some indication that they have liaison with their cabinet and Prime Minister, to consider how far this kind of legislation is going to get when you have the presidents of finance companies in the Senate and you have some senators who are under retainer from finance companies. I leave the grievance to sit in the minds of my Liberal friends, and in the Prime Minister's mind.

Mr. Speaker: It being ten o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to standing order 56 (4) (f) to interrupt the proceedings forthwith and put the question on the motion before the house.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Gordon) agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration, $1,057,600.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Departmental administration, including Canada's share of the upkeep of the international bureaux at Berne and Montevideo, $2,083.500.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Departmental administration, $2,068,800.

Proceedings reported.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader to outline the business proposed for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, sir, I would be glad to do that. Tomorrow we will go into committee on the legislation respecting the surcharge order. When that has been completed we will continue with the committee stage of the Income Tax Act, and when that has been completed there is an understanding among all parties in the house, I believe, that we would take the motion respecting consumer credit in the name of my hon. friend the Solicitor General, and that there would only be very brief speeches from each quarter of the house.

I hope there will be time for further business this week and there is no business, as I have said so many times this session, more urgent than the legislation respecting the Northwest Territories, which I have sought to bring before the house ever since September 30.

On Thursday evening we will take the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and there will be another department available if that department should be completed. On Friday evening we will take the estimates of the Department of Labour, and there will be another department available if that should be completed.

Mr. Pigeon: Why do we not close the public works estimates?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman has asked a very proper question. There was an understanding, or at least a declaration by the government at the time the house was good enough to extend the hours, that we would take a new department on each evening so that there would be an opportunity for every department to have some review before the end of the session, and so that hon. members would have an opportunity to bring up points with respect to every department of government. That is the reason we are following the course we are.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 6, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RAYMOND RODGERS—ALLEGED DENIAL OF PRESS GALLERY PRIVILEGES

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I wish to raise a question of privilege arising out of the fact that Mr. Raymond Rodgers, correspondent for the St. Catharines Standard, has been expelled from the press gallery. I should like to attempt to establish a prima facie case of privilege based on one reason or a combination of several reasons, following which, if permission is granted, I am prepared to move a substantive motion which would take care of the matter.

First I should like to quote to Your Honour from Beauchesne, citation 103, paragraph 2 which says "the house has always asserted the right to provide for the constitution of its own body, the right to regulate its own proceedings, and the right to enforce its privileges." Again Beauchesne, citation 107, reads as follows:

> Whatever matter arises concerning either house of parliament ought to be discussed and adjudged in that house to which it relates, and not elsewhere.

I contend that matters affecting the internal economy of the house are questions of privilege. There is, of course, public expenditure for the press gallery of the house, payment for which is provided through the internal economy commission. The amount is something like $100,000 annually.

The second point is that an exception has been made respecting the administration of the galleries, including both the press gallery and the diplomatic gallery. This exception has not been concurred in by the house.

The third point is that I think you will agree a legitimate breach of privilege can be established in the matter of time, that is to say that the matter of time is urgent.

Motions affecting the internal economy of the house, as I pointed out, are questions of privilege affecting the privileges of all members collectively and may always be considered in the house without the notice necessary in the case of motions generally. This is pointed out in standing order 17, and Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure and Practice on pages 375 and 376, where a case is cited concerning the translation of the official debates which is reported in the debates of 1876.

The present matter relates to the principle by which persons are accredited to the press gallery, and the application of that principle to the credentials of a particular correspondent. The house in the past has delegated to the Speaker the enunciation of a principle and the application of that principle to particular cases. Over the years since that delegation of authority, however, we have perhaps lost sight of the fact that what is involved is the fundamental privilege of each and every member of the house to object to strangers in the galleries, according to standing order 13. Therefore each and every member is responsible for and must consent to any rule made by way of an exception to that privilege.

As well, we are also responsible for the application of that rule in this particular case. Each member's responsibility is even heavier in respect of the exception that has been made because due to the lack of space and facilities for the press gallery the exception is a discriminatory one that admits certain correspondents and excludes others. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, the present difficulty has continued over several sessions and continues each sitting day of the house, so that the question of privilege is one that renews itself with each sitting and is immediately before the house on the occasion of each sitting.

On October 29 last, Mr. Speaker, you advised the house that the question of principle and the question of the individual case were of deep concern to you but that due to the pressure of other urgent matters it was physically impossible for you to determine the matter shortly. There can be no doubt that the effect of the unavoidable delay in the particular instance of this individual has had the result of deciding the matter during the interim before a determination of the principle, in favour of one of the parties against the other. This decision, founded only in delay, may ultimately be the correct one according to the justice of the case, or it may not be.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if I am granted a prima facie case of privilege I am prepared to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty):

Denial of Press Gallery Privileges

That the Sergeant-at-Arms, pursuant to standing order 88, be instructed to grant pro tem a card admitting Raymond Rodgers to the press galleries of this house.

I have a large number of other citations with me this afternoon which I could quote to you, Mr. Speaker, but I do not particularly wish to take up the time of the house. However, in my view these precedents will establish that there is an injustice by reason of delay. There has been a transfer of the administrative responsibility of this house to a body outside of the house who are not, in turn, responsible to us. Therefore, on this basis, I would implore that you grant a prima facie case of privilege so that I can move a substantive motion to clear up the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who would like to speak on this question?

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, this particular issue has concerned a number of members in the house, particularly the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty), for many months. It is quite apparent that the person involved, Mr. Rodgers, is under considerable difficulty in carrying out the duties that he has as a result of his relationship as an accredited correspondent of a newspaper. We feel that the delay that has taken place has been unfair to him, and it has been unfair to the constituency in which his paper is printed. We think it is unfair to the house. Speaking not only for myself as an individual member but for the members of our party, we want to support the plea that has been made that this be considered a proven case of privilege. We would support the idea that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to proceed as suggested.

I think hon. members are aware that the facilities that are provided to the members of the press gallery are supported by a vote of this house. I think hon. members are aware that for some years the internal administration of those facilities has been carried out under the constitution of the press gallery association.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to raise a point of order. My point of order is very brief, and it is this. I believe it is usual in such cases, before debate is embarked upon on one of these motions, for Your Honour to decide whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. Without seeking to restrict anyone's rights, it seems to me that Your Honour should make that decision; because the hon. member for Port Arthur, if I apprehend his remarks correctly and I listened carefully, is discussing the motion. Before we embark upon a debate on the motion, we should know if there is a question of privilege. I should respectfully suggest also that if you have any doubt about it, as usual you take it under advisement for another day very soon. Of course I recognize there should not be any delay.

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the Secretary of State has a great deal of merit. On the other hand, the question to be decided is a very important and delicate one. I would prefer, before trying to give a right decision on the point of privilege, to hear any hon. member who wished to say anything.

Mr. Fisher: I think I am speaking in support of the argument that this is a matter of privilege. You used the word "delicate" to describe the situation. I think all hon. members realize that the situation is delicate. It really relates to the fact that we are aware that our proceedings in this house do not gain great significance in the country as a whole until they are reported abroad, and therefore we move with a great deal of delicacy in so far as those people are concerned who are reporting upon this assembly.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The use of the word "delicate" was not intended to convey the meaning being read into it. When you are discussing the personal rights of an individual, that is always a very delicate operation or matter to decide. I am not influenced whatever by whether or not the members of the press gallery like my decision.

Mr. Fisher: I am delighted to have that assurance, Mr. Speaker. Let us come back to the question of the privileges of the house, which it seems to me have been broken or impinged upon by the action of the press gallery association in denying the use of facilities provided by this house, through a vote of the house, to someone who is an accredited newspaperman. It seems to me this is a breach of the privileges of all of us, and I beg you to allow the point and let us get on with getting the matter cleared up.

I will not argue now as to whether the move to have the Sergeant-at-Arms enforce the use of the facilities in Mr. Rodger's favour is good, but I do feel we cannot get anywhere until we have a motion, and to have a motion we required your approval of it and a proven case of privilege.

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I support this question of privilege quite strongly. In Lincoln we have the St. Catharines Standard with a daily circulation of some 30,000, serving an area with a population of around 130,000. Not only is there great personal inconvenience for the Standard representative but there is also greater inconvenience to the people of my constituency, and I respectfully feel Your Honour should approve of the procedure suggested.

Mr. Speaker: Well, recent experience may have shown it is somewhat dangerous to allow too much discussion on a point of privilege, because privilege is an extraordinary proceeding and should be stated as briefly as possible. Nevertheless, I think the discussion this afternoon illustrates the fact that this is more in the nature of a complaint than a privilege, but before reaching that conclusion may I be permitted to call the attention of hon. members to citation 104(5) in Beauchesne:

> As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity. If he is not so satisfied he may allow the member to make a statement with a view to ascertaining whether or not a prima facie case can be made out.

Of course that was the reason for listening carefully to the hon. member for Medicine Hat. Further, citation 113 in Beauchesne reads in part:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or to apply a remedy.

Of course it is my duty to arrive at a conclusion as to whether a prima facie case of breach of privilege of the house has been made out. Also, a question of privilege is a question relating to the rights and privileges of the house as a whole, or of its members individually, and to the conduct and honour of such members. What is submitted to the house today seems to be more in the nature of a complaint, criticism or grievance concerning the internal economy and administration of the house, and in my opinion should be treated as other possible grievances against the internal economy and administration of the house. The rules governing the internal economy commission are set forth in detail in the House of Commons and Senate Act.

Now, inasmuch as this matter has been under consideration for many months, in fact even years, it hardly qualifies as having been raised at the earliest opportunity, but I admit that is a rather slim limb on which to rely. Some time ago I told the house that the matter was still under active consideration, and that is the position today. Therefore I regret to say that the question as raised does not satisfy me as being a prima facie case of a breach of the privilege of the house.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, then might I ask unanimous consent of the house to move the following motion:

> That the Sergeant-at-Arms, pursuant to standing order 88, be instructed to grant pro tem a card admitting Raymond Rodgers to the press galleries of this house.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the moving of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Speaker, while I regret to object, this motion has taken many hon. members by surprise. There has been no notice of it. Your Honour has indicated there is not a matter of privilege involved. Therefore it seems to me that the ordinary rules with respect to motions should apply to this as to other motions.

Mr. Peters: There is no machinery for that.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like unanimous consent to move another motion, which I think may meet the unanimous wish of the house. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the question of Raymond Rodgers' right to use the facilities of the press gallery be referred for quick study, and report back to the house on its merits, by the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think I can speak for all my hon. friends when I say that there would be unanimous consent to that motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the moving of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GREGOIRE—FAILURE TO TABLE LISTS OF CONSULTANTS

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which concerns all the members of this house, as a result of the promise made by several cabinet members.

It has to do with the famous list of consultants which was referred to yesterday, that several cabinet members agreed to have tabled in the house; I tried to have a look at that list just before we met this afternoon but it had not been tabled as yet.

That promise was first made by the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis). On page 4428 of

Hansard for November 5, 1963, right hand column, the Postmaster General stated:

> The famous consultant list they talk about so much. I happen to have in my hand the Tory list.

Then the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said:

> Table it.

The Postmaster General answered:

> I have no objection.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) then said:

> Read it.

And the Postmaster General:

> I am going to read it first and I am ready to table it.

It is a commitment.

Then the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume) said:

> On a point of order.

To this the Postmaster General replied by committing himself further:

> I am ready to table it.

Later on, on a point of order, I said:

> I think that, if the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) wants to talk to this house about a schedule or list, it would be normal to table it.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) added:

> After reading it.

Thus the obligation to table the list after reading it.

A little later, Mr. Speaker, you said yourself:

> I am not entitled to anticipate—

You can find it on page 4429, right hand column.

> —I am not entitled to anticipate any more than the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is entitled to anticipate, and if we were to hear the Postmaster General for another minute or two I feel reasonably sure he would be about ready to table the document.

Whereupon the Postmaster General answered:

> I am ready.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that we have there, repeatedly, undertakings on the part of the Postmaster General and even of the Minister of Public Works to table this document, but it has not been tabled as yet.

Now, I think it is also the privilege of hon. members to have tabled in the house not only the list mentioned yesterday by the Postmaster General, but also the list mentioned some time ago and which, it would seem, is in the possession of the Postmaster General, that is the one which is now in the Post Office Department. The Postmaster General himself referred to it when he stated—and that proves that it is in his possession:

> [Mr. Gregoire.]
> If my hon. friends are as pure as they think they are, they will not object if I talk about their own list. This list is even worse than the Liberal list—

That is a clear indication that there were two lists. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that it is the privilege of hon. members to see both lists, more especially as a motion was made for the production of one of these lists. Its existence was denied at the time but is admitted now by the Postmaster General, as can be seen on page 4429 of yesterday's Hansard.

That is why I ask that both lists be tabled, as was promised yesterday during the discussion.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is quite easy to determine if one has regard to the authorities. The lists referred to are, I understand, private lists. If they were public lists it would be a different matter. My reason for making this statement is founded on the statement, in May, sixteenth edition, at page 461 where the following appears:

> Indeed, it is obvious that, as the house deals only with public documents in its proceedings, it could not thus incidentally require the production of papers which, if moved for separately, would be refused as beyond its jurisdiction.

I do not know of any case where private papers belonging to private members have been produced without the consent of the private member or members concerned. I understand these papers now at issue are private papers; therefore I do not believe we have the right, on a question of privilege, to ask for their production. If on the other hand the minister wishes to produce them, that is up to him; but there is no question of privilege arising as far as the Chair is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in spite of—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; there can be no discussion of the ruling.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, in spite of the decision—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, in spite of the ruling you have just given—I realize that those two documents are private documents, but with the unanimous consent of the house I do not object to table them. I am ready to table those two documents, with the unanimous consent of the house.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The Postmaster General has offered to produce the two documents, which are private documents, but he cannot do so without the unanimous consent of the house. Is that agreeable to hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has been decided.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. We agree that the Postmaster General table his list, but no proof is being given to the house that we also had a list.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope hon. members will recognize that the matter has been decided as far as the Chair is concerned, and that we shall not repeat some of the disturbances we had last night.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: No. If it is on this question, the matter has been decided.

[Later:]

Mr. Denis: Pursuant to leave granted earlier this day, I now table the two lists in question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that the wish of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): The Prime Minister advised the house on Monday that he had written to the premiers of the provinces about the agenda and other arrangements for the forthcoming federal-provincial conference. My right hon. friend said that after the letters had been received by the premiers he would table them, and in his absence I am now doing so on his behalf. The letters are in the languages in which they were sent out.

The letter to each premier encloses a paper setting out the proposed agenda and an outline of procedures with annotations referring to comments and suggestions which had been received from the premiers in response to an earlier letter to them. As these annotations refer to letters from the premiers which should not be tabled without their consent having been secured, the enclosure to the letters I am tabling omits them.

It does, however, set forth the agenda, the proposal for the committees of the conference and other procedural suggestions precisely as they were included in the documents sent to the premiers. These cannot, of course, be regarded as final until they are approved by the premiers and by the conference itself. However, as they are based on comments which have already been received from all concerned, they will indicate the consensus as to the matters to be discussed and the manner of conducting the conference.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder whether, with the consent of the house, I could ask the hon. gentleman to tell us again what has been omitted from these documents. I could not quite catch what he said.

Mr. Chevrier: I indicated that what had been omitted were certain comments and suggestions which had been made by the premiers. These are not being tabled because before doing so we would have to obtain the consent of the premiers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will that consent be asked for?

Mr. Chevrier: If it is the wish of the house I could report to the Prime Minister accordingly, and I am sure that would be his desire.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): The following questions are being answered today: 1,078, 1,261, 1,328, 1,394, 1,420, 1,444, 1,452, 1,459, 1,472, 1,475, 1,489, 1,502, 1,505, 1,506, 1,508, 1,519, 1,521, 1,527, 1,529, 1,530, 1,532, 1,536, 1,538, 1,541, 1,545, 1,547, 1,550, 1,561, 1,565, 1,567, 1,569, 1,576, 1,590, and 1,597.

If questions numbers 1,129, 1,217, 1,386, 1,387, 1,409 and 1,486 could be made orders for returns, the returns would be tabled immediately.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if you would call starred questions 1,484, 1,485 and 1,598, I would ask that the others stand.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT—PROCEDURES RESPECTING CORRECTION, LAW ENFORCEMENT, PROBATION ETC.

Question No. 1,078—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the Department of Justice been reorganized in such a way that one senior officer of the department is responsible directly to the Minister of Justice for the operation of the criminal law section, and also responsible for the liaison of the work of this section with the parole board, the R.C.M.P. and the penitentiaries branch so that the operations of these various sections may be integrated so that one officer of the department is thoroughly familiar with the operations of all these groups to advise the Minister of Justice as recommended by the Fauteux report?

2. Has the Department of Justice organized and sponsored a national conference attended by representatives of Canadian universities who are interested in the development of education in the fields of correction and law enforcement to formulate university programs for the training of workers trained in the fields of correction and criminology as recommended by the Fauteux report?

3. Has the Department of Justice implemented the recommendation of the Fauteux report that the federal government give special financial support toward the development of university education in criminology and related fields, such designated subsidies to continue until these programs are firmly established and, if so, where, and what are the amounts of the grants?

4. Has the government implemented the recommendation of the Fauteux report that financial assistance be granted to pre-service training by students in the fields of correction and criminology through tuition assistance and scholarship plans designed to encourage persons with superior qualifications to prepare for careers in correction and law enforcement?

5. Has the government any information regarding the provinces which have established systems of adult probation as recommended by the Fauteux commission and, if so, of those which have, how many probation officers has each province, and what are the professional qualifications, and years of experience of each?

6. Is the federal government taking any steps to ensure that courts at all levels uniformly interpret punishment as the correction of the offender rather than retribution by society, as recommended by the Fauteux report, and, if so, toward this end have any meetings or conferences been arranged by the government among judges, crown prosecutors, probation officers, psychiatrists, psychologists and representatives of the Department of Justice?

Mr. Chevrier: 1. No.

2. No.

3. No.

4. No.

5. All of the provinces, with the exception of Quebec and Prince Edward Island, have established systems of adult probation. No information is available with regard to Newfoundland. No information is available as to the number, professional qualifications and years of experience of the probation officers.

6. Officials of the Department of Justice have attended seminars of judges and magistrates on sentencing arranged by provincial attorneys general and universities.

FEDERAL BUILDINGS, WHITE BEAR INDIAN RESERVE, SASK.

Question No. 1,261—Mr. Southam:

1. What buildings have been erected by the federal government, giving the cost of each, either wholly or in part between June 21, 1957 and April 22, 1963 on the White Bear Indian reservation, Carlyle, Saskatchewan?

2. What federal government buildings, if any, are planned for 1963 on this reservation?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Nil.

2. Construction of a storage shed, estimated cost $450, is planned for this year.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT, PORT SIMPSON, B.C.

Question No. 1,328—Mr. Howard:

Since January 1, 1961, has any proposal been received from the government of the province of British Columbia or from any minister or department thereof for community development at Port Simpson, B.C. and, if so (a) when (b) what was the nature of the proposal, and (c) what was the nature of the reply?

Mr. Munro: No.

TUNNEL BETWEEN QUEBEC CITY AND LEVIS

Question No. 1,394—Mr. Dionne:

Has the Minister of Public Works received representations concerning the construction of a tunnel between the cities of Quebec and Levis and, if so, what action will be taken with respect to such representations?

[Translation]

Mr. Badanai: No, this government has received none.

DISARMAMENT—STUDY OF CONSEQUENCES TO CANADA

Question No. 1,420—Mr. Mather:

Are the Departments of Trade and Commerce and National Defence at work on a study of disarmament consequences to Canada and, if so, when may a report be expected?

Mr. Pickersgill: In response to a request by the United Nations secretary general, the Canadian government prepared a study on the economic and social consequences to Canada of general and complete disarmament. This study was prepared by various Canadian government departments and published in volume II of the secretary general's report on the economic and social consequences of disarmament, document E/3593/add. 1, April 11, 1962. A copy of this report is available in the library of parliament. Various departments are now compiling additional information on this subject and it is expected that this additional information will be sent to the United Nations secretariat in the near future.

MACAMIC, QUE.—PAVING OF POST OFFICE SITE

Question No. 1,444—Mr. Laprise:

1. Have tenders been called by the Department of Public Works for paving the site of the post office at Macamic?

2. Who were the bidders for that contract?

3. What was the amount of the tender of each of the bidders?

4. Who had the responsibility for distributing the forms of tender?

[Translation]

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes, a tender has been received from D. Lamothe Limitee, of Noranda, P.Q.

2. D. Lamothe Limitee has been the only bidder.

3. $1,875.

4. No other tender has been called because that company was proceeding with important paving work for the municipality which resulted in savings for the department.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT DIRECTORY

Question No. 1,452—Mr. Fisher:

1. Was a booklet "Department of Transport Directory" and in the blue section a "list of officers of boards, commissions and corporations reporting to the minister", dated at Ottawa, June 1963, printed (a) in English, and (b) in French and, if so (i) of those printed in English, how many were distributed (ii) of those printed in French, how many were distributed?

2. What was the cost of publishing these booklets (a) in English, and (b) in French?

3. Who authorized their publication, (a) in English, and (b) in French?

4. What disposition will be made of the booklets which were not distributed?

5. How often are these booklets published?

6. Will any new issues of this directory be published in both English and French and, if so, how many in each language?

Mr. McIlraith: 1 and 2. Yes. 1,500 copies printed in English at a cost of $1,264.91; and 1,320 distributed to date.

3. The departmental publications committee established in accordance with treasury board circular direction.

4. Number printed is related to expected distribution requirements, with a small reserve which is distributed on a continuing basis to meet additional requirements at headquarters and regional level.

5 and 6. Frequency of publication is determined from time to time by the departmental publications committee which has a present objective of once a year. So far as a French edition is concerned, the booklet is not for the purpose of providing information in narrative form but is simply a listing of names, residences, and telephone numbers of personnel.

RIDEAU WATERWAY LOCKS

Question No. 1,459—Mr. Matheson:

1. How many vessels passed through the following Rideau system locks in each of the years 1945, 1950, 1955, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, namely (a) Upper Brewers (b) Newboro (c) Smiths Falls detached (d) Burritts Rapids (e) Ottawa?

2. How many men were employed on all Rideau waterway locks, and at what cost during these years?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Rideau canal vessel passage

| Lock station | 1945 | 1950 | 1955 | 1960 | 1961 | 1962 | 1963 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Upper Brewers | not available | 460 | 893 | 2010 | 2230 | 2303 | 2697 |
| Newboro | " | 2249 | 2717 | 4052 | 4148 | 4491 | 4518 |

JACQUET RIVER, N.B., POSTMASTER

Question No. 1,472—Mr. MacRae:

1. Was a civil service competition held recently to fill the position of postmaster at Jacquet River, New Brunswick?

2. If so, what was the number of the competition, and what was the closing date for the taking of applications for this position?

3. How many applicants were there for this position?

4. Who were the successful applicants, in order of merit?

5. Has the position now been filled and, if not, for what reason?

6. Does the government intend to follow the policy of filling positions by open competition?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Yes.

2. 63-J549; closing date, June 29, 1963.

3. Five.

4. Pettigrew, Douglas Bonar; Hickey, Arthur Charles; Audit, Monica Elizabeth.

Note: Messrs. Pettigrew and Hickey are entitled to the veterans preference.

Questions

5. No. On September 19, 1963, the commission was informed by the Post Office Department that it was looking into the question of the advisability of amalgamating Jacquet River and Durham Centre post offices to serve one postal area.

6. The civil service commission is responsible for determining the method by which a vacant position in the civil service will be filled. Under the Civil Service Act the commission is responsible for making appointments by means of open competition whenever it is possible to do so and if it is in the best interests of the service.

MENTAL HEALTH RESEARCH PROJECTS

Question No. 1,475—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What psychiatric research projects being conducted by the universities, government, and private foundations are being financed by federal health grants?
2. What is the value of each grant?
3. What is the total value of these grants for mental health research being done in each province?
4. What is the total value of these grants for Canada?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Under the mental health grant, federal funds have been allocated in 1963-64 toward the conduct of research into the prevention and treatment of mental illness and for the promotion of mental health in Canada at various Canadian universities, hospitals and other health agencies.

2. Sixty three research projects are being supported in the present fiscal year. The value of each grant varies from $150 to $45,600.

3. Newfoundland, nil; Prince Edward Island, nil; Nova Scotia, $14,363; New Brunswick, nil; Quebec, $289,986; Ontario, $204,445; Manitoba, $27,048; Saskatchewan, $117,390; Alberta, nil; British Columbia, $60,314; Northwest Territories, nil; Yukon Territory, nil.

4. $713,546.

*REOPENING OF RAILWAY PROVIDENT FUND

Question No. 1,484—Mr. Rideout:

Is consideration being given to the reopening of the 1959 plan so as to allow provident fund employees to transfer to the 1959 plan?

Mr. Cantin: The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that this matter is not under consideration at the present time.

*AIR TERMINAL BUILDING, LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 1,485—Mr. Irvine:

1. How many bids were received on the tenders called for the new air terminal building in London, Ontario?
2. Who were the tenderers, and for what amounts?
3. Is any portion of the building to be air conditioned and, if so, what areas, and is this included in the general contract figure?
4. Will there be an opening ceremony and, if so, will the minister concerned be in attendance?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Cantin: 1. Eight bids were received.

2.

| Bidders | Amount |
|---|---|
| W. A. McDougall Ltd., London, Ont. | $ 998,899 |
| Ellis-Don Ltd., London, Ont. | 1,006,500 |
| Louis Donolo (Ont.) Ltd., Toronto 19, Ont. | 1,049,065 |
| McKay Cocker Construction Ltd., London, Ont. | 1,054,511 |
| The Foundation Co. of Canada Ltd., London, Ont. | 1,058,500 |
| The Frid Construction Company Ltd., Hamilton, Ont. | 1,061,500 |
| Curran & Herridge Construction Co., Ltd., Sarnia, Ont. | 1,104,000 |
| Johnson Bros. Co. Limited, Brantford, Ont. | 1,138,386 |

3. The entire building will be air conditioned and this work is included in the general contract figure.

4. It is standard procedure that a ceremony be held at the opening of new terminal buildings and this practice will probably be followed. The question of whether the minister concerned will be in attendance will be decided in due course.

CONSUMER SUBSIDY ON BUTTER

Question No. 1,489—Mr. Peters:

1. What effect has the 12 cents consumer subsidy, as applied to butter had on the butter sales in (a) Canada (b) export?
2. What increase in the domestic market is attributable to this subsidy (a) in consumption (b) in production?
3. What amount of the increase was diverted into (a) ice cream (b) soft ice cream (c) other dairy requirements?

Mr. Hays: 1. (a) During the 17 months in which the 12 cents subsidy has been in effect May 1, 1962 to September 30, 1963, total butter sales increased approximately 19 per cent over the same months of 1960-61.

(b) There was no effect on exports as the Canadian domestic price was above world prices. Only a few thousand pounds of butter are exported annually.

2. (a) Total consumption of butter during the 17 months May 1, 1962 to September 30, 1963, the period in which the subsidy has been in effect, was 488.9 million pounds compared with 410 million pounds in the same months of 1960-61, an increase of 78.9 million pounds.

(b) Total production of butter during the 17 months ending September 30, 1963 was 573.8 million pounds compared with 534.5 million pounds in the same months of 1960-61, an increase of 39.3 million pounds. Since May 1, 1963, butter production has dropped 10.4 million pounds, 4.8 per cent, over the same period in 1962, May 1 to October 1.

3. (a) and (b) It is estimated that in the 17 month period during which the subsidy has been in effect, 13 per cent of the increased sales of creamery butter, or 10.2 million pounds, was used for both hard and soft ice creams. There is no separate information on the quantity used in each type of ice cream.

(c) It is estimated that 4 per cent of the increase, or 3.2 million pounds, was used in manufacturing other foods.

EDMONTON AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDING

Question No. 1,502—Mr. Lambert:

1. What is the estimated cost of construction and equipment of the Edmonton international airport, including purchase of land, construction of runways, lighting, terminal building, ancillary services, equipment, access roads, grants to the province of Alberta and the municipal district of Leduc with respect to road relocation and construction?
2. Of the estimated cost, how much has been expended as of October 15, 1963?
3. What is the take over date of the terminal building and related facilities, and when is it planned to officially open the said terminal building?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. $32,000,000.

2. Actual expenditure as of September 30, 1963, $27,137,475.

3. A provisional take over took place on October 25, 1963. The target for the official opening ceremony is February 1, 1964.

REGULATION OF SUGAR PRICES

Question No. 1,505—Mr. Mather:

1. Is the government aware of the action taken by the U.S. administration to curb sugar price speculations by placing the trading of sugar futures on the New York exchange under government regulations?
2. What is the situation respecting sugar price regulations in Canada?

Answer: 1. Yes. A bill has been submitted to the United States congress to enable the secretary of agriculture to regulate futures trading margins and the size of speculative accounts, but has not been under active consideration as yet and is not expected to be considered by congress until next year.

2. There is no commodity exchange in Canada in which sugar futures are traded. Canadian prices are determined by the cost of raw sugar in international markets. Furthermore, except in time of war or national emergency the regulation of prices is assigned by the British North America Act to the provinces.

SUBVENTION ON COASTAL SERVICE CONTRACT, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 1,506—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the government to renew the subvention on the coastal service contract between Pictou, Nova Scotia, Charlottetown, P.E.I. and the Magdalen islands, now held by the Magdalen Island Transportation Company Limited, which expires on December 30, 1963?

Mr. McIlraith: This contract is due to expire at the close of navigation 1963. As is the case with all other contracts, an assessment of the service will be made by the Canadian maritime commission, after which consideration will be given to renewal of service and terms of the contract.

WHARF REPAIRS, SKINNER COVE, N.S.

Question No. 1,508—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Have tenders closed for repairs and improvements to the wharf at Skinner's cove, Pictou county, Nova Scotia?
2. How many firms tendered on this work, and what was the amount of their tenders?
3. To whom will the contract be awarded?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes.

2. Four tenders received, as follows: Joseph Almon, New Glasgow, N.S., $12,785. R. A. Douglas, New Glasgow, N.S., $13,995. Colin R. MacDonald, Antigonish, N.S., $14,225. Stanley Reid, Pictou, N.S., $14,232.34.

3. The contract has not yet been awarded but is expected to be given to the lowest bidder.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION INTO B.C. FISHING INDUSTRY

Question No. 1,519—Mr. Howard:

What is the present status of the combines investigation branch inquiry relating to the production, purchase and sale of raw fish in British Columbia?

Mr. Chevrier: While the injunction proceedings in the courts against the restrictive trade practices commission have been concluded, it remains for the commission to complete its review of the oral and documentary evidence in order to comply with the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada as to making evidence available to the parties and then to hear the submissions of the parties before making its report. Therefore, it will be some time before a report is received. In the meantime an intergovernmental committee (federal and British Columbia civil servants) has been appointed to study the problems concerned with price and wage disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry in order to make recommendations for minimizing interruption of fishing operations in future.

PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES UNDER HOSPITAL SERVICES ACT

Question No. 1,521—Mr. Howard:

For each year since its inception, what have been the payments to each province pursuant to the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act?

Miss LaMarsh: Payments made to the provinces under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act for each year since its inception are shown in table I attached. This table will be found on page 19 of the annual report under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, which was tabled in the House of Commons on October 10.

Further advances on contribution made subsequently in 1963 for the months April to August inclusive, by province, are shown in table II attached.

It will be noted that since the inception of the program on July 1, 1958, until the end of August 1963, total federal payments amounted to $1,169,596,823.02.

TENDERS FOR FISHERMEN'S WHARF, PUGWASH, N.S.

Question No. 1,527—Mr. Coates:

1. Who was the successful tenderer for construction of the fisherman's wharf at Pugwash, Nova Scotia?
2. How many bids were received, and what was the amount of each tender submitted?
3. What is the expected date of completion of this project?

Mr. Badanai: 1. R. A. Douglas Limited of New Glasgow, N.S.

2. Four bids were received: R. A. Douglas Limited, New Glasgow, N.S., $40,585.75; Colin R. MacDonald Limited, Antigonish, N.S., $43,507; R. K. Chappell Construction Ltd., Sydney, N.S., $43,653; Liverpool Lumber Co. Ltd., Liverpool, N.S., $49,933.62.

3. March 2, 1964.

TREATMENT CENTRES FOR EMOTIONALLY DISTURBED CHILDREN

Question No. 1,529—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many residential treatment centres for emotionally disturbed children are there in Canada?
2. Where are these treatment centres located?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. and 2.

It is not possible to know the total number of such centres since they do not report to the dominion bureau of statistics and are not required to meet objective accreditation standards for treatment. However the Department of National Health and Welfare knows of 11 such centres located in Montreal, Toronto, Newmarket, Windsor, Kingston, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Regina, Vancouver, Victoria and White Rock. There are as well seven hospitals in Canada which admit children with psychiatric disabilities and 12 hospital training schools for the mentally retarded.

HOSPITAL OPERATING COSTS

Question No. 1,530—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What was the total cost of operating Canada's hospitals for each of the past five years, province by province?
2. What was the total cost of operating Canada's mental hospitals for each of the past five years?
3. What was the per diem cost of operating Canada's hospitals for each of the past five years?
4. What was the per diem cost of operating Canada's mental hospitals for each of the past five years?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Total operating expenditures of public general and allied special hospitals for each of the five years for which final figures are available, in thousands of dollars:

| | 1957 | 1958 | 1959 | 1960 | 1961 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|

*Excluding Quebec for which records are not available.

DIVISION OF VOTES, 1963 ELECTION

Question No. 1,532—Mr. Matheson:

1. Has any department or agency of the federal government information which would indicate, by parties or groups, on the average, how many votes were received, in the 1963 federal election, by a (a) Ralliement Creditiste M.P. (b) Social Credit M.P. (c) New Democratic M.P. (b) Progressive Conservative M.P. (e) Liberal M.P.; and, if so, what are the figures in each case?

2. Has any department or agency of the federal government information which would indicate, by parties or groups, on the average, how many constituents are represented by a (a) Ralliement Creditiste M.P. (b) Social Credit M.P. (c) New Democratic M.P. (d) Progressive Conservative M.P. (e) Liberal M.P. of the twenty sixth parliament; and, if so, what are the figures in each case?

Mr. Pickersgill: The chief electoral officer has supplied the following statistics:

1. (a) Ralliement Creditiste, 147,936; (b) Social Creit, 139,689; (c) New Democratic, 238,584; (d) Progressive Conservative, 1,192,-854; (e) Liberal, 2,111,566.

2. (b) Ralliement Creditiste, $796,539; (b) Social Credit, 809,491; (c) New Democratic, 1,356,016; (d) Progressive Conservative, 5,577,-687; (e) Liberal, 9,698,514.

CHEESE EXPORT SUBSIDY

Question No. 1,536—Mr. Peters:

1. What has been the result of the reduction in cheese export subsidy from four cents to three cents?

2. What effect has this on the export price to (a) Great Britain (b) other European markets (c) American market?

3. What is the total production of cheddar cheese for the years 1961, 1962, and each month of 1963 in (a) Canada (b) province of Quebec (c) province of Ontario?

Questions

4. In each case, what percentage is made from (a) raw milk (b) by the by-flash process?

Answer: 1. The reduction in the cheese export subsidy, applicable only to cheddar cheese shipped to Britain, has effected a saving to the treasury of $61,180 on exports to that country in the May to August period this year, of $6,118,000 pounds. Total 1963 exports to Britain are expected to equal those of last year, which amounted to 26 million pounds. Demand for Canadian cheddar in that market continue strong.

2. (a) The export price of cheddar on a cents pound basis f.o.b. shipping point has remained above last year's comparable price for the period May to August:

| | 1963 | 1962 |
|---|---|---|
| May | 33.6 | 31.7 |
| June | 34.2 | 32.0 |
| July | 33.8 | 30.4 |
| August | 33.4 | 31.4 |

(b) and (c) not applicable. (See answer 1).

3.

PLACE MEASUREMENT DREDGING, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 1,538—Mr. Coates:

1. What place measurement dredging projects are being considered in the maritime provinces for the fiscal year 1964-65?

2. What are the estimated quantities to be dredged in each of these projects?

Mr. Badanai: 1 and 2. This information is not available at this time and will not be available until the department's 1964-65 estimates are tabled in the house.

STUDIES OF WATER LEVELS, ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Question No. 1,541—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Does the government intend to institute a study of the causes of the lowering of the level of water in the St. Lawrence river?

2. If studies of this problem have been made, of what nature were they, and by whom were they made?

3. Does the St. Lawrence seaway authority have any jurisdiction in that matter and, if so, to what extent?

Questions

[Translation]

Mr. Turner: 1. The level of water in the St. Lawrence has been under study for several years and the studies will continue. The present low-level cycle is due actually to the small amount of precipitation which has fallen in the drainage basins of the Ottawa river, the great lakes and the St. Lawrence river.

2. The studies include various suggestions to control the flow of lake Ontario and concerning the effects of the holding up of water in the upper Ottawa, as well as studies on models and on the spot for the future construction of protective works in the St. Lawrence river, at Montreal and downstream from Montreal.

Studies on the control of the flow of lake Ontario come under the international St. Lawrence river board of control, on behalf of the international joint commission; those concerning the Ottawa river drainage basin are undertaken by the federal-provincial Ottawa river board of engineers and those made at Montreal and downstream, mainly by the Department of Transport.

Studies of the factors affecting the water level of lake Ontario and consequently the flow and level of the St. Lawrence river have also been made by the international lake Ontario board of engineers, on behalf of the joint international commission, from 1952 to 1958.

3. No.

STUDY OF BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 1,545—Mr. Latulippe:

In view of the recent publication of statistics on the number of bankruptcies in Canada and particularly in the province of Quebec, does the government plan to undertake a survey of the situation and to take immediate appropriate action?

[Translation]

Mr. Chevrier: A complete revision of the Bankruptcy Act is being studied in the Department of Justice and there is before parliament an interim measure, Bill S-2, "An Act to Amend the Bankruptcy Act", for the purpose of improving certain aspects of the Bankruptcy Act administration.

ALGERIA—CANADIAN INTERESTS AFFECTED BY NATIONALIZATION PROGRAM

Question No. 1,547—Mr. Latulippe:

Have any Canadian industries or any Canadian capital been affected by the nationalization program of the government of Algeria and, if so (a) how many industries (b) what capital is involved (c) did the federal government take any steps to protect Canadian interests?

[Mr. Latulippe.]

[Translation]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are informed that there does not seem to be in Algeria any Canadian capital or industry which could be nationalized.

Consequently, the government has received no claim for compensation.

Therefore parts (a), (b) and (c) of the question are not applicable.

SALARIES OF POLICE MAGISTRATES, YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 1,550—Mr. Nielsen:

1. Has the salary of the police magistrate in and for the Yukon Territory been increased and, if so (a) on what date was the increase authorized (b) was the increase retroactive, and to what date (c) what was the amount of the increase?

2. Has the salary of the police magistrate in and for the Northwest Territories been increased and, if so (a) on what date was the increase authorized (b) was the increase retroactive, and to what date (c) what was the amount of the increase?

Mr. Chevrier: 1. No.

2. No.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT, STEWART-CASSIAR ROAD, B.C.

Question No. 1,561—Mr. Howard:

Are any discussions or negotiations presently under way between the government or any agency or branch thereof and the government of the province of British Columbia regarding an agreement to contribute to the construction of the so-called Stewart-Cassiar road and, if so, when is it expected that an agreement will be reached?

Answer: No. Federal contribution to the cost of constructing the Stewart-Cassiar road is being made in accordance with an agreement made in 1958, and amended in June 1963 to extend the completion date from 1963 to 1968.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH CZECHOSLOVAKIA ON NATIONALIZED PROPERTIES

Question No. 1,565—Mr. Klein:

Has the government any information concerning negotiations now being carried on between the government of the United States and the government of Czechoslovakia for the settlement of claims of United States citizens for properties nationalized by Czechoslovakia after world war II, and, if so, are similar negotiations being conducted or will they be conducted by the Canadian government on behalf of Canadian citizens having similar claims against Czechoslovakia?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Our information is that the United States-Czechoslovakia negotiations on nationalization claims of United States citizens, which have been carried on over a number of years, are still going on.

As regards claims of Canadian citizens in respect of property nationalized by the Czechoslovak government, repeated efforts have been made in the past through the Canadian embassy in Prague to obtain a settlement of these claims, without success. The Canadian government has within the past few days made further efforts to bring about negotiations. The past attitude of the Czechoslovak government has not been encouraging, but all possibilities for making some progress in respect of these claims are being carefully and actively explored.

CANADA MEDAL

Question No. 1,567—Mr. Lambert:

1. Have any awards of the Canada medal been made since its institution in 1943, if not, has the authority for the Canada medal been revoked?
2. If the Canada medal is still active, what plans are contemplated for its future?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. No; no.

2. None at the present time.

*MILK SUBSIDY PAYMENTS, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,569—Mr. Ricard:

Since the establishment of the agricultural prices stabilization board and up to March 31, 1963, what has been the total amount paid as a grant of 25 cents a hundredweight of milk to the producers supplying each of the following factories: Societe Cooperative Agricole, St-Germain, Co. of Drummond; Theodore Jodoin, St-Theodore d'Acton, Co. of Bagot; Societe Cooperative Agricole, St-Hugues, Co. of Bagot; Deslauriers & Frere-Paul Jodoin, St-Liboire, Co. of Bagot; Felice Di Palma, St-Liboire, Co. of Bagot; Heliodore Parent, Ste-Helene, Co. of Bagot; Societe Cooperative Agricole, St-Simon, Co. of Bagot; Theodore Gevry, St-Pie, Co. of Bagot; Alfred Bernard, La Presentation, Co. of St-Hyacinthe; Produits Laitiers Val Maska, St-Damase, Co. of St-Hyacinthe; Charles Benoit & Irenee Lariviere, La Presentation, Co. of St-Hyacinthe; Lussier & Frere, Enr., St-Hyacinthe, Co. of St-Hyacinthe; Produits Laitiers Mont St-Hilaire, St-Hyacinthe, Co. of St-Hyacinthe?

Mr. Hays: During the four fiscal year periods ending March 31, 1963, the period in which the 25 cent per hundredweight milk subsidy has been provided, the factories listed, acting as agents for the agricultural stabilization board, have transmitted to their respective producers a total amount of $1,516,221.79.

WHEAT BOARD SALES CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,576—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

For the crop year beginning August 1, 1963, until the present time (a) how many sales contracts for wheat has the wheat board entered into (b) what countries were the contracts signed with, and on what dates were they signed (c) what was the board's listed price on each of the days on which the sales contracts were signed?

Answer: It is contrary to government policy and not in the public interest to reveal details of the commercial sales contracts entered into by the Canadian wheat board.

PURCHASE OF SOUTH AMERICAN RAW SUGAR

Question No. 1,590—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

Is the government considering the possibility of purchasing Demerara-type raw sugar at low prices directly from Rio or Sao Paulo, Brazil, through our commercial attaché with a view to reselling it to Canadian refineries with a consequent lowering of prices on the Canadian market?

[Translation]

Answer: The government is not considering the purchase of Demerara-type of raw sugar. The import of sugar into Canada is in the hands of the private trade and if Canadian importers can obtain sugar at lower prices in certain countries, they will no doubt avail themselves of the opportunity.

CANADA'S MOST FAVOURABLE TRADE BALANCE

Question No. 1,597—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

With what country does Canada have the most favourable balance of trade and, what is (a) the value of exports to that country (b) the value of imports from that country, for the last twelve month period for which figures are available?

Answer: Canada has a larger export balance on trade with Britain than on trade with any other country. The value of commodity trade with Britain in the 12 months ending September, 1963, latest figures available, was as follows: domestic exports, $992,950,862; re-exports, $9,443,729; imports, $514,129,911*.

*August and September are preliminary.

*INFORMATION AND WARRANT AGAINST HAL BANKS

Question No. 1,598—Mr. Woolliams:

1. What charges were laid by information against Hal C. Banks prior to or on October 31, 1963?
2. What was the date of the charge or charges in question and who laid the information or informations in question?
3. Was a warrant issued for the said Banks arrest contemporaneously or immediately following the taking and swearing of the said information or informations?
4. If a said warrant was issued, what date and hour was it delivered to the police for execution?

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, the answers are as follows:

1. An information was laid against Harold Chamberlain Banks of Pointe Claire, in the district of Montreal, charging him with conspiring to commit an assault causing bodily harm to Captain Henry Francis Walsh.

2. The date of the laying of the said information was October 23, 1963, and it was laid by Sergeant Joseph McLeod of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

3. A warrant for the arrest of Banks was issued on October 23, 1963 immediately following the laying of the said information.

4. The said warrant was delivered to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police immediately upon being issued but the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were directed not to execute it pending further instructions. They were directed on November 5, 1963, to execute the said warrant.

REQUESTS FOR CO-OPERATION IN CHAUDIERE RIVER WORKS

Question No. 1,217—Mr. Perron:

1. During the last two fiscal years, has the government of the province of Quebec requested the federal government to carry out or to co-operate in carrying out certain works in the Chaudiere river and, if so, what was the nature of such works?
2. Has the federal government received requests during the last two fiscal years from municipalities wishing to obtain its co-operation in carrying out certain works on the Chaudiere river and, if so (a) which municipalities (b) what will be the nature of such works and (c) what was the answer given by the federal government?

Return tabled.

DEPORTATION ORDERS

Question No. 1,386—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1962, how many, if any, people have been ordered to be deported, shown by country of last permanent residence, and what was the reason for the order of deportation having been made?
2. How many of these have not been so deported with the reasons given in each case?

Return tabled.

VISITORS DEPORTED AND REFUSED CITIZENSHIP

Question No. 1,387—Mr. Howard:

For each year since January 1, 1957, how many persons resident in Canada by virtue of visitors permits have been (a) ordered to be deported and (b) refused citizenship papers, with the reason given in each case?

Return tabled.

SPONSORED IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 1,409—Mr. Prittie:

1. In regard to sponsored immigrants, does the Department of Citizenship and Immigration draw any distinction between those immigrants who are expected to become self-supporting and those who, by reason of age and/or infirmity, will never be self supporting?

[Mr. Macdonald.]

2. (a) How many sponsored immigrants were admitted to Canada in each of the years 1955-1962 inclusive (b) of the total number of immigrants entering Canada in each of the years 1955-1962, what percentage were sponsored (c) what were the countries of origin for the sponsored immigrants during each of the years in question (d) by what process is the department made aware of any subsequent application for assistance on the part of a sponsored immigrant, to municipal or provincial authorities (e) since 1955, how many sponsored immigrants have subsequently received public assistance following their admission to Canada (f) does the federal government assume complete responsibility for the cost of public assistance paid on behalf of immigrants who were sponsored at the time of their admission into Canada or is any cost-sharing agreement in existence whereby the provinces are reimbursed for public assistance granted on behalf of sponsored immigrants?
3. Is a sponsor required to sign an undertaking to provide care and maintenance for the person sponsored, and does this document incorporate a guarantee that such persons will not become a public charge at any time during their residence in Canada, if so, (a) does such a document have any legal validity and is it the practice of the department to seek legal recourse in enforcing the terms of the contract under which entry was granted (b) in those situations where a sponsor deliberately repudiated his responsibility to provide support for an immigrant who is incapable of ever becoming self supporting, what action was taken by the department if persuasion proved unsuccessful (c) do financial obligations incurred subsequent to the admission of an immigrant release the sponsor from his prior obligation to support?

Return tabled.

*WHEAT BOARD MEMBERSHIP AND POWERS

Question No. 1,486—Mr. Langlois:

1. What is the rate per bushel paid by the farmers for the transport of grain from western Canada to the great lakes warehouses?
2. What is the price per bushel paid to the farmers of western Canada for oats, wheat, rye and flax in 1962 and 1963?
3. Who are the members of the Canadian wheat board and, by name, what changes have been made in the membership of the board since (a) 1958 (b) July, 1963?
4. What powers does the board of grain commissioners have with regard to the purchase or the transport of western feed grains or of export grain?
5. For what number of years did Mr. F. F. Hamilton, chief commissioner of the board of grain commissioners, act as deputy commissioner of that board before acceding to his present position?
6. What did he do prior to his becoming deputy commissioner?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DR. LORIS RUSSELL—APPOINTMENT TO NATIONAL MUSEUM

Motion No. 107—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the government, including that through the office of the Prime Minister, regarding the appointment of Dr. Loris Russell some time ago to head the national museum.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would ask leave to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL RESPECTING IMMIGRATION

Motion No. 111—Mr. Peters:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all orders in council covering immigration for the years 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, and 1959, and to include any corrections that have been brought to the attention of the government as a consequence of the immigration amnesty order, together with recommendations instituted by members of parliament concerning individuals covered by such orders in council.

He said: I would ask permission to have this motion stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN R.C.M.P. AND ALERT SERVICE

Motion No. 112—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the R.C.M.P. commissioner's office or that of the "I" directorate office and the alert service (Marjorie Lamb, P.O. Box 173, Station "Q", Toronto, Ontario), since June 1, 1961.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it is not and has never been in the public interest to produce correspondence to or from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, for to do so would immediately destroy the confidence on which numerous organizations and the general public have always relied in communicating with the R.C.M.P. Therefore the public interest requires us to continue to maintain a policy that such matters are never publicly disclosed.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have this motion transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

T.C.A. REPAIR FACILITIES, WINNIPEG

Motion No. 129—Mr. Orlikow:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Manitoba since April 8, 1963, dealing with the proposed move of T.C.A. repair facilities from Winnipeg to Montreal.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this motion subject to the usual reservation as to obtaining the consent of the province.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is agreed to subject to the reservation of the minister.

Motion agreed to.

28902-5—284

CORRESPONDENCE FROM AUDITOR GENERAL REGARDING ESTATES

Motion No. 138—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence sent by the Auditor General to the minister or the deputy minister (taxation) of the Department of National Revenue regarding any revenues which should be collected by the crown in connection with estates of deceased persons since January 1, 1963, and to be more specific, in view of previous decisions on like motions, for only that correspondence signed by the Auditor General, Mr. Henderson, and not correspondence or memoranda directed by employees of the Auditor General's office.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the Minister of National Revenue that he has spoken to the hon. member for Port Arthur, and that since no correspondence has been received by the minister or the deputy minister, taxation, of the Department of National Revenue from the Auditor General the hon. member is now prepared to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INDUSTRY—DUPLICATION IN SETTING UP OF DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 139—Mr. Orlikow:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Manitoba and other provinces regarding possible duplication created by setting up the Department of Industry when similar departments have already been operating in the province of Manitoba and other provinces.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry has drawn my attention to notice of motion for production of papers No. 140 passed a few days ago which asked for all that is asked for in this motion and even more. Therefore I am sure my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North would not mind if this motion were now dropped.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

STUDY OF NELSON RIVER POWER POTENTIAL

Motion No. 142—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all letters, communications, documents, and reports exchanged since 1961 between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba with respect to a study of the power potential of the Nelson river.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, we are entirely agreeable to accepting this motion subject only to the usual reservation with respect to obtaining the assent of the province.

Motions for Papers

Mr. Speaker: The motion is accepted subject to the reservation expressed by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

INTERVIEWS WITH INMATES, ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY

Motion No. 143—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the transcript of any interview, inquiry or examination of or with each inmate of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary relating to the riot in that penitentiary on June 17, 1962.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have permission to withdraw this notice of motion.

Mr. Speaker: Motion withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTER, RAMA, SASK.

Motion No. 144—Mr. Korchinski:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, petitions and other documents, other than inter-departmental correspondence, exchanged between the office of the Postmaster General and any consultants, advisers or any other interested parties relating to the appointment of a postmaster at Rama, Saskatchewan, since April 8, 1963.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to the adoption of this motion and the tabling of all official correspondence.

Mr. Pigeon: What do you mean by "official"?

Mr. Knowles: No Christmas cards?

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MANITOBA ON DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

Motion No. 145—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, briefs, memoranda, or other documents exchanged since the 22nd day of April, 1963, between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba with respect to the setting up of a Department of Industry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the information requested in this motion has already been tabled in response to order No. 140. In view of this I would be happy to withdraw my motion.

Mr. Drury: It will be tabled, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

SECURITY PROCEDURES AND INVESTIGATIONS

Motion No. 146—Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence received since January 1, 1963 by the Prime Minister and/or the Minister of Justice from organizations or individuals dealing with the problem of security procedures and investigations and the replies to same.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder whether the hon. member would allow this to stand.

Mr. Knowles: That will be agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

B.C. FISHING INDUSTRY—JOINT COMMITTEE

Motion No. 147—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all letters, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or department thereof and any other person, organization or government since July 1, 1963 dealing with the federal-provincial committee on price and wage disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the government is agreeable to accepting this motion subject to the usual reservation in connection with federal-provincial correspondence and the inter-departmental exchange of correspondence.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is accepted subject to the reservation of the minister.

Motion agreed to.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE, NORTH PACIFIC FISHERIES COMMISSION

Motion No. 148—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any or all members of the advisory committee to the north Pacific fisheries commission since July 1, 1963.

Mr. Robichaud: The government is agreeable to accepting this motion.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is accepted.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR, B.C. FISHING INDUSTRY

Motion No. 149—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the telegram received during the early part of August, 1963, from the fisheries association of British Columbia, which telegram dealt with the suggestion that an arbitrator be appointed to settle certain unresolved questions related to the strike in the fishing industry in B.C. earlier in the year.

Mr. Robichaud: This motion is acceptable to the government.

Motion agreed to.

DR. LORIS RUSSELL—APPOINTMENT TO NATIONAL MUSEUM

Motion No. 150—Mr. Fisher:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged between ministers or employees of the government and outside persons regarding the appointment of Dr. Loris Russell some time ago to head the national museum.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared to accept this motion subject only to the reservation respecting such privileged documents as may exist.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is accepted subject to the reservation expressed by the minister.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH ROLAND COMTOIS, REPENTIGNY, QUE.

Motion No. 151—Mr. Pigeon:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Minister of Justice or officers of the Department of Justice, on one hand, and Mr. Roland Comtois, of Repentigny, constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, on the other hand.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated on a former occasion, since there is no official correspondence I have no objection to this motion passing.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that this motion be transferred for debate; as concerns—

An hon. Member: It is already accepted.

Mr. Pigeon: —as concerns the word official, I think that the word "patronage" should be substituted.

[Text]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would allow me to refer you to page 2858 of Hansard of July 30, 1958, where under similar circumstances the then minister of agriculture said:

I am also informed it has never been the custom of the house to have documents of this nature—

Personal and confidential documents.

—produced. If there are any documents in addition to these I shall be glad to produce them.

That is the position I am taking on this motion, namely that I consent to it but that there are no official documents.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, in my view, this is quite a different case. The Minister of Justice is distorting the meaning of the motion and I ask that it be transferred for debate.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER OF MACKENZIE TERRITORY

Motion No. 153—Mr. Rheaume:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, documents or other papers exchanged between any of the following: (a) the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and/or any official or employee of the department of northern affairs (b) Mr. E. R. Horton of Yellowknife, Northwest Territories (c) Mrs. I. J. H. "Tibbie" Hardie, Ottawa, Ontario, "consultant" (d) Mr. John J. Connolly, Ottawa, Ontario (e) and/or any other member of the executive of the Northwest Territories Liberal association; relating to the appointment of Mr. E. R. Horton of Yellowknife, N.W.T., as resident commissioner of the proposed Mackenzie territory.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would ask permission to have this motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Motion withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

RESULTS OF 1963 ELECTION

Motion No. 154—Mr. Caouette:

That an order of the house do issue for a return of the complete results of the general election in Canada on April 8, 1963, showing, for each constituency by provinces, the total votes cast for each candidate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I move the motion in the name of the hon. member for Villeneuve?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, in a non-controversial way, I could raise a point of order with respect to this motion. This is a document which has to be tabled under a statute of the parliament of Canada. Therefore it seems to me that the house would be making itself rather ridiculous by ordering the production of something that the law of Canada has ordered. I am informed by the chief electoral officer that this document is being printed and will be ready between December 15 and January 1, and the law will be complied with with respect to its tabling. In the circumstances I suggest that we should not pass the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member on behalf of the hon. member for Villeneuve—

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I accept the suggestion of the Secretary of State, but I do not agree with him when he says that this notice of motion is ridiculous. Perhaps it was a way for the hon. member for Villeneuve to expedite matters.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the hon. member this motion stands.

Motion stands.

LEGAL DOCUMENTS ISSUED AGAINST HAL BANKS

Motion No. 155—Mr. Woolliams:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of each and every information laid under the Criminal Code of Canada on or before October 31, 1963, against Hal C. Banks, together with any other legal documents issued or served on the said Banks in connection with the information or charges in question.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to move this motion, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler).

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, while we are still on notices of motions for production of papers, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that, about three weeks ago, an order of the house was adopted asking the Postmaster General to table certain documents. Now, that has not been done as yet and, since the motion was agreed to three weeks ago, could the minister give some explanation for the delay?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the information is available, it will be tabled.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF SUBMARINES FOR CANADIAN NAVY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that cancellation of the frigate program will result in the laying off of up to 10,000 Canadians in the shipbuilding and related industries, will the government reconsider its decision to purchase three submarines outside of Canada and launch its own submarine building program in our country, as this type of warship can be built efficiently by our Canadian shipyards?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): I am grateful to the hon. member for having given notice to the Prime Minister's office that he intended to ask this question. I presume that it is based on a purported statement by the president of Davie Shipbuilding Limited appearing in this morning's

Gazette, and which would appear to be an estimate on the part of the individual quoted as to the number of personnel who might have been employed if the general purpose frigate program had been continued.

It is a fact, however, that Canadian shipyards will get substantial benefit from the $110 million shipbuilding program announced by the Minister of Transport and the $50 million program forecast by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. The Minister of National Defence has explained to the house the reason for the cancellation of the frigate program. He has explained also to the special committee on defence the reasons for the purchase of the three submarines from the United Kingdom. I have nothing to add to what he has said in this regard.

In so far as a possible submarine construction program in Canada is concerned, the Minister of National Defence also told the defence committee yesterday that we are now undertaking a thorough study of our future naval requirements, and that once those have been determined it will be the policy of the government to undertake production in Canadian yards.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that the programs that have been announced by the Minister of Transport and by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys were programs that were already drafted under the previous administration, in great part, and that the abandonment of the frigate program and the buying of submarines outside of Canada is going to be a tremendous blow to employment in the shipyards of Canada?

Mr. Chevrier: I thought this was a supplementary question that was being directed to me, but I note now that it is a statement. It is not a fact, let me assure the hon. member, that this program was prepared by the former administration. The former administration had something to do with the 40 per cent aspect of the program—

Mr. MacEwan: "Something to do;" that is generous.

Mr. Chevrier: —but the program announced by my colleagues, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is an entirely new program.

An hon. Member: No, it is not.

Mr. Chevrier: These programs, as my two colleagues have indicated, will provide a tremendous amount of employment for the shipyards of the country.

SUGAR

REPORTED DIFFERENCE BETWEEN U.S. AND CANADIAN PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister aware that a five pound bag of sugar in Canada now costs the housewife 95 cents, while advertisements in United States newspapers show the same product selling in the United States for 49 cents? I should like to ask the minister whether the government is making any study of the reason for this tremendous disparity in price if, as the Prime Minister claims, the price in Canada is largely set by the world price. If such a study is being undertaken, what is the answer?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I am glad the hon. member has posed that question. I can assure the hon. member that it has caused me and my two colleagues who are particularly interested in this problem, namely the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, a great deal of concern. I can assure him also that we are giving the matter careful study. I hope it will be possible to say something within the next few days.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Could the spirit of Hyannis Port be extended to asking the United States how they keep the price of sugar at half what it is in Canada?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Perhaps I might answer that question in a preliminary way.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Here is a sugary answer.

Mr. Gordon: This will not be a sugary answer; I hope it will be a factual one. When the statement is made in the next few days, to which the Minister of Justice referred, I expect it will include a description of the different ways in which sugar has been purchased over the years in the different countries. I am sure that will explain the question the hon. member has asked.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. Will it indicate whether the government of Canada is prepared to adopt some of the methods other countries have used?

Mr. Gordon: It will indicate the advantages and disadvantages of the different purchasing methods.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO DELAY IN EXECUTION OF WARRANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question relating to the answer given to part 4 of question 1,598 given by the parliamentary secretary. Will the minister say who directed the Royal Canadian Mounted Police not to execute the warrant immediately against Hal C. Banks, and for what reason such a direction was given?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I think in the contribution I made to the debate yesterday I answered the question the hon. member just now put to me.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask a supplementary question. This question springs directly from the answer given today, so it would be impossible for it to have been answered previously. I wonder if the minister would try to give an answer to this very important question.

Mr. Chevrier: I took it that I had given an answer yesterday. In the answer I gave yesterday I indicated to the house that the first concern of the government was keeping the men on the ships in order to keep grain moving, and that was the reason the warrant was not executed immediately. I did not want to be placed in a position of interfering with what was being done by the trustees, who were at that time entering upon their duties. Since then instructions have been given to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to execute the warrant. It seems to me that is an answer that should be acceptable to the house.

Mr. Martineau: Were such instructions given by the minister himself or by some other person?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, now, would the hon. member indicate to what instructions he has reference?

Mr. Martineau: Yes. The answer given by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice said that instructions were given to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police not to execute this warrant immediately. My question to the minister is, who gave such instructions?

Mr. Chevrier: The Minister of Justice did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a gross interference.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is turning into a debate. We have had enough questions, I believe, on this subject.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice, and ask him if he would comment on the Canadian Press story from Toronto to the effect that S.I.U. officers in Toronto claim he has betrayed them by arresting Banks, and are threatening another immediate walkout?

Mr. Chevrier: I have no comment to make, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Could he disclose to the house the reasons why the charges were not laid against Hal Banks through the ordinary channels, in the circumstances, the attorney general of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is quite in order. Normally, the procedures are taken by the attorney general of a province, as I repeated many times in this house; but in this particular case, since the affair was about a report by a federal investigator, since it was about cases concerning a federal statute, since it also dealt with suggestions made by the federal investigator, we considered it was proper to obtain the assent of the provincial authorities, which we did in the circumstances.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Were not the charges laid under the Criminal Code?

Mr. Chevrier: One of the charges was laid under the Criminal Code and the others, which are still under consideration, will be made under federal statutes, including the Shipping Act.

[Later:]

[Text]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him under what authority he was acting when he suspended execution of the warrant against Mr. Banks.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a responsibility and a duty on the part of the Minister of Justice, under certain circumstances, to act in the best interests of the public and in the common interests of the country. Having regard to the circumstances as I found them at the time I thought I was acting in the best interests of the country, in doing what I did.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): If I might ask a supplementary question, would the minister answer the question as to where he had any authority, after delivery of the warrant to the police, to direct them not to execute that which the court had directed? It is all very well to say "I did it because of circumstances". Tyranny always operates that way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Under what law did you do that?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the first place I am not too sure I understand the implication of the right hon. gentleman's question. If he is dealing with a legal point I am not going to get into a legal argument with him on that matter. I have given the reply to the hon. member who asked the question, and I have nothing to add to it.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Can the minister tell the house if he asked the province of Quebec for authorization to institute proceedings against Mr. Hal Banks, in order not to encroach on a field under provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, since this is a jurisdiction matter, the question should be put to Messrs. Martineau and Robinette who have taken the necessary step.

[Text]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): A supplementary question. I wonder if the minister could clear up for me a reference to this matter in his earlier remarks. Was a warrant issued or was a summons issued on the charge originally laid? This would explain the minister's actions more clearly than his reply so far.

Mr. Chevrier: The answer is that a warrant was issued on October 23.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Can the minister tell us what steps have been taken between the time when a warrant was issued for the arrest of Hal Banks and the time when he was arrested, in order to make sure that the warrant could be used when necessary?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary secretary replied a moment ago to that question and if the hon. member wishes to refer to Hansard, he will find the answer.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST QUEBEC UNIVERSITY GRADUATES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council a question. Could the minister tell the house whether he has recently seen an item published in the Montreal Le Devoir, under the title:

Ottawa: eight civil servants denounce the treatment meted out to university graduates from Quebec.

If so, what action has the government taken or intends to take in order—and I quote the text of this letter:

—that the federal state provide the means of ensuring to French Canada an honest share in the administration of public affairs, at the intermediate and, perhaps, higher levels too in compliance with its responsibility and that it be done without delay.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. gentleman has asked a long question, but I believe about 75 per cent of it was in order. The comment at the end, I did not believe, was in order. May I suggest this question be shortened considerably.

[Translation]

Mr. Sauve: Mr. Speaker, I made no comments. I quoted from a newspaper which published part of a letter.

I would like to know whether the government intends to do something to follow up that letter.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am taking the question as notice and I shall answer as soon as possible.

[Text]

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the next federal-provincial conference is to take place before the end of the month, will the Secretary of State guarantee to the house that all the information relating to motions 19, 22 and 33, which stood in my name and which were accepted by the government on June 26 last, will be produced well in advance of the conference? I ask this, sir, in order that all members interested in the true meaning of co-operative federalism can begin their basic studies immediately.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Well, much as I should like to give such a guarantee, I am afraid I will have to tell the hon. gentleman that we do not have a dictatorship in Canada. I will do my best to persuade—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —my colleagues to provide the information that the hon. gentleman obviously needs for his enlightenment.

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask a supplementary question. Why has there been this delay when the information I require obviously refers to very few documents, and returns have already been made in this house relating to motions which required a much more voluminous correspondence than I am requesting?

Mr. Pickersgill: As soon as orders of the day are reached, sir, I will start an inquest into this important question.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister give us any reason to justify the fact that, after the opening quota, there are points that have delivered only 300 bushels, whereas many other areas have already delivered 4 bushels to the acre? Does the minister intend to leave the situation as it is, or is he washing his hands entirely of the Canadian wheat board?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I gave an answer to this question just the other day, when I said I was sure it would be the desire of all hon. members, including the hon. member who has just spoken, that there should be the maximum movement of grain out of this country this year. In order to accomplish this it will be necessary from time to time for quotas to be irregular. I can understand why there are some points that are temporarily being squeezed by this policy. Before the end of the crop year I am sure everyone will be happy at the amount of grain moved.

Mr. Korchinski: Has the minister the answer for the second part of my question? Has he washed his hands entirely of the operations of the wheat board, or does he intend to interfere and ask that some of these initial quotas be raised to allow a 2 bushel delivery?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: May I say to the hon. gentleman I have no intention of instructing the wheat board to do anything that would interfere with the maximum movement of wheat from Canada this crop year.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): As a supplementary question, may I inquire—though I agree with what the minister is probably trying to do—whether any consideration is being given to leaving over to next year the income from the increased deliveries beyond the specified payment for next year's income; because it is entirely up to the department to get more grain moving to the lakehead.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have had some preliminary talks with the Minister of National Revenue about this, but I think it will be understood by all hon. members that if some farmers withhold their deliveries there will probably be other farmers willing to deliver their wheat in their place, so I do not think there will be any holding back of deliveries as a result of the factor mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I think what the hon. member was trying to ask, and the minister did not catch the question, was this: If farmers co-operate with the wheat board and deliver wheat which they would normally hold over until 1964, will there be some adjustment of income tax payments?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thought it was the desire of all hon. members to have quotas opened up as quickly as possible so that farmers could deliver their grain, and I cannot understand why there should be an argument on the other side of the question.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REFUSAL OF U.S. DOCK WORKERS TO LOAD CANADIAN SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and ask him if he would tell the house how many Canadian ships now in United States ports are being boycotted in their attempt to load or unload, either by picketing or other means?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian embassy in Washington has reported the following situation: the Upper Lakes company vessel the S.S. John Ericsson has been boycotted in Chicago since October 4. The S.S. Thorold, belonging to another Canadian company, is also lying idle in the south Chicago harbour. The S.S. Colonel Robert R. McCormick has been boycotted since last Saturday morning, and has been unable to load. The Mondoc has been boycotted and the Vandoc has likewise been boycotted.

The embassy has been very energetic in making representations with regard to the situation, and in addition our consul general in Chicago has been in touch with the regional office of the national labour relations board in Chicago.

On Monday, acting on a charge filed by a Chicago stevedoring contractor, the national labour relations board opened an investigation into unfair labour practices by the seafarers international union of North America, the parent union of the S.I.U. of Canada. The S.I.U. of North America has been charged in the complaint with engaging in a secondary boycott, an illegal proceeding under United States labour legislation, and we are advised that the decision of the board with regard to this matter will be forwarded to Washington very soon.

While I am advised that the outcome of this case may not necessarily affect the situation as a whole, it is suggested that it may have an important bearing. My hon. friend may be assured that continuous representation and contact exist between the Canadian embassy, the state department and the department of labour in the United States.

Mr. Starr: And it is cordial?

SHIPPING INDUSTRY—REVOCATION OF APPROVAL RESPECTING VACATION PAY ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he can reply to my question of November 1, when I asked him about the vacation fund which was in the hands of the S.I.U., and whether it had been turned over as yet to the employees.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the S.I.U. vacation fund is being liquidated as quickly as possible. At present the trustees have the authority to approve payments with respect to the vacation fund. My further understanding is that those seamen who have not presently received their vacation pay will receive it prior to the end of the shipping season, or as soon as possible. However, this matter is under investigation both by the trustees and by the Department of Labour and I hope to have a further opportunity to make a complete report later.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question. Has this fund been turned over to the employers, who would dispense it to the employees?

Mr. MacEachen: The Department of Labour issued a directive that the funds be returned to the employers by the S.I.U. Certain steps in that direction have been taken, but at present the point under investigation is the extent to which the directive has been complied with, and whether in the circumstances, because of certain bookkeeping arrangements, the directive could be fully complied with. That is now being investigated by officials of the department.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. Could I ask the minister whether any orders or regulations have been issued under section 18 of the public trusteeship legislation?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the minister, when such orders are passed, whether they will be tabled in the house?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be glad to undertake to table any such regulation, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANGLOIS—INFORMATION RESPECTING OPERATION OF GRAIN EXCHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I was going to take it up at the opening of the house today, but since it stems from the question period I thought I should wait until this time to present it. It has to do with a question of mine which was answered by the Secretary of State on Monday, November 4, relating to the grain exchanges. My question was:

1. What responsibility, if any, has the federal government for the licensing or control of operations of the (a) Winnipeg grain exchange (b) Montreal grain exchange, and (c) Toronto grain exchange?

2. What are the functions of the above mentioned grain exchanges and, is there any federal control over prices set by these exchanges?

3. If federally licensed, on what date did each exchange commence operation, and what agency granted the licence?

The answer given was:

1, 2 and 3. The federal government has no responsibility in relation to the operations of grain exchanges.

This is a wonderful Pontius Pilate attitude on the part of the government, but it does not solve the problem. I was wondering if the Secretary of State could tell me how we could get information on this matter for the people of the country. Are we going to use the R.C.M.P., or is the Minister of Agriculture going to institute a royal commission to investigate their proceedings; because we all know they are robbing the people blind in this country. It is the government's attitude at the moment which I decry in not giving answers to questions on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to say once more it is my duty to find whether there is a prima facie case of privilege, and it seems to me quite evident there is no prima facie case of privilege, no matter what there may be in other directions.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, how can I get the answer? The minister says it is not his responsibility, and I have been looking for it for the past couple of weeks.

An hon. Member: Vote against them for a change.

[Later:]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Seeing that I cannot get an answer from the government to the question I asked a while ago, would the Minister of Justice tell me whether I could obtain an answer from the Governor General or, if not, from the Queen, since she has total authority?

[Later:]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I hope the government does not think I am nagging on this question, but I have been on it for a month and still have not had an answer. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he could give me the answer, and whether he could investigate the grain exchanges of Canada, which have become the sacred cow of India; no one wants to touch the matter. Did he inquire into that?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Langlois: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Megantic, but he has had considerable leeway this afternoon and this is no time to argue. If he wishes to place a question, let him place his question. The minister declined to answer the last question from the hon. member, so that is the end of it.

Mr. Langlois: On a point of privilege; he might not have answered the last one, but the people of Canada have been waiting for a long time for such an answer.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of privilege in the statement of the hon. member.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STORAGE SPACE IN MONTREAL FOR ONTARIO CORN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Elgin asked me a question as to whether I had received a telegram from the president of the association for the development and protection of eastern agriculture. I did not have the information at that time and said I would look into the matter.

The telegram was received on November 1 and was answered the same day, acknowledging the wire and indicating that I was referring these matters to the national harbours board for attention, and that I would request the board to get in touch with the president of the association directly. I am informed the board has been in communication with the president of the association and is attempting to meet the problem raised by the hon. member.

TOBACCO—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. On October 4, as recorded at page 3204 of Hansard for that date, I asked the minister whether his department was considering putting a price support on the 1963 crop of flue cured tobacco, and he replied that they were giving consideration to this request. Would he follow the customary procedure of announcing today in the House of Commons the deficiency payment for tobacco, as was announced outside this chamber to the farmers of Simcoe by the hon. member for Norfolk?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, the stabilization board has acted upon the request. I did not know it had to be announced in the house, but if it has I shall be glad to do it tomorrow.

QUEBEC—LOSS OF BUTTER IN FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the loss of 8 million pounds of storage butter as the result of a fire yesterday in St. Denis sur Richelieu is covered by insurance under the stabilization board, or is this a complete loss?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question may I say it was not 8 million pounds but 6 million pounds of butter and butter oil stored at St. Denis. We do not yet know the exact amount of the loss. Salvage operations have commenced, and we will not know for a few days. It is not insured.

FINANCE

REPORTED REQUEST FOR APPROVAL OF BANK MERGER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it correct that the Toronto-Dominion Bank and the Bank of Nova Scotia have asked for governmental approval for a merger?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

REPORTED EVASIONS BY MEMBER FOR NOTRE DAME DE GRACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, and in his absence perhaps the Minister of Justice would take it as notice as Acting Prime Minister. Has the Department of National Revenue made a study of the tax evasions set out more clearly in the MacKay report concerning the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wonder—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Surely, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: He is the acting minister.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder could I take this question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Would he study the MacKay report and the income tax loopholes referred to in the report to see whether or not Bill No. C-95 covers the matter, before it is passed in this house?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I do not think this comes under my jurisdiction, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPPING

GASPE—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF SHIPS TO CARRY LUMBER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Ouellet (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Transport.

There will be 700 more workers unemployed next week in the Gaspe peninsula if the saw mills are unable to obtain ships in order to forward eight million feet of lumber to Great Britain.

Has the minister taken the necessary steps to cope with the situation by finding shipowners willing to send their ships to the dangerous wharves of the Gaspe peninsula?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. The hon. member for Gaspe (Mr. Cyr) drew the matter to my attention last night, and I also saw the rather thorough story on the subject matter in Le Devoir this morning.

I have arranged with the shipping operations branch of the department to render what assistance it can. At this stage I am not sure what assistance can be given, because it would appear from the information I had this morning that one ship was available to move this lumber but it would require the assistance of a tug. Unfortunately the department does not have a tug available, and it was a matter of where a tug could be found to assist the one ship, and possibly other ships to move the lumber.

AIRPORTS

EDMONTON—MURAL ON WALL OF TERMINAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether the minister has seen the new mural in the main lobby of the international airport and, if so, would he give serious consideration to my suggestion that we hang the painter instead of the painting?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the minister has not seen the mural but he has heard a bit about it. I think it would be wise if the Minister of Transport did not set himself up as a judge of works of art.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF FRENCH SPEAKING VICE PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland), may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister?

Could the minister tell us if it is true that pressure was brought to bear on the president of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. Stewart Bates, by the French speaking ministers in the government to obtain that a French Canadian be appointed to either one of the vice presidencies on the executive committee of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since that question comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue, I consider it as notice and will refer it to him.

[Text]

TRANSPORT

QUEBEC—PROPOSED TUNNEL BETWEEN ST. LAMBERT AND MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Public Works?

In order to enlighten the citizens of St. Lambert and Montreal, could the minister tell the house whether it is true that a tunnel is to be built between Notre Dame street and the south shore of the St. Lawrence?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker, under the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Can the minister tell the house what will be the share of the federal government for the building of this tunnel?

Mr. Deschatelets: This is a major priority project, but the contributions of the federal and provincial governments and of the city of Montreal have not yet been decided.

MEASURE VALIDATING ORDER IN COUNCIL

The house in committee on Bill No. C-88, respecting an order of His Excellency the Governor in Council entitled the surcharge on imports order, and to restore certain rates of customs duties and tariff benefits expressed to be withdrawn thereby—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Chevrier: Because a considerable amount of time has elapsed since this bill received second reading, hon. members will perhaps expect me to make a short statement at this stage.

The bill has several related purposes. The first is to confirm the surcharge on imports order which was passed by the governor in council on June 24, 1962. That order was made on the basis of section 4 of the Customs Tariff and section 22 of the Financial Administration Act. The order provided, in effect, that the general tariff, instead of more favourable tariffs, should apply to certain commodities when imported into Canada but it then went on to remit the duties on such commodities to the extent necessary to bring it about that no duty was, by the first part of the order, increased by more than 15, 10 or 5 per cent, depending upon the commodity.

The second purpose of the bill is to restore, effective April 1, 1963, the more favourable tariff rates above referred to.

The third purpose is to limit the effect of future like orders to a six months period unless during that period any such order is approved by parliament.

I do not wish to keep alive a debate which was somewhat acrimonious and, I think, rather irrelevant, as to the nature of opinions that were given or not given concerning the validity of the surcharge on imports order. In describing the debate as somewhat acrimonious and irrelevant I accept my share of responsibility in the matter. We would do well, I think, to return now to what the Minister of Finance said in announcing that a measure of the nature of Bill C-88 would be introduced. He said that the legality of the order had been challenged and the matter was before the courts; that this posed a difficult problem, because in many cases those who paid the surcharges had passed the amounts on to their customers, and those customers perhaps to their own customers, and so on. He said it would not be possible to unscramble a situation of this kind and that one effect of the proposed legislation would be to prevent any massive attempt at obtaining refund of moneys in fact paid by now unidentifiable Canadians. In addition to this consideration, that the people who recovered the money might not be those actually entitled to it, there is the other very important consideration that the country has budgeted on the basis of this money, and we need it.

That this bill is, in the circumstances, at least a wise precautionary matter, I am sure the majority of the house will agree. That the fear of the government is not illusory is borne out by the fact that there are already pending in the exchequer court actions for the recovery of many million dollars, with more to be expected should these succeed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many actions have been brought?

Mr. Chevrier: I think I can give that figure. There are approximately ten at the moment. These actions were taken, these suits were brought, by serious and competent counsel who do not lightly lead their clients into litigation of this nature.

As to opinions, I only want to say this: When the order was first passed there was an oral opinion, and having regard to the urgency with which the matter was regarded by the then government, it is perhaps not surprising that that was so. But oral opinions are illusive things and, in point of conclusiveness, it is difficult to nail them down afterwards. I have no doubt that the government believed that, after the discussion between the Departments of Finance and Justice in the course of which the oral opinion was expressed, they were warranted in assuming the risk, or they may even have been convinced there was no risk. I have made it clear that I do not share that view but I readily concede that the government acted upon it. As to a written opinion, I can only repeat that there is absolutely nothing upon the files of the Department of Justice. I understand that the deputy minister did give the former minister of justice some material to use in debate quite some time after the order was passed. This is common practice. The nature and contents of that communication, however, in so far as I am concerned, rest between the deputy minister and the former minister of justice in the same way that I hope confidential communications between myself and the deputy minister will still rest between us, after I have left this office. I have not seen it and have not inquired into it because I would regard it as confidential and not subject to disclosure to a new administration. Whatever the communication was, it is obvious that it was confidential material prepared for the minister in a debate on a politically controversial matter and was never considered as material that should be retained upon a file.

In summation we say that, at the least, there are doubts about the validity of the order and these doubts compel that so important a matter should now be put at rest by this bill.

If I may, I should like to ask my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to move:

That in clause 1 of C-88 the word "validly" in line 9 be deleted.

Mr. Favreau: I so move.

Mr. Nowlan: Certainly the amendment which has just been moved to clause 1 will not be opposed by this side, because I have precisely the same proposal in draft form on my desk. In fact, I intended to move a similar amendment myself later this afternoon.

I suppose that since the experience of Saul of Tarsus on the road to Damascus we have not seen a greater conversion than has been evident on the part of the hon. gentleman today. We know that Saul kicked against the pricks and that he saw a great light. I am not sure whether the Minister of Justice has seen a great light or whether it was the pricks, in his case, which led to his conversion, but I agree with him that this has been a subject of acrimonious discussion and that there would be no purpose served in reviving it at this time. I must say, however, that the acrimony was not engendered from this side of the house, or rather from the side on which we then sat but, rather, that it was produced by the various members who criticized our action on that occasion.

I shall not go into the subject at great length this afternoon. As the minister has said, this action was taken at the time of an exchange crisis. The government acted with decision and authority. Undoubtedly, it acted under some degree of pressure. Whether or not there were opinions at that time, written or oral—the minister says, now, there was an oral opinion and, obviously, no government would have taken action of that kind until it had received an opinion which approved thereof—is not at this point a matter of primary concern. But since this is, I assume, the last occasion on which this matter will be discussed in the house, I will refer to a statement made by my former colleague who preceded me as minister of finance, the Hon. Donald Fleming. In referring to this matter—and the reference will be found on page 291 of Hansard of October 9, 1962—he had this to say in connection with the validity of this order:

> My first point is that we have proceeded on the advice of the law officers of the crown in the proper manner—

Mr. Knowles: Was he not minister of justice, then?

Mr. Nowlan: He was minister of justice; that is correct. Let me continue the quotation.

> —and the advice we have is that the measures which were introduced by orders in council in June, which took effect one minute after midnight on June 25, are proper and legal; that the government had full power to proceed to pass those orders in council, and that those powers so exercised were conferred upon the governor in council by parliament. There can be no question about the validity of those orders in council.

That was a statement by the then minister of justice who had been minister of finance at the time the orders were passed. During all the various questions of privilege that were raised and the discussion of the motion to produce the documents put forward by the hon. member for Essex East, now Secretary of State for External Affairs, I never heard anyone suggest that this action which was taken in the interests of Canada was not good and proper. The only questions I have heard raised are (a) whether it was done on the advice of the law officers of the crown and, (b) whether it was done under the authority of an act of parliament.

Some reference has been made, of course, to the action taken by a preceding government in 1947 and the fact that that government afterwards brought in legislation to validate the action it had taken. I suggest there is no analogy whatsoever between the action of the government in 1947 and the action which was taken by the government of which I had the honour to be a member, in connection with the so called surcharge order.

What happened in 1947 was a very crude and wrong thing from the standpoint of strict legality. One night in October a voice came on the air. Undoubtedly the voice was that of the then minister of finance, the Hon. Douglas Abbott, although there was no proof and no identification whatsoever. This voice then proceeded to say: As of midnight tonight we are increasing the excise taxes by X per cent. Bang, that was it. Without any authority of parliament the act was changed over the radio. This voice said: Taxes from here on are going to be Y per cent instead of X per cent as authorized by the statute.

That was in October. The following March a bill was brought into parliament to validate that action. I have the dates here, although I do not know that they are too important. The validating legislation was brought into the house on March 28, I believe, to validate something which had been done six months before. The bill said, of course, that these taxes were to be retroactive to the date when this voice came over the radio.

It has been argued that this is similar to a budget speech in that when the minister of finance brings in his budget he says that certain taxes are going to be imposed and they become effective as of that night. I suggest that there is no analogy whatsoever between the two situations. A budget speech is brought in on a message from His Excellency the Governor General. This is followed by the resolutions. Then there is a motion to go into supply. Finally there is a motion to go into ways and means. Very properly there are many complicated and technical mechanisms whereby parliament safeguards the right to increase taxation.

I am not suggesting that what was done in 1947 was not necessary at that time. I am not criticizing the action that was taken, but I do say it had no reference or relevance whatsoever to the action taken by the government of the present Leader of the Opposition and by the then minister of finance. We acted on the advice of the law officers of the crown, that we were proceeding in accordance with two statutes which had been passed by parliament, one, the Customs Tariff Act, and the other the Financial Administration Act.

There can be no analogy whatsoever between the action taken under those statutes and the action taken back in 1947, possibly because of an emergency. As I said, I am not questioning the advisability of that action at all. However, there is no question whatsoever of any analogy. The fact is that it was certainly necessary for parliament to validate that action because it resulted in a substantial increase in taxation over and above the rates prevailing, and there was no provision whatsoever for doing so in the taxation statutes. Obviously that action had to be validated by statute. It was done posthumously, six months later, and made retroactive to the night when the radio speech had been made.

Some misapprehension and discussion may have been caused in the present instance by the question of whether there was or was not an opinion. A motion was made by the hon. member for Essex East that the opinion, if there was an opinion, be produced. The minister and the government of that day took the position, and I am sure it is one which would be concurred in by the present Minister of Justice, that it would be improper to produce an opinion from an officer of the crown to his minister because, once you start producing such documents, the whole doctrine of confidentiality breaks down and it would be impossible for ministers to obtain the frank and confidential advice of their officers, and vice-versa.

There are precedents which have been exercised by ministers heretofore in such circumstances. I can think of at least two. When the Hon. Mr. Guthrie was minister of justice in the government of Lord Bennett, as he later was, he was asked to produce an opinion in the House of Commons. He refused to do so but he did obtain a letter from the deputy minister of justice, which he read in parliament. It was not the official opinion which he had obtained some time before but a letter which was given the minister for the purposes of parliament. There may be some argument as to what the technical difference may be between the two. In the one case the minister says that the opinion is confidential and he refuses to produce it. In the other case the minister says that parliament demands it and it is in the public interest for parliament to be informed. That is one precedent.

There is another one nearer to home so far as my hon. friends are concerned. When the right hon. Mr. Ilsley, now chief justice of Nova Scotia, was minister of justice—I might say in passing that he is a former member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings—he also produced a letter from a deputy minister advising of action which he had taken, not giving the opinion itself but giving a summary and stating the opinion of the law officer that the action was valid.

You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Essex East moved for the production of this opinion. A debate arose thereon on orders of the day, and the debate was not terminated. Before it could be, some other things happened. But the minister of justice at that time was prepared to produce for parliament a letter from the deputy minister for the information of parliament setting forth his opinion on the action which had been taken by the government of the day with respect to surcharges. I have here the opinion of the deputy minister addressed to the then minister of justice with respect to the surcharge on imports order. If the debate at that time had been continued this opinion would have been produced, and since a question has been raised whether or not an opinion was obtained from Department of Justice I want to put it on the record now for the information of parliament. It is dated November 16, 1962, is addressed to the then minister of justice and says:

> You have asked me to furnish you, for the information of parliament, with a statement of my views on the validity of the surcharge on imports order, P.C. 1962-902 of June 24, 1962.
> Section 4 of the Customs Tariff, R.S.C. 1952, chapter 60, empowers the governor in council by order to withdraw rates of customs duties more favourable than the general tariff, and to withdraw the benefit of any tariff more favourable than the general tariff. These powers are unrestricted, and the effect of their exercise is to produce an increase in tariff rates.
>
> Section 22 of the Financial Administration Act, R.S.C. 1952, chapter 116, empowers the governor in council, on the recommendation of the treasury board whenever he considers it in the public interest, to remit any tax, fee or penalty. The section defines a tax as including any tax, impost, duty or toll payable to Her Majesty, imposed or authorized to be imposed by any act of parliament and provides, inter alia, that a remission thereof pursuant to that section may be total or partial, and may be granted in any particular case or class of case and before the liability therefor arises.
> I am of the opinion that section 1 of the surcharge on imports order withdraws rates and benefits as authorized by the Customs Tariff, and that section 2 partially remits the resultant tax increases as authorized by the Financial Administration Act. In my view, therefore, the surcharge on imports order is a valid exercise of the powers conferred on the governor in council by these two statutes.

This is signed by Elmer A. Driedger, deputy attorney general, and I want to table this document at this time. So far as the record is concerned, I suggest that clears up any doubt. We are not referring now to any opinion which may have been given previously. That is not mentioned in the letter. This is a letter which was produced some time later, it is true, for the benefit of the House of Commons, and due to circumstances over which we had no great control it was not produced. I wanted to do so at this time.

I do not think there is very much more one can say at this time. I can appreciate the Minister of Justice feeling, on the advice of his officers, that this legislation will facilitate the operation of the government and the department in dealing with litigation. He says that is one reason why he brought in the bill. We are not going to debate that at this time.

I do want to state very emphatically again that in our opinion what we did was based on the statutes of the country, was authorized by parliament and was not only legal but also entirely proper in every way, shape and form and was the proper action to have taken at that time. We have no apologies and no regrets whatever to utter in that connection.

I would have moved certain amendments. I had two, as a matter of fact, which I was going to move because I thought there was an imputation in one section which was unnecessary and unwarranted. I was going to ask this committee to strike these from the record. In view of the statement made by the minister, in view of his action in taking out at least one word which was repugnant to us, the word "validly", I shall not move these amendments. If that word "validly" were allowed to stand there would be the imputation that what we did was invalid, and that certainly could not be accepted by us for a moment.

In view of this action, I do not intend to go further with the amendment. I am glad the minister has taken the position he has. I hope that this will finally clear up this matter, which has been the subject matter of some acrimony and some lengthy discussion. I hope it is clear in the record now that I have said, as my predecessor did before me, that we were acting at all times on the opinion of the law officers of the crown. I hope that the matter will be laid to rest after the passage of this section.

The Chairman: Is it my understanding that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings is filing this document with the Clerk at the table?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Can that be done while we are in committee?

Mr. Nowlan: It is on the record; I read it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there might be unanimous consent in order that it might be done, because I have some doubt about the regularity of the procedure.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, I have no desire to reactivate the acrimony that surrounded this issue in the last parliament and in the earlier part of this parliament. I hope that I succeed at least as well as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings did in not raising issues that will reactivate that acrimony. I am not so sure my hon. friend's reference to Mr. Abbott, and his reference now to the question of whether or not there was an opinion last year from the deputy minister of justice, fulfilled the hope expressed by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

Even so, Mr. Chairman, before we pass this legislation I think the house has no alternative but to face up to the fact there are a few things that should be said. I was, of course, interested in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings that in his view there is all the difference in the world between what Mr. Abbott did in 1947 and what the last Conservative government did in 1962. When he proceeded to emphasize the difference, he made quite a point of the fact that in 1947 a voice came on the air, which purported to be the voice of Mr. Abbott. The hon. member said that we had to assume it was his voice. The only comment I wish to make is that science is wonderful. Fifteen years later a voice came on the air again to tell us of certain actions, and the only difference was that in the meantime television had been invented and we not only heard the voice but we saw the face. It was the face of the then prime minister, the present Leader of the Opposition. We recognized his face and we recognized his voice. There was no doubt about it.

However, in both instances we were being advised by the then latest means of communication that the government of the day was imposing certain tax increases. I still think that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and his colleagues have a real task on their hands in trying to deal with the proposition that the taxes in 1947 were at least approved by parliament later, whereas the taxes imposed on June 24, 1962, were never approved by parliament, except in so far as they are now before us for retroactive approval.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask the hon. member if they were not approved by parliament when the statutes were passed some years before?

Mr. Knowles: That is the point I am coming to right now. I suggest that the hon. member has indulged in argument by assertion, when he said that the Customs Tariff and Financial Administration Act provided a valid base for the surcharge order in council. If he can argue by assertion, so can I. My reading of these two statutes, particularly my reading of the Financial Administration Act, leads me to believe that the government had a right under the Customs Tariff to make certain changes increasing the rates of tariff, but it had no right under the Financial Administration Act to make the kind of reduction it did, which had the net effect of simply increasing taxes.

It is for this reason the matter is before the courts. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings argues one way and I argue another. He may be a lawyer, while I am not; but I suggest to him the case has been taken before the Exchequer Court of Canada because there is a serious doubt in the minds of very eminent counsel as to the validity of the order in council. We all know how that order in council was composed. In the first place, reliance was placed on the Customs Tariff, where there is authority by order in council to increase the rates of duty by transferring goods from one class of tariff to another. Although that right is in the Customs Tariff, there is no suggestion that the government, by order in council, can arrive at any intermediate rate of tariff. You can move goods from one class to another; in fact, you can make that movement among three different categories. However, there is no suggestion that you can, by order in council, fix some other rate.

In so far as section 22 of the Financial Administration Act is concerned, surely it is quite clear that it is a provision for the remission of taxes or duties or penalties which have been unfairly collected. There is no suggestion that this is a statute that can be used as a basis for cutting down a tax imposed in some other way. Surely, the part of section 22 which requires the publishing in the public accounts of every such remission of more than $1,000 makes it clear that what was envisaged in that section was individual remissions of the kind that have been published from year to year in the public accounts.

Now, my good friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings and I could go on arguing this matter as long as we have the right to speak. I do not suppose I could convince him any more than he could convince me. However, there is doubt about the validity of the order in council, and that doubt is confirmed by the fact that the case has been taken to the exchequer court. I think it is unfortunate it has not been possible for the court to make a decision. We have had arguments about it here and in the last parliament. We differed, depending on where we were sitting in the house. I think it is unfortunate the court has not had a chance to make a decision. One of the by-products of the passage of this legislation will, I suppose, be that the case will disappear from the exchequer court list.

Another very interesting question has arisen here. It arose on August 1 when we had the matter before us. The Minister of Justice told the committee then that the opinion of the deputy minister of justice was that there was some doubt about this order and therefore this legislation should be introduced. We have had it again today. The Minister of Justice tried to play this in a very low key, and I appreciate what he is doing. Still, he told us that there was an oral opinion from the deputy minister of justice to the previous government that this order in council was valid. He told us that he has an opinion from the deputy minister of justice that there is some doubt about it, and that this piece of legislation should be introduced.

This raises some rather serious questions as to the relationship between the government of the day and the Department of Justice. Frequently in this place we are told that such and such is the opinion of justice. It begins to look as though the government of the day gets from justice the opinion it wants. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has read into the record a letter from the deputy minister of justice to the then minister of justice, and he gives it now as the authority, presumably, that the government of the day had for believing that this order in council was valid. This letter the hon. member has read to us today was dated November 16, 1962. The order in council was passed on June 24. I listened carefully to that letter, and it does not, unless I missed something, say that Mr. Driedger thought this on June 24. Mr. Driedger was giving to the then minister of justice arguments that he could use in the debate in the House of Commons. He was giving those arguments to the then minister under date of November 16, 1962.

The present Minister of Justice very suavely and very nicely today said these things should not be produced. He was not going to ask for the letters given to the previous minister, and he would not want us to ask for the tabling of his opinion to him. This seemed to soothe the tempers in the house. But the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has read into the record from a document the present Minister of Justice would not give us. This seems to me to raise a very serious question about the relationship between the government of the day and the Department of Justice, particularly the deputy minister of justice. If these opinions of justice are going to mean anything, if they are going to be valuable to us, surely we have got to get away from a situation where we get one opinion one month and another opinion a few months later.

We are getting these from precisely the same individual, the same person.

Mr. Churchill: You are going too far.

Mr. Knowles: I am not, sir. Is not the Elmer A. Driedger who said that the same Elmer A. Driedger who is deputy minister of justice today, and did he not give an opinion in the letter to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) that this order in council was valid; and has not the Minister of Justice told us the same deputy minister said there is doubt about it, and therefore that legislation should be brought in?

Mr. Churchill: Doubt in some people's minds.

Mr. Knowles: No, doubt in his mind—doubt in the mind of the same person who wrote the letter which the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings gave us a little while ago. I suggest that confidentiality between a minister and his deputy minister should be maintained, but that confidentiality has been destroyed by what has taken place today, and it raises the importance of governments asking from the deputy minister, not opinions that will support what the government happens to want to do, but opinions that are objective and valid all the way down the line.

Mr. Chairman, this underlines what I have said a great many times during various debates on this last session. How much better it would have been if the government of that day had stuck with what it often said it believed in, namely the rights and supremacy of parliament. How much better it would have been if it had brought this matter to parliament.

Parliament was not meeting in June of last year when the crisis was faced and this action taken, by what I think was an invalid order. But I believe even the last parliament, made up of minorities as it was, would have been willing to give approval to the tax changes if parliament had been given a chance to do so and had been given the arguments for them. This is another case that demonstrates the supreme importance of having respect, and holding to that respect, for the rules of the house, for the traditions of parliament, and particularly for the basic principle that the government is at all times responsible to parliament as a whole.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, it seems to us we have no alternative but to support this legislation and to vote for it. If there is doubt about the order in council, then the passing of this legislation will remove that doubt, at least in so far as the actual collecting of the taxes is concerned. The other thing to do is to leave it to the courts, and if that results in a declaration that the order in council was invalid, then those who have filed their cases in the courts would get their money back. But since they are not the ones who paid it ultimately, since those who did pay it, the consumers, are not identifiable, that would be compounding the injustice that has already developed. Because of that situation we feel we have no alternative but to support the legislation to clean up the doubts and to make sure this situation does not happen again.

In that connection I want to indicate that although the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has torn up his amendments, I still have one I intend to move when we get to clause 3. May I just say now, while we are on clause 1, that I am glad the government has put clause 3 in the bill, and that it wants to prevent this kind of thing from happening again, or at least to provide some safeguard; but I do not think the government has gone far enough.

I listened carefully to the Minister of Justice. He said one of the purposes of the bill would be that any "future like orders"—although I did not take down all of his words I took down those three—could last only for six months subject to later approval by parliament. That is not going far enough. I do not think there should be any "future like orders". I do not think in the future it should be possible to bring in an order, based in part on the Customs Tariff and in part on the Financial Administration Act, and juggle with the tax rate in the way this was done. Therefore when we come to clause 3 I will move an amendment which seeks to tighten up this legislation a bit more, so as to make sure what happened last year will not happen again.

I stress the point that here we have an example of the importance of paying attention to the letter of the law, paying attention to the principles and practices of our parliamentary democracy, and in particular paying attention to the important principle that governments should not do what they do not have authority to do, and that governments should respect at all times the supremacy and the rights of parliament.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I contemplated asking the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a question, but then I thought it might be better to wait until I said something with regard to some of his remarks and then, if he subsequently wishes to answer, that is his privilege. The hon. member has offered his criticism of this measure. Early in his remarks he said there was a difference of opinion and that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings was making an assertion. He, on his part, was similarly making an assertion, and they were poles apart and perhaps could not be reconciled.

Then he went on to deal with the situation as he sees it, and in the course of his remarks as I heard them, and I paid close attention to them, he cast a reflection on one of our senior civil servants. I have always been of the opinion that this should not be done in the House of Commons, or elsewhere for that matter, because civil servants have not the right of reply. It is all very well in the House of Commons to attack each other, but the great saving feature of the House of Commons is that we have the right of reply.

We do not have the right to reply to accusations made from some other quarters; but I think it is wholly wrong for a member of the house to cast a cloud on a civil servant, whom he named, without someone coming to the defence of that civil servant. I do so very gladly because Mr. Driedger, who has been mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a trusted servant of the crown and the opinions he gave when we were in office were opinions based on his belief and integrity—and I did not get the impression from the statement made by the Minister of Justice that Mr. Driedger gave an entirely different opinion to him.

I understood him to say there was doubt in the minds of some people, and for the removal of that doubt it might be wise to have a statute passed, such as is here before us; but I do take exception, and strong exception, to attacks on civil servants, and particularly on one who is a senior civil servant, a trusted civil servant, and who has no right of reply in this house.

I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who delights in lecturing us from time to time as to our duties and responsibilities, will recognize his duty and responsibility in this connection. I have the greatest pleasure in lecturing a member of that party that sits on the sidelines so often and tells us what to do, and how the party that is now in office is acting just as the former government acted, and that both are wholly wrong. A party which has little hope of ever forming a government spends a lot of time telling the rest of us what to do.

My hon. friend is a fellow-citizen of that great city where I claim citizenship, and I think he has made a mistake in the course of his remarks today in his anxiety to protect the country against faults, as he sees them, that have perhaps occurred in the past.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is to be commended for making sure that there are no unfair attacks on civil servants, senior or otherwise. I thoroughly agree with him. If I made any attack, I made it on governments that seek to get from the deputy minister of justice opinions that suit their purposes. It seems to me that is what we have got in this situation.

Let me read very briefly from a statement which the Minister of Justice made in the house on August 1 this year, when speaking about this matter, as recorded at page 2932 of Hansard:

> I should have added that there is doubt as to the validity of the order because in the opinion of justice it should have been approved by parliament.

That, according to the present Minister of Justice on August 1, was the opinion of the Department of Justice over which the deputy minister presides, namely that this legislation should be approved by parliament. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings today read into the record a letter dated last November 16 from the same person, the same deputy minister of justice, expressing the view that it could be supported that the legislation was based upon two statutes and therefore did not need to be approved by parliament. On one occasion the legislation did not need to be approved by parliament. On another occasion the legislation should have been approved by parliament. If that is not a case of two different governments getting from the same individual the opposite advice, I do not know what is.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, may I just say this, that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in attempting to absolve himself from an attack on a servant of the crown and the civil service, has now cast a reflection on members of parliament in saying that successive governments tried to get from a civil servant the information they desired to use for their own particular purposes. This is an accusation of dishonesty which reflects upon members of parliament.

Mr. Knowles: The only thing that needs to be said is that the best the former government could do was to produce a letter dated November 16, whereas the order in council itself was passed on June 24.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 1 as amended agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Approval by parliament.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, before clause 3 carries I should like to move an amendment. As I understand clause 3 it imposes certain limitations on the government with respect to its powers by order in council under the Customs Tariff. As the Customs Tariff now reads in section 4, the government, by order in council, can move goods among the various categories—general tariff, most favoured nation and British preferential—which result in rates going either up or down. As I read clause 3 of this bill it is proposed that from here on, when that power is exercised so as to increase rates of duty, it shall be valid for only 180 days subject to its approval by parliament. While I agree that it may be a good idea to limit that power to this extent, what concerns me is that it would still be possible under this legislation to pass the same kind of order in council which was passed on June 24, 1962, and for it to be good for six months. I do not think that kind of order should be possible.

I am supported in my belief that that is what could happen by the words the Minister of Justice used when he said that the purpose of clause 3 of the bill was to provide that any future like orders shall be limited by this restriction. I do not think there should be any future like orders. I do not think there should ever again be an order in council which relies on the Customs Tariff to raise the rates and then relies on the Financial Administration Act to reduce the rates to certain percentages. I think this can be corrected by putting another subclause into clause 3. I therefore move:

> That clause 3 of Bill C-88 be amended by substituting the word "subsections" for the word "subsection" in line 23, and by adding at the end of the clause, immediately following subsection (4), the following subsection:
> "(5) Where any order is made in accordance with the provisions of subsection (4), neither that order nor any other order shall provide for an increase in rates of customs duties and the simultaneous remitting of any portion of such duties."

In other words, this accepts the proposal in clause 3 that the right to increase duties be limited to a six-month period; but it goes one step further and says that when such duties are raised they must not at the same time be reduced to a certain extent under some other statute, as was done in the case of the order in council of June 24, 1962. The Minister of Justice said that the purpose of clause 3 was to prevent happening again what happened the last time, and I think to make sure that it does not happen such an amendment to this bill is the answer.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what is the position of the Minister of Justice with respect to this amendment. I myself have not had time to study it. Personally, I think some amendment such as was proposed in the bill brought in by the minister would be desirable. I was prepared, and I think we were prepared, to support the section which he brought forward. What attitude he will take toward this amendment is, of course, a matter for him to determine, but as I say we were prepared to support his amendment. I think it is desirable and necessary. Without going further into the matter I might suggest that the fact that under this proposed legislation of the minister he was going to limit to six months what we did, I think the best argument possible to show that what we did was valid and proper is that the amendment would now limit it to a period of 180 days, rather than indefinitely, as it was under the original act.

Mr. Chevrier: I have looked at this amendment carefully but I am afraid I shall have to take the position which I have already indicated, I believe, to my hon. friend on an earlier occasion, namely that on behalf of the government I could not accept the amendment. It seems to me that what the hon. member is trying to do, and I say this to him respectfully, is to amend this bill by an amendment which should be, or should have been, made to the Financial Administration Act. I may have misunderstood what he has proposed, but I think the purport of his amendment would be far more applicable if it were an amendment to the Financial Administration Act. I suggest this is not the place where such an amendment should be made. I do not want to go into greater detail, and if the committee feels that is necessary it can be done; but my opinion as I look at the amendment is that I would have to advise the government to resist it.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the point the minister has made in opposition to this proposed amendment is surely not a very substantial one, and I say that with the same respect that he used in referring to me a moment ago. I would point out to the minister that Bill No. C-88 is entitled:

> An act respecting an order of His Excellency the Governor in Council entitled the surcharge on imports order, and to restore certain rates of customs duties and tariff benefits expressed to be withdrawn thereby.

There is nothing in the title to Bill No. C-88 which says that there is going to be tucked into this bill an amendment to the Customs Tariff, despite the fact that citation 361 of Beauchesne says:

> In framing the title care must be taken to make it wide enough to cover all the provisions of the bill—

The minister knows that the government is now indulging in a very common practice, when it has a bill before the house, to include in that bill an amendment relating to another statute but which covers the bill with which we are now dealing. I suggest that what we are dealing with is the question of orders in council which vary rates of customs duty, and that we should provide that such orders cannot be varied by reliance on the Financial Administration Act or any other statute. I say that one of the reasons for not putting this in the Financial Administration Act is that, just as the former government found a section in the Financial Administration Act to rely on for that double-barrelled order in council, so some other government might find some other section in some other statute altogether. Therefore I suggest that the procedural point made by the Minister of Justice is hardly valid. I would be interested in whether he has any argument of substance against this proposal that we should plug the loophole and make sure that no future like orders are possible at all.

Mr. Chevrier: I think I made it clear in my first statement that I did not want to get into an argument with my hon. friends opposite or with my hon. friends in the corner, and I am certainly not going to start discussing the legality of the amendment. If I were to do that, then I would say exactly what I think should not be done under the circumstances. It seems to me that what we have here is a bill wherein there is doubt, about which I have been advised there is doubt, and about which I am convinced myself there is doubt. For that reason the bill is before the committee. I have a great deal of sympathy for what the hon. member has said and for the manner in which he would like to have the difficulty removed. But none the less I regret to tell him that I have to advise my colleagues that I must, under the circumstances, resist the amendment.

Amendment, (Mr. Knowles) negatived: Yeas 12; nays 90.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clause 3 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Olson: We have not had a great deal to say about Bill C-88 during the committee stage because we believe it is necessary for the purpose of validating certain actions which were taken by the government on June 24, 1962. The reason for our attitude, is, of course, that there is no possibility, now, of refunding any of the taxes collected to the people who ultimately paid them when they bought the goods which the surcharges involved.

However, a number of things have been said by members on both sides of this house, in this chamber and in other places in Canada, with which we simply do not agree.

[Mr. Knowles.]

We heard the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings say there was no difficulty in June respecting their interpretation of whether the surcharges were legal or not. We have heard, too, the Leader of the Opposition say, perhaps inside this house, but certainly outside, that he knew of no crisis in international exchange affairs until after June 18, 1962. I want to say that either this statement is not true or the right hon. gentleman was derelict in his duty. If he did not know there was a crisis in international exchange prior to June 18, then he certainly did not know what was going on in the economy of Canada. I wish to say that we think the action which was taken on June 24 in imposing these surcharges was taken too late. We also believe that this action was delayed until that date for reasons which were not in the best interest of the people of Canada. They may have been in the best interest of the Conservative party which was involved in an election, but certainly it was not for the good of the people of Canada that the government should have allowed our reserves to fall to such a dangerously low level before action was taken to halt the drain.

We have an obligation to validate these measures now, so that there may not be a possibility of some of the persons first charged with the payment of the tax receiving a windfall by way of refund, but we do not accept the argument that there was no crisis apparent until after the date of the election.

The Chairman: I did not want to interrupt the hon. member in his remarks but perhaps I should say as a matter of record that the question "Shall the bill carry?" is not debatable under standing order 32. However, the remarks have now been made and I would ask the committee again if the bill shall carry.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? Now?

Mr. Gordon moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Nowlan: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed from Friday, November 1, consideration in committee of Bill C-95 to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 16—Exemption of income from manufacturing or processing business in designated areas.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Last Friday afternoon we spoke on this clause and we brought forward an amendment as follows:

That section 71A (1) (b) be amended by adding: "except that the provisions of this section shall apply only where the municipality in which such taxpayer carries on business has requested the benefit hereof, and that municipalities receiving such benefits must not be closer to each other than 100 miles".

This amendment was the result of a concerted effort by a number of members on this side to remove the injustice which is rampant as a result of the indiscriminate naming of these designated areas. We believe the federal government should not usurp the authority vested in the provincial and municipal authorities. In other words, the provinces and the municipalities are the ones who best know the needs of local areas. The provincial government, on the advice of the municipalities, best knows whether and where a stimulant should be administered to these corporate bodies. We wish to get legislation which would spread out the benefits flowing to these areas and which would not work to the detriment of other areas in the region, so we proposed there should be a distance of 100 miles between any areas which might be designated. However, after careful perusal and consideration of the words in the proposed amendment appearing after the word "hereof", we find our suggestion is not as workable as we formerly believed it was. Therefore, with the permission of my seconder, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, and with the unanimous consent of the committee, I ask permission to withdraw this amendment. I may say we intend to replace it with another which I am sure will be acceptable to all hon. members.

The Chairman: Is the committee willing to consent to the withdrawal of this proposed amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. Hales: Since the committee has given unanimous consent to the withdrawal of this amendment, I should like to present another on similar lines. But before reading the amendment I should like to bring to the attention of the committee as forcefully as I can the great danger, the pitfalls, the discrimination involved, and the impracticability of applying this piece of legislation in all parts of Canada.

This legislation is another example of 60 days of hasty decision. We find ourselves being asked to pass clause 16 of this legislation and I think we should pause and be very careful before we pass it. I would ask the other parties to my left in the house to join with us in supporting the amendment which I propose to put before the house.

The list of designated areas was established by order in council. I wish that the minister without portfolio, who comes from Brantford, had asked one question of his cabinet colleagues at that time. If he had done so we would not now find ourselves faced with this problem which affects not only my area but the area of the hon. member for Renfrew North and other areas in Canada. If he had only asked the question, "how will this affect communities in the surrounding area", before the order in council was passed we would not find ourselves confronted with the problem that exists in the industrial area which includes Galt, Kitchener, Hespeler, Preston and Guelph.

This is a piece of legislation, Mr. Chairman, that will not work in a practical way. It was brought before the house by those academic thinkers on the treasury benches who had no conception of its practical application. I have taken the time of the house before to bring various points to the attention of the house to show that the legislation is not workable. I will simply list them now. First of all, it is discriminatory. The Minister of Industry says: Yes, it is discriminatory; that is what we want it to be. The hon. member for Northumberland says: Yes, it is discriminatory; that is what we want. That may be all right in certain areas but you cannot have discrimination where there are adjacent cities.

Another point I brought to the attention of the house was the criterion by which these places were designated. The criterion used is not a practical one. It is an academic criterion. The six summer months have been taken and this does not give a fair assessment. I have given the reasons why in former speeches. If you are going to use unemployment figures you should take the whole 12 months of the year. This makes it practical and possible for all communities in Canada to qualify, and does not discriminate against those with high summer employment or low winter employment.

The third point I mentioned before was that the legislation encroaches upon provincial and municipal autonomy, something that we must guard against very zealously. The fourth point which I mentioned before was that it is contradictory. We have the Minister of Finance asking us in Bill No. C-95 to pass legislation that will impose a penalty on American subsidiaries in Canada. On the other hand, we have his counterpart, the Minister of Industry, offering $400,000 on a silver platter to an American firm to locate in Canada. This is the situation. They are at cross-purposes. The legislation is contradictory.

The fifth point I mentioned was that the legislation was not being accepted by industrialists generally. This legislation has been dreamed up on the basis of academic thinking and I for one should like to see practical legislation.

What has the press throughout the country had to say about this matter? Surely we can place some importance on what the press has had to say. The latest comment brought to my attention is found on the first page of the Canada section of Time magazine of November 8. Under the main heading "The Realm" there is the subheading, "Depressed? Who, Us?" There is a picture of the main street of this thriving city of Brantford. The article reads in part as follows:

> At one end of town, a $750,000 motel is going up opposite a spanking new shopping plaza; at the other, a $1.5 million General Hospital residence and nursing school. Fortnight ago, in fact, Brantford became Canada's first city to go over the top in its united appeal campaign.

The whole article is worth reading for those on the government side. Here is a full page from the Kitchener-Waterloo Record. There are pictures of the Brantford employment office with no one in it, park benches with no one sitting on them and the busy main street, in fact, a town hustling and bustling with trade. I have here an article from the Globe and Mail of November 2 last which shows average earnings for Guelph of $4,232 and average earnings for Brantford of $4,215, a difference of only $17 per capita between the two cities. Yet Brantford is designated as a depressed area and the surrounding cities, particularly Guelph, are not.

Here is another heading in the Guelph Mercury: "Don't Need Extra Help". The reference is to a statement by the mayor of Kelowna. Here is an editorial that appeared in the Guelph Mercury of October 24 last headed, "Who Wants to be Depressed?" There is an interesting paragraph which reads as follows:

> Industry minister Drury has got a tiger by the tail in this issue, and he may end up wishing that he had let the normal laws of supply and demand attract new industries to areas where they are best suited.

Again I say that the practical application of the law of supply and demand would have been much better than the application of academic thinking such as we find in this legislation. And so I could go on. Other protests and articles have been written. Here is one from the Guelph Mercury of October 16 last headed, "Wants 'March' on Ottawa", which reads in part as follows:

> Alderman Donald Snider of Waterloo Tuesday suggested a march on Ottawa to protest federal plans for legislation giving special tax concessions to 11 areas and 115 municipalities in Ontario to the detriment of other areas. A "freedom train"—

Here is a headline from the Globe and Mail of October 9 last: "New Hamburg to Join Protest to Ottawa". These are but some of the newspaper articles that have appeared from time to time about this very unsatisfactory academic, theoretical piece of legislation that we are being asked to pass in the house this afternoon.

Before I conclude by moving an amendment to clause 16 I respectfully solicit the support of the parties to my left. I know that some of their members have the same problem in their areas. I would ask members on the government side to let their conscience be their guide with regard to this legislation. Very few of them have risen in their places to defend it. Why? Because they know it is wrong. That is why they have not stood up to defend it. Now here is a chance for them to support the amendment which I propose to put before the house.

The Prime Minister, in replying to a letter from the Guelph chamber of commerce, had this to say:

> The difficulty is to apply this principle fairly.

Even the Prime Minister knows there will be difficulty in applying this fairly.

> I am sure you will understand that any definition is bound to produce some difficult, borderline cases. It certainly was not and is not the government's wish to discriminate against a new industrial development in Guelph.

Inasmuch as the Prime Minister has said in his letter that it is not the wish of the government to discriminate, I ask for the support of this amendment by members on the government side. The amendment is along the lines that as members of parliament we should respect the rights of the municipalities and the provinces. We should respect the autonomy of these areas. This is what the amendment is based on—respect for the autonomy of these municipalities.

I mentioned earlier that not long ago the provincial government passed legislation prohibiting municipalities from outbidding one another in order to attract industries to their municipalities. Here we have the senior government stepping over the provincial government, ignoring them completely and saying to Brantford in this instance: You are a designated area. I do not know whether the Minister without Portfolio from Brantford was present, but he is a member of the cabinet and I wish he had asked his colleagues this one question: If we designate Brantford, what will the surrounding communities think about this legislation. If he had done so we would not find ourselves in this position today. So, Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack):

That paragraph 71A, subsection 1 (b) is amended by adding:

"except that the provisions of this section shall apply only where the municipality in which such taxpayer carries on business has requested the benefit hereof".

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to thank the hon. member, if he included me—and I am not sure he did, although perhaps I am entitled to think he might have— in his reference to the academic thinkers on this side of the house. I have spent a fairly strenuous life, and all the while have been charged with being one of the practical people of this world. In the past, a lot of people have said it would have been better if I had spent more time in school. I thank the hon. member for the promotion.

Now, a lot has been said about this particular clause. I do not think anything is to be gained by a rehash of the arguments pro and con on the subject of trying to assist slow economic growth areas and trying to provide additional employment. As I have said, there are those who think these matters should be left to the ordinary forces of supply and demand. There are others, and they include most of the people in Europe, who think it is the duty and responsibility of the government to do something about areas of slow growth by trying to provide opportunities for the people living in those areas.

Then there is the argument, and I think this is perhaps the argument that the hon. member has concentrated upon, concerning the criteria that should be used in establishing these areas. It is significant, however, that in the amendment he has included a provision that a designated area would not be eligible for this assistance unless it were forced to come to the government, hat in hand, asking that this be done. I do not know, but I suppose you could make some kind of argument along this line. However, I suggest to the hon. member and to other members of this committee, that if we accept the principle that the federal government has a responsibility for trying to provide additional employment in areas of slow growth and relatively high unemployment, then the government should act accordingly.

Now, the criteria for the selection of areas have been based on the employment and unemployment record for summer months rather than the annual average in order to avoid undue emphasis on winter unemployment in areas where the main problem is of a seasonal character. Under the established criteria, a national employment service area qualifies as a designated area provided:

(a) It has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one half or more of the summer months, May to October, during the past eight years; and it has experienced an employment increase of less than one half the national average over the same period; or

(b) It has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one third or more of the summer months, May to October, during the past eight years; and it has experienced an employment decrease over the same period; or

(c) It has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one half or more of the summer months, May to October, during the past three years; and it has experienced an employment decrease in each one of the past three years.

(d) However, an area shall not be designated if the average monthly national employment service registration for the three months of May, June and July, expressed as a percentage of the total number of paid workers in the area,

(i) Is less in the current year than in the preceding year and less in the preceding year than in the year preceding that year, and

(ii) Is less in the current year than in the year preceding the preceding year by at least 45 per cent; and the area would not, if the three months of May, June and July in the current year were considered to be a single month, have been classified by the Department of Labour as a substantial labour surplus area for that month.

Provision is made for flexibility—and I do not believe enough has been said about this —in extending boundaries of designated areas and for adding new national employment service areas to the list of designated areas as soon as they fulfil the criteria of eligibility. All national employment service areas will be reviewed annually by the Department of Labour, and those new areas which qualify, along with those areas which no longer qualify, will be announced by that department.

The Minister of Industry, Mr. Chairman, has stated that the government intends to apply the various programs of assistance to industry in the designated areas as soon as possible. The area development agency will co-ordinate these activities for the government of Canada. Through the co-operative efforts of government and industry, economic activity will be stimulated in areas that have experienced slow growth and heavy unemployment for a long time. The Minister of industry has stated that if this formula is found not to work in practice or to be susceptible of improvement, then he will be the first to recommend this improvement.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, to hon. members of the committee that the thing we should try to do now is get on with this particular measure for improving the rate of growth in certain areas of Canada and for providing more jobs in those areas, without further delay. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I must say to the hon. member, on behalf of the members on this side of the house, we will be unable to accept his amendment.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I want to make my remarks on this point very brief because the amendment that has been made would suggest to us further that, if only we had a government financial policy in Canada that was directed to our economic responsibility everywhere as it should be, we would not be talking about depressed areas and granting them special tax concessions. This clause with which we are dealing specifically is to provide a 36-month exemption from tax for new manufacturing or processing businesses being established in designated areas. The problem that is dealt with in this amendment is how the area shall be selected or designated as a depressed or needy area.

I am somewhat disappointed that the Minister of Finance has seen fit to reject this amendment, because I think it is aimed at a very fundamental problem of which we who are in the legislative business ought to be continually mindful. The clause provides that the Minister of Industry can designate an area. We have here more discretionary powers being put into the hands of government. It seems to me that government should want to have the advice and full co-operation of the communities with which they are concerned. The only way in which this can be accomplished is to take those communities into the confidence of the government.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if the hon. member would allow me to ask him a question? The areas as defined are not confined to municipal boundaries, and I am just curious, since I gather he is supporting this amendment, to know how he thinks it would work in practice when it is intended to help areas that are not restricted to any particular municipal boundary limits?

Mr. Thompson: I am quite aware of that. It was for this reason I was careful to use the word "communities", because in "communities" you might have several municipal or local governments. Certainly, you have the provincial government to which these local governments are responsible. How much more effective it would be if these governments were consulted, if they were allowed to express their opinions on this.

I am in favour of this amendment for two reasons, and one is that the consultation aspect of government must be continually protected and preserved. It is only in this way we can get the full co-operation not only of local governments but also of people in industries and commercial enterprises in these communities. This applies even to the provincial governments because, after all, our municipalities are responsible to them.

From the second standpoint what I am particularly concerned about is that this bill is placing more discretionary powers in the hands of a central government, and this is the very thing we should be most concerned about as governments get larger and larger.

I would like to ask another question concerning something not touched by the amendment, but which is in a section preceding the amendment. Paragraph (a) states:

> —occurring wholly within the 36 months period that commenced on the day certified as the day on which the business commenced manufacturing or processing in reasonable commercial quantities;

Just what would a "reasonable commercial quantity" be? It seems to me that paragraph (a) is very general and ambiguous, while the other is just the opposite, in that it is placing authority back into the hands of the minister. I regret that the minister has taken the attitude he has just expressed because this is a very vital point, even though it is a minor one.

Mr. Winkler: I shall intervene only for a few minutes to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Wellington South. The basic idea of this legislation is, of course, to assist generally in the areas outlined by the government, but a very worthy point has been mentioned by the hon. member for Red Deer regarding the discretionary power of the Minister of Finance in determining who shall be eligible. To me this sounds like a peculiar way of approaching the question of how the areas are going to be designated.

Early this year, last year and the year before, one would have thought, listening to the minister's colleagues, that the whole of Canada was depressed; but now, as I said last week, we narrow it down to Liberal ridings. It seems, particularly with regard to the area that has been designated in Ontario, and which has caused a controversy, there must have been some particular pressure within the cabinet to designate that area. In fact it looks like a little bit of empire building around that particular city.

It only became evident to me after I had an opportunity of reading Hansard of last week, when we were discussing this particular item, why this particular area should have this preference, when Brantford and every other city in the province of Ontario is enjoying prosperity as a result of the action we took when in office. There is no question about that.

Today we dealt with the surcharges and disposed of that particular measure. Some hon. members might think this is irrelevant, but I want to bring it to the attention of the committee to show that this particular method of dealing with the matter, such as the minister has proposed in the bill, is wrong, and that the hon. member for Wellington South might have the right idea here. At least it would be done on the basis of something that can be considered by an area which is anxious to take advantage of this legislation.

The surcharges, be they good, bad or indifferent, legal or illegal, were introduced and contributed immeasurably to the prosperity we are enjoying today. In fact I recall reading a letter in this chamber from a manufacturer making that very point, that they contributed to our prosperity, and therefore the government does not have to bring forward measures such as this to pinpoint certain areas and be discriminatory, as was stated by the minister's parliamentary secretary.

If all the municipalities in the Dominion of Canada are to have an advantage, surely it should be stated that way, and surely when an industry expands, and makes a contribution where unemployment has been a big factor, it should be for the benefit of the entire country and not limited to some place which the Minister of Finance says needs this assistance. That is not the philosophical thinking of the people on this side of the house. We think everybody should have the advantage and that that is the only fair way of dealing with the situation.

To conclude my brief remarks I say that if the minister really and truly wants to do something for the benefit of all the people of Canada and all the industries in Canada, he will remove the ridiculous sales tax imposition which is going to obstruct the expansion of industry. He might also do something about transportation so that areas, such as the area in which I live, can take advantage of it to attract industry.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Winkler: If someone else wants the floor, then if he stands up he might have it. Who is doing the talking?

If the minister would do something of this nature that would affect all industries equally he would be contributing to the expansion of industry in all municipalities. We in my particular area would like to take advantage of this, but we are experiencing the boom that the Conservative government instituted early in 1962. If the amendment presented by the hon. member for Wellington South were accepted, then I am sure representatives of the municipalities in my constituency would come down here and point out that they can use it to their advantage, and therefore to the advantage of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, the matter of provincial autonomy was put forward, so to speak, when this amendment was introduced. After considering the amendment, I feel that it actually goes against the principles of provincial autonomy as we understand it. Municipalities spring from the provinces. If the federal government is to be allowed to deal directly with the municipalities, to override provincial governments, the central government will be inclined more and more to follow that course. It is precisely to that principle that we object.

On the other hand, if the hon. member who introduced this amendment would replace the word "municipality" by the word "province", then the amendment would be not only acceptable, but desirable. It would follow that the federal government would no longer have to deal with the municipalities but only with certain provincial governments. That would relieve the federal government of extra work, difficulties and problems. They would negotiate only with ten provincial governments, or at least with those interested, the province of Quebec being one of them. But the federal government is asked in this amendment to negotiate with every municipality.

Now, take my own riding, for instance, which is one of the designated areas—and my thanks to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), to the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) and to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) for having had the good idea of including the constituency of Lapointe among the designated areas. I say to those hon. ministers that they should have thought of that a long time ago, because in the constituency of Lapointe, the unemployed, the small industry and farmers have been in dire straits for quite some time.

Mr. Rouleau: That is because they have a bad member of parliament.

Mr. Boulanger: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be very easy to refute the charge just made by the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) and the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), for if our ridings are going through a period of distress, depression and unemployment, it is not the fault of the members of the opposition, who have not even got their say in that, but the fault of the members of the party in office who have always refused to open their eyes and use their brains in order to accept the suggestions we have made to them in the past. It is because they turned a deaf ear to all our suggestions that they find themselves today without any solution to the problems facing us. Let the hon. member for Dollard and the hon. member for Mercier use their intelligence and stop being dense like all government members, and let them accept the solutions we are suggesting. They will realize then that the hon. member for Lapointe has the proper answers likely to solve the unemployment problem.

Mr. Rouleau: You never settled anything.

Mr. Gregoire: The hon. member for Dollard refuses to consider this solution with an open mind, like all other present government members and those of previous governments. That is why the appropriate solutions could never be found.

Mr. Chairman, there are other remarks I wanted to make to the Minister of Finance regarding this bill, namely this one which is worth considering, because I believe that the experts of the Department of Finance have succeeded in doing something that nobody could ever bring off in the whole world. I am referring to a sentence that I find in the French version of Bill No. C-95.

In fact, it begins at the bottom of page 14, and it continues on page 15 to end at the top of page 16; just one sentence with one semicolon only.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that it takes genius and these people must be outstanding to be able to compose one sentence extending nearly a page and a half.

Mr. Gordon: Not guilty.

Mr. Gregoire: I shall point out to the minister that really he could have experts with a different inclination, that is to make that piece of legislation clearer, less ambiguous and more concise.

It is true that there is a semicolon after the first 32 lines, but the period comes only after the next 30 lines, which means a sentence of 62 lines.

I noticed that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) was sitting next to the Minister of Finance a while ago, and seemed to be giving him advice. I have no doubt about the intellectual capacity of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, because I have always respected his talent for literature.

I notice also the presence of the Minister without Portfolio and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne), who was a university professor.

I notice also the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), who is also a university graduate.

They are all good French Canadians who must strain their ingenuity, now and then in order to give the French language its inherent pungency and zest. And when I notice sentences like the one just mentioned which make up a page and a half, I am convinced that these three ministers will approve what I say.

I should have mentioned also the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis), but I will inquire about his linguistic qualifications and then I will be able to quote him once in a while.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: At any rate, I submit that my remarks are in order, because when mentioning that clause, I am pointing out its defective terminology and punctuation or, rather, the inexact idea intimated therein, because it is impossible to express any idea clearly in a sentence a page and a half long.

I would also like to bring another point to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Everybody mentioned the designated areas which need help.

I had the opportunity of meeting some commission members, businessmen and municipal councillors in my riding, and to discuss matters with aldermen, mayors and reeves. Having done so, I realize that it is alright to exempt new industries from taxation, but in order to help administer the act appropriately the officials of the department of finance, or labour, and more particularly those in the employment office should be at the disposal of city councils, industrial commissions and municipalities, when they want advice, statistics and data, and all information required to help attract new industries to the various designated areas.

I think the employees of the various employment offices throughout the country, should be asked to supply our municipalities and industrial commissions with all statistical data that would help determine which industries might more particularly benefit by settling in one designated area rather than another. Then, being administered in practical way the law would become more efficient and benefit the designated areas to a greater extent.

That is why I would suggest to the Minister of Labour that he ask all his officials in employment and unemployment insurance offices to help, and co-operate with, as much as possible, municipal councils and industrial commissions in order to give them the required information and statistics for the establishment of new industries in those various places called designated areas.

With respect to section 16, I should like to point out to the minister—and the Minister of Finance must be aware of that, since he was for several years an outstanding accountant working for an equally outstanding firm—that any company entering into business does not, in the first 12 months, or in many case in the first 24 months, and even in the first 36 months, make any profits and, therefore, would not benefit from a tax abatement.

I daresay to the minister that a new industry will show a deficit.

Then, those new industries coming into operation in the designated areas will suffer a loss, an operation deficit, and consequently they will not have to pay taxes. If that situation comes about for any normal industry, the same thing will affect an industry starting its operations, its marketing and its production in the designated areas.

So, the tax exemption granted to new industries for a three year period will not be beneficial to them if it is limited to three years. In certain cases, it will be six months, or a year, or even two years.

For those reasons, I am asking the Minister of Finance if he could not change a provision of the bill so that it would read as follows: for the first three years during which an industry would be paying taxes if it were taxable, that is if it showed operation surpluses subject to tax payments.

Then, there would be a true three year tax exemption benefit, while under the present legislation, an industry does not benefit from it for three years but for much shorter period if it happens that a new industry does not make any profits for the first two, three or even the first four years.

The Deputy Chairman: I see it is six o'clock. In any case—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I see that the hon. members are in a hurry to vote. I am prepared to agree to their request, because on the same section, another member of our group will move an amendment. Then, I shall have the opportunity to give more advice to the Minister of Finance and I hope it will be followed.

The members who a few minutes ago blamed us for having depressed areas in our ridings suffer from a lack of intelligence, and I would suggest that they listen to the speeches dealing with unemployment in our constituencies.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Lapointe did a very successful job in talking out the very worth while amendment put in by the hon. member for Wellington South. I see it is now six o'clock. Shall I proceed with my remarks, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the house would give unanimous consent to revert to motions purely for the purpose of substituting somebody on a committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Walker: I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret):

That the name of Mr. Olson be substituted for that of Mr. Girouard on the standing committee on privileges and elections.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on that motion.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that on the privileges and elections committee we, of the Ralliement Creditistes, have only one representative, while the group of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) has two. The same thing prevails in every one of the special or standing committees of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must bring to the attention of the hon. member that the motion moved by the hon. member is not open to debate.

I am sorry; I have just been told that the motion is open to debate, but only on changes brought about in particular circumstances.

Mr. Gregoire: That is precisely what I have in mind; I am dealing with such changes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, it is precisely on the point we have just referred to and which directly concerns the change that I should like to propose an amendment to the motion.

I have made my preliminary statement and I feel the arguments I am using are permissible in the course of the debate on the motion.

As I was saying, the membership of the standing and special committees of the house is not fairly divided among each party, especially as far as the Ralliement Creditistes is concerned. For instance, on the defence committee—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In my opinion, the hon. member is wandering quite a bit from the subject of the motion now before us, and if I may read it in English—

[Text]

That the name of Mr. Olson be substituted for that of Mr. Girouard on the standing committee on privileges and elections.

That is the only thing which can be discussed by the hon. member because that is the only motion before the house at the moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: That is precisely what I wish to discuss, and to come to the point, in view of the poor distribution—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must point out to the hon. member that his remarks are not relevant to the motion before the house.

Perhaps, he could wait for another opportunity to make them.

[Text]

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nowlan: May I inquire from the Secretary of State what the business of the house will be for tomorrow, and also for Friday as well.

Mr. Pickersgill: Tomorrow we will continue with the committee stage, and I hope also the third reading of the bill under consideration a few minutes ago, the income tax bill. Under the agreement I mentioned last night, when it is completed we will take, up until five o'clock, the motion in the name of my hon. friend the Solicitor General, which everyone is anxious to reach. If that is completed I should like to call second reading of the Northwest Territories Act once more.

Mr. Nowlan: Will the same order be followed on Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

It being five minutes past six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 7, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a communication has been received which is as follows:

7th November, 1963

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 7th of November, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

PRIVILEGE

MR. ASSELIN, NOTRE DAME DE GRACE—ALLEGED THREAT OF PERSONAL ATTACKS IN HOUSE

Mr. Edmund Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to bring to the attention of the house a question of privilege affecting the independence of my position as a member of parliament. I think you and the house should be immediately advised that it has been suggested that I use my influence as a member of the house in a most improper way, and that I have been threatened that failure to do so would bring reprisals by way of personal attacks against me in the house.

I have to advise that I was approached yesterday evening in connection with certain questions which have been raised in the house during recent days affecting my personal position. A highly respected member of the press gallery, Mr. W. A. Wilson, chief of the Montreal Star parliamentary press bureau, advised me that he had been requested by Mr. Pascal Hayes, the Progressive Conservative candidate in the Montreal Notre Dame de Grace riding in the April 8 federal election, and presently employed I am advised in the office of the Leader of the Opposition, to convey to me the following message. Mr. Hayes indicated that if I would undertake to have quashed a conviction for common assault which is now outstanding against him and which is presently under appeal in the Quebec courts, he would cause certain members of the opposition to cease making any further personal attacks or imputations against me in this house, and that there would be no further attacks from the Progressive Conservative party in this house. If I failed to take this action, I was given to understand that these attacks would be continued and that other Progressive Conservative members would be organized to take part. I was advised also that the Conservative members of the banking and commerce committee would walk out of the meeting tomorrow morning.

With respect to Mr. Hayes' conviction, I was advised to use any means possible to have the charge dropped or withdrawn or the conviction quashed, so as to leave his record completely clean. It was further suggested particularly that I should arrange for a key witness in the prosecution to say that it was not Mr. Hayes who had struck her but, in fact, was a certain Mr. Cameron who also was implicated in the case, who gave testimony at the original trial, and who was one of Mr. Hayes' election organizers. It was stated that I should see that Mr. Hayes came out of the case "clean".

As you can readily recognize, this involves a very serious question with possible far reaching effects. I considered it to be my duty as a member of this house and a citizen of this country to lay this matter before you and this house at the very first opportunity.

Mr. Bell: Tell us Bermuda.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I simply rise to say that if I heard the hon. member correctly he made an allegation that one Mr. Pascal Hayes was employed in my office. Let me make it very clear that he is not, under any circumstances. His wife is a secretary in my office. Beyond that I know nothing of this matter, and I want to make it quite clear that the person in question referred to by the hon. member has no connection, directly or indirectly, with my office.

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): If I have misinformed the house on this matter—

Some hon. Members: Yes, yes.

Question of Privilege

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): —then I should like to withdraw that part of my remarks relating to the fact that Mr. Pascal Hayes was employed in the office of the Leader of the Opposition. I am sorry if I have caused the Leader of the Opposition any embarrassment in this particular instance. However, I must state that I am bound to take his word for this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): —and I withdraw that part of it.

Mr. Speaker: I think the point has been made clear.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on this point of privilege, should there not be some ruling or understanding as to whether it is a point of privilege to raise in this house something which is obviously only hearsay? We are told a person outside the house has told the hon. member certain things, but he has produced no evidence. I am not trying to get into the argument, but I raise the question whether it is a point of privilege to recite in the house things which are obviously hearsay.

Mr. Starr: Probably the whole thing is false.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the banking and commerce committee I have no intention of walking out on my duties in that committee, and I have not heard of any intention on the part of any member of this party to walk out on those duties.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The point taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a proper one. It is my duty to see if there is a prima facie case of privilege, and I do not see any prima facie case of privilege here.

MR. GREGOIRE—METHOD OF SALUTATION IN LISTS OF CONSULTANTS

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I rise on a question of privilege concerning relations between members of parliament and officers of certain government departments. Having consulted the lists which the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) tabled in the house yesterday, after he obtained unanimous consent to do so, I find that, according to the first one, that is the list prepared under the former Conservative regime, in letters addressed to me the salutation "Cher M. Grégoire" and the pronoun "vous" were to be used.

Then, according to the second list, this was changed to: "Mon cher Grégoire" and "tu".

I should like to know what changes could have brought about that loss of good manners between the party in office and the member for Lapointe.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have no hesitation in saying there is no point of privilege in this statement. There may be a complaint, but no point of privilege.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STANDING ORDERS—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (St. Ann) presented the second report of the standing committee on standing orders, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Twelfth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Wahn.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—U.S. ACTION RESPECTING ECONOMIC CREDITS TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to have addressed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his absence the Minister of Justice might answer it. Has the government of the United States made representations to the government of Canada as well as to other nations in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization with a view to securing an agreement among those nations to refuse long term economic credits to the Soviet union? What has taken place in this connection, and what is the attitude of the Canadian government to the suggestion?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): I am afraid I shall have to take that question as notice and bring it to the attention of my colleague.

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO SITUATION OF ARRESTED CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I had intended to direct a question to the minister of external affairs but perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could answer it instead. A great number of Canadians, not to mention the families of Lippert and Milne, the two men arrested by the Cuban government, are most concerned as to the well being and safety of these two men. Could any word be given to this house and to the families concerned regarding the present state of affairs surrounding their detention? Their situation has apparently dropped from sight.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): I did have a word with my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs in connection with this matter, and he informed me that our representatives in Cuba are in touch with these people and doing everything they can to assist them. Beyond that, and in the absence of my colleague, I am afraid that at the present time I can go no further.

Mr. Thompson: Does that answer refer to a current conversation or did it take place previously, at a time when the men were first arrested?

Mr. Chevrier: This was since my hon. friend made his statement in the house.

BERLIN—CONSULTATION WITH U.S. RESPECTING RECENT INCIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I wanted to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Have Canadian authorities been taken into consultation by United States authorities in respect of what appears today to be an unfortunate resumption of brinkmanship on the Berlin-Soviet autobahn?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I will have to draw that question to the attention of my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

STEPS TO IMPROVE U.S.-CANADIAN RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. The Prime Minister made an important speech in the United States in which he said Canada as a nation should endeavour to get along with the United States. Since there has been a deterioration in relations since the Hyannis Port conference, what steps are going to be taken by the Canadian government in an endeavour to get along with the United States?

Mr. Speaker: The question is out of order because it is a statement, not a question.

Mr. Woolliams: My question briefly is this—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If you are questioning the ruling I still think you are out of order, but if it is another question go ahead.

Mr. Woolliams: My question was at the end, and I may have been interrupted and not heard. What steps is the Canadian government going to take in order to improve our relations with the United States, which have deteriorated?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the question should still be dry cleaned.

SUGAR

INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT RESPECTING PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the hon. gentleman said he intended to make a statement on the price of sugar in Canada, particularly with reference to the high price in Canada as compared with the relatively low price in the United States. I wonder whether the minister would consider making his statement at a time when there could be a full scale debate on this question, rather than merely making it on motions which would not provide any opportunity for debate.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I did not say, if I recollect correctly, that I would be the one who would make the statement. I have spoken to my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I think he will make the statement. I shall bring the suggestion made by the hon. member to the minister's attention when he returns to Ottawa.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RAYMOND RODGERS—INVITATIONS TO ATTEND MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections. My question is based on a report that the chairman of the press gallery association, Mr. Connolley, was invited to attend a meeting of the committee held this morning. Was a similar courtesy extended to the other party concerned with the question of admission to the press gallery?

Mr. Alexis Caron (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): They were both told we had a meeting this morning. The meeting was adjourned to the 25th.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections. In view of the fact that I have in my hand a note signed by Mr. R. S. Rodgers stating that he was not informed of the committee meeting, would the chairman of the committee inform me if he misunderstood the person to whom I was referring?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I have been told since that the only one seen was Mr. Connolley, and as he was requesting an extension to the 25th he had not seen the other parties because the meeting would be on the 25th.

Mr. Herridge: The first answer was incorrect?

Mr. Caron: I made a mistake.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio.

Could he tell us whether he is the one who asked his colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) to set up a marine industry in Causapscal, situated 50 miles from the St. Lawrence?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, there is no official in the Department of Transport by the name of Holden.

[Text]

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

EVALUATION OF PLANES UNDER CONSIDERATION FOR PURCHASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport why Trans-Canada Air Lines has not sent an evaluation team to Sud Aviation to investigate the possibilities of the Caravelle, as it did with regard to the BAC-111 and the Douglas DC-9?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice, but in taking it as notice I do not want that to be taken as an admission that the assertions made by the hon. member are correct, because I believe they are not correct.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice who is Acting Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to surrender to the ultimatum given by the Quebec government to have T.C.A. choose the Caravelle instead of the American DC-9 to provide work for T.C.A.?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the government has received no ultimatum in that connection. The newspaper that the hon. member is waving is no evidence. However, I might add after the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith), that the question will be given serious consideration.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has he received any recommendations from the government of the province of Quebec concerning the choice of a carrier for T.C.A.? Is he in a position now to tell the house what the decision of the government is in regard to the choice between the DC-9 and the Caravelle?

Mr. McIlraith: As I said in the house in answer to a question a few days ago, Trans-Canada Air Lines have made a technical evaluation and report of the plane they propose to buy, and an evaluation of all the planes considered. This involves several planes, as well as the two named by the hon. member. The subject matter of this report has not yet been considered by the government. When it is, and a decision is announced by T.C.A., I shall be glad to advise the house exactly what is being done.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Minister of Transport let us know before a decision is taken what kind of plane T.C.A. is going to buy? If the minister will allow me, I should like to ask what the intention of the department is—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Valade: I am asking a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are making a speech.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. gentleman knows that in order to maintain order in this house, an hon. member should resume his seat as soon as the Speaker is on his feet. The first part of the question is in order, but in my estimation the hon. gentleman was starting an argument in the second part. Let us keep our questions short and crisp.

Mr. Valade: What is the intention of the department with regard to the Vanguard, which has to be disposed of after the DC-9 is purchased?

Mr. McIlraith: A loaded question like that cannot be answered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is an unloaded one.

Mr. Balcer: I should like to ask an unloaded question of the minister. When is the special committee on railways, air lines and shipping going to meet, and is it going to meet before a final decision is made on this very important matter?

Mr. McIlraith: I have repeatedly put before the house my view as to the importance of having that committee created. I hope it will be set up very shortly. I am sure the house leader will agree with me, and the record of Hansard will show, that he has tried to get this matter forward for a decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When?

An hon. Member: Do it now.

Mr. McIlraith: Whether the committee is set up before or after this decision is taken will depend on the actions of the house itself.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RADIATION TESTING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of health and welfare. In view of a story appearing in yesterday's Globe and Mail stating that the Y.W.C.A. wanted what they described as an adequate radiation testing program, could the minister give the house any information on the government's present testing program?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of his question. As it happens I have a rather lengthy statement to make regarding the question of radiation, one which has been asked for by several hon. members in the past. However, considering the fact that the house is always so anxious to press on with the business, may I ask permission of the house to have this lengthy statement, which is two pages long, inserted in Hansard as though read?

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is the type of question for the order paper.

[Editor's note: statement referred to above is as follows:]

Earlier this year the Voice of Women presented me with a brief entitled "Fall-out monitoring in Canada." It did not seem to be appropriate for me to comment on such a complex matter before it was thoroughly reviewed. This brief has now been reviewed by competent scientific officers and I also referred it to the dominion council of health. The dominion council of health is the senior advisory committee to the department and all of the provinces are represented on it by their deputy ministers of health or chief medical officers, as the case may be. The council reviewed the brief and prepared the following statement on October 25, 1963.

Ionizing radiation, its effect on health and the development of radiation protection services are matters which receive the regular and close attention of council. The present meeting was no exception and the dominion council of health received and discussed in detail the report of the radiation protection division of the Department of National Health and Welfare. In addition it dealt with the matters raised in the brief from the Voice of Women entitled "Fall-out monitoring in Canada", which had been referred to council by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Council recorded the following views which are pertinent to the points brought out in this brief.

Detection of fall-out is only one of five interrelated factors which must be considered in assessing the total effects of this source of ionizing radiation on health. The dominion council of health, after full consideration of all information available, found no indication for the implementation of additional detection measures recommended in the brief submitted by the Voice of Women nor does the dominion council of health consider that there is justification, at the present time for "the installation of milk decontamination equipment by the dairy industry". Fall-out must be kept in proper perspective with other forms of radiation exposure.

The dominion council of health is satisfied that the present radiation protection program of the department and plans for its further development are fully adequate to meet the needs of this country.

The dominion council of health supports the proposal of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the establishment of an expert committee on all aspects of radiation protection and furthermore recommends that the brief submitted by the Voice of Women be studied and reported upon by this committee.

I concur in this statement, and I would like to assure the members of this house that the department has been in regular consultation with experts in Canada and in other countries on matters of radiation protection since the program was set up in 1950. Every effort has been made to develop and maintain a highly competent service and at the same time to make the best use of outside experts. In addition we have tried to keep the program of fall-out monitoring in proper perspective, but at the same time recognizing the fact that this has become the area of greatest concern to the public.

I am satisfied that the program of the department is adequate to meet our present needs but I would assure hon. members that if circumstances changed, the program would be modified to keep pace with changing circumstances.

In order to ensure that we continue to receive the best possible advice, the government is also setting up an advisory committee on radiation protection to advise me on all aspects of radiation exposure and acceptable standards. This committee will be composed of recognized authorities from universities and other non-governmental sources as well as government scientists. In addition, we will continue to maintain a close liaison with such agencies as the internationl commission on radiological protection, the United Nations scientific committee and the world health organization as well as individual experts.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO TERMINATION OF JOINT PLANS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister or, in his absence, for the Acting Prime Minister.

At the gathering of the next federal-provincial conference, does the Acting Prime Minister intend to recommend the discarding of joint programs and their replacement by a tax compensation plan, as asked by the premier of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, when recently touring New Orleans?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member was in the house yesterday when I tabled the correspondence pertaining to the federal-provincial conference, and its proposed agenda.

If the hon. member reads these documents, he will find the full list of the subjects that the federal and provincial governments have agreed to discuss.

As for the Liberal policy on joint programs, it is well and widely known.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask, on that point, a supplementary question.

It is doubtless true that we are informed about the government's policy in the matter of joint programs; but I would like to be told whether the Minister of Justice intends to discard these programs at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Chevrier: The agenda and the procedure to be followed are matters which the conference decides for itself. If, with the agreement of the federal government, the provinces decide to modify the agenda which has already been tabled they are free to do so.

[Text]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Justice if the President of the Privy Council was speaking for the government when he stated in his address in Toronto earlier this week that the government should be prepared to withdraw from some of the joint federal-provincial programs?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I thought the President of the Privy Council, at least from the press report I read, had made an excellent speech in Toronto, and I am sure he could explain what was meant by what he said. I have no difficulty in admitting at once that what he did say would certainly meet with my approval.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF FRENCH SPEAKING VICE PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Sherbrooke addressed a question to me in connection with senior appointments at Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. My colleague the Acting Prime Minister took the question as notice.

I am pleased to tell the hon. member for Sherbrooke that the short answer is, of course, that there was no pressure brought to bear on the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. However, since the question seems to reveal, if I may say so with great respect, a certain lack of understanding of the organizational structure of the corporation, perhaps I can say just a word in explanation.

The management group of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation consists of the president, one vice president and four executive directors. Following the retirement of the former vice president, Mr. P. S. Secord, the board of directors of the corporation unanimously recommended the appointment of Mr. H. W. Hignett as vice president, an appointment which culminates a long and distinguished career with the corporation.

Of the four executive directors I have mentioned, two are French speaking Canadians and two are English speaking Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. Concerning the answer he has just given, does the minister intend to recommend or favour the appointment of a French Canadian on the executive committee of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, since now none sits on that committee on a permanent basis?

[Text]

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman did not hear my answer. Of four executive directors, two are French speaking Canadians.

NATIONAL REVENUE

IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC LITERATURE AND OBSCENE BOOKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. As reported in the Globe and Mail this morning, is it government policy to allow free access of pornographic literature and obscene books into Canada without checking at border entry points?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Would the minister comment on the attitude of his department toward the spreading of pornographic and obscene literature in Canada and the importation thereof? More specifically, perhaps he would comment on the statement by a departmental official, as reported in this morning's Globe and Mail, that "the definition of obscenity is there but no one seems to care. Until the courts ban a book, there's no sense of our doing it." Would the minister indicate whether it will henceforth be necessary to go to court before an obscene book will be banned from entry into Canada?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, before I comment on a statement of that nature I think I would want an opportunity to read it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: I had in mind the statement, not the book. However, I would have no objection to reading the book. I understand that my colleague would like to add something to my reply in connection with this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: One other supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. One question at a time.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, in response to the subject matter of this series of questions, etc., I should like to say this. Hon. members will recall that the Customs Tariff contains an item, 1201, which prohibits the importation of "books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs or representations of any kind of a treasonable or seditious, or of an immoral or indecent character".

I should explain that the detention of a publication by customs should not be interpreted as prohibition of the publication, since any customs officer is duty bound to detain any work which in his judgment is immoral or indecent and submit it to the department for examination and a ruling as to its classification in the light of item 1201.

However, the department has not independently prohibited importation of any publication for almost two years. I want to emphasize this because the newspaper stories seemed to indicate there had been a change since this government came into office. Let me repeat; the department has not independently prohibited importation of any publication for almost two years, but has preferred to be guided by decisions of the courts under section 150 of the Criminal Code, of which there have been very few since the amendment of that section.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN OPERATION OF ELEVATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, and I apologize for taking the time to put it. I have repeatedly tried to get in touch with different branches concerned with the operation of the parliament buildings, but I have never been able to obtain any satisfaction with regard to the operation of the north side elevator in corridor C. I would ask the minister to exert whatever influence he can to get this elevator operating for the benefit of the Progressive Conservative, New Democrat and Social Credit members of the house.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am going to look into this matter, as usual, today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BRIDGES

QUEBEC—REPORTED REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT OF EXISTING STRUCTURE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Would the minister tell the house whether he has received from the Quebec government a request for a new bridge between the south and north shores at Quebec city, near the existing bridge?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

THE MINISTRY

SUGGESTED REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF POSTMASTER GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of an editorial in today's Ottawa Citizen, that great supporter of the Liberal party, I wonder whether the Prime Minister intends to follow the suggestion contained therein; and may we expect that the Prime Minister will be asking for the resignation of the Postmaster General?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the editorial or the news item to which the hon. member refers, but having regard to what has taken place in the house I am sure that is the last thing the Prime Minister would want to do in so far as the Postmaster General is concerned. I believe all those who sit on this side of the house believe that he is performing his task excellently.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN PART TIME EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Postmaster General a question?

Does the minister—even if he has to cut down his patronage list—consider opposing all measures tending to reduce the number of people who have part time employment in urban post offices, so that a greater number of people might remain on the regular payroll and be able to look after the needs of their families?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question put by my hon. friend, I must inform him that next week I shall meet the executive members of the association of postal employees and we shall discuss the matter to see whether the allegations made by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe are correct.

With regard to patronage, I did start solving the problem by deciding not to give exclusive consideration to Conservative recommendations.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the question I wanted to ask has been asked. All I can say now to the hon. gentleman, having received the news of his promotion to another place, is that we now know he is about to leave us.

AGRICULTURE

TOBACCO—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture is prepared to answer the question I asked yesterday with regard to the support price on tobacco.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the agricultural stabilization board has been authorized to support all grades of flue cured tobacco, other than special factored and nondescript, marketed from the 1963 crop produced in Ontario at a prescribed price of 47 cents a pound, which is 90 per cent of the ten year average or base price. The board has also been authorized to make payments for the benefit of producers in other provinces on the sale of their 1963 crop of an amount per pound equal to any payments which may be made to producers in Ontario.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS—PROVINCIAL WILLINGNESS TO SHARE IN INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister now say how many provincial governments have indicated to the federal government their willingness to share in the cost of increasing the pensions paid under the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, I can not.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister say whether the province of Manitoba has so indicated?

Miss LaMarsh: Not with certainty.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if the federal government is prepared to share with the provinces in increasing the pensions payable to the blind.

Mr. Woolliams: She is reading the newspaper.

Mr. Starr: I think the hon. lady did not hear me, so I will repeat my question. Is the federal government prepared to share with the provinces in increasing pensions for the disabled and the blind?

Miss LaMarsh: First, may I say I was not reading the newspaper but was answering departmental correspondence.

In answer to my hon. friend, may I say that I am sure he has been in the house and has heard this type of question asked a number of times. He knows what was introduced in the house yesterday by the Minister of Justice. This is one of the matters which will be under consideration at the dominion-provincial conference commencing on November 25. As such, it is not a matter within the realm of decision making, because it is open for discussion between the provinces and the federal government.

I should like to say that we are receiving many representations, many letters from those interested, both recipients of benefits under shared programs and those who are related to or otherwise interested in such programs. This has assumed rather large proportions. There is a study being undertaken to determine whether these programs should be continued in the same form or another form, transferred to the provinces, or what should happen to them. Because the matter is on the agenda, because it was discussed in the September conference, we expect the provincial governments will come with their minds made up or with suggestions which may be adopted. As a result of that free debate, we will be in a position to inform the house after the conference what steps we will take.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. Has the federal government made a decision to participate with the provinces, if they are willing, in the increases to these people?

Miss LaMarsh: The federal government does participate already. We do not know in what way the proposals will be changed. The federal government has been studying them and has a number of alternative proposals. I cannot say at this time which of these may be satisfactory to the provinces.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a question for the President of the Privy Council, which is of some importance in view of the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wonder if the minister would care to amplify the statement he made in Toronto early this week, to the effect that the federal government should get out of certain joint programs and compensate the provinces so that they can carry on the programs themselves. Was this a statement of policy that the federal government get out of these programs and does this include such things as hospital insurance, old age assistance, pensions for the blind and pensions for the disabled?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): I do not believe I have anything to add to what I have already said. I have stated this week that when I made this speech I merely repeated the attitude taken by this government. I should not be expected to elaborate on this on orders of the day.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): May I ask a supplementary question. Was the minister referring to all joint programs or some of them? That is all we want to know.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I referred to well established existing programs.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In her previous answers she stated she had a great deal of correspondence and letters in connection with the matter under discussion. Has she tabulated these in accordance with the type of answer, and can she give us any idea of the general tenor of the letters she has received?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the minister replies may I quote Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 171(w) which says:

> A question oral or written must not:
> (w) raise a matter of policy too large to be dealt with in the limits of an answer to a question.

It seems to me the minister has made long and detailed replies, and we are very rapidly descending into a debate. In spite of the importance of the matter, I put it to hon.

members whether we have not gone far enough along this line at the moment.

Mr. Douglas: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say the minister has given long answers but they contained very little information. What I asked the president of the council was a simple question, as to whether it is now accepted government policy that the federal government intends to withdraw from joint programs and, if so, what are the programs?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I intend to abide by your ruling.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If the majority of provinces meeting here on November 25 indicate a desire to increase the old age assistance, and blind and disabled allowances to an amount equal to the present old age security payments, is the government prepared to go ahead and amend the acts accordingly?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. gentleman, who is an experienced privy councillor, began with the word "if" and is therefore a hypothetical question, which is against the rules.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. Could he tell the house whether he will be a member of the federal government's delegation at the federal-provincial conference that will convene on November 25?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, the delegates have not yet been designated.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION ON BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State?

On August 1, as reported on page 2879 of Hansard, the Secretary of State gave us the assurance that the civil service commission would provide all possible information about bilingualism in various government departments. On October 1, I asked the Secretary of State for information on this matter and he replied that he would submit a preliminary report in the near future. The same thing happened on October 16, as reported on page 3630 of Hansard.

I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he is in a position to give us a preliminary report or to tell us what progress has been made in the investigation conducted by the civil service commission on the matter of bilingualism in the various departments of the federal government.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): No, sir, I cannot at the present moment. I understand the commission is working concurrently on its submission to the royal commission and a report to the house, and as the hon. member knows Mr. Pelletier, one of the members of the commission, recently became the deputy minister of veterans affairs. He was succeeded by a new commissioner, and I think we would all expect the new commissioner would need at least a week or two to familiarize himself with the work of the commission before we can expect such a document.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Does this mean that we shall receive a preliminary report from the civil service commission within the next two weeks?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not like to give any such undertaking. The civil service commission is an independent body set up by parliament, to which the government is not allowed to give any direction. It would be very improper for me to give any directions to them, but I will let them know the hon. member's desire to have this report.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Wednesday, November 6, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 16—Exemption of income from manufacturing or processing business in designated areas.

The Chairman: Order. When we rose last night we were considering clause 16 of the bill with an amendment proposed thereto by the hon. member for Wellington South. Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Amendment (Mr. Hales) negatived: yeas 56; nays 95.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Monteith: May I ask a question for clarification and information. At what point, during your putting of the question and from then on, would hon. members not have a right to vote?

The Chairman: I would refer the hon. gentleman to standing order 12(2), which says:

When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the house, or make any noise or disturbance.

I assume this is the standing order which applies on the calling of a vote.

Mr. Monteith: In committee also?

The Chairman: In a committee also.

Mr. Chevrier: And there was lots of noise.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Rynard: I want to make a few comments on the method of designation of areas, which provides that they must have less than 50 per cent of the national average employment over eight years, and have high summer unemployment. This is a very discriminatory method of designating areas, because there are many tourist areas which have high summer employment but still suffer severely from a high rate of winter unemployment.

I would like to ask the minister what research, if any, has been made with regard to the designated areas. I am sure some of them have been areas of full employment in the past, and what assurance is there that after the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of taxpayers' dollars, the same conditions will not exist which drove industry out of those areas previously? In other words, has any investigation been made into whether the climate in those areas is favourable or unfavourable for industrialization? Has any investigation been made into water and sewerage facilities, and the general conditions existing? Has it been determined whether an industry which goes into a particular area is likely to flourish in that area?

It is a strange situation that the designated areas in Ontario are ones which are represented by cabinet ministers. I could name some of them, but at the moment my strong objection is to the method of designation. To my mind it contravenes dominion-provincial relations and dominion-provincial-municipal relations. Surely the person on the ground, who lives in an area, collects taxes, and observes it over the years, knows whether it is an area that wants help.

As far as I can see, this government is staking a knowledge of statistics against the knowledge of people. To my mind that is altogether wrong, and for these reasons I cannot support this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks with regard to Bill C-95. We are now discussing clause 16, which says:

This new section provides a 36 months exemption from tax for income tax from a new manufacturing or processing business in a designated area. This clause implements paragraph 2 of the income tax resolution which reads as follows—

I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) to this matter. I would like to defend small business: there are quite a number of small industries throughout Canada, and quite a few in the province of Quebec, which can barely operate. Many of those small industries would need some sort of help, but, according to this clause, only new industries will benefit from those income tax exemptions.

With regard to industries which have been operating for some time, I believe it will be rather difficult to have them move to other areas. For instance, industries that are in centralized areas, like Quebec, Montreal, or Sherbrooke, are not likely to go and settle in some other area without proper means of transportation, or where transportation is much more costly and markets inadequate. Let us, for instance, take an industry in the city of Montreal: according to statistics, it can sell almost 25 per cent of its production locally; but, if that industry settles elsewhere, it will lose this advantage of selling 25 per cent of its production locally, without having to pay for transportation.

And the larger centres offer many other advantages which do not exist elsewhere. In a centre like Montreal—to take that city again as an example—where there is an abundance of specialized labour, industry does not find it too difficult to obtain what it needs in that field.

On the other hand, while there is plenty of manpower in remote centres, there is no skilled labour force. The industry which will set up in those centres will have to train and organize a new manpower. Small industries have much difficulty in getting established and in maintaining their development, because of the many problems which the larger centralized industries do not have.

For instance, as regards the manpower problem, the small industry must organize it itself and train the young people of the area. There is practically no skilled labour in those areas. So, the small industry must train the workers.

According to the statistics I have here, the small industry must train some ten people before it can keep one skilled worker who will be able to do the job. The small industry must train several persons because once they know their trade, there are always some who will go to work in the larger centres where skilled labour is in great demand and better paid. So, the small industry has to train about ten people in order to keep at least one trained worker, which means that its costs are that much higher and its profits, that much lower.

With regard to the financing of small industries in remote centres, where can they find the help they need? In the first place, the various governments, federal, provincial, municipal, the school boards, the church councils collect taxes and sell debentures on a year round basis. The governments undertake campaigns to sell debentures, and consequently all the money goes to them.

The federal government, for instance, sells a lot of debentures; the provincial governments, the school boards and the municipalities do the same. In the meantime, the small industries also try to sell debentures to raise capital but they get only what is left. Sometimes they are unable to find the money needed for expansion, which means they have to spend years barely managing to survive.

I know personally several small industries, and am apprised of the difficulties they are up against, in that field. Some of them have been operating their plants or their businesses for ten or 15 years practically without profit. I even know industries which have been in operation for ten years, and have suffered yearly losses of $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000, those losses being made good by the income of some more profitable ventures. On the eleventh year, there is profit at last. But, then it has to pay income tax, whereas it should be granted an exemption to make up for the losses of the previous years.

Now, that is the matter upon which I call the attention of the Minister of Finance. I feel that it would be a good thing to grant small industries the same tax exemption the new industries are getting under the policy the Minister of Finance has set out in Bill C-95.

These small industries, which can barely make ends meet, cannot find the capital they need, except through banks which lend at an interest rate of about 10 per cent. However, some municipalities have begun to help out industry.

There is the industrial development bank whose function we all know. But an industry must have been in operation for three years and earned profits. If an industry cannot meet those conditions, the industrial development bank is not interested.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

As the small industry cannot get a loan from the industrial development bank, nor from other sources, because all the money goes for the purchase of all sorts of debentures issued by the federal, provincial and municipal governments, I believe that it is in real need of tangible assistance in order to develop.

The expansion and development of small industries, I believe, would be less expensive than to establish new ones because, as I said before, new industries are not interested in settling in new areas which are located far from the larger centres. Furthermore, only the local folks, who like to live there, who have their relatives there, would agree to remain there and work for those industries.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, on account of all the factors involved, the Minister of Finance will have to show more concern for the problems of the small industry, because its requirements are basic. It is essential to help small industries, if we are to provide for the development of the whole country.

It is recognized that industry is the basis of capital, the basis of social economy. It is recognized that industry puts into circulation the money of the employees, to provide a living for the professionals, who live from workers' salary. The professionals live on the money they draw from those who earn it in industry. In general, almost all the professionals live on what the worker gives them. In turn, the worker takes his money in industry. However it is to industry that the less attention is paid. Our attention should be directed towards the smaller industries which will grow one day.

A three years or 36 months tax exemption is not so much to give assistance to industry. To really help industry, the larger industries should be encouraged to move to the various centres, and the government should do something entirely different, for instance, pay 50 per cent of the cost of the removal and of the construction of plants. The government should pay grants on transportation. Otherwise, industry will not be encouraged to resettle, and the government will then have to do something else.

I therefore do not believe that the amendment to Bill C-95 brought forward by the Minister of Finance will be of great help to the people and to Canada. I am of the opinion that the best service the minister could render would be to take an already existing industry and set it on its feet again, to see to it that it can at least survive, by granting it the tax exemption granted new industries.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to submit to the Minister of Finance so that he may clarify his bill as much as possible. I know that the minister will look into the problem and will try to find solutions.

The amendment which I propose reads as follows:

I move, seconded by Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger, that section 16 of the bill be amended by adding section 16 A which reads as follows:

This section will also apply to small industries already set up in the said designated areas, in addition to industries which will improve their plants or buy new equipment.

This is the amendment which I submit to the house, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: It is moved by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe):

That section 16 be amended by adding section 16(a), which reads as follows: 16(a) This section will also apply to small industries already set up in the said designated areas, in addition to industries which will improve their plants or buy new equipment.

I would point out to the hon. member that I have some doubt as to whether this amendment is valid and in order. I will now be pleased to hear the committee's views in this connection.

Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, you expressed some doubts as to the validity of the amendment. You might make a ruling on its validity before putting the amendment.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, as to the validity of the amendment, I feel that it supplements the proposals made by the minister.
