The additional two amendments are to increase the numbers on the advisory council to permit greater participation by employer and union groups, and finally to provide an honorarium for the chairman.

The increased rate of assistance for training, especially training the unemployed, and for training programs in industry, underlines the urgent priority the government attaches to these aspects of the Canadian system of technical and vocational training. We certainly support the priority of these aspects of the program which was attached to them by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), who was concerned that our training program ought to be directed towards providing skills and training for jobs.

In his speech the hon. member for Port Arthur—and I may say his speech was very interesting to me—regarded the emphasis placed on the expansion of secondary school facilities as at the expense, in his view, of technical and trades schools. It may be that varying emphasis has been placed on secondary schools in particular provinces, but in general the approach has been balanced, and there has been a balanced program of expansion in secondary schools and in technical and trade schools.

It ought to be pointed out, of course, that the federal government participates in the secondary school program in order to support exclusively technical and vocational education and that aspect of the secondary school program which the federal government supports, namely technical and vocational education, enables students to enter the labour market more easily, and later to take more specialized training for employment. So, it is very wrong to suggest that an emphasis on secondary and vocational training is not job directed. It most certainly is.

I realize that this problem of technical and vocational training is a complex one. It might have been possible to have a general debate on the subject if the amending bill provided the opportunity. However, it does not. All I want to say in conclusion is that the national system of technical and vocational training is set out in the principal measure, the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. It enables the federal government to enter into agreements with provincial governments to make substantial contributions to all aspects of technical and vocational training. There are ten aspects of technical and vocational training for which authority exists for the Minister of Labour to enter into agreements with the provinces. The emphasis given by any province to any particular program for which assistance is available is entirely up to the province itself. If any particular province has placed an emphasis on technical and vocational training at the secondary school level, that is a result of a decision by that province exercising its constitutional responsibility in that field.

The federal government has attempted to indicate its own estimate of priorities by the particular range and rates of contributions it has assigned under these various programs. Because we have attached urgent priority to the training of the unemployed and to training in industry we are proposing to increase the rates of contribution from the federal treasury in this field. I make these remarks in commentary on the plea that was made by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) for a national policy of technical and vocational training. The national framework is provided for in this act; the response is up to the province, exercising its own authority. In this field the federal government proposes; the provincial government disposes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the passage of this legislation for more than a moment or two, but I wish to ask the minister this question. Can he inform the committee whether any of the provinces are using this legislation to train forest rangers, road locators, timber cruisers, lumber graders, first aid men, fire prevention crews, and cooks?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I know that I shall best suit the inclination of the minister, the committee and myself if I offer my observations in the fewest and simplest words. It seems to me that on this question of training the unemployed there is a gap in the statistical information available to the department which is depriving the department of the full benefits of the legislation.

I placed upon the order paper at the close of the last parliament certain questions, and these were the answers I received. I noted, first of all, in the year 1961, that 38 per cent of the unemployed who had enlisted for training had failed to complete the course. It was encouraging to note that in 1962 the percentage of those who had failed to complete the course had been reduced to approximately 23 per cent. I was greatly concerned to learn the reason for there having been this high number of failures to complete the course. At this time the answer I received was, "Information not available". It is my respectful submission, Mr. Chairman, that this information is vital and necessary if we are to get the full benefit of this program.

When I asked for the number of unemployed who had finished the course and who had been able to secure jobs using the skills for which they had been trained, again I received the very disturbing answer, "Information not available". It is my further respectful submission that there could be no greater waste of public funds than to train workers in skills for which there were no employment opportunities. This is friendly criticism, I may say to the hon. member for Ontario, because I will be the first to admit that the impact of automation has come so rapidly that it is impossible to keep abreast of it, and I can certainly appreciate the difficulty that was confronting him in the early stages of this most admirable legislation; but my plea to the minister is this: we must have more statistical information if we are to apply this course of training so that the workers may get the most out of it. In other words, it is my submission that the expenditure of public funds should be geared to the information we are obtaining in these reports. With those very few words, Mr. Chairman, I will resume my seat.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, the legislation now before us, to amend the technical and vocational training act, is contrary to the educational system prevailing in Quebec.

I am, therefore, taking this opportunity to bring Quebec's claims to the minister's attention and explain the difference between the educational system in that province with regard to technical and vocational training compared with the other parts of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, among the main problems which labour circles are concerned with, unemployment in every form and job insecurity come first. To those problems may he added those created by automation, the training of our young people for work and the rehabilitation of the older workers who have been discharged as the result of new and advanced techniques.

It is currently said that this country and our province have known radical changes since the turn of the century, and that our economy, which was formerly centred on agriculture, has now become industrialized.

Within a few years, and more particularly following the economic development required by the war effort, and by developing the resource above and under ground, our country has become an industrial giant.

Amongst the chief problems we have to contend with in regard to automation, the primary one, in my opinion, is education, primary, secondary or university education as well as vocational training and adjustment. Everyone is aware that automation will require more engineers, more physicians, more mathematicians, more skilled machinists, more technicians of all sorts. It is certain that foremen will have to acquire more competence and that there will be new vocational qualifications required for the maintenance and repair trades. It is already a well-known fact that our young people will be not be able to start their apprenticeship before having completed secondary education.

On the other hand, experience proves that the majority of teachers never worked in industry and that consequently they can hardly prepare young people to properly hold positions in industry. We are of the opinion that their academic level often leaves much to be desired, which is readily realized if one reads briefs submitted by teaching people. Hence teachers must have a better preparation and consequently it is extremely urgent to set up normal schools for technical training instructors, in order to emphasize quality as well as train a large enough teaching staff. Before being admitted to teach, teachers should spend two or three years in industry and should even be eligible for leave with pay to readjust themselves.

The training available at present in technical schools and technological institutes is complementary to primary and high school courses and is directly related to them through its academic requirements. Theoretical programs are devised so as to make pupils understand the whys and wherefores of everything, to instil principles and to give information. Practical courses are intended to make pupils understand the theoretical notions acquired in theory classes.

The so-called specialized training, at the outset, was devised to come to the rescue of young people who were leaving school prematurely for various reasons. Thus, Mr. Jean Delorme, the director of specialized training, could say that he had achieved his purpose when he had succeeded in securing for technical school students the equivalent of a ninth grade certificate.

The publicity given specialized training reveals, however, that such training is aimed at supplying "well trained operators", by technological schools, according to the leaflet on "specialized training" published under the signature of its general manager.

Having become what is called nowadays a technician, that is a graduate of a technological institute, is a starting point and not the ultimate end. According to the trade, it is only after a few years of post-graduate studies and practical experience supplied and gained in industry that the young man, after having tested his qualifications, will validly be able to consider himself a tradesman or a technician.

Too often, the public fancies that graduates who just completed their studies are experts in their specialties, that they can be full-fledged employees in their own right in industry and that they can give the same output as if they already had a few years' experience.

Everyone knows that it is not so and that it will never be so, no matter how much the programs of the technological institutes are changed. Vocational training cannot be the exclusive responsibility of educational institutions. In fact, the latter can only provide basic training, since industry is the cornerstone of the whole system.

It follows that theoretical training is only a prerequisite to holding a job in a plant or on the site. It is on the job that one serves the apprenticeship that will permit one to become fully qualified in a particular trade.

In other words, theoretical training is nothing but an introduction to the apprenticeship which must be provided later, at the place of work, by the employer or the union.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to remind you that it is to apprenticeship that we owe the finest achievements both here and elsewhere: government buildings, bridges, dams, and numerous residential, industrial and business constructions which were carried out only through the efforts of a variety of trades and techniques.

Those men acquired their technical skill by serving their apprenticeship under skilled workers.

However, in view of the technical developments and the urgency of maximum production to meet competition, this formula has to be adapted constantly under conditions which are often difficult. That is why, at a certain moment, industry had to change its methods of production and go in for fractional production, chain production and exaggerated specialization with consequent loss of its traditional importance by apprenticeship.

In spite of everything, apprenticeship still has many advantages, namely a greater flexibility in adjusting to industrial needs and trade requirements. It provides an important part of sound learning by compelling the apprentice to live in the trade environment and working community in the factory, in the field or in the shop. As a result of the necessary physical and muscular effort, he acquires automatic movements required for the quick and sure performance of specialized work. It remains an important and reliable stage in the training of professional workers.

What is exactly a workshop school or a field school? Its purpose is to combine the practical training deemed essential to the practice of a trade and the theoretical instruction recognized as necessary to a full vocational training; to combine methods of teaching in order to make skilled workers better acquainted with the latest technical developments, thus enabling them to become genuine modern technicians; finally, to co-ordinate methods permitting and promoting in the working environment theoretical instruction in keeping with the cultural needs of the workers.

Some industries try to bring about this co-ordination according to their needs and to the requirements of their output. They admit that without an active participation of industries to the setting up of true vocational training, it will be impossible to achieve worth-while results. In addition, as vocational training can only be developed in definite working conditions, it also implies the enlightened participation of unions.

Mr. Chairman, there is in Quebec the apprenticeship commission for vocational training. The immediate purpose of this legislation is to promote apprenticeship by the creation of commissions and vocational centres, through the co-operation of industrial and vocational groups and public authorities.

In our province, the expression "apprenticeship centre" generally refers to vocational training establishments directly under apprenticeship commissions.

The apprenticeship commission studies, develops and amends, as necessary, the theoretical and practical programs of each trade submitted by trade consulting committees and see that these programs are carried out.

The results of our apprenticeship system: in the industries, trades and crafts subject to an apprenticeship system, there was 30,727 apprentices divided among the following crafts, industries or services: barbers, hairdressers, commercial establishments, building industry, manufacturing industries, other industries and services.

Since training boards have been set up, the day and evening courses they provide have been taken by 48,521 apprentices and journeymen, as follows: automobile, 2,394; barbers and hairdressers, 4,620; construction, 31,484; footwear, 5,616; watchmaking, 175; printing, 4,232. Thus we see the important role played by the training boards which have been set up in the province of Quebec since the passage of the training assistance act in 1945.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

[Text]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether, instead of calling it ten o'clock, we could carry on and try to expedite the passage of this bill.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we would offer the suggestion that we sit by unanimous consent either until we finish the bill or until 10.15, whichever comes first.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Beaule.]

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, we must therefore:

1. Recognize the need to establish a school system which would provide vocational courses in accordance with the various levels of training required by the different occupations in each economic sector;

2. Adapt those courses to the calibre of training required at each level in order to give to the young people an opportunity to acquire a basic vocational training in keeping with their aptitudes, and to the workers an opportunity to improve their skill while practising their trade;

3. Recognize that what is taught in vocational schools is but a prelude to the training to be received in industry. Considered as the extension of formal schooling, on-the-job training should be able to meet the requirements of practical training for all categories of specialized workers.

4. In view of the fact that the period of industrial training must include, for the young trainee, a reasonable guarantee of progress and adaptation, working conditions must always be regulated by collective contracts. Through such regulation, technical training is put to good use and, consequently, is put into effect to benefit the trainee.

5. Training boards are just the right organizations to ensure that young trainees in technical schools will get the practical training needed in industry and to watch each individual's progress until he has acquired professional qualifications. By their registration, employment and control services and also by their qualifying examinations, they can well be considered as indispensable agencies to operate the transfer of the graduates from the vocational schools to the various industries they have chosen.

6. The creation of an agency responsible for vocational education should not result in the establishment of government schools only. We should be able to take advantage of a system of various institutions supported by a variety of initiatives. Apprenticeship centres should continue to operate in accordance with their own character.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to move an amendment to clause 2.

[Text]

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. Starr: This clause has to do with the raising of the federal government contribution from 50 per cent to 75 per cent. The assistance is being extended until March 31, 1967. I wonder if the minister could tell us from what date it will take effect.

Mr. MacEachen: From March 31, 1963.

Mr. Starr: In other words, it will be retroactive.

Mr. Herridge: Has the minister any information on the question I asked with regard to possible overlapping?

Mr. Byrne: All the categories the hon. member mentioned with respect to forestry are covered in the legislation. There are five provinces which participate at the rate of 50 per cent—New Brunswick, Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia and Alberta.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, since technical and vocational training means any form of teaching which prepares a person to hold a profitable job in primary or secondary industry or which enables him to get a better salary in the service industry, I should like to move the addition of the following paragraph (d) to section 2:

That, after having obtained the authorization of the provincial government, the government be empowered to sign with the representatives of private technical and vocational schools which are recognized and subsidized by the provincial governments and which give vocational training, agreements similar to those which were concluded with the department of education.

The Chairman: It is moved by Mr. Beaule, seconded by Mr. Gauthier:

That the government be authorized to enter into agreements similar to those entered into with the department of education with representatives of private establishments of vocational and technical training which are recognized and subsidized by provincial governments and which provide technical training and this, after having obtained the approval of provincial governments.

Mr. Caron: Such agreements with private establishments are unacceptable.

[Text]

The Chairman: If there is no objection taken to the regularity of the amendment I will put it to the committee now.

Mr. MacEachen: I will not argue as to the regularity of the amendment, which proposes to permit the federal government to make agreements with private institutions. It seems to me this measure can reach into the activities of private institutions in any province through agreements which the Minister of Labour and the federal government might make with the provinces themselves. In this way we are respecting the integrity of the provinces by making the agreements directly with them. I am afraid the amendment cannot be accepted.

Mr. Herridge: I think the amendment is an excellent one but I cannot resist saying that in my opinion this afterthought type legislation shows lack of forethought.

Mr. Nowlan: It is after ten o'clock, too.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 60.

Mr. Herridge: Before the clause carries, I wish to withdraw my previous remarks. I misunderstood the terms of the amendment. My French is very poor.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Council established.

Mr. Starr: This clause envisages the addition of five members to the existing advisory council. Can the minister tell the committee what areas of our population are expected to be represented by the additional five members?

An hon. Member: The Liberal area.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the truest thing you have said this session.

Mr. MacEachen: The purpose is to increase the representation from employees, unions and employers. Those are the principal areas.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have with some reluctance refrained from making a major speech on this bill but I should like to ask one question on this final clause. We all know that the problem in vocational education is, as in other areas of the education field, the lack of coordination. This is a situation which arises to a great extent because our educational system is such as to foster individuality within the provinces. I wonder how far this council will go in developing a national perspective or a philosophy of education which meets the needs of our rapidly changing situation?

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

Mr. MacEachen moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the acting house leader would indicate what the business of the house will be for tomorrow and as far as he can go after tomorrow.

Mr. MacNaught: The business of the house tomorrow will be as I outlined on Friday night, with the exception that the latter items mentioned may not necessarily be in the order I outlined them on on Friday. As far as Wednesday is concerned, I regret I cannot say anything at this time.

Mr. Nowlan: But the next order of business will be as outlined by the acting house leader on Friday night?

Mr. MacNaught: That is right.

Mr. Pigeon: Excuse me, I asked a question of the minister—

Some hon. Members: No.

It being fourteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 19, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

WHEAT—TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table two copies in English and in French of the long term wheat agreement between Canada and the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic signed at Ottawa on October 29, 1963.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PERSECUTION OF JEWS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in connection with representations made by the Jewish labour committee of Canada and the Canadian Labour Congress regarding shocking treatment of three million Soviet Jews who have been subjected to increasing discrimination and persecution. Have any representations been made to the government in this connection, and has the Prime Minister or Secretary of State for External Affairs brought to the attention of the Soviet ambassador a situation that is becoming more difficult and trying with the passing months?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my recollection, although I would like to check on the matter, that representations have been received along the lines indicated by my right hon. friend and that a reply has been made to those representations, but I will be glad to look into the matter and give the reply, if any, tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At the same time can the Prime Minister say whether any representations have been made to the Soviet embassy in this connection?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to look into that too.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that representatives of the Jewish labour committee and the Canadian Labour Congress are seeing the Soviet ambassador at three o'clock this afternoon?

Mr. Pearson: No, I did not know that.

CUBA—DETAILS OF CHARGES AGAINST ARRESTED CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): While I am on my feet may I reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Oxford. I said the text of the formal charges to be laid against the two Canadians under arrest in Cuba would be received yesterday afternoon. It has now been received by the embassy in Havana and has been transmitted to the Department of External Affairs. I may say that in a general way the two men are charged with smuggling explosives into Cuba and committing other acts described as constituting crimes against the integrity and stability of the nation. The date of the trial, after a postponement at our request, has been set for Saturday, November 23.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Could the Prime Minister tell us the maximum sentence which might be imposed on these men if they were found guilty?

Mr. Pearson: I should like to look into that and make sure I give the hon. member a correct answer.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Is the government making sure that these men will be adequately represented by counsel?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): That was the question I myself asked the other day. I was about to ask, now, whether any consideration beyond that mentioned the other day would be given so that Canadian counsel might be available. Would the Prime Minister say also whether there is any charge against these men of conspiracy with the nationals of any other country in an attempt to bring about the overturn of the government in Cuba?

Mr. Pearson: With regard to the legal protection of these men I can add nothing at the moment to what was said the other day, but I will try to make inquiries to see whether there is any further information which could be given tomorrow. As to the details of the charge, I am not in a position at this moment to go beyond what I have said this afternoon. The information obtained here was received over the telephone, and I should like to await a written report before I say anything more.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the right hon. gentleman know whether the trials will be in public or whether they will be behind closed doors?

Mr. Pearson: I do not, but I should be glad to look into that point.

NATO—U.S. REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING TRADE WITH COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he tell the house what the reaction of Canada is to the representations being made by Mr. Ball on behalf of the United States that western countries should not deal with communist countries except on the basis of a general agreement having been arrived at, and in particular whether Mr. Ball has taken a stand on behalf of the United States that the granting of credit is an improper course to take? Have those representations been made to the minister or to the government through NATO? If so, what was the Canadian reaction?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No such representations have been made to me as Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I am not aware that they have been made to any of my colleagues. If they were made we would, of course, give them due consideration. Since this is a hypothetical question I do not think I can give any more by way of answer to the right hon. gentleman at the moment. I understand, of course, from the newspapers that these representations have been made to other countries. Since we have not yet had an opportunity of considering this question, this is the only answer I can give.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the United States under secretary of state, George Ball, brought before the members of the NATO organization the need of a general agreement amongst the NATO nations on the subject of trade with the communist bloc. Have such representations been brought to the attention of the Canadian government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): They may have been received by the Canadian representative at the O.E.C.D. meeting, along with other representatives, but we have not had a report from our representative yet on this subject. I will make inquiries to see if one is coming.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister inquire at the same time whether the press references to the fact that this was brought to the attention of NATO countries is correct, and that there was a strong objection thereto by Britain and France?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question. The press report of the NATO ministers' conference suggested that Great Britain had rejected the United States suggestion to put a five year limit on credits to the Soviet union, and that only Norway and Denmark had supported Great Britain in this regard. I wonder if the Prime Minister would look into the matter to see if it is true that Canada did not support Britain in rejecting this proposal.

Mr. Pearson: I have already seen those press reports, and as a result we have made inquiries of our representative in Paris. It is his report I am awaiting now.

WEST GERMANY—CANADIAN ACTION RESPECTING WAR CLAIMS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to deal with a question, as usual of national and international significance, asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West on November 15 last dealing with the policy of the government of West Germany in meeting claims arising from nazi persecution.

Since 1952, Mr. Speaker, some 7,000 Canadians have received from the German war claims fund compensation for war losses under the nazi regime, including maltreatment, amounting to almost $9 million. In conformity with the usual international practice in such matters, only persons who were Canadian citizens at the time of loss were eligible under the war claims fund, which derived from liquidated German assets.

At the same time, the West German government in the post-war period has enacted a series of indemnification laws providing compensation for victims of the nazi regime. A number of persons who became Canadian citizens after the war and who were accordingly not eligible under the Canadian war claims fund have been successful in obtaining compensation under these West German indemnification laws. Further legislative measures extending and liberalizing the scope of payments to various categories of victims of nazi persecution are currently before the West German parliament. I can assure my hon. friend that the details of these new West German compensation measures, when enacted, will be available to any Canadians who may be interested.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

ROYAL COMMISSION—REPORTED REMARK BY MEMBER FOR YORK EAST

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) expressing the views of the Liberal party on the purposes of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission when he said that one of its purposes was equivalent to that of apartheid in South Africa?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the accuracy of the report, I may say the hon. member was speaking for himself at this meeting.

Mr. Ricard: As a supplementary question, is the right hon. Prime Minister going to take steps to discipline his member?

Mr. Pearson: Not, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of my hon. friend's question.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER PLANT—INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether the government has received any recommendations from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited regarding the location of the heavy water plant which is in contemplation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has considered some proposals made to it in respect of the provision of heavy water required by Atomic Energy of Canada over the next five years. The government is now considering those proposals and hopes to be able to announce the decision in a few days.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, will this include the matter of the location of the plant?

Mr. Drury: It is likely, Mr. Speaker, that the announcement will carry implicit within it an indication of the location.

UNITED NATIONS

COMMONWEALTH SEAT ON SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that conversations are now under way at the United Nations concerning the reallocation of the non-permanent seats on the security council, are steps being taken by the government to ensure the continuation of the commonwealth seat on that body so that Canada's future opportunities of election to the security council will be protected?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into that matter in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is attending an O.E.C.D. meeting in Paris.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC—REPORTED CLOSING OF CERTAIN RADAR STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Is it true that his department intends to close, in the near future, the radar station located at St. Sylvestre, in the county of Lotbiniere? If so, could the minister tell us the steps which have been or will be taken to provide work for the employees who will be laid off?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): As I have advised the house previously, Mr. Speaker, we have been studying our defence radar capabilities to determine whether any changes would be possible without reducing the effectiveness of the system. I expect we will have some conclusions in this regard shortly, and when we do I will be pleased to announce them in the house.

NATO—REPORTED INTENTION TO STOCKPILE CANADIAN WEAPONS AND EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question of national and international significance to the Minister of National Defence. My question is based on reports from an unofficial source of information and concerns the government's policy with respect to defence. In view of the fact that a Canadian Press report from Bonn states that Colonel Hans Joachim von Hopsgarten of the German army general staff informed our defence committee in Bonn that Canada will stockpile in Europe weapons and equipment for two reinforcing infantry brigades, and in view of the reported denial of the accuracy of this statement by a Canadian government official, would the minister inform the house of the facts surrounding these two statements?

An hon. Member: Ask Max Ferguson.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can take no responsibility either for the statement of the German colonel or for any interpretation which might have been given to it in a C.B.C. program. I can say, however, that both the chief of the general staff and myself have referred to the question of stockpiling equipment in Europe. This suggestion has been made by the supreme allied commander, Europe at least every year for the past five or six years. As yet no decision has been reached.

NATO—REPORTED REMOVAL OF AIRCRAFT FROM MARVILLE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware that the aircraft which were stationed at Marville, France have been removed, and would he care to tell the house what will be the future use of the base at Marville?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that any aircraft which were stationed at Marville have been removed, unless the hon. member is referring to the old air defence interceptor squadrons. The plan as is well known to hon. members, is to station two squadrons of CF-104 aircraft at Marville, and there has been no change in that plan up to the present time.

Mr. Crouse: Would the minister tell the house when those new squadrons will be based at Marville?

Mr. Hellyer: I cannot give a definite answer but I understand all squadrons of CF-104 aircraft will be in place by some time early next year.

WEARING OF DEVICES TO MEASURE RADIOACTIVITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the report correct that employees of his department, in carrying out their duties, will be and are now required to wear dog tags?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am sure my hon. friend is referring to the tags worn for the purpose of measuring radioactivity. If that is what he is referring to, he is correct.

[Mr. Herridge.]

TRADE

BUTTER OIL—REPORTED REFUSAL OF OFFERS TO PURCHASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture why the federal government has rejected all bids to purchase 80 million pounds of stored butter oil and has returned cheques which offered 25½ cents a pound for this butter oil, as reported in the Montreal Gazette of this morning.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on October 8, 1963 the agricultural stabilization board offered butter oil for export to designated countries at 30 cents per pound. While no sales were made at this price, exporters expressed considerable interest in the product and certain counter proposals were received by the board. Because of this, the board notified all known interested parties that they should submit their best offers for the product. Firm offers with deposits were then received covering a relatively small percentage of the total amount available. In the opinion of the board these offers were not acceptable either from the standpoint of price or conditions of sale. The offers were accordingly rejected and the deposits were returned.

The board then offered the butter oil for export, once again to designated countries, at 27 cents per pound with certain provisions concerning a performance guarantee. This offer is still in effect, and the board has made sales and received commitments covering a substantial portion of the entire product.

POTATOES—STEPS TO PROVIDE EXPORT MARKETS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister received any advice concerning the surplus of potatoes existing in New Brunswick, and has he been requested to investigate all possible export markets with a view to assisting potato farmers in the disposal of this perishable commodity at the best possible prices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, both my department and the Department of Agriculture have been aware of the situation. We have been doing everything possible to assist in the marketing of these surplus potatoes.

WHEAT—REPORTED DIFFICULTIES RESPECTING SALES TO RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I refer to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Cariboo. He directed his question to the Minister of Finance, and it related to a report which had appeared in several United States newspapers. He referred to one report which appeared in the Yonkers Herald Statesman; I have also seen copies of the same article appearing in other newspapers in the United States. It alleges that Canada's wheat sales to red China are turning sour. This article goes on to say that the Chinese are in arrears by $100 million, and so on.

This story is completely false, Mr. Speaker, and if I wished to characterize it I would say it is nothing short of creative fiction. The Chinese have paid all their obligations either on or before the scheduled due dates. The outstanding balance on September 9 of this year was nil. The outstanding balance at the present time is about $10 million, and they are not behind in any payments whatever.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING FORTHCOMING TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. On October 21 in response to a question of mine the minister said he was going to make a statement to the house on the status of the preparations for the Kennedy trade negotiations. That was about a month ago. In view of the very important nature of this matter I wonder when we may expect the minister's statement.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the draft statement was given to me today by my officials and I am now reviewing it. I hope to make it within the next day or so.

EFFECT OF WHEAT SALES TO CHINA ON CANADIAN TEXTILE EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is he aware that, according to comments in The Sentinel Review, mass selling of Canadian wheat to communist China means the loss of 1,500 jobs in the Canadian weaving industry?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not aware of those reports.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that he tabled the agreement between Canada and Czechoslovakia today, will he give consideration to tabling the wheat agreement between Canada and red China?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ADMISSION OF PUBLIC TO CONFERENCE ON SMOKING AND CANCER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Will the public be admitted to the conference on "tobacco and cancer" which, as the minister has announced, will be held next week?

[Text]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is insufficient space in the room to permit anyone being present other than invited parties.

HIGHWAY SAFETY—REQUEST FOR APPEAL BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister take the first opportunity to make a television appeal to the Canadian people in order to impress upon them the great necessity for better observance of highway safety regulations, in the hope that we might reduce the traffic death toll which was so much in evidence last week end?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I would be glad to do anything I can along the lines suggested by the hon. member—

Mr. Fisher: Provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Pearson: —including an appeal over television if that were appropriate in the circumstances.

FINANCE

REPORTED U.S. ACQUISITION OF CANADIAN BANK STOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is the government aware that the First National City Bank of New York has purchased, through a subsidiary, a 50 per cent interest in the Mercantile Bank of Canada, contrary to the policy prohibiting the operation in Canada of branches of United States banks?

An hon. Member: Give us an answer for a change.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the minister cares to answer this question, it is one for the order paper because it requires considerable research.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I would be glad to answer the question, Mr. Speaker, because the hon. member was kind enough to give me notice. The purchase of a 50 per cent interest in the shares of the Mercantile Bank of Canada by a subsidiary of the First National City Bank of New York, of which the government is aware, does not contravene any present legislation.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—CONFERENCE RESPECTING ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I haven't got a loaded question for the Minister of Transport, although I could ask him why box cars loaded at Prairie River, Saskatchewan have not been picked up for ten days. I should like him to tell the house whether he proposes to attend the conference which has been called by the premier of Saskatchewan to discuss the problems raised by rail line abandonment. The conference begins on Friday next, I believe.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): As to the first part of the hon. member's remarks, he will be happy to know that I have directed an inquiry to the Canadian National Railways to see what I can find out about the two box cars to which he referred.

As to the second part of the question, I have received an invitation from the premier of Saskatchewan to attend a meeting at Regina on Friday, November 22 of representatives of the various municipalities to discuss the question of rail line abandonment and proposed legislation arising out of the MacPherson royal commission report. I regret very much that I shall not be able to attend that meeting.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Will anyone be representing the hon. gentleman or his department at that meeting?

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. McIlraith: There will be one or possibly two officials from the department present, and they will be able to deal with the technical aspects of the matter and with the report of the royal commission.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): In view of the fact that the minister is not able to attend this conference, will he delegate several prairie members to attend in his place?

NORTH SYDNEY-NEWFOUNDLAND—MAINLAND FERRY TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): In Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, and by no means is it a loaded one. In view of the fact that the minister advised Dr. J. S. Munro, the mayor of North Sydney, by telephone on October 25 that North Sydney would be the mainland terminus for the new $12 million auto ferry, and in view of the fact that the minister advised the Halifax Chronicle-Herald on November 18 that the government had not yet reached a decision on this question, would the minister in his own decisive way make another statement in the house to clarify the situation? In other words, is North Sydney going to be the mainland terminus?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I should begin by telling the hon. gentleman that his understanding of the telephone conversation is not correct. A decision on the terminal for the new ferry has not yet been taken. However, it will be taken shortly and announced in the ordinary way.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question. Might I ask the minister whether he would kindly notify the mayor of North Sydney that he has misunderstood him?

Mr. McIlraith: I think the mayor did not understand the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I think you are in error.

EDUCATION

REQUEST OF TEACHERS' FEDERATION FOR GRANTS TO PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that the Canadian teachers' federation has passed a resolution urging the federal government to provide grants to the provinces for general elementary and secondary education? If so, would the Prime Minister discuss this matter at the federal-provincial conference to be held next week, in order to comply with the requests of the Canadian teachers' federation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes; I was made aware of this by the delegation which I had the pleasure of meeting last week. As far as the second part of the question is concerned, initiative in a matter of this kind concerning elementary and secondary education should come from the provinces. All the provinces will be represented here next week, and if they take that initiative the federal government will be very glad to discuss this matter with them.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING SCHOLARSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he now in a position to announce the 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 each that were promised during the election campaign?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not on orders of the day.

Mr. Starr: As a supplementary question, will the Prime Minister be in a position to announce them at some other point in our proceedings?

Mr. Pearson: I hope to be in that happy position, Mr. Speaker, one day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NATIVE INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ian Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of members of the house the fact that a number of prominent Indian representatives from British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec are present in the gallery today.

INQUIRY AS TO TRANSLATION OF WORK BY BEAUCHESNE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the library of parliament has distributed today a list of selected works on procedure, I take this opportunity to ask the right hon. gentleman the following question. Where do matters stand as far as the translation of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms is concerned?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be looking into this matter to ascertain exactly where we stand at the moment, and I will give an answer very shortly.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISTRIBUTION OF WAR CLAIMS FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance and I am sorry I have not given him notice. It is a question of considerable importance to Hong Kong veterans. Has the minister since taking office received requests from any organizations or individuals to publish the report on the distribution made from the war claims fund?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will be glad to look into the matter and if I am incorrect I will advise the hon. member tomorrow.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

PURCHASE OF NEW PLANES—MEETING WITH COMMITTEE OF LIBERAL CAUCUS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has met with a very impressive committee of the Liberal caucus led by the hon. member for Dollard on the matter of the replacement for Viscount and Vanguard aircraft for Trans-Canada Air Lines; and whether, following this meeting, he will soon be in a position to give the house the result of the cabinet deliberations on this matter.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not met any committees from any of the caucuses.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR DEDUCTION OF PART TIME UNIVERSITY FEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Does the minister intend to accede to the request submitted last October 31 by the part-time students' association of the faculty of arts of the University of Montreal, which asks that tuition fees be made deductible from their taxable income?

Has the minister replied to the association?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this matter and all other proposals in connection with legislation which might be brought forward in the next session is now being considered within the department.

QUEBEC—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING CLAIMS FOR CHARITABLE DONATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Did the minister investigate or give instructions to his officials in order to stop their arbitrary and unfair way of reducing by half, and sometimes more, the amounts claimed for charitable donations in the income tax returns of several taxpayers?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I can do no more than to reject the implication contained in the hon. member's question.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I tell the minister that the same situation exists in my riding, will he deny that fact? As a matter of fact, I can give him a number of examples.

Moreover, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) advised me that in his riding, charity receipts claimed for tax deduction purposes are reduced without any investigation or explanation, and even without the taxpayers being informed, which compels them later to pay the tax accordingly.

[Text]

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, I can add nothing to what I have said in answer to the previous question. There are no arbitrary powers given to our officials to reduce these claims without proper investigation. They are charged with the responsibility of satisfying themselves that the receipts are accurate and beyond that I cannot go. As I indicated the other day, the situation is the same all over Canada as it is in Quebec; it is not confined to any particular ridings or areas of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us whether he can have an investigation made in certain tax offices, and more particularly in those of the Quebec area, in order to make sure that civil servants do not behave in a discriminatory and arbitrary fashion?

[Text]

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times I have to repeat that there is no discrimination. We cannot accept this proposition. We are very much aware of these charges that are made from time to time and of the implications suggested by questions of this kind.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. If there is proof of discrimination and arbitrary decisions, can the minister tell us how to advise the taxpayer, in order to cope with that situation?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If hon. members have any particular proof or matters they wish to submit in a private way may I suggest that they do so to the minister and give the minister a chance to investigate if he thinks it desirable to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I have no intention whatsoever of questioning your decision, but the situation that has just been pointed out is not to be found in only one part of Canada but right across the country. Consequently, can the minister assure us there will be an investigation into such discrimination against Canadian taxpayers?

[Text]

Mr. Garland: I can only repeat that there is absolutely no discrimination.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is taking on the nature of a debate, and it is also becoming almost a restated complaint. If hon. members really think they have been aggrieved, or if they wish to bring something of urgent importance to the attention of the minister will they kindly do so, but not at this time. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Is it the same question of privilege?

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I will listen to the statement of the question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, we, on this side of the house, have declared that there was "discrimination" or that arbitrary decisions were made by officials of the income tax division, and the minister has stated that there was no "discrimination".

That is why I rise on a question of privilege for, in my opinion, this concerns the rights of all members. When we make assertions and the minister maintains the opposite, he must, then, let us have the investigation we are asking for in connection with that matter; then we shall produce the evidence accordingly.

That is my question of privilege.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my task to see whether there is a question of privilege or a prima facie case, and I must say, having listened to the minister deny four times this afternoon that there is any discrimination, that I do not see any prima facie case of privilege.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the point raised a while ago by the Minister of National Revenue to the effect that there was no discrimination. I think it is my duty now to bring a few examples to the attention of the house, proving that, contrary to the minister's statement there is discrimination. I shall refer to a letter—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must realize that rightly or wrongly the Chair has given a decision on his alleged point of privilege, and the decision was that there was no prima facie case.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I put to the Minister of National Revenue a question with regard to a paragraph of a letter written to a taxpayer by an official of the taxation division:

> While it is true that our letter of July 24 gave to understand that an official of our department would call on Mr. Tremblay, we realized later on that, in view of the great number of returns, this task would unduly delay the assessment and hence the refund.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

We want to conform to the rules of the house, but when we ask a minister a question—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —and his answer is vague, hardly accurate, hardly precise, then we are accused of wanting to make speeches and not abiding by the rules. Let the minister accept what we are stating and give us the assurance that he will see to it that things are straightened out.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is an abuse of the rules. The hon. member may not know it, but a question should not last more than a sufficient time to explain its urgency or its tenor. The hon. member is making a speech, not asking a question. If it is on the same point, the question has already been decided twice, and I think the hon. member should leave it there.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I have another question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I have another question of privilege, and it is that the minister—

Mr. Speaker: One moment. The hon. member for Lapointe has a question of privilege?

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: All right.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, here is my question of privilege. The minister has misled the house in stating there was no discrimination, no arbitrary decision, and the evidence on that point—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no question of privilege. The minister has denied the implications four times. I have ruled on it twice, and may I suggest we get on with the business before the house. My learned and hon. friend must know he cannot do indirectly what he is not allowed to do directly, and the attempt to get around the ruling earlier, if I can put it that way, is completely out of order and I hope my hon. friend will accept that judgment.

Mr. Caouette: The minister is responsible.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO EQUIPMENT RENTAL PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he can give any indication when he will be able to reveal in the house his interesting plan for a federally supported equipment rental scheme for farmers.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member for Port Arthur has asked me that question, because I am sure he feels the same about me as I do about him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hays: In due course he will have the interesting answer.

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. Is it the intention of the minister to introduce legislation at this session to deal with the problem of stability of price and supply of feed grains for the farmers of eastern Canada?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are looking into this whole matter. This question is before the committee on agriculture now and I understand that on Thursday the members of the committee will be presenting a number of questions to the board of grain commissioners. We have all of these things in mind. We are taking a close look at them, and when we have the answers we will announce them in the house.

Mr. Coates: Do I understand from the minister's statement that no action will be taken with regard to legislation on feed grains for eastern farmers until the agriculture committee has completed consideration of this matter?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LANDS, FORESTS AND WATERS—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the acting house leader. Can he inform the house when the committee on lands, forests and waters will be called?

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Caouette.]

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question which is related to the Columbia river treaty. Will the Prime Minister state now that all the details have been settled as between British Columbia and this government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As has been mentioned in the house, Mr. Speaker, there is one very important detail to be settled, and that is the price of downstream benefits if power is sold in the United States. This is an outstanding important question that is now being considered between British Columbia and the United States.

Mr. Pugh: May I ask a supplementary question. When this is settled, will the treaty then be ratified?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is the only important outstanding question.

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Will the Prime Minister inform the house what other important questions have been settled?

AIR TRANSPORT

HASKETT, MAN.—PROVISION OF LANDING STRIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has anything to report at this time on the provision of a landing strip at Haskett, Manitoba, which is a question of importance to the flying farmers of Manitoba.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I will procure the information and give an answer tomorrow.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO REFORMS RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the President of the Privy Council. Last June 25 the minister stated in the house that in September he would institute reforms in the civil service with regard to bilingualism. Can he tell the house what are those reforms, which have not yet been announced, or should I put my question on the order paper?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a number of reforms are under way. If the hon. member would put his question on the order paper, I would be able to give him a more precise answer.

[Text]

IMMIGRATION

HAL BANKS—ABSENCE FROM COUNTRY WHILE ON BAIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I should like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Bow River as to whether officials of my department questioned the propriety of Hal Banks leaving Canada for the United States in view of the bail he was under.

The answer is as follows. The Department of Citizenship and Immigration exercises no exit control over persons leaving Canada, and such persons are not normally seen or interviewed by Canadian immigration officers. The only exception to this is in the case of persons who wish to have their departure verified, so I assume on that particular day such was not Mr. Bank's wish.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—QUALITY OF TEAM TO BE SENT TO OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the disgraceful showing of the Canadian hockey team in Moscow, does the minister think the team to be sent by Canada to the Olympics, supported by the national fitness council to the extent of $25,000, will be sufficiently strong to be truly representative of top amateur hockey in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

NATIONAL CENTENNIAL ACT

AMENDMENTS CHANGING NAME, ENLARGING MEMBERSHIP OF ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the National Centennial Act to change its short title from the National Centennial Act to the Centennial of Confederation Act and to change the title of the national centennial administration to that of the centennial commission; to provide also that the centennial commission shall consist of a commissioner, an associate commissioner and not more than twelve directors in lieu of eight directors and to provide further for certain administrative changes in connection therewith.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Prime Minister plan to make a statement?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak at any length on the meaning and contents of the resolution before us, because I consider that it expresses very clearly what it intends to achieve.

First of all, the resolution aims at increasing the number of directors from eight to 12. In this way the government simply wants to obtain a fairer area representation and a more adequate intercommunication in a field where it is particularly important to maintain continuous relations and consultation with the various parts of this country and individual groups.

The resolution further aims at giving to the board of directors the necessary authority to undertake, or contribute to, any project without first obtaining the permission or agreement of the governor in council, as long as the required expense does not exceed the amount of $25,000. We believe that this change is desirable, because it will give the board of directors greater flexibility and efficiency.

Finally, the third objective is to amend more particularly in the French version, certain terms of the present act which are not in keeping with historical facts and to which the government of Quebec has strongly objected. For instance, both versions of the act mention the centenary of Canada rather than the centenary of confederation. Moreover, the word "national" in the English version is confusing in the context in which it is used, and resulted in another historical error in the French version. Thus, the latter constantly refers to the "centenary of the nation" rather than to the "centenary of confederation."

The expressions "Canada centennial", "centenaire du Canada", "national centennial" and "centenaire de la nation" have given rise to perfectly justified objections on the part of the premier of the province of Quebec.

He set down those objections in an exchange of correspondence first with the former prime minister of Canada and then with the present Prime Minister. That correspondence began on October 4, 1961, and has already been tabled in this house by the Minister of Justice, on June 27 of this year to be exact.

That correspondence and the debates which took place last summer in the legislative assembly show quite clearly that the government of Quebec will refuse to participate in the centennial celebrations, unless the changes we are proposing today are accepted by the Canadian parliament.

Other changes less important than those are being proposed but, in my opinion, the hon. members will be in a better position to discuss them at the second reading stage of the bill.

Therefore, I do not intend to say anything more at this time.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am somewhat surprised, Mr. Chairman, that the Prime Minister, in whose name this bill appears, has not spoken on this amendment but has left this matter to the President of the Privy Council. I will be speaking at somewhat greater length than he did. The President of the Privy Council has set forth, in simple words, that the reason for these changes is the high minded purpose of the government to bring about an increase in the number of officials and to increase the number of directors from 8 to 12; to improve the efficiency of liaison, as I understand it, by a provision that the governor in council will not be required to give his consent to undertakings or projects costing under $25,000; and finally to change the name because the premier of Quebec has stated that unless this change is made, that province will not co-operate in the celebration of the one hundredth year of Canada's confederation. We have heard of other ultimatums in recent months. Apparently, from the very careful wording of the President of the Privy Council, this is another of those ultimata which have become very prevalent in the course of the past seven or eight months.

Mr. Lamontagne: Because of the mistakes that were made in the act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mention was made of the fact that there had been communication with me, as prime minister, by the premier of Quebec. I would point out that, while I have not the record before me, he stated that the date of that letter was October 4, 1961, and it will be noted that the act in question was assented to on September 29, 1961. In other words, throughout the entire period of the debate that went on in connection with this matter, this question was not raised by the premier of Quebec. It was only when he was asked to make recommendations in regard to the representation of Quebec on this board of directors that, as I recall it, for the first time any suggestion was made in this connection.

I do not think it is quite as simple as the President of the Privy Council would have it. You will have noticed, sir, that the number of directors is to be increased. That is becoming something of a regular course; as soon as the number is increased, immediately any appointments to that board of directors will be of those who are considered to be politically fit. I am sure that in a matter as important as securing the co-operation of all parts of Canada, considerations of political fitness will not be the pre-eminent reason for appointments to this non-party crusade, as it were, on the part of Canadians to bring about a realization in all parts of our country of the meaning of our 100 years of confederation. I believe there is need of a strong centennial administration without regard to party.

A little later on I am going to ask the President of the Privy Council to place on record the list of appointments that have been made to the conference. It is an interesting list, and it is one to which I shall refer. It is one that in my opinion gives greater consideration to political fitness, to patronage packing, than to the great issues that face us and the opportunity of doing something in Canada to bring together all parts of this country in a unity of dedication.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not in the house at the time, but I am informed that last evening the hon. member for Ontario referred to the establishment of a council under the legislation then before the house. He asked, among other things, whether the minister would tell the committee what areas of our population were expected to be represented by the additional five members. An answer was given by the hon. member for Rosedale, I understand, who has from time to time answered for the government, although he does not always get the credit. The answer of the hon. member was "The Liberal area". That was an interesting answer given by the hon. member last evening, if I am correctly informed by those who were present at the time, although for the benefit of posterity the hon. member will remain incognito, because Hansard records that "an hon. member" made that statement. However, it does reveal an attitude of mind. I do not know why the hon. member did not receive identification, because I am sure he would like to look back in future years to having uttered those immortal words; that the reason for the increase in the number of people on the council was to secure extra representation in the Liberal area.

That is a state of mind; and it is very apparent as I look at the appointments made, that the hon. member for Rosedale, although he is just on the periphery of power, was able last evening to speak with authority and indicate the attitude of the government as a whole.

Now, sir, we believe that in the appointments to be made to this council, patronage should not be put on the march, that partisan political objectives have no place in an organization designed to bring together all the people of Canada and all the provinces of Canada. I intend to look over, just in a casual way, the appointments which have already been made since the minister took charge. They indicate a disregard of the principle of non-partisanship which should prevail in connection with the celebration of confederation. At the moment, I intend to do no more than point out these facts, because I know the committee will be most anxious to hear the minister explain how these appointments came about. It could just happen, of course, in the case of a few of these appointments, that they were former Liberal candidates or organizers, or even wives of former Liberal candidates. Up to a point one might consider it was no more than a coincidence.

Mr. Lamontagne: The former Speaker, too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will deal with that, too. We did not make these appointments. They were made by the hon. gentleman, or on the recommendation of his government. I say they are not in keeping with bipartisanship or with multi-partisanship in this House of Commons or in this country. I shall refer to that shortly. I wish to put this list to the minister because it is a who's who of Liberalism to the extent of about 75 per cent of the appointments.

Let us glance over it. One is a former Liberal candidate. Another is a great Liberal worker. A third is a former candidate in the last election. A fourth is a former Liberal M.L.A. On I go. Among these names, of course, are the names of some who might have become members if they had got nominations. There are members of the bench. Of course they are removed from politics, but it so happens that no one who was not was appointed by the present government or its predecessor, the St. Laurent government, is mentioned here. Then there is the wife of the Liberal candidate in Winnipeg. Just a coincidence. Then there is the wife of a Liberal member, a woman of ability and capacity. There is the defeated Liberal candidate in Vegreville, Alberta. I am just giving a few examples. I could go into greater detail, and I am sure the minister would be glad to hear me do so.

Mr. Lamontagne: Go on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But in addition to their political affiliation these people have certain other peculiar propensities and qualifications which made necessary their appointment, whether it be experience as candidates or something else. I hope the minister will go over this list. I hope he will place it on the record because, speaking with the utmost seriousness, with the exception of appointments such as that of Mr. Claude Jodoin—

An hon. Member: George Hees.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no. Mr. Hees did not get on that list. He had a higher dedication. The hon. gentleman is a little behind. He does not know who is on the list. Any time the hon. member who has just spoken wants to intervene, after his present intervention, I shall be glad to hear him.

There is the vice president of the University of Saskatchewan, and there are a couple of other professors. There is Mr. Michener, and then there is a representative of the Legion.

Mr. Lamontagne: The federation of agriculture.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes; David Kirk. There are these few, interspersed among a political glossary. It is a most interesting thing.

Now what are the hon. gentleman and his friends going to do? They have taken over the membership of the organization in large measure and given it to members of their own party. This is an occasion which should be above that type of thing. I am not going to say there would not be occasions when I would not raise objection, but this is something which is, or should be, above party, above any consideration other than the unity of our country.

I object strenuously to this list. It is a list which indicates that this government has no realization of the meaning of a celebration of confederation. It discloses the appointment of several people in a representative capacity but the rest of them, many of them, have no other practical qualification except that they are all members of the party which is now in power. I do not understand this in the context we are now considering. A committee which should be representative of all the people of Canada should be above the suggestion of becoming a party instrument in overwhelming measure.

Now the intention is to increase the number of directors. What does this mean? It means that all the appointments which have been made are out because as soon as the act is amended—

Mr. Lamontagne: I never said that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then could I ask the minister to say which appointments will be continued? The effect will be that they will all be out. If perchance they are reappointed, then of course those who are reappointed will be in. But that is the trend which is taking place.

There is another field to which I would direct the attention of the committee. The board of broadcast governors is, I understand, now being considered as another field for interference.

Mr. Lamontagne: That is the last one you should refer to.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Any time the minister wishes to interrupt, if he will stand up I shall be glad to answer him, because he is going to have an awful lot to answer for.

Now, it would appear, changes are to be made to bring about the strongest possible organization; that is what they say, at least. I want to look back and see what was decided in the past, and ask why the changes? I go back to the first meeting of the provisional national committee. I do this merely for the purpose of having the record clear. It met under the joint chairmanship of the hon. member for Three Rivers and the hon. member for Queens. That was on February 8, 1960. Then on April 18, 1961 the committee further operated. Those attending included four ministers of the federal government and one representative from each of the ten provinces. In addition to the membership to which I have referred, this group consisted of some 37 people, and there were 14 members appointed by the various provinces.

On this committee there is the President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Forestry. Those ministers represent something of the relationship that we endeavour to bring out. It is a joint relationship between the English and the French. We had joint representation in regard to the appointments made outside of those who were appointed by the provinces.

The minister has opened up the whole field by saying that he wants to make this a strong and effective organization. Therefore I think we should have a report now of the whole situation regarding centennial planning. For example, as one looks at what is taking place in one of the fields, namely the world fair, one begins to wonder what is being done.

Mr. Lamontagne: What have you done?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What has been done? What are we going to achieve? Are we going to attain what we hope will be a time of national stocktaking, a rededication for the future? Are we going to attain a program which will mark the birth of this nation as a nation? That would not disregard what took place prior to 1867, when we were not a nation. We were at that time a composite of colonies. There was Lower Canada and Upper Canada, and they were joined together either under the act of union or the constitutional act of 1791. But we did not have a nation. We also had colonies by the sea; Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick. They joined together as a nation on July 1, 1867. These are not my words in 1963; they were the words that Sir Georges Etienne Cartier used in 1867: "We have joined together as a nation".

Great things had been done prior to that time. In what is now known as French Canada there had been a great heritage of several hundred years. In English Canada and in the maritimes—and taking Nova Scotia, for a moment, as an example—there were the knighthoods established under James I of England and James VI of Scotland. Parliamentary institutions were established there, but there was no Canadian nation as such. There were a number of colonies which joined together following the meeting in Charlottetown and later in Quebec, and they joined together under a federal system as a nation.

I think the programs, marking as they do the birth of this nation, must have a strong national flavour. But they must also have local and provincial aspects. I see this celebration in 1967 as something which will reflect the entire record of Canadian history from the days of Jacques Cartier and the Cabots. I see it as something which will show the tremendous contribution made by the church; by the French missionaries who came here; by the French and English explorers who came here; and by those of other racial origins who came to this country prior to 1867.

Mr. Greene: What about Lief Erikson?

Mr. Monteith: Why don't you sit back and learn something?

Mr. Diefenbaker: When I hear that interruption I think of the hon. gentleman in the words of Job: "Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?" I am glad to see there has been special recognition of the undertaking of projects of a capital nature; that there has been recognition of the contribution made by Charlottetown, a contribution recognized in the great edifice now being built in that city. The recognition of what took place in the city of Quebec is above parties; this is a matter that should bring all of us together without regard to party, which will serve to record and preserve our historical and cultural past so as to recognize in particular the contributions made by both English and French.

I also want to underline and emphasize the contribution made by other racial origins who do not want their descendants placed in the position of being second class citizens in this confederation. These racial origins came early in what is now Nova Scotia. The Germans came in about 1758. In other parts the United Empire Loyalists came in the 1780's, many of them being of German and Dutch origin. Other races came in later on to make their contribution to the building of this country into a great nation. At the same time that recognition was given to the basic principle upon which confederation was established there was the assurance that the rights of the basic races should be retained, unchanged and unchanging.

With a view to bringing these things about we suggested certain courses to be followed. The hon. member for Three Rivers, as one of the joint chairmen, announced on October 11, 1961 the federal government's plan to provide for $100 million as its budget. Then he set out certain ideas and suggestions in connection therewith. May I detour for a moment to point out that one of those things was the authorization to the national capital commission to purchase properties on the east side of Sussex drive in Ottawa and restore the buildings thereon to their appearance at about the time of confederation. This was to be a mile of living history. Now it is the history of a mile which will never come into existence because of the stand taken by the government in their refusal to carry out a plan which had in it the nucleus of principles which would have made Ottawa a place not only vital and living in the present but also revealing something of the greatness of its past.

When we were in office we announced that the federal government intended to ask parliament to make grants available for projects in the various provinces, and that the federal contribution should not exceed one third of the agreed cost, and so on. In view of the fact that the minister has opened up the whole matter for consideration I should like to hear him place his plans before this house and the country.

I go back to 1946. At that time I suggested that one of the things that would do more to give us a knowledge of our past and an appreciation of our heritage would be a freedom train to travel across Canada carrying on it the treasures of our freedom beginning with Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights of 1689, in addition those things that made this country possible such as the Quebec Act of 1774. Here in Canada we have the heritage of being the first country within what is now the British commonwealth to secure freedom of religion. We did so 50 years before it was attained in the United Kingdom and we secured it from the United Kingdom parliament. Here the Jews received their freedom for the first time.

Ezekiel Hart was elected to the legislature of Lower Canada in 1807 and it was not until 1832 that his right to sit was fully recognized. Some of us have difficulty getting into parliament but although elected, Hart was not allowed in. But he and all other Jews were granted something for all time that was not extended to people of the Jewish faith in the United Kingdom until a quarter of a century later.

Here in Canada we abolished slavery in 1791 or 1792, before any other nation in what is now the western world. These are some of the things of our past. These are the living things that give strength and vitality to a nation. One of the most interesting debates one can read is that which took place following the introduction by William Pitt, the younger, of the amendment to the Quebec Act in 1791. That debate is worthy of a place in our history books representing as it does the beginning of the concept of independence while at the same time retaining the closest of relations with the motherland.

Then there is the Act of Union. These are things that are part and parcel of this nation. A freedom train would bring them together. I do not know whether Great Britain would allow Magna Carta to be brought over here from the British museum but certainly a prototype could be produced that would be a living embodiment of our freedom. When you read Magna Carta you find that for the first time religious freedom was established within the England of that day. It provided that Jewish people could lend money and could ask for repayment up to a period of seven years, beyond which they were not allowed to collect either principal or interest. Yet within a very few years one of the worst persecutions in all history took place in the England of that day.

The Magna Cartas of 1215 and 1217 and the various Magna Cartas that followed are the golden threads in the tapestry of our nationhood. That is why I suggest to the minister I should like to hear what is being done in this connection.

I should also like to know what the view of the government is with regard to those who today occupy the positions of commissioner, deputy commissioner and directors. I see there is to be a change made in the amendments so that the description of the offices will be "commissioner" and "associate commissioner". I state immediately that I agree with that. We discussed this at length when endeavouring to bring about this legislation. We referred to the associate as a deputy. I feel in that change the government is doing something in keeping with the tradition of our country.

I mention the other appointments, Ernest Cote, assistant deputy minister of northern affairs and national resources and Dr. John Hodgson, assistant secretary to the cabinet. The four men I have mentioned all have a national reputation. I want to point out that when I announced the appointments in the house on January 25, 1963 the hon. member for Laurier, now Minister of Justice, gave his approval to the appointment of the commissioner and the deputy commissioner and pointed out that they were good men and had been well chosen.

In addition to those men the other appointments are Hugh Mills, Halifax, Paul Desmarais, George Metcalf, Dr. Norman MacKenzie, J. R. Murray, managing director of Hudson's Bay Company and Mrs. Marianne Linnell of Vancouver. I say that these individuals are worthy of being continued in their positions. All of them are good people, and I ask the minister whether it is his intention—

Mr. Lamontagne: You can have the answer now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister wants to answer, all right.

Mr. Lamontagne: I can say that it is certainly not the intention of the government to replace any of the present directors of the administration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is the intention to continue them in office?

Mr. Lamontagne: Exactly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And that covers everybody from the commissioner and what is now described as the associate commissioner down. I appreciate that. I expected that would be the answer that would be given by the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently there is disagreement among some of those opposite because they have the same view that the hon. member for Rosedale expressed last week, but I am glad the minister is above that kind of petty pressure. I am not going to repeat what has been said on previous occasions. This whole matter was dealt with at length on September 18, 1961, and discussed by the present Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, and by many other members. We felt at that time that we had brought about a plan that would be beneficial and would assure that confederation would be celebrated as it should be.

There is one other reference I wish to make and it has to do with the change of name. The name today is the "National Centennial Act" but apparently the word "national" is going to be removed. I do not understand that. Instead of being known as the National Centennial Act it is going to be called the "Centennial of Confederation Act". I like the word "national" covering the nation as a whole.

Mr. Lamontagne: It certainly stays there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The word "dominion" has disappeared. During the days of Mr. St. Laurent it became an ugly word and was removed even from the telephone books. Now the word "national" is to be removed. I cannot understand the need of that change. This is a national undertaking. It is said it is objected to by the premier of Quebec. I am one of those who like to see confederation bringing us together in agreement, but surely we are not going to determine the course of a national undertaking on the basis of an ultimatum by any one of the premiers of the provinces. I should like to see words like "this nation" preserved. I know the minister mentioned the fact that there is not agreement in that regard in the province of Quebec.

This is the centennial of the establishment of this nation. This is not the centennial of Canada in its parts. It will be the centennial of all ten provinces of Canada. Certainly, to me, there is no opprobrious connotation in the word "national" in reference to this nation as a whole, nor was there any question of subservience in the term "dominion". I understand the viewpoint of some who say that in the translation there is a different connotation, but in the expression "national" there cannot be another connotation because the word is identical in both languages. Why remove a word that refers to all of the people of this nation, not only the two founding races but all the races of our country? I do not think words like these should be put on the proscript list.

Mr. Lamontagne: They are not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, there must be a reason for removing them. It is not just the action of one taken by caprice. I suggest that if this is to be a national organization, it should remain as a national organization, in its title and description. What we are trying to do by this legislation is to strengthen the bonds of our country. This is the purpose of the President of the Privy Council, and all of us. Then, why not give reconsideration to these conference members? I did not name them out of consideration for the fact that I did not want to put them in their respective slots. I feel that even yet the minister should give reconsideration to this.

We worked on these appointments. I know how difficult it is, because as soon as you pick out an outstanding person belonging to another party, immediately someone will say, he has not supported us. This has nothing to do with the organization. I look at this document I received from the office, and it is similar to the kind of work one finds on John Macdonald's copy of the original draft of the British North America Act. That is one of the things that should be in the records of our country. He did not write anything, but he did a lot of doodling. He drew pictures of some of those who sat around the table. He would have been a caricaturist or cartoonist if he lived today, on the basis of the doodling he did at that time. This is part of our history. I make this plea to the minister on the basis of what is being done: Let us endeavour to forget partisanship. Outside of five or six representative persons on that council, a microscopic eye could not detect the qualifications for the positions they are occupying beyond those of political rightness at the moment.

I am making this appeal. We have a terrible responsibility today with the cleavages in our country, a responsibility to so act that it will not be said of us that we allowed confederation to be weakened. The achievement of confederation is a remarkable one, and the more one looks at it, the more he believes it was a miracle of statecraft. It is one of the miracles of the world. There were so many reasons why these various colonies should not have joined together, and yet they did. In 1775 the French colonists decided to stay as Canadians. They refused the solicitations that were made to them to throw in their lot with the 13 colonies. If it had not been for them, the Canada we have today would not have survived. Franklin put up a great argument. The French of that day answered this argument.

In the light of history, we could not have blamed them if they had listened to the exhortations of Franklin to grasp independence. As a matter of fact, one of the most interesting phases of history is the fact that we in Canada can join the United States any time we feel like it, without any vote on the part of the states of the United States, because under the articles provision is made for Canada entering on the same terms as the original 13 colonies, and that provision still stands.

We chose another course. Your ancestors and my ancestors did not come here for the purpose of following the attractive proposition that might have been the economic result of having joined the 13 colonies which became the United States. The leaders of the American revolution did not understand the French Canadian mind. They did not know that these people were first and foremost Canadians. Whatever our differences may be in this country, I belong to those who still contend that that spirit is as staunchly held today as it was in 1776 and 1867.

History is a great teacher. It was a monumental decision for them to make to merge in 1867 with the numerically greater number of people in Upper Canada, predominantly of British origin, and with the people of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, overwhelmingly of British origin. It was not an easy decision for them to make. There have been great roadblocks since; there have been many difficulties along the path since confederation.

The conference at Charlottetown should be read and reread, and become the knowledge of every student in our public schools, high schools and universities. We do not think enough of Canada. We always see things somewhere else. At the moment I am not criticizing our national broadcasting corporation, but I would like to see it portray something of the grandeur of our past, of our explorers and missionaries such as Radisson and Groseilliers, something of the beginnings in the maritime provinces, something of the United Empire Loyalists and what they stood for, something of those who opened up the western plains, the coureur des bois, the Northwesters, the Hudson Bay Company, something of the Selkirk settlers, and what they all endured in building a nation. Those things are no longer part of the traditions of our people. They do not see, feel or hear something of those traditions, and this is an opportunity to do that very thing.

The fathers of confederation met in Charlottetown and afterwards in Quebec. I think one of the best descriptions of their meeting in Quebec is:

> —Macdonald, Galt, Tilley and Tupper, Cartier, Brown and McGee. They were there from French and English Canada. These fathers of confederation, in their dark Victorian clothes and stiff collars, might seem a less colourful assembly than the eighteenth century group in wigs and bright waistcoats that met in Philadelphia in 1787 to frame the American constitution. But the Quebec fathers also held in their hands the future of half a continent. And it was fitting they should meet in the old capital of New France, beside Cartier's great river of Canada. For here in the 72 resolutions that the conference drew up a new Canadian nation was born.

Sir, that is why I make this appeal. Give us a list of the people of this nation. Make this council worthy of our traditions. Strip this committee of those who, in the eyes and in the hearts of Canadians as a whole will not be looked on as representatives of the people as a whole, without regard to party or religious considerations. In doing that we will be doing something to strengthen confederation.

The fathers evolved confederation. Its genius was not founded on absolutes. Its genius was not in the absolute uniformity of opinion or belief. Its genius was not in the absence of differences. Its strength and its power—the fact it has carried on almost 100 years, and I hope will continue from generation to generation—was not in similarity or uniformity. It was in differences, but those differences settled in reconciliation and a spirit of good will, understanding and co-operation.

In 1963, with all the elements that are today trying to pull this nation asunder, not saying it intentionally but having that effect, we need something of the abiding genius that characterized confederation and those who joined together. We need that once more as Canadians as we celebrate the one hundredth year of confederation. That spirit is tolerance, based on knowledge, of agreement in the larger things of life, and above all, by the determination that we as a nation put into this celebration the assurance that those differences shall not be permitted to pull asunder a nation whose future no one today, in the wildest dreams of imagination, can envisage.

Mr. Lamontagne: May I ask a question of the right hon. gentleman?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Lamontagne: I would like to ask him why, since parliament gave approval to the setting up of this national conference on the centennial in October, 1961, no appointments were made before April, 1963; and second, what would be the names he would recommend to be deleted from the present conference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can tell you this, sir. The officials were meeting; the plans were being made, and I can tell you that 90 per cent of the names on this list would not have been on any list that I prepared, and that we would not allow the domination to be one of party. We wanted it to be a committee that would be representative of all of Canada and the best of Canada. If that is the only defence he has to give to that list, then I rue the possibilities for the future.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it is probably a good thing that the government has found reasons for seeking to amend this legislation, because in so doing we are being given an opportunity to take stock with respect to our plans for the celebration of the centennial of Canada's confederation, which is now less than four years away.

This is a subject which lends itself to references to our great history, such as those made by the Leader of the Opposition. It is a subject that lends itself to expressions of hope, faith and confidence about the future. I dare to hope that as a result of our stock-taking at this time, we may yet make of the celebration of our one hundredth birthday a worth-while event. However at this moment I think it has to be said with all candour that the chances of our having a worth-while celebration in 1967 are very slight. I place the blame for that on the party in power up until April of this year, and on the party now in power.

We have had many words about the celebration of our one hundredth birthday. We have had a great deal of talk about what is going to be done, but the fact is that already some of the projects which had been planned at the provincial and municipal levels have been cancelled, because people at these levels are unsure of what is going to be done nationally. Already precious time has been lost, not to mention the excursions into patronage that have marred this whole picture.

The Leader of the Opposition has referred to what was done by the government when he was prime minister. Part of what I want to say has already been alluded to in the question put to him by the President of the Privy Council, but may I put it on the record again. The act known as the National Centennial Act was given royal assent on September 29, 1961. The Progressive Conservative government had already been in power four years. Even that was pretty late, bearing in mind the warnings that had been given to the Canadian parliament years before, that we should start planning for this event. But even after that it took from September 29, 1961, until January 24, 1963, before the appointments of those to make up the national centennial administration were made. We have already had put on the record today the names of those who are the commissioner, the deputy commissioner and the eight directors.

I hold in my hand a copy of the first annual report of the national centennial administration, which was for the fiscal year 1962-63. I find from this that the board held its first meeting in Ottawa on February 18, 1963. I suggest that was already several years too late. What has the board done? I read from the report:

Until the end of the fiscal year, ending March 31, 1963, the commissioners were engaged in locating office space, recruiting essential personnel, considering those projects which had already been approved by the government and developing a program which would guide the administration's operations in the ensuing months.

Then after a few short paragraphs—the report is all on one page—the commissioners make this statement:

> They have emphasized that planning for the centennial must start now.

Mr. Chairman, if ever the words "too little and too late" apply, I suggest they apply to the attitude that the governments we have had in office have taken toward this important matter of planning our centennial in a way that would mark our history for what it is worth, and also in a way that would chart for us a second century that would be even greater than our first. One hesitates to make many references to what he himself or his immediate colleagues may have said or done about a matter through the years, but I think it is perhaps appropriate in this connection to remind the house that a long time ago some of us started saying that 1967 would soon be here; that if we were going to celebrate our 100th birthday appropriately, we should start planning for it well in advance.

Someone else may have thought of the idea first, but the first person I know to have suggested that we start planning for 1967 in an appropriate way is a distinguished citizen of the city of Ottawa, Mr. Walter B. Mann, head of the English department at Lisgar Collegiate Institute. Mr. Mann is a long time friend of mine, and I know that in 1950 he started suggesting a 17 year plan. He suggested then, and he did so publicly, that we should look forward to our centennial celebration as an event to be greeted, not just with the sound of trumpets and long speeches, but by launching programs of development to make the country one in 1967 of which we could really be proud. I may say that Mr. Mann's idea appealed very strongly to my sense of imagination, and in due course I began presenting this idea to the House of Commons. Back in 1954, nine years ago, I first placed on the order paper of the House of Commons a resolution which read in these terms:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of the establishment of a 100th anniversary committee, with provision for federal and provincial representation, for the purpose of planning the economic and social development of this country on a vast scale, including inter alia, housing and slum clearance, conservation, irrigation and power projects, improvements in transportation, highway construction, the elimination of grade crossings, the building of hospitals, assistance to municipal projects and other public works, and also for the purpose of planning ways and means to strengthen the economy of every section of this country; and that consideration should be given to the advisability of such a program being launched immediately and being pursued vigorously year by year so that on July 1, 1967, the people of Canada will be in a position to celebrate this nation's 100th birthday not only with fireworks and speeches but by the achievement of a land of health and abundance for all our people.

Mr. Chairman, I placed that resolution on the order paper in 1954 with high hopes. I am afraid now that all we are going to have in 1967 are the fireworks and the speeches. The resolution was not debated in 1954 or early 1955. Hon. members know what happens to resolutions if they are down at the bottom of the list. They are not reached. But in March, 1955, during the debate on a supply motion when the grievance raised was unemployment, I took the opportunity to spell out what in that year I suggested might be called a 12 year plan. This was 1955; 1967 was still 12 years away. I suggested that we start thinking in terms of our 100th birthday as an event that we would best celebrate, not just by having fireworks and speeches when that time came, but by developing the social and economic life of our country, by strengthening our economy, by improving our life in every way; that if we did this sort of thing, we would be in a position to have a birthday really worth celebrating. I think probably that speech of mine on March 2, 1955, was the first speech in the House of Commons which suggested that we had to plan well in advance for an event such as the 100th birthday of this country.

The next year, on the editorial page of the Ottawa Journal of March 8, 1956, there appeared a very interesting article entitled, "Looking towards confederation birthday", by that very able writer, I. Norman Smith. On previous occasions I have quoted portions of this article by Mr. Smith and I need not do so again, except to point out that here was a writer of ability, whose articles are well written and widely read, pointing out to us that if we were going to celebrate our 100th birthday adequately we had to plan for it well in advance. Mr. Smith pointed out then that Ottawa, this city, had made a botch of the celebration of its 100 years as a city the year before because it had not planned well in advance, and he hoped that Canada would profit from the mistake that Ottawa had made. I will read the last paragraph of Mr. Smith's article:

> Finally, it must be planned now, and by men with a vivid sense of history and future, men unafraid to be called dreamers. Put such men at work now for even three weeks and they would come up with a blueprint of something that could easily prove the best thing that has happened to this country since confederation.

Others joined in that suggestion in speeches of one kind or another. As a matter of fact, on March 19, 1957, there was reported in the newspapers of the country a speech that Mr. St. Laurent, who was then prime minister, had made the day before at Hamilton. In this speech he took up the theme and suggested that if we were going to celebrate our country's centennial in a proper manner we would have to start planning right away.

There were these several voices. I have named, among others, Mr. Walter Mann. I have referred to my own resolution and to my own remarks on the subject. I have referred to Mr. I. Norman Smith. I have referred to the former prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent. Here were these voices in the early and middle fifties saying that 1967 was just around the corner and it was time we got started. Finally, on December 9, 1957, for the first time, in the light of what happens to private members' resolutions, the resolution I read a moment ago was reached for debate. It is interesting to note that as soon as I had moved it and uttered this one sentence: "Mr. Speaker, the resolution which I have the honour to present to the house speaks for itself," there were two interjections which read as follows, as will be found in Hansard of December 9, 1957, at page 2084:

Mr. Byrne: It certainly does.

Mr. Pickersgill: We shall take it as read.

After I had made my speech urging the House of Commons, the parliament of Canada and the country generally to begin planning without delay for the celebration of our 100th birthday, the first speaker was Mr. John B. Hamilton, then the member for York West and also the parliamentary secretary to the minister of citizenship and immigration. The whole tone of his speech was that I was wasting the time of the house by bringing in such a resolution and that it was obviously nothing more than a resolution full of ideas which my party wished to see enacted. This was the kind of treatment given to my motion. It did not come to a vote; it was talked out.

It was interesting to read the press reports on the debate which took place that day and to read the headlines which the papers put on the reports. I have here a copy of the Montreal Gazette of December 10, 1957, and the headline on the Canadian Press story is: "C.C.F. Urges Bold Plan for 1967 Centennial". We often quarrel with the use of headlines but I am grateful for that headline; I think it caught the spirit of the resolution and of the speeches we made in support of it. The Toronto Globe and Mail of that morning ran the same story but gave it this headline: "P.C.'s spurn C.C.F. Plan for '67 Program". Well, I suppose that was a good headline, too, because if the one in the Gazette caught the spirit of the resolution, the one in the Globe and Mail caught the attitude of the government toward the whole project. Thus it was that back in those days, probably because the idea came from some of us in this minority party, the major parties rejected it. It was then we lost the chance of having a celebration of the kind which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) now says we ought to have. In 1957 the Progressive Conservatives spurned the plan. Finally, however, four years later, in 1961, under the leadership of the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who was then prime minister, the legislation we are now being asked to amend was brought in. But it took another year and a half before people were appointed to carry on the work, and about all they have done so far is to look for office space, recruit personnel and make at long last, a decision that the time to start is now.

In the meantime, as far as references to this matter in the house are concerned, very few have been made to the legislation we now have before us. Most of the attention has been paid to the legislation respecting the world fair which was passed last year and, as hon. members are aware, there does seem to be a great deal of turmoil over that. But I suggest the turmoil surrounding the arrangements for the world fair points to the fact that I was more of a prophet than I realized when I expressed the hope in my resolution a decade ago that we would plan this event in such a way as to make sure that when July 1, 1967, came we might have, not just fireworks and speeches, but a land of health and abundance of which we could be justly proud.

I admit I have offered these remarks in a spirit which is something less than hopeful. I think we as a country lost our chance to have a proper 100th birthday celebration because neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives were prepared to look at this thing in the terms I. Norman Smith suggested in his article in the Ottawa Journal some years ago or in the terms of the speech which the former prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent made in Hamilton, or in the terms of my motion. Indeed, it might not have been considered at all if the provinces and municipalities, realizing that 1967 was coming, had not pressed Ottawa to give a lead. However, in spite of the fact that my observations have not been altogether hopeful, I do express confidence that because the subject has been raised today and because this question is out in the open and we must of necessity take stock of the situation, we will pull up our socks and begin to do something to make this celebration a significant one. If we are to do this, it will call for the display of some of the things the Leader of the Opposition talked about, so that our people can see them —souvenirs, mementos of our history. It will call for an awareness on our part of the greatness of those who brought Canada into being and of our responsibility to bring into being a still greater Canada. All of this calls for a lot more than speeches and fireworks; it calls for the kind of social and economic planning which we proposed when we brought this matter up ten years ago and which we still say is the way to build a nation worthy of celebrating its 100th birthday.

I am grateful that the matter has been reopened today so that we have the opportunity to go into it and assess the position, and I hope the whole question of whether or not this will be done on a patronage basis will be brought out into the open. Surely this is no place for patronage. I was glad the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) replied so readily that the present members of the administration would not be removed. I was glad to hear him say that the additions mean just additions, not replacements. I hope a hard look will be taken at the larger group, the conference which is being formed, to make sure that those who are on the committee represent all the streams of life in this country. I must say that when I heard the Leader of the Opposition berating the government for its practice of patronage I wondered who was talking.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Remembering what the hon. gentleman's party did while in power in Saskatchewan, he ought to start close to home in that regard.

Mr. Knowles: I will come back to Saskatchewan in a moment. Through the efforts of some of my friends in the Progressive Conservative party, the government tabled a couple of interesting sessional papers a short while ago. They were lists of consultants—two lists, one in use by the present Liberal government and one which had been in use by the government which went out of office in April of this year. They are both interesting but I think the old one is more interesting than the new one. Looking at this list—and it is an official document now, sessional paper No. 255, part 1—I find that on page 1 appears the following sentence:

> With regard to Newfoundland, effective immediately, all matters pertaining to Newfoundland will be referred to Mr. James A. McGrath, M.P. and I think at the time of referral he should be supplied with the name and address of the individual who is our normal consultant concerned with the particular problem.

I go over into Ontario, no this is in Quebec, just across the river, and I find an interesting situation there. There the consultant for a certain constituency, the member of parliament for which happened to be a Liberal, was a civil servant. I shall not give his name, except that he was "Dear Tom". Here was a civil servant working for the government of the day, handling the patronage for a particular constituency.

Then I look at Saskatchewan and I find, very interestingly, that the constituency of Prince Albert is listed, and the name of the member of parliament for that constituency is given. We know his name, of course; he is the present Leader of the Opposition. The consultant, the person handling these patronage matters, is listed. I will not give her full name but I will say that the list says she was to be addressed as "Dear Bunny". I thought the Leader of the Opposition was happy to have a dog around the house, but apparently it was "Dear Bunny" when it came to handling the patronage in his constituency.

I hope hon. members will forgive me for this light touch, Mr. Chairman, but I think it necessary after listening to this tirade on the part of the Leader of the Opposition against the present government on the matter of patronage. It is pretty hard to tell which of the two older parties is more adept at that practice. At any rate, I do agree with the Leader of the Opposition that there is no place for it in the administration of our centennial legislation.

Let me say briefly that I can see reasons for increasing the size of the board, as posed in this legislation. I think we should view sympathetically the suggestion that certain changes be made in the title of the legislation and in one or two other places. Like the Leader of the Opposition, I like the word "national"; but if it causes offence in certain places, and we want to achieve unity, let us consider the objection sympathetically. I would go one step further and suggest to the President of the Privy Council that it might even be better—it is not merely a compromise but is better—to change the name to the Canadian centennial act. We are only at the resolution stage, and I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council or the Prime Minister to look at this suggestion. I think we could improve the legislation tremendously and would avoid the appearance that we are avoiding the word "national" if in all places we used the word "Canada" or "Canadian", thus making it clear that what we are proposing to celebrate is the centenary of the confederation of Canada.

I have just one other word to add about the turmoil there is around the use of the word "national". I do not think it hurts us to be reminded that there are those among us who think of Canada as having originally been founded by two nations; that we should take all that into consideration in our attempt today to recast confederation, conserving what we have, and going on to build a better Canada. This matter which is being drawn to our attention, makes us realize that what we have to face is the desire of those in the French speaking part of Canada for a greater measure of autonomy as a French speaking nation and a French speaking group, but not as a province.

Where I think we are in danger of going awry in today's situation is when people like Premier Bennett, and some others, translate this difficulty we are trying to sort out into a case of provincial rights. It is not a reversion to provincial rights that is wanted. We have rather two main groups to consider. We have the French speaking people for whom a greater measure of autonomy seems to be that which they most desire; and we have the English speaking people in the rest of Canada, to whom the benefits of federalism are just as precious as are the benefits of autonomy to the French speaking people. This, I suggest, does not mean that we want to turn our land into a squabble over provincial rights. We have to think of what the two main groups want. I think we can recast and rewrite our constitution so that those of us who so desire can have the benefits of federalism and those who wish can have the benefits of autonomy, up to a point at any rate, within the Canadian family.

I do not think we should be alarmed because the word "national" is brought out into the open in a debate like this. As an English speaking Canadian I like the word. It is a good word. I like this nation to which I belong. But I like the word "Canada" even better. The word "nation" might apply to any one of a hundred nations; but "Canada" is the area, the country, the heritage to which we all belong. Canada is the country we are trying to build for the future, and I think we can build a better Canada if we try to grapple sympathetically with the problem before us, as posed by this particular piece of legislation. I think we can help make for a better future, for a better second century, if we try now to make up for the mistakes we have made in the last few years, and make the celebration of our 100th anniversary what it should be. I have said, and I repeat, that I think precious time, maybe too much time, is being lost. When suggestions were made over the past decade they were ignored. However, there are still three and a half to four years to go, and I think hon. members will realize that some things can still be done. I urge that this stocktaking session we are having be taken seriously, and that we do our best to plan for the kind of centennial which will be worthy of this great Canada to which we all belong.

Mr. Frenette: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that it is five o'clock?

Mr. Gregoire: One minute before five o'clock.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock, so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is now my duty to leave the chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

POINTE-AUX-TREMBLES BRIDGE

The house resumed from Thursday, November 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rouleau for the second reading of Bill S-41, to authorize the construction of a bridge and a causeway over the St. Lawrence river near the city of Pointe-aux-Trembles.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): No, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words.

I put a few questions to the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) and I would be very happy if he could answer them. I shall reply later, if the Speaker gives me his consent.

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, if my memory is good—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I should point out that if the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) speaks now he will close the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, as I said last week, I think this bill is against the public interest and that it is the responsibility of the members of this house to take the necessary steps to kill it.

Mr. Gregoire: That is right.

Mr. Pigeon: During the week end, I had the opportunity to conduct a personal investigation, and I am going to put before the house new arguments to prevent the bill from being passed.

As I said before, all works erected on the St. Lawrence river, including bridges, causeways and wharves, are the exclusive property of either the federal government or the provincial government, or of the municipalities.

To date, Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any private concern which owns such works.

Besides, Canadian authorities have always kept a sovereignty over national resources such as the St. Lawrence river. That is why, Mr. Speaker, they have always refused—

[Text]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has already spoken in this debate and I doubt that he has the right to speak twice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Has the hon. member already spoken in this debate?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am asking the unanimous consent of the house to allow me, in the public interest, to put forward worth-while arguments which all members of the house will find interesting, I believe.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we give our consent. Since the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has worth-while arguments that should be brought before the house, we agree that he should put them forward, otherwise this would be closure.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The only condition under which the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm can speak again is by unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Agreed.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Gregoire: Closure. We will help the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed very seldom that the federal parliament has to deal with legislation such as Bill S-41 which seeks the authorization to build:

A bridge and a causeway on the St. Lawrence river—linking the shore of 94th avenue, in the city of Pointe-aux-Trembles, Montreal.

As was mentioned a while ago by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who, I regret, was denied the right to speak—

Mr. Gregoire: That is closure.

Mr. Caouette: —I feel that any bridge which crosses the St. Lawrence should belong to the federal government, to the province or even to a municipality, under an agreement with the federal government in many cases.

However, there was no need, in my opinion, to ask us to pass a bill of this nature to authorize the construction of a bridge which will give privileges to a private enterprise or even to a private individual.

I will say to the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) that the same thing was done elsewhere. Any time a person wishes to reach the shore opposite his home, he just has to build a bridge without asking the government's permission or without having to present a private bill. He just goes ahead and if the federal government ever needs that land or has to change something to the private bridge, it is not bound by a bill or by legislation passed by the house.

Mr. Speaker, I will read the preamble of Bill S-41:

Whereas Developpement Central Ville de L'Isle Inc., a company duly incorporated by letters patent issued under the companies act of the province of Quebec, has acquired title to, is the owner and has the control of most of the territory of two islands lying within the harbour of Montreal, namely, Isle Ste Therese and Isle-aux-Asperges, most of which territory is presently used as farmland;

It appears that Developpement Central Ville de L'Isle Inc. is the owner and has the control of the lands on Isle Ste. Therese and Isle-aux-Asperges.

Whereas to provide for the full development of this territory, it is necessary to subdivide it into residential—

This has actually nothing to do with the federal government—commercial—

Mr. Rouleau: That is why they want to build a bridge.

Mr. Caouette: I hear my hon. friend from Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) say that is why they want to build a bridge.

It is all very well to build a bridge, but I object to a bill which would bind the federal government through the construction of a private bridge. It should be possible to find a way to build a private bridge without binding and tying up the federal government by passing a federal act to that effect.

—it is necessary to subdivide it into residential, commercial and industrial lots, under an elaborate town planning system.

Here again, it does not come under the jurisdiction of the federal government to decide or even consider whether the company in question should have an elaborate town planning system.

That rests with the municipal authorities and the provincial authorities, as is the case in Ontario. Here, in Ottawa, when you talk about town planning, it concerns the municipality and the province, even if the federal government may put forward a few suggestions.

And further on, in the preamble:

Whereas the construction of a bridge and causeway over the St. Lawrence river in the area would contribute to such development and create employment: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the construction of a bridge and a causeway over the St. Lawrence river would contribute to such development and create employment.

Now, what would be the length of this bridge, what would be its approximate cost?

Why is it that the federal government does not build a bridge which would span the St. Lawrence river and reach those islands where, no doubt, houses could be built in residential locations?

We do not object to the construction of a bridge by the federal government, but we are strongly opposed to the construction of a private bridge, with the agreement of the central government, sanctioned through a bill authorizing a company or an individual to become the owner of the bridge.

The first clause of the bill reads as follows:

Subject to the provisions of this act, Developpement Central Ville de l'Isle Inc. is authorized to construct, maintain and operate a bridge—

Mr. Speaker, this should imply that the bridge might be a toll bridge under the circumstances, that the company itself would have the right to establish the toll rate.

Mr. Rouleau: That can be amended.

Mr. Caouette: So I realize, but it has not been amended. We are discussing Bill S-41, from the Senate.

I continue reading clause 1:

—maintain and operate a bridge on the St. Lawrence river, linking the shore of 94th avenue, in the city of Pointe-aux-Trembles, Montreal, to the shore of Ile-aux-Asperges, and causeway linking Ile-aux-Asperges and the shore of Ile Ste Therese.

At the same time, when referring to the explanatory notes, we find this:

The sole purpose of this bill is to authorize the company to construct a bridge and a causeway over the St. Lawrence river thus making possible the development of two islands lying within the harbour of Montreal.

The lands involved are presently used for farming but the project will make it possible to develop them into residential, commercial and industrial properties.

The bill contains the usual safeguards, namely, that the governor in council must approve the plans and location; the company must observe such regulations for the security of navigation as may be prescribed by the governor in council; and the usual time limits are placed on the commencement and completion of construction.

Mr. Speaker, we, in this corner of the house, cannot give our support to a measure of such importance.

We are in favour of private enterprise, but we recognize that there is such a thing as public property which belongs to the people and, as such, must be protected. Now, when we have a means to cross over a stream from one side to the other, it seems to me that belongs to the federal government, just like the bridges between the north and south shores of the St. Lawrence, be they located at Montreal, Valleyfield, Quebec city or anywhere else. Those bridges do not belong to private individuals or private enterprise but to the government.

As a matter of fact, as I pointed out a while ago, some of those bridges were built thanks to contributions from the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government.

I will now read section 2—

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member for Villeneuve allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Boulanger: During his remarks, the hon. member talked about a bridge linking one shore of the St. Lawrence river to the other. I think the hon. member made a mistake, or else he exaggerated, because it is an island and there can be no question of from one shore to the other.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I will reply to my hon. friend from Mercier. The way he put his question, an island would not have any shore—

Mr. Boulanger: It is because the hon. member said from one shore to the other, implying "of the St. Lawrence river".

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, whether we go from the north shore to the south shore on the St. Lawrence river or from the shore of an island to the bank of the St. Lawrence, there is certainly—

Mr. Boulanger: There is certainly a difference.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, whether we start from the shore of an island to get to the shore of the St. Lawrence, there are still two shores, and it takes a bridge to reach both. I regret the hon. member for Mercier does not understand that an island also has shores.

Mr. Boulanger: I was merely asking you to be more explicit.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Mercier for his attention towards me.

Mr. Speaker, clause 2 reads as follows:

The said bridge and causeway shall be constructed and located under, and be subject to, such regulations for the security of navigation of the said river as the governor in council prescribes. To such end Developpement Central Ville de l'Isle Inc.—

Mr. Speaker, we do not know the names of the directors or those of the shareholders of that company. We cannot find them anywhere.

I read on:

To such end Developpement Central Ville de l'Isle Inc. shall submit to the governor in council, for examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and causeway and a map of the location, giving the soundings accurately, showing the bed of the stream and the location of other bridges, and shall furnish such other information as is required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and until the said plans and location are approved by the governor in council the said bridge and causeway shall not be built or commenced; and, if any change is made in the plans of the said bridge and causeway during their construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the governor in council and shall not be made or commenced until it is so approved.

Mr. Speaker, you will admit that I stick to the spirit of the bill, since I am quoting the different sections.

Mr. Rouleau: This is a filibuster.

Mr. Caouette: And now section 3 reads as follows:

The construction of the said bridge and causeway shall be commenced within three years after the plans therefor have been approved by the governor in council—

We note that this project could be completed in three or four years and I am wondering whether the construction of houses has not been undertaken on these islands called Ile Ste Therese and Ile-aux-Asperges. And I now read on:

—and shall be completed within three years after such commencement; otherwise the powers granted by this act shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the undertaking as then remains uncompleted.

Mr. Speaker, there is a point which seems to me quite ambiguous and equivocal. It is this:

Otherwise, the powers granted by this act shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the undertaking as then remain uncompleted.

To build, go across, or do what precisely?

Mr. Beaule: A flying bridge.

Mr. Caouette: To build a "flying bridge", as suggested by my hon. friend for Quebec East (Mr. Beaule). And further on, in section 3:

Provided, however, that if such approval is not obtained within three years after the passing of this act, the powers granted for the construction of the said bridge shall cease and be null and void.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Dollard, who is a man of ability and good will, should have tried to submit a more serious bill than the one brought forward. In fact, I sat in this house from 1946 to 1948 and never was such a bill introduced, asking to authorize a private corporation or an individual to build a bridge across the St. Lawrence river, or from one bank to an island located in the middle of the river, in order to facilitate the construction or creation, if you prefer, of projects which could be residential or industrial and probably commercial. They do not know exactly where they are going, but nevertheless they want a bridge to go there.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to let that bill go through if we do not get more information from the hon. member for Dollard, and in order to allow him to supply the information, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lapointe:

That Bill No. S-41 be not now read the second time, but that it be given a six month's hoist.

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that the points raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) in support of his amendment are not valid. I think we should proceed immediately with the second reading of this bill and, if need be, put the question to a vote. I suggest the bill needs no explanation.

Besides, when the hon. member for Villeneuve says he has never seen such a bill adopted, I think he overlooked a few, because in 1961 the house passed—

Mr. Caouette: I was not here then.

Mr. Rouleau: In any case, he ought to know about it.

Mr. Caouette: It was passed because I was not here.

Mr. Rouleau: He should know that in 1961 the House of Commons passed a similar bill which contained almost the same sections as the one which is being studied today. It is the bill concerning the corporation of the Three Rivers bridge; the said corporation was authorized in the same way by parliament to build a bridge over the St. Lawrence river. It is a private company.

Mr. Caouette: It has not yet been built.

Mr. Rouleau: As far as the St. Lawrence river is concerned, under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, an act of parliament is needed to allow a corporation to build a bridge over the St. Lawrence river, whether the waterway is to be crossed completely or in part.

In this case, it is intended to build a bridge not longer than 500 feet, so that the people concerned may move about on an island which they own. It is nothing more than that.

I am asked today to give the names of the members of that company. I am glad to do so: the president is Mr. Conrad Bock, the director is Mr. Robert Desy, notary, of Montreal and the secretary-treasurer is Miss Denise Cournoyer, also of Montreal.

Mr. Caouette: These are the temporary directors?

Mr. Rouleau: They are the actual directors of the company. The one who is most interested in that company is the president, Mr. Conrad Bock.

Mr. Gregoire: Are there permanent directors in the company?

Mr. Rouleau: As far as I know, there are no other directors than those I just mentioned to the house.

Mr. Gregoire: Are those three the only shareholders?

Mr. Rouleau: To my knowledge, the three of them are the only shareholders in the company. There are no others.

Mr. Gregoire: By virtue of what were they incorporated?

Mr. Rouleau: By virtue of an act of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Gregoire: The first or the second part?

Mr. Rouleau: If the hon. member for Lapointe had listened to me when I introduced the bill last week, he would know that I gave all those details. I explained at that time why it was impossible to build such a bridge without going through this procedure.

There is nothing to make such a fuss about. The purpose of the bill is to authorize a company to build, over a part of the St. Lawrence river, a bridge of only 500 feet, to enable the people concerned to proceed with the development of an island near Montreal.

I am convinced that the building of this bridge would help stem unemployment in Montreal and ensure an excellent development in the limits of the city.

In the circumstances, I ask my hon. friend from Villeneuve to be kind enough to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member whether this bridge will be a toll bridge?

Mr. Rouleau: When the company first came before the Senate, its intention was to build a toll bridge. But following the objections that were raised in the committee of the other place, the bill was amended and the company was not authorized to build a toll bridge there.

Mr. Caouette: Could the hon. member for Dollard tell the house whether that company is presently operating on the island of Montreal or outside the city? Is the company engaged in some works or in the building of homes?

Mr. Rouleau: This island measures about 2,000 acres, 1,737 of which can be used. Out of those 1,737 acres, 1,480 are owned by the company. Moreover, the company has options on the other lands.

So far, the company has applied for the loans required for the construction of that bridge. Therefore the company is operating.

Does that answer your question?

Mr. Caouette: Did the hon. member for Dollard inquire from the federal authorities in order to find out whether the federal government would not take the responsibility of building such a bridge to those two islands?

Mr. Rouleau: Last week, the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I think, inquired about the merits of a private enterprise erecting a bridge over a stream like the one in question.

Generally speaking, I think the construction of bridges rests with both provincial and federal governments.

The proposed structure will be only 500 feet long and will make possible a private development. In my opinion, it should not be expected that either the federal government or the province will build a bridge for the sake of private individuals. I feel that if the company wishes to develop an island it owns, it should also make the necessary expenditures to get to that island.

Mr. Speaker, if the bill is given second reading, our hon. friends will have every opportunity of discussing its various clauses when they are examined by a standing committee of the house.

Mr. Caouette: We do want to bring up the subject again.

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to the remarks of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Dollard, who surely did not put forward very strong arguments in his attempt to disprove the merits of the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

I do not often agree with the views of that hon. member.

In my opinion, the hon. member for Villeneuve was too conservative this time in asking that this bill be hoisted for six months.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I feel that the hon. member should withdraw his insult to the hon. member for Villeneuve whom he called a Conservative.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I made no reference to narrow-mindedness. If I had, the hon. member for Lapointe could have thought I was alluding to him. I actually said that the hon. member for Villeneuve had been too conservative in his remarks, because he should have suggested that consideration of the bill be postponed for a much longer period than six months.

In my humble opinion, there are reasons for which this amendment ought to be adopted.

While attempting to refute the reasons the hon. member for Villeneuve had given for moving the amendment, the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) tried to compare the Developpement Central Ville de l'Isle Inc., to the Three Rivers bridge corporation.

The two corporations have been set up for quite different purposes. In the first place, in 1961 the Three Rivers bridge corporation submitted a bill that it was my privilege to sponsor. The object of the bill was not to further private interests but to develop the economy of a whole region, that of the heart of Quebec.

The arguments marshalled then for the passing of that bill were very serious. They rested, first, on the solvency of the directors of the corporation and their business experience; moreover, they asked for the special powers needed, under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, to carry out a project studied many times over a period of years by engineers for the provincial government as well as for private enterprise.

With regard to this bill, the hon. member for Dollard may lack some information, and he might be very interested to learn that the corporation of Developpement Central de Ville de l'Isle Inc. would own approximately 1,400 acres of land on Ile-aux-Asperges as well as hold options on a large section of the rest of it.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Dollard is aware of the facts, but in my opinion, the members of the house ought to be. This corporation requesting special powers from this house today is on the verge of bankruptcy, so much so that the lots were bought four years ago from a mortmain corporation, and no capital and even no interest was paid for them; moreover, legal action was taken against the corporation several times before the superior court in Montreal.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, we are discussing the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Villeneuve to the effect that second reading of this bill should be postponed for six months.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member who now has the floor goes well beyond the limits allowed by the proposed amendment.

Mr. Pigeon: Reasons are being put forward.

Mr. Rouleau: I should like to have the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. Paul: I do not know whether the hon. member for Dollard has been enlightened by the remarks I just made but I am of the opinion that they are in order because I stated at the very beginning that the hon. member for Villeneuve had submitted an amendment for a six months' hoist, and I am now giving the reasons for favourable consideration of this amendment. My remarks concern the proposed amendment and the solvency of the corporation asking the house for the privilege to build a bridge, and the interruption by the hon. member for Dollard will not divert me from the subject I intend to deal with.

On several occasions the company was sued before the superior court in Montreal, and often threatened with seizure and sale of its properties by the sheriff. This mortmain corporation whose name I shall not reveal, has paid its creditors to keep a mortgage on the properties sold. In addition, Mr. Bock, the president of the company sponsoring this bill, is insolvent as you will find out by inquiring from the St. James street branch of the Bank of Montreal where you will be told that Mr. Bock is unable to manage his business.

It might be a good thing to grant special powers to a corporation but not to insolvent individuals.

I believe that this would be a colossal mistake. Besides, the hon. member for Dollard could perhaps try to disprove the statement that the municipal council of Pointe-aux-Trembles, at their meeting of November 4 last, refused to approve the construction of that bridge because they were well aware, undoubtedly from the information received, of the hazards of unfair use of that bridge, because the powers that would be given the corporation would be practically unlimited and Ile-aux-Asperges would become a closed island, since it would then be left to the whim of the directors of that corporation to impose burdensome charges. Now, Ile-aux-Asperges being closed, its residents would have to suffer inconvenience beyond any limit compatible with individual freedom.

And that is not all. Supposing for a moment that this company could benefit from the passing of this bill, it would go before its creditors and say: "We now have authorization from the federal government to build a bridge". It would then borrow money, not to start the construction of the bridge but rather to pay off old mortgages which have not been reimbursed for four years and it would carry on with the construction of the bridge over a period of more than three years.

Then, the company would be forced to come back before us and ask for an extension of the same powers for another period of three years, but in the meantime, the creditors would not get more benefits, because this bill is introduced for the sole purpose of paying off the debts of that corporation.

The directors mentioned are unknown in financial circles, except for Mr. Conrad Bock who is recognized as being insolvent. Among the others, Miss Cournoyer has been mentioned, and I do not think that she ranks among the business personalities of the metropolis. As for the other director, I have forgotten his name.

In short, it is dangerous to grant to an insolvent company the means to recover funds which will be used for other purposes than those for which they would be granted.

The municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles is justified in objecting to the construction of the bridge.

Mr. Gregoire: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Paul: Certainly.

Mr. Gregoire: Is the said Mr. Bock who has just been mentioned by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere a director of Eagle Lumber Company?

Mr. Pigeon: No, no.

Mr. Paul: No, I think that the hon. member for Lapointe is referring to Mr. Germain Bock.

Mr. Pigeon: This is not at all the same thing.

Mr. Paul: It is not the same Bock, he is not interested in the same business, because the one of whom we are speaking today is well known in legal circles, while the hon. member for Lapointe is referring to a gentleman who is well known in financial circles and his reputation is much above that of the fellow of whom we are now considering the solvency.

The corporation of Pointe-aux-Trembles has good reasons to object to parliament giving the power requested by Developpement Central Ville de l'Isle Inc. And why? Supposing a residential centre were established on Ile-aux-Asperges and that the company became insolvent—anyway it could not become insolvent, for it is already so. But supposing it were publicly confirmed at that time, the municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles would have to assume the cost of building approaches to the bridge, of lighting and maintenance, and everything would fall back upon the taxpayers of the municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles which would have to pay a rate not yet established, for using that bridge, as long as the company exists.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think this would be by-passing the authority best placed for judging the matter, that is the very municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles which knows the site, the possible advantages and disadvantages of building that bridge and certainly also the standing wealth and solvency of the company directors. As a matter of fact, the municipal authorities are afraid that, if services, once established, cannot be continued, the principals, that is the present officers of the corporation of the municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles will have to carry everything.

I am convinced it would ill beseem parliament to award jurisdiction over the St. Lawrence river, which is an international waterway, to a private concern. It would be the first time the parliament of Canada passed a bill supporting a private enterprise in the full meaning of the term.

The Three Rivers bridge corporation, Mr. Speaker, cannot be compared in any way with this company. The Three Rivers bridge corporation is having quite a hard time to carry out its project, even though its members are very capable businessmen. The whole district of Three Rivers, Drummondville, the north shore and the south shore will benefit from that bridge.

Mr. Speaker, the object of the present bill is to favour a strictly private company engaged in housing development on an island in the St. Lawrence river. The bridge in Three Rivers will connect both shores of the St. Lawrence, whereas we are being asked today by the Developpement Central Ville de l'Isle Inc. to authorize the construction of a bridge and a causeway to connect one shore of the St. Lawrence to an island known as Ile-aux-Asperges.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we would have liked very much to know whether this company has complied with the Quebec companies act, first of all, and then, whether it has submitted every year a statement of its operations and is still in existence, because otherwise, we would be providing a company with a dangerous weapon.

In my opinion, in view of the financial situation of the directors of the company, and in view of a new situation which would be created because it would be the first time that extraordinary powers would be granted to a private company, I am convinced that parliament would not act in a businesslike manner.

I am of the opinion that we should "buck" this bill. We should take all necessary steps to support the amendment of the hon. member for Villeneuve, who was very generous a while ago, I am sure, by refraining from simply asking for the six months' hoist. Hence, I shall be glad to support the amendment of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), for the reasons he indicated and also for the reasons which were forwarded to me, urging me to object to the carrying of the bill.

I am quite aware of the fact that the sponsor of this bill in the house is a very active hon. member, but I think he somewhat missed out in failing to get all the necessary information concerning this project. Had he known the true financial position of this company, I am sure he would have never come before the house as sponsor of this bill.

I think we should simply and solely reject this bill, but first we should take a decision on the hon. member for Villeneuve's amendment, which I hope will get the support of the majority of the hon. members.

[Text]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Having listened to the debate so far I wish to voice our support for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). Indeed, I would urge that the sponsor of the bill dissociate himself from this scheme.

I think the comments made by the various speakers have overwhelming convinced us—certainly, they have convinced me—that this is a most improper piece of legislation and that we are getting into an area in which parliament should not venture. I am not against free enterprise or private enterprise but this is one area where we should not be giving a private company the right to enter into an undertaking of the sort we now have under consideration. I would appeal to hon. members on the other side who may be thinking of voting in favour of this bill—I can tell by their smiles that some of them obviously are—to consider exactly what principle they may be endorsing if they do so.

The last speaker drew attention to what I consider to be an insurmountable obstacle in the way of the bill. If this company is as weak as it is said to be, what are we going to do if, six months after being given this power it goes bankrupt? What about the people who buy homes on this island? We have no guarantee that they will not be at the mercy of this company. We have no means of knowing the company will not misuse its powers to control public access. It looks to me as though this is nothing but a land speculation scheme and that once the company secures these powers and gets permission to build this bridge there is nothing to stop it selling the whole scheme at a profit, stepping out and reneging on its obligation to build the bridge, thus making a fool out of parliament.

If a bridge is to be built, surely it should be built by public authorities, either municipal or provincial, and be under public ownership. Let the people who own the land get advantage from better access to it. We all know that once a bridge is built the value of the land will rise. These speculators are the ones who will make the killing, not the people who bought the land originally, lived on it, and probably paid for it. I do not think parliament should concern itself with such a speculative undertaking. I was interested in what the last speaker had to say about the individuals who were undertaking this venture. Their financial solidarity is very questionable. If people of this type are even contemplating a venture of this sort we should have nothing to do with it, because we would be assisting them to get into a situation which would reflect on us and on the municipality. I was also interested to hear that the local municipality itself was opposed to this project. Surely, that should carry some weight with members of this house.

This is not a government measure so we can look at the matter dispassionately and in a non-partisan manner. If the local municipality is opposed to the measure on what appear obviously to be good grounds, how can we go against them and support this principle? As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, we will oppose the bill, and I hope all hon. members will do the same. It seems to me that, rather than give the bill a six months' hoist, it would be preferable to kill it completely at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, contrary to my hon. friends opposite, I must congratulate the sponsor of this bill.

As far as the amendment is concerned, I find it amazing that it is the members of the official opposition in the house, who have no interest whatsoever in that riding, that seem most interested in having the bill postponed, for that is obviously what they are trying to do.

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Boulanger: I am going to do like the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I will not allow him to ask a question because his question would be silly, as we know. Besides, he only wants to delay me, knowing that I have only a few minutes at my disposal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am from the constituency of Mercier, where this project is to be carried out. I wish to state that the so-called inquiry which was presumably made by my hon. colleague for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and submitted to my hon. colleague for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) is not worth much. A few moments ago, I saw the latter reading certain documents, and I had occasion to observe the legerdemain that went on. In any case, Mr. Speaker, and contrary to the conclusions of the inquiry made in the county by my hon. friend, the inquiry which I made myself with some colleagues gave us the proof that the allegations we have just heard are erroneous. We know, for instance that the municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles is not against the project, and I have correspondence to prove it.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Speaking on this bill, I have referred to the proceedings instituted against the company, and my statements can be verified in the record office of the superior court in Montreal.

The hon. member for Mercier does not have the right to contradict another member—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Paul: —I feel that he does not have the right to question my statements; first of all, he may not contradict another member; besides, my statements can be verified at any time in the record office of the superior court in Montreal.

He has no right to impute intentions to me; he does not have the right to create the impression that this bill is no concern of ours. Where public administration is concerned, it is the duty of every member of the house to take part in the debate, and not just the privilege of the member for the constituency directly concerned.

Mr. Boulanger: Just as I thought: there is no question of privilege. It was merely an attempt to distort my words.

As I was saying, several of my colleagues have mentioned the municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles as being opposed to the project. That is what I spoke about and nothing else. I said nothing of the remarks concerning legal action. However, as far as the attitude of the municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles is concerned, I have looked into the matter myself and I have found that it has never opposed the project.

Indeed, it could not protest at this time; if it wishes to do so, it will have the opportunity of making representations when consideration is given to the technical aspect of the project since the question of the bridge approaches is the only one which concerns Pointe-aux-Trembles. As far as the islands in question are concerned, they come under the town of Varennes as part of its territory. Consequently, the investigation carried out by my opposition colleagues has nothing to do with Pointe-aux-Trembles. The project comes under the jurisdiction of Varennes on the south shore.

The municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles was only interested in the approaches to the bridge, as they were to open on 94th avenue in Pointe-aux-Trembles, and it wanted to be sure that the approaches would be built in a proper location, without any prejudice to anyone. On the whole the municipality of Pointe-aux-Trembles, contrary to what my hon. friend has alleged, never expressed official opposition to that project.

Now, as concerns the solvency of the corporation, wishing to build that bridge, my learned friend is a lawyer and he knows very well what he should do in all that concerns legal procedures. Personally, I know nothing about that. I can only speak of the project itself.

Should this project be developed—knowing what prices are asked for lots available on the island of Montreal—you can readily imagine what it would mean in my constituency of Mercier and to its 281,000 residents. Such a project of residential development, low cost housing and lots would certainly be appreciated by both the labourers and the white collar workers, or middle class people.

Now, in my opinion, those lots would be much cheaper than those on the island of Montreal.

In my constituency, there is a considerable number of unemployed. And this is the very kind of development that would give work to hundreds of workers. Also, this would allow the constituency of Mercier to expand. And let me add that it is a beautiful constituency, perhaps the finest on the island of Montreal.

Mr. Gregoire: It would be a shame if it could not remain as it is.

Mr. Boulanger: I thank the hon. member for Lapointe. That is why I was elected with a majority of 14,000 over the Social Credit candidate who ran second.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it is six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour reserved for private members' business having expired, the house will now revert to the business interrupted at five o'clock.

AMENDMENTS CHANGING NAME, ENLARGING MEMBERSHIP OF ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to amend the National Centennial Act to change its short title from the National Centennial Act to the centennial of confederation act and to change the title of the national centennial administration to that of the centennial commission; to provide also that the centennial commission shall consist of a commissioner, an associate commissioner and not more than twelve directors in lieu of eight directors and to provide further for certain administrative changes in connection therewith.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, the resolution now before us aims at amending in some ways the National Centennial Act and comprises three main points.

First, it is proposed to change the present title to that of centennial of confederation act.

Second, it is proposed to enlarge the agency's powers, to increase the number of its directors from eight to 12, and to designate an associate commissioner.

We believe, Mr. Chairman, that the new title is better as it is more adequate.

In my opinion, the Canadian nation has been in existence for a much longer period. This change is the result of representations made by the province of Quebec and for once, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) has paid attention to the claims of Quebec. This is an auspicious event and it is to be hoped that this happy experience will be more often repeated from now on in other fields.

As for the extension of powers, we understand that the commission, in order to be efficient, must be free from certain restrictions and enjoy a degree of freedom; consequently, we are willing to give it some discretion—comparative discretion, of course —but we are also asking its directors to keep the members of the house informed of its activities and the steps which will be taken for the organization of the centennial celebrations. We rely entirely on the minister responsible for this commission and we are convinced that he will take the necessary action.

As to the section concerning the appointment of other members on this commission we are no longer against it since the minister has formally committed himself not to make of this commission a refuge for displaced or hard up politicians. We understand that the reason for appointing other members is to make the commission more balanced in that it will be more representative and the views of various parts of the country will carry more weight.

Canada is made up of different elements with varied origins, and we should use every possible means so that this anniversary is truly a Canadian celebration.

But, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said this afternoon, there is little time left. We have lost precious moments. And if we want to celebrate our centennial with more than fireworks and a parade, it is urgent to get to work without delay.

Less than four years separate us from 1967. And if we want these celebrations to have a tomorrow, if we want to leave our descendants concrete proof of our faith in the future of our country and of our appreciation of things that have been accomplished, it is high time to do something.

Energetic measures must be taken immediately. Here I might add that if those measures were taken immediately, they might not solve the unemployment problem, which is so acute in our country today, but they would be temporary steps that might alleviate it to a great extent.

Let us improve our country, our provinces and our municipalities. Let us take every possible means to encourage the initiatives of private citizens, organizations and companies.

Our people do not lack initiative and if they feel that their efforts have the support of an agency like the centennial commission, I am convinced they will do things of which the Canadian nation will be proud.

Let us put the celebrations to good use and show the world at large that we are a great nation, that we have the makings of greatness.

It goes without saying that the centennial celebrations will be a festival of remembrance. We will have to bring back to life the history of our land. Let us not lose that occasion to pay our forefathers the tribute they have so richly won by their work and their perseverance. We will take advantage of the celebrations to proclaim far and wide the merits of all those who have made confederation, of those who have built our Canadian nation. I am thinking here of the members of the liberal professions, of the workers in all fields of human endeavour, of businessmen and industrialists, in short of all those who have built Canada as we know it today.

I think, however, that we must put to profit the few years left to prepare ourselves for the celebrations with dignity, by pooling our resources and putting behind us all spirit of partisanship, in order to reach this national maturity essential to the survival of any nation which wants to forge ahead and play an important part on the world stage.

There is a lot to do in the meantime. In the east as in the west of Canada we hear conflicting voices. Various groups are trying to destroy the ties which bind together all Canadians; these groups are, I think, in a certain sense, pursuing a noble ideal and their mission is not altogether without merit. But I sincerely feel that it would be wrong to preach anything which might divide us at a time when we are witnessing numerous examples of solidarity and of unity in the world.

We should not overdo anything, as some dissident groups would like us to. We should try to find out what could bring us together rather than divide us.

We should approach our problems in the same spirit which brought Canada into being, and I am satisfied that it is possible to achieve, whatever the more pessimistically inclined may think.

There are many good elements in this country, and as long as we may count on the sincere good will of our English and French fellow citizens, there is room for hope.

One of the best ways of marking the centenary of our confederation would be, I think—and, on this point, I am pleased to recall the definite undertaking of the Prime Minister—to bring all Canadians under a single and distinctive flag and hear our national anthem, "O Canada", sung in Quebec as well as in Vancouver or Halifax.

Should we not also avail ourselves of this anniversary to bring our constitution home, so as to enjoy at last, the full powers of a truly adult nation.

If we really have the will to do so, if all Canadians want to come together and hold out their hands in loyalty to each other, I am convinced that all those prejudices, whether well founded or not, which are separating us at this time, will spontaneously disappear. Mutual respect and full enactment of the British North America Act are the best means to make Canada a great country and the two nations of which it is composed, happy people and model citizens.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, while confederation is being discussed in all parts of the country, we are dealing with a resolution to change the title of the National Centennial Act to that of the centennial of confederation act, which I think is much more appropriate, when we refer to confederation, than was the designation "national centennial".

In fact, as we have heard it said so many times and as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) stated himself this afternoon, the nation has existed for well over a hundred years. Indeed, Canada was discovered in 1534, that is to say 430 years ago. And as far as the French Canadian element is concerned, this represents four centuries of history which, I hope and believe, we shall be celebrating in 1967 at the same time as the centennial of the Canadian confederation.

Today, we can read and read over our history since 1534. Of course, we find in it satisfactions and disappointments, but it reminds us also of some facts which undoubtedly prove that our forefathers were eager, from the very beginning of the Canadian colony, to create or build, if you prefer, a country such as we have today within which, at least, understanding should prevail.

Our missionaries and nuns who came to Canada between the years 1500 and 1700 had to cope with the Indians and to conquer a land, a country, an heritage for our forefathers, as well as for ourselves who live in Canada today.

Mr. Chairman, many of our forefathers fought for commendable aims; they fought in order that their unity, their freedom, their faith and their tongue might survive. For instance, we read in our little History of Canada the feat of arms accomplished by Dollard des Ormeaux at Long Sault where, with 16 companions—

Mr. Rouleau: That is why we have the riding of Dollard.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, as my good friend from Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) just pointed out, that is why we have the riding of Dollard.

Our little History of Canada relates the memorable feat of arms of a fellow countryman and his companions who then saved Ville Marie, which is now known as Montreal.

Mr. Boulanger: Against the Iroquois.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) says that Dollard des Ormeaux fought against the Iroquois. In some parts of the country, we still have to face the Iroquois, even in 1963.

On the other hand, I must say it all depends on which corner of the house the interruptions come from. When they come from a certain corner, which reminds me very much of the little Chicago of the years 1947 and 1948, it rather smells of the Iroquois, Mr. Chairman.

We read and still read in our History of Canada about all those victories which have been remembered.

In fact, we should remember the years 1830 to 1842, when La Fontaine was a champion of the rights of French Canadians, and when we also had the support of English speaking representatives, especially Mr. Baldwin. Then we realize that at the precise moment when the two largest elements were shaping the nation, Lower and Upper Canada already recognized the urgency of an agreement and also of understanding and co-operation between the two great races which make up this country.

Mr. Chairman, certainly there were frictions, even battles, but nothing prevented men of goodwill from finding common ground permitting co-operation.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the people of the province of Quebec have given proof that they love their native land, not by encroaching upon other people's rights, not by minimizing the rights and freedom of other people. As far as I know, we have never interfered in any way with the freedom of English Canadians who were and still are one of the main elements of our confederation.

Mr. Chairman, there are also citizens who do not understand and who do not want to understand the urgency of an agreement based on the mutual respect of the two main elements which constitute our nation. That is the reason why, instead of calling the 1967 celebrations the "centenary of the nation", we shall call them the "centenary of confederation".

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, there are in this country elements on both sides who do not want in any way to recognize the dual nature of the Canadian nation: we have them on the French side, and we also have them on the English side. For instance, the other evening, I received a telephone call from one Mr. Cliff, born in Montreal, but now living in Ottawa, who abused me as follows: "Well, you Socreds what do you want? You are constantly asking for concessions. Do you think that you can build a nation always on concessions?" I replied: "My dear friend, what concessions are we asking of the rest of the country? What concessions are French Canadians asking of the federal government? We are not asking for concessions. We do not want more at the expense of others. We just want to regain possession of what is rightfully ours."

Mr. Chairman, can you give me one instance in history where French Canadians asked for concessions at the expense of others? We have never done that and we will never do it. However, we continue to insist on equal rights within confederation.

Coming back to my friend, Mr. Cliff, who was telephoning me, I said: "Give me an example of a concession we are asking for". And he told me: "You want to force my children to speak French."

Mr. Chairman, whether it is in the province of Quebec or elsewhere, French Canadians have never forced anybody to speak French, any more than we are compelled to learn English in the province of Quebec. If we have learned English, it is because we wanted to, but nobody forced us.

The same applies today in the province of Quebec with regard to the way in which Anglo-Saxon minorities are treated. When an Englishman from any part of the country comes to the province of Quebec, we greet him in both languages. In our province, government advertisements and posters of all kinds are written in both English and French. We do not have to be bilingual in Quebec, no more than people have to be bilingual elsewhere. However, I think that French Canadians and the province of Quebec have proved, by their courtesy, that they are interested in the national unity of Canada. That is why we give the same privileges to minorities, in our province, in Catholic French Canada.

Mr. Chairman, we are not asking for concessions, but we are making suggestions.

I went to Toronto recently and spoke in Osgoode Hall, and also before the Canadian club in Sarnia. I was warmly welcomed by English speaking Canadians, by people who are endeavouring to understand us. Please believe me that such attitude is greatly appreciated.

We are told sometimes, in certain parts of the province, that out west or in Ontario, people would not sing the national anthem.

When I spoke in Osgoode Hall and in Sarnia, at the very beginning of the meeting, the national anthem "O Canada" was sung. I was impressed and happy to find that English speaking people realize exactly what our position is. We must feel at home everywhere in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, we suggested recently to the provincial authorities of Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta to give their French Canadian minorities the same treatment which is given to the English minorities in our province, in Quebec. There is no discrimination in the province of Quebec and I proclaim this loudly all across Canada.

In my own city of Rouyn, 15 per cent of the population is English speaking; 85 per cent of the population is French, but nevertheless there is no discrimination, as far as schools or the treatment given to everybody are concerned. We feel we are all of the same family. I pay taxes which help to finance Protestant schools and I am glad and satisfied to do it, because I am helping my fellow citizens, human persons, to acquire the knowledge they need to face life.

Mr. Chairman, those feelings do not exist in your own constituency which includes Cornwall, because there are French Canadians who are not treated like the English Canadians in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, we suggest that the other provinces should adopt an attitude similar to ours, in the province of Quebec. I think that we would thus achieve a better understanding, a greater harmony, between the two great races of our country, Canada.

Quite recently, the Prime Minister very rightly said:

> Confederation is the creed conforming our faith in the future of a united Canada.

It was also a declaration of independence with regard to the United States. And that has prevailed since confederation, in 1867.

We decided to go our own way on this continent, from sea to sea—not only with regard to that part of Canada which is Quebec, not only for that part which is British Columbia—but from sea to sea, first of all, as a part of the British empire, and later as an independent member of the commonwealth of nations.

That declaration, though significant in its implications, is true; it should be respected by the ten provinces which make up today our Canadian nation.

We knew that such a declaration, based on such a belief, would carry with it an economic price. At that time, we were ready—and I hope we still are—to pay that price, the price of being Canadians.

How well advised was the right hon. Prime Minister to make that statement—such a fundamentally Canadian statement, respectful of both elements, of all Canadians who have accepted that sacrifice to build up a Canada which some elements are trying to destroy. We must oppose the destruction of this country, yes, but by taking action and assuming our responsibilities. We should not try to escape those responsibilities, more particularly at this time, when we are only a few years away from our centennial celebrations.

Mr. Chairman, the right hon. Prime Minister added:

> However, confederation entails another price which many among us are either willing to forget or unwilling to pay. Confederation meant not only rejection of political and economical annexation by the United States, but also of the American concept of the "melting pot", which creates that country's national unity.
> From a technical point of view, confederation has perhaps never been a treaty between states, but it was an agreement, an understanding between the two races which founded Canada, based on the principle of an acceptable association on equal terms.

That is the very basis of the confederation of 1867.

That is the spirit of the constitution, as that of confederation itself, which was established by the founders, among which were Macdonald and Cartier.

> The agreement stipulated that national political unity would be realized and maintained without—
> —without the imposition of a system of racial, cultural and linguistic uniformity.
> However, that agreement was more academic than real.

An agreement on paper, a hazy agreement. They forgot to realize it. They forgot, in other terms, to respect the full and entire letter of the agreement.

> Outside the province of Quebec and as Canada was developing, it was more often violated than kept, and for reasons that are easily understood.

Mr. Chairman, that is what the right hon. Prime Minister, head of the government of which the minister, the President of the Privy Council, is a member, accepts and displays here, squarely, before the whole nation:

> —that agreement was more academic than real. Outside the province of Quebec, and as Canada was developing, it was more often violated than kept—

That is the grievance French Canadians utter today. Not that we ask concessions, no, I state it again, we do not want concessions, we simply want the respect of the letter of the confederation established in 1867. I shall not say, however, if that letter was not respected, if that basis, that foundation was not respected, that it was entirely the fault of English Canadians. No, far from it, Mr. Chairman. I would put on the shoulders of the French Canadians their share of the blame, especially those French Canadians from the province of Quebec who sat here, in parliament, and who, instead of working in the interest of this Canada of ours, blindly followed the party which ordered them not to say a word and not to claim full respect of our rights.

The Chairman: Order. I have been hesitating for some time to interrupt the hon. member during his interesting remarks, but may I remind him now that he should stick as much as possible to the terms of the resolution which is presently before the committee. The question under discussion is not the principle of the legislation we want to amend, but rather the very terms of the amendment. I urge the hon. member to try to restrict his remarks to the terms of this resolution.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your suggestion that I should deal strictly with the spirit of the resolution now under discussion. I should like to point out, however, that this afternoon the leader of the official opposition, as well as all the others who took the floor, almost without exception, referred to Canadian history.

Mr. Lamontagne: Except me.

Mr. Caouette: I shall try to restrict my remarks to the resolution as far as possible, but I would ask you to be lenient towards me and to give me enough scope.

Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister also stated, and I think this has to do, after all, with the celebrations to be held in 1967:

For French speaking Canadians, confederation set up a bilingual and bicultural nation.

All French Canadians feel strongly about this, whether we sit on this side or the other side of the house. I see that my hon. friend from Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) is smiling. He knows that we are right. It is a fact that for us, confederation set up a bilingual and bicultural nation.

It protected their language and their culture throughout Canada.

It meant association, not domination.

As far as association is concerned, we are of course quite ready to co-operate, and to take part in that association. But as far as assimilation or domination are concerned, we reject them both.

The Prime Minister said further:

French speaking Canadians believed that such an association would give the two founding races equal opportunities to take part in the various stages of the development of Canada.

That is indeed what the French Canadians believed and still believe today.

Mr. Chairman, on December 17, 1962, the Prime Minister stated also:

Certain recent developments clearly indicate that we are going through another serious crisis as regards national unity. We became a nation long ago, but we still have not reached an agreement on all the symbols of nationality; even worse, in certain circles, doubts are expressed about the very principles on which our confederation rests.

In certain of our western provinces, and in some parts of the maritimes, the equality of the two great Canadian races, of the two great ethnic groups which form our nation is often denied, under the pretext that there is in Canada an English speaking majority and a French speaking minority, and that we should not expect therefore to be treated otherwise than as a minority.

Mr. Chairman, we firmly believe that throughout Canada minorities are treated equitably, even the French minority. But outside of Quebec, the French minority is not put on an equal footing with the English-speaking majority, while we, in the province of Quebec, do put on an equal footing the English speaking minority.

Professor Frank H. Underhill, quoted by the Prime Minister, said recently:

"It is unfortunate to note that we seem to drift without compass. We have lost this conviction of national determination which inspired our forebears in 1867...We are feeling our way to recover the sense of greatness which inspired us in the days of yore...The present times call for an unfailing intellectual effort of a higher degree, a sense of imagination more spirited a state of mind more experienced than what we had to exert in the past."

Mr. Chairman, was it not the main purpose of confederation to establish mutual respect between the two great cultures and to preserve this British land in America, that is to avoid annexation to the United States.

And speaking of concessions which have been made, I believe that French Canadians have done more than their share in the past. I will give a few examples, not to prove that those people were wrong throughout their lifetime, but that as far as the principle of co-operation is concerned, they were gradually overrun by the will of the majority in Canada.

I only wish to give a few examples from history, as for instance the murder of Louis Riel, the champion of French influence in the prairies.

One might mention also the capitulation of Cartier himself, in 1871, concerning schools in New Brunswick. Those were concessions on the part of French Canadians, but they were made under pressure from the majority that was trying to assert itself at that time.

And what about the capitulation of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1905, on the Manitoba school question?

Then there was conscription imposed upon the French Canadians in 1917, which meant defeat for the Conservatives during a good many years, because French Canadians never forgave them for breaking their word.

There was conscription imposed upon French Canadians in 1942 by the Liberals, under Mr. Mackenzie King, when French Canadians in Quebec had been promised explicitly that never, under a Liberal administration, would a Canadian province be subject to conscription.

That is why, at that time, the prime minister of the day, Mr. Mackenzie King, was asking the Canadian provinces—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —to release him from a promise he himself had made to French Canadians of the province of Quebec.

There was this federal infringement, and for the information of my good friend the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel), those are facts and not reproaches, facts that I am bringing forward in order to prevent those things from happening again and to do away with discrimination.

This federal encroachment, in wartime, on the rights of the provinces in the field of personal income tax, corporation income tax, succession duties, rights which the government no longer wants to return to the provinces, is another example of a concession on the part of the provinces.

Mr. Lamontagne: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Lamontagne: Is the hon. member for the resolution?

An hon. Member: He is reading Mr. Pearson's speech.

Mr. Caouette: No, I am not reading your leader's speech.

For the information of the President of the Privy Council, I will tell him that I am for the resolution, but if he will listen to me for a few moments, I will tell him why—

An hon. Member: Are you mad?

Mr. Caouette: I am explaining the reasons which lead me to share the opinion of the President of the Privy Council on the resolution presented by the Prime Minister, but my good friend, the President of the Privy Council, should be a little more patient. We heard him for two minutes this afternoon and we might have thought that he had been speaking for two hours. He should leave us some latitude.

Mr. Chairman, the matter of provincial rights which the central government took over during the war years—and will not relinquish now—will be discussed at the federal-provincial conference next week.

[Mr. Caouette.]

We have our small share in the federal civil service, in the contracts awarded by the government. Ottawa is, so to speak, the supreme court and it usually takes advantage of any matter that sets it against the provinces. In my opinion, another resolution to institute a court that would respect the provinces' rights is needed.

Mr. Chairman, like everyone else, we want to celebrate the centennial of confederation in 1967. Within three years, it rests with us to make of 1967 a year that will be favourable to the celebration of a centennial that will attract the attention of the whole population, throughout Canada; otherwise, in the meantime, we might see the rise of separatist, independentist movements, even fasting movements, not only in Quebec but in Ontario. As a matter of fact, we may even ask ourselves if we will not see the rise in Ontario of movements that will send us—as happened in the past—a thousand dollars, telling us: Get out of confederation.

Well, that is not what we want. We want to respect the meaning of confederation, we do not want that meaning to become saturated with prejudice but fully understood by all the members in this house. If, before 1967, we join hands—

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I feel that our leader had good reason to worry, during this debate, about certain appointments to the centennial commission. Obviously, we should celebrate the centennial of confederation and not that of a political party.

Therefore, in the national interest, I would ask the minister to reconsider those appointments so that the commission will be national rather than political in its scope and membership.

I feel the commission is too important for the minister not to revise the appointments.

Mr. Chairman, certain changes will have to be made—

Mr. Lamontagne: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, if the minister will be so good as to let me complete my remarks, he will have all the time he wants to speak later on.

At any rate, he was one of the first to speak and to criticize me indirectly. There is some mumbling on the other side of the house and I would ask the minister to let me speak; if he wishes to ask me some questions, he may do so when I am through.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Balcer: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that the hon. member is not speaking from his seat.

The Chairman: Order. I would suggest that the hon. member for Longueuil take his seat when the chairman rises.

I should also like to remind the hon. member for Three Rivers that a member can speak from a seat other than his own since we are now in committee.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, I rose on a point of order.

Mr. Pigeon: Am I the one who has the floor?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): It is the chairman who will rule on the point of order.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr Côté (Longueuil): How could the appointments be revised when they have not yet been made?

The Chairman: There is no point of order here and I would ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to continue his speech.

Mr. Pigeon: If no appointment has been made yet, I wonder how those people could meet. Perhaps the hon. member should sleep on that.

Mr. Lamontagne: In my opinion, the hon. member made a mistake earlier when he spoke of reviewing the appointment of the directors of the centennial commission. One of the main purposes of that resolution is precisely to increase their number because they have not been appointed yet.

Mr. Pigeon: I simply referred to the centennial commission.

Mr. Lamontagne: There is no centennial commission.

Mr. Pigeon: I just ask him to be patient. I have the right to speak since you have recognized me, Mr. Chairman. If the minister wants to make a speech he can do so when I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I should like it to be a celebration of the centennial of confederation and not that of the centennial of a political pack. That is why we are worried, on this side of the house.

I was also pleased to note that other amendments have been made, because without Quebec's contribution to the centennial celebrations, it would have been impossible to take advantage of this bill and to vote the amounts of money in co-operation with the provinces. It is indeed the centennial of confederation and not of Canada, which we are going to celebrate since Canada existed long before 1867. Mr. Chairman, there is a part of our history before 1867 which is very interesting as it deals with the intensive struggles carried on by the French Canadians at that time to assert their rights. Besides, they were very thankful to England later on and showed their gratitude during the attempt at invasion by the Americans.

Mr. Chairman, that amount of money that the federal government wishes to appropriate, $1 per capita per province, will require the co-operation of the provinces. I wonder whether it would not be possible to divide these amounts of money in order that some of them might be used for the erection of monuments commemorating the period of our history before 1867, and others for memorials to recall that part of our history after 1867.

Mr. Chairman, when we were in office, the then prime minister and his government made a step forward to help celebrate the centennial of confederation by taking the required steps to have the world fair held in Canada. In my opinion, that was an important action taken by the government of that time. I urge the President of the Privy Council to make every effort so that international conventions will be held here in Canada in 1967.

I had the opportunity to be a member of a Canadian delegation to Belgrade, recently, under the chairmanship of hon. Senator Dessureault. He carried on the task initiated by his predecessor. And I congratulate him publicly in this house for the work he has done in Belgrade. He obtained from the members of the interparliamentary union that they hold their important sittings here in Canada, in 1967.

I think that will be another important event that will help to make our country known at the international level.

I also wish to make a suggestion in anticipation of the centennial festivities. I wonder whether it would not be possible, for the centennial year, for the provinces to select students according to their talents, in secondary schools, high schools, colleges and universities to whom a free trip paid entirely by the federal government would be offered, for example on C.N.R. trains, to enable them to visit Canada from coast to coast. In my opinion, that suggestion would allow the elite of the nation, the younger generation, to know their country and this would foster better understanding and national unity.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a certain evolution in this country since 1867, and the trend must continue.

I also remember that at the last Conservative convention, for instance, a resolution was moved to change the constitution so that the word "dominion" be deleted. It was put to a vote and a majority of delegates voted to have the word "dominion" suppressed.

Mr. Chairman, if we are anxious to celebrate the centenary of confederation, we must at the same time try to do something to improve the present situation and remove the stress which is now prevailing in this country.

It is all very well to erect monuments and to work out great plans, but it would also be necessary, in my opinion, to have a much higher ideal. Besides, it was very well understood that in 1967, all the governments, both federal and provincial, would remain supreme and that they would be in a position to raise the necessary funds to exercise their respective rights.

I believe that the fathers of confederation made serious mistakes. First, granting the federal government the right to veto any provincial law; second, leaving the federal government vague and almost unlimited powers of taxation; third, the authority to grant subsidies to the provinces; fourth, restricting the use of the French language to the province of Quebec, the federal parliament and the federal courts of justice.

We know that the fathers of confederation got together to work out a constitution to be submitted for the approval of the government in London. Incidentally, the British North America Act was drafted in English only. It is a legal document passed in England. Of course, it has been translated into French but it is not like a bill which is drafted in both languages here in Ottawa.

When I referred to mistakes, here is what I really meant. My intention is not to blame the fathers of confederation too much; the problems as well as the means of communication were different then. It was very difficult for the fathers of confederation to see one hundred years ahead.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the government will add another program to the centennial objectives. An ideal objective would be, in my opinion, to revise the Canadian constitution completely, in co-operation with the provinces.

The Canadian constitution has existed since 1867. The federal government could avail itself of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference to make this suggestion to the provinces in anticipation of the centenary. The Canadian constitution might be revised in co-operation with the provinces by being adjusted to modern times.

I know that this ideal objective can meet with difficulties, but if we really want to celebrate the centenary of confederation in a spirit of unity, we must work towards that end. And, I already said, provincial co-operation is essential.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

It is all very well, to set up royal commissions on biculturalism but, in my opinion, this is not the best means to give national unity a concrete form. Besides, the value of that royal commission was questioned by the conseil de vie francaise because culture and education belong to the provinces.

I think we should find a system to completely revise the Canadian constitution in order to bring it into line with our modern world. Also, the provinces should be given back their taxation powers, definite powers in the provincial as well as in the federal field. The knowledge of the French language should be extended, not only in the province of Quebec, at the federal level, in the courts, but on a national scale in co-operation with the provinces. Surely, there must be a way to do something in that direction.

Those are the few suggestions I wanted to make and I spoke in accordance with my conscience—

An hon. Member: Now he has two consciences.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, those are precisely the people who stamped out the rights to the provinces. Those are the very people.

For instance, when you see the President of the Privy Council say, as he did in a televised press conference last Sunday—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pigeon: He stated: "We will abolish some joint programs but we will set up some others." That means that the policy of the government is contradictory and by the way, the President of the Privy Council is a good example, because he wrote a book and since that time, he contradicts himself quite often.

Mr. Lamontagne: But you never read it.

Mr. Pigeon: If the President of the Privy Council wants to succeed, I wish him—

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order, and I do so on the basis of these last words uttered by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who speaks about contradiction when he himself leads us into confusion.

He speaks about the erection of monuments and afterwards—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the point of order is not well taken and I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Berger: I would like to know—

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, I would like the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to tell me whether he agrees entirely with the statement made this afternoon by the leader of his party, whereas he himself is asking us tonight to try to grasp the meaning of his words. This is absolute inconsistency.

The Chairman: Order. I understand the hon. member has raised a point of order; but I feel there was no point of order.

Mr. Pigeon: You are perfectly right, Mr. Chairman, for the point of order was ill founded.

Moreover, before venturing into that field, the hon. member should learn the standing orders of the house. Instead of sending an open letter to newspapers to criticize his leader for having given Mr. Gordon another term of office, he should, according to the dictates of his conscience, look after the interests of his fellow citizens from Quebec at the caucus.

With this, I conclude my remarks. If the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet wishes to speak, he will have the opportunity to do so since we live in a democracy. If he does make a speech, he will show that he is not gagged by caucus dictatorship nor by members of his party.

[Text]

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, anyone who comes from a province other than Quebec, who either sits in the house or is seated in the galleries, will get the impression tonight that at least 75 per cent of the discussion which takes place in this chamber is about the province of Quebec and is participated in by only French Canadians. There is nothing wrong with their participation, and we do realize that they have a tremendous number of problems. But, I wish to deal with one point brought up by this resolution, we want one Canada and we want a united Canada. What is more, when 1967 rolls around we still want a united Canada. I come from the province of Alberta. I happen to be half French and I know that those who are speaking for the French Canadians are not telling the truth. I want to repeat what the President of the Privy Council—

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Kindt: I shall answer the hon. member's questions later when I am finished if he cares to ask them at that time.

The Chairman: Order, please. I understand the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Kindt: He is just interrupting. He has had the floor.

The Chairman: Order. The Chair should have the opportunity to hear the question of privilege.

Mr. Langlois: I think an insinuation was made about French Canadians that was not quite true. I should like the hon. member to tell us exactly what was wrong and what was right, or what was not true.

An hon. Member: Sit down and listen.

The Chairman: I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a true question of privilege and I would ask the hon. member for Macleod to continue.

Mr. Kindt: The President of the Privy Council stated that unless changes are made in the act the province of Quebec will not co-operate in the centennial celebration of confederation, or words to that effect. Those are not the exact words.

Mr. Lamontagne: They are not my words.

Mr. Kindt: If they are wrong, let the minister correct them, because my point is based on what he said. It is all well and good for one province to say: Do this or else. If we in other provinces are approached with the thought that there are features in the bill which are good for all of us, including Quebec, all right; but when we are approached with the ultimatum, do this or else, it is blackmail. It does not sit well with the other provinces in Canada.

I do not think this is the feeling that the good people of Quebec wish to disseminate among the people of the other provinces of Canada. I think the minister either made a mistake or the government of Quebec has made a mistake. If the government of Quebec has come to the President of the Privy Council and pointed a gun at his ear and said, "Do this or else", it is up to him to tell the house, if that is the reason he has taken the position he has, and why he made that statement. If there is some other reason then I as one who comes from another province, would like to know.

Mind you, I have no qualms about certain features of the bill, but I do detest this particular statement of the President of the Privy Council. We all know that on the government front benches there are 10 cabinet ministers from Ontario and eight from Quebec. The government is loaded with ministers from those two provinces. If the President of the Privy Council is going to stand in his place and say, "Do this or else", he is rubbing the rest of the provinces of Canada the wrong way.

Mr. Lamontagne: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I believe I never said what the hon. member is saying I said.

I would advise him to look at the correspondence exchanged between the former prime minister of Canada and the present premier of Quebec, which was tabled in the house on the 27th of June, and he will understand the situation.

Mr. Kindt: I gave you the opportunity to correct me if my words were wrong, but you did not do so.

Mr. Lamontagne: Yes, I did.

Mr. Kindt: You brought an extraneous matter into the picture by referring to the former government. I am referring specifically to what you said in the house tonight.

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that he should address himself to the Chair.

Mr. Kindt: Right. I shall be delighted to do so. I turn now to the increase from 8 to 12 in the number of directors. We have never had any explanation why the government intends to add four additional directors.

Mr. Lamontagne: In order to give sufficient provincial representation.

Mr. Kindt: All one has to do is to use his imagination, and it does not take the imagination of anyone with any great degree of intelligence to know that the government is simply padding the board of directors. They are creating more places for political appointments. I say that we want a centennial celebration in 1967 that will be representative of all Canada, and if the government frontbenchers are going to continue to act in the manner they have since this bill was brought before the house today, I say to them that they are acting wrongly, if they hope for a united Canada in 1967.

Mr. Lamontagne: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he against the intention in the resolution, that there should be representation from all the provinces? Is he against that?

Mr. Kindt: I will put it this way. There are 10 provinces in Canada, and the Northwest Territories, and the Yukon. If the government were to act in a non-political way and put a representative on the board from each of the provinces—they might even go so far as to give Quebec and Ontario two each, because of their greater population—if the government were to bring in people from all parts of Canada to serve on the board—

Mr. Lamontagne: That is exactly what we want to do.

Mr. Kindt: —then it would not be so distasteful. But the President of the Privy Council has never indicated to the house that he intends to carry out any such suggestion.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, with the customary brevity of my party, there are only four or five things I should like to say on the resolution now before us. First, I think it must be fairly obvious to most members of the house, as I am sure it is to most people in the country, that so much time has already been wasted by the former and the present administrations in regard to organizing our centennial birthday party that those in charge will have to move very quickly unless they want to go down in history as party poopers. Second, I want to point out that there are only about 40 months left to get the centennial party on the rails. Third, I should like to emphasize what I think is in many members' minds, that not enough attention is being paid in the organization of the party to permanent public projects that will last. I feel that we should want to come out of the celebration with something more than the dishes in the sink, after the party is over.

This afternoon my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, suggested that we in the New Democratic party are at least as eager to have a national consciousness instilled into Canadians as any other party in the house. However, we are ready to forego the wording which the resolution seeks to take out, the use of the word "national" in the title of the act and elsewhere in the centennial phraseology, if it will help to bring together the people of all the different regions of Canada as Canadians, so we can celebrate our centennial party as one people. We favour, instead of the word national, the word "Canadian". The language of this title should be the celebration of the Canadian confederation centennial.

As one who had something to do with the organization of the British Columbia centennial, Mr. Chairman, celebrated in 1958, and who observed the Alberta and Saskatchewan celebrations in the same period, I should like to draw to the attention of the centennial people generally the value of paying more attention to the practical achievement of these provincial centennial organizations. I am not one who supports the provincial government of British Columbia, Mr. Chairman. However, I must say in fairness to them that the organization they inspired and set up did a good non-political job, and that the province of British Columbia has come out of that centennial celebration a much richer province culturally than it went into it. I think the same thing could be said about the Alberta and Saskatchewan celebrations.

I should like to urge also, in supporting the resolution before us, that the centennial administration pay a little more attention to what I consider to be the external effects of our coming celebration. As well as having a party within Canada, I think we should try to do things in our centennial celebration that will attract good will and impress the world with Canada's stature. I think we could do this in several ways if we think big enough. I feel that 1967 should be the year when we decide on what kind of official, distinctive Canadian flag our country should have. It may be that we would decide in favour of the red ensign. It may be that we would decide on some other quite distinctive flag. Surely, on January 1, 1967 we should unfurl around the world the officially designated Canadian flag.

Second, sir, I think internally it would be an excellent thing in 1967 if we could do something for our older citizens, such as reducing the pensionable age without a means test to 67 at the most.

Finally, I have one particular point I have brought to the attention of the official centennial organization, and I am hopeful that others would agree it would be a matter worth considering. I think Canada should set the world an example in international thinking on the occasion of our birthday. One way we could do that would be to invite, through the United Nations, one child from each country affiliated with the United Nations to come to Canada as our guest for two or three weeks during the height of our centennial celebrations. We have the planes to fly them here, and we have the trains to take them across Canada so that they could see something of the achievements of their forebears from their own country who have pioneered Canada and helped to give us what we have today. I think this would be a very good method for celebrating our birthday in Canada. It is imperative that we pass this resolution and that we encourage our centennial people to think large and think fast.

Mr. Mandziuk: We cannot minimize the importance of the amendments contained in this resolution, Mr. Chairman. It is true that they fall into three parts. The first is the increase in the number of directors from eight to 12. I would not quarrel with that. If experience has shown that eight directors do not provide sufficient representation to the provinces, or if a directorship of that size would not properly carry out the duties of the directors, I am quite happy to see the number increased to 12 or, if necessary, more than 12.

The second purpose is to simplify directives to this administration. I would not quarrel with that. However, the change in name puzzles me. I have listened with interest to the very eloquent address of the hon. member for Villeneuve, as well as others. It is true that they went into the history of this country of ours. I do not quarrel with that, either. Why are the words "national centennial", changed to "centennial of confederation"? I can understand the basis of the argument. Some people will contend that Canada existed from the time of the first explorers, but Canada did not exist as a nation at that time. I am in accord with the right hon. Leader of the Opposition when he said that it was in 1867 that Canada, the nation as we know it today, was born. We are, therefore, celebrating in 1967 the centenary of that birth.

An hon. Member: What were we before?

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, I just wonder where the hon. member was before.

What puzzles me is that the President of the Privy Council has said he made this change at the whim of the premier of Quebec.

Mr. Lamontagne: I did not say that.

Mr. Mandziuk: The minister did not use the word "whim", but I am using it. He did not tell us—but perhaps he will before this debate closes—whether or not the other nine premiers felt the same way as the premier of Quebec. Did they have any objection to the name as it was? Did they have an opportunity to concur, and if they did not, why not? This would be very interesting to us.

Mr. Lamontagne: I can answer that question.

Mr. Mandziuk: The President of the Privy Council will have an opportunity to answer that question. He can do so after I have finished my remarks or when he closes this debate.

I agree with what my leader has said, Mr. Chairman, that the birth of Canada as we have it today occurred in 1867. What did we have before 1867? I studied Canadian history from the time of Cabot and Champlain and all those discoverers who came to this new land. At that time lower Canada might have been called a province, but it was an abandoned child, abandoned by its motherland. Let us not twist history or deny historical facts. Upper Canada consisted of people who came from south of the border because they did not want to live under the stars and stripes. They wanted to live under the British flag. These were the two founding races who conceived this structure, this pact, which eventually welded this territory into one Canadian nation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, regardless of what we say, and facts can be twisted, this was a union of necessity. Lower Canada knew full well that if she were left to herself she would be absorbed by the United States. Quebec, as we know it today, would have been non-existent. Upper Canada, the present Ontario, knew quite well that if she did not enter this pact she, too, would be absorbed by that giant, the United States, that was growing up at that time. It was a case of necessity, so that these two peoples welded their swords into plowshares and started building a nation. That is why I believe the centennial of the birthday of the nation dates from there, unless I have misunderstood Canadian history. It was a case of either unite or perish. Every Canadian of today knows that, and we might as well face it.

Other peoples came into this country after 1867. Some came for economic reasons. I can name various racial groups that came to Canada for the simple reason that their homelands were overpopulated. They came here, where they found open spaces and opportunities. Others came in search of freedom like the race from which I descend—in search of the freedom which was denied them in their homeland. They found that freedom in Canada.

They came in here, not as hewers of wood or drawers of water. They felt they were coming in as equals, as partners in the building of this nation, and they so feel today. That applies to everyone, Mr. Chairman, to everyone in this house, and we have the descendants of many races in this chamber. These people who came were prepared to make maximum contributions to the development of one over-all Canadian culture. They are making those contributions today to a national culture embracing the best of all cultures.

It is natural for a nation such as ours, made up of so many peoples from different parts of the world, a nation that I believe is still in the process of uniting into something more solid and stronger, to go through the pains of birth. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote a few sentences from an address given by Mr. Justice Samuel Freedman, who is now a judge of the appellate court of Manitoba, to an audience in Toronto in 1959, at a time when he was chancellor of the University of Manitoba. This is what he said:

> The two major groups and many smaller ones are learning the lesson of living together as Canadians.

This was as far back as 1959.

> But there are still dangers to overcome. Sometimes extremists have encouraged group isolation and exclusiveness. Sometimes, on the other hand, there have been demands for compulsory conformity to a fixed pattern. I believe, however, that provided there is only one politicial allegiance, namely to Canada, and that all groups participate as Canadians in its corporate national life, there is still room for secondary cultures as well.

There are various parts of this nation where certain people feel that they want to isolate themselves, to be exclusive. There are others who feel we should all conform to their pattern of life. But I believe that this learned judge, when he spoke to his Toronto audience, expressed himself more clearly than I could, in giving us a lesson in what we must do to overcome the difficulties we face today. Certainly there is considerable disagreement. We cannot all think alike. It is only in a communist dictatorship that people are compelled to think alike, but here we are free to think and speak as we please.

I am talking about these people who feel they are equal partners in the building of this nation. Originally they had to overcome prejudice. My father did, and so did I. We overcame the prejudice. They had other difficulties to overcome. They had to learn at least one official language and many of them today know both official languages. Those who wish to retain their mother tongue and teach it to their children do so on their own account, and they do not expect the state to pay for it.

According to the latest statistics there are over 5 million people in our country who are descended from neither French nor British stock. They have entered into every sphere of our national life, legislative, judicial and educational. Two of my daughters are teaching school in a strictly English speaking district in Winnipeg, and this district does not take any exception or objection to their name. They are building up the next Canadian generation. They are proud to be doing so, and I am proud of them.

These people also entered the industrial life, and when the call came to shoulder arms they answered that call. They felt Canada was worth fighting for, and many names that a lot of hon. members cannot pronounce are on the rows of crosses in the fields of France, in the fields of Asia, and in the fields of Africa. Why? Because they believed in Canada. They believed in what this Canada meant to them.

These people pray, and I believe I have a right to ask on their behalf, that they be not left behind in celebrating the hundredth anniversary of this great nation of ours. They wish to celebrate. They wish to take stock of what they have achieved and what they have contributed to this nation. They hope that the two founding races appreciate their contributions, and they are not asking for anything else.

They are not looking forward to speeches. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre very ably put it, we do not expect to pass that year over just in speeches. We expect to take stock and show what we have achieved as a nation, to show we have achieved unity instead of fighting over whether or not it is the centennial of confederation, the centennial of Canada, or the centennial of what. No matter what it is, it is a centennial of the birthday of this nation, and this act can be called whatever the government pleases. They can railroad the name to suit, but it will still mean the centennial of the birthday of this nation as we know it, which took the best the French had to contribute, and also took the best the English had to contribute, British tradition, British fair play, and British justice. This is the best guarantee, not only to French Canadians but to us all, of these freedoms which we enjoy today. I said, Mr. Chairman, there were over 5 million of these people. They ask for the privilege of full participation. They do not fail to recognize the two founding races. We do not deny history; we are not going to deny history; we are not going to twist it to suit ourselves. They do not ask for official recognition, which is the impression some people have. I am proud of my racial origin and I am proud of being a Canadian. Some people think my compatriots expect official recognition. No, Mr. Chairman; that is a false statement for anyone to make. I do not pretend to speak for all these 5 million or more Canadians, but I know the people of the race from which I descended do not want to be hyphenated Canadians. I think hyphenation is coming back into fashion again; everything is hyphenated.

I do not want to get away from the resolution, Mr. Chairman. If I were to do what some hon. members have done, I would get away from the resolution that is before us, and I know you would permit me to do this because you have extended that privilege to others. I could cite many examples of where this hyphenation is in full swing across Canada today. In plain language, the people for whom I speak do not want to be left out of these birthday celebrations, because they are as concerned as the rest of us, if there are no second-class Canadians, if we are all Canadians. If not, let us put that on the statute books: we will have wood hewers and water carriers, and the elite, which is contrary to every concept of Canadianism and freedom that is on our statute books. These people want this because they owe political allegiance to Canada, and Canada alone. We have people who came here and acquired citizenship by taking the oath of allegiance. Their children were born here, and in the eyes of the law they are full Canadian citizens and are entitled to all the privileges, as well as the obligations, inherent in Canadian citizenship. They owe allegiance to no other country. They have renounced the state from which they came. They may be interested in what is going on in their homeland, but they are Canadians and as such are interested in what is going on in the Congo, for example. We sent our boys out there, at the risk of being shot down by the negro tribes. We are interested in what is going on in the Gaza strip, where our boys are trying to keep peace between two warring nations. Some of these people in Canada who have acquired Canadian citizenship and are loyal Canadians are interested in what is going on in their homeland, particularly if their homeland is behind the iron curtain; but that does not mean they feel their allegiance is divided. They want to be recognized as participants in the corporate national life of Canada, while fully recognizing that there are two founding races. It is just the same as if you organized a partnership or corporation and two men entered into the business, and then, as business expanded, other people joined in. Are the first two people the only ones who have a share in this corporation? I think this is contrary to our bill of rights; it is contrary to our constitution, and it is contrary to everything that we believe in and that these people expected when they came to this country.

I think the word "national" is a word of pride. I do not know why people should take exception to it. If we are a nation, this is a national celebration and the purposes of this act would remain the same if it were called the national centennial act. If Canada is not a nation, what is it? Is it just a hyphenated monstrosity? No, Mr. Chairman, it is not.

I should now like to deal with what has been said by other hon. members. I listened with interest to the speeches of hon. members, and in particular that of the hon. member for Villeneuve, who spoke about some injustices and unfairnesses that exist in our constitution under the British North America Act. I say, Mr. Chairman, that if these things do exist, let us correct them, in all fairness. Why not? I am going to point out an injustice that is in the British North America Act—just one. This applies to those of French origin. I am not going to call them French Canadians, because I do not call anyone a hyphenated Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mandziuk: The British North America Act guarantees the English full equality in Quebec, but gives no such guarantee to the French in Ontario. Why not? I am pointing this out, Mr. Chairman, and saying that if there is any amendment that needs to be made to our constitution, if it is necessary, if it hurts some part of this nation, let us correct it, but let us not ruin this nation. Let us keep this nation united. Let us keep this nation strong. Let us keep this nation so that everyone, regardless of racial origin, owes allegiance to no other country but Canada.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Chairman, I was most interested in the hon. member's speech. I found in it many points with which I agree, but there was one statement about which I should like to ask a question. The hon. member referred to his two fine daughters who are teaching. He mentioned, I think, that they are teaching in a solely English district and this district had no objection to name. Is the hon. member inferring that there are districts or areas in this country where anybody does object to a person's name, no matter what that name may be?

Mr. Mandziuk: I started by saying that we had to overcome prejudices; that there was discrimination; that there were such areas; that there were such districts. However, I have not seen any in the last 20 or 25 years, or at least since the last world war.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the resolution is precisely to change the expression "national centennial" to "centennial of confederation".

The hon. member who has just spoken, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) said: "Whether it is the centennial of the nation or of confederation, what does that change, those are only words, let us get some action".

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall reply to the hon. member for Marquette that those may be words but to us, they have their meaning. If, in 1812, that is 55 years before confederation, when the nation already existed, when there were Lamontagnes, Tremblays, Merciers, Caouettes and Gregoires who fought in the Canadian army against the invader, if it had not been for them, he could not boast of being a Canadian citizen today. He could simply call himself an American citizen.

Before confederation, there was a Canadian nation, there was a Canadian country, there was a Canadian fatherland and Canadian citizens who worked, fought to develop that country. It is precisely because there was a Canadian history prior to 1867 that the hon. member for Marquette can be proud to live in a country which progressed, developed and expanded.

If it had not been for that period before 1867, the hon. member for Marquette might think to himself that he would not be welcome in Canada. It is because Canadians fought for Canada before 1867 that he is here today.

That is why words mean something to us. "Centennial of confederation" and "national centennial" do not mean the same thing at all.

Does the hon. member for Marquette realize that it is because of our forefathers who were here in Canada before 1700 and 1800 that he can share with us the benefits of this country? I cannot tell what his ethnic origin might be, but two centuries ago those people were not here.

We welcome as friends all those who come to live in Canada. We want to recognize their rights and privileges, but we want them to recognize that, before they came to Canada, our two great nations worked towards the development of this country.

We are happy to grant them all the rights which every Canadian citizen can enjoy, but we do not want them to forget that we fought, before they came, so that they might enjoy the rights and the freedom which are now ours in Canada.

A while ago, I heard the hon. member for Marquette say: We want our rights without taking anything from anybody, but let no one take anything away from us either. If ever a Canadian citizen from another ethnic origin is deprived of any right as a Canadian citizen, I will be the first to stand in this house to see to it that he is granted his rights, and that, in any province, in Quebec or elsewhere.

We favour the respect of the rights of each and every one and we are not asking Canadian citizens to give up their rights, because, on the contrary, we want to preserve them.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said to me: "You are engaged in a fight; what have you got against English Canadians? Why are you fighting against us?" I answered him: "Since we sit side by side, then read Hansard or stay in the house and listen to us; then you will realize that we do not want to take anything away from the English Canadians, we want nothing from them, no concession, no privilege, we do not want them to give up anything, we are simply insisting on our right to grow, to expand and progress as French Canadians.

I think it is possible to do so without taking anything away from the English Canadians; furthermore, we want to help them to grow.

I was just reading part of a speech made by the hon. member for Port Arthur who, it is said, is known to be outspoken. Well, I will say that he went into this matter of education like a cow in a rose bed or a bull in a china shop.

Here is what the member for Port Arthur said:

> Quebec, like many other provinces, stands in urgent need of a new educational system.

What concern is it of his? What business has he to tell the province of Quebec what it should do in the field of education?

I am very happy to note that he has just come back. He told us: Stop complaining—

The member for Port Arthur was telling me just yesterday: But stop complaining about the English Canadians.

We are not complaining about the English Canadians, but when someone like the member for Port Arthur says it is urgent that Quebec, like the other provinces, get a new educational system, then I say to him that it is none of his business.

It is precisely because there are too many English Canadian members or citizens who wish to meddle in the affairs of the province of Quebec that there is today what might be called some sort of antagonism—

[Text]

An hon. Member: It is part of Canada, isn't it?

Mr. Gregoire: It is part of Canada.

[Translation]

But the educational system of the province of Quebec is under the exclusive jurisdiction of that province and not of the federal government.

We are not seeking the suppression of anything whatsoever in your educational system in Ontario. You can do as you wish. This is not our business.

There will be mutual understanding when everyone will mind his own business. Nowadays, everyone wants to interfere with the province of Quebec's business.

I note also that the member for Port Arthur said this:

> The factor I want to hear about is whether all these screams, yells and howls—in connection with such program may be the reasons for the government not going forward with something that is long term and embracing.

Mr. Chairman, the other provinces are free to accept that program if they wish to do so. It is up to them; that is not our problem. Education does not come under the jurisdiction of the House of Commons or of the federal government but under the provinces.

If the latter wish to set up such a program with the help of the federal government, they are free to do so, but it is none of their business if the province of Quebec chooses to establish a scheme of its own. That is precisely what is meant by "biculturalism": two cultures.

Language is the chief medium of culture. It gives birth to another way of thinking. But let us not to try to be all in the same boat, because it will become a melting pot.

If English Canadians want to develop in a certain way, they should feel free to do so. The province of Quebec wants to set up its own educational system, in keeping with its French culture and its methods for its own citizens. It should be allowed to do as it pleases.

I wish to stress this point: when everyone will actually mind his own business, then everything will be fine and it will be possible to get along, to co-operate and to build a nation where the two great races will be able to live side by side.

But let everyone start by minding his own business. Let nobody come and tell us what to do and we shall not tell others what they should do. That is a rather important aspect as far as the co-operation between the two races is concerned.

Mr. Fisher: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gregoire: The hon. member for Port Arthur seems to be up in arms. I challenge the hon. member for Port Arthur to mention a single example where we have indicated to the other provinces what they had to do. We have requested our share for ourselves, our share only according to our rights.

For instance, when have we tried to interfere with the customs system, the embassies or the consulates? Never. They are the responsibility of the federal government. When have we told the province of Ontario to do such or such a thing?

In the riding of Port Arthur for instance, can the hon. member for that electoral district mention a single instance? He will never find any. But let us look after our own educational system, our own roads, our own hospital system and everything we have at the present time ourselves, for ourselves and by ourselves, under the British North America Act.

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) said a while ago: Tell us just one thing that is wrong with confederation and we will be ready to change it. Well, what is wrong with confederation is that it was not carried out just as it is, it was not respected. Its true meaning was lost sight of and it was not applied and respected over the years, ever since 1867. That is what is wrong with confederation.

Let us go back, for instance, to 1942 when, if I am not mistaken, the federal government asked the provinces to lend it their sources of revenue accruing from individual income tax, corporation income tax and succession duties.

At that time, this order in council provided that if the lieutenant governor in council of a province asked for return in full of these sources of revenue, the federal government would have had to give them back within 30 days. That condition was stipulated in the order in council of 1942, under which the provinces agreed to lend their sources of revenue to the federal government which, in turn, committed itself to give them back to the provinces within 30 days, on request made by the lieutenant governor in council. So it means that this concerned the rights of provinces.

Mr. Chairman, speeches on that matter have been heard for a long time in this house. I am of the opinion that, at the present time, after all those speeches, people have all the required information and it would be time to take action. Still, it must be a step in the right direction, because if we are not ready to apply the proper remedies to confederation, we will not be able to cure what may be ailing it; we will just make its condition worse and heavens knows that it is bad enough as it is.

What would be the proper cures? They have been mentioned several times and there is a fairly wide consensus of opinion on that point in the province of Quebec today.

First of all, the provinces must regain possession of their sources of income, so that they may develop by themselves and without the assistance of the federal government all the fields which come under their jurisdiction according to the B.N.A. Act.

As the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) stated, that should be done, and indeed I am glad to say it here in English, so that my English speaking colleagues may better understand.

[Text]

What we as French Canadians want in this country is this. We do not require other people in Canada to speak French in our country. That is not what we call our right under the constitution. What we want is our right to speak French in the country. We do not require that same right for every Canadian citizen. We do not require people in Toronto or Vancouver to speak French, but we would like French Canadians to have the opportunities to speak French, their own language, in their own country. I do not think that is wrong.

As the hon. member for Villeneuve mentioned, when we from the province of Quebec come into Ontario, the first road sign we meet when entering the province of Ontario on the road from Montreal to Ottawa says: "Observe speed limit". We do not require that a road sign should be written in both languages. It might be a courtesy, but that is not what we want. We want the opportunity and the facilities to develop ourselves, and to develop by ourselves in our country. We do not require anything from English speaking Canadians. They can develop themselves as they wish, but let us have the same opportunity.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this is fanaticism. I do not believe that it is demanding concessions from the other group. No.

There is no concession to ask in this regard. The thing is simply this: the principle of two nations is being recognized more and more in our country, and those two nations must both have the opportunity to develop and to expand, so that the whole country may develop.

To my friends, the new Canadians, who seem to fear this inquiry on biculturalism and who would like it to become an inquiry on multiculturalism, I say that it should not be attempted to make of Canada a country with an English, French, Polish, Italian, German, Ukrainian culture, because we would end up unavoidably with a melting pot as in the United States. Let every Canadian citizen strive to protect two cultures in Canada. Then, the descendants of other ethnic groups who will come to settle in Canada will have the opportunity to keep at least their traditions, their folklore and even their native tongue in certain cases; they may safeguard part of their cultural heritage if two nations can live together in Canada. If on the contrary, we try to preserve many of them, we will end up with a melting pot, as it is the case in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, we will celebrate the confederation centennial if on one hand, we act accordingly; if each ethnic group looks after its own business so as to develop itself and expand and if on the other hand, we act in such a way as to enable both races, both cultures to develop themselves according to their own ambitions, their character, while preserving their language and their culture.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member for Lapointe permit a very simple question?

Mr. Gregoire: Certainly.

Mr. Berger: I have listened, to a certain extent, with pleasure to the speeches made tonight by the hon. members for Villeneuve and Lapointe. But there is that ever-recurring word "we": "we say", "we want", "we wish"

—I would like to know what the word really means, for it is a plural form that is rather peculiar to me.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I believe that I know my French Canadian fellow citizens well enough to say that French Canadian cultural, ethnic and national progress, prosperity and development in Canada is their earnest desire and I think that the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet is included among them.

I am pleased to see he is indicating that he is happy to be included in such a group.

[Text]

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. In his speech he stated that the French Canadian population and the English speaking population should foster only two cultures in this country. Does the hon. member's group back up his statement that other groups—I will not use the word "ethnic", although it is popular, but those of Ukrainian background, or those of Italian or other European ancestry—should forget their own cultures and the advancement of those cultures within their own family and within their own community?

Mr. Gregoire: No. I think the contrary, that each of these groups should try as much as possible to keep its heritage and tradition which it received in its own country. Each group should keep its own culture as much as possible, but I think there should be only two official cultures in this country, the cultures of those who founded and established Canada. I think the others, the Italians and the Ukrainians, to which my hon. friend drew attention, should try to retain as much as possible their own heritage and traditions, which would enrich the country even more.

Mr. Macaluso: If the hon. member would go back in history a little bit he will find that this has already taken place.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

THE LATE DONALD SUMMERVILLE

DEATH OF MAYOR OF TORONTO—EXPRESSIONS OF CONDOLENCE

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, as a member of parliament from metropolitan Toronto I regret to advise the house that the mayor of Toronto, Donald Summerville, passed away this evening in office. It will be three weeks ago tomorrow that he was in Ottawa representing the city of Toronto, which he graced before the transport committee of the Senate. There are no Conservative members from Toronto and he did me the great honour of asking me to accompany him before that committee. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hahn) went with him as well.

As all hon. members know, Mr. Summerville was a very active man. Possibly he had been endeavouring to do too much in the recent past. I regret his death. The halls of parliament have been graced in the past by former mayors of Toronto. I think of the late H. C. Hocken and the late T. L. Church. I could name many others. I am certain Donald Summerville would have graced the halls of the House of Commons in the very near future. All members of parliament from metropolitan Toronto, including New Democrats and Liberals, have lost a friend in this true blue Conservative, Donald Summerville, and I regret having to be the one to bring the sad tidings.

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, we on this side would also like to join with the hon. member in expressing our deepest sympathy to Mr. Summerville's family. The mayor was a very close friend of mine and just three or four days ago we attended a meeting together. I am sure he was a great man and representing Toronto he did a great deal for that city and also for all of Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the acting house leader would give us a résumé of tomorrow's business and possibly Thursday's.

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow we will continue with the resolution we have been discussing today. When it is finished we will take up the resolution preceding the amendments to the Admiralty Act and the resolution preceding the C.N.R. financing act, then the second reading stage of the act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and the second reading stage of the act to repeal the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939. If there is any time left we will consider the three resolutions standing in the name of the Minister of Transport, namely, the grade crossing fund, the St.

Lawrence Seaway Authority Act and the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act.

Mr. Hamilton: I wonder whether the acting house leader would be able to give us any information on what departmental estimates are planned for the latter part of the week?

Mr. MacNaught: I am sorry, but I cannot give that information now. I understand that conversations will be carried on through the usual channels tomorrow to arrange a satisfactory program for Thursday and Friday.

It being six minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 20, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS AND BUDGETS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, by leave I beg to move:

That the annual report for 1962 of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian National Railways securities trust, the auditor's report to parliament for 1962 in respect of the Canadian National Railways, the budget for 1963 of the Canadian National Railways, the annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines for 1962, the auditor's report to parliament for 1962 in respect of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and the budget for 1963 of Trans-Canada Air Lines, tabled on May 17, 1963, be referred to the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, on this motion I want to ask the minister a question. Could he give us an explanation as to what we are going to do about the 1961 reports, which as far as I know have not been dealt with by the house?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware they had not been dealt with by the house. If they have not been dealt with, I am afraid it happened before my time. However, I will look into the matter.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. McIlraith: Earlier today the hon. member for Port Arthur asked me when the annual reports of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines for 1961 will receive consideration. I find on checking the records that they were considered by the sessional committee in November of 1962 and were approved by that committee, as to Canadian National Railways on November 23, 1962, and as to Trans-Canada Air Lines on November 27, 1962.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FRANK L. BANFIELD, HALIFAX—PROCEEDINGS UNDER PAROLE ACT

Question No. 1,150—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Was Frank Leonard Banfield of Halifax released from Dorchester penitentiary in November, 1962 and, if so, was he given a certificate of expiry of sentence?

2. Was Mr. Banfield subsequently arrested by the R.C.M.P. on the 11th of June, 1963, at his place of employment by exercise of a warrant of committal under the Parole Act and if so, was he lodged in the county jail at Halifax and, for what period of time?

3. Were the R.C.M.P. and the national parole board aware that Mr. Banfield (a) had resided (b) been steadily employed in Halifax since his release from Dorchester and (c) been married since his release?

4. Was a warrant of committal issued by a provincial magistrate as required by the Parole Act and, if so, what is the name, and the status, of the person who signed the warrant of committal?

Mr. Chevrier: 1. Frank Leonard Banfield was released from Dorchester penitentiary in November, 1962, and was given a document that certified that he had been incarcerated in the institution serving a term of two years. In addition, the document stated that he had been sentenced on May 10, 1961, and was released on expiry on the 23rd day of November, 1962, after serving one year, six months and 14 days.

2. Mr. Banfield was subsequently arrested by the R.C.M. Police on June 11, 1963, at his place of employment and lodged in the county jail at Halifax after 12.30 p.m. on June 11, 1963 and was released on bail during the morning of June 14, 1963.

3. No.

4. When Mr. Banfield was arrested as described in paragraph 2, the R.C.M. Police had in their possession a forfeiture warrant of committal, purporting to be under the Parole Act, which has not been issued by a magistrate as required by that act. On June 24, 1963 a substitute forfeiture warrant of committal was issued by provincial magistrate Horace E. Dickey, Q.C. at Halifax, Nova Scotia but immediately thereafter and before such warrant was executed a new certificate of parole was issued to Mr. Banfield.

PROSECUTIONS OF COMPANIES FOLLOWING NORRIS REPORT

Question No. 1,170—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is the government considering legal action against Canada Steamship Lines; The Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Co.; David Transportation Ltd.; Guy Tombs Marine Services Ltd.; National Sand and Material Co., Ltd.; Nothwest Steamship Ltd.; N. M. Paterson & Sons Ltd.; Quebec and Ontario Transportation Co. Ltd.; Quebec Paper Sales & Transportation Co., Ltd.; The Reoch Steamship Co. Ltd. concerning agreements signed by these companies with the S.I.U. which were declared by Justice Norris to be in contravention of the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act; if not, for what reason?

Questions

2. Is the government considering legal action against Canada Steamship Lines concerning an agreement between it and the S.I.U., whereby the company would be indemnified for any damages arising against it for the agreement with the S.I.U. on behalf of the company's personnel who already had been certified to the N.A.M.E. of Canada by the Canada labour relations board, which agreement was declared by Justice Norris to be in contravention of the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act; if not, for what reason?

Mr. Chevrier: Counsel appointed by the minister to study the evidence in connection with the Norris inquiry are considering these as well as the other questions of prosecution arising out of such evidence.

*C.N.R. GRAIN ELEVATOR, SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Question No. 1,317—Mr. Bell:

Is it the intention of the Canadian National Railway Company to sell the grain elevator on Prince William street, Saint John, N.B., as announced September 19 in Moncton and, if not, what are future plans?

Mr. Cantin: The elevator at Saint John is not being offered for sale by the Canadian National Railways. Future plans for the elevator are receiving consideration.

RICHARD O'HAGAN—REMUNERATION

Question No. 1,377—Mr. Fisher:

Has Richard O'Hagan, on the staff of the Prime Minister's office, also been receiving an additional income or expense allowance from any other source, including the national liberal federation and if so, what is the scale of this additional remuneration?

Mr. Pearson: The only official record of Mr. Richard O'Hagan's salary is the salary he is paid by the government of Canada for services rendered on a full time basis.

C.N.R. EASTERN GRAIN ELEVATORS

Question No. 1,378—Mr. Rynard:

Is it the intention of the Canadian National Railways to dispose of all of its eastern elevators?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of the Canadian National Railways have been giving consideration to the question of whether it would be advantageous if certain elevators were operated by firms whose main business is the operation of grain elevators, and in order to assess the matter advertisements have been placed in newspapers inviting proposals for the elevators at Midland and Portland.

C.N.R. TRAIN FACILITIES, PORT AUX BASQUES-ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.

Question No. 1,383—Mr. Tucker:

1. Have any requests been received by the government or management of the C.N.R. concerning the lack of sleeping and dining facilities on trains operating between Port aux Basques and St. John's, Newfoundland?

[Mr. Orlikow.]

2. Have any announcements recently been made by the management of the C.N.R. with respect to train operations between the above two points in Newfoundland?

3. Is it the intention of the government to request C.N.R. management to ensure the provision of sleeping and dining facilities on trains operating between the above points?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. Representations were received by the government from the hon. member for Trinity-Conception and were transmitted to the C.N.R.

2. The management of the railway advise that the usual announcements were made regarding timetable changes effective October 27.

3. This is a matter relating to the internal operation of the railway, and consequently the only action open to the government is to draw to the attention of the management any representations received.

FUMIGATION OF APARTMENTS FOR SERVICE PERSONNEL, HALIFAX

Question No. 1,479—Mr. Crouse:

1. What is the total number of apartments for naval personnel at Shannon park, Halifax?

2. What is the total number of apartments for army personnel at Windsor park, Halifax?

3. How many of these apartments in each of these areas required fumigation in (a) July (b) August (c) September, 1963?

4. What was the total cost of fumigation in each of these areas in each of the said months?

5. Were tenders called for such works and, if so, what firms tendered, and what is the amount of each of the said tenders?

6. Which of the said tenders was accepted?

Answer: 1. 521.

2. 219.

3 and 4. None of these apartments required fumigation. However, pesticidal control treatments were carried out as follows:

Shannon park

(a) 108, (b) 178, (c) 26.

Under contract, inspection and treatment services of all buildings are carried out at an initial treatment cost of $1,980.

(All of these were initial treatment).

Windsor park

(a) 2, (b) 0, (c) 4.

Under contract, inspection and treatment services of all buildings are carried out at a monthly cost of $150.

5. The tender call for Shannon park covered pesticidal control treatments with separate quotations for a call back inspection and additional treatments.

Bids were submitted as follows: Scotia pest control $1,818 initial treatment, plus $8 for a three bedroom unit, $10 for a two bedroom unit and $35 for a basement area on a call back inspection and treatment basis. W. E. Mackie Ltd., $1,980 plus $3, $5 and $40 respectively. Braemar pest control, $8,400 plus $35, $6 and $25 respectively.

The tender call for Windsor park covered monthly inspection of all buildings and regular monthly treatments as required.

Bids were submitted as follows: Scotia pest control, $150 per month; W. E. Mackie Ltd., $175 per month; Braemer pest control, no quotation.

6. Shannon park, W. E. Mackie Ltd.; Windsor park, Scotia pest control.

QUEBEC—JAIL INMATES RELEASED ON PAROLE

Question No. 1,488—Mr. Matheson:

In the province of Quebec from January 1, 1961, to date (a) how many penitentiary and jail inmates have been released on parole by the national parole board (b) what has been the rate of parole violation in comparison with the national rate (c) how many of the abovementioned parolees have been convicted while on parole of armed robbery and, of these (i) how many had served terms in federal penitentiary (ii) in provincial jails, and (iii) how many had never been in detention before (iv) had exceptions been made under the parole regulations and, if so, to what extent and, under what circumstances?

Mr. Chevrier: (a) From January 1, 1961 up to September 30, 1963, 1,610 inmates have been paroled from penitentiaries and provincial prisons in the province of Quebec.

(b) In 1961 the rate of parole violation in the province of Quebec was 11.22 per cent for that year, compared to a national average of 11.84 per cent. In 1962 the rate of violation for the province of Quebec was 11.35 per cent, compared to a national average of 12.18 per cent. We are unable to determine the parole violation rate for the first nine months of 1963, as the information is not yet available.

(c) Of the 1,610 parolees, 19 have been convicted of armed robbery, which is a violation rate for this particular type of offence of 1.18 per cent of the total number of parolees released. (i) Of these 19 parole violators, six had served a term in a federal penitentiary, and (ii) Seven had served a term in a provincial jail, and (iii) Six had never been in detention before. (iv) Exceptions to the parole regulations had been made in two of these cases. In both cases the men involved were in custody for the first time. One exception was to the extent of 12 days on a two year sentence, and the other exception was to the extent of two months on a 12 year sentence. The reason for both exceptions was that a job was available for them at that time, which would not have been available to them later.

SLEEPING RESERVATIONS, C.N.R. OCEAN LIMITED

Question No. 1,525—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Have any complaints been received by the Canadian National Railways in the last six months in regard to the inability to secure sleeping reservations on the Ocean Limited due to overcrowding and, if so, what remedial action is contemplated to eliminate the causes of these complaints?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advises that it is not aware of any complaints. However, it is quite possible, due to the heavy travel on the Ocean Limited, that some patrons have been unable to obtain the type of space desired on the day they wished to travel. Effective October 27, the equipment and schedule of the Scotian have been improved to provide additional sleeping and dining car facilities between Montreal and Halifax.

CONSTRUCTION OF SUGAR BEET REFINERIES IN EASTERN CANADA

Question No. 1,546—Mr. Latulippe:

Has the government any plans to stimulate the construction of sugar beet refineries in eastern Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec, in view of the present situation in the sugar market?

Mr. Drury: No. It is understood that the government of the province of Quebec is currently investigating this matter. No requests for assistance have been received from the province.

ADEQUACY OF AIRSTRIP, ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.

Question No. 1,549—Mr. Tucker:

1. Have any studies been carried out to determine whether the existing airstrip and other facilities at St. John's, Newfoundland, are adequate to cope with weather conditions and increasing traffic and, if so, what is the nature of the report with regard to these studies?

2. Is any consideration being given to the planning of an additional airstrip in a different location to the one now being used?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. The most recent study indicates that the present runways will be adequate to satisfy any foreseeable operational requirement. Certain work, however, is planned to improve the taxiways and apron and consideration is being given to the provision of an instrument landing system on runway 11.

2. While some consideration has been given to the development of an airport at a different location, the matter is not being actively considered at the present time.

CONVERSION OF HANGAR, WHITEHORSE AIRPORT

Question No. 1,551—Mr. Nielsen:

Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the proposed conversion of "A" hangar for terminal use at the Whitehorse airport (Yukon) and, if so, on what date is it intended to commence work on the project?

Mr. McIlraith: Because of the relatively little difference in estimated cost of construction of a new small air terminal building at Whitehorse as opposed to the earlier approved plan of rehabilitating a wartime hangar to serve as an air terminal, it has been decided to proceed with plans for a new building.

In selecting a site for the proposed new building, soil tests had to be undertaken and these were only received at the end of October. In the meantime, preliminary sketch plans have been completed.

It is now the intention to submit a proposal to treasury board seeking approval in principle to construct a new air terminal building at this airport in the near future.

COST OF TELEVISION PROGRAM "TELEPOLL"

Question No. 1,602—Mr. Nielsen:

1. What is the cost to Canadian National Telecommunications of its participation in the television program "Telepoll" carried on the C.T.V. network?
2. Is the cost of C.N.T.'s participation shared equally with Canadian Pacific Telecommunications?
3. Does C.N.T. have any discretion as to the program content of "Telepoll" and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1 and 2. "Telepoll" is sponsored jointly by Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Telecommunications. Program costs are based on standard C.T.V. network rates and are shared equally by the two companies.

3. The program is planned and produced by Channel Productions Limited for the Canadian television network. The selection of program content rests with the producers, not the sponsors.

SUBSCRIBERS TO HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

Question No. 1,603—Mr. Caouette:

What was the total number of subscribers to the English and French editions of the House of Commons Debates in 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963?

Mr. Drury: The debates of the House of Commons are sold and distributed on a sessional basis. Actual circulation figures are only available for the last three sessions.

| | English edition | French edition |
|---|---|---|
| Fifth session, 24th Parliament, (18 January 1961 to 18 April 1962) ..... | 11,163 | 2,587 |
| First session, 25th Parliament, (27 September 1962 to 5 February 1963) | 11,513 | 2,622 |
| First session, 26th Parliament, (16 May 1963 to 2 August 1963 and 26 October 1963 to date) .. | 12,526 | 2,974 |

These figures are maintained for procurement purposes to show the upward or downward trend and, having served this purpose, are not held any longer. The distribution of the debates of the House of Commons, in both languages, has gradually increased over the past sessions and it is expected that this trend will continue.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

C.B.C. REVENUE FROM ADVERTISING

Question No. 1,606—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Of the $27 million received by the C.B.C. and referred to in the Glassco report (a) how much was received in radio, and (b) how much was received in television?
2. Of the amount received in television, how much was received through Canadian sponsors?
3. How much commission was paid to agencies and what amount was paid to affiliate stations?
4. How much was paid to employees of the advertising sales department of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The amount referred to in the Glassco report is $32,910,000, which is the amount shown as advertising revenue (gross) in the corporation's annual report for the fiscal year 1961-62. (a) $2,562,000. (b) $30,348,000.

2. The explicit amount received from Canadian sponsors is not readily available, but it is estimated to be approximately $26,000,000.

3. As shown in the corporation's annual report 1961-62 commissions to agencies and networks $4,620,000. Payments to private stations $4,851,000.

4. The amount of $1,541,000, shown as Selling expense in the annual report 1961-62 covers all the expenses of the corporation's commercial department, including salaries.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.—NEW C.N.R. BUILDING

Question No. 1,619—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Is it the intention of the Canadian National Railways to erect a new building at Charlottetown?
2. If so, what is the type of building to be constructed, and when will the project commence?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1 and 2. Consideration is being given to the erection of a new express-freight shed. However, the starting date for construction has not yet been determined.

BREAKWATER REPAIRS, PONDVILLE, N.S.

Question No. 1,621—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Have tenders been called for breakwater repairs at Pondville, Richmond county, N.S., and, if so (a) what are the names, addresses, and amounts of those who tendered (b) has a contract been awarded and to whom?

Mr. Badanai: Yes. (a) The only tender received in response to public advertising was from Gerald J. Forgeron, West Arichat, N.S. at $9,105. (b) Yes, to Mr. Forgeron.

RELEASE OF WEATHER INFORMATION, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 1,637—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Have any restrictions been put on the release of weather information from D.E.W. line sites through the Department of Transport to commercial carriers operating in the N.W.T.?

2. If so, what are these restrictions and when were they imposed?

3. What is the procedure that must now be followed by a commercial carrier and the Department of Transport to obtain weather information from D.E.W. line stations (a) prior to flight departure (b) during flights?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. No.

2. N/A.

3. (a) Information may be requested and obtained from Canadian weather information outlets. (b) Obtained by contacting the D.E.W. line site on the appropriate VHF air to ground facility or by reference to the radio range twice hourly broadcast of reports.

STUDY OF CHESAPEAKE BAY CROSSING PROJECT

Question No. 1,640—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Has the Department of Public Works made arrangements to study the 17.6 mile combination causeway bridge tunnel crossing Chesapeake bay, which is now in an advanced stage of construction, with a view to determining whether any of the concepts and engineering methods used there would have application in a crossing for Northumberland strait?

2. If not, are plans being made for such a study?

3. Have engineers of the Department of Public Works visited this project to study the problems met, and the methods used to overcome them?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. The department has been observing the progress of this project with keen interest and has studied the plans for it and reports on it. Arrangements have also been made for our engineers to visit the site in the near future.

TRADE MISSIONS TO WEST INDIES

Question No. 1,646—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Since May 1962, have trade missions been sent to any of the islands in the British West Indies (Antigua, Barbados, Dominica, Grenada, Montserrat, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent)?

2. What special assistance, economic, technical or administrative, has been extended to these islands?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The Canadian trade mission to the Caribbean (appliances and housewares) concludes its business in Trinidad this week, after visiting Jamaica and Barbados. No other Canadian trade mission has visited Barbados or the other islands listed since May 1962.

This trade mission comprised 15 Canadian exporters of consumer goods, particularly electrical appliances, hadware and cutlery, plastic housewares and stationery. It was organized by the Department of Trade and Commerce in co-operation with the Canadian electrical manufacturers association.

2. Under the Canadian bilateral program of grant aid for the commonwealth countries and territories of the Caribbean area, both project assistance and technical assistance have been provided since May 1962 to the islands listed. The projects are: (a) a deep water wharf and warehouse project for the island of St. Vincent was started in 1962 and is scheduled to be completed early in 1964; (b) a quantity of port handling equipment is in the process of being purchased for the islands of Barbados, Grenada, St. Vincent, Dominica and St. Kitts; (c) during the present fiscal year, construction is scheduled to commence on primary schools in Grenada, Antigua and Dominica, and on port warehouses in St. Lucia and St. Kitts; (d) the drilling and developing of fresh water wells is currently being carried out in the islands of St. Kitts, Nevis, Anguilla and Montserrat; (e) a forest survey for the island of Dominica was completed in the summer of 1962.

Under technical assistance arrangements, students have been trained in Canada and Canadian teachers sent to the islands as shown in the following table:

| Country | Students in Canada since May 1962 | Canadian teachers in area since May 1962 |
|---|---|---|
| Antigua ..... | 9 | 2 |
| Barbados ..... | 13 | 1 |
| Dominica ..... | 7 | 3 |
| Grenada ..... | 9 | 3 |
| Montserrat .... | 5 | 1 |
| St. Kitts ..... | 2 | 1 |
| St. Lucia ..... | 2 | 1 |
| St. Vincent ... | 8 | 1 |

FOLLOW-UP PROGRAMS FOR MENTAL PATIENTS

Question No. 1,655—Mr. Orlikow:

Will the government give consideration to offering financial incentives to public health departments that employ public health nurses or social workers in order to promote home community follow-up programs for patients discharged from mental hospitals?

Miss LaMarsh: Federal financial assistance is already provided annually under the terms of the national health grants in support of the development and operation of community public health and mental health programs which employ public health nurses and social workers.

With considerable variation from province to province, patients discharged from provincial mental institutions are visited and followed up under such programs. It would be quite in order for a province to submit further projects under the national health grants for the purpose of extending follow-up programs for patients discharged from mental hospitals.

CF-104 PLANE LOSSES AND REPLACEMENTS

Question No. 1,658—Mr. Lambert:

1. Since putting into use of the CF-104 Starfighter by the R.C.A.F., how many such aircraft have been destroyed or retired as being further unserviceable as a result of operations, operational training or instructional training?

2. What is the breakdown as between losses based on (a) Canada (b) Europe?

3. How many CF-104 aircraft have been purchased as replacements for the above losses, over and above the original number of aircraft slated to be required in the CF-104 program?

4. What has been the cost of these additional purchases, if any, and, is it the intention to purchase additional such aircraft to cover possible future losses of CF-104 aircraft?

Answer: 1. 11.

2. (a) 5. (b) 6.

3. None, but 16 dual aircraft have been ordered primarily for training purposes which have an operational capability.

4. The estimated cost of the dual aircraft is $27,500,000. No additional purchases are planned.

NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED, SEPTEMBER 1963

Question No. 1,665—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many persons were unemployed during the month of September and, of this number, how many were women and, amongst these (a) how many were married (b) how many were there whose husband was working (c) how many were under twenty years of age?

2. How many men were unemployed during the same month and, of these (a) how many were married and had children (b) how many were under twenty years of age?

3. Of the total unemployed during this month, how many were only temporarily out of work and expected to return to their work or to take a job before November 1, 1963?

Answer: 1. As of the week ended September 21, 1963, the number of unemployed in Canada was estimated at 250,000 of whom 58,000 were unemployed women. (a) Of the 58,000 unemployed women, 17,000 were married. (b) Not known. (c) Of the 58,000 unemployed women, 23,000 were 14 to 19 years of age.

2. As of the week ended September 21, 1963, the number of unemployed men in Canada was 192,000. (a) Of the 192,000 unemployed men, 96,000 were married. The number of unemployed married men with children is not known. (b) Of the 192,000 unemployed men, 39,000 were 14 to 19 years of age.

3. Not known. However, as of the week ended September 21, 1963, of the total unemployed of 250,000, 13,000 were on temporary lay-off with definite instructions to return to work within 30 days of the commencement of the lay-off.

AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS ACTING AS AGENTS FOR STABILIZATION BOARD, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,667—Mr. Latulippe:

In what transactions did officials of the dairy products division of the Department of Agriculture act as agents of the agricultural stabilization board during the past two years, in the constituencies of Compton-Frontenac, Megantic, Sherbrooke and Beauce?

Mr. Hays: Officials of the dairy products division acted as agents of the agricultural stabilization board in the administration of policies concerning the buying and selling of creamery butter and cheddar cheese.

STABILIZATION BOARD EMPLOYEES, QUE.

Question No. 1,674—Mr. Latulippe:

What are the names, dates of employment, qualifications and salaries of the officials of the agricultural stabilization board who work in the following constituencies (a) Compton-Frontenac (b) Megantic (c) Sherbrooke (d) Beauce?

Mr. Hays: The agricultural stabilization board do not have any officials located outside of Ottawa.

DAIRY PRODUCTS DIVISION EMPLOYEES, QUE.

Question No. 1,675—Mr. Latulippe:

What are the names, dates of employment, qualifications and salaries of the officials of the dairy products division of the Department of Agriculture who work in the constituencies (a) Compton-Frontenac (b) Megantic (c) Sherbrooke (d) Beauce?

Mr. Hays: (a) (b) (c). Mr. R. Levesque, located at St. George de Beauce, works the area of Beauce, Megantic and Frontenac. He has been employed continuously with this division from April 26, 1959. His salary is $5,130 per annum.

(a) (c). Mr. P. E. Leclerc, with headquarters at Sherbrooke, looks after the inspection work in the Sherbrooke, Compton, and part of the Frontenac constituency. He has been employed continuously by this division since December 16, 1957. His salary is $5,130 per annum.

Qualifications for the abovementioned officers require they have at least two years of high school plus graduation from a recognized dairy school. They must also have a thorough knowledge of manufacturing procedures of dairy products.

*REPORT ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

Question No. 1,680—Mr. Bell:

1. Has the Minister of Justice received the report on juvenile delinquency from the departmental committee appointed in January, 1962 and, if not (a) what is the reason for the delay (b) have all meetings and discussions been completed (c) when will the report be handed down?

2. Will the report or any portion thereof be made available to parliament for study?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. The report of the Department of Justice committee concerning the nature and extent of the problem of juvenile delinquency and the steps that might be taken to meet it has not yet been received because members of the committee have found that their ordinary departmental duties seriously limit the time that is available to write the report.

All meetings and discussions by members of the committee with interested individuals and organizations have been completed and it is expected that the report will be available in April, 1964.

The minister, of course, from time to time receives representations concerning amendments to particular provisions of the Juvenile Delinquents Act. All such proposals have been referred to the juvenile delinquency committee. It was to proposals of this limited nature that he referred in response to a question from the hon. member on November 13.

2. When the report of the committee is received a decision will be taken on the question whether it should be made public.

BUTTER SUBSIDY PAYMENTS, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,681—Mr. Latulippe:

What amount has the government spent under the 12 cent per pound butter subsidy since March 31, 1963, in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac?

Mr. Hays: Claims for the 12 cent per pound butter subsidy in April 1963 and the equivalent payment to eligible producers since that time until October 31, 1963, of 14½ cents per pound on butter fat used for the manufacture of butter, have totalled $275,546 for butter manufactured in creameries located in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac.

DEFINITIONS UNDER EXCISE TAX ACT

Question No. 1,685—Mr. Belanger:

1. Is a person or a company repairing automotive engines, automobile fuel pumps or television screen tubes defined as a manufacturer under the terms of the Excise Tax Act and, if so, what are the defining terms used in the act or regulations?

2. Does the Excise Tax Act or regulations thereunder define the meaning of a customer, a producer or a manufacturer and, if so, what is such definition?

3. Does the Excise Tax Act or regulations state the percentage of the primary sales price that may be used to repair an article before it is considered as a new article and once more liable to tax and, if so, what is that percentage?

Mr. Garland: 1. Rebuilding or remanufacturing is distinct from repairing and falls within the definition of "manufacturer" appearing in the Excise Tax Act and amplified by court decisions.

2. There is no definition of "customer" in the Excise Tax Act and, in general, definition of the word is that found in the dictionaries and in common usage. The definition of "manufacturer" is explained in (1) above. In certain circumstances covered by specific regulation or instruction, the words "wholesaler", "retailer" and "user" are defined for purpose of that regulation or instruction.

3. There is no single test as to what constitutes manufacturing as distinct from repairing. The nature of the manufacturing or repairing operations, the ownership or other rights to the goods and the relative value of parts and components to the total value of the article are some of the factors used in determining whether or not an article is being manufactured. No percentage figure is used in the current regulations.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ADMISSIONS TO CANADA BY ORDER IN COUNCIL

Question No. 1,425—Mr. Peters:

1. How many persons were admitted to Canada under order in council between the years 1950 and 1960?

2. What are the numbers of these orders and the names and addresses on those included in each order, signifying in each case those recommended by members of parliament for inclusion following the amnesty provision for those illegally admitted?

3. How many were included in these orders in council, and what adjustments have been made to correct improper information in the order in council, giving the number of P.C. order in each case?

WINDSOR STREET POST OFFICE, MONTREAL—EXTRA HELP

Question No. 1,460—Mr. Valade:

What are the names and addresses of the persons residing in Montreal who were hired as supernumeraries for the Windsor street Post Office, between April 8, 1963 and October 23, 1963, and on what date was each of them employed?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

IMMIGRATION ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Motion No. 111—Mr. Peters:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all orders in council covering immigration for the years 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, and 1959, and to include any corrections that have been brought to the attention of the government as a consequence of the immigration amnesty order, together with recommendations instituted by members of parliament concerning individuals covered by such orders in council.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I ask permission of the house to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Motions for Papers

LEASING OF GOVERNMENT ELEVATOR, PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Motion No. 164—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents received or sent by the Minister of Agriculture, the board of grain commissioners or any other department or agency of government since January 1, 1962, dealing with the possibility of leasing the Canadian government elevator at Prince Rupert, B.C.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government.

Motion agreed to.

LEVEL CROSSING REPLACEMENT, LAC MEGANTIC, QUE.

Motion No. 165—Mr. Latulippe:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence since 1955 between the Minister of Public Works and the town of Lac Megantic with regard to the replacement of level crossings in that town.

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, I was offered the opportunity to go and consult those documents myself at the Department of Transport, and I shall gladly do so.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but I did not hear what the hon. member has just said.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I was told that I could go and consult those documents at the board of transport commissioners. Since the file is quite voluminous and that a great deal of work would be saved if I went myself to the board of transport commissioners in order to consult those documents, I am willing to do so.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

RELOCATION OF RAILWAY TRACKS, LAC MEGANTIC, QUE.

Motion No. 166—Mr. Latulippe:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence since 1955 between the Minister of Transport or any official of his department, and on the one hand officials of the Canadian National Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway; and, on the other hand, the town of Lac Megantic, with regard to the removal of level crossings in that town and the relocation of the railway tracks.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there are no papers under the motion as drafted, but I understand that what the hon. member wants is the correspondence with the board of transport commissioners, who are responsible for the administration of this matter. If he is satisfied to make the necessary amendment by substituting "board of transport commissioners" for "transport department", then there is only one other objection to the motion, in that there is a tremendously large file of correspondence involved. I have arranged with the hon. gentleman that he can go to the board of transport commissioners and select those letters and documents he would wish to have tabled and they will be tabled. Subject to these remarks, there is no objection to the motion carrying.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is accepted subject to the reservation of the minister.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING JOLIETTE-L'ASSOMPTION-MONTCALM CONSTITUENCY

Motion No. 168—Mr. Choquette:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence received by the postmaster general or any official of his department, since April 1, 1958, in connection with post offices, rural mail delivery or any other services which fall under the jurisdiction of his department in the constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis: Always subject to the usual reservations.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation made by the minister the motion is accepted.

Motion agreed to.

TELEGRAM FROM B.C. FISHERIES ASSOCIATION

Motion No. 169—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the telegram received from the fisheries association of B.C. which was referred to and quoted in part by the Minister of Fisheries at page 2945 of the House of Commons Debates for August 2, 1963.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would allow this motion to stand today?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to co-operate with the Secretary of State any time today.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

SELLING AND PRICING OF NEW DRUGS

Motion No. 170—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of telegrams, correspondence, and other documents exchanged between the government, the restrictive trade practices commission, or the combines investigation branch, and any person, organization, or company since January 1, 1961, regarding the question of hearings by the restrictive trade practices commission concerning the selling and pricing policies of certain pharmaceutical houses in respect of new types of drugs.

He said: May I ask that this motion stand, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—STATEMENT ON POSITION OF ARRESTED CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Yesterday the Prime Minister promised to make a statement regarding the two Canadians who are being held prisoner by the Cuban authorities, particularly with reference to whether their trial would be a public trial, and second as to whether the Canadian government would assure themselves that these men would have adequate counsel.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am now in a position to give further information on some of the questions which were asked yesterday. The hon. member for Oxford asked what could be the maximum sentence which might be imposed on the Canadian prisoners. The state prosecutor in Havana has asked in the indictment that the two pilots be given the death penalty.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition inquired whether the trial would be held in public. We have been told that the trial will be held in public and that local and Canadian correspondents will be permitted to attend. An officer of the Canadian embassy in Havana will also be allowed to be present.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam a moment ago, and the Leader of the Opposition earlier, inquired about defence counsel. With regard to Canadian counsel, the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed the house on November 14 that we had asked the Cuban authorities that Canadian counsel be permitted but that our request had been denied. There has been no change in that regard. We are informed that the participation of foreign counsel is not permitted under the Cuban system. However, with the help of our embassy in Havana, each of the accused has now secured his own Cuban defence counsel.

Beyond this, Mr. Speaker, I feel I should not go at this time. I should like to emphasize, however, that the government is following the case with the closest attention and the most serious concern, and is in contact with the foreign ministry in Havana and the Cuban ambassador here. At all times, Mr. Speaker, we have been concerned for the welfare of these two Canadian citizens and are doing everything we can for them. Likewise, Mr. Speaker, we would not wish to do or say anything at this moment that might not be in their interests.

Mr. W. R. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question in view of the Prime Minister's reply. In the event that the two accused Canadians in Cuba did not, in the opinion of the government, receive a fair trial as we understand it, would the government make clear to the government of Cuba in this eventuality that possible retaliatory measures might be considered by the Canadian government?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think it would be in the interests of the prisoners themselves at this moment to go beyond what I have already said on the eve of their trial.

RUSSIA—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PERSECUTION OF JEWS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I was asked a question by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition about persecution of the Jews in the Soviet union and whether the Canadian government had made any representations on this matter to the Soviet embassy. I have an answer, Mr. Speaker, and it is rather longer than I would like, but it is a very complicated and difficult question so I hope the house will bear with me.

The government has received occasional representations from various Jewish organizations in Canada on the question of anti-semitism in the Soviet union. Several of the representations have related specifically to the numbers of Jews convicted for economic misdemeanors and sentenced to death or long prison terms.

I find it particularly unfortunate that any government should find it necessary to resort to those penalties for economic crimes which were abandoned in many countries of the world at least a century ago. Although the penalties have been levied against persons of various nationalities and faiths within the U.S.S.R., the disproportionate number of Jews given severe sentences may reflect the historical tradition of anti-semitism which has prevailed among the population, even though there is no evidence to suggest a state program encouraging anti-semitic tendencies. There is also an element of religious persecution within the U.S.S.R. which is directed not only against the Jews but also against Christians, Muslims and other religious believers. I am sure that not only the government but all the members of this house would join in condemning such persecution in all its forms, whether in the Soviet union or elsewhere throughout the world.

Despite our concern, we have not made representations to the Soviet embassy on the specific question of anti-semitism in the U.S.S.R. If such representations were contemplated the more appropriate channel would be to make an approach directly to the Soviet authorities through the Canadian embassy in Moscow. However, I should remind my right hon. friend who asked the question of the fact that there is in the Soviet union a deep-seated suspicion of cosmopolitanism, that is a mistrust of elements in the population and particularly of minority and religious elements which the Soviet authorities fear might have international connections and loyalties which could conflict with their allegiance to the U.S.S.R. Because of this consideration, Mr. Speaker, the present government, as did the previous administration, wishes to avoid any official action which, by emphasizing the Soviet suspicion of the international affiliation of the Jews, might provoke further restrictions against the Jewish community in the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister ascertain whether there has been correspondence between the government and the Canadian Jewish Congress on this matter, and if so, could the correspondence be tabled?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there has been correspondence on this matter, but I am not familiar with the details of it at the moment. However, I shall be glad to collect that and see if it could be tabled.

NATO—U.S. REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING TRADE WITH COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the Prime Minister, while he was on his feet, would make some reference to the question that was asked yesterday about the NATO ministerial conference and the position which Canada is taking with reference to the United States proposal to curtail credits to the Soviet union to a period of five years.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Now that I am on my feet again Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to say a word about that. I had intented to because, as my hon. friend knows, I was asked yesterday whether any representations had been received by the Canadian government from the United States government concerning the need for general agreement among NATO nations on trade with the communist block.

While no direct representations have been received on this subject from the United States government, we have been kept informed of United States thinking on this and it was, of course, the subject of discussion at a special meeting of the NATO council on Monday of this week, at which the Secretary of State for External Affairs was present and at which the United States delegate made a proposal concerning the undesirability—and I am just paraphrasing what he said—of granting credits for trade with communist countries beyond a five year period.

The Canadian delegate, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, joined the United Kingdom and certain Scandinavian delegates in opposing that proposal. My hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be back in the house tomorrow, or at the latest on Friday, and he will make a more extended statement on this matter at that time.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR ACTION RESPECTING RISING PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. The question is somewhat unusual, but it is of urgent and country-wide importance. Has the Prime Minister received representations from some of his supporters in this house urging him to adopt the New Democratic party price control policy on sugar by the introduction of a measure to give effect to such policy? Is so, what action does he intend to take?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only representations I have received to adopt the policies of the New Democratic party have been from members of that party themselves. On this particular point I have not received the representation my hon. friend talked about, but I do note, as no doubt he has noted, that the price of sugar has dropped $1.80 per hundred in the last day or two.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. A week ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated that negotiations were going on with the sugar exporting countries in the commonwealth regarding the possibility of Canada entering into an agreement for the bulk purchase of sugar at a negotiated price. Are those consultations continuing? What progress is being made, and how soon is the government expecting to make a contract with the sugar industry?

Mr. Pearson: Negotiations are going on. I will bring my hon. friend's question to the attention of the minister, who is not in the house this afternoon, and he will make a statement at the earliest possible moment on the consultations, and on any decisions taken resulting from them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does your question deal with sugar?

Mr. Gregoire: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question. A week or so ago, the Minister of Justice told us his officials are studying the situation in England where there is a sugar board and where long term contracts have been instituted. Has he anything further to report to the house as to the adaptability of this system to Canada?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): The director of research and investigation did go to London and did have talks with the chairman of the board there. Those talks were satisfactory. The Minister of Trade and Commerce dealt with them in his statement, and I should not like to add to what was said at that time.

REQUEST FOR PROMOTION OF GREATER DOMESTIC PRODUCTION

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I direct my question to the hon. candidate for the office of minister of agriculture for the east.

Considering the prohibitive price of sugar due to our inadequate national production in that field, does the government intend to give some impetus to sugar beet growing in Canada?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I shall call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the problem raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Text]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—CLAIM TO OWNERSHIP OF ISLANDS IN HUDSON BAY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question?

Has the minister received from the province of Quebec a request concerning the ownership of the islands located in Hudson bay and James bay, in territorial waters, that is within the three mile limit at low tide?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, sir; no such request has come to my attention.

QUEBEC—REQUESTS FOR TENDERS NOT IN FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question. Could the minister tell the house why the tenders called for the drilling to be done under the Dufferin terrace were not published in the French language newspapers, and particularly in those of Quebec city?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I will take the question as notice, and I hope to give a reply to my hon. friend as soon as possible.

PUBLICATIONS

COMPETITION WITH CANADIAN EDITIONS OF U.S. MAGAZINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can give a reply to the question I raised regarding the grievous position, or whether there is a grievous position, of Canadian publications at the present time, on which the government may intend to act.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This matter is still under consideration. I hope to make an announcement with regard to possible government policy in this field in a few days, perhaps toward the end of the next week.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. I base it upon the fact that most of us are still getting representations about this matter. I should like to ask the Prime Minister directly whether he feels that there is indeed a grievous situation here, in economic terms, for these publications.

Mr. Pearson: I am informed by those who are qualified to speak for the publications in question that there is indeed a serious economic situation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF CARAVELLE PLANES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the many representations from Quebec and the serious unemployment situation in that province, does the government intend to recommend the selection of Caravelle aircraft by T.C.A., in order to give work to the employees of Canadair?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We will be discussing unemployment at the forthcoming conference with the provinces. On the special point raised by the hon. member, I hope to be able to make an announcement within a few days.

TRADE

BREAD—PROPOSED PROHIBITION OF IMPORT INTO NEW YORK STATE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware of a bill introduced in the legislative assembly of the state of New York with a view to prohibiting the importation of Canadian bread in that state?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, I have not been advised of that resolution, although I have seen a reference to it in the press. I will be glad to look into the matter.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

USE OF WORDS "POSTES" AND "POSTAGE" ON STAMPS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the reports published in some newspapers, can the minister tell the house if it is true that the words "Postes" and "Postage" used by the Post Office Department will disappear?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, I must say that nothing will be done to change the bilingual character of postage stamps in 1964. As a matter of fact, one will bear the word "Canada", a bilingual word which is very easy to say in both French and English. As far as the others are concerned, they will bear, instead of the words "Postage" or "Postes", another bilingual inscription, to confirm our country's distinctive bilingual character.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Postmaster General a supplementary question? Does he not think the time is ripe for him to have his picture on postage stamps?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we ought to have the portrait of the hon. member for Villeneuve put there instead, since he is not long for this world, politically speaking, and he will die eventually. In any case, he is surely aware of the fact that only dead people have their pictures on postage stamps.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the words "Postes" and "Postage" are to be removed from postage stamps and, as a result, it will be impossible in other parts of the world to know that Canada is a bilingual country, does not the minister feel he ought to reconsider the decision taken and leave those two words there?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, even if the words "Postes" and "Postage" do not appear on postage stamps, we could still read on them, for instance, "Conférence de Charlottetown" and "Charlottetown Conference".

[Text]

TRANSPORT

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF SATELLITE TRACKING STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask the Minister of Transport if it is correct that the nimbus satellite tracking station proposed for Neil's Harbour will be cancelled because the Canadian government refuses to provide the housing requirements for personnel who would be employed there.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, that is not correct.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask a supplementary question. When is this government going to stop playing touch football with such questions as the Newfoundland ferry and the heavy water plant?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not understand touch football as the hon. member does.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): With respect, sir, that is not the only thing you do not understand.

CHIGNECTO—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY DEVELOPMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Can the Secretary of State inform the house if the Atlantic development board is presently giving consideration to a study of the Chignecto complex?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am afraid I could not hear what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. Coates: Can the Secretary of State inform the house if the Atlantic development board is presently giving consideration to a study of the Chignecto complex?

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe so, sir.

Mr. Coates: I wonder if the Secretary of State would check and find out for certain, and give the house some indication when we might expect a report.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to do that when the officials are back from Newfoundland and I can get in touch with them readily.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—INQUIRY AS TO STORAGE ON CANADIAN SOIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Defence. Have we now any nuclear weapons, in one form or another, stored on Canadian soil?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not that I am aware of, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a supplementary question. If we have them stored on Canadian soil, would the minister be aware of that situation?

Mr. Hellyer: I would hope to be, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: We hope you would be, too.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

SUGGESTED APPEARANCE OF PRIME MINISTER BEFORE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention to appear before the standing committee on privileges and elections to outline to that committee the details of the government's program for making a contribution from the public treasury toward the costs incurred by parties and candidates during election campaigns?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have not been invited to appear before the committee, so the question is indeed hypothetical.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—PRICES PAID BY EASTERN FARMERS FOR WESTERN GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture or for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but since they are both absent today I shall direct my question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister assure the house the government will investigate the reason eastern farmers have to pay such a high price for grain produced in the western provinces?

Mr. Woolliams: Because we produce a good quality grain.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The grain is of good quality, but I shall be glad to look into the matter. However, I do not believe this is a suitable question for orders of the day.

Mr. Langlois: May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. I know that the western farmers produce good wheat—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Langlois: —but we have been asking this question for quite a long time—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member please take his seat when I am on my feet? Is the hon. member putting a question?

Mr. Langlois: Yes. I have been putting it for months, Mr. Speaker, and I still have not had an answer from the government. I went to the Prime Minister this time, and he gave an arrogant answer which was not in keeping with what should be an answer on the part of the government.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member got rather tied up in the form and phrasing of his own question. If he does not realize it, I should tell him that is not the type of question one should put. I am sure he will take notice of that.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase the question I asked the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to investigate the operations of the grain exchanges as to the difference in prices of wheat between eastern and western farmers?

Mr. Pearson: With great respect, I do not think this is the kind of question I can answer on orders of the day.

Mr. Langlois: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have been coming back to this question for the past month, and all we have got on the part of the government have been delays—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Langlois: —and arrogance without precedent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is the second time this afternoon I have to ask the member to resume his seat when I am speaking. If he would refer to the rule book he would see he has to keep his seat.

Mr. Langlois: With all due respect to Your Honour I would still like the government to answer normal questions when they are asked, and then maybe I would not have to get up and call on the rule book and have Your Honour make statements every so often.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—SUPPORT FOR VIEWS OF MEMBER FOR KOOTENAY WEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question, and it is a rather unusual one. During the last week or two has the Prime Minister received correspondence from Liberal candidates who ran in the Kootenay or Okanagan areas advising him that they are supporting the hon. member for Kootenay West with regard to his views on the Columbia river?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot recall receiving any communication of that kind with that kind of suggestion, that I should support the hon. member for Kootenay West. I may have received it, and I will look into that matter because it is very important.

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Prime Minister. Yesterday, in regard to the Columbia river treaty, the Prime Minister said that the governments of the province of British Columbia and the United States were working together on the downstream benefits; that is, as to the sale price. Is Canada participating in those negotiations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes indeed, Mr. Speaker, the federal government is participating in these negotiations.

Mr. Pugh: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are those negotiations going on fairly continuously, or have they stopped?

Mr. Pearson: They are going on fairly continuously, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure of all the details, but I know that technical committees were set up, representing all the parties to the discussion, to look into some of the technical questions. I believe those discussions are completed, or almost completed, and that there is to be a discussion next week on a rather different level. I will look into the matter and obtain more details for my hon. friend.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the event of agreement being reached among the three parties concerned, is it still the Prime Minister's intention to refer this treaty to the external affairs committee of the House of Commons before proceeding with it in the house?

Mr. Pearson: I think, Mr. Speaker—and again I speak subject to correction—the commitment has already been given that the treaty, when all the difficulties that have been encountered have been removed and the treaty has been signed, will be referred to the external affairs committee of the house before ratification.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—REPORTED OFFER OF RUSSIAN ICEBREAKERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Is the government ready to accept the offer made by Russia to send its own icebreakers to the St. Lawrence river in order to keep it open so as to expedite the shipping of Canadian wheat to that country?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such offer. In any event, we have our own Canadian facilities which I hope are adequate for this purpose.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in reference to the question asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm concerning Canadian shipping facilities. Have the Canadians got facilities to keep the St. Lawrence waterway and other waterways open, in order to ship wheat out of our ports during winter time?

Mr. Pearson: As my hon. friend knows, we have icebreakers that are used for that purpose.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): As a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, is he suggesting, although I am sure he is not, that icebreakers will be used to interfere with the traditional position of the Atlantic ports in handling wheat shipments?

Mr. Pearson: I quite understand my hon. friend's preoccupation with that question. I hope nothing I have said will add to his preoccupation in that regard.

Mr. Nowlan: Or to my worries.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of what has been said about icebreakers on the St. Lawrence, will the Secretary of State contact the Atlantic development board officials as soon as he can communicate with them, and try to arrange hearings in Saint John about this matter of winter navigation, which is now under consideration by the board?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to bring the hon. gentleman's speech to the attention of the board.

UNITED NATIONS

COMMONWEALTH SEAT ON SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Oxford, who inquired about consultations now under way at the United Nations in preparation for the forthcoming debate on the question of enlarging the security council.

The principal aim of the Canadian delegation in these talks, and at meetings of the commonwealth group, has been to emphasize the importance of retaining the commonwealth seat. Pressure for enlargement has developed, notwithstanding Soviet opposition, from the newer member states of Asia and Africa. In their view geographical considerations should be accorded greater importance than others in determining the composition of the council.

This has an obvious threat to the seat which is normally held by a commonwealth member. We are doing all we can to drive home the point that states which contribute significantly to the maintenance of peace and security should be assured of a reasonable prospect for equitable representation on the security council. The commonwealth has an outstanding record of contribution in this regard, and we believe that contribution deserves recognition in the allocation of seats on the security council.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LANDS, FORESTS AND WATERS—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. In his capacity as house leader could he make the necessary arrangements to call together the committee on lands, forests and waters while the members of the Northwest Territories council are still in the city? I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources would agree it would be a very useful and helpful exercise to have the members of the committee meet these distinguished northerners.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as house leader I did everything I could in this regard by moving the motion drafted by the hon. member for Peace River. The committee has been in existence for months. I will try to act as an honest broker and see if we can do a little more to get the committee to meet.

PENSIONS

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF PLAN TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to that honest broker, the Secretary of State, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the house leader. Would the minister discuss with his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the possibility of bringing before the house a motion to refer the subject matter of the Canada pension plan to an appropriate committee, without prejudice to the right of the legislation to remain on the order paper and without prejudice to the right of the house to proceed with the legislation at any time?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): No, sir. I think that would be a most undesirable thing to do on the eve of the federal-provincial conference. It seems to me, from what I read in the public press, that we have enough committees at the present time competing for the attention of hon. members, and I doubt if an academic exercise of the kind suggested by the hon. gentleman at this stage, before the federal-provincial conference, would further the end he has in view.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, will the government consider such a proposal immediately after the federal-provincial conference has been held?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is a matter in which the government should take its responsibility in the normal way, according to the rules of the house.

Mr. Knowles: That is what it should do.

NATIONAL CENTENNIAL ACT

AMENDMENTS CHANGING NAME, ENLARGING MEMBERSHIP OF ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, November 19, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Batten in the chair:

That it is expedient to amend the National Centennial Act to change its short title from the National Centennial Act to the centennial of confederation act and to change the title of the national centennial administration to that of the centennial commission; to provide also that the centennial commission shall consist of a commissioner, an associate commissioner and not more than twelve directors in lieu of eight directors and to provide further for certain administrative changes in connection therewith.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, following my remarks of yesterday, I should like to deal today with a most important point.

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) wanted to know what it is we would like to change in our Canadian constitution, in the British North America Act. We said that we would like to modify the way the British North America Act has been enforced, and the constitution carried into effect.

I have here the British North America Act, and I would like to show the house that this act has been violated several times by the federal government and that when there was violation of the B.N.A. Act, it was not done by the provinces to the prejudice of the federal government, but by the federal government to the detriment of the provinces.

If one reads clause 91 of the British North America Act and considers the various matters which are the federal government's responsibility, one finds that never did the provinces interfere in the fields placed under the federal jurisdiction.

For instance, let us take the first point:

Amendments concerning the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

Never did the provinces interfere in that field. Second:

The public debt and property;

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The provinces did not busy themselves with what concerns the federal public debt. Here is another point.

Unemployment insurance;

The provinces did not enter that field either.

And then:

The borrowing of money on the public credit.

The provinces were not concerned with that field.

And further:

Postal service;

The Postmaster General himself would be the very first to say that the provinces never concerned themselves with that matter.

And, further on, we find:

The census and statistics;

The same can be said here.

Further along we see:

Militia, military and naval service, and defence;
Navigation and shipping;
Currency and coinage;
Banking, incorporation of banks and the issue of paper money;
Weights and measures;
Bills of exchange and promissory notes;
Interest;
Patents of invention and discovery;
Copyrights.

In every case, it may be noted that the federal government has been free to legislate in those fields, and that the provincial administrations did not deal with those matters, which are under federal jurisdiction.

On the other hand, if we read clause 92, which lists the exclusive powers—I repeat "the exclusive powers of provincial legislatures"—and consider, among others:

The establishment, maintenance, and management of hospitals, asylums, charities, and eleemosynary institutions—

—we find that, through its hospital insurance scheme, the federal government did enter that field.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think considerable leniency has been shown in this debate, but I fear we are getting away from the resolution before the committee.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: Everyone spoke of just about anything yesterday.

Mr. Gregoire: We are speaking of the centenary of confederation and it is in connection with the celebration of that event that I am referring to the act which established confederation. I feel my remarks are entirely relevant, considering especially the speeches which were made by those who spoke before me in the house. In my opinion, I am not straying from the subject under consideration by mentioning the act on which confederation is based. Since we are speaking of the centenary of confederation, we have to go back to the origins of confederation if we wish to celebrate that event which occurred 100 years ago. I am just going back to the origins.

Paragraph 8 of section 92 reads as follows:

Municipal institutions in the province;

The legislation concerning loans to municipalities, winter works, etc., shows once more that the federal government has infringed upon provincial jurisdiction.

A quick look at section 93 of the British North America Act, which deals with education, shows that the government has violated provincial autonomy by providing assistance for universities and vocational training establishments.

That is because the government does not abide by paragraph 2 of section 92 which states:

Exclusive powers of provincial legislatures.
Direct taxation within the province in order to provide the raising of revenue for provincial purposes.

In other words, direct taxation comes under the provinces, not under the federal government.

It is precisely because this clause of the constitution has been violated that today so many problems crop up in the path of confederation.

When the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asks us what we complain of, then I answer him that we complain of the Canadian constitution not being respected today by the federal government, for they infringe upon the rights of the provinces; and the day such infringement by the federal government stops, we will no longer complain about confederation.

The hon. member for Port Arthur could perhaps take time off to study that clause of the British North America Act, the Canadian constitution; perhaps he would then understand our complaints and would no longer tell us that his knowledge of the French Canadians of the province of Quebec is restricted to Lili St. Cyr and Maurice Richard.

Mr. Chairman, 95 years after confederation, the hon. member for Port Arthur, a former professor, comes and tells us that it is all he knows about the province of Quebec; he certainly has much to learn about our culture.

Had he opened his eyes a little more, he would have seen that we have not only Lili St. Cyr and Maurice Richard, but also great artists such as Raoul Jobin, Leopold Simoneau, Richard Verreau, Wilfrid Pelletier, who have given brilliant performances on the most famous stages in Canada and in Europe.

We have had great artists, scientists, doctors, engineers, who have been a credit to the French Canadian nation.

Had he studied a little more, he would have learned that we have had great statesmen, such as Henri Bourassa, and great politicians, such as Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. Chairman, we may tell him that we know also some great English Canadian artists, great singers, such as John Vickers and James Milligan, and the hon. member for Marquette should certainly know about Irene Salemka, who performed on the stage of the Hamburg and Vienna operas.

We know them because we opened our eyes on the whole of the English Canadian civilization, and the hon. member for Port Arthur should have opened his eyes as we did, to see what was going on on the other side. But he did not; that is why he stated there is only Lili St. Cyr and Maurice Richard as products of the province of Quebec.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I can tell him that we are proud of Maurice Richard, who was a great player on a wonderful hockey team. I can tell him also that he should have opened his eyes to see all our artists and actors who are a credit to Canada on the international scene. Furthermore, I can tell him that, for one who is a school teacher, I find him ignorant for not knowing those things. It may well be that, according to his standards, the value of a man is determined by the thickness of his pocket-book and the money he has in the bank. Should that be his conception of culture, I shall say to him that we, for our part, have a different notion of what real culture stands for. The real value of a man is surely not indicated by the thickness of his pocket-book.

In my opinion, instead of telling us things I would call "stupid", the hon. member for Port Arthur should have remembered all the distinguished citizens of the province of Quebec who have contributed not only to the growth of their own province but to that of Canada as a whole; in short, before asking what we are complaining about, before running us down, he could at least have ascertained whether our demands and claims are justified.

As a former school teacher, he is talking through his hat when he tells us, without knowing what it is all about, that our educational system needs to be changed.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member and advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Gregoire: May I have one minute?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, in making a few remarks on the resolution now before the committee I am reminded of the fact that I am a representative of one of the eastern provinces which together with the two central provinces about 100 years ago made of the union a great nation, and it is with that sort of thought in mind that I rise to make some observations on the resolution. In listening to the opening remarks of the President of the Privy Council yesterday I realized that the government may consider there are reasons for the resolution now before us. Without going into the reasons he gave for the resolution, I submit that when the government brings a resolution before the house for its consideration and states that it is expedient to amend a certain statute it should give the reasons for it in language and in argument which they can justify.

The resolution before us has the name of the Prime Minister attached to it. He is associated with it, of course, as its sponsor and it bears all the influence and prestige of his office. Presumably the government has given consideration to the subject matter of the resolution and is satisfied that these changes are good for Canada. Presumably the government is prepared to be held responsible for the proposition that there is need for the amendment of the original statute and that the amendment is good and will strengthen the original legislation. Obviously that is the situation.

I cannot agree with any such proposition. I find myself compelled to reject the substance of the resolution. I find myself compelled to reject the premise that there is any need for this amendment. The minister has stated that objections have been raised. I do not propose to go into those. I think the fact that the government has submitted the resolution to the house is what should be before us today.

The government seems to have got in the habit of withdrawing, and it would appear to me that they might properly be accused of a withdrawal in this particular case. Let us examine the proposed amendment and let us see what the contemplated changes are. They are going to change the title.

Mr. Lamontagne: No.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): They say the title must be the "Centennial of Confederation Act".

Mr. Lamontagne: We do not change the title of the act.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Suppose I read the resolution.

That it is expedient to amend the National Centennial Act to change its short title—

Mr. Lamontagne: Not the title.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I am reading from the resolution.

Mr. Lamontagne: The short title, but not the title.

An hon. Member: Make your own speech.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): If the resolution is wrong perhaps the minister would like to have it corrected. I am reading from the resolution.

Mr. Lamontagne: I said we do not change the title but only the short title.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I read again.

That it is expedient to amend the National Centennial Act to change its short title from the National Centennial Act to the Centennial of Confederation Act—

Mr. Lamontagne: The short title.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I continue:

—and to change the title of the national centennial administration to that of the centennial commission.

I do not know what the minister is quibbling about because he is certainly going to change the title. That is the suggestion in the resolution.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit there is nothing in the resolution that will change the title of the act, which is at present "an act respecting the observance of the centennial of confederation in Canada". That is the title of the present act and the resolution does not change the title.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I wonder what we are debating here today. Are we debating what the minister says we should be debating, or are we debating what the resolution says, which I have read?

Mr. Lamontagne: Perhaps the hon. gentleman might go back to the act which was passed by his own government and he would see that there is a title and a short title. We are not proposing to change the title in any way but only the short title.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): That is what I call splitting a hair right down the middle.

Mr. Lamontagne: No.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The minister says he is not going to change the title but he is going to change the short title.

Mr. Lamontagne: Exactly. They are two different things.

Mr. Macdonald: You should get a lawyer.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The hon. member for Rosedale says he should get a lawyer.

Mr. Macdonald: No, I said you should.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): No, you have told the minister what to say. You are the lawyer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I have been heckled before by people of the same political persuasion as this crowd.

Mr. Macdonald: They threw you out of office too.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am going to have to ask the committee to allow the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton to continue his speech.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the argument I was going to advance was this. Regardless of what we say in this year of our Lord 1963, we should be influenced to quite an extent by what history says was the concept of the people who brought about this union in 1867, which in my opinion was the building of a great nation. What did they have in mind? The minister says he is not going to change the title of the act much. He is going to change the short one and leave the long one as it is—something of that nature, and something just as ridiculous as that, too.

Mr. Lamontagne: Why did you have two titles?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The question about which people must make up their minds is, have we been a nation for 100 years or not? Moreover, I submit that when the government brings before this house a resolution which in effect is playing down Canada they are doing a disservice to the country. There is nothing wrong with the original title. It was explained that we were a nation before 1867, and no one is quarrelling with that; but the B.N.A. Act and the joining together of these four provinces came about in 1867. There is no argument that that is the event we propose to celebrate.

I want to read from a book dealing with the history of the most important province, and hon. members can understand which one that is. I have in front of me the book: "New Brunswick: A History, 1784-1867", written by Professor MacNutt. Part of it concerns the events leading up to the union of 1867. At that time New Brunswick was a colony. It had a governor, and it might be of interest that the governor's name was Gordon, and he was not very popular. I do not say he was any less popular than the Minister of Finance, but he was not very popular.

At the time of confederation the province of New Brunswick and the province of Nova Scotia, together with Upper and Lower Canada joined together and were bound together through the medium of the British North America Act. This is what Professor MacNutt says about a nation. It seems to me that when a professor of history, someone who has looked into the past, writes about a nation it has some significance, more significance than opinions expressed by us gathered here 100 years later. He says that after the election at which the people of New Brunswick decided in favour of confederation the jubilation that followed was Protestant and British rather than a paean of praise for the new nation. He goes on:

> On many an occasion in later years Smith declared that it was a racial and religious cry that had defeated him. Edward Barron Chandler had assured the people that in the new union the maritime provinces could hold a decisive balance of power between Upper and Lower Canada. Tilley had satisfied them that they would endure no increase in taxes. But of the rhetoric and prophecy that frequently accompany the birth of new nations—

And here again is the comment about a new nation—

> —there was little in New Brunswick, especially during the excitement of elections.

Then on page 454 of the same book he continues:

> Behind the adroit persuasions of Macdonald and his colleagues in Canada lay the authority of the British government, not forced but nevertheless strongly asserted, working for the composite solution British world interests required. The problem had not been of New Brunswick's making, but she was compelled to recognize its existence. Her elemental loyalties powerfully invoked, exposed to the appeal of building a new and great nation whose promise hung upon imponderables, pressed by the impact of immediate events, cajoled by rather flimsy assurances of commercial prosperity, and somewhat bribed, the province entered confederation with very little grace and no gratitude.

My reasons for these quotations from a great historian, who has gone back into the prevailing opinions expressed by various people 100 years ago when this nation came into being, is simply to show what was the concept at that time of Canada as a nation. Now, Mr. Chairman, do we take the opinion of an historian who is an expert in the field, or the opinion of somebody who has not made any particular investigation into the matter? I submit there was no need for any change to the title.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): You do not even know the reason for it.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Well, these interruptions do not matter to me. The hon. gentleman has a right to his opinion as I also have a right to mine. The difference is that I have proven mine, whereas all hon. members opposite have is mere assertion. However, that is not unusual for them. If we pass this resolution as it stands I consider that we will, in effect, be saying that we cannot do business under the title of the National Centennial Act. It will be construed that we have not yet become a nation. I wonder what those heroes who went over in the first world war and those who went over in the second world war would think about that.

Mr. Lamontagne: May I ask the hon. member a question. When did somebody in this house say that there was no Canadian nation?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I said that if we passed this resolution it would be construed as an admission that we have never been a nation. There is no one so blind as he who will not see, and there is no one so deaf as he that will not hear.

Mr. Macdonald: And there is no one so dumb as he who has nothing to say.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Well, the hon. member for Rosedale should be an authority on that particular subject. I said that I did not subscribe to any such fallacious doctrine that we have never been a nation. Go upstairs to the sixth floor, and in the dining room you will see pictures of at least two outstanding prime ministers of Canada, Sir John Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Do you remember, Mr. Chairman, what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said when he was asked about the place of Canada in the commonwealth, or in the British empire, as it was then called? He said: "Daughter am I in my mother's house, but mistress in my own". If he was mistress in his own, then we were a nation; there is no question about that. That is what the great Laurier said. He said we stand for the unity of Canada. Only a few days ago I read, because I was not here at the time, what the hon. member for Three Rivers said in support of the principle of the unity of Canada. That is the important thing, the thing we should be stressing.

Mr. Lamontagne: Will he speak during this debate?

[Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton).]

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I said I was not here.

That is all I have to say as far as our nationhood is concerned. If our friends over there wish to deny our nationhood, that is their privilege: I am not going to deny it.

Toward the end of the resolution, it says:

To provide also that the centennial commission shall consist of a commissioner, an associate commissioner—

I see no objection to that. Indeed, if I wished to extend compliments to the minister I would say that the adjective "associate" seems to be an improvement over the word "deputy". I am expressing no objection to that change. Then, the resolution continues:

—and not more than 12 directors in lieu of eight directors—

This brings us back to the story of the Atlantic development board. Hon. gentlemen opposite had to gain control of that board so they brought in six extra directors to accomplish this purpose. The resolution speaks here of four more, bringing the number up to 12. I will say that the commissioner appointed by the previous government is just about the best appointment which could be made in Canada.

Mr. Lamontagne: No patronage.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): No one has more knowledge of Canada than Mr. John Fisher and we are fortunate in having his services at our disposal. Four new members are to be appointed. We should have those names as soon as possible.

Mr. Lamontagne: You took a year and a half to appoint the national conference.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I would prefer that the president of the council did a little more acting and a little less talking. It will be better for him and it will be better for his party, too. The resolution ends:

—and to provide further for certain administrative changes in connection therewith.

I have grave misgivings about this. I presume we shall know in a short time, when the resolution passes, just what is contemplated. I hope the minister will not make any attempt to introduce changes which will be considered as being partisan in character. To do so would, in my opinion, be to defeat the very object of this legislation and I hope it will not come to pass.

I say, in summary, that some of the concepts which the government are now recommending to us are incorrectly founded. I do not subscribe to them. I think there may be other things in the legislation, things we have not so far seen, which may be equally difficult to accept. I urge the minister to make public, either by laying them on the table of the house or by incorporating them in Hansard, the names of the proposed new appointments at the earliest possible moment. I am speaking about the personnel of the conference.

Mr. Lamontagne: They have already been made public.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): There have been some misgivings about provincial representation on this conference, which will be composed of 60 members. Twenty are to be appointed by the provinces, two by each province. I am sure this is a most desirable situation.

Canadians have a habit of playing themselves down. The government has done us a disservice by playing down the nationhood of our country by the change which is contemplated in this resolution. It should not be so. The government should be furnishing leadership to the people of Canada in the process of building ourselves up rather than the opposite. That is what should have been done and that is why I view this resolution with misgiving. I hope my fears will prove not to be well founded. I travel, or used to travel, a good deal outside Canada. I found that the name of Canada is held in high esteem wherever I have gone outside the borders of this great country. I hope my misgivings concerning the result of the change contemplated by this resolution will be unfounded.

Finally, I hope the machinery provided by the new act will be effective and that it will produce results of which all Canadians can be proud.

Mr. Cowan: I heard the hon. member who has just resumed his seat attribute to Sir Wilfrid Laurier the lines: "Daughter am I in my mother's house but mistress in my own". Should this not have been attributed to Rudyard Kipling, from "Our Lady of the Snows" published in 1897?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): If the hon. member wants my opinion, I would say that Laurier probably quoted it.

Mr. Barnett: I listened with some interest to the remarks of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) comes from one of the original provinces of confederation. I feel that those of us who come from other parts of the country, such as British Columbia, are happy to be joining the rest of Canada in celebrating this centennial even though we may not have been part of Canada for a hunded years by 1967.

I cannot say I was greatly impressed by the hon. gentleman's argument as it applied to the major change which this resolution will effect. As to his misgivings on this subject, my only reaction is to suggest that a rose by any other name would smell sweet—and I doubt if that particular quotation originated with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, either.

I was one of the members of this house who was honoured to be present when Senator Donald Cameron on behalf of Canada extended an invitation to the commonwealth parliamentary association to visit this country in 1967. In these circumstances the prospect of our celebrations in that year came to my mind very often when we were touring the new commonwealth country of Malaysia, as guests of that country. If our centennial celebration is to be what many people hope it will be we could very well attempt to capture some of the zest and fervour which I found in the country of Malaysia, which has yet to celebrate its first anniversary let alone its one hundredth, in respect of their own federation and in respect of their feeling of belonging to the commonwealth of nations in which they feel parliamentary democracy is a vital thing. I found I had some rather strange reactions when I first entered their commons chamber, because if there was one single thing which struck me in Malaysia it was their endeavour to create the symbols of nationhood. Not the least of these is their new parliament buildings which those of us who were on the tour saw officially opened by the king of Malaysia.

This new building is a symphony in stone and glass, beautifully spacious and air conditioned from start to finish. In fact, I told one of the members of the Malaysian parliament I was beginning to wonder if we in Canada had constructed our parliament buildings 100 years too soon. I have always regarded our own Commons chamber as a rather beautiful room, and one that does in some ways symbolize the Canadian nationhood. However, I have to confess that when I came back after my trip to Malaysia I noticed for the first time how smoky and grimy our chamber is.

I must say I am wondering, as we approach our one hundredth anniversary, whether or not we might be getting a little shaky and decrepit in so far as some of our enthusiasm for the symbols of nationhood is concerned. If I might make a suggestion to the President of the Privy Council as a contribution to this debate, I would suggest that one of the things we should do, perhaps long before 1967, would be to restore a little brightness to this chamber.

The new nation of Malaysia, in my view, is going all out to do some things to make their first anniversary as worth while as our one hundredth anniversary should be. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the hope that we would have something more than fine speeches. I should like to see us have some of the new symbols for our one hundredth anniversary that the people of Malaysia are going to have for their first. The delegates to the commonwealth parliamentary association were invited to witness a display of mass bands before His Majesty the King of Malaysia in a stadium the like of which we have not anywhere in this country, so far as I know. I refer to the stadium Negara, their new national stadium. We, in Canada, put up some sort of a barn-like structure for a stadium, and we erect a horrible mess of structural steel for our floodlights. These people created a stadium in which the floodlight columns look like national monuments. They were beautiful stone columns, shapely in form and proportion. I must say that many times I wished all the members of this house could have the experience of touring Malaysia, just as the delegates to this conference did. I can think of nothing that would give us more zest or more inspiration for having a one hundredth anniversary celebration that is worthy of our nation than the experience those of us had who were there.

Certainly, I feel that we in Canada are not yet too old or decrepit to be able to revive that sort of youthful enthusiasm for nation building and for the development of parliamentary democracy that I found in the newest member of the commonwealth, Malaysia. I recalled that when I left this chamber to go on that trip, the house was involved in a rather long and sometimes heated discussion concerning where certain members were going to sit in this chamber. I must say that, with that in mind, I was a bit appalled when I found the veneration in which Canada, as the senior member of the commonwealth, was held by the people of Malaysia, as they voice their enthusiasm for parliamentary democracy and the rule of law.

Malaysia is a country of minorities with about 50 per cent Malays, some one third of the people with Chinese ancestry and the other largest minority coming from the subcontinent of India. This is a land where people speak many languages, a land where people have a great variety of cultures and yet—

The Chairman: Order; I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I am just wondering whether he is not straying quite a bit from the resolution now before the committee.

Mr. Barnett: I have listened rather attentively to the discussion of this resolution, and it seems to me that my remarks are pertinent to my own desire, and I take it to the desire of those who wish the passage of this resolution, to do something to stimulate action in connection with our celebration plans and to get some real centennial building into the proposals for this celebration in 1967. It was with that in view, Mr. Chairman, that I thought I should like to say these few words in support of the resolution, relating them to my own recent experience in the development of nationhood in Malaysia.

I am not going to prolong these remarks. The point I am really trying to make is that the important thing to consider in connection with our centennial is the attitude of mind with which we approach it. If I may say so, I think one of the prerequisites is a change in the attitude of the members of this house collectively. I was saying that the contrast between the attitude towards the institution of parliament which was evident when I left here and the attitude which I found in Malaysia was something which did not make me proud to be a Canadian or to be a member of this house. I feel that if there is any virtue in some of us going abroad and seeing what others are doing, it is in getting a fresh approach by seeing ourselves through the eyes of others. We should talk about this when we do come back into the house.

I was mentioning that Malaysia is a nation of minorities, a people with many languages and many cultures. I was about to say that they are making a tremendous effort to create unity and harmony, yet retain the variety and colour of their various cultures. I have to say that even during this discussion, the sort of petty bickering in which we indulge in respect to some of the language and cultural features of our own confederation, does not sit very well in contrast to what they are attempting to do in Malaysia. I would hope that the passage of this resolution, if it has any value at all, will help us enter more fully into the spirit of confederation. That was really the point I wished to make when rising to discuss it.

In line with some of the suggestions made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I could go on to point out what might be some of our centennial projects. In Malaysia, for example, 50 per cent of the total federal budget is being spent on education. It has one of the most beautiful universities to be found anywhere in the world, a university which was started from scratch in 1958.

Mr. Lamontagne: May I ask a question of the hon. member?

Mr. Barnett: Yes.

Mr. Lamontagne: In order to shorten the debate on this resolution, which has a very restricted scope, I wonder if he would agree to postpone his remarks about centennial projects until we come to the estimates of the centennial administration?

Mr. Barnett: I had no intention of launching into any lengthy discussion of what I might consider to be appropriate centennial projects, but I was going to mention by way of illustration and by way of emphasis of the remarks made earlier by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that this is the kind of emphasis being placed by the government of Malaysia in building its new federation. This is the sort of thing which I would like to see us doing in Canada, when we enter upon the second 100 years of our existence as a nation. In deference to the point raised by the minister, I will now admit this was about the extent of the remarks I intended to make.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to delay the committee and I certainly hope it will pass the resolution shortly. I believe there is only one speaker to follow, although I am not sure of this. However, as I read once again the terms of the resolution and the changes that are to be made, although they do not seem consequential there is still a slight fear that there is another meaning for the changes that are being proposed. This has been referred to by the President of the Privy Council and by other speakers, and I have had private conversation about it earlier this afternoon.

I wonder if there is not some significant meaning in the actual changes that are proposed. Is the government changing its attitude about Canada as a nation, and now thinking of it as a two nation state? This may be the case, but we do not know. Although there is no doubt we will accept, on division, the resolution as it stands, considering the statements that have been made so far I feel I have something worth while to add in the progress of debate.

The previous speaker indicated that, by comparison with what he has seen in recent weeks, Canadians would not be proud to be members of parliament if they could see the deportment of such a new nation as Malaysia. I say to you now, Mr. Chairman, if there is anything wrong with Canada we can find some of the ills right here in this parliament. One of them is the proliferation of parties in this house, and we have seen what this has meant to Canada and the Canadian people in recent weeks.

Pleas have been made for progress in parliament, but they have no relationship to the actual business that has been transacted inside the house, and the people of Canada must recognize this. If changes are to be made it is entirely due to those people who have held up the work of parliament.

During the course of this debate references have been made to what transpired in our history, and in regard to who came here, what nations sent people, and the purposes of their coming. My colleague from Marquette made a noteworthy contribution yesterday afternoon, and my background induces me to tell the house my forefathers came here from the United States to seek the freedom of this country and to leave the area of conflict that existed in the United States at that time.

They came as a type of loyalists, loyalists to the British crown, loyalists to the Canadian flag, and loyalists to their faith. I believe that as we go on to celebrate the centennial of Canada we must remember the faith our forefathers had in coming here. We must remember the efforts that were put forth in order that we might enjoy the bounties of this country that exist today. If we forget those basic things, how can we go into the celebration of our centennial with the proper concept of what we should do?

With regard to the list of people being invited to the conference, and especially with regard to their political affiliations, surely it is not our intention to proceed to our hundredth anniversary on the basis of a political connotation such as that list had? I certainly hope that before the debate concludes the President of the Privy Council will table that list of names for all our people to see.

Listening to the statements made yesterday, seeing the parrying, the setting back and forth, the swaying made to our ideas, I could not help thinking of the effort that was put forth during two world wars. This was something which was mentioned by another of my colleagues. Surely these people, as they went to fight for Canada, did not think they belonged to this or that part of Canada, and did not care whether their comrades spoke this tongue or that tongue. Indeed, if I am to be honest with the committee, when I myself went into the second world war I left a section of the country which was bilingual. The other language used was German, but my comrades and I went to fight for Canada. We did not go to fight for any situation that was local, or any situation that would divide the country. Anyone with an ounce of common sense will know why we and others made this effort.

The crew with which I flew in the second world war—this is the second time I have mentioned this in the house, but I think it is more important this time—had a skipper who was French Canadian. I am sure he would be proud if he knew that today one of the members of his crew sat in this house, in the highest court of Canada; nor would he ask,

"Do you belong to this group, or do you belong to that group?" That was not why he gave his life. This very great comrade of mine, whose name was Emile LeBlanc, came from Prince Edward Island, and as I stand here I realize that I owe my existence to him, because he could have been out of that situation much sooner than I.

Then I think of the things that were said in this house yesterday and wonder where on earth we are heading when hon. members make statements about what they think are the right things and the wrong things. Surely as far as our friends are concerned—and I say "our friends" in all sincerity—from the province of Quebec, if they are being denied any rights, surely we have these rights set out boldly and clearly not only in the Quebec Act of 1774 but also in the British North America Act. I would be the first to stand up for these people if those rights were being denied. But we in this parliament of Canada cannot expect to have the advantages of an area of prosperity or the advantages of the contribution from one end of the country to the other if sections of our country are separate and apart.

Yesterday I heard the hon. member for Lapointe say, "We do not want anything in Quebec. We do not want anything else from Canada. We do not expect anything. But don't take anything away from us". I do not have his exact words in front of me at this moment, Mr. Chairman, but I think that is the gist of what he said. The hon. member went on to say, "We want our share". I agree with him. If through the legislation that exists in the Canadian statutes he is being denied his share, or his people, as I said before I would be the first to stand up in my place and demand that those rights be honoured. In the meantime, as we are considering the celebration of our confederation let us be together and let us be one. We must not be divided. We cannot be divided and be a nation. This is the fear that I have with regard to the terms of the resolution that is before us. This resolution is presented by the government and it is an odd thing that we hear these types of statements coming from some hon. members. I refer to the statement made recently by the hon. member for Lotbiniere in regard to Canada's present status. These are not the type of statements that draw us together; they are not the kind of statements that will make us a great nation and give us, as representatives of the people, a better understanding of the situation. Then there are the statements of the hon. member for York East, whose letter to his constituents I hold in my hand. He says, "This is dead" and, "That is dead", and he does not believe the government is accomplishing anything. If it is not accomplishing anything, it is as much his fault as anybody else's in this house.

I should like to point out, again, some of the things that keep us together and those which tear us apart. I think of the speech made by the hon. member for Three Rivers the other evening. This is the type of thinking that we want; it is the type of thinking that will carry us into 1967 and beyond as a nation, and with the possibility of being a great nation; not being divided by petty arguments among ourselves. I listened to the speeches made last evening. Some of the things said were devastating and only denigrate the picture of Canada and its possibilities as we draw toward the centennial of our confederation.

I hold in my hand a clipping from the Toronto Star which carries an article bearing the headline, "Legion 'Worse than reds'—Caouette". I have a further article here which deals with that hon. member's reason for not serving his country. This article goes on to say:

> Caouette evaded military service simply by refusing draft calls. "They sent me white slips and blue ones and pink ones but I refused to go", he said recently. "I had gone through the depression and I didn't think Canada had given me anything worth fighting for".

An hon. Member: He should resign.

Mr. Winkler: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think, as we are considering the 100th birthday of confederation and its celebration, and our great historic past, and when I think of the days when the English minority in Canada depended on the French majority to bring us through to 1867 and on to where we are today, and the statements made yesterday by one of the hon. member's colleagues, an honourable course for the celebration of our centennial would be for this hon. member to resign his seat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member for Lapointe spoke for this party in the house yesterday. The general theme of the hon. member's speech was that we wanted mutual respect as does anybody else. As we give respect to the English speaking citizens, we want it the same way. Does the hon. member go along with that principle?

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. Winkler: There is no question about what the hon. member said, and if the colleague of the hon. member who has just spoken will come back into this house and say this was a mistake—

Mr. Gregoire: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Winkler: —that he is repentant, I would be the first to accept that—

Mr. Gregoire: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

Mr. Gregoire: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member wishes to quote what somebody has said, he should quote what was said and not what is reported in a newspaper. The newspaper report might be mistaken, and it is because of such mistakes that we have the present situation. On my question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I would like the words of the hon. member cited as they were said, and not as they have been reported in the newspapers, because this leads to mistakes being made.

The Chairman: Order. I am wondering whether we are not getting some distance away from the subject matter of the resolution which is before the committee. Certainly the comments that were just made by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce are of interest to the committee, but they seem to be getting away from the resolution that is before us. Perhaps the hon. member would take that into consideration.

Mr. Winkler: I thank you, Mr. Chairman, and will certainly try to follow your direction. But I cannot deviate from the fact that these things are important to this country. These are important questions when we are considering the celebration of the 100th birthday of confederation in 1967. I quoted directly from the speech of the hon. member, the report of which will be found in the Star Weekly of December 15, 1962.

Mr. Langlois: Was that a written speech?

Mr. Winkler: When I was dealing with this particular question, Mr. Chairman, I did not want to be misunderstood. I was dealing with this point because of the area from which I come, where the people are generally of German origin. We do not ask to be recognized as a separate group. There is not an ounce of separatism in our souls. We want to be recognized as Canadians. We want only to be known for the contribution we make to Canada and all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: As I look forward to 1967 and the celebration of the 100th anniversary of confederation I would invite my colleagues to consider what I am saying, because then I think our centennial will be celebrated in a suitable manner. I will reiterate what I said earlier. Having regard to the terms of confederation as laid down in the British North America Act and the rights available to every citizen of Canada to be used for the betterment of Canadians as a whole, if any situation arises where these rights are not being adhered to I will certainly stand up with any fellow citizen of Canada and fight for those rights. Before I take my seat I might ask the President of the Privy Council once again to be so good as to put on the record the names of the people who will attend the conference in this regard. I am sure every member of the house will appreciate it if he will do so.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, in looking at the resolution, which is in the name of the Prime Minister, one of the things that I would very much hope the centennial commission, as it is now to be called would do would be to recommend to the Prime Minister a design for a distinctive Canadian flag, because certainly this is one of the most important things that the people of Canada will expect to have when our 100th birthday takes place. As a matter of fact, if I heard the Prime Minister correctly he said in the house recently that he would recommend a flag to parliament within two years and that the design of the flag would be debated by the house.

I would hope that the centennial commission would hear representations and would be able to make recommendations to the Prime Minister in this respect. All of us who have been members of the house for a number of years and, indeed, those with a shorter length of service, have received over the years many views on this subject, which is one of great interest to most Canadians. I know that in the more than 10 years I have been here I have collected a very large file with designs for a proposed Canadian flag. These designs are varied in nature, size, shape and colour. A great many of them are extremely abstract and are composed of red and green triangles, circles, rectangles and the like. I suspect that in some cases they are so subjective that they mean nothing to anybody except the designer. I am reinforced in this view, inasmuch as most of these odd looking designs are usually accompanied by a very careful explanation of what each triangle, circle, rectangle or square means.

Many representations have been made concerning a flag. There is one group in the country that feels that a distinctive Canadian flag—I am sure all of us agree our flag should be a distinctive one—should contain some symbols which—

The Chairman: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member will allow me to interrupt him to remind him that we seem to be straying from the subject matter of the resolution before the committee, which has to do with the amendment of the National Centennial Act.

Mr. Nesbitt: With great respect, Your Honour, as I read the resolution it calls for a reorganization of the national centennial administration, to be called the centennial commission, and provides for an additional number of members and for certain administrative changes. With great respect, I would think it would be very clear that one of the very important things the commission might do would be to recommend to the Prime Minister and the government a design for a national flag.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is certainly not part of the resolution.

The Chairman: Order. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member and I will let him go on, but perhaps I could mention to him that the subject matter of the resolution is not what the commission is going to do. This might have been discussed when the original legislation was before the house, but when we are considering amending legislation the discussion should be limited to the terms of the amending resolution or bill. I know that the discussion up to now has gone far beyond the bounds within which it should have been limited, but in any case I think it is my duty to bring this point to the attention of the hon. member and I hope he will take it into account.

Mr. Nesbitt: With all respect to Your Honour, I would point out that the last part of the resolution contains these words: "and to provide further for certain administrative changes in connection therewith". It is not made clear at all what these changes are and therefore I thought that would give us considerable latitude in discussing the resolution. Certainly other hon. members have done so. However, I do not wish to make an issue of the matter and if Your Honour wishes I will discontinue my remarks and make them on another occasion.

The Chairman: I am sorry, but I did not hear the last remarks of the hon. member. Do I take it that is the end of his remarks?

Mr. Nesbitt: It is my understanding that Your Honour was objecting to the line I was taking on this matter. I do not wish to make an issue of the matter with Your Honour and if it is your wish I will take my seat and make my remarks on another occasion.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I feel badly about what has happened to the hon. member for Oxford, because I cannot find anything about the member for Port Arthur in the resolution and he was the subject of one of the very wide ranging speeches in this debate. It seems a pity that he should take precedence over the flag that we may have in 1967. I hope the hon. member for Oxford appreciates that he has some sympathy with regard to his intention and the remarks that he was making.

I wish to touch on only two matters in relation to the resolution. One is the intention of a group of young people in this country to focus attention at the time of the centennial on a youth parliament. I understand they have put their suggestion before the national centennial administration, as I suppose it is still called, and I thought it might be worth while to express the sympathy of our party toward this project and our hope that the minister will encourage Mr. John Fisher, who I understand is carrying out the liaison work in this matter, to do something about it. It certainly seems to me that the idea of having in this place in 1967 a meeting of our young people elected on some kind of basis that would allow for constitutional representation—

Mr. Nowlan: If we reduce the voting age to 18 will that not accomplish the end?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings suggests that the reduction of the age to 18 will create a youth parliament here anyway.

Mr. Nesbitt: They will not be able to own any property.

Mr. Fisher: I hate to think what the real parliament may be like in 1967. I am in favour of the centennial administration taking up the idea of a youth parliament or youth session of parliament and giving Ottawa the central focus among young people. I happen to have spent a great deal of time doing research on the year 1876 as it affected the United States. It was their centennial year and they did things up in a very large way. They had almost too much of an outburst of patriotism, and in that year activities of every kind ran riot in the United States. The field I happened to be interested in was sports and athletics. Here again the build-up was tremendous for every possible kind of sporting event, with some national championships involved in it. There were a great number of conferences held in which youth took part and in which sport was the centrepiece. I think the idea of the youth parliament in 1967 can be promoted and developed just as well as anything the Americans did in 1876.

Mr. Gregoire: You mean 1776.

Mr. Fisher: No, 1876, which was their centennial. I have not lost a century, even though the hon. member for Lapointe obviously thinks I am a poor school teacher.

In view of the introduction of the minister, a relevant point seems to me that he told us the main reason for introducing these amendments was because of objections taken by the province of Quebec. I assume this is the reason why members such as the hon. member for Lapointe were allowed the latitude they were in dealing with the fact that Quebec had objections to this. I should like to take the opportunity offered by the hon. member for Lapointe and straighten out one thing for his own observation, as well as that of my hon. friends who have this obsession with Lili St. Cyr and Maurice Richard. I discovered some years ago that Lili St. Cyr was not a French Canadian. I think she was born in Waukegan, where I think Jack Benny comes from. She is rather statuesque, due to the cultural nature of her activities, and her reputation really came into full flower in the fine city of Montreal, where she adopted this name, I understand because it flavoured of Paris or Montreal. She developed in Montreal a great reputation for that particular art in which she specializes, and became widely known because her art had a certain popularity in much of the United States.

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask a question?

Mr. Fisher: No, I do not want any questions yet.

Mr. Gregoire: Just one question.

The Chairman: Order, please. The remarks which are being made by the hon. member for Port Arthur are, of course, very interesting, but I find it difficult to relate them to the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to point out that I was not the one who introduced Lili St. Cyr into this debate, but I feel I have every right to get the matter straightened out, because there is a printed record in Hansard. I find a tendency on the part of our very lovable French Canadian brethren, whenever they get exasperated to fly to such statements as: "The hon. member for Port Arthur said that the only culture in French Canada is Maurice Richard and Lili St Cyr". That is nonsense. I knew that Lili St. Cyr was not a French Canadian. I know a fair amount of what Maurice Richard has achieved; he is certainly the most exciting hockey player there ever was. But I never made any positive statement at all. All I did, in all innocence—and one thing I have discovered is that one should never approach a French Canadian audience with innocence—was to put the matter in the shape of a question. I asked: How do you expect the people in western Canada who have little contact with French Canadians to know anything about your culture? Then I asked: What do we know about your culture, except Maurice Richard or Lili St. Cyr—because they happened to be two names with a French Canadian connotation which might be known in western Canada. I said that, in order to underline the fact that the people of Quebec, the French Canadians, have done very little to tell us in the rest of the country about these marvellous painters, poets, historians, and all the rest of it, which they are supposed to have—and I do not doubt that they do have them. I have an ambition to be able to buy, if ever I can afford it, a de Tonnancourt painting to hang up over the mantlepiece. However, the argument I was trying to make at the time still holds good, and the hon. member proves it. As far as the majority of them are concerned, whenever they want to get their backs up they berate the English speaking Canadians for not knowing anything about them. They never let our part of the country know what these magical and wonderful facets of French Canada are.

After I made this statement, which was so torn out of context, a newspaper in Montreal sent a journalist up to see where this stupid fellow came from. This journalist came to Port Arthur and picked out the names of 25 French Canadians from our telephone directory. When I say French Canadian names, I mean common names like Robichaud, Lafontaine, Labelle, and so on, which fit into our picture. This man telephoned these 25 people one after the other and opened a conversation in French, and he was not able to find a single one who could reply to him in French. When I finally got to him this man was still suffering from shock. But he made two points to me. He said it was obvious that the French Canadians in my part of the country assimilate quickly. Second, he said it was obvious that French Canada or Quebec itself is not permeating or getting out into the rest of Canada. Thereafter he was much more sympathetic to the point I tried to make. This is the argument I should like to get home in this context.

The premier of Quebec has told the federal government that this National Centennial Act is not a satisfactory title, and has to be changed because of French Canadians' consciousness of history. I wish the premier of Quebec would get out into the rest of the country, instead of making demands, as are so many of my French Canadian colleagues here, and tell what are his objections. Why should he leave it up to the President of the Privy Council to make the sort of explanation which led to the rebuttal we had yesterday from the Leader of the Opposition? I do not want to be put into an extremist position because I have already been attacked by one of the extremists, but I think it is about time we started to level on this question of the relationship between French Canadians and English Canadians.

I am a mountain of prejudice with regard to a great many things, but I think like most people in English speaking Canada think. I do not speak for them but I think like most of them. We want to know more. We want to co-operate, establish liaison and sympathize. But the way things are going now we seem to be continually trapped into keeping our mouths shut while these people go ahead and attack us. I do not feel, and most of the people in my part of the country do not feel, responsible for Maurice Duplessis and what may have developed in Quebec. We do not feel we are responsible for the fact that the premier of Quebec is at the present time objecting to this title and wants this petty little change. But we would like to know more about it. My argument is that the government, in this particular case the minister, has given us a pretty inadequate explanation of changes such as this. I think the minister should be prepared to recognize that it always seems to be a matter of the English speaking Canadians in a sense having to back down or retrench because of these very sensitive co-nationalists of ours.

Mr. Lamontagne: May I ask a question? Does the hon. member know that the correspondence exchanged on this issue was tabled in the house on June 27 and that the whole matter becomes very clear on reading that correspondence?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, I have checked the debate and read the reference to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did you read the letters?

Mr. Fisher: Yes. My point in this regard is that here again we have to respond to the demands and to the requests of Quebec and of the French Canadians within this chamber. I think the matter should have been handled at an earlier time than this, and I do not like to see a government, and an administration which it has created, attacked on the basis on which it was attacked yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition. Yet this is the length to which we are constantly being driven by the attitude of our friends in French Canada and by the spinelessness, I guess it could be called, of English speaking Canadians. I should like to make the point that English speaking Canadians, if I understand them, are not bigoted, are not narrow and not antagonistic. But they have a very difficult time understanding. I should like to suggest that some of those who are doing all the wailing about the mistreatment they have suffered in the past should take a good look at our history, because their interpretation of history is one of the most one-sided I have ever encountered. I should like them to look at the British North America Act closely. Let them look at section 133, for example. When they complain about the British North America Act not being followed, and the rights of Quebec being sidestepped, they should recognize that most of these sidesteps or end runs around the provisions of the act have been made with the agreement of the representatives of Quebec who sat in this chamber; that the representatives of the province of Quebec went along with them as far as provision for unemployment insurance and things of that kind are concerned. It is measures of this kind which constitute the major changes which have taken place. It was not a case of the English speaking politicians conniving in such a way as to leave the French Canadian politicians in ignorance of what they were doing. The Quebec representatives co-operated; they took part in reaching the decisions.

I sometimes wonder whether Laurier and St. Laurent were French Canadians when I hear the extreme opinions expressed by the hon. member for Lapointe. There were representatives from Quebec in this chamber and in its antecedents long before 1837 and the revolution. This piling up of the misdemeanours or wrongs committed, I suppose, by English speaking Canadians, these suggestions of interference with the arrangements of confederation in the course of some scheme practised upon French Canadians has, it seems to me, gone too far. I wanted to get this on the record particularly in view of the attack by the hon. member for Lapointe, who seemed to feel that any English speaking Canadian who expressed an opinion on a subject such as education was getting into a field which he should not enter. If this is so, why is it that these wonderfully pure constitutionalists from Quebec should for so long have accepted grants in relation to education, universities, technical training and so on?

Mr. Gregoire: I can tell you.

Mr. Fisher: If the hon. member has the answer, I believe I know what it is. If they did these things, they were probably not being correct in doing so under the terms of the constitution.

Mr. Gregoire: It was because the federal government took all the money. That is the answer.

Mr. Fisher: That might very well be. It is time we had a revamping of the constitution to meet the objections and ideas which people are putting forward. This could really be a wonderful centennial project. Maybe if it could be focused upon some kind of conference, we would really have a lively year in 1967. But I do not wish to leave this point without telling the hon. member for Lapointe, as far as constitutional changes may be concerned, that if he wants to hammer home the assertion that Quebec has a special status he should start by admitting that the people who live in the other provinces may also have a different conception of what the federal or national government should be, and if there is to be any solution to this it will not only be a case of the hon. member or his friends seeking to establish their point of view or their objectives, because other people will be seeking to establish theirs.

Mr. Gregoire: We do not object to that.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member says he does not object to this. That is fine. I was under the impression that that is all he has done ever since he arrived in the house.

Mr. Gregoire: No.

Mr. Fisher: I want to thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to stray so far from the matter before us. I can only reflect that your predecessor in the chair perhaps allowed us to stray too far from the terms of the resolution, and that none of us were zealous enough to try to get the speakers back on the subject.

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask a question? The hon. member for Port Arthur said he and his friends have to stay put and shut up while we alone were talking on these subjects. What does he think about his own declaration that the province of Quebec should change its system of education? Does he think that this is the business of the members from other provinces?

Mr. Fisher: This is certainly irrelevant to the matter now under discussion, but all I was doing the other day was saying that the brief showed that Quebec has problems in connection with its educational system, particularly with regard to the retention rate in schools. I should like to say to the hon. member that I do not divide my loyalties. I am not a citizen of Ontario at one moment and a Canadian at another. I happen to think that opportunities for young people in Quebec are just as important to me as opportunities for young people in Ontario. I even think that the trees and the rocks and the iron ore of Quebec belong to me just as the resources of the province of Ontario belong to the people of Quebec. This somewhat emotional answer is the only answer one can give to a question such as the hon. member asked.

An hon. Member: You are wrong.

The Deputy Chairman: I have allowed the hon. member to ask the question and I have also allowed the hon. member for Port Arthur to answer it. But I do feel we are ranging far and wide from the resolution which is now before the committee.

Mr. Lamontagne: I certainly do not intend to discuss the whole range of the subjects considered yesterday and today in this committee. I think many of these matters might best be discussed when the estimates of the centennial administration are before us.

When I spoke yesterday on this resolution I made a brief statement on what I thought were the nature and significance of the very simple amendments we proposed to the act. I assumed that members had already read the two versions of the present act and that they had also read and carefully studied the exchange of correspondence which was tabled in the house at the end of June.

However, the Leader of the Opposition chose to extend the scope of the debate far beyond the limited field of this resolution and in doing so he made several assertions which cannot go unchallenged. In the first place, he referred to the composition of the national conference on the centenary, which was made public at the beginning of October.

I want to remind hon. members that the act authorizing the creation of that conference was assented to on September 29, 1961. During the year and a half from September, 1961 to April, 1963, the previous government did not take any steps to set up the conference or to appoint its members. One year and a half of precious time was lost as a result of the indecision and confusion of the former government. It is true that appointments had been made in January, 1963, to the national centennial administration. However when we took office in April, there was practically no staff there, so the administration itself could not properly operate. Finally, the national committee of ministers had not met since the fall of 1961. This is the situation as it was back in April. This is an indication of how seriously the previous government approached the preparations for the centennial of confederation: An act had been passed by parliament, but practically nothing had been done to implement that act a year and a half later.

Now, I come to the composition of the national conference itself. Yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition said that in appointing the members greater consideration had been given to political fitness and to patronage packing than to the great issues that face us. He added that the list of members was a who's who of Liberalism to the extent of about 75 per cent of the appointments. The right hon. gentleman should be the last in this house, it seems to me, to raise the issue of patronage in connection with appointments. But let us consider the assertion that about 75 per cent of the members of the national conference are Liberals. The conference is composed of 60 members, 20 of whom have been nominated by the provincial governments. This is one third of the members, so that the right hon. gentleman's claim that 75 per cent have been appointed by this government on a patronage basis becomes clearly untrue and unfair.

Let us look at the other members who have been directly appointed by the present government. In setting up the conference, we wanted to secure as wide a representation as possible by regions, ethnic groups, municipalities, artistic movements, university and professional groups and the population in general. I readily recognize that there are known Liberals amongst the members of the conference, but there are also active members of other political parties. I am one of those who believe that prominent Canadian citizens should not be denied the opportunity of serving their country just because they are active in the Liberal party. I resented more particularly the reference made by the Leader of the Opposition to two of our most eminent judges, Mr. Justice Michaud and Mr. Justice Monnin, who played a very active role in their respective communities in New Brunswick and in Manitoba.

We wanted to have a broadly based representation on the conference from the mass media. Here are some of the names of the representatives of that most important field of activity so directly related to the preparations for the centennial.

Mr. Donald Jamieson, president of the Canadian association of private broadcasting.

Mr. A. F. Mercier, president of the Canadian Press and general manager of Le Soleil.

Mrs. David Anderson, editor of a leading Canadian women's magazine, Chatelaine.

Mr. Jacques Brillant, president of radio and television stations CJBR.

Mr. T. Horton, mayor of Yellowknife and editor of News of the North.

Dr. Pierre Jobin, president of L'Action Sociale Ltee de Quebec and professor at Laval University.

Mr. Frank Glogowski, president of the ethnic press club and editor of The Alliancer.

Mr. Fred McGuiness, publisher of the Medicine Hat News and one of the most active organizers of the Saskatchewan jubilee.

Mme. Jeanne Sauve, a well known television commentator and a very active member of the artistic community in Montreal.

Reverend Keith Woollard, television editor, United Church of Canada.

Mr. Mavor Moore, a well known television personality and art director in charge of the celebration in Charlottetown to commemorate the 1864 conference.

Mr. Baxter Ricard, owner of a radio station in Sudbury.

We have there 12 members representing the mass communication media. Where is the 75 per cent of patronage packing? Will the Leader of the Opposition deny that these 12 Canadian citizens will very effectively and very adequately represent this most important field of the mass communication media? What names would he recommend that we should delete from the list?

We also wanted to have a good representation from the professional groups. What are the names of these representatives?

Mr. Claude Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labour Congress.

Mr. David Kirk, secretary of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Mr. Don Morrell, general manager of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. D. M. Thompson, secretary of the Royal Canadian Legion.

Mr. Ralph Steinhouer, member of the Alberta farmers union and former president of the association of Alberta Indians. Again, I ask, where is the 75 per cent of patronage packing? Will the Leader of the Opposition deny that these five members will very effectively and very adequately represent our most important professional groups?

Then, we felt that in addition to provincial representatives it was essential to have representation also from the territories and municipalities. What are the names of these representatives?

Mr. Horace Boivin, former president of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities and mayor of Granby.

Mayor S. L. Buckwold, former president of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities.

Mr. Gordon Cameron, commissioner of the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Maurice Finnerty, mayor of Penticton.

Mr. Harry Viner, one of Canada's most colourful mayors.

Mr. Richard Wilson, mayor of Victoria.

Finally, we also wanted representation from the universities, artistic movements, cultural groups and from the population in general. What are the names of these representatives?

Mrs. H. F. Angus, wife of H. F. Angus, dean of faculty of graduate studies at the University of British Columbia. She was also nominated for the position of chancellor at University of British Columbia two years ago.

Mrs. Austin Brownell, member of the board of governors, Acadia University.

Mrs. Saul Hayes, past president of the National Council of Women and wife of the executive vice president of the Canadian Jewish Congress.

Mr. Norman A. Hesler, chairman of the regents of Mount Allison University.

Mr. W. A. Johnston, president of the Winnipeg art gallery.

Dr. J. F. Leddy, vice president of the University of Saskatchewan.

Mrs. Lloyd J. Lewis, widow of Judge Lloyd J. Lewis.

Father Malcolm Macdonnell, professor of history, St. Francis Xavier University.

Professor John Meisel, professor of political science, Queen's University.

Judge J. Michaud, eminent jurist and Acadian.

Hon. Roland Michener, former speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. Pickersgill: A well known Liberal.

Mr. Lamontagne: Judge Alfred Monnin, president of the Winnipeg symphony orchestra, final festival chairman of the dominion drama festival.

Mr. Frank Pagotto, businessman from Montreal, of Italian origin.

Mrs. E. S. Russenholt, who among other things was chairman of the women's branch, Canadian institute of national affairs, chairman of the national radio awards committee for public affairs, free-lance broadcaster, and a member of the national advisory board of the Canadian association for adult education.

Again I ask the Leader of the Opposition, where is the 75 per cent patronage? I would like very much to get an answer from him, and I would also like to see some justification made of the accusations levelled against me, which were also a most unfair reflection on the eminent citizens who have so generously accepted to serve their country through the national conference on the centennial.

Such an unfair reflection will certainly not contribute to bringing together, as the Leader of the Opposition hopes, all parts of this country in a unity of dedication.

I should now like to deal with the other major point raised by the Leader of the Opposition. He claims that 1867 marked the birth of our nation and that in that year colonies by the sea such as—I quote more or less from Hansard—Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick joined together as a nation. Apparently the Leader of the Opposition has forgotten the history of his country. If I am not mistaken Prince Edward Island joined confederation in 1873, not in 1867, and Newfoundland came to the same decision in 1949, not in 1867.

An hon. Member: Small potatoes.

Mr. Lamontagne: Look at Hansard. This is another example of the accuracy of statements made by the right hon. gentleman.

It seems to me that whether we would like to do it or not, we cannot change the facts of our history. It is quite clear to me, as it should be to the right hon. gentleman, that our nation and Canada existed before 1867. What did happen in 1867? United Canada and two other separate British colonies joined together in a confederation to form a single British colony, which became sovereign in fact much later in the present century. Thus, the only event we will celebrate, strictly speaking, in 1967 is the centennial of confederation.

We certainly do not want to downgrade Canada, as some hon. members claim, but I maintain that to state that Canada existed before 1867, that our nation was born before 1867, is not to downgrade Canada or our nation. It is merely a statement of fact to say that, in the strict meaning of our history, we will celebrate in 1967 the centennial of the Canadian federation, and we should all be proud to celebrate together this most important historic event.

[Translation]

I should like now to add a few words on the precise character of the resolution, as well as on the usefulness of the bill which will follow.

I should like in the first place to refer to the gist of the debate which went on between the former prime minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the premier of Quebec in October, 1961.

It must be pointed out that the English version of the present legislation, in the wording it uses, does not agree at all with the French version. When the Leader of the Opposition became aware of that mistake, in my opinion, he should have taken at once the necessary means to bring about the changes in the other official version of the legislation.

To show you very specifically the differences between the two versions, I would like to take, as an example, the official name of the administration. The English version reads: "National Centennial Administration"; this should have been translated: "Administration nationale du centenaire". In the official French version, it was translated by "Administration du centenaire de la nation", which is not at all the same thing.

It is in part because of this rather significant mistake from an historical standpoint that the Hon. Mr. Lesage, following a letter from the former prime minister of Canada, replied on October 19, 1961 as follows—in my opinion, this letter should be recorded in Hansard, since very few hon. members, it seems, have read it. I quote:

My dear Prime Minister,

I hope you will excuse my delay in answering your letter of October 4. I have recently been away on a trip to Europe and, especially, to Paris for the opening of Quebec House.

No doubt will you be inclined to excuse that delay in view of the much more striking one which seems to have occurred. I refer to the fact that, in your letter, you are asking me to appoint two delegates to a "national conference on the centennial of Canada". I think that centennial could have been celebrated either in 1634, a hundred years after Jacques Cartier, or at the very beginning of the eighteenth century, a hundred years after Champlain, whose glorious achievements cannot be brushed aside off-handedly by a mere stroke of the pen.

Your act is aptly entitled "An act respecting the observance of the centennial of confederation in Canada", but that title is inconsistent with section 3, which refers to the "national centennial", and section 17, which refers to "Canada's centennial".

I do not feel I can take it upon myself to let such an ambiguity remain nor do I dare ask my colleagues of the executive council right away to assist me in appointing two persons to represent the province of Quebec at the "national conference on the centennial", for fear of sanctioning something which French Canadians have too much pride to accept, let alone the fact that it would compel their political representatives to take, for the sake of dignity, a stand not in keeping with their true feelings of friendship and their desire to co-operate.

I rely on your sense of justice, my dear Prime Minister, to admit that Canadian history did not begin in 1867 and that to say otherwise is seriously prejudicial to French speaking and English speaking Canadians whose forefathers founded this country long before confederation.

Awaiting your official letter asking the Quebec government to appoint two representatives to the national conference on the centennial, I remain, my dear Prime Minister,

Yours truly.

That letter was dated October 1961, and since the reply of the former prime minister of Canada was not satisfactory, Mr. Lesage renewed his request on May 2, 1963. This time, he wrote to the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). This letter has already been tabled in the house and I do not intend to read it again. I should like, however, to put on record the letter that the present Prime Minister sent to Mr. Lesage on June 7, 1963. Here it is:

My dear Premier,

In the last few days, I had the opportunity to look more fully into the objections you raised in your letter of May 2 regarding certain expressions used in the Centennial of Confederation Act. Those objections seem justified to me.

[Mr. Lamontagne.]

As early as possible in the course of this session, we will introduce amendments to certain sections of the act so as to bring them in line with the general title and historical facts.

I hope that, following those changes, the Quebec government will be able to participate in the celebration of the centenary of confederation and to take the necessary steps in that connection.

Later on, when the Quebec legislature was considering a bill concerning the celebration of the centenary, the two major political leaders, Hon. Jean Lesage and the leader of the opposition, Mr. Daniel Johnson, both agreed that the provincial legislation should not be enacted until the federal act was amended as I have just indicated.

I believe that the problem raised by this resolution is very simple. First of all, I am not the one who delivered the ultimatum, and I think that in this particular case, it is an absolutely justified request, because it agrees perfectly with historical facts.

In my opinion, the problem which we are facing as members of this parliament is very simple. Either we rectify the obvious historical mistakes, which have crept more particularly in the French wording of the present legislation, or, as the leaders of the two main political parties of the province of Quebec have stated, the latter, through the will of the legislature, will refuse to participate in the celebration of the centenary.

Several members of the official opposition have expressed their desire to satisfy the justified grievances of the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, I heard the whip of the official opposition say something to that effect this afternoon.

In my opinion, the resolution under consideration aims precisely at settling such a grievance. And the time has come, I feel, as much for them as for us all, to put right an obvious wrong, to refrain from needlessly increasing the tensions that exist in our country today and to get ready, all together, to celebrate the centennial of Canada's confederation.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, my remarks shall be brief, but I should like to set some facts straight on matters discussed by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) and at the same time, set the historic facts in their true context.

The purpose of this resolution, to change the present title of the act to the "Centennial of Confederation Act", is quite justified.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) did quite a good job of shedding light on facts concerning the observance of the centennial of confederation which, I think, will be one more step towards the future of this fine and great country of ours.

Sometimes, facts have to be set straight on the basis of history. It might be a good thing to simplify some observations when we talk about celebrating a centennial.

It is said sometimes that 50 years in the lifetime of a happy couple is a short period. We could also say that 100 years of confederative life, in the lifetime of the Canadian people, is in fact only one period because Canada existed before the 1867 confederation. Indeed, it is somewhat like when people prepare to celebrate a 25th wedding anniversary, the husband being 50 and the wife only 40. It does not mean that they will celebrate the wife's 40th birthday or the husband's 50th birthday, but rather their 25th wedding anniversary.

Mr. Chairman, when we consider that confederation which united in this Canada of ours a country with the greatest future, the two great races which served as its basis, I think it would be proper for several of us to recall the discussions held at that time to justify that fusion, that union of the two great races which gave birth to Canada as we know it today.

Something was said about the Charlottetown conference; and something also about the Quebec conference, held in 1864.

When the project for the creation of a Canada with a great future was introduced to the legislators of that time, we must admit that it was a marriage between two great races which were anxious to protect themselves against invasion and assimilation dangers coming from a powerful neighbouring country which had already shown certain aspirations with regard to the British colony that was Canada at the time.

Like in all marriages, there are sometimes some little disagreements, but this does not mean that we are going to divorce. I am convinced that with the good will of our English speaking fellow citizens and of those who believe in the future of our country, we shall celebrate the centennial of confederation in a grand way.

Celebrate the centennial of confederation. I find that those words are appropriate. Unfortunately, in the course of a debate such as this, certain expressions are used at times which show more partisanship than a genuine wish to see this centennial take place in cheerfulness. All those who are nationally minded enough realize the importance, the greatness and the beauty of our country and actually look forward to a revision of the constitution whereby the wrongs and the mistakes which have slipped into the British North America Act would be corrected.

I noted earlier that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce was reading from newspapers which reported certain statements made recently by an eminent Canadian politician who even referred to military service, among other things.

I should like to point out to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that he could also have recalled to all legislators in this house the stand taken by Hon. Ernest Lapointe in 1940 or 1941 or by Camilien Houde, who was a member of the same party as the hon. member.

I think the man who made the statements reported in those newspapers has the right to be treated fairly and that those statements should not be recalled to arise political passions, to revive old feuds between men of good will who would like nothing better than reach an understanding to make of the centennial of confederation another step toward unity and understanding in this great and beautiful country of ours.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) seemed deeply hurt by the remarks made by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) last night about the education system in the province of Quebec. He maintained and deeply regretted, after having revised some of his statements that then, in the west the province of Quebec and French Canadians were unknown, except for our hockey star, Maurice Richard, or Lili St. Cyr.

I should like to point out to the hon. member for Port Arthur the struggles carried on for French survival in the western provinces and for the establishment of a French radio station in Alberta. I think that we could also point out the more recent struggle by our fellow citizens of British Columbia in connection with the schools in Maillardville.

The hon. member for Port Arthur could also remember that French Canadians live throughout the country and that they wish to be in good terms with everyone, so that Canada may become the country with the most brilliant future.

On the other hand, I think that this resolution is in keeping with the historical facts of our country. We are really celebrating the centennial of confederation and not the centennial of the nation. If the wrong interpretation given to this legislation in English as well as in French, is due to a translation mistake—this is what I hope—I think that we have the opportunity by approving this resolution of giving it its true interpretation.

We should adopt the bill which will be introduced and not play politics or launch a fight among the various ethnic groups of our country. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) referred yesterday, and rightly so, to the cultures which were brought in our country by other groups. I think that we have readily endeavoured to encourage these ethnic groups to adjust themselves, especially in the province of Quebec. I know what I am talking about when I say that there can be found in Montreal ethnic groups from various European countries. I think they felt at home in the province of Quebec. I am sure that other new Canadians found a similar welcome in the other provinces.

Once again, I say that the question of racial culture should not be raised to recall events, unfortunate no doubt, that may have taken place. We must rather look toward the future of our country and prepare the centennial celebrations. I am convinced that with the co-operation of all men of good will and, as the President of the Privy Council said, by increasing the number of directors on the centennial commission, we may expect for 1967 greater celebrations than for a fiftieth anniversary. When a couple celebrates their golden wedding anniversary, people often say that they have little time left to live.

On the occasion of the centenary of confederation, we foresee that our country will set an example to the world and that its legislators will succeed in guaranteeing to their constituents not only freedom and security but also countless opportunities.

In this country which has not only vast natural resources but a variety of cultures, we will succeed in establishing a Canadian spirit of which we will all be proud.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I have already spoken in this debate so my remarks at this point will be very brief. In fact, my purpose in rising is to move a one word amendment to the resolution now before us. The amendment I am seeking is in order under the provisions of the appropriate citation which provides that money resolutions can be amended if the amendment comes within the framework of the resolution. I believe also that the amendment meets the points that have been made by the President of the Privy Council and at the same time it will put into the short title a word which I think all of us would like to have there.

I may say before I move the amendment that I thought it was unfortunate that the President of the Privy Council did not make yesterday the explanation that he made today. Some of the debate we have had might have been unnecessary. I am sure he will agree with me that it would be desirable in the short title to recognize that it is the Canadian confederation we will be celebrating when we observe our centennial in 1967. So, Mr. Chairman, since this has been gone over and it does not need to be spelled out at greater length, I simply rise to offer this amendment. Amendments in committee do not require a seconder but my good friend and colleague, the hon. member for New Westminster, would like to be associated with this amendment. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster:

> That the resolution be amended by inserting therein, immediately after the words "the Centennial of", the word "Canadian".

Hon. members will see that this will make the short title read, "the Centennial of Canadian Confederation Act". I ask the President of the Privy Council to recognize the fact that this does not deny the existence of a Canada and of Canadians prior to 1867, but I ask us all to recognize that confederation as we know it did take place on July 1, 1867. It was on that date that the Canadian confederation became a reality. Let us be proud of it and let us say in the short title of the act that what we are celebrating is the centennial of Canadian confederation.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, we certainly have no objection to the amendment and we will see to it that the bill will reflect the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the resolution—

Mr. Knowles: As amended.

Mr. Hamilton: As amended—in reply really to the remarks of the President of the Privy Council. First of all, I do not think that in meeting the charges of the Leader of the Opposition he was impressive in reading out that list, because as we listened to the list we wondered whether the percentage figure given by the Leader of the Opposition was too conservative. I am not quarrelling about that so much as the fact that the President of the Privy Council in his remarks made it very clear that the act was really being amended for one reason only, because there was an ultimatum served by Premier Lesage of Quebec.

On this particular subject of the ultimatum as to the title I do not think it is a serious enough matter on which to start a quarrel, but in the celebration of our birthday I think it is a great pity that the word "ultimatum" has to be used. Surely in this day and age of political thinking we have enough experience and judgment that we can resolve all these matters without the use of the word "ultimatum". As the hon. member spoke I wondered whether this ultimatum included the world fair in Montreal. If the house decides not to play in this little game of quibbling about the title, does that mean that Quebec will cease to participate in the world fair? These are questions in our minds.

My point in rising, Mr. Chairman, is simply to express the distaste which we feel, not only at this subterfuge of bringing in patronage—that is a small issue and we can override that—but at the fact that we are amending the act because of an ultimatum.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question. Does the hon. gentleman not think that all this difficulty and the need for this whole measure could have been avoided had the right hon. gentleman, who was prime minister when the original legislation was enacted previously, consulted all the provinces, as his party is constantly admonishing us to consult, before they brought in this legislation? Then there would have been no difficulty about having a French version and an English version which meant something different, and we would not have had to take all this time. Surely we should all be glad to correct this little problem in semantics and get on with the important business of the house.

Mr. Vincent: That was the work of the opposition in 1961.

Mr. Hamilton: The Secretary of State, by rushing into this short debate in order to ask this question, remembers not that this matter was the subject of discussion for months before the act was passed in this house. Why did he not bring this matter up then?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because your party was the government.

Mr. Hamilton: There was all sorts of time to consult the provinces. I am making the point that it was the President of the Privy Council who a few moments ago said that the reason for these amendments was primarily because of an ultimatum from Premier Lesage; and I am making the point that the matter is too small to start a fight over—I agree with the Secretary of State there. I am saying that I have a feeling of distaste as a Canadian because this house has to do something by virtue of an ultimatum. I do not think the use of the word "ultimatum" is the way to correct errors.

I was one who many years ago during the war, when I found so many of my comrades overseas so unaware of the reason for the position they were in, in the lonely hours raised the question over and over again: What is it all about? As an older person knowing a little about the history of the country I took it upon myself in the tents to explain as best I could what it was all about. I know many others who knew a little about our story, did the same. History is the story of mankind and institutions. You cannot move forward in history and achieve the fulfilment of your destiny without knowing your background.

We formed ourselves into a federal state in 1867 for better or worse. We are one nation now and this is our 100th birthday coming up. Many of us thought that if many of these men serving their country overseas did not know our story, what a failure there had been in Canada to tell the young people the story of their country going back to the days of the Indians and Eskimos. Do not stop at French Canada; go back to the very beginning. We knew our educational system had failed us, and one of the ways we thought we could put these ideas forward and make Canadians conscious once again of that story was to use the birthday celebrations of 1867. We should tell the story during the intervening years leading up to 1867. This was to be rededication of Canadian people to the great principles which brought people to this continent and enabled them to go through the pioneering and suffering they went through to build this nation. This was a contribution made by many people.

I had hoped at this time that we would be well on the way with our centennial celebrations. To me our centennial was not just a question of building buildings and holding fairs. To me the primary purpose was to educate the people of Canada, not only the million people who have come to our shores during the last 18 years, but the two or three generations who have been educated in our new system of education, where they learn little history. Let us turn back the clock a little and open up the pages of history showing what men in this country endured. This is the purpose of our centenary.

We will not quarrel with the government over the title. We will not quarrel with them over the type of people the appoint. I am sure they are all good people. But some would have liked to see the acceptance of the fact that maybe a few of them should have been from other parties than the Liberal party, that is all. We ask the government and the centennial staff to remember that their primary job is to tell all the Canadian people the story of what has happened in this country, the story of the men who went across the country, and the men who came after and developed it. This is a story which will bring pride to us all. I personally am proud to live in a country which has two legal languages. When I go abroad I am proud to say that in my country two colonial groups from two parent powers in Europe united to form one country and to welcome all other people. I am proud to say that, and I want every other Canadian to know this story.

This is why I rise in this debate, to say that I do hope we will not have to continue the federal system by continually giving way to ultimatums. I think as a matter of principle there should be a co-operative approach. I think this approach could have been achieved, and I feel very unhappy at this moment that we have to accept today these amendments to this act. But in accepting them, and feeling unhappy as I do, I hope the government will not fail to carry out the primary function of this birthday celebration, but will use the years and the months which remain to build up in Canada a knowledge of what has gone into the country, so that we can dedicate ourselves to the principle more successfully to carry out the future before us.

Resolution as amended reported and concurred in.

Mr. Lamontagne thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-107, to amend the National Centennial Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before the next item is called, so that there would be no misunderstanding, I wonder if it could be understood that the bill which has just been given first reading, and which is in fact already printed, I believe, could be presented in the form in which it was printed so as to enable us to get on with the work tomorrow, and that the corrections consequent upon the resolution could be deemed to be made in the bill, so that it is regularized and the matter thereby not held over for another day?

Mr. Knowles: I am sure the suggestion made by the Secretary of State will be acceptable, unless it is possible to print the bill overnight. My friends over at the printing bureau work fast and I am sure they could do it if necessary.

Mr. Pickersgill: If it is possible, it will be done, but I should like to be doubly sure we do not have a lot of difficulty about a technical point tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the said bill be read a second time? Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ADMIRALTY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES OF JUDGE AND REGISTRAR

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Admiralty Act to permit the governor in council to authorize the payment of a salary not exceeding four hundred dollars per annum to a surrogate judge in admiralty and a salary not exceeding three hundred dollars per annum to a registrar in admiralty.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Macdonald: The purpose of this resolution is to make provision for the emoluments and remuneration of a number of administrative officers who are responsible for carrying out the provisions of the Admiralty Act. I may say briefly to the committee that the subject of navigation and shipping has, under the British North America Act, been made the responsibility of the parliament of Canada and pursuant to this responsibility the parliament of Canada has enacted the Admiralty Act. In so doing it set up as the court responsible for admiralty proceedings the Exchequer Court of Canada and by the same statute it divided the country into eight admiralty districts coextensive with the eight Canadian provinces which have a salt water coast line. Courts have been set up in each province for this purpose and as a matter of practice the administrative officials responsible for the functioning of the courts have commonly been employees of the provincial governments of the provinces. The two particular positions referred to in this resolution, that of surrogate judge and registrar, while provided for in the Admiralty Act were positions for which no remuneration was provided.

It has been found difficult in recent years, due to the low tariff and the comparative paucity of business, to provide through the fees sufficient remuneration to pay to these officials not only a return for the time and thought involved in the performance of these duties but even the actual cost of maintaining the admiralty records. The practice heretofore has been for the registrar and the surrogate judge to retain for themselves the fees received in accordance with the general tariff and the rules and orders under the Admiralty Act. The purpose of the bill proposed in this resolution is to permit the governor in council to authorize the payment of a salary to each surrogate judge in admiralty and each registrar in admiralty, respectively, of $400 and $300 per annum. In other words, the officials will be paid these emoluments; and the fees in question, which hitherto have been their emoluments, will be paid into the consolidated revenue fund. My information is that this resolution is in substantially the same form as that in which it appeared on the order paper last year.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Chevrier) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-108, to amend the Admiralty Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the house would be disposed to consider going through the other stages of this important measure so that we could give something to the other place to do? The explanation given by my hon. friend from Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) will, I am sure, have convinced everyone—

Mr. Knowles: If the Secretary of State does not take up all the time until six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Chevrier) moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Salary of surrogate judge and registrar.

Mr. Aiken: I do not wish to delay the proceedings but there is one matter which occurred to me on the resolution and it occurrs to me again, now that I see clause 1 of the bill. The bill appears to authorize only one salary of $400 to a surrogate judge and $300 to a registrar. I am asking the minister whether it is clear that this could affect any surrogate judge and any registrar. From the way it appears here, it would seem that only one surrogate judge and one registrar would be entitled to a salary, and this is the way the resolution read. Is the minister satisfied that these provisions will cover any surrogate judge and any registrar? I should like to know how many are involved.

Mr. Macdonald: The real purpose is to cover the registrar and the surrogate judge in the admiralty district of Ontario. These positions have been held by an officer of the supreme court of Ontario as registrar and by the senior master of the supreme court of Ontario as the surrogate judge. Due to the situation in the Ontario courts, this has been the area in which there has been difficulty in getting people to continue this operation. It is for this specific purpose that the bill has been brought forward.

Mr. Aiken: Do I understand that this affects only one surrogate judge and one registrar?

Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Mr. Aiken: Does the bill change the situation with respect to fees, or will the officials receive the fees in addition to the small salaries?

Mr. Macdonald: The second subsection of the proposed new section 14A indicates that the emoluments provided in subsection 1 shall be in lieu of the fees which have hitherto gone to the two officials concerned. As provided by subsection 2, if they receive remuneration those fees will go into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Aiken: I hope the judge and registrar are satisfied with this very large emolument they are now receiving.

Mr. Macdonald: May I inform the hon. member that while this may not seem like a princely sum, it will meet their requirements.

Mr. Dinsdale: While this measure seems to apply to only one judge, I notice that in the explanatory note there is a reference in the plural to admiralty districts, surrogate district registrars, admiralty judges and so on.

Mr. Macdonald: I agree with the hon. member that the plural is used in the explanatory note, but my understanding is that the measure is only intended to apply to the province of Ontario.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Aiken: Next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hamilton: I wonder if the acting leader of the house would give us the business for tomorrow and possibly Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not realize that the hon. gentleman was suffering from blindness. I think we would just take the third reading, and I would hope there would be no great time taken with it, of this important measure that the house was good enough to carry so far today, the Admiralty Act. Then, we would take the second reading and the other stages, if possible, of the bill that was given first reading just before this one, respecting the Canadian centennial. After that, we would like to take the three resolutions standing in the name of the Minister of Transport in the order in which they were indicated yesterday by the Solicitor General.

In so far as estimates are concerned, it is not proposed—I may say I have discussed this through the usual channels—by the government to take any government legislation beyond five o'clock tomorrow. Tomorrow evening in committee of supply, the understanding is we would continue with the estimates of the hon. lady, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When they have been completed, we would hope to conclude also the estimates of the Department of Public Works. On Friday—

Mr. Knowles: That is a change from the Department of Labour, is it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I indicated to the hon. gentleman it was only if the Minister of Labour was available, and he is afraid he cannot be. On Friday, we intend to go into supply as soon as the orders of the day are reached and begin with the estimates of the Minister of Industry, and all the various departments and agencies for which he is responsible. When they have been completed we will resume consideration of the estimates of northern affairs, and when they have been concluded we will resume consideration of the estimates of Mines and Technical Surveys. I believe the Minister of Fisheries will also be available to complete his estimates before 10.30.

It being seven minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 21, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT ON PARIS MEETING OF O.E.C.D.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated yesterday that on my return from the organization for economic co-operation and development meeting held in Paris on Tuesday and Wednesday I would make a brief statement on the results of this conference, which was presided over by the foreign minister of Norway, Mr. Lange. I wish to table the communique issued at the conclusion of this meeting, and with the permission of the house perhaps it might be printed as an appendix to Hansard of today, as was done in other years.

The organization for economic co-operation and development provides an important bridge between the European and North American parts of the Atlantic community. It is expected shortly to be broadened by the inclusion of Japan when the parliamentary procedures in that country have been completed. These links among such key countries make this organization extremely important in Canada's general foreign relations. The O.E.C.D. provides a forum for consultation among representatives of the principal industrial nations of the west.

The most important feature of this particular meeting was the discussion of assistance by member countries to the less developed nations of the world. I emphasized the importance which the Canadian government attaches to the efforts of the O.E.C.D. to improve the co-ordination of aid. I indicated that the statistics frequently referred to comparing aid programs of Canada and other countries were often misleading and needed to be interpreted with great care. There are problems of definition and content which must be examined critically. Moreover, as the organization has recognized in the past, there are qualitative as well as quantitative factors which must be introduced for a meaningful comparison.

I am happy to report that representatives of other member governments warmly received the details of the increase in our own aid program which were announced in this house last Thursday. The meeting also considered the trade relations of member countries with the less developed countries and agreed on the importance of approaching the United Nations conference on trade and development with the intention of making a positive contribution to the necessary efforts to expand the trade of these developing countries. The occasion of this O.E.C.D. meeting provided an opportunity for the ministers from the NATO countries to take part in an informal NATO discussion on east-west economic and other relations. This is, of course, a subject under continuing study by the organization, and we had a frank and useful discussion of the significance of recent developments.

In making this statement I have taken note of the questions asked of the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition yesterday and the day before. In particular the council considered the role of government credit and government guarantees of private credit in trade with the communist countries. No attempt was made to reach an agreed view, as this was not the object of the discussion. I made it clear that Canada favoured east-west trade in non-strategic goods on a mutually advantageous basis.

Regarding government to government credit, I reported that Canada like most other NATO countries has not extended such credits to any communist country. In connection with the question of credit guarantees, I stated that Canadian policy is generally to follow the criteria established for members of the Berne Union; that is, normally to limit government guarantees of private credit to five years. This policy is maintained with respect to all countries on a non-discriminatory basis, and of course applies to guarantees of private credits for Canadian sales to communist countries.

I may say in conclusion that the reports which I have seen on my return this morning indicating that Canada had taken a position other than that of the government of the United Kingdom are not founded in fact.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The house will welcome the presence of the genial Secretary of State for External Affairs. We saw him pictured in various poses during his visit to Paris. His look of suspicion has no basis in fact.

Paris Meeting of O.E.C.D.

Naturally, we give our support to the O.E.C.D., and I am very glad to hear that Japan is about to join. We endeavoured, during the days of the Conservative administration, to encourage the adherence of Japan; we gave it our full support.

However, I should like to refer particularly to the credit arrangements which were discussed. According to the various press items there was in fact an endeavour on the part of the United States to bring about an end to all credit or credit guarantees to communist countries.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not accurate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am just mentioning what the press had stated. The minister has said, as I took from his remarks, that we believe there should be a restriction to five years. Personally, on the basis of recent experience, I believe that period will have to be increased. I found a situation outside the communist countries in the Middle East demanding that there must be an increase in the period during which credit is given. I hope consideration will be given by the government to this very important question outside the communist countries. I know that in Israel I found that Canada could considerably extend its trade were it able to give the same kind of extended credit facilities that are available elsewhere. There is one particular, large order for railway supplies, ties and the like. Canada is in the position where credit could be extended for only a few years. One particular country has offered credit running over a period of, I think, 20 years with interest rates lower than those that we in Canada are able to give. In other words, countries are becoming strongly competitive.

I think the government of Canada will have to move forward with the times. We did our part when in office to provide credit, to expand and extend trade, but I feel that what we did will have to be extended in order to meet the stronger and ever increasing competition of other countries for world business.

I should also like to say to the minister that he might clarify the announcement he made just prior to his departure relating to increased assistance to underdeveloped countries. I have examined his statement, and the more that I examine it the more it seems to be an economic conundrum. It is difficult to understand what he meant and what is the amount of the increase. It has been stated in the press that in Paris he spoke of an increase of $170 million in Canada's aid overseas. I am sure he did not say that, but that was in the press. I hope that at the earliest possible date, with the perspicacity and ability in language that he possesses, he will translate the as yet untranslatable. As one looks at the picture and reads the statement one asks oneself, how much is Canada going to advance additional to that provided in the past. The minister may have been able to make that clear to the O.E.C.D. so they would understand it, but I should like him to make it possible for Canadians to appreciate it as well.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure members in all parts of the house welcome back the Secretary of State for External Affairs from his meeting with the O.E.C.D. in Paris. We are glad he has avoided some of the pitfalls which have sometimes enticed members who visit that playful city. Certainly on behalf of the members of this group we welcome any steps which are taken to bring Japan into the O.E.C.D.

I am glad to hear the minister say that a good deal of time was spent on the matter of additional aid to underdeveloped countries. I think one of the great disappointments for those who supported the idea of NATO has been that so little is done under article 2 of the NATO charter. It was hoped that the O.E.C.D. would be the instrument through which the western democracies would use some of their vast resources to assist the underdeveloped countries. It was hoped that the trend might be away from concentration upon military expenditures toward greater investment in the development of these emerging countries. I think most of us are disappointed that these expectations have not been fulfilled.

I am glad the minister clarified the situation for those attending the O.E.C.D. meetings. I still think it requires clarification in Canada. The hon. gentleman announced the other day a $70 million increase in Canada's contribution. If one examines the statement carefully, however, one finds that $50 million of this sum really consists of loans, which means that our cash outlay in terms of outright assistance is small indeed. I think the minister should know that we in this party, and I believe members in all parties in the house, would be prepared to give the government wholehearted support if he and his colleagues were to embark on a bold and imaginative program of aid to underdeveloped countries.

I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman make mention of long term credits. We have no way of knowing exactly what transpired at the meetings, but the press reports indicated that the United States representatives were urging that credit extended to communist countries should be limited to a maximum of five years. It was also reported that the United Kingdom representatives had opposed this suggestion, and I am glad to learn that Canada joined with Britain in this regard.

It is important for Canada to extend her trade irrespective of whether the countries with which we trade are communist or not. Good trading relations are the basis of good international relations. We think that countries become better friends, and have a better understanding of each other if their trade relations are expanded. I hope the government will continue to oppose any restrictions as to time in connection with these credits, and that it will be prepared to consider advancing long term credit not only to communist countries but to any others which may wish to enter into trade agreements with Canada on this basis.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I join with the previous speakers in expressing our pleasure at the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is back in our midst again, and that he had a successful meeting with representatives of other member nations of O.E.C.D.

I think it is good that we should realize that the basic intent of the Atlantic community was not merely military in character. I believe as we move forward, away from the circumstances which developed in Europe at the end of the second world war, we should increasingly recognize the importance which is attached to the economic aspect of the work of the north Atlantic community. I am thinking in particular in terms of trade. However, the objectives of the economic policies of the north Atlantic community should run parallel to those objectives with which the military aspect of the alliance was originally concerned, that is to strengthen and protect the nations and their economies forming the alliance.

In my opinion it is an excellent thing that Japan should be moving closer to membership, and no doubt there are other countries which could be included in the same category as Japan. They too should be welcomed as members. It is most important that the underdeveloped nations of the world should be considered. I would have been much more pleased to read reports that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had given leadership in the direction of developing trade with the underdeveloped countries to a far greater extent, on the basis not only of a completely new approach to some of the economic problems involved but also of new policies with regard to aid. As has been suggested, we should be extending greater credit arrangements on a new basis if necessary so as to reach out to those nations which are now emerging and which would like to stand with the free world. There would be no shortage of markets in the world if only the people who are today suffering from hunger had the dollars with which to buy the goods we can produce.

In the over-all picture leadership to this end would be an excellent thing. I do emphasize again to the Secretary of State for External Affairs the need of standing with those who are our friends, and doing so in such a way that we can strengthen them having regard to the situation that continues to exist in the world today.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to hear that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) had a pleasant stay in Paris and that he met with the representatives of various European and North American countries.

Next time the Secretary of State for External Affairs goes to Paris, I hope that he will invite me to accompany him so that I may see for myself what happens with regard to agreement.

The result of that conference which was held in Paris seems to be a greater economic co-operation between Europe and North America, which will contribute to improve considerably our trade relations with various European countries.

I also understand that this conference will result in a larger contribution to the assistance given various underdeveloped countries in the world.

We encourage the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as well as the government, to pursue a policy which will prevent the free countries in the world from being influenced by subversive philosophies. I think that with regard to this matter, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as well as the government, could show leadership and even set an example to the whole world, and that, while improving our relations with some communist countries.

Some people seem to be shocked at Canada's dealings with certain communist countries. Yet the latter do not hesitate to deal with or to try and influence the western countries, or the free countries, of which we are one. But we should not be afraid to take some action or measures to prevent communism from progressing in the world, as is now the case.

On behalf of our group, I commend the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I urge him to show the way to a durable peace in this world.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the printing in Hansard of the O.E.C.D. press release dated November 20, in English and in French, as requested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a communique.

Mr. Speaker: The communique. Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—FOOD AND DRUGS —CHANGES IN PERSONNEL

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James) moved:

That the names of Messrs. Francis and Rondeau be substituted for those of Messrs. Rideout and Gregoire on the standing committee on privileges and elections.

That the name of Mr. Francis be substituted for that of Mr. Pennell on the special committee on food and drugs.

[Text]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, this is a shameful motion, in that it seeks to take off the committee on privileges and elections two members who had the courage to give their own opinions objectively. That is what is being done in this particular motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on this particular motion I wish to say I was a member of both these committees before becoming a delegate of Canada to the commonwealth parliamentary association conference in Malaysia. During the period of my absence from Canada there was an understanding that I would be temporarily replaced on these committees but that on my return I would be permitted the privilege, with the consent of the house, of resuming my seat on the committees in which I am interested and to which I was originally assigned. The intent of this resolution is purely and simply to permit me to resume the positions which I originally had on the committees, and I am sure there is no other implication whatsoever.

Mr. Aiken: On the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no privilege.

Mr. Aiken: On the point of privilege that was raised surely I can reply, because I meant no offence whatever to the hon. member who has spoken. He is only one hon. member who is going on the privileges and elections committee. My objection is that the two hon. members who are being taken off the privileges and elections committee are the identical two members who did not vote with the government to back up the cabinet decision on a particular matter. This is my objection. I am not raising any objection to the hon. member for Carleton, who is only one of the members nominated.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The house has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure—

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I am one of the people affected by this change. To the best of my knowledge there was no cabinet decision on this matter. Any decision made was made by the individual member as he saw fit, and we were put on there to replace people who were away. It was my understanding that I was placed on the committee to replace the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown), who is away. Whether he has come back I am not sure, but I want to stress that there was no cabinet decision.

Mr. Pigeon: How do you know?

Mr. Greene: Again on the point of privilege, there was no direction, and if there was I certainly did not know anything about it.

Mr. Bell: That is the point.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): On a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if the hon. member for Carleton was a member of the committee at its session this morning. He sat in the quorum and took part in the meeting, and it now appears that he was not a member of that committee.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it is a well established rule of the house that until a committee has reported, its proceedings are not debatable in the house. It seems to me the time of the house is being wasted in a way that is wholly irregular and contrary to the rules, and we should proceed in the proper way and abide by the rules of the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would not inject myself into this discussion if we had not had this gratuitous insult from the Secretary of State. What is being done is not against the rules of the house. The action taken by the government is an obvious endeavour on its part to prevent members of the committee carrying out their individual wishes for the benefit of the house as a whole.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a question of personal privilege, I am claiming no special privilege as house leader, but as a member of the house I have the same right as any other member to raise a point of order without having to endure the gratuitous, uncalled for, and injurious insults of the right hon. gentleman who, every time he rises on a matter of procedure, demonstrates anew his complete lack of knowledge of the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker: If I may interrupt—

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): On a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member please take his seat? If I may—

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: If I may inject just at this time, I wish to say that in a situation like this a reasonable amount of pointed questioning, and even remarks, should be permitted, but I hope we will not descend into a long range debate on the question at issue.

Mr. Woolliams: It is not my intention to go into a long range debate, but I do rise on a point of privilege that I think affects all hon. members. On a point of privilege I would like to ask why this committee is sitting three times a day. We have other responsibilities in the House of Commons than to attend on committees. One would assume, after the recent speech of Mr. Davey, that they were rushing through this type of legislation without proper care and without giving it proper scrutiny because they want to rush Canada into another election. I well recall the Secretary of State, who is always so courteous, on several occasions—

Mr. Woolliams: Between 1958 and 1961—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is entering into a complete debate, and I wonder if the hon. member has a point of privilege. I have not seen any prima facie case of privilege yet. Generally speaking, matters affecting a committee should be decided in the committee without wasting the time of the house.

Mr. Woolliams: Surely there is a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. We all have certain responsibilities to the house, to our work in committees, and other responsibilities. As I say, I well recall the Secretary of State crying in this house because the committees were sitting once a day when the house was sitting. Now he wants this committee to sit all day when the house is sitting. When the shoe is on the government foot it is a different tune, and that is my point.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, to get back to the point of order raised by the Secretary of State which, as I understood it, was that there was no right to debate a motion of this kind to change the members of a committee—

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no.

Mr. Harkness: I think this should be made quite definite. I have always understood, in all the time I have been here, that there was a right of debate on a motion of this kind. I do not think it should be established by the statement of the Secretary of State that there is no right to debate a motion of this kind to change the members of a committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Calgary North would not want to misrepresent what I said. It is quite possible that I did not make myself clear.

Mr. Pigeon: It is not the first time.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would not be the first time I had not made myself clear to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon); but the point I raised, and it is a very serious point, was not that this motion was not debatable but that it was against the rules of the house to debate the proceedings in a committee—

Mr. Aiken: We are not.

Mr. Pickersgill: —until the report of the committee had been received. Several hon. gentlemen, starting with the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka began discussing things that had gone on in the committee at a time when, on my submission, sir, on a proper interpretation of the rules there was no report from the committee, and therefore there was nothing before the house about the proceedings of the committee.

If the hon. gentleman had merely wished to move that somebody else be put on the committee instead of my hon. friend from Carleton, I can say I have seen that happen before. It would have been in order, but to use this as an excuse to debate what is going on—

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking, sir, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Secretary of State is on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I almost regret that I raised the question, because it seems whenever we seek to carry out the rules of the house we simply take more time than if we disregarded them altogether, but I suggest it is really quite serious when the right of any hon. member to raise a point of order, and to suggest that the rules should be observed, is questioned by a paid officer of the house, the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word on the point of order raised by the hon. Secretary of State. He has now injected into this debate some of his usual accusations and innuendoes. He is constantly throwing out the suggestion that the rules are not being obeyed. No greater breaker of the rules exists in this house than the Secretary of State.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Then he ends with his customary slurring remark with regard to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. This is typical of the attitude of the Secretary of State to parliament. We are those who have maintained the rules of this house and set an example to hon. members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: On this particular question, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State, in his usual fashion, rises to lecture the house. This matter could have been finished long ago if he had listened to other people. But no, he must rise and lecture the house and tell us what he thinks we should do. If he would set a proper example there would be no trouble here whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the substance of the motion, if I could, and support it. While I do not think it is formally institutionalized by the rules, it seems to me it is a custom here that the parties determine what members among their ranks shall sit on committees. If we entered into a debate in contradiction of this custom and, say, pushed this to the stage where we would have the house voting upon the matter, we would be interfering not only with what is a party custom but with the individual rights, it seems to me, of members of parliament. I have heard no objections in this discussion from the members affected by the motion.

Mr. Woolliams: They are scared.

Mr. Fisher: I have just heard an interjection that they are scared. I think the hon. member for Bow River has to admit that he is exaggerating. I have been in this committee and have not been able to figure out the voting pattern at all, because we have had Social Credit-New Democrat-Liberal-Tory coalitions, if you want, as far as voting is concerned. It seems to me that the implication is nonsensical.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I deliberately allowed a short discussion on this matter because it seemed to me there perhaps might have been a ground for complaint. But as to the substance referred to by the hon. member for Port Arthur, I propose to now put the motion. The house has heard the motion; is the house ready to adopt it? Is the motion, as put by myself a short time ago, adopted?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, would you call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, on division.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James) moved:

That the name of Mr. Otto be substituted for that of Mr. Moreau on the standing committee on veterans affairs.

That the name of Mr. Scott be substituted for that of Mr. Fisher on the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Motion agreed to.

CONSUMER CREDIT

APPOINTMENT OF COMMONS MEMBERS OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General) moved:

That the members of the House of Commons on the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit, approved November 8, 1963, be: Messrs. Bell, Cashin, Chretien, Coates, Cote (Longueuil), Crossman, Deachman, Drouin, Gauthier, Greene, Gundlock, Irvine, Miss Jewett, Messrs. Kindt, Macdonald, Marcoux, Matte, Nasserden, Orlikow, Pennell, Pugh, Ryan, Scott, Vincent.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

WHEAT—TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH POLAND

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table two copies, in English and French, of the long term wheat agreement between Canada and Poland signed at Ottawa on November 5, 1963.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—SUGGESTED APPEAL TO PREMIER CASTRO BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, having regard to the seriousness of the prospective trial in Cuba and the fact that sentences of death are generally carried out with very little delay, he would now consider making an appeal directly to Fidel Castro in this regard. I point out the example that took place within the last two weeks in the U.S.S.R., where a university professor was arrested, held incommunicado and, following direct representation, was released.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish—and I am sure my right hon. friend would agree—to do anything which will prejudice rather than help the position of these two Canadians in Cuba. I will be glad to take his particular suggestion under advisement. I should add that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has seen the Cuban ambassador again, and our ambassador in Havana has seen the foreign minister of Cuba on this particular point within the last 24 hours.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to do anything either to embarrass the government acting for all Canadians in this matter, or to endanger those who are under arrest, but I stress once more that I believe the Prime Minister communicating directly could do a great deal that ordinary diplomatic communication cannot achieve.

PROPOSED VISIT TO FRANCE BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of a statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Paris. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received an invitation from France to visit that country in the near future. If so, what are the dates of that visit by the Prime Minister to France?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the dates and the details have not yet been worked out. All I can say is that it will be some time in January.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): A supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister inform the house what is the purpose of this projected visit to France?

Mr. Pearson: I hope it will be a good will visit.

RUSSIA—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PERSECUTION OF JEWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman yet been able to ascertain whether there is correspondence between the government and the Canadian Jewish Congress on the matter he spoke about yesterday? If so, will this correspondence be tabled by him in pursuit of the exchanges we have had, or will it be necessary for me to put a motion on the order paper?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No. I am investigating my own files. There may be correspondence with other members of the government. I want to make sure I have it all, and then I will be in a position to put the correspondence on record.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF TAX RENTAL AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the federal-provincial conference will be held next week, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would care to take the house into his confidence and indicate whether the government is going to offer to the provinces a revision of the tax rental agreements, and whether he is willing to extend to the provinces a larger share of the income and corporation tax fields up to the 25 per cent which has been asked for by one of the provincial premiers.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has been a member of this house for many years and has been the head of a provincial government. I am sure he would not expect me to state publicly at this moment, on the eve of the conference, any offer that might be made by the government to the provinces in this or any other matter. He talked about the tax rental agreements. The tax rental agreements, of course, do not exist at present. Fiscal relations are on the agenda, and we propose to discuss this matter in all its aspects. I do not think it would facilitate the kind of agreement which we hope will be arrived at if on the eve of the conference, representatives of the federal government were to state what the case of the government will be in this matter.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary, question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister not think that in view of the fact that any decision which is reached will have to be ratified by this house, it might create a good atmosphere at the federal-provincial conference if the Prime Minister gave some indication as to what offers will be made, particularly with reference to an offer of the federal government to pay its share of the increase in the old age assistance pension, the blind pension and the disabled persons allowance, effective October 1? I think this would be of great interest to the people of the country, and I thought the Prime Minister might want to give some indication to the house.

Mr. Pearson: I do not mean to be difficult in this matter, but I think it would be most unwise from every point of view if I gave the impression that the government is going to make offers on these matters. There is going to be an exchange of views, and the agreement which I hope will be reached will result from an exchange of views. We would not want to make public before the conference, on either level of government, offers which would be interpreted on the other side as offers for bargaining purposes.

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF ELECTION ACT AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): In view of the fact that the government, according to the Prime Minister, is considering the introduction of legislation to lower the voting age to 18, and in view of the fact this has already been done or is contemplated by a number of the provinces, will the Prime Minister bring this matter before the federal-provincial conference next week so that a uniform voting age could be agreed upon and established throughout Canada? In addition, if an age of less than 21 is agreed upon by the provinces, will consideration be given to removing the legal disabilities of persons of that age; and by legal disability I refer, of course, to their inability to enter into contracts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I agree that this matter, which is important, should be discussed with the provinces, but it is not on the agenda for next week. If an opportunity arises for that kind of discussion I will be glad to take advantage of it.

BREAD

PROTEST AGAINST PROBABLE PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether he has received a letter from the Quebec professional bakers' association protesting against a possible increase in the price of bread following Canada's large export of wheat? What does he intend to do in that regard?

[Mr. Douglas.]

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not recall having received such a letter, but I will be glad to look into it as soon as I get back to my office.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PERIOD UNDER EXPORT CREDITS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of what was said earlier this afternoon. I should like to ask him if the government will give consideration to extending the period for which credit is granted under the export credits act, in order to assist Canadian exporters in world markets. I am thinking particularly of possible sales of rolling stock to Israel and other countries which would assist areas such as my own in so far as employment is concerned.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): These requests for credit go before the Export Credits Insurance Corporation regularly and before the government through me from time to time. We do everything possible to grant terms of credit that will enable us to get the business. So far as I am aware we are not losing any business at the moment because of a lack of credit.

[Later:]

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his reply to the hon. member for Pictou. May I take it that the government, and E.C.I.C., will abandon the policy of not making loans under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act unless the amount is $2 million or more? Will the minister now consider the making of small loans under this legislation so as to encourage exports and manufacturing, particularly in the shipbuilding industry?

Mr. Sharp: That is a technical question. I should like to take it as notice and answer it tomorrow.

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG—FACILITIES FOR IN TRANSIT PASSENGERS ON INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the unfortunate impression created on some 60 international air line passengers during their stopover in Winnipeg a few days ago, will the minister endeavour to find a way to enable such in transit passengers in the future to see not just a basement room, but to enjoy the spacious grandeur of the new Winnipeg airport, reflecting as it does the friendly hospitality of the city and people of Winnipeg?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members here share the hon. gentleman's view about the friendly hospitality of the people of Winnipeg. I read the newspaper item on which the question is based, and apparently it has to do with what are called holding rooms at the new international airport for certain in transit passengers who are not staying in Canada and who have not been cleared through customs or immigration. Whether the difficulty was due to the fact that the airport had only been opened for three days and arrangements were not completed, or whether it is due to something deeper than that I do not know, but I will immediately have the whole subject matter looked into.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Minister of Transport take immediate action with regard to this important problem? Having read the newspaper article, surely he could pick up the telephone and discover what is happening. This may result from inadvertence on the part of the management of the airport, but it certainly is not complimentary to Canada to have international travellers dealt with as they were at the airport in Winnipeg just the other day. There will be other international travellers landing within a few days under similar circumstances.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will have the matter looked into immediately. As the hon. member knows, coming from Winnipeg, the airport terminal building was just opened last week, and this happened on Friday. I am immediately having the whole subject matter looked into, in all its implications.

Mr. Churchill: This is Thursday. I was there Monday, and I knew all about it then.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ADMISSION OF PUBLIC TO CONFERENCE ON SMOKING AND CANCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister reconsider her recent refusal to provide adequate accommodation for the conference on tobacco meeting on Monday, particularly cigarettes and their relation to cancer of the lung and other diseases, so that the press and public, including interested members of the house and the Senate, may be able to attend and hear the representations that will be made? I ask this question in view of the intense and widespread interest shown in this serious and urgent medical problem.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will be glad to reconsider it. My hon. friend must realize this meeting takes place at the same time as the dominion-provincial conference. The facilities here on the hill are sharply limited, particularly in respect of the availability of translators and the equipment which we use in order that one may have a bilingual meeting. I have been reconsidering this since several of my colleagues in the house have asked permission to attend.

The concept of the meeting originally was one which would be in camera and which would permit a very free expression of opinion from those who may be interested in the growing and manufacture of tobacco and those interested in the health aspect. While I shall be glad to reconsider, I must advise my hon. friend that I have already given considerable thought to the matter and it is my present belief I would not lightly change the decision.

Mr. Rynard: May I ask a supplementary question. It is my opinion and the opinion of this house that a conference that concerns the health of every individual in Canada should not be held in camera. The Canadian Medical Association, when it brought in its report, brought it in publicly with the press in attendance. I say to the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rynard: —if there is no room here, then let us get a room at the Chateau Laurier.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the minister to invite the tobacco growers to this meeting?

Miss LaMarsh: There has been a press release on this, but I cannot remember the exact title of the organizations. There is one for yellow tobacco from Quebec and there are two tobacco growing organizations from Ontario that have been invited, as well as the cigarette manufacturers. Most of these people have presented written material which has already been distributed.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wonder if I interpret the minister's previous statement correctly, that the press will be excluded from covering this important conference on the smoking situation?

Miss LaMarsh: Subject to the agreement of those who will be in attendance, it is proposed that the press will be admitted for the opening 15 minutes. There will be statements issued at the conclusion of the meeting. Those who come to the meeting will be certainly free to say anything they wish to the press following the meetings, but the meetings themselves will be held in camera.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR STAMP COMMEMORATING FOUNDING OF 4-H CLUBS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In consideration of the fact that this afternoon we have had 185 4-H club members representing 72,000 other 4-H club members present in the galleries, and in view of the fact that the Postmaster General has assured the house that he will reconsider his refusal to have a stamp issued commemorating the birth of the 4-H club movement at Roland, Manitoba, in 1913, would the minister use his influence with his colleague to further this project?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in the 4-H clubs. There were 14 members from each of the ten provinces in Canada present, and just before orders of the day I think they left the house in disgust and are not here at the moment.

An hon. Member: Whom were they disgusted with?

Mr. Hays: They did not seem very happy, but I will be glad to take this suggestion under consideration.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

MANUFACTURE IN TORONTO OF PARTS FOR DC-9 PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Could the minister confirm that the de Havilland company in Toronto have been manufacturing certain parts of the DC-9 since last July for Air Canada?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a statement will be made on this whole subject tomorrow, and perhaps I can deal with the question then.

[Mr. Mather.]

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING PURCHASE OF NEW PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, my question is really related to the one just asked by the previous questioner of the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister whether it is too late for members or other associations, such as trade unions, etc., to make representations regarding the choice of the short range jet for Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, such recommendations should be made to Trans-Canada Air Lines.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport?

Does the minister intend to call an early meeting of the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping so that its members may have the opportunity of making representations to the president of T.C.A. before a final decision is taken concerning the purchase of the Caravelle or DC-9 aircraft?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the calling of a committee is not the responsibility of the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, could I put my question to the Secretary of State?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member. I believe this question has already been asked, either this week or last week.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yesterday.

Mr. Gregoire: No answer.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he considered providing Trans-Canada Air Lines with statistics as to unemployment in various areas of this country, in case such information could help this corporation choose between the Caravelle and DC-9 aircraft?

[Text]

Some hon. Members: No answer.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BOYCOTT OF CANADIAN SHIPS—STATEMENT BY U.S. OFFICIAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is now prepared to answer my question of November 13 last, in which I asked for clarification of the discrepancy between the statements made by himself and by Mr. John W. Leslie, the United States deputy assistant secretary of labour.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had already dealt with this question. I regret if I have not, and apologize to the hon. gentleman. I may say I have examined the situation. I believe in the light of the events of that day my statement does not need to be clarified.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question. Does the minister not think that the opposite viewpoint and the statement made by Mr. Leslie, which was directly the reverse of his own, need clarification?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not responsible, of course, for what someone else says. In respect of statements made by someone in the Canadian government and someone in the government of another country, I believe that situation should not be a cause of provocation.

FINANCE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO BANKRUPT COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Did the minister receive requests for an investigation from small investors who had invested money in the national holding company which recently declared a $1.2 million bankruptcy involving a complete loss of $800,000 for those small investors?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

In view of the fact that the shareholders' protection emergency committee pretended and officially stated that the directors of that company rather than its structure are responsible for the bitter failure affecting thousands of small investors, does the minister intend to hold an investigation?

Mr. Chevrier: According to what I heard from the hon. member and what I saw in the press, it seems that this matter comes exclusively under provincial jurisdiction, but in any case, in view of the concern of the hon. member I shall investigate.

[Text]

REPORTED STATEMENT ON BUDGET SECRECY BY PRIVY COUNCIL ADVISER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the minister would affirm the correctness of a statement made by Mr. Kenneth Taylor, adviser of the privy council, to the effect that budget secrecy may be further relaxed to permit advance knowledge of budget objectives to be gained?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The hon. member was good enough to send me notice of his question. I believe there is a misunderstanding. I think what Dr. Taylor said was that Canada should not adopt a system which would enable interested persons to profit from information obtained in advance. I may say that Dr. Taylor was kind enough to send me an advance copy of the paper which he read in Vancouver the other day on the whole process of budget making. It is one of the best papers on the subject I have seen, and if any member would like a copy I would be glad to supply it.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATION OF "O CANADA"

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, could I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to suggest that "O Canada" be adopted as the national anthem of Canadians, when he introduces his bill to give Canada a truly Canadian national flag?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a question for the order paper, although I recognize the importance of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I believe that we have here all the same an important question which concerns all Canadians and which can easily be asked on orders of the day rather than be put on the order paper, since it entails but a simple answer from the Prime Minister.

For that reason, I submit that this question is absolutely in order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: There were two reasons for making my last suggestion. One was that I could not see the urgency of the question, and questions on orders of the day are at the very least supposed to be urgent. The other point is that this question has already been asked, if I am not mistaken, three or four times this session.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, you are absolutely right. After twenty years of waiting, I believe the answer is not yet urgent.

[Text]

GRAIN

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF POWERS OF WHEAT BOARD TO EASTERN PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister care to inform the house whether it is the intention of this government to extend the powers of the Canadian wheat board so that it may have jurisdiction over the sale of western grain in the eastern provinces?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this would, of course, require amending the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and notice of any intention of the government to change the act would be given in the usual way.

Mr. Langlois: A supplementary question. Can the minister at least give us a little bit of hope that this might come up next session?

HOUSING

REPORTED CURTAILMENT OF DIRECT LOANS TO BUILDERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Could he inform the house of the reasons which prompted Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to abolish direct loans to builders, whereas it was understood that loans would be granted to them up to December 31, 1963?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest of this subject perhaps the house would permit me to make a short statement by way of explanation.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

To encourage a high level of house building activity during the winter months, the government on September 23 authorized Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to extend its lending program to builders. Previously, direct government loans were available to builders only if they found buyers in advance of building. In September this restriction was temporarily removed.

I am happy to report that the new lending policy has been highly successful. Up to November 15 the corporation received loan applications for 13,147 houses. Nearly 4,000 of these applications were made in the last two weeks. This is not only the largest fortnightly total since the start of this particular program, but it represents the largest volume of direct mortgage lending ever undertaken by the corporation during a comparable period of the year. It creates a loan potential of close to $160 million.

This lending potential ensures the success of the $500 winter incentive program of my colleague the Minister of Labour. It also guarantees a much higher volume of building this winter than ever before in our history. I would be surprised if we went into the new year with less than 90,000 new houses under construction. Indeed, the figure could be higher. By contrast, last year there were 76,000 houses under construction at year end.

These two government programs have provided a tremendous impetus to employment in the building trades and other associated industries. So much so, in fact, that it is now debatable whether the industry is capable of undertaking a larger building program than that already being financed. If more direct loans were made, some builders might find that shortages of skilled labour would prevent them completing their housing in time to qualify for the $500 winter building incentive.

Because of this situation, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has instructed its offices not to accept further applications for speculative loans after close of business November 15. I should like to stress this point; builders, of course, can still obtain N.H.A. financing from approved lenders, and they will continue to be eligible for direct loans for houses sold in advance of construction. The corporation will also make loans to home owners. In effect C.M.H.C., having achieved the government's objectives, has simply reverted to the policy which existed prior to September 23.

I think the house will agree that this special winter lending program has been an unqualified success.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Could the minister indicate to what extent this large increase in the number of applications—an increase which is the result of the policies of the previous government—was caused by the fear of the tax increase to 8 per cent coming up next March?

Mr. Garland: I think the statement I have made speaks for itself.

Mr. Pugh: So will the 11 per cent tax.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can he give the house a breakdown by provinces of those applications to which he referred?

Mr. Garland: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. More: Will the minister get it?

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER PLANT—REPORTED CALL FOR TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Is the minister now in a position to enlarge on his remarks of Tuesday regarding the calling of tenders and the location of a heavy water plant in Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Coates: How long may we expect to have to wait?

Mr. Drury: As soon as possible.

AIR TRANSPORT

REFUELLING IN CANADA OF AIRCRAFT TO AND FROM CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Do Cuban aircraft and aircraft from iron curtain countries en route to and from Cuba still land and refuel at our bases in Canada?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I should like to take the question as notice.

AGRICULTURE

EARLY APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER FOR EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether he still intends to appoint a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question is at most one for the order paper, if it is in order at all. I believe it has been asked before.

CONGRATULATIONS ON INCOME OF WESTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter F. Foy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce for enabling western farmers to enjoy the largest average income they have ever had.

SUGAR

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I take this opportunity to answer a question directed to the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam on the subject of negotiations with the commonwealth countries on the sugar question. I am sorry I was not here yesterday. I was enjoying the warm hospitality of the people of Winnipeg or, more correctly, the people of the city of St. James where, as all hon. members should know, the beautiful new airport building is located.

As indicated to the house on November 12, I have informed both the commonwealth exporters' group and the Rhodesian producers that we would be interested in considering with them any proposals they might wish to lay before us. Since that time we have had further communications not only from the commonwealth exporters but also from South Africa and Cuba, and we are awaiting their proposals.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF GILL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Considering the difficulties which are being encountered by the unemployed of our country in their dealings with the unemployment insurance commission at this time, is it the intention of the minister to apply some of the recommendations of the Gill report as soon as it is possible to do so?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As my colleague the Minister of Labour is temporarily out of the house, may I say that it is our intention to deal with this report as soon as possible.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROTESTS RESPECTING CLOSING OF STATIONS IN WEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Last Friday I referred to the master agency plan which was being forced upon the residents of the Edmonton area by the Canadian National Railways, and I drew the attention of the minister to the fact that the C.N.R. has closed stations on main lines without obtaining the permission of the board of transport commissioners. I now ask the minister if he has looked into this situation.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, I would be glad to look into this.

Mr. Smallwood: I asked if the minister had looked into it.

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry; I did not hear the hon. member clearly. No, I have not looked into it.

Mr. Smallwood: Then I want to ask a supplementary question. Because of the inconvenience that the closing of these stations is causing the residents of these areas, and in view of the fact that the C.N.R. has not obtained the permission of the board of transport commissioners, will the minister do this immediately and see that these stations are reopened?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I will have it looked into tomorrow.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

KNOWLEDGE BY PRIME MINISTER OF MOTION REPLACING MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it relates to the motion this afternoon replacing two Liberal members on the committee on privileges and elections. Was this motion made with his knowledge and consent?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This motion was made in the usual way, Mr. Speaker, and the question gives me the opportunity of denying the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition that there was any intervention of the government in any way, shape or form in the action taken by the Liberal members on this committee.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. To the knowledge of the Prime Minister was there anything which brought about the replacement of the two members on the committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is definitely out of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS TO HOUSING ACT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue in whose name resolution No. 14 appears. Does the minister intend to introduce his legislation before the Christmas recess?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I did not hear the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Belanger: I would like to know whether the Minister of National Revenue intends to introduce resolution No. 14 before the Christmas recess?

[Text]

Mr. Garland: I can only refer the hon. gentleman to what the Prime Minister said in regard to this matter in the light of the over-all progress.

ADMIRALTY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES OF JUDGE AND REGISTRAR

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-108, to amend the Admiralty Act.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to supplement the answer I gave the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka in committee on the bill yesterday. The answer I gave may be found at page 4985 of English Hansard. I pointed out to the hon. member that the immediate purpose of the amendment was to provide for the situation in the province of Ontario. As I pointed out earlier, in Ontario we have the only surrogate judge under the Admiralty Act, and it was the situation in the province of Ontario that provided the immediate stimulation for this amendment.

I should also like to deal with another question which the hon. member asked at that time. He raised the question whether the amendment would have general application. I have drawn his question to the attention of the law officers of the crown, and they have advised me that their interpretation of Bill No. C-108 is that it is the intention of the bill and of the resolution which preceded it to cover not only the situation in the province of Ontario but to cover as well each of the other admiralty districts in which it may be desired to make the arrangement. In particular, in advising me of their opinion the law officers of the crown made reference to section 31(1)(j) of the Interpretation Act, and pointed out that in a proper case a singular word may import a plural meaning. They indicated that in their opinion that was so in this case.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary was good enough to advise me this morning of the statement he has just made, and I am very glad this matter has been cleared up so there will be no misunderstanding on the record. I think this does point up the advisability of holding over for third reading any bill which had gone through all other stages on the same day.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL CENTENNIAL ACT

AMENDMENTS CHANGING NAME, ENLARGING MEMBERSHIP OF ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (for the Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-107, to amend the National Centennial Act.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very much time of the house on this measure, but I do think it provides an opportunity to say a few words that in my opinion have become necessary because of what I consider to be the rather narrow attitude taken toward the bill and perhaps toward confederation in general. Certainly the co-operation of the provinces is going to be essential in planning the centennial celebration. I think what should be borne in mind by the commission is the fact that the consideration should be stressed that Canada is made up of an amalgamation or working union of provinces rather than a single unit such as Great Britain.

I am not one of those who becomes alarmed when we have differences of opinion as to how Canada should be reflected or what is Canada's national image, etc. I only become alarmed when I find such violent opinions being held by some who apparently feel that no other view but their own should prevail. I certainly hope that by Canada's centenary our present flurry of excitement over where we are going, the possibilities of separatism, etc., will have been smoothed out or at least minimized to such an extent that these problems will be put in proportion.

In my section of the country the city of Edmonton is a very cosmopolitan area. We have a good percentage of German, Ukrainian and Polish nationals. I happen to have one area of French speaking people. I assure the house that in so far as the background of these people is concerned and the question of what is a Canadian, we do not appear to have the problems that sometimes seem to rise in the house as to what is a Canadian. Frankly I am totally unable to understand the almost rabid excitement sometimes shown by members on the far left and their sensitivity about the problems of Quebec.

Certainly it would be a very bad thing if we were to lose the advantages of the cultural background and heritage of the French speaking people, but I can assure the house that the French speaking people of my area have been very successful in preserving their language, their culture and their religion. In their own community and in their own homes French is the first language spoken. They are able to have teaching in French. We are now establishing a college, I believe, to train French speaking teachers. Numerically these people are very much inferior to the English speaking people, but I do think it is worthy of note that the mere fact they are so small in numbers and so completely surrounded by people who find it necessary or expedient or advantageous to speak English first has not caused them to lose any of their own language.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not want to interrupt the hon. member but it seems to me what he is saying now has no connection whatsoever with the bill we are considering at this stage.

Mr. Nugent: I think I will be able to satisfy the minister by my next few remarks relating more directly to the bill. I note the increase in the number of representatives on the commission, and the bill contains reference to the number of members to be appointed from each of the provinces. I can also satisfy him by explaining to the house the situation in my province; what the state of Canada is, shall I say, in that area where there are people of different backgrounds. We are going to get a lot of benefit from the persons who are appointed from these various areas.

As I understand it, the province of Alberta is to appoint two members. Each province will be appointing two, and of course the federal government is going to appoint twice as many. I trust its appointments will be made from across Canada, so that in the planning of the celebration of our centennial we will have a fair representation from the province of Alberta which will be able to bring to the deliberations of the committee experience of how things are there, and will adequately reflect the picture of Canada today, how confederation is working and how people of various cultural and ethnic backgrounds are getting along together.

As I understand it, one of the ways in which we can celebrate our centenary is to give a picture of Canada, to allow all Canadians to know and appreciate the state of the country, and where we are in so many ways, not just economically but culturally as well. I think when this commission starts to sit, bringing people together who are experienced in such matters, these problems which may beset one part, or which may be taken much too rabidly by one part of the country, can be brought into in proportion, so it will be seen that they are not really as serious as they are notorious.

I am sure the commission in its deliberations will have considerable pressure put on it, stressing that there must be some more solid symbol, something a Canadian can point to and say "This is a Canadian", as they can with the Americans. They have a definite type of nationalism. It is a melting pot type of country with a melting pot type atmosphere, and they conform to a norm which is very identifiable. I suggest what we are really proud of in Canada, why we are different from the Americans—and I personally am very happy we are—is that we are not and do not pretend to be a melting pot. Canada is made up of people of different backgrounds, people who treasure different types of heritages, people who want to live in different ways, and who treasure most of all that ability to live the way they want, the prime restriction being only that they respect their neighbour's right to live differently should he so wish. This is a point overlooked and sometimes not appreciated enough by Canadians.

The essence of democracy is supposed to be the freedom of the individual. I suggest that Canadian democracy, Canadian confederation, and the fact we do not have that melting pot, really give the ordinary Canadian more freedom than his counterpart in the United States, because he does not have the pressures of conformity to anywhere like the same extent.

Another matter I would like to mention deals with paying special attention to the province of Quebec. I do not pretend to be an expert on that province or its problems, but I have had the pleasure of visiting there, and I must say I was very encouraged, from gaining a little knowledge of the residents of Quebec, to find them more like western Canadians than I had imagined they could be. Other than the language barrier I could imagine myself at home, and most certainly at home in the part of my riding where the people speak French.

I think certain groups in this house from Quebec pay too much attention to the imagined slights that some people feel. There is always a tendency for some people to point the finger, to take advantage of any worry of one group, to turn it to political advantage and say "I will champion this cause or that cause for you." Certainly sometimes the feeling in Quebec that they are not putting a strong enough hand on the top of industry, on the top of the civil service, and that they do not own enough of the industries their people are employed in, has a very familiar ring. We do not hear it now so much in the west as we used to; but during the tough times in the thirties—and I am referring to all the thirties and even into the forties—when times were a little tough and it was hard to get a job, we found exactly that sort of feeling and expression on the prairies; "They control us; they have got all the money and all the big jobs."

Usually the prairies were looking with suspicion on Bay street, or else on United States control and interests. Whenever you have tough times you want to blame somebody. In the west we used to blame Toronto and American capitalists from the eastern states. The pattern is not much different, and I can readily imagine with the same complaints in Quebec that the direction of complaint would have been toward Toronto and toward American capital, and there would not have been any left as between eastern Canada and western Canada, English speaking Canadians and French speaking Canadians, were it not advantageous for some to say "Since those complaints are there let us point the finger at the real culprits, those English speaking people who want to swallow us up. We will champion the French people and get some political advantage out of it."

That has been responsible for much of the fuss. It is responsible for the attitude taken by some hon. members of the house, which I think has expressed itself in almost ridiculous form in the extent to which they have gone to protect their pride or tender feelings, and to show how well they are championing these causes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the President of the Privy Council pointed out a while ago that it was not permitted at this stage of the study of the bill to embark on a digression or even to speak along the lines taken now by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent). In my opinion, if such digressions were permitted, we should be allowed to answer certain allusions.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is quite right, and I am sure the hon. member who has the floor realizes that what we are now discussing is an amending bill. We should consider the principle of the amending bill, and not the principle of the bill being amended. I am sure he will take this into account in the course of his remarks.

Mr. Nugent: I regret that the way in which I have put my remarks may have made it seem to the hon. member that this was not exactly pertinent. The point I made earlier is that the expansion of the number of members makes it possible to get a different and broader viewpoint of the confederation of Canada as it is. What I was trying to stress here was the point that there are not those real troubles that sometimes appear from the surface; that a basic understanding of the nature of the complaints, heard not only from Quebec but from time to time through various parts of the country, can be put in proper perspective when the members of this commission are properly chosen, when there is an expansion in the number of members, and that a careful choice from the provinces will give a much better chance to see that this is what is done.

I cannot understand the justification for increasing the number of members of a commission from any other point of view. I see the President of the Privy Council shaking his head, indicating that what I am saying is wrong. However, if he is going to expand the number of commissioners he must be going to add something to the commission other than political appointees. If the minister wants to ask me a question I shall be glad to entertain it.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question? I am under the impression that the hon. member is confusing two quite different agencies, namely the national centennial administration, about which we are now talking, and the national conference on the centennial, which was set up last October. Am I not correct in my impression?

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I was of course referring to both bodies in the nature of the problem facing them and the need for understanding by each. But I thought the minister was objecting to my remarks about the expansion of the commission itself. I can only hope that the reason for expanding the administration is to give it a broader base and not just for political representation. That is the only point I wish to make.

I said at the outset that I was going to be very brief, but I did want to point out that the number of people on this advisory committee, drawn from across the provinces should be fully representative; and even though only two are appointed by each of the provinces I hope the other 40 will be in proportion from all the provinces so we will get a balanced picture. I also hope the points I have made may be of some use in understanding that while sometimes certain groups in this house are very vocal and very loud and sometimes, I think, rather silly, the problem looked at in proportion is not that serious; it does not accurately reflect Canada's real troubles; and perhaps we will teach them to speak with more moderation by 1967, as more understanding develops across the country.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the house has spent the best part of two days on this piece of legislation. Therefore we do not feel it is necessary to have an extended debate today. My remarks at this second reading stage will therefore be very brief.

I should like at the outset to refer in just a word or two to the small amendment the house accepted yesterday when we were at the resolution stage. I refer to my amendment which inserted the word "Canadian" in the short title. To make a one word amendment does not seem very much, but I dare to hope that what happened yesterday is a symptom of what we can do when we celebrate our centennial. We were apparently badly divided in the house up to a point yesterday. There were those who felt that the word "national" should be taken out of the short title; there were others who did not like the idea of the word "national" being deleted. But when it was suggested that the word "Canadian" be put in, without any debate this was accepted unanimously.

I dare to hope this suggests there are things that unite us in this country. I dare to hope that this gives promise that the celebration of the centennial itself will not have the effect of dividing us, as has sometimes appeared to be the case from the kind of discussions that have taken place, but rather that the celebration of the centennial will be an event that will unite us in this country and launch us into a second century that will be even greater than the first century since our confederation in 1867.

I do not think it was out of place to have the kind of discussion that we had during the last two days. It is good for people to get things off their chest. Indeed, I think the relative calm that has settled over the chamber today suggests that this purpose has been served and I hope this piece of legislation will now have the endorsation of the house, and that we will thus be in a position to ask the commission and those responsible for planning the centennial celebration to get on with the job.

It had been my intention earlier to ask the President of the Privy Council at some stage in connection with this legislation to give us a report on the projects lined up or being undertaken. But I will be satisfied if he will give us the commitment that he will make such a report in some detail on the estimates that relate to this matter. Surely bringing those estimates before the house cannot be long delayed. I do think we are entitled to have a report on what has happened up to the present time and what is being done.

As I said a couple of days ago when I spoke in the debate at the resolution stage, I am concerned, and I think many Canadians are concerned, at the precious time that has been lost. I hope it will not be possible for a writer like I. Norman Smith, in 1968, to say of our centennial that we made a botch of it, as he said Ottawa did of its 100th birthday. This depends upon all of us. It depends not just on the commission, not just on the government, but on all of us in this house and the people of Canada generally. I believe we would like to have a worthwhile celebration. Let us get on with the job in the three years or so that remain between now and then.

I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare in her place, as well as the President of the Privy Council. I would like to make just one more concrete, practical suggestion as to a way in which I think we could effectively celebrate the 100th birthday of this nation in a manner in which it would be long remembered. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare could have something to do with this, she too would be long remembered. What about planning now to increase old age security by stages of $5 a month; once in 1964, twice in 1965 and twice in 1966. Thus on entering 1967, our 100th year of confederation, the basic old age security payment would be $100 a month.

One hundred dollars a month, in the 100th year of confederation, would be a monument much better than any monument of stone; it would speak much louder than speeches; it would last much longer than fireworks. I suggest this as a very practical proposal and something that might well be planned with a view to making our 100th anniversary one really to be remembered.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to participate in this debate heretofore, and I do not now intend to prolong it; but there are a few things I would like to say in relation to the bill before us.

Changing the short title of a bill is something of importance, not because the short title means very much in itself but because the addition or deletion of words can be construed as a change of policy or attitude on a subject which means a great deal to us and which I trust will continue to mean more, because it is so vitally concerned with the continuation of our nation, Canada.

The change that relates to the increase in the number of commissioners is good if it means a wider representation across Canada and a greater degree of participation by Canadians as we approach the centennial through these preparations.

Now, the basic change, the elimination of the word "national" and the substitution of the words "of Canadian confederation", which includes the amendment made yesterday, is what I regard as the most important and significant part of this bill. I personally wish to go on record as favouring this change. I do so for two basic reasons which I should like to state. The first is the obvious one that it makes the short title of the bill conform to its existing long title, "An act respecting the observance of the centennial of confederation in Canada." Therefore the amendment which was added yesterday follows along this line of thought.

The second reason is the fact that the use of the word "national" in the short title prior to this amendment leads to confusion and misunderstanding in the French translation. I do not contend I am a master of the French language. Certainly, however, I regard the meaning that is brought out in the French translation of the title, "le centenaire de la nation" as something completely different from the meaning given by the English title. A lot of this confusion could have been avoided if there had been more care used in the translation of the title of the original bill. As I understand the meaning of the word "nation" in French, it conveys shades of meaning that are certainly not conveyed by the English word at all. I believe this is one of the reasons so much time has been consumed in the house; that is, simply that a French speaking person who reads the title gets a completely different meaning from the English speaking person who reads the title.

At the same time I should like to place firmly on the record, particularly for the benefit of our friends whose mother tongue is French, that in the English sense of the word Canada did become a nation by the process of confederation. This process was an event of historic importance and significance, well worthy of the commemoration celebrations we are now planning for 1967. The year 1867 marks the time a number of independently governed British colonies on the North American continent were constituted into a new nation to be known as Canada. At the same time the old province of Canada was divided into the present province of Quebec and Ontario. This was the time the effective government of Canada was transferred from London, England to Ottawa, to a federal parliament elected by Canadians. This, then, becomes the birthday of our country, Canada, using the English meaning of the word "nation", as a politically autonomous group of people inhabiting a recognized territory and bound together by common bonds of allegiance, citizenship and governmental organization. This is the meaning that is carried to English speaking people who fully understand the meaning of those words.

I cannot help the feeling that many of my friends in the province of Quebec do not recognize the importance of this constitutional step which was taken in 1867, nearly 100 years ago. It seems to me that an impression still remains, often enough fostered by politicians who should know better, that the federal government is not their government, and that it is not in any way essentially different from the colonial government which existed prior to 1867.

It is remarkable that this attitude should persist, when in fact Quebec province has provided Canada with two of its most capable and respected prime ministers, namely Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Louis St. Laurent. Under their leadership Canada passed one quarter of its almost a century of political life. I am thinking now of the country of Canada. Quebec also has been traditionally the backbone of the Liberal party, which has spent more years in office than any other Canadian political party since 1867. If any province has had a chance to say what it wanted by way of federal government policy in the past 100 years, that province has been Quebec.

I am supporting the change of name proposed here because I believe the change is necessary to avoid any undue misunderstanding on the part of Canadians who come from Quebec. All the same, I would appeal to those who are of French Canadian background to endeavour to understand precisely what the word "nation" means in the English language. Probably we are talking about the same thing, and we are far closer to mutual understanding than technical interpretation and meanings of words would apparently convey. If one talks in English about a national centennial, one is not denying that French Canadian culture existed before 1867. When one talks in English about Canada as one nation, certainly one is not denying the existence of a French Canadian language nor its right to continue its important place in Canadian culture. Personally I wish every French Canadian inhabitant in Canada to have the fullest chance to preserve and develop their culture. Confederation, united under a common form of government, brought together men and women of different cultures who wanted to become citizens of the new and great Canadian nation. It has, of course, attracted many others who have since come to live here, who are neither French nor English but who also wanted to live under this government of Canada.

It is this founding agreement which made Canada an independent and which has led to sovereign political entity that we propose to commemorate in the year 1967. I hope that those who live in the province of Quebec will realize that this is something entirely different from the original discovery, settlement and development of our land, whether by our French or English pioneers. It is an event that we should celebrate because this is what we look forward to as a nation.

It is my hope that all Canadians will stop long enough to consider the intention of the original fathers of confederation when they brought confederation into being nearly 100 years ago. This was to make Canada a new, autonomous country which later became part of the commonwealth, but still a nation to have its own citizenship and its own government. Let us make sure that not only do we celebrate the centennial but that we have a Canada in which to celebrate it. Let us stand together to make sure that this original purpose of the fathers of confederation is continued and strengthened. Surely if the changing of a word or two in the title of this act helps us to understand the real purpose which we should be looking for today, then we should all be for it.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I have but a few very brief comments to make on the bill now before the house.

There was quite a bit of discussion yesterday, at the resolution stage, and we heard some very pleasant observations, especially from the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr.

Gregoire), to whom I am glad to pay this tribute, because his rejoinders were most appropriate at times.

I feel it would also be quite in order for me to congratulate the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) for his very clear and most objective statement.

Mr. Speaker, the main features of the measure we are discussing concern the changing of the short title of the act from "the National Centennial Act" to "the Centennial of Confederation Act".

The bill aims also at granting extended power to the centennial commission and increasing from 8 to 12 the number of directors, if it is passed, needless to say.

That proposal is meant obviously to promote administrative efficiency within the centennial commission, which will be able to make expenditures up to $25,000 without getting beforehand the authorization of the governor in council. The commission will also be able to acquire property up to the said amount, without having to obtain the authorization of the governor in council, which is surely one more step towards administrative efficiency.

But the most important change, in my opinion, is the new name that is proposed. Instead of celebrating the centennial of the nation, we are going to celebrate the centennial of confederation. Of course that implies rather different circumstances, because we are ready to celebrate the Canadian nation at any time, but to celebrate the centennial of confederation, that is not exactly the same thing.

As a matter of fact, if we refer to the words of the former government member for Roberval, perhaps we can understand why those who drafted the present act preferred the name "centenary of the nation", because, if my memory is good, the former member for Roberval used to say that confederation was a dupe's bargain. Of course he was giving his personal opinion, and perhaps this explains why it would be preferred not to celebrate the centennial of confederation, but rather the centennial of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, if I may give a personal opinion, I would say that in order to celebrate the centennial of an event, that event must reflect something happy which was beneficial to the two great races of the country.

Well, if we want to celebrate confederation, it must be recognized that it brought about some benefits, otherwise there would be no reason for such a celebration. And here I would like to refer to the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), who claimed that the statement I made two weeks ago at the young Liberals' convention was prejudicial, because it was not likely to lead to unity.

Mr. Speaker, I am justified to say, I think, that I do not see how my remarks might be prejudicial to national unity.

I simply expressed the wish that by 1967 Canada would have her complete national sovereignty, because I am convinced—this also may be a very personal opinion—that at the present time the great majority of public opinion is ready to Canadianize Canada in all her aspects and symbols.

We want to be Canadians, Mr. Speaker, and I resent at times too many references to French and English Canadians. I am proud of being a Canadian and also a French-speaking Canadian, and I believe that the best way to unite the two great races which make up our country and to bring them closer together, is to create a truly Canadian ideal.

When a great parliamentarian stated in 1848: "We have government responsibility", there was cause to rejoice because it meant breaking with the bonds of colonialism.

When in 1931, the Statute of Westminster recognized Canada's independence, there was cause to rejoice, because it meant breaking with all bonds of colonialism.

In 1963, four years before the centennial celebrations, it is advisable, in my opinion, to see to it that every symbol of bondage and subservience is removed.

Canada is an economic power; it has the right to transact business freely with other countries. It declared war in 1939—which is a sign of total independence—and since 1945, it has its own representative at the United Nations. Why should it still be subject to bonds of colonialism?

Here is the nonsensical situation in which Canada finds itself in 1963: without a flag, without a national anthem, unable to amend its own constitution in some cases and a foreign sovereign is the symbol of its supreme authority.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I trust that for 1967, we shall have all the symbols of absolute sovereignty in Canada in order that we may be true Canadians in this our great country of which I am proud.

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I wish, in the first place, to congratulate the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) who has recalled some fine feats of arms and certain past periods, from colonial days to a sovereign and responsible government.

In connection with this Bill C-107, I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for the short amendment which he moved last evening. In my opinion, there is some truth in this brief amendment.

We are all Canadians of goodwill, and regardless of our racial origin, we hope that the confederation centennial will really be something to rejoice about for the various elements throughout the country.

I note that the amendment introduced provides that the number of directors of this centennial commission is to be increased from 8 to 12.

Considering the nature of the speeches which we have heard during these past few days, it is essential that we should bear in mind that our Canadian people is made up of French Canadians, English Canadians and new Canadians.

I trust—I hope that I am right in this—that these appointments will not be purely political appointments but will really take into account the real splendour and magnificence which should characterize the celebration of the confederation centennial. I suggest that the number of directors increased from 8 to 12, should effectively represent our various ethnic groups, that is four French-Canadian, four English-Canadian and also four new-Canadian representatives. I think that the beauty of flowers lies in the variety of colours and we should not forget that almost a third of our people—at least five million out of the 18 million inhabitants of Canada—brought us their own native culture, which we are sometimes glad to see in their patriotic celebrations within their own groups.

I think we might multiply the colourful diversity of those who will take part in celebrating the centennial of the Canadian confederation, and that is why I believe that it is time to try the experiment by introducing the other ethnical groups in that commission. Thus, everybody would take part in the celebration of the confederation centennial as a flourishing nation with great hopes for the future, which wants to progress in that direction.

I shall quote clause 17 of Bill C-107 which says:

> There shall be a national conference on the centennial of confederation consisting of the minister and not more than sixty members, each of whom shall be appointed by the minister, including at least two members from each of the ten provinces who shall be appointed by the minister on the recommendation of the governments of each of the provinces.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Perron) is a little bit confused, as was another hon. member a little while ago. The centennial conference, with 60 members, has already been formed; the names of those members were announced early in October. This bill does not in any way propose to increase the representation on that conference.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, I was not alluding to the increase of the membership, but I wanted simply to suggest that the ten provinces be also considered when proceeding with appointments to this national conference.

Mr. Speaker: I must tell the hon. member that he is getting away from the bill before us when he speaks of appointments, as he did just now.

Mr. Perron: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having probably been absent when the house was informed of those appointments having been made.

Yet, at the same time as the increase in the number of commissioners from 8 to 12, I think we should not only prepare the adoption of a national flag but also of a national anthem. I think the idea should be considered so that the celebration of the centennial of the Canadian confederation would really be a great day for all Canadians.

[Text]

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): I shall take only a few moments. I did not intend to enter into this debate. However, I was somewhat shocked at certain aspects of the discussion which has taken place in the last two days on such a simple amendment as is now proposed. I was certainly taken aback when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), ranging far and wide, opened this debate in such a critical vein and allowed it to take the course it has taken.

I have looked at some of the words used by the right hon. gentleman. He stated, among other things, as will be found reported at page 4916 of Hansard for November 19:

> The word "dominion" has disappeared. During the days of Mr. St. Laurent it became an ugly word and was removed even from the telephone books. Now the word "national" is to be removed. I cannot understand the need for that change. This is a national undertaking. It is said it is objected to by the premier of Quebec.

Later on, he stated:

> Why remove a word which refers to all of the people of this nation, not only the two founding races but all the races of our country?

Others of the right hon. gentleman's party spoke in the same vein, including the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk), the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and others. However, it is interesting to note that in the same debate the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) stated as reported on page 4937 of Hansard for the same day:

> I was also pleased to note that other amendments had been made, because without Quebec's contribution to the centennial celebrations it would have been impossible to take advantage of this bill and to vote the amounts of money in co-operation with the provinces. It is indeed the centennial of confederation and not of Canada which we are going to celebrate, since Canada existed long before 1867.

He went on to say—and this surprised me:

I also remember that at the last Conservative convention, for instance, a resolution was moved to change the constitution so that the word "dominion" be deleted. It was put to a vote and a majority of delegates voted to have the word "dominion" suppressed.

These words give a somewhat different impression to that given by the hon. member's leader. The hon. member for Marquette made what I consider to be a fine speech, a fine contribution. He, too, ranged far and wide. I find I must agree with many of the things he said. As reported on page 4942, he stated:

Other peoples came into this country after 1867.... They came here, not as hewers of wood or drawers of water. They felt they were coming in as equals, as partners in the building of this nation and they so feel today.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I agree. Then the hon. member went on to say:

These people who came were prepared to make maximum contributions to the development of one over-all Canadian culture. They are making those contributions today to a national culture embracing the best of all cultures.

These are not words with which one can argue. I agree with them. He went on to say:

These people pray, and I believe I have a right to ask on their behalf, that they be not left behind in celebrating the 100th anniversary of this great nation of ours. They wish to celebrate. They wish to take stock of what they have achieved and what they have contributed to this nation. They hope that the two founding races appreciate their contributions and they are not asking for anything else....They ask for the privilege of full participation....I am proud of my racial origin and I am proud of being a Canadian.

Like many other members of this house, I, too, am a Canadian who descends from an ancestry which is other than French or English. I am proud of my Italian ancestry, just as the hon. member for Marquette is proud of his Ukrainian ancestry. But, Mr. Speaker, when he implies in his speech that people who have come to this country from the European nations may be looked upon as second class citizens because of an amendment to this act, then I say he is not speaking with sincerity but is speaking strictly for purposes of public propaganda. I take objection to his remarks when he says, as found on page 4943 of Hansard:

If we are a nation, this is a national celebration and the purposes of this act would remain the same if it were called the National Centennial Act.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) does not agree with that. We have not heard from the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) or the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade). I am wondering what they are thinking. But this is not important. We all know that the right hon. gentlemen at one time in the history of the country tried—

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am very delighted to hear the hon. member but I think he is completely out of order. He has been reading from speeches by different members of the house and saying, "I agree with this" or "I do not agree with that". We would like him to tell us his own opinion and come back to the main purport of the bill. I do not mind hearing his comments but I should like him not to read the speeches of others. I hope he can make a speech of his own.

Mr. Macaluso: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, this just shows that the hon. member does not know whereof he speaks. I am quoting from certain speeches made by members of his party, and if they were in order when they made them I am in order when I quote from them to show how inconsistent they are.

Mr. Pigeon: We are on second reading.

Mr. Macaluso: I still intend to quote certain remarks made by members of the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs. With regard to the changing of the short title of National Centennial Act, at first I wondered why it should be changed. But I was not aware then that the premier of the province of Quebec had written to the Leader of the Opposition when he was prime minister setting out the reasons why he recommended this change. I was not aware until it was explained by the President of the Privy Council in the house why Canadians of French origin object strenuously to the wording of the short title. This only goes to bear out what I have always considered and still consider to be a lack of interest on the part of the right hon. gentleman in many things with regard to which he states that he was or is the great defender. We would not have wasted three days in the house—

Mr. Churchill: What are you doing?

Mr. Macaluso: —if the plea of the premier of the province of Quebec had been listened to at that time and if a proper translation had been made at that time. I am quite concerned about the people who have come to this country from the European nations. As the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) stated, they came to this country to be Canadians, they are Canadians and, as I said the other night during the speech of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), they are making a contribution.

But I would say that each and every one of us has a responsibility to see that the celebration of the centennial of confederation in 1967 is a most happy occasion. I do not mean happy only in the sense that we should be able to go out and have fun socially at the events that will be going on, but that we should be happy with regard to the 100th anniversary of the founding of this nation which was brought about by the joining together of Lower Canada, Upper Canada and the maritime provinces at the conferences in Charlottetown and Quebec city resulting in confederation in 1867. I know that in 1967 all Canadians, no matter what their origin, will take part in the celebration feeling that they are Canadians and none of them, as the hon. member for Marquette seemed to imply, will enter into the celebrations as second class citizens just because the name of this act has been changed. I understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) also wants to speak so I will now conclude.

Mr. Churchill: Thanks for giving me two minutes.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I believe it would meet with the approval of the house if the time devoted to private members' business this day were to extend only from 5.20 to six o'clock so that we may finish this bill, because it is urgent that it be disposed of today. The President of the Privy Council cannot be here next week, and I think it would meet with the approval of all hon. members if we continued a little longer and tried to dispose of the bill.

Mr. Knowles: We agree that we try.

Mr. Churchill: We agree that we try; but it is pretty shocking procedure that two members on the government side should occupy the time of the house in the last 40 minutes making speeches which were inflammatory, to say the least, and that we should then be asked to agree to a limitation of debate. Another 20 minutes might not suffice to answer these hon. gentlemen.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: We agree, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? First of all, is it agreed that we will proceed as suggested by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the passing of this measure. If the hon. member who has just resumed his seat had confined his remarks to the principle of the bill now before us, I feel I might have had an extra 15 minutes, and that, without impeding the work of this house.

We are studying an amendment to legislation enacted by the former government. The purpose of this amendment is to change the title of a federal agency which is entrusted with a public celebration and with throwing into light, at the occasion of the centennial of confederation, those historical facts which have surrounded the birth and the expansion of this country of ours, Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we wasted a lot of time in finding a formula to change the title of that act. It would have been so much more simple to call the bill the "Canada centennial act", and in French "Loi du centenaire du Canada". That title would have been quite simple and would certainly have expressed the proposed objective. This makes us wonder whether the real aim of the bill is not to play at politics rather than to safeguard a principle, as the government would have us believe.

When we examine the main amendments concealed behind this change of title, we find various clauses which not only make us suspect the reasons given by the President of the Privy Council, but tend to depreciate the aim of the legislation introduced by the former government.

Indeed, there is not a single paragraph in the amendment of the former act which does not imply some sort of political patronage. The present legislation being so important, it is unfortunate that the government did not consider the grounds for introducing this legislation more seriously and should rather under the pretence of changing the title, have opened the door to a patronage which seems so much to its liking.

If we read paragraph 3 of Bill C-107, we find that, instead of maintaining the status of the general commissioner in charge, he has been given an associate commissioner, which results in a sharing of authority and the splitting of the administrative structure of that organization, a fact which might very well make it helpless or at least ineffective.

I wonder why the minister saw fit to appoint an associate commissioner to such an organization. If it was not for political reasons, I would like very much to know the real reasons which prompted him to make this change in the legislation.

If we examine the legislation a little further, we find in subsection 5 that the commission may undertake a program or distribute donations for any amount not exceeding $25,000. Here again, this amendment is quite close to the new spirit that seems to prevail since the Liberal party came into power in the province of Quebec, in that every means is used to evade the law in order to protect the supporters of the regime, in spite of the fact that the present government blamed the previous administration in the province of Quebec for having dispensed patronage.

In my opinion, the danger entailed by those amendments intended to emphasize the advantages of confederation, is that they open a door to patronage. It seems to me that the minister could have been much more cautious and stood clear of crypto-separatism, which he has so often exposed by removing such an amendment from this legislation.

I should not want either to leave unchallenged the statements made by the minister in the last few weeks about the respect of confederation, but I wonder why he has made this change in the act in order to increase the membership of the commission from 8 to 12.

Obviously, it is not to give a job to a few unemployed.

Mr. Lamontagne: It is to provide representation for all provinces.

Mr. Valade: This is the reason given, to provide representation for all provinces, but the same excuse was given when at the beginning of the session, the Atlantic Development Board Act was amended. The same excuse was given when the present government proposed to amend the Canadian World Fair Act. The other day, the Prime Minister gave the assurance that he would consider amending the Canadian World Fair Act to increase the number of directors. Probably once again this is to open the door to patronage.

In all the measures introduced by the government, the basic principles are altered by amendments opening the door to patronage. This bill should be free of all political influence and all the measures introduced by this government should be safe from such political influence.

Mr. Lamontagne: Would the hon. member allow me a question? Does the hon. member agree that we should try to appoint representatives from all provinces within the centennial commission?

Mr. Valade: I agree completely with the minister about representation of the provinces within that commission, but, in my opinion, there are several ways to achieve this. And I think the minister must realize there are other ways to solve the problem.

I appreciate that the number could have been increased to 16, 24 or 48. I do not know the maximum number the minister could set but, by increasing by one third or one half the existing number, he saw to it that he would get the majority when decisions are reached with regard to grants amounting to less than $25,000. The act states clearly that the commission has the right to undertake a distribution program for gifts, grants of less than $25,000.

So, the amendment concerning the appointment of other members to the commission opens the way to such an implication. I am not raising an accusation.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, we ask to be authorized to increase the number of the directors of the commission from 8 to 12, and I said to the Leader of the Opposition the other day that our intention was not to replace the eight directors already appointed by the former government, so that we would not have the majority when decisions are taken.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I commend the minister for this statement because the appointments made by us were not political appointments. That is where lies the difference between the present government's attitude and that of the former government.

In the list submitted to the house by the minister on November 20 as recorded on page 4978 of Hansard, I see the name of Mr. Jean Brillant, one of the Liberal party's financial backers.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, may I remind the hon. member that that concerns the national conference that has already been set up, and which is not at all the same thing as the centennial commission. Consequently, I would ask the hon. member to read the act and restrict himself to the question under study.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must remind the hon. member for St. Mary that in this debate I called to order some members who seemed to confuse the two agencies.

Mr. Choquette: The Duplessis manner.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lotbiniere has just said words that may be dangerous for him, since nationalistic and crypto-separatist statements were not made by Mr. Duplessis, but rather by his friends Messrs. Levesque and Lesage.

Moreover, I think that many statements on the part of some of his friends in the province of Quebec have contributed more to disunion in Canada than any statement made by the former premier of that province.

I also think that the hon. member for Lotbiniere should think again, for he has made another statement where he gave a detailed account of the Liberal party's great contribution to confederation and its understanding of this problem. Now, if my hon. friend would go back to the days when Mr. St. Laurent was prime minister of Canada, he would recall that during a similar debate, the former prime minister had stated that the French language could be done away with, as an official language by a majority vote in the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt once more the hon. member for St. Mary, but I suggest that he limits his remarks to the legislation now before us.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but I had to answer the hon. member for Lotbiniere who made quite an irregular interruption, and if he wishes to start a debate on that matter, I am ready to take part in it.

I believe that the President of the Privy Council would have been well advised to keep political considerations out of the amendment he introduces to the legislation enacted by the former Conservative government.

To come back to the argument which I brought up a moment ago, I wish to tell him that I do not question the objectiveness and the honesty of those who will be appointed to that commission, but I believe that the risk which the government runs by proceeding in that manner can easily cast doubts on the honesty not only of the commission itself, but also of those who comprise it.

The commission will play a vital part in the success of Canada's centennial celebrations. That is why the minister should have taken all necessary precautions to ensure that nobody would have any misgivings about the commissioners' impartiality, and especially about political pressures or patronage within that commission.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude, I must say that as a French Canadian, I will be most happy to celebrate Canada's centennial with my English speaking fellow citizens. However, as the present premier of the province of Quebec said on several occasions, the future of confederation will be very doubtful indeed if the two groups who wrote the British North America Act do not make an objective effort to understand each other.

In fact, the decisions we take should work in favour of national unity instead of against it.

I should like to remind the house that the soundest basis of confederation was laid by Conservatives, men like Cartier and Macdonald. History is there to prove it. I have the feeling that it is the Conservative party which will once again save confederation, especially if certain Liberals who hold important positions, like the Quebec premier and his minister of natural resources, keep on making vociferous statements in favour of nationalism and separatism. In my opinion, we will have then a basis for closer agreement between the two great races of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, nationalism and separatism are not to be found only in the province of Quebec.

There exists, in other parts of Canada, groups which manifest ideas of separatism in their own area.

In fact, it is recognized that hon. members often, and quite regrettably, receive periodicals which are not such as to consolidate the basis of understanding between French speaking and English speaking Canadians.

I have in hand one of those periodicals. I shall quote some extracts, simply in order to call the attention of responsible men, in all fields of public activity, on publications of that type, which, instead of helping us build a strong nation, endeavour to divide us by the wrong interpretation of the very principles which inspired the confederative pact. And, at this stage, I suggest it is a pact and not an act, as Mr. St. Laurent alleged.

Mr. Speaker, those periodicals are prejudicial to the country's unity. As a matter of fact, in its November 1963 issue, the Sentinel wrote:

[Text]

> They are pleading now for an equality which, if granted, would soon develop into applied superiority through the pressure their unified control and persistent needling can exert upon the political leaders of all parties. That, to our mind, is the issue that lies ahead for Canada. It is in the shaping today, and all the calls seem to be coming from militant French Canadians in all stratas of Quebec life.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I point out that situation, which, I know, distresses all hon. members; but we are confronted here with precisely the type of publication that can only be prejudicial to the success of the celebration of the centennial.

The President of the Privy Council should have suppressed from these amendments the last appearance of patronage, so that this bill would not be a piece of legislation tainted with politics but a measure which might inspire truly noble feelings, unite all Canadians, and make of the year 1967, the year of Canada's centennial, a year of which we might all be proud as Canadians.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, could I direct a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Valade: Certainly.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has just suggested that the title of the act be changed to the "Canada centennial act". Does he not feel that in 1967 we shall be celebrating the 443rd anniversary of Canada?

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I did not understand the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has suggested that the act be known as the "Canada centennial act". Does he not feel that in 1967 we shall actually be celebrating the 443rd anniversary of Canada?

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question affords me the opportunity to clear up a point.

When I speak of Canada's centennial, I want to emphasize that, in 1867, confederation enabled the two ethnic groups to unite. As a matter of fact, my friend knows quite well that there was no Canada as such in 1867, but that there was instead what they called "Lower Canada" and "Upper Canada"—

Mr. Caouette: "Haut-Canada" and "Bas-Canada".

Mr. Valade: I used the English expressions for the sake of bilingualism and to show clearly what the situation was then.

And thus with confederation, the wish of both French speaking and English speaking Canadians to unite and to respect each other came true. It is this respect for their essential rights that is laid down in the British North America Act, in sections 92 and 133, to be exact, and many others of which hon. members are aware.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Longueuil should not make me say what I did not say and, especially, that I believe Canada began in 1867. On the other hand, I know that our country began to head towards a certain unity of mind in 1867, and our goal now must be to try and create, for 1967, a unity of mind in mutual respect for the rights of each province which is the true spirit of confederation, and not a melting pot.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put another question to the hon. member. Is he not of the opinion that there was a Canada before Upper and Lower Canada came into being?

Mr. Valade: I think there were also Indians even before my friend's time, here, in Canada.

[Text]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to register my objections to this bill. It is another indication of fumbling and bumbling on the part of this government. I have had occasion during the last two or three days to run over in my mind the accomplishments of the government during this session, and I find that all they are doing is taking acts which are already on the statute books and changing names, enlarging the number of directors or the number of people mentioned in those acts, and things of that nature.

Here we have another example. The National Centennial Act was set up, people were appointed and the job was under way. This government has to now tinker with this operation. When the present government was in opposition was the time for them to suggest the changes that they are now trying to bring into effect, if they thought them worth while at that time—which they did not. We have heard hon. members suggest today—

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, but I rise on a point of order. I believe it was understood that at 5.20 we would move to the private members' hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The understanding of the Chair was that we would go to twenty minutes after five o'clock, and unless there is unanimous consent to continuing this debate, the Chair will have to call the private members' hour.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) is absolutely the last speaker, and if he could conclude his remarks in a couple of minutes—

Mr. Churchill: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: —perhaps the house would consent to that course being followed. But if we are going on with a debate on semantics—and the debate on this bill has already gone on for three days—I think we should follow the course that was agreed upon earlier.

Mr. Churchill: This is precisely the reason I intend to debate this measure, because of accusations like this. One of the other members said we were wasting the time of the house and the hon. member has referred to semantics, and so on. I have every intention of exerting my rights as a member of this house to be heard on this bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni also has rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre might want to adjourn the debate because I understand we are going into committee of supply at seven o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ACCEPTANCE OF FISHERIES COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING HALIBUT

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the cabinet minute or other official document which authorized the Secretary of State for External Affairs to notify the executive director, the international north Pacific fisheries commission, by telegram under date of May 10, 1963, that the commission's recommendations for the removal of the halibut stocks in the eastern Bering sea and the herring stocks west of the Queen Charlotte islands from the annex to the convention had been accepted by the government of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion has been standing in my name for some time. It was transferred for debate on October 16, and in order to set the matter in perspective I might perhaps just quote the remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) on that occasion. He said, as reported on page 3625 of Hansard for October 16, 1963:

The government, as my hon. friend knows, approved the three recommendations of the international north Pacific fisheries commission concerning the removal of halibut stock in the eastern Bering sea and herring stock west of the Queen Charlotte islands from the annex of the north Pacific fisheries convention. This decision was communicated to the executive director of the commission on May 10. Action was taken on the authority of this cabinet decision and no other official document exists.

With regard to the production of the actual cabinet minute, as my hon. friend I am sure well knows, it is a well established rule in Canadian parliamentary practice that the texts of cabinet minutes are not made public. I regret, therefore, I cannot agree to the motion and I ask my hon. friend to be good enough to withdraw it.

My reply was as follows:

I would not quarrel with the general principle enunciated by the minister in respect of cabinet minutes, but it does seem to me there are some particular circumstances surrounding the situation which the minister has outlined in connection with this matter. It is apparent from what he has said that there are no other official documents in connection with the action taken by the government.

It seems to me there are some special circumstances attached to this kind of situation. I should like to ask, therefore, following the good example of the present minister in the previous parliament, to have this motion transferred to a place on the order paper where it would become a debatable motion.

The terms of my motion which you have read to the house, Mr. Speaker, make it clear that I was not directly asking for the production of a cabinet minute. My motion does say "cabinet minute or other official document". At the time I drafted this motion I had been led to believe that there perhaps was no other official document, but I was hopeful that there might be one which I had not been able to discover. I should like to make it clear that I had no intention of asking the government directly to produce a cabinet minute as such.

The reason I felt this motion should be debated was that if there were no other documents than the cabinet minute, a rather peculiar and regrettable state of affairs, then the cabinet minute being the only official record of the action taken by the Canadian government to amend an international treaty, that should become public property. If the situation is as indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his earlier reply to me, then the public of Canada and the members of this house have never had any official notification that the annex to this treaty has been amended.

As the house will recall, a rather important and controversial matter is involved. I realize fully that it is not within the rules on this occasion to debate the merits or demerits of the action the government took. However, in order to put this matter in perspective, I feel I should be permitted to point out that when the original proposals of the international commission came to the attention of the house during the last parliament, this was obviously quite a controversial matter. It was considered to be of grave importance by hon. members, particularly those who came from British Columbia whose fisheries were most directly affected by this north Pacific convention.

I should remind the house that this concern was shared by most of the other members from British Columbia and by the Liberal members of this house who represented British Columbia, including the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing). I recall that on one occasion he asked the then minister of fisheries about this matter and suggested it should go before the marine and fisheries committee prior to a decision being taken by the government. He suggested that this could possibly have disastrous consequences. Those are his words, as I recall them. I found it difficult to understand, therefore, when the present government acted precipitately on this matter and apparently tried to shove it under the rug, so that parliament and the people of Canada would not be aware of what has taken place. Quite frankly, this is the only interpretation I can place upon the fact that the only official record of the action taken by the government of Canada in this connection is some cabinet minute.

This matter goes back, of course, for some time. I suppose the members of the present administration could argue that this was a matter which should have been brought to a conclusion by the previous administration. I would not quarrel with them too much if they were to suggest that there was some unnecessary delay under the previous government. I asked for the production of papers earlier, including the correspondence exchanged between the government of Canada and the international north Pacific fisheries commission on this subject. A return was made on July 5, 1963 and it is sessional paper No. 64A.

The file on this subject begins with a letter dated November 23, 1962 addressed to the then secretary of state for external affairs, the Hon. Howard C. Green, wherein the government is notified by the executive director of the international north Pacific fisheries commission that certain recommendations of the commission to change the annex to the treaty had been made. The correspondence has some rather wide gaps in it, and I will not attempt to put it all on the record because I do not think it is particularly relevant to this discussion. However, I would follow through to the fact that on April 4, 1963, a letter was addressed to Mr. Jackson, the executive director, from the under secretary of state for external affairs acknowledging the fact that they had been notified by the international commission of the acceptance by the government of the United States of the amendments to the annex to the convention.

Then there is a lapse of some period of time, the next letter on file being dated May 8, 1963, addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) from Mr. Jackson, the executive director of the commission. In the fourth paragraph of the letter Mr. Jackson has this to say:

> The commission has now been advised that the government of Canada has accepted the recommendations to amend the annex of the convention in respect of the stocks referred to in the letters cited above. Advice from the government of Canada to this effect was received by the commission on May 8, 1963. In accordance with the provisions of article VII, paragraph 2, of the convention I am herewith notifying each contracting party of the date of receipt of the Canadian notification of acceptance of the amendments to the annex of the convention.
> Since all three contracting parties have now signified their approval of the commission's recommendations of the amendment of the annex, it is considered amended from May 8, 1963 in accordance with the provisions of article VII, paragraph 1, of the convention.

In light of that particular letter, and in light of the fact that the effective date of the amendments to the treaty is May 8, 1963, I find the next document on file to be quite interesting. It is dated May 10, 1963 and is from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the executive director of the convention. This document is a telegram and it reads as follows:

> With further reference to your letters of November 26, 1962, January 25, 1963 and February 19, 1963, I am pleased to inform you that the commission's recommendation for the removal of the halibut stocks in the eastern Bering sea and the herring stocks west of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I am listening with some care to the line of argument the hon. member is adopting. In his previous remarks the hon. member indicated that he has knowledge of the narrow limits between which a debate of this kind is confined. He is now requesting the production of papers, and the only matter before this house at the moment is not the operation of the commission but whether or not the documents referred to should or should not be tabled. I recognize that in this chamber there has not been a long history of this particular type of procedure, but in every case since this rule was adopted on September 27, 1963 I think every Speaker has warned the house of the narrow limits of this debate. While I can understand that the hon. member would want to preface his remarks with some information, I would advise him that the real question before the house is whether or not the documents should be tabled. I would hope that he would keep within these limits as far as possible. I say this to the hon. member because I would not want him to range far afield and then this practice be used as a precedent for succeeding debates.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your concern in this connection. I stated at the outset that I would carefully try to avoid arguing the merits or demerits of the case. I am about to conclude my reference to documents which, in my opinion, are in fact the basis of my contention that this house should request the government to produce a cabinet minute, which I am willing to concede is not a usual request. It is because of the actual documents and the factual statements which I am attempting to put on the record that I feel I have a logical argument. If you will bear with me for another minute or two, Mr. Speaker, I think I can proceed immediately to relate what I am quoting to my request for the production of the documents. I feel these questions are very pertinent to my case. I realize that they are rather wordy because they go into the details, but I felt I should be careful in placing the exact text of these documents on the record so that there could be no question as to the accuracy of the arguments I am going to advance.

I think I had read the telegram from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the point where I had made it clear that he had notified the executive director of the commission of the acceptance by the government of Canada of these amendments to the annex to the treaty, as proposed by the commission. The rest of the telegram deals with the matter of an appointment to the commission to succeed the late Mr. G. R. Clark, and I need not quote that part of it.

The particular point which I think bolsters my argument that the government treated this matter very lightly is this. I am trying to bring home the fact that in the light of the letter and the telegram to which I have referred, according to the executive director the treaty amendment came into effect on May 8; yet the commission had no notification from the government of Canada, according to this file, until two days later, May 10. I think I could argue that that in itself is a rather strange state of affairs. I could also point out that the letter from the executive director dated May 13, which acknowledges receipt of the telegram from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, does throw light on this rather peculiar situation—at least, the situation strikes me as being peculiar. I say that because in the last paragraph of his letter he says:

> As we stated in our letter to you of May 8, we were informed orally of the decision of the Canadian government by the deputy minister of fisheries....For that reason the effective date of the amendment of the annex to the convention has been announced as May 8.

I do not know how this situation strikes other hon. members but I was rather shocked when I read through this file. I felt that here we had an international convention, which was ratified by act of this parliament, amended as a result of an oral communication from one of our civil servants. That, in my opinion, is not the proper way in which to conduct Canada's international business. I wish the Secretary of State for External Affairs were here this afternoon, because I feel this is really his responsibility. I should like to point out that under the terms of the north Pacific fisheries convention as ratified by the statute which appears as chaper 44 of the statutes of 1952-53, article V of the treaty reads:

> The annex attached hereto forms an integral part of this convention. All references to "convention" shall be understood as including the said annex either in its present terms or as amended in accordance with the provisions of article VII.

I confess I am no authority on these matters, but while it is legal and proper for the governor in council to agree to amendments to the annex without formal ratification by parliament being required, it does seem to me that when it comes to amending an annex which is an integral part of an international treaty between Canada and two other nations—a treaty which required ratification by this parliament—the government should at least have a responsibility for tabling an official document in this house so as to inform members that an international convention has been changed.

As far as I can find out, this has not been done. According to the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, no such document exists. I think this is particularly ironic because, as I understand the situation arising out of amendments to this treaty, certain consequential amendments affecting the halibut fishery regulations were involved, and these regulations were gazetted in the Canada Gazette. It seems strange to me that in connection with a relatively minor matter, the amending of certain halibut fishing regulations, the government should be required to record its actions in the Canada Gazette, although it is considered right and proper that the amending of a treaty can be done by a secret minute of the cabinet.

These are the reasons which have led me to feel that the only proper course for the government to take in these circumstances, in the absence of any other documentary evidence of the amending of this treaty, is to lay on the table of the house the cabinet minute referred to in my notice of motion for the production of papers. I do not think I wish to say anything more. As I have made clear, I do not consider myself to be an authority on international law and if a spokesman for the government can tell me why the course of action followed by the government is in line with normal constitutional practice I will be glad to listen to him. But since the ordinary practice is that acts of a public nature carried out by the governor in council must be gazetted in the Canada Gazette or laid on the table of the house, it does not seem right that the government should be able to amend a treaty without anyone in the house having official knowledge that such a thing has been done.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): The hon. member prefaced his remarks by making certain observations and I hope I shall be permitted to reply to them. In his motion, which has been transferred for debate, the hon. member asks:

> That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the cabinet minute or other official document which authorized the Secretary of State for External Affairs to notify the executive director, the international north Pacific fisheries commission, by telegram under date of May 10, 1963, that the commission's recommendations for the removal of the halibut stocks in the eastern Bering sea and the herring stocks west of the Queen Charlotte islands from the annex to the convention had been accepted by the government of Canada.

In opposing this motion I should like to deal briefly with the background, referred to by the hon. member, the north Pacific fisheries commission, and show that the government has acted under authority which had been granted to it by this parliament. The international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean was signed in Tokyo on May 9, 1952, by the Canadian representative pursuant to order in council 2282 dated April 17, 1952. The convention was tabled in the house on March 27, 1953. Implementing legislation was then brought before this chamber and approved on April 2, 1953. It appears as chapter 44 of the 1952-53 statutes. On June 12, 1953, the Canadian instrument of ratification was deposited with the Japanese government pursuant to order in council 1953/696, dated May 7, 1953.

Under the convention, Japan agreed to abstain from fishing salmon, halibut and herring of north American origin. The convention provides that after a five-year period, the north Pacific fisheries commission, established pursuant to the convention, will annually determine, on the basis of scientific evidence, whether these stocks of fish continue to qualify for abstention within the terms of the convention. This week, at this very moment, the convention is holding its tenth annual meeting in Vancouver.

As the house knows, the commission has so far made four recommendations with respect to the removal of stocks of fish from the abstention list. The first was made in 1959 when the commission recommended that herring off the coast of Alaska be removed from the list. The second was made in 1961 when the commission decided that herring off the coast of the mainland United States no longer qualified for abstention. Both these recommendations were approved by the three governments concerned and the annex to the convention was amended accordingly. As a result of an exhaustive study of the scientific evidence, the commission determined at its annual meeting in Seattle in 1962 that the stock of halibut in the eastern Bering sea and the stock of herring off the west coast of the Queen Charlotte islands no longer met the qualifications for continued abstention. It accordingly recommended to the three governments concerned that these stocks of fish be removed from the abstention annex of the convention.

Mr. Barnett: Would the minister permit a question? If I understood him correctly, he just said the authority was granted under the terms of chapter 44 of the revised statutes of that year. I wonder if he could be a little more specific. Just where and how, in this particular act, is that authority granted?

Mr. Robichaud: As will be seen at page 310 of the 1952-53 statutes, chapter 44, entitled An Act to implement the International Convention for the High Seas Fisheries of the North Pacific Ocean, section 4 reads as follows:

> The governor in council may make regulations for carrying out and giving effect to the provisions of the convention and any recommendations of the commission, and without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations—

Then the act specifies the regulations that can be made. The hon. member stated in the course of his remarks that no documents were produced by the government and that the only documents available were cabinet minutes. I stated in the house in reply to a question by the hon. member for Queens on May 28, 1963, as reported on page 352 of Hansard:

> The government has accepted the commission's recommendations and has advised the commission accordingly. It has also approved by order in council the amendment to the northern Pacific halibut fisheries regulations as recommended by the commission. The decision was taken on May 7 and the order in council was passed on May 23.

I have here a copy of the order in council which reads as follows:

> Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery Convention Act
> International Pacific Halibut Fishery Regulations
> P.C. 1963-772
> At the Government House at Ottawa
> Thursday, the 23rd day of May, 1963.
> His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Fisheries, pursuant to the provision of section 2 of article II of the convention between Canada and the United States of America for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific ocean and Bering sea, is pleased hereby to approve the annexed regulations made by the international Pacific halibut commission.

The hon. member made reference to a telegram which was sent by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) under date of May 10 stating—

Mr. Barnett: Before the minister proceeds to deal with that telegram, I wonder whether he would permit another question.

Mr. Robichaud: Certainly.

Mr. Barnett: He referred to an order in council which I understand was made under the terms of the act in respect of the northern Pacific halibut convention. I understand that what is involved in the question is the north Pacific fisheries convention. Arising out of section 4 of the act which he quoted and which as he said gives the governor in council the authority to make regulations in respect of the north Pacific fisheries convention, I should like to know where the regulations are in respect of the subject matter of my motion concerning the north Pacific fisheries commission. I am quite aware of the order in council about the halibut fishery.

Mr. Robichaud: In reply to the hon. member I wish to repeat what I have said before in the house. The only document available outside of the cabinet minutes is the order in council which amended the North Pacific Halibut Fishery Convention Act. As the hon. member well knows, this act is annexed to the treaty and this is where the amendment was made. The amendment was made to the regulations under the authority granted to the government which I have cited, chapter 44 of the statutes of 1952-53, section 4, which provides that the governor in council may make such regulations as are deemed advisable to carry out and give effect to the provisions of the convention and any recommendations of the commission. So it is clear that the government has acted under authority which was granted to it by parliament.

Mr. Barnett: Surely I did not hear the minister correctly. I understood him to say that the north Pacific halibut fishery convention is annexed to the treaty which is part of chapter 44 which ratified the north Pacific fisheries convention.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member put his question again so I can get it straight?

Mr. Barnett: My question is based on my understanding that the minister read from an order in council which was passed pursuant to authority given by the northern Pacific halibut fishery convention.

Mr. Robichaud: Right.

Mr. Barnett: I understand that is chapter 43 of the same volume of the statutes as the north Pacific fisheries convention. My question arises out of my understanding of what he said, namely that the northern Pacific halibut convention was annexed to or was a part of chapter 44. I suggest that the two things are separate and apart. By way of explanation may I say that in my remarks I indicated I knew that arising out of the amendment to the north Pacific fisheries convention an order in council had been passed amending the north Pacific halibut regulations, but I would suggest they are two entirely separate questions.

Mr. Robichaud: If the hon. member will read the north Pacific halibut convention, chapter 43, and the north Pacific fisheries convention, chapter 44, he will find that the matter referred to in his motion has to do with both acts. In the case of the recommendation referred to concerning halibut in the eastern Bering sea, which required implementation, I might state that this was done by amending the international Pacific halibut fishery regulations which are promulgated under the Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery Convention Act, chapter 43, to which he has referred. It may be I was wrong in stating that the order in council I referred to was passed under chapter 44. I find that it was passed under chapter 43 of the statutes of 1952-53. That is the one I referred to in my reply to the hon. member for Queens, as reported on page 352 of Hansard.

In connection with the production of cabinet minutes I think the hon. member is well aware that a decision of the house in that regard was taken on June 20, 1951. On that occasion the prime minister of the day referred to the oath of privy councillors and stated it would not be proper to establish precedents which would in any way depart from the constitutional tradition that matters treated, debated and resolved in the privy council cannot be published to any who are not of the privy council. That can be found on page 4346 of Hansard, June 20, 1951. May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being six o'clock it is my duty to inform the house that the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired. As the business to be considered at seven o'clock, pursuant to special order made on Thursday, October 17, 1963, will be the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, does the house agree now to go into committee of supply?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, vote No. 1. Shall this item carry?

1. Departmental administration, $1,973,500.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, there are a few matters to which I should like to direct a little special attention. We must not lose sight of the necessity and urgency for doing something about blind pensions. The minister has mentioned this, and I know she has some problems in working out a solution in conjunction with the provinces. However, I believe she has enough drive to bring it to a head and do something more for the benefit of blind people, as has been already done on old age security.

I also want to speak for a few minutes on the question of disability pensions. For far too long the definition of a disabled person has been much too strict. Actually this philosophy of a disabled person having to be in a wheelchair or lying in bed is ridiculous in this day and age. It should be related to his ability to have or to get any type of employment.

In this connection there is another point which we encounter in practice over and over again. Quite often a disabled person is a married man, and his wife goes out to work because the disability allowance is quite insufficient to keep the household. However, once she earns more than $1,980 a year, or $165 a month, she is in trouble. That is ridiculous, because quite often she has to pay carfare or drive a motorcar to get to her place of work. She has to buy food, clothes, pay for rent and fuel, and look after the furnishings in the house. It is ridiculous for officials to penalize people simply because they are showing thrift.

When I was home last week end a case was drawn to my attention of a mother who had two children going to high school. These two were over 16 years of age, and she had a third child coming into that age bracket. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I say to the minister of health that the promise of the Liberal party to continue family allowances as long as children are at school should be implemented at once. I think there is general agreement that they said they would extend it to the age of 18 years, and as a matter of fact the Minister of Justice stated in the house that the government had a plan, which he thought was a pretty thorough going one, and that it would be introduced in due course.

There is a little urgency about this in view of the fact that the cost of living has increased. It should be remembered that boys and girls are being kept longer at school not only upon the insistence of the parents and the department of education which exhorts the parents to keep them there, but also on the advice of the federal government which says the young people should continue at school to learn the necessary skills so that they will not be unemployed. Surely we cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to dwell for a little while on the question of the conference that is being held here next Monday. I know and appreciate that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has taken a very sympathetic attitude toward this matter, but I wonder whether she or the ordinary person realizes the great importance of this conference. I recall that when I went to medical school 35 years ago, cancer of the lung did not have to be considered at all and was not looked for. We were looking for tuberculosis and other things on the X-ray plates. When a radiologist looks at an X-ray plate today, he looks at it very carefully to see if there is any evidence of cancer. From 1899 to 1919, if my memory is correct about these years, in the University of Minnesota they reported only three cases of cancer of the lung. In the year 1919, at that same university hospital, they reported only one case. In the years 1949 to 1952 they reported over 264 cases. We must bear in mind in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that generally speaking very few cigarettes were smoked prior to the first great war. Since that war there has been a gradual step-up year by year in the number of cases of lung cancer which have occurred in the United States. The increase in the number of cases of cancer of the lung has been paralleled by the increase in the consumption of cigarettes, and in the year 1960 there were 37,000 people who died of cancer of the lung in the United States.

It is true that in proportion to men, not many women have died of cancer of the lung, but I hope this does not start the minister back on the road to destruction, because there has been a marked increase over the years in the number of women who have developed this disease. To demonstrate the seriousness of this situation I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that out of every 100 of these cases of lung cancer that are diagnosed, within five years 95 of them are dead, regardless of the type of treatment carried out. Therefore it follows that there is only one form of treatment, and that is prevention. When we look at the record and all the surveys that have been made, we realize that to all intents and purposes those who do not smoke do not contract cancer of the lung. I want to go a little further, Mr. Chairman, and say that we can consider a religious group, the Seventh Day Adventists, who do not smoke or drink, and we find that to all intents and purposes they never contract the disease of cancer of the lung.

I have illustrated that there is no cure for this disease, and in Canada today more people are dying of cancer of the lung—and this is leaving out coronary diseases and all the other things; and there are about double the number of deaths in the coronary field—from among those who smoke than is the case with non-smokers. Today more people are dying in Canada every year of cancer of the lung than from traffic accidents, bad as they are. Therefore the conclusion one must reach is that the cigarette plays a very definite part in causing cancer of the lung. I have emphasized to you, Mr. Chairman, that the only treatment for this disease is prevention. This prevention must go back to the boys and girls between the ages of 14 and 17 in our high schools today, because I think it has been fairly well proven over and over again that if a boy or girl has been smoking for two years, they have acquired the habit. To illustrate the seriousness of this problem I would point out that it is estimated that over 400 boys and girls start smoking cigarettes every day in Canada.

I know the minister is very well aware of most of these facts, but I want to impress upon her that to carry out a policy of prevention in this regard you must have the good will and the support of everybody across this nation. There is no question as to what the findings will be, because they have been proven over and over again; but to get that good will and support you must have the backing of the men and women across this country. You must have the support of the press, of members of parliament, and of all the people generally. So I ask the minister—and I know all the difficulties, and I know that if it were easily done she would have agreed to do it long ago—to very carefully consider obtaining a larger room, if it is at all possible, so that the press, the members of this house and the Senate, and other interested people may come into this meeting and hear first hand the story of tobacco, cigarette smoking and cancer of the lung. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to give this question most careful consideration.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if I can raise this debate to a scale that is a little less depressing than that achieved by the hon. member who has just spoken. I do not mean that I disagree with what he said, but there are other things that we must consider. I would like to see if I can imbue the Minister of National Health and Welfare with some common sense thinking about a national health plan. Realizing that the Liberals have been promising this since 1919, I am going to try to give them some reasons for implementing it now.

I like to feel that in our modern society the blessings of good health and the advantages of many new discoveries and developments are not only for those who can financially afford them. I like to feel that when a new discovery comes about, it will be available to anyone who is in need of it and not just to anyone who can afford it. The development of a national health plan is so that this may come about. Popularly, Mr. Chairman, today this is known as medicare. It has been said that everyone is adequately cared for by our present system. I do not even consider this is a system, much less that it is adequate. I admit that a great many people are cared for in one way or another, but certainly not properly, by present standards. It is my considered opinion that there is a large group of people who are medically indigent. I am not referring to those people who are now receiving charity, but those whose budgets do not allow them to receive adequate care and, in many instances, no care at all. These people will let things go until they reach serious proportions, rather than run up a medical bill. These same people, when they do come to the office, are often inadequately treated either because they do not get the required prescription, for financial reasons, or the doctor substitutes something cheaper than the best treatment, something they can afford to buy.

These are the ways in which I consider that people receive inadequate care. We cannot change the ways of people who are incapable of budgeting for an illness. I do not believe that people are asking for charity, nor do I believe in the degradation that a person must suffer in order to receive some sort of medical care in the event of illness. There are some who would forgo medical treatment rather than receive it under these circumstances. A properly planned comprehensive national health plan would remove this barrier of having to receive charity in order to obtain medical care because everyone would be paying for this in accordance with his ability to pay and consequently would be financially responsible. To this extent, the stigma of charity would no longer exist. As a practising doctor, I feel an important barrier would be removed. Our medical freedom to treat patients is limited by financial considerations which are, medically speaking, entirely irrelevant.

Another financial barrier is that of indebtedness of the patient to the doctor. It provides a tremendous psychological barrier between doctor and patient. Certainly, a doctor's judgment is hampered by the realism of the debt that exists between them. When I refer to a national health plan, I am referring to an all-inclusive completely comprehensive national medical insurance plan. This is one that not only covers doctors' services but includes dental care, medication, eye glasses and appliances. Anything less than this in a national plan is inadequate. Private insurance plans are never this comprehensive. None of them include dentistry and only a few of them include partial drug payments. All of them are covered with exclusion riders, waiting periods, exceptions, omissions and fine print. It often takes a lawyer to interpret them and one often feels that to collect from them is committing a felony.

I cannot see how a national plan would cause an increase in expenses. Medical care is now costing X number of dollars, and the only increase would be the cost of administration and the proper care of those inadequately cared for now. Part of the cost of administration would be offset by the removal of profits now enjoyed by the private insurance companies In other words, a national insurance plan would simply level expenses, as does any insurance plan.

I turn now to the opposition to medicare. The main opposition to medicare is purported to be the doctors. The doctors have stated that the people would abuse the plan. In my opinion, this only proves that people are being inadequately treated now because they do not want to burden themselves with financial expenses they cannot afford. Must we use financial inadequacy as a deterrent to medical care? Doctors are represented as being dedicated people, dedicated to the care of others, and yet all their arguments against medicare have to do with their own, private feelings. I should like to quote from an article in the Globe and Mail of May 21, 1963. This is a short joke which reads as follows:

> Fred: What did your doctor tell you?
> Al: He told me to cut down on my smoking, try to walk a mile a day, and to be sure to write a letter to my member of parliament against medicare.

Doctors belong to many associations such as the Ontario Medical Association, the Canadian Medical Association, and their colleges of physicians and surgeons in the various provinces who are their licensing bodies. These bodies lay down the rules and laws that govern the ethics, behaviour and economics of the medical profession. Doctors who do believe in a government sponsored compulsory medical health plan are afraid to go against this norm that is set down by the association to which they belong, and say what they truly believe. Is this the true purpose of an elected body that is supposed to portray the wishes of all its members?

I have seen letters from doctors in Saskatchewan, and after reading them I was actually ashamed to admit I was a member of this profession. Am I idealistic when I state that I always thought doctors belonged to a profession that served sick people and that this was their prime function? I realize that economic problems and factors are important and that doctors must live, but must they appear to be interested in the welfare of people and yet, at a time of crisis, show a selfish interest in their own welfare? Medicare eliminates a doctor's economic problems. I do not believe the associations that represent the medical profession truly express the feelings of the members, but rather their own feelings. The impression that is given to the public is that these bodies do truly express all the doctors' views, and I feel that this is a false impression. It is not my intention to deprecate the medical profession, especially since I am a member myself, but I do feel that the misrepresentation should be known.

There would be no harm in this if it did not involve the health of the working man and his family. Health is a necessity for making a living and the responsibility for this lies with the medical profession. These doctors are hard working and most are truly devoted to their duties, but in many instances are misrepresented by their own elected governing bodies. Is it fear of these bodies that prevents us having a properly run, government sponsored all-inclusive medical health plan? There are no private plans that are adequate, as was proven by work done in Hamilton at the Steel Company of Canada. The Ontario Medical Association is stating that up to 70 per cent of the people have adequate medical care. This is truly deceptive because only 47.2 per cent of people have some form of health insurance. It now only remains to show the inadequacy of present plans.

P.S.I. is considered to be the best of the private plans, and it covers 18 per cent of the population. An exhaustive survey was conducted in Hamilton by the department of political economy of the University of Toronto with the help of the steelworkers union. By comparing P.S.I. with a profit-making plan, P.S.I. was found to be the best, and yet P.S.I. paid only 23.5 per cent of the average total health costs of the families who subscribed to it. The people who have P.S.I. are better off than others who have one of many profit-making plans that cover only 12.9 per cent of the average family's total health cost. These plans are riddled with escape hatches for the insurance companies in the event they are paying out too much to any one person. These policies may be cancelled at the whim of the company by refunding premiums, or exclusion riders may be attached after an illness in order to exclude the system involved or any future diseases which may develop. What kind of protection is this for anyone? What kind of protection is this for a man who must earn a living for himself and his whole family? Surely, his illnesses are not self-inflicted so that he must be punished for them and then expected to go through the degradation of receiving charity.

Only 18 per cent of all Canadians enjoy the best kind of private plan available, and even these plans pay less than one quarter of the family's total annual health cost. The reason for this low figure is that none of them include dental care, eye glasses, appliances or drugs. The statistics are rather shattering when one listens to the propaganda of the Ontario Medical Association, the Canadian Medical Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, who are the enemies of any national health scheme. These people tell us that it is a person's individual right to choose his own plan. Really, he has no choice except to select an inadequate private plan, to join the army or be admitted to a mental home, if he wishes to receive adequate care.

If the representative bodies of the medical profession can come up with a privately administered plan that gives the kind of coverage the British people enjoy, well and good. If they cannot, then we should get on with the business of a government sponsored compulsory health plan. You cannot manipulate statistics forever. Let the doctors and their associations either produce or keep the status quo, but let them stop hoodwinking the public. People are afraid they will not be able to choose their own doctor under a national health plan. This is not so. Actually, conditions would be the same as they are now without the financial barriers between doctor and patient. Doctors would be paid for services rendered only, thereby maintaining the doctor's incentive to treat his patient. This fear or ignorance, and it must be realized that ignorance produces fear, prompted the Ontario Medical Association to produce a small booklet entitled, "Doctor, What About Medicare?" This booklet was circulated to every doctor in Ontario and is full of propaganda against government sponsored plans. Again, I ask, is this truly the feeling of the medical profession? This book was available at a slight cost for putting into doctors' waiting rooms for distribution to patients, so that this propaganda would spread even farther.

I should like to quote also from an editorial in the Star Weekly of a few months ago. This editorial deals with the fear the doctors have about a government medical insurance plan. If the doctor's fear is that he does not want a layman dictating treatment for his patient, or want anyone to tell him the type of drug a patient needs, or the number of X-ray plates it is necessary to take, it is well realized that these are medical decisions and can only be made by qualified personnel. This editorial is summed up in this manner:

> What Canadians want is a system that will provide all of them, rich and poor, with the medical care they request. They do not want to bilk the doctors. They merely want to make sure that every citizen gets medical attention when he needs it. not as a matter of charity, but as a matter of right. This, we think, is a principle with which most doctors would agree.

I should now like to go into the success which other countries have enjoyed in this direction. We happen to be distinctive in that with the United States we are the only two countries in the world which have no government sponsored medical health plan. Great Britain has put in some of the most successful government sponsored health plans at a time of Great Britain's greatest austerity. It was, of course, the British Labour party that did this, at a time when it seemed almost impossible. Since 1953 Great Britain has had a Tory government, and yet no attempt has been made to remove this plan. As a matter of fact, recently the British Tory government instituted methods of improving some of the parts of the system.

A few months ago there was a panel consisting of general practitioners, specialists, and politicians who came over from Great Britain to the United States, and this panel was heard and seen over a nation-wide television network. The general concensus of all the panel was a complete satisfaction with their system, and the only thing they feared was the misrepresentation which the press have given us over here.

There are only two countries left in the world today that do not have some form of government medical plan—Canada and the United States. The ability of a country to provide these necessities to everyone is a reflection of the political and cultural status of a country. Our status cannot remain one of the status quo; we must advance and we must do so in a completely democratic way.

It has also been said that the quality of medicine would be lowered because of the increase in quantity. Even this is not so, as evidenced by a study on the Norwegian health plan. Two of the most universally accepted measurements of the merits of a given medical system are the infant mortality rates and the life expectancy at birth. The infant mortality rate in Norway is 20.5 per thousand births and in the United States it is 26.4. Norway ranks fourth in the world and the U.S. ninth. In the life expectancy figures Norway ranks best in the world with 71 years for men as against 66 for men in the U.S. Medical education in Norway is free, thereby producing opportunity for everyone with ability. The figures just given are not because there are more doctors per capita. In 1953 Norway had one physician for every 900 population, whereas the U.S. had one for every 760 population.

Other parties in Canada have made rather futile attempts to establish provincial health plans. The only one that has been established successfully and which is operating successfully at the moment is in Saskatchewan, where they have a partial medical health plan; they have provided doctors' care. Everyone knows there was a rather bitter battle over this scheme at the time of its inception, but even those doctors who were so stubborn and obstinate at that time are today of different mind. There was an article in last night's Ottawa Journal headed: "Battle lines on medicare blurring in Saskatchewan". I should like to read a small part of this article:

> The battle lines drawn by Saskatchewan doctors and the C.C.F. government over the compulsory medical care insurance plan put into operation 16 months ago are blurring.
> The tempered attitude of doctors, who once said they were unalterably opposed to compulsory medical care insurance in any form, is reflected in comments of Dr. E. W. Barootes of Regina, vice president of the Saskatchewan college of physicians and surgeons, who last year was an outspoken critic of the socialist government's plan.
> "The profession hopes that these differences of view that exist can be ironed out and modifications made so that the plan will be acceptable," he said in an interview. "There are some pretty deep philosophical differences but we don't want to pick a quarrel".

I think that is a pretty good statement, coming from a doctor who opposed the plan so adamantly only a year and a half ago. The editorial continues:

> Provincial health minister A. E. Blakeney says the possibility of changes in the plan is not excluded by the government.
> "It is the government's view that the plan is operating successfully and will continue to operate successfully. It is obtaining a wide measure of public support and is beginning to gain acceptance among the medical profession," Mr. Blakeney said.

They also mention this, although it happened about two months ago:

> In September, the government announced a 50 per cent reduction in one of the four levies that finance the $20,000,000 a year plan. Personal premiums were reduced from $24 a year to $12 for families and from $12 to $6 for individuals.

So as I say, despite objections at the time of its conception this plan is proving to be one of the most successful yet advanced. It makes me proud to be a member of the political party which was capable of putting forward the first successful plan on the North American continent.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to participate in the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I well recognize that this department could be one of the most important departments of government. Throughout the years I have been very interested in the welfare and health of our senior citizens and youth, and for that reason my remarks will be confined to this subject.

First may I dwell on the welfare and health of our senior citizens, as we well realize that these people, along with the pioneers of our nation, have established and upheld many fine traditions in this great country of ours. When listening to the minister's speech on July 18, 1963 respecting the Canada pension plan, my first disappointment was that the government's promise during the last election of $75 a month to our senior citizens who meet the residence requirements of the old age security act would not come into effect at once. I can assure you that when talking to these senior citizens, such a delay was a real disappointment. With the higher cost of living they would have to be content to do without most of the necessities of life. As a director of Waterloo county's apartments for elderly persons, which are sponsored by the Royal Canadian Legion, branch No. 50, Kitchener, I well realize the necessity of such an increase. Our constant interest in and consideration of their welfare makes them feel that they are wanted citizens and not just a burden on mankind. Many of these people are first war veterans who, owing to their disabilities, have not been able to prepare for the future and are therefore unable to compete with other citizens who have the normal advantages. Such an increase, which should have been forthcoming some time ago, will give them greater security and an independent feeling in life.

Another situation we might well consider at this time is where a couple may be in receipt of old age pension, and death strikes leaving a burden on the survivor for debts incurred. Perhaps such pension of the deceased might be extended for a certain period to help the survivor to defray such expenses.

When speaking to our senior citizens I found much discontent over the price of drugs and medical prescriptions which generally appear too high for pensioners, especially those of low income. Surely some system could be devised where these necessities could be made available free to those below income tax level. In bringing forward this raise we also have an obligation to those citizens who are receiving old age assistance, blind and disabled allowances. Their future lives are in our hands. Humanitarian service extended to these people should be sincere and of most importance.

As I previously mentioned in this house on June 24, 1961 it is desirable that we give further consideration to those of our citizens reaching the retiring age of 65 years. These folk in many cases have not had the opportunity of providing for their future through superannuation or pension plans. Many of these people are on the unemployment list or were unable to have retirement postponed, and therefore are in financial difficulty at an age when they should be able to have some security other than just owning their own homes and a few belongings. It is an acknowledged fact that these citizens have played a prominent part in developing the economy of our country. I am sure that we, as hon. members of the house, along with the Department of National Health and Welfare, can devise some system to look after their financial needs at the retiring age.

Owing to improvements in medical care and otherwise, we have a greater population of people in the age group 70 or over, as well as those in the 65 to 70 year age group. These circumstances make our obligations much greater. Many fine improvements have been made in the Old Age Pensions Act. The previous government made the most beneficial improvement when they lowered the residence requirement from 20 to 10 years in regard to old age pensions. Another splendid move was that recipients are now permitted to take their pensions with them when leaving Canada on a permanent basis. I am sure that our senior citizens living outside of Canada or contemplating doing so for various reasons, are appreciative of such legislation.

My second thought concerns the fine youth of our country, but before expressing my observations on fitness and amateur sports, may I suggest that we who are parents should take a good look at our daily obligations with regard to assistance and guidance extended to them in their responsibilities as future citizens of Canada. Like all proud parents, we expect a lot of our younger folk, and we must do so if our young country is to fulfil its ambitions. However, we must not forget that they will only be able to shoulder their responsibilities in a manner consistent with the teachings and with the example which they will have received from us. To my mind, however, education in such a way is not related only to the three R's. It covers a much wider field. For one thing, good citizenship is required of all the individuals making up a nation, if that nation is to be strong and healthy. I am sure hon. members will agree with me that such education means developing in our children a strong sense of responsibility as individuals. But responsibility means work, and unfortunately too many of us have the natural tendency to leave it to the other fellow to do the job. The pass-the-buck or let-George-do-it policy has never been known to lead to great achievements. So, as I said before, let us teach by setting a good example first, and then by giving young people plenty of opportunities to assume responsibilities. They will make mistakes, as we have done, but they will learn, and in the process they will realize that they too have an important role to play in the aspirations of our nation.

With regard to fitness and amateur sports, I was interested in the remarks made by the Royal Canadian Legion's "Coaching Review" of June 1963, which had this to say:

> A fresh mind is quickening the pulse of Canadian amateur sport these days, giving it new initiative, leading, eventually to its expansion and development in the light of current needs and standards.

As part of that initiative the Royal Canadian Legion has launched its sports training program, with particular emphasis on improving the coaching and performance of track and field athletics. For some years the Royal Canadian Legion of Waterloo, Ontario has made a great success of promoting the eastern Canada track and field events, along with events in other places across Canada, and some time ago I had the great pleasure of taking part in the opening of the Kitchener public schools track and field event where 6,000 children were in attendance and over 1,000 competitors took part. Much credit is due to this committee for its outstanding success. Such events mean healthier boys and girls. Members of the Legion, like other sports-minded citizens, believe that track and field, and indeed, all sports, should be enjoyed at the bottom level as well as the top level.

For years the Royal Canadian Legion has made tremendous contributions to the welfare of our youth in various ways, and recently acquired one of the world's greatest coaches, Mr. Geoffrey Dyson of England, to carry out their sports training program. I had the pleasure, last year, of attending this program in Guelph, Ontario, and recently I attended the clinic sponsored by the Kitchener recreational council at which time this gentleman was in charge and later was guest speaker at the luncheon. To hear this man and to see him in action is a real treat, and inspired over 100 men attending this event. No doubt, such action by the Legion in securing the services of such a distinguished gentleman can be attributed in no small way to the $5 million fitness and amateur sports program brought forward by the previous government and passed by parliament and the other place. I sincerely believe that the national advisory council, made up of outstanding sportsmen and representatives of every province, along with the superb coaching ability of Mr. Dyson, and men of similar ability will in five years or so put Canada in its rightful place in world sports activities, and more important, will develop generation after generation of young Canadians with healthy bodies and healthy minds.

I am pleased to see the minister take an interest in this sports effort, and I hope her future assistance may continue so that this fine program will expand to the point where our athletes may compete with the best in the world, and more important, where every Canadian youth may take part in order to develop a greater standard of fitness and a wider knowledge of sportsmanship, fellowship and friendship. I spoke a moment ago of Mr. Dyson. This great coach, who played a major role in developing in England a coaching elite second to no other country, and whose presence will have a profound beneficial effect upon Canadian coaches and athletes, mentioned that communities are interested in fitness for different reasons—such as health, military efficiency, national regeneration, racial and personal self-esteem, social accomplishment, character building and aiding mental activity. No doubt all these reasons have been and are being presented in support of programs of physical activity.

Speaking of military efficiency, it is obvious that governments which use armed force as an instrument of foreign policy cannot allow fitness standards to fall beneath a certain level. Pushbutton warfare has certainly not eliminated the need of physically fit troops, and military standards are still higher than civilian standards. In some countries the fall in fitness reached a critical point. For example, in the 1959 Berlin crisis, the United States government had to reject 428 men out of every 1,000 called up, for lack of physical efficiency. This was almost double the rate of the second world war. It is well known that fitness has both political and international implications. Politically, national fitness and sports campaigns can help weld nations together, particularly the United States, Canada and other comparatively young countries where people have come together from different backgrounds. This is very noticeable in my riding of Waterloo North where we have one of the largest cosmopolitan centres in Canada. This district has turned out some of the finest hockey players, golfers, football players, etc., and is certainly interested in fitness and amateur sports.

The former minister of national health and welfare, speaking in 1962, mentioned a growing spirit of nationhood. We find many countries in the world bringing forward huge expenditures for sports and fitness. France is one of these, and her aim is to check the flow of youth from country to town. Communist countries in particular have long recognized the political importance of sporting success. This is also true in England where in 1954, the British foreign office sent Roger Bannister to the United States immediately after his first four-minute mile.

We realize that today the best performers in sport are new ambassadors in a political sense, particularly with regard to sport, for sport is international and inter-racial. We realize that sports can also be used as an outlet for the natural tendency and desire, so deep in human nature, to prove superiority, but we must remember that superiority can be won at too high a price.

Having followed the program of fitness and amateur sport since its inception, I want to congratulate the former minister of national health and welfare, his staff and the members of the national advisory council for the splendid efforts accomplished in these few short years. I realize that many Canadians expected this program to produce wonders in a very short time and I might tell the minister that I am sure many people may well think it should do the same in the next few years, but it is going to take ten or 12 years to bring the program up to the mark. Let us work together so that the program may achieve the desired success.

As we know, many grants have been made to deserving organizations. However, if the federal government is going to assist the great majority of our youth in Canada with regard to fitness and amateur sport, and if the opportunity for gifted athletes is to be increased, these things cannot be done merely by grants to national agencies interested in national and international sports competition. The framework through which better coaching as well as fitness can be encouraged by the federal government will depend upon provincial and municipal programs as well as the contributions of sports bodies. This is of the utmost importance.

Under such a program we need the co-operation of provincial and municipal departments of health, education, welfare, municipal affairs and others and through provincial governments we need the co-operation of municipal recreation departments such as we have at the present time in my constituency of Waterloo North where such co-operation has developed a combination of coaching and training to strengthen and extend fitness and sports programs for all our young people, which I hope will be exemplified in every part of Canada.

In my speech on September 22, 1961, I suggested that our three realms of activity could be:

1. The provision of sports facilities, adequate playing fields, stadia, swimming pools, gymnasiums, tennis courts, and other training and competitive areas. These facilities would mean fitness for our youth.

2. The provision of competent coaches, something that is invaluable to our youth.

3. Direct financial aid to national organizations and teams representing Canada in international events.

The Legion has made a move in the right direction in the provision of coaches with their appointment of Mr. Dyson. The national advisory council, through the former minister of national health and welfare, has provided direct financial assistance to many worthwhile national organizations. Such a move has proven its worth, and from time to time I hope more grants will be made to associations which in turn will help their affiliates. I commend the minister for her recent grant to the Royal Canadian Legion and also to Father Bauer and his team from British Columbia, because it is of interest to me, as Father Bauer was born in my riding.

It has been suggested by well known sportsmen that at the present time we lack proper sports facilities such as playing fields, stadia, etc. Our future aim should be to improve such facilities so that our coaches in all sports will have modern buildings and playing fields strategically located in every province, where each province will have the opportunity of sharing in the cost of same.

For our physical fitness program many auditoriums could be used in our universities, colleges, schools, Y.M.C.A.'s, churches, etc..

These are some of my suggestions and thoughts, Mr. Speaker, with respect to a fitness and amateur sports program. I sincerely hope that the minister, along with her staff and the advisory council, will continue the splendid work undertaken by the former minister and those who assisted him. In this way we can look forward to a brighter future in fitness and amateur sports in Canada. As previously mentioned, we can put Canada in its rightful place in world sports activities and, more important, develop generation after generation of young Canadians with healthy bodies and healthy minds and a true understanding of sportsmanship, fellowship and friendship.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, I should like, through you, to extend my congratulations to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) for having been entrusted with such an interesting department. I hope that she will enjoy good health and have the courage to overcome the criticisms that are inevitably directed to the incumbent of an office entailing so many responsibilities.

I note that during the discussion of the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, there is a great deal of talk about health insurance and that many members like to say over and over again that we should now have a health insurance plan, since this idea was advocated as early as 1919 in the program of the Liberal party. In this connection, I hope that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) will be able to follow me and to understand the situation—

Mr. Gregoire: I am not a follower.

Mr. Habel: He has just replied that he is not a follower. I know that he is not a follower, but I think that he would sometimes profit by following good ideas rather than ignoring them so often.

As for health insurance, we should take into account the fact that the Liberal government had advocated a hospital insurance plan and that during the years which followed, many difficulties had to be overcome with the provinces as well as with the hospitals throughout Canada.

One may think that such plans can be put into effect overnight but with due reflection, we realize that it is better to take all necessary steps and understand the situation before carrying out such plans.

Mr. Gregoire: Since 1919, that makes 44 years.

Mr. Habel: If the hon. member for Lapointe wants to be a bit patient, I intend to go back to 1919 and show him that, as opposed to certain members, who have their rights as I have mine, I chose to remain in the Liberal party rather than try to form a new one which would never get anywhere.

Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with the problems we have been up against in trying to set up a hospital insurance scheme. First, there was the matter of hospital beds, then the agreement to be reached with the provinces, not to mention the number of nurses. We must realize that the hospital accommodation necessary to meet a situation such as the one created by the acceptance of a hospital insurance scheme required some preparation.

I can say, without running any risk, that the former minister of national health and welfare, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, found a way, in 1945, to get the cabinet to agree to a general plan to expedite payment of the grant to the provinces and hospitals that wanted to expand in order to be ready for the day when the hospital insurance scheme would be implemented.

For the information of the hon. member for Lapointe, I will point out that it was a five-year plan. In 1950, the plan was renewed.

Several hospitals in nine provinces took advantage of it and increased their facilities to be able to cope with the hospital insurance scheme.

Mr. Chairman, I should say in passing that in 1945—I was at that time a member of the provincial legislature—during the election campaign preceding the provincial election in Ontario, our leader advocated an insurance program. I myself campaigned in favour of an insurance plan with a nominal rate for each family.

However, the Conservative party in office at that time in Ontario opposed such a plan.

I do not blame them, and I do not say that they did wrong. The Conservative party was not ready yet to accept the idea of health insurance and throughout its election campaign it fought against the program advocated by the Liberal party.

Since the Conservative party had more members elected, it remained in power, of course, and did not establish any health insurance plan.

Therefore, from that year until 1957, the province of Ontario still refused to accept hospital insurance. It is only in 1957 that this province finally agreed to a hospital insurance plan. This goes to show, Mr. Chairman—I shall perhaps repeat myself in order to be better understood—that it might be argued that such things can be accomplished overnight but, all the same, they require years of preparation, because the government must take into account the expenses incurred through the establishment of those plans.

That is why I feel at ease to declare that those who readily repeat that the health insurance plan was part of the 1929 Liberal platform, forget to mention what the Liberal party has done—

Mr. Gregoire: War and taxes.

Mr. Habel: —while it was in power to prepare the country to put such plans into effect.

I just heard one of the members opposite saying "war".

Mr. Gregoire: And taxes.

Mr. Habel: The war, hon. member, was started by Hitler, the man who is admired by your leader, and not by the Canadian government.

Mr. Gregoire: I am speaking of taxes.

Mr. Habel: I can assure you of that.

Mr. Chairman, since 1927 the Liberal government managed to insert in the statutes of this country the pension with means test for needy people aged 70 and over. In 1940—I may be told that it is not health legislation—but it certainly has some effect on public health—in 1940, as I said, the Liberal party enacted unemployment insurance. In 1944, family allowances were introduced. In 1945, there was the first phase of the national health scheme subsidizing hospitals desirous of enlarging their premises, in order to be ready for the day when the provinces would accept hospitalization insurance.

In 1950, came the second stage; the department of national health offered a program of grants to any hospital willing to avail itself of it.

In 1951, the Liberal government introduced the old age security pension without means test, for anyone having reached the age of 70 and over.

In 1951, a pension with means test was granted to needy people in the 65 to 70 age bracket.

In 1951, there was the pension for the blind.

In 1954, we had the pension for disabled persons.

In 1956—and there is another thing which you might say is not directly connected with health insurance or with the Department of National Health, but which certainly has some effect on the health of the unemployed—there was the contribution of 50 per cent to the provinces to assist unemployed people who were not protected by unemployment insurance.

In 1957, we had the hospitalization insurance act which was passed and entered into the statutes of this country though I admit, that it was later enacted by the government elected in June.

Now, we must keep in mind, Mr. Chairman, that when the pensions act was introduced, it only provided for $20 a month. Under the following Liberal governments, and keeping pace with this country's development, as well as with the needs of the beneficiaries, those pensions were gradually increased to $46 per month.

I shall give credit to the Conservative government for having granted two consecutive increases; but—and this was quite remarkable—always on the eve of some election.

As far as we are concerned, we just granted another $10 increase—

Mr. Pigeon: But we do not tax people.

Mr. Habel: Immediately after the election, we granted another increase of $10.

Mr. Pigeon: Ours were granted without taxation.

Mr. Habel: As far as family allowances are concerned, Mr. Chairman, may I point out that in order to get the act adopted by this house, the then prime minister, probably after having consulted the members of his cabinet, had decided to grant these allowances only up to the seventh child. In that way, he got the House of Commons to pass the act. Later, when the usefulness of the family allowances was well established, the same government brought about the necessary changes, in order to give to the parents family allowances for every one of their children, whatever their number. This proves once more that in that field, things must be brought about progressively, when the time is ripe for their general acceptance.

Mr. Gregoire: Slowly.

Mr. Habel: Slowly but surely, which is much more than anything you could do.

However, Mr. Chairman, that is why I feel that the day is not too distant when in the field of family allowances, the government will see fit to extend them to children who are at school, at least up to the age of 18, or even beyond.

As for the amount of the allowances, I believe that a readjustment would be in order.

Mr. Gregoire: That is very good.

Mr. Habel: But that adjustment must take into consideration the economic situation of Canada, and not the political fancies of parties without real responsibilities to shoulder.

Mr. Gregoire: As for us, we are fully aware of the true needs of the country.

Mr. Habel: I am amused by the "buzz, buzz, buzzing" of my hon. friends opposite. This brings me back in thought to the time when I was working on the farm, was cutting grain or hay with a sickle; I had to be very careful not to get stung by bees—

Mr. Gregoire: Or rather by "Habelles".

Mr. Habel: By bees which buzz in our ears, just as our hon. friends opposite.

Mr. Latulippe: You did not have today's equipment.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, I am told that we were not well equipped, that times have changed. Most certainly they have changed; at the time I am speaking about, the father of the hon. friend who has just interrupted me also worked on a farm, with equipment similar to mine. In my youth, however, people were not up to their necks in business, as my hon. friend is today.

Today, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make reference to the pensions for disabled persons. I am of those who believe that the regulations under which a person is judged eligible for the pension for disabled persons should be considered seriously by the provincial governments in order to remedy the present situation that a person has to be practically or completely helpless to fulfil the requirements.

For instance, I have in mind the case of epileptics. It is also recognized that some other ailments represent a continuous danger for the employer and the employee. But those people have a right to live like anybody else and, indeed, it is enough to be affected by an ailment or a handicap without also being deprived of the benefits of the disabled persons pensions act.

Therefore, I urge the minister to take advantage of the conference soon to be held to conclude an agreement with the provinces so that those requirements may be mitigated and so that the granting of pensions under the Disabled Persons Act for those people who cannot work but who certainly have a right to live may be facilitated.

Before concluding, Mr. Chairman, I hope that this government will find a way to correct the situation I just mentioned in order to mitigate the requirements in regard to the disabled persons pensions. I am also convinced that this government will find a way, in due time, to extend family allowances to the age of 18, if not further, in the case of children still going to school and, providing the economy of the country permits, to give back to family allowances the purpose for which they were set up in 1945 by a Liberal government.

Mr. Willoughby: Mr. Chairman, I know we are all anxious to pass these estimates this evening if at all possible, and I can promise at the outset that I am not going to take up very much time in what I have to say tonight. I do wish, however, to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister on her appointment. While she may not have the most spectacular portfolio in the cabinet, or may not be dealing in astronomical figures which add up to billion dollar deficits, or may not be dealing with fantastic nuclear weapons or intercontinental missiles, she is dealing with the health of every man, every woman and every child in this country, and in my opinion she has one of the most remarkable portfolios in the cabinet. In addition to that, I must not overlook the fact that she is dealing with the finest profession in the world, the medical profession. I have every confidence that with her personality and great propensity for the truth she will not only carry on the work of this department but will add to and advance the great work it has carried out in the past and in recent years.

There have been great developments in this department in recent years, but we must realize that it also has problems. There are big problems in the department; there are big financial problems and there will be greater financial problems. The outlay of the department does not reap any obvious dividends in financial returns, but it results in dividends in the health, happiness and welfare of the people of our country. These dividends cannot be estimated in simple financial returns. There is the problem of great scientific developments, which must be given careful consideration in every way by the department. This is no time for smugness because of the fact that this department has operated so well; and I hope and am sure that it will continue to operate well in the future. This is the time for us to look for greater progress and greater developments in this wonderful department.

As we all know, Mr. Chairman, there are two definite aspects of this department. There is the welfare department and there is the health department. It is difficult to know just where one stops and the other begins because they are so completely in the same field, that of the welfare of our people. I will not spend much time dealing with the department of welfare because it has been adequately dealt with by other speakers. However, I do want to say that in general I endorse all the welfare programs that are carried on at the present time, and I know there will be more that I will be able to endorse in the future. I recognize, however—as I think everyone in this house recognizes—that there are still many deficiencies in the department of welfare; there are many abuses of the privileges offered by this department. We must also recognize the fact that there must be improvements and adjustments as far as possible to overcome some of these deficiencies.

In regard to the health aspect of the department, Mr. Chairman, I know the question of hospital insurance was adequately dealt with by the previous government. This program was in operation for many years in at least two provinces before the present federal government saw fit to introduce it on a national scale. I congratulate the previous government for introducing this scheme, which I know has been of great benefit to the provinces in the institution of hospital programs throughout Canada. Hospital care is, without question, a most demanding field. I wish to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that with advancing treatments and methods the need for hospital subsidization in the future will increase, and increase rapidly. I see no hope of avoiding increasing expenditure in the field of hospital care. Scientific developments, advanced treatments and every field of medicine have meant that hospital treatment is becoming the only efficient treatment, and home care is rapidly becoming less and less. This trend will continue. The patient is recovering much more quickly because he is receiving better treatment, and I think it should also be emphasized that in hospital the patient develops a psychological attitude that is a wonderful asset in his treatment and recovery. This attitude results from the fact that patients do not face the fear of a large hospital bill at the end of their treatment. In the field of health we face the problem of an increase in life expectancy. I think the minister should consider very seriously this increase in life expectancy. This has resulted from better sanitation, better preventive medicine and better medical care. I have not the figures before me but I think I am giving a conservative estimate when I say that in the last generation our life expectancy has increased by about ten years. This means that we are entering the field of geriatrics, and the Department of National Health and Welfare will be faced with the problem of providing increased subsidies for the treatment of the aged. We must have more care for those who will be confined to homes for the aged. We must have increased subsidies for those who are going to be confined to nursing homes. At the present time I think that the subsidy provided for nursing homes by both the provincial and federal governments is much too low.

Now, what can we expect in the future, Mr. Chairman? I know the question of health insurance has been mentioned briefly here tonight. During the last election campaign this government promised that we would have an insurance plan as soon as they took office. However, I noticed this item was lacking from the speech from the throne. I realize this program is not something one should rush into as the government has rushed into some of the ill-conceived programs presented this session. I hope that this measure will receive considerable study before anything further is advanced.

I should like to try to dispel right here, once and for all, the idea that the so-called orthodox medical men, to whom reference has been made this evening, are against such a program. We accept the principle that health insurance is a good thing for the country and a good thing for the people, if it is a proper health plan. Now, what do we mean by a health insurance scheme? I know that in so far as the people of British Columbia are concerned, about 80 per cent are covered by a satisfactory private health scheme. Then, there are the people who are on social welfare who are covered; but there are about 20 per cent who have no coverage. This is the group that needs coverage. This 20 per cent, probably because they are not indigent and therefore not on welfare, are not able to pay for proper medical services. I do not consider for one minute that it is necessary for the government to undertake complete medical coverage as long as the private schemes are satisfactory. I do feel there is a group in our population that requires government assistance. I know the medical profession is in favour of that.

I believe that at the present time the majority of people are satisfied with their private schemes. We must remember that there must be no compulsion on anyone to enter a medical scheme. There are people who, for different personal reasons, religious reasons or other reasons should not be asked to contribute to a medical scheme if they do not want to come under it. We have to give a certain amount of leeway to these people, and we should devise a scheme that will be satisfactory to them. We must have a scheme that is going to be satisfactory not only to the medical profession but to the people who will be covered by it. The people must have a free choice of doctor. The doctors must be paid for services rendered and, except in the case of those working for institutions, they should not be put on a salary basis. There must be no directives to hospitals, except in the case of hospitals financed by the government.

I come now to what I consider to be the most important part of my remarks—and I do not believe this point has been mentioned by previous speakers. I refer to the necessity for research. Never in the history of our country has it been so important for us to consider seriously the matter of research. Research is a great benefit to everyone; it is of benefit to the people who are affected and to the medical profession. It is important to the economic welfare of our country. Canadians are recognized everywhere in the world for their high professional standards. They are considered to be industrious people who work well wherever they may go. The result is that Canadian scientists are very much in demand throughout the world. I do not mean to indicate we should in any way discourage our people from going to other countries to study and get new ideas; I believe this should be encouraged in every way possible. However, we must make it worth while for these same people to come back to our country.

Over the last 15 years or so this country has been losing medical men at the rate of about 250 per year. This means that about five medical men per week are going to the United States alone. In so far as the nursing profession is concerned, the statistics present an even worse picture. Fortunately, however, some of these people return to Canada. There is a loyalty to their country that brings them back. When they do come back they bring increased knowledge and increased training to this country, which has cost Canada nothing. However, we must make it worth their while to return to Canada. It is for this reason I say research is important. Some of these people stay in the United States for personal reasons, some of them like the climate and some of them like to make 50 per cent to 100 per cent more than they would in this country. The most important thing is that there are better job opportunities in the United States, better research facilities and they have better working conditions. These scientists are more appreciated in the United States than they are in Canada. We have to make it more worth their while to come back to this country.

We have had good research performed in this country, some of it under very unfortunate circumstances. I had the privilege of personal acquaintanceship with Dr. Fred Banting and Dr. Best and I know that the conditions under which they worked in making that important discovery of insulin were a disgrace to our country. Of course, the situation has improved since then, but we have a long way to go yet, Mr. Chairman. I must congratulate the department for its recognition in the last few years of the need for more research. The figures I received today indicated that in 1956-57 the department was appropriating $1,729,700 for medical research in Canada. I am glad to say that last year this amount was doubled, and I ask the minister to see that this branch receives more encouragement. We have the men and women in this country. We have the facilities; so by increasing our subsidies we can do much work in Canada and we can make Canada one of the greatest medical centres in the world.

In spite of the problems we have at the present time in the field of scientific research we have put up a very creditable performance in some of our hospitals and laboratories. Let us find a way to increase this research, to discover the mysterious diseases with which some of us are afflicted today. Let us show the minister why cancer of the lung may develop when we smoke too much. I am sure that every one of us is interested in research, and I know we can do more in this field in Canada. There has never before been a time when we faced so many problems in research as we do today, and I feel this is the place where more can be done than it can anywhere else. By this research we can prevent illness, save suffering and cut down on hospitalization. This has been reduced considerably.

One of the most important developments due to research work has been in the treatment of tuberculosis. Many tuberculosis institutions have been closed up now, and this has saved money for the country. This illustrates that we can save money by spending it in the proper way in the research branch of our national health and welfare department of the government. I urge the government at this time to advance further this most important department. The rewards will be great, not only for the welfare of our country but for our economy as well.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, following the example of the previous speaker, I do not intend to take much of the time of the house to deal with the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

By the way, I wish to congratulate the minister (Miss LaMarsh) for her appointment as head of one of the most important departments. In fact, last week, at the time of the introduction of the said estimates, it was repeated again and again that this department was second in importance. However, if you study the budget for the financial year ending March 31, 1964, you will find there is a correction to be made, for the estimates of the Department of National Defence for the financial year ending March 31, 1964 amount, approximately, to $1,619 million and those of the Department of Finance, to $1,302 million. Now, as the estimates for the Department of National Health and Welfare amount to $1,204 million, it comes third, and I believe it is normal to make that correction.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion it is very important to recognize the great principle that tomorrow's economy should be more and more distributive, since we live in a world that improves constantly in the field of science. In fact, the various discoveries give today easier access to material things, at least to the production of material things which meet the needs of the human race.

If we take into account the fact that 23 per cent of the budget for the financial year ending March 31, 1964 is devoted to the Department of National Health and Welfare, it must be recognized that this is very encouraging for the future, since health and sanitation are no doubt the things that should have priority.

Mr. Chairman, reference was made, a moment ago, to the fact that in today's world, it is high time that society, and more particularly labour classes, venture more and more into the field of social legislation.

In fact, we notice nowadays that upon reaching the age of 45, 48, 50 or 55, a man who has worked many years in a plant finds himself dismissed. Automation is taking over from him and he is often unable to find work that would suit his physical capacities or his insufficient training. Thus, he finds himself in a most difficult position.

We also notice that a great number of our fellow citizens are still too young to benefit from old age pension and on the other hand, too old to receive family allowances. Nevertheless, they are left with heavy responsibilities with regard to the education of their children who have started rather advanced studies.

That is why I am of the opinion that it is most important to go farther in the field of social security, from the standpoint of hospital and health insurance, family allowances and old age pensions.

During the discussion of the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, we heard a lot about health insurance and hospital insurance.

According to the budget estimates, federal grants for hospital insurance and general health amount to $436 million. That is the share of the federal government for its contribution to various health or hospital insurance plans, in co-operation with the provinces that already have their health or hospital insurance schemes, some of which include medical costs.

If we analyse carefully this amount of $436 million, we find that the federal government spends about $75 a year per family as its share in hospital insurance plans, while the provinces who have such a plan have to contribute the same amount.

That means that between $125 and $150 for each Canadian family are spent on health insurance and hospital insurance in some provinces.

Now, I believe that if the same amount could be given out to family heads, to single people or to the older people who do not live with their families any more, each one of our Canadian families could get from companies operating in that field an insurance policy in case of illness and another one which would guarantee the payment of a salary during the stay in hospital of the family breadwinner; and that could be done for premiums of $125 or $150 a year.

We now have a hospital insurance scheme for the workers which guarantees, upon payment of approximately $10 a month, the protection of the worker and his family; if one member of the family falls ill, he can be admitted to the hospital free of charge and chirurgical expenses and visits by the physician are reimbursed.

I feel we should study the possibility of setting up for Canada a similar health insurance plan.

Of course some might say: Those amounts will be spent for things other than those they should be used for.

I will reply that the Department of National Health and Welfare could distribute to heads of family cheques for an amount equivalent to the actual cost of hospital insurance, which could be cashed only by companies or organizations specialized in the field of protection and for nothing but hospital insurance. I think that would cost less and families would get better coverage. Moreover, in many cases, it would enable them to get the physician they want, because you know what usually happens with regard to hospital insurance: to be admitted to a hospital, you must first prove to some official that you are ill enough to deserve a reservation for a hospital bed.

Therefore, I believe that the future health insurance plan should be studied from that angle to see if it would not be advisable to change the scheme which is already in the planning stage and taking form in our own province in the field of health insurance.

There is another very important side to the activities of the Department of National Health and Welfare, that of family allowances.

I believe everyone knows that it was one of the Liberal party's great promises; on the other hand, during the recent election campaigns, all parties stressed the need to review and amend that legislation so that it would better suit today's needs.

A while ago, the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) gave us the impression he wanted to look back upon the past, and he went back as far as 1919 to remind us how this house had voted the Family Allowances Act.

At that time, the cost of living was much lower than nowadays, Canada was enjoying prosperity thanks to wartime activities, a very large number of family heads were able to earn their livelihood easily and properly by holding a position of some kind in our country, which was in full development in 1945.

If we consider the situation in the last five or six years, we realize that everything justifies a revision as soon as possible of this highly social legislation we have in the Family Allowances Act.

Mr. Chairman, as I said a while ago, it is sometimes sad for a family head to know that he is too young to receive a pension and too old to take advantage of family allowances. The father of a son aged 18, 19 or 20, who sometimes had to make great sacrifices to enable him to continue his education, is often unable, because he has lost his job, to keep his son in college or technical school, where he would graduate in two or three years.

We must amend the Family Allowances Act in order to extend the period of eligibility, perhaps until the child has completed his studies.

I hope that these suggestions will receive careful consideration; moreover they are consistent with a policy accepted and advocated by all the candidates during the last two election campaigns, for the problem of social security, pensions and family allowances was made much of at that time.

We also find under item "unemployment assistance" a federal government contribution of $110 million for social assistance to the unemployed, the disabled recognized as such, and those unable to provide for their own needs. One hundred and ten million dollars for the federal contribution. If we add to that the contribution of the different provinces, we get a very impressive amount.

But if we scrutinize the implementation of that legislation, we find that it is done with stinginess and even with discrimination.

Recently some of my constituents made certain representations to me concerning one of their fellow citizens who had benefited for nine years from the legislation for the blind and who, owing to obscure circumstances, after the last two elections, completely lost his claim to that pension in September 1963. In spite of representations which were made by both he and the head of his parish, the officials concerned seem to think that blindness is no longer a problem for him and that his eyesight is perfect. Yet, an optician who examined him told me personally: "That man will never recover sufficient eyesight to hold any kind of a job in industry or elsewhere." That is only one case out of hundreds.

I wonder if we should not also take a new approach to the distribution of purchasing power.

Last week the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) seemed to refer to a speech made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) in 1947. I feel we should have allowed him to continue his remarks because, in 1947, there was some talk about the national dividend and the distribution of our country's great wealth under the form of purchasing power. In my opinion, if that suggestion had been accepted, we would have fairly ridden Canada of all such cases of stinginess and discrimination.

In the field of national health, Mr. Chairman, we must concern ourselves mostly with the welfare of those who need not only medical care but also a sufficient quantity of calorie-rich food to sustain them so that they may not need medical attention too soon.

Let us think of the 500,000 to 600,00 Canadians who, over the past 26 years, have known the hardship which comes with unemployment. We could have increased consumption through a better distribution of the purchasing power, through increases in family allowances and old age pensions, and also by reducing the eligible age.

This would have been a real step towards social security which the people need more and more, like all human beings living in developed countries where scientific progress has taken place in the last 50 years.

I think that it is only natural that people are eager for security.

For the people in lower income groups who do not always get a hard-earned salary, because of unemployment, all this is very important.

I believe that all fields of social security should be examined during the discussion of the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare and that higher family allowances and for older children should be considered.

There is another field which, in my opinion, should be considered by the Department of National Health and Welfare, in co-operation with other departments if necessary, especially with provincial representatives, I mean amateur sport in the country.

We have in our province as well as in the others, various organizations, interested for example, in playgrounds and parish halls. I think that we should devote over $5 million to amateur sport. This higher grant should not solely be used to finance advanced studies, but should also be used for the improvement of instructors or other persons assigned to the organization of sport.

I think consideration should also be given to the advisability of a more active participation by the federal government and its closer co-operation with the provincial departments of welfare and youth in order to grant subsidies to already existing bodies.

I gave as an example the playgrounds association, the O.T.J. of the province of Quebec. I know that there are in the other provinces across Canada similar organizations interested in athletics but what I have in mind, is a training program in physical fitness to give our youth a sound mind in a sound body. Our older citizens must facilitate the access to organized games and promote the physical development of our youngsters who represent the future of our nation.

That is why I think that in the field of amateur sport, the Minister of National Health and Welfare could certainly make a contribution to the development of a brighter future for our youth in terms of national health. We must not forget that national health is a matter of prime importance in modern societies and that the future belongs to the fighting man who has faith in the future.

It is our duty to anticipate what tomorrow will be and to do that, we must give today to our youth the best of health because insecurity holds nothing good in the heart of the underprivileged and insecurity is too often the lot of our large families either in the farming or working class.

In my constituency, hundreds of families live on farms with an income utterly inadequate which does not even allow them to get the bare necessities of life.

In fact, it was proven that 97,000 farms in eastern Canada have an annual income of less than $1,200 a year.

I think that the Minister of National Health and Welfare should take under serious consideration a way to supplement those completely inadequate incomes by increasing family allowances, if we wish to avoid the worst for those for whom the future holds in store nothing but misery for them and their dependents. I can assure you that it is sometimes very difficult to prevent people from considering that the wealthy should share their possessions with them.

We all want to take steps to make sure that in this country, the homes of those who are afflicted with illness and social insecurity will at last find happiness of some kind.

I think that it is up to the Department of National Health and Welfare to take up the challenge in connection with our future and to devise a program capable of ensuring security for the majority of our citizens, for in a country endowed with enormous riches of all kinds, we must assume the responsibility of solving this problem by pushing back as far as possible the frontiers of destitution and disease.

I believe that we live in a providentially privileged country in this regard. We have well organized political structures and, in my opinion, with the co-operation of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be able to find a way to get all the money needed to accelerate the increase in family allowances and the improvement of the old age pension scheme by lowering the age limit at which they become payable. Thus, a more prosperous and a more promising future will be in store for us.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few observations on these very important estimates which provide for the expenditure of over $1,200 million. I am one who believes that federal-provincial conferences that will deal particularly with problems relating to our human and natural resources will be the foundation upon which we will build national unity in this country. I am convinced that the discussion of these practical things relating to human beings and the development of our natural resources in these conferences will bring about a great deal of understanding, and I think that has already been demonstrated to some extent by the conference of ministers on resources. I trust that all involved in the coming federal-provincial conference will reach agreement and come to conclusions that will be to the advantage of all the Canadian people, regardless of the province in which they live.

I want to extend my sincere congratulations to the minister on her appointment. I remember when she first came to the house as a neophyte, shall I say, on the opposition benches. It was not very long before she demonstrated by her debating ability, her vigour and her activity that she had a contribution to make to the house. In addition, she was the first lady member of the standing committee on veterans affairs. I do not know what some of the old boys I served with in the first world war would have said if they had known that veterans would wear petticoats in years to come. Anyway, it is a sign of the times, and she was very interested in veterans affairs. I wish her every success in the administration of her department and all she undertakes to the advantage of the people of Canada. I am sure she will not be content to be the ornamental apex of the broadly based department she administers.

I also wish to pay my tribute to the staff of the department both in Ottawa and in other places. I have had occasion to inquire about problems relating to senior citizens, medical questions and things of that sort, and so far as I am concerned I must say that the officials have taken every trouble to provide the information, although sometimes it is not easy to collate all the information some people seek. I have been here a good number of years, Mr. Chairman, and I cannot let the estimates of this department pass without making reference to the contribution to the department and to the Canadian people that the lady secretary of the department has made throughout the years.

I am not going to waste the time of the house by repetition, but in a sentence or two I do want to support the pleas made by previous speakers for the establishment of a national health insurance plan, something that this party has been urging for years. We hope that the developments that will occur in connection with the pension plan, and the developments that have occurred in some of the provinces in this connection, will spur the government on to take the bull by the horns, as it were, and give some leadership in connection with a national health insurance plan.

I want to say a word or two about welfare before going on with my other remarks. I remember the welfare that existed when I was a boy. It was known as parish relief. If you were down and out and almost starving you could go to the workhouse. If you were able-bodied you worked on a pile of stones splitting flints that were crushed into the macadam roads of Great Britain. This was the way welfare was administered, and the situation was very similar in this country in the early days as far as the meagreness of welfare is concerned.

We have come a long way since then. Now we are in most unusual circumstances compared with years ago. We find that the majority of people in Canada, including the rich and the poor, now support the welfare state. But these people support the welfare state from two different motives. I have talked to prominent industrialists who expressed their support for all types of welfare legislation. You will find them acting as officers of welfare concerns, local committees, and so on. While in some cases there is a touch of humanitarianism in this, I have talked to some of these people who considered it was good business. They can pay welfare benefits today that they could not years ago, and all because of increased production. They consider it is really good insurance against social revolution, and also for the maintenance of the capitalist system.

In that connection I want to quote briefly from Maclean's magazine, October 6, 1942, which had a very interesting article dealing with developments with respect to the former government. On page 76 I read this:

> Nothing in this classically competitive business history would lead you to suppose that some of McCutcheon's ideas might alarm a dogmatic capitalist, but such is the surprising case. A caption in the Toronto Star of September 30, 1957, read: "Praises Canada's drift toward welfare state."

Just imagine a multi-millionaire making a statement like that 25 or 30 years ago. He would have been kicked out of the establishment.

> The account of a speech McCutcheon had made to the Canadian club followed. "Relating...the vast expansion of government and voluntary health and welfare programs, (McCutcheon) said, 'You might expect me as a businessman to denounce this whole movement...as a dangerous if not to say pernicious thing. On the contrary, I regard it not only as one of the greatest achievements of private enterprise and a modern industrial society, I consider it necessary to the continued existence of both.'"

That is the point of view of many of the wealthier people who support welfare at this time. Mr. Chairman, my colleague says I mentioned 1942. I misread the date; it is 1962. Of course my colleague is very fond of exactitude in small matters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is not our point of view. We look upon the welfare state as paving the highway to social justice for everyone, and not as causing some people to suffer in perpetuity human indignity by being kept on welfare in the sense of the persons I have mentioned. We mean that the welfare state should provide for every child in the country, regardless of place of birth or economic circumstances of the parents. We believe that all able-bodied men should be provided with employment at decent wages and in proper working conditions. We believe that all Canadians are entitled to decent housing, and to protection by national welfare against the hazards of ill health. We believe that our aging citizens are entitled to retire in comfort with a measure of security. We do not look upon this as subsidizing human beings to stay on the shelf because they are no longer of use in the society in which we live. We believe in human dignity and opportunities for all according to their physical and intellectual development.

I listened with interest to the speech made by the hon. member who represents Kamloops. He is a member of the medical profession, and I heard with particular interest his references to the need for greater research in many aspects of health and welfare. I heartily support those remarks. I do not intend to repeat them but I have had this brought to my attention by persons in my own constituency, by local groups interested in the problem of rehabilitation, particularly of children and juveniles, and I support their pleas for wider, more expanded research into all aspects and all problems relating to the development of a sound policy within this department.

I now want to say a few words about the pension plan. Our hopes were raised very high during the election period, and we came here with great expectations and anticipations. Because of circumstances that have developed this delay has occurred; however, as a result of this forthcoming conference I hope this will provide an opportunity to develop a sound plan related to the circumstances of the times.

I fully appreciate the opposition the government has received from some quarters to a national contributory pension plan. I am not sure whether I should have said that, or whether I should have said a confederation contributory pension plan. Anyway, you know what I mean. Mr. Chairman, my colleague is again correcting me in matters of minutiae: It is the Canada pension plan. There is nothing like having a prompter behind the wings. He should have been on the stage, or behind the back door but out of sight.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Anyway, we all know there has been strong opposition, and I want to give credit to the minister for the stand she is taking in placing the broad outline before the house in the form of a resolution, and not backing down one iota. She is not given to easily changing direction because of the zephyrs slight political winds and things of that sort, and we wish her well in standing her ground.

In that connection I would like to quote a cutting sent to me by some of my constituents who are interested in this question. It is an editorial from the Star Weekly of recent issue. It is well worth reading into the record, because in my opinion the person who wrote the editorial sized the situation up very well indeed. It is headed, "Big finance fights pensions"—we all agree with that—and states:

> Powerful interests have begun a mighty lobbying campaign against the Canada pension plan now before parliament. They are the insurance and trust companies which control the huge funds built up under private pension plans.
> The Canada pension plan offers more, to more Canadians, than any private plan or any combination of private plans can give them. It will cover almost every employed worker in Canada unless he lives in a province that stays out, as Quebec will.

According to this editorial.

> After it has been in effect 10 years it will pay a man aged 70, who has been earning $77 a week, a pension of $175 a month. This is a far quicker build-up to maximum than private plans, which might take 40 years to reach this point.
> Some of what the insurance interests are saying is plain hogwash.

That is a rather plain word.

> "Canada is looking into the jaws of an economic catastrophe," says one document. Others use more skilful arguments and figures. Among the main points the insurance men attack are:
> The cost. Contributions from worker and employer will not exceed 2 per cent of wages (up to $77 a week) for the first 10 years, then will increase. Government actuaries have worked this out extremely carefully, allowing for the proportion of old people there may be in the population.
> Very fairly they give both a high cost and a low cost. In the year 2050, for instance, they reckon that, on optimistic assumptions, the plan will cost only 4.38 per cent of wages. But on a pessimistic basis they say it might cost 8.84 per cent.
> Opponents have immediately seized on the highest figure and some even say, without giving any facts, that the cost will really be much higher.
> How much pension? Insurance men say the plan "overpensions" people.

Isn't that a frightful cry—they actually overpay pensioned people. To talk of giving our older citizens some measure of comfort is absolutely atrocious in their point of view.

> Even with an extra $75 of old age pension for a wife, a couple will have only $250 a month at most. Many will have less if they retire early or don't earn as much as $77 a week when working. Is this too much pension?
> Pay as you go. The argument against this part of the plan is that because it pays pensions out of contributions as it receives them, it is destroying an important part of our savings system.

That is an insurance company's point of view. They have been collecting the savings, keeping the profits and investing them wherever they saw fit, without any thought being given to the best advantage of the development of this country, and in some cases investing them in foreign companies to quite an extent.

The building up of funds under private plans provides money for businesses to expand and helps the country to grow, this argument goes.

What the Canada pension plan's opponents do not say is that the United States has had a similar pension scheme since 1937 and that there private pension plans have gone on growing alongside it and providing billions of dollars for investment. There's no reason why this shouldn't happen here too.

Then, as a clincher, the insurance men ask that the plan be delayed so there can be full discussion on it. We believe that its details should be carefully checked, possibly by the House of Commons banking committee. Now that it is proposed to bring the present $65 old age pension up to $75 without waiting for the Canada pension plan, an extra two months' delay won't do any harm, and a lot of improvements may be made in that time.

What the big financial interests fighting the plan want is not just delay. They hope to kill it dead. In the interests of security and decent comfort for our old people at the end of their working days, parliament must thwart their design and establish the Canada pension plan.

I give full credit to the editorial writer of the Star Weekly who wrote that article. He has done a service to Canada to state the situation in such clearcut language. As I said before, I trust that the coming conference will bear good fruit in respect to this pension plan, and once again I wish the minister, the other members of the cabinet and the officials attending the conference every success in their negotiations in this respect.

Now I want to say a few words about the Disabled Persons Act. I am trying to be as brief as possible, Mr. Chairman, but it is very difficult for me to get the floor on some occasions. In the first place, I am a modest person—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: —and I often get outbidded, and that sort of thing. I do get it on Thursday and Friday nights occasionally. First of all, I trust that agreement will be reached on this matter so that these persons will soon receive the extra $10 that is being paid to those under old age security. I mention this because I have had quite a bit of experience with persons in my own constituency who have made application for disabled persons allowances. I am convinced, as the result of my experience, as the result of talking to the board in Vancouver and talking to half a dozen doctors who are very interested, that many of these persons have been denied these allowances as not being unemployable, when they are completely unable to earn a living. I know two or three cases where they are completely unable to earn a living, and I simply cannot understand why the legislation permits this sort of thing. I have talked this over with the board in Vancouver which administers the allowances. They showed me a huge volume of regulations. Without a doubt their hands are tied by the present regulations, which I presume were drafted as a result of negotiation between the federal and provincial governments. I have talked to a number of doctors who were simply amazed that many applicants have been denied the disabled persons allowances, and I have talked to the persons directly affected and their neighbours.

In the opinion of this group, Mr. Chairman, the disabled persons allowance act needs amending at the earliest possible date, and the regulations to it, in order to give effect to the principles, of the act as we understood them when they were passed in this House of Commons some years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I am very pleased to see that I am drawing applause from Progressive Conservative benches and—is it the Social Credit rally or the Social Credit party? Anyway, I am drawing applause from both of them and I think I am doing very well. In concluding my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words about fitness and amateur sports grants. I give credit to the former government for this program. This was an excellent piece of legislation and is a very worth-while project indeed. I have had some experience with this program throughout the constituency. I live in a riding in which the Royal Canadian Legion has some 12 branches and many of them are quite strong in their membership. Throughout the whole district there is intense interest in physical fitness, in field and track sports, team sports, and so on.

The Royal Canadian Legion in Kootenay West has worked very hard in the last five years. They have a coach who is a former Olympic champion—this man is resident in Rossland—to build up interest. There has been a great deal of interest built up in the schools, among the parents and particularly among the children who are directly interested and participate. Already we have developed two or three track and field athletes of national calibre and we expect some of them to be competing in the next Olympic games. This program is of great assistance in this respect. I wish to compliment the minister and the government for the grant made to the Royal Canadian Legion. It is a step in the right direction. I am sure that because of the results, knowing she has a warm heart, next year the minister will increase this grant. This provides an opportunity for co-operation between the federal and provincial governments and between particular organizations throughout Canada, both at the national and local level, to do something worth while, to develop physical fitness among our young people, develop amateur sports and so build for the future of Canada a healthier, a stronger and, I trust, a wiser generation.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity of speaking a second time on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare as I have two thoughts that I would like to advance, both of which I think are for the national good, under the headings of health and welfare. First I should emphasize that I am a non-smoker. I have not indulged in the habit since corn tassels and toilet paper went out of style. When I say toilet paper, that was in the days before Facelle toilet tissues were made in my riding of York-Humber—and I mean toilet paper. I thought the habit rather disgusting at that time and have never taken it up. As a non-smoker I would like to urge that this conference on Monday and Tuesday be thrown open to the public and the press. I sincerely believe that the more publicity there is given to this conference, the more effect it will have on the young people of the nation and it will influence many of them to not take up the habit.

I have been 40 years in the newspaper business and I know how much attention is paid by newspapers and periodicals to a mere press hand-out from a conference held behind closed doors. If the conference is in the open, the press, radio, and possibly television, will give it wide coverage and the import of the deliberations will be broadcast from coast to coast. I would like to see the conference given as widespread publicity as possible.

Having incurred the askance looks of my hon. friends from Norfolk and Durham, where tobacco is grown in large quantity, because I favour publicity that may retard this habit, I would point out that I have a large number of variety stores in the riding of York-Humber which could take offence at my remarks, and I would now like to make an effort to placate them. I am a non-smoker and I am in this House of Commons a great deal for the simple reason that I do not find it necessary to go behind the curtains from time to time or go into the members' lobby, nor do I walk around the parliament buildings, in order to indulge in the habit of courting lady nicotine. We have certain members of the press gallery who are here a minimum of time, possibly 30 minutes a day, who retreat to their warrens on the third floor and write lengthy articles pointing out the terrible attendance of the members of the House of Commons. But they do not point out when they are writing those articles that they themselves are not in the House of Commons, and they do not give the members of the house credit for leaving the chamber for the same reason they leave the press gallery, namely to work in their offices or to smoke in various places and various postures.

I would point out that when I came into this chamber this evening I counted the number of Liberals sitting in the members' lobby and I would report to you, not with any great degree of pleasure, that there were almost as many members in the members' lobby or behind the curtains enjoying themselves, under the heading of "welfare", as there were in this chamber. This is a small item of news for the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, if he wishes to know where we are most of the time.

I should like to make this suggestion in all seriousness, bearing in mind the fact that I personally am not addicted to this habit of smoking, that you would have double the attendance in this chamber after orders of the day if smoking were permitted here. Some newspapers are keeping box scores relating to members' attendance in the house. I have a better than average figure because I do not smoke and I am in the house a great deal. Many members go out to smoke. I do have a tremendous number of friends who indulge in the filthy habit and I do not think any worse of them than I do of my friends, like the hon. member for Niagara Falls or the hon. member for York West, who set a non-smoking example which all members do not always follow. We would like to have smoking allowed in the House of Commons so that a large number of members would come in here and see the example set by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the hon. member for York West and the hon. member for York-Humber, and then they might come to the conclusion they must give up smoking following the realization that lung cancer is staring them in the face.

Mr. Enns: Having heard this rather humorous dissertation, Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if my somewhat sober remarks will be listened to at all. Actually, after the comments made by these speakers this evening, I would think the minister, as head of the department, would realize that her estimates could not be reduced because each speaker has advocated an increase in the various programs that have been discussed. I am thinking of disabled persons allowances, and so on, which it has been advocated should be increased. Actually, I can support this myself.

Various references have been made to the health insurance plan. It was rather a curious experience to hear an hon. member opposite—I cannot recall his constituency—speak in favour of health insurance and speak also in favour of proceeding slowly. During the election campaign, this was one of the things that was promised immediately. We were told we would have this plan as soon as the Liberals took power. It is not necessary for me to remind the committee that our party is not opposed to medical insurance. In fact, it was our party that initiated the commission, under Dr. Hall, to study the whole question of health services. This would be the basis for an adequate study of any program of insurance. I think this is certainly a very sensible approach to this vast problem.

In introducing the estimates the minister stated that better than 19 per cent of the federal budget is required for health and welfare. I think translated into other terms this statement speaks of the high quality of services the Canadian people receive from this significant department. When I recall that this department has not yet existed for 20 years and has already reached the point of requiring such a share of the total expenditure, I must compliment the minister on accomplishing this degree of service to Canadians.

I noticed in the estimates provision has been made for an increase in welfare grants. I was interested in the cumulative spending for research, welfare grants and health grants. The whole grants program of this department is a great thing. While the amount in the estimates has been increased from $250,000 to $500,000, I think in this present day and age, when it can be said that 90 per cent of the scientists who ever lived are still alive, and when the statement is made that knowledge doubles itself almost every ten years, the government needs to recognize that there has to be some impetus, some encouragement given to the development of better trained personnel. This is especially true at a time when the cost of higher education seems to be increasing as well. I would admonish the minister to give thought to an even greater increase in the grants program.

Mention has been made of the pension plan. It is a source of some sadness to me that the plan had to be introduced in such great haste and therefore has now had to be shelved, at least temporarily. I, personally, and I think most members of the house, are in favour of a pension plan that has been solidly conceived and one that will be workable, because there are many individuals who are not covered by private programs about which we hear so much. There is one theory advanced that would solve our whole problem in this area, and that is that as long as the economy increases at the rate it has, and the productivity keeps increasing at the present rate, the standard of living of Canadians will be doubled in one generaion, or 30 years. In this way, the problem of welfare would more or less resolve itself. If this were so, it would lead to the rather tempting solution of simply sitting and waiting until the economy of the country reached this point.

Of course, this is not possible, nor could it be. I was, therefore, reassured when the minister said in introducing these estimates that we would, of course, have to spend whatever is necessary to assure Canadians of the highest possible standard of health. She assured the committee that there would be no skimping in this area. I am reassured by this kind of statement because I feel in the years to come the department will really enlarge its expenditures as it will its services. All studies indicate that the theoretical possibility of the poor disappearing, through this formula I just mentioned of the standard of living doubling, does not work. If you do some reading in this field, I would refer you to studies made in the United States, a country which claims the average level of income per family is something like $7,000 per year. In spite of this rather high level of income, it is still possible to speak of the mass phenomena of the poor in that country. There have been many books written on this subject, but I would like to refer to the book written by Mr. Michael Harrington which he calls, "The Other America; Poverty in the United States". This certainly points up that this faceless group has no real representative in our society.

Just where to draw the poverty line in Canada is something I would not want to undertake at this time because so many things have to be considered. According to a recent census, over half of our single persons earn less than $2,000 per year. If you want to apply this to families, I think the figures show that something like 40 per cent of the families earn less than $4,000 per year. Now, whether we can consider this to be the poverty line or not, I am not too sure. I put it to the members of the house to try to establish just where we would be in attempting to provide the many needs of our families if we had only $4,000 to buy education, to buy clothing, shelter and the many other things a family requires. I say, therefore, that a great awakening of the public conscience is necessary to the fact that we are far from an affluent society, in spite of the fact we enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world.

If we live in the suburbs, I believe it is quite easy to be convinced that we do, in fact, live in an affluent society because the poor have a way of disappearing. They are confined in crowded, miserable housing in the centre of town and many of us hardly even notice them.

Another reason they are becoming invisible is because many of them are at an age where they are quite isolated from the rest. Some are over 65 years of age and the dependants of those families with limited incomes to which I referred are under 18 years of age. These groups are not very vocal in our society, yet most of the services of the department are directed at them. The book to which I referred, "The Other America" by Michael Harrington, has this comment:

> And finally the poor are politically invisible... They are without lobbies of their own; they put forward no legislative program. As a group they are atomized; they have no face, they have no voice.

One of the biggest causes of poverty, I suggest, is unemployment. We know that much of the complexity of this problem of unemployment cannot be blamed entirely on the lack of government programs, although the government shoulders a heavy responsibility to provide increasing opportunities for employment. But it seems that the human race no longer fits society. Here I should like to quote from the September 1962 issue of Harper's magazine, an article entitled "The Stupidity Problem"—an odd term—by Mr. John Fischer:

> The human race—or anyhow that sample of it located in North America—no longer fits the kind of society it has to live in. Our society just does not have any jobs for certain people. If it continues to develop along its present course, the numbers of such unemployables seem likely to grow rather rapidly.

Then he goes on to outline the difficulty of finding employment for all, especially those less adequately suited for the complex jobs of today. Then he concludes with this comment:

> For we have apparently built ourselves unintentionally, and without realizing it, a society which calls for a distribution of intelligence entirely different from that which God provided. It remains to be seen whether we can make it work.

Indeed, all the resources of health and welfare, of housing, education and employment, will have to be applied to see whether we can really make our society work.

Why do I show concern in this area? How well have we done up to now? I should like to use educational achievements as some sort of measure. If it is said that this is not really a proper yardstick to use when discussing the estimates of the department of health and welfare, I suggest that education is very much tied in with health and welfare. For example, how many of us know that more than 200,000 adults in Canada have never gone to school? Do we realize, Mr. Chairman, the employment problems facing this group? Some 870,000 Canadians did not get past grade four. There are other figures to show that 70 per cent of unemployed men at the present time have no more than grade eight education. The national employment service tells us that if you have not at least grade eight education you are ineligible for more than 70 per cent of the jobs available. Finally, there are something over 7 million Canadians who have never completed high school. When we look at the various qualifications now expected even of office boys, where it seems matriculation is mandatory, we can see the complexity of the problem which faces anyone who attempts to find a solution to the unemployment question.

Obviously we have failed somewhere along the line. One of the chief reasons is that we look too closely and too critically at the cost of health services, at the cost of welfare services, and at the cost of education, while ignoring the fact that the cost of failing to spend money to provide adequate health, welfare and education services is much greater. What is the cost of unemployment, for example? What of the frustration of the people who cannot find work? What about the enforced idleness, the loss of purpose and self-respect, or even the loss of hope and faith? There are even more tangible indicators of the effects of unemployment, such as the loss of homes through mortgage foreclosures, development of delinquency, and I can name many others. In comparison the provision of welfare services, work projects and other measures to stimulate the economy is clearly a lesser price to pay. What about the cost of sickness, pain, suffering, chronic incapacity and loss of income owing to inadequate medical and health services? Society as a whole, as well as the individual who is ill, pays an enormous price for the burden of illness. Beside these costs the price of adequate health services is surely small. What about the cost of ignorance, of reduced job opportunities, frustration, long hours of drudgery, perhaps even unemployment, and even more important, failure in the fulfilment of life? If we are wise we will pay for health and welfare and adequate educational measures simply because we cannot afford ignorance, sickness and personal misery.

This leads me to three specific proposals I should like to put forward. One is in the area of health, and this is not a proposal which has not already been discussed. It advocates the implementation of a properly thought out health insurance scheme. I read the report of the department for 1962-63 and was interested to see that something like 98.7 per cent of all Canadians are covered by hospitalization schemes. What a difference that is when compared with the less than 50 per cent who receive coverage through a medical insurance scheme at the present time. I say there is great need for a health insurance scheme which will be acceptable to the medical profession. It must be a scheme that will still be locally and regionally controlled, and various methods of financing must be well considered before it is put forward. I am looking to provinces like Saskatchewan, and Ontario which is contemplating a scheme, and also Alberta. I am hopeful that Canada will before long develop, in the same way it developed a workable hospitalization scheme, a health insurance scheme. I think it is unfair that medically indigent people are dependant on the charitable inclinations of the medical profession to provide adequate health services. In the area of welfare I look with some alarm at the complexity and diversity of the numerous schemes at the present time serving the people. For example, I think of the workmen's compensation act, veterans pensions, unemployment insurance, family allowances, mothers' allowances, disability allowance, allowances for the blind and disabled, and the various old age security pensions, veterans allowances and general assistance. Surely there must be a way of simplifying this maze of different programs jointly financed by federal money, provincial money, municipal money and voluntary schemes.

This leads me to advocate a social security plan which will funnel these individual programs into one scheme. The saving in administrative duplication would be considerable and the service to the entitled recipients would certainly be enhanced. I am hopeful that some of the recommendations of the Gill commission can be considered in the wider application and development of a social security program. So any social security program should be preceded by careful study of the conditions which exist under present provisions, before its implementation.

The third and last suggestion I wish to make has to do with education. I make it with reluctance because I do not wish to lay upon an active minister and upon a department which already has many diverse functions, yet another burden. Yet I feel there has to be a branch responsible for the field of education at a national level. We hear much talk about the need for granting scholarships, about increasing demands for university grants and the requirements of the vocational and technical training program. All this has to do with education. There is another problem which confronts many families, including particularly the families of service men and others in our society who are becoming less and less rooted. In many cases their children encounter setbacks, not because they lack ability but because they suddenly encounter a school curriculum or program which is completely different from anything they had been undertaking previously. For this reason I think a branch should be set up to deal with this aspect of the educational field and that the department should be renamed the department of health, welfare and education.

Mr. Nesbitt: I did have a lengthy speech prepared on a number of topics but in view of the hour, and in an effort to co-operate with the minister, I will shorten my remarks as much as possible. The first thing I should like to bring to the hon. lady's attention is the question of blind pensions, disabled persons allowances and old age security payments. As a number of other members have mentioned, we hope that all those people in receipt of these payments will soon get the $10 increase. I hope the government will bring in legislation accordingly at an early date because these people badly need the extra allowance.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the committee. I know it has been discussed over the years in this chamber. I know it was being discussed ten years ago. It is the question of removing the means test as a condition of payment of pensions to the blind, and I think the minister should give careful attention to this principle not only as it applies to the blind but as it applies to disabled persons allowances. The application of the means test necessitates certain administrative expenditure and, in addition, it is embarrassing to a number of the applicants. People who are blind are deprived of a valuable physical asset when it comes to earning a living. Through no fault of their own they have probably not been able to make a living as well as the rest of us, and for this reason we should help them out by compensating them in some small way for the loss of a valuable physical asset. It is true a number of blind persons may be able to make a living, but they are not able to do so as well as if they had not lost their sight. I feel that in all these cases an allowance should be granted without a means test being applied. I know there may be some who have lost their sight and who do not really need the allowance, but the same could be said in this particular respect of some of those in receipt of old age security benefits. The great majority do, and if payments are made to a few people who are affluent, it must be remembered that the money usually goes back in taxes, anyway. I understand that most blind persons in this country lost their sight at a very early period in their lives.

As far as the payment of disabled persons allowances is concerned, the same principle should apply, though we should perhaps bear in mind that these people may have become physically handicapped later in life and would therefore have had a better opportunity to earn a living than most blind persons. Perhaps, in these circumstances, a regulation could be made specifying that if the handicaps had occurred prior to the age of 35 the payment should be granted without a means test. In cases where the handicap was sustained beyond that age, the means test would continue to apply.

With regard to the disabled persons allowance, the hon. member for Kootenay West brought certain complaints to the attention of the minister and I want to re-emphasize what he had to say. Most members of this house have had case after case brought to their attention involving persons who are very ill, who cannot work, and who, in all probability, will never be able to work again. But when they apply for the allowance their applications are turned down because they are not considered to be totally and permanently disabled. Apparently, under the regulations as they now apply, if there is the remotest possibility that a person may be able to move again he is denied this type of allowance. I am sure this was never the intention when the legislation was passed. Possibly the situation has come about because of the way in which the regulations are enforced by the federal and provincial authorities concerned.

I hope the minister will give this situation a careful second look. I could mention dozens of cases of this kind which have come to my attention. These people are totally disabled, but they are told that because 15 years later they may possibly be able to walk again, the allowance cannot be granted. Then there are those who are permanently, but not totally disabled. A man might be able to work with his left hand. This is a kind of argument I have had brought to my notice time after time. The officials say: We would like to do something, but the regulations do not permit us. Once again, I suggest the minister give this situation her close attention.

I should like to turn briefly to consider what might be done with regard to a new type of food poisoning which has been in the news of late, an extremely rare type of poisoning known as botulism. There have been several instances of it lately and I hope the minister will consider advising the food and drugs division of her department to see that warnings are passed to those who are processing food and to make sure a plentiful supply of antidote is available for the treatment of those who do contract this illness. The cause of this illness is a type of bacteria which occurs, I am told, in non-acid foods only, in the absence of oxygen, as, for example, when smoked fish is wrapped in cellophane and left for some time in storage. The unfortunate thing is that this type of food poisoning is not easy to avoid because the food affected is unchanged as to taste, odour and colour. People have no warning that they are eating contaminated food. I hope the department will do everything it can through education and publicity to make the public and others concerned aware of this problem. I hope, too, that it will keep a careful check on food processing plants, particularly those handling foods which are wrapped in cellophane and which may be stored for a while before they are used.

To turn to another subject, I wish the minister could give us a brief report, when she replies, as to the present situation with respect to the analysis of samples of radioactive materials which have been collected in Canada and around the world. I am sure she knows that a few years ago the United Nations was interested in a project of this sort. It still is, as I gathered when I was in attendance there not long ago. Samples of air, soil, water and food were collected by various countries. Canada offered to analyse these samples for countries which do not have facilities for doing so. Ghana, Burma, Pakistan and one or two other countries have sent samples to Canada to be analysed. The information is collated and sent to the United Nations so that we can keep track of radioactive fall-out in Canada and in other parts of the world. Maybe people think they know how long this material stays aloft after these explosions but we have all read reports of live material falling in large quantities in northern Canada and perhaps elsewhere, and we do not know how long it stays up. There have been a good many guesses but I understand nobody really knows how long it stays aloft, what happens to it when it comes down and in what concentration it does come down.

It is true there is a nuclear test ban treaty at the moment but one can never tell when the treaty might be broken. We hope it never will be. In any event, from previous tests in the atmosphere we know that this material is still coming down and we would like to know to what extent. I know we are supposed to be analysing samples from these other countries and I hope the minister can give us some information.

Finally, on the subject of tobacco I understand the minister is helping to convene a conference in Ottawa next week on cigarette smoking and the allegedly attendant evils. From all the information we have available it seems pretty clear that cigarette smoking does do some harm to people by causing some varieties of heart disease and arterial disease, and apparently it is a contributing factor in certain forms of lung cancer. I draw the minister's attention, as I am sure some of her colleagues already have, to the fact that the tobacco growing industry in Canada is a $100 million a year business. If basic research is not going on already in the laboratories that come under the minister's jurisdiction, I hope that some will be carried on to try to find what the agent is in cigarettes that may produce cancer, and if that agent can be found to exist then I hope some way of removing it can be devised. The industry is far too big a one to toss overboard without making some effort to save it. If there is some substance in cigarettes that causes cancer, let us try to find out what it is and try to find some way of removing it. I am sorry to take so much time but there were a number of points I wanted to bring to the minister's attention.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Monteith: Just before the item carries, Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the privilege of saying a very few words. I have not participated in the debate on the estimates of the department before and I will be very brief. I should like to repeat the statement I made when I first asked a question of the minister at which time I congratulated her on heading the best department in the government. I repeat that statement and as this is the first opportunity I have had since leaving the department I should also like to express my appreciation to the officials of the department who have been very helpful to all ministers who have had the opportunity and privilege of heading it.

Having followed the speeches that have been made since the opening remarks of the minister, and the reply thereto of the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas, may I say that some very worth-while speeches have been made during the debate on these estimates. I wish to single out two that have been made tonight, the speech of the hon. member for Kamloops and that of the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa. The hon. member for Portage-Neepawa made a suggestion respecting welfare grants and, while I do not intend to hold up the first or any other item, when we get to that item in the estimates I should like to ask the minister one or two questions concerning the fitness and amateur sports grants and the welfare grants.

I must insist that the minister has not followed the right course in not increasing old age assistance payments and disability and blindness allowances at the same time as she increased old age security payments. Naturally we are all most interested in the report to be made by the health commission. I wish the hon. member for York-Humber were in the house at this time because I should like to finish by saying that the contribution made by the hon. member suggests he should go back to using the ingredients he mentioned earlier in his speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister of health and welfare a question concerning item 1.

According to the 1963-64 estimates, the departmental administration includes 379 employees. Could the minister tell us how many of those officials are bilingual?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: No, Mr. Chairman, I cannot tell the hon. member that.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question. Has an inquiry been made in the Department of National Health and Welfare in line with the announcement made by the Secretary of State on many occasions in the past, that inquiries would be made to delimit how many bilingual people there are in each department? Has such an inquiry been made in her own department?

Miss LaMarsh: I am informed that about a quarter of the headquarter's staff is bilingual. The difficulty arises, of course, through using this word loosely in deciding who is bilingual. We have people who speak many languages. We have others who speak English, and speak French only slightly. We have people who speak German, Spanish, Italian or perhaps even Indian. We have a lot of these people. If my hon. friend means French and English he will have to define the degree. Even then this would waste a great deal of time and public money, and to what useful avail I am not sure. We have the best people we can get to do the job, and this is the only criterion on which we employ people in this department.

Mr. Gregoire: I see the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration beside the Minister of National Health and Welfare and he must have been as shocked as I was when she asked what we mean by bilingual, German or Ukrainian or Italian? I think the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration must have had the same reaction as I had. When we speak about bilingualism I think it is understood we mean French and English. I should not like to question the competency of the personnel. That is not why I raise the problem. I am sure the minister has tried to choose the most competent people. For example, I see there are 138 stenographers, and I think it would be in bad taste to raise the question of the competency of all these employees.

I referred to bilingual employees and I should also like to point out that the minister asked me to what degree I meant that they should be bilingual. I simply state that it is sufficient if somebody who is in contact with the public can understand and be understood in both official languages. That is why I asked the question whether an inquiry has been made in the Department of National Health and Welfare. The minister referred to 25 per cent, and that is what I should like to know from the minister.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Gregoire: I have asked a question.

Mr. Peters: Supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Lapointe, I should like to inquire whether a training program is under way in the Department of National Health and Welfare to bring about a degree of competency with regard to bilingualism on the part of the staff.

Miss LaMarsh: A number of officers of the department who have been able to speak only one language have been taking special language courses, and they have obtained permission to take time off for this purpose. When the government sets up the civil service language program now being arranged, those who wish to do so will be able to take extra training.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether the minister would indicate to the committee what plans she may have for answering the various statements that have been made and the questions that have been put to her in the several hours of debate there have been on item 1. I do not ask that she do it on the first item, if she will undertake to do it on some other item, but we would like the minister's comments on statements that have been made.

Miss LaMarsh: In at least two cases I have already written those who spoke last week on the estimates to give them the answers. One general question which has kept coming up concerns disability allowances and the test for them. It is perfectly true that the test is permanent disability. There are a great many people who do not fall within this classification and therefore do not obtain an allowance. The regulations have been drawn as a result of consultation between the two levels of government.

However, I am informed that within the last few years many people who do not qualify as being completely and permanently disabled, qualify under unemployment assistance programs. They are not employable and therefore they receive some assistance.

As all hon. members know, there have been a number of questions asked within the last few weeks regarding the basic categorical programs. I have indicated, as has the Prime Minister, that because of the fact that this topic has been requested by the provinces as a matter for insertion in the agenda of the federal-provincial conference to commence on Monday, no action was being taken in concert with the old age security increases. This, of course, is still my position, that until a full discussion has been held at that conference any other discussion may be premature at this time.

The hon. member for Oxford raised a question with respect to collections of samples in various countries to count radioactive fallout as a result of United Nations resolution 1379, passed in 1959. I have very little information with me with respect to this, but I am informed some four countries negotiated with Canada in order that details of samples, types, procedures and frequencies might be developed. As a result, we are receiving regularly from Pakistan samples of milk and food products, and samples of soil from Burma. I have not got any other information available at the moment, but I will be glad to obtain it and supply it to my hon. friend.

With respect to the topic of a number of speeches, the family allowance increase, my hon. friends have also placed questions on the order paper and have been informed by myself and the Prime Minister that this is indeed a part of the program of the government, a program for parliament, and that in the priorities which were given by the government, this did not obtain the highest priority.

All hon. members have been aware of this since the opening of the session when they heard the speech from the throne, and they have had no reason to believe it would be included in the legislative program for this session, since it was not mentioned in the speech from the throne.

A number of speakers also dealt with the question of medical care, which quite obviously is not a part of the legislative program of the government for this session. Indeed, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Oxford, the report of the Hall commission is expected within a few months, and I should expect that taking any action without having that commisison report before us would be precipitate.

If there were other specific points raised I am sorry, but I thought they were being answered as argument developed, or I may have written answers to them. If not, I shall be very happy to give personal answers to hon. members.

Mr. Choquette: There is one question which is urgent and which I hear a lot about in my riding. Is it the intention of the government to raise the family allowance in the near future, and to extend it to students attending secondary schools?

Miss LaMarsh: I would like to refer my hon. friend to the literature of the party which we both support.

Mr. Monteith: Get together.

Mr. Choquette: Does that mean yes?

Mr. Gregoire: As I have not read the publications of the Liberal party, may we know what is the program it is supporting on the point raised by the hon. member for Lotbiniere?

Miss LaMarsh: The legislative program of the government is set out each year in the speech from the throne, and I refer my hon. friend to it.

Mr. Gregoire: I thought the program was set out during the last election, and was referred to in a booklet of the Liberal party. I would like to know—

[Translation]

The Chairman: The hon. member seems to be straying from the item under consideration.

[Text]

Mr. Nesbitt: I would like to ask the minister a question again. I think she answered it but it was rather difficult to hear her because of conversations going on in the chamber. I asked her at one point if she would care to comment on checking up on the rules and regulations which determine whether disabled persons allowances would be granted or not. I thought she answered, but would she mind repeating the answer?

Miss LaMarsh: I did, and I simply answered what my hon. friend knows, that this is a categorical program with a definition which was inserted, and which is very clear. There has to be complete disability and permanent disability in order to qualify. A great many people who cannot qualify in that rather rigid category are now qualifying under unemployment assistance programs where they are disabled, but not completely so and not permanently so.

This latter program is being used more and more by all of the provinces to fill in the cracks around this rigid program, and that is one of the reasons why this categorical program, and others, are to be discussed in depth at the conference on Monday, in order that better welfare programs can be developed for the whole of Canada.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am glad this matter is being gone into and I hope it has practical results.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I read under this item: "Educational and informational publications, $45,000.00", a subheading which comes back under practically all items. Could the minister tell us whether those publications are in both languages? If not, what is the percentage of publications in both languages?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: I am informed that all literature published by the department is published in both languages.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

5. Administration, 467,800.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 5 carry?

Mr. Knowles: We are grateful to the minister for the remarks she made on the first item, as I am sure she is grateful that the item has passed. We are now on the first item under the health branch and I wonder if the minister could give us a little more of a look into the future so far as health insurance is concerned. Included in the items under the heading of the health branch are amounts of money for three programs, which are excellent steps in this field—the general health grants program, the hospital construction grants, and the contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. I am sure the minister will agree that, excellent though these programs are, they are not the end of the story. I know—and she has confirmed it—that questions relating to medical services are on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference to be held next week. I know it is easy for her to ask us to wait for the report of the Hall commission, but surely, after all the years we have been waiting, we could be told by the minister of this department whether within the department there are plans for a health insurance program which could be implemented if the party in power were prepared to take the step.

I can think back to as recent a year as 1948, when the Liberal government of that day announced the health grants program. We were told then that this was the first step looking toward medical care, or a health insurance program. Well, 15 years have gone by since then, not to mention the years since the Liberal party's declaration of 1919. I know the minister will say that these matters should now at least wait until after the conference of next week and that we should wait for the report of the Hall commission. Incidentally, it always seems that that report is a month or two off. But surely after all these years and the times we have been told to wait, we could be told whether thorough studies are taking place within the department, and whether plans are being drawn so that if the government were prepared to make the decision we could start with a national health insurance program.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, the Department of National Health and Welfare has for a number of years been amassing and collating information and statistics with respect to medical plans in other jurisdictions. This information is there, ready for the department to use as the first step. There is background material in the form of study papers, and so on, for the minister. I am not able to say that a plan for medical care is in the department ready to be brought forward. During the six months I have been minister, as my hon. friend must realize, my main legislative concern has been in the welfare field. Surely my hon. friend would not expect, nor would the public expect, action to be taken, because the Hall commission report has not come down and so much time and effort has been spent in undertaking that study.

When this report is received by the government and a thorough study has been undertaken in regard to it, we will then be in a position to move forward in the commitment which the government has, the commitment very well known to my hon. friend, in the field of medical health.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for the statement she has has just made. I freely admit that she has given—and I approve of it—priority, in the months she has held this office, to the welfare side of the program. I know the job she has on her hands trying to sell the Canada pension plan. She knows that she gets help from us on that.

Mr. Monteith: On everything.

Mr. Knowles: But I do hope that what the minister has said this evening will be recognized as being in the nature of a commitment and just as soon as she gets the welfare program moving along, and as soon as she gets the Hall commission report, she will go to work on implementing, while we still live, the commitments of the Liberals of 1919 and every election over the decades since that time.

The minister said a good deal of work is going on in the department. Of this I am quite confident. I wonder whether anything has ever been undertaken comparable to the draft bill that the late Ian Mackenzie prepared when he was minister of the department of pensions and national health back in 1944. The minister may recall that last Thursday night when I was speaking on these estimates I produced from my musty files a copy of that draft bill. I would not suggest that the very same bill be introduced today, because a great many changes have taken place since then. But I wonder whether it has been updated, whether that bill has been studied and revised so that we could move in this direction if the minister were in a position to do so.

Miss LaMarsh: I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I first heard of this bill when my hon. friend mentioned it last week.

Mr. Knowles: That proves that the minister must have been very busy with other things, Mr. Chairman, because I am sure her department is much more efficient than that. I am sure her officials should have drawn to her attention, before this, that important document that was prepared in 1944. I hope there will soon be another one, and that next time it will not be just a draft bill produced a few months before an election, but a bill that parliament will have a chance to enact.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

25. To authorize hospital construction grants to the provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon territory upon the terms and in the amounts detailed in the estimates and under terms and conditions approved by the governor in council including authority notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current year not to exceed a total amount of $26,596,275, $20,000,000.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question. Perhaps her officials have before them, in order to save time, the 1962-67 health services plan for the Yukon territory, as revised. If they have that plan before them, the minister may be able to advise me how the plans are coming along for the accomplishment of the 1962-63 objectives for the various centres in the Yukon, as listed in the report commencing at page 17. Has the minister that plan in front of her?

Miss LaMarsh: No, Mr. Chairman. I will have to look it up and send the information to the hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: Then perhaps I could ask the minister, in order to save time—I have not spoken on the main item and I certainly do not want to delay this one—whether she would undertake to write me comprehensively as to whether the targets that are set forth on pages 17, 18, 19 and 20 of this health services plan for 1962-63 have yet been met; and if they have not been met, why not? Also, have any of the 1963-64 plans been proceeded with in advance of their schedule?

Miss LaMarsh: I will be glad to undertake to do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I see that under items 20 and 25, there is a listing of the grants given to each province in that field. As it is one of the joint programs in which both federal and the provincial governments are taking part, does the minister intend to follow the idea of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) and give back to the provinces the jurisdiction in the field of public health, with equivalent sources of income?

[Text]

Miss LaMarsh: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but it is extremely difficult on occasion to hear what my hon. friend is saying when I am listening to the translation, and I asked my colleague to tell me exactly what the hon. member asked.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, is the minister prepared to give back the responsibilities under these joint programs between the federal and provincial governments, including the return to the provinces of income tax equivalent to the amounts given to the provinces as subventions?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend will have to rely for an answer to that question upon the responses made by the Prime Minister from time to time to similar questions put to him in the house. The proposals which will be discussed at the conference we hope will result in co-operation between the two levels of government with respect to these programs, as well as with respect to fiscal matters. I can say little more, with the conference starting in only two or three days. I would suggest to my hon. friend that pressing me on this matter is not in the public interest. It would not be something conducive to improving the spirit of co-operation between each of the governments concerned.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to address a question to the minister on the same subject, but in a somewhat different direction. I should like to know from her specifically whether the hospital construction grants have been put on the agenda for the forthcoming conference? I do not believe I need to elaborate, in posing my question, on the fact that the cost of construction in relation to the grants has altered very rapidly from the time when the present arrangements were made.

I did have a little chance as a member of a local hospital board, during what I sometimes refer to as my four-year holiday from this place, to wrestle with some of the problems involved in hospital improvement and construction. Certainly, the falling value of the hospital construction grants is one of the problems facing all local hospital administrators at this time. I am wondering whether the minister can indicate the intention of her department in respect of seeing that this matter gets a thorough discussion at the federal-provincial conference.

Miss LaMarsh: Well, Mr. Chairman, the dominion-provincial conference agenda is largely the result of requests from the provinces. I am not sure that I am the minister who should be reporting for the conference itself. The shared programs is an item on the agenda, and I am sure the hon. member knows that hospital grants are matching grants. In some of the provinces construction grants are somewhat larger now from the provinces than from the federal field. It is not my recollection that hospital grants specifically are on the agenda, but the whole problem of shared costs certainly is.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I know that on two or three occasions the population of Joliette has requested the Quebec government for the construction of a new hospital. I should like to ask the minister if she has received a request from the provincial government to build a new hospital, because I know that the federal government shares the cost of this construction.

Miss LaMarsh: I am sorry that I cannot give my hon. friend an answer. I have no idea what individual applications may have been received by the department through the provincial agencies. I would be happy to attempt to find out and let the hon. member know, if I can.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

35. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including payments to hospitals and other institutions which care for Indians and Eskimos as contributions towards the construction of hospitals and related facilities, $2,274,900.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if the minister would give me the same undertaking in respect of item 35 in connection with the Yukon Territory as she did on the other item in connection with this 1962-1967 survey by her department?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I thought we were coming to item 30; that is why I skipped a question. Am I allowed now to ask only one question about item 30?

The Chairman: Does the house give its unanimous consent? Are the hon. members in favour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, here is my question. Out of the $385 million provided for the hospital insurance act, what is the amount spent in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Are you quite sure that amount is listed under item 30?

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: That is the wrong item, Mr. Chairman. It was a statutory item to which he was referring.

Miss LaMarsh: On October 10 last the annual report of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act was tabled in both English and French. I refer my friend to table C on page 16, which shows the total payments to Quebec were $88,713,635.41 last year.

Item agreed to.

Welfare branch—

55. Family allowances and old age security—administration, $2,890,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the minister is doing very well, but like ministers who do well she needs to be reminded of what is still to be done. I was interested in her comment a while ago when she said that improvements in family allowances were part of this government's commitment for this parliament. She seemed to be picking her words very carefully. She said it was a commitment but it did not have the highest priority. I draw her attention to the fact, if that is her excuse for not acting soon in respect of family allowances, that by the same reasoning she must act as soon as she possibly can with respect to the Canada pension plan, because that certainly was given the highest possible priority during the election campaign, in the speech from the throne and in the first speeches that were made in the house at this session by members of the government.

We have been over this a good many times. I know the arguments. I know that there is a federal-provincial conference coming next week. I know the educational job that needs to be done in the various sectors of our society. But I remind her of what she said tonight in respect of family allowances, although I do not accept the delay in that matter; but on this matter of improving the old age situation, particularly bringing in the Canada pension plan, the commitment by this government to the Canadian people had the highest priority. I still call upon her and upon the government to act upon it as quickly as possible.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Monteith: I think it might well be pointed out also that while the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has put the highest priority on the Canada pension plan rather than family allowances, there was certainly an implication during the last election campaign that by at least last September, the start of the school year, family allowances would be paid to those between the ages of 16 and 18 who were attending school. This was definitely the understanding and appeared to be a commitment on the part of the government during the campaign.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since we are considering item 55 which concerns family allowances, is the minister now in a position to answer the questions we asked a while ago with respect to a possible increase in family allowances in the near future?

[Text]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Gregoire: I did not have any answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, we have not yet received an answer to the question we just asked.

[Text]

Mr. Choquette: I asked the question and I got an answer.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I was recognized. I asked my question and I have received no answer yet.

The Chairman: Perhaps the minister wants to answer all questions asked by various members of the house at the same time.

Mr. Gregoire: I see.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: Has the minister's department calculated how much it will cost annually to pay family allowances to children between 16 and 18 who are still attending school, within the confines of those matters promised by the Liberal party?

Miss LaMarsh: Yes we have estimated the cost.

Mr. Olson: Can I have the estimate?

Some hon. Members: Ten thirty.

Mr. Churchill: We are prepared to go on for a few minutes. There are only six items left and the session is drawing to a close. There will only be about eight days remaining to complete the other estimates, so I think we should go on for another few minutes and complete this department.

Mr. Knowles: There may be only six or eight items left in this department, but they are very important ones. As a matter of fact, I imagine my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre and others of his party might like to discuss some of these items after next week's federal-provincial conference is over. I think we have done a good night's work, as I believe the minister will agree, and I would suggest that it is 10.30.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the acting house leader if the forecast of business for tomorrow stands, and whether he could let us know anything about the business for Monday.

Mr. MacNaught: The forecast of business for tomorrow as outlined by the leader of the house last night stands. I regret at this time I am unable to make any statement about Monday, but negotiations will be carried on tomorrow morning through regular channels to arrange the program for next week.

It being twenty five minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

Supply—Items Passed

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day:]

45. Administration of the food and drugs and the proprietary or patent medicine acts, $3,008,900.

50. Administration of the Narcotic Control Act and part 3 of the Food and Drugs Act, $450,100.

APPENDIX

COMMUNIQUE ON MEETING OF O.E.C.D.

1. The ministerial council of the O.E.C.D. held its annual meeting in Paris on 19th and 20th November, 1963, under the chairmanship of the Hon. Halvard Lange, minister for foreign affairs of Norway, and reviewed the economic prospects for its twenty member countries and their economic relations with the rest of the world.

2. The prospects for economic growth in member countries are on the whole better than last year. The United States, the United Kingdom and Canada are now progressing at a faster rate. In other member countries expansion continues. In the expectation that this growth will be supported by suitable measures in the United States and other countries, the increase of the gross national product of the O.E.C.D. area as a whole for the years 1960-64 will probably correspond to the growth target of 50 per cent set for the decade of the 1960's by the first ministerial council in 1961.

The importance of internal stability for balanced economic growth was stressed. Costs and prices in a few European countries are rising rapidly. A stabilization plan is being put into effect in France. Measures have been taken in Italy; further steps must be envisaged.

3. As regards international payments, measures undertaken by member countries, and the recent trends of trade among them, have begun and should continue progressively to create better equilibrium between the deficit and surplus countries. It is important that measures adopted by all member countries to deal with their internal economic situations should continue to take into account their effects on the general equilibrium of international payments.

4. In member countries in the process of development, economic growth in recent years has generally been somewhat faster than in the O.E.C.D. area as a whole. However, it can hardly be said that the desirable narrowing of the gap between these and other member countries has really begun; much remains to be done.

The ministers considered it desirable, therefore, that the organization and its more developed members should continue to devote their attention and co-operation to the development problems of the less developed member countries.

Ministers noted with satisfaction that a new Spanish development program will be inaugurated in 1964. The ministers also reviewed the situation of the consortia for aid to Greece and Turkey and reaffirmed the importance which they attached to the efforts of member countries in support of the development of these two countries, particularly by the provision of long term development capital on favourable terms.

5. Ministers reviewed the work of the organization in the fields of agriculture, industry and manpower, and agreed that this work should increasingly be directed to the problems of adaptation arising from changes in the economics of member countries. They considered in particular that the organization should pursue its work on an active manpower policy, and on the retraining of manpower as well as on mobility of manpower and industry.

6. Ministers noted with satisfaction the results of the ministerial meeting on policies for science and technology on 3rd and 4th October, 1963.

7. The ministers noted that development aid has been maintained at a high level and on improved terms, although the earlier rate of increase has not continued. The needs of the developing countries are, however, increasing, and great problems lie ahead. Past results have depended largely on public support in member countries. The provision of aid to meet the expanding needs of the less developed countries will depend even more on such support in the future and will be related increasingly to measures of self help in the recipient countries.

The ministers emphasized the value of the confrontations of national aid programs through the organization, and asked members further to co-ordinate their efforts with a view to making aid more effective in response to priority needs in the less developed countries. They also welcomed the intention expressed by the members of the D.A.C. of relating more nearly the terms of aid to debt servicing capacities of recipients. Important steps had been taken by some members in this connection during the past year. Ministers noted the decline in private capital movements from the industrialised countries to the less developed countries and asked the organization to consider further what steps might be taken by industrialised and less developed countries to increase the flow.

The ministers welcomed the establishment of the O.E.C.D. development centre.

8. Since last year's ministerial meeting, the organization has devoted a great deal of attention to the ways and means to increase the export earnings of less developed countries, member and non-member.

The bulk of the exports of the less developed countries still consists of primary products of which O.E.C.D. countries are the main importers. Various methods for stabilizing and increasing the export earnings from these commodities are now being studied. Ministers stressed the importance of this work. Member countries should join in efforts to improve the market conditions for primary products.

Increasingly, however, the less developed member and non-member countries need to diversify their economies and encourage the production of manufactured articles for their own markets and for exports. The industrialised countries of the O.E.C.D. should facilitate this development by providing enlarged access to their markets for these products. The ministers noted with approval that full reciprocity from less developed countries was not being demanded for the tariff reductions expected from the forthcoming round of GATT tariff negotiations.

Ministers instructed the organization to continue work and consultations concerning the trade problems of the less developed countries.

They voiced the determination of their governments to prepare for the United Nations conference on trade and development in a constructive spirit.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

PURCHASE OF DC-9 AIRCRAFT—CONTINUATION OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement about the acquisition of aircraft by Trans-Canada Air Lines, and certain other matters related to aviation and the aircraft industry. This statement is somewhat longer than I and perhaps the house would wish, but I think this is justified in this case by the importance of the matter and the general interest it has aroused.

Trans-Canada Air Lines is today announcing that it is placing an order for six jet aircraft of the DC-9 type with the Douglas Aircraft Corporation. This decision has been reached by the board of directors of T.C.A. after a technical and economic evaluation of five different types of aircraft. A thorough review by the government disclosed no reason for directing T.C.A. to reconsider this decision.

The evaluation by T.C.A. was probably the most complete ever undertaken by an air line company, certainly by a Canadian company. The selection of an aircraft is a complex process in which many matters must be taken into account. The pattern of routes to be served, which is different for each air line, affects the calculation of both capital and operating costs. It also governs the assessment of alternative types of aircraft in relation to the stage lengths and distances, the frequency of service, and many other matters including maintenance, passenger comfort and speed.

If T.C.A. is to provide the best service to the Canadian public at the lowest possible rates, it needs the type which is best suited to its own economic and operational requirements. T.C.A. has decided that the DC-9 best meets these requirements, on grounds of both cost and service to the public. This, of course, does not mean that the types not selected by T.C.A. are not good aircraft; rather it means that they are not as well suited to T.C.A.'s particular needs in this particular instance.

In studying the decision of T.C.A. the government has considered the impact which each of the alternative choices seemed likely to make on employment and industrial activity, and was concerned that, whatever type might be selected, Canadian industry should share in its manufacture. None of the types under consideration could have been built entirely in Canada; in each case engines and at least a number of component parts would have had to be brought into the country. However, the Douglas Aircraft Corporation had already entered into an arrangement with the de Havilland Corporation of Canada whereby a substantial portion of the DC-9 aircraft is to be produced by de Havilland of Canada.

This does not apply merely to aircraft produced for T.C.A., but to all DC-9 aircraft sold anywhere in the world. There should also be benefits to component manufacturers in Canada, both directly and indirectly. For example, United Aircraft of Canada Limited, in the Montreal area, is expected to receive many millions of dollars worth of business both on the engines installed in the DC-9 and on other work transferred to Canada concurrently by the parent company in the United States.

I am very pleased that the T.C.A. decision will result in the acquisition of an aircraft having an important Canadian component made by a Canadian company and providing substantial employment for Canadian labour. Indeed, with the T.C.A. order acting as a stimulus to the purchase of DC-9's by other air lines throughout the world, there is a very strong likelihood that the benefits to the Canadian economy in terms of labour and production, including foreign exchange gained, will be greater than the value of the T.C.A. order.

At the same time I am aware that much public discussion has centred on the possibility of production at the Canadair plant in Montreal of another type of aircraft for use by T.C.A. In this connection I wish to emphasize that the government has given special attention to the current and prospective levels of activity at Canadair, and I can assure the house that this company will continue to enjoy, as it has in the past, a substantial share of the aircraft production work carried out in Canada. At the present time Canadair is prime contractor to the Department of Defence Production for two major aircraft production programs. One of these is the F-104 Starfighter program. Having recently completed an order for 200 of these aircraft for the R.C.A.F., the firm is currently producing a further 140 for mutual aid, financed jointly by the United States and Canadian governments. The production of these aircraft at Canadair's plant at Cartierville is scheduled to continue until the autumn of 1965. In addition to these orders, under arrangements made by the Department of Defence Production, Canadair is sole supplier to Lockheed California Company of wings and tail assemblies for all aircraft of this type sold by Lockheed. The other production program in which Canadair is currently engaged is the CT-114 Tutor jet trainer. One hundred and ninety of these aircraft have been ordered by the R.C.A.F. Deliveries are scheduled to commence in December of this year and to continue through December, 1965.

Canadair has also received subcontracts from a number of United States defence contractors, largely as a result of the Canadian-United States production sharing program. An example, which holds excellent potential for continuing production, is the subcontract which the company has received from Convair division of General Dynamics for design and manufacture of part of the airframe of the F 111 TLX aircraft now being developed for the United States department of defence. Subcontracting has also enabled the company to diversify its activities by the manufacture of items ranging from valves for submarines to components for helicopters. In addition to its manufacturing, Canadair performs a continuing large annual volume of repair and overhaul work for the Canadian services under contracts with the Department of Defence Production.

In recognition of the fact that it is only through the development of new products that a company can hope to maintain a stable level of future production, the government has provided substantial assistance to Canadair both through the Department of Defence Production and under the defence industrial research program of the defence research board. Important development projects are under way at Canadair which have been made possible not only by the financial support of the government but also through negotiations conducted by the Canadian government with other countries.

T.C.A.'s study of the purchase of new aircraft was made against the background of the corporation's forward plans for the next ten years. The effect of this planning is to indicate that much the greater part of T.C.A.'s fleet of turbo-propeller Viscount aircraft will continue to be needed throughout the ten years.

I am therefore now able to announce a change from the previous expectation, which was made known a year ago, that the overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg might begin to be phased out early in 1966. For at least as far ahead as planning now extends, that is at least ten years, the Winnipeg facilities will continue to be used.

This decision has considerable importance to the economy of greater Winnipeg. In the view of the government it is very much in the national interest that opportunities for skilled employment of the kind which the T.C.A. base provides should be diversified in different centres to as great an extent as is compatible with industrial efficiency. For this reason the continued operation of these maintenance and overhaul facilities in Winnipeg is to be warmly welcomed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister has made a very lengthy statement and it is, of course, impossible to analyse that statement without having the details before us. However, it indicates that the widespread division which, it has been suggested, existed within the cabinet has finally been resolved in favour of those who represent Ontario constituencies.

With regard to the lengthy explanation as to the benefits which will go to Canadair, all I can say is that it would appear, because the explanation was so long, that the potentialities for Canadair are much less than the hopes expressed today by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Compared with the Avro.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am very glad for that intervention, the statement regarding the Avro. Throughout the years we were condemned for the stand we took in connection with the cancellation of the Arrow program. It was a difficult decision to make. We only found out a matter of three weeks ago, when General Foulkes was giving evidence before the defence committee, that hon. gentlemen who now interrupt me had agreed on cancelling the Arrow program but had decided not to do so before the 1957 election.

Mr. Pearson: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no point of order. The statement which the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Pearson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the right hon. gentleman wishes to rise on a point of order, may I say that it is in keeping with his usual course.

Mr. Pearson: My point of order is that the statement which the Leader of the Opposition has just made is entirely inaccurate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder why the Prime Minister does not take some instructions from the so-called rule expert, the Secretary of State, who might point out to the right hon. gentleman that that is not a point of order. It is simply an interruption designed to cause a detour, but it will not succeed. I repeat what I said; the St. Laurent government had decided to cancel that program but he and his friends, including the present Prime Minister, agreed they would delay taking any action on this course, which they believed in the Canadian interest, because of their fear of the political effect.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is a false statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the ruddiness of the face of the Prime Minister is understandable under all the circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In so far as the announcement is concerned, naturally, as I said at the beginning, we will look at it and see what was actually said and what was meant by the large number of words that were used in the explanation. However, there is one definite announcement and that is regarding the Winnipeg situation. I am sure that will bring intense pleasure to the hon. member for Winnipeg South who for so long—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —has pressed to have the base remain there.

Mr. Knowles: I raise a point of order now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I did not have a compass with me when I was describing the constituency, but so there will be no misunderstanding as to the identity of the person meant may I say I was referring to the former minister of national defence sitting on my left. However, even that statement is not quite as clear as it might be. It does not indicate whether there is going to be any reduction in employment. It simply says that the overhaul base will be continued. I hope that statement means that the playing around with this problem by the present government for so long has finally been ended—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —for as far as we were concerned we gave the assurance that the base was not going to be interfered with.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has made two very important announcements. There will be general pleasure at the announcement that the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base is to remain in Winnipeg for at least the foreseeable future. I think this is good not only for the economy of Winnipeg and Manitoba, but it is a good decision for the economy of Canada as a whole. I know it will bring a great deal of satisfaction to my two colleagues, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Winnipeg North, who have done most of the work in advocating that the base should be maintained at Winnipeg. It will also relieve a certain Liberal candidate in Winnipeg, who is my namesake, of a good deal of his embarrassment over the commitment he made during the election. I think the decision is a good one and we welcome it.

With reference to the decision which the Prime Minister announced regarding the purchase of the DC-9, this is a complex and technical matter and we would want to examine the Prime Minister's statement more carefully. But I do want to say to him and to the government that while we want all the employment we can get in Canada, I think the Canadian people as a whole will deem it the government's responsibility to place the major emphasis on the safety of and service to the passengers who travel on T.C.A. and on the efficiency of Trans-Canada Air Lines. This must be the main consideration in making a decision of this magnitude. If the government, which is in full possession of the facts, has made a decision on the basis of that criterion, then I think they will have the wholehearted support of the people of the country.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Trans-Canada Air Lines has become one of the major air lines of the world, responsible for the safety and transportation of thousands of people each year. I am not sure if the reaction of the members of this house to the announcement just made is in keeping with the record and standards that have been set by T.C.A. I would say that Trans-Canada Air Lines is not responsible for the unemployment situation in Canada, nor should politicians be deciding what kind of aircraft T.C.A. should operate.

I am not an expert in aviation, but I fly by T.C.A. as much as anyone else and I have had considerable personal experience in flying as well. I must say that I feel it is a safer proposition to fly in an aircraft selected by technical people who know something about it than to fly in one that might be selected by politicians. Now, if the technical people of Trans-Canada Air Lines have decided that the DC-9 is the best type of aircraft to fly, and that in consideration of the economic operation of the air line it is also the best type to choose, then I think we should accept that decision because they have the responsibility for the decision.

However, it is encouraging to note that the unemployment situation in Montreal is not something which is just left to the wolves; because the announcement, as I have understood it, indicates there is going to be a considerable increase in the activities of Canadair and the aircraft construction industry in Montreal. I also welcome the decision to leave the maintenance depot in Winnipeg, at least for the foreseeable future, because its removal would work a hardship on a lot of people whose lives have been wrapped up in this particular phase of the industry at Winnipeg.

I should like to comment that it is now obvious that T.C.A. is entering into the field of pure jets. I am concerned about the number of feeder lines, which will not decrease but increase, I believe, and which probably are not in a position to use this type of aircraft. I urge the government to be very careful in their policies and in their considerations respecting the maintenance of these feeder lines, and to make sure that the service is extended to these areas. This provides an opportunity for private enterprise to co-operate with public enterprise in maintaining the essential transportation policies which the Canadian people require.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the announcement just made by the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Pearson) reminds me of someone who makes you take a dose of castor oil by offering you at the same time a spoonful of sugar.

[Mr. Thompson.]

I have absolutely no intention of discussing the report of the directors or the experts of T.C.A. who suggested the purchase of six DC-9 aircraft instead of Caravelle aircraft. The latter was widely spoken of and for a while it particularly interested government members from the province of Quebec and from other parts of Canada who decided in favour of the Caravelle instead of the DC-9.

According to experts, the Caravelle has already stood the test of experience, but not the DC-9.

The castor oil is referred to in this morning's Le Devoir which said:

> By choosing the DC-9, Ottawa will deprive Quebec of a $55 million contract. Even if Ottawa chose the Caravelle, Toronto would build the DC-9.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am a little amazed at the attitude of my hon. friends opposite who gave a real loud applause at the announcement made by the right hon. Prime Minister although they themselves demanded the purchase of the Caravelle for the whole of Canada or to meet the needs of T.C.A.

I repeat that there is no question of criticizing the decision of experts because they know what they are doing. But we must recognize that some experts chose the Caravelle while some others preferred the DC-9.

The spoonful of sugar is the announcement that the air base in Winnipeg will be operated for another ten years and that overhaul and maintenance operations will continue to be done there as in the past. I am glad of that.

As for Montreal, we are told that the Royal Canadian Air Force will award contracts to Canadair and that United Aircraft of Montreal will produce parts and accessories. The only thing is that the DC-9 will not be built in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the government cannot reverse its decision, but I should like to point out to the Prime Minister and to the members of his cabinet that Quebec has the highest level of unemployment at present and that every effort should be made to reduce the chronic unemployment which has been afflicting that province for years.

Millions of dollars of expenditures will have to be made for the production of those aircraft and the industrialization that will follow. I am all for the distribution of that money according to the needs of the provinces since Quebec will have its share, but I feel that the government should have favoured the less developed and less progressive areas.

We have to swallow the dose of castor oil. The spoonful of sugar makes it easier, but we still maintain that the government should have chosen the Caravelle instead of the DC-9.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can give an assurance that the overhaul and maintenance work that will be required on the proposed new jets will be done at the base in Winnipeg.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport supplementary to the question put to him by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. In view of the minister's statement that he could not assure that the work on the DC-9 would be done at Winnipeg, can he say, since the base is being maintained, what work will be done there and the extent of the employment that will be maintained at Winnipeg through the foreseeable future?

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if I might suggest that before questions are asked on this subject the text of the statement made this morning be read carefully, because it deals with the point raised. This overhaul base situation has caused grave concern in Winnipeg because of conflicting statements and misinformation that got out before I had responsibility in the department. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will appreciate this. There were differences in announcements made by him in Winnipeg during the election campaign and statements made by the minister of transport of that day—

Mr. Churchill: No, sir.

Mr. McIlraith: —and the T.C.A. officials announcements. This has become a matter of great worry to the people of Winnipeg.

The maintenance work that is envisaged, and this is related to the announcement made on the acquisition of new aircraft, is the work on the Viscount, and it will be seen on reading the statement that the announcement infers keeping the Viscount aircraft in operation, whereas the fears in Winnipeg arose from the fact that the Viscounts were being taken out of operation, starting early in 1966, with the closing of the base as that operation proceeded. Indeed it was indicated it would proceed rapidly.

I would ask hon. members to check the statement quite carefully, but it is predicated on the maintenance base continuing the same kind of work that it is doing now.

Mr. Churchill: We will have to read the statement plus Hansard.

Mr. McIlraith: And it is predicated on the planning involved in the purchase of aircraft, which is firm through to 1973.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, may I ask the minister what will happen to the Winnipeg maintenance and overhaul base when the Viscount has been phased out? Is this assurance only for these few years?

Mr. Pickersgill: It isn't going to be phased out for 10 years.

Mr. McIlraith: I think this should be put in perspective. The facts of the matter are that the announcement this morning dealt with employment for 10 years ahead; in the last 10 years employment in T.C.A. at Winnipeg has increased by 23 per cent. To go beyond the year 1973 in a definitive announcement as to the precise nature of work that would be done in a base doing overhaul and maintenance work would, in my view, be irresponsible.

Mr. Knowles: During the 10 year period will employment be maintained more or less at the present level—

Mr. Pearson: It may be increased.

Mr. Knowles: —or will it be nibbled away as was the case during the last few years?

Mr. McIlraith: I would hope it would be maintained and probably increased, but I cannot be precise on the matter at the moment.

[Later:]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the reference to General Foulkes earlier today in this chamber, is the Prime Minister in possession of any further information or reports concerning the course of action then taken?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, shortly after General Foulkes appeared before the defence committee he visited me to protest at the interpretation which had been given to his evidence. I asked him, if that were the case, whether he would send me an exact transcript of what he had said, and—

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Either this is in order or it is not in order, but these self-explanatory statements in answer to suggested questions are not in keeping with the rules of this house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this question arises out of a statement made a few minutes ago by the right hon. gentleman, which is now on the record and will have been reported. Therefore I think in justice to General Foulkes, who cannot speak for himself in this house, the question is in order and I should be able to put on the record in answer to the question exactly what he said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I again rise on a point of order and ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. gentleman wants to revert to motions in order to make a self-exculpatory statement I have no objection, but this is no place for this kind of infraction of the rules.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, continuing my answer to the question—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. I ask for a ruling here, instead of this contemptuous attitude on the part of the Prime Minister.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to bring to the attention of the house the fact that the right hon. gentleman knows full well that when he is dealing with a matter concerning a statement made by a minister in this house, he must deal with that statement and with nothing extraneous to it. In his statement the right hon. gentleman opposite dealt with a matter which was entirely extraneous—

Mr. Monteith: Who started it? The Prime Minister.

Mr. Chevrier: Just a moment. That part of his statement was totally out of order. I remember full well how we when on the other side of the house were called to order at any time—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was the interruption which called for an answer from me.

Mr. Speaker: It is a new experience for me to have to interrupt two hon. members who are ministers, but I do think the point is reasonably well taken that if the statement is a long statement we should revert to motions.

Mr. Pearson: The statement is in reply to a question which was asked in view of what the right hon. gentleman said about a particular man. It is a very short statement. Reference to the verbatim evidence which was given will clear this matter up, out of fairness to General Foulkes, and it will take about 30 seconds to make it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If this is a reversion to motions I have no objection whatsoever, but this present course is improper.

Mr. Chevrier: So was your statement.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is improper to place before the house questions arising in connection with statements made to a committee.

Mr. Speaker: May I refer hon. members to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 181(1):

> Questions must be answered briefly and distinctly, and be limited to the necessary explanations, though a certain latitude is permitted to members of the crown whenever they find it necessary to extend their remarks with the view of clearly explaining the matter in question.

In view of the fact that it is the Prime Minister who is making this request a certain latitude should be given, but I would have to leave it up to his good taste to restrict the latitude as much as possible.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, there is another point of order which I think Your Honour must consider and which has not yet been placed before you. If the Prime Minister is about to straighten out something which took place in a committee of the house, I submit he is out of order because that committee has not yet reported. If the Prime Minister wishes to deal with that matter I suggest he had better find some way of doing so which is within the rules.

Mr. Pearson: I am not dealing with this matter because of anything which arose in the committee but because of a reference made in the house to a statement which was made in that committee, a reference which I claim was inaccurate. I am trying to clear up that inaccuracy. That is all I have in mind.

Mr. Knowles: If the Leader of the Opposition was out of order in referring to what went on in the committee he should have been ruled out of order at the time; but if he was not ruled out of order, that does not make it proper for the Prime Minister to pursue a line which is out of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not out of order. I was making a statement when I was interrupted. It was one of those interruptions made by an hon. member sitting in his place; "What about the Arrow". I answered it, and the answer hurt.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that in order to permit this discussion to continue, if the Prime Minister would like to revert to motions and the house gave its consent, we could follow that procedure—

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, the Prime Minister indicated that he was about to read a verbatim report of what was said in the committee. The committee has not reported to the House of Commons; therefore he would not be in order in doing such a thing. It is on that point that Your Honour would have to rule.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if might be heard on the point of order. I think it might be helpful if I read the question which was asked. The question is "In view of the reference made to General Foulkes, has the Prime Minister a report of what the general actually said about the Arrow cancellation?". It is clear that the answer was to be what the general actually said, as disclosed to the Prime Minister; because General Foulkes was concerned with the information which had appeared in the press of Canada, concerned with what he felt was a mistake. So I suggest the approach made by the right hon. Prime Minister is in order.

Mr. Speaker: If the Prime Minister could give a short answer without referring to what went on in the committee he might be in order.

Mr. Pearson: What I propose to do in answering this question is to repeat what General Foulkes told me. He said, and he gave me a copy of his evidence—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Pearson: But to end this matter, if hon. members opposite do not wish to have on the record the exact words he used, as given to me by him in my office, I do not wish to delay the house and I will see that the information is given to the press.

Some hon. Members: They are afraid of the truth.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege. The remarks just made by members of the other side of the house were not directed toward me, but I object to any suggestion that when members insist that the rules be observed it is because they are afraid of the truth. There is no one in this house who insists more regularly on the observance of the rules than the Secretary of State. But citation 324 (1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition specifically states:

> Until the report and evidence has been laid upon the table it is irregular to refer to them in debate or to put questions in reference to the proceedings of the committee.

I suggest that the decision made by Your Honour and by the house, that we should not hear this statement, was one which was reached purely on the basis of the observance of the rules and not on the substance of the matter before us.

Mr. Douglas: I also suggest that if General Foulkes has been misunderstood, or if his evidence before the defence committee has been misinterpreted, he has a perfect right to ask the chairman of that committee to allow him to appear again and correct any misunderstanding with regard to his comments.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

Following his statement concerning the purchase of the DC-9 aircraft, can the Prime Minister tell the house whether T.C.A. has called for tenders from the French company which developed the Caravelle?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: If the hon. member would read the statement I made, he would find the answer to his question.

Mr. Pigeon: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

In his lengthy statement the Prime Minister did not say whether T.C.A. had called for tenders from the company which developed the Caravelle aircraft.

Following the long statement he just made, the Prime Minister must be in a position to answer me. That is why I am asking this question.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Just read the Prime Minister's statement.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. Mary.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Thank you for recognizing me at last, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct my question either to the Minister of Transport or to the Prime Minister. Since the Prime Minister answers in certain cases and the Minister of Transport in others, I will let the two hon. gentlemen choose between themselves who is to reply.

In all the arguments which were brought up in the statement by the Prime Minister as to comfort, speed, service and cost, I heard nothing about safety. Can the minister make a statement as to the comparative safety of both the Caravelle and the DC-9? This is a point which is of major importance.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, I suggest that the rules be applied to both sides of the house. There is a rule that questions must be succinct, that they should not contain arguments and that they should be directed to one particular minister. Since we seem to be in a mood to observe the rules this morning, I suggest they be applied with respect to this question.

Mr. Pigeon: You are the king of arguments.

Mr. Valade: On the point of order, I wish to read some remarks made by the Secretary of State and say that I did not know to which minister I should direct my question, because the responsibility for a decision—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure we understood the point of the hon. member's question, and I think we have dealt with it.

Mr. Valade: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister any statement to make concerning the safety of the DC-9?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. I wish to assure the hon. member that Trans-Canada Air Lines made a most careful evaluation over a period of about two years through their engineers and other persons working on the economic aspects of its operations. They went into the whole question of safety as well as the other relevant factors which are involved in a decision to purchase a new aircraft.

Mr. Valade: How many test flight hours—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would wait. I have recognized the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the government has decided to buy DC-9 aircraft, does not the Prime Minister feel that it would be logical for Liberal members from Quebec to give their resignations as soon as possible in order to protest against that decision?

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Valade: I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can tell us on what date the contract was signed for the purchase of the DC-9 by Trans-Canada.

Mr. Pearson: I do not think it has been signed yet.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

PROPOSED HOLIDAY IN HONOUR OF FORMER PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-109, respecting Sir John A. Macdonald day.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, as Canadians approach the centennial of the Charlottetown and Quebec conferences and soon of confederation itself, it seems proper and desirable that the memory of the chief architect of confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald, be honoured by the observance of a holiday bearing his illustrious name. This bill proposes such a holiday on the Monday following his birthday, January 11.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved that the house do go into committee of the whole at its next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the office of representation commissioner and to define the duties of the commissioner under the said measure, in addition to those assigned to him under the Canada Elections Act and under a measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith; to provide for the salary and expenses of the commissioner; to provide for the appointment of a substitute commissioner and for the payment of his salary and expenses; to authorize the commissioner to appoint such officers and employees as are necessary for the conduct of his office and to engage on a temporary basis persons having technical or specialized knowledge of matters relating to the work of the commissioner; to increase the salary of the chief electoral officer of Canada and to effect certain other changes in the Canada Elections Act consequential upon the said measure, and to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund under the authority of the said measure of all amounts required for the payment of salary and other expenses under the said measure and under the measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions, including expenses of administration thereunder.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON ARRESTED CANADIANS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he is in a position to give any further report regarding the situation of the Canadians at present imprisoned in Cuba and awaiting trial; and whether he has decided on the course suggested by me yesterday, of communicating directly with Premier Castro?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the house would expect, we are of course following this matter as closely as possible. The Secretary of State for External Affairs saw the Cuban ambassador last night and has been in telephonic communication with our own embassy in Cuba, and our ambassador in Cuba has seen the foreign minister there. I am sure hon. members of the house recognize that the government, from the cabinet to the officials concerned in the Department of External Affairs and in our embassy in Havana, have from the beginning of this case felt the gravest concern for the welfare of these two men. We have taken and will continue to take every step that we think can be of assistance to them. Our views on all aspects of the arrest and the prospective trial have, as I have already indicated to the house, been repeatedly conveyed to the Cuban government through every channel which is open to us.

If we thought it would be helpful to the two accused to tell the house in detail what has been said between the Canadian and Cuban governments, my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I would have done so before this, and would do so now. But I ask the house and my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition, who I know shares our grave concern, not to press me for a further statement this morning. The trial is scheduled for tomorrow, and we hope and earnestly pray that our anxiety will have been relieved before the house reassembles on Monday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not allowed to make a comment at this time, excepting that I should be permitted to say that the house joins with the Prime Minister in the expression of the view that nothing be done that would in any way hamper or cause potential difficulties. I would, however—circumscribed by the Prime Minister's suggestion, which I entirely accept—ask the Prime Minister, without requiring an answer, to make representation to the government of Cuba that whatever the sentences, they be not summarily carried into effect, so that further steps might be taken, if necessary through the United Nations.

Mr. Pearson: I appreciate very much the attitude of my right hon. friend and of other members of the house on this matter, and I can assure him the single point he has just mentioned has been made abundantly clear to the Cuban government on more than one occasion by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, but before doing so I might just say to the Prime Minister that I hope he can convey to the government of Cuba the great concern of the parliament of Canada and make a special appeal to them that if the death sentence is passed it will be delayed. The Cuban government must understand that all parties in this house take a very grave view of this situation, and that any appearance of injustice in the treatment of these men would certainly cause a serious situation to develop in the relations between our two countries.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has suggested that I might deal with this question. I want to say that having talked to our ambassador in Havana last night, I am satisfied that the viewpoint which has been expressed from time to time in this house and in the country has been brought home strongly by our ambassador to the foreign minister of Cuba and to the government of that country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And to Castro personally?

Mr. Douglas: I am sure all hon. members will be glad to know that. I think it will strengthen the Canadian government's hand if the Cuban government knows the people of Canada are concerned, and that it would be injurious to the good relations between our two countries if any action were taken that smacked of injustice or was peremptory.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the comment of the Leader of the Opposition I would just say I have not commented on his interjection for the reasons mentioned in the statement of the Prime Minister.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: I wonder if, by unamimous consent, I could make a statement on the situation regarding the Canadian prisoners in Cuba. It has just been handed to me as a result of a message received from Havana.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pearson: Since answering questions earlier this morning, I have now received a message from the Canadian ambassador in Havana which enables me to add to what I said a few minutes ago. Our ambassador called again this morning on the Cuban foreign minister, who gave him the following formal assurances which I quote from the English translation. They were given in Spanish:

> The Cuban government has assured the Canadian government that it is taking and will take into special consideration the Canadian government's interest in the case of the Canadian pilots held under arrest and awaiting trial accused of very serious offences for which Cuban law sanctions capital punishment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

If the Canadian pilots were to be condemned to death the Cuban government assures the Canadian government that it would give special attention to any appeal which the Canadian government might put forward on behalf of the pilots.

This is the end of the quotation. We cannot prejudge the issue of the trial, of course, even on the basis of this message. However, if there should be—I put this as a purely hypothetical proposition—a sentence of death the ambassador will immediately, on behalf of the government, make an appeal to the Cuban government at the highest possible level that the death sentence be commuted, if in fact a death sentence is imposed.

PENITENTIARIES

NEW WESTMINSTER—RECOMMENDATION THAT CONDITIONS BE INVESTIGATED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the question I wanted to direct to the Minister of Justice arises out of the trial of three men in connection with the disturbance at the New Westminster penitentiary. The jury made several recommendations, one of which was that an independent investigation be conducted into conditions at the New Westminster penitentiary. Is the minister's department prepared to undertake such an independent investigation?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that when the presiding judge at a trial receives recommendations of this nature he forwards them to the Minister of Justice with his comments. Of course my hon. friend realizes I have not received them yet. When I do receive them, the recommendations will be given consideration.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, when the minister has received them and has made a decision, will he acquaint the house with his decision in this regard?

Mr. Chevrier: I see no objection to that.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ADMISSION OF PUBLIC TO CONFERENCE ON SMOKING AND CANCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the greatly increased interest in the conference on smoking and cancer, would the hon. lady have changed her mind since yesterday regarding the press attending the conference and letting the public have maximum information?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, after the representations which were made in the house during the last couple of days, I had occasion yesterday to go back through the correspondence, and I found that in sending out invitations some months ago, particularly to representatives of the provincial governments, I undertook that the conference would be held in camera. I therefore feel I cannot make any attempt to have the press present. However, if representatives of the provinces should decide at the opening of the conference that they wish it to be open to the press, I would certainly be prepared to go along with that.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LANGUAGE OF INSTRUCTION OF CHILDREN OF SERVICE PERSONNEL OVERSEAS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is meant for the Minister of National Defence, but as he is not in the house at the moment, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister confirm or deny the item published by Le Devoir this morning and according to which children of the Canadian military personnel posted in Europe are taught exclusively in English?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion recently to go and visit our troops in Europe and I have visited the schools where the children of our military personnel are taught. I can assure my hon. friend that there are bilingual schools, and that children may learn the French language in all of our schools in Europe.

Mr. Caouette: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Associate Minister of National Defence tell us whether these bilingual schools are maintained by the Department of National Defence, or if they are those of the European countries concerned?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I may tell my hon. friend that these schools are operated by the Department of National Defence, which hires the necessary staff.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question on that point to the Associate Minister of National Defence. When he speaks of bilingual schools, does he mean schools where all the teaching is done in English, except for one or two hours a day devoted to the teaching of French, as is done in English schools of the country where just a smattering of French is taught?

[Text]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LOUNGES FOR SECRETARIES—RECREATIONAL FACILITIES FOR MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has he given any consideration to the matter of lounges for secretaries in the parliament buildings, and also for recreation facilities for members of parliament and the press in the suggested location in the west block?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I am afraid I shall have to take this question as notice.

GRAIN

CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION OF SASKATCHEWAN POOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce taken note of the resolutions approved by the delegates of the Saskatchewan wheat pool at their recent annual meeting, urging support for the two price system for Canadian wheat; or, if this system were not implemented, for annual acreage payments; or that the wheat pool continue to press for a better share of the national income for agriculture? If so, would the minister have any comments to make on this resolution?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member can put that into more capsule form.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, this is a very important question. I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce is prepared to answer some of these questions.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I understood very well the question put by the hon. member. I gathered he asked what comment I had to make about the resolutions passed by the Saskatchewan wheat pool at its recent annual meeting. There were many of them and the hon. member mentioned some. May I say to the hon. gentleman that I was present at the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan wheat pool and I discussed some of these resolutions at the time. I have not yet seen the final text, but I can assure him that when these resolutions are received they will receive most careful attention.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY AS TO INTERIM PAYMENT ON 1962-63 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I note that he has been speaking to the wheat board recently, and I wonder whether it is the intention of the wheat board to make an interim payment on the 1962-63 crop before January 1, 1964?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question directly, but I did have a discussion with the Canadian wheat board on the question of further payments. They have the matter under consideration, and a payment will be made as soon as it is possible to close out the accounts and do it in the ordinary way.

TRADE

CRITERIA GOVERNING FINANCING UNDER EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I also answer two other questions. One submitted to me yesterday by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich which concerns the basic criteria governing long term financing under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act. The established policy is to finance substantial orders of $2 million or more for capital goods in cases where long terms are necessary to win the export orders. Although no orders for boats or ships have yet been financed, they would not be ineligible. Constant consideration is being given to ways of improving the facilities and adapting them more effectively to the needs of Canadian industries seeking business in export markets. The question of the $2 million minimum amount and the question of adapting the rules to benefit small manufacturers are among the matters constantly being reviewed.

BREAD—PROPOSED PROHIBITION OF IMPORT INTO NEW YORK STATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The other day the hon. member for Villeneuve addressed a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue, and I think the question should have been addressed to me. The hon. member asked whether the Prime Minister was aware of a bill introduced in the legislative assembly of the state of New York with a view to prohibiting the importation of Canadian bread in that state.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I have now been advised that a bill to amend New York state health laws, which in essence would prohibit the importation of Canadian bread into New York state, has been pre-filed, which is the usage in that assembly. The legislature does not reopen until January 8 and copies of pre-filed bills are not available for distribution until, or just before, the sessions begin. Not all pre-filed bills reach the floor of the legislature and I am assured by some of my informants that this one is not likely to. At any rate, I can assure hon. members that the progress of this pre-filed bill will be watched carefully.

WHEAT AND FLOUR—COMMITMENTS TO IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to address a completely non-controversial question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

An hon. Member: Why ask it, then?

Mr. Olson: My question arises out of the fact that we are now approaching the end of the shipping season. I should like to know whether our commitments with regard to the wheat deal with Russia and the other iron curtain countries are now back on schedule according to the agreement. Perhaps the minister could also tell us whether the commitments with regard to flour have been met.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity of having a personal discussion with the chairman of the Canadian wheat board at the beginning of this week, and he assured me that to his knowledge all commitments undertaken by the Canadian wheat board and by the flour millers have been fulfilled. I do not really think that even during the interruptions of shipping there was in fact any default of any kind.

HOUSING

BREAKDOWN OF APPLICATIONS FOR DIRECT LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Regina City asked me for a breakdown of loan applications for the fall program of direct C.M.H.C. loans for home owners by provinces. I have asked the corporation about this, and I am now in a position to tell the hon. member the number of applications received between September 23 and November 15, was as follows: Newfoundland, 55; Nova Scotia, 70; Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, 78; Quebec, 4,023; Ontario, 4,681; Manitoba, 625; Saskatchewan, 553; Alberta, 2,306; British Columbia, 756. That makes a total of 13,147.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I could now direct a non-controversial question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him whether at an early opportunity, on motions, he could make a statement to the house of a reportorial nature about the meetings of the advisory committee of the north Pacific fisheries commission.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): My estimates have only partly been dealt with by the committee, and when they are considered by the committee again I will be prepared to make the statement requested.

PROVINCIAL REQUEST THAT FOREIGN SHIPS LAND FISH IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. I should like to know whether the government has received any request from one of the provinces that foreign vessels be allowed to land fish in Canada for processing. If so, has the government made any policy decision in this connection?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a request has been received to that effect. The reply given was that the government would abide by the existing regulations under which no foreign vessel is entitled to land fish in Canada.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to direct a further question to the Minister of Fisheries. Will the minister tell the house which province made the request to which I referred in my earlier question.

Mr. Robichaud: In so far as I can recall, such a request was received from the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): May I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Will the minister inform the house the name of the country that wished to land and process fish in Newfoundland?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I believe that a number of countries have expressed their desire to land fish in Newfoundland and in other provinces of Canada. Amongst those countries were Japan and Spain.

AGRICULTURE

REPRESENTATIONS BY EASTERN PROVINCES RESPECTING FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, but I gather he must be away displaying his auctioneering talents, so I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Did the government receive any representations from other eastern provinces on behalf of the eastern farmers besides the memoire presented by the farmers' union of Quebec a few weeks ago?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into that matter.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

CONSIDERATION OF EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration with reference to the coming dominion-provincial conference. Will the subject of the education of Indian children come up? I am referring particularly to those areas where a joint provincial-federal responsibility lies. Will this question be discussed at the conference?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all I can say at the moment is that the general subject of Indian affairs, including the relation between the provinces and the federal government and their respective responsibilities, present and eventual in respect thereof, is on the agenda.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

DECISION OF GERMAN AIR LINE RESPECTING PURCHASE OF CL-44 AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister of Industry. Can the minister confirm or deny the press reports that Lufthansa will not purchase the CL-44 aircraft made at Canadair?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Lufthansa has reached any firm conclusion. The Department of Defence Production is making every effort it can to assist Canadair in selling the CL-44 aircraft abroad.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the house leader. For the guidance of the committee of the whole house in studying the estimates today, would he let us know the order in which the various departments and agencies that come under the Minister of Industry will be taken up?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of this question. I think it would perhaps help the house when we reach orders of the day if I were to indicate that the Minister of Industry considers it might suit everyone's convenience if the item on the Department of Industry were called first and it was understood that a general debate over the whole range of the activities for which he is responsible to the house could take place on that item. There would be no disposition on his part to seek any narrow interpretation of the rules. When the other items were reached it would be understood that they would be dealt with strictly according to the rules, which is usual with ordinary departments but is rather difficult in his case and in the case of one or two other ministers who have several agencies.

The various branches of public activity that the minister has to answer for are the Department of Industry, atomic energy, the Department of Defence Production, the national research council and the department of public printing and stationery. The minister thought he might take them in that order, but if any considerable number of members felt after the general debate that they would prefer to have a different order followed, the minister is a very agreeable member of the house and I am quite sure he would be glad to try to accommodate.

Perhaps I could go beyond answering that question in order to say that I indicated two other departments that would be available when his estimates and those of northern affairs are finished, but for personal reasons on the part of the ministers it is difficult for them to be here. Therefore my colleague the Minister of Labour will be available to fill in until 10.30 if he should be required.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING SCHOLARSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a succinct and direct question to the Prime Minister. It is based on an inquiry this morning from the alma mater society of a university in British Columbia for the latest information as to when the house and the country can expect an announcement with regard to the government's promised scholarship program.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give a succinct and direct answer to that question, and I have given it before—as soon as possible.

REDISTRIBUTION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROPOSED GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. In the light of the story appearing in this morning's Globe and Mail written by Bernard Dufresne, could the Secretary of State inform the house as to the government's plans, or what the government proposes to ask the house to do in the field of redistribution? When the Secretary of State gets to his feet perhaps he might deal with two aspects, the machinery for redistribution that the government has in mind and the question of whether there is to be an increase in the membership of the house so there will not be a loss of seats in some of the provinces.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, a government notice of motion has been brought forward today. If the house is agreeable it is proposed to take it early next week and also a bill of which I hope to give notice before six o'clock today, which will have an outline of the scheme for redistribution.

Mr. Bell: Scheme?

Some hon. Members: Scheme?

Mr. Pickersgill: A plan, a proposal. In respect of this matter I might say it is the view of the government that this is a constitutional responsibility imposed upon the whole of parliament for which the government, of course, has to take the initiative because it is the government, but which it is our collective duty to discharge in the best possible way. It is not the intention of the government to be insistent beyond the point of principle with which I think the house agrees, that we should have an independent, non-partisan redistribution by persons other than members of the House of Commons. It is not the intention of the government to insist in any way on any of the particulars of these bills, and any suggestions for improvements or amendments would be considered on their merits. It is the house, of course, that is going to decide these matters and not any part of the house.

As to the other question, I may say that the government has no plans now—we will have to see how the house feels about it—as to amendments to the British North America Act.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the use of the word "scheme" by the hon. gentleman was scarcely in keeping with his subsequent remarks, but I am sure that was just an inadvertence. There is no foundation, then, for the report that the government intends to suggest to the house that the number of seats should be 286, which I believe was the number mentioned in the article?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no foundation for that. The right hon. gentleman is quite correct in saying that I used a word that was perhaps unfortunate, but it was also used in connection with the British commonwealth air training scheme, of which most of us were pretty proud some years ago.

COMBINES

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED PRESSURE ON AUTOMOBILE FIRM TO RAISE PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the Department of Justice received a brief from Provincial Motors Limited of Halifax, Nova Scotia, claiming that pressure has been brought to bear on this firm by Canadian Petrofina Limited to raise their prices? If so, is the restrictive trade practices commission investigating this complaint, and will the minister keep the house informed regarding the outcome of this investigation?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): My understanding is that a brief has been received by the director under the Combines Investigation Act. As my hon. friend knows, over the years it has been the practice not to give any information concerning an inquiry until a report has been handed down by the restrictive trade practices commission.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the house have the minister's assurance that this matter will be investigated very promptly and aggressively?

Mr. Chevrier: I can give the assurance that the matter is in the hands of the director and will be given every attention.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO LOAN OF $250 MILLION TO PREVIOUS GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question of which I gave him notice. Would the minister tell the house whether it is true that the Conservative government borrowed $250 million without interest from the Bank of Canada in 1962 and that this amount was credited to the account of the consolidated revenue fund?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of this question. It is not a fact that the previous government borrowed $250 million from the Bank of Canada. It is a fact, however, that it was announced in September, 1962, that the government of that day was borrowing $250 million from some New York banks at 5 per cent interest for a period of 25 years.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF GILL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I intended asking a question of the Minister of Labour, but he was momentarily out of the house and the Prime Minister sort of pinch-hit for him. However, he rather sidestepped the answer, so I am going to direct my question to the minister this morning. Can the minister tell the house when he intends to apply some of the Gill report recommendations in order to prevent some of the trouble the unemployed now have with the unemployment insurance commission?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I have nothing to add to what was said by the Prime Minister yesterday or to what I said on this subject on my estimates some days ago.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

MANUFACTURE IN TORONTO OF PARTS FOR DC-9 PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yesterday the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm asked a question concerning the manufacture of aircraft parts. The answer to his question is no.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TRUSTEESHIP LEGISLATION—INQUIRY AS TO INJUNCTION PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Justice, and I hope it is not inappropriate. Can the minister report to the house the status of the hearing for an injunction against the trusteeship; and could he tell us whether, in the meantime, there is any question about the authority of the trustees? I am referring to the trusteeship over the maritime unions.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday there was an interlocutory motion which was heard in Montreal testing the validity of the act which was passed by parliament, not on its merits but from the point of view of an interim injunction. The judge before whom the motion was made took it under advisement. I believe it will be some weeks before he hands down a decision. In the meantime, the act which was passed by parliament affecting the trustees and the duties and responsibilities of the trustees, I should say, is in no way affected by this motion.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1d. Department administration, $665,000.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I did not hear what you said. Would you please identify this vote, the page it is on, and so on?

Mr. Drury: Perhaps I might be of some assistance in this regard, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: This vote is to be found on page 3 of the supplementary estimates "D".

Mr. Drury: As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out last night, there are only some eight days, including today—

Mr. Churchill: "South Centre".

Mr. Drury: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre; excuse me. As he pointed out, there are only eight days remaining for examination of the estimates; consequently, as the house leader suggested, I will make a relatively short, general statement covering a number of departments, indicate where they will be found in the estimates book, the order in which we will be considering them, and if the house is agreeable I will suggest that a general discussion on the affairs of all these departments be undertaken initially under item 1 of the Department of Industry.

Following that we will have a detailed discussion, with the support of the officials, under each of the departments, seriatim. That is, a general discussion in relation to all the departments would take place, following which there would be a detailed discussion on each of the departments in order, under each of the votes.

The departments to be considered would be the Department of Industry, item 1, which is supplementary estimates "D" on page 3; following that atomic energy, which is in the main estimates at page 40; following that, the Department of Defence Production, in the main estimates at page 82; following that the national research council, in the main estimates at page 275; following that, the department of public printing and stationery, in the main estimates at page 335.

As hon. members will recall, the Department of Industry was established on July 25 this year in accordance with the act passed earlier in the session, and it was at that time discussed in some detail. For that reason it does not appear necessary for me to again go over the proposed duties and functions of this department, but I might describe briefly the progress which has been made since that time in setting up the establishment.

In discussing the setting up of the department it is perhaps useful to distinguish three separate phases; (1) organizational planning (2) staff recruiting and (3) operations. There is some overlapping of activities under each of these headings, naturally; but for our purposes today I think the committee will find this classification useful.

The first phase—that is, organizational planning—is now essentially complete for the Department of Industry. During the past four months a great deal of effort has been devoted to the preparation of detailed organizational plans, and the result is that the Department of Industry will consist of ten main functional branches, which are aircraft, chemicals, clothing and textiles, electrical and electronics, food products, machinery, materials, mechanical transport, shipbuilding, and wood products.

The organization of the Department of Defence Production is being altered in certain respects so that the operational structure of the Department of Industry and of the Department of Defence Production will be parallel. As a matter of fact the director of each Department of Industry branch will also be the director of the equivalent branch of the Department of Defence Production. These directors will be responsible to both the Department of Industry and the Department of Defence Production, and with this dual responsibility will be able to co-ordinate the activities of both departments in each industrial field. Legal, financial, personnel and other staff services are being provided to the Department of Industry by the appropriate officers now on the staff of the Department of Defence Production. These units, which are now in operation and have been for some time, can absorb very much more easily the impact of the new department's work than could newly created units. Furthermore, this arrangement will avoid unnecessary and consequently wasteful duplication.

The new department is now actively engaged in the activities which come under the heading of staffing and recruiting. At this point the deputy minister, as the Prime Minister announced, has been appointed, as have two assistant deputy ministers who, incidentally, in a way similar to that of the branch directors, will have dual responsibilities in regard to both the Department of Industry and the Department of Defence Production.

The directors of the present defence production aircraft, electrical and electronics, and shipbuilding branches have been appointed directors of the equivalent branches in the Department of Industry. Candidates for the positions of directors for the other branches are currently being interviewed, and we expect that these appointments will be made in the course of the next few weeks. The commissioner of the area development agency, Mr. Lavigne, and the deputy commissioner, Mr. Teeter, have been appointed and the recruiting of officers to staff the agency is now under way. In addition, the staff of the domestic commerce branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce has been transferred to, and is now working in, the Department of Industry. We expect that the recruiting and appointment of staff will be substantially complete by the end of the current fiscal year, and at that time the department should be on the way to being fully operational.

On the financial side it will be seen in supplementary estimates "D" that the total vote is in the amount of $665,000. Of this the major proportion, that is $535,000, is for salaries and wages. Most of the amount for salaries, that is $475,000, is for personnel who are expected to be appointed to the department between now and the end of the current fiscal year. Hon. members will appreciate that this is based on an estimated rate of recruitment calculated some months ago, and if this rate is not met the actual expenditure will be proportionately less. The remaining objects of the vote total $130,000 and have been estimated on a per capita basis using the experience of the Department of Defence Production. That is all I propose to say about the Department of Industry.

Turning now to the atomic energy estimates, votes 1 and 5, which, as I mentioned can be found on page 38 of the main estimates, I would point out that these votes concern the expenditures of the atomic energy control board, regulatory body set up by the Atomic Energy Control Act in 1946. The primary function of the board is to control dealings in atomic energy materials and equipment in the interests of national security and health and safety. It administers this control by means of a licensing system operated under the atomic energy control regulations.

Vote No. 1 is to provide for administration expenses of a staff of 15 employees and two advisory committees to assist the board in its operations. Most inspection of atomic energy activities is carried out on behalf of the board by other organizations, such as the Department of National Health and Welfare and provincial health departments, but the board's staff includes inspection officers with experience in the design and operation of nuclear reactors and in the problems of nuclear safety associated with the handling of enriched uranium.

Under the Atomic Energy Control Act the board is also authorized to make grants in aid of atomic energy research and training. Since the war the board has assisted Canadian universities to purchase and operate major items of atomic energy equipment to enable them to carry out fundamental atomic energy research and to train the engineers and scientists needed for future atomic operations in this country. Vote No. 5 is for the purpose of continuing this aid for university atomic energy research and training.

Votes Nos. 10 and 11 relate to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, a crown corporation. Its work may be divided roughly into three parts. These, of course, are closely related and progress in one usually yields side results that are important to the others. The first part of A.E.C.L.'s work, and one I will be referring to briefly later on, is fundamental research in all areas of nuclear science. The second, and by far the largest part of A.E.C.L.'s work, is to promote the use of uranium as a source of economic power. This means applied laboratory research and large scale industrial development. The third part of A.E.C.L.'s work is to promote the production and use of radioisotopes as tools in medicine, industry and many other fields of endeavour.

During the last parliament a special committee on research engaged in a study of A.E.C.L.'s work. I am sure members of that committee will remember that A.E.C.L. has centred its nuclear power program on reactors that use natural uranium for the fuel and heavy water for the moderator. This system is technically and economically attractive, particularly for public utilities in regions where water power has already been fully harnessed and where there is no low cost coal, oil or gas.

One of its many attractions is that the fuel system is much simpler than that of other nuclear power systems, since no elaborate plants are needed to prepare the fuel for the reactor and no chemical processing needs to be done after the fuel leaves the reactor, having served its purpose.

Canada's first nuclear power station has now been in operation for more than a year. It is located about 140 miles from here, near Rolphton, Ontario. The day to day operation of the station is under the control of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, which feeds the electricity produced into its electricity network. In the last year the station has been operated for specific periods to demonstrate that it is reliable and can stay on line for extended periods of time. Between these demonstration runs, components have been checked and improvements made to the plant. It is interesting to note that the major causes of trouble in the demonstration runs came from the more conventional items of equipment, such as turbine valves and auxiliary diesel motors, rather than from the nuclear portion of the plant.

This N.P.D. station is small, and generates only 20,000 kilowatts of electricity. Another station with 10 times the output is under construction by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited at Douglas point on the eastern shore of Lake Huron. Ontario Hydro is again cooperating in the construction and will operate the station when it is complete. The construction is going very well and should be finished on schedule less than a year from now. One of the most gratifying features, and I am sure this will commend itself to all hon. members, is that the costs to date are slightly lower than had been estimated. A.E.C.L. expects Douglas point to begin operating at full power during 1965, and when its performance has been adequately proven Ontario hydro has indicated its intention to buy the station from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Mr. Douglas: This is a heavy water plant?

Mr. Drury: This is a heavy water using plant but not a heavy water production plant.

But even Douglas point is being dwarfed by designs that are now under preparation. Requirements are developing for stations to produce 500,000 kilowatts, or 500 megawatts, and probably for several such stations on a single site. Agreement has been reached with Ontario hydro that a nuclear power station of approximately 500,000 kilowatts capacity should be designed, and A.E.C.L. is now designing the nuclear part of such a power station and Ontario hydro is designing the conventional part of the power generating system. Negotiations are currently under way between the federal government, the government of Ontario and Ontario hydro on arrangements that could be made for the construction of a number of these very large stations in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Douglas: Are these heavy water using plants?

Mr. Drury: Heavy water using plants.

Mr. Douglas: These large plants, these 500,000 kilowatt plants—

Mr. Drury: They are designed to use heavy water as the moderator.

Looking further into the future, A.E.C.L., in co-operation with Canadian industry, is studying ways to improve further heavy water nuclear power systems. The heavy water moderator nuclear power system is the technique which A.E.C.L. has been extraordinarily and uniquely successful in developing, and it is with a view to securing a greater use of that technique that the conversations and negotiations are being conducted with Ontario hydro.

Mr. Douglas: Before the minister leaves that point, what are the arrangements between Ontario hydro and his department regarding costs? Are costs shared for installation and operation?

Mr. Drury: There is no general formula for cost sharing as between A.E.C.L. and Ontario hydro. There are different cost arrangements in relation to the initial reactor at Rolphton, Ontario, and the one that is now nearing completion at Douglas point. There will probably be different arrangements yet again in relation to the larger plants on which negotiations are just starting. There is, however, a clear definition of functional responsibilities, in that A.E.C.L. takes full responsibility for the proper design and successful operation of the nuclear energy portion of a generating station, whereas Ontario hydro concerns itself with the design and proper functioning of the so-called conventional elements using the energy to convert it into electricity.

Mr. Douglas: Is the same type of financial co-operation available to other utilities across Canada?

Mr. Drury: I would say that in general the government would contemplate making available to any other province, or hydroelectric commission of a province, the same kind of financial arrangements which have been made in respect of Ontario.

Although Ontario is at present the province with the main interest in nuclear power, A.E.C.L. recognizes its responsibility for advising and assisting Canadian utilities in other provinces that might be interested in incorporating nuclear power stations in their systems. Canadian manufacturers are also being kept informed and are being assisted in learning the new technology so they will be in a position to supply components for nuclear power stations in Canada and abroad. A.E.C.L. is constantly having technical discussions with Canadian manufacturers. It welcomes the attachment of scientists and engineers from industry to work as members of its design and development teams, and it places development contracts with industry to a total value of approximately $5 million per annum.

Several countries have been showing a growing interest in the Canadian nuclear power system which I have described, and this has been demonstrated quite dramatically in the last few weeks. Toward the end of October A.E.C.L. announced that a technical agreement had been concluded with the United Kingdom atomic energy authority. This authority is building a heavy water nuclear power station that will have a generating capacity of 100,000 kilowatts. This station is different in some ways from those designed in Canada, but it also employs heavy water as the moderator. Under the agreement the United Kingdom atomic energy authority has paid A.E.C.L. $750,000 for the information developed in this country on heavy water moderated reactors. Canadian industry is, however, protected in that Canadian know-how on nuclear power stations and their fuel will only be passed to British industry under licence.

Last week my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced that two agreements had been reached with the government of India. One was for technical co-operation between A.E.C.L. and India's department of atomic energy. The other was an agreement between the governments for the construction of a 200,000 kilowatt station—similar to the one nearing completion at Douglas point—in the state of Rajasthan in India. The Indian government chose the Canadian designed station as the best means of generating electricity in this part of India. They satisfied themselves that electricity from this power station would be cheaper than any alternative conventional electricity generating station, even though the station is to be built on normal commercial terms. There is no Colombo plan or other aid, either as gifts or low interest loans. About half of the $70 million required will be spent in Canada, and normal Export Credit Insurance Corporation financing has been accepted. This selection of the Canadian system by another country is something of which we can all be justly proud.

I might say a word now about the A.E.C.L. program of fundamental research. This work does not often result in newspaper headlines, but we all know how important it is. This type of research gives the scientists and engineers greater understanding and a greater confidence in all their work. Since it is dealing with the frontiers of knowledge it stretches the minds of all those who are engaged in it, and gives the laboratories a pool of talented and qualified people.

Besides nuclear power, the use of radioisotopes is the other principal peaceful application of atomic energy, and is the third main part of A.E.C.L.'s program. A.E.C.L.'s commercial products division markets these radioisotopes for use in agriculture, industry, medicine and research, and also designs and manufactures lines of equipment employing radioisotopes as a main element. The commercial products division now handles over $4 million worth of business of this kind per year, and nearly 90 per cent of this is in the export market. They compete successfully with their foreign competitors without any subsidy, hidden or otherwise. They operate on a normal commercial basis. Perhaps one of the reasons they are so successful is that they have been plowing back 16 per cent of their earnings into research and development. May I suggest that we deal with the votes when we revert later to consideration and detailed discussion of this particular department.

The next department with which I should like to deal, Mr. Chairman, is the Department of Defence Production. This will take a few minutes, so I suggest it might be convenient to hon. members if we were now to call it one o'clock.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: I understand I should now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit later this day. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

The Late President Kennedy

THE LATE PRESIDENT KENNEDY

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY ON DEATH BY VIOLENCE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I rise, Mr. Speaker, to express, if I may, the feelings of shock and grief felt by all of us at the news of the attack on the life of the President of the United States. I rise also to convey on your behalf and, perhaps I may be permitted to say on this occasion, on behalf of all the people of our country the sense of desolation and dismay which we felt on the receipt of this news, a feeling which we share with the citizens of the United States of America.

I would also like to express our sympathy and convey our prayers to the wives and families of the President and the governor of Texas. I am sure that when the news came over the air our first thought was for them. I was about to add that with this sympathy went our fervent hope and prayers for their recovery, but I have just received a message that President Kennedy died at 2 p.m.

A heartbreaking tragedy has occurred. The world can ill afford at this time in our history to lose a man of his courage, a courage which he displayed both in war and in peace. It can ill afford to lose a man of his wisdom, his determination to advance the cause of freedom in his own country and in the world.

This is a tragedy not only for the President's family and for his people; it is a tragedy for all of us. No people outside the United States will share more deeply in this tragedy than the people of Canada, the neighbour of the United States.

It is difficult for me to say anything more at this time. Our hearts are filled with sadness.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): It is difficult to find words to express the feelings of all who love freedom in this terrible tragedy which has taken place. One thinks of the words of the secretary for war when Lincoln was assassinated: "Now he belongs to the ages". And as Lincoln died endeavouring to bind the wounds that followed the civil war and to assure to those who were negro the right to stand upright as men, whatever history may record of President Kennedy, his stand on behalf of the equality of all men without regard to colour was to me an earnest endeavour to bring about the culmination of the dreams, the idealism and the life work of Lincoln.

It has been the penalty of greatness in the United States that its presidents walk constantly in the valley of the shadow of death. It is worthy of mention that under the British tradition of government, leaders have been singularly free from the assassin's hand. One prime minister of the United Kingdom only—in 1812 I think it was—died at the hands of an assassin. We in our country have been free from this, except in the case of two of our statesmen, D'Arcy McGee and George Brown. A tribune of freedom has gone. Whatever the disagreements, to me he stood as the embodiment of freedom not only in his own country but throughout the world. Canadians, yes, free men everywhere, will bow their heads in sorrow.

All of us would like to convey, as the Prime Minister has so eloquently done, our sympathy not only to Mrs. Kennedy and the family but to the people of the United States. Free men everywhere mourn. Mankind can ill afford to lose this man at this time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all of us, like the people of Canada, are stunned at the news of the assassination of the young and far seeing President of the United States. President Kennedy was a good friend of the people of Canada, and I think the people of Canada had a high regard for him. I think they watched with deep sympathy his endeavours to bring about racial integration and a better understanding among the people of his own country with regard to the problem of minority groups.

This tragedy is all the more pronounced since it has taken place in a democracy; because in democracies there are constitutional and peaceful means to bring about changes of government. It is a reflection on a democracy when an assassination like this takes place.

I am sure all of us are grief stricken at this sad news. I know that the Prime Minister will convey to Mrs. Kennedy, to Vice President Lyndon Johnson and to the government of the United States our deepest sympathy in this tragic hour, and our hope that the government of the United States will go forward with its program to develop a better racial understanding in its own country and to promote the interests of peace throughout the world. The members of this group join with the government and all members of the house in expressing our sympathy on this tragic occasion.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I join with those who have already spoken. We are shocked and deeply grieved by the assassination of President John F. Kennedy of the United States. I am sure it is the thought and wish of every Canadian, not just those in this chamber this afternoon, that we extend our sympathies to his wife and family and also to the American people at this tragic time. We in Canada have watched his administration with perhaps keener interest than any other people in the world, and certainly we are grieved by this unfortunate incident that has taken place just a little while ago.

President Kennedy was a man who brought youth and a new ambition to the administration of the United States. He tackled the duties of his high office that carries such tremendous responsibilities with devotion and determination. Not only the people of the United States and of Canada, not only the people of the western world, but the people of all the world are the losers in this event.

As has already been said, we can ill afford at this time to lose a man of the calibre of John F. Kennedy. I think it would be well that when the Prime Minister sends the sentiments and sympathies of this house to the family of President Kennedy and the American people that he should also send our sympathies to the family of Governor Connally and the people of Texas.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, our group wishes to add its own tribute to that of the house, which unanimously extended its most sincere and deepest sympathy to those who are most sorely tried by this tragedy which has fallen upon the free world today.

The fact must be stressed that we find extremely loathsome acts such as this one which do nothing to strengthen the cause of those who are responsible for them. A man may be assassinated, but you cannot kill the principles he stood for. Others will rise after him to keep on defending his ideas and to promote democracy among the free nations of the world.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as a tribute to and out of respect for the President, our friend, as a token of sympathy to his wife, for whom this has been a dark year, and to his family; and as an indication of our desire to share in the grief of the American people, I move, seconded by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), that this house do now adjourn until Monday.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 2.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

November 25, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE LATE PRESIDENT KENNEDY

SILENT TRIBUTE TO THE LATE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are about to resume the discharge of our responsibilities for the nation's business, which we suspended on Friday after receiving the shocking news of the death of the late president of the United States. Just two hours ago in Washington the nation that President Kennedy led so brilliantly, joined by the representatives of countries far and near, paid a last formal tribute to him. As a mark of our respect and sorrow I should like to suggest to the house that before we turn to the business of the day the members stand for one minute in silent tribute.

[Whereupon the house stood in silence for one minute.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS— ADJOURNMENT AT 6 P.M.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that agreement has been reached by all members that we will dispense with routine proceedings and pass at once to legislation, and that at 5 p.m. we will suspend the hour for private members' business and adjourn at 6 p.m. Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING PAYMENTS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Railway Act, chapter 40 of the statutes of 1958, as amended by chapter 35 of the statutes of 1960, to permit certain grants to be made from the railway grade crossing fund for a further period of three years beyond January 31, 1964.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. McIlraith: The purpose of this legislation is to extend for a further period of three years, from January 31, 1964, an expanded program of assistance through the railway grade crossing fund for the provision of reflective markings on the sides of railway cars, for the cost of protective work at level crossings, and for the building or reconstruction of grade separations.

In 1955, following an investigation into the matter of grade crossing protection assistance by the board of transport commissioners, section 265 of the Railway Act was amended by increasing the annual statutory grant to the grade crossing fund from $1 million to $5 million. At the same time the limits on the contribution to any single project were raised from 40 per cent of total cost or $150,000 maximum to 60 per cent of total cost or $300,000 maximum. Provision was also made for the first time to allow contributions from the fund for reconstruction and improvement of grade separations which had become obsolete in the course of time.

The result of this was a marked expansion in the program of crossing protection and removal throughout the country, and a backlog of worth while projects accumulated in excess of the resources available to the grade crossing fund. In 1958 section 265 was therefore again amended providing for a further expansion in the maximum limits of funds that could be applied to single projects. These became 80 per cent of cost to a maximum of $500,000 for projects at level crossings, and 50 per cent or $250,000 for the reconstruction of existing grade separations. Beginning that year a supplementary grant of $10 million for the fund was voted in the estimates. This legislation provided a three year period for the expanded limits just described. In 1960 the period was extended by another amendment of the act.

This period will expire on January 31, 1964. The present bill will provide for the extension of the period for a further three years, until January 31, 1967. What is being sought today is authority to continue that extended limit for the further period of three years.

This legislation also deals with another matter which has nothing to do with expenditure. Recently in the supreme court of Alberta, trial division, a decision was handed down having to do with the speed of railway trains at crossings where protection had been ordered. The interpretation placed on the section of the relevant statute is somewhat different than that which had been the basis of railway practice. The effect of the decision is that once an order for protection has been approved, the railways are then required by law to pass over the crossing concerned at 10 miles an hour. It had been the practice, where crossings of this type had been involved, and the time for installing the protection had passed, that trains should be required to pass over the intersection at this limited speed. The interpretation placed on it by the Alberta judgment also meant that trains could not speed up once they had entered the crossing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Whose judgment is that?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Justice Manning's. Once the trains had entered the crossing it is felt they should be able to speed up. One result of the proposed change is that the board of transport commissioners can deal with the question of the speed when they are making the order. The effect of the judgment is that the practice of trying to get from the highways departments of the provinces the various crossings with which they are concerned and make the orders as early in each year as possible, although work on those orders might not be carried out until considerably later in the year, would have to be changed or discontinued; and it is thought that this would mitigate against the effective use of the grade crossing fund.

From my observations in the house over a vast number of years I must say that I think this is legislation of a nature that has commended itself to all parties in the house, and I would hope that the legislation for which leave is now being sought would appeal to the house in the same way.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether it would be in order at this time for me to ask the minister a question regarding these level crossing procedures. Has the government given consideration to the brief submitted by the Canadian Automobile Association and the representations of other road safety organizations, which I understand are advocating the arm type of railway crossing guard protection involving the lowering of the guard at the crossing? Further, has the department considered the wisdom of guarding crossing approaches by means of the standard highway safety signs used in the provinces?

Mr. McIlraith: I think I should point out to the hon. member for New Westminster that this is a matter that is dealt with by the board of transport commissioners, not by the department. Briefs have been submitted to them. The board of transport commissioners works very closely with the provinces in this matter. The relationship is quite close, and I have reason to believe it is relatively satisfactory to both parties concerned. The program also appears to have had some effect in reducing the number of accidents. I think hon. members will be glad to know that there is a declining number of accidents at these crossings each year. That process has gone on since 1958. This is particularly significant when you bear in mind the sharply increased number of automobiles on the highways each year and, regrettably, the sharply increased number of automobile accidents taking place each year.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the very important piece of legislation before the committee this afternoon. That it is important practically every member in the house will agree, because they will have memories of tragic accidents that have occurred at level crossings in their ridings. I well remember some that have occurred in my riding or adjacent to it. One accident that stands out in my mind particularly took place at Hillsburgh, a few miles from Guelph, just a few short months ago. A school bus was struck by a train. Quite a number of young students as well as the driver of the bus were killed, and there were serious injuries to others riding in the bus.

Grade crossing separation is a progressive practice that has been going on for some time, and a great many have been installed at level crossings throughout the country. The fact is that trains are not running as regularly as they used to because of the reduction in traffic, but I think it is just as imperative now as it ever was that grade crossing separations be carried out. People become careless. When they come to a railway crossing they should realize that the only way to get across safely is to proceed on the basis that any time is train time, and take all the necessary precautions.

However, at times the public have to have this brought to their attention more forcibly through the installation of signal lights and crossing arms, which are still important factors in preventing accidents. In this day and age, when people are travelling faster in their motor cars and when railroad trains are travelling faster, I think it is important that this legislation be kept in force. I was noticing that in the estimates for 1960-61 the fund stood at $10 million and was then reduced to $5 million. Perhaps when the minister is replying he might tell us just where the fund stands at the moment. He might also be able to tell us how many applications there are before the board at the moment for the installation of signals, crossing arms or grade separation, as it is called.

There is one other point I should like to mention. When this act was being amended in 1958 a provision was introduced to make it possible for the railroads to put reflective markings on the railroad cars. Periodically we pick up our newspapers and learn that someone travelling along a road at night or perhaps during a storm when visibility was poor has run into the side of a train at a crossing. I well recall the arguments put forward in this connection by a former member of this house, Mr. Gordon K. Fraser. This was one of his ideas, that railroad cars should have reflective markings on the side so they would stand out at night. We know that some of the Canadian National cars are now marked in this way, and they are more easily seen as they are moving over a crossing during a period when visibility is poor. I was wondering if the minister would have any idea how far this work has progressed, and what the plans of the railway are for the future in regard to putting these reflective markings on railway cars.

This act is to be extended for another three years, and I am sure the people of Canada who travel on our highways will be happy to learn of this fact, because we want to do everything possible to minimize the danger of accidents at railway crossings.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, there is just one matter I want to mention. It is simple, but I believe it is important. We all realize that we are dealing with money which will be allotted for the installation of railway crossing safety devices. We are concerned about this because everyone knows that from time to time serious accidents are occurring across this nation which in the aggregate are taking the lives of many Canadians.

Not only are our newspapers full of references to such accidents but we each have our own experiences in our own areas in this connection. Only a few months ago in my own city of Red Deer a whole carload of people lost their lives while riding in a taxi when the car collided with a train at a crossing at which there was not ample protection.

I am thinking specifically, however, of a bus accident which occurred at Lamont, Alberta, a few years ago, in which a whole busload of children were involved, many of whom lost their lives. At that time the committee investigating this mishap received evidence regarding a comparatively cheap safety device which was actually demonstrated at the time. This device is activated by a low power radio transmitter on a locomotive engine and makes contact with any nearby vehicle that has the corresponding device installed inside it. Cost of installation of this type of device, both for the railroad and the automobile, is comparatively cheap and can be reckoned in terms of tens of dollars instead of hundreds of dollars, which is the cost of the normal automatic safety device. Because it is safe and simple, and because it gives a certain amount of protection, it could serve in many places where accidents take place almost daily.

I would like to ask the minister whether any consideration has been given to the acquisition of this type of safety device which could be used particularly by public vehicles, and in many cases by people who frequently use unprotected railway crossings. I do not think any of us can be complacent in the face of this appalling toll of human life which takes place month after month, and certainly this device is worth investigating. It would give much more widespread protection, at an inexpensive cost compared to the very expensive type of safety signal now being used. Does the minister have information in regard to this?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Wellington-Huron asked some questions, and I want to point out to him that the method of voting the money in the estimates was changed because it was found that the actual expenditures were not taking place in the year in line with commitments. The form of the estimate is now really a commitment authority, but it adds up to the same thing. It is a different and I think a better way of doing it. This method was decided upon in the light of experience, and there is no reduction of funds. The $10 million which was formerly provided in the estimates as a direct vote is now provided by way of direct vote and by way of commitment authority, and it brings the full amount up to the equivalent of $15 million a year.

In answer to the questions about the application, and so on, I should perhaps inform the committee there are about 35 active applications for grade operations; there are about 400 active automatic protection projects, and the rate of putting reflectors on the cars—whatever that is called—is about 6,000 cars per year. The number of grade crossings that are having reflectorized material put on the crossing signs is about 2,500 per year. I hope these statistics have given the answer to the hon. member for Red Deer. If not, and if he will restate his question, I will try to give him the information.

Mr. Thompson: I am somewhat familiar with the cost of the normal automatic signal device which is being installed and being presently considered for several hundred crossings, but I am interested in something that is cheaper, which might not give the same degree of safety but which could prevent many of the accidents which take place. Has this cheaper type of device, this radio controlled device activated from a locomotive installation, been considered by the department both as a safety and economy measure?

Mr. McIlraith: I find myself a little vague as to the device the hon. member is talking about. Is he talking about the device that would be in the automobile?

Mr. Thompson: Specifically, Mr. Chairman, I am thinking about the device that was demonstrated and recommended at the time of the investigation into the grade crossing accident involving a school bus at Lamont. At that time this safety device was suggested, and it certainly could protect all public vehicles. It would be a two instrument device, the controlling device being on the locomotive itself and the receiving device in the vehicle on the highway. It was also indicated at that time that it was so cheap that even private passenger cars could install the receiving end of this automatic signal device.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I now understand the hon. gentleman's reference. The safety device was considered by the board, but the difficulty is that it would not be effective unless it were adequately maintained in the motor vehicle. That is one difficulty in the matter; nor can the board require the installation of such a device in a bus, for example. There are some other limitations of a more technical nature, but I have given the short answer to the question. There are other lesser objections to it.

Mr. Thompson: I was concerned, Mr. Chairman, with the comparative cheapness of this device, and I was thinking particularly of public vehicles. The accident I was talking about, which happened in the city of Red Deer only a few months ago, concerned a taxi all the occupants of which were wiped out. It would seem to me that while you could not require it to be put in private vehicles, there would certainly be co-operation on the part of provincial authorities, who would be happy to give public vehicles this protection. At the same time it should be made available to private vehicles. I think something like this should be considered, in view of its cheapness, contrasted with the expense of the automatic signal device the minister is mentioning, in terms of its being considered for 400 crossings at the present time. I believe something like this ought to be considered in every possible aspect.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, this resolution seems entirely in order and even commendable, because it recommends the granting of subsidies to the railway grade crossing fund for a period of three years.

All Canadians know that grade crossings constitute a public danger which must be eliminated as much as possible through the efforts of the Canadian government.

Automatic safety signals are needed not only in some regions but throughout the country. By warning of danger, they will prevent a great number of deaths.

However, grade crossings are still tolerated in some cities. May I quote one example about which I wrote to the minister in order to draw his attention to the fact that in Noranda, in the riding of Villeneuve, two railway tracks cross Murdoch street in the very centre of town. Indeed, there are automatic signals but sometimes people must wait as much as 20 to 30 minutes before being able to cross these tracks. Traffic is at a standstill during this time. We request that a viaduct or an elevated road be built which would eliminate the dangers of these grade crossings.

We have now before us resolutions providing for works to be performed in Canada in order to give employment during winter to the greatest possible number of people. If amounts allotted to winter works were spent to build elevated tracks or viaducts wherever traffic is heavy enough, it seems to me that the grade crossing fund might make a large contribution to their erection.

Mr. Chairman, this matter is very serious and the settling of this problem most urgent.

I suggest that grade crossings should not only be equipped with automatic signals, but they should be eliminated altogether and replaced by viaducts or elevated tracks wherever there is a need for them.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport pertaining to this matter of railway grade crossings. What is the cost sharing arrangement among federal, provincial and municipal governments? The experience I have had with the applications presented by some municipalities is such that the railroads, it appears to me, are very reluctant to have these crossings protected, although there is a great need for this to be done. I have the impression that the cost sharing arrangement does not appeal very much to the railroads, in some cases. Also, is the cost sharing arrangement the same in all cases, or is it different in the case of some crossings than it is in others? Would the minister give me an answer to this question, please?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, to the extent that I can I will be very glad to do so. As to protective devices, unless there are special circumstances the cost of installing protective devices at level crossings, such as flashing lights and so on, is apportioned as follows: the fund, 80 per cent; the highway authority, 12½ per cent; the railway, 7½ per cent. As to grade separation, unless there are special circumstances the cost of constructing a grade separation to eliminate an existing level crossing, or to divert substantially all highway traffic from it, is usually apportioned as follows: where the cost is not more than $625,000, the fund 80 per cent or $500,000, whichever is the lesser; the highway authority, 15 per cent; the railway, 5 per cent. Where the cost is more than $625,000, the fund $500,000, and the remainder according to the particular circumstances. I think that answers the hon. member's question.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, nothing was said about the share provided by municipalities. Is there any arrangement in this cost sharing procedure under which municipalities must also contribute to the cost?

Mr. McIlraith: It is the highway authority, whatever that highway authority may be, whether it is municipal or provincial.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this is a very important resolution in that in connection with grade crossings someone is always fatally injured before anything is ever done about the spending of money from this particular fund. I am sure every riding has had a serious accident at some time or other before signals were installed or other protection given at almost every major crossing. It seems a great waste that this should be so.

I wonder whether the government has given consideration to establishing a technical advisory staff to provide municipalities or the provinces with a survey to indicate when a certain crossing is of such a nature that it warrants this kind of assistance. I am thinking of a particular accident which happened not long ago, as a result of which there was a certain amount of politicking as well as other factors. This accident occurred at a provincial railway crossing which was not under the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners. I realize that the board of transport commissioners does stipulate in relation to the grade crossing fund that if the traffic over a particular railway is sufficient, then before construction of the railroad can be completed these devices must be installed or that a separation of grade must be constructed.

In the case of this accident, as an election was due the construction of a by-pass became a political issue. The by-pass was routed across a railway on the northern trans-Canada highway. The police were very surprised that it took ten days before the first fatality occurred on the level crossing. To make matters worse, earth had been piled up to make a grade separation on the road itself, and the road curved around the pile of mud, putting the level crossing in a position where it was almost impossible to see. In this case the board of transport commissioners could not exercise authority, so the department of highways and the railway got together and made an agreement. To make matters even worse, I understand the agreement provided that if there was an accident on the crossing, no matter what the insurance was the provincial department of highways would cover the cost so the railway would not lose any money. The reason I mention this case is because separation of grade will eventually take place, but I imagine it will be some 10, 15 or 20 years from now.

A few miles from that crossing there was another grade separation over a railway track. For 15 years it kept settling year by year, and a little fill was added from time to time. Then an election would occur and someone would say "We have to separate the grade". A little more fill would be put in; then that fill would drop and they would say it was not possible yet. I suggest that is what is going to happen in this case. It was almost 20 years before separation of grade resulted in the first case I mentioned, and I suggest that if left to their own devices it may be just as long in this other case.

I am wondering whether the federal government should have connected with the fund a number of technical advisers who would be able to suggest alternative methods of grade separation where such was indicated. In this particular case there is a terrific problem in that there is no solid bottom at the crossing in question until 80 or 100 feet down. There is even the suggestion that there may be quicksand close by. So undoubtedly a difficult problem of construction is involved, and technical advice would certainly be advantageous. But this would bring about what everybody knows must be done, and grade separation would take place by means of either an underpass or overpass. However, it is a problem which the department of highways of Ontario is completely incapable of solving at the present time.

Another thing we are interested in and for which there is great demand in my part of the country is the amount made available for the supply of markings to give protection to traffic approaching a line of box cars crossing the road at a level crossing. Personally I had the idea that when we passed a measure similar to this some years ago, box cars would be marked in a similar fashion to the way road signs are marked and would be easily discernible when the headlights of a car 500 or 1,000 feet away illuminated them. I think it would be particularly useful to have a broken line of marks which would allow a motorist to see there was an obstruction ahead even in fog or rain. Personally I have yet to see, particularly in northern Ontario, when driving around the country any of these box cars marked in a fashion to provide the protection which this house had agreed was necessary.

I realize that these devices are very expensive to instal, but I had understood it was agreed that it was mandatory to instal them on all new cars; that when locomotives or rolling stock were built it was compulsory that they be given this reflective marking, which was to be paid for by the fund. By this means, in a relatively short time we could paint all the box cars with this reflective paint so that sooner or later they would give this protection.

I have not seen, to my knowledge, any cars in northern Ontario so marked. It may be that they are marked, but if they are then the reflective material used is of no value whatsoever. The minister may have some information on this and it might be possible, before the bill comes before us, for him to indicate whether there are any of these cars in the local yards in Ottawa which we could look at. I think we have been wasting our money if this provision does not give better protection than that which I have seen on the new cars of the Canadian National Railways, the markings of which are in no way, in my opinion, reflective.

This matter is very important, Mr. Chairman. Much useless slaughter occurs on our highways because of the inability of motorists to ascertain when trains are approaching level crossings. There are no doubt many areas where the municipalities are going to have to be given some assistance to ascertain how they can provide separation of grade in a reasonable manner. One of the previous speakers mentioned that the municipalities, the towns, villages and townships, are quite often more interested in providing this protection than the department of highways. It would seem quite easy for the department of highways in most cases to provide grade separation on new track if the traffic crossing it so warrants. But for municipalities, and especially small municipalities, it is difficult to find the money and sometimes, until disaster strikes, to find the will and support necessary to provide these facilities.

I mentioned the fact that in my home town, which is a relatively small town, there was considerable complaint about children having to cross a level crossing which was situated about three blocks from where signals were installed near the station. There was considerable debate over whether a new block signal should be installed or whether they should hook a relay on to the block system already there. While that matter was being debated, because the problem was not immediate nothing was done and a woman was killed. Within a few days these block signals were installed; it seems that the money was forthcoming.

I strongly urge that the technical advice available to the department should be supplied to the provinces and the municipalities, as well as to some of the railways which do not come under the board of transport commissioners. I do not think it would be difficult for us to furnish this information.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I would not want the resolution now before us to be disposed of, without submitting to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) a few observations concerning the welfare of the inhabitants of my riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

The minister is well aware that my riding is criss-crossed by both our railway systems, the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National. My riding is cut in half by two main lines operated by the Canadian National, and the numerous level crossings are a hazard to the lives of my fellow citizens. I submit that all necessary measures should be taken to avoid further accidents.

In the last few years, with the co-operation of the minister's predecessor, many level crossings were equipped with light signals. Unfortunately, at certain crossings, serious accidents have occurred quite recently. I am thinking of the accident which killed several people at St. Eugene, and of another one which killed two inhabitants of Montreal at St. Liboire.

Flashing signals have now been installed, but it is most unfortunate that action had not been taken sooner to spare lives.

On the other hand, I know that a request for flashing signal lights has been made concerning level crossings at St. George and St. Edward in the parish of St. Liboire. Orders have been issued for the construction of a protective system at those two places.

I also ask the minister if he could not use his influence to speed things up even more.

There is also the crossing at St. Augustin for which no request has been made, in view of its importance, special consideration should be given to the installation of an adequate protective system there.

I would also like to renew the request I made some time ago to the minister for the installation of flashing light signals at the level crossing to be found on the seventh range of the parish of St. Germain de Grantham.

The provincial department of highways has recently improved the highway between the two important towns of Wickam and St. Germain. As time goes by, traffic is getting increasingly heavier over there.

I should like to renew a request I made to the minister on November 5, so that delays may be reduced to a minimum in order to provide adequate protection to the constituents of St. Hyancinthe-Bagot in particular and to the travelling public in general.

Let us not wait until further tragedies happen before taking prompt action. Let us instead apply the saying that prevention is better than cure.

I am quite aware of the minister's dispositions and I am assured of his full co-operation. Should he need further details, I would be very happy to send them to him.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: In commenting briefly on this subject, I should like to agree with the previous speaker that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. The particular problem I have in mind arises because of the increasing number of school buses which use railway crossings on district and country roads where the volume of traffic is not sufficient to warrant the installation of block systems which cost from $7,000 up.

I think it can be agreed that the 80 per cent contribution made by the federal government from this fund is generous enough, and that some responsibility should attach to the railways and to the local authorities themselves. However, the minister did not mention the maintenance of these block signalling devices. I know that in some cases such costs may run from $200 to $300 a year. Where they are installed on a district road the local authority has to pay the full amount, and the result is that they are not installed on a large number of these country roads where school buses have to cross the lines twice a day.

The hon. gentleman told us, I believe, that the board of transport commissioners had rejected the idea of a radio transmitter on the trains sending a signal which could be received in school buses. I do not disagree with what has been said in that respect, but maybe there is some other means by which protection could be provided. I think some research should be done, as was suggested by the hon. member for Timiskaming, in an effort to find some low cost device, some acceptable way of getting a signal to these school buses so they may be alerted to the fact that there is a train approaching the crossing. I do not say I know now of any device which could be of use. It is possible that research could bring one to light.

Certainly the problem which arises because of the use of these country roads by school buses is increasing year by year, and its solution is made difficult by the fact that on some of these roads there is very little other traffic. Perhaps some system such as has been suggested, or indeed a different system entirely, could be introduced. A number of serious accidents have occurred on these little used roads, and I urge the minister to take this matter under advisement to see whether something cannot be done about it.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak only briefly on the resolution, to commend the government for signifying its intent to amend the Railway Act to permit grants to be made from the grade crossing fund for a further period of three years from January 31, 1964. With the increase in highway traffic I would say that this type of legislation is almost a necessity. Undoubtedly it has resulted in the saving of many lives in the past and will undoubtedly save many lives in the future.

In my own constituency many beneficial changes have already been made throughout the county, but I should like to put this question to the minister. It has to do with the problem that arises when a level grade crossing within the limits of a town should be changed. I am thinking now of the town of Bridgewater, wherein lies a crossing that should be altered. To the best of my knowledge there has been some uncertainty about the authority that is responsible for implementing a change at this particular crossing. The railroad passes over the highway fairly close to the town limit sign. I should like the minister to clarify the legislation so that it will more clearly indicate the responsible people who must make the original representations to the government in order to have the crossing in question altered.

At the present time large numbers of school children travel daily along the highway between Bridgewater and the New Germany high school. There have already been a number of accidents, and although none have been serious I believe some changes should be made at this crossing. I have been informed they have not been made because there has been some misunderstanding with regard to the proper authority to whom representations should be made. I should like the minister to clarify that situation.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my wholehearted support of the principle of the legislation. I want to make a few comments in line with those made by previous speakers. As you know, Mr. Chairman, I usually look at things from a nation-wide point of view, but if you will excuse me this afternoon I will become somewhat parochial for a change. The Secretary of State is laughing; I am not sure whether he takes me seriously.

This legislation is good legislation, and it has been of great advantage to many parts of the country. However, with the increasing population and the consequent increase in traffic, and the increasing development of roads where there is no great density of population, the pace is too slow. That is the only criticism I have to make of this legislation.

I happen to represent a mountainous region, and many of our people are very interested in the grade crossing situation. First of all we have the problem that is presented in areas where there is density of population, and owing to the nature of the country we also have dozens of very dangerous railway crossings elsewhere. There are many places where there is a blind cut approach with a steep grade up to 10 per cent and an acute curve all at the one crossing. Possibly at such points there will be only light car traffic during the day and two or three school buses taking children to school and bringing them home.

We have had some serious accidents and a lot of near accidents. Under certain weather conditions, such as a blinding snowstorm, it is impossible to see or hear a train coming, and the engineer is in the same position with regard to seeing a car or bus. Apparently this problem is somewhat general. I have listened to the remarks of a number of members who have indicated that the problem of railway crossings in the less densely populated areas is serious. I want to join them in urging further consideration of this particular aspect of the railway crossing problem.

I suggest that in co-operation with the provinces a complete survey should be made of all railroad crossings that present any particular danger at all, whether they are in densely populated areas or in rural areas where traffic is light. Then an order of priorities should be established for dealing with these crossings in a particular manner. The more expensive could be dealt with first, and so on.

Previous speakers have suggested that some research should be undertaken looking for a cheap form of warning device or something of that sort for such railroad crossings, and I support them in this suggestion. We know it is impossible to ask for underpasses or overpasses in many circumstances, but surely devices could be obtained as a result of research that would greatly reduce the hazard.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Third, until these crossings in rural areas are properly protected I suggest it might be possible to consider changes in railroad rules. I am thinking of one mountain valley in my constituency. Freight trains heavily loaded with lumber and travelling at a fairly good speed pass one blind crossing after another some 10 miles apart. Where a train is hauling a load of lumber 30 miles to the famous Kettle valley railroad I think under such circumstances time is not a factor, and a few minutes means very little. Possibly some consideration should be given to changes in the railroad rules to bring about a reduction in train speed until something is done to protect these crossings.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, in order to meet the present need even with low cost devices, both in densely populated areas and in rural areas, more funds are going to be required than will be available under the bill to come before us after the resolution is passed.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I would be angry with myself for not calling the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) to the many disadvantages of grade crossings in the riding I have the honour of representing. Several of these grade crossings have no signals.

As a matter of fact, in an accident last summer at a grade crossing in a municipality near Megantic, namely Nantes, five members of the same family were killed and two others injured.

As far as the town of Megantic is concerned, there are six grade crossings in a distance of three miles. C.N.R. tracks cross the national highway at six different places. Three of these grade crossings have signal systems.

At two other level crossings right in the heart of the town, no signal can be seen.

In the centre of the town of Megantic, there are ten, 12 and even 15 accidents each year in which vehicles are practically demolished; fortunately there is no great loss of life—a few only over several years—because the train slows down when coming to that spot, but many vehicles suffered considerable damage, of which the owners must bear the cost, because the railway is never wrong.

A few years ago the board of transport commissioners were asked, on several occasions, to eliminate all those level crossings. The records must be quite bulky, because the minister told me the other day that it was practically impossible to supply them and gave me permission to examine them at the board of transport commissioners' office.

The railroads are a serious problem in Megantic, but it would be so easy to do away with those level crossings without building overpasses. Some estimates have been prepared to this effect, and it would cost about $1 million to move the tracks. This would eliminate practically all level crossings with the exception of the two main ones going in and from the town of Megantic.

That is why with regard to this matter I would draw the minister's attention to my riding which is one of the worst localities in the province of Quebec, and perhaps even of Canada, because the railway crosses the highway six times before leaving Megantic.

The authorities of Megantic asked me some time ago to make representations with regard to the matter, and I am sure that the minister also received some requests for improvement of the level crossing situation.

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, this resolution enables me to say a few words on level crossings which are an extremely serious problem in the city of Chicoutimi.

I wrote to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) at the request of the authorities of Chicoutimi. I take this opportunity of pointing out this correspondence to remind the minister about the problem so that he may take the matter into account when drafting the legislation which eventually will be introduced.

In Chicoutimi there are 15 or 17 level crossings throughout the city and they are quite dangerous for drivers. In this era of heavy traffic it is ridiculous to have so many level crossings in a city of approximately 40,000 inhabitants.

It might be possible to bring considerable improvement to that situation. Indeed, a few years ago, Mr. Fairweather, one of the vice presidents of the C.N.R., made quite a thorough investigation of the matter and came to the conclusion that those level crossings had to be eliminated at any cost. Along with engineers he had prepared plans to that effect, and today the C.N.R. and the Minister of Transport must have in their possession those very important plans which would provide a solution to that problem.

That is why I ask the minister to keep that in mind because that project was brought forward more than ten or 15 years ago and the people of Chicoutimi have been waiting for it so long that it should be carried out now so that many accidents would be avoided. I nearly had an accident myself while I was with my family. That is why I call the attention of the minister to that problem.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-110, to amend the Railway Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if it would be the wish of the house to go on and consider second reading now?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, if the bill is ready for distribution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the bill is ready for distribution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps if the bill is not ready immediately we could take second reading after considering the next resolution, and that would give the officials time to get the bill distributed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE BORROWING AUTHORITY

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act to provide that the authority, with the approval of the governor in council, may from time to time borrow money from Her Majesty or otherwise to an aggregate that shall not exceed at any time $535,000,000 in lieu of $345,000,000 which it is already authorized to borrow by section 13 of the act.

He said: The purpose of this resolution, Mr. Chairman, is to provide additional borrowing authority to obtain the funds required to enable the St. Lawrence seaway authority to undertake the twinning of the locks of the Welland canal, as announced to the House of Commons on August 2 of this year. The amount necessary for this work is estimated to be $180 million. There is an additional $10 million, the greater part of which will be required to provide funds for the settlement of a long standing disputed claim having to do with the cost of the diversion at the Victoria bridge. This question was only decided in 1963, that is, as to how the cost of this undertaking should be borne, and according to the decision the seaway authority has to pay approximately an additional $11,700,000 for this capital work. They do not have the capital funds available, and part of this $190 million will be used for that purpose.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, I am sure we are all interested in this measure to provide additional borrowing authority to the St. Lawrence seaway in the amount of $190 million. The minister has explained that this is necessary in order to defray the cost of the twinning of the Welland canal locks and to provide capital funds for the diversion at the Victoria bridge.

This is quite a sizeable sum of money. I think the committee is entitled to know when the pre-engineering work was done on this twinning project, how long it will take for the project to be completed, how much additional revenue is expected to be received, and whether this will be a toll free lock.

The St. Lawrence seaway was a tremendous development project, completed just a few years ago. It has done a great deal to stimulate trade and commerce throughout central Canada, and I notice its revenue increase in 1962 was 8.1 per cent over 1961. We will expect a further increase this coming year due to the huge grain sales, and I wonder if the minister can give us some idea at this stage what the increase in traffic will be for the present navigation period and when the seaway, without the twinning, is expected to pay its way, so that it would not have to be returning periodically to the treasury for assistance.

Mr. McIlraith: I can give some information, and the best way to get an accurate picture is to give the latest figures I have on total cargo tons for both the seaway and the Welland canal. Taking the period April to October, the figures for the Welland canal in 1962 were 30,421,305 tons, and in 1963 they were 34,192,548 tons. The figures for the Montreal-lake Ontario section for the same period were 21,853,929 tons for 1962 and 25,732,923 tons for 1963. From those figures it will be seen that the rate of increase on the St. Lawrence section is 17.7 per cent over last year, and on the Welland canal section 12.4 per cent. Of course the rate of increase is being held up through November and it will be appreciated that the figures may vary slightly at the end of the year, but I think the picture they give is an accurate one.

Regarding tolls, in accordance with the agreement made with the United States a review of the tolls is necessary and the preparatory work is going on now. The review is required to be completed by the middle of next summer, and I do not think there is anything useful I can add at present on the question of tolls.

With regard to the $180 million which is to be spent on the Welland canal, I think I indicated in my statement to the house on August 2 that a situation would arise in which there would be restriction of shipping if this work were not undertaken immediately, because otherwise the Welland canal would not be able to handle all the traffic.

The work is being undertaken in such a way that practically all of it will be done during the off-navigation season, and the engineering plans for the sequence of doing the work are made in such a way that benefits will start to flow from the work in the early years. It is a five year program and will not be completed until the navigation season of 1969, but the work will be of benefit before the end of the five year construction period.

Perhaps I could give the programming of the costs through the years. The amount to be spent this year will be smaller than in the succeeding years. Some $10 million will be spent this year, and more than that in the succeeding years.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, members of this group naturally support this expenditure as part of the development of the country, but individual members of parliament are required to justify their actions when they appear before their constituents. I think the minister should take this opportunity to give us an outline of the need for the twinning of the locks, the type of development that is intended, what additional benefits it will give to the seaway, the plan to be followed with respect to construction, and a breakdown of the expenditures for the various aspects of the work.

This is a lot of money, $190 million, which we are giving the seaway authority to borrow in addition to its present authority, and when we come to the second reading of the bill I hope the minister will give us the story in sequence, the history of the need, the planning with respect to the development, a breakdown of the cost, the time schedule for construction, and the improvement it will bring to the handling of traffic on the seaway.

If I were to go home at this time, Mr. Chairman, and were asked by my constituents to explain this matter in detail, I would have a pretty foggy idea. I know in general that it is necessary, and so on, but I think when we are considering items of this amount we should get a very clearcut and thorough explanation of the circumstances which cause the government to bring this legislation before the house. When we get to the second reading of the bill the minister will no doubt have had an opportunity to get the facts together and possibly get some assistance from his officials. I hope at that time we will get a story on the record which will be informative to hon. members of this house and of use to them in informing their constituents as to why we gave the seaway authority this power to borrow an additional $190 million.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the members of this group also wish to support granting additional borrowing power to the seaway authority in order to expand the potential economic activity of the country. It would appear that the required $190 million to provide the capital cost of twinning the Welland locks is to take care of the area along the seaway that is most congested at the present time. The question that immediately arises is, how long will it be before parliament is asked for additional funds to twin some of the other locks? The figures the minister has just given indicate that the tonnage going through the seaway is increasing even more rapidly than the tonnage going through the Welland canal. Therefore if the congestion at the Welland canal has now reached the point where additional installations are required to take care of the situation, when this work is completed an even greater tonnage will be carried by the other seaway locks. I would therefore be interested to know whether the department has made any studies as to how long it will be before parliament will be asked for authority to borrow additional money for some of the other locks along the seaway. Furthermore, have there been any negotiations with the state of New York and the United States government to twin some of the locks along the St. Lawrence seaway?

I have one other question, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the $10 million required for the settlement of some claims respecting the Victoria bridge. I am not satisfied that at this point we have had a sufficient explanation as to why this extra amount of money is being requested by the seaway, when apparently they had not previously assumed this responsibility.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favour of this resolution which will provide for the twinning of the single locks on the Welland canal. This twinning will provide for a greater dispatch of shipping on the great lakes, and as such will help the economy of Canada. The Welland canal overcomes the difference in level between lakes Erie and Ontario. The difference in the water level of these two lakes is 326½ feet, and this is overcome by seven locks which each have a lift of about 46½ feet. The canal is 27½ miles long, and the locks are numbered from the lake Ontario end.

In the first 6½ miles there are three locks. These compensate for the rise in the ground level from lake Ontario to the base of the Niagara escarpment. Unlike previous canals, which took somewhat circuitous routes up the Niagara escarpment, the present Welland ship canal climbs the Niagara escarpment directly, at right angles. In the next mile from the foot of the escarpment the climb is 186 feet through locks 4, 5, 6 and 7. Above lock 7 which is about lake Erie level there is a straight sailing stretch for 20 miles to lock 8 at Port Colborne. When the canal was built it was necessary to twin locks 4, 5 and 6 because of the steepness of the incline at this site. Because of this very rapid rise these locks had to be built end to end. There is no level sailing stretch between them, as there is between other locks.

If these locks had not been twinned at that time boats going down the canal would be required to wait until a boat coming up the canal had been locked through these three locks, and vice versa. That is the reason they were twinned at that time. There is very little rise at lock 8 at Port Colborne. Lock 8 has two purposes; it controls the water level in the canal, and it also compensates for the variation in the water levels in lake Erie. We know that lake Erie, like all other lakes, has a cyclical high level in some years; every four or five years it comes around to a high level. We know also that a strong west wind blowing down lake Erie will cause the water level to rise by four to six feet at the entrance to the canal. Therefore it is necessary to have a lock at the lake Erie end of the canal in order to lift boats from a controlled level into lake Erie. I think it is very necessary to twin these single locks because there is a bottleneck at most of them at the present time. Number 7 lock has the worse bottleneck, but at the present time they all suffer from this congestion.

The estimated cost of twinning these locks is $180 million. This figure was given by the minister a few minutes ago. The Welland canal was first conceived by local residents in 1818. They started to build it in November, I think, of 1823 and it was finished in 1829 at a cost of something under £500,000. In 1842 the government of Upper Canada took over the Welland canal from the shareholders and at that time they decreased the number of locks from 40 to 27. This was afterwards called the second Welland canal. A third Welland canal was completed in 1887 at a cost of $13 million. The present canal was completed in 1931 and cost about $130 million. The committee can therefore see that the twinning of these five locks, 1, 2, 3, 7 and 8, will cost more than all previous Welland canals, including the present canal which has 11 locks of similar size, and over 27 miles of sailing levels.

It is very interesting to read the description of the sod turning ceremony for the first Welland canal. William Hamilton Merritt, a local resident, was the chief promoter and he made a speech at the sod turning ceremony in November 1823. It might be interesting to the committee to hear part of what he said at that time. Just previous to this time the Erie canal had been completed in New York state, and Mr. Merritt was referring to the Erie canal when he said:

> If they can make a canal 300 miles long without taxation we can do the same for one tenth the distance by following similar means. When we contemplate the natural advantages we possess over the Americans in our water communications, it is astonishing to think of the apathy and indifference that have hitherto prevailed among us on this subject. If we inquire the cause nine tenths of us would blame the government. There never was a more erroneous idea. We are ever inclined to move the burden from our own shoulders and can only blame ourselves. Nor ought we to suppose that our governors are as immediately interested in any part or portion of the country as the inhabitants who are living on the spot.

Then I think the politicians in this committee will be interested in the next passage.

> If you were asked from what branch of the legislature should these measures emanate, you would readily answer, the branch composed of the commons—they are sent from among us—their interest is ours and if we do not find exertion among them where do we look for it?

His idea of the legislature of that day was not very high even at that time, because he concludes with these words:

> Show me a measure that has passed that body for the improvement of the country—it is a rare occurrence that measures of great national improvement originate from the administration of government.

So that is what he thought of legislatures at that particular time. He went on to say that when our legislators got to parliament they became indifferent. I am sorry to say that from reading the press and some of the letters in the Toronto daily Star, the Toronto Telegram and other papers, it seems we as members of parliament here are considered indifferent when in fact we are not. I pay tribute to the memory of Hon. William Hamilton Merritt who did so much to develop shipping in Canada.

There is a little history attached to tolls. Tolls were applied to the Welland canal right after it was constructed. I read an article to the effect that in 1895 tolls were being charged of 2¼ cents per ton. In that particular year $139,000 was collected and 870,000 tons passed through the canal. The minister mentioned today that the amount this year was 34 million tons.

Early in 1900, I think in 1903 or 1904, tolls were removed from the canal. At that time boats had to provide their own men, who accompanied the boats through the locks and looked after the tying up. They tied up the boats both at the locks and at the lock approaches.

This state of affairs continued until 1931, when on the completion of the present Welland canal the government of the day supplied linesmen to tie up the boats, charging a fee to the boats to pay these employees. When the St. Lawrence seaway took over we all know tolls were imposed to pay for the operation of the canal, plus the amortization of $29 million, the cost of deepening the canal, which amount was to be retired over a period of 50 years. This continued until 1962, after the former government had taken over, but in June 1962 the tolls were removed.

I have often mentioned the question of tolls in this house. I have talked against their imposition, not so much because it would cost a great deal to industry and shipping passing through the Welland canal to retire the $29 million plus the cost of operating the canal, but because this always created uncertainty in that area on the part of canal-based industries, as well as for industry in Hamilton and Toronto. There, industries were not worried so much about the $29 million; they are more concerned about the $180 million required now, which would make their position on the canal almost unbearable or intolerable. They would not be able to continue to operate in that location if they had to pay canal tolls commensurate with the cost of operating the canal, plus the amortization of some $200 million over the next 50 years. This applies to industry in Hamilton and Toronto as well.

Let me take the steel industry in Hamilton as an example. The steel industry in Hamilton, like the steel plants in Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit and Lackawanna, gets its raw material for a lot of its steel from the shores of lake Superior, its coal and coke from the shores of lake Erie. In fact the coal mines of Pennsylvania are not far from lake Erie. All the material for United States mills comes in through toll-free areas, whereas every ton of raw material coming into the steel plants of Hamilton must pass through a toll area. This makes the steel mills at Hamilton less competitive with the steel mills along the United States shore of lake Erie. I have always maintained that this does make the steel and other industries in Hamilton and Toronto, which is supplied through the Welland canal, less competitive than some of the industries in the United States, and I therefore hope that when the question of tolls comes up the minister might be able to give the plants in our part of the country some favourable consideration. I might say that uncertainty will upset the stock market. It is just as upsetting to business, too. Certainly the canal area and certain other areas are not desirable locations for new industry, particularly for heavy industry making use of water-borne traffic.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Chairman, I am also in favour of the resolution before the committee. I did want to say a few words this afternoon on this matter, but it has been so adequately covered by the hon. member for Welland, as far as Hamilton is concerned, that I need say only a very few words. The hon. member for Kootenay West mentioned in his remarks the need for twinning these canals. I agree with his remarks. However, it is both coincidental and interesting that at the present time I am conducting a study into the history of the promotion, construction and financing of the original Welland canal by Mr. Merritt, the founder of the project. If the hon. member needs a reason for the need of the canal, I suggest he obtain the books I have from the parliamentary library, from which he will see that the same reasons that the construction was proceeded with are also sufficient reason for twinning the canals today.

With regard to the question of tolls and the Hamilton steel industry, we have in Hamilton a very large industrial complex based mainly on supplying the blast furnaces in this steel centre. There has naturally grown up around it a number of secondary manufacturing industries. These industries are not wholly dependant upon the steel industry, but they are to the extent of at least 75 per cent, and perhaps even more. Canada has a tradition of toll-free inland water transportation.

I suggest to the minister that he study very carefully the briefs which the seaway authority is now accepting on the subject of tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway, including the Welland canal section. I submit the hon. gentleman should do this when the report comes from the seaway authority. I have received copies of the briefs submitted by the industries concerned and I believe they are sound. Naturally, they propose that no tolls, whether they are called by that name or by any other name, be imposed on the Welland canal section. As the hon. member for Welland has stated, any reimposition of tolls, by whatever name, would add greatly to the cost not only of steel but of many other articles in this country. It is my opinion that the Welland canal is a system which operates in the national interest, not only in the interests of the industries along the great lakes or in its immediate area. I say this because any increase in the costs of steel production, or production generally in that area as a result of the imposition of tolls would have adverse effects right across the country. I commend the government on its proposal to twin the canal. One result would be the provision of a great deal of employment in this area.

I should like to conclude my remarks by saying that any decisions about the imposition of tolls, either with regard to the Welland canal or to the St. Lawrence seaway as a whole, should be considered in the light of their effects on the economy of the country generally because the burden of any such tolls on the secondary manufacturing industries in Hamilton, and the Niagara peninsula in particular, will be considerable and will be felt from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. Regan: It is my intention to reserve the main part of my comments on this subject until the second reading of the bill which will follow the resolution, but I cannot help commenting briefly on the question of tolls on this new section of the Welland canal.

With great deference to the views of the hon. members for Welland and Hamilton West I must disagree in part with the proposition they have put forward. I would have no objection to the idea that there be no tolls on cargoes destined from one point to another within the lakes and river system, but to say there should be no tolls on cargoes which pass through this canal and which are destined to overseas points, or which have originated from overseas points, is to say that even though we have a railways system which could carry these goods to and from the ocean ports—a railways system which, by the way, is now functioning at a loss—we should use $180 million raised from taxpayers, many of whom live in areas adjacent to the ocean ports, in order to provide another means of carrying goods at a time when we are not fully utilizing the means which already exist.

I would therefore urge the minister to consider seriously the economic consequences to all parts of the nation of making a decision on the lines suggested to him. I urge that the principle of tolls be applicable at least to goods which originate outside the lakes and river area, or which are destined to points outside that area.

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, the measure to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, which is under consideration, is certainly very important when the amounts involved are considered. For instance, it aims at increasing the borrowing power from $345 to $535 million, that is an increase of $190 million.

A few moments ago I listened with great attention to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) explaining the needs in that field.

I agree that the needs are immense, and our party feels that when it comes to increasing the country's economic growth, capital expenditures which enable Canadians to live must be made. Indeed it is better to spend our money in that way rather than for social or unemployment assistance.

And now I would like to add a few words about the liabilities shown in the St. Lawrence seaway authority's report. I find the situation truly alarming. For instance, under section 25 of the act that was passed, the seaway authority borrowed $334,500,000; on December 31, 1959, it was unable to meet the interest amounting to more than $19 million, and payment was postponed; on December 31, 1961, payment of the interest was again postponed, as well as on December 31, 1962, so that those liabilities total $383,880,008.

It is quite disturbing to be faced with such an accumulation of debts.

I am wondering also what the rate of interest is going to be on that loan. Following a brief analysis, I find that on the current loan the average rate is 5.70 per cent, at least as far as the year 1959 is concerned. That is quite a high rate of interest, but this does not seem to bother the government.

Does not the government think that this will result in some serious inflation, since it is believed that an accumulation of debts and interests generally causes wretched inflation? That is where the danger lies with our present financial system.

I am convinced that the government is in the process of creating some sort of monster. It is impossible to keep on going with such a system under which interests pile up at a staggering rate and debts keep on increasing. It seems to me that other solutions can be found. That is why I am going to the trouble of speaking about it.

Finally, I was just reading an analysis by one of Canada's greatest economists, who said more or less this: Governments, once in office, always take steps to which often they were opposed when in opposition.

That is why I am hopeful that the present government will give special attention to the 11 members of the Social Credit party in this house who advocate theories that have been studied for more than 40 years by distinguished economists, and that in order to improve the financial system.

There are eleven of us representing this party in the house. On several occasions we offered some solution and more particularly we suggested creating social capital or public credit bank. Such an institution might, in a case like this, help carry out projects needed for the economic development of this country, while not significantly increasing the debt or the interest load. That is the main point. We must stop creating such inflation.

I more particularly remember that, during the last election, our friends who are now in power had a holy terror of inflation as well as of our party, because inflation in itself is an abominable thing.

We are among the first to fight inflation by all available means. That is why we warn the government to be very careful in this respect and we would suggest to its members to delve into the economic methods which might be gradually applied at this time.

I would not say that we could change our economic system overnight. Yet, I maintain that it is possible to modify our financial system and gradually to establish a new one which would be in keeping with the age of automation and mechanization in which we live.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join the hon. members who have spoken before me on the matter under study and set forth our group's viewpoint.

I understand that the resolution tends to improve shipping on the St. Lawrence seaway, more particularly by doubling over the years the traffic capacity of the Welland canal.

We have no more objection to that than the previous speakers. We are in favour of all improvements likely to promote the economic activity in our country. All this will be beneficial to everyone, not only where the improvement is being brought about but throughout Canada. Therefore, we have no objection in principle to the proposed improvements.

However, I should like to join the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) who suggested that we did not have quite enough information about the actual need for such improvements. I also add that we did not obtain many details or explanations about the procedure to be followed in order to find the additional $190 million requested in this legislation.

I imagine that the usual procedure will be followed: money will be borrowed in order to provide the necessary funds for the payment of those improvements. This is what was done in the past; money was borrowed at interest rates that were so high that, up to now, it was impossible to repay the interest. They merely accumulated and were consolidated with the already existing debt.

In this connection also, I wish to raise a minor objection, concurring in this respect with the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté).

I will perhaps let him speak but not too long because he just said that his group of 11 members in the house represents the Social Crediters; I must point out to him that we are also 13 in our group which added to his group of 11 make a group of 24 members in the house which claim to belong to Social Credit.

I then sincerely support the proposal made by the hon. member for Chicoutimi. We should endeavour at least to find some other means to finance public works and other needs in Canada.

The present loan and taxation system has nothing in common with natural law. It originated from measures created and invented by men. Those measures might have made sense and been right for a certain number of years; today, however, as we all realize, I am of the opinion that we will never be able to get out of it with the system we now have, a loan and taxation system which is getting obsolescent and leads nowhere.

The government should make a careful study of this matter. We are as sincere as any other member of the house. We want the well-being of Canada as all other citizens of this country.

We are asking for a change in the economic system and especially in the financing of government projects. I feel that our group should be given more consideration and that more interest should be shown in the methods advocated by us.

A while ago there was some mention of a special bank for the financing of all social projects. We have already proposed that the Bank of Canada be entrusted with such a role.

Why should the Bank of Canada not be asked to create the required money instead of paying the chartered banks interest as at present to carry out that function? Let no one say that that would be conducive to inflation. Once again I wonder how the creation of $190 million by the chartered banks could be less inflationary than if that were done by the Bank of Canada.

The only difference between the two is that on the $190 million created by the Bank of Canada we would have no interest to pay and it would be much easier to write off the debt.

I conclude with these few remarks, but not without once more urging the government to pay attention and to try to look into the suggestion offered to them.

Mr. McNulty: Mr. Chairman, the need for the twinning of the Welland canal locks has been apparent for some time, and I would hope that this resolution will receive the support of all members of the house. There has been considerable newspaper publicity about the shipping tie-ups in the Welland canal. At one time there were 21 to 23 ships tied up outside the lake Ontario entrance to the Welland canal at Port Weller. It is apparent from the studies that have been made that the twinning of the locks will increase the tonnage up to 60 per cent. This will not just be of benefit locally. Special ships are being constructed at the present time to haul coal from Nova Scotia and the twinning of the locks will mean a great deal of benefit to that part of the country.

It will also mean a great deal for the commerce of the west. It will certainly mean that in the future we can go all out in seeking contracts for the sale of our grain to all countries of the world because we will be able to transport the grain at a reasonable rate and will be sure of making deliveries. The twinning of the locks will be a great benefit to industries stretching from one end of the lakes to the other. Ore is brought from Labrador and transported through the canal. Pulpwood and many other natural resources are transported through the canal for processing at both ends.

A commitment was actually made by the former government to twin the locks of the Welland canal, and for this purpose some 115 properties were expropriated in the area. These properties have been paid for at considerable cost, and I am quite sure it was the intention of the previous government to twin the locks just as soon as the time and the occasion were right. Studies have been made, and I am sure it is to the credit of the present minister that he has taken the initiative and proposed this resolution. The project will surely result in increased employment opportunities for residents of the area over the next four or five years. I am told that some 5,000 or 6,000 jobs will be created as a result of the twinning of these locks. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that if all members look at the amount of money that is being set aside for this project and study the need for the twinning of these locks and the wonderful results that will flow from this project they will give the measure their wholehearted support.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I have one or two further questions to ask in connection with the increase in tonnage on the seaway this year of 17.7 per cent. When the minister answers, can he give us a breakdown of that percentage? We all realize that probably the bulk of the tonnage going through the seaway is grain and iron ore. The hon. member for Lincoln intimated that coal would come up from the maritimes to this seaway.

However, in considering a project costing $180 million we must realize that grain shipments may not be heavy every year. We hope they will be, but I think some breakdown of the tonnage should be given by the minister in order that the committee would have a better idea of the value of the project.

Mr. McIlraith: I have the figures broken down as between general cargo and bulk cargo, if that would be satisfactory.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): There is one other question that comes to mind in connection with the St. Lawrence seaway about which some concern is felt in various areas around the great lakes. I refer to the question of water levels. The question of the Chicago drainage canal has been debated in this house many times. I do know that the level of some of the lakes has dropped considerably this year. The hon. member for Welland, in speaking about this question, intimated that there was a seven-year cycle in this connection. I do not know whether we can depend on that seven-year cycle. I am wondering, therefore, if any consideration was given in the pre-engineering studies to the question of making the canal deep enough to take care of the variation in the water levels of the great lakes.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, some questions have been raised as to the need for additional capacity in the Welland canal. Perhaps I can best illustrate the need by saying that it was always felt the critical period would be reached when the tonnage figures were somewhere between 40 million and 50 million per year. At the estimated average rate of growth since the inception of the seaway, that is some 8 per cent, that period of time will be somewhere between 1964 and 1966.

Perhaps I could be a little more specific. In 1958 the total volume of traffic on the Welland canal was 21 million tons; in 1959 it was 27.5 million tons; and 1962, over 35 million tons. This year, up to November 14, the tonnage has amounted to 36,972,000 tons. This would indicate that by the end of the season the tonnage would be crowding the 40 million mark. Perhaps I could also give you another illustration. In the 1961 navigation season of 260 days, an average of four vessels were kept waiting on each of 162 days. In 1962 an average of seven vessels were kept waiting on each of 194 days and so far in 1963, an average of seven vessels have been kept waiting on each of 197 days. It will be seen, therefore, that the situation is worsening and if this work is not undertaken now we could be in a very serious situation.

[Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron).]

In considering this project, we should bear in mind the tremendous importance of shipping facilities to the economy and business of this country and particularly the fact that so much of that business has to do with exports. In the light of these considerations, it will be seen that the matter is both important and urgent. It is quite true that at the moment, because of the volume of wheat sales, many persons are inclined to think only of grain shipments, but these facilities are vital to all parts of the country. It has been demonstrated, of course, by our experience in the last few months, that these facilities are of the utmost importance not only to the grain trade and to the prairie provinces but they are equally vital to other parts of the country.

As the hon. member for Chicoutimi was speaking, I could not help but think of the amount of pulp that is brought through the Welland canal for the pulp and paper industry, and the importance of the Welland canal to that part of the economy of Quebec which supplies so much pulp. The canal is important also to the movement of paper to the export and domestic markets, as well as to the movement of ore from Quebec and Labrador for export to the United States. It is important, too, to the movement of steel from Canadian producing points to the different parts of the country, because of the special importance of lake shipping to the steel industry. It will be seen, therefore, that this is of vital importance to all parts of the country.

While I have picked out the bulk cargoes to illustrate the point I wish to make, I should like to give the hon. member for Wellington-Huron a breakdown of the increased tonnage this year over last year. From April 1 to November 14 the breakdown as between bulk cargo and general cargo is as follows: bulk cargo, from 30,626,427 to 34,791,000 tons; for general cargo in the same period from 1,858,711 tons to 2,181,000 tons. Therefore it will be seen that the increase is in both types of cargo.

As to the question of financing it, there is of course the larger question of the method of financing any or all public works, but for the purpose of this particular legislation we must remember that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act of 1952 provides that the capital funds shall be obtained by that agency of the government from the Minister of Finance. There are negotiations going on from time to time as the need for borrowing arises, but I think the best answer I can give the hon. member who asked the question is that the average rate of interest on loans to date is approximately 4.5 per cent.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-111, to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Power to borrow money.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister answered one of the questions I asked in respect to giving some illustration of the need. I thought that was pretty useful, but would he inform the committee of the timetable for construction, give a breakdown of the costs, and tell us when it is expected the works will be completed?

Mr. McIlraith: Assuming the authority is granted by parliament, it is expected the arrangements for the work will be put in hand immediately. I think the best way of illustrating the time of the actual construction is to give the payments per calendar year, because the payments will be made as the work progresses. The estimated expenditure in 1964 is $10 million; in 1965, $20 million; in 1966, $40 million; in 1967, $40 million; in 1968, $40 million and in 1969, $30 million. It is expected that the major portion of the project will have been completed in the first quarter of 1969.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING PAYMENTS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-110, to amend the Railway Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Speed limit in unprotected populated areas.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out the nature of the amendments. The first part of the bill deals with the amendment I spoke of consequent on the Alberta court case, where section 312 of the act was interpreted in a way that had not been in accordance with the practice and what the section was thought to mean. The only change is that where the clause in the bill provides that "no train shall enter a highway crossing" the words used in the act were "shall pass" any highway crossing.

As I explained on the resolution stage, the control of the limit of speed has always been interpreted to be control of the speed at which a train enters the crossing, and not at which it passes over a crossing. For long trains moving slowly at ten miles an hour this actually means interference with the use of a crossing by motor vehicle traffic, instead of a measure intended to procure safety for the motor vehicles using the crossing. Therefore the word "pass" is being changed to "enter".

Also a clause has been added giving the board jurisdiction to fix the speed at which a train may enter a crossing, when the board makes these orders for works at any grade crossing.

Formerly it was statutory. The same remarks apply to the two related sections, 312 and 428. For some reason that is not wholly clear to me but is known to law officers concerned with drafting these things and is purely a legal reason, those clauses in the bill are put first, and the last clause in the bill is the one having to do with the extension of the provision of funds; that is, the limitation on the amount that can be spent under section 265 of the Railway Act. That section, although it bears a lower number, is put at the last part of the bill because it is an amendment to an amendment; the only change there is to provide for the addition of three extra years, changing the figure "6" to "9"; that is to say, nine years from January 31, 1958.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions to ask the minister, and I thank him for his explanation. Does this mean there will be a survey of railway crossings, and possibly new regulations as to speed imposed upon certain crossings where that is the most effective way of meeting the situation at the present time? My second question is: is there continuing research into the possibility of providing a cheap form of warning for those many crossings that would not warrant the expense involved in a survey?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, there is continuous work going on in this field; the engineers are constantly at work on it. I should add, by the way, something that was not adequately clarified by me previously. While the applications originate, in the normal course, from the provinces for the start of each year, and from the municipalities, if the board hear of any case where there is a dangerous situation, they immediately investigate it. That answers the question raised by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg. Any town or municipality can initiate such a project, but regardless of that, if the board hear of any case which constitutes a dangerous situation, they will of their own volition investigate it.

Mr. Rock: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to hear from the minister that the government intends to extend the time of the operation of the grade crossing fund for another three years. The citizens in my constituency in the county of Jacques Cartier-Lasalle will be very happy to hear this, because they are concerned about future projects within our county. At the present time all level crossings in the county of Jacques Cartier-Lasalle have signals, but the traffic count in these areas today warrants the building of underpasses or overpasses throughout the riding.

I would point out to the committee that the county I represent embraces one third of the western part of the island of Montreal. In the Roxboro-Pierrefonds area three level crossings should be changed to grade separations. We have, along the lakeshore area, the St. Charles road crossing and the Sources road crossing, which should also be changed to grade separations in the form of either an underpass or an overpass.

At the time these lakeshore level crossings were installed with signal protection an agreement was made between the municipalities and the railway companies to close certain other crossings, such as the Valois, Pine Beach, and Pointe Claire crossings. I am afraid that the legal rights attached to these crossings have more or less disappeared; the right to receive, let us say, a grant from this fund in the future has disappeared. I think these things should be taken into consideration in the future.

I can also give another example in the city of Lachine. The C.N.R. intended to build a large humpyard, which now exists. At the time, the main line going to the humpyard was two lines through the centre of the city. They also intended to build another track or so beside that one and enlarge the right of way to this humpyard. Within this right of way there were seven railway level crossings. They also intended going through from south to north to reach the new humpyard, which would have created another four level crossings. I was a city councillor for Lachine at that time. The city council made representation to the C.N.R. to relocate this whole centre track north of the city. We had something of a fight on our hands with the chief engineer of the C.N.R. and we had to make representation to the minister of transport here in Ottawa, who at that time was the Hon. George Marler. We also had to make representation to one of the vice presidents of the railway. These people apparently saw eye to eye with the city of Lachine, and the tracks were relocated north of the city.

At that time we saved the railway companies and the government millions of dollars from the grade crossing fund just on the seven grade crossings which existed, and we also saved them the expenditure of millions of dollars for the four additional proposed grade crossings. This relocation took place. The railways were to build an underpass at 55th avenue. We objected to this location; we wanted a more central location, around 34th avenue. This was refused because the C.P.R. owned industrial land right near 55th avenue. The member who at that time represented the county made representations to the board that were not in the interests of the city of Lachine and for these reasons we lost our case. They therefore built this underpass at 55th avenue, rather than at a central location at 34th avenue. We have now reached the point where the city of Lachine needs a second underpass, or overpass, around 32nd avenue, which is about the same location.

We have no way, first of all, of getting a grade crossing because it is impossible to build one there. Therefore, if we want any benefit from this fund, it is impossible for us to obtain such benefit because no grade crossing exists. It is this type of situation which I think should be taken into consideration. I believe that the limit of $500,000 should not be applicable to special cases such as this, or cases where municipalities have given up level crossings in order to put, say, signal lights on other crossings. I believe that the minister should give consideration in the future to special cases such as exist within the riding of Jacques Cartier-Lasalle.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this is a point so small that I hesitate to raise it, but perhaps it is one that lawyers like the minister might consider. I notice that in clause 1, and again in clause 2, a word used in the marginal note is not the same as the word used in the text. I am sure the words mean the same thing. I have been looking the words up in the dictionary, but it strikes me that this is just the kind of thing over which lawyers spend all kinds of time in court. I wonder whether we should not look into this question. The words in the text in both places are "thickly peopled portion of any city", but in the marginal note the words are "thickly populated". It sounds the same, but why have "thickly peopled" in the text and "thickly populated" in the margin? Should they both not be the same?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, of course they should. As a lawyer who sometimes had occasion to differ from colleagues in my own office this is the very sort of thing I would have asked about. I regret not noticing it before, but I will certainly ask about it. I am not sure where the difference is made. The marginal note, of course, does not have any legislative bearing on the interpretation of the statute; it is the section itself which governs.

Mr. Knowles: I do not wish to extend this discussion but it is precisely because Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 359, says that there is some importance to marginal notes that I raise the point. I am sure the minister will look at it, and third reading could be held over to make sure it is not a mistake or that we are not opening up something for the lawyers.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): There is just one question I would like to raise in connection with subsection 4, which indicates that:

> No train shall enter any highway crossing at rail level at a speed greater than twenty-five miles an hour if at such crossing a person or vehicle using the crossing or an animal being ridden or driven over the same has been struck by a moving train—

In other words, if an accident had previously occurred. How are those crossings designated so that engineers on the trains will be able to know at which crossings they have to slow down to 25 miles an hour?

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry I do not know how the railways so designate these crossings for the information of their engineers, but I do know that the board of transport commissioners have the required information which is carefully kept, and it is acted upon as required by statute.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): One other question. I wonder if there has been any discussion with provincial governments in connection with this particular part of the act so that similar designation might be made of highways for the protection of the motorist when approaching a crossing at which an accident had previously occurred. I wonder whether that has been discussed with the provincial departments of highways.

Mr. McIlraith: I think not, but I would hope that the designation would not be applied to cases like that, because it would encourage motorists to try and beat the train. That is one of the problems at such level crossings, where a motorist on seeing a train approaching wants to beat it across. If we were to indicate that a train was required to move at a slow speed at such a crossing, we would only be encouraging accidents, the whole purpose of the legislation being to prevent accidents.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3.

Mr. McBain: Can the minister give us any percentage figures of the advantage the railroads in Canada are taking of the installations of reflector type markings on box cars?

Mr. McIlraith: The number of railway cars which have so far been marked in this way is about 20,000. There is an annual rate of 6,000 additional box cars which are so marked. Of course, there is the requirements that all new box cars be so marked as they are put into use, as well as certain old cars when they are being repainted.

CANADIAN OVERSEAS TELECOMMUNICATION CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CO-ORDINATION WITH OTHER NATIONS, ETC.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act to extend the co-ordination of Canada's external telecommunication services to include co-ordination with nations outside the British commonwealth; to increase the number of directors of the corporation by two; to provide for the appointment and salaries of vice presidents; and to provide further for certain consequential changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the resolution stage of this bill is not required because of any significant charge being put on the treasury but really because of technical reasons in that certain sections could conceivably have a bearing on the financial aspects of the bill. It is really a bill containing a number of small amendments arising out of administrative experience, and because of the growth in the corporation.

Perhaps I could summarize them at this stage, although they would better be dealt with when the bill is before us. The purpose of the resolution, of course, is to ask approval for leave to introduce a bill to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act so as to provide changes in the executive structure of the corporation to reflect the expansion in its size and activities and the national importance of its work; and to insert two minor amendments, one dealing with the stated purposes of the corporation and the other with superannuation of its employees.

The bill contains provision for increasing the number of directors including the president from five to seven so as to allow for broader national representation and to make it easier to raise a quorum for meetings. It also provides that, instead of having one vice president appointed by the governor in council, there can be such vice presidents as the board may think necessary appointed by the board. At present the salaries of the president and the vice president are fixed by the governor in council. Among the proposed amendments is provision for the salary of the president to be fixed by the board with the approval of the governor in council, and for the salaries of the vice presidents to be fixed by the board. Since these officers are directing a business corporation which is in direct competition with other large private businesses in the communications field, it is desirable that the arrangement as to the designation of vice presidents, and so on, be in keeping with the practice in the competitive field in order to maintain the corporation's interest in the field of recruitment and development of senior personnel.

Among the stated purposes of the corporation in the act is that of co-ordinating Canada's external telecommunication services with the telecommunication services of other parts of the British commonwealth of nations. Because of the rapid growth in this field the corporation has become active in the opening of direct services with nations outside the commonwealth, and the bill provides an appropriate change regularizing this procedure.

The act at present provides that the Civil Service Superannuation Act is not applicable to directors, officers and servants of the corporation. In 1961, by virtue of the estimate and appropriation No. 5 of that year, and because of the change in the Civil Service Superannuation Act, the employees of the corporation were brought under the Civil Service Superannuation Act. The appropriate change is now being made in the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act in consequence of that step having been taken.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I notice the resolution states that co-ordination of Canada's external telecommunication services is to include co-ordination with nations outside the British commonwealth. I am wondering which nations are involved in this program. Does this mean that the corporation is considering laying more underseas cables to these other countries in order to extend the service?

The resolution also speaks about increasing the number of directors and providing for the appointment of vice presidents. However, the number is not given. The resolution does not say how many will be required or what their duties may be. Is there to be, say, a vice president responsible for the commonwealth organization and a vice president to look after communications with the other nations which are being linked with this organization? In short, what will their duties be and how many will be appointed.

Mr. McIlraith: Because of the rapid growth in international telecommunication it is now necessary for the corporation to connect its overseas facilities in the Atlantic area with Iceland, West Germany, France, Italy, Switzerland, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, the Netherlands and Belgium. In addition, after Monday of next week, on account of the trans-Pacific cable serving Australia, New Zealand and, ultimately, Hong Kong I believe—and here I am anticipating—that, because of the necessity of having a station in Hawaii, there will have to be an agreement with the United States.

This, by the way, is a crown venture which has been extremely successful and I think it is one in which all Canadians can take a great deal of pride. The corporation has certainly sharply improved the communication facilities between this country and countries overseas.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): The minister has answered my question regarding the other nations involved. Does the corporation already have cables running to these various countries or does it intend to instal new cables? If new cables are to be laid, will the operation be financed by the corporation itself, from its own funds, or will there be a charge on the treasury?

Mr. McIlraith: This is one of the corporations which pay full taxes and interest on money borrowed. It is true, it borrows from the treasury, but the corporation pays its way. There will be a new cable physically inaugurated on Monday—the Pacific cable. Her Majesty the Queen will open it officially at an elaborate ceremony, a ceremony which, I think, will be of real interest to Canadians. I would anticipate—and I do not wish to be considered as making an announcement of any kind—that additional transoceanic cable service will be required to meet the growing demand. Demands on the service have increased beyond anything anticipated when this corporation was first set up. Indeed, the demand has been such that the capacity of the cables already in use has been taken up much more rapidly than was anticipated when they were planned and installed.

Mr. Lambert: Does the minister anticipate, in connection with this envisaged expansion, that the corporation will come to parliament to seek more capital funds in the relatively near future? I am hazy about the financial structure of this particular corporation, so perhaps the minister could tell us what the capital requirements are likely to be in the reasonably foreseeable future, since what he has said in the last few moments indicates that a substantial investment will have to be made.

There has been an impression at times that some of these crown corporations operate in the nature of satellites orbiting around parliament. There is a means of communication, yes. You can send up a beam to the president of the corporation through the minister and there may be communication back, but that is all. Some of them have operated in the past on this basis. I am not suggesting this is the case in this instance, but I should like the minister to indicate with regard to this proposed increase in the number of directors and the naming of vice presidents, whether these appointments are to be within the strict jurisdiction of the corporation or whether they are to be the subject of suggestion—whether the board would be amenable to suggestion—from the government. I have some suspicion about the wisdom of creating these satellites. They go orbiting off and parliament cannot get at them. Does this amount to a step further out into the stratosphere for this corporation?

Mr. McIlraith: I think the simple answer to the question is, no. The need for this corporation arises out of the fact that it has to enter into commercial contracts with countries abroad and participate in the construction and management of these cable lines across the oceans, so that we may have the advantage of communication by telephone and otherwise. This is the system used by the press agencies, the telephone companies and others requiring to make long distance telephone calls and other communications across the oceans. I am not aware there has been any suggestion of any other way in which an operation of this kind could be managed.

There is nothing involved in this bill, other than changes required because of the growth of the operation. How does one take a cable thousands of miles to Australia without touching on an island owned by the United States? A piece of property must be acquired there so that the cable may be taken across. A similar situation arises in the case of one of the Atlantic cables running to Greenland. Once the cable has been taken across, why should it not be used by the other countries of Europe? Why should its use be limited to one or two countries? I might add that there is very close co-operation in this field, in the Pacific region between Australia, New Zealand, Great Britain, and ourselves; and in the Atlantic region between Britain and ourselves. All these projects are carried out co-operatively.

Mr. Lambert: With the greatest respect to the minister, I must say he has done what is done by many kinds of fish when they want to escape from danger; he has obscured the waters. He has given us some technical details which I think we all rather felt we knew, but what I am concerned about is the future financial requirements of Canadian Telex and also the matter of the nomination of directors and vice presidents. Those are the questions I put to the minister, and frankly we have not had any information on them.

Mr. McIlraith: I think I should deal with the question of vice presidents. A vice president in the corporation has now come to be looked upon as an employee. It is a designation of an employee, as opposed to the older corporate idea, that a vice president was a part of management and the board of directors. It is to make the necessary change there, that this amendment is being made in the act. I do not know precisely what number of vice presidents there will be. I suspect it will change from time to time, but since it is the designation of an employee that is concerned I cannot see the purpose or the desirability or, indeed, the need for a limitation of the numbers because we are all familiar with the change in administration practice in this regard.

On the question of increasing the number of directors from five to seven, I would point out that this is a pretty big country. It is trite to say that, I know; but sometimes we may overlook it in considering such matters. We have to run an operation now that is almost world encircling. That means that there has to be the kind of personnel on the directorate who have a knowledge of this kind of subject matter. In addition to those who are particularly competent in the financial field we need people with a knowledge of certain more specialized elements of the communications field.

In that connection perhaps it would be useful to hon. members if I were to remind them of the fact that one of the directors is a Canadian Press representative, Mr. Purcell. The requirement for the two extra members is for the purpose of trying to bring wider representation and making a stronger board. It has also been found that with five directors it has been difficult at times to have a quorum. If there is one man ill and another unavoidably absent, the directors are down to a bare quorum and it is thought that is not sufficient to deal with some of the questions of importance that the board of directors have to deal with from time to time.

With regard to the capital requirements, at this moment I do not foresee any need for additional capital, but there has been such rapid change in the whole field of communications that I am not going to preclude that possibility. I think it would not be responsible to do so, because these contracts are quite costly so far as capital requirements are concerned, although they have turned out to be very profitable from the point of view of earning capacity.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, in connection with the financing we are considering at the present time the resolution uses the words "co-ordination with nations outside the British commonwealth". That brings up the question I asked first of all. Are the cables already built to these other countries? If not, are the other countries going to assist in the building of them? Are they going to pay for the right to connect to the main cable across the Pacific which will be opened in a short time, and also the one that goes across the Atlantic?

Mr. McIlraith: The cables I have been talking about are for the most part already in position and it is a matter of making connecting arrangements at the terminal point. That is the way the cable business operates. I took the illustration of the Pacific cable. I have every reason to suspect that there will be requests for connection by other cable companies so they may use our facilities for communications to Canada. But we do not go into cable operation as such in these other countries. In other words, it is not a facility we provide in those countries. The situation is not unlike the telephone companies internally in Canada. You can make a telephone connection with another company in various ways, but you have your terminal point at which you receive the other facility.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I will say a few words with respect to the introduction of this resolution, which I find very interesting. This resolution tends to create more intimate relations or ties with the other countries of the world.

This offers me, at the same time, the opportunity to point out, as did the minister, that it has been decided to increase the number of directors of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation:

> The increase by two of the number of directors of that corporation.

This also gives me a further opportunity of making a suggestion. Would the minister be of the opinion that a French speaking Canadian be appointed to such directorships, in order to restore the communications between the two most important groups in Canada.

Since we are talking about communications, I may say—and no pun intended—that it would be a fine opportunity to restore the communications between the two groups which made this country.

I would also like to draw the attention of the minister to an experience which I had last year, when I was delegate to the interparliamentary union convention at Brasilia, in Brazil. I recall that we were then practically without any contact with Canada; the only link we had with North America was through the United States embassy. Each morning that embassy would present us with a short release which allowed us to keep abreast of what was happening in North America, but we had absolutely nothing from Canada.

That is how I was able to realize that means of communication between our two countries are non-existent.

Brazil, which has a population of 75 million people, is a very large country; she is very friendly and I deplored the lack of means of communication between our two countries. It must be remembered that we were at that time at the peak of the Cuban crisis, and this interparliamentary conference had a deep influence on the settling of that crisis, but few newspapers mentioned that fact. The hon. senators with whom I was will certainly be able to confirm my statement; we were in contact with parliamentarians from communist countries, etc., and the congress of the interparliamentary union had a considerable influence in the settling of the Cuban issue as well as the firm stand taken, especially by the late president of the United States, who has been the victim of a tragic assassination a few days ago.

Our country must establish close relations with the largest republic in South America, "A Republica dos Estados Unidos do Brasil". This is most important, and that is why we must establish ties with this country through cables.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks on the advisability of bringing forward a bill to amend or change the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act.

I wonder whether this takes into account the fact that a few months ago the French dailies of America expressed the need of having in Canada a French language news agency because some newspapers pretended that there was a lack in the supplying of news.

I therefore wish that the communication facilities which would be provided by the extension of the telecommunication system in question be also extended, besides the countries mentioned a while ago in the list supplied by the minister, to countries of Latin America. I hope also that the prohibitive cost of news agencies will be reduced and that a new inter-American agency will be created which would be able to facilitate the relations of French daily newspapers on this continent with countries other than the commonwealth countries, since the measure under study tends to amend this crown corporation in order to promote our relations with other countries.

As far as increasing the number of directors of this corporation from five to seven is concerned, I hope that favourable consideration will be given to the suggestion of the hon. member for Chicoutimi regarding the advisability of appointing a French Canadian to one of these positions, in order to better even more the friendly relations between the two countries. This might also facilitate the creation, for the benefit of the French daily newspapers on this continent, of a news agency having easier access to the world telecommunications services.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have before me the 13th yearly report of this crown corporation. As there seems to be no French speaking person on the board of directors, I ask the minister whether it would be possible that one of the two persons appointed be French speaking.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, the hon. member for Beauce and the hon. member for Chicoutimi raised this question. I draw your attention to the fact that I would expect one of the directors, Mr. Pelletier, has some knowledge of French.

Mr. Pigeon: I understand that Mr. Pelletier is a French Canadian and is one of the directors. but I am thinking of the administration in which no French Canadian has a part.

Mr. McIlraith: I think the hon. member moved rather too quickly because I have not completed my remarks as yet. There is the engineer, Mr. Pelletier, on the board of directors. With the addition of two more directors I would think—I do not know how to express this in parliamentary language—the hon. gentlemen might feel the government would give very careful consideration to their remarks today.

In so far as the service to Brazil is concerned, I can tell the hon. member that the condition about which he speaks has been improved since August of this year. There are now circuit connections with Brazil. I may have given an imprecise answer to the hon. member for Edmonton West concerning certain connections with the trans-Atlantic cable on the European side. There are certain connections already made with some of these European countries. I believe the present act does not exclude them, but it is so there will be no doubt as to the legality of these operations that these changes are being made in the bill which will follow this resolution.

Mr. Pigeon: I asked the minister if this crown corporation sometimes used the United States Telstar.

Mr. McIlraith: I will have to get an answer to that question. The whole question of using satellites in substitution for cable is something we could discuss here at considerable length. Just when this stage will be reached, I cannot say now. I do not believe in using a crystal ball; I believe in careful planning and taking advantage of these developments, as well as pressing research on them as quickly as possible. I could not conjecture as to the time when we would use this device.

Mr. Lambert: I have one final question for the minister. Legislation in this regard has been ready for some time, so the corporation would have looked at the persons available to fill the expanded directorate. Perhaps the minister is in a position to tell us now who they are going to be.

Mr. McIlraith: I regret, Mr. Chairman, I could not enlighten the hon. member at the moment.

Mr. Pigeon: A few minutes ago I asked the minister if it was his intention to amend the regulations governing this corporation so there would be French Canadians taking part in the administration of the corporation.

Mr. McIlraith: The situation there is one having to do with the internal management of the corporation. I am going immediately to draw the situation to the attention of the management. I am not qualified to give an answer at the moment.

In so far as the use of Telstar is concerned, perhaps my answer was not sufficiently clear. We have not, of course, used Telstar.

Mr. Douglas: The minister mentioned careful planning, and I wonder what type of economic survey has been made concerning the economic feasibility of extending these facilities as proposed in this legislation. The minister may want to leave this matter until the legislation is actually before us, but I would assume that this involves a sizeable outlay of funds to expand these facilities. I am sure some economic survey has been made as to the anticipated return and how some of these facilities would earn enough to meet the capital investment.

Mr. McIlraith: This bill does not involve expanding the facilities in the way indicated by the hon. member. As to the studies, there are constant studies going on in co-operation with—if I may use the term—related authorities in the different countries, namely the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, in so far as the Pacific cable is concerned, and regarding the scientific advances being made and the economics of them. But there is no completed study, and no immediate contemplated increase I can speak of today, because the developments simply are not at that stage. I thought I had indicated this earlier.

Mr. Douglas: Perhaps I misunderstood the minister. I thought he spoke of additional cable facilities that are in contemplation.

Mr. McIlraith: No doubt there will be further requirements. The demand and the developments are so great in this whole field of telecommunications, both in this country and all over the world, that it is reasonable to assume there will be demands for additional circuits across the ocean, but at this moment there are none immediately contemplated. However, I was very careful to be cautious in this respect because of the rapidity of change.

Mr. Pigeon: This crown corporation uses the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, and I would like to ask the minister how much it cost the corporation to use that company last year. I know it is a poor company, and it is for that reason I want to know.

Mr. McIlraith: I do know the corporation collects a great deal of revenue from overseas long distance telephone calls initiated through the Bell system. I will try to get a precise answer for the hon. member.

Mr. Pigeon: I would like to know if Bell Telephone imposes its tariff, or whether it is possible for the crown corporation to engage in negotiation of an agreement with the telephone company.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. McIlraith: No, the Bell Telephone Company cannot impose the tariff. The corporation owns the facilities, and it is the one which imposes the tariff.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I do not remember the minister answering my question in connection with how many vice presidents there will be, and I would also ask him if the appointment of these vice presidents will come under the civil service commission?

Mr. McIlraith: The short answer to the latter question is no, but I think the hon. gentleman should leave his question until the bill is being considered, because I think it should be discussed at that stage.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Could the minister tell us whether to date he has received representations from French dailies promoting the setting up of a French language news agency in Canada through the improvements in the telecommunication services?

The minister just discussed the economic soundness of those improved services. Did the minister receive representations from French dailies to the effect that this crown corporation should be encouraged to provide for the setting up of a French language news agency?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Not as far as I know, Mr. Chairman, but I want to go into that answer further and if there is any change from what I have said I will inform the hon. member.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-112, to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Composition of board.

Mr. Douglas: I wish to come back to the question I raised at the resolution stage. The minister spoke of extending the service of the telecommunications corporation to other countries outside the commonwealth. I take it this will not involve any additional expenditure, but will involve entering into arrangements with those other countries to use the services already constructed?

Mr. McIlraith: This is what I was seeking to indicate. It does not necessarily mean construction of additional cables for that purpose.

Mr. Douglas: If there are any extensions of existing cable services, will they have to come back for money or have they sufficient capital on hand?

Mr. McIlraith: No, under the legislation they do not have to come back but an appropriation might be required for this purpose.

Mr. Douglas: Is there any limit on the amount of money granted under the act?

Mr. McIlraith: It is covered by section 14 of the act, and the amount of capital is $4½ million. Money may be appropriated in any amount for capital purposes.

Mr. Churchill: Would it not be wise to leave this now in committee of the whole? We have done pretty well today, with resolution stage and first and second reading. Hon. members now will have a chance to go through the bill and study it.

Mr. McIlraith: I would be quite agreeable to that procedure. I think we have done pretty well this afternoon. However, at the same time there is a suggestion I might make. There is a national harbours board bill, and we might dispose of it.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader to indicate the business for tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, in response to the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I should first like to say how much I appreciate the co-operation that has been extended today on all sides of the house, in what has been the kind of day I think none of us hope we will have to go through again for some time.

Tomorrow, as I indicated earlier in my discussions with hon. gentlemen opposite, it is proposed by the government that we should start consideration of the problem of redistribution and take first the resolution standing in my name to set up a representation commissioner. There is also a bill, of which notice has been given, in regard to which I would probably move first reading tomorrow. It is on the order paper today. Before doing either of those things, if there is no difficulty we will take the third reading of the bill respecting the Railway Act so that it could go on to the other place. I assume the redistribution measure would not go through in one day, and that would also be the business for Wednesday.

It was understood that on Thursday the house would go into committee of supply as soon as the orders of the day were reached and we would have a debate on the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. The same procedure would be followed on Friday, and we would have a debate on the estimates of the Department of National Defence. I will let hon. members know a little later in the week what second department will be available for each of those days, in case hon. members run out of things to say on the first two departments. I think however, that is an unlikely contingency.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 26, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MINES, FORESTS AND WATERS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt) presented the first report of the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

STATEMENT RESPECTING FORTHCOMING TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in responding to a question from the hon. member for Danforth on October 21 I undertook to inform the house on the current status of the preparations for the round of GATT trade negotiations scheduled to get under way next year. This round is colloquially known as the Kennedy round, a phrase which recalls to all members the courage and the wisdom of the late president of the United States.

On May 24 I reported to the house on my return from a meeting of trade ministers in Geneva that it had been agreed in principle to convene a comprehensive trade negotiating conference on May 4, 1964. This major negotiation is to cover all sectors of trade, including agriculture. In taking this decision the GATT ministers recognized that a great deal of preparatory work would be required before the opening of negotiations. For this purpose a trade negotiations committee has been established, composed of representatives of all the participating countries, to elaborate the rules for the tariff negotiating plan to be adopted, to work out the means for dealing with the special problems of agricultural trade and non-tariff barriers to trade, and to consider the participation of less developed countries in the negotiations.

This committee, of which Canada is a member, has held a number of meetings and established a series of subsidiary groups to work on particular questions. A subcommittee on the tariff negotiating plan has been at work. The elaboration amongst the countries concerned of a suitable across the board linear reduction plan designed to be largely automatic in operation requires the most careful and detailed examination. Hon. members will recall that while GATT ministers agreed on the adoption of a linear plan for the negotiations, it was accepted that for countries such as Canada, for which a linear plan would not be appropriate because of the characteristics of our production and trade, the objective would be the achievement of reciprocity through an exchange of concessions of equivalent value.

In the field of agriculture a general agricultural committee has been established by the trade negotiations committee. The terms of reference of this committee are as follows:

> The committee shall consider and submit to the trade negotiations committee recommendations in regard to the rules to govern, and the methods to be employed in the creation of acceptable conditions of access to world markets for agricultural products in furtherance of a significant development and expansion of world trade in such products.

A cereals group has met to examine the possibility of coming to general international agreement on acceptable conditions for access to world markets for wheat and other cereals. This group is meeting again during the present month. A group on meats has held one meeting, and a similar body will be established on dairy products. Other subcommittees are dealing with non-tariff barriers and the participation of the less developed countries.

Preparation for a major trade negotiation of the scope which is contemplated is a complex process involving progressive recalculations of the varying interests of participating countries. Agreed methods and procedures will take some time to work out. Indeed, there has already been what the technicians refer to as some slippage in the schedule originally envisaged for the preparatory work. The house will appreciate, however, that the negotiating conference itself is not scheduled to open until May of next year.

Canada is participating actively in the preparatory work and will continue to do so. We wish to ensure so far as possible that the negotiations will have broad coverage and will be substantial and successful. It is important for Canada that the foundations for the negotiations should be soundly laid and should accommodate our own negotiating interests as well as those of the larger participants such as the United States and the European economic community. Our current efforts are directed to this end.

Tariff Negotiations

In addition to the preparations being undertaken internationally, each participating country in the months between now and the formal opening of the negotiations next year will be developing its own negotiating position, including its assessment of benefits and the elaboration of its contribution to the bargaining in the light of its national and particular interests. As I have mentioned on a number of occasions, the government will be very anxious to have the views of all affected Canadian interests in preparing the Canadian negotiating position. However, announcement of procedures for receiving these views has been deferred until the framework of the negotiations can be outlined with more certainty, and I regret to say that it is not possible to give the necessary certainty at the moment.

Nevertheless, for many of the Canadian interests concerned there may be useful preliminary studies which can be initiated now. I know that some organizations in particular sectors of the economy have already begun such studies. The scope of the tariff reducing authority of the United States is known, as is the objective of the United States administration to use this authority to the maximum consistent with the procedures laid down in the trade expansion act and an adequate response from its trading partners, in particular the European economic community. It would be useful for industry to begin to identify and evalue the export opportunities which may be presented in the United States and other main markets so as to be able to respond quickly and effectively when the government is in a position to consult on a more precise and specific basis. It would also be useful if at this stage exporters would advise the Department of Trade and Commerce of barriers to trade other than tariffs which may stand in the way of the expansion of their sales to particular countries.

This statement which I am making today is in part an announcement to the business community, as well of course as to the members of the house, of the procedures we contemplate. The Department of Trade and Commerce itself has been in touch with exporters generally. Indeed, within the next few days I expect to have some informal discussions with leading members of business communities. It is in the light of the government's assessment of the trade benefits of the prospective negotiations that consideration will be given to the concessions that may be appropriate on Canada's part.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The general purport of the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce will receive the support of Her Majesty's loyal opposition. Indeed, I recall that in September of 1962 I brought before the prime ministers' conference in London the need of a world conference amongst democratic and like minded nations to the end that an arrangement could be entered into for multilateral trade. This suggestion, when made to the prime ministers' conference, was received with criticism in Canada by some of the hon. gentlemen now sitting opposite. However, in the month of October I submitted the matter to the late President Kennedy, set out in the same detail I used when I placed this matter before the prime ministers' conference. Within four days thereafter he informed me by letter, which is available to the house, that he would join with Canada in this initiative which he considered would be of major importance and beneficial to the extension of trade multilaterally throughout the world.

Mention has been made by the minister of preparations being made for the conference next May, I think it is, in Geneva. Certainly the events of the last several weeks have not been indicative of the same determination on the part of some western nations to bring about the desirable objectives of multilateral trade in the terms enunciated by the minister as seemed probable during the summer and early autumn of this year. I hope Canadian industry will react to the suggestion of the minister, and that Canadian interests as a whole will place before the minister and the government their viewpoint on this most important matter.

When we, as the government, said that across the board tariff cuts were not possible unless Canada was prepared to be sacrificed in various industrial areas, that view was ridiculed. However, today it is accepted; it is recognized, as the minister has said, that a linear cut, an across the board cut, would not bring about for Canada that degree of economic certainty to which she is entitled. As a matter of fact, with United States tariffs higher than ours, were we to make the same rate of cut the result would be very little improvement in our potential for the acquisition of markets in the United States and, on the other hand, a vast increase in the potentiality of the United States to trade in Canada.

Therefore I am sure that since the government has accepted the view that was ours, we will naturally follow the course of supporting whatever may be done in this connection. But I would point out one fact, namely that the last two or three lines in the minister's statement indicated to me that certain sacrifices might be asked for on the part of Canada. My hope is that in whatever action is taken we will maintain to the largest degree possible our preferences within the commonwealth, those preferences having meant so much to our country. The United States throughout has desired to remove those preferences. I know we had discussions in this regard during the so-called dialogues that took place between our government and the government of the United States; but we took the stand, and we still do, that the commonwealth has something to offer, and that there should not be a sacrifice of those preferences because of the desire of other countries to bring about such changes.

Mention was made of agriculture, and I would think this is going to be a very difficult field. One has only to look at the events of the last few days to realize what the situation is in the European community. There were many who claimed that we should try to secure associate membership in the European community but, sir, you do not hear so much about that now.

We find there is grave disagreement among the nations of that community, and in particular with reference to agriculture. I would like very much, and I am sure the house would also like, to have the opportunity to hear the minister explain what the result will be to Canada's markets for wheat in the event that the plan proposed by Mr. Sicco Mansholt, vice president of agriculture for the common market, were carried into effect. The other day he suggested that the common market should have uniform grain prices. That means the uniform grain price in West Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg would be $100 a ton. I have not worked this out, but mental arithmetic leads me to believe it would be about $2.90 a bushel, which would be 9 per cent above the current price in France, the community's chief producer of wheat.

If this plan is accepted it means a large increase in France's production of wheat. It is actually all important to wheat production, and I am sure this is something that will command the attention and consideration of the Canadian government. In endeavouring to bring about extension in trade I hope there will be no sacrifice of Canadian agricultural interests because of the action of the European common market.

It is difficult to follow the minister in the detail which he has given. No advance notice was given that there would be a statement in this regard, but I thought I ought to make these observations:

1. Having consistently advanced multilateral trade during the period we were in office, we support the action now outlined.

2. We are pleased to find that the old idea of linear and across the board cuts has now been departed from.

3. In connection with agriculture we hope the European common market's initiative, which I mentioned a moment ago, will be watched carefully throughout and that our markets on continental Europe shall not thereby be sacrificed.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic party I want to thank the minister for his statement, of which he has given us notice from day to day in the past. We knew the statement was coming and were eagerly awaiting it. Those of us who are interested in this field have had so many communications from business and agricultural communities across the country that I for one realize we really cannot deal with this matter adequately on a statement on motions. The issues the minister has raised and the implications of this policy upon the whole Canadian economy are so great that I would earnestly suggest that some time in the new year the minister try to arrange a general debate on this subject; because the matters raised in this statement are far too complex and difficult to deal with at this stage, although we can make some general observations.

I would urge the minister to try to arrange a convenient time at which this matter could be more thoroughly explored. I am sorry, for example, that the minister has not said anything about the implications to the whole program of the French position. Those of us who were on the recent trip to Europe were very impressed by the apparent determination of the French government to torpedo these talks. None of us yet knows the effect of President Kennedy's death upon the whole proposal that is now before us. There are signs in statements now emanating from officials in Washington which seem to indicate that some of these people are having second thoughts about this particular program. I hope the minister will be able to give us some information on this score.

But I come back to the main complaint we have been making from the beginning in regard to the whole Kennedy tariff negotiations. We still do not feel that the government is taking the country into its confidence. The minister has spoken about the desire to enlarge export opportunities, but there is still no clear indication from this government as to where it is going with respect to the concessions it intends to make and how these concessions are going to affect the Canadian economy. I suppose the business community from coast to coast is still in a quandary wanting to know whose ox is going to be gored in these negotiations and what plans and programs the government is going to develop to assist them through what will be a fateful transitional period.

I still feel that we are no wiser now than when the minister commenced his statement. The detailed portions of it are of course helpful and will be studied, but so far no clear indication is given to the business community as to what kind of program the government are going to follow, what kind of concessions they are willing to make, who is going to be affected by this, and what plans the government has to assist these industries through the transitional period. We still have no clear indication from the government where it is going in this regard. We have no announced policy in regard to adjustment assistance, without which we have been told we are seriously handicapped and cannot carry on effective negotiations. We were glad to hear the minister talk about commodity agreements, because in many areas these are the only long term solution. We would like to know what the plans are to work out agricultural problems with the European economic community.

All I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that it is just not possible to deal with this matter on motions. It is so serious, so far reaching, so complex, and carries with it such great implications for the whole Canadian economy that I urge that at some convenient time in the very near future a thorough debate be scheduled to discuss this matter.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, this not being the time for speech making or debate, I would impress upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce the necessity of keeping the house informed on this matter. I support the remarks just made by the hon. member for Danforth and urge that an opportunity be provided for not only a debate on this entire issue but also for studying this whole question, because certainly trade is one of the basic problems that we must face in this increasingly competitive economic world.

I congratulate the minister for having again raised this matter, and I think his remarks indicate something that is sorely needed in our economy. I refer to the need for more consultation and co-operation among the various aspects of our economy. It is a good thing that business is being brought into it. I believe the work of Canada on the committee and the leadership which Canada can give in relation to trade can be made much more effective on this basis.

I would just add that we in Canada do stand in need of a permanent and projected trade policy for agriculture which will give the necessary assurance to what is still our basic industry. I also remind the minister and his government that along with this question of trade one of the most vital aspects which cannot be separated from it, is the problem in the world today concerning the balance of payments. Along with the newer trade patterns there must also be a new financial arrangement worked out which can facilitate the trade policies which are developed.

I would also remind him that we have not only an obligation but an opportunity within our own commonwealth of nations, and I trust that as we are looking over the entire trade situation we do not forget the aspect of trade that relates to the commonwealth. It is now some six years ago that Great Britain offered us free trade as far as their part of the commonwealth was concerned. The government at that time turned their back on this suggestion; but certainly in the over-all picture there is no better place to begin than with the commonwealth.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I had not been told beforehand about the statement just made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp). Nevertheless, that statement is indicative of the great interest shown by the government in external trade and our trade relations with countries all over the world. It seems intent on increasing negotiations to get a bigger share of international trade, especially with Europe.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said preference should be given to commonwealth countries. Personally, I think preference should go to countries offering the best guarantees and the best terms, wherever they may be.

Those which do business with us do not do so out of love for Canada but because it is to their interest. Thus we sell wheat to foreign countries at prices lower than those in force in our own country.

It is desirable of course that we seek to deal as much as possible with foreign countries but we must not forget that our domestic market comes first.

We have overseas ambassadors, trade commissioners and others; our industrialists are represented and see to it that our trade relations are maintained and improved in those countries.

There should be government representatives in all regions of Canada to stimulate our domestic market and try to get all the countries of the world to buy our surplus production.

That is our wish and our hope in this corner of the house; moreover, we would ask the minister to introduce as early as possible a bill or a resolution that we could discuss so as to meet as quickly as possible the needs on both the domestic and foreign markets.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

PERSONNEL OF SESSIONAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (St. James) moved:

That the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping appointed November 15, 1963, be composed of Messrs. Addison, Balcer, Bechard, Bell, Deachman, Fisher, Forbes, Granger, Gregoire, Gundlock, Hahn, Leboe, Lloyd, Macaluso, Mitchell, Monteith, Muir (Lisgar), Nugent, Prittie, Pugh, Richard, Rideout, Rouleau, Rock, Sauve and Southam.

Motion agreed to.

CONSUMER CREDIT

CONTROL OF USE OF COLLATERAL BILLS AND NOTES

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-113, to provide for control of the use of collateral bills and notes in consumer credit transactions.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know the Small Loans Act regulates part of the cash loan field in Canada. Somewhat by analogy to that act, this measure is designed to regulate the consumer credit field as far as I believe it is possible for the federal government to go at the present time until interpretations have been handed down by the courts defining provincial and federal jurisdiction with more certainty.

This bill has two main purposes; first of all, to give warning to makers of promissory notes given as collateral to deferred payment agreements in consumer credit transactions that they may become liable for payment of the notes to third parties who are innocent purchasers of the notes for value and without notice of the sale of goods transaction; second, to limit the rate of interest chargeable on such notes.

This bill offers alternatives and a somewhat different approach to ideas already contained in one or two bills which are before the special joint committee of both houses on consumer credit. It is my hope that with the unanimous consent of the house the Solicitor General will move to refer this bill to the joint committee on the motion for second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—SENTENCE IMPOSED ON ARRESTED CANADIAN CITIZEN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, while appreciative of the fact that the Cuban government provided an open trial for the two Canadians charged with offences against that country, the sentence imposed on one of them of 30 years is difficult to understand on the basis of ordinary humanitarian principles. I would ask the minister what the government intends to do in this regard, and what are the possibilities, if he is able to say, of there being a major amelioration of the term imposed.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the present time all I can say in answer to the hon. gentleman is that an appeal is being lodged against the sentence in the case of one of the accused. What the result will be I cannot, of course, say; the course to be followed will depend on the outcome of the appeal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the minister say to whom the appeal is being taken? Is it to a court, or is it to the president, or what is the technique?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the appeal will be taken to a military body that is of a judicial nature. It may be that the judicial body in question is the same body that tried the accused. This, of course, would be unusual under our procedures, and this has been indicated already in the discussions and conversations we have had with the ambassador here and with the government of Cuba itself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister not say that an appeal like that, from the trying and sentencing body to that same body sitting en banc, would not be much of an appeal, although we have had that experience in our own country in connection with certain administrative appeals in the past? What has been the suggestion of the government of Canada in connection with the appeal? Has it been suggested that the appeal be direct to the president?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated the particular steps which would be involved under our procedures. The judicial body involved in the appeal may not be in accordance with our procedures. Having in mind the interests of the accused, I feel I cannot say any more at this moment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Ronald Patrick Lippert is alleged to have confessed that he was an agent for the United States central intelligence agency. I wonder whether the minister's department has made any inquiries as to the accuracy of this statement, and whether the confession was actually made and is in accordance with the facts. If so, does the minister intend to make any protest to the government of the United States for having one of its agencies involve a Canadian citizen in illegal acts against another country with which we have normal diplomatic relations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman will understand why I would not want to comment now on these alleged facts. I make no comment on whether they are true or whether we have any indication to lead us to believe they are not true. I make no comment on this point at all. Certainly until the judicial proceedings have been completed I do not propose to say anything that might prejudice in any way the conclusion of those proceedings.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Does the minister intend, however, to carry on an investigation to see if the facts as alleged in the said confession are accurate?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not want to say anything at this time until the judicial proceedings have been completed.

Mr. Douglas: The minister has succeeded in not saying anything.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did a Mr. Garfat, a Mr. Rueben or any other businessman from Ontario visit the minister or any of his officials to discuss arrangements for the flying of these canned goods to Cuba?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the particular canned goods in question were discussed with the minister, but I shall look at the documents and see what is the situation.

[Later:]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if an investigation is being undertaken, in view of the evidence at the trial in Cuba, into the reported canning of the explosives in the Toronto area.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid this is a matter which does not fall within the responsibilities of the Department of Justice. This is an event which has taken place in another country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Some hon. Members: Toronto.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may be allowed to complete my answer, in the light of the question which the hon. member has put I will be glad to ask our people to look into the matter.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Surely the minister must have misunderstood the question. The question the hon. member asked was with reference to certain goods which it is alleged were canned in Ontario, and now it is claimed that the cans contained explosives. Surely it is the responsibility of the police authorities to see whether persons are canning explosives under the guise of canning food.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I must admit at once, and I apologize to the hon. gentleman, that I misunderstood the question as it was put. However, having regard to the answer already given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to a related question, I have nothing to add to what he has already said.

Mr. Peters: We do not want to carry the question any further, but the suggestion has been made that this canning was done in Canada, and this question has no relationship to the problem of external affairs. If this is being done I presume a criminal offence would be committed, and this could be investigated irrespective of the decision made by external affairs.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to look into the question. I am sure my hon. friend realizes that if there is an offence under the Criminal Code the constitution is quite clear that this would fall within provincial jurisdiction. So the attorney general of the province is the one who normally, under those circumstances, would have a certain responsibility. I do not want to take responsibility from the Department of Justice, if there is any, and I shall be glad, as I said earlier, to look into the matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister inform the house whether canned goods being exported from Canada are subject to inspection by inspectors of the food and drugs division of her department?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I do not know offhand, Mr. Speaker, but I know we do not inspect them to see if they are explosives.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—REPORTED PLAN TO REDUCE CANADA'S EXPENDITURE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister tell the house whether there is any truth in the report, published in this morning's edition of Le Devoir, to the effect that the government is considering a cut of its military expenditures within NATO, in order to put more money at the disposal of the Canadian provinces?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any official basis whatsoever for that report.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

SASKATCHEWAN—INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION OF JET SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the minister know whether Trans-Canada Air Lines has plans for jet service in Saskatchewan when, or before, the DC-9's go into service in 1966? In particular, will Regina and Saskatoon be included in transcontinental jet service?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the only way T.C.A. jet service could be provided to Saskatoon and Regina before the delivery of the DC-9's would be by the DC-8's. At the present time T.C.A. has no plans for making DC-8 intermediate stops between Winnipeg and Calgary in the case of Regina and Winnipeg and Edmonton in the case of Saskatoon. I would expect that both Regina and Saskatoon would have jet service after the DC-9 has been placed in service.

RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING NEW PLANES AND WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister?

Can the minister tell the house why, on the one hand, the government accepted the recommendations of Trans-Canada Air Lines on the choice of the DC-9, while on the other hand, it rejected the advice of those experts who recommended the transfer of T.C.A. workshops from Winnipeg to Montreal?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): The Prime Minister made a statement in the house last week on three questions relating to the activities of Trans-Canada Air Lines. He has thus outlined the government policy, and it is not for me to comment on the Prime Minister's statements.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

As Canada has an adverse trade balance with the United States, has the government reconsidered its decision, and bought for Trans-Canada Air Lines another plane instead of the DC-9?

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. member is trying to imply that Canadair did not get its fair share of contracts with the United States, he is mistaken, for I feel that the statements of the Prime Minister clearly establish that this company will get quite a considerable number of contracts.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I asked the minister a specific question. I asked him if buying a DC-9 from an American company, and the fact that some parts for it would be made in the United States, would not contribute to increase the deficit in our trade balance with the United States?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order.

It seems that the answer I gave the hon. member did not satisfy him, but he should remember that the purchase of DC-9 planes will involve very important sub-contracts which will promote the expansion of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister?

Does the minister intend to make known the report of experts in favour of the DC-9 aircraft instead of the Caravelle and to disclose the reasons that brought about the purchase of the DC-9 aircraft rather than the other?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is in order to publish or make known technical reports such as that one.

Of course, the decision rests with the Minister of Transport, but according to the stand taken by the previous government and of the preceding one when technical reports were submitted, it will be recalled that they were considered as privileged material between the crown corporation and the government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport?

Does the minister intend to make known the experts' report and can he assure the house that no member of the house had the opportunity to see this report?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): The Minister of Transport does not intend to publish the report. The Minister of Transport can assure the members of the house that this report has not been shown to any members of the house, but its contents have been shown to members of the cabinet.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice?

Would the minister tell the house why the government recommended the purchase of an aircraft that has not been tested yet, leaving aside two other aircraft, including the Caravelle, which has already stood the test on an international scale?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is very easy. It is not the government that recommended the selection of that aircraft; it is the crown corporation, after a careful study, that made the recommendation, and the government accepted it.

Mr. Pigeon: The government interfered with this decision.

[Text]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the uncertainty that exists at Winnipeg over the question of whether the T.C.A. overhaul maintenance base is going to be retained there, as a result of the statements made by the minister and the president of T.C.A. after the Prime Minister's statement the other day, will the minister consider having prepared a clearcut statement that will do away with this uncertainty and tell us what the work is that will maintain the base there and the full employment that has been indicated for the next 10 years?

Mr. McIlraith: I might try to do that, but I have a suggestion for the hon. member. I hope the officials of Trans-Canada Air Lines will be before the sessional committee within the next week or two, and it would seem to me that would be the place to have such information put on the record.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Last week the minister said, and these are his words, "I would hope it would be maintained and probably increased, but I cannot be precise on the matter at the moment."

Mr. McIlraith: What is the page reference?

Mr. Churchill: It is page 5055. Is the minister not holding out false hopes to the people of Winnipeg by statements such as that? On what does he base the statement that employment might be increased, when the jet planes are not going to be serviced at Winnipeg and the Viscounts are going to be withdrawn?

Mr. McIlraith: I tried to explain this to the hon. gentleman on Friday last. The significant part of the announcement is that the Viscounts are not to be withdrawn, as was previously indicated in the announcements a few months ago. This is the significant part. Now, those Viscounts are becoming older planes which certainly will require to be serviced.

I have not got the Hansard reference, but in answer to a question I indicated that I expected the employment level would be maintained or even increased above the present level. In answer to a further question from the hon. member I indicated that I would not give an assurance that the DC-9 maintenance work would be done at Winnipeg.

That is what has been said on this subject so far; and should any further assurance be wanted, if the hon. gentleman will phrase his question carefully I will try to get a careful answer for him, because I am as anxious as he is to have these fears in Winnipeg removed. I have indicated that the fears in Winnipeg have grown larger than the facts warranted, even before the announcement, and for that reason as well as others I am anxious to have them quite allayed. I believe the situation in Winnipeg with respect to this matter is very much better than I was able to convey to the hon. member in answer to questions on last Friday.

Mr. Churchill: As a further supplementary question, can the minister give an assurance that the number of Viscounts now in T.C.A. service will be maintained at the same level during the next 10 years, and that they will be serviced at Winnipeg?

Mr. McIlraith: No. It would be utterly irresponsible to give an assurance in those terms.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the uneasiness in Winnipeg to which the minister has referred, and even though that committee is going to meet soon, will the minister consider giving a carefully prepared statement which will reconcile what Mr. MacGregor said with what the minister has said, and thus get this thing cleared up? I am sure he read what Mr.

MacGregor said the day after the announcement was made, and that he realizes there is a real basis for the uncertainty that exists in Winnipeg.

Mr. McIlraith: I will be very glad to consider that, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister tell the house whether Trans-Canada Air Lines is considering the possibility of increasing its fares to make up for the $20 million deficit that will follow from retaining the maintenance base at the Winnipeg airport?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister, by that answer, confirm the figure to which the hon. member referred?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR EMPLOYMENT OF BILINGUAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, and I want to make it one of personal privilege.

For the last two sessions I have been insisting that French be spoken on T.C.A. aircraft, especially by hostesses on duty aboard Vanguards or Viscounts.

I have to inform the minister that yesterday several members, including Your Honour, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. members for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve), Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger) and Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), boarded a plane at noon, at Montreal, on flight 351. We had but one hostess and she was not bilingual.

Will the minister tell me if he is making fun of us when we ask him for bilingual hostesses on T.C.A. aircraft? We are not asking that English be done away with but that French be spoken at least between Montreal and Ottawa.

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): This whole matter is one which has received very close attention. I am sorry I do not have the details with me at this moment, but a great deal of work has already been done in this connection. Efforts are being made to ensure that in all these aircraft attendants should be bilingual on routes where that is desirable or required. I am sure if the hon. member would pursue his question in the committee he would get a statement in detail as to what progress has been made in this field in the last three or four months.

TRANSPORTATION

SHORTAGE OF SLEEPER ACCOMMODATION ON TRAINS TO WEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Transport. It is somewhat related to earlier questions regarding the shortage of railway box cars, but this time it is in connection with the apparent shortage of railway coaches. Does the minister know that there is no railway passenger sleeper accommodation available from December 18 to December 24 for travel to the west? I called for a reservation during that week, and I was told that there were three pages of names on the waiting list. Will the minister use his good offices to see that additional facilities are provided so that people may be able to make their Christmas holiday trips as planned?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to draw the hon. member's question to the attention of the railways.

AGRICULTURE

DISMISSAL OF P.F.A.A. SUPERVISOR FOR SWIFT CURRENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. It arises out of a statement the Minister of Agriculture apparently made to a Liberal audience in Red Deer, Alberta, as reported in the Edmonton Journal of Monday, November 25, in which he said in part "Patronage, what is that? I select people according to merit." If it is government policy that personnel are selected on merit why was it, in view of this statement by the minister, that Mr. George Walker, the former P.F.A.A. supervisor for Swift Current, was discharged from the government service? Either this statement is false or the minister does not practise what he preaches.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last half of the question is obviously one for the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: In so far as the first half is concerned, I think I will have to draw it to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

REQUEST FOR OPEN MARKET FOR GRAIN AS BETWEEN EAST AND WEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture but he is a busy man, so I will direct it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think he can answer it. Is it the intention of the government to have a more open grain market between the western and eastern provinces such as exists between the United States and our eastern provinces now?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gave me notice of this question, but it has not helped me very much to answer it. I am afraid I do not understand the purport of the question, because I find it difficult to make a comparison between the situation that exists as between the United States and the eastern provinces and the situation that exists as between the western provinces and eastern provinces of Canada. I hope the hon. gentleman will rephrase his question and put it on the order paper.

Mr. Langlois: It is very short. One can order wheat or corn from the United States for delivery directly to the eastern provinces, and you cannot do so in Canada from the western provinces.

[Later:]

Mr. Langlois: I should like to address my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or to the acting Prime Minister. What has been done in response to representations made a few weeks ago by the farmers' union of Quebec concerning eastern and western grain sales?

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps I might be permitted to answer that question. This whole question of the movement of grain from western to eastern Canada has been engaging the attention of the government, and there have been representations from many sources. I can assure the hon. member that we are not lacking in representations. We are looking into this matter and following it continuously.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

REDISTRIBUTION

INQUIRY AS TO CHAIRMAN OF PROPOSED COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the chief electoral officer, Mr. Castonguay, been approached by the minister or other persons in authority to become chairman of the proposed new commission for redefining the electoral boundaries?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): There is no such office proposed and therefore it would not be possible to suggest to Mr. Castonguay that he be considered for the office described by the hon. gentleman. However, I do not want to quibble. There is a resolution on the order paper having to do with a representation commissioner and I intend, as soon as we reach orders of the day, to discuss this at length. I shall be glad at that time to answer what I think is the hon. gentleman's question.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO INTERIM AND FINAL PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he indicate whether there is going to be an early interim payment some time in the new year, or an early final payment on last year's wheat crop, to take care of the lack of capital of farmers on the prairies?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in reply to a similar question the other day I said I had already had a preliminary discussion with the wheat board, and they intend to follow the same procedure as in other years. I am sorry I cannot give a date at the present time.

POWER

HAMILTON FALLS—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE BY ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could the minister advise us whether the Atlantic development board is going to assist in financing the Hamilton Falls development, as was indicated by Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland over station CJON last Sunday morning?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the broadcast, and I would be exceedingly surprised if the hon. gentleman is accurately informed about it. I assume he did not hear it himself. I know of no basis for the statement that the Atlantic development board is considering helping in the financing of the Hamilton Falls development. I would be very surprised indeed if that had been considered.

SUGAR

PROTECTION OF CANADIAN PRODUCERS IN LONG TERM AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the minister's statements concerning negotiations now going on for future supplies of raw sugar, and in view of his statement that our domestic sugar beet producers will be protected, would he be willing to arrange for representatives of the Canadian sugar beet growers' association to be present at and take part in these negotiations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of this question. I can assure him at once that I have already had discussions of a very informal character with representatives of the sugar beet producers, but perhaps I might add that officials of my department have received suggestions from various overseas producers, some of them suggesting exploratory discussions, and it is expected that meetings will be held within a few days in Canada. When the nature of the offers from these producers is better understood, and if these offers merit serious consideration, an opportunity will be made for consultations with representatives of the sugar beet producers.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, will entering into any such arrangements for the bulk purchase of sugar, with any of the countries which have indicated some interest in this, require legislation, or has the government sufficient authority to proceed with the matter at the present time?

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not examined this question because I am not certain as yet about the nature of the offers or suggestions that may be made. Hon. members will understand there is a wide variety of possibilities, some of which doubtless would require legislation and some of which might not.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EFFECT OF PRICE INCREASES ON BAKERY INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him whether he has received representations from the bakery industry or from a consumer group with regard to the impact of the price of sugar upon the final product, specifically bread.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not had representations from that particular group, but I have from other groups.

Mr. More: I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he confirm the suggestion I have heard that the annual cost to the bakery industry due to the increase in the price of sugar is $13 million, and that the net profit of this industry last year was only $4 million?

Mr. Sharp: I had not heard this, but I thank the hon. gentleman for informing me.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—DISCUSSIONS WITH WESTERN PREMIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister consider meeting with the premiers of the three prairie provinces to discuss the very important question of railroad abandonment, since these gentlemen are presently in Ottawa?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have already discussed this problem with the premiers of each of the provinces, but I would be very glad to discuss it with them again if they so wish.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): As a supplementary question, since a meeting was held last Friday in Regina between officials of the minister's department and officials and members of the Saskatchewan government, would the minister care to give the house a report on that meeting with regard to railway abandonment?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if it is proper for me to give a report on that meeting. It was called by the Saskatchewan provincial authorities and officials of my department were sent there only as observers, but I will look into it and see if a report can be given.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONFERENCE ON SMOKING AND CANCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister give us a report on the discussions and dealings at her successful national conference on the relationship between smoking and disease?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice that he would ask such a question. In the gallery at the moment there are some representatives of the industry and individuals who were present at the conference, which lasted for a day and a half. The conference was also attended by representatives of the departments of health of each of the 10 provinces and in some cases representatives of the departments of education and of youth, as well as the voluntary health agencies, the cancer society, heart foundation, public health institute and representatives of the growers from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

As a result of a very co-operative day and a half the provincial representatives agreed unanimously on the fact that smoking is harmful, and agreed to undertake co-operatively a program of education and research directed toward young people in the country and their commencing the habit. The federal government then announced it was prepared to put up $400,000 for a program of education which would be addressed to adults, which education would take the form of a positive program and not a program based on fear. In addition the federal government announced that it is prepared to expend the sum of $200,000 to add to funds already available for research on lung cancer and motivational research into the smoking habit—why it is picked up and why it persists so strongly.

May I say that notwithstanding the obvious conflict of personal interest the conference proceeded in a spirit of great co-operation, in a spirit of moderation, and with a real concern for something which, it agrees, has become a national health problem in Canada.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to ask the minister if this allocation of $600,000 is reflected in the estimates now before us or in supplementary estimates, or whether it will be included in a later supplementary estimate.

Miss LaMarsh: I omitted to say that there would be a technical committee set up at once to deal with the specifics of the program. As the hon. member knows, the estimates which are now before the house are not estimates which were prepared during the time the present government has been in office. It is expected this sum will be included in the next estimates.

An hon. Member: For 1964-65.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I wonder if this information will be available to the press and to members here as well as to members of the other place, so that we may know what went on at this conference.

Miss LaMarsh: Apart from the briefs prepared by my department, briefs were prepared by each of the agencies involved. Though they were invited to bring sufficient copies for distribution to the press and to interested people, they did not bring copies in any great numbers. Representatives of the press were invited to a press conference last evening, and they were given copies of all the briefs where additional copies were available; and of course delegates were free to discuss with members of the press what had been going on. I have made myself available to the press to answer any questions which might be raised. As to the specific programs, these will be announced after the working groups have met and determined on them.

Mr. Rynard: I wonder if I may ask when this material will be available to members of the house. Is there a printed record of the meetings, with recommendations and so forth?

Miss LaMarsh: No, there is not. Reading of the briefs took up much of the time. On behalf of the department some notes were made of the discussion, but there will be no printed record. As I indicated previously, it was the intention to hold these meetings in camera so that discussion might not be inhibited by the possibility of material being extracted from the proceedings as they went along which might not be supported by later submissions.

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): I wonder if the minister can indicate whether there was any discussion at this conference with regard to the restriction of cigarette advertising in Canada. Could she tell us what attitude the conference took toward the extensive advertising of cigarettes in this country?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, there was a discussion with regard to advertising. It was pointed out that the cigarette industry had itself voluntarily restricted its television advertising to the period after nine o'clock in the evening. We discussed various aspects of advertising but this, together with all such specific matters, was finally referred to the working group. This group is to be made up of specialists drawn from the provinces working closely with the voluntary groups and the representatives of the industry.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST THAT COPIES OF STATEMENTS BE MADE AVAILABLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In view of the interest in the federal-provincial conference which is taking place, I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister could tell us if copies of the various provincial statements and of any formal statements which are made by the federal government could be made available to members at an early date.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): My understanding is that all these statements are public and that they are available, but I will inquire at once to see if they can be given to members in their boxes in the usual way.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING PAYMENTS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-110, to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say I am glad to see that the point I raised yesterday has been met. I refer to the fact that in the previous copy of the bill there was a difference in wording between the marginal note and the text of the bill. That has now been corrected and the same terminology is used in the text and in the marginal note; this has been done both in English and in French.

Thus the matter has been taken care of.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the office of representation commissioner and to define the duties of the commissioner under the said measure, in addition to those assigned to him under the Canada Elections Act and under a measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith; to provide for the salary and expenses of the commissioner; to provide for the appointment of a substitute commissioner and for the payment of his salary and expenses; to authorize the commissioner to appoint such officers and employees as are necessary for the conduct of his office and to engage on a temporary basis persons having technical or specialized knowledge of matters relating to the work of the commissioner; to increase the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada and to effect certain other changes in the Canada Elections Act consequential upon the said measure; and to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund under the authority of the said measure of all amounts required for the payment of salary and other expenses under the said measure and under the measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions, including expenses of administration thereunder.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. gentleman goes ahead with his presentation, I am wondering whether he would be prepared, in view of the fact that this is part and parcel of a general electoral change, to agree that the whole field be covered at one time in general discussion, rather than going over the same ground later or restricting the discussion in committee to the terminology of this particular resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the right hon. gentleman has anticipated a suggestion I was going to make to the house, which I think is a very helpful one and I appreciate his suggestion very much. I assume he is speaking for his friends, and I hope I am speaking for mine, and I appeal to hon. gentlemen in the corner to agree that we regard the debate on this resolution as a general debate on the problem of redistribution and the proposals which are being laid before the house for a method of dealing with this problem. In that context perhaps—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I say that we agree but we wonder, in view of the fact that such agreement could have been anticipated, why the minister did not proceed with first reading of the other bill today.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was just going to explain that too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it because there was not a resolution?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman, it is because the resolution which is now before the committee envisages all the payments that would require to be made, and all the financing, for both measures. Perhaps I should explain right away why that is. The bill that I did not introduce today was not introduced for the very good, technical reason which the right hon. gentleman has indicated, in order to conform with the rules of the house. The bill as it is now drafted envisages a procedure not for one redistribution but, if it meets the wishes of both houses, is something that would become a fundamental statute; it would provide the means of carrying on redistribution for the future.

It seemed to me that it would be desirable not to include in that measure, which has a general application for the future, a lot of mechanical and financial provisions relating to the specific redistribution measure that is now before us. That is the only reason for there being two bills. It would have been quite possible to put everything into one bill, but it seemed to me that looking to the future, if we could in our wisdom in this chamber and in the other place provide at the present time a means of dealing with this problem whenever it arises after each decennial census, so there would not have to be basic legislation brought before parliament every ten years, we would be doing a service to future parliaments. I am sure the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, who have very recently served in the government of Canada, are just as conscious as anyone who is on the treasury benches today of the immense demands that are made for parliamentary time. If we can do something, and do it well, that will save parliamentary time in the future, it seems to me it would be a sensible thing to do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Without abridging the full rights of parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: Precisely. The right hon. gentleman is more than right about that; without abridging the full rights of parliament. I think—and here again I have been assisted by the right hon. gentleman—that before I go on to talk about any of the details of this measure it would be proper for me to indicate the kind of attitude with which the government is approaching this problem and with which I, as the spokesman for the government in this particular matter, am endeavouring to approach it.

The measure now before us and the other bill, of which notice has been given on the order paper, represent a serious endeavour by this government, after a full study of the matter, to eliminate abuses of the past, to make the House of Commons truly representative and at the same time give this commission certain ground rules and directions from parliament as to the principles it should accept. It is an endeavour at the same time to grant flexibility in the interests of fairness in order to ensure that the considerations that have always been in the minds of governments since 1867 shall be maintained.

It must also be pointed out to the commission that rural ridings must necessarily, in the experience of the past, have less population in general than urban ridings, and that there are other considerations, such as geographical lines, rivers, county lines and the like which must be taken into account. But all these considerations shall be based on the assurance that an independent commission will bring about a redistribution that is fair, just and reasonable; one that will be determined not on the basis of the frailties of human nature, which all of us have, but on a basic principle that the political advantage of the government or a majority in the house shall not be one of the considerations to be taken into account or given any attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words we want to follow the lead that has been given by almost every nation, certainly by commonwealth nations and the mother of parliaments, that membership in parliament shall be determined fairly by the people.

Hon. members may suspect and indeed some hon. members may know, because I have read this statement, that it is not my own. These were the words used by the right hon. gentleman opposite in April of last year when he introduced a similar resolution, and with his permission—I did not ask it in advance but I hope I have it now—I am making them my own, because the spirit in which the right hon. gentleman was approaching that matter at that time is the spirit in which this government is seeking to approach it at this time.

It is true that the word "commission" occurs on several occasions and that when the other bill, of which notice is given, is seen by the house and the public it will be seen that it should be in the plural instead of the singular. But with that exception I do not think there is a single word in this statement with which I would quarrel. I do not think there are—I hope there are not—many words in that statement with which any hon. member of this house would quarrel, because it does seem to me it is the objective that all of us have in mind. It is the objective to which all political parties in this house, I am happy to be able to say, seem to me to be committed. Moreover, the business, the task, the burden, if I may put it that way, of redistribution is a constitutional obligation which is imposed upon parliament, and particularly, of course, upon this chamber. I say that because, unless I am greatly mistaken—and I must confess

I have not done any detailed research—the other place has never altered what has been done in this place in the past. Therefore, because it has to do with the composition of this house, and because it is imposed upon all of us by the constitution, the question of redistribution is peculiarly the duty—and not one that any of us regards with much relish, I think—of all of us in this house.

I may say at once that the government has no intention of trying to impose its will, and has no desire to do so; I want to emphasize that. As I said earlier we are committed to the principle of an independent, impartial redistribution to be performed outside this house. But as I indicated in answer to a question from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre the other day, we in the government do not feel that we are committed to any detail on either of these measures. We do not intend to regard the bills as government measures except technically. Because technically they are government measures; they are taken up in government time and are introduced by a minister of the crown. However, we feel that the collective wisdom of this house should be brought to bear on this problem and that any good suggestion from any quarter should be incorporated into these measures without any thought of partisan consideration. We will welcome improvements from any quarter of the house to either of the bills. It is true, of course, that for the financial provisions of the bill which would follow this particular resolution the government has naturally to take its proper responsibility and, of course, intends to do so; but for every other aspect of these measures if there is a better way that anyone can suggest of doing these things than that suggested in the bills, and if it commends itself to the majority of the house, I can assure hon. members in all parts of the house that there will be no quarrel from this side.

I should like to say a word or two about the history of the proposals I am now seeking to outline. We in the government regarded the problem of redistribution, I think rightly, as one of the most urgent problems facing us when we took office. I discussed this matter with the chief electoral officer the day I became a minister. The following day the cabinet authorized the chief electoral officer to enlist the co-operation of the bureau of statistics and of the surveyor general's branch of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys with a view to making every kind of technical preparation which could properly be advanced. At that time the census information was available, and this would have made available the technical material required for redistribution as soon as parliament could act and determine upon how it should be accomplished.

The chief electoral officer suggested to me that it would be helpful if he visited Australia and New Zealand, where they have a very long experience of impartial redistribution, and where in Australia the situation is very similar to our own. That suggestion received my approval, and I think his visit has been one of the most useful things which could possibly have been done. The chief electoral officer had studied the system in those countries and in Great Britain and elsewhere, but actually seeing those countries and talking to the people who carried out these functions I think gave him a much better appreciation both of the difficulties and of the methods that need to be applied in this very complicated kind of problem.

I should perhaps add that the chief electoral officer told me something at the beginning of our discussion which horrified me. He told me that his estimate was that it would take a commission so long to consider the question that it would not be possible to have an election under redistribution before the autumn of 1968. I see the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings smiles; I suppose I am not the only person who has received such advice. I must say that I said I should not like to have to make a proposal to parliament with that kind of timetable attached to it, and I remarked that there must surely be some other way of doing this more rapidly. But the more I went into it the more complex and difficult it appeared; and to be quite frank with you, sir, the more impossible it seemed to me to expect one single commission composed of eminent persons who would have to be selected for this purpose, but who would probably feel they could not give their full time to it, to accomplish it in any reasonable time.

Therefore I made the suggestion to the chief electoral officer that we have four commissions, one for Quebec, one for Ontario, one for the four Atlantic provinces and one for the four western provinces. We gave quite a lot of thought to this possibility. Then when the chief electoral officer came back from Australia he advised me that in Australia they had a separate commission for each of the states, that to have a commission straddling two or more states would mean that one would not save very much expense but that one would lose a good deal of time, and that one would not have within the commission the same intimate knowledge of local conditions which one would have within a commission from a single state. I must say that this argument seemed to me to be very compelling, besides which it seemed to me that it would still further reduce the time likely to be taken in carrying out the redistribution. It also seemed to have another advantage to me; it meant that if we had commissions composed of three persons in each province we would have three people with knowledge of local conditions. These three people would be as independent and as impartial as we could find. They would collectively have three kinds of experience, and three outlooks would be brought to bear on this problem. I thought that would be much better than having only one person from each specific province in the case of the smaller or less populous provinces, and therefore it was decided that in the proposals which would be laid before the house provision would be made for a commission for each of the provinces.

There is at once the problem which will have occurred, I think, to every hon. member—that of making sure that all the commissions would proceed on a relatively uniform basis. It was then that the suggestion was made, one which I believe I made myself, that an office should be created by parliament and an officer of parliament appointed by parliament who would be ex officio a member of each of the 10 commissions and who would have the task of co-ordinating their activities.

Here I come to the point where I feel I should answer the question put to me earlier by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. The question of how this office should be constituted did not seem to present many difficulties. It was quite obvious it would have to be created by parliament and, like the chief electoral officer, the appointment of the commissioner would have to be made by a resolution of parliament.

Mr. Balcer: I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but earlier he raised the point that the chief electoral officer had advised him that if he were to follow a certain system he might not be able to achieve redistribution before 1968. Before the minister proceeds to another subject, I wonder whether he could tell us now what would be the time envisaged by him if this resolution should be approved?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am going to deal with that point. I am very easily confused, as the house knows, and in order to save me that embarrassment I wonder whether hon. gentlemen would let me do it in my own order and in my own time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You do not want help in that direction.

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman is quite right. I do a sufficiently good job of it myself that I need no help. However, I try not to confuse others. I was saying that it seemed to me whoever would be appointed to the office of representation commissioner should, of course, be appointed in the same way that the chief electoral officer is appointed, by a resolution of the house. It is true, of course, that I have envisaged in my own mind, and I think it is true that my colleagues have the impression, that there is one person who would be better able to fill this office than anybody else we know anything about in Canada, and I do not want to hide for one minute from the house that that person is the present chief electoral officer. I did not conceive that I had any right to offer to that gentleman a position which had not yet been created by parliament, but in my own mind I feel he is a man who, if he would accept the office, would be better qualified to fill it than anyone else I happen to know anything about.

Mr. Martineau: I wonder whether the minister would satisfy the curiosity of the committee and say whether or not he or some other person in authority has approached the chief electoral officer to find out if he would consider accepting this office, if and when it is created by parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I should be quite frank and say yes, I have reason to believe that the chief electoral officer would accept if he felt that he would be acceptable to all quarters of the house. But, knowing him as we all do, we know he would not wish to accept unless he knew that the appointment would be agreeable to all quarters of the house.

I do not mind saying at once why I feel he would be acceptable. We have had four elections since 1957 in a period of a little over six years. Although some of those elections were quite bitterly fought and many hard things were said, I have not heard in any quarter of the house, no matter who was in office or who was in opposition, any suggestion that they were not conducted with the utmost propriety. I think that all of us as Canadians can be proud of that. I do not want to seem unduly sentimental about this, but as we look about the world today and see with what difficulty other countries change their governments and how impossible it is in so many countries to change them at all without bloodshed and strife, I think that we can be exceedingly proud of what has gone on in this country in these last years. The way in which we have operated the system itself is in my view further evidence of the proposition some of us accept, that our system of parliamentary government is unsurpassed anywhere in the world.

Mr. Knowles: Would the Secretary of State permit a question? If I am anticipating what he is coming to, he can tell me. He has referred to the fact that each of these 10 commissions would consist of the representation commissioner and three others. Does the government have in mind that a pattern such as we now have in Manitoba, and which has worked out very well, might be the pattern to be followed? As the Secretary of State knows, in that province we have an independent commission consisting of the chief electoral officer of the province, the chief justice, and the president of the university.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman is trying to make my speech for me before I make it myself. While I represent a province other than Manitoba, I have spent over half of my life in Manitoba, I share his pride in the way things are done there and I will have something more to say about that in a moment. Because I have just reached it I should like to deal first with the point raised by the hon. member for Three Rivers, about the timetable envisaged on the assumption that this legislation would be acceptable before the end of this calendar year to the house, not necessarily in precisely the form in which it is presented but in a form that may and I feel sure will be somewhat amended by our collective wisdom.

If that were possible, and if it were possible, as I think it should be, to get the commissions set up by about the 1st of February, it would appear to me that under the procedures envisaged in this legislation the reports would be available early in 1965, that the necessary period for the kind of parliamentary approval envisaged in the legislation would be another two or three months and that, if we wanted, for other reasons, to have a general election, it would be possible to have it on the basis of redistribution in the autumn of 1965. But it does not appear to me that it would be practical at all to consider that any election held earlier than that could be held on the basis of any distribution of constituencies except the present one. Of course, this timetable would correspondingly have to be extended if for any reason the legislation did not prove acceptable and if we did not get it completed before the end of 1963. If we got the legislation enacted say by April or early May of 1964 I would not then envisage the possibility of its coming into operation so that an election could be held under it earlier than the spring of 1966.

I think this view is realistic. If we are going to do what I take it all of us are pledged to do, if we are going to have redistribution done by an impartial body, I do not think it is possible in any shorter period. I might add that I believe, that once the pattern has been set, a second redistribution would not take nearly so long.

Once the pattern has been set the adjustment of boundaries in a future redistribution will be more a matter of taking account of the changes in population in a single decade which, although they can be quite explosive sometimes as we know, are not likely to be anything like as great as those which we will have to take into account this time, when this commission will be seeking to deal with situations that have persisted, in some cases, for the best part of a century. The first redistribution, therefore, under the new scheme, if and when it takes place, is going to be a much more difficult operation, I feel sure, than any subsequent redistribution will be.

Now, I come to Manitoba. I went to Winnipeg for a couple of days just before parliament resumed this session in September. Unfortunately, one of the three commissioners who performed the redistribution in Manitoba, the only complete redistribution by an impartial body that has been done in Canada as yet, is dead. I refer to the late Chief Justice Adamson. I had a most interesting conversation with the other two commissioners, the president of the university, Dr. Saunderson, the chief electoral officer, Mr. Prud'homme, lasting for almost two hours. I was impressed particularly by one thing. As they related their experience to me, I noted that the methods they followed, the procedures they used, were almost precisely the same, having in mind the great difference of circumstances, as those which the chief electoral officer described to me as having been followed in Australia. It did seem that almost any independent and impartial commission going about this task would have very little choice but to follow these methods. I was rather reassured to have this notion confirmed. From what I could learn, all parties in Manitoba regarded that as a most successful experience in that province.

Moreover, I should like to hope that this would be the kind of commission, if this legislation is adopted, that would be established in each of the provinces. It seems to me these are the kind of people one would naturally look to. Of course, this is a problem with which we will deal when we get farther along. In this opening statement today, I am merely trying to deal with the general principles.

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I must advise the hon. gentleman that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am grateful to the committee because I think it would be preferable for me to complete my statement at this time. I shall attempt not to trespass unduly on the time of the committee.

Mr. Knowles: It is a very important subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is very important, there is no doubt about that. It is the very foundation of our system of government and nothing we could be considering could be more important.

Now, in general, what is suggested in this measure is representation by population. There are departures, of course, from the strict principle of representation by population. There is no thought of interfering with the representation by separate members of the two territories. I mention two territories, but we may possibly have three territories, and in that case I think we would still envisage what is now called the Northwest Territories being represented by one member. There is no thought of changing the senatorial floor provided in the constitution which, at the present time, protects the representation of the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. One of the most agonizing problems in the whole of redistribution, of which we are all aware, is the problem of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

As all hon. members know the population of Manitoba in recent years has grown much more rapidly than the population of Saskatchewan. At the time of the 1961 census, if my memory serves me correctly, Saskatchewan had only about 5,000 more people than Manitoba. I believe an estimate made in June of this year indicated that Manitoba had about 20,000 more people than Saskatchewan. Practically speaking, one has to say that the two provinces have equal populations. I do not think there are any other circumstances connected with the two provinces which would justify any of us in feeling that when they are equal in population they should have equal representation. It seems to me that that is a valid proposition. I know this is not going to be a very easy thing to accept in Saskatchewan.

I had some little experience, before I was a member of the house, with the problem that faced Saskatchewan when the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was the premier. After the war, there was the hope and expectation that the growth of Saskatchewan, which had been somewhat arrested by the war, would resume on a very rapid scale. Certain special measures were taken, which I have never regretted and which I always thought were justified, to ameliorate that situation in the post-war redistributions. We are faced now with the fact that Manitoba and Saskatchewan are equal in population and I think all of us feel only one conclusion could reasonably be drawn from that fact.

We are also aware of the fact that Alberta and British Columbia are, at the moment, quite substantially under-represented in this house. These provinces are a long way from Ottawa and there is certainly no argument for their being under-represented, if that can be corrected. We are also aware of the fact that ever since confederation, in nearly every part of Canada, the rural population has been represented by more members than the urban population. I echo the words of the right hon. gentleman a year ago when he said he did not think that could be entirely departed from. I noted with some interest, as I am sure other hon. members did, a speech made not long ago by a distinguished former member in this house who is now the lieutenant governor of Ontario on this particular point. I feel confident that any commission, taking account of our history, taking account of our background, would feel that in the tolerances they would have to allow—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did the lieutenant governor say?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps on a later occasion I could get that. I would not like to paraphrase it, but the gist of it was that the disparity in representation was not likely to continue on the scale on which it now exists. This was the point. I would rather use his own words, and perhaps it was a mistake to even mention the statement without having it under my hand.

Mr. Winkler: There were some very good members in that group.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course I do not conceal from the older hon. members—it would be useless if I tried—that I was brought up on a homestead in the bush in northern Manitoba and I may have a slight rural bias myself. It is also well known there is no town of more than 4,000 people in my riding, and possibly that might create a slight bias in my mind—I hope not too great a bias—but I know too that some very distinguished members have been elected to this house from some of the great Canadian cities, notably the city of Winnipeg, and I would not like to see that municipality unduly under-represented in the house. We all know the great burden borne by the hon. member for Edmonton West in representing that huge and growing constituency.

Neither do I conceal from the house that probably all of us in our hearts would secretly like to leave the whole thing alone if we could, and if it were not our duty to do something about it. All of us probably tend to have a somewhat proprietary interest in our constituencies. Sometimes we may even think we have almost a proprietary right to them, and after we get comfortably situated in a constituency, especially if we keep on getting elected, all of us feel that having new areas added to which we will have to go around and spread our charm, would constitute a strain we would rather avoid. However, the constitutional obligation is here, and I think all of us should remember that, whether they live in our own constituencies or not, no one can vote in this country who is not a Canadian elector.

It is our duty to treat all the people of this country equally, so far as we can, and if we really mean what we profess about self-government, then roughly each of them should have an equal voice in this house, which has the responsibility for overseeing the government of our country.

The House of Commons is supposed to be a mirror of the population. At present we all know it is a somewhat distorted mirror, and when I say that I am not reflecting on any hon. member. Under the constitution we all have a duty to replace the distorted mirror by a mirror which will better and more fairly reflect the whole population. That is what a redistribution is for; that is what it means; that is what this task is. It is, as I said earlier, a task which imposes a collective responsibility on all of us and in which each of us has an equal share. I do not think the right hon. gentleman or I have any more responsibility than any other hon. member for this task, except that we have certain positions the house has given us. I may say that the government hopes for and invites a co-operative effort in this difficult task.

Since this parliament came into being last May we have heard quite a lot about what is called the image of parliament. I think a lot of what we have heard and read about it is a rather distorted mirror too; but then I am probably biased, and probably some of the rest of the hon. members are, too. I think when we look back at the end of this year at what this parliament will have achieved, we will have no particular reason to apologize to anyone.

I have never apologized to anyone and never intend to, for being partisan in this parliament, because party is the essence of parliamentary government. It is what saves us from having dictatorship. If we do not believe in our parties and what they stand for, and if we do not uphold them, then we are not doing our job. That is why we can have peaceful change under the parliamentary system, instead of having to shoot the head of a government when we do not like him. Happily we do not have to do that. We have another method. Perhaps it is not altogether unpainful. It may leave a few scars, but it also leaves an opportunity for recovery. It gives the people a chance to make up their minds, to change their minds, to change them again, and even perchance to change them still again.

Neither do I think that parliament should always be a model of decorum. If we are going to feel seriously about these things, then there are going to be times when we are going to behave in a way that perhaps some of us would like to undo when we think about it later in the day, or early next morning; but by then it is too late. We are human beings; we are engaged in an activity in which sometimes we are seeking to reconcile differences, and at other times seeking to make those differences as great as possible because we believe good will come from making them as great as possible. That is part of the normal activity of parliament, and I think there has been a lot of talk by people who perhaps have not appreciated that, even in the great parliaments, all was not a model of decorum.

Sir, I will be breaking the rules when I say this, but perhaps you will let me. I was very much impressed the other day when the right hon. gentleman said, in the debate when we were setting up the committee on procedure, that all was not peaceful in this chamber in the days of Borden and Laurier, in the days of Tupper and in the days of Macdonald, and that perhaps on balance there are better manners and better behaviour in parliament today than there were in a great part of the nineteenth century.

Mr. Nicholson: We were not here.

Mr. Pickersgill: As my hon. friend reminds me, we were not in this house then. Fortunately there are a lot of books appearing at present in which we can read about those days. That is a good thing. In saying that, I hasten to add it is not an advertisement for my own book.

But here, sir, we have a different kind of task. We have a task that the government is trying to approach, and which I believe the right hon. gentleman and the government he headed were trying to approach a year ago, in an entirely different spirit. Here is a task about which there need not and should not be any partisan differences.

I do not think any hon. member in his heart, no matter what party he belongs to, thinks we should try to win elections by rigging the machinery. I think we should try to win elections by putting our causes before the people and making sure the people have a fair chance to register their opinions fairly and honestly. That, sir, is the spirit in which we are approaching this matter.

I would like to close what I have to say now by repeating once more the words of the right hon. gentleman a year ago, on April 9, 1962 when he said:

> We want to follow the lead which has been taken by almost every nation—certainly by the commonwealth nations as well as by the mother of parliaments—that membership in parliament shall be determined fairly by the people.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Orpheus had the reputation of being able to bring the birds out of the trees by the suave manner in which he spread his charm.

Mr. Knowles: Orpheus was a piker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am still on a high mythological level and the word "piker" was not then good usage. But had it been, it would have been most appropriate. I have been in this house a long while, but I have never heard the hon. gentleman, to use his own expression, and to repeat it once more, spreading the charm as he has done today. I know he will not misinterpret what I have in mind if I say that in direct proportion he arouses in me fears as to what may be contained in this legislation. I know I shall not be misunderstood, and I am in no way contravening the rules by ascribing motives—because I am not doing that—when I say that to the extent he has carried himself into the elevated airs of high non-partisanship the committee will look with even greater care at the provisions of the bills which he is to bring before us. Can I say that without imputing motives?

I am very much in agreement with what the hon. gentleman had to say regarding the image of parliament. I think what he said represents the wide knowledge he has, not only of the history of our country and its constitutional development, but also the practical knowledge which came to him when he was in the position of adviser to one or more prime ministers. Apparently in those days the views he holds today were not expressed as strongly as they might have been. Certainly the redistribution measures which were introduced while he was in the august position of being more or less a director of prime ministers did not bring about the idealistic bills which, he has now stated, will be laid before parliament.

I am in agreement with him, too, on the question of each of us standing for parliament and the principles for which parliament stands. When I read what has been written by those who elevate themselves to a position of punditry, that parliament is today an institution unworthy of its traditions, the Secretary of State and I are at one in our attitude in that regard. I have seen the parliament of the United Kingdom in action.

I recall on one occasion in 1957 going over to London after the conference of NATO powers in Paris in December. Prime Minister Macmillan was reporting on the conference that afternoon. I was in the gallery and making due allowance for the difficulties I may have had in hearing, I do not think the members of the house heard much more than I did by reason of the interruptions and the din in that chamber. I recall very well one occasion in this house back in nineteen—I shall not fix the year because that would identify the Speaker—when it became somewhat noisy and the Speaker said. "Let me make this clear: as long as I am Speaker of this house there is going to be a minimum of decorum."

All of us realize, as the hon. gentleman has said, that in the crucible of discussion there will be fire, and things will be said which in the retrospective hours might very well not have been said. I, naturally, feel gratified that the hon. gentleman should have seen fit to quote at some length the remarks I made. I was glad to see that before he identified me as the speaker there was applause on the Liberal side of the house. That paragraph aroused their support.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the right hon. gentleman will permit me to say that before I identified the speaker there was also applause on his side of the house?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no doubt about that, because they have always been appreciative of the good things of life and the best of parliament. But today there was that unanimity which does not always exist, when the hon. gentleman quoted from the observations I have made.

Speaking more seriously, I think our purpose and our aim must be to do our part to elevate representative government, to bring about the assurance that election shall be determined by the people, not by the manipulation of the ballot box or of constituencies. I think, also, that we shall have to give serious consideration to a problem which is becoming more and more difficult; with the mounting costs of election campaigns the state will have to step in and determine limitations upon the expenditures to be made by each and every one of us in our constituencies. All these things take time, but I feel there is unanimity in this regard. When I look back to the early days when I was a candidate—and an unsuccessful candidate—many thoughts occur to me. Indeed, I was just reading in the life of Mackenzie King, volume two, that when I was defeated in 1929 in Prince Albert, the then attorney general of Saskatchewan wrote to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the then prime minister,

Mr. King: "We have heard the last of Diefenbaker". That was interesting, because that was 34 years ago and many things have happened in the intervening time, and many similar predictions have been made. However, that is aside from what I am endeavouring to present to the committee.

With the purposes in mind that the hon. gentleman has indicated, there can be no argument. Over and over again we in this party advocated an independent commission. I am not going to clutter up the record by going back over the years and referring to the numerous occasions on which we advanced the concept of an independent commission. However, for the members who were not here in those days I would point out that there are several ministers now sitting on the treasury benches who in the early 1950's voted against there being an independent commission. But public opinion develops, and as a result of public opinion there today is unanimity that action in this regard should be taken.

There was one other matter to which the minister alluded and about which I wish to say a few words. He referred to the length of time it would take for this planned commission to be operative. Apparently he had not brought that to the attention of the chief organizer of the Liberal party, because hon. members will recall that a few days ago that gentleman was predicting that an election was just around the corner. The Secretary of State, who has a close acquaintance with the operations of the Liberal mind in this regard, has stated that if this plan is brought into existence he cannot foresee a general election based on redistribution before 1968.

Some hon. Members: Nineteen hundred and sixty six.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the right hon. gentleman misheard me. That was the suggestion, if there was one commission for the whole of Canada. I said that in implementing the proposals that are now being put forward, the earliest date I could foresee was the autumn of 1965.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—the autumn of 1965. Again I say that apparently there was not liaison between the one who determines the date and the one who provides the ammunition for the next election for the government and the Liberal party. I do not think it will take anything like that length of time. We were in a position where we could not proceed with redistribution until the completion of the census. I could argue that at the moment, but I am not going to, by referring specifically to the statute in that regard. We proceeded as early as we could in 1962 with a plan for the setting up of a commission independent of parliament in so far as political considerations are concerned. The following words appear in the January, 1962, speech from the throne:

> My government will ask you to take steps to ensure that the forthcoming redistribution of electoral districts is made in an equitable manner upon an objective basis. To this end you will be asked to approve for the first time in our history a measure to create an independent commission to recommend the changes required in the electoral districts as a result of the decennial census.

There is, therefore, agreement in principle, agreement in objectives and acceptance of the principles that were enunciated by me in introducing an earlier resolution.

Now we come to a consideration of the terms of the commission. What kind of commission shall it be? We have taken the stand that a commission is difficult to set up unless it is in fact in large measure a judicial one. We have support for the stand taken in that regard on the part of Mr. Mackenzie King, who in 1933 suggested a commission of six judges from different provinces, three to be nominated by the government and three by the opposition. However, in addition to the judges—

Mr. Pickersgill: I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon, but I did not catch the date of that reference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was 1933. That was during the discussion on redistribution. Those were the views of Mr. King, who was an experienced politician. In addition to that we felt that consideration should be given to adding to the commission the chief electoral officer and the surveyor general. We felt there should be one commission for all Canada, rather than a multiplicity of commissions for each and every one of the provinces. Indeed, the hon. gentleman himself said that he thought for a while what should be established was four commissions, representative of the four sectors of our country.

What were the terms that we advocated and which we still advocate? I very much appreciate the attitude taken by the minister in this regard when he pointed out that this is not going to be a partisan matter, that every consideration of partisanship is to be left outside this chamber in what we are about to do. He mentioned the chief electoral officer as a possibility for appointment to the position envisaged by this resolution. I personally have expressed, on more than one occasion, the view that Mr. Castonguay has discharged his responsibility in a way that is as unusual as it has been generally acceptable. There has been no suggestion at any time that in his many duties he has failed to preserve a complete and a towering neutrality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Private Bills

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock p.m., the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-43, respecting The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company—Mr. Wahn.

THE CANADIAN EQUITY INSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-42, respecting the Canadian Equity Insurance Company—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace) —Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Change of name.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Asselin)?

Is the company referred to under the name Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada now in existence and is The Canadian Equity Insurance Company merging with the Guildhall company, or is it a complete change of name?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, in the first place, in reply to the first question of the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, the Guildhall company is now in existence. The Canadian Equity Insurance Company is a subsidiary of that company. It is a group headed by the London Assurance Company, and the latter intends to withdraw the Guildhall Insurance Company and to do its business through the Canadian Equity Insurance Company.

That is why it is requested to change the name of the Canadian Equity Insurance Company to that of the Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada, the French version of which is "Guildhall, Compagnie d'Assurance du Canada".

Therefore, it is the Canadian Equity Insurance Company which will transact all the business of the Guildhall Insurance Company Limited—the English company—which will no longer operate in Canada.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. member tell us what is exactly the business transacted by this company called the Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada. Is it general insurance, fire insurance, automobile insurance or accident insurance? What is it?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): With your kind permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to read the information I have concerning the three companies concerned.

The Guildhall Insurance Company Limited, which has been in business since 1925, operates in the field of general insurance, fire insurance and casualty insurance.

Mr. Caouette: What company is that?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): The Guildhall Insurance Company Limited.

Mr. Caouette: That company has been in operation since 1925?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Yes.

Mr. Caouette: When did the Canadian Equity Insurance Company start its operations?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): It was incorporated by a special act of parliament in 1956. It sells fire insurance, accident insurance and casualty insurance.

Mr. Caouette: Then, it is in the same field as the Guildhall Insurance Company Limited?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Exactly. The Canadian Equity Insurance Company is controlled by both the Guildhall and the London Assurance—

Mr. Caouette: Is that the London Life Insurance?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): No.

Mr. Caouette: London Assurance?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): The London Assurance Company was incorporated by a royal charter in England.

Mr. Caouette: Now, after the passing of this bill, it is the Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada which will carry on all the operations, you might say, of the Canadian Equity Insurance Company.

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, the business will be carried on by the Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada. The name Guildhall will be changed, as well as that of the Canadian Equity Insurance.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, do I understand that it is a case of amalgamating three companies?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): No, Mr. Chairman, I apologize, and I hope that I am not misleading the committee. The London Assurance has been incorporated in 1720 in England; it has been operating in Canada since 1862 and it deals with general insurance, fire insurance and casualty insurance.

Last year, the London Assurance entered the field of life insurance. The Guildhall Insurance Company Limited, as it exists today, is also a British company; it is one of the main subsidiaries of the London Assurance and it has been operating in Canada since 1925; it has a great number of agencies here in Canada.

In December 1962, the Guildhall Insurance Company Limited acquired a majority interest which gave it control of the Canadian Equity Insurance Company, which company was incorporated by a special act of parliament in 1956 to deal also in casualty insurance, fire insurance, etc.

It is now the intention of the group designated by the name London Insurance to take away from the Guildhall Insurance Company, which is a British company, the activities in which it has engaged itself in Canada and to use the Canadian Equity Insurance Company to manage the Guildhall company's business.

That is the reason why they wish to change the name of the Canadian Equity Insurance Company, which will deal with the business carried on previously by the Guildhall Insurance Company, into that of Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada. It will be a Canadian company and it will also have a French name.

Mr. Paul: Is the hon. member implying, in his conclusions, that the mere fact of adding the word "Canada" is sufficient for a company to become a Canadian company? Would it not rather be a Canadian incorporation?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): It would precisely be a Canadian incorporation, since normally it can be considered as Canadian when parliament authorizes its incorporation. In order to give satisfaction to my hon. friend, I may add that out of ten directors, eight are Canadians.

Mr. Marcoux: Can the hon. member give us the proportion of English capital as compared to Canadian capital invested in that company?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): I am not in a position to answer this question definitely.

Mr. Marcoux: If it is not asking too much—

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Yes.

Mr. Marcoux: —could the hon. member give us the names of the directors, of whom eight are Canadians? Is it possible to have those names?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): I am pleased to comply with the request of the hon. member. Here are those ten names:

| Name | Address | Nationality |
|---|---|---|
| Mr. J. A. Pollen | London, Eng. | British |
| Mr. Wm. Toomey | London, Eng. | British |
| Mr. W. Earle McLaughlin | Montreal, Que. | Canadian |
| Col. M. C. G. Meighen, O.B.E. | Toronto, Ont. | Canadian |
| Mr. E. R. E. Carter | Toronto, Ont. | Canadian |
| Mr. Frank B. Common, Jr. Q.C. | Montreal, Que. | Canadian |
| Mr. E. A. W. Paterson | Montreal, Que. | Canadian |
| Mr. J. K. Lindsay | Montreal, Que. | Canadian |
| Mr. G. L. Craddock | Toronto, Ont. | Canadian |
| Mr. G. C. English | Montreal, Que. | Canadian |

That is all the information I have, Mr. Chairman, and that is why the proposed change is asked for.

Mr. Ricard: Would it be possible to know from the hon. member what is the proportion of shares held by each of the directors?

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): No, Mr. Chairman. But I may add that the bill was considered by the committee on banking and commerce and by our insurance department. I feel sure that the directors hold at least the minimum required under the law.

Mr. Ricard: You are satisfied without getting more details on that? You are satisfied with that?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Canadian Equity Company or the Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada are Canadian companies and will carry on operations across the country, and I note that the bill is introduced by a good French Canadian member from Montreal. Consequently, I would ask the hon. member whether he intends to suggest to the company to have at least one French Canadian representative on its board of directors in order to please the French Canadian group in this country.

Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): I shall be pleased to take into consideration that suggestion by the hon. member for Villeneuve and, with his permission, I shall suggest to the company to discuss that matter with him.

ADANAC GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

On the order:

Private Bills—House in committee of the whole on Bill S-44, an act respecting Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada.

Mr. Macdonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for the unanimous consent of the house to move this bill on behalf of the hon. member for York North (Mr. Addison) who is unavoidably absent from the house at this hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The house in committee of the whole on Bill No. S-44, respecting Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Macdonald (for Mr. Addison)—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Name in French.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might point out to hon. members that the sole purpose of the bill is to provide this company with a name in the French language as well as in the English language. For more particular details as to the company's organization and control I would refer hon. members to page 4739 of Hansard where the hon. member for York North made a statement in moving second reading of the bill.

POINTE-AUX-TREMBLES BRIDGE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, November 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rouleau for the second reading of Bill No. S-41, to authorize the construction of a bridge and a causeway over the St. Lawrence river near the city of Pointe-aux-Trembles, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Caouette.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, the last time we studied this bill, the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) moved that the debate be adjourned. He was to continue his remarks this afternoon, but unfortunately, important business keeps him away from the house.

Consequently, with your permission, in order that a decision be reached about the amendment moved by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and in case I did not make myself clear the last time, I will resume briefly my argument.

[Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).]

This is a bill through which the corporation Developpement Central Ville de L'Isle Inc. is requesting from the federal parliament the authorization to build a bridge over part of the St. Lawrence river to reach one of the islands it owns.

Waters are not navigable at the very point where the company wants to cross, because they are shallow, and the bridge would be 500 feet only.

Mr. Speaker, I submit respectfully that it would not be fair to Canadian taxpayers' money as well as the money of the citizens of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal to build a bridge which will only serve in fact to ensure a development by a company which owns an island.

Until now, the people concerned have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to acquire the islands and to prepare the plans for the building of the bridge for which they ask authorization today.

I am of the opinion that it is only fair to authorize the directors of this company to start the construction of that bridge.

For the information of the hon. member for Villeneuve, I must say that, under section 11 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, if a company wants to build a bridge, even if it is only over part of the St. Lawrence river, its directors must go to parliament and obtain the authorization to do so. That is precisely the procedure followed by the directors of the interested company.

In any case, the bill will be referred to a committee and all members who wish to secure information, will be able to do so by questioning the witnesses who will appear before the committee when the bill is studied.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully ask the hon. member for Villeneuve to withdraw his amendment so that the house may agree to the motion for second reading, which will give us the opportunity to study this measure more carefully in committee.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the other day when we dealt with Bill S-41, respecting the building of a bridge between Ile Ste. Therese, Ile-aux-Asperges and—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have to inform the hon. member he has already taken part in this debate and that he is not allowed normally, to participate again. However, with unanimous consent of the house, he may withdraw the amendment he moved during the debate, but he is not allowed, according to the rules, to speak a second time.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, were the house unanimous, the hon. member for Villeneuve could be allowed to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to the hon. member for Villeneuve taking part in this debate a second time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. members for their kindness.

When the bill was submitted for the first time, we did not have the information needed.

As this concerns a very large residential, and perhaps commercial, development on Ile Ste. Therese and Ile-aux-Asperges, in Montreal—two islands which are not under development at the present time, precisely for lack of a bridge—we changed our stand.

Tuesday last, when we discussed this bill, I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Lapointe:

That Bill No. S-41 be not now read a second time, but that it be read this day six months.

Now, with the consent of the hon. member for Lapointe, who is not here at this moment but with whom I discussed the matter, I wish to withdraw my proposed amendment, so that the bill be carried as quickly as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to the hon. member for Villeneuve withdrawing his proposed amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent of the house to withdraw the proposed amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment withdrawn.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

LOTTERIES

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION TO OPERATE NATIONAL LOTTERIES

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-32, to establish Canadian futures.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have only one regret this afternoon, and that is that there will only be 30 minutes allocated to the discussion of this bill, the subject matter of which has come in for considerable discussion during the past few weeks. I must say that there was a time in the past when I would have hesitated to talk in any positive manner on the subject of sweepstakes and lotteries, the subject matter of this bill. However, since there has been considerable comment in the press of the country over the past few weeks on this subject, I have no hesitation in discussing it at some length.

National Lotteries

Only a few weeks ago I picked up a copy of the Globe and Mail for November 8 and I noticed a headline which read, "Lotteries Gain Favour". This referred to an observation by the premier of Ontario, Mr. Robarts. I should like to quote briefly from the article, as follows:

Premier John Robarts suggested yesterday that Canadian public opinion was ready for an easing of the lottery section of the Criminal Code governing bingos, auto raffles and draws.

Statements by the attorney general are also referred to in the article, but I do not want to discuss those now. I should like to mention what was said in the Gazette a week later. There was a headline to the effect that the government was prepared to back state lotteries. A further headline read, "Federal Law Change Would Give Right to Provinces". This is the point I want to bring out. I am not going to read at length from the editorial, but I should like to mention one paragraph which reads:

Any decision will be dependant on the interest which the provinces display in the idea.

It has been suggested in various quarters that the subject matter of this bill might be ultra vires of this parliament because it infringes upon the rights of the provinces. I feel I must make some observations to disprove this suggestion. As a matter of fact, two measures on our statute books at the present time, the Canada Council Act and the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund Act must fall if Bill No. C-32 is ultra vires of this parliament.

Now, sir, we must look at the pith and substance of the bill in order to determine whether the objects fall within federal or provincial powers as distributed under the British North America Act. The object may, of course, fall within both the federal and provincial powers. The object of Bill No. C-32 is to be found in clause 15. In short, the bill sets up an operating trust for the benefit of the Canada Council. Reference to section 21 of the Canada Council Act, chapter 3 of the statutes for 1956-57, will show that the Canadian parliament set up the Canada Council as a charitable organization as described in section 62 (1) (e) of the Income Tax Act, another statute of this parliament. I ask you, where did the parliament of Canada get the authority to give three readings to the Canada Council Act, a statute which sets up a charitable trust?

Section 92(7) of the British North America Act provides that a province has exclusive jurisdiction to make laws for the "establishment, maintenance and management of charities in and for a province." The implication of this provision is that a province cannot establish, maintain and manage a charity which is not exclusively in and for a province. Therefore the establishment, maintenance and management of a charity in and for two or more provinces is within federal jurisdiction, under the first paragraph of section 91 which provides that Canada has power——to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of Canada, in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces;

And also by virtue of section 91(29), which gives to Canada power to make laws for——such classes of subjects as are expressly excepted in the enumeration of the classes of subjects by this act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces.

Now, charities which are established, maintained and managed in more than one province are expressly excluded from provincial jurisdiction by the addition of the words "in and for the province." The legal rule of interpretation is that the expression of the one is the exclusion of the other.

If the argument, that the charitable object of Bill C-32 is not within the power of this parliament, is persisted in, then the proponents of that argument deny the validity of the Canada Council Act and the legitimacy of the Canada Council. They deny, too, the validity of the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund Act, chapter 33 of the statutes of 1959. By that act parliament has set up a charitable trust in the name of Her Majesty that is devoted to research into the diseases of children, and the causes, prevention and treatment of such diseases, and gifts to the board of trustees are deemed to be a gift to Her Majesty. Therefore in law they are a charitable gift for public purposes.

Having established a trust and designated a charitable object recognized under the preamble of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 43 Elizabeth chapter 4—which is going back a long way—and as within the legislative competence of Canada through the enactment by this parliament of the Canada Council Act and the Queen Elizabeth II Research Fund Act, we now come to the question of how that fund is to be maintained. The answer is, by a lottery. Again it must be emphasized that the end and object of the bill are a charity; the lottery is the means chosen to the maintenance of that end.

The bill could have provided that the charity would be maintained by gifts to the trustees, as is the case with the Canada Council and the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund, but the whole intent and mechanics of this bill are admirably set out in an order in council of the Nova Scotia government dated June 12, 1752, which authorized a government or royal lottery. That order recites:

Whereas a lighthouse at the entrance of the harbour of Halifax would be greatly beneficial to the trade, navigation and fishery of this colony and might be the means of preserving the lives and properties of many of His Majesty's subjects, and whereas although many persons might willingly contribute towards so good a work without any expectation of a reimbursement, yet probably many may more readily be concerned therein, when attended with any hopes of promoting their own interest at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, this recital clearly puts a public lottery in perspective. It shows it is nothing more than a practical method of financing a public good, and withal, a much more practical method than hoping that the public good will be adequately financed by gifts from the public. In contradistinction to the method of gift financing, the order in council subsequently refers to the lottery method as a "voluntary tax."

We now come to the legal power of this parliament to use the lottery or voluntary tax method of maintaining an all-Canadian charity. From earliest times it has been recognized that the king has a duty to expend money for the establishment, maintenance and management of public charities as incident to his responsibility for the care of infants—and I hope you will not be too amused—idiots, lunatics and charities—I hope not in that order. This prerogative extends also to the supervision of private charities. "Bacon's Abridgement of the Law", fifth edition, 1798, volume 5, at page 534 has the following:

In like manner in the case of charities, the King pro bono publico has an original right to superintend the care thereof; so that abstracted from the statute 43 Eliz. Ch. 4 (the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act) and antecedent to it as well as since, it has been everyday's practice to file informations in chancery in the attorney general's name, for the establishment of charities and the like.

In a former bill which I presented to the house, Bill C-16, "an act to found and constitute the western Canada veterinary college", a public charity, I did not omit to provide in clause 9 that the college should be visited by Her Majesty or her ministerial agent to supervise the administration of that charitable trust.

To fulfil these charitable duties the crown has the right to raise revenue to establish charities, maintain them, and pay for their management. For this purpose the king may use his own private income, revenues from compulsory taxation of his subjects, or some sums of money given to him by way of gift, either outright or through the mechanics of a lottery. It was the lottery method that the king, through his council, used in the exercise of his prerogative to establish a lighthouse pro bono publico in the Nova Scotia example I gave earlier.

Through the years, parliament has by statute taken over many of the charitable duties of the crown, and the moneys to establish and maintain them are raised by compulsory taxes of one kind or another. Occasionally there are gifts to the state for public purposes, that is, charities in the legal sense. A Canadian example of this is the gift of Kingsmere park to the government of Canada as a public park in trust for the citizens of Canada, and you can see the Kingsmere Park Act, chapter 161 of the revised statutes. Or the government may initiate a public charity by starting a fund with moneys raised by compulsory taxes, and provide that thereafter the charity shall depend upon gifts for its maintenance. This is what parliament did in the Canada Council charity and the Queen Elizabeth II charity.

Section 92(7) of the British North America Act charges the provinces with the duty of establishing, maintaining and managing charities "within a province". With that duty is the reciprocal right to raise money to carry out that duty. The federal government is charged with a similar duty as to charities extending over one or more provinces. It enjoys a similar right to raise money for that duty. Nowhere does the B.N.A. Act prohibit either the province or the federal government, or the Queen in right of Canada, from raising money other than by compulsory taxes to establish, maintain and manage all-Canadian charities. If the parliament, or the Queen in right of Canada, wishes to set up a Canadian charitable fund and solicit gifts for its maintenance, that has been done. If the parliament wishes to set up a Canadian charitable fund and maintain it by lotteries, as in Bill C-32, that can be done. The question whether the provinces are presently bound by the lottery provisions of the Criminal Code, so that they cannot now set up lotteries to finance charities in and for the province, is not for me to answer. However, having given the argument which is in reply to the suggestion that this thing might be out of the jurisdiction of the provinces, I would go on to discuss the bill itself.

As laid down in Bill C-32 and as stated in the explanatory notes, its purpose is twofold. First, it provides for a legal outlet, under strictly supervised conditions, for those Canadian citizens who wish to gamble on sweepstakes, lotteries, and like games of chance. Second, it assures that moneys spent by Canadian residents on such activities will be redirected, with a minimum of expense, to the advancement of education.

Now, dealing with the first point, probably one of the most flagrant disregards for Canadian law is evidenced by our unabashed, bold and hypocritical attitude toward lotteries, sweepstakes and games of a similar nature. When we consider the numerous baking sale draws, turkey raffles and the chances we have taken to win a dream home or a Cadillac, it is hard to say if there is anyone who has not indulged in this type of practice at one time or another which, if investigated, would be illegal in the eyes of our existing antiquated law dealing with this matter. One may smile at the examples I have given, and complain of their overuse, but neither the truth they illustrate nor the ridiculousness of the situation which they stress can be denied.

Thus, the bill is so worded that those who wish to participate in the "casting of lots"—and I use this form advisedly since it is found in Joshua, chapter 18, verse 10—may do so. Also, they may participate in one of the oldest and most recognized entertainments since man has indulged in games of chance, and their right to participate will be protected by some method. The Canadian people can thereby enjoy a definite feeling of assisting in some facet of Canadian social justice. This bill is so devised that its legality and terms are concise and clear. Protection from graft and hucksters is guaranteed to participants in the games, and hypocrisy will be eliminated because Canadians will have in fact, freedom of choice; not that it has been denied in the past, but rather their choice can be made within the framework of the law.

What of the second purpose of the bill, that of distributing the income from these games for educational purposes? Well, it has been estimated that thousands of Canadians gamble away $500 million, with $70 million or more being dropped at the racetrack alone. As well, Canadians spend at least $20 million on lotteries and sweepstakes, breaking the law each year. It is interesting to note that in the past 23 years, Irish hospitals have received $100 million as a result of the sweepstakes. And here is a fact: Canadians have contributed a fine share of that. This year alone, it has been estimated that we will spend $15 million on the three Irish sweepstakes alone.

This is money which should stay in Canada. There is no getting away from the fact that as long as games of this nature are in existence—and I have seen no proof to make me believe they will ever be eliminated—the money spent on them should not be shared only by the winners and a group of entrepreneurs who might own the business but, rather, that it should be shared with all other Canadians.

Why education? Let me draw attention first to the university teacher and researcher recruitment problem. Dr. E. F. Sheffield, research director at the Canadian universities foundation, recently provided us with some very startling facts. In the academic year 1960-61 there were some 9,000 teachers and research workers in Canadian universities. But by 1970-71 it is estimated that the required number will be 25,000.

Dr. Sheffield has emphasized a number of difficulties relating to this problem. Proper recruitment procedures is one of them. But there are other more difficult problems. There is that of attracting qualified Canadian university graduates; that of keeping them in Canada; that of attracting teachers and researchers from the United States, and that of keeping some of them out of industry.

Although the foundation is doing an excellent job in solving many of these difficulties, I am sure Dr. Sheffield would agree with me when I say that suitable working conditions in the universities and attractive salaries for recruitment and retention of staff are vital. I submit that this bill would go a long way toward providing a solution to these problems.

What of the student population explosion and the resulting cost of providing university facilities? Dr. R. B. W. Jackson, director of the department of educational research, Ontario college of education, recently presented a paper to a conference of the Canadian education association in Quebec city. Dr. Jackson stated that the student population explosion threatens to exceed previous predictions and will continue at a high level until 1980. The cost of providing facilities needed in the next ten years in the universities could reach $1.75 billion and operating costs alone will double every four or five years. The Canadian universities foundation has estimated that total capital requirements of Canadian universities and colleges up to 1965-66 will be about $800 million.

Then there is the Canada Council. At the moment, the council receives from an endowment fund approximately $50 million per year which it distributes in the form of fellowships, scholarships and bursaries for deserving students who wish to pursue studies in the arts, humanities and social sciences. A new category will be instituted later this year, that of fellowships in science, engineering and medicine. I will only say at this time that the Canada Council has been doing a splendid job. Additional funds will increase its good work accordingly. The education problem is staggering. This bill could go a long way toward eliminating some of these difficulties.

Let me close by saying this: In my opinion, passage of this bill would provide the machinery which would allow Canadians to carry on an activity within the framework of the law; it will conserve Canadian dollars in Canada and would put them to work against this startling and frightening educational problem which faces us; and, may I repeat, it will eliminate a farcical, bold, brash, disregard of Canadian law. If we are allowed to turn our heads away from Canadian law on a question such as this, where might it stop? This unwelcome hypocritical precedent must be eliminated. Lotteries and sweepstakes work. I think Canada would participate in a "sure bet" by the passage of this bill.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Ormiston) will have noticed that I used two earplugs, just to get his message. When I was originally asked to talk out this bill—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: You got that message, anyway.

Mr. Otto: —to talk on this bill, I expected it to be a bill concerning the purchase of sugar futures or wheat futures, or some economic measure. I was amazed to find out that it was a bill to establish a giant bookie business. I am disappointed, with all due respect, that a gentleman sponsoring a bill in which he seems to have a serious interest would try to hide it by calling it "An Act to Establish Canadian Futures". I am surprised he should try to hide it under the aura of business. It is, after all, a sweepstake bill, a horse racing or bookie bill.

The hon. member suggests that one of the purposes of this measure is to keep in Canada money spent on Irish sweepstakes, and so on. Well, if members would investigate the police reports they would find that, because of our counterfeiting, which is pretty good, most of the money which is supposed to be going to Ireland is staying in Montreal anyway. What we are really talking about here is whether we are to legalize gambling. Far be it from me to say yes or no, but this is the question we must face: Are we going to take advantage of this situation; are we going to accept the fact that there are a certain number of people who want something for nothing—and this applies to most of us, at one time or another—and are we going to say that in this case we will make money out of it? It has been said that investment in the stock market in the purchase of shares and bonds, which this government and all of us are trying to promote, is to a certain extent gambling. On that basis it can be said that if we gamble on the stock market or on the future of wheat or sugar, surely there cannot be very much wrong with the purpose of this bill. However, I venture to say that in many cases where we gamble—and business gambles; we all gamble—there is at least an element of effort that is put in to make it a successful venture. Pure gambling, which this is—

An hon. Member: "Pure" gambling?

Mr. Otto: —does not have this aspect. If we say that we are going to take advantage of the fact that a certain number of people are going to gamble at all times, they are going to buy sweepstakes tickets, they are going to play bingo, there are many other more lucrative sources of revenue that we could probably consider. For instance, we could decide whether we are going to sell morphine, or legalize or license some of the oldest professions. There are many other vices in which people indulge. We know there are drug addicts, and we could just raise the price of drugs, for instance. Today the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) reported to the house that we are trying to persuade young people not to smoke. Why do that? Why not just raise the price of cigarettes and get everybody to smoke? This is the real issue here.

Let us suppose that we decide gambling is not such a big vice, that we are all going to do it, so let us legalize it. We then change to some extent the morals involved in this question. This is what we are asked to do here. It will always be quasi moral, quasi legal, and this is the element that invites the unwelcome entrepreneur, whether we are talking about the whisky business or whatever it is. Some of my best friends are, or were, moonshiners. It was difficult for them to grasp the fact that the government or somebody else could make whisky and sell it but they could not. It no longer becomes a moral issue if we take this stand.

We are here dealing with future Canadians. I take it we would have a very respectable board or commission, composed of judges, professors, and so on regulating the bookie business. It is going to be very difficult to convince other people that they have no right to do this. They ask, if it is moral for the government to do it, why is it not moral for them to do it. This is the real issue. I do not know that I have made up my mind one way or the other. Whether the element of pure gambling is involved, it is still a moral question to this extent, that the number of people who will take advantage of sweepstakes will cause serious concern to this country, our economy and our way of living. But nevertheless this is the question the house must decide at this time; not that this will be an isolated instance all on its own and there will be no other similar questions to decide, because we will still be asked to decide whether we are going to legalize bingo games or lotteries of all kinds, controlled or uncontrolled.

Therefore if the hon. member, instead of presenting this bill had presented a bill to the house to amend the Criminal Code, perhaps this would have been a better way to achieve his object, because if we are going to legalize gambling we should do it with proper regulation, in the proper way, through the Criminal Code, and all we would have to say would be, "Gambling is not such a bad thing after all. We have lived with it for centuries and we are going to go ahead with it". For these reasons I would ask this house not to support this bill.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth occasion on which we have had an opportunity to express ourselves on the question of lotteries, and I am mighty glad that a private member from Saskatchewan has introduced such a bill. This means that of the six bills of this nature before the house at the present time, members from four different provinces have spoken in favour of legalizing that which is being carried on from one end of Canada to the other.

I do not think the last speaker ever worked for a newspaper or he would not have asked the question, "Would there be enough people buying sweepstakes tickets to justify setting up sweepstakes in this country?" If he had ever worked for a newspaper and received the hundreds of telephone calls that come in every day, all day long, inquiring as to what second was the third goal scored in the game between so-and-so the day before, he would know the answer to his question. We have made inquiries about this, and we in the newspaper business know that the second at which a goal is scored is the pay-off on the sweepstakes being conducted on hockey games right across the country year after year. About 12 years ago these lottery operators or entrepreneurs, as they are called, realized that if they tried to sell tickets in offices on the number of goals that would be scored in a game, they would find it very difficult, because once you got up to the "12" figure people did not like paying their money and in effect drawing a blank.

Now they can make money by selling thousands of tickets on a hockey game, specifying at which split second the winning goal will be scored. There are tens of thousands of people engaged in this hockey pool business in the country at the present time—and I can give the house first hand information on that. It is part and parcel of the sweepstakes business. I sincerely believe that we should legalize what is now being done by people surreptitiously. Over $200 million are involved in this business and a great deal of it goes out of the country.

The last time I spoke about lotteries I had Irish sweepstakes tickets on the Cambridgeshire, but of course the Cambridgeshire has now been run, and a great deal of publicity was given to the Canadian winners. I have here three tickets on the Grand National. I bought these on Saturday afternoon while walking along Annette street in Toronto. My personal supplier happened to see me as I was going from the St. James Roman Catholic church bazaar to the Runneymede Presbyterian church bazaar, and he was good enough to honk his horn to let me know he had tickets. This shows how "difficult" it is to buy these tickets in our dominion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must advise the house that the hour for private members' business has expired, and the house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the office of representation commissioner and to define the duties of the commissioner under the said measure, in addition to those assigned to him under the Canada Elections Act and under a measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith; to provide for the salary and expenses of the commissioner; to provide for the appointment of a substitute commissioner and for the payment of his salary and expenses; to authorize the commissioner to appoint such officers and employees as are necessary for the conduct of his office and to engage on a temporary basis persons having technical or specialized knowledge of matters relating to the work of the commissioner; to increase the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada and to effect certain other changes in the Canada Elections Act consequential upon the said measure; and to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund under the authority of the said measure of all amounts required for the payment of salary and other expenses under the said measure and under the measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions, including expenses of administration thereunder.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

[Mr. Cowan.]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, at the time of adjournment I was referring to the fact that we believe in one commission rather than ten; and we emphasize the necessity of there being two judges on such a commission. I had mentioned earlier the attitude taken by the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King in that connection. Before I refer to what he said I might mention that as far back as 1903 the Conservative party took its stand in this regard and, as of the redistribution following the legislation of 1900, as a party we accepted the principle of a reference to a judicial tribunal with rules for the guidance of that tribunal. In that connection I refer to Hansard for 1903. It was also proposed that county boundaries should not be laid down as a principle except subject to certain conditions. It was proposed to refer the whole question to a judicial tribunal to be composed of chief justices of the supreme courts of the several provinces. The resolution in question read as follows, as reported at column 12376 of Hansard for September 25, 1903:

First, that a commission to consist of the chief justices of the highest courts of judicature in each of the provinces of Canada shall be appointed for the purpose of fixing the boundaries of each constituency entitled to elect a member or members of the House of Commons—

Then after some further general remarks the resolution continued:

—that such commission in so doing shall consider the distribution of population according to the then latest distribution of population according to the then latest census of Canada and the public interest and convenience, and shall particularly have regard so far as practicable to the boundaries of the counties, municipalities and cities.

MacGregor Dawson in his book says this:

Thus Mr. Mackenzie King in 1933 suggested a commission of six judges from different provinces (three to be nominated by the government, three by the opposition).

Furthermore, I recall very well Mr. King's speech in the House of Commons on July 15, 1947 when, as he often did, he quoted what he had said on other occasions. On this occasion he said, as reported on page 5648 of Hansard for that year:

My own view, and I have come to it after observing pretty carefully what has been taking place and what has been said in debate in this house as well as in the corridors, is that redistribution should be taken out of the hands of the House of Commons, where the parties are immediately interested, and should be put in the hands of a commission of judges. I would have that commission composed of judges selected in equal numbers by both sides of the house. The redistribution, if it is carried out in a fair way, has not to do with party advantage at all. It ought to have solely to do with seeking to effect a fair and impartial division of the constituencies.

And then he goes on to deal with the question in a general way.

On June 28, 1952—I am not going to follow Mr. King in this regard—I said on that occasion that I would set out in some detail the plans followed in this regard in other countries. I am sure with the reinforcement of Mr. King's views in this connection, and with the expressed desire of the Secretary of State to listen to the voice of reason, this is one matter which he will be willing to reconsider. Because if the plan be to appoint ten commissions across Canada, there will be as many different angles to the decisions arrived at. Regardless of whether there is one member representing the country as a whole, the same person being on each commission, there will be uncertainty and great difference of opinion.

Looking back to what has been done in other countries, South Africa has three superior court judges to consider the redistribution question. New Zealand has two commissions composed of five members on each, Australia, to which reference has been made, has one for each state consisting of the surveyor general, the chief electoral officer, with the chairman nominated by the governor general, who I think is really the governor in council. The United Kingdom has a chairman, the registrar general, the director general of the ordinance survey, and two other members.

I am not going to go into detail this evening because there will be every opportunity for that later, but I do want to point out some salient views which we hold in this regard. The first is that, to ensure that this would be an independent national commission, there should be one commission with a majority of judges on it. It is not for me to say what is in the bill, and I make no reference to it. But I point out that when in 1962 we introduced our measure there was no one more definite than the present Secretary of State in the view that under no circumstances should such a plan be accepted unless the names of those appointed were included in the bill. We took the stand that this had never been done previously. I am sure there has been no reconversion on the part of the Secretary of State, and in any appointments there should be I am confident that, in accordance with the spirit he has exhibited today in such abundant measure, he will see the wisdom of placing before us the names he has in mind.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the right hon. gentleman would permit me, I should like to make one intervention. I know he does not want to misrepresent the position I took. I did take the position that I thought the names should be in the bill, or that the appointments should be made by parliament. I still think that this should be done in some fashion. One thing I do want to make clear: I do not think it should be done by the governor in council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am clear about that; but whether it is done by the governor in council or otherwise, I am glad we have the certainty we now have that the hon. gentleman believes those names should be available to parliament in advance.

It is not for me to reveal what is in the bill but if, perchance, there were any provision whereby in the absence of agreement between the government and the opposition the governor in council would make the determination, I am sure the governor in council would be making quite a few of the appointments. That is something the hon. gentleman feels should be prepared against, so I am sure the government will be in a position, before the bills are in front of us, to indicate who in its opinion, should constitute this commission. There has been, as I said a moment ago, a large measure of agreement surrounding the person of the chief electoral officer, and I hope a similar measure of agreement can continue with respect to the other appointments to be made.

And now we come to one of the most difficult and complex problems facing us, a problem which has exercised the thinking of successive administrations in the past. From the very beginning of our country and throughout the years the principle has always been accepted that a rural seat should not be required to have the same population as an urban constituency. The reason for this is apparent to all who have represented rural constituencies. I was particularly struck by what the Secretary of State said today. Seasoned first in Manitoba, and then ripened in Newfoundland, he has an appreciation of the country as a whole which few possess. Travel widens, and experience of that kind always expands the scope of wisdom, and I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you would agree that this scope on the part of the hon. gentleman has been greatly increased since he took over Newfoundland. However, there has been a great deal of discussion on this subject. The same problem exists in the United States. As the house knows, there was a judgment of the supreme court of the United States in 1962 on the subject of constituencies—districts, as they are called in that country. In that judgment it was pointed out that throughout the years rural districts in the United States have had lower populations than have urban districts. It has been an acceptable situation, and the judgment places, as it were, the handwriting on the wall for the practice in this regard. It has been a long, difficult and trying experience to determine what is fair and what is reasonable. A similar difficulty has been encountered in our provinces, as well. Without designating any one of them in particular, I can think of one province in which two cities have almost half of the population but only one quarter of the seats in the provincial legislature. It is difficult to arrive at a fair basis of representation.

Certainly, I would be the last to argue that there is the fairness there should be when one constituency may have a population of a quarter of a million and another a population of less than twenty thousand. I am not thinking now of the two northern constituencies which, as the hon. gentleman has said, have guaranteed representation, just as the provinces by the sea have guaranteed representation in the parliament of Canada. It is a difficult problem. There are some who suggest that under the present system Canadians are governed by a rural tyranny. I think it was McGeachy who, referring to those in the country, said: "The tyranny of the yokel will be hard to break". That was in an article which appeared in the Financial Post. It is not a very good basis upon which to proceed, but it is indicative of a state of mind.

We must endeavour to bring about, with reasonable regard for the urbanization that is taking place, a basis of representation which will not be unfair to those large rural areas which are so difficult to represent in parliament. It is not for me to place before the committee any of the temperate views expressed in the bill that is to be introduced, but I am going to place before the house what the view was of the members of the Conservative party when it formed the government of Canada. I know there was criticism that we should have proceeded earlier than we did with this matter. Until today that criticism was tenable, but after listening to the Secretary of State point out the length of period of time that will be necessary in order to bring about the change, full corroboration has now been given by him of the course which we followed.

I recognize fully the difficulties that are inherent in any decision that will be made. We worked on this matter at length. The Secretary of State has spoken of the interviews he has had with numbers of knowledgeable people on this question. We did the same. What formula could we arrive at that would be fair to all? I am going to place our views on record, and they represent our views today as they did when we introduced our bill in 1962.

We believe, as I said, that there should be one commission consisting of five members, one of whom shall be the person for the time being holding the office of chief electoral officer of Canada and the remainder to be named in the proclamation. So we have that measure of agreement this evening between the government and the opposition, in that we agree that Mr. Castonguay is the type of person to occupy a position on this commission. Then we went on to deal with the ground rules, as it were. We said that the commission would have to make a report within a year and that in preparing its report the commission should be governed by certain rules. We said that the division of each province into electoral districts, and the description of the boundaries, should correspond as nearly as may be to the electoral quota of that province, that is to say, the quotient obtained by dividing the population of that province as ascertained by the census by the number of members of the House of Commons to be assigned to that province as calculated by the commission under section 11. There is no argument about that.

Then we mentioned the difficulty in connection with electoral districts represented by two members in the House of Commons. That is a problem, for example, in the city of Halifax. Throughout the years it has been a matter of tacit tradition and accepted policy in Halifax that one member shall belong to the Protestant faith and one member to the Roman Catholic faith. We have to make allowances for that.

What about representation by population? The old cry of "rep. by pop." almost caused people to resort to rebellion. It is a principle that must be accepted, subject to exceptions that are based on many considerations too numerous to outline at the moment. We also provided in our bill that attention should be given to special geographic considerations, including the sparsity or density of population of various regions of a province, the accessibility of such regions or the size or shape thereof, which appeared to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable. We think that is a consideration that should be placed in the statute as one of the ground rules.

We said that consideration should also be given by the commission to a departure from the principle of representation by population in the case of any special community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants which would render a departure necessary or desirable. That is pretty general in its terms but, as the minister said today, we must endeavour to allow for a reasonable degree of flexibility, so that the commission may exercise their responsibility in fairness and in justice.

We also provided for a departure wherever it appeared to the commission to be necessary or desirable, without causing excessive disparities of size between electoral districts, in order to take advantage of existing boundaries of counties, districts or other municipalities. One can think of old, traditional ridings in Quebec and Ontario which have been distinguished throughout the years for the representation they have had in the House of Commons. I have no plea to make for Prince Albert; and with a complete absence of bias and prejudice, of course, I point out that Prince Albert is the only constituency in Canada that has ever had three prime ministers. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as Mr. Laurier, was elected in 1896. In those days when anyone accepted a position in the gift of the crown he immediately lost his constituency and following his elevation to the prime ministership he chose Quebec East.

Prince Albert also had Mr. Mackenzie King for many years. There is a constituency far removed from the centre of the nation which has contributed three of the fourteen prime ministers of this nation. Quebec East had Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. There are quite a number of other similar cases across Canada. Manitoba has been honoured twice by having prime ministers. Leaders of the opposition, too, have found kinship in a province far removed from their accustomed abode. All this indicates that every constituency, whether rural or urban, can make a contribution to the House of Commons.

We have the rule of "rep. by pop.", but whatever political scientists may say in this regard there must be a recognition of the fact, which I am sure is within the experience of all members representing rural ridings, that traditionally some degree of tolerance should be granted. My suggestion is that the commisison might depart from the electoral quota for the province in question, for any constituency, to the extent of not more than one third or less than one third. This means that if the quotient is 70,000 any constituency would be allowed to have no more than about 94,000 and no less than approximately 46,000. I place that before the committee as a fair and reasonable basis.

Now, I know that whatever we do will cause harm to some of our members. However, the attitude of good will in the house that was evinced in such an abundant measure this afternoon by the Secretary of State causes me to make the suggestion that this might be a reasonable basis. Someone will say, "That will have the effect of wiping out my constituency"—or someone else's constituency. But no matter what we do in order to bring about a compromise, to bring about fairness and justice, there will be some who will suffer. Some might suggest 20 per cent. I do not think that will cover the situation at all. I think that a 20 per cent tolerance would have very serious consequences. I do not think it is enough. I point out what the situation will be in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, where ridings that have been represented through the years, which members have served with distinction, will find themselves obliterated if we follow the principle of representation by population literally.

It has been accepted in the United States that there must be a recognition of the fact that rural ridings will necessarily not have the same population as urban ridings, for many reasons that could be advanced and will be mentioned by other members. I suggest, therefore, that a one third tolerance will meet the situation. While it will not meet the position of many individual members in the house, it has in it the elements of fairness and justice. This is what we are trying to bring about.

The Secretary of State said that he hoped what we would do would be followed by other parliaments. I do not express the hope, I express the certainty; because when we remove this cancer of political manipulation and operation on constituencies, without an anaesthetic, for political purposes we will have removed one of the most serious blights on the parliamentary system. Furthermore, I believe when this commission is of the opinion a direct application of the rules in any particular case is not practicable or would be likely to produce inequitable results, they may recommend a departure from the general rule.

There are many other matters with which I could deal, but other members will deal with them. I am trying to meet the problem without the rancour of experience, without going back once more to fan the embers of past controversies, but trying to deal with this subject in a fair and objective manner. The minister has stated that the house is going to have an opportunity to make a determination, that the government is prepared not to stand or fall on whatever bill may be produced but rather to ask for the counsel of the house. It is for this reason I have chosen to place these views before the committee. I hope that there will be a considerable amount of discussion of this proposal. This is not one of those things that can be rushed through. We are charting new courses. We are entering into an experiment. We are turning our backs on the past. All too often redistribution was an occasion for action to remove political adversaries. We are trying to end this, and for that reason I have set forth some of the general considerations we feel are necessary.

We feel that the appointment of ten commissions is not the answer to the problem. We feel that there should be a national commission. We feel that the representation on that commission, with the exception of he who holds the position of chief electoral officer or the position envisaged by the resolution, and possibly the surveyor general, should consist of judges who will be removed from politics and whose views will be accepted as a judicial decision based on the rules made by parliament. We feel that, in so far as the rural constituencies are concerned, there should be a tolerance of approximately one third.

Now, all of this will not place in the hands of the commission the power of a final decision. The decision must rest finally with parliament. We have to guard against setting up a commission that will be determining the rights of parliamentarians and, therefore, there must be final acceptance by parliament of whatever the recommendations of the commission may be. It is not for me to say what is in the bill that has been drafted. But generally speaking, I feel that we must assure that parliament shall finally determine the matter. I am not going to make any observations on what may be in the bill in that connection.

I believe I have covered what I set out to cover. If the same attitude is taken as was so evident today in the opening remarks of the Secretary of State, I am sure that we will evolve a plan that will be a credit to parliament, to our responsibility to assure the maintenance of the democratic process and, above all, that each of us will be acting in accordance with the dictates of justice rather than the compelling mandate of political consideration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, what I am going to do is rather unusual, but in view of all the circumstances I would like to say to the right hon. gentleman, and also to the whole committee, that the desert here on the treasury benches is occasioned by the fact that a meeting is being held in connection with the federal-provincial conference, and it is not intended as a discourtesy to the right hon. gentleman or any other member of the committee. I am only sorry my colleagues were not here to hear the speech of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Churchill: I didn't notice anything strange.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, both the Secretary of State and the Leader of the Opposition have had occasion in the course of their remarks to refer to the greatness of our parliamentary institution. This is a sentiment to which we all subscribe. I believe all of us accept it as our responsibility to try and maintain that greatness, and indeed to do what we can to make this institution even greater for our having been here.

As one who has had the opportunity of participating in the parliamentary redistributions of the 'forties and the 'fifties, I sense already the possibility that this debate on redistribution may well be unique; it may well be unlike any other that we have had in our Canadian history. As I have indicated, I took part in two of these redistributions, those in each of the last two decades, and they were rather stormy, quite fiery and very contentious. I have also had occasion to read some of the earlier debates on redistribution, and I must say that by comparison the storms we had in the 'forties and 'fifties were games of tiddlywinks. As a matter of fact, it has not been in redistribution debates that parliament has proven its greatness. In the past these debates were occasions when hon. members exhibited proprietary interests in their own constituencies, in which one party tried to hurt the other, in which various injustices were done, and all told these debates have not been the brightest chapters of Canadian parliamentary history.

With that background I am delighted, as I am sure are all hon. members, that we are having the opportunity in this session of parliament to bring into being legislation that will remove the drawing of constituency boundaries from a parliamentary committee and put it in the hands of an independent commission. I had earlier planned on giving some details as to where parties stood on this matter in the past, but I confess that in view of the charms of Orpheus, otherwise known as the Secretary of State, and the endeavour of the Leader of the Opposition to match that charm, it is a bit difficult to remind Liberals and Conservatives of the details of their past on this question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If you start on this we will start on the Saskatchewan redistribution.

Mr. Knowles: The Leader of the Opposition referred to the fact that Mr. King in 1933 favoured redistribution by an independent commission. I have also read those words of his. He did not like the redistribution that was being effected by the government in power at that time, so in 1933 he favoured an independent commission; but in 1943, when Mr. Coldwell asked if consideration was being given to redistribution by an independent commission, there was no answer, and likewise, the redistribution of that decade, which did not come until 1947, was put through by a parliamentary committee on which the Liberals had a majority. Again in 1952 the same Liberals were in power and redistribution was done by a parliamentary committee rather than by an independent commission.

Mr. Caouette: The same Liberals are there now.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend from Villeneuve is interjecting. I happened to notice his name in one of these Hansard volumes, when he was here before as the hon. member for Pontiac, and I find that on one occasion he too voted against redistribution by an independent commission. I mention these things of the past just to indicate how pleased I am that we have reached this point of unanimity.

I was going to say that the Leader of the Opposition was quite correct in pointing out that the Conservative party, many years ago, started talking about redistribution by an independent commission, but somehow or another that talk was when it was in opposition. When it was in power, for example in the 'thirties, it did it the other way. Even in 1947, when I had the privilege of moving an amendment on second reading of a redistribution bill, that it be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of the house redistribution should be effected by an independent commission, only some 19 members of the Conservative party—mind you, they were the better ones —voted for that amendment. All the rest of them voted the other way.

So, there has been a slow process of education among the various parties. However, we have now reached the point where we all agree that no longer should redistribution be carried out by a parliamentary committee, no longer should we go through this kind of bitter experience in which hon. members try to protect their proprietary interests, as was the case in the nine or ten redistributions this country has had up to the present time.

Also, as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, his party when it was last in power did commit itself to the principle of redistribution by an independent commission. He has made it clear in what he said this evening that he may differ in some detail from the proposals to be made by the government, but at least the Conservative party, let it be said without qualification, committed itself while it was in power. I think this was the first time a government in power committed itself to redistribution by an independent commission. We now have the Liberals back in power, and for the first time in their experience as a party in power they have committed themselves to this same principle.

Mr. Chairman, this is good. We have now come to the point where we realize the seats we represent are not our personal possessions. We have come to the point where we realize that parliament belongs to the people of Canada and that we must find some way, other than doing it ourselves, to determine the boundaries of the constituencies that are represented in this house. I say again, this is good, and we may well have the opportunity in this debate to wipe out the memory of the nine or ten redistribution debates in the history of our country which make reading that does not add to the greatness of parliament.

I liked the suggestion of the Secretary of State that we might now put on our statute books a piece of legislation that would not make it necessary to make basic changes every ten years. The Leader of the Opposition echoed that, and turned that hope into confidence. I join with both of them in hope and confidence this will be the case, but it will be so only if we produce good legislation in this field at this time. I was glad to hear the Secretary of State make it clear that this is not a piece of legislation the details of which the government will make a matter of confidence, but rather that we start with the proposition that all of us agree on the principle of an independent commission, and by discussion here in parliament, the best kind of discussion, we will put our various views forward. Then by listening to the views put forward by others, we may come up with the kind of legislation that will not require basic changes every ten years.

I look forward to that being done, Mr. Chairman, because in the two previous decades in which I have been here, basic changes did have to be made. In the redistribution in the 1940's we took two bites at it. In the first place, although the government of the day, in the speech from the throne in 1943, said there would be redistribution in that session, it decided this was too contentious an issue to put before parliament during the war, so an amendment to the British North America Act was sought in order to postpone that redistribution, to postpone the contentious kind of debate it would have produced. It postponed most of the debate; but even the debate on the British North America Act amendment itself was a very contentious one and things were said which I think afterwards members perhaps thought were not to their credit and wished they were not recorded for all time.

Then when we did get at the matter in 1947 we had to make a basic change; we had to increase the size of the house from 245 seats to 262 for the 1949 election, so that the reductions in some of the provinces of the members they would have would not be too serious. Then when we got into the 1950's and came at the matter again, we had the problem of Saskatchewan losing too many seats because of the kind of adjustments in population that had taken place, so we had the formula that was written into the British North America Act at that time, which I think was proposed if not openly, certainly by understanding by the then minister of agriculture, Mr. Gardiner. At any rate, it was a pretty fundamental kind of change that we had to make, out of which we came up with 265 seats and these several variations in the general rule of representation among the provinces according to population.

If we are going to avoid having to make these basic changes every ten years, this job should be well done. I believe we all agree with the Leader of the Opposition that this is not something to rush. Let us look at the legislation carefully; let us study it carefully; let us come at it in the spirit that has been demonstrated thus far today by those who have spoken; and let us try to do as effective a job as we can, not for ourselves but for the Canadian people to whom parliament really belongs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about some of the details. We have not seen them all yet; we have only those to which the Secretary of State has alluded in discussing the resolution, and those to which the Leader of the Opposition has alluded by comparing what might be with what his government proposed when the Conservatives were in office a year or two ago. We do have this question of whether there should be one commission or ten. Here I think we can discuss the matter in good faith. It is not a partisan issue. But I think it is good that we do have these two proposals before us. As a matter of fact we really have three proposals: the proposal for one commission; the proposal for four commissions, which the government is apparently not going to place before us; and the proposal for ten commissions, which is before us. I would like to suggest that we take a rather sympathetic look at the proposal for ten commissions. I appreciate the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that we have one for purposes of unity; but I think if each of us would consider the position in his own province he would realize that the chances of all the things that need to be considered receiving full consideration are best if there are people from that province doing the job for that particular province.

The Secretary of State indicated this afternoon that the government's plan would call for ten commissions of four members each, one of whom would be the representation commissioner and the other three from the province concerned. I made reference to the independent commission that we have in the province of Manitoba for the purpose of provincial redistribution. I think the pattern we have in Manitoba is a good one and I dare to hope it is a pattern that might be followed. In our case the commission consists of the chief justice, the president of the University of Manitoba, and the chief electoral officer. If the government's plan goes through, the total commission for Manitoba would be those three and the representation commissioner. I think the representation commissioner sitting on all ten commissions would provide unity and consistency. On the other hand, having a commission for Manitoba consisting, as I hope might be the case, of Mr. Castonguay and the three persons I have already named from Manitoba, would produce a body which would not only be above any partisan consideration or reflection at all, it would not only be a board of efficiency—in Manitoba's case, one that has proven its capacity to do the job—but we would have three out of the four of that group being Manitoba people who would know the history, the geography and the people of Manitoba and would be able to take into consideration the points that need to be considered in order to draw the boundaries in the best interests, not of the members of parliament for Manitoba but in the best interests of the people of Manitoba themselves.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, let us look at these various proposals. I think the idea of ten commissions, one for each province, is a good one. I have already, by implication, joined in the tributes paid to Mr. Castonguay by the Secretary of State and the Leader of the Opposition. We think there was nothing inappropriate in the Secretary of State admitting that this is a name that has been considered, because this chief electoral officer, the son of a former chief electoral officer, both of whom have performed good service for this country, would certainly be an ideal person for this position. I agree that we should be given the names of those who will make up the commissions, or that we should know the device by which these names will be chosen. I was glad to hear the Secretary of State say that he does not think they should be chosen by order in council.

I would like to say a few words about another detail that the Leader of the Opposition discussed in his remarks. It is hardly a detail; it is pretty basic to the whole question. I refer to the matter of what tolerance there should be from a quota. The Leader of the Opposition told us that in the bill presented by the previous government the proposal was that there be a tolerance of one third above or below the quota. When you work that out by mathematics, it means that the largest seat, in terms of population, could be twice the size of the smallest seat, in terms of population. When you realize that the former government's bill had—it was read to the committee this evening—escape hatches to go even further, you can see that a considerable disparity would be possible if there were that much tolerance.

The Leader of the Opposition threw out the figure of 20 per cent. Personally I think some such figure as that would be better. If you do your arithmetic again, you will realize that if you do allow a tolerance of only 20 per cent, the largest seat, in terms of population, can be only one and a half times the size of the population of the smallest seat. In all cases I am speaking about seats or constituencies inside a province. That leads to this whole question of the disparity or difference between rural and urban seats. I know the traditions about this and I readily recognize that this is something we do have to consider. Hon. members of course are aware of the fact that I represent one of those tightly knit urban constituencies. Though the population of Winnipeg North Centre is larger than the average across the country, the number of square miles of the constituency is very few. I say that just in case anyone thinks I am speaking from the standpoint of an urban member as against the two previous speakers, both of whom have spoken as rural members. That at least is on the record.

I think there are two aspects to this question, and we should try to keep them straight. On one hand there is the question of the weight that a Canadian elector's vote carries in parliament; on the other hand there is the question of a member being able to give service to his constituency. If you look only at the first of these considerations, namely the weight that a Canadian elector's vote carries in parliament, we should have representation by population. The numbers of people in all ridings should be equal. If they are not equal, then those who feel that there are twice as many of them in a constituency as in some other constituencies consider that they are not being adequately represented. But the other consideration is also a very real one. How can a member give service to his constituency if, in order to have the average number of electors in it or the average number of people, it has to be, in terms of square miles, literally an empire?

I suggest that we try and resolve this problem in two ways. On the one hand, let us admit some disparity by letting a figure such as has been suggested be the rule, namely a 20 per cent tolerance up and down which would permit some constituencies to be one and a half times as large as others in terms of population. That is one way of admitting a certain amount of disparity. Another thing we can do—and now I speak as an urban member who cannot make any claim of this kind—is to recognize that members who serve large rural areas have problems of travel and communication that those of us in tightly packed urban areas do not have. I suppose in the light of what happened recently, any talk about extra expense money would not be popular, but should it not be in that area that we try to solve the problem of the member serving the rural area, rather than following a course which would result in urban people feeling that their votes are not as strong as those who live in the rural areas? I have made my case as an urban member for something closer to representation by population, but I say quite frankly that a figure such as a 20 per cent tolerance up and down would, it seems to me, go a good way toward resolving the problem. However, I would propose that consideration be given also to extra travelling and communication expenses for those members in the large rural areas. I think, for example, to go to an extreme case, of the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Northwest Territories. The distance they have to travel is much greater than the size of some provinces.

That may be just a detail, Mr. Chairman, as the Leader of the Opposition said, but it is a pretty important detail. We now have two suggestions coming from the lips of the Leader of the Opposition, either a 33⅓ per cent tolerance, or a 20 per cent tolerance. Perhaps we can indulge in some collective bargaining here in the House of Commons and arrive at a figure between those two, but I am glad the pattern has been set for bringing these things out into the open and discussing them. I am also glad that the pattern has been set for objective, dispassionate and fair discussion of these matters so that we can seek to solve them and do what the Secretary of State hopes, namely to provide the kind of legislation which will not have to be changed every ten years as we go along. That is the story across the years so far. Basic changes in the legislation have been made every time to try to redress grievances and wrongs, or to try to avoid doing wrong to others. This time let us take our time and get the kind of proposals which will provide the greatest amount of fairness.

There was one other detail—we call these matters details, I suppose, to play them in low key, but they are pretty important—to which the Secretary of State referred, and that concerned the case of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. He indicated that population changes in the last few years have been such that Manitoba now has a greater population by a few thousand than the province of Saskatchewan. At the moment there are 14 members from Manitoba and 17 from Saskatchewan. I am not going to set one of these provinces against the other by any means, but I do suggest that we must make sure that fairness is done between these two provinces. We also have to make sure that fairness is done to both of them in relation to the situation in the rest of Canada. I pride myself on being able to understand legislation and particularly mathematical formulae, but I find it hard to compute what would be the result of the present formula under the British North America Act which, when amended last time, gave Saskatchewan two more seats than otherwise it would have had. What effect that will have if we make no other changes to the B.N.A. Act this time I do not know; but if we make no other changes in the total representation and follow the rules set out in the B.N.A. Act we will still have 265 members. If that results, on the one hand, in Saskatchewan's having more members than Manitoba despite Manitoba's greater population, and on the other hand in both Saskatchewan and Manitoba losing members, despite their increased population, while British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario and Quebec increase their members, it is going to look as though an injustice has been done. I know it can be argued mathematically that they would be getting their proportionate numbers, but the loss of seats just would not do. We have the senatorial floor to protect us, but the senatorial floor is composed only of six members—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: Gladly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is he suggesting that Manitoba and Saskatchewan should have more senators?

Mr. Knowles: No. My hon. friend knows that I would reduce the number of senators from Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and from the other eight provinces as well, to zero. What I am leading up to—and I suppose it has to be a member from Manitoba or Saskatchewan who raises this question first—is that we have seriously to consider what the effect of the present rules in the B.N.A. Act will be in terms of the number of members those rules provide for provinces like Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Returning to where I was before the friendly interruption of the hon. gentleman, if the result is that both of those pretty important provinces in this nation lose seats, and also that the one with the greater population has the lesser number of members, then that really is not producing justice or what would seem to be justice. Therefore, I think that during the course of these discussions we are going to have to trot out into the open the question whether there should be an increase in the number of members in this house in order to keep up the numbers in provinces like Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and perhaps some of the other provinces too. I know there was a story in the newspapers a few days ago which said this should be done, and when the Secretary of State was asked on orders of the day whether there was any foundation to this story he said there was no official foundation. And as far as the legislation before us is concerned, I realize that that is the situation.

I am not at this moment making a partisan case or a Manitoba case out of it, but I suggest that we consider whether or not the number of seats in this house should be increased. In this connection, before anyone thinks that that is an astounding thing to do may I give a few figures to the committee. When parliament was first brought into being in 1867—the parliament of Canada, as it has been known since 1867—we were set up with 181 seats. I have tried to ascertain what the population of Canada was in 1867; it is probably ascertainable but I have not got the figure for that year. However, I have the figure from the census of 1871, when the population of Canada was 3,689,000. Let us take that figure as the population at the beginning of our modern history.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was going to say 3.5 million.

Mr. Knowles: Roughly 3.5 to 3.6 million, with 181 seats. That means that each member of the House of Commons when parliament first met in 1867 represented approximately 20,000 of population. Our population has gone from less than four million to more than 18 million. It has multiplied more than four times.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is 19 million.

Mr. Knowles: Someone says it is 19 million; I have missed the news in the last day or so. I am getting figures from all over the place. At any rate, it has increased about five times; yet we have increased the number of seats in the house only from 181 to 265.

May I do another bit of arithmetic. When we carried out the last redistribution in 1952 it was done on the basis of the 1951 census.

The population of Canada, according to that census, was 14 million people. If we divide 14 million by the 265 seats provided then, it works out to a representation of about 58,000 Canadians per member. In other words, between 1867 and 1953, the year of the first election after the last redistribution, the number of people represented by each member increased from 20,000 to something like 58,000. In terms of greater ease of travel and improvement in communications it is not out of the way for us to represent more people than did the first members of parliament, but I think it would not be inappropriate to consider that possibly we are reaching a plateau and should begin to level off. If we were to leave the number of members unchanged and elect again to parliament a total of 265 it would mean that each member would represent more than 70,000 people. On the other hand, if the rumour which appeared in the press a few days ago, or perhaps I should say in the Globe and Mail—

Mr. Pickersgill: Canadian Press had the story as well.

Mr. Knowles: Well, once it is in the Globe and Mail the Canadian Press will pick it up, and vice versa. If we were to raise the representation in this house to 283 with a populations of 18 million or 19 million we would still be as individual members, be representing 65,000 or 67,000 people. That is considerably more than we were representing according to the redistribution of 1952, and a great many more than members were representing in the last century. I do not suggest we should stay with the figures of the last century, but I do suggest that the 58,000 to 60,000 level reached after the redistribution of 1952 is a reasonable one and that there is nothing out of the way in suggesting that the number of members in this house be increased by 18 or 20 so that, in the process, the rules which now exist under the British North America Act would not result in provinces whose population has grown being represented by fewer members in parliament. I believe this suggestion should be given consideration.

I know that when this story appeared in the papers some members began to wonder if the number suggested could be accommodated in this chamber. Actually, there are 276 seats in the chamber at the present time—desks and seats. It would not mean many more, and even though I do sit alongside the Conservatives, here at my right, I would not mind if my desk were moved over a couple of inches so that we could get another row in at this end and thus provide ample accommodation. Mind you, after the next election we might not be sitting here; we might be sitting over there on the government side.

An hon. Member: A coalition.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no. Anyway that is a problem which could be solved easily by whoever is here after the next election.

We always enjoy discussions about redistribution and what the next election may produce. However, the main thing is for us to look at all the factors involved. Let us look at the various proposals which have been made with regard to an independent commission—whether there should be one or ten. Let us consider what the margin of tolerance should be. Let us consider the question of whether the report of an independent commission should be final or whether provision should be made for review. Let us consider, also, the question of how many members there should be in order to be fair to the country as a whole.

There is one thing on which we seem to be agreed. We have agreed that no longer should the drawing of constituency boundaries be done by a parliamentary committee but that it should be carried out by an independent commission. To have reached agreement in that regard, is good. Now let us have the kind of debate we have had thus far; let us sort out the various proposals and come up with a plan which will not have to be changed. Then let us get on with the job.

I see you are on the edge of your chair, Mr. Chairman. I do not intend to detain the committee much longer. Even though we must give this matter the thorough study it deserves I hope we can deal with it with reasonable expedition. I would say that the Secretary of State set a reasonable goal when he suggested that this measure should be got through before Christmas so that the commission could be set up and a start made. We never know when an election could happen in this country. We have learned that from experience. Let us ensure as far as we can that the next election will be based on a redistribution according to the 1961 census. The 1945 parliamentary elections were held on a redistribution based on the 1931 census which was completely outdated. In 1963 we had an election on a redistribution based on the 1951 census and that, too, was outdated. Let us not have another election in the 'sixties based on the 1951 census. Let us have it on the basis of the 1961 census. I think that by proper expedition we can achieve that object.

I am glad the Secretary of State has made it clear that when we have the bills before us the details can be changed without there being any question of want of confidence in the government. Let us discuss this matter in a spirit of collective bargaining and come up with decisions which will stand the test of time. Let us turn the debate on redistribution from the sorry chapters there have been in the past to an occasion which will add greatness to our parliamentary institution.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, we welcome the opportunity presented to us at this time to discuss some of the matters which are of such vital interest and concern to us, as they relate to our electoral system.

As in many other fields of national concern it seems we have been very slow to effect the changes which are needed so as to eliminate some of the inadequacies apparent in our electoral system in Canada. From time to time certain changes have been made, but it would appear they have been made, not on the basis of principle but on the basis of expediency and political considerations. It would seem to me the time has come—and this view has been expressed by previous speakers—when we should take a good look at the whole situation and endeavour to make those changes which will be to the advantage not only of parliamentarians but of Canadians as a whole.

For these reasons, we welcome the introduction of these particular measures. We believe they will have a beneficial effect upon our parliamentary system. On a number of occasions various aspects of this question have been debated in the house, but unfortunately they were discussed at times when there was little possibility of the house reaching any decisions with regard to them. Now that these matters have been presented to us for consideration we trust that the fullest consideration will be given to every consideration put forward. We hope that those suggestions which are worth while will be incorporated in the measures and that those which are not important will be sifted out and cast aside.

We are, of course, aware of the fact that this problem has been occupying the attention not only of those who sit in this house but of many other agencies across the country. For instance, our attention was directed some time ago to certain recommendations of the federation of mayors and municipalities. Even though we might not be able to support all those recommendations, the federation has brought to our attention one of the basic problems which has been referred to tonight, the achievement of fair representation according to population. I think we all agree these are problems that must not only be recognized but met. I believe the Secretary of State characterized this matter as one of the most important issues that could occupy our attention at this time, and with that I agree.

The problem has perhaps been caused by the wholesale shifting in population from area to area which has seen a tremendous concentration of population in certain sections and at the same time has resulted, of course, in a diminishing of population in other sections, notably the rural areas. The matter of geographical areas has also been referred to tonight. In my view this is a very important consideration, because of the fact that a member of parliament can only cover adequately a certain area and fulfil his responsibility to a certain number of people.

Another important factor is the availability of the member to his constituents. Not only must he be able to get around and see them at certain times or so many times in the course of a year, but those who have problems must be able to get to their member and we recognize that he must be accessible to them at such times. We think also of the industrial and social considerations that enter into the whole problem and the serious imbalance that now exists in representation. All these problems have been covered in the discussion today. I believe they are very serious considerations and we must give them our attention.

On October 12, 1962 the hon. member for Port Arthur brought in a private member's bill regarding redistribution. He pointed out a number of these problems, made certain deductions and arrived at certain conclusions. On that occasion as well as others we have had the opportunity to face up to some of the problems that confront us.

I suppose a completely satisfactory and equitable solution will not be possible in every instance, but we must make a sincere and concerted effort to resolve as many problems as we possibly can so that, as has been pointed out tonight, it will not be necessary within a very short time to make any fundamental or basic changes in the legislation. The measures that are before us are designed to solve some of the problems in order to make our electoral system conform more to present day requirements.

Words of commendation have been uttered with regard to the chief electoral officer for the work he has done during past years. We in this group would like to concur in those words of appreciation and commendation, because we believe he has fulfilled in a wonderful way the responsibilities that have devolved upon him in that office. The suggestions we have before us tonight are perhaps based to a considerable degree upon recommendations and suggestions he has made following his extensive study of the various problems. The fact that he has had the opportunity of discussing these problems in other countries, and looking at their problems and the way in which they have endeavoured to solve them, has no doubt had a real influence upon his own thinking in this regard. I am sure we are indebted to the chief electoral officer for what he has done in respect of these matters.

If I may deal with some of the issues that have been raised tonight, the fact that we are being asked to appoint a representation commissioner and subsequently a commission indicates a recognition that certain things should be above partisan politics, and surely this is one area in which this must be true. As has been indicated, no doubt in the past some decisions have been based upon political considerations rather than upon a sincere endeavour to resolve the problems and work out the boundary lines between constituencies on an equitable basis. But we believe that by appointing an independent commission we will go far toward removing that rather obnoxious element from redistribution.

The question of the necessity of a full time representation commissioner has been raised. Perhaps it has not been raised in the debate thus far, but it certainly has in various private discussions that have been held. We have been wondering whether it is absolutely necessary that such a commissioner be appointed. We have already paid tribute to the work that has been done by the chief electoral officer and it might be in order to suggest that we should consider whether the duties of the representation commissioner could not be combined with those of the chief electoral officer, and his staff possibly expanded. It appears that there could be a duplication of activities between the chief electoral officer and the representation commissioner and perhaps this could be avoided by adding to the staff of the chief electoral officer and allowing him to discharge the responsibilities of the two offices. I am not making a definite recommendation but simply suggesting this as something that could be given consideration.

Another question raised tonight concerns the advisability of having ten commissions rather than having one, or four, as previously suggested. I must admit that formerly I have viewed the idea of possibly four commissions as being practical and desirable, but in the way that the suggestion of ten commissions has been put before us I can definitely see that there are advantages. For one thing, it will save time and I believe this is a very important consideration. We heard this afternoon that the appointment of one commission would result in the postponement until possibly 1968 of any election that could be held based upon the new redistribution. Even if four commissions were appointed I suppose it would take a considerable length of time. However, ten commissions should be able to proceed with their task with dispatch and complete their work in a much shorter period of time.

I believe the Secretary of State pointed out that having ten commissions would not involve any substantial additional expenditure because in all probability the commissioners would be paid on a per diem basis, but as they would be called on to serve for a shorter period of time it would simply mean that the cost would be spread over a greater number of people. The fact that the commissioners will in all probability be chosen from their respective provinces is also an important consideration. If one commission were appointed with members from all parts of the country from coast to coast, the commissioners would have to spend much more time acquainting themselves with the provincial and local area situations; but by having one commission for each province the commissioners will be more aware of the problems in their own provinces. Therefore, speaking personally and also, I think, for our group, I can say that we look with favour upon the proposal to have ten commissions, rather than one or four as previously suggested.

We appreciate the fact that parliamentary responsibility is being maintained, even although the independent commission is doing the work of redrawing the boundary lines. On the other occasion to which I referred, when the hon. member for Port Arthur was speaking on this matter, he pressed the idea of a completely independent board. I feel that there should be some responsibility to parliament in this respect so far as these commissions are concerned. It would seem to me to be a repudiation of responsibility were we to turn this work over completely to an independent commission, without any review of it here in this house. We trust that when any measure is brought before us adequate provision will be made for a thorough analysis and study of the recommendations, and every opportunity given to voice opinions in this particular respect.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the various matters have been covered very thoroughly today. The speakers have gone into a great deal of history, given historical reviews and quoted from speakers of bygone days. I do not propose to do that, because there has been sufficient placed on the record in regard to these matters.

However, I should like to refer to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to the effect that it would not be such a bad idea if we were to increase the membership of this house rather than reduce the representation of some provinces. By the way, in passing, I should like to say that I hope when the Secretary of State referred to the fact that British Columbia was under-represented at the present time he meant it as far as numbers were concerned, and not as far as quality was concerned. As to the increase in membership of this house, I do not know whether or not that would be desirable. We have 265 members here, and there are 102 members in the other place. We have ten provincial legislatures with varying numbers. We have our municipal governments; and it would almost seem to me that Canada is pretty well governed so far as numbers and so far as agencies are concerned. I do not know, therefore, if the suggestion should be taken too seriously. Certainly, consideration should be given to it, but I think possibly we should look at it from the other point of view and discover whether or not it would be in the best interest of the nation to increase the membership in this parliament.

With these observations, Mr. Chairman, I will leave this matter. No doubt other members of this group will be participating in the debate. They certainly will when we come to debate the various items in the bill that will be presented after this resolution.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I find that the resolution before us implies various things, and I shall deal with them as they come to my mind.

There has been talk of increasing the number of members in the house. Well, when I see all those empty desks—more particularly on the Liberal side of the house, where several members are missing—I think that an increase in number would not mean more members in this house.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks seem to worry my Liberal friends. Well, I would tell them that, instead of increasing the number of ridings, there should be an increase in the number of those sitting here.

An hon. Member: Where is the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Mr. Gregoire: Look on your side. Nothing hurts like the truth. Look on your side, and you will see that several are missing.

Mr. Chairman, I see that a few Liberal members are coming back. But, out of a total of 130, there are scarcely 25 Liberals in the house at this time.

An hon. Member: Where is the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Mr. Gregoire: The hon. member for Villeneuve is always here.

Mr. Caouette: He is behind the curtain, here.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, there is now a total of 130 Liberal members, but many only rise once a year. Several do absolutely nothing. Now, if the number of naughts is increased, what difference will it make?

[Mr. Patterson.]

An hon. Member: There will be more "Caouettistes".

Mr. Gregoire: You are absolutely right. When the next general election comes around, there will be more Caouettistes in this house.

Mr. Chairman, how can we think of increasing the number of members when so many of them are completely useless.

We should start by having elected to this house people who are interested in public business and who will look after the interests of their constituents.

An hon. Member: Where are all your members?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I see that the young backbenchers of the Liberal party have yet not renounced their little game of interrupting. I know that nothing hurts like the truth, but never mind. It is a good thing from time to time to spread truth around, and we do not feel shy about it.

Mr. Chairman, I would absolutely oppose any increase in the number of members if they were all like the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) who never takes the floor but spends his time interrupting.

On the other hand, if an increase in the number of members did not impede the business of the house, but would prevent us from wasting our time as we are doing now, I would be in favour of such an increase.

In fact, at present, with 265 members, we are not even able to pass the necessary legislation within the allotted time. That is one of the reasons why I am against an increase in the size of the house.

It is true, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, that in 1867, each member represented 20,000 people, while in 1951, there was one member for 58,000 Canadians. Under the present bill, one member would represent 70,000 people.

Mr. Chairman, let us not forget that nowadays means of transportation and communication are much quicker than they were in days gone by.

In fact, it is much easier nowadays than in 1867, 1925 or even 1930 for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to go in his riding and meet his voters during a week end.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that if a member is elected for a certain number of voters, the number of problems to be settled will increase, because it has been noted that most of the problems to be solved by hon. members for their voters come from vexatious interference from government officials. It is not that government officials are wicked. No. But as I said before, because of the great number of complicated acts that they must apply, they are quite difficult to deal with.

Most of the problems that members of this house have to deal with, on behalf of their constituents, result from government and bureaucratic red tape concerning the administration of very complicated legislation such as, for instance, the Unemployment Insurance Act and, more especially, the Income Tax Act.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, numerous problems are raised by income tax officials who take it upon themselves to cut down, without making any investigation and in an arbitrary and discriminatory fashion, charitable donations receipts to be used for income tax deductions. Consequently, if we are to represent 70,000 voters instead of 20,000, that, for us, will mean more cases to deal with. And I say again that such a situation is due to the fact that government officials have to apply vexatious laws.

If, instead of increasing the number of members, we were given more help to settle those matters, I think the problem would be solved. As a matter of fact, I would suggest that the number of senators be reduced instead.

Mr. Knowles: To none.

Mr. Gregoire: I notice that the hon. member for Mercier is leaving the house; he realizes that his next job is disappearing.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with another problem tonight: that of the independent commission that will look after this redistribution.

In fact, we are in favour of the setting up of an independent commission that would look after the redistribution and we support that plan. However, that commission should be really independent. But who would appoint the commissioners? Would it be only the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) who would appoint some friends of the government?

Before agreeing to the principle of an independent commission, we must decide that it will be really independent and that its members will be chosen by the five political parties in the house. Then we will be sure that commission will be truly independent.

We are told: The returning officers in the various ridings must be independent. But they are appointed by the party in power about every ten years or even more often. Sure, they are independent, but there is nothing to prevent them from leaning on one side more than on the other, and they will tend to lean towards the party that appointed them rather than towards the others.

The chief returning officer of an electoral district, even if he is supposed to be independent, is still appointed by the party in office and often, since the law gives him some leeway, he will use it to favour the party that appointed him rather than the others.

I feel it is essential that the commissioners be appointed by the five political parties represented in this house.

I should now like to deal with the most important problem to which this resolution will give rise, and that is: how many ridings will there be? What provinces are going to lose some and what provinces are going to gain some?

A study has been made, and I have here a few figures showing that Canada has a population of 18,238,247. If you leave out the ten ridings in New Brunswick, which must remain unchanged, the four ridings in Prince Edward Island, the one in Yukon and the other in the Northwest Territories, which make 16, there is left a total of 249 ridings. The population of those 16 counties being 740,191, there are 17,498,056 inhabitants left in the other ridings, or an average of 70,842 people for each of the 249 remaining ridings.

According to the predictions I have here, the number of ridings should be reduced from 265 to 264; the province of Quebec would have 74 seats instead of 75, other provinces would lose seats, the number of seats in Ontario would increase from 85 to 88, other provinces would gain seats: British Columbia would gain 1, Alberta 2, and Saskatchewan would lose 4.

An hon. Member: Three.

Mr. Gregoire: The number of seats in Saskatchewan would decrease from 17 to 13, according to the figures I have here.

It seems that a socialist administration is not too beneficial for Saskatchewan since this is the province with the highest decrease in population. By the way, this is not a recommendation for a socialist government.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: They have gone as missionaries to other parts of the country.

Mr. Gregoire: With the system under which they live in that province they would like to go and live where they can have freedom and security.

Mr. Caouette: In the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, in the province of Quebec, one of the main arguments put forward by the separatists is the following: "As things are going now, they say, before the year two thousand, instead of having 75 representatives in Ottawa out of 265, this province will only have half of this number and this means that French Canadians will be represented in this house not by 34 or 35 per cent of the members, but only by 18, 15 or even 12 per cent.

It must be recognized, however, that the percentage of French Canadians will not decrease in the province of Quebec, but we will lose some representatives in the House of Commons. This is one of the most important arguments set forth by the protagonists of separatism.

Mr. Chairman, I have a suggestion to make to the Secretary of State which, I think, he should take into consideration. It is admitted that for New Brunswick, the number of members should not be less than ten; for Prince Edward Island, it should not be less than four.

I submit then, keeping the number of 265 members for Canada, that the province of Quebec should never have less than 75 members.

This would eliminate one of the main arguments of the protagonists of the separatist doctrine in the province of Quebec. It would also guarantee to French Canadians who view this problem with alarm that they will always have adequate representation in the House of Commons, even if their ratio decreases compared to Canada as a whole.

Following immigration, our group represents a lesser percentage of the over-all population because immigrants are more easily assimilated by English speaking Canada than by French speaking Canada.

We have nothing against that. It is not the fault of English Canadians if immigrants join their ranks rather than ours. It is our fault and we must take the blame when we deserve it.

However, I feel that we must ensure that French Canadians are adequately represented in the House of Commons. I would, therefore, suggest that the province of Quebec should never have less than 75 members out of a total of 265 or similar representation if there are more or less than 265 members in the house.

I know that Quebec will also elect English speaking members as is the case at present for the Minister of Industry and Defence Production—

An hon. Member: Peacetime production.

Mr. Gregoire: —whose competence honours his province. Forgive me, I meant the minister of peacetime defence production whose competence is the pride of Quebec. We are glad that the English speaking citizens of Quebec have elected such a representative. We feel that English Canadians who live in our province must also be represented in the house. As I say, we are glad to see that the English element of the province of Quebec has sent to the house such a qualified representative.

But we feel that—

Mr. Pigeon: I should like to put a question to the hon. member for Lapointe. Has he got a favour to ask of the Minister of Industry.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, Pascal said that he who is evil sees evil everywhere.

Mr. Pigeon: Quite appropriate for the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Gregoire: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm thinks only in terms of patronage which, as I know, is far from being the case for the other member I am speaking of.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that some English speaking members from the province of Quebec will come to Ottawa. We do not object to that. But in the province of Quebec, the percentage of French Canadians has not come down. It holds up regularly. I think that if we accept as an absolute policy that the percentage of members coming from the province of Quebec to Ottawa will always remain unchanged, we will put an end to one of the greatest fears of the French Canadians in the province of Quebec and even throughout the country.

I think that at this time, when there is so much talk about biculturalism and bilingualism—as far as I am concerned, I see biculturalism as a system allowing two cultures to develop—if we really wish to have biculturalism, we should take an opportunity such as this to put into the statutes of Canada a provision to the effect that the French Canadians will always be adequately represented in the House of Commons at Ottawa.

If 35 or 40 years from now we should make up only 10 per cent of the population and have by then only 10 per cent of the members in the House of Commons we would then have to confess that we failed to provide today for future generations. I believe that we should see to it now that the French Canadians will forever be present in sufficient numbers in this house.

We make this suggestion to the Secretary of State in the hope that he will consider it earnestly in the drafting of the bill.

If I may, I would like to mention a fact which shows that this suggestion has already been carried out in the province of Quebec, where we maintain that the English Canadian minorities receive very fair treatment. I do not remember in what year the Quebec legislature determined the number of counties, but they determined that number so as to safeguard the English Canadian minorities' rights, and more particularly so in the eastern townships, where they gave those counties the assurance that they would continue to exist even if there were disproportion as far as the number of their electors is concerned. That is the reason why we have those small counties like Brome-Missisquoi, Compton, Shefford and Stanstead in the provincial field. The existence of those counties was respected by the provincial government. Why? When the Quebec legislature ordered a redistribution, it wanted to guarantee an adequate representation of English minorities in the province, by leaving them some counties which, today, are represented only by a minimum of voters.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the same thing can be done at the federal level, since we in the province of Quebec have been able to guarantee to English Canadians an adequate representation at the provincial legislative assembly. I am of the opinion that the federal government ought to adopt the same policy towards the French Canadian minority in the province of Quebec and guarantee the existence of a certain number of ridings in order to enable French Canadians to claim their rights in the house at any time in the future.

That would set a tremendous example for future generations, as far as the right of the French Canadian nation to have an adequate representation in parliament is concerned.

Moreover, it is already done for some provinces. For instance, Prince Edward Island, with a population of 104,629 has four guaranteed ridings, which gives an average of 26,000 people per riding, when the other ridings in Canada have an average of 70,842 people, according to the last census. We uphold this principle and what applies to Prince Edward Island should also apply to the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member consider concluding his speech so that the bill could be reached, because there would still be an opportunity to speak on the bill.

Mr. Gregoire: I would say to the Secretary of State that if I am the last person to speak on the resolution, I will agree; but if I am not the last to speak on the resolution, I object.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, there are a few hon. members on this side of the chamber who wish to speak.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I assume that the order of business is the same for tomorrow as it was today?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We will go on with this resolution and if we should conclude it, as I hope we will, before six o'clock, we could perhaps use the rest of the time on the Canadian overseas telecommunications measure which is nearly through the house, and any of the other items with which the Minister of Transport is concerned. There is the minister's resolution on the order paper in connection with the Aeronautics Act.

Mr. Knowles: Do the items announced for Thursday and Friday still stand?

Mr. Pickersgill: For Thursday, quite definitely. I may wish to speak to hon. gentlemen tomorrow about Friday.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 27, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND AND THIRD REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South) presented the second and third reports of the standing committee on standing orders, and moved that the reports be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FISHER—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege. I would have preferred to do so when the Minister of Agriculture was in the house, since it involves a statement he made. I had better put on the record the statement he made, apparently in an interview, which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of Monday, November 25, 1963. This is what I take exception to, and I want to make a statement on it. He is reported as having said:

Douglas Fisher, he's a kind of odd duck.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: I appreciated that the Minister of Agriculture took a metaphor from his own field. Then he went on to say:

Three times he didn't have enough guts to stand up and vote.

I want to raise a question of privilege in order to put it to the house that if the Minister of Agriculture is using the term "guts" in the sense I think he is, that is, courage, I have the right to say that if I did not vote, I was in the house and it was not a question of lack of courage.

Mr. Byrne: What was it?

Mr. Pigeon: We will auction the minister.

MR. CAOUETTE—REPORTED ULTIMATUM BY PREMIER OF QUEBEC

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, as we are now on motions and in view of the national importance attached to the federal-provincial conference, I take the liberty of rising on a question of privilege and bringing to the attention of the house the following motion:

I move, seconded by Mr. Gilles Gregoire, member for Lapointe, that this house express the wish that the requests, even the ultimatum, of the Hon. Jean Lesage, premier of Quebec, for better tax sharing as well as for participation of the provinces in the development of monetary policy in Canada, be approved to enable all provinces to be in a better position to meet their responsibilities through decentralization.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel it is in order at this time to consider either as a question of privilege or a point of order the motion moved by the hon. member, because his motion is clearly out of order.

It is out of order first because the statements made by the Prime Minister and the federal government have not been made public—except for press releases—and I am about to table those documents.

This motion is also out of order because the statements made by the premier of Quebec this morning were certainly not in the nature of an ultimatum; on the contrary, they constituted a clear account of the policy of his government.

It is completely out of order for an hon. member to introduce a motion concerning a proposal which is under consideration. As far as this motion is concerned, it is obviously out of order since the federal-provincial conference is not yet over.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I think I can handle this matter myself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My task is to find whether there is a prima facie case of privilege, and I see no point of privilege in this on at least one ground, besides many others. This is in the nature of a substantive motion which requires notice. No notice has been given under our rules; therefore on that point it is out of order. On the other point, I do not see a prima facie case of privilege; therefore I must reject it.

Question of Privilege

MR. CAOUETTE—REMARK IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday afternoon when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) delivered his speech, he stated, as reported on page 5415 of Hansard for yesterday:

[Text]

My hon. friend from Villeneuve is interjecting. I happened to notice his name in one of these Hansard volumes, when he was here before as the hon. member for Pontiac, and I find that on one occasion he too voted against redistribution by an independent commission.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to set the record straight by referring to page 697 of Hansard for February 24, 1947, when I stated, following the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

[Text]

I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member, but this is a matter which could be dealt with on the orders of the day rather than at this time, or else it is in the nature of an explanation which could better be made in the committee of the whole. I suggest to the hon. member that he reserve his explanation for the committee of the whole, at which time he will have ample opportunity to make it, rather than continue on motions.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF SUBMISSIONS PRESENTED BY DELEGATIONS

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table copies of the submissions presented by the federal and provincial delegations to the federal-provincial conference which opened on November 26.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister would care to move that the documents relating to the federal-provincial submissions be printed in Hansard for the convenience of hon. members. Would that be possible?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I must bring to the attention of the house that there are many hundreds of pages in these briefs, and I do not think it would be possible to get Hansard at the usual time tomorrow if this were done. In fact I think it would take quite some time before it could be done even in a separate Hansard. What I would suggest, if it has the approval of the house, is that I will endeavour to get copies from the secretariat as quickly as possible so that hon. members may have them in their possession.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION FOR FURTHER FOUR YEARS

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I would like to make a brief statement with regard to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, which expires at the end of this 1963 calendar year.

Representations have been received recently by the government from municipal authorities of the affected gold mining communities and from representatives of the gold mine operators setting forth the continuing need of assistance to the industry. The government has decided to ask parliament to extend the act to prevent the hardship to dependent communities which would result from the abrupt closure of a substantial number of gold mines.

In order that the industry may have as much notice as possible of the terms under which assistance will be paid, I wish to announce that the government will introduce legislation shortly, effective as from January 1 next, extending the application of the act for a period of another four years without change in the present formula for computing the amount of assistance payable.

The amending legislation will also provide for a restriction on the amounts of assistance payable to any new lode gold mines commencing production after June 30, 1965. Lode gold mines brought into operation after that date will be eligible for assistance only if the mine provides direct support to an existing gold mining community. A gold mine will be deemed to provide such support if the majority of the persons employed at the mine reside in one or more of a number of gold mining communities which will be specified.

The purpose of the restriction is to prevent the establishment of new gold mining communities which would be dependent upon government assistance from the outset and which would add to existing social problems. The restriction will not affect those gold mines which are now in operation with respect to eligibility for assistance payments now or in the future. The restriction will not apply to placer mines. The date upon which the restriction will become effective has been set at July 1, 1965, in order that these new lode gold mines which are currently under development will have a reasonable opportunity to qualify for assistance.

In conclusion may I express the belief that the extension of the act will assist the gold mining industry to meet its special difficulties, and by extending the operation of many gold mines will enable them to continue support of their dependent communities.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I think there will be general satisfaction among the gold mining communities of Canada at the announcement of the minister indicating the decision of the government to seek the further extension for four years of the present cost-aid formula. The house will recall that this formula was devised in its present form in 1958 by the previous Conservative administration, and generally speaking it has provided for a very considerable sector of the gold mining industry the kind of assistance that was necessary and continues to be necessary in order to keep these mines in operation and retain in a viable condition a very vital industry of Canada.

I did not have previous notice of this announcement and I have not studied the possible implications of the new formula as it will affect new mines. I hope it proves to be a workable formula and will not prejudice small mining operations. In that connection it will be essential to study very closely the restrictions the minister has indicated. In particular I would like to have a great deal of information with regard to the manner in which communities or mines that will be eligible for this new assistance will be selected. There is something in the form of the announcement of the minister that could give rise to quite a bit of anxiety among gold mining communities in this regard.

I am happy to note that the minister has received favourably the submissions which were placed before him, and particularly the submission which was made by the gold mining communities just a few weeks ago. In that submission a request was made for the continuation of the present formula, that is to say the Fleming formula of 1958.

I am glad the government has acceded to this particular request; but I think it is now time, and more than time, for the government to consider this whole question of the gold mining industry in Canada and to take a very positive step, not only in ensuring the continuance in operation of the gold producing mines for some time yet, but to further develop this very vital industry for Canada. I think the government should communicate with the international monetary fund authorities to see what co-operation or interest is shown there to the possible increase in the world price of gold. In the final analysis the future of not only the gold mining industry but of the entire mining industry of Canada lies in this area. Very responsible and competent mining and financial authorities in Canada and outside Canada have requested that the government look into this facet of the needs of the gold mining industry. I think now is the time to go ahead and initiate certain negotiations in that respect.

In conclusion I wish to say that we on this side of the house will be studying with very much interest the details of the announcement, and we look forward to the early submission to this house of legislation which will give effect to the announcement made by the minister this afternoon.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should start off by doing what the previous speaker did and saying that the legislation was originally passed by a Liberal administration. I am sure my hon. friends on the other side appreciate that.

There is always a fundamental contradiction, when we deal with this particular matter, between a government subsidy of a fairly open, even crass kind such as this and the free enterprise ethos of the men who promote the mine. I do not suppose any of us need remind ourselves that the reason for the subsidy really relates not to an attempt to protect the promoters or the shareholders but to an attempt to protect communities. That is why the qualification which the minister indicated is going to be introduced is important and interesting. I am sure it will raise in mining circles a tremendous amount of discussion. I can already foresee some of the arguments, particularly in a case where a mine may start off by having quality ore and not needing a subsidy, but as its reserves dwindle or the venture moves into new ground it reaches the position where it will qualify. I am sure that type of discussion will be held in mining circles.

We welcome the announcement, Mr. Speaker, remembering always that we still feel somewhat uncomfortable about a subsidy which buttresses communities but at the same time happens to buttress the private enterprises which are often entered into by people who are very much aware that a government subsidy is involved. This points up one of the contradictions we are always encountering in the Canadian political scene, and I think it is worth while reminding free enterprisers of them.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say on behalf of the gold mining industry in the province of British Columbia, and particularly the constituency of Cariboo, that we welcome the extension of this assistance program. However, we believe whether it was instigated by a Liberal government or a Conservative government is not a question that should be continually tossed around in this house. I think the time has come when we have to face the fact that we have a job to do, and that we should get on with that job. I thank the minister for his announcement.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the announcement just made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Benidickson) that the government will continue to pay grants to gold mines, affects very closely the area I represent in this house.

There is one suggestion however that I should like to make to the minister. In my opinion, he should consider increasing the price of gold as an incentive to this industry to develop a great number of new mines, not only in our area, but also in all parts of Canada where there are gold mines.

In the Villeneuve riding large amounts of money are paid to the gold mines in the Val d'Or and Malartic area. Yet, the miners of Val d'Or and Malartic get much lower salaries than those in the Noranda, Temiscamingue and Timmins areas, as well as other communities of northern Ontario.

Since grants are paid provided that certain requirements are fulfilled I think that the factor of miners' salary should be taken into consideration, when such grants are paid to mines in our area. Finally, we should not only endeavour to maintain gold production, but also to provide miners with living conditions which will enable them to improve their lot and to bring it up to the level of that of our fellow citizens working in other Canadian industries.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BAGOTVILLE AIR CRASH—TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT INQUIRY

Question No. 1,239—Mr. Bell:

What was the assessment of responsibility in the Bagotville air crash on October 11, 1962 in the inquiry of the Department of Transport?

Mr. McIlraith: The Department of Transport does not assess responsibility, and this matter is before the courts.

BAGOTVILLE AIR CRASH—DEFENCE DEPARTMENT INQUIRY

Question No. 1,240—Mr. Bell:

What was the assessment of responsibility in the Bagotville air crash on October 11, 1962 in the inquiry of the Department of National Defence?

[Mr. Leboe.]

Answer: In view of litigation recently commenced, it would not be in the public interest to answer this question at this time.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES EARNING $12,000 OR MORE

Question No. 1,344—Mr. Rheaume:

1. How many persons employed by the federal government, including the armed forces and the R.C.M.P., earn $12,000 or more annually, shown by department or agency?
2. Of the above employees, how many, during the past two fiscal years, have submitted expense accounts for travel, removal, accommodation, entertainment or miscellaneous expenditures totalling $6,000 per year or more?
3. Does the information contained in part 2 above include such expenditures as telephone and telegram charges, memberships in professional or business associations?

Mr. Benson: 1. 2,443.

2. During the fiscal years 1961-62 and 1962-63, 182 of those included in the 2,443 mentioned in (1) submitted expense accounts or received reimbursement for expenditures by means of allowances, amounting to $6,000 or more in at least one of these years.

3. It includes telephone and telegram charges incurred while away from headquarters, and certain membership costs for persons posted outside Canada.

*MANUFACTURE IN QUEBEC OF AIRCRAFT AND ENGINES

Question No. 1,359—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. Has a contract or agreement been signed to permit the manufacture at Longueuil, Quebec, of Pratt and Whitney engines for installation in the French made Potez aircraft and, if so (a) when was such contract signed (b) what are the details of the contract?
2. Is the Minister of Transport engaged in any negotiations relating to the acquisition by T.C.A. of Caravelle aircraft and their manufacture by Canadair Ltd., at St. Laurent, Quebec and if so (a) have negotiations reached the contract stage (b) when is it expected that such a contract will be signed?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: 1. There has been an exchange of letters of intent between United Aircraft of Canada Limited and Etablissement Henry Potez.

(a) The letter of intent is dated October 14, 1963.

(b) Since it will be a commercial contract passed between the two companies, particulars are considered of a private character and cannot be made public without the consent of the parties concerned.

2. The announcement made by T.C.A. on Friday, November 22, 1963, contains the answer to this part of the question.

C.N.R. TRUCKING POLICY

Question No. 1,544—Mr. Laprise:

1. To what degree, if any, does the Canadian National Railways intend to enter into competition with the trucking industry in the field of road transport in Canada?

2. Is it Canadian National Railways' policy to provide its own trailers to certain private trucking concerns and, if so, what qualifications must a firm possess to take advantage of such assistance?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows: 1. The company's trucking policy was given in a statement by the president at the sessional committee meetings held in June 1961 and November 1962. Reference thereto is made on page 260 and page 93 of the 1961 and 1962 evidence respectively. Stated briefly, the Canadian National is making a strenuous effort to meet the problem of erosion of its share of the transportation market.

2. In order to improve service to its customers, Canadian National will enter into agreements with duly licensed private trucking concerns to haul its merchandise laden trailers, but only after proper authority has been granted by provincial regulatory boards.

PROSTHETIC SERVICES, D.V.A.

Question No. 1,568—Mr. Matheson:

1. What variety of prosthetic services are supplied by the Department of Veterans Affairs?

2. How many service centres are presently operated for disabled veterans, and where are these located?

3. How many fittings were provided to (a) veterans, and (b) others, in each of the years 1950, 1960 and 1962?

4. Under what circumstances and terms are prosthetic services available to the non-veteran public?

5. Has consideration or study been given to the feasibility of transferring these facilities to the Department of National Health and Welfare or some agency capable of providing prosthetic services to all the Canadian disabled?

Answer: 1. Services supplied to veterans and others, by the Department of Veterans Affairs, are prosthetic and orthoptic appliances, as follows:

(a) Artificial limbs, arms and legs; (b) Appliances and accessories, hearing aids, belts and trusses, braces and splints, elastic hosiery, stump socks, wheelchairs, various related accessories; (c) footwear, orthopaedic boots, and modifications to boots; (d) ophthalmic, eyes—plastic and glass, glasses, miscellaneous, magnifying reading glasses, facial masks.

2. The Department of Veterans Affairs has at present in operation for disabled veterans 12 service centres located at Camp Hill hospital, Halifax, Nova Scotia; Lancaster hospital, Saint John, New Brunswick; Queen Mary Veterans hospital, Montreal, Quebec; Defence Medical Centre, Ottawa, Ontario; Sunnybrook hospital, Toronto, Ontario; Westminster hospital, London, Ontario; Deer Lodge hospital, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Motherwell Building, Regina, Saskatchewan; Colonel Belcher hospital, Calgary, Alberta; Shaughnessy hospital, Vancouver, British Columbia; Veterans hospital, Victoria, British Columbia; University hospital, Colonel Mewburn pavilion, Edmonton, Alberta.

3. (a) 1950, 17,758; 1960, 22,839; 1962, 24,412. (b) 1950, 3,019; 1960, 3,969; 1962, 3,850.

These figures may not be completely accurate as the records for the year 1950 are not entirely reliable.

4. The circumstances and terms under which prosthetic services are available to non-veterans are as follows:

(a) Supply of appliances is made to serving members of the armed forces on presentation of a medical prescription under section 18 of the veterans treatment regulations; (b) Supply of appliances is made to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on receipt of a medical prescription under section 19 of the veterans treatment regulations; (c) Under section 20 of the veterans treatment regulations, at the request and expense of a provincial workmen's compensation board, Saskatchewan branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, the War Amputations of Canada, the Canadian Paraplegic Society, and any other organization designated by the director general, treatment services, as a responsible body, politic or corporate, upon their written certification that facilities for the required service are not otherwise available, and subject to the prior approval of the director general, treatment services; provided that appliances shall be restricted generally to those manufactured by prosthetic services (without precluding the incorporation of purchased components) and further provided that, when original sponsorship ceases, appliances supplied under this section may be serviced for the individual, subject to prepayment, during the life of the appliance but will not be replaced excepting under legitimate sponsorship; (d) Under section 21 of the veterans treatment regulations, at the request and expense of any department of the government of Canada; (e) Under section 22 of the veterans treatment regulations, at the request and expense of an allied government.

5. Officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs believe that there is a need among disabled persons in Canada for a better prosthetic service than is at present available. These officials have given consideration to a number of ways in which the skills and services of the prosthetic division of the department might be made available to a larger segment of the Canadian population, including the possibility that the division might be transferred out of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Consideration is still being given to this matter.

DENUNCIATION OF CANADA-QUEBEC TAX AGREEMENT

Question No. 1,570—Mr. Caouette:

Since 1942, has the Minister of Finance received written notice from the government of the province of Quebec, pursuant to section 23(5) of the agreement signed by both governments on the vacating of certain fields of taxation during the war with a view to denouncing the agreement and, if so, what steps have been taken in this respect, and what agreements are now in force?

[Translation]

Mr. Benson: No. Under section 23(1) of the wartime tax agreement, it was provided that the agreement would terminate on the last day of the fiscal year of the province ending nearest to the thirty first day of December in the first calendar year which began after the date of cessation of hostilities. As order in council P.C. 7409 dated 21st December 1945 fixed the 2nd September 1945 as the date of the cessation of hostilities, the wartime tax agreement automatically ceased on March 31, 1947, and Quebec was free to resume the imposition of a provincial tax on individual and corporation incomes. As Quebec did not enter into subsequent tax rental agreements, that province has retained its freedom to tax individual and corporation incomes.

*BILINGUALISM AT MARVILLE MILITARY BASE

Question No. 1,592—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. How is bilingualism handled at the Canadian military base located at Marville, France?
2. Are notices of all types published both in French and in English?
3. Do the fuselages of Canadian aircraft carry bilingual inscriptions?
4. Are the menus written in both languages?

[Translation]

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, the answers to Nos. 1 and 2 are as follows:

Instructions, notices, etc. are posted in French if needed. French magazines and newspapers are sold on the base and records to learn French can be obtained free of charge from the base library. French courses are also available to those who want to take advantage of them.

Answer to No. 3:

No, the inscription is made up of only the letters R.C.A.F. and the rosette with a maple leaf in the centre of it, which is known throughout the world.

Answer to No. 4:

The menus are written in English or in French as need be.

CORN—SURPLUS, EXPORTS AND STORAGE

Question No. 1,593—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is there a corn surplus in Canada and, if so (a) how many bushels are stored in each of the western provinces (b) what percentage does the 1963 total corn sale represent of the country's total surplus (c) what was the storage cost in 1962-63 for the corn surplus (d) what were the administrative costs of the corn surplus during 1962-63?
2. To what countries did Canada export corn during the year 1962-63 and (a) how many bushels were exported to each country (b) at what price per bushel (c) what are the conditions of payment to each country?
3. What was the storage cost in 1962-63 for the surplus corn?

Mr. Hays: 1. No. (a) None, corn, other than for canning purposes, is not produced in commercial quantities in western Canada (b) not applicable; (c) not applicable; (d) not applicable.

2. (a) Belgium-Luxembourg, 1,399 bushels; Austria, 5 bushels; France, 1,939 bushels; West Germany, 28 bushels; Netherlands, 44 bushels; Switzerland, 4,601 bushels; Japan, 18 bushels; British Guiana, 7,182 bushels; Chile, 29 bushels; Barbados, 110 bushels; Jamaica, 20 bushels; Leeward and Windward Is., 112 bushels; Trinidad and Tobago, 3,149 bushels; St. Pierre and Miquelon, 129 bushels; United States, 24,505 bushels.

(b) These exports consist of certified and specially developed varieties of seed sold by Canadian seed producers specializing in certified and hybrid seed production for foundation stock and seed purposes. No information is available as to the price per bushel received by producers for these shipments.

(c) Since these were private sales on a commercial basis no information is available.

3. Nil.

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,594—Mr. Latulippe:

Did the Minister of Finance state at the beginning of October that the government did not intend to reduce its balance of payments deficit to the detriment of the United States and, if so (a) what practical measures does the government expect to take (b) what special meaning does the Minister of Finance attach to multilateral measures as opposed to bilateral ones (c) what are the methods presently employed to re-adjust Canada's balance of payments (d) what has been, each year for the past five years, the deficit in Canada's balance of payments (e) is a balance of payments deficit expected for the current year and, if so, what is the projected figure?

[Translation]

Mr. Benson: (a) (b) (c) It is believed this question refers to a speech that the Minister of Finance gave at the annual meeting of the international monetary fund in early October. The government's policy towards Canada's balance of payments problem was indicated in that speech as follows:

"The Canadian government is determined to press on in this direction (i.e. towards a reduction of the over-all current account deficit) by constructive steps which avoid severe distortions or disruptions in our own affairs or in those of our trading partners. We do not aim at balance with one particular country or one particular area but at improving our balance with the world as a whole."

(d) 1958, $1,131 million; 1959, $1,504 million; 1960, $1,243 million; 1961, $982 million; 1962, $848 million.

(e) Data on the balance of payments for 1963 are available for the first six months only. The deficit on current account for the first six months of 1963 was $439 million, compared with a deficit of $695 million in the first six months of 1962.

COMPETITION FOR MANAGEMENT ANALYSTS

Question No. 1,613—Mr. Fisher:

1. (a) What is the civil service commission's training program to train civil servants as management analysts (b) how much money was spent by the civil service commission on staff training for management analysts' position during 1960, 1961, 1962, and up to the end of September, 1963 (c) what is the information on monies spent for staff training in other government departments, by name, requiring management analysts as requested in (b) above?

2. Did the civil service commission receive any complaint from civil servants or any staff association with respect to the conduct and results of civil service competition No. 63-654 and, if so (a) who made the complaints (b) what replies were made to such complaints?

3. (a) Was selection and interview of candidates who applied for positions in competition No. 63-654 conducted in accordance with the Civil Service Act and regulations (b) does any section or sections of the Civil Service Act and regulations authorize and provide for selection boards to change their personnel when interviewing and selecting applicants for one competition (c) does any section or sections of the Civil Service Act and regulations authorize and provide for civil servants to have their friends submit applications in response to a competition, with the assurance of a position if they apply (d) does any section or sections of the Civil Service Act and regulations authorize the establishing of an eligible list before all applicants are interviewed (e) does any section or sections of the Civil Service Act and regulations authorize the appointment of applicants to positions before the selection boards have completed their interviews of all candidates whose applications were accepted?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have been given the following answer by the civil service commission:

Questions

1. (a) The management analysis division (formerly the organization and methods service) of the civil service commission has given training to departmental officers, as requested, since 1956. This training is done by (i) formal training courses, (ii) on the job training by the attachment of departmental officers to management analysis division officers when a project is being carried out for the department concerned, and (iii) by dissemination of selected information on management analysis work. Formal training courses in management analysis have been planned, on the basis of requests from departments, until the end of the 1963-64 fiscal year. (b) The staff costs involved in giving formal courses in management analysis have been approximately $4,000 a year for 1960, 1961 and 1962. For 1963, up to the end of September, the costs have been approximately $8,000. These costs do not include the salaries of those attending the courses. (c) No figures available.

2. The civil service commission received no written complaints in connection with this competition. There were two telephone calls from the Ottawa office of the civil service association of Canada for information only. This information was given verbally.

3. (a) Yes. (b) Section 38(1) of the Civil Service Act permits the civil service commission to make an administrative decision of this nature. (c) No. (d) Yes. See 3(b) above. (e) See 3(b) above.

NATIONAL WAR MEMORIALS

Question No. 1,616—Mr. Matheson:

1. Does Canada presently have a national shrine of remembrance in Ottawa or elsewhere and, if so, where?

2. What war memorials or cenotaphs are in existence in the Ottawa area, where are they located, for what purpose were they erected, and when?

3. Does Canada have any memorial to the unknown serviceman?

Answer: 1. Canada does not at present have a national shrine of remembrance.

2. The following memorials in the Ottawa area are the only ones in the erection of which the federal government has participated:

(a) The world war I memorial on Confederation square. This memorial commemorates the more than 60,000 Canadian servicemen who died during service in that war. This memorial was unveiled by King George VI on May 21, 1939.

(b) The peace tower. The peace tower of the centre block of the parliament buildings, and particularly the memorial chamber therein, was erected to commemorate Canada's participation in world war I and in memory of those Canadians who lost their lives during that war while in the armed forces. The peace tower was officially opened by the Prince of Wales, later King Edward VIII, on July 1, 1927.

(c) Veterans memorial buildings on Wellington street. The veterans affairs building and the trade and commerce building, together with the commemorative arch connecting them, form the veterans memorial buildings. The cornerstone of the veterans affairs building was laid by the Hon. Hugues Lapointe, the then minister of veterans affairs, on November 11, 1952, and the buildings were occupied by their respective departments in 1955-59. These buildings were intended as a memorial to those Canadians who gave their lives while in the services during world war II.

(d) The commonwealth air forces memorial. This memorial was erected by the imperial war graves commission, now the commonwealth war graves commission, of which Canada is a participating member, and was unveiled on July 1, 1959 by her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. This memorial is located on Green island. It commemorates the 798 men and women of the air forces of the commonwealth who died in Canada, the United States and neighbouring lands from 1939 to 1945.

(e) Canloan memorial. This memorial consists of a commemorative stone in a small park at the corner of Stanley avenue and Sussex drive. It was placed in memory of 673 Canadian officers who served voluntarily in the British army and took part in the invasion and liberation of Europe, 1944-45. There were 128 fatal casualties among this group of officers. The memorial was unveiled by the Governor General on June 3, 1961.

3. There is no national memorial in Canada to the unknown serviceman.

EXTENSION OF AIRPORT RUNWAYS, LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 1,632—Mr. Irvine:

Are there included, in the estimates of the Department of Transport, sums to extend the runways at London airport?

Mr. McIlraith: No. The department had earlier expected that runway strengthening would be necessary in connection with use of London airport by Vanguard aircraft, but engineering investigation indicated that this would not have to be undertaken at the present time, although an additional parallel taxiway is to be constructed.

NURSING ORDERLIES, D.V.A. HOSPITALS

Question No. 1,634—Mr. Irvine:

1. What was the date of the most recent increase in pay granted to nursing orderlies in D.V.A. hospitals?
2. What was the amount of this increase?
3. Has there been any reclassification of nursing orderlies since this increase?
4. If so, after reclassification, what was the net additional pay?

Answer: 1. Salary revisions for nursing orderlies, effective from January 1, 1963, were authorized by the government on July 29, 1963.

2. Increases varied from nothing to $540 per annum.

3. There have been 1,737 reclassifications and an additional 212 are pending.

4. The total additional annual salary increases when all reclassifications are made will, it is estimated, amount to $348,550.

GRANTS TO HEALTH RESEARCH PROJECTS

Question No. 1,642—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What research projects being conducted by the universities, government, and private foundations are being financed by federal health grants, in the following fields: (a) heart disease (b) cancer (c) tuberculosis (d) multiple sclerosis (e) muscular dystrophy, and (f) arthritis?
2. What is the value of each grant?
3. What is the total value of each grant for each province?
4. What is the total value of these grants for Canada?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Under the national health grants, federal funds have been allocated to date in 1963-64, on the basis of provincial requests, towards the conduct of research at various Canadian universities, hospitals and other health agencies in the following fields: heart disease, cancer, tuberculosis and arthritis. No research project has been submitted by the provinces during this fiscal year for the support of research on multiple sclerosis and dystrophy.

2. (a) Heart disease, thirty seven research projects are being supported in the present fiscal year with the value of the grants varying from $499 to $66,812; (b) cancer, under the cancer control grant, $350,000 has been earmarked for cancer research. To date provincial requests have been approved in an amount of $223,027 on behalf of cancer research; (c) tuberculosis, nine research projects are being supported in the present fiscal year with the value of the grants varying from $4,850 to $28,950; (d) arthritis, ten research projects are being supported in the present fiscal year with the value of the grants varying from $258 to $17,000.

Questions

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS PARK—IMPROVEMENTS TO WATER SYSTEM

Question No. 1,651—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has a contract been awarded for improvements to the water system in the Cheticamp area of the Cape Breton Highlands national park?
2. Who was the successful tenderer and what was the amount of the tender?
3. What are the names, addresses, and amounts, of all others who tendered?

Mr. Laing: 1. No; tenders have been called but no contract yet awarded.

2. N/A.

3. Tenders were received from the following:

Maritime Builders Limited, P.O. Box 555, Sydney, Nova Scotia, $60,219.00; Stephens Construction Limited, 199 Townsend street, Sydney, Nova Scotia, $65,013.58; Albert E. Whidden, P.O. Box 30, Antigonish, Nova Scotia, $162,266.00.

HOUSE CONSTRUCTION, PORT BLANDFORD, NFLD.

Question No. 1,652—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. To whom was the contract awarded for the construction of two dwellings at Port Blandford, Newfoundland?
2. What was the amount of the contract, and what were the names, addresses and amounts, of all those who tendered?

Mr. McIlraith: 1 and 2. The closing date for tenders for this project is November 28 and, accordingly, the information requested is not yet available.

POSTAL TERMINAL BUILDING, EDMONTON

Question No. 1,657—Mr. Lambert:

1. Have plans and working drawings been completed for a new postal terminal building and related facilities in Edmonton and, if not, when is it expected that these shall be completed preparatory to a call for tenders?
2. When is it expected that tenders will be called and; when is the anticipated date of awarding a contract and, what is the target date for the commencement of construction or completion?
3. Do the plans call for air conditioning all or part of the proposed building and, if not, what are the reasons for such a decision?

Mr. Badanai: 1. No, but it is expected they will be completed early next month.

2. The department expects to call tenders in late December, 1963, and to award the contract in March, 1964. Construction is expected to commence immediately following the award of the contract and take about three years to complete. This estimated time includes the installation of mail handling equipment as well as construction of the building.

3. Yes, for all of the building.

PERSONS ON PAROLE CONVICTED OF CRIMES

Question No. 1,659—Mr. Orlikow:

In the past five years, how many people released from prison on parole have been convicted of further criminal activities?

Mr. Chevrier: The national parole board has only been functioning since January 1, 1959. From that date to November 1, 1963, 10,264 persons have been granted parole. Neither the national parole board nor the R.C.M. police have statistics showing the number of such persons who were convicted of further criminal activities after their parole periods were completed. Of these 10,264 cases however, 501 had their parole forfeited by reason of conviction for an indictable offence while on parole and 61 had their paroles revoked in whole or part because of summary conviction offences. The national parole board conducts follow-up studies of recidivism among persons granted conditional releases by five and 10 year periods from 1950 and publishes the results in the annual reports of the board.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK LOANS

Question No. 1,663—Mr. Caouette:

1. What is the total amount of the loans granted by the industrial development bank since its establishment in 1944?
2. What is the amount of the loans granted by the industrial development bank to each of the ten provinces of Canada for each of the past five years?
3. Has the industrial development bank purchased shares or debentures issued by companies or individuals with which the bank had entered into underwriting agreements and, if so, (a) what were the amounts (b) what proportion was acquired in the province of Quebec?
4. What was the number of the loans granted by the industrial development bank (a) in Canada (b) in the province of Quebec?
5. What was the average amount of these loans?
6. What is the paid up capital of the industrial development bank?

[Translation]

Mr. Benson: 1. Total amount of loans granted by the industrial development bank since its establishment in 1944 to September 30, 1963: $542,159,000.

2. The bank has no authority to lend to provincial governments.

3. (a) $45,000; (b) nil.

4. (a) in Canada: 10,131; (b) province of Quebec, 2,378.

5. (a) in Canada, $54,000; (b) province of Quebec, $65,000.

6. $33 million.

CRITERIA FOR DEVELOPMENT AND UNEMPLOYMENT AREAS

Question No. 1,664—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What are the criteria under which an area can qualify as a development area?
2. What are the criteria under which an area can qualify as a high winter unemployment area?
3. Is the national employment service Megantic area considered a high winter unemployment area and, if so, for what reasons?
4. Does the national employment service Megantic area qualify as a development area and, if not, for what reasons?
5. Can municipalities in the high winter unemployment areas expect that the federal government will take their 10 per cent share in the winter works program?
6. Which municipalities in the Compton part of the constituency of Compton-Frontenac are in the high winter unemployment area?
7. Is the Compton region considered as a development area and, if not, for what reasons did it not qualify?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. MacEachen: 1. The national employment service area will be designated:

(a) if it has been a labour surplus area for at least half of the summer months of the past eight years and employment growth has been less than half the national average, or (b) if it has been a labour surplus area for at least one third of the summer months of the past eight years and employment has declined over this period, or (c) if it has been a surplus labour area for at least half of the summer months of the past three years and employment has declined in each of these years. On the other hand, an area will not be designated if there has been a steady and considerable decline in unemployment over the past three years, a decline large enough to take the area out of the substantial labour surplus category.

2. To qualify as an area of high winter unemployment, the average ratio of national employment service registrations to estimated paid workers must have been 25 per cent or more in the three months January, February and March during the years 1961, 1962, and 1963.

3. Yes. In the Megantic area, national employment service registrations represented more than 25 per cent of the paid workers during the winter months of the past three years, thereby meeting the conditions outlined above.

4. No. The Megantic national employment service area does not qualify as a designated development area because it has failed to meet the employment criteria.

5. Municipalities in areas of high winter unemployment will receive higher payroll incentive payments under the municipal winter works incentive program. Municipalities in these areas will receive an additional 10 per cent, or a total of 60 per cent of payroll costs of winter works projects.

6. All of the Compton part of Compton-Frontenac constituency is in the Sherbrooke local office area. Sherbrooke is not an area of high winter unemployment.

7. The Compton region is part of the Sherbrooke local office area. Sherbrooke has not been designated a development area because it failed to meet the established employment criteria.

FISH BREEDING STATIONS

Question No. 1,669—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the Department of Fisheries received any representations or requests with regard to the building of a fish breeding station in Compton-Frontenac constituency?
2. How many fish breeding stations are there in the eastern townships of the province of Quebec?
3. What were the expenses incurred by the federal government with regard to fish breeding stations (a) in Canada (b) in the province of Quebec, indicating (i) the cost of each project

(ii) the number of employees at each station and the salary of each (iii) expenses incurred for building and repairs during the past ten years?

4. What are the rules that govern (a) the choice of a site for a fish breeding station (b) the organization of such an establishment?

5. What amount was spent on research in fish breeding stations during the past five years (a) in Canada, (b) in Quebec?

Mr. Robichaud: 1. No. The provincial government operates fish breeding stations in the province of Quebec. Consequently, the following questions are not therefore relevant.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Answered by No. 1.

5. Answered by No. 1.

BUTTER STORAGE, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,672—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture received any requests from the constituency of Compton-Frontenac concerning the building of refrigerated warehouses for butter surpluses and, if so (a) from whom (b) on what date?

2. At October 31, 1963, how many pounds of butter indicating value and carrying charges, were stored in the constituency of (a) Compton-Frontenac (b) Sherbrooke (c) Megantic (d) Beauce?

3. What individuals or private firms have such warehouses and (a) what is the annual rent (b) since when, in each case (c) has the rent been raised in the past five years and, if so, by how much in each case?

Mr. Hays: 1. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable.

2. (a) and (b) As at October 31, 1963, there were 6,106,384 pounds of butter in storage warehouses in the constituencies of Compton-Frontenac and Sherbrooke, valued at $3,430,-632 and storage charges amounted to $11,786.79 per month; (c) and (d) As at October 13, 1963, no butter was stored in the constituencies of Megantic and Beauce.

3. Societe Cooperative Agricole, Lac Megantic; Metropolitan Storage, Sherbrooke; Eastern Townships Produce Co., Sherbrooke; W. Lowney Company, Sherbrooke; Lansdowne Storage Company, Sherbrooke.

(a) Storage charges are 13 cents per box per month for the first eight months plus handling charges which are included in the first month's storage, and 10 cents per box per month for the ninth and subsequent months; (b) Societe Cooperative Agricole, 1961; Metropolitan Storage, 1963; Eastern Townships Produce Co., 1961; W. Lowney Company, 1963; Lansdowne Storage Company, 1963. (c) No.

REAL ESTATE CREDIT ADVISER, AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,679—Mr. Gauthier:

Is there an agronomist employed in the Department of Agriculture as a credit adviser authorized to deal in real estate while discharging his departmental duties?

Mr. Hays: There are no agronomists employed by the Department of Agriculture as credit advisers. The Farm Credit Corporation, however, does employ credit advisers who are not authorized to deal in real estate while discharging their duties for the corporation.

MINING OPERATIONS, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,683—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many mining firms or companies operated in Compton-Frontenac in 1963?

2. What assistance did the federal government grant each of these companies, and under what program?

3. What firms or companies hold mining properties in Compton-Frontenac?

4. What revenue did the federal government receive from those companies during the past three years?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. One.

2. No direct assistance.

3. Several companies hold mining property in Compton-Frontenac county, two of which justify comment. Copperstream-Frontenac Mines Limited holds mining rights on a molybdenite property of 2,990 acres in Gayhurst and Dorset townships in Frontenac county, and has reported reserves of 2 million tons averaging 0.50 per cent $MOS_2$. The Moneta group, financed by Moneta Porcupine Mines Limited, Dome Mines Limited, and Hastings Mining and Development Company Limited holds property in Marston and Clinton townships and has done exploration work on a large low-grade copper deposit.

4. No information available.

TARIFF PROTECTION ON SUGAR

Question No. 1,686—Mr. Mather:

What is the amount of tariff protection enjoyed by Canadian sugar refiners against competition from foreign refined sugar?

Mr. Benson: The duty on fully refined sugar is $1.09 per cwt. under the British preferential tariff and $1.89 per cwt. under the most favoured nation tariff. The duty on raw sugar depends upon its polariscopic test. On 96 degree raw the rate is 28 cents per cwt. under the British preferential tariff and $1.28 under the most favoured nation tariff. In comparing rates of duty on raw and refined sugar account should be taken of the fact that there is a loss factor of shrinkage of about 7 per cent in converting raw sugar into refined sugar. Moreover it should be kept in mind that in general commonwealth producers take about 85 cents of the $1 per cwt. margin of preference on raw sugar.

Questions

FEDERAL TAX RECEIPTS FROM SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 1,687—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

What was the amount of all taxes received from the province of Saskatchewan by the federal government in each of the years 1961 and 1962, and of this, what amount was derived from income tax?

Mr. Garland: The following are the amounts collected by the Department of National Revenue in the province of Saskatchewan:

| Fiscal Year | Total | Income Tax* Included in Total |
|---|---|---|
| 1960-61 | $88,940,148 | $67,505,161 |
| 1961-62 | $91,509,591 | $71,826,579 |

*Includes old age security tax

FEDERAL TAX RECEIPTS FROM QUEBEC

Question No. 1,688—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

What was the amount of all taxes received from the province of Quebec by the federal government in each of the years 1961 and 1962, and of this, what amount was derived from income tax?

Answer: The following are the amounts collected by the Department of National Revenue in the province of Quebec:

| Fiscal Year | Total | Included in Total |
|---|---|---|
| 1960-61 | $1,748,906,370 | $860,609,230 |
| 1961-62 | $1,830,377,564 | $910,730,574 |

*Includes old age security tax

ROADS TO RESOURCES, MANITOBA

Question No. 1,692—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many roads have been built in northern Manitoba, in whole or in part, under the roads to resources program?

2. What is the length and description of each such road?

3. In how many cases were payments made to private mining companies toward the cost of constructing such roads?

4. What mining companies received such payments and, in each case (a) what figure was submitted to the federal government as the cost of the road (b) how much thereof was paid by the federal government and (c) to whom were such federal government payments made?

Mr. Laing: 1. Three.

2. Thompson road, approximate mileage 191. New construction commencing at No. 10 highway near Simonhouse, thence to a point on the Wekusko-Snow lake road to the townsite of Thompson; Osborne lake road, approximate mileage 12.2. New construction from a point on the Wekusko-Snow lake road to the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company at Osborne lake; God's lake road, approximate mileage 384.2. New construction from the northern terminus of the Interlake road system near Gypsumville through Grand Rapids to the Thompson road and thence east as far towards God's lake as can be completed.

3. None.

[Mr. Benson.]

4. None. However, the International Nickel Company of Canada has agreed to pay to the province one third of the cost of such portions of the work on the Thompson road as are of direct interest to the company, and the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company has undertaken to pay one third of the total cost of the Osborne lake road, leaving the balance to be divided equally between the federal government and Manitoba.

Under the roads to resources agreement with Manitoba the province is primarily responsible for arrangements with the mining companies concerned. Provincial returns to date do not show the contribution by the International Nickel Company of Canada toward the construction of the Thompson road; they indicate that the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company has contributed $199,065 toward construction of the Osborne lake road.

RADIO AND TELEVISION SERVICE, WABUSH, NFLD.

Question 1,695—Mr. Fisher:

1. What plans has the C.B.C. for providing radio and/or television service to Wabush, Newfoundland?

2. What is the population estimate the C.B.C. is using in its plans for service to this area?

3. Has the C.B.C. any radio and/or television service for any communities in Canada, in hinterland areas, that are smaller in population than Wabush and, if so, what are they, and what is the population in each?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Applications have been submitted to the Department of Transport for authority to establish two low power radio stations, one at Wabush and the other at Labrador city. There are no immediate plans for television.

2. Estimated at 5,000 within the combined coverage area proposed for the two low power transmitters referred to in part 1.

3. Yes in radio but not in television. The corporation has more than 100 low power radio transmitters in operation now and eleven more have been authorized but are not yet in operation. Many of these are or will be serving communities with smaller population than that estimated for Wabush/Labrador city area. Some of these are:

| Place | Population (estimated) |
|---|---|
| Latchford, Ontario | 1,500 |
| White River, Ontario | 900 |
| Foleyet, Ontario | 800 |
| Beardmore, Ontario | 1,800 |
| Nakina, Ontario | 1,300 |
| Cassiar, B.C. | 600 |
| Clinton, B.C. | 1,300 |
| Fort Nelson, B.C. | 1,800 |
| Fort St. James, B.C. | 1,500 |
| Houston, B.C. | 1,600 |

| Place | Population (estimated) |
|---|---|
| Lytton, B.C. | 1,500 |
| Holberg, B.C. | 1,200 |
| Dawson, Y.T. | 900 |
| Elsa, Y.T. | 600 |
| Watson Lake, Y.T. | 600 |
| Fort Smith, N.W.T. | 1,800 |
| Hay River, N.W.T. | 1,400 |

FRENCH COPIES OF TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT BOOKLET

Question No. 1,697—Mr. Fisher:

1. Was a booklet "Department of Transport Directory" and in the blue section a "list of officers of boards, commissions and corporations reporting to the minister", dated at Ottawa, June 1963, printed in French?
2. Were 1,500 copies of these booklets printed in French, the same as in English or, if not, how many were printed?
3. Of the 1,500 or so copies printed, how many were distributed as at October 1, 1963?
4. What was the cost of the booklets printed in French?
5. What disposition will be made of the remaining booklets printed in French which were not distributed by October 1, 1963?
6. Will another issue of this directory be published in French?
7. Who are the members of the departmental publications committee and for what reason did they consider the publication of this booklet in French necessary?
8. Was economy taken into consideration?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. No. As pointed out in the answer made on November 6, 1963, to parts 5 and 6 of question No. 1,452 the booklet is not for the purpose of providing information in narrative form but is simply a listing of names, residences and telephone numbers of personnel.

2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. Not applicable.

7. At the time the booklet was published the committee comprised the senior assistant deputy minister, director of administration and personnel, chief of office services.

8. Not applicable.

EXTENSION OF HARBOUR FACILITIES, NOEL, N.S.

Question No. 1,698—Mr. Kennedy:

Has the government any intention of extending the harbour facilities at Noel, Nova Scotia, so as to accommodate ocean-going vessels for movement of pulpwood, etc?

Mr. Badanai: Not at the present time.

SCHOLARSHIPS TO CHILDREN OF OVERSEAS SERVICE PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,700—Mr. Matheson:

1. Are the children of overseas service personnel eligible for dominion-provincial scholarships and, if so, how are they selected from the graduates of Department of National Defence schools in Europe?
2. How many such scholarships have been awarded to Department of National Defence school graduates in each of the past five years?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Yes. Recipients are selected by provincial government and university selection committees.

2. Information is not available.

BRAS D'OR ILLUSTRATION STATION

Question No. 1,703—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Has the contract for the Bras d'Or illustration station expired and, if so, will it be renewed, and for what period of time?

Mr. Hays: No, the contract for the Bras d'Or illustration station has not expired.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS FIGURES ON MERCHANDISING VOLUME

Question No. 1,704—Mr. Mather:

Do dominion bureau of statistics figures indicating increases in merchandising volume, such as in department store sales, take into account the increased prices of goods sold?

Answer: The dominion bureau of statistics retail sales series represents the value of merchandise sold.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY—OFFICER PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,711—Mr. Fisher:

How many (a) admirals (b) commodores (c) captains (d) commanders, and (e) lieutenant commanders are at present in the Royal Canadian Navy?

Answer: (a) Vice admiral, 1; rear admirals, 8; (b) commodores, 23; (c) captains, 69; (d) commanders, 239; (e) lieutenant commanders, 849.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder if I might be permitted to say a word at this moment. I have had consultations through the usual channels, and I believe that in order to assist the government, because so many ministers are not able to be here at this time today on account of the federal-provincial conference, it would meet with the wishes of the house if Your Honour were to call only motion No. 169, which the government is willing to accept without any discussion. It would be a service to the government which would be greatly appreciated if the other motions could stand until next week.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the house agrees with the suggestion made by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I notice that the Postmaster General is in the house, and since motion No. 152 has to do with his department I wonder whether he would be prepared to make a reply today, or has the agreement been on an over-all basis?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was an over-all agreement.

TELEGRAM FROM B.C. FISHERIES ASSOCIATION

Motion No. 169—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the telegram received from the fisheries association of B.C. which was referred to and quoted in part by the Minister of Fisheries at page 2945 of the House of Commons Debates for August 2, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

FEDERAL ATTITUDE TOWARD ALLEGED ULTIMATUM FROM QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question regarding the briefs which have been presented to the dominion-provincial conference, particularly that presented by the premier of Quebec. In view of the fact that the hon. gentleman is a member from that province, can he say whether it is the intention of the government to capitulate to this ultimatum as has been the case in the past?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): I am somewhat surprised at the language used in the last part of the right hon. gentleman's question.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Chevrier: If hon. members will allow me, I will do my best to answer it. In the next place I should like to say that there is nothing either in the statement made by the premier of the province of Quebec or in the statement I listened to this morning that is in the nature of an ultimatum. Finally I should like to say that all these matters, not only the brief prepared and submitted by the premier of the province of Quebec but those prepared and submitted by all the provinces, will, as stated by the Prime Minister this morning and yesterday, be considered carefully, sympathetically and fairly to all provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, so far as the last observation is concerned, that the consideration will be fair to all provinces, that is what is expected by everyone in this house. I ask the minister, though, whether an opportunity will be given to the house to debate this question at an early date.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the briefs were tabled by me earlier today. They will be submitted to hon. members just as soon as the secretariat has word that they should be, which will be this afternoon. In so far as the matter of debate is concerned, I think that is something that will have to be left to the discretion of the Prime Minister when he returns.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the federal-provincial conference is under way, I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister could tell me who is representing Yukon and the Northwest Territories at that conference?

Mr. Chevrier: That question has been asked on several occasions and the Prime Minister said he would look into it, but I must say that there is no official representation from the Northwest Territories or Yukon.

[Later:]

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he tell the house if it is true that, at the request of Ottawa, the province of Quebec has agreed to withdraw from the pension plan for the blind and the disabled in return for tax concessions?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the question of joint programs is now being studied by the federal-provincial conference, I feel it would be out of order for me to make a statement in that respect.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister a supplementary question. Without knowing the decision taken, can he tell us if such a suggestion was discussed at this morning's meeting?

Mr. Chevrier: I think the hon. member should be satisfied with the statements made a while ago. With regard to the statements made this morning, I am not in a position to say what happened at that meeting.

[Text]

REPORTED EXCLUSION OF OUTSIDE PRESS PHOTOGRAPHERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I should like to address a short question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government received written protests from 17 press photographers complaining of their exclusion from an opportunity to take photographs for their newspapers at the federal-provincial conference, while at the same time an official government photographer was provided with full facilities? Can the Acting Prime Minister give reasons for such exclusion?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such difficulty that has arisen. I was present this morning when a photograph was taken of those who were there, so I would not think there was any difficulty in that respect. However, in view of the hon. member's question, I shall be glad to look into it.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with further reference to a question asked a little earlier, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it is the attitude of the government or the decision of the government that the national film board should be a monopoly agency in so far as these photographs are concerned to which reference has been made, at the dominion-provincial conference, and also whether it is the view of the government that the right of competition from free agencies should be denied.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question put by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi I indicated that I was not familiar with the circumstances as he outlined them from the memorandum he had before him. When I said that a picture was taken, I was referring to the usual picture that is taken of the Prime Minister and the premiers of the provinces. That was taken shortly before I left at noon. So far as the rest of the question is concerned, I am afraid I shall have to inquire into the position to ascertain what it is.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It seems completely inexcusable.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—VALIDITY OF CONFESSION OF RONALD LIPPERT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell the house if his department has any information as to whether the confession of Ronald Lippert, a copy of which I hold in my hand, was secured under duress or under promise of clemency? Has this matter been looked into by his department or by his officials in Havana?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been looked into by the Department of External Affairs.

While I am on my feet may I deal with questions that were asked of me yesterday by several hon. members. At no time has it been suggested or charged, before or during the trial itself, that the explosives were of Canadian origin. Neither is there any evidence that they had been brought into Cuba from Canada.

The hon. member for Kootenay West asked me a question concerning the visit to my office on August 21 of Mr. William J. Garfat and Leonard Rosenberg. These gentlemen came to see me, and discussed a project for the export of food parcels from Canada to Cuba. This proposal for a commercial food parcels scheme is completely distinct from the alleged smuggling of explosives in food tins from Miami by one of the accused, in connection with a flight said to have been made for the purpose of obtaining some aircraft engines.

The Department of External Affairs sent Mr. Garfat a letter dated September 11 saying that we were of the opinion, after looking into the food parcels proposal, that it did not appear to be feasible. In the letter it was pointed out that the United States Cuban assets control regulations would not permit the transfer of funds to Canada by Cuban refugees in the United States for the purchase of food packages in Canada.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has told us that his department has looked into the question of the alleged confession. Could I ask the minister what his officials have found as a result of their investigation?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the appeal has been lodged, and I prefer to say nothing which in my judgment might in some way prejudice that appeal.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the minister if the Canadian ambassador in Havana has seen the prisoner or the other accused, Mr. Milne, who was acquitted? Has the ambassador himself seen either of them?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the ambassador or the vice consul, who himself happens to have legal training, saw both prisoners prior to the trial on at least three occasions, I believe. The individual who has been found not guilty is expected to be leaving Havana momentarily.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider having this individual appear before the external affairs committee when it sits, to give his side of the story?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should think that at this particular moment we would all want to express ourselves in a manner that would not prejudice the due process of law currently under way.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A few moments ago he said that the Canadian ambassador in Cuba, and I believe the vice consul, had interviewed the two Canadians held in custody there. I am asking the minister if he would undertake to check the accuracy of that statement. I am told by those who have recently been in Havana that the only person from the Canadian embassy who visited either Milne or Lippert was Mr. Warren, the third secretary, and they had no conversations with any persons or personal interviews with anyone other than the third secretary, who has had only one year's experience in the overseas service.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will be glad to look into my hon. friend's earlier question and my responses thereto, but I would be greatly surprised if I were in error.

RUSSIA—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING PERSECUTION OF JEWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, November 20, 1963, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked the Prime Minister if there had been any correspondence between the government and the Canadian Jewish Congress on the subject of anti-Semitism in the Soviet union. The Prime Minister replied he understood there was some correspondence, and I now wish to table it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORT

CHIGNECTO—INQUIRY AS TO STUDY BY DEVELOPMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Has the Secretary of State been able to determine whether the Atlantic development board has the Chignecto complex under study and, if so, can he report to the house on their progress in this regard?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if I heard the hon. gentleman correctly his question concerned the Chignecto complex. If so, the answer is that the government has approved in principle a proposal for an exploratory study, and the board is at present engaged in seeking the most competent persons to do it.

NORTH SYDNEY-NEWFOUNDLAND—MAINLAND FERRY TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport what reply he has given to a communication he has received from the Sydney board of trade in reference to the mainland terminal of the ferry running to Argentia, Newfoundland. I refer particularly to the final paragraph of the letter, which reads:

> We of the Sydney board, feel it is only natural that North Sydney should be this terminus, and wonder if the latest press releases are in error?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): It is rather difficult, when one signs so many letters, to recall a particular one without notice. My recollection is that I told them their representations would be borne in mind when this matter was considered. I appreciate very much the importance of a decision like this to each community that aspires to have the terminal in its locality.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO ABSENCE OF MINISTER FROM HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister to tell the house when we can expect to have a full time minister of agriculture. Last week he was away two days, and this week he has not been here at all. I think the house is entitled to know if we are going to have a full time minister.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): I should like to answer that question by saying that following a question by an hon. member yesterday in connection with a statement alleged to have been made by the Minister of Agriculture I communicated with his office, and learned that unfortunately he is ill and that is the reason he is not in the house.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Minister of Agriculture is now attending the federal-provincial conference or an auction sale?

[Text]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question supplementary to that of the hon. member for Huron.

I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister who is representing the federal government at the federal-provincial conference, since the question of marketing boards apparently has been discussed there.

Mr. Chevrier: I am glad to answer that. It is the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Tremblay).

[Later:]

Mr. Charles Lamb (Victoria, Ont.): As I have been an auctioneer for over 40 years, I should like to offer my services to the Minister of Agriculture so that he can spend more time in the House of Commons.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—DIVERSION OF WATER UNDER PROPOSED TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question based on the Columbia. It is a current and very interesting issue. Can the right to divert water from the Columbia for consumptive purposes be assigned for multipurpose projects under the terms of the proposed treaty?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest that this is really a question for the order paper, as it requires a little research.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, a number of publishers and newspapermen are anxious to hear the answer to this question.

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE OF TREATY TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the Columbia river project. As a member representing a lot of people interested in water, and therefore directly concerned, and in view of the Prime Minister's promise in writing that a Liberal government—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Please come to the point of your question.

Mr. Cooper: Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs refer the treaty, before it is signed, to the external affairs committee in order that the people directly concerned will be consulted prior to any decisions being made?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has clearly indicated that if an agreement is concluded between the United States and Canada, the government will unhesitatingly announce its policy and submit the treaty—after the government has taken the position which constitutionally it should and must take—to the committee which, under those circumstances, would have an opportunity for the widest possible examination.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As a supplementary question, in view of the Prime Minister's promise in writing to numerous organizations that the government would not renegotiate the treaty and no decision would be arrived at until the people directly concerned were consulted, does the minister think the promise of the Prime Minister is being kept in this respect?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the promise of the Prime Minister is being kept in this as in all other respects.

CONSIDERATION OF PETITION RESPECTING PROGRAM "NINE TO FIVE"

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister a question?

Does the minister intend to ask for an investigation of the C.B.C. which interferes with the freedom of expression by cutting out one character from the T.V. serial "De neuf à cinq" following a petition signed by the authors association?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): I shall consider this question as notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR REPLY TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. I direct the minister's attention to question 1,237 on the order paper, which was placed there on October 4, some 54 days ago. Does the minister intend to have his department reply to that question before the expiration of 60 days next Tuesday?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am going to look into this matter, and as soon as possible an answer will be provided the hon. member.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONFERENCE ON SMOKING AND CANCER—REQUEST FOR REPORT FROM WORKING GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): In the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I should like to address a question to her parliamentary assistant. Yesterday, in reply to a question, the minister stated that all matters before the national conference on smoking were finally referred to a working group. In view of the great interest of the members of this house in this subject, may I ask if it is the intention of the minister to report to parliament as findings are made and conclusions reached by this group.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): I shall be glad to bring this question to the attention of the minister upon her return.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the parliamentary secretary say whether it is the intention of this department to do any research on this matter of the cancer-producing elements in tobacco, with a view to trying to find out (a) what they are and (b) removing them?

Mr. Haidasz: I shall be glad to bring this to the attention of the minister also.

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR INCREASED HOSPITAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wanted to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in her absence I shall direct it to her parliamentary secretary. Has the government received a communication from the chairman of metropolitan Toronto pointing out that urgently needed new hospital construction cannot proceed on the basis of the present grant? If so, what plans does the government have in mind for increasing the grant in order to assist metropolitan Toronto and relieve this critical hospital shortage?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

USE OF WORDS "AIR CANADA" ON NEW PLANES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Could the minister assure us that the words "Air Canada" will appear on the DC-9 aircraft which are to be built?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I cannot assure the hon. member as to the painting of the aircraft.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: Could I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? How is it that the Minister of Trade and Commerce nods his head?

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT AS TO COST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, a question was asked of the Minister of Transport regarding the T.C.A. maintenance base in Winnipeg. The minister stated he would look into the statement purportedly made by the president of T.C.A., Mr. McGregor, who is quoted in the Globe and Mail of last Saturday as follows:

> "If the Winnipeg base is worth that ($19,800,000) then Mr. Pearson is the man to decide," Mr. McGregor said. "I'm not pleased with any decision that has the effect of increasing T.C.A.'s costs."

I wonder if the minister has been able to get a statement from Mr. McGregor. I know that the government of Manitoba, which intends to bring a delegation to Ottawa about this matter, is very interested in getting all the facts. If that is the cost, I think the government of Manitoba is entitled to know on what these figures are based.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I was unable to hear the first part of the hon. member's statement because of some disturbance in the house. As to the latter part of his statement, I have no comment to make at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Transport heard my question earlier, and I would like to rephrase it slightly. Can he bring to the house an explanation about the difference between the figure used by Mr. McGregor of $19,800,000 for keeping the T.C.A. repair base at Winnipeg, and the figures used previously by the government on other occasions? Can he do that shortly, or does he suggest that we wait until Mr. McGregor appears before the appropriate committee, at which time he will certainly be subjected to long and intensive questioning?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite clear as to the difference in figures to which the hon. member refers. It is not possible for me to say what a committee will or will not do, but I would expect that in the normal case the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines would be before the committee in a few days, and it seems to me that this question might be more appropriately dealt with at that time.

TRADE

OATS AND BARLEY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EXPORT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce; possibly he will not be able to answer it now but would rather take it as notice. It has to do with the export possibilities respecting oats and barley. There was a statement made the other day, as the minister knows, by one of the commissioners of the wheat board to the effect that the situation in so far as these two farm commodities are concerned is not favourable for export. Would the minister be prepared to make a general statement in this connection so that the farmers affected in all parts of our country will have the views of the minister in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I am happy that the right hon. gentleman values my views so much.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does he intend to make a statement at this session of parliament regarding the government's intention concerning the two-price system for wheat?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to make any such statement.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Are we to take it from this that the government has dropped this as an integral part of its program?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. I answered the question the hon. gentleman asked me, and I said it was not my intention to make a statement at the present time.

WHEAT—AMOUNT RECEIVED BY BOARD FROM SALE TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Considering that in last week's sale to Russia the figure of approximately 500 million was mentioned, was that the price received by the Canadian wheat board in that series of wheat transactions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that was an approximation. As I recall, it was the price to be paid by the Soviet union for the wheat on board ship in Canadian ports.

Mr. Langlois: As a supplementary question, that was the price paid by Russia, but was that the price received by the Canadian wheat board?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is a very technical question. I see no urgency in it, but if the hon. gentleman would like an answer in detail I think he should put the question on the order paper.

FISHERIES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—OPPORTUNITY TO MAKE REPRESENTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Fisheries, and it has to do with the upcoming federal-provincial fisheries conference which will be held in a month or two. I understand that the fisheries council of Canada, that is the operators, have been invited to make representations to this conference. My question is, will the minister request the labour and co-operative groups of the industry to make similar representations?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): To my knowledge no official invitation to the fisheries council of Canada to express its views at the forthcoming fisheries conference, which will be held here during the week of January 20, 1964, was extended. However, when inquiring about this possibility they were informed that they would be permitted to present their views on the opening day of the conference. Similar information was given verbally, on October 29, to the fishermen's and allied workers union of British Columbia, and a similar reply is being forwarded to the Ontario council of commercial fisheries, which wrote recently asking if they could be allowed to present their views.

I wish to make it clear that any labour or co-operative group interested in the fishing industry which will express its wish to give its views to the conference will be afforded a similar opportunity.

REDISTRIBUTION

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN HOUSE MEMBERSHIP BEFORE COMMISSION ESTABLISHED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Could he inform the house whether the government intends to introduce, during this session, legislation to amend the British North America Act in order to increase the number of federal members, and that, even before the proposed commission now under consideration has made a start?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I notice the question of the possible amendment of section 59 of the British North America Act, for the purpose the hon. gentleman suggests, has been discussed a great deal in the press. The government at the present time has no intention of making any such recommendation; but as I indicated yesterday in the debate on the subject of redistribution, this is a matter about which members of the house will probably wish to make representations, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did. I am sure the most careful consideration will be given by the whole house and by the government to any such representations.

WORLD FAIR

INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE AND TUNNEL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Could he tell the house if the federal government intends to pay part of the building costs for a second combined bridge-tunnel which would connect both shores of the St. Lawrence river, and cut through Ile Verte? That project, conceived in view of the world fair, has been announced by the minister of municipal affairs of the province of Quebec.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this plan has been conceived by the world fair authorities, but the federal government has not received, as yet, any plans or specifications.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR RED DEER RESPECTING POSTMASTER GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I wonder whether his attention has been drawn to a news dispatch of the Edmonton Journal of late last week which states as follows:

National Social Credit leader Robert Thompson has charged that Canada's Postmaster General was lying to parliament, comparing the action with the John Profumo affair.

This article is referring to certain discussions that took place in this house. I am asking, Mr. Speaker, whether the attention of the Postmaster General has been drawn to this very serious charge.

[Translation]

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the article in question. I shall read it and, if need be, take whatever steps are necessary.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR OFFICE OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed, from Tuesday, November 26, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the office of representation commissioner and to define the duties of the commissioner under the said measure, in addition to those assigned to him under the Canada Elections Act and under a measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith; to provide for the salary and expenses of the commissioner; to provide for the appointment of a substitute commissioner and for the payment of his salary and expenses; to authorize the commissioner to appoint such officers and employees as are necessary for the conduct of his office and to engage on a temporary basis persons having technical or specialized knowledge of matters relating to the work of the commissioner; to increase the salary of the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada and to effect certain other changes in the Canada Elections Act consequential upon the said measure; and to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund under the authority of the said measure of all amounts required for the payment of salary and other expenses under the said measure and under the measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions, including expenses of administration thereunder.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is reported on page 5131 of Hansard as saying the following during the debate on this resolution, yesterday afternoon:

[Text]

My hon. friend from Villeneuve is interjecting. I happened to notice his name in one of these Hansard volumes, when he was here before as the hon. member for Pontiac, and I find that on one occasion he too voted against redistribution by an independent commission.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I wish to set the record straight. I have before me the official report of the debates of the House of Commons for February 24, 1947, and on page 697 I find the amendment introduced at that time by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I quote:

This bill be not now read a second time but it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the readjustment of the representation in the House of Commons should be referred to an independent commission to be appointed for that purpose.

As reported on the next page, I stated then:

As for the amendment of the hon. member who spoke before me (Mr. Knowles), I grant him the right to his own views. Once again I repeat that I do not, in the least, fear the manner in which the government, or the committee which is to be appointed, will proceed to the redistribution of electoral constituencies.

However, the hon. members whose constituencies will be affected should be invited to state their case. I imagine the committee will invite all those concerned, those hon. members to come and see how that committee works, how redistribution is done in their respective constituencies.

This is what was going on in 1947. Well, the vote was taken on February 24—page 737—and contrary to what he was saying yesterday afternoon, my name does not appear among the hon. members who voted. I did not vote either for or against it, but I took position anyway in regard to the way the government was behaving then.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, very briefly on this question of privilege may I apologize to the hon. member for making a statement yesterday which technically was inaccurate. He interrupted when I was speaking, as hon. members will recall, and from memory I recalled the debate in 1947. I should not have said that he voted against my amendment because, as he has now pointed out, he did not vote at all on the amendment. What was in my mind was that the members of his party had voted against it and that he, by the remarks he had made, had in effect spoken against my proposal for an independent commission. I apologize to him. If I had said he had spoken against it, rather than that he voted against it, I would not have been in error.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to traverse what has been said by hon. members who have participated in this debate prior to this afternoon. We have heard members of very long experience in this house, particularly the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, speak on this matter. I put myself in the category of rather approaching middling years in this house, and I think all hon. members will agree that, regardless of the length of time they have served in the house, as one goes along in years of service here he forms a greater admiration for our parliamentary system. With all its imperfections, one develops a greater and greater affection and respect for this house, notwithstanding some of the things that may be said elsewhere, many times without too much knowledge.

Be that as it may, Mr. Chairman, we do face a problem as regards redistribution. I will not go into the details of that problem, as to the differentiation between an urban voter and a rural voter, the great disparities between some electoral divisions, some protected by a statutory floor provided in the constitution as against those rather large and, as I believe the hon. member for Carleton is wont to use the term, suburban constituencies that keep growing and growing and growing. I represent such a constituency, and many times people have said to me, "How is it that it requires five, six or seven persons to equal the representation given to a much smaller riding in the eastern provinces?" This includes the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and of course those in the maritimes, which it is understood are covered by a statutory floor. We do have these rather grave disparities.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition made reference yesterday to a certain province where he thought the population of two cities, unidentified by him, represented half the population of that province, and yet they had less than a quarter of the seats in the provincial house. This happens to be the province of Alberta, and I know that in so far as the cities of Edmonton and Calgary are concerned, it is very clear that they are very much under-represented in the provincial house. I would be interested to know just what proportion hon. members of the Social Credit party think would be the proper balance as between urban and rural voters.

However, one thing does puzzle me, and that is the nature of the resolution that is before us. I have seen some omnibus resolutions in the past, but this must come close to being the champion of them all. I do not know how many bills the Secretary of State intends to bring forward in connection with this resolution, but it does speak of at least two measures, and therefore I assume there will be at least two bills. If I read correctly his remarks of yesterday in concluding his speech, the Secretary of State did refer to "bills".

Redistribution Commission

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could clear this up and save the time of the hon. gentleman and the committee. There is one bill that depends on this resolution. That bill will provide not only for the payment of the representation commissioner but also for the expenses of any boundary commissions or commission which may be set up. That will all be done, and there is a department or agency for this purpose. There is another bill, of which there is notice on the order paper which, because the expenditures are all being made in connection with the first bill, I was advised did not require a resolution. They were the two bills I referred to; but there is only the one bill depending on this resolution. That bill also makes one or two consequential amendments under the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Lambert: I am grateful to the Secretary of State for clearing up that point, but I am wondering about the wording. Let us go to the nature of the resolution. The first portion says:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the office of representation commissioner and to define the duties of the commissioner under the said measure—

That is clear, and I think it is the main purport of this resolution. Then there are consequential provisions to provide for the payment of salaries for the commissioners and those persons whom they require to assist them. That too is quite clear. It says:

—and to define the duties of the commissioner under the said measure, in addition to those assigned to him—that is the representation commissioner—

—under the Canada Elections Act—

Now, that must mean under the Canada Elections Act as amended, because I have perused the Canada Elections Act and I must say, subject to correction by someone better informed than I, that the words "representation commissioner" do not appear in that act. I think there is a little looseness in wordage here which will have to be cleared up in due course; perhaps the Secretary of State will make note of these matters for his explanations in due course, so that they may be coherent and in sequence. Then, third, it continues:

—and under a measure to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—

That is all relating to the representation commission. The next few lines of the resolution are all consequential and are quite clear; but when I come to the seventh last line I find some difficulty in understanding. Although we are dealing with a measure concerning a representation commission and what is to follow therefrom, we have a completely extraneous thought introduced, namely:

—to increase the salary of the chief electoral officer of Canada—

—and now we come to an amendment of the Canada Elections Act—

—and to effect certain other changes in the Canada Elections Act consequential upon the said measure—

I ask, what measure? There have been two measures before us already, so therefore I think we need some technical explanation and clarification.

I have perused the remarks of the Secretary of State made yesterday afternoon, but I think that before this committee is asked to adopt the present resolution the appropriate changes in the Canada Elections Act should be indicated. Otherwise I put it to the Secretary of State that he is asking us to buy a grab bag—

Mr. Pickersgill: Might I just ask the hon. member a question. He was a former presiding officer of the house and, if I recollect some of his rulings he ruled that the adoption of a resolution only gave the government permission to introduce a bill, and did not approve a bill. I suggest that all this resolution is asking for is this: It is saying that it is expedient to introduce a measure on which this house would exercise its judgment when it saw precisely what it was going to exercise its judgment upon. If that is not a correct interpretation of this resolution perhaps the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Lambert: So far as the argument the Secretary of State now wishes to make in the form of a question is concerned, namely that he is asking the committee to approve a resolution referring to certain changes to a certain act, I think we should be taken into the confidence of the Secretary of State in the matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would love to. I thought I had done that in the remarks I made yesterday.

Mr. Lambert: I do not believe that is so, and I think we should have this information. But be that as it may, so far as the resolution is concerned. I will be interested to see just how the bills are drafted and what they will provide.

Let us now turn to the main portion or purpose of this resolution, which is the question of the representation commissioner and the commissions. The Secretary of State did indicate that there were alternatives which had been opened, and I think he was very fair, almost beguilingly fair, in his approach to the whole problem which is before us, namely whether there should be one commission, four commissions, or ten commissions. He indicated that if there were one commission of unspecified number it would take until 1968 before the report of that commission could be formulated and acted upon, and an election held in consequence. I should like to know the reasons which led to the decision or conclusion that it would take five years before that commission could sit, make its report, have it adopted and the electoral machinery put into operation as a consequence of the changes made.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman appreciates that that was not my view. I was merely giving the view of the chief electoral officer.

Mr. Lambert: Perhaps the Secretary of State has been taken into the confidence of the chief electoral officer and given those reasons. Personally I have some reservation about ten commissions. Notwithstanding the fact that there is a formula for the representation commissioner of Canada to be an ex officio member of each of the provincial commissions, I would think that there would be the likelihood of a difference in interpretation of the criteria or extenuating circumstances permitting the commission to deviate from the norm. It is for that reason that I feel it is quite important that we have consistency in this regard; I think we should and must have it.

Let us assume for argument's sake that they are permitted to depart from the quota to the extent of 25 per cent. In one province they may interpret that as being 23 per cent, but in another province only 18 per cent, because it is permissive up to 25 per cent, and they would try to be as far away from the 25 per cent in certain cases as possible. I am wondering whether among the factors which will be considered by the proposed representation commissions there will be such contingencies as those which apply in Australia—the community or diversity of interest, means of communication, physical features, existing constituency boundaries and provincial electoral boundaries, etc. These are all matters which must be considered. Then there are historical boundaries, which must also be taken into account.

I have yet to be persuaded by the Secretary of State that ten commissions would be preferable to one. If it is felt that one commission would take too long in reaching its decision, why not appoint a larger commission which could be subdivided into committees dealing with specific areas? All those concerned could then work together to produce a final report. I feel this would be preferable to having ten independent commissions related through the person of the representation commissioner. We all feel, perhaps, in the shadow of the excellence of the person who may be designated to fill this post but, being mortal, he cannot be with us forever and his successors may not be as acceptable in their qualifications.

If the government does intend to proceed on the basis of ten provincial commissions, I should like to know with some precision who the persons to be appointed are going to be—not necessarily by name, because it might be invidious or even impossible to include the names in the legislation. But, let us say we have first of all the chief justice of the province. Then someone suggested the president of the university. But some provinces, like Ontario, do not have a state university, neither does Quebec. One might appoint the clerk of the elected assembly. In Australia—and I am subject to correction here—there is a state legislative official who usually sits. So I offer that as a suggestion—that the clerks of the legislative assemblies be included. Such persons as these could be identified by the offices they hold. They are not identified by name. This would dispose of the criticism which could easily be levelled against a formula which provided that one member should be named by the Prime Minister, one by the Leader of the Opposition and a third by agreement—and if there should not be agreement, then by the governor in council. We know this would be likened to packing the court, because there would never be agreement; it would not be in the interest of the government of the day to accept any suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition. This is why I would prefer to see a completely independent commission.

I would rather see one commission composed of as many judicial officers as possible, because we must wish to remove partisan political bias from this area. If we say we cannot remove political bias from such a body as I have suggested we are accepting the proposition that our judges are politically biased; and I do not think anybody would "buy" that as a general proposition. So I would like to see a judicial commission composed as far as possible of judges, from different parts of the country, named by the government and by the opposition. It would have to sit once in ten years; it might have to sit for a couple of years while its members were, in addition, carrying out their other duties. Let us not say it would be wrong to do this, bearing in mind the number of judges we have and the practice followed by both this and previous administrations of taking judges away from their normal function. Possibly I am prejudiced, being a lawyer, but I think these men are eminently qualified to carry out these special duties.

A suggestion was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or by the member from Fraser Valley that the number of members of parliament might be increased. I cannot, myself, accept that suggestion as a way out. I do not think it is necessary to increase the number of members of parliament. To think in these terms implies, I would suggest, a misconception of the role of a member of parliament. I know there is some difference of opinion about this, and I do not intend to enter upon a philosophical discussion at this time, but I believe the prime duty of a member of parliament is to be a legislator, not necessarily an ombudsman for his constituents. True, that in part may have become his function, but let us go back to the fundamental reason for the existence of this chamber and of parliament. Members are here for the purpose of granting and withholding supply and of enacting legislation. They are legislators, first. As I have indicated, I do not believe we should try to deal with the disparity in the size of constituencies by increasing the number of members—not in this country, with a population of 19 million. We know that in the British house there are 600 odd members representing a population of some 50 million. The French national assembly has 500 odd members for a population of roughly the same size.

Mr. Knowles: Ours are not odd, except the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Lambert: Well, I will make it "500 plus".

There is one final question I would put to the Secretary of State. Would there be provision for an appeal from a decision of the commissioners within a province before a report was made to parliament? Somehow, I think there should be an intermediate step. I feel that if a certain proportion of the members from a province were so minded, if they believed a wrong principle had been applied or that some grave injustice was being done, they should have access to some means of appeal before the matter came to parliament for final determination. I put this forward as a suggestion for consideration. It may be there are more minuses to it than pluses, but I do think it would be better if provision were made for such a review within a province, rather than before parliament where the membership from a province might be lost in the ensemble of the far greater number gathered in this house.

I have referred to a number of questions which bear upon the subject and, in closing, I would only say that I shall be most interested to see the bills and the provisions they contain. Again, I would address a word of caution to the Secretary of State. I know it is not necessary to disclose in a resolution all the details of the legislation to be contained in the bill which is to follow but, in these circumstances, to ask the committee to accept certain unspecified changes is, surely, asking a great deal. If I am asked to vote for a resolution which includes the words "to effect certain other changes in the Canadian Elections Act" I am obviously at a disadvantage because I do not know what is meant by those words.

He may have a little clause at the end saying that this act is hereby repealed and re-enacted. There are a few other things that could be very dangerous, and if he has failed to disclose them and if we have failed to question him about them I do not think we should accept the resolution in principle until he does so. I hope the hon. gentleman will make these disclosures to the house, because I think we could then look upon the resolution with a little more equanimity than we can at the present time.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member for Edmonton West permit a question? My question relates to the interesting observations he made about the problems connected with increasing the size of the house. I think we all appreciate those observations and accept the fact that there is a problem. However, has the hon. member any suggestion to make as to how we might cope with the situation that would develop if some provinces were called upon to lose seats, not having the protection of a senatorial floor that other provinces have? I ask this question in the same good faith in which he made his observations. Does he have any suggestion to make to cope with this problem?

Mr. Lambert: I agree that this does present a sort of public relations problem but, be that as it may, is there an accepted principle of a vested interest by a province in a specified number of members in the house? We know the historical reasons—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is evident the hon. gentleman comes from Alberta and not from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lambert: That may be, and maybe it is a little easier to be on the side of the haves than the have nots. But we know that certain of the Atlantic provinces have statutory floors. This was a condition of admission into confederation.

Mr. Knowles: We also have a floor, but it is no help to us.

Mr. Lambert: I realize that Manitoba can go down to six and no fewer. But does it mean any more to say that, instead of reducing the number on this hand we will increase the number proportionately on the other hand? Proportionately one would have to increase the numbers in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and perhaps in other provinces. Therefore I do not think there is any great difference between a province having 12 members and being reduced to six and its remaining at 12 members while others are increased to 24. Any way you look at it the others still have double the number of members. Why go through all that change to get ourselves into other problems and complexities? I crave the indulgence of the house for having developed arguments more than answering questions, but I have put forward these arguments in support of the principle I enunciated.

The Chairman: The hon. member for York-Scarborough.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, without my taking the time of the hon. member for York-Scarborough I wonder whether he would permit me a few minutes to clear up one point. I am not going to attempt to reply to the hon. member for Edmonton West now. I think he made a very constructive speech. However, there is one point in the resolution itself that I thought I had explained yesterday, but on looking through Hansard hastily I find I did not. I think I perhaps explained it somewhere else to some of the hon. gentleman's friends. I was pretty frank yesterday about my own views, and I expressed my own view as to who would be the most suitable person to be the representation commissioner. I am glad to see that my views on this matter seem to have found an echo in all quarters of the house.

We know it is a very difficult task indeed that the chief electoral officer has in that office, and I believe that the feeling is shared on both sides of the house, perhaps in all quarters of the house, that it would be desirable to provide for a transitional period at least and maybe for something more than that when, after the appointment of a new chief electoral officer, the person to be made representation commissioner would have certain functions given to him under the Canada Elections Act of a perhaps somewhat supervisory and appellate character, which would not be envisaged to be of a continuing character necessarily over a long period, but which would provide for a transition.

It is for that reason that, in the proposed bill to set up the office of representation commissioner and to provide for the financing and the administrative machinery, as well as the hiring of the clerks and so on that would be required to assist the boundary commissioners in carrying out their functions, it is suggested that certain consequential amendments should be made to the Canada Elections Act giving the proposed representation commissioner certain functions under the Canada Elections Act, redefining the functions of the chief electoral officer and providing for a salary for each of these officers. The salary, of course, has always been provided by statute and has never been left to the governor in council, for the same reason that judges' salaries are fixed by statute, so that the governor in council, even by the fixing of the salary, could not be said to be seeking to interfere with their complete independence. That is the sum and substance of the reasons why these amendments to the Canada Elections Act are included within the scope of the bill it is proposed to introduce, once this resolution has been passed.

As for the drafting of the resolution, the hon. gentleman is a lawyer and I am only a layman and I do not pretend for one minute that I drafted it. It was drafted by the law officers who are far more competent than I am. If I as a layman were going to draft it I would put "will have been" and tenses of that sort in it. I think it could be drafted even better in French than in English, because there is more precision in the use of French verbs than in our sloppy way of doing things.

To my own knowledge, and I am sure to the knowledge of the hon. member for Edmonton West, the draftsmen have drafted a great many resolutions and I am sure they have taken these matters into account, but I will bring his observations on grammar, syntax and style to the attention of the draftsmen and if any changes should be made we will seek to make them. But I did want to clear up this one point of fact as much as I could, because the house is entitled to know about it and I am seeking to be completely frank.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to delay the committee very long, in view of what I consider to be the extreme urgency of this legislation. There seems to be general acceptance of the principle of redistribution, and the fact that we should have an independent commission do the job. There also seems to be general acceptance of the statement by the Secretary of State that the whole house has a responsibility to get on with the job, and I did not perceive any contrary views in listening to the lead-off speakers for the parties on the other side of the house. I am sure this unanimity will not always exist when we are considering the specifics of the legislation, but if we are determined to proceed to get the job done I am sure we can work out an acceptable, fair and equitable solution to the whole problem.

It seems to me that we must face up to the fact that the house no longer reflects the make-up of our nation through its elected representatives. The shift in population from rural to urban, which has accelerated very rapidly in recent years, has resulted in very serious inequities in representation in the house. These inequities are well known, and it is not my intention to dwell upon them at length. However, it might be useful to make a few comparisons by way of example of what really has happened since 1952. I am going to compare the rural and urban situations, rather than getting into other complicated factors such as constitutional guarantees and so on. In fact, I intend to stick within my own province of Ontario to indicate how the situation has got quite out of hand.

The constituency of Grey-Bruce has a population of approximately 36,000 people, and they elect one member to this house. On the other hand, the constituency of York-Scarborough, which I have the honour to represent, had a population according to the 1961 census of 267,000 people. Now, this is a ratio of one to seven. Surely, the first consideration of responsible government is representation by population. I am equally certain, Mr. Chairman, that a man with the capabilities of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce is capable of looking after twice as many people. I am sure, for that reason, we will probably not hear very much objection from him.

When I was coming into the chamber, someone told me that there was a total of 280,000 farmers in the whole of western Canada. The population of my constituency has increased since 1961 and I now have more people than the total number of farmers in western Canada. I hasten to add that I realize I am comparing nuts and bolts, or something to that effect, and I do not expect my remarks to be taken too seriously.

Mr. Fane: Nobody will.

Mr. Moreau: Much has been made in the debate so far about the difficulties of campaigning in large rural or sparsely populated ridings. I can assure hon. members that the difficulties of organizing a campaign in a riding like York-Scarborough, which in the last election had 643 polls, are equally great. I can assure hon. members also that the difficulties of serving such a populous riding after being elected are literally impossible.

The Leader of the Opposition indicated yesterday that he favoured a one third tolerance from the average representation per constituency, and he went on to point out the difficulty of communicating with constituents in a very large riding. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, the difficulties envisaged at the time of confederation in connection with this question have been dissipated by the improved channels of communication and methods of travel. However, I think we have to recognize the special situation of those far northern constituencies such as Churchill, Saguenay and so on. Mr. Castonguay has reported to us that in Australia they make a 20 per cent tolerance work very well indeed, in spite of the fact that the differences in population density in that country are similar to our own, where the development is largely a ribbon development along the sea coast, with vast stretches in the interior that are sparsely populated. The situation in Canada, therefore, is not so different from that in Australia.

In spite of the fact that I represent an urban riding not too far from Ottawa, I find that because of parliamentary duties, the hours of sitting and so on, my constituents must, for the most part, communicate with me by mail. Indeed, a great number of them have complained already that I am never available in my riding. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that since the members must be in Ottawa in any case, and since mail and telephone services are not very different in most constituencies, whether they be rural or urban—with the exception of the northern ridings—we have virtually the same problems. Our constituents really must communicate with us for the most part by mail. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the members of the committee should consider seriously the adoption of the 20 per cent formula.

I suggest we could make special provisions for those constituencies outlined in schedule III of the elections act. For the benefit of those members who are not familiar with this schedule, I would indicate that in the province of Ontario we would have the constituencies of Cochrane, Kenora-Rainy River and Port Arthur. In the province of Quebec, we would have the constituencies of Chapleau and Saguenay. In the province of Newfoundland we would have the constituencies of Bonavista-Twillingate, Burin-Burgeo, Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, Humber-St. George and Trinity-Conception. In Manitoba, we would have the constituency of Churchill. In the province of Saskatchewan, we would have the constituencies of Mackenzie, Meadow Lake and Prince Albert. In the province of Alberta, we would have the constituencies of Athabasca, Jasper-Edson and Peace River. In the province of British Columbia, we would have the constituencies of Caribou and Skeena. The Northwest Territories and the Yukon, of couse, would be treated quite differently. The special provision might take the form of a formula in which the land area could be included along with a minimum population in determining the boundaries of these constituencies. Perhaps this would dispel a great many of the fears the members from those constituencies might have about the difficulty of representing these large ridings. Perhaps we could include the minister from Bonavista-Twillingate amongst those.

Mr. Winkler: You are not going to wipe that one out, too, are you?

Mr. Moreau: I am trying to dispel his fears.

Mr. Pickersgill: You could not wipe that out.

Mr. Moreau: Another factor that should be considered by the commissioners is that of growth. I suggest that the suburban ridings that are experiencing a very rapid growth should contain the minimum population requirement under whatever tolerance is accepted. Some members might ask, who is to determine which are the most rapidly growing suburban ridings? I suggest we could use, at least initially, as a measure the increase in voters between 1962 and 1963 elections. In my riding of York-Scarborough, for instance, we had an increase of over 10,000 voters in that eight month period. Certainly, since the 1961 census the population has risen from 267,000, and by now it must be past the 300,000 mark.

During the debate yesterday, Mr. Chairman, there was some discussion as to whether we should have one or ten commissions to do the job of redistribution. The hon. member for Edmonton West indicated that perhaps we could modify this somewhat and set up subcommissions of a national commission. Whatever mechanism we use, Mr. Chairman, I suggest the commission should be made up of representatives of the province, whether it be a commission or a subcommission. The hon. member for Edmonton West also indicated problems of communities with diverse interests, the importance of communications, to boundaries of provincial ridings, and so on. I would think that commissioners from a province would be in the best position to assess these factors as they applied to local conditions, and then I think they could more intelligently recommend the riding boundaries that we should have.

It is my opinion that the job could then be done very much more quickly, as the Secretary of State has indicated. Certainly, I can assure hon. members that the people in my constituency are clamouring for a change in our riding boundaries.

Mr. Knowles: What kind of a change?

Mr. Moreau: I would hope that a change in the riding boundaries would be as far as they would go. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also indicated that there has been a measure of education in the various parties with regard to redistribution being done by an independent commission.

He went on to say that for the first time the Liberals, when in power, have committed themselves to this principle. I would like to remind him that it was a Liberal government in Manitoba which accepted this principle. I happened to be living there at the time and took part in the debate that went on during that period. It was a Liberal government that initiated the present system, about which the hon. member was so complimentary last night.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit me to say I am glad he has drawn attention to that fact, and I confirm what he said. However I am sure he realizes that in what I said last night I was referring to the federal Liberals.

Mr. Moreau: I appreciate that. The hon. member for Lapointe wanted us to write in some sort of constitutional guaranteee for the province of Quebec. I find this approach quite repulsive. I do not see how we could write in a constitutional guarantee for a province as large as Quebec when we cannot predict what changes will come about in the distribution of population in this country. I think the other provinces would immediately clamour for similar guarantees, and in effect we would be freezing the present provincial representation in this house.

As a foundation for his argument he indicated the fair treatment the English minority receives in Quebec in other matters, including provincial redistribution, but I want to indicate to him that the French minorities in other parts of the country receive pretty fair treatment by and large, and I can indicate the treatment I received in Toronto with the 22,000 vote majority the electors saw fit to give me.

In conclusion may I say how pleased I am that we are getting on with this most important job. On behalf of my constituents I wish to say how grateful they are that the government initiated the preparation of maps and population statistics immediately upon assuming office, which documents will be considered by the commissioners after the commissions are formed. The Manitoba experience indicated that the compilation of base maps and statistics took about a year before the Manitoba commission was able to operate effectively. I cannot help but feel optimistic, seeing the general agreement in the house and knowing the preparatory work has virtually been completed, that we can have redistribution before another election.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, the discussion to date has been conducted on a very high plane. We all seem to be tending towards an impartial commission, but I think all of us are trying to make sure it is impartial in our favour. It is the old story of us all being equal but some being more equal than others; and I get the feeling from the discussion we have had that we want to make sure we are all dealt with equally, and that the coming redistribution does not end up with some being more equal than others.

It is very difficult to assess the expediency of adopting this resolution without having before us fairly complete particulars of the electoral boundary commission proposals. Actually we are discussing the resolution for a representation commissioner, and it has been agreed we can discuss in general the question of redistribution. I think that the really basic part of redistribution will be found when we eventually come to it in the bill which is in the name of the Secretary of State, providing for the establishment of electoral boundary commissions.

Some of us have wondered why the Secretary of State put this bill on the order paper as a bill for first reading, when normally it would be required by resolution. He has explained to us that in the bill he intends to introduce there will be no provision for payment of public expenses and therefore it will not be a money bill. But we are involved in two difficulties. The first is that we are discussing a resolution on one bill which will depend upon another for its final implementation. We are going to have two statutes. If we pass the resolution we are now concerned with, and do not pass the electoral boundaries commission bill in the same form in which the government presents it, then this may cause some very considerable difficulties.

What the Secretary of State said about redistribution was more significant for what it left out than what it included. It included the title of a bill, and I suggest that if he had introduced the bill on electoral boundaries commissions by resolution it would have more particulars in it as to what we were considering, and we would not be dealing merely with the title of a bill and its general intentions. I think we are working under considerable difficulties, and the Secretary of State was not very clear in setting out the criteria under which the electoral boundaries commissions would act when they are set up.

However, we have to decide what is before us, and that is whether or not it is expedient to adopt a resolution to appoint a representation commissioner, and to bring in a bill in general terms along the lines of that resolution.

We have first to consider what are the real fundamentals in redistribution, and number one among these is the basis on which seats are to be added or altered. We ought to know the population and geographic content which is to be used in setting up each riding. We ought to know how many people, on an average, are to be included in a riding, and the percentage by which the commission will be authorized to deviate. That is basic to this type of bill and it has not been given to us yet. We are left in considerable doubt about the real fundamentals on which the government intends to redistribute the electoral seats.

The second thing we have to be sure of is that the job will be done in an objective and non-partisan way. I think that the intended nomination of the chief electoral officer as representation commissioner will be accepted by everyone in the house, but under present circumstances he will merely be a co-ordinating person and not the person by whom final decision is made. Therefore at this moment we do not have any assurance of equal, objective and non-partisan redistribution below the level of the one person who is well known to this house.

Third, we need some assurance that redistribution will be carried out equally in all provinces. This is one of the shortcomings of the proposal for 10 commissions because, unless the criteria are set down very carefully, each of the commissions could very well be operating on a different basis. Representation in the House of Commons is not a provincial matter. The number of seats in each province is set down in the British North America Act. The manner in which representation shall be made from each province is not. We believe we should have equal representation across Canada. It might very well be that in one province greater stress will be laid on urban ridings and less on rural, and in another province completely different criteria will be used.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I think we should be told before we pass the resolution—and I do not believe we have been told—whether it is really the intention of the government to increase the number of seats. I was under the impression that the number of seats could not be increased without an amendment to the British North America Act or a special statute of the parliament of Canada, but I find that section 52 of the British North America Act permits the number of members in this house to be increased by parliament, provided the proportionate representation of the provinces is not disturbed. Therefore we need no formal act or amendment to the British North America Act to increase the number of seats; it could very easily be done right in the statute we are considering, or in the other one concerning the electoral boundaries commission. I think we ought to know which of these alternatives is in the mind of the government before we pass the resolution. I say that the Secretary of State has touched very little on these four matters.

I think we should be told the population average that is to be accepted, and the percentage of deviation. Figures of 20 per cent, one third, 25 per cent, and so forth, have been mentioned. These are not just figures taken out of the air. Each percentage of deviation allowed under the act will affect a great many members, and 5 per cent can make the difference as to whether a riding is to be altered or left. I think geographical limits should also be discussed; how large or how small a riding should be in connection with its geographical location. Also, I think we should know what level of tolerance will be permitted between urban and rural ridings. We do know that in general members in rural ridings represent fewer constituents. The hon. member for York-Scarborough is a classic example of what happens in an urban riding at the moment.

We should know what is in the mind of the government in connection with these questions. Other matters are also important. There is the matter of main roads and connecting roads. It has been suggested that the surveyor general and the dominion bureau of statistics could provide a great deal of information on this matter, and this is perfectly acceptable. But we cannot just draw lines on a map and redivide these constituencies. It is not too satisfactory at the moment in many ridings. The centre of gravity of the riding may be a good many miles from the northernmost or southernmost limits of the riding, and yet in another riding the centre of gravity may be much closer. I think communications are important. Radio and television are becoming more important than they used to be. I personally have no television station directly in my riding; I have to use one near the north end of the riding and one at the south end. I am not asking for any change in this regard because I think the riding which I represent is sufficiently large and well populated to be left alone.

This brings me to another point. I would like the Secretary of State to tell us, if he will, whether, if a riding comes within the rules or the criteria of population and deviation, it will be left alone. In other words, if it is between minimum and maximum within the rules set down, will that riding be left alone in name and geographic boundaries? Or even if it comes within the limitations that are set down, will there be fiddling around with the outside boundaries of the riding? I think we should know this, because while some of the most serious problems concern the elimination of ridings by absorption into adjacent ridings, there is also quite a serious problem in regard to adding to or subtracting from ridings which at the present time are perfectly satisfactory, having regard to all the criteria that could be set down.

In connection with the commissioners, I agree to some extent with the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West that perhaps we cannot name the individuals who will be commissioners under the legislation, but I think we should provide in the bill that they be named by resolution of the house. If we do not choose to name people in the bill that we pass, if we merely set out the type of persons they should be, and if the Secretary of State and the government want to keep this matter, in fact as well as in theory, a non-partisan and impartial commission or commissions, the persons appointed should be named in the house, either in the bill or by a supplementary resolution. I think only by doing this can we say there will be an impartial naming of these people, and it will not merely be a case of the government appointing people who they are quite satisfied will follow the general lines the government desires to be followed. I believe these people should be named.

Arising out of this, Mr. Chairman, it must follow that I do not agree with there being ten separate commissions. I agree that we should have a strong central body, a strong central commission, made up of a commissioner and people such as the surveyor general, an official from the dominion bureau of statistics and judicial persons. These people would make up a satisfactory central body and I think that in order to keep equal representation across the nation this primary function should be carried out by simply one body. If in each province it is desired to have people working on this problem and making representations to the central body, I would have no objection; I think that is necessary. But I think there should be a central body which would make the final decision in connection with the whole question of distribution. The provincial people should not be asked to form an independent commission.

This is one of the things we are worried about. We will have ten independent commissions and will not know who is going to be on them. If you are to have this number of people, 30 commissioners, you will have diversity of opinion, diversity in the application of rules and you will have great no trouble in agreeing that the present chief difficulty in obtaining people who are acceptable to the house in general. We would have electoral officer should be the representation commissioner. We would probably have no difficulty in agreeing on five, six or seven other people to form this commission. But if you are going to have 30 people and are taking them from different places across the provinces, I think there will be feeling that it is not going to be impartial, it is not going to be fair and—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would let me ask him a question?

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman think it would be acceptable to the people of Ontario or to the members from Ontario if this commission of six or seven which he envisages included nobody from Ontario?

Mr. Aiken: Well, I would agree with that. If we have seven people acceptable, I do not think it matters whether or not they come from Ontario.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was not the question. I did not ask for his personal opinion; I asked the hon. member if that would be acceptable generally across Ontario.

Mr. Aiken: I see no reason why it would not be. The province of Ontario, and I say this with some pride, I feel leads the nation. I think the attitude taken by the Hon. John Robarts, premier of Ontario, in connection with the dominion-provincial conference is a very good example of what Ontario is prepared to do to bring about uniformity in Canada. I believe he sets that up very well in his approach to the present conference. He says that we must have a formula which is acceptable. He knows that Ontario must be the main provider of taxation revenue, and we in Ontario are prepared to accept that and are prepared to accept the fact that our taxes will be distributed among other provinces in greater need. That has been very well set forth, and I would say for myself—I cannot say it for anyone else—that if there were a commission of seven people set up and not one of its members came from Ontario we would be satisfied, so long as they were suitable people.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): What about Newfoundland?

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. Aiken: I do not think we need worry about Newfoundland. Newfoundland will be well looked after.

I should now like to make one reference to the statement of the Secretary of State, as reported at page 5113 of Hansard, where he was discussing the question of who is to be appointed to these commissions. I was hoping that he would have been rather specific about it and would have said who the government had in mind. Perhaps he will later on before the bill is passed. The hon. gentleman said:

> It seems to me these are the kind of people one would naturally look to.

He had just described them.

> Of course, this is a problem with which we will deal when we get farther along.

I should like to ask whether he means farther along in the bill or farther along in the procedure.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought that since there is a procedure suggested in the bill, of which I have given notice, it would have been preferable to deal with that when the bill comes before us. But I do not mind telling the hon. gentleman, if he would like the answer now, what is said in the bill. I know sometimes there is a technical point taken about not disclosing what is in bills to follow; but what is suggested in the bill—and the government is open to alternative suggestions—is that the boundary commissioners in all the provinces, apart from the representation commissioner who would be appointed by a resolution of this house, would be appointed, on the joint recommendation of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, by the Speaker of the House of Commons. In the event of their failure to agree the Speaker would have to resolve the difference.

However, we are open to any other method which can be found which is impartial and acceptable, and in this regard I was quite intrigued with what the hon. member for Edmonton West suggested, namely specifying not the individuals but the category of persons. My own idea is that the Manitoba commission was a model commission, composed of the chief justice, the president of the university and the chief electoral officer of the province. That is the kind of membership I would envisage for each of these commissions: a judge, a person learned in these matters, and a person experienced in the way the chief electoral officer is. And it has worked in Manitoba, and that is the only case we have experience about in Canada.

Mr. Aiken: I thank the Secretary of State for his explanation. He did point up the objection made by the hon. member for Edmonton West, that you are going to provide agreement, but that in the alternative the government wins.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman must have misunderstood me. I said the Speaker of the House of Commons would resolve the difference. The one thing I will not recommend to this house is that any decision on this matter be made by the governor in council; I think that would be entirely wrong, and I want to make that very clear. That would be taking redistribution away from the house and putting it in the hands of the cabinet, and I do not want to see that done. I want to be absolutely sure that both sides of the house have an equal voice. And I mean an equal voice—no preference, no matter who is the government. Because otherwise I do not think the public would be satisfied that the matter is being handled fairly. That is the point. With regard to the actual mechanics of it, we had to make some suggestion, until some alternative is found. After all, the Speaker, when we elected him, was elected to be an impartial person, and that was why he was suggested. If it was the chief justice of Canada I would be equally well satisfied. But it would have to be somebody like that.

Mr. Aiken: Then I think that answers the point I was making, because our concern is that if there was the provision that in the event of disagreement the governor in council would make the appointment, that would in effect mean that if there was no agreement the government would make the appointment.

Mr. Pickersgill: That will not happen.

Mr. Aiken: As we go along and prod the Secretary of State a little about those matters which concern us, I think we may get round to the point where we feel this resolution is worthy of adoption.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I prod the hon. gentleman a little, and perhaps the whole committee, and suggest that if we adopt the resolution and see the two bills a lot of these questions would be answered by the hon. gentlemen themselves, instead of my having to get up and give previews of little corners of the bills. I would rather have all of the bills seen; but I am in the hands of the committee.

Mr. Aiken: I just want to say that we are hopeful that if the bill contains some very bad principles the government will change it before it is brought in.

Mr. Pickersgill: Or after. They can be changed at any stage.

Mr. Pigeon: But we like your voice.

[Translation]

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some remarks concerning this resolution, which deals with the position of commissioner and the readjustment of the representation in the house.

First of all, I must say that I strongly favour the establishment of an independent commission. I believe that the house must endeavour to find a solution to the satisfaction of all parties in the house.

It is necessary that the representation be changed because we find today abnormalities, situations which are no longer normal.

For instance, we see that there are members who represent constituencies 10, 15 and even 20 times more populous than others. I am of the opinion that every voter in the country has a right to be adequately represented.

We know that it is a difficult situation and that it needs to be corrected. We should then apply ourselves to find the most equitable solution for every Canadian voter because the house must reflect the true image of the Canadian people.

I fully agree with the principles put forward up to now to the effect that it is essential to find an appropriate solution in the near future. To this end, we should set up ten commissions which would look into the problem of every province. In this way, we could effect an adequate redistribution sooner, in order that the country may be duly represented in the house.

In my opinion, the formula used in Australia, with a 20 per cent tolerance between the most and the least populated ridings, should perhaps be applied here in Canada, in order to have more adequate representation in the house.

A most interesting point was raised, that is whether we should increase the membership of this house. Personally, I do not think so because I cannot see what useful purpose it would serve. It is hard enough as it is to deal with the estimates and bills with the number of members there is now that, in my view, to increase it would greatly reduce the efficiency of the house.

I am convinced that it would be in the national interest to have just about the same representation after redistribution.

After studying the resolution, I notice that it does not mention a detail which, while not of capital importance, has nevertheless some value.

A few months ago, I raised in the house the point that the names of some ridings are often inadequate. It is very difficult for the Speaker of the house, as well as for the distinguished members of the press, to easily identify hon. members. I have in mind, for instance, the ridings of Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere, Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—

Mr. Pigeon: It is a very good name.

Mr. Chretien: —Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie, etc. In my opinion, the terms of reference we will give this commission should include power to change names and impose certain restrictions concerning the names of new ridings, because it is much easier to remember names like Hull, Longueuil, etc.

In my opinion, the commission should find names easier to memorize, and this would make the business of the house more efficient.

I therefore suggest that in addition to these terms of reference, the commission be asked to give short and simple names to the constituencies after having drawn their boundary lines, in order to simplify the business of the house and the work of the members of the press gallery.

Mr. Fisher: I have had so many opportunities in the last few parliaments to speak on this subject that I have no intention of entering upon any general review now. I wish to concentrate on one element only of the redistribution problem, mostly to the exclusion of the others. This is the problem which arises in relation to area as well as to population. It is one which leads me to want to put on record some statistics.

It would be foolish to suggest amendments to an act which one has not seen, but I think it might be possible for us to consider some adjustments or amendments to any formula, such as a 20 per cent formula, so as to allow for those ridings which have huge areas and a scattered population. I think I can best make my point by putting on record the largest constituencies in area in Canada, giving their population according to the 1956 figures. We have a total of 37 constituencies in Canada which have an area greater than 10,000 square miles. If we stop to think about it, that is a relatively small proportion of the 265 constituencies represented here. Only 37, as I say, have areas greater than 10,000 square miles. To approach the question in another way, only eight constituencies have areas greater than 100,000 square miles. Most members who have a constituency of 10,000 square miles in area think it is big. But as I have said there are eight constituencies in Canada which have an area greater than 100,000 square miles.

An hon. Member: Name them.

[Mr. Chretien.]

Mr. Fisher: I will put the list on record.

Largest Canadian Constituencies in Area, with 1956 Population

| Constituency | Area in Sq. Miles | Population |
|---|---|---|
| Mackenzie River | 527,490 | 12,492 |
| Saguenay | 374,950 | 56,655 |
| Yukon | 207,076 | 12,190 |
| Churchill | 170,827 | 48,999 |
| Port Arthur | 148,482 | 78,111 |
| Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador | 125,710 | 71,416 |
| Skeena | 125,641 | 56,664 |
| Cariboo | 120,544 | 60,464 |
| Meadow Lake | 96,327 | 37,840 |
| Chapleau | 83,640 | 65,456 |
| Peace River | 81,900 | 69,725 |
| Cochrane | 70,585 | 42,720 |
| Athabasca | 62,000 | 56,611 |
| Kenora-Rainy River | 52,308 | 67,356 |

Those are the 14 constituencies having areas greater than 50,000 square miles. I might say that the population of Saguenay, which the hon. member sitting over there represents, has been growing relatively quickly because of mineral developments in that region. Churchill is another of these large constituencies which has been growing fairly quickly. In considering the population figures, it should be remembered that the two ridings up in the north namely, Mackenzie River and Yukon, are special cases. They do not lie within provincial boundaries and that is one of the main reasons why they have representation here despite their small population.

One of the interesting things to note is that almost all these constituencies, with the exception of Meadow Lake, are of the hinterland variety. They are not rural constituencies in the sense that they have a farm basis. Their population growth has been comparable in almost every way to the national average, if not greater than the national average—certainly, in the case of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador it has been greater—and it has been based on forestry or mining, developments which do not lead to an even population spread. There is a spotty effect—small nodules of people within these large areas. It is my contention that it is most difficult to represent ridings of this kind, particularly when they have large populations, on any basis comparable to that which applies in the case of smaller constituencies. If we take Canada's estimated population at the time of the last census in 1961—it was 18,238,000—and divide that figure by 247, which is the divisor one uses in determining the population quotient after taking away the population of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and the Northwest Territories, we reach a figure somewhere between 66,000 and 69,000—I give that figure loosely.

I should like to call attention to the grave disadvantages of representing these immensely large constituencies. For example, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador now has a constituency whose population is well over the 80,000 mark. In other words, it is above the norm, and yet he is saddled with this fantastic area. Not only that, it is an area that is separated by a considerable body of water, and while I will not say that the communications system in all this population scatter is primitive, it is certainly expensive, and many of these communities are so far apart that they have no community or affinity of interest.

I should like to suggest that right in the Canada Elections Act at the present time there is recognition of the special difficulties with ridings of this kind. That recognition is found in the fact that nomination day in these ridings is held at a different time than in the normal ridings in Canada. I should like to make a plea to the house that it consider some means of compensating and making adjustments with regard to area. I have gone into this matter very fully with the chief electoral officer, Mr. Castonguay, for whom I have a tremendous admiration. To my mind he is the most articulate civil servant I have ever encountered. I do not know whether he is in French, but certainly in English he is not only the most articulate but, with regard to the statutes and regulations that he administers, he is about the best informed man I have encountered in the federal civil service.

I have had difficulty in my discussions with Mr. Castonguay in getting him to express any interests in or enthusiasm for a recognition of the area problem. I think this is partly because he recognizes, almost in the way the Minister of Finance does with regard to taxation, that once you make any exceptions you open up all kinds of problems. But I think in this particular case some kind of exception should be considered. I know it may be unfair of me to interpret conversation with Mr. Castonguay, but I mean no unfairness and I think I am being accurate. Mr. Castonguay is willing to concede that it might be possible to make some adjustment in the formula that would make some compensation, but nevertheless he cannot quite see it.

Other people have suggested that one of the ways to do this is not to make any concession with regard to area but to give some extra consideration to members of parliament who represent such areas in terms of expense arrangements, travel arrangements or something like that. I would feel that would be the most invidious of all advantages that might be given. I think we are almost faced with the conundrum that confronts school teachers and boards of education. When you get into pay by merit you are into a morass and you need to set a standard. I do not think you can meet the problem of a constituency of huge area by giving some kind of special financial or transport consideration to the member. I think that the consideration has to come about by making some exception in the arrangement of the population figure for such areas. In other words, any time you have or are likely to have a constituency of more than 50,000 square miles I suggest that there should be some arrangement in the instructions to the commissioners whereby they will do their best to see that the population figure is kept down when you have any area over 50,000 square miles.

I can perhaps explain this best in terms of the riding of Port Arthur which I represent. In the southwest corner you have over half the population within a few square miles in the city of Port Arthur. The riding slices up to the Manitoba boundary and actually it has several polls that lie well north of the constituency of Kenora-Rainy River. In the eastern part there are a number of polls with a considerable native population that are 350 to 400 miles from the main population centre and lie much closer to the sphere of influence of Cochrane or Algoma West or even Timiskaming and Timmins.

It seems to me that the special problem of the large riding is not one that is likely to be approached in any spirit of partisanship. From talking to members such as the hon. member for Churchill, the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador and the hon. member for Skeena I know that the difficulties we have in representing these huge areas with scattered population are worrisome to us in terms of the kind of job we can do. I have heard the hon. member for Yukon suggest in the house the great difficulties in looking after his huge riding, but his riding only has a population of a little over 12,000. Lord knows, it is bad enough when these 12,000 are scattered over 207,000 square miles and I agree that, comparatively speaking, there should be special consideration in creating a constituency there, despite all that area and the small population; but what about the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador whose riding has a population of over 80,000? In other words, his riding has a population roughly six times that of the riding of the hon. member for Yukon. His riding has over half the area of the Yukon and it has even more discontinuity in terms of transport arrangements.

I am not going to crystallize any suggestion I make into a definite proposal, but I should like to suggest to hon. members that when the bills are before us relating to this matter they be prepared to give sympathetic consideration to some adjustment to try to take care of this situation that I would say affects at least 10 and maybe 15 or 20 ridings in the country. It was always easy for me to be sympathetic to the hon. member for York-Scarborough in the last few years, knowing the huge population problem there, and this sympathy, of course, becomes especially strong at election time. But I put it to the hon. member that the main thing we should be concerned about is not so much election time but servicing, looking after and understanding the interests of the people of one's riding. These interests are not only in terms of people but are a physical thing. I suggest that the physical problems in looking after a riding of over 100,000 square miles, with a population of over 50,000, are even more difficult than the physical problems in looking after one of the very large city ridings.

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware that I proposed a formula this afternoon which would take into account land area for those ridings mentioned in schedule III of the Canada Elections Act?

Mr. Fisher: I did not hear it. I meant to listen but I was called out. I appreciate that that suggestion was made. I missed it but I will certainly look at it. This is one area that needs serious consideration. One of the things that bothers me about the kind of consideration you get is that I think there will be impatience among many members to whom this kind of thing does not matter, because they are not involved with this type of constituency. I put it to the Secretary of State that he knows how ineffective members from such constituencies have been in trying to make their arguments to the C.B.C. in order to get television and radio service in many cases.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, on that particular point I might say that the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador has done exceedingly well. He is getting radio service almost immediately at Wabush and Labrador city but I admit it has taken him about three years to do it. I am sure he will be glad of the advertisement.

Mr. Fisher: The Secretary of State is probably conscious of the question I have on the order paper in relation to this very matter. On this particular point, I should like to show the Secretary of State a few letters I have had from people in the Wabush area that do not express quite so much satisfaction in regard to this particular matter. They have pointed out they have been clamouring for three or four years now, and I just raised the question in order to support the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador because this is a problem we all have.

Mr. Pickersgill: But the decision has already been made.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, but they still have not got television service. What are you going to do about that? The minister may take a great deal of comfort from the radio coverage—

Mr. Pickersgill: May I answer that? The hon. gentleman has succeeded in doing what no one else has succeeded in doing in this debate, and he has got under my skin. What I intend to do about that is to say publicly —I do not know that the C.B.C. agrees with me and I am sure that a lot of private television people do not—that we should have single coverage all over Canada before we worry about alternate service.

Mr. Fisher: This example is a good one. In so far as getting under the minister's skin is concerned, I may say I was talking today to a gentleman who was forced to observe the proceedings of the house yesterday. He said, "When you arrived back in town, did you smell the incense burning, the perfume, and as you came to your seat did you hear the sweet tinkling of bells?" He said that yesterday was one of the sweetest, stickiest and stinkiest days he had ever seen in the House of Commons. I gather that partisanship just disappeared and pleasantries reigned.

Well, I come back to my point. When you represent this kind of constituency, which is a relatively small portion of the total number of constituencies, when these constituencies are scattered all along the northern fringe of Canada, when they do not have powerful means of communication in terms of newspapers, television stations or the kind of pressure groups that count, it is very difficult to develop the kind of sympathy and understanding that you often need from governments and from bureaucrats. I want to make the point that it is extremely difficult—I have made it too often now—to represent a constituency that runs to this particular size.

Now, there were one or two smaller points that I wanted to mention. I wonder if the Secretary of State or any members of the cabinet, have talked at all with New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, the three provinces protected by the senate floor, and which are going to be protected by the senate floor, in order to get their views on the relationship of the number of seats they hold as a right from confederation, as against the intention that has been mooted that there will be an increase in the number of seats. There is a double-edged problem in this particular matter. It seems very unfair if we are talking about—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman to put his question again very carefully because I am not sure I got the purport of it properly?

Mr. Fisher: At the present time, New Brunswick—

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand the situation; it is the question I did not get.

Mr. Fisher: If we increase the number of seats, obviously those provinces are not going to get any of the increase. They are set; they are protected with the floor underneath them; but their relative influence, of course, is going to diminish. I would not expect that they would quarrel about this, but I suggest that they might have made some kind of criticism.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, what is the antecedent of "they"? Is the hon. gentleman suggesting the proposition that we should consult with provincial governments about the redistribution of membership in this house? I think that is a novel proposition, and I had never thought of embarking upon it. I do not think we should.

Mr. Fisher: It is not that novel. It has been made in almost every debate on redistribution. I feel that the Senate floor is based upon the promises given these provinces when they came in. Let us be realistic about this. The minister knows that Prince Edward Island looks upon this as an article of confederation.

Now, has Prince Edward Island, for example, made any protests or has the government sounded them out as to what their views would be? I am thinking here, not of the government alone but also such people as the Solicitor General. This is one point. The second point relates to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to answer, if the hon. gentleman would permit me. Without regard to party, I think Prince Edward Island is very ably represented in this house, and I think the people who are elected to this house to represent Prince Edward Island are perfectly capable of speaking for Prince Edward Island on this subject. I would not think of consulting anyone else but those people about Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Fisher: I am very pleased to have that assurance from the hon. gentleman. Now, let us look at this from the other point of view. As long as we have this floor, the whole relationship will be thrown out of context or thrown out of balance. Given this marvellous representation from Prince Edward Island, has the minister had any discussion with his colleagues from those places that have a floor to the effect that, instead of increasing the number of seats in the parliament of Canada, some approach be made to those particular provinces that are over-represented on the basis of population, from the point of view of accepting a voluntary reduction in their representation?

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest the hon. member should put that question to the hon. members for Queens.

Mr. Fisher: I am just shocked that the minister is really converting this debate into a wide open, irresponsible discussion upon a measure introduced by him and by the government. Whether the minister will acknowledge it or not, and I do not suppose he will because he knows it is a rather touchy subject, this is an important consideration in this whole matter. There has been a lot of talk about the comparison of York-Scarborough, with 200,000 people with Prince Edward Island which has less than 100,000, and yet has four seats. This is part of the anomaly of representation by population.

One of the things that is quite apparent, when you look at the rules for sharing seats amongst the provinces, is that you now have some subtracted from the 265 and you are down to 247 before you get your divisors. I imagine that very soon, judging by the relationship of the population of Nova Scotia to the rest of the country, this is going to drop even further, perhaps down to 237. Then, the divisor throws things away out of kilter. As a matter of fact, if the extremes of population movement to certain portions continues, it is quite conceivable that we will be having "rep. by pop." for about three provinces, and all the rest will be protected by some kind of floor.

I am not advocating here that we do away with the floor, but I want to know what thinking the government has done on this problem as a means of getting out of increasing the number of seats. Every hon. member in this house knows that increasing the number of seats will let us off the hook. But it really does not do much in terms of getting better representation for the people in the country; and it really does not do much about meeting the fact that the old rules, including the Senate floor, are making a monkey out of "rep. by pop." I think it is just something the government might have considered because, like many other hon. members, I am not an enthusiast for seeing the membership in this house increased. I tend to agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West on that. It may well give some advantage in getting a quorum in the house, or in some of the committees of the house, but that is about the only advantage I can see in it. I hope, having said that, I am not undercutting my argument—

Mr. Pickersgill: I was just going to point out the hon. gentleman is pretty illogical. He argued for a low population in Port Arthur and a high population in Prince Edward Island. As the sponsor of this legislation I want to make it very clear I am not in favour of interfering with the senatorial floor which protects the maritime provinces. I think my suggestion that I am not in favour of it, that I am in favour of maintaining the constitution in that respect, is a responsible position, although I was accused by the hon. gentleman of irresponsibility.

Mr. Fisher: I am glad to know that the minister is prepared to accept this kind of responsibility. He is probably aware I was pretty sure he could not or would not do anything other than what he has just done. But not enough people in this country who will will be considering the problem know about the Senate floor. Most of them are unaware of what it does to the beautiful logic of the representation by population argument.

The increase in the number of members in this house will again not compensate relatively for these areas that have the Senate floor. I do not think we should complain about the Senate floor very seriously, but I wish everybody would recognize that unless we plan at some future time to make some kind of adjustment to it, that will be satisfactory to those areas that are supported by it, we will get greater and greater discrepancies as shifts take place in the population of Canada.

There was one other point I wanted to touch on in relation to the commission, and how it would plan to operate. I have always felt that judges, despite their great reputation for fairness and impartiality, are not always the people with the best backgrounds to bring to this kind of problem. I would take it from what the minister said in his opening remarks that the technical assistance in terms of population, mapping, and that kind of thing, will be available to the commissioners, particularly to the chief commissioner, but that assistance will not really find representation in the person of anyone.

I have always felt that a geographer or demographer should find some representation on the national commission, and when I say representation I mean as a person. I would like to ask the minister whether this was considered at all, or whether it was felt that the chief commissioner would embody in himself all that kind of knowledge and expertise. I do not know whether he is in a position to give me an answer at the present time, or whether he wishes to, but I would like to know if this matter was considered.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think this could be better considered when we have the bills before us.

Mr. Fisher: One other thing I would like to mention in connection with the commission is the fact that in the major provinces there is such a difference, in the stretch say, from northwestern Ontario down to the Ottawa valley, particularly in terms of any intimacy of knowledge; so that I do not feel you can really make a great thing out of the argument the minister put forward, that to have a single commission for a province would allow this type of thing. I do not know how you are going to get representation on a commission in Ontario that is really knowledgeable in the sense of understanding the traditions of a riding, something about its population, its economy and its transport hookups, and one might even say the social-political watersheds of various areas in a province that size. That is why the argument the minister used, to take away the idea of a commission to represent the three prairie provinces, seemed to me somewhat insubstantial. I think that the argument I am applying to Ontario is the one he applied to the prairie provinces.

I think if the situation exists in Ontario, where we will have a commission that really is not that informed in any intimate way about the province, then the same thing could apply quite easily to the prairie provinces.

There is another point which may be irrelevant but, in view of all the commissions we are creating, are we going to be able to staff them properly? We have not heard from our friends in the corner about whether the French speaking interest is going to be protected, but I assume they will speak on it. And are we going to be able to get such population representation in a hurry? It is for that reason, while I agree with my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre that we accept and support the idea of a multitude of commissions, I still have a tendency to feel we could probably do with three or four rather than with 10.

I have enjoyed the opportunity of speaking on this topic, which is so familiar. One of the things about its familiarity is that it is balanced with the complexities, so that one tends to forget more than one learned last year. One might say it is a wonderful bag of tricks, and a cave of exploration for almost any hon. member in the house. I am sure, from the non-partisan way in which the minister introduced this, that the response he will get in the house will be a very generous one, and I know other hon. members probably look at it the same way I do—looking forward to days and days of discussion here, while we give him all the suggestions in that spirit of harmony with which he kicked off the debate.

Mr. Bell: I wonder if I could just interject a brief comment. It could be assumed, from what the hon. member for Port Arthur has said, that we from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are not interested in this subject, because we have not taken the opportunity to say something. I know the hon. member for Queens is planning to speak on this resolution, and I may say we look very seriously on this matter of the senatorial floor. For my own part I would say if any change were made that would reduce the effect of the protection of the senatorial floor, we would protest this and would want to know what is the quid pro quo.

We might settle for a couple more senators or something like that, but we are going to have our say on this, and I think the hon. member for Port Arthur has brought up a matter that is very serious and about which we will have something to say. We have considered it and the fact that we are actually silent today is because we are waiting to make our thoughts known later in the discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I notice the hon. member for Sherbrooke is rising, but I wonder will he permit me to make a suggestion before he speaks. I believe someone else in the corner also wishes to speak, and the hon. member for Carleton. I wonder, would there be any chance, if they spoke very briefly, that we might conclude at six o'clock. It will not be possible to come back to this measure until next week, and I think it would help us all if we could see the two bills.

We cannot do that until the resolution is adopted, and the resolution only commits us to the expediency of going on to the next stage. It would give us and the public a chance to study these bills which, as I indicated earlier, are going to be amendable; the government is not insisting on anything in them except impartiality. If we could have them open to the public gaze until next Monday and then have our debates on them seriatim as bills, I think it would help us all in the house. This is just a suggestion I am making. I am not seeking to shut hon. gentlemen off; but if they could make their observations briefly and we could at six o'clock give first reading to the two bills, they would then be available for study.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, the measure of agreement at a very high level with regard to what is proposed is very encouraging. We all agree that we want to see a much greater degree of equity in the basis of representation in this house and establish a procedure which will be perhaps effective for redistribution in the future. I think we all agree, also, that we should set the machinery in motion with the least possible delay, but making due allowance for the proper amount of time needed to undertake what is really a very fundamental change. The chief electoral officer said recently in the hearings before the committee that in his opinion there would not be any riding in Canada, save the two most northerly ridings, that would not be affected by the measure if carried out by an independent commission in Canada. This is a very fundamental change, and I feel that its full import will not be realized until such time as the report of the commission is before us.

I hope that the spirit of harmony that has been evident so far will also be in effect when the time comes for us to examine the report and we find that ridings have been eliminated, boundaries have been changed, new ridings have been brought into being and individual members in the house will have to adjust their conduct accordingly and choose places in which they will seek re-election. I submit it is well worth our time at this point to make sure that the proper rules are spelled out and the proper groundwork is laid so that the independent commissions which are set up will be able to operate.

Everyone has agreed that certain rules should be spelled out. One of the first rules to be spelled out is the question of the population base. I was particularly interested in the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who pointed out that at the time of confederation the average member represented 20,000 people, and at the time of the last redistribution the population of the average riding was something like 58,000 people. If we added 15 or 20 members to this house, that would give a basis of something like 68,000 people for 280 or 285 members. I think, as the hon. member for North Centre observed, there is something of a plateau in the number of persons in a riding which a member can properly serve. We also want to give as much protection as we can to the senatorial floor, to which reference has been made, and resolve the problem as best we can of Manitoba versus Saskatchewan, and equality of representation. To do this we have no alternative but increase the number of members in the house, and I think all of us will be in agreement with that proposition, after having examined this question.

I think once you have established a population base, the question of tolerance has to be looked at very carefully. Then there is the question of area to be considered, and the northern ridings. The hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned this matter when dealing with the suggestion of the hon. member for York-Scarborough that we consider these ridings under section 3 of the elections act as being ridings to which special consideration should be given. But this is not the rural-urban problem. This is a different problem. I represent a riding that up until recent years was an average rural riding. It is now a very large suburban riding, about the tenth largest in Canada, as far as I can determine.

In this particular kind of situation there is a very serious injustice in terms of the work loads of different members, and in spite of the best efforts of members of the house this situation continues to exist. I know, for example, that my hon. friend from Edmonton West represents a larger riding than I do, and I am sure his riding is ably represented, in a qualitative sense, in the house; but I am sure he would be one of the first to say that he could serve his people and the area better, were there a more equitable population base. I think a 10 per cent figure should be adequate in a tolerance, and certainly the experience of New Zealand suggests a 10 per cent figure. The Australian figure, according to the report of Mr. Castonguay, was 20 per cent. Although the commissions were allowed a 20 per cent tolerance, they in fact kept within a 10 per cent margin. The problem is not only what the tolerance should be; it is to anticipate the situations that are going to develop.

For example, if we redistribute on the basis of the 1961 census this would not be very equitable because my own riding has increased in population by almost 15 per cent since that time. The hon. member for York-Scarborough pointed out that in eight months over 10,000 new voters were added to his riding. This is going to continue. If we are to take the 1961 population base and allow a 33⅓ per cent tolerance, this will in effect mean that the largest riding could be twice the size of the smallest. The situation in regard to population growth continues to present a problem in this regard. On the basis of my riding, the riding of York-Scarborough or the riding of Edmonton West, we would have disparities at the time of the next redistribution every bit as bad as, if not worse than, the ones this house now faces.

This is not the kind of solution that can be spelled out clearly in rules. The electoral commission, when it comes to grips with the problem, will have to use a great deal of horse sense. We can give them a population base; we can say what tolerance shall apply, whether it be 10 per cent or 20 per cent—I think it should be no more than that—and we can say, "Please note the increase in voters as between the 1962 and 1963 elections", or give them the enumerations of any subsequent provincial election that may have been held; but when we spell out all the rules there will still be a great area in which discretion can be exercised by an independent commission. Even with the very best intentions, this commission will have to decide such things as some ridings at the present time representing minority groups. I would hope that an independent electoral commission would not quickly or lightly break up such ridings, because we know what the consequences would be if they did.

We know that certain ridings represent language distinctions and any electoral commission which attempted to redistribute mathematically without taking language boundaries into effect would be doing something that many of us would not like. For this reason I think the category of persons named to these independent commissions, much as I respect the judiciary, is restricted because of the limitation of time. I do not know many members of the bench who are not overworked, and seriously overworked, and when they are diverted to other functions as well, the administration of justice is thereby impaired to some degree. The fact remains that there are many people in different categories of public life who can contribute, and it is not easy always to spell them out individually or even by category. One person comes to my mind; he is a professor of sociology and worked for a number of years in the dominion bureau of statistics and on demographic studies. I think such a person is eminently qualified to serve on an independent commission. I am not concerned about the fact that we may not find people. The people can be found and they will, I am sure, be of the right independent calibre. I found it difficult to understand the reasoning of the hon. member for Port Arthur, who argued at one point that Ontario was so big that one commission could not do the job properly, and he suggested that if you put all the prairies together they would not be able to do the job properly either. The logic behind this argument is beyond my comprehension. I think at least we have to recognize the principle that within a province people are more competent in this matter, will know the province and its problems and are therefore much more likely to deal expeditiously and fairly with the problems of redistribution within the province than if we had one over-all, independent commission.

I personally strongly support the principle of setting up independent commissions for each province. The province of Ontario recently attempted a redistribution; they set up the machinery but then found the time of the members was limited. They had to come up with a stopgap arrangement before an election, which brought a rough measure of greater equity than prevailed previously. But no member who has worked on the job of provincial redistribution in the province of Ontario will tell us that there is a complete solution. The final report, which will be some time being handed down, will have to be studied. In a large province like Ontario or Quebec the job will be a difficult one and time consuming. But certainly any attempt to lump together the Quebec or Ontario problems and combine them with other provinces will in my opinion seriously delay the functions of any group trying to grapple with the problems of redistribution.

Following the statements of the house leader, Mr. Chairman, I will not say any more. I have just one observation to make in connection with my own riding. One of the problems in my riding is that of maps. New suburban areas which are rapidly growing up outside the established boundaries of the city of Ottawa simply do not have the facilities to give an adequate breakdown of polls. I suspect that this is a serious problem, one not to be underestimated, and the services of people from the surveyor general's branch, and so on, will be absolutely essential. But this is a technical problem which takes a little time to overcome.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, although I do not intend to speak at great length, it will not make much difference, since members of other parties have indicated that they wish to speak.

It has been mentioned this afternoon that the number of members should be reduced rather than increased. Since everybody agrees and everything has been said I shall only say a few words, in order not to delay the adoption of this resolution.

In my opinion, it is not essential to go into details at this stage, since the government is only giving notice of its intention to introduce a bill. We must make suggestions, as concisely as possible, about matters that might have been overlooked so that they will be included in the bill.

The suggestions made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) are worthwhile. He has looked fully into the problem and he referred to all the discussions held in the house on this matter since confederation. The same applies to the suggestions of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) who has studied this problem extensively. All those suggestions will be considered by the commission when it is established.

The main point is the setting up of this commission as soon as possible. In my opinion, what could delay its establishment is the fear that the selection of its members might be tainted with partisanship.

Such is the difficulty which the government will have to face because even if this commission were composed of judges, it must be remembered that all of them have been appointed by a political party and that it is very difficult for a man to forget his political ties.

In my opinion, there is another alternative concerning the composition of this commission. It would be to appoint people who are too young to have ever been involved in a political organization or to have come under the baleful influence of certain politicians in their circle, or else people too old, having already one foot in the grave, for whom political has no lure whatsoever. Then the grounds for the steps we would be taking would be nobler and would lead to more conclusive results.

I would be remiss if I did not mention that in the riding I represent—the most beautiful of all, needless to say, the riding of Sherbrooke—we also have our redistribution problems, but when this commission is established, the time will then be favourable to make appropriate suggestions in order to settle these small problems. Since 1867, these problems have to be discussed at regular intervals; they come under the purview of the Canadian constitution, which must be amended every time it is desired to increase the membership of the house. As a matter of fact, these problems always brought about harsh political partisanship, because the party that proposed the redistribution was immediately accused of trying to derive some advantages from it, while the previous party that had wanted to change the representation in the house was itself accused of trying to do it for its own benefit.

In my opinion, the best intention the govgovernment has shown is to want to relieve the house of this partisanship spirit which always inclined members of parliament to delay such legislation. Unanimity has been achieved—which is surprising, especially on the part of the opposition—and it has been agreed that we must keep partisanship out of this commission.

It was suggested to set up ten independent commissions that would look after the redistribution. That is a good suggestion but I think that the one made by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) is preferable, if you believe it is not enough to take the provinces into consideration in this redistribution, but that each area's cultural, territorial and linguistic aspirations must also be considered.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that by setting up five subcommissions to represent British Columbia and the surrounding area, the prairies, Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces, and possibly a sixth one for the Northwest Territories, we could study the problems intelligently, because we would then have within the committee or commission all the elements that might differ across the country, and I think everyone would be treated fairly.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there not a disposition on the part of the committee to let the resolution go through so that we could introduce the bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): No, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to say it is not feasible to meet with the request of the Secretary of State at the moment. There are still a number of people who wish to speak.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the resolution rather than on the bills?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That is right.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the house leader whether he can let us know what will be coming on Friday. We are looking forward with great expectation to hearing the minister of external affairs tomorrow, but what is happening on Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: I expect, as the hon. gentleman suggests, that tomorrow will be entirely taken up with external affairs, but there will be some other minister available if hon. members should run out of speeches before the end of the day. On Friday, it is proposed, if it is the wish of the house, to abstract the estimates of the Department of External Affairs from the committee of supply and refer them to the committee on external affairs. The first item of business after the orders of the day would then be interim supply, and the government would be asking for one month's supply. If the federal-provincial conference is still going on I shall ask the indulgence of the house to present the interim supply measure on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Finance.

When that has been completed we will take the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and we would have other departments available—the Department of Public Works would be the next one available, I think, up to five o'clock. At seven o'clock we would resume consideration of the estimates of the Department of Industry, where we left off last Friday.

Mr. Smallwood: How about agriculture?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is hoped the estimates of that department will be available next week.

Mr. Smallwood: How about the post office?

Mr. Pickersgill: That will come in its turn.

Mr. Churchill: Can we be absolutely sure that at seven o'clock on Friday we shall be considering the estimates of the Department of Industry and the other items under that ministry?

Mr. Pickersgill: As nearly sure as, in this vale of tears, any assurance can be given. If the minister drops dead, say, or if some dire calamity of that sort should occur, the arrangements might have to be changed. But as far as I can foresee now, I give that assurance.

Mr. Knowles: If that happens you will be to blame.

It being four minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ALLEGED CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS RESPECTING QUEBEC SUBMISSION

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the rights of all hon. members in the house to get the truth in answers given by members of the cabinet.

To a question put to him yesterday by the leader of the official opposition, the Acting Prime Minister gave this reply, as reported on page 5156 of Hansard, left hand column:

If hon. members will allow me, I will do my best to answer it. In the next place I should like to say that there is nothing either in the statement made by the premier of the province of Quebec or in the statement I listened to this morning that is in the nature of an ultimatum.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on May 27, 1963, I put a question to the Minister of Justice and Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Chevrier) and here is what he replied as shown in Hansard, at page 282.

Mr. Speaker, I duly received the press releases the hon. member sent me. I even heard the Quebec premier, Mr. Lesage, on television, when he stated that he considered as an ultimatum the claims or proposals of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, on May 27, 1963, the Minister of Justice admitted that the Quebec proposals were in the nature of an ultimatum and yesterday, November 27, as shown in Hansard, the Minister of Justice stated that there was no ultimatum.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, and this is my point of privilege, that the members of this house are entitled to get the whole truth and not answers where facts are concealed; and members of the cabinet have no right to shirk their responsibilities as the Minister of Justice tried to do yesterday.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday dealt with the federal-provincial conference now under way.

I remember very well the press releases that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) sent me, as well as the answer I gave him, but in my opinion this release is several months old, while the question of the hon. member concerned only what happened yesterday and immediately before. I am in a position to say that there was no question of an ultimatum.

As a matter of fact, my attention is called to the fact that this was confirmed by the premier of Quebec himself.

Mr. Gregoire: Does the Minister of Justice mean that the premier of Quebec changed his mind?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING LOTTERIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Acting Prime Minister?

Could he tell the house whether the idea of establishing lotteries has been rejected once and for all this morning at the federal-provincial conference or whether it is still possible that the matter will be further considered during this conference?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to provide an answer such as my hon. friend is asking. The matter has not been settled one way or the other.

The purpose of this meeting was to hear the representations made by the attorneys general of the various provinces, and this has been done. A frank discussion was held and in due course, I intend to report on it to the government.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Will the matter of lotteries be discussed again before the end of the conference?

Mr. Chevrier: Such a decision rests with the provincial premiers. If they so desire, the federal government is willing to discuss the matter again.

[Later:]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I am addressing my question to the Minister of Justice. As it seems evident that no agreement will be reached with regard to provincial lotteries during the federal-provincial conference now taking place, can the Minister of Justice tell us whether he intends to introduce in the very near future a bill in the house tending to amend the Criminal Code so as to allow provincial lotteries, as promised by the Liberal party during the last election campaign?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the introductory remarks to the question, which certainly anticipate discussions which might take place during this federal-provincial conference, as well as those which took place this morning between the attorneys general of the provinces and the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Minister of Justice implied that I might jeopardize the progress of discussion at the federal-provincial conference. Yet, the Minister of Justice stated himself that there had been no agreement with regard to provincial lotteries, that the issue had been discussed, and that there was no chance of the matter being discussed again at the federal-provincial conference.

FEDERAL ATTITUDE TOWARD ALLEGED ULTIMATUM FROM QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister?

In view of the fact that the province of Quebec has a culture and a language which differ from those of the other provinces and that it has, consequently, different needs, can the minister assure us that the federal government will accept the legitimate requests of Quebec?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): The brief of the province of Quebec, which has been tabled, will be given careful consideration by the conference and the federal government, as will the briefs submitted by the other provinces.

Mr. Pigeon: Is it the intention of the federal government to capitulate to the requests of British Columbia, which are greater than those of Quebec?

Mr. Chevrier: I see that the hon. member must have consulted his chief, as yesterday the latter asked the same question about the province of Quebec.

[Mr. Valade.]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Can the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the federal-provincial conference will carry on with its work next week?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the matter rests with the provincial premiers and with the federal government, as they establish, from day to day, the procedure to be followed.

[Later:]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether the federal government has denied up to now the 25-25-100 formula of the Quebec premier, so that under the equalization system that province will have to be satisfied with some $30 million, a clearly insufficient amount considering its needs at the present time?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the formulas submitted by the province of Quebec and several other provinces are now being studied by the government.

AVAILABILITY OF SUBMISSIONS PRESENTED BY DELEGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask is this a private debate, or can any of us get in on it? From the nature of the discussion I thought we were on motions. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister a question. Yesterday he tabled the submissions which have been presented at the federal-provincial conference, and he said that copies would be made available. On inquiry at the sessional papers office I found there was only one copy, and that was out on loan. I have not been able to get an original copy to make other copies, and there is no copy available anywhere.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is quite right. The difficulty is that when I inquired yesterday after I returned to the conference there were only four copies, and the copy I tabled was one of those four. Therefore what is being done now by the secretariat is to ask the premiers for additional copies just as quickly as they can be obtained, and when they are they will be given to the members.

REPORTED EXCLUSION OF OUTSIDE PRESS PHOTOGRAPHERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I was about to reply to a question that had been put to me yesterday by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi in connection with the taking of pictures at the conference. The reply I wish to make is that press photographers were allowed into the conference room for nearly half an hour at the opening of the conference yesterday. Press photographers can, furthermore, take pictures of members of the federal and provincial delegations as they come into or leave the conference room. This, I am informed, as well as the taking of an official photograph by the national film board, accords with the practice which has been followed at previous federal-provincial conferences.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED EXISTENCE OF SPY RING WITHIN DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a position to confirm or deny the existence of a spy-ring within his department, as stated in an Ottawa newspaper, the South End News, yesterday?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the article in question and may give a reply tomorrow.

HOUSING

SASKATOON—DISQUALIFICATION WITH RESPECT TO WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Did the minister receive a telegram yesterday from the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Jones) regarding disqualification of about 60 houses in Saskatoon from the $500 winter construction bonus, unless by November 30 the owners comply with a sudden new instruction regarding fabrication on site, which completely contradicts earlier C.M.H.C. instructions? What action does the minister propose to take in regard to this matter, which will seriously affect the operations of the building companies involved because they cannot comply with this new regulation?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, without accepting some of the implications in the hon. member's statement, I would like to say I have been in touch with the hon. member for Saskatoon and sent him a wire earlier today which I think will satisfy that hon. gentleman, who is a well known and popular member of the house and who we are all sorry is unable to be here today.

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. The deadline was November 10, for applications to December 1 for completing the floor basements and floor joists. I think the regulations should be looked into if the minister is going to make this plan work this year. Would he take that into consideration?

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. gentleman to restate his question.

Mr. Clancy: The tender form I received from the department stated that all applications had to be in by November 10, 1963. Another clause stated that if certain work was completed after December 1, 1963, it would not be considered. Would the minister look into the regulations?

Mr. Garland: I want to be helpful, Mr. Speaker, but I think all I can say at this moment is that I will look into the hon. member's question.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROTEST AGAINST ABANDONMENT OF HUMBOLDT-MELFORT LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister been informed of the strong protest by the municipalities and boards of trade of territories which will be affected by the abandonment of a C.N.R. grain line between Humboldt and Melfort, because without doubt this will affect the agricultural industry in that area. I would like to register my personal protest against the abandonment of this very important grain line.

MASTER AGENCY PLAN—CLOSING OF STATIONS IN EDMONTON AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with regard to the master agency plan being enforced on the people in the Edmonton area by the C.N.R. officials. Is it correct that the stations in the affected area will be closed permanently as soon as the C.N.R. officials have met with the sessional committee of members of parliament, as already announced by one railway official?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the statements made by the hon. member, but I will look into the subject matter raised in his statements and if there is anything in them I will give an answer.

MINES, FORESTS AND WATERS

LACK OF QUORUM AT MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

A meeting of the mines, forests and waters committee was duly called for 3.30 yesterday afternoon. Around half past three or a quarter to four I went there with the hon. members for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Asselin) and Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). We were twelve members whereas the quorum is only ten.

Since there was only one item on the agenda, that is the invitation extended to the Quebec and Ontario ministers of natural resources to come and express their views on the ownership of the islands situated in Hudson bay and James bay, two Liberals, namely the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George and the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe left—

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What is the question of privilege?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is a rule of the house, surely, that matters which are referred to a committee should be settled in the committee and not dragged into the proceedings of this house while the committee is still sitting and has not made a report. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that matters of this kind should be dealt with in the committee, according to the rules of this house.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member for Lapointe please state his question of privilege quickly. If it concerns the proceedings of a committee, such matters should be settled within the committee. What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the Secretary of State it is not a question of the content of the discussion in the committee, but rather that two Liberal members walked out, thus destroying the quorum that was already there and preventing the committee holding a meeting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I submit that this is a matter for the committee, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and not for the house. I also suggest that the committee should look after its own affairs in regard to matters which have been referred to it by the house.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question of privilege, please?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, here is exactly the point of privilege; the committee does not sit because the Liberal members do not attend its meetings and do not want to examine the questions put before them. And when a member takes the time to go to the committee—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the point taken by the Secretary of State is well founded. It has been decided in this house many times that matters affecting the conduct of a committee must be decided within the committee and not brought to the attention of the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because the committee does not sit—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have decided the questions. There is no question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I appeal against your ruling.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. gentleman knows the rules as well as I do.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I appeal against your ruling.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair from which the hon.

member for Lapointe has appealed. Those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the ruling sustained on division.

TRADE

OATS AND BARLEY—STATEMENT ON EXPORT POSITION, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question about oats and barley. First of all he referred to a statement which he alleged had been made by one of the commissioners of the wheat board to the effect that the situation as far as these two farm commodities are concerned is not favourable for export.

I inquired into the statement which the Leader of the Opposition alleged had been made in this regard, and I could find nothing to support the right hon. gentleman's assertion. The statement which was made by Mr. Robertson on this question was as follows:

> In the case of oats and barley, it is unlikely producers will be able to market as much as they wish of these two grains but it is reasonable to expect delivery opportunities comparable to those of recent years.

I should like to go on to say something about the position of oats and barley, since this was the subject of the second part of the question asked by the right hon. gentleman. As all hon. members know, there was a magnificent harvest in western Canada this year, and the wheat board expects that between exports and domestic consumption the whole of the wheat crop will be disposed of within the present crop year. There has also been a very large crop of oats and barley. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, in recent years, indeed ever since we have been growing oats and barley, a high percentage of these grains has been marketed or consumed domestically and a relatively small quantity, particularly in the case of oats, has been exported. This will continue to be the situation in the present year.

I should like to add this, however, and I know the right hon. gentleman will welcome this news. There has been a substantial improvement in exports of oats and barley from Canada this year. In the case of oats, exports have been more than doubled, and in the case of barley they are three times as high as they were a year ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just give us the figures.

Mr. Sharp: Well, the figure last year, for the period up to November 20 was, in the case of oats, 1,900,000 bushels. This year it is 4,400,000. Last year for barley it was 2,900,000; this year it is 8,600,000. I think hon. members will agree that this represents a very substantial increase in exports. There has also been a substantial increase in shipments of oats and barley out of country elevators to eastern Canada and out of the lakehead. I make this point particularly because there have been a number of suggestions made in the house that the movement of oats and barley to eastern Canada has not been substantial.

Perhaps I might put these figures on the record, too. From the opening of this crop season, shipments of oats out of the lakehead have been 17.8 million bushels compared with 13.7 a year ago. In the case of barley, shipments amounted to 23.8 million bushels compared with 14.4 million a year ago. Notwithstanding this substantial and welcome improvement in the movement of oats and barley both domestically and for export, it is inevitable that, with such a large crop as the commissioner of the wheat board mentioned, delivery opportunities will be limited but will be at least comparable with those of recent years.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would not have risen on a question of privilege had it not been for the gratuitous insertion into the debate of unnecessary figures. Now I want to read what was said:

> A Canadian wheat board commissioner says western farmers will not be able to sell much oats or barley this crop year, but growers would be able to sell "as much wheat as they wish to".

It was on the basis of that statement that I asked the question. The hon. gentleman has pointed out the amount of exports—

Mr. Sharp: That was the right hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —so far as oats and barley are concerned. I did not interrupt while the hon. gentleman placed his information before the house, and I ask for the same courtesy. Mention was made of the fact that this year up until November 20 exports had been 8,600,000 bushels. I would point out that in 1962-63 the total exports of barley and barley products were 42,900,000 bushels while the previous year it was 15,400,000. So that every statement I made was in accordance with the facts.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: I should just like to make two points. I answered the question asked by the right hon. gentleman yesterday when he said that some commissioner of the wheat board had suggested that there had been a drop in exports of oats and barley. That is not so, and the right hon. gentleman has still not proved it. The second point is that I gave the figures in answer to the question of the right hon. gentleman, and I would not have given them had he not asked for them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want the house to have the facts; that is the reason I made the addendum.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING COLUMBIA RIVER TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on October 30 I moved a motion for the production of papers concerning correspondence between certain ministers of the crown and other persons in Canada with respect to the Columbia river treaty. I want to ask that fountain of all information, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when those papers will be produced, because there are a great many people who are curious about those letters.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall seek to satisfy the curiosity of the hon. gentleman as quickly as possible.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

HAINES ROAD—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING MAINTENANCE DURING WINTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and his parliamentary secretary, may I ask the acting minister of northern affairs whether negotiations have yet been completed between the government of Canada and the government of the United States with respect to the all-weather maintenance of the Haines road in the Yukon.

In the absence of the acting minister may I ask the deputy acting minister if he has an answer?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member was directing his question to me, but in any event I shall take notice of the question and see that it is brought to the attention of the minister.

WORLD FAIR

REPORTED TECHNICAL DIFFICULTIES RESPECTING SITE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works.

What are the new technical difficulties affecting the development of the world fair site of 1967 to which Mr. Lucien Saulnier, and the vice president of the fair, Mr. Robert Shaw, referred? Can he tell the house whether those difficulties may delay the development of the site?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that these statements have been made within the last 24 hours by very responsible officials of the world fair. They are of a nature that may affect the preparation of the site, and I think the house is entitled to know if such difficulties exist and if in reality they will affect this project, which is very important for Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would doubt very much that new developments have come up which could delay the working out of the exhibition plan, as I have not received any report to that effect.

[Text]

AGRICULTURE

DISMISSAL OF P.F.A.A. SUPERVISOR FOR SWIFT CURRENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I think we are all pleased to see the Minister of Agriculture back in the house, and that he has made such a rapid recovery from his recent illness. I see he has Hansard in his hand, and I presume he has an answer to the question I directed to him in his absence the other day.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek asked the Acting Prime Minister this question on Tuesday last, and the Acting Prime Minister was pleased to turn it over to me this morning. I am glad to reply to the question, which reads in part as follows:

It arises out of a statement the Minister of Agriculture apparently made to a Liberal audience in Red Deer, Alberta, as reported in the Edmonton

Journal of Monday, November 25, in which he said in part "Patronage, what is that? I select people according to merit." If it is government policy that personnel are selected on merit why was it, in view of this statement by the minister, that Mr. George Walker, the former P.F.A.A. supervisor for Swift Current, was discharged from the government service? Either this statement is false or the minister does not practise what he preaches.

Mr. George Walker was discharged on the recommendation of the director because he did not perform his duties satisfactorily. The director was appointed by the previous administration and is a good man.

[Later:]

Mr. McIntosh: I have another question for the Minister of Agriculture arising out of the answer he gave to my earlier question. I understand that in his files he will find a report made by the present director in regard to the supervisor to whom I just referred, to the effect that he was the most capable supervisor in that branch.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What is your question?

Mr. McIntosh: If he does find this report, will he consider firing the director and reinstating the supervisor?

Mr. Hays: I should like to answer the hon. member's question. Apparently he does not understand that the problem arose out of the fact Mr. Walker was taking orders from the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek instead of the director. This was one of the problems, and was not satisfactorily fulfilling his job.

Mr. McIntosh: May I ask the minister if he would repeat his answer. I did not hear what he said.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is becoming a debating period instead of a question period.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is a question of privilege. If a member has just been accused of giving orders to a civil servant, surely he has the right to get up and make a reply.

Mr. McIntosh: I did not hear the exact words the minister used. I should like him to repeat them, and then I was going to raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the important business still before the house may I suggest to the hon. member that he read what was said, and if he has a question of privilege he can raise it tomorrow.

Mr. McIntosh: If I have your permission to raise it tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, I shall do so.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FEDERAL AGENCY TO PROVIDE FEED GRAIN FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture which concerns a matter of great urgency to the Atlantic provinces. Is it the intention of the government, early in the new session, to bring forward legislation setting up a federal feed grain agency to deal with western feed grains for eastern farmers?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): This matter is under discussion at the moment and there is nothing I can say about it. I cannot comment further.

REQUEST FOR STORAGE SPACE IN MONTREAL FOR ONTARIO CORN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I have given him notice. Could the minister supply any additional information further to his reply to my question on November 5 concerning the storage of Ontario corn in Montreal national harbours board elevators? Is discrimination being practised against Ontario corn by Montreal elevator operators, who only allow the unloading of five to ten cars per week or a total of 10,000 to 20,000 bushels, while at the same time United States boats arriving at Montreal with 400,000 to 500,000 bushels of corn are unloaded almost immediately? The information I have received is that at the present time there are about 100,000 bushels of Ontario corn in Montreal elevators for the winter months, while at the close of navigation in mid December there will be over two million bushels of United States corn in storage.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question, and to assure him that no discrimination is being practised against Ontario corn by the national harbours board elevators at Montreal. More than ten railway cars or 20,000 bushels per week of Ontario corn were unloaded in Montreal elevators in the following weeks:

|---|---|
| Week ending November 2 | 26,086 bushels |
| Week ending November 9 | 101,311 bushels |
| Week ending November 16 | 61,300 bushels |
| Week ending November 23 | 69,618 bushels |
| Week ending November 27 | 74,696 bushels |

All vessels containing United States corn had to wait before being unloaded in Montreal, as follows: one ship, three days; one ship, nine days; one ship, eight days. As of 8 a.m. today, November 28, the quantity of Ontario corn in Montreal elevators is 252,979 bushels. The quantity of United States corn in Montreal elevators is 1,281,905 bushels. It is not possible to foresee at this time what quantity of United States corn will be in store in mid December. However, as far as it can be determined at this time the quantity of United States corn in store in mid December is unlikely to exceed 1,300,000 bushels. There are at present on harbour tracks nine cars of Ontario corn, and they will be unloaded not later than tomorrow evening.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can he say how the importation of corn from the United States this year compares with last year? Is it greater or less?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATION OF CAPITAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State a question relating to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I should like to ask the minister whether any conversations were had or instructions exchanged between the government and the C.B.C. with regard to their capital program that is in the estimates for the coming year, from the point of view of whether they are to plan or prepare it on a five year basis, as his party suggested would be the practice.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if I may ask the hon. gentleman a question, is he referring to the future or to the present program? If he is referring to the present program, as the hon. gentleman knows, that is a program that was put in the estimates by the previous administration. But if he is referring to the future I regret to say that up to now I have had no time to have any discussions with the C.B.C. about its program for next year or for subsequent years. I would remind the hon. gentleman, however, that if he will look again at the report of the Fowler commission he will find that it was the program of operations that was to be put on a five year basis, and there was never any suggestion that there should not be year to year control of capital development.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Does the government intend to go ahead with its announced policy with regard to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and a five year plan?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the policy of the government, as rapidly as it can be achieved, to put the budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on such a basis that it is not determined from year to year by treasury board, and so that it is known to the whole of parliament that it is not in any way under the control of the government or, as I said when I was in opposition, under the thumb of the minister of finance. I think that is an undesirable situation that should be corrected as quickly as possible.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Since April is some months behind us, it is worth asking what steps the minister has taken to carry this out. Is the C.B.C. simply to understand from this general statement that this is so?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no. The responsibility is clearly on the government, and the hon. gentleman and all other hon. members will be informed of the position of the government as soon as it has been formulated.

NAMING OF BUILDING IN MEMORY OF PRESIDENT KENNEDY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Does the government intend to name after the late president of the United States, Mr. John F. Kennedy, one of the federal buildings under construction like, for instance, the C.B.C. headquarters in Ottawa?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the hon. member is one that I think will interest all hon. members, and I will certainly bring it to the attention of the corporation.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—AVAILABILITY OF FRENCH LANGUAGE PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Could the minister tell the house whether French Canadians in British Columbia will soon be served by the C.B.C.'s French T.V. network?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I, of course, do not carry in my head all the details of the plans of the C.B.C., but I shall be glad to inquire and inform the hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam as well, who would obviously be greatly interested in this question.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER PLANT—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT DECISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, but as he is absent I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the current issue of Time magazine carries a detailed report on the developments relating to the government's decision on heavy water, and contains information that some of us have been trying to get for some time; and in view of the fact that the tender deadline date for the heavy water project was May 31 last, could the Acting Prime Minister inform the house when the government is going to be able to give some information relating to its decision on this vital project?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to reply to this question today. I doubt that a decision has been taken. In any event, I shall be glad to draw the question to the attention of my colleague who, as the hon. member knows, is at the conference at this time.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Acting Prime Minister not think that the hour of decision is at hand on this matter?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to that question is probably yes.

TRANSPORT

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES BEFORE DECISIONS REACHED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell us whether he has made any arrangements to meet with Premier Lesage while Mr. Lesage is in Ottawa, to discuss with him the suggestion of the premier that no decision respecting transport should be taken without previous consultation with the provinces?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Balcer: As a supplementary question, may I ask the minister if he will give us his opinion on the suggestion of Mr. Lesage?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I think that would be a clear violation of the rules.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF LIAISON COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): In the absence of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration I would like to direct this question to the acting minister. Did the government or the minister make a commitment to one Mr. Henry Castilou of British Columbia to the effect that there would be an Indian liaison committee appointed consisting of parliamentarians and advisers for the purpose of making annual visits to the various Indian villages in British Columbia?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I really cannot say, but I will ask the minister to reply.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the genial Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether, in view of the fact we have in the diplomatic gallery two distinguished gentlemen from British Columbia, namely the premier and the minister of health, the government of Canada looks upon that province as being a friendly power?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I reply to that question by saying that I am sure we are all pleased to see the premier of British Columbia and other premiers in the gallery today. I understand there are several premiers present in the gallery but I only see Premier Bennett and Premier Smallwood, and if I do not mention the others it is simply because I do not see them.

In answer to the hon. gentleman's question I want to say this government seeks to conduct the public business in such a manner as to enjoy the happiest relations with all the provinces.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, vote No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

1. Departmental administration, $7,648,800.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Chairman, the motion to refer the estimates of the department to the standing committee on external affairs gives the first occasion that I have had since assuming my present responsibilities to make a comprehensive statement on Canadian external policies and the international developments to which they are directed.

I have, of course, already made a number of statements in the house on specific aspects of foreign affairs which from time to time have seemed to require special comment. And so I do not intend to cover every aspect of our foreign policy today. Instead, I should like to concentrate on those international developments which are of general concern because of their bearing on international peace and security, and on those which have particular relevance to Canadian external activity.

As we all know, there are certain factors which condition our responses to the shifting international events of our time. Factors such as history, our traditions, our resources, our geographical location and our cultural composition are present at all times, whatever the issue happens to be or whatever government in Canada finds itself in power, and they combine to create what I would call a natural Canadian reaction to any major international development. At the very least, these continuing factors tend to define the limits within which Canadian policy can develop and still remain true to our national values. They give a general continuity to Canadian policy which transcends party considerations, and I am sure that all hon. members would wish to see continued the non-partisan spirit that customarily has been reflected in our external policies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Until last year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Just as there is a constant theme running through Canadian foreign policy over the years, so also do I believe there is a continuity of external policies on the part of our great neighbour to the south. Even so profound a tragedy as that which befell the United States just a week ago will not alter in any fundamental way the firm but wise and humane qualities which generally have been the hallmark of American leadership on the great international issues of our times, those affecting peace and war, and the task of raising living standards of the less fortunate peoples of the world. The wanton crime which ended a brilliant young life and career, striking grief into the hearts of all citizens of the world, as the late President Kennedy often called his fellow human beings, may lead to a pause while the new President gathers to himself the strands of office; but the course of American policy, as we know now from his statement yesterday, remains unchanged. The values by which John Kennedy lived, and for which he died, will live on. I know the house will join with me in extending to the President of the United States our best wishes and our pledge of Canadian co-operation in discharging the arduous responsibilities which have fallen to him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Among the tasks which will confront him are a number of important and delicate questions affecting Canadian-United States relations. It is not my intention today to go into detail with regard to these relations, except to assure the committee that all of them are under intensive discussion with the United States government; in a general way these discussions were continued with the meeting of the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States on Monday last.

Institutional and personal relations between these two countries are so varied and so intertwined that problems are bound to be manifold, and some conflict of interest cannot be avoided in intercourse between two nations. But without continuous communication in an effort to find solutions that will satisfy the interests of the United States and Canada, no tolerable solutions will be found. It has therefore been a primary objective of government policy to see to it that a genuine dialogue was resumed at all levels between our two countries. This process was begun at Hyannis Port and has been maintained ever since through a variety of channels. It is our intention that it should be continued uninterrupted, however difficult the problems may seem, and I believe it was not without significance that the Canadian Prime Minister was among the first, along with the President of France, to be received by the new President of the United States on Monday last.

At this meeting with President Johnson, which I attended, it was clearly evident that the President regards the relations between our two countries as important, and I can say it was quite evident that he will derive considerable satisfaction from continuous contacts with the Prime Minister of Canada.

In assessing the international atmosphere as a whole, which is one of the things I wish to do in this statement, the state of relations between the communists and the rest of us is of course basic. Some other problems, particularly that of assisting the peoples of the less developed countries to advance into full participation in mankind's heritage of dignity, freedom and welfare are no less difficult and in the long run even more important, but it is relations with the communist countries which have involved the risk of war and have demanded the diversion to defence of vast resources which, in a more settled world, could be used for the purposes of instruction and well being.

It is therefore with some sense of satisfaction that one can compare the general international situation today with what it was a year ago. At that time the world stood on the very brink of nuclear war as the result of a sudden, secret deployment of Soviet strategic missiles in Cuba. We now know, as I am sure the right hon. Leader of the Opposition would confirm, that a year ago, in what Mr. Gromyko has referred to as the Caribbean situation, the nations looked for the first time right down into the pit of nuclear fire. That Soviet clandestine move produced the most dangerous crisis of the post-war period but it was one which I believe may mark a new chapter in east-west relations. Happily, that situation was resolved in a way which not only avoided open conflict but opened up new avenues for reducing tensions. It was typical of the late president of the United States that at the peak of that crisis he had the foresight to speak of peace.

But the major political problems of the world remain, in Germany, in Indo-China, in Cuba. The problem of Berlin access is with us still, as recent tense moments on the autobahn have reminded us. These and other problems caused by Stalin's division of Germany and Europe remain as grave sources of tension in the world, potentially as dangerous as Cuba. So when I speak of satisfaction at the improvement in the world political situation during the past year, I do not suggest that there are any grounds for complacency. Critical problems in adjusting relations between the communist and the non-communist worlds remain. Of course it is not possible to define precisely what prompted the Soviet authorities to co-operate in concluding certain limited, tension-easing agreements, of which the partial test ban treaty is the most significant, after some years of refusing these same proposals. Doubtless a variety of factors entered into the decision. One Soviet motive may have been a desire to reduce the risk of war; for there is no question in my mind but that the Soviet people, like our own, ardently desire peace and that Cuba was a sobering lesson for everyone. Another motive was, I think, economic, since the partial test ban treaty seems likely to limit the extension of the arms race into even more sophisticated and expensive areas of development. The Soviet leaders probably also share with us a desire to discourage the dissemination of nuclear weapons under the independent control of more and more governments, a development which could vastly increase the danger of accidental war and make much more complicated, and perhaps hopeless, the prospect of achieving disarmament.

Evolution within the communist bloc may have exerted considerable influence. In eastern Europe the Soviet union's allies now enjoy a greater freedom to manoeuvre than was possible a few years ago. I think this was highlighted the other day when my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I received in our offices a member of the government of Bulgaria who had come to Canada to discuss with us matters involved in a prospective trade treaty. Although on key international issues such as disarmament and Germany and Berlin the bloc countries give apparently unquestioning support to the Soviet union, it is nevertheless evident that on internal policy relating to collectivization of agriculture, de-Stalinization, and so on, and on bloc economic policies, there are variations which indicate clearly that differing national requirements and interests are more and more taken into account.

Moreover, there seems to be some increase in the realism of the Soviet leaders on the essential issues of Soviet-western relations, and this realism may make possible in due course limited agreements on a number of other issues to complement and consolidate the relaxation begun by the achievement of the limited test ban agreement. The dialogue between the Soviet union and the United States, as the leading representative of the west, has been resumed and it is to continue, as President Johnson's first message to Chairman Khrushchev indicated yesterday.

Now, sir, a major factor in Soviet thinking, of course, is the problem of its relations with communist China. While we have long known that there were serious differences between the Soviet union and China, and that China has never been a true satellite of the Soviet union, the new element is the unrestrained public disclosure of the extent of the rift. The dispute now appears to have been carried into the field of interstate relations, affecting economic, political and possibly even territorial aspects. It would be unwise, of course, to judge how far these differences may yet be carried, for the sobering fact is that they are still agreed as to their basic aim, the extension of communism throughout the world. Their differences are related primarily to the means by which this aim can best be achieved, although in the process national and racial considerations appear to have become involved.

Neither do I wish to minimize, however, the significance of the nature of their differences over method. Communist China maintains an attitude of unreasoning militancy while the Soviet union proclaims the policy of peaceful coexistence. The communist dogma of the inevitability of war is thus at the very root of Sino-Soviet differences. How this conflict of view between the two leading nations competing for influence and domination of the international communist movement is resolved can have the most profound influence on the peace of the world for years to come.

There can be little doubt of the aggressive nature of current Chinese policies. Quite apart from China's often proclaimed call for active prosecution of wars of liberation, her adherence to the doctrine of the inevitability of war, her rejection of the test ban treaty, and similar evidence of a hard attitude, communist China has provided a modern example of expansionism through her limited invasion of India last year. A statement at the time revealed that her object was not only the promotion of territorial claims, but the diverting of India's economic resources to defence and the discrediting in India's democratic process. It had all the evidence of a bid to demonstrate to other nations that the principal power in Asia was communist China, not India. It is also noteworthy that the Soviet union condemned China for its intransigence for refusing to negotiate the border settlement with India on the basis of the so-called Colombo proposals, and reiterated its belief that negotiations are better than war.

The dispute between communist China and the Soviet union is likely to force both of these countries to re-examine the fundamentals of their relations with the rest of the world.

We should be careful, however, not to become complacent at the sight of the two communist giants openly quarrelling between themselves. There are factors which could make them keep their dispute, despite the evident contradictions, within bounds. But quite apart from this, it does not follow that bad relations between the Soviet union and communist China will necessarily mean any improvement in relations between either of them and the west, nor even necessarily any benefit to the non-communist world in which they are already competing for influence.

How, then, are we to deal with the communist Chinese colossus, whose annual population increase is equal to the present population of Canada? For almost the entire period of its existence communist China has been effectively isolated from the non-communist world, partly as a result of western policies but partly out of deliberate choice. We have had a recent example of China taking an initiative to intensify its own isolation. The test ban treaty was a step, albeit a small one, away from the arms race and therefore away from war. It is unfortunate and ominous that the Peking authorities chose to express strong opposition to it, in sharp contrast to its ready acceptance by the vast majority of the nations of the world.

So we must carefully consider whether the degree of isolation which now surrounds communist China is healthy; whether it promotes international peace or tends to intensify the threat to it. At one time the Soviet union was in a similar state of isolation. I wonder how many of us believe that Soviet isolation served the interest of world peace? I well remember Mr. Vishinsky saying in the United Nations that never would he allow the windows of the Soviet union to be opened to the ideas of the west. And the nations of the west at that time, for the most part, strove to establish contact with the Soviet union along lines which have now clearly become better established.

Some means must be found to remove the suspicion and ignorance which feeds on isolation. The lesson of the last years seems to point toward increased contacts. Whether those contacts take the form of scientific and cultural exchanges or of limited agreements, they serve to lower the barriers of hostility. I do not suggest it would be appropriate to rush into some new formal relationship at this time with the Chinese people's communist republic. The avowed intention of Peking to occupy Formosa stands as a serious obstacle to both the seating of communist China in the United Nations at this time and to the recognition of the Peking regime. But I suggest that the increasing ostracism of communist China from the world community may be self defeating and a potential threat to international stability. It is not too soon to begin in the west to formulate realistic and farsighted policies toward this Asian giant.

Trade, of course, has a special place in the process of overcoming the mistrust which exists between the west and the entire communist block. The Soviet union and other communist countries are facing a particularly difficult problem of resource allocation at the present time, and both the nature of this problem and the attempts to deal with it will have important implications not only for the domestic and foreign policies of those countries but for east-west relations in general.

What are the implications for Canada of the developments which I have been discussing? First, it must be understood that we are bound by treaty obligations, by tradition and by national interest to the Atlantic world and to those countries which derive historically, economically and politically from western Europe. Interdependence is a fact of international life, and Canadian relations with the communist world are inevitably governed by the general state of relations between the two great military groupings, particularly those of the United States and the Soviet union. It is neither possible nor desirable that our relations with the communist world should be significantly better or worse than the relations of our closest friends and allies with the communist world. Within those limits, however, there are certain possibilities open to us which could serve our interests and those of our allies. I believe profoundly that the long term solution of east-west problems will come through the slow evolution of communist thinking about their own methods and objectives, and about the outside world. It will not help if the Soviet leaders continue to feel that the west is totally alien and implacably hostile. Breaking down this dangerous misconception is the political reason behind our encouragement of cultural and other contacts, and it should also be the political reason for our trade with communist countries.

So for these broad political considerations, as well as for the commercial advantages which accrue to Canada, a country vitally dependent upon its exports, the government intends to allow non-strategic trade with the communist world to develop. We believe that through trade we shall encourage the evolution of institutions and attitudes in the communist countries more favourable to co-operation with the rest of the world.

It is essential, I believe, to assess realistically the elements which have contributed to the better atmosphere which undoubtedly does prevail at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow a question? What change has there been in the policy with regard to trade with communist countries in non-strategic materials and commodities? Has there been any change from the policy pursued by the government of which I had the honour to be the head?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think there has been any change.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what I thought.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not think there is any change. I clearly indicated that in the basic Canadian foreign policy there is a continuity of development regardless of which government is in power. I believe the matters I am now discussing are of such importance that they do not lend themselves to any political advantage, and certainly I am not trying to take any advantage of that kind in this discussion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We just want the record to be clear.

Mr. Chevrier: It should be clear as to other things, too.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Apart from the critical role of the Cuban crisis in stimulating a re-examination of policies in both the east and the west, the concrete steps taken toward the easing of tensions have in fact been few in number. They consist exclusively of measures to slow down the arms race or reduce the danger of a sudden outbreak of war, but they leave completely unresolved all the political problems which could give rise to war.

The measures are three limited agreements, all falling within the general field, which might be classed as preliminary to disarmament. First, a direct emergency communications system has been established between Washington and Moscow which should do much to ensure that war between east and west does not come about as a result of accident or miscalculation. The difficulty encountered in communicating rapidly at the time of the Cuban crisis was evidently enough to induce the Soviet union to accept this measure, which the United States had first proposed in April, 1962.

Second, there was the Moscow treaty banning nuclear weapons testing in all environments except underground, signed by the United States, Britain and the Soviet union on August 5, 1963. Canada signed the treaty in the capitals of the three depository governments on August 8, 1963. It was an unprecedented first step toward limiting, both quantitatively and qualitatively, the production of nuclear weapons, and of course it carried with it the enormous human dividend of removing the most serious source of radioactive contamination of the atmosphere and seas.

But above all the signature of this treaty by the nuclear powers, and its subsequent acceptance by over 100 states, proved that by patient exploration agreements can be arrived at which serve the interests of both east and west. Its real significance lies in the prospect it holds out for a broader settlement of east-west questions by the same process. On the western side, it was accomplished without any sacrifice of principle or of security, and involved no political concessions. For example, adherence to the Moscow treaty by regimes which are not already recognized by Canada, in no way constituted extension of Canadian recognition to them.

May I observe that when on July 25 the Prime Minister announced Canada's decision to sign this treaty the authentic text was not available and was, therefore, not tabled in the house before the recess on August 2. Subsequently it was published. However, for the convenience of members I am now tabling copies of the treaty, three copies in the two languages. As all parties in the house have already expressed their wholehearted support of the agreement, arrangements are now being made to deposit Canada's instrument of ratification in Washington, London and Moscow.

The third limited agreement was that reached at the United Nations between the United States and the Soviet union to refrain from stationing or orbiting nuclear or other weapons of mass destruction in outer space. This took the form of separate expressions of intention by the Soviet union and the United States, which were welcomed by a unanimous resolution of the general assembly in October last; and as the house knows, this is a measure which successive Canadian governments have advocated.

It is to be noted that none of these agreements constitutes an actual reduction or elimination of weapons and armed forces. None the less the negotiations in the 18-nation disarmament committee in Geneva have been productive. The committee has played an important role in helping the major powers to reach agreement on all three measures. Even in the field of general disarmament the committee has made a valuable contribution toward narrowing the areas of difference between the communist and western positions.

Important gaps still persist, however, and I would not wish to leave the impression that progress on actual disarmament is likely to be quick and easy. The Soviet position on control, inspection and verification is not giving any evidence of moving in the direction which the west regards as essential.

The outlook therefore for disarmament is fraught with problems, and the 18-nation committee faces an enormous task. In the view of the Canadian government, among those measures designed to increase mutual confidence the committee might give priority to the examination of measures to reduce the risk of surprise attack by land forces, such as the establishment of ground observation posts. If these posts have sufficient liberty to observe within an adequate radius of action they could give assurance against the possibility of sudden war. I appreciate, however, that discussion is likely to be difficult, as the Soviet union tends to try to couple intrinsically worth while measures of this kind with unacceptable conditions, at least unacceptable to the western countries. The Soviet approach to disarmament has always been heavily influenced by its policies toward central Europe and toward Germany in particular. Their latest objective seems to be to induce the United States and Canada to withdraw their forces across the Atlantic and thereby remove the North American presence which is, to the great majority of Europeans, the tangible evidence of our commitment to their effective defence. The western response to all these overtures must of necessity be such as will take into account the exigencies of NATO defence as well as the need to reduce the risk of war by accident or miscalculation.

It is difficult to maintain the momentum toward disarmament engendered by the limited agreements which have been reached, especially in the face of political setbacks such as the renewal of Soviet harassment in the Berlin corridor. Yet it would be wrong to slacken our efforts, for as in the case of the limited test ban and the Austrian state treaty of 1955 a seemingly endless and inconclusive discussion can lead suddenly to progress and achievement. We owe it to ourselves and to humanity to persist in our efforts to achieve disarmament within conditions of security that will create the kind of international climate which in turn may encourage the settlement of some of the major political problems dividing east and west.

Our membership in the United Nations, along with NATO, our membership in the commonwealth and our proximity to the United States represent the cornerstones of foreign policy which have been recognized by all governments in Canada. Developments at the United Nations therefore continue to occupy a very important place in Canadian foreign policy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow a question before he turns to another subject, in connection with the very laudable objective of disarmament? Is Canada now negotiating with Poland on a resolution for a nuclear free zone in central Europe?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are discussions proceeding between Canada and a number of countries with regard to the proposals for a nuclear free zones. With regard to the particular zone to which the right hon. gentleman directs my attention, as a member of the NATO alliance we must naturally take into consideration the views of our allies and the interests of the alliance itself. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will readily appreciate that. With regard to the proposals for a nuclear free zones in other areas of the world, we have given sympathetic support providing, as I have said before in answer to a question in this house, certain conditions which we believe essential are observed.

The atmosphere at the current assembly appears calm in the sense that the tensions between the communist and the non-communist blocs have eased, thus eliminating one familiar obstacle to constructive action by the world body. But one direct consequence of understanding in one area has been to cause renewed activity in another of no less importance. I refer to race relations, which now emerges as one of the dominant factors in international affairs. The African states are understandably aroused at the failure of their persistent efforts in the United Nations and in the specialized agencies to bring about any appreciable change in the policies of South Africa and Portugal. These and other issues of colonialism and racial discrimination are being featured prominently in the assembly debates. The aims and objectives sought by the African members are shared by almost the whole membership, but there is a substantial area of doubt about some of the measures proposed for achieving their desired ends.

Canada has consistently urged under this government, under the preceding government and under the government before that, that the membership of the United Nations should be comprehensive in character, and this is the fundamental reason we are opposed to any move to have members expelled from the United Nations. South Africa and Portugal have become the immediate object of such moves, which could have much wider application. There are within the organization other member states whose policies are just as repressive and just as discriminatory as the ill advised and repugnant policies now being followed by these two countries. In all cases we believe that such policies are more likely to be modified if they are kept under close scrutiny by the United Nations than if the states concerned were to be expelled. Moreover, we believe that all such measures which conform strictly to the letter of the charter of the United Nations could, unless carefully observed, create a situation resulting in far reaching harm to the United Nations itself. The government has made clear—

The Chairman: I am sorry I have to interrupt the minister. Is it agreed that he continue?

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the committee, because I should like on this occasion to make as careful and as comprehensive a statement as possible so as to outline the position which the Department of External Affairs and the government are taking at this time.

I made clear at the United Nations the position of Canada and its determination and desire to see the United Nations strengthened in every possible way, particularly as regards capacity to engage in peace keeping operations. We have urged other member states to follow the example of countries like Canada, the Scandinavian members and now the Netherlands, which have taken steps to prepare their national forces for emergency service with the United Nations.

We have called for the establishment of a compact military planning team in the secretariat to assist the secretary general in the conduct of peace keeping operations involving military personnel and equipment. We have offered to share with other governments our experience which we have gained from extensive participation in peace keeping operations over a period of many years in the United Nations and, pursuant to the Geneva accord of 1954, and through Canadian participation in the three international supervisory commissions operating in Viet Nam, in Cambodia and in Laos. We see the suggestion for extensive participation outside the United Nations by interested countries as a possibility for giving strength to the idea of a world peace force together with the suggestion of improvements to the secretariat by providing for the possibility of staff training for United Nations military operations. We are examining intensively, in this context and in others, ways in which these improvements can be achieved.

An important aspect of United Nations peace keeping relates to the financing of these ad hoc operations, principally those in the Congo and in the Middle East. We have been greatly concerned in recent times, as members of this house are, about the growing deficit in relation to the peace keeping accounts of the United Nations. The secretary general has estimated that this might be about $140 million by the end of 1963, and it is an indictment of our time that it should be possible for us to provide so readily, as we must, for our defences when at the same time it is so difficult to get the necessary moneys to keep functioning properly the organization that was established at San Francisco to try to substitute pacific means, conciliation, adjudication and discussion, for settling disputes between nations, instead of resorting to force.

We believe that the financial burden should be shared by all members of the United Nations, not only by some of the great powers and some of the lesser powers but by all the great powers and all the nations. There is room, of course, for offering the less developed countries some measures of relief from their assessments when peace keeping costs are high. There is none for absolving countries with a capacity to pay from their financial commitments.

We believe that the peace keeping operations in the Congo and in the Middle East should be continued as long as they are considered necessary, and this will be a determination based upon prevailing practical and other considerations. It was on this basis that we supported the continuation of the Congo force for a further period of six months, that is until June of 1964. We believe that the United Nations emergency force should be maintained. We would be opposed to curtailing that body if by such curtailment there should result any inefficiency or any failure to provide the stability which is generally desired in the Middle East. We believe the continuing effectiveness of these peace keeping bodies will depend on satisfactory financing arrangements being made.

The most recent peace keeping effort of the United Nations, to which Canada is contributing an important element in the staffing and maintenance of the air component, is the observation mission in Yemen, about which I am sure the right hon. gentleman heard a good deal during his visit to the Middle East a few months ago. The government's decision to meet the secretary general's request for Canadian participation was consistent with our policy of supporting this fundamental aspect of United Nations activity. This was a hazardous experience. It was originally participated in by Yugoslavia, the country which supplied the ground force, and by Canada, which supplied the air component. The governments of the United Arab Republic and Saudi Arabia undertook to supply the necessary finances for an initial two month period. Following further commitments to finance an additional four months' operations, the secretary general has extended the mission until January 4, 1964, at which time the situation will, I expect, be reviewed by the security council.

But I must emphasize in this connection that the United Nations mission in Yemen is strictly a temporary operation limited to observing and verifying the progress of disengagement. It is not charged with the supervision or enforcement of the agreement. Unfortunately, progress on disengagement to date has not been encouraging, and I can only express the sincere hope that the extension of this mission's period of responsibility will afford time for more effective implementation of the agreement. I also expect that time will be utilized in devising some civilian observation machinery more appropriate to the task in Yemen.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Churchill: Would the minister permit a question? How many Canadians are involved in the operation in Yemen?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not have the exact number, but it is somewhere between 20 and 30.

A situation must not be allowed to develop in which the parties would use the presence of the United Nations mission as a cover for the indefinite continuation of their involvement in the affairs of Yemen.

The Canadian delegation at the United Nations is active, as in other years, in many other fields; in promoting disarmament, co-operating in outer space, scientific research in relation to the hazards of radiation, respect for human rights, and the program of economic and social development carried out under the auspices of the United Nations and the specialized agencies. We shall continue our support for humanitarian programs designed to alleviate refugee problems. We are actively engaged, as a number of the preparatory committee in each case, in the organizing work for the United Nations conference on trade and development in March of 1964, and for the international year of co-operation in 1965. I am happy to take this opportunity of welcoming to our capital Mr. Prebisch, the president of the United Nations trade and development conference, who is in our city today and tomorrow. Certainly the trade and development conference will be a matter of special interest and concern, and I might say that it was the subject of considerable discussion at the meeting of the O.E.C.D. in Paris.

Canada has been able in the United Nations, I believe, as I found in the period when I was there at the beginning of the session and from time to time when I returned, to strengthen bilateral relations with most member states, particularly with the new states of Africa. I have welcomed the occasion to talk to many of the representatives of the African states, to get to know their problems a little better and generally to let them understand the good will and the favourable disposition that Canada has toward them.

The opportunity for personal conversation on a wide range of subjects is, in my judgment, one of the valuable dividends of the general assembly. Another is the ability of the organization to provide its member states with a wide variety of means for bridging and reconciling differences. This may be the real reason for striving ceaselessly to keep the United Nations in working order; for in spite of its imperfections this international instrument has demonstrated its capacity to respond to most of the basic needs of the international community in a period of exceptional difficulty.

A foreign minister of one of the great powers said to me only a few days ago that Canada is an idealistic nation; its confidence in the United Nations seems to be unbounded. My reply was yes, we are an idealistic people; we do believe in the United Nations, and we do believe that if our world is to survive in this interdependent period, that body must be given increasing support. I believed, when I said that, I spoke for every member of this house and for the vast majority of the people of our country.

I made reference a few minutes ago to the rapidly changing nature of the world in which we live. One of the most dramatic manifestations of change has been the emergence in the past few years of scores of new independent nations with widely varied backgrounds. In Africa a whole continent has come awake and for the first time has taken its place on the world stage. The vitality of these new countries, and their determination to play a significant part in world affairs, were demonstrated at the conference of the heads of some 32 independent African states held in Addis Ababa last May. At that meeting the charter of the organization for African unity was adopted, envisaging a new era of political and economic co-operation. At that gathering the African states also served notice of their impatience with the rate of progress toward the solution of the remaining colonial problems.

The Portuguese African territories in South Africa are the focal point of anti-colonial pressure. In the case of Portugal, the difficulty arises from its claim that its overseas territories are an integral part of metropolitan Portugal. The time is, in fact, long overdue for Portugal to give some sign that it recognizes the principles of self determination in its overseas territories. The Canadian government has made it clear that it cannot accept the theories on which Portugal's colonial policy is based. We welcome the reforms which Portugal has instituted during the past two years in its overseas territories. We hope that the Portuguese government will wisely take the further steps which alone can turn aside the criticisms to which it is now exposed.

It is harder to foresee any solution to the problem of race conflict in South Africa. The Canadian government can understand the fears of white South Africans about the possibility of being submerged and eventually forced out of their homeland. However, the Canadian government cannot understand South Africa's claim that apartheid is the only solution, and we deplore the use of harsh and repressive measures offensive to fundamental human rights which are used to carry out this policy. We derive no pleasure, and I am sure no one in this house derives any pleasure, from seeing our former sister nation of the commonwealth become an outcast amongst nations for its race policy. I repeat what I said at the United Nations, that we are prepared to help in any way possible to achieve a solution based on justice, but we cannot and we will not support one which is offensive to human dignity.

In Southern Rhodesia the race problem is not yet hardened along irrevocable lines. African leaders, including some commonwealth leaders, have pointed out that it would not be in keeping with normal commonwealth practice if Southern Rhodesia were given her independence under a government which is not broadly representative of its whole population. More time is needed to search out a solution in Southern Rhodesia which will avoid the heavy problems now facing South Africa.

Elsewhere in former British colonial territory the movement toward independence marches steadily forward. Malaysia came into being on September 16, embracing Sarawak and North Borneo. We in this house welcomed wholeheartedly the founding of Malaysia. We now regret, along with the British foreign secretary who spoke on this yesterday, the external difficulties which have attended the birth of a state which we are satisfied is destined to enhance the peace and stability of southeast Asia.

In the Caribbean we have watched with satisfaction the progress of Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago since they achieved independence last year. They have provided reassuring models of stability in an area which has been otherwise turbulent. The Canadian government continues to follow closely constitutional developments in other islands and territories in that region, and as I have already announced, steps are being taken to improve and expand our aid arrangements for the region in the economic field. This was one of the subjects discussed at Hyannis Port between the late President of the United States and the present Prime Minister.

The nurturing of one of our other cornerstones of foreign policy, the commonwealth, is a basic feature of our external policies. In the past few years membership has been progressively enlarged until today it embraces 16 sovereign states. The majority now are in Asia and in Africa. It is because of the special insight which the commonwealth gives us into the new forces which have emerged in the post-war era that we most value this unique association of states. The commonwealth practice of continuing consultation among members on matters of mutual concern is especially valuable in a world in which race and colour have too often tended to be divisive forces.

A second important group of newly emerging states meriting special attention from Canada are the 20 French speaking states of Africa, most of which are members of the French community. It is only natural that Canada, a bicultural state, should wish to contribute to the advancement of this important group of French speaking African countries as it does to the African members of the commonwealth. There is a natural link here that also prompts French African states to turn to Canada. Like all the countries of that continent, these states are faced with the enormous problems of education and economic and cultural development. It is our intention to increase the level and quality of our assistance to them in terms that are represented by the announcement I made a few days ago, the details of which are now being formulated into a plan, which will, I hope, be of increasing value in manifesting Canada's concern for these countries.

There is one subject with which I wish to deal briefly now, Mr. Chairman. The house is aware that for many years as a private member of this house I demonstrated my interest in the question of Canadian membership in the organization of American states, a development to which most Latin American countries attach considerable importance and to which I am sure a great many Canadians familiar with developments in Latin America will likewise attach much importance. This government is fully aware of the role that the organization of American states plays in hemispheric affairs. We are aware, too, that there has been a noticeable growth of interest on the part of Canadians in connection with developments in Latin America, with which many of our citizens have a cultural, religious and social affinity.

This is not a question which can be settled summarily. There are a great many factors which the government must take into consideration and which are being carefully weighed. To this end I have had discussions with the president of the council of the organization of American states, and I have had discussions with the president of the inter-American bank. We are watching carefully the discussions now going on within the organization concerning terms of membership, a matter of considerable importance as well to the commonwealth countries of the Caribbean which are showing increasing interest in participation. All these aspects of the question are now being actively reviewed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. gentleman allow a question? He used very significant words—"discussions are taking place regarding the terms". Does the Canadian government take the stand that the ordinary terms applicable to members of this organization should not apply to Canada?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I implied that. If I did, I had not intended to. At the present time there is a discussion as to the terms of membership of interested countries, and Canada is not one that has indicated an interest at the present time in joining the organization. If we reach that situation—I am not saying we will and I am not saying we will not—then will be the time to give consideration to the kind of question to which my right hon. friend has directed my attention.

There are many questions that I have not covered today but which undoubtedly will be discussed when the committee is set up: Membership in the Indo-China peace commissions; some of our current negotiations with the United States involving such questions as the law of the sea, on which negotiations will be resumed next Wednesday in Washington; discussions with regard to the Columbia river treaty project; our balance of payment problems. Indeed there are a whole series of questions concerning the two countries, as well as many questions concerning other countries and concerning our membership in various international bodies, but we will have an opportunity to deal with those at a later time.

A number of years ago a former secretary of state for external affairs, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, gave the following description of how Canada should pursue its international responsibilities:

> In her participation in international affairs Canada will, I hope, act with resolution, with responsibility, and also with restraint. We should not evade our international duties; but in discharging them we should not be influenced unduly by national pride and prejudice. I hope that in our foreign relations we can reconcile our first duty to our own people with our ulitmate obligations to the international community. In a frightened and suspicious world this is not always easy.

His prescription for Canadian conduct is as valid today as when it was first enunciated on April 29, 1948, and the world is only now beginning to be slightly less beset by fear and suspicion than it was then, when the expansionist and threatening behavior of international communism provided the impetus for the present western system of collective security, of which Canada is now an integral part.

The fundamental objective of Canadian policy was then, as it is now, to preserve peace and to seek a reduction in international tensions, whether those tensions arise from the ideological conflict between east and west or from the upheavals which have been engendered by the surge toward independence and higher living standards of former colonial and underdeveloped peoples. In our pursuit of these objectives we aim to maintain a balanced, realistic and co-operative outlook on international affairs, avoiding excesses of optimism, pursuing policies commensurate with our capabilities, and ensuring that Canada speaks with a reasonable and constructive voice in international councils.

Sir, I have dealt at length with relations with the communist part of the world and with the less developed areas, because those are the dominant forces in contemporary international life, affecting directly the scope for Canadian initiative in international affairs. I have outlined what I believe to be some of the ways in which we can work toward a further relaxation of tension. But I do not wish to exaggerate the possibilities. We are far from the point where we can relax our vigilance. There is no evidence as yet that the decrease in international tension which has begun will prove so durable that the dismantling of our defences would be warranted. We must recognize that the collective security arrangements, which we have developed within the north Atlantic alliance, by their very effectiveness have been a major factor in bringing about the more hopeful atmosphere which prevails today. NATO, which embraces our major military efforts in both Europe and North America, remains one of the main cornerstones on which Canadian foreign policy rests and must rest, not only in our preparations to defend ourselves if the need to do so should be thrust upon us but also in our approach to an era of peace, if that should materialize; and on this question I think the latter is the more likely consequence and result.

It is important to recognize in this connection that NATO is not just a military alliance but an assembly of nations with common ideals and a high identity of purpose, in peace and in war. Since the competition between the communist and democratic worlds will certainly continue, even if war is abandoned by communism as an instrument of policy, all members of the western world will be faced with the same problems of how best to respond. Thanks to the habit of consultation which has been developed over the years, the organization today is well equipped to become a central forum for co-ordination of western policies in the more hopeful period that may lie ahead. The forthcoming ministerial meeting of NATO in December, which some of my colleagues and I will attend, will be of great importance in exchanging views and charting a common course.

That meeting will also be significant in another sense. As a consequence of the re-emergence of Europe as a major world power centre, certain changes in relationships are taking place within the alliance. This development is itself in large measure the product of enlightened policies consistently pursued through the post-war period. It is inconceivable to me that in the moment of success of policies so deliberately pursued, there should be a fear to accept the consequential change in trans-Atlantic relationship that inevitably had to ensue.

There is no cause for concern in the evolutionary process taking place in the west. To be sure, certain problems have been introduced into the relationship within the western family of nations, but I stress that these problems can and will be resolved without undermining the fundamental cohesion of the western alliance, and certainly without harmful consequences to any outside nation.

So, sir, I conclude this statement on Canadian foreign policy as I see it at the present time, a policy that is predicated upon certain constants, membership in the commonwealth, membership in the United Nations, membership in NATO, our traditional and cultural affinity with France, one of the great and strong nations of the world and one of the strong powers in Europe today. I dedicate the efforts of this government anew to the twin objectives of promoting the Atlantic partnership while working unremittingly for international peace and stability.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, my first words must be of congratulation to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the manner in which he has dealt in a general way with the problems facing Canada internationally. He has an amplitude and felicity of phrase that makes it difficult on occasion to follow his exact meaning, but I will say that the views he has expressed today, and in particular the general summation he has made, will cause no serious division as between those in the government and those in opposition. However, that does not mean I feel he has covered the subject as recent events would have demanded.

When he dealt with the question of the recognition of China I thought he was going to make a profound declaration, but by the time he had completed his remarks in that connection he had gone no further than the government of which he was a member seven or eight years ago. He did, however, deal with the question of the problem that has to be faced. I am not applying this in any way to the question of the recognition of China; I realize the difficulties inherent in so doing. I believe that the free world made a mistake 12 years ago, when it was purely a legalistic matter and when recognition would not have carried the connotations that it does today. Recognition, regardless of one's agreement with the government that holds office in any particular state, follows when certain matters are answered affirmatively. One has only to take the recent example of the recognition of the revolutionary government of South Viet Nam to understand that, whether countries agree or disagree with an administration, when under ordinary circumstances that administration will hold office for a period of time and has a degree of permanence about it, recognition takes place. But with the passing years—and I have found this everywhere in regard to Asia—today recognition of China would seem to carry with it the approval of communism as practised in that country. If I could use a homely illustration, all of us recognize the Secretary of State for External Affairs; but that recognition does not carry with it full approval of the things that he stands for.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that he desired to secure reasonable unanimity of opinion in the house and hoped we would be as non-partisan as possible. I intend to follow his suggestion in that connection and be as non-partisan as he was when he occupied the position of critic on external affairs during the days of the former administration. I would immediately point out the fact that I am glad to find the reputation of Canada internationally is so widely accepted. I was of those who argued at all times that this has always been Canada's reputation; but I recall that in 1963 in the month of January the hon. gentleman at that time had grave doubts as to Canada's international position. He spoke of the downgrading of Canada that had taken place. I would like to point out in this connection the fact that one who has recently received recognition from the Prime Minister, Mr. John W. Holmes, who was described by the Prime Minister as a wise Canadian commentator on U.S.-Canadian relations, made a statement in the International Journal regarding Canada's international position in which he said:

> At the end of the second war, Canada emerged as the third strongest of the western powers and assumed in international organizations a position of influence not far behind that of the minor great powers. During the decade and a half since that time, Canada's population and resources continued to grow, but its relative position in the world fell off considerably.

That, from a man who was in the civil service in a high position during the days the former government was in office, indicates that whatever may have been the change in Canada's external prestige, it continued for a period of approximately 18 years subsequent to the war. As I listened to the Secretary of State for External Affairs today referring to what has been achieved in the field of international relations, including the test ban treaty, the hopes expressed regarding disarmament and the steps being taken, I was reminded of the fact that when the then secretary of state for external affairs, the Hon. Howard Green, pressed strongly for these forward steps there were those who now sit opposite who ridiculed what he was doing and alleged that what he was doing was in fact the result of a naïve lack of understanding of processes of international negotiations. Even the Secretary of State for External Affairs used these words in January last:

> I simply say to the minister, it is one thing to work hard but it is another thing to work wisely in this field. I do not think it possible to work wisely unless we take into account the existing fundamental differences in ideology that prevail between the Soviet union and the free world, the existence of major political problems that divide east and west.

He also indicated there was altogether too much optimism on the part of Mr. Green in expressing the view that it would not be long before we would have achieved an international test ban agreement, now referred to in such fulsome and responsible terms by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Then the hon. gentleman referred to what had been achieved in relation to outer space. That brought back memories. It was in 1957 that I had the honour to bring this particular matter before the United Nations, setting out in detail a course of action to assure that outer space would not be used by the nations for purposes other than those of peace. Mr. Green pursued that course throughout the period during which he held the responsibility of office, and an agreement has now been achieved. Then the hon. gentleman mentioned another matter—the provision of help to nations which lack most of the economic opportunities which we have in Canada. One of the things we advocated throughout the years was the establishment of a food bank. That proposal met with derision. However, with the passing of the years it has become accepted as a basic principle of one of the agencies of the United Nations.

Then the hon. gentleman spoke of how trade could be a solvent of the difficulties between nations. He said the present government intended to continue the policy which was carried out, after much criticism, of selling non-strategic commodities to communist nations. I remember the hon. gentleman at that time—and I just recall this—making a statement about the selling of wheat to communist China on credit, to the effect that we sold on credit to our enemies but that we sold on a cash basis to our friends. These are changes—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the right hon. gentleman must be in error and I would be grateful if he would quote the statement he now attributes to me in that context.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not have it before me, but I have a perfect recollection of its being said. I am complimenting the hon. gentleman. He should not take umbrage. There has been a change of opinion in this regard.

Then there was mention of the need for preserving within the commonwealth the principle of the acceptance of a colour-blind commonwealth. This was the stand we took before the commonwealth prime ministers conference. This was the stand which was so strongly criticized both in this house and outside it. We took the position firmly and definitely that within a commonwealth increasingly comprising people of so many races and colours no other principle would be acceptable. We asked South Africa to change its apartheid rules even to a slight degree. We asked South Africa to give its 12 million coloured people and negroes, three representatives in the parliament of their country so that they would have the opportunity of presenting their views. That was denied. We did not ask South Africa to leave the commonwealth. That was a decision of the prime minister and of the foreign minister of that country at the conference in 1961. What we asked was that they recognize the fact that, wherever discrimination is practised, there are the incipient beginnings and incubation of communism and its acceptance.

Today, the idea of a colour-blind commonwealth is acceptable, though two years ago, when the government of which I had the honour to be prime minister advocated this principle, we were criticized for dismembering the commonwealth. It could not have survived without that principle. The Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned that there are 16 members today. When I first became prime minister, I think the number was nine. If we ever allowed ourselves the luxury of a vote to determine any matter in the prime ministers conference, that would be the end of the conference and, ultimately, of the commonwealth.

My own view was: let us look to the future; let us recognize that everywhere in the world the spirit of freedom has been aroused in all the races of man; do not let us say, with five out of six of the individuals in the commonwealth belonging to coloured races, that the principle of non-discrimination should be denied. We did not say that, in the heart, there might not be discrimination; but we said that when discrimination is an integral part of the policy of any of the nations, such a policy was inconsistent with the principles of the commonwealth and with the maintenance of peace within the commonwealth.

The minister referred to the decision of the government to expand the assistance planned for those who live in countries which were formerly French colonies. That was the stand we took. We believe in the bicultural relationship of our country and determined on a course of action in that regard. What is now being done is to extend the amount on the basis of a principle which we adopted.

I do not bring these matters to the attention of the house for the purpose of referring to the past, except as the past shows us a course for the future. It is much harder to speak from this side of the house on the subject of foreign affairs than it is from the government side. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) have access to information far and beyond anything which is available to other members. And that is proper. We do not know the facts as the government knows them. A committee has been set up to look into the whole field of foreign affairs. I hope there will be full discussion in that committee. Today, when I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs two or three questions he was frank in his answers and if the same attitude is adopted in the committee it will be most beneficial. He mentioned the new spirit of Moscow had considerably changed since August, when the badminton game was played in the Crimea. There have been abrupt, even ominous changes. Why these changes have been made, we do not know. It may be Chairman Khrushchev is trying to place responsibility for his national and internal problems on the west. It may be that his agricultural policy having failed, he must find a scapegoat in other parts of the world.

It may be he is endeavouring to bring about closer relations with communist China, although certainly those relations today, if interpreted on the basis of what is being said, are far from as agreeable as one might expect between two great communist states. However, Khrushchev made this statement the other day, and I think it is in keeping with what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said:

> We do have disputes and differences with the Chinese comrades but our main difference is that with capitalism. Although there are differences between us and our Chinese brothers we stand together on the main issue. We are against capitalism...We are for socialism and communism. We have one path, that of our common struggle against capitalism, for the victory of communism throughout the world.

That statement by Khrushchev emphasizes the warning given by the secretary of state.

The period of good will during negotiations for and immediately after the signing of the test ban treaty had been followed by renewed polemics against the west. With regard to the division between red China and the U.S.S.R. —this is only one view and may not be accepted—I point out that this division first became apparent to the outside world after we in Canada did that which the U.S.S.R. could not do, and that was supply communist China with wheat to relieve famine and starvation. The U.S.S.R. refused that. The previous government entered into an agreement in that connection. All I can say is that the cleavages between those two nations were intensified following the delivery by Canada of the first shipments of wheat. What the future will bring in the relations between communism and the western world no one knows, but certainly the events of the last few weeks have been anything but hopeful. The detour of smiles of a few months ago has now had a change, and the highway seems to be one fraught with great difficulties.

The minister mentioned the organization of American states. I am surprised that he did not go further than he did, but as I said a moment ago the responsibilities of office and the knowledge that comes therefrom often brings about a change in thinking. I want to point out what he said only a few months ago, in January of 1963, which was a repetition of what the Prime Minister had also been saying. As reported at page 3078 of Hansard he said:

> Do we have over-all planning and co-ordination of effort in the government at the present time which gives its total attention to a particular problem in external relations and is continually casting its eye up and down the radar screen looking for problems in areas where Canada can exert an influence?

Then he pointed out one of those places in which the influence could be exerted, and that was in the organization of American states. These are his words, which he uttered as far back as September 7, 1961, as reported on page 8067 of Hansard for that year:

> We were told by the Prime Minister some months ago that this house would be given the opportunity of expressing its view with regard to the desirability of Canadian membership in the organization of American states. I express once again my own strong personal view that the time has come when Canada must accept its responsibility in this organization.

Then the present Prime Minister, in September 1961, mentioned the necessity of giving the United States advice of the kind that we did, and rightly, during the Cuban mix-up. He said that if we were to interest ourselves in these developments, then we have to take our responsibility in the organization which is concerned with these matters, namely the organization of American states.

Then on January 24, 1963, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs said, as reported on page 3073 of Hansard:

> —it seems to me that the time was never more urgent for us to accept the long-standing indication of every member of the organization of American states and to join this organization.

I wonder what has happened? Why the change of viewpoint. I also point out—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know my hon. friend wants to be very objective today, but I am sure he will agree that nothing I have said this afternoon would warrant the conclusion that there has been any change of personal view.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, that is an example of the turning of words. A year ago he said "now". Today he says "maybe tomorrow". I dislike bringing these things up, but I could go on with quite a number of other quotations in this connection. He also said this, as reported on page 3074:

> —it seems to me the Cuban crisis highlighted once again the need for Canada to take part in the organization of American states.

Then he goes on to point out the need for joining the organization; but today, with the sophistication that comes with knowledge, he is not so certain as he was. Does he suggest that he is? I do not think so, because this is a problem of great difficulty. It is so easy to solve it when on the opposition side, but it is a different thing when one sits over there and has the responsibility. We considered this matter and looked into it very carefully, but decided that we should expand the number of our trade missions and the number of our diplomatic posts in South America. I visited Central America two years ago and wherever I went there was a widespread suggestion that we should join. I asked what the reasons were and the answer given was: "So that we will have you with us to stand up to the United States". Is the government today finding out that the happy euphoria that they showed to the organization of American states for five years has been dissipated in the light of experience? These are questions which will be asked when we are considering the items in committee.

The Chairman: Order. In order to permit the house to proceed with the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to leave the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the Secretary of State for External Affairs was introducing his estimates in committee of supply he stated he wished to table copies of the treaty banning nuclear weapons tests. Is it agreed that the said document now be tabled?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CORRESPONDENCE WITH U.S. RESPECTING UNION TRUSTEESHIP

On the order: Notices of motions (papers):

October 31—Resuming debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Martineau: That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, communications and other documents and replies thereto between the government of United States of America, or any of its departments, and the government of Canada, or any of its departments, concerning the great lakes shipping situation and the proposed trusteeship of Canadian maritime unions since the 6th of July, 1963.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has asked me if I would agree to this motion being postponed. I gladly comply with that request provided that the motion would not lose its priority on the order paper.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN R.C.M.P. AND ALERT SERVICE

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved:

That an order of the house be issued for a copy of all correspondence between the R.C.M.P. commissioner's office or that of the "I" directorate office and the Alert Service (Marjorie Lamb, P.O. Box 173, Station "Q", Toronto, Ontario), since June 1, 1961.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice indicated that the government is not prepared to provide me with the information requested under this notice and I want to present the argument in support of providing the information. I think the best place for me to start is by reading the description of the Alert Service as put out by that organization. I therefore read this paper which is headed, "The Alert Service, 1047 Yonge street, Toronto 5, Canada, Marjorie Lamb, Founder and Director". Under "function" it says:

The function of the Alert Service is to keep Canadians accurately and constantly informed about the policies and operations of communism, and to devise and encourage sound methods of combating communist above ground operations in Canada.

Under the heading "history" it says:

The Alert Service was started in 1950 upon the request of Canadians for authenticated information on communist activity in Canada. Since then it has evolved into a nationally and internationally recognized information and counselling service helping Canadians to equip themselves to meet the propaganda and infiltration efforts of the communists.

Under the heading "financing" it says:

The maintenance and expansion of the Alert Service work have been and continue to be made possible by the voluntary contributions of Canadians. The funds are held in trust and the books are subject to audit. Donations make possible the distribution of literature and information so necessary to meet and overcome the communist threat to freedom.

This is dated January, 1963. I should like to quote from another publication of Alert Service, also with the same heading, in which it says:

Communism and you. Your personal responsibility in frustrating communist activity. Because the avowed objective of the communist party, no matter what they happen to be saying at the moment, is the overthrow of our system of government, the operations of the communists in Canada is the professional concern of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which is the law enforcement agency charged with national security. It is their job to know what the communists are doing. Therefore they are glad to receive any information concerning communist activity. In dealing with any infringement of Canadian laws such as sabotage and sedition they act against communists as against any other lawbreakers. It is important for every Canadian to know that under existing regulations it is not the function of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to distribute information concerning communists or communist activity. In the area of communist infiltration of ideas and psychological warfare, at a time when we are not at war with another country, their job is not to act but to watch and know. They do not, for example, take action against communists who are attempting to infiltrate into trade unions, churches or voluntary organizations or to run for government office. To see that the communists do not obtain their objectives in these areas is the voluntary job of every loyal Canadian.

I think that makes it fairly clear what the objects of the Alert Service happen to be. It is a voluntary service supported, I gather, by voluntary contributions. It is an organization that is 13 years old and it is out to get Canadians to help, in a voluntary way, to understand and to fight the communist menace in Canada in its above board aspects. From its own propaganda apparently it is also an agency that encourages co-operation with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and implicit in what it says, of course, is the suggestion that any citizens who have any information or suspicions should let the R.C.M.P. know about them.

I want to put on the record a question I asked last year. It was question No. 1,288 and it was answered on January 30, 1963, as found on page 3253 of Hansard. The question was as follows:

Has the R.C.M.P. any knowledge of the objectives of the Alert Service, P.O. Box 173, Station Q, Toronto, and, if so, has the R.C.M.P. co-operated in any way with the service, either with advice or funds?

This was the answer:

The R.C.M.P. has knowledge of the objectives of the Alert Service and has co-operated with this service as it does with any reputable news media. It has not co-operated with funds.

In other words, this is an acknowledgment that the R.C.M.P. knows about the Alert Service, that it has co-operated with it and that it considers it is a reputable news medium. This is an important point in my argument that I should have given to me the information I have requested.

I should like to turn to another publication of the Alert Service to indicate the scope of its operations. This publication is dated August 1, 1963 and at the top it has the words "Replacing all previous lists". The heading is "Some Organizations and Publications in Canada Which Follow the Communist Line". The organizations are as follows: Communist party of Canada; young communist league of Canada; congress of Canadian women; Canadian peace congress; B.C. peace council; Edmonton peace council; Manitoba peace council; Toronto association for peace; Canada-U.S.S.R. association; Canadian-Chinese friendship society; league for democratic rights; workers' benevolent association; youth friendship league; association of Carpatho Russian Canadians; association of united Ukrainian Canadians; Bulgarian Canadian peoples league; Canadian council of national groups; Canadian language press club; Canadian Slav committee; Chinese Canadian welfare association, Toronto; Chinese youth association, Vancouver; cultural recreational association of Chinese Canadian youth, Edmonton; east wind association, Montreal; federation of Russian Canadians; federation of Yugoslav Canadians; Finnish organization of Canada; independent mutual benefit federation; Kossuth sick benefit society; Lithuanian literary society; Macedonian Canadian peoples league; maple leaf mutual; Polish-Canadian mutual benefit society; Polish Canadian thousand year committee; Polish democratic association; Russian Canadian youth organization; Slovak benefit society; sons and daughters of the Canadian Lithuanian mutual benefit society.

Then, there are these publications:

In addition the Alert Service on this same date came forward with a list of communist front organizations in Canada that worked closely with their parent international organizations. These international front organizations are listed as follows:

Women's International Democratic Federation
World Federation of Democratic Youth
World Council of Peace
International Institute for Peace
World Federation of Trade Unions

The affiliates in Canada are listed as follows:

Congress of Canadian Women
Young Communist League
Canadian Peace Congress
B.C. Peace Council
Edmonton Peace Council
Manitoba Peace Council
Toronto Association for Peace

Then, this publication reads as follows:

While official affiliation may not be formally acknowledged, some unions in Canada undoubtedly come within the orbit of influence of the World Federation of Trade Unions. The following unions are considered to be under communist dominated leadership.

International union of mine, mill and smelter workers; united electrical, radio and machine workers of America; Canadian textile council; united fisherman and allied workers' union; marine and boiler makers' union; Vancouver outside civic workers union.

Then, there is a list of some other communist international front organizations, and they are as follows:

International association of democratic lawyers; international organization of journalists; international radio and television organization; international union of students; world federation of teachers unions; world federation of scientific workers; Afro-Asian people's solidarity organization.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to get those lists on the record because that goes to the nub of what I am trying to find out about the communications and relationships which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have acknowledged. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police say this is a reputable publishing organization—that is, the Alert Service. I am not making any judgment on whether or not it is. This is the kind of thing that the Alert Service publishes. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have acknowledged they cooperate with this service.

I should like now, Mr. Chairman, to cite one quotation from a publication, The Canadian Intelligence Service, published at Flesherton, Ontario. This is volume 11, No. 11, dated November 16, and on page 4 I find the following quotation:

> Deputy R.C.M.P. Commissioner George B. McClelland (head of the security and intelligence branch) recently stated publicly that:
>
> The international union of mine, mill and smelter workers has for years been controlled for reds and red sympathizers; and that this is the basis of the present struggle at the great International Nickel mines in Sudbury, where anti-communist workers have gained control of their own local 598.
>
> Not enough is known about what is going on in mine-mill and there is too little public support for men "trying to lift the yoke off their backs."
> "At no time in history has it been so essential for every free man to recognize the face of the enemy when he sees it."

There is an example where the head of the security branch, if this report is correct, has identified one of these communist controlled organizations that is listed in the Alert Service.

I should like now to turn to a discussion that took place in this house in 1959, and to read some quotations containing questions that I asked and the responses that were made by the then minister of justice, Mr. Fulton, as well as some interjections that were made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. gentleman who is now the Prime Minister. One of the things I was trying to find out from the minister at the time was the relationship to security, and the procedure of keeping the files, or who determined what was a subversive organization and what kind of control was kept. My argument was that the people of Canada were entitled to know what these so-called subversive organizations may be, if they operated in a public manner, in order that Canadian citizens could protect themselves from association with them. My point was that some of these organizations are active in the field of athletics, drama and so on, and they draw people into them who take part and may even be members. If these organizations are considered as subversive, these people may find later that they are listed as members of subversive organizations and there may be information on Royal Canadian Mounted Police files against them.

Alert Service Correspondence with R.C.M.P.

Now, I should like to quote from page 5145 of Hansard, for June 25, 1959.

> Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of the force to make a report to the government or department of the government in every case where we are called upon to give information. As I say, we do not attempt to influence the decision of the department as to the judgment it may come to on the basis of the facts we may report. If we are asked to report on an individual and we have a file on that individual, then as I conceive it it is the duty of the police to make the report available; but I know on the basis of my experience, from discussions with my colleagues and in another capacity in another department, that my officials and I myself feel free to exercise a judgment and that judgment will be influenced in all cases—

Then, he goes on into the details of what is considered subversive. This is the point where I came back and asked him this:

> Give us an idea of some kinds of organizations that are subversive. I am sure that a great many people in the lakehead region would have nothing to do with the Finnish organization of Canada if they were perfectly clear in their minds that the government considered it subversive. Where are the definitions in this field?

Then, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate intervened as follows:

> Before the minister answers I should like to put a question to him supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur, and then the minister can perhaps answer both at once. I think the minister has rather left the impression from his answers that the information gathered by the police is given in the raw or crude form to other government departments.

There is a reply from Mr. Fulton on that, and then the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate comes back as follows:

> I do not think the minister has answered the question I asked. Probably it is because I asked it clumsily. This information about an individual is not necessarily all gathered by one constable,... It is a statement which is obviously, in many cases, a composite of various bits of information.
> I thought that would help the hon. member for Port Arthur. I think he has a very legitimate question here which is in the minds of many people. I know many people came to me when I was minister of citizenship and immigration about the very kind of thing the hon. member is talking about. I think the public might be very much reassured if we were told, not how the police made an evaluation as such, but how they assess the information—

Then, Mr. Fulton comes back in an interchange to point out the kind of precautions that are taken and he gets into a discussion with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that leads to this:

> As to the suggestion that we should name and list the organizations which have a record or an indication that they are undesirable, from a specific point of view this would be the most self-defeating policy or practice I could imagine. Practically every piece of information that was known to the police would immediately have to be made public; the extent of police knowledge would be made public, and the value and effectiveness of the work would be immediately almost completely negated. Efforts would have to be recommended from the beginning to build up a file of information, a body of information, which is now available.

Indeed, if we started naming names and naming organizations we would lose, I would think, at least 80 per cent if not more of the sources of information we now have.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that really correct in the case of an organization like this Finnish organization? It is common knowledge that there are a certain number of communist front organizations in this country, particularly appealing to some people who have come to this country fairly recently. I do not believe there is any doubt but that, as the hon. member for Port Arthur has said, a good many people get inveigled innocently into these organizations. There may be some secret organizations that the minister and the police would not want to reveal, but in the case of organizations that conduct their activities in public it does seem to me that there is a point the government ought to consider. I do not refer to the minister because the minister is quite right when he says this is a matter for the security panel and for the government, not for the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Fulton came back in reply saying:

—I wish to point out that at no time, certainly since I have been minister and at no time prior to that of which I am aware, have the R.C.M.P. ever identified any organization as being a subversive organization. I should like to make it clear here that I am not accepting what my hon. friend says he was told—

Then he goes on to kill a few of the arguments which I made and which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate made. Later on, the man who is now Prime Minister commented in this same debate:

I think he—

That is Mr. Fulton.

—was right, of course, when he defended the practice of not making public lists of subversive organizations, which is perhaps not quite the same as lists of communists or communist front organizations which are known to be such. That is in contrast, of course, to the practice—and I think it is a good contrast—across the border where they do have their blacklists or lists of subversive organizations, and where I suspect they have lists of Canadian organizations which they consider to be subversive and perhaps a list of members of those organizations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the former minister of justice underlined the fact that the practice has been that the R.C.M.P. does not publish and does not give information on what are communist front organizations and what are subversive organizations, but it is acknowledged that it has co-operated with this particular organization, the Alert Service, which it says is reputable. My conclusion is that the Alert Service, if it is reputable, as the R.C.M.P. claim, got this information from the R.C.M.P. It does not say so, but this is the conclusion I draw.

In the judgment of the R.C.M.P. this is a reputable publishing organization. It publishes this list, and keeps it up to date, of communist front organizations, and including the various unions in Canada that are sympathetic.

I am willing to withdraw this motion if the parliamentary secretary to the minister will give me an assurance that the R.C.M.P. has never communicated to this organization this particular list that I have read, or a facsimile of it, from which the Alert Service drew this, or if he will give me an assurance that there has been no communication of any kind, or anything of this kind, by the R.C.M.P. with the Alert Service. But if, as I have strong suspicions, it is true—and I feel certain the R.C.M.P. intelligence and security director has communicated with this publishing service, which is considered reputable—and if the R.C.M.P. has provided it with this particular list, I want to see the communications and I want to know why, because we have it on the record that the R.C.M.P. is against this.

In substance, Mr. Speaker, that is my case. So far as the statement is concerned where Mr. McClelland identified the mine, mill and smelters workers' union as a communist organization, I would also like an explanation of that, but I can find it in another way and on another occasion.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer first to the closing remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), particularly with regard to his undertaking to withdraw this particular motion if I would give him an assurance that the list in question, the one he read, the one that was published in the Alert Service, was not furnished to the publisher of the Alert Service by the R.C.M.P. I would have to say I have not actually seen the correspondence which we have here in question, and therefore I am not able of my own knowledge to state whether or not that was the case.

However, I have discussed this matter with the commissioner of the R.C.M.P., the gentleman who, at the time referred to, was responsible for security within the R.C.M.P., and from my conversations with him it is my understanding that information of the kind referred to by the hon. gentleman was not furnished to the Alert Service by the R.C.M.P. A more fundamental question, which I think is underlying the debate on this particular motion, is one as to whether or not in the proceedings of this house it would be desirable to compel the R.C.M.P. to disclose to members, on notices of motions for the production of papers, correspondence which it has with any individual, with any group of individuals, with any corporation or otherwise—the question of whether or not, in the great volume of correspondence which the R.C.M.P. receives as a police force, it would be desirable to compel the force to put on the public record of the house its files, by way of private members' notices of motion. I would rather prefer to address myself—

Mr. Fisher: Could I ask the parliamentary secretary a question? Before he gets down to this basic principle, will he note the fact that the R.C.M.P. has indicated that this is a reputable news media? Surely that does make a distinction or difference between the communications with private organizations and individuals, or between police forces, or within the police themselves? I would like to suggest that this is an indication of a communication between the R.C.M.P. and a news media, in other words, the same as with any other publisher, and I think this does make a distinction that the parliamentary secretary may be missing. I would like him to comment on that.

Mr. Macdonald: I would say not. I would say the principle applies, whatever the nature of the communication from any person. I would prefer to go on and address my remarks to this particular question, that whatever the source, whatever its pedigree in the mind of the hon. member or in the mind of anyone else, whatever the nature of the type of communication, I would submit to the house that in so far as it relates to the police work of the R.C.M.P. it would not be desirable to put on the public record, or create a precedent of putting on the record, the kind of information which might be enclosed in correspondence from any body, whether reputable or having a lack of reputation, and whether it has to do with the reputation or otherwise of a particular organization.

Mr. Fisher: Could I ask the parliamentary secretary another question? Is this on the basis that it is a police organization, or is it on the basis that it is a government agency?

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, I put it in this connection exclusively on the basis it is a police organization, and it is a type of government agency with particular characteristics which make it undesirable for correspondence, albeit departmental correspondence, to be made available in this public way.

The function of the R.C.M.P. is set out and can be found by hon. members in chapter 241 of the revised statutes. Its general functions are well understood—the duties of preserving the peace, of preventing crime, preventing violence and offence against the laws of Canada, and also apprehending offenders against those laws. In the job of carrying out its particular function the R.C.M.P.—as indeed with all police forces—must have access to all possible information which can be legitimately obtained, or which may be proffered to it, for the purpose of informing itself in connection with its particular duties. I would say this is so whether it is a matter of investigating a particular offence, investigating conduct in a particular case that may be felt to create a particular offence, or conduct in general which may give the police the opportunity of evaluating whether or not further investigations are required which may form an additional fragment going into, as the hon. member said, the composite picture of the situation, or general background information which could facilitate the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the course of carrying out the duties to which I have referred.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, could I interrupt the hon. member at this point? It might be helpful to us. Does the hon. member think the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should comment on the reputation or otherwise of an organization like the strange one that is the subject matter of the motion of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher)?

Mr. Macdonald: I would say to the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) that my personal opinion would be that they should not, and I can only say that this particular response was given at a time when the hon. gentlemen who now form the government were not responsible for giving—

Mr. Fisher: On that point, Mr. Speaker, surely the parliamentary secretary is not suggesting that this is not a direct answer from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police? He is surely not introducing the response of the former government? The answer is that the R.C.M.P. has knowledge of the objectives of the Alert Service and has co-operated with this service, as it does with any reputable news media. In other words, the relationship I am interested in is that between the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and a reputable news media.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Speaker, this really gets into the question of the underlying basis for the answers given in the house. I am suggesting this is the responsibility of the government. The government is generally responsible, as members of the hon. member's party have pointed out from time to time, for the activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. If the particular activity happens to be that of giving an answer to a question in this house, I suggest there is a responsibility in the government.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member is not doubting the accuracy of this reply?

Mr. Macdonald: I am not raising that question at all; I am merely replying to the question raised by my hon. friend from Royal. I would point out that to allow this particular motion to pass, and to recognize the right of an hon. member to compel the government, on behalf of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, to disclose the particular correspondence which it may have with an individual, or further information that may come to it from whatever source—whatever the nature of that source, as I said before—would inhibit the police in carrying out their obligations.

I would like to refer more particularly to that matter. I think the first and most obvious reason why this should not be done is that if it became public knowledge—and it soon would—that information of this kind could be compelled to be produced in this chamber, such information might very well be cut off from sources anonymous, and from named people who write, thinking they are dealing in confidence with the R.C.M.P. Then the general conclusion would have to be that the information could not be supplied to the R.C.M.P. in this way. This very valuable source of information in carrying out their duties would be cut off.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I hate to interrupt the hon. member, but I ask him another question. He is not assuming I am interested in the information that comes from the Alert Service to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, is he? If he is, I would like to make it very clear to him that my intention is to get the information that has gone from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the Alert Service; that is all. I do not care what came back from the Alert Service; I want to know whether the Royal Canadian Mounted Police gave anything to the Alert Service. So there is no question, really, of there being interference with the information that may be coming to the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Macdonald: I would not accept the distinction which the hon. member is trying to draw. He says, "I only want one side of the correspondence". I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that while this would perhaps not be as revealing as submitting all the correspondence, it certainly would have the inhibiting effect to which I referred earlier. If one were to make available by way of notice of motion for the production of papers particular information which might be referred to in correspondence coming back from the force to the particular individual, it would be entirely possible for as much damage to be done as if the whole correspondence was revealed.

I would point out that it has been established for a long time in this house that correspondence or proceedings of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in connection with investigations—and investigations in this case would include particular investigations and correspondence they might have in their general investigative function—are privileged and should not be revealed either in answer to questions or in response to notices of motions for the production of papers.

I would refer the house to a number of citations in Hansard where this question has been raised and the privilege has been recognized. In 1939, in Hansard at page 1669, the Hon. Ernest Lapointe, the then minister of justice, revealed that certain charges which had been made had been further investigated, but he refused to disclose any further information as to the nature of those investigations or what was revealed, in view of the fact that it would be contrary to the public interest to do so. If I might, Mr. Speaker, I would refer particularly to a statement made in this house by the former minister of justice, the former hon. member for Kamloops who was replying to a colleague of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), namely the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). This will be found in Hansard for July 8, 1958, at page 2047. The question raised by the hon. member was as follows:

> Does the R.C.M.P. maintain any files or dossiers on members of parliament?

The second part of the question was:

> If so, upon which members of the present parliament are such files or dossiers maintained?

The reply of the minister of justice at that time was as follows:

> All Royal Canadian Mounted Police files on individuals are confidential and many are secret. One of the primary duties of all those responsible for such files is to respect and preserve the confidential or secret nature of their contents.
> It will be appreciated also that a large number of such files are started by reports, statements or knowledge of activities coming to the attention of responsible members of the police which they are bound to investigate in the course of their duties. The follow-up on such reports in many cases reveals no necessity for further action, yet there is still a file. This means that many files will be in existence under the names of individuals against whom there is nothing of a substantial, let alone a criminal, nature.

I would point out that what the former minister of justice said on that occasion applied directly to the contents of those files, namely the correspondence both to and from the R.C.M.P., which may have related to allegations about individuals, allegations about organizations, or information generally which may have been of assistance to the police in their investigative activities. The minister of justice at that time pointed out a second and, I would submit, substantial reason why information of this kind could not be made available in the house on notices of motions for the production of papers. He referred to the fact that particular individuals, perfectly innocent individuals, may well be prejudiced by putting on the public record correspondence to and from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police relating to them. We could even reach the point where statements about a particular individual, as one assumes happens very often, which are sent to the R.C.M.P. with malicious intent, are made public, and the individual may be entirely innocent of the charge or the allegation that is made. Subsequent investigation, as the minister pointed out in that particular case, may well indicate that there is no substance at all in the rumour. But if the production of that correspondence had been compelled in the house, we would have the situation where the individual would be prejudiced by having an allegation put on the public record, and no amount of denial could help to eradicate a certain amount of suspicion or a certain amount of prejudice—

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the parliamentary secretary a question? Did he not read an alleged statement by the deputy commissioner in charge of the branch which contained statements about a certain union? As a matter of fact, it is a union to which I believe the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Byrne) is proud to belong? Given a statement of this kind by the commissioner, given this kind of connection between the Alert Service and the R.C.M.P. which has been acknowledged by the R.C.M.P., what is likely to be so terrible in terms of general consequences about either answering the questions I put to the minister or letting me have the correspondence? Surely, there is a wrong being done the other way.

Mr. Macdonald: I do not think that follows at all. I have no reason to believe either that the statement was or that it was not accurate. I know there has from time to time been considerable criticism of, I believe it was, the Canadian intelligence service as well as the Alert Service, to which he has now made reference. I do not know whether that statement was accurate or not, but I think that statement would only be made by a responsible official such as the gentleman who is now in charge of the R.C.M.P., after full investigation of the validity of the facts upon which it is based. I suggest there is a broad distinction between a situation where the police have investigated a particular situation and established the validity of the facts, and the situation where some malicious individual may write in to the R.C.M.P. raising charges against a perfectly innocent individual and thereby causing prejudice to him.

I refer to the fact that it has been substantially accepted in this house for many years that the documentation and, in fact, the investigative activities of the police generally should not be gone into either by questions or the production of papers. I would refer hon. members to Hansard of April 28, 1952, at page 1646, in connection with a notice of motion for the production of papers brought by the former leader of the hon. gentleman, the former member for Rosetown-Biggar, Mr. Coldwell. This was a notice of motion by the hon. gentleman in connection with certain investigations which had been carried on by the R.C.M.P. under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. The then minister of justice, the Hon. Stuart Garson took the position that it would be against the public interest to make public the particular documents required. He went on to say:

> The reasons for the taking of this position will be obvious to anyone who gives the matter thought. Not only are the police investigators instructed to ascertain all the relevant facts, but they are encouraged to submit to their superior officers their own theories and their own hypotheses as to what interpretations might be drawn from these facts in further investigation into the matter. They are encouraged to suggest further lines of inquiry. They are encouraged, and indeed instructed, in the case of an investigation into a crime, to suggest in strictest confidence all those whom they regard as possible suspects, however slight may be their own reasons for suspecting these other persons, in order that their superior officers to whom these confidential reports are made may, by considering these confidential reports along with other confidential reports received from other investigating officers, draw conclusions as to what further investigations may be necessary, or even ultimate conclusions as to guilt and the identity of the guilty party or parties.

The various debates to which I have referred on this particular question make it abundantly clear that it could only have the effect of inhibiting the activities of the R.C.M.P. in the discharge of its legitimate police duty.

Mr. Fisher: That is what is being done.

Mr. Macdonald: The disclosure of this would not only have the effect of inhibiting this police function but it could also result in a prejudicial effect on particular individuals who might be referred to in correspondence of this type. It is for this reason I feel that all hon. members should oppose the passing of this motion and it is in this connection that I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he might fall in line with precedents and withdraw his motion.

Mr. Fisher: I will withdraw the motion as soon as the parliamentary secretary gives me some answer that is satisfactory to the two questions I raised, the two possible questions.

Mr. Macdonald: I pointed out to the hon. member that I cannot from my own personal knowledge answer that particular question. I also pointed out to him that as a general principle it would not be desirable to submit the material to the type of cross-examination which might be involved in questions of that kind.

Mr. Scott: Would the hon. gentleman permit one further question? Would he undertake to familiarize himself with the correspondence and give the hon. member for Port Arthur his answer on another day? We could adjourn the debate in the interval?

Mr. Macdonald: I am prepared to consider that suggestion but I feel on the basis of general principle it would not be desirable for me to set a precedent, or for hon. members to set a precedent, which would require someone in my position to go back and examine a document, to speak to the police about this, and come back to the house with excerpts from it or conclusions or statements made on it. I would go on the general principle that it would be against the public interest for this particular statement to be produced in parliament.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I just wish to make a few comments in connection with this motion. I should like first of all to say that the question of discretion as to what if any information in the files of the mounted police is made available, should be left to the Minister of Justice and the R.C.M.P. I realize the hon. member for Port Arthur has raised a somewhat novel point. He wants one way correspondence to be given without necessarily the replies. Yet I think it is the old case of being unable to confirm or deny that certain information exists because, in such confirmation or denial, important admissions might be made.

I will admit that during the last year there have been certain apparent shortcomings in the security system of the R.C.M.P. These have been shown in several cases which have been brought before the house. I think such shortcomings are natural under a system such as ours and under the system under which the R.C.M.P. operate. They do not operate in a world of facts. They operate in a world of suggestion, conclusion and even inference, which is repugnant to a good many of our basic concepts. Yet when it comes down to a fine point we have to accept this system as preferable to having no proper security, or insufficient security in this country. There is a very fine line between what can be revealed and what cannot be admitted, and that line we cannot here undertake to define. I believe that definition must be left in the hands of that authority.

In this particular case I would expect the R.C.M.P. would not give the information requested by the hon. member. In all conscience I would not expect them to do so. I believe that what the hon. member is getting at is that the R.C.M.P. may be using this agency in order to get certain names put before the public, which it cannot do itself.

Mr. Fisher: And which it will not give to us.

Mr. Aiken: And which it will not give to anyone, and for which it will not accept responsibility because it is based on this very realm of suspicion, of consequential facts of evidence gathered up, which is not always conclusive. If this is the case, and we can only speculate about it, I would not expect the mounted police to admit it, nor would I expect they would deny it. I do not know how we could expect an answer to this particular question. We must, of course, always be alert and see that individual cases of hardship and of unjust suspicion must be cleared up, which in our free society can be followed up, so that the names of certain innocent individuals who are suspected are cleared. These are cases of recognized publications. I know of one which the hon. member referred to, a publication called "Northern Neighbours". It happens to be published in the community in which I reside, and it is no secret that it is a communist publication. Neither is it any secret that it is published in my area, and I must admit I get a lot of letters about it. Nevertheless I do not suppose that even if the mounted police were asked about this publication they would include it in a list. I have no hesitation in stating here that this is a communist newspaper, is accepted as such, and is in fact published under the sponsorship of the communist party of Canada. I do not think it is an illegal publication; if it were illegal it would not be published. Nevertheless I feel we cannot go into this situation by expecting an answer, which would open the door to a good many more. I sympathize with the objective of the hon. member in keeping alert—

Mr. Fisher: Could I just ask a question. Would the hon. member condone the activity of the R.C.M.P. in providing an agency such as this, which it calls reputable, with a list of subversive organizations for publication while at the same time the R.C.M.P., through the Minister of Justice, refuses to acknowledge that there really is such a list or that it should be given to members of parliament? This hardly seems to me to be the way a democracy should function.

Mr. Aiken: No, I would not condone that at all, if that be the case. I would not think it a proper use of this particular organization or of the services of the mounted police if that were so. Unfortunately, I do not feel that we can expect them to admit or deny it.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member who has just taken his seat permit me to ask him a question. The question which comes to my mind is whether he would agree that we should be able to know whether or not the R.C.M.P. is giving information to a voluntary organization which it is not prepared to give to the members of this house. It seems to me that is the nub of the question which is being asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). It has nothing to do, in my submission, either with the argument advanced by the last speaker or by the parliamentary secretary. I think this is an important question.

Mr. Aiken: Perhaps we are trying to do indirectly what could not be done directly. If the question: "What organizations are considered communist-dominated, and what publications are so classed?" were put on the order paper, I do not suppose it would be answered.

Mr. Fisher: For the information of the hon. member I might tell him that I have put such a question on the order paper for a number of years, and the response of the government is always that it is not their policy to do this. More than one minister of justice has given this same reply; also the parliamentary secretary has this afternoon confirmed it.

Mr. Aiken: In reply to the last three questions—I am not going to talk the motion out—the overriding consideration in this situation must be the security of the nation. I do not think we can direct the R.C.M.P. as to how they operate. If they choose to operate in this manner, then I do not think we can prevent it. For example, if we asked the C.I.A. either to acknowledge or deny that they had anything to do with the flying of explosives into Cuba by the two Canadians who were recently arrested there, I do not think they would do so, and I certainly would not expect them to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Shall I call it six o'clock? I must advise the house that the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired. Before I call it six o'clock may we revert to committee and resume the business interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $7,648,800.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, at the time of adjournment of this discussion I was dealing with the question of admission to the organization of American states. I am not going to say any more on that point except to refer to a pamphlet issued by the Canadian-American committee entitled "Canada and the Organization of American States". The minister, of course, is thoroughly conversant with this pamphlet in which the arguments both pro and con are given.

In summary, the arguments in favour of membership are that Canada would play a constructive part in international diplomacy in the western hemisphere and have closer trading and economic relations. Both these arguments are cogent ones. As already stated, during our period in office we greatly extended the field of our relationship with these countries in the western hemisphere. We realize, as all hon. members realize, that we are indeed in the western hemisphere and that the interests of the countries within that hemisphere are our interests.

On the other hand, the arguments cited against are first, as already pointed out, that Canada would be placed in an awkward position. Then there is the political argument that the commonwealth connection weighs against full Canadian participation. There is the argument that membership would be costly and a heavy burden. We would also find ourselves involved politically in every disagreement, difficulty or revolution in central or South America. In the organization a decision is binding on all if it is supported by two thirds of the members, but consent to use armed forces is not governed by the same majority vote. The cumulative effect of the demand that we participate in insurrection, revolution, rebellion or other internal difficulty is something that we in Canada should not assume unless there are advantages far outweighing the potential difficulties that caused us to delay and to defer taking action. The same course has been followed by the present government, despite the views expressed by the minister and by the Prime Minister.

I referred to the Prime Minister earlier. There is one quotation I think I should place on the record, a statement made by him on April 27, 1961. He said that he thought the only piece of advice he had given to the minister was, to use his words as found on page 4085 of Hansard:

> —sympathetic consideration should be given by the minister now to something which he seemed to be considering very sympathetically a year or so ago, the problem of Canadian association with the organization of American states.

Now, sir, what I intend to do is deal with several subjects, endeavouring to follow as closely as I can the order in which the minister presented his argument when he dealt with Canada's membership in the various organizations and then with Canada's responsibilities. He mentioned, among other things, that I would have some knowledge of the situation in Yemen. He pointed out that Canada had a representative group under the United Nations in that distracted country. He did not go into any detail regarding the position of the United Arab Republic, which placed some 30,000 men in that country to uphold the revolutionary government that took over, nor did he deal with the resolutions of the United Nations in that connection. He did express the view that it would not be very long, as I understood him, before this Yemen problem would be solved. The solution, of course, would require the removal of these troops. Personally, I do not believe there is any possibility of the removal of any substantial portion of the troops of the United Arab Republic from Yemen this year or even next. Therefore, consideration will have to be given to additional members being recruited, through the United Nations, for the observation unit there.

I feel I should now pass to a personal matter having to do with a visit I made during the month of September to the United Arab Republic and also to Israel. I want to say immediately that it was my first visit to the United Arab Republic. The respect and regard for Canadians in that country is heartwarming. I had made available to me an aircraft to take me all over that country. I met not only the prime minister but the foreign minister, who is an old friend of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Fawzi. I had a long talk with President Nasser. The hospitality and warm consideration shown to me and to my wife, on behalf of Canada, was heart-warming. We saw evidence of the dramatic building of a nation. We saw a great desert in which vast improvements have taken place, one of which is the construction of the Aswan dam. When it is finished, it will provide the last source of water for that vast country and it will mean that only 4 per cent of the entire area will be cultivatable. The only hope that they have of this desert blooming as the rose is that ultimately solar power may be used to produce water for the soil from the sea.

I visited the United Nations emergency force. The commanding officer, an Indian, was one of the most striking men I have ever met, Major General P. S. Gyani. I visited the Canadian corps and saw there something of the contribution that Canada has made. Out of a force of 5,100 on the Gaza strip, one fifth are Canadians.

I realize that some will not agree with the view I am about to express. President Nasser impresses me as a man with tremendous capacity and ability, dedicated to the building of his country. While from time to time he makes speeches that are inflammatory against Israel, I believe that the attitude of the leaders in Egypt and in Israel has greatly ameliorated the bitterness of a few years ago. Prophecy is one of the most dangerous pursuits in which one in politics can indulge, but on the basis of discussions with the president and other representatives of the United Arab Republic, I do not believe that they have in contemplation the launching of any attack against Israel.

Now then, the government is one that practises state trading, a kind of totalitarian socialism. It decries communism and at the same time it has close relationships with those who are communist. Marked changes have taken place in the past few years. Education has been widely extended in the desire to raise standards, and this gives one the impression President Nasser is a leader with an ambition in life to restore something of the ancient grandeur of his country, which had one of the earliest civilizations. At the same time he seeks to maintain the peace.

Following my visit to Egypt for a week, I went to Israel. This was my second visit there and the changes in 10 years are beyond words to describe. The discoveries, the archaeological excavations, have established beyond peradventure that the Old Testament is in fact not only a book of faith but a true book of history. Practically everything in the Old Testament that was regarded by the agnostic as being fairy tale has been proven, in the light of 10 years' excavations, to be fact.

I was received by the president and met the prime minister, the minister of foreign affairs and other members of the cabinet. I met David Ben-Gurion who spoke in glowing terms of Canada and referred to several hon. gentlemen opposite, two of whom are before me at the moment—the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Justice—in a way that would have warmed their hearts. He the warrior, dreamer, idealist and statesman is now retired and belongs to that exclusive club of ex-prime ministers.

I again saw something of the awful refugee problem, and I spoke with all these leaders. Mr. Chairman, 10 years ago I would not have made the suggestion I am now about to make, and I make it because I have met with the leaders of both these countries. While the Arab world has always strongly held the view that Israel should never have been created as a state, while they contend that the Balfour declaration of 1917 was one that ought not to have been made, and while they have refused at all times to meet with representatives of the Israeli government, I think there is a change of attitude in both these countries, and a recognition of the fact that Israel is there to stay and wants to live in peace with its neighbours.

Without peace Israel cannot achieve the greatness of her destiny. I have already spoken of the international force, UNEF, I decry no one else's contribution to the setting up of that force, but I do point out that in January 1956 I suggested an international force be set up to protect and ensure the boundaries between Israel and her neighbours. It was not regarded as a serious suggestion, but it was adopted later that year.

That force is not strong enough to maintain the peace. It is not intended to do that. It is there for the purpose of observation, with a minimum of security assured. The difficulty between Israel and the Arab states is one of the potential dangers in the world today, and I think if it were possible to get representatives of the U.A.R. and other Arab states to meet with representatives of Israel in discussion, there might well be a possibility of achieving a degree of agreement which has been wanting since 1948. The boundary and refugee problems may be nearer solution than could have been hoped for even two years ago, and it should not be forgotten that Canada has a high reputation in these countries.

In his speech last January the Secretary of State for External Affairs said we should look at the radar screen, as it were, of world affairs and determine on some definite courses to be taken by Canada. I am now following that suggestion. Canada, without ulterior or selfish purpose, is not suspect by either side, and it must be remembered there can never be a solution of any problem if those who disagree cannot come together. But 18 feet of carpet between opposition and government does not constitute isolation one from the other. No government is unaffected by the arguments advanced by the opposition. No opposition is unaffected by the stands taken by the government, no matter how in the course of discussion we may disagree with them.

In Canada, Jews and Arabs live in amity, and I suggest that Canada should now take preliminary steps to sound out the Arab nations and Israel, with a view to bringing together representatives of these nations in Canada to discuss their problems and difficulties, so that peace with understanding and justice may be brought to the Middle East. I think that action at this time would prove of beneficial result, and there can be no harm done if there is failure the first time in endeavours made in that direction.

I now pass on to the commonwealth, one of the unique institutions to which we belong. I felt the minister treated it very lightly with two or three sentences, and then went on to other matters. I am not going to discuss the commonwealth this evening, except to say that so long as Canada remains within the commonwealth, so long as there is that binding union, that magnetic influence east and west and over all the world, so long as that continues then we in Canada are assured of maintaining our independent existence.

From time to time I hear people speaking about what the results would be if we were to join the United States. I simply point out that all the guaranteed rights of biculturalism, education, and so on, would no longer exist; and they only exist because of the action of an imperial parliament far removed from this country which passed legislation generations ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Many who come to our country have no concept of what this means in their first years in Canada. They have said of the commonwealth, "What is it? It has no seal; it is not held together by the sword; it has a few preferential trade rights; in general it has a common parliamentary tradition"—and that is disappearing—"but what is there?" It is undefinable; I have never been able to understand its meaning. I have sat in a prime ministers' conference, with the prime minister of the United Kingdom as the chairman and the rest of us around a table, of different colours, of different races, of almost all the religions of men. We are able to agree on the larger things that affect mankind. While there are disagreements between countries like India and Pakistan, no one in the commonwealth family believes the day will ever come when there will be war between them. In other words, the commonwealth knows what peace means, and the commonwealth knows how to achieve peace among people, without regard to the differences of colour and race. That being so, I think when we are expanding aid and technical assistance we ought to give foremost consideration to raising standards within the commonwealth and giving countries within the commonwealth an opportunity to raise themselves.

They talk about Britain as a colonial power. She was a colonial power in 1914, when only 10 per cent of the people of the then empire had freedom. Today the figure is about 96 per cent. They have all grades and varieties of government, every level of economic development. I think it would be a forward step for the strengthening of the commonwealth and the cause of peace if we had set up within the commonwealth a commonwealth loan and assistance organization, financed by all the countries of the commonwealth that have achieved freedom, for the benefit of those who have become members within the last three years or so and those who will become members in the years ahead. I would like to see action taken so that the commonwealth prime ministers conferences, which after all are of the essence in binding the commonwealth together, would meet from time to time in various parts of the commonwealth—not in rotation, but with a major portion of the meetings being held in London and with meetings held from time to time in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the other countries of the commonwealth, so that we would all get to know each other better.

Having referred to the commonwealth, Mr. Chairman, I now come to our relations with the United States. I am not going to go over the ground that was covered on the day of the tragedy. I am going to speak of the new President. All of us heard him yesterday. He is a great parliamentarian, a man who, with his forceful simplicity, was able to catch the imagination of mankind in a 25-minute speech. The Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the continuance of the dialogue between Canada and the United States. I would have had a lot more to say on this if this debate had taken place a week or so ago. I am going to refrain from doing that on this occasion. But I do say, that the more general the dialogue and the more continuous the peregrinations in the last few months, the more accelerated the difficulties between our countries. I think that instead of this travelling back and forth, a little more diplomacy and less showmanship would be more effective. I also point out that it was said in January, 1963, that we were going to suffer because of the anti-Americanism of the government; that there would be a great withdrawal of investment funds in Canada. At no time did the previous government complain about investment in Canada. What it said was that all investment in our country, welcome as it was, should be designed to benefit Canada's destiny. In other words, if investment became an immigrant into our country, it should be such that would adopt Canadianism when it reached here.

Things were going to change, Mr. Chairman; the dialogue was going to bring about tremendous results. What happened? I am not going to repeat what has been said in connection with the budget, but I am going to point out that the dominion bureau of statistics quarterly report issued on November 26 shows that capital coming into Canada through sales of Canadian securities to foreigners amounted to $98 million in the third quarter of 1963; that is the period July, August and September. This is the period in which this government, then in office for several months, said there was going to be an investment attraction to Canada under the new diplomacy. What is the record? In the second quarter—that is, April, May and June—the amount was $391 million. In the first quarter of 1963 it was $410 million. In the fourth quarter of 1962 it was $386 million, an average of about $390 million for those three quarters. This government takes over, and there is a falling away in United States investment in our country of approximately $300 million in a period of three months. I point this out as evidence that this government in its dialogues seems to be engaged in a monologue. I do not intend to say more, except that this followed the action of a government which was going to open a new stage of Canadian-United States relations. Yet the last three months has seen the lowest figure in a period—and here I am speaking from memory—covering some eight quarterly returns. This is something which deserves attention and it is one which places the mark of Cain on the tinkering which has gone on by this government in its relations with the United States—a kind of tinkering which is described by the government as dialogue. A withering of our investment in that manner and in that proportion spells difficulty for this nation.

Our attitude is this: Companies investing in Canada should be required to obey the laws of Canada. At the time of the Cuban crisis—and I am not going to deal with that this evening, but events have proved we were right in the attitude we took in October of 1962—the contention of the United States was that because they had decided they were not going to deal with Cuba, we could not deal with Cuba in non-strategic materials. We took the stand that Canada would determine its own policies without direction. In so far as investment is concerned in those areas of the Northwest Territories controlled by this nation, we had the law changed so that none but Canadians could take out mining licences, licences for oil and the like. If there was development, 50 per cent had to be made available to Canadians. It was said at that time that this would kill United States investment in Canada. As a matter of fact, there was a tremendous expansion of investment in those areas. I ask the government to give an explanation for this document, issued only two days ago, a document which disposes of all the froth of the argument that the present government has the answers in Canadian-United States relations.

I turn to the other organization in which we have membership, the United Nations. The minister paid a most eloquent tribute to the United Nations, and rightly so. He told us about the development which has taken place, about the expansion which has been witnessed; how all Canadians had hoped this institution would be all-embracing. I am not sure what the membership is today. I believe it is around 112. I hear someone say it is 111. Well, it was not all-embracing to begin with. I was in San Francisco in a humble capacity in 1945. No one could have dreamed that that body would have the membership it has today, and there will be further increases. It is an amazing institution. It is 18 years of age. The league of nations died at 16 years of age. At 18 one goes through a bewildering change. The United Nations is doing the same. There are some problems in connection with it, and the minister has mentioned them, including the need of action to require member nations to make their contributions. The hon. gentleman dealt with that matter at length. I know what he is trying to achieve. It is a preposterous proposition, that because a nation is strong and powerful it can say: I belong to the club but I won't pay the membership fees. That is what it amounts to. It amounts to saying: I want to be a member and I want all the privileges, but I want somebody else to pay. It is all right if you can do that, but it will not, in the United Nations, assure the preservation of that body.

I notice the minister did not deal with a matter he raised outside the House of Commons—an increase in the membership of the security council. That is desirable. It is necessary so that representation may be secured for the many groups of nations in Africa, in Asia and in other parts of the world. That is the ideal. But it cannot be achieved without the consent of the U.S.S.R. and there is every evidence, if the information I have is correct, that it would impose a veto. The question of seats in the United Nations is one which my hon. friend from Oxford will deal with at length, from the vast experience he has had of that body. I do not intend to say more, except that we in Canada should make clear our view that nations should be required to pay their dues.

The United Nations has brought about the end of many serious difficulties. I do not intend to read out the list I have here, but for those who are interested, the Canadian foundation for education in world law has an article in the current issue of its journal entitled "Peace in Our Time". It shows the number of wars and revolutions in all parts of the world since 1945, and it is an amazing list. Some of us fail to realize, sometimes, that while we have lived in peace, among a vast proportion of the nations on the earth there have been wars throughout this period of time. And there would have been more, but for the United Nations.

I feel that while it might be arguable that when the cold war softens we ought not to bring up matters which could be provocative, we should do more than just enunciate in the House of Commons our belief in non-discrimination and in the right of self-determination. I feel that the present government should continue what this party endeavoured to bring about, namely support of the members of the United Nations for a resolution calling on the U.S.S.R. to give to the subjugated peoples under its control or the control of its satellites the right to determine for themselves their future course. We think in this regard of the subjugation of people in Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary and the Ukraine; we also think of Latvia and other countries of the Baltic. I heard Khrushchev say that he believed in self-determination, that with him this was a basic principle. Because of the overwhelming number of foreign races who are members of the United Nations today, colonialism is not regarded as colonialism if only the right white race is involved.

It is hard to get support from those of the coloured race, the minister will agree, to join in a resolution against the U.S.S.R. for its tyranny over the people of Europe and elsewhere. Last year and the year before we endeavoured to bring about such a resolution, but we did not have the general support we had hoped for. At the NATO conference in Paris in December of 1957 I was able to secure the inclusion of a term in a resolution calling upon the U.S.S.R. to assure the peoples under its control their right to determine their own destiny. I should like to see a strong stand taken in that connection.

There is something more I find rather difficult to understand. The minister dealt in grandiloquent terms with the question of racial non-discrimination. In view of that I find it difficult to understand why the Canadian vote was not cast in the third committee of the United Nations in favour of a resolution against discrimination. But, no, Canada abstained. The hon. member for Winnipeg South announced our abstention. The excuse given was that some constitutional principle in Canada would be infringed.

I have this resolution before me, Mr. Chairman, and I should like to read a portion of it to show the kind of resolution from which we abstained. I would ask why the government of Canada abstained. The resolution says, in part:

> The general assembly,
> Considering that the United Nations declaration on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination provides that the United Nations, the specialized agencies, states and non-governmental organizations should do all in their power to ensure the abolition of all forms of discrimination based on race, colour or ethnic origin,
> Considering the great importance of the speedy implementation of this declaration in order to liquidate all forms of racial discrimination as soon as possible,
> Considering it essential that, as a step towards the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, the declaration should be made known throughout the world,
> 1. Requests that all states shall undertake all necessary measures in order to implement fully, faithfully and without delay the principles contained in the United Nations declaration on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination.

The reason was, so it was said, because of article 9 of the resolution, which says:

> 1. All propaganda and organizations based on ideas or theories of the superiority of one race or group of persons of one colour or ethnic origin with a view to justifying or promoting racial discrimination in any form shall be severely condemned.
> 2. All incitement to or acts of violence, whether by individuals or organizations, against any race or group of persons of another colour or ethnic origin shall be considered an offence against society and punishable under law.
> 3. In order to put into effect the purposes and principles of the present declaration, all states shall take immediate and positive measures, including legislative and other measures, to prosecute and/or outlaw organizations which promote racial discrimination or incite to or use violence for purposes of discrimination based on race, colour or ethnic origin.

Canada abstained from voting and as a result got a black eye. The vote finally came up in the assembly. The question was also raised in this house, as I recall it, and the excuse, as I say, was that some constitutional principle was at stake. After a lot of argument in the United Nations someone finally suggested that a few words should be added, and in the passage which reads—> —to prosecute and/or outlaw organizations which promote racial discrimination—

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

—they added the three words "or incite to" so that it read:

> —to prosecute and/or outlaw organizations which promote or incite to racial discrimination.

Then Canada voted in favour of the resolution, as did all the nations. I cannot understand why Canada abstained in the committee on a matter which is inherent in our constitution. This principle is inherent not only in our bill of rights, but it is one inherent in the stand taken by the commonwealth at the prime ministers' conference, and is now accepted throughout the commonwealth. It is true that two or three weeks afterwards, following some contemplation and the addition of those words, which are to say the least meaningless, there was a change of attitude. But I should like the minister to explain by what variety of aberration did Canada's representatives give to Canada internationally an image contrary to the basic principles of this country, namely freedom from discrimination. The Christian Science Monitor of November 22 has this to say:

> The United States, indeed the entire western bloc, has just averted by a semantic eyelash a major collision with that two thirds of the world which is non-white.

Both the house and the country have the right to know why Canada took this stand. I received three or four letters from India, from Pakistan, from one country in Africa, asking me why Canada abstained on this question of non-discrimination. I am glad they took a second view of this, but it will take a long time to eradicate the effect of Canada, with regard to a resolution that commands the support of Canadians as a whole and would commend itself to all Canadians, abstaining on the basis of a comma or the absence of one or two words.

Mention was made by the minister of peacekeeping machinery. He did not go as far as he has gone on previous occasions in that connection. He has argued in the past that the United Nations should have a permanent force, but he did not go that far today. He spoke of improving the peacekeeping machinery of the United Nations. That is all to the good; but I do hope that before Canada arrives at any decision to support the setting up of an international United Nations force, parliament will have the opportunity of discussing it.

I am not speaking about these peacekeeping forces at all. When we were in office we designated one infantry battalion for service under the United Nations flag, and although Canada has since taken part in peacekeeping operations, the unit has never been used or called for. While the minister and the Prime Minister go about speaking about the necessity of this force under United Nations control, we have to go outside the House of Commons to find out what the situation is. Today the Minister of National Defence spoke in Toronto.

The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs are all for this force. There are tremendous difficulties in the way. If you set up a body under the United Nations, is it going to be recruited only from the small nations? Are you going to recruit Britishers or Americans or Russians? When you form this force, does it take its direction from the United Nations regardless of the feelings of the respective nations whose forces are used? How often in the last few years it has been found difficult, if not impossible, to use Canadians in certain areas because Canadians are white and the coloured races do not want white armed forces from the United Nations.

Suppose the kind of United Nations force contemplated by the minister and the Prime Minister is set up. What happens? Suppose Canada says: We do not want to be at war with nation A. Must the members of the force from Canada take the direction of the United Nations rather than that of their own nation? One has only to ask the question to realize, with conditions of nationalism being what they are today, the impossibility of setting up such a force. Again I say that does not deny peacekeeping machinery, but it does deny the setting up of such a force powerful enough to act under the direction of the United Nations.

I said a moment ago that we had to find out outside the house what the situation is. As found on page 12 of the speech delivered to the Empire club of Toronto today by the Minister of National Defence, the minister said:

> Neither the secretary general nor any major power group within the United Nations has shown any enthusiasm for such a permanent force.

That may be the reason the minister did not press it today; but for the last two or three months the airwaves have been filled by the public statements of the minister and the Prime Minister on the dedication of this country to the setting up of such a force.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my right hon. friend permit me to say to him that I have listened with interest to what he has been saying. I do not take issue with what he has said. If there was evidence in the United Nations at the present time that a United Nations police force could be set up, this government would certainly give support to that idea but, as my right hon. friend knows, at the present time there is not the disposition to give support to such an idea and we have been trying to achieve it within a more limited sphere.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a very interesting observation because I want to refer now to what the Minister of National Defence said as to the proper course when he spoke today. He went on to say:

> It would appear then that the most satisfactory solution is to have well balanced, broadly trained forces to draw from as required.

That just shows the cleavage between ministers in the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no cleavage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize that the hon. gentleman always finds difficulty in seeing that the antithesis to something is not the same. I point out that the minister has quite frankly admitted that if the other nations would favour such a force Canada would then be in the van along with them; but the other nations are not going to have it, so my earlier request that parliament should have the opportunity to examine the matter fully before such a force comes into effect is surplusage.

One tries to follow in the sequence taken by the minister the various matters he discussed. Without a prepared script, but simply anticipating what might be considered to be important, I have endeavoured to place before the house as objectively as possible the views of the opposition. We share with the government—no party has a monopoly in this regard—the desire that the objective, the dedication and the first consideration of all of us shall and must be peace with justice, a world under law, a world in which each nation will regard itself as a keeper of all other nations.

In external affairs we try at all times to maintain an essential unity. That unity will be maintained by the opposition whenever questions of external affairs come before the house. However, when one considers that the Hon. Howard Green for three long years, in the face of contemptuous ridicule, pursued the objective of ending nuclear tests as a preliminary to the wider field of ultimate disarmament, I am sure no one will object to my saying that, despite the outcome of the election, he has the satisfaction of knowing that he builded better than he dreamed.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, we in this party welcome the opportunity presented by the introduction of the estimates of this department to take advantage of the wide-ranging debate on Canada's role in international affairs. I, too, would like to congratulate the minister, who seems temporarily at least to have left the chamber, on his masterly review of world affairs. I must admit, however, I should have liked to hear something a little more definite about Canada's role and Canada's views on concrete international questions. I suspect other members would have liked to hear a little more definite information, too. I was reminded, Mr. Chairman, by his speech of what was once described as the two worst lines of English poetry ever written. They were written by Dr. Samuel Johnson, and he opened the poem with these words:

> Let observation with extensive view
> Survey mankind from China to Peru.

This seemed to me to be a fairly good description of the minister's speech. He spoke eloquently, for example, of the dangers of the isolation of a great country such as China. He told us, if I correctly heard his words, that it was not too soon for the west to rethink its relationship with China. I wish that he and his government had had the courage to announce official recognition of the existing regime in China, which is a fact of life whether or not we like it. If he had done so, Mr. Chairman, he would have given some substance to the generalities which he gave us in his speech.

The minister's observations—I see he is here now—about O.A.S. were, I thought, a beautiful example of his own inimitable style. He told us that the question of Canada's relationship with O.A.S. was under active review but that no conclusion whatever must be drawn as to whether he and his government favoured Canada's joining the organization, and that his answer to that question would be, maybe yes and maybe no. I think that is a rather typical example of the style of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In a remarkable speech made at American University in Washington on June 10 of this year, the late President Kennedy called upon his nation to reassess their position towards the cold war. I should like to refer briefly, Mr. Chairman, to some of the things that were said by the president on that occasion because I believe that they are extremely relevant to this particular debate. On that occasion, he said he had chosen a topic on which ignorance too often abounds and truth is too rarely appreciated. He said this was the most important topic on earth, peace. He spoke of peace, he said, because of the new face of war. Total war makes no sense, he said, where great powers can maintain large and relatively invulnerable nuclear forces and when a single nuclear weapon contains almost ten times the explosive force delivered by all the allied air forces in the last war. He referred to peace as the necessary rational end of rational men. He spoke of the dangerous belief that peace is impossible; the belief that we are gripped by forces we cannot control. He did not refer, he said, to absolute concepts of universal peace and good will.

I ask the house to note these words, and I quote:

> Let us focus instead on a more practical, a more attainable peace, based not on a sudden revolution in human nature but on a gradual evolution in human institutions—on a series of concrete actions and effective agreements which are in the interest of all concerned. There is no single, simple key to this peace—no grand or magic formula to be adopted by one or two powers. Genuine peace must be the product of many nations, the sum of many acts. It must be dynamic, not static, changing to meet the challenge of each new generation. For peace is a process—a way of solving problems.

I make no apology, Mr. Chairman, for quoting at length the words of the late president. It seems to me that it is within the framework of this approach that we in this house can most usefully discuss in this debate on the estimates on external affairs the part which Canada can play in the supremely important task of our generation, which is the building of a world community. That part will not consist of magic formulas or withdrawals from the harsh facts of life, but in steady support for concrete actions and effective agreements looking towards the evolution of an effective international order.

The members of all parties in this house agree about the importance of this objective, and will agree about many of the means required to achieve it. I, on behalf of my party, will emphasize those aspects of our international policies in which we believe that a new approach is required and in which we believe Canada lags at the present time.

First of all, we believe, as other members in the house no doubt do, that Canada must give its fullest support to the United Nations and its agencies. We believe that we should do all we can to advance the interests of the United Nations, for example—and this was discussed by the minister—by placing a contingent of Canadian troops permanently at the disposal of the United Nations secretariat. We believe we can assist other like-minded countries to make available to the United Nations a force which would be at least a step towards the rule of law throughout the world. I welcome what the minister said in this regard, and I sincerely hope that his words will be followed by actions. I know there are difficulties, but I do not see that these difficulties should prevent us from genuinely making available a force of this sort to the United Nations.

We believe that the present easing of tension between the east and the west, which has been symbolized by the test ban treaty, should be used for further steps forward. I have just returned, as have other members of the house, from a trip or visit—I do not use another word which I have seen used in the press—to Europe, during which we saw the massive array of military power with which each side in the cold war confronts the other. It is true that this massive confrontation of power creates, by reason of its deterrent effect, a sort of uneasy stability. It is true also, however, that while Germany remains divided and Berlin remains a democratic island behind the iron curtain, no assurance of final pacification in this key section of the world is possible. This is the reason that we, in this party, urge serious consideration of a demilitarized zone in Europe and the mutual withdrawal of nuclear striking power and other weapons as a step towards the eventual disbandment of opposing military blocs in Europe.

A companion step which might have great psychological value would be the negotiation of a non-aggression pact between NATO and the Warsaw pact countries. No one who has visited Europe and who has spoken to the leaders of the European countries thinks that the demilitarization of central Europe is an easy task, or one that will be accomplished overnight. It involves the preservation of balances and it involves a step by step approach. But we believe Canadian policies within the alliance should be directed to actively encouraging within Europe those who do not take a rigid stand and are prepared to start now on the road towards building eventual mutual confidence, which is essential for lasting peace if this important area is to be secure. But, Mr. Chairman, it is our view that the major areas of instability throughout the world are not in Europe, where the balance of nuclear power makes war of any sort an insane gamble on either side. The danger of instability throughout the world lies rather in Asia, in Africa and South America, where the tremendous revolutions of our times are creating new states and also new stresses.

Peace cannot be secured until the striking inequalities between rich and poor nations are reduced. Today as we see it—and it is true—the danger of conflict arises out of the cold war and the menace of communism; but this menace does not arise entirely from the massive military power of the Soviet union, real though that is, because it is effectively balanced by the equal and more massive power of the western alliance. It arises rather from the power of communism to exploit the urgent desire of the poverty stricken two thirds of the world to raise their living standards, even if this appears to require the acceptance of the coercive methods of communism. That is the real danger to the world, and that is the danger to which we should be paying more attention.

Social and political changes are pressing forward in the world today with increasing force. The big question is whether or not these forces will be channelled into the mould of communism, with its suppression of the individual, or whether these changes will find their expression within the framework of democratic systems which concern themselves with the rights and the worth of the individual. We believe a generous and effective international plan, on the same scale of generosity as the Marshall plan, which would enable countries such as India to take off on the way to expanding and self-sustaining economies, would be a contribution to defence and security just as important, if not more important, than the contribution to traditional methods of defence.

It does not seem to me that we in this house, in this country, or in the western world have begun to take this problem seriously. Only recently we had the opportunity to hear Mrs. Myrdal, a distinguished Swedish ambassador, talking to us about Sweden. She said that Sweden, with an average annual income of $2,000 per year, proposes during the next 10 years to increase its national income by 5 per cent per year, which would mean that in 20 years the average income would exceed $4,000 per year.

Most of the western democracies, although many of them lack the political and economic wisdom of the Swedes, are aiming at similar objectives, which they will achieve with varying degrees of success, as no doubt we shall in Canada, but take the contrast with India. Mrs. Myrdal pointed out to us that India, despite its high level of potential skill, and its plans for an expanded economy and a measure of international economic aid, is only able to increase its average annual income of $100 by approximately 1 per cent per annum, which would achieve a level of $120 per annum in 20 years. Therefore this grave disparity which now exists is accelerating at a tremendous pace.

We say it is necessary to plan internationally for an abundant world. It is necessary to make an effort on a scale far greater than we have done so far. This matter was discussed by the United Nations general assembly at its fifteenth session in 1962. The assembly expressed its hope that the flow of international assistance and capital to developing countries would be increased substantially, so as to reach as soon as possible approximately 1 per cent of the combined national incomes of the economically advanced countries.

I am aware, as of course are all hon. members, that on November 14 the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced an increase in the Canadian contributions to economic aid. This proposed increase, which is to come into effect in 1964-65, brings the Canadian contribution to $190 million a year, a good deal of it in the form of loans; but I would point out to the committee this will be less than half of the 1 per cent which the United Nations has suggested as a reasonable standard. We believe that even with this announced increase there remains a gross imbalance between Canada's contribution to economic aid and the sum of roughly $1.5 billion which Canada is spending annually on defence.

Our party, the New Democratic party, has been quite specific on this matter. We have committed ourselves to increasing economic aid to 2 per cent of the gross national income, roughly $800 million a year, more than four times the figure proposed by this government, and yet I point out less than half the amount we are currently spending, and have been for many years, on more traditional forms of defence.

I would like to point out to the committee that a halfhearted attempt to solve this problem of world poverty and to meet the urgent physical needs of the vast majority of the human race, is just not good enough. If we are to preserve freedom we must recapture the spirit of purpose and compassion. There is no doubt that we have the physical resources, but what we lack is the vision and the will to use them. I, and this party for which I am speaking, would like to see Canada lead and not lag in this field.

While I am speaking on the United Nations and the economic welfare of the world, I want to refer to a subject which sometimes people think it is tactless or wrong to mention. I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to tell us some time what stand Canada is taking in the United Nations, or anywhere else, to assist underdeveloped countries in the problem of population control. It is high time we stopped being mealy-mouthed about this issue and recognized that unrestricted population growth means that every effort to increase the standards of human living throughout the world and to abolish poverty will be frustrated. I think there is an international obligation on well developed countries to help other countries faced with this problem to do something about it.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I now want to turn to another problem. I believe it is absolutely essential that our defence policy be brought into harmony with our international policy. I know this is not a debate on defence policy, but the two are intimately linked. Our role in the world, which we express through our Department of External Affairs, must be supported by a posture of defence undertaken through the department of defence. Mr. Chairman, I might tell hon. members that the words "posture of defence" are something I picked up in my experience in the committee on defence.

We in this party believe, as I think most hon. members do, that our own security lies in the closest co-operation with those to whom we are linked by geography and history. In other words, we believe in the unity and the strength of the western alliance, but within this alliance Canada can play a more constructive and independent role. She can equip herself to carry out tasks that larger nations cannot do. Canada can seek a role which does not merely supplement what our allies can do well enough without us. There is no need for us to add to the forces of the type of which we already have a superfluity. We can undertake a role within the alliance, what has been expressed as the role of fire extinguisher or peacekeeper, which others in the alliance cannot do, or for a variety of reasons cannot do well.

I propose to conclude my remarks by making a serious complaint; nevertheless I hope it will be a constructive one. To me it is absolutely scandalous that neither in the last parliament nor in this session of this parliament has the committee on external affairs met, or been called to meet. I find this extremely strange under the present regime, because the Prime Minister, when he was secretary of state for external affairs and also when he was under secretary of state for external affairs, played a considerable part in seeking to enlarge the scope and the vitality of the parliamentary committee on external affairs. I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is it now the view of the government that interest in international affairs should be confined to a few departmental experts, or do they believe that the Canadian parliament should be concerned with these matters?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. gentleman, I hope we can set up the external affairs committee tomorrow morning, and sit next week. I share my hon. friend's desire to have this done.

Mr. Brewin: I hope the future actions of the minister and his government will not belie his words as much as his past actions have in this connection. It is pointed out to me, Mr. Chairman, that tomorrow will be the 100th day of this session, and I think we all hope the session is on the wane. I suggest it just is not good enough, in the type of world in which we live, not to have a committee on external affairs meeting until the 100th day of the session—if we are going to meet tomorrow morning, and I am not too certain of that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. Brewin: The minister says he agrees with me. He is in a position to do something about it, if he agrees with me. It seems to me that the regular meeting of the committee on external affairs is essential if members of parliament are to participate in the formulation of Canada's international policy and if they are to be able to interpret adequately to the Canadian people policies on international affairs. It has been suggested to me, and no doubt to other members of this committee, that when Canadian parliamentary representatives go abroad they sometimes have to take a back seat when international issues are being seriously discussed. If this is so—and I believe it is so, from what I have heard—I am quite sure it is not because of any natural deficiency of understanding on the part of Canadians or Canadian parliamentarians. I believe it is because the government has made too little effort to acquaint members of parliament with the problems of international affairs. I suggest that the failure to call the committee on external affairs into being is a symptom of this attitude.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues will no doubt wish to contribute to this debate, enlarge on some of the points I have made and raise others. I would like to conclude by telling the committee that we in this party seek, as I am sure all other members do, to contribute all that we can in hard thinking, intelligent planning and effective criticism to the strategy of peace, upon which the survival of all Canadians, and indeed of all humanity, depends.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, on rising to speak in this debate tonight I would first like to congratulate the minister upon the speech he made this afternoon, particularly on his flow of words and beautiful language in dealing with the subject that no doubt is nearest to his heart. We in Canada—and I could not help thinking about this, this afternoon as I listened to the minister's speech—must be more concerned, as Canadians, with specifics as they relate to our role in world affairs.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs gave us the chance to turn for a while from the domestic issues that so often engross us and look at ourselves, not simply as a country living unto itself but as a member of a world family of nations with certain duties and responsibilities, not simply to our own citizens but to others in many other parts of the world with whom we must maintain relationships. It has been my personal privilege and experience to spend some 17 years living and working amongst peoples of other lands, not at the level of the foreign diplomat but down at the level where people actually live. As a result of this experience I have become keenly aware of and am most interested in the affairs that take place in the world, their relationship to us and our responsibilities in regard to them. I regret that there is apparently so little interest in world affairs on the part of so many of our members, as is evidenced by the number of empty seats in the chamber. I do not think any one of us can deny the fact that we live in a world in which no man can consider himself alone; no man is an island unto himself, as it has been said. Yet so many of us as members of parliament do not seem to be interested enough in what is going on in the world as it relates to us to even concern ourselves with debates and discussions on this topic. I would remind the government of the fact that members of the government owe a greater responsibility to their Secretary of State for External Affairs than is indicated by the small number of members now sitting in the benches on the other side of the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would join the previous speaker in saying that I think one of our greatest shortcomings—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I point out to my hon. friend, since he has referred to the fact that many members are absent from the chamber, that there is a cabinet meeting being held tonight in connection with matters having to do with the proceedings of the federal-provincial conference. This is an important meeting.

Mr. Thompson: I thank the minister very much and I acknowledge the truth of what he has said. But the attendance in the chamber was not any better this afternoon, and certainly there ought to be more members present who are not participants in cabinet meetings tonight. I join the previous speaker in saying that I think one of the greatest shortcomings in the activities of this house is the fact that the committee on external affairs has not yet been set up. One of the things I looked forward to in coming to parliament was the opportunity and privilege of taking part in the proceedings and discussions of this committee. However, I have yet to be informed that such a meeting has ever been held or the committee has ever been established in any active way during this parliament or the last one.

I agree with the statement made by the hon. member to the effect that every one of our delegates on every one of the committees assigned to some foreign mission should be briefed very thoroughly and carefully in the matters that concern their appointment to these committees. Certainly, as we take part in international discussions we owe it to ourselves and to our friends to be just a little more concerned with and better informed on these matters.

As we push forward into this fascinating era of change, of which we are a part, one fact strikes me forcibly. That is, that man's increasing control over nature has given him a freedom and power in his actions that he has never before known. This increasing freedom and power in turn poses a moral challenge to mankind in the realm of behaviour such as he has never before known. We no longer regard warfare between nations as some glorified entertainment and adventure in the spirit of the middle ages. We cannot even regard gunboat diplomacy as a moral duty in bringing world enlightenment in the spirit of the colonial era. It is an odd commentary in this atomic age that that which is most likely to bring peace on earth and the cultivation of Christian virtues such as charity, integrity, patience and humility between nations of the world in the 1960's is not the pious moralizing of those who wish to act solely from principle. It is the sober assessment of the risks that go with any other kind of conduct in a world where the major powers have their hands perpetually on a nuclear hair-trigger. In considering this subject I think it is up to us to see that Canada indicates her full share of these virtues. In my experience I have often seen situations which have made me aware of the fact that Canada is held in much higher regard by our friends abroad than we are willing to admit and to demonstrate by our actions.

I was interested, today, to read in the Montreal Gazette that a visitor from Scotland, the Earl of Dundee, had made a long range prediction in Montreal that Canada might one day be a more powerful and influential force in the world than the United States. This might be wishful thinking on the part of someone who has perhaps a better impression of what we are than we have ourselves, yet there is a certain amount of truth in it. I also received a letter today from a Canadian school teacher who took a year off from her work and went to Australia. I had an opportunity to read her letter during the supper hour. She told me that, though very often she had been taken for an American because of her mannerisms and speech, immediately people learned she was from Canada there was a new expression of friendship on their faces. This applied not only during her stay in Australia but in the other countries through which she travelled. I have seen this happen over and over again, and it is something which has always perplexed me. How is it that we, as Canadians, enjoy so much good will among our friends across the world when, as a nation, we have actually done so little to deserve it? Perhaps it is because Canadians in their own pioneering way have gone out to accept opportunities to help their fellowmen, without a lot of show and publicity. The fact remains that we do enjoy a great deal of good will in the world and I am confident this has come about because of Canadian individuals, not because of anything which the Canadian nation has done.

If we could only understand this, I believe the prediction yesterday by this visitor who came to us from Britain might become something not far from the truth and that Canada might indeed be a more influential nation in the world than it is today—possibly more influential than the United States. We certainly do not suffer from the handicap under which many of our friends in other countries labour. We are not associated with a legacy of economic or colonial imperialism. In these circumstances we can make friends easier and our work does not give rise to those doubts and suspicions which so often fall on other nationals. But I am disappointed that we in Canada are not doing more to take advantage of this favourable position.

In my brief remarks tonight I should like to review our foreign policy as it affects four main areas with which we are associated. First, I should like to refer to the American hemisphere. We cannot think about our relations with our neighbours in this area without being mindful of the tragedy which hit the United States last week, in the cruel assassination of President Kennedy. Perhaps no world leader has had more world vision and backed it up with more dynamic action than did the late president. We feel very keenly, particularly right here in the American hemisphere, the loss of this leader in world affairs. It has been reassuring to us to hear the new President affirm his determination to go forward with the policies initiated by the late President Kennedy. It has been particularly welcome news to hear him say that action, rather than mere words, is needed now to tackle the question of civil rights in the United States. I think we can take a lesson from this in Canada. There is no reason why Canada should not be giving leadership in this area as well.

Living, as we do, in the shadow of the United States we sometimes think there is not very much we can offer in the way of leadership, so we follow along and adopt the attitude "me, too". I believe it is possible at this time for Canada to give leadership and direction, even to the United States, in regard to various aspects of foreign policy, certainly with regard to Central and South America.

I began to think this afternoon that the minister would not even refer to Latin America. Then, just before the close of his speech, he did mention the subject. I was disappointed that there was not more positive intention indicated in those parts of his speech which related to the situation in that area. He said the government was watching discussions which are now taking place within the organization of American states. He also said he thought public opinion was more favourable to Canada's taking a more active part in the affairs of that organization. I think that is sheer dilly-dallying. I am convinced we should be getting into the organization of American states, not just sitting back and watching what is taking place but carrying our own responsibility. How can we offer to be a good neighbour if we are not willing to show at least a neighbourly attitude? After all, the cost of friendship is friendliness. We do not show friendliness if we simply sit back in an armchair waiting for a more convenient time to take action.

As we sit here in Ottawa tonight it is worth remembering that Cuba, the West Indies and Central America are all closer to us than many of the extremities of our own nation. It is also worth remembering that in defiance of the Monroe doctrine which has kept American shores free from outside interference for a century and a half, Cuba is now a satellite of the Soviet union, pro-communist fronts are strong in most of the Latin American republics, and the United States alliance for progress has yet to get off the ground. I noticed a news report today which indicated that Haiti had been infiltrated by Cuban agents, and that it will not be long before there is more serious trouble in that country. We all know what is happening in British Guiana, in Venezuela, Bolivia, Colombia and Peru. In these circumstances we should not be waiting for the lid to blow off the kettle; we should be trying to do something about the situation while there is time. We, in Canada, cannot bury our heads in the sand and pretend these problems do not exist.

It was good to hear the minister say last week there would be increased aid to some of these countries and that the Caribbean islands, in particular, are to receive increased help. Here we have a group of islands whose whole affection looks toward Canada. These islanders expect Canada to do something to help them. I know this very well, because I am intimately acquainted with the area. Yet we have made such a little effort. We could, in fact, go in with a reasonable amount of assistance—something which we are completely capable of—and make a total effort which would leave its impact and achieve some results.

It is true, of course, that the amount of money poured into an area is not the only criterion of assistance. One of the greatest paradoxes in this postwar world is that the billions and billions of dollars of gift money from the United States has in so many instances failed to win friends or influence people. All too often it has caused suspicion and many times enmity. We do not have to sit back and think that, because we do not have the billions of dollars to give away, there is no other way to indicate friendship and demonstrate our intentions to be of assistance. In one important respect I believe we are in a position to help more than the United States, and that is in the realm of people. Canada with its strong and valued French Canadian background has people of Latin background, but yet who have the experience of our modern form of government and productive techniques who could be immensely helpful in making this concept of an alliance for progress work in the Latin American countries.

I have been greatly impressed by news reports in the last few days concerning a group of 70 Latin Americans now in Canada with a production called "El Condor", the story of how communist activities in the universities of Peru were beaten down by a new concept on the part of students who were looking for something but who before could not find it. Here we have Latin Americans coming to Canada and trying to help us in our problems. How much more could our own French Canadian people be spearheading the attack as far as friendship and development is concerned in the Latin American world. The Latin American situation is serious and is growing progressively worse. I believe the government would be failing to carry out its mandate if it did not take a greater part in the development of intercourse with Latin America immediately, not at some time in the future.

The second direction in which I would wish to turn our thoughts is to the commonwealth. I should like to congratulate the minister on the steps he has taken to stress the importance of this body in the security council of the United Nations. I should like to join with others who have commented on the value of the commonwealth in this day and age. I do not think the commonwealth of nations is something to be placed in the same category as the British empire, because I believe that if this community of nations, not tied together by treaties or formal bonds, yet having a greater base for understanding and unity than any group of nations, could get into high gear on the economic front and in friendly diplomacy, it could have a tremendous role to play in current affairs at this time.

We live in an age of machines and mechanical organizations. Many of our international institutions such as the United Nations and subsidiary bodies reflect this thought. Often enough we forget the power of something which has not been manufactured but which has grown, the power of something that is an organism, not just an organization. We forget that a concrete sidewalk can be cracked by a mushroom growing underneath it, as well as by a compressed air drill. We seem to be at a loss, not knowing how to organize the commonwealth in order to get results.

The point is that the commonwealth, however, is already here in that it is a living institution and as such does not need organizing. What it does need is to be set a task. Let it recognize its task, and as the experience of wartime has proven, every part will respond to meet the challenge as a whole. I have been in practically all of the countries of the commonwealth, if not all of them, and I have found that bond of affection and understanding which is difficult to explain. But it is that something which stands as one of our great potentials. In the commonwealth there are 700 million people. If we take both the developed parts and the undeveloped parts of the commonwealth we have, on the one hand, one of the greatest sources of productivity giving the things people need to live on, and on the other hand one of the greatest market areas in the world.

Therefore I suggest that we might use the commonwealth to this advantage. We do not need elaborate conferences; all we need is common thinking among commonwealth nations about the problems of ignorance, poverty, hunger and disease that plague the less developed nations of this world, and perhaps a common agreement to allocate different spheres of responsibility for foreign aid and assistance between the commonwealth nations.

To do this it is said that we need money. How can we trade if we do not have money? If there were 100 cattle in a field without pasture, and there was another field across the road where there was good pasture but no cattle, it would not take too long for the two farmers to get together for their mutual benefit. There is no reason at all why such a policy could not effectively be put to work in our commonwealth of nations. This could reach out to other friendly nations as well, because in this commonwealth of nations the friendship that forms its basic foundation along with a democratic form of government common to most, would immediately include other friendly nations of similar background, once they saw this thing begin to work. I believe we can work out between ourselves common policies of economic self-help, common exchange policies which can greatly help the trade difficulties of commonwealth nations and supply the goods and services we need.

At the Ottawa conference of 1932 the foundations of the preferential tariff arrangements were laid which made the commonwealth a great trading entity. I feel that Ottawa in 1963 could have some very useful things to say about international exchange arrangements and the supply of raw materials between member nations. It would be a tremendous thing for the secretary of state, one of the most sound actions he could take, if he took the initiative to bring together another commonwealth conference in Ottawa. It would prove that the commonwealth could be something of an international force, not to the exclusion of other states but as an example to the rest of the world. Economic considerations led Britain to wish to abandon the commonwealth for the sake of the common market area. At the same time, Britain is the heart and centre of 700 million people with the richest endowment of natural resources of any trading bloc in the world. I say that something must be wrong with our understanding of the commonwealth and its potential when this happens. I do not think we should be content to see Britain slough off her commonwealth connections so lightly. And she would not if our attitude were different. Only a few months ago a senior official in the British government said to me: "If we could be convinced that Canada would take the lead in doing something to make the commonwealth work, we would be the first to swing in behind her". I think that was meant very seriously. I believe he was thinking back to the days when Britain did make such an offer towards the development of a commonwealth free trade area, but we in Canada turned our backs on it.

Third, I should like to spend a few moments on Canada's relationship with the communist countries. I believe our government deserves praise for its part in promoting the test ban treaty signed in Moscow in August of this year. Perhaps it was not such a very big thing, but it at least moves us toward the objective which I think all sane people in the world want, which certainly we in Canada want, namely peace. I believe we could take the lead and when there is a crack in the wall which divides the world Canada should be the first to put her hands through. Everything we can do to continue discussion and negotiation is commendable, and certainly this test ban treaty must be included in that classification. Provided adequate safeguards can be assured, world disarmament one step at a time seems the only hope for the world's future.

This past year has seen a great increase in our trading relationships with the Soviet union. Within limits this has been most useful to our economy, but there are two matters that I think are worth mentioning in this regard. The first is that we have not yet devised any adequate method of two way trade between communist countries and Canada, and trade to have any permanent effect or usefulness must be a two way agreement. Therefore, although our agricultural industry is happy that we have found a useful market for our wheat, the problem remains of the economic consequence of what imports might do in return. No nation—certainly Canada cannot—can expect to continue trading where there is no two way opportunity to make that trade effective and permanent.

Second, we must be sure that we are not simply providing the raw materials with which communist countries are buying influence, through re-export, directly or indirectly, to other nations of the world and in many cases to people who want to stay with us in the friendly neighbourhood of western nations dedicated to free government and free opportunity for human beings. Trade cannot be divorced from its political effects, and while one aspect of our economy benefits; what is going to happen to the other aspects of our economy if we cannot develop a logical two way trade pattern? Let us be careful that the trade we carry on with our communist neighbours is not trade that we should have carried on directly with the underdeveloped nations of the world.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has mentioned the possibility of recognition of red China. I believe that no nation in the world should be excluded from the negotiating table, if it is possible for it to be included. But I remember the incidents that led to my going to Africa in the first place. It was because a stronger nation had invaded a smaller nation, raped that country, obliterated its educated people and wiped out without mercy those who wanted to retain their free way of living. Some in this house tonight were at the league of nations when this matter came to a head in 1934, 1935 and 1936, and to the shame of the western countries we turned our backs on the little country of Ethiopia. Yes, it was only a country of 15 million or 20 million people who were not very well educated, who had not made any mark upon the world, who did not carry any influence in world affairs. But we turned our backs on these people and it remains, and will remain as long as history is written, a black mark for the western world.

As long as the recognition of red China means the obliteration of 11 million people who want to live in freedom on the island of Taiwan, then that recognition cannot be justified. As soon as red China will recognize a two China policy, it seems to me it will then be for the betterment of the world that red China be admitted to the conference tables. As we have watched red China in recent months it is apparent she is determined by whatever means to go out and accomplish her objective.

I think it should be indicative to us of what the true face of communism is, at a time when there is sorrow over the death of President Kennedy, a sorrow shared in most of the countries of the world. Communist China has taken this particular occasion to let loose a new tirade of abuse against the United States of America. The saying is that "he must have a long spoon who would sup with the devil". As the government invites communist nations to our dinner table, let us be a little careful that we do not get hurt. No matter how Mr. Khrushchev may smile, Marxism as it is expressed in communism remains a creed that believes in revolution and the overthrow of democratic government, and "dialectic" is best translated from the vocabulary of communism into common English by the slang expression "doublecross".

Finally, I should like to look at what I believe is one of our major opportunities and responsibilities in this ever shrinking world, the emerging nations. These include the new nations of Africa, also being courted at this time by the Soviet union, and some commonwealth and Latin America countries as well. I know the eastern horn of Africa very well. I have travelled in almost every area there. I have been greatly disturbed by the fact that this same Khrushchev, who pretends peace to us at the present time and has adopted a new attitude of peaceful coexistence, has been successful in making the Somali republic the arsenal and jumping off point for Soviet aims and ambitions in the continent of Africa.

We must be concerned with these emerging countries the world over. This is a difficult time for both us and them. The era of colonialism is ended. Yet colonialism had its purpose. It brought law and order, it trained primitive peoples, it brought education and the chance of a higher way of life to the areas that it administered. The need for the benefits that colonialism brought still remains. Yet no longer can they be imposed by force. They must be given in good will. This is something that is very difficult indeed for many of the former imperial powers to do, even though they want to do it. On the other hand, it is something that we Canadians, citizens of a nation that was once a colony, certainly can and should be doing. Again, the contribution that we can make is not just in the form of money and materials. I believe that the contribution that we can make in the form, for instance, of technical assistance and education is very large indeed.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you very much. I will hasten to bring my remarks to a close quickly. This is so, whether it is a matter of Canada sending educationists abroad or accepting increasing numbers of foreign students here. In this way we can render a very definite service. During the supper hour tonight I was speaking on the telephone to a man who knows the West Indies area of the Caribbean very well. He was talking about a Canadian who went to one of the islands in the Caribbean as a teacher training director, and said that he had reports from at least a dozen people about the wonderful job this man was doing, not just in his classes in training teachers but as a good will ambassador of what Canada represents and what Canada wants to be.

I am reminded of the newly created organization that had its birth in the capital city of Ethiopia, Addis Ababa, only a few months ago. It was through the efforts of Emperor Haile Selassié, who was in our midst only a few weeks ago, that this organization came into being. I do not think we in Canada have any idea whatsoever of the important part this organization can play in the peaceful development of Africa. When the crisis developed between Algeria and Morocco a few weeks ago we saw this organization play its part in bringing peace to a troubled area, not through the influence of foreigners but through the influence of Africans themselves.

I look back on my own experience in Africa. I think one of the most fruitful aspects of the years I spent over there was not so much what I did there but the fact that I was able to direct to Canada a large number of students who are now trained and qualified and are taking their place in their own countries. One of these men was the key man at the peacemakers' table a few weeks ago in the dispute between Morocco and Algeria.

In this connection, there are several matters I wish to raise. First of all, I hope it will be possible for the government to provide increased funds to enable Canadian students, young people, to travel overseas for service there. It does not take a great deal of money for this project. The cost of paying one's way on such a mission is, for students, frequently prohibitive; yet these people are here and willing to go. The good will that can be spread by such ambassadors at the local level is incalculable. I suggest the government consider allotting a portion of its increase in external aid funds for this purpose.

The second matter has to do with the bringing of foreign students to Canadian educational institutions. This does not involve thousands of students, because it is far more practical to educate African students in Africa if the educational facilities are available. In many countries in Africa and Latin America, as well as other developing areas of the world, there are not sufficient educational institutions, at least not in the field of higher learning. Canada has had a highly successful program in this field, with a very low failure rate. The program was initiated by the Department of Trade and Commerce some 13 years ago and now it is handled through external aid in the Department of External Affairs. Perhaps that is where it belongs. Some 600 students per year are now under instruction in Canadian educational institutions today, many of them through private aid, but the program is obviously capable of generating great good will and being of immense help to the countries concerned. Certainly, we can accommodate not just 600 but 6,000 if this were made financially possible.

At the present time, however, this program under the Department of External Affairs appears to be restricting the number of applicants because of a shortage of personnel at the administrative level in the department itself, and this in spite of the recommendation of the organization and classification branch of the civil service commission in September, 1959 and again in April, 1960. At the executive level, in the same service, we appear to have the odd sight of two directors of technical assistance sitting in the same chair with the same qualifications and duties; both, one presumes, drawing substantial salaries and both, one also presumes, getting in each other's way. I believe the minister could well look into this matter to see if this program, which is capable of such good service, could be put into more shipshape order as more funds are made available.

I should like to mention another point in this regard, and it is simply expressed in the statement that the greatest enemy of peace today in the world, in my opinion, is hunger. We, in Canada, could well be the food basket of the world. Somehow, and soon, it is imperative that we direct our own trade policies in such a way that we can go out and make these tremendous reserves of food potential for those who are dying because they do not have them today. Then, we should back that up with our technical know-how in order to assist these people to raise more food in their own countries. The communist countries are in trouble because, under that system, they cannot increase their production sufficiently to meet the demands of their own people. This proves to us that the centralization of authority in government is certainly not the answer to all our problems. On the other hand we, in the private enterprise system, boast that we can produce all we need and much more, but at the same time we fail because we do not have the means of distribution. What is the end result going to be, if the failure of communists on one hand and the capitalists on the other ends in a dead heat, one because they cannot produce and the other because they cannot distribute? Then, what kind of world are we going to have when both have failed? This is something about which we ought to be thinking.

There is one more point in this regard, and that is that behind all these programs for aid and assistance there must be a sincere attitude of friendship and a willingness to help people less fortunate than ourselves. As I mentioned before, the price of friendship is friendliness. If we cannot be motivated by the desire to help others, then none of these things will be of much use. This is a responsibility not only of the people out in commerce, not only of the people in our educational institutions and in our professions but of politicians as well. If we were more concerned about it, then perhaps the seats in this house would be better filled than it is at the present time.

External affairs is not a subject that can be treated in a vacuum. Almost inevitably, it spills over into matters of trade and defence, and well it should. Nevertheless it is one of the most important areas of government, as we look at Canada's place on the world scene. I hope that the remarks I have made will give the government some thoughts from outside of itself as to the policies Canada should be following in this rapidly changing international situation. Certainly none of these things about which we talk in connection with external affairs could come to pass in any effective way until our defence policies, our trade policies and our external affairs policies move in a parallel direction towards a common objective. I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as one who has a greater opportunity than any Canadian today, not through just suave words or voluminous words, but to do something, bring about action to get the attention not only of Canadians but also of the people of the world.

I am reminded of a little story that I came across just a few months ago. Perhaps just to sum this whole thing up about which we are talking in connection with external affairs, I might share it with you. A father cut up a map of the world to make a jig-saw puzzle for his son. He was very surprised at the speed with which his son completed the puzzle. He asked his son how he did this and the reply was that there was a man on the back of the jig saw puzzle. He said, "I put the man straight and the world came out right".

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) express his views on the foreign policy of Canada and on the part played by his departmental estimates in this regard.

I listened to him very closely and what struck me—and, I suppose, several other members—was the expression of his good intentions. But even though he gave us to understand that he was well intentioned, we must consider the estimates which will be made available to him.

From a financial point of view, the estimates of the Department of External Affairs are 17 times less than those of the Department of National Defence. I feel that this is minimizing somewhat the part that our Department of External Affairs must play in the world. Nobody denies that Canada must play a very important part in the world.

In fact, those who have had the opportunity to go abroad and meet other parliamentarians, to discuss with them, in short to get acquainted with their economic, political and social problems, have realized that most of them consider Canada as a young and rich country which at the present time enjoys a fine reputation.

Mr. Chairman, during a recent trip to Paris, I noted that all the member countries of NATO, except Canada, had their flags flying in front of the NATO international office. And yet our country, which will soon be celebrating its centennial and has an important part to play on the international scene, cannot do likewise for obvious reasons. Even if Canada is a young country, it still remains that it is one hundred years old and that it has a most important role to play in international affairs.

In fact, it is not so much population that counts but the expanse of territory. Vancouver is further removed from Halifax than Paris or Germany are from Canada. Our country has a population of 18 million whereas Belgium which is only 150 square miles in area, has 9 million inhabitants, that is about half our population.

What conclusion can one draw from those facts, Mr. Chairman? The conclusion that Canada is a young and vast country which should set for the world an example of peace and prosperity.

Mr. Chairman, it would be beneficial if the Secretary of State for External Affairs could represent Canada as a country which has everything and which at the same time is a prosperous one, for if we take into account the number of unemployed in this country, the people of other countries cannot help but think that Canada is not so prosperous after all.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we should first review our national monetary policy, in order to give the example to the other countries of the world which are now seeking solutions to the problem of surpluses, while others try to solve that of hunger.

Some time ago, we welcomed the news that an agreement had been signed on the suspension of nuclear tests.

I have here the report tabled by our previous secretary of state for external affairs at the United Nations. At page 8 of that report, he said that nuclear tests were most dangerous from a health point of view.

The second complete report of the United Nations scientific committee on the effects of atomic radiation is quite clear on that point when it says:

> Since there are no other effective methods to prevent the harmful effects of the spread of radioactive contamination caused by nuclear explosions, the permanent suspension of nuclear tests would be beneficial to present and future human generations.

That is what the request for investigation by the secretary general of the United Nations implies.

It is, on the other hand, unfortunate that this country should have included nuclear arms in its national defence policy. Canada might have played a peaceful and prosperous part among the countries of the world.

Let us take a look at Switzerland: there we have a country which has always remained aloof from war, which never had to rebuild what it had built before; anyway, when visiting countries which have been devastated by war, a very different situation can be seen. We may, therefore, conclude that those things are hardly helpful.

I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs should dispose of the tremendous sums which were to be appropriated for nuclear arms, to enable him to carry out all the good intentions expressed this afternoon, because there is no lack of good intentions, but of the necessary funds to carry them out.

We favour disarmament, which normally should result from an agreement to abandon nuclear tests, in the publication External Affairs, of September 1962, I read, on page 269, the following, under the title "Economic and social consequences of disarmament":

> A report on the economic and social consequences of disarmament was published by the United Nations Organization in February 1962. It had been prepared by an advisory group appointed by the secretary general, following a resolution moved by Pakistan, which was carried on December 15, 1960, and this report will be discussed at the seventeenth session of the general assembly.
> The advisory group was made up of experts coming from the following countries: United States, France, Great Britain, India, Pakistan, Poland, Sudan, Czechoslovakia, U.S.S.R. and Venezuela. Chosen by the secretary general, the experts submitted their suggestions in their own name. The advisory group held two meetings, the first one in Geneva, in August 1961, and the second, in the U.N. building, in New York, from January 23 to February 16 of the current year.

Here is the unanimous conclusion reached by the group:

> The achievement of a general and complete disarmament would be an incommensurate blessing for the whole human race.

You can see that group decided in favour of disarmament after the signing of the test ban treaty.

In the same article, it is said a little further:

> It is estimated that the world spends about $120 billion yearly for military purposes at the present time. That amount represents at least two thirds of the total national revenues in all underdeveloped countries. About 85 per cent of this total is spent by seven countries: U.S.S.R., United States, Great Britain, France, German Federal Republic, Chinese People's Republic and Canada.

Canada is among the seven countries that spend most for military purposes.

To go further than the previous speakers, may I add that Canada should restrict herself to a pacific part and show the whole world that despite her small population in relation to her territory, she is really prosperous and able to help underdeveloped countries of South America, by maintaining trade relations with them, while correcting her unfavourable trade balance.

Canada ought to set an example for mankind, which is looking for peace in the world and prosperity for all nations.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago the Hon. Adlai Stevenson, addressing a United Nations day rally in Dallas memorial stadium was booed, spat upon, and hit on the head with a couple of card placards saying "Down with the United Nations." At that meeting he gave a carefully prepared address, but this important figure of the United Nations and of the United States, who to some extent has represented America to the world, was harassed and attacked by people who were against the idea of international involvement. Of course, during these last few days we have had in our minds the memory of a president who epitomized to the world the good, world citizen. President Kennedy, in his inaugural address on January 21, 1961, said:

> My fellow citizens of the world: Ask not what America will do for you, but what together we can do for the freedom of man.
> Finally, whether you are the citizens of America or citizens of the world, ask of us here the same high standards of strength and sacrifice which we ask of you.

We in Canada, responding to this challenge, should think right now of our relationship with the rest of the world. During the last six months, Mr. Chairman, it has been my privilege to be in 11 countries. I believe, as speakers before me have indicated, that there is perhaps no people in the world with more opportunity to participate fully and generously in world events. Of necessity, those speeches that have preceded mine have tended to be general in character, covering the wide scene. I would like to limit myself, in the time that is available, to one particular aspect of external affairs. I am referring to foreign aid. A few weeks ago I was in Skoplje. I had an opportunity to see first hand most of the devastated streets of that city. I believe I am correct in saying that over 16,000 people were then living in tents. Skoplje, an ancient Macedonian city that goes back several hundred years before Christ and represents an ancient and honourable civilization in that part of the world, would have been fractured and shattered for all time except for a process of great international assistance. The most important resolution passed by the 52nd interparliamentary conference, which took place in Belgrade, was one wherein every delegate of the 60 nations represented, both iron curtain and free countries, resolved to go back to their parliaments and recommend that substantial international aid be given for the reconstruction of Skoplje.

I do not want to dwell on this subject at any length, but I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who I know has been concerned about this matter, will regard this as a great opportunity for Canada to make a significant and permanent contribution to an ancient and proud city that has known something of the ravages of the Turks, the Byzantians, the Romans and the Huns. There is one country in the world that might exercise some sort of pressure on Yugoslavia, and that is the Soviet union. Notwithstanding their ideological sympathies, the Yugoslavs tend to look to countries outside and beyond the Soviet union for the kind of understanding they are not likely to find in their own local environment. I think this is a unique opportunity for Canada to make herself known there, and a contribution of perhaps $2 million—if I might suggest that figure—for some kind of permanent building that would always have the name "Canada" upon it would be the sort of thing that honourably would bear our image for ever in that part of the world.

May I pass on to an aspect of foreign aid that I think is even more important in the long run. I have been interested for some time in precisely what Canada has been doing in the area of foreign aid. I have placed on the order paper a number of questions on this matter and have received from the ministry a number of answers. At page 1486 of Hansard for June 24 last there is an answer from the department with respect to Canada's contribution in external aid expressed as a percentage of Canada's gross national product. I might point out to the committee that in the year 1960 it was .20 per cent; in 1962 it was down to .18 per cent. Perhaps one would not be able to judge what this means unless it were compared with the contribution of other countries. On October 14, 1963, I put another question on the order paper which asked the extent of our contribution in comparison with the countries of NATO Europe, and NATO North America. I should like to put the answer on the record. This is based on the gross national product of each country during the year 1961: Belgium .86 per cent; Canada .19 per cent; Denmark .12 per cent; France 1.70 per cent; Germany .83 per cent; Italy .21 per cent; Japan .48 per cent; the Netherlands .62 per cent; Norway .21 per cent; Portugal 1.24 per cent; the United Kingdom .66 per cent; the United States .73 per cent. Then, expressing the same thing in another way, on November 13, 1963, I received an answer with respect to aid to development.

The answer of November 13, 1963 told us what in the last year of record was the per capita contribution in foreign aid to underdeveloped countries from members of the organization for economic co-operation and development. These figures show aid for development expressed in American dollars. They relate to the year 1962: France $20.93—that is per person; the United States of America $19.17; Germany—that is, the federal republic—$7.75; the United Kingdom $7.80; Canada $2.66. Mr. Chairman, the Globe and Mail of October 7, 1963 says:

> Canada is still one of the black sheep of the western world in the proportion of national wealth devoted to foreign aid. Even on the most favourable basis of calculation, we are channelling into aid programs only about one third of 1 per cent of our gross national product, or approximately $135 million a year. Of the 20 countries in the organization for economic co-operation and development, only Denmark rates lower than Canada in the provision of aid.

They conclude their editorial comment by saying:

> Mr. Martin should fight hard the good fight for increased foreign aid in the knowledge that he has public opinion behind him.

I feel, with great sincerity, that this is one area at which we must take a very close look.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Matheson: Of course.

Mr. Churchill: Is the basis of comparison the same?

Mr. Matheson: No. I am sure that is a very proper and appropriate comment, Mr. Chairman. I have had an assurance from the Secretary of State for External Affairs that some countries are taking advantage of other kinds of contribution which we, in our circumstances, do not include.

Mr. Aiken: Portugal, for example.

Mr. Matheson: Yes, and France. But, no matter on what basis we make the comparison, our contribution is not nearly good enough. I have put similar questions on the order paper relating to defence, because I am one of those who feel very strongly that the contribution we make to our alliances is something that runs parallel, to some extent, to the matter of foreign aid. We are not even making a very substantial contribution in the matter of defence, in comparison with some of our more important allies. I think this is of critical importance. May I, though, address these remarks to an area in which I think we could make a very sizeable and important contribution. When one considers the conclusions reached by Barbara Ward and others who have studied this subject over the years, it is evident that a great many of these foreign aid programs are not achieving the results intended. The population explosion in some countries is such that no matter what is done by way of foreign aid little can be accomplished to bring large benefit to the people. Perhaps other means will have to be adopted to accumulate capital so that people may move to a higher plateau of progress. Certainly, there are other areas where great work can be accomplished if there is concentration. Barbara Ward says:

> For three hundred years the white race has enjoyed a dominant position in the world. Its members were able to stamp their prejudices across the face of the globe because they were, in fact, on top.

When we think of the recent tragic happenings in Dallas and of other unfortunate incidents to which reference has been made by distinguished members of this house it occurs to me that perhaps Canada has a moral responsibility as well as a political interest in becoming involved in these great racial problems of the world. Where would it be possible to do this? Many who are authorities on this subject say the one place in the world where we could hope to make the greatest contribution is in the Caribbean area.

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not know that while he was away attending a conference we did increase our foreign aid by $70 million?

Mr. Matheson: I was happy to read that. I read that, I think, in two foreign newspapers.

May I refer to a comment by Dr. Doris Johnson. She says:

> Canada is missing out in the Caribbean. This country ought to be in the forefront in providing aid for the Caribbean area. Russia has been very active assisting underdeveloped countries and I would like to see Canada's Colombo plan extended to cover educational improvements in this hemisphere.

I am aware of what Canada is doing in respect to the Colombo plan. With respect to the West Indies assistance program, the ministry has been good enough to supply answers in detail with respect to people, places and work done. I am aware of what is being done with respect to the special commonwealth Africa aid program, the commonwealth technical assistance program, the program of educational assistance for independent French speaking African states, and, in a slightly different category, the commonwealth scholarship and fellowship program. But there is one area which would respond more rapidly than any other to a sharp increase in our aid program, and that is the Caribbean. I believe there is a necessity for Canada to bring about a special relationship with our commonwealth neighbours in the West Indies, an association which would be as close and as helpful as any kind of political union. I am not talking about federation. I am talking about involvement—about intimate personal engagement in the Caribbean area. This is one of the most volatile parts of the world. Taking the long view, it is an area where we could do most to prevent disorder in the future, in addition to the more important object of uplifting mankind.

We believe poverty is obsolete. We believe a country as wealthy as our own, with a population of 20 million people, could look to our friends in that part of the world and, without being patronizing or superior, make a substantial and important contribution to their welfare. I believe Canada should make a determined, all-out, concentrated effort in the field of education and technical assistance in the Caribbean. The West Indies should be our show window, the place where we test out and demonstrate to ourselves and others our faith and good intentions towards all the peoples of the world.

It can be contended, as many columnists suggest, that the correct way to participate in foreign aid programs is by concentration. We have made mistakes in Canada in the past; in defence, for example, by developing certain types of weapons and not seeing that development through to completion. They were good ideas but we did not go at them hard enough. I am suggesting we should really go as far as may be necessary, not on the basis of planning one, two or three years ahead but in terms of a decade of development. There is a strong case to be made out in favour of specialization. Men with broad experience, men such as Paul Hoffman of the United Nations special fund, Eugene Black of the world bank and our own Nik Cavell have told us that there should be at least a few demonstrations of concentrated efforts of aid.

I am not unmindful of the fact that in the past we have been interested in multilateral programs and that we are still interested in these programs, many of which are connected with agencies of the United Nations. At the same time, there must be special bilateral arrangements with respect to aid. These are our brothers, our commonwealth friends, and if there is any people to whom they may reasonably look for close association and friendship, it is surely to the people of Canada. Each impact we can make will reinforce the effect of the rest. What we need is a new approach with respect to education and investment, new means of production and technical assistance at all levels. I am trying to be specific because it seems to me we have heard the leaders of our parties dealing with the subject only in general terms. Whether or not there is such a thing as an "ugly Canadian" I do not know, but it is clear that with respect to the Caribbean we are not "ugly Canadians". These people are ready for development to take place. Many of them are highly educated. Many of them have been educated in the United Kingdom and others are graduates of our own schools and colleges. Economists like W. W. Rostow, who was one of the late President Kennedy's chief policy advisers, and Arthur Lewis, a West Indian who has been Paul Hoffman's right hand man, have described the factors which tell whether a people is ready or not for development. Nearly all the qualifications they mention in their theoretical studies can be found in concentration in various parts of the West Indies.

Our country and the West Indies are bound together by close historical and trading associations. May I touch on the question of self-interest? The Caribbean area is one where we have a strong mutual trading interest and advantage. I do not think we need always think in Canada in terms of a cash contribution. I believe—and I throw this out as a suggestion to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—that we could make a most valuable contribution based upon the elite federal services we have—the wealth of experience and advice at the government's disposal in the fields of fisheries, oceanography, mines and technical surveys, finance, trade and commerce, health and welfare, and so on. We have built up this knowledge and expertise over the hundred years of our history and all this accumulated skill which is now available to us could be placed at the disposal of our friends in the Caribbean. Some of our experts could, for example, be given leave—six months a year, so that they could put some of their talents to use in the Caribbean area where they are greatly needed.

What about strategic considerations? Well, here is a part of the world which is bounded by revolution, disease, and hunger. Some of those who spoke before me talked about the organization of American states and the complex political and economic conditions underlying that organization. I do not think there is an area closer to us, or one which calls for more immediate consideration, than the area of which I have been speaking. This could become a splendid economic, social and political laboratory. Dr. Philip Sherlock, principal of the University of the West Indies said: "The people of the West Indies come in every colour except blue". In these wonderful islands, so close to us, we find Asiatics, Caucasians, Negroes and every type of mankind. Let us dare to get involved. It is not as if it would introduce into our country the serious problems which would result from integration, or such as have preoccupied those unfortunate people in Dallas, Texas. Would it take too much imagination to believe that in this mechanistic age we could fly employees of Canadian factories, who could go off for three weeks in a year, perhaps, and spend some time in the Windward isles or in the Leeward isles or down in some of those obscure and beautiful and not too expensive places?

I know several universities in Canada which have been enriched by the addition of Caribbean students. Some of our greatest athletes who have competed in the Olympics have come from the Caribbean. Harry Belafonte, for whom I have much admiration, says in the United Church Observer for November of this year:

> The struggle of the Negro people in America today is part of a very much larger struggle. The dignity and integrity of the whole human race, especially of the colored peoples all over the earth, are involved. Nothing is more gratifying than to come to a place like Canada which has had historical association with the struggle of the Negro people in America. From early days of the abolition of slavery, over many years, you have shown support for the struggle of the Negro people of America.

This is not an embittered man, but one who has known great success. He continues:

> It is true that you are removed from the vicious faces of the white supremist forces that exist in America; it is true that your children are not being whipped in the streets with hoses. It is true that your children are not being put into the segregated and vicious prisons of the south to be beaten; it is true that lynchings are not directly a part of the Canadian scene. But I dare to say that human right and human responsibility is as much yours as it is ours.

There are many subjects one could touch on in the field of external affairs, but there is still a little time available and many people wish to contribute to the debate. It is a fact, as one of my distinguished predecessors tonight has said, that at the moment there is an appalling imbalance between what the world is contributing to defence and what it is contributing to foreign aid and social and economic improvements of underdeveloped people. I am not suggesting that our contribution to defence is too high. Indeed, I earnestly wonder whether we are pulling our full weight in that direction. But certainly in the direction of foreign aid there is no question but that we have been very much on the low side and we must make substantial and important changes for the future.

I should like to conclude with the final paragraph of the last speech President Kennedy prepared only a few days ago. He said:

> We ask, therefore, that we may be worthy of our power and responsibility—that we may exercise our strength with wisdom and restraint—and that we may achieve for our time and for all time the ancient vision of peace on earth, goodwill towards men. That must always be our goal—and the righteousness of our cause must always underlie our strength.

[Mr. Matheson.]

That is not a matter on which there is any division in this house. In every political party there are people who have made noteworthy contributions in the discussions of external affairs; some, indeed, have spoken today. I know that my political leader is a man who believes mightily in this cause, and now is the time to get down to specifics and prove this in a noble and grand way.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, it is rather a pity that the original plan of having the defence estimates discussed tomorrow is not to be carried out, because the estimates of the Department of External Affairs and the estimates of the Department of National Defence are, by their very nature, intimately related. After all, defence policy is really dependent on foreign policy, and for this reason changes in one affect the other. Recently we have noticed certain changes of policy in the Department of National Defence, such as the scrapping of the frigate program. There has been a great deal of talk in the press and other authoritative sources that further extensive cuts in defence equipment are being contemplated. This can only indicate one thing, and that is that our foreign policy, presumably in the field of NATO, is going to be altered as well. However, more of that in a moment.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out very well, apart from the general objectives of peace and good relations with other countries of the world, and of course protecting our national sovereignty, our foreign policy is based on four cornerstones—our relationship with NATO, with the United Nations, with the commonwealth, and our special relationship with the United States of America.

First, with respect to NATO. Year by year we have heard that a crisis exists in NATO. This year is no exception. Year by year the need of Canada for the North Atlantic treaty alliance has proven to be inescapable. NATO is Canada's principal alliance. Indeed, it is the principal alliance of all its members, including the United States, and for 15 years NATO has proven to be the shield of the west.

What is the nature of the present crisis? The London Economist for November 9 last said that basically the present crisis of confidence inside the alliance stems from a whispering campaign in France and in Germany against the willingness of the United States to shoulder a burden in the alliance commensurate with its power. The same magazine goes on to say that it is nonsense to imagine that the United States, because of its own difficulties or because of dissatisfaction with its allies, is going to pull out.

No United States speech in recent times was awaited with greater interest and read with greater care by the allies of the United States than yesterday's speech to congress by President Johnson. That speech contained the general affirmation of the United States to "keep its commitments". Naturally the new president concerned himself immediately with domestic affairs. He dislikes NATO, but this omission cannot be given undue significance. There are voices in the United States, notably that of Senator Goldwater, that argue for building American strength at home rather than abroad. The members of NATO must think constantly about the provision and deployment of the armed forces at the service of the alliance. Canada has honoured her NATO commitments in the past and we hope Canada will continue to honour them in the future.

As I have already mentioned, the scrapping of the frigate program and certain other information we read in the press, which one cannot help but feel may have come from authoritative sources, leads one to wonder whether our commitments in this regard are going to be carried out. The planning of military requirements must be a task undertaken jointly by all members of the alliance. This is not something imposed upon the alliance by one or two members. Last May when NATO met in Ottawa the task assigned to the permanent organization in Paris was to study NATO's requirements and the sources available. This task has not, as yet, been completed.

I see the Minister of National Defence has now returned to the house. He addressed the Empire club in Toronto today and spoke on the subject of military strategy. This statement, I understand, was part of his speech, referring to the NATO ministerial meeting which we had here last May, in which he said that they would recall the decision taken, that the council undertake a comprehensive review of the interrelated questions of strategy, forces requirements and the resources available to meet them, in order to achieve a satisfactory balance between nuclear and conventional arms.

This is a very far reaching, sweeping program. Its implications, indeed ramifications, affect the whole scope and structure of western military capacity. Yet I recall, Mr. Chairman, that this happened at the NATO meeting at which, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, nothing was to be decided. This review to which I referred a moment ago was one for which we should have waited before bringing nuclear weapons on to Canadian soil. The result now seems to be that military policy is in some sort of nuclear strait-jacket, with all the eggs in one basket, so to speak. I suppose this may be why the frigates were cancelled. We could not afford both.

The next cornerstone of our foreign policy to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred is the United Nations. I should like to say immediately that I had the pleasure of visiting the United Nations recently as an observer for a while and having conversations with a number of the delegates there. What I heard there certainly indicated to me that the acquiring by Canada of nuclear warheads for the Bomarcs did not do this country a great deal of good, so far as the United Nations is concerned.

Nothing has been said publicly about this matter, at least not when I was there, but one certainly heard about it privately. It is the old story, that fitting nuclear warheads on the Bomarcs, considering what use they may be and their purpose, something like bows and arrows in the military context, was of very dubious value and was far outweighed by the loss of our influence at the United Nations in certain circumstances. It was said to me, "I see your government has now joined the nuclear club", and regardless of how one might argue that we really had not joined the nuclear club, that is what people elsewhere believe.

Another point about the United Nations to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has referred has to do with peacekeeping machinery. The Prime Minister also dealt with this in his address to the United Nations. This is a very excellent thing and something that I think we are all in favour of. As was suggested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his remarks this afternoon, plans are at present in the state of formulation as to what type of peacekeeping machinery we might have.

There are some suggestions I should like to make on the basis of my experience at the United Nations and I hope that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will take them into consideration. Apart from the military commitments and the types of military forces that might be required, there are certain civilian facilities—I will not use the word "forces"—that might be planned now and kept on file with the secretary general. For instance, every emergency situation that arises in the world is different from the previous one. Just as the Congo was different from the Middle East, so may the next situation be entirely different. The political situation may be different. The geographical situation may be totally different. The type of United Nations personnel that may be required in such a situation can only be determined by the circumstances as the situation arises. However, a certain amount of planning can still be done in advance in order to have on hand certain types of civilian personnel that may be required in such an emergency. The countries concerned could submit lists of personnel with certain qualifications which could be kept on file with the secretary general as a sort of continuation of the experts bank which was introduced and accepted by the general assembly a couple of years ago.

As to military forces, each country could very well submit to the secretary general a list of military forces which they would be willing to contribute at a moment's notice, should an emergency arise. When an emergency does arise the secretary general would not be faced with the situation of having to telephone one country that he might consider suitable, asking that country, "Can you contribute items a, b and c," and having that country say, "We do not know; we will let you know in a week". Valuable time is lost in an emergency situation. If the various countries concerned that have contributed in the past, and some others, would supply the secretary general with lists of military equipment and personnel they could provide at a moment's notice, the secretary general, should an emergency situation arise, could look at the lists of Canada, Brazil and Sweden, for example, and see that they were prepared to contribute certain things that would be suitable. Thus valuable time could be saved.

I realize full well that, in view of certain problems the secretary general has with the Soviet union and France about paying for these operations, it might well be that it would cause the secretary general some embarrassment to have such lists deposited with him formally, and it might well be that some sort of semi or quasi-United Nations organization could be formed which would not be directly a part of the United Nations but which could make these arrangements. The president of this organization could keep lists which he could give to the secretary general, if necessary.

These are just some of the questions that will have to be considered by the government and by other governments concerned. I hope that the government pursues this matter. I understand they are going to be doing so and I wish them well because I think it is a very valuable type of work.

The next point is the question of our relationships with the commonwealth. The Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned how active the government was in supporting the commonwealth and referred to the great heritage and the fine relationships. I am glad to hear that, but I think that the Secretary of State for External Affairs might have gone a little farther and told us just what we are going to do to try to promote this situation further. In the military field we have heard suggestions that we should have military forces available or in training to help the United Nations; but what about the commonwealth?

Last year India was attacked by China and eventually we were able to send some military equipment. India is still threatened, and what about the new state of Malaysia? It is certainly threatened by Indonesia. If something happens in either of these places, what are we going to do? Are we going to send equipment or troops, or both, to help our partners in the commonwealth?

I would hope this matter could be clarified and some idea given as to what we are going to do. I realize that each situation is different and may have to be decided according to the circumstances at the time, but I think it should be made clear to us in this debate what the intentions of the government are in this respect. Are we going to help our commonwealth brothers if they are attacked, or are we going to stand by? If we do help them, are we going to give them equipment only or equipment and men, and to what extent? These are things that I think will have to be considered very carefully.

Foreign policy, of course, should be very flexible and should keep up with the times and circumstances. In this regard it has been pointed out that the People's Republic of China is apparently intent on pursuing her aggressive course in the world. While it is quite true that the Soviet union apparently has decided to follow another course and perhaps try to achieve her objectives by other than military methods, the People's Republic of China has not. Since it seems to me that at the moment there is at least some lessening of tension between the Soviet bloc and the west I would suggest, in view of the behaviour of China, that perhaps we should direct our attention more to the Pacific at the moment. I would hope that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his colleagues would give very careful consideration to whether or not we should possibly become involved in some alliance in the Pacific. I think this matter should be looked into at the present time. In view of the lessening of tension between the west and the Soviet union and the constant pressure and increase of tension in the eastern part of the world, I think this is something which must be given the most careful consideration, if it has not already been given such consideration. There is no use trying to form alliances and make arrangements after the trouble starts. These things should be foreseen and the arrangements made in advance. I know that China is away across the Pacific, but today distance does not mean very much. I know that Malaysia and India are far away also, but I think these things must be taken into consideration.

Then, there is the question of the extension of credit to the Soviet union and other iron curtain countries. In the last few years Canada has been very fortunate in trading with the Soviet union, red China and with other satellite nations of the Soviet union. This has been a very good thing for Canada. It has greatly helped our economy. There is no question about that. It has done another thing, in that it has done a great deal to break down the barriers which existed between the Soviet bloc and the western group. Trade is a great help in this regard. Certainly when I recall that payments had to be made in fairly short order on the sales to China, the use of this foreign exchange may well have had a practical advantage in addition, inasmuch as China could not then use this foreign exchange for the purchase of war materials or for sending additional propaganda to South America. However, not only Canada but Britain and Germany have followed a course of issuing extensive credit to the Soviet union and related countries.

Recently in Paris I believe the United States suggested that these credits should not be extended past five years. As I understand it, this suggestion was met very coolly. It would not affect Canada anyway, as I understand it—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do I understand my friend to say that the United States recommended that credits be extended beyond five years?

Mr. Nesbitt: No, not more than five years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In accordance with the Berne convention.

Mr. Nesbitt: This suggestion was not too well received by the other countries, chiefly Britain and Germany, whom it would most affect. Now, I just mention this fact in passing. While I have pointed out that the advantages of trading with the communist nations are very great, I feel if there is going to be any extension in the future of credits to these countries, we should very carefully look into the long range results. Are we, in fact, by doing this, cutting down the credit that we could extend to the underdeveloped countries, which perhaps need them more? By extending these extensive credits to the Soviet union and related countries, are we perhaps permitting them to extend credits, a sort of chain reaction so to speak, to certain underdeveloped countries that they wish to penetrate politically? I think this is something that should be looked into carefully. I have no doubt it will be. I just mention it at this time in passing, because we do not want to be blinded by the very favourable results we have had from the trade up to now. We do not want to find out later, to our horror, that a number of things were happening that we did not realize. An example of this is the sale of scrap metal to Japan in 1938, about which we were very happy; but then later a lot of people had it thrown back at them at Hong Kong.

The last thing I should like to mention this evening is the threat to Canada's seat on the security council at the United Nations. This is a rather complex subject, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the committee will bear with me if I give one or two words of background material, because this is a type of thing that is not readily understood elsewhere than in the United Nations. After 1945, when there were approximately 48 countries in the United Nations, a gentleman's agreement was made concerning the non-permanent seats on the security council. As perhaps most people know, there are 11 seats on this council, five of which are permanent, namely the Soviet union, the United States, Britain, France and China. The other six are the non-permanent seats and members are elected, three at a time, for a two-year term.

Until recently, this so-called gentleman's agreement has been carried out. Under that agreement, the six non-permanent seats were divided as follows: The Latin American group of countries have two of them; the western European bloc—everything works in blocs of countries at the United Nations—one seat; eastern European countries, one seat—those are the Soviet bloc countries—the Middle East, one seat, those were the Arab countries generally, and the commonwealth, one seat. Since 1955 the membership of the United Nations has expanded to 111. As I recall—and that was the first year I was there—the present Secretary of State for External Affairs did a very good job at that time in making a package deal to bring in a number of new countries. After that, with the increase of the new countries in Asia and Africa, pressure became very great on the other countries to provide adequate representation on the security council to the new Afro-Asian countries.

The obvious thing was to expand the membership. However, the Soviet union has made it quite clear within the last week I understand, that it will veto any expansion of the security council until China has been admitted. As a result of the increased voting power of the new Asian and African countries, as I say, something has to give. Apparently what is going to give is the commonwealth seat. The projected arrangement which is being discussed, I understand, at the present time in New York is that the six seats would be divided as follows: Two to the Latin American countries; one to west Europe; one-half seat—that would be a one-year term—to eastern Europe, and to the Asian and African delegations, two and a half seats. As I have said, this half seat means a one-year term instead of a two-year term. The commonwealth seat would be eliminated.

I know this question has been brought up in this house on many occasions this session. Just recently, on November 20, the Prime Minister replied, as follows, to a question of mine in this regard, as reported on page 4963 of Hansard:

> The principal aim of the Canadian delegation in these talks, and at meetings of the commonwealth group, has been to emphasize the importance of retaining the commonwealth seat. Pressure for enlargement has developed—

The first sentence I read is the cogent one. It is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, that the government has given up hope of retaining the commonwealth seat. I realize there has been very great pressure, and this seat may have to go. I recognize it is difficult and the pressure from the Asian and African countries is very great. Since they cannot enlarge the council, the redistribution of seats seems to be the alternative. I understand there have been suggestions made that since the commonwealth seat is going to go, Canada might find a seat with the Latin American countries or with the western European countries with whom we are dealing. Perhaps that has to be, I do not know. While I recognize the difficulties in connection with this problem, so far as I can see there has been no active, constructive work done at the United Nations to try to retain the commonwealth seat.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit an interjection? I am sure he would not want this suggestion to go unnoticed. There is great activity in this connection at the United Nations, and has been now for some time.

Mr. Nesbitt: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs say that. However, I was at the United Nations for some time, and I am not exactly unfamiliar with it, but that certainly was not my impression at all. I was going to suggest to the minister—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are some things one does not discuss on the hilltops, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. Nesbitt: I beg your pardon?

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was just observing that there are some matters that can be best handled without giving too much public attention to them.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am quite aware of that, and I have a number of acquaintances at the United Nations, who are not associated with the Canadian delegation, and from whom I was able to gather some of this information. I am naturally aware that these things are being discussed on all sides and I have tried to point out to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that I know what he is up against in this matter. But instead of assuming the commonwealth seat is going to go, why not get out and do a real selling job? The Secretary of State for External Affairs did a wonderful job in 1955, against almost impossible odds, in bringing in all these new countries—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I do not make the assumption the commonwealth seat is going to go, and I do not expect that will be the result in the immediate period to which my hon. friend is directing my attention.

Mr. Churchill: What is that immediate period?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, within a foreseeable period.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am very glad to hear this. It is my understanding this matter is going to be settled before the end of the present assembly, unless things have changed very much in the last 10 days or so. But some arrangement has to be made and I understand that is what the intention is.

If it is not possible to retain the commonwealth seat, under present circumstances we will not get a seat until the security council is enlarged by Russian permission. We cannot get a seat unless we go in with Latin America. They have 20 members and have two seats, and this would mean we would not have one for 10 or 11 years, which is not commensurate with the contribution we make to the United Nations. If we go in with the western European nations, there are about 14 of them and they have only one seat, which would mean we would have less chance still.

However, there is another course of action which the Secretary of State for External Affairs could follow. I hope he is right in his forecast; but if the commonwealth seat should go, then Australia is out in the cold, New Zealand is out in the cold and Canada is out in the cold. But there are also other countries such as Israel, Cyprus, and perhaps South Africa after its policy changes, and all these countries might be included in a block.

Perhaps we might get another group formed, before the security council is extended, which would be granted half a seat, or rather a seat on a one year term. After all, Canada and New Zealand territorially control a large amount of the resources of this planet, and I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have a pretty good case to sell in this regard.

I see my time is almost up, but in conclusion I would like to refer to a remark made by the minister. If I heard him correctly, he said there was no disposition in the United Nations at the present time to set up machinery for peacekeeping forces.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I said was that there were not enough members in the United Nations who would subscribe at the present time to the proposition that there should be established a United Nations police force.

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps that was a misunderstanding of mine. As I now understand him, he was not referring to some peacekeeping machinery, but to a peace force.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, a police force.

Mr. Nesbitt: Oh, a police force—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Which Canada would of course support.

Mr. Nesbitt: As I understand it, the difference being between some sort of peacekeeping machinery, where lists of forces would be filed, and some sort of permanent police force, which is quite another thing. That clarifies it, so with that I conclude my remarks.

Mr. Haidasz: I do not wish to hold up the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, but in view of the fact that this week end in Toronto a national convention coinciding with the tenth anniversary of the founding of the Canadian association of Polish ex-political prisoners will take place, I have been asked by representatives of that organization to raise my voice in this chamber and express my sympathy for their cause.

As hon. members know, there is draft legislation pending before the West German parliament providing compensation for victims of nazi persecution. This new draft of the German indemnification laws will be subject to scrutiny by both the upper and lower houses, and may therefore undergo changes before final adoption. I hope the appropriate officials of the Department of External Affairs, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, will examine this draft legislation in order to determine whether and to what extent Canadian interests may be affected, and in what way they can protect the interests of Canadian citizens, now resident in Canada, who were victims of nazi persecution.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I most certainly will examine it, and I may say I have been doing so.

Mr. Herridge: I see there are just a couple of minutes left and I had not intended to speak this evening. A number of us hope to have the opportunity to speak later, but I do want to support the remarks of the previous speaker with respect to the question of the victims of nazi persecution who are now Canadian citizens. I have had a number of them visit me in my office, and I have received documents from Bonn which clearly indicate that their just claims have not by any means been satisfied to date.

I raised the question in the house a week or so ago, and the Prime Minister was good enough to prepare a statement on the matter. In fact we understand that the government is keeping an eye on this situation, but I do urge that every effort be made to see these persons receive the fullest compensation. There are quite a number of them who have been entirely overlooked, whose claims under present law are not considered valid, and if the Canadian government does not take a fairly strong stand many of us in this group, and other members in the house, are afraid justice will not be done.

Time is running out, and I understand they are going to change the law in Germany. There is some question of amending it in a manner that will have some effect on the claims of the persons we are concerned with. I suggest this is an appropriate time for the Canadian government to use its influence with the government in West Germany, to make strong representations on behalf of these Canadian citizens so that the law, as amended, will include them and their valid and, in some cases, quite substantial claims.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being 10.30 p.m., shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if the acting house leader would confirm the arrangements for tomorrow and let us know what might happen on Monday?

Mr. Cardin: Tomorrow it is proposed the house will take up interim supply, and when that is finished it is proposed to go on with the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. If they are completed before five o'clock, then the estimates of the Department of Public Works would be taken. At seven o'clock the Department of Industry is due to be taken up, and if that is completed before 10.30, then the Department of Public Works would be called upon again.

Mr. Churchill: Nothing for Monday?

Mr. Cardin: For Monday it will be announced tomorrow night.

It being twenty four minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.
