The purpose of the bill is to help certain areas known as designated areas. Exemptions are granted to new industries in order to help the designated areas.

The purpose of our amendment is to provide further assistance to designated areas, and this is entirely in keeping with the meaning of section 16.

I fail to see why this amendment is not valid and completely in order.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, as to whether or not the amendment is in order, I would just say that the proposal in the bill to provide incentive to new businesses to locate in designated areas is a very generous one. The purpose is to encourage new enterprises to locate in these designated areas and to provide the productive base for future development and additional employment.

I suggest with respect that this amendment goes much further than was contemplated in the bill. While I listened with great interest to the hon. member's speech, which I thought was a good one, and while I agree with him that we should encourage small businesses all through Canada, I should not like to restrict that situation only to small businesses in these areas. I respectfully suggest that this proposed amendment goes much further than is contemplated in the bill, and that therefore it is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I am very surprised at the position taken by the government about this particular section of the bill.

We hear at every turn the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) making speeches here and there and state that the government will try—

An hon. Member: On a point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order—

Mr. Pigeon: If the hon. member will make his point of order I will sit down.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Is the hon. member speaking on the point of order? At present, we are listening to arguments concerning the point of order.

Mr. Gregoire: On the point of order—

Mr. Belanger: In my opinion, the proposed amendment does not widen the general scope of the bill.

Now, in the section under consideration, the minister proposes to reduce unemployment by helping the development of industry.

We claim that with our amendment, it would be easier and cheaper for the government to look after small industries which are in financial difficulties and which could be profitable if they were given the same advantages as the new industries.

We sincerely feel that this bill will be useless in many cases as we showed a while ago. It is not advantageous for an established industry to move to an underdeveloped and depressed area.

In our opinion, the amendment does not go any further than the bill and we claim that it would be cheaper to help existing industries than to set up new ones.

[Text]

The Chairman: The amendment proposed by the hon. member is, of course, imaginative and very interesting, but I am afraid that in the light of the arguments which have been submitted for the guidance of the Chair and the research I have quickly made in relation to this amendment, I do not hesitate to say that it is out of order.

Division

The amendment introduces an entirely new proposal, which no amendment should do at this time, I should like to refer the hon. member to May's sixteenth edition, page 793, where it is said that an amendment must relate to the matter under consideration, and is governed by the rule of relevancy. On this basis I think the amendment, which goes beyond the particular scope of this clause, is out of order. I also think, in spite of the remarks just made by the hon. member for Charlevoix, that this amendment would tend to bring in a new class of industries which would benefit from the tax incentive, and which would thus indirectly be a charge on the treasury. For these reasons I submit that the amendment is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I appeal against your ruling.

[Text]

The Chairman: Is the hon. member appealing from the ruling of the Chair?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In committee of the whole, when clause 16 of Bill C-95, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, was being considered, the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac proposed in amendment the following:

That clause 16 of this bill be amended by adding clause 16A, which would read as follows:

16A. This section will also apply to small industries already set up in the said designated areas, in addition to industries which will improve their plants or buy new equipment.

The Chair decided that the effect of the proposed amendment would be to introduce an additional group of industries not covered in the main proposal and in consequence thereof the amendment was not relevant to the clause. Whereupon the hon. member for Lapointe appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the ruling confirmed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted in favour of your ruling.

[Text]

Mr. Beer: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

Mr. Turner: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

And the house having resumed in committee:

Mr. Grafftey: Before we proceed any further I would like to note that the other day the hon. member for Renfrew South indicated in an article that there was not enough polarization of debate and the people of Canada did not see enough difference in principle between the two major parties. What I wish to underline this afternoon is that in our discussion of designated areas there is a definite difference in principle regarding our approaches to this problem.

One of the main principles of the party I support in this house goes back to the time of Burke when the idea of local self-agency was promoted. It simply means that municipalities often know what is best for themselves and how best to govern their own affairs. This is a major difference in approach as between the two major parties.

We consulted the municipalities: You designated without consultation. When we brought in the notion of surplus manpower areas we never went forward unless the municipalities were consulted in advance, and this is a principle that is written right into the heart of my party's approach. A treasury bench, one third of which is made up of ex-senior bureaucrats, has adopted this attitude of designation without consultation, and that is what we are fighting against this afternoon.

I fully realize that the government of the day has a great responsibility in the field of stimulating the economy and employment, but I ask members of the government, have you not learned your lesson yet? Have you not learned your lesson that your whole economic problem has floundered because of lack of consultation? You never consulted the provinces in relation to your pension scheme or in relation to the municipal loans fund question. Lack of consultation keynotes the whole reason why the government is floundering in relation to its economic program; and in relation to the first area it designated I ask, is not the proof of the pudding in the making?

I do not want to underrate the importance of statistics. Of course in a plan such as the government has in mind, statistics and centralized control here in Ottawa, play an important part in determinations before designating an area; but what we would like to know either from the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Industry, or the Minister of Labour, is whether in future the municipalities are going to be consulted before they are designated. If the hon. member for Renfrew South really wants polarization in debate, this notion of consultation is one that separates the two major parties in the house.

The party I support was the party which fathered confederation. Today we are fathering, again and again, this notion of co-operative federalism. Through our ARDA program and in the field of natural resources we went forward in good will, in co-operation and in a spirit of consultation with the provinces. We are the ones who have pioneered this whole area of co-operative federalism. Hon. members opposite talked about co-operative federalism in their speech from the throne, but their whole performance since then has been keynoted by a retreat from that spirit of co-operative federalism. Unless they accept our warning today, and assure us they will consult the municipalities in future before designating areas, then in a very short time we shall witness in this house—and mark my words—another retreat.

In a by-election in a constituency across the water somebody recently made the remark—and I think the remark was based on Conservative principles—that Westminster does not necessarily know what is good for Scotland. I think, underlining Conservative principle in this house, and especially in a nation with a large land area and sparse population, that Ottawa, no matter how wise the ex-bureaucrats are, does not always know what is best for the municipalities.

If you really believe in centralization across there, and I believe you do—you are the centralizers—you need have no fears by simply extending to municipalities, local governments and provinces the courtesy of consultation, because you will not necessarily be delegating your powers away forever. Before this debate is over I hope either the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Industry, Minister of Labour, or all of them together, will assure us that this spirit of co-operative federalism, inspired and pioneered by the government I supported prior to the last election, will be put into effect. I mention our approach to ARDA and the resources field, and hon. members opposite must realize, no matter what they say or think, that municipalities are still creatures of the provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Grafftey: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. member aware the address in reply to the speech from the throne was adopted a long time ago?

Mr. Grafftey: It might have been adopted by a vote, but it was not adopted in spirit by hon. members opposite. If you adopted the speech from the throne which contained this notion of co-operative federalism, far be it from me to suggest in reply to the Secretary of State that for one minute you have practised the spirit you meant to adopt. In fact you have turned your back on the municipalities—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am going to raise a serious point of order. It was agreed that on clause 1 of the bill there would be a general debate, and there was no effort made in any way on the part of the government to restrict the general debate on that clause, but we are now on clause 16, and there is a rule of the house that argument on a clause of a bill should be relevant to the clause. I was seeking by my earlier question, in a gentle way, to draw the hon. member's attention to this rule of the house, but since I do not seem to have succeeded perhaps I should ask Your Honour if it is in order to make these wide-ranging speeches on clause 16 of the bill?

Mr. Grafftey: In reply to the point of order I simply say I am not entering a general debate, I am talking about the specific principle of consultation, and all I ask before I take my seat is that one of the ministers concerned with this clause should guarantee to us that the courtesy of consultation will be invoked before any further areas are designated. This is not a general debate, but I repeat that this principle separates the major parties in the house in relation to their approach to this and similar problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the government should think again and change its mind about this clause which infringes upon provincial autonomy, since municipalities are under the provinces' jurisdiction.

Now, I wonder why the government did not ask the provinces to designate the areas where unemployment and economic stagnation were more serious than elsewhere. Surely, it would have been easy and more in keeping with the autonomy of the provinces to have the provinces themselves designate those areas and submit the required recommendations to the federal government.

I fail to understand the government's attitude. We hear the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) speak often enough of handing back to the provinces their taxation rights. He is an advocate of the new federalism.

What does he mean by this new federalism, when certain measures are being forced upon municipalities without the provinces being consulted?

I am of the opinion that this is not the way to get better co-operation between the federal government and the provinces; on the contrary, I believe that the government's position is to ignore the provinces, and this prompts me to ask the minister a question.

Why does the government decline to ask the provinces to designate those areas? We shall know from the minister's answer what the position is.

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to answer the hon. member. I think that question would be more properly put to the Minister of Industry when his estimates are up for consideration.

Mr. Pigeon: I do not think so.

[Translation]

I think that the minister is afraid to answer, because he realizes that his government has made an error by refusing to ask the agreement of the provinces. In my opinion, the government is unwise in refusing to revise its attitude in that regard.

[Text]

Mr. Skoreyko: Last Friday I spoke briefly on this bill and pointed out the problems experienced by small businesses which might wish to establish a new business or a subsidiary in a designated area.

The other day I noticed in the Ottawa Journal that the Minister of Industry, addressing the Ottawa Rotary Club, said that, although the government was concerned with industry, its interests did not lie in directing it or running it but, rather, in aiding it to expand and provide employment. When one looks at this particular subclause of clause 16 he wonders who had what in mind when this provision was drawn up. I refer specifically to subclause 3. May I read it briefly and explain how I interpret it. It says:

> For the purpose of this section, a person shall be deemed not to have been carrying on a business in a designated area in a fiscal period unless
> (a) throughout the fiscal period the aggregate of the capital cost of all machinery, equipment (other than delivery equipment) and buildings situated in the designated area that were owned by the person—

Subclause A deals with owned machinery, and it goes on under B to deal with leased machinery. Then it says, in line 17, that the aggregate amount must be at least 95 per cent of the aggregate of the capital cost of machinery, equipment—other than delivery equipment—and buildings wherever situated.

I would be very interested to have the minister's interpretation of what the words "wherever situated" mean. My interpretation is that the parliament of Canada cannot legislate with regard to business outside the country. Therefore, I must assume that the word "wherever" means "wherever in Canada". If this is the case, a Canadian business does not qualify because 95 per cent of the new machinery and equipment acquired must represent 95 per cent of the total assets of the company.

Let us take, as an example, a firm in the city of Ottawa which has buildings, equipment and machinery to the value of $10 million. If it wishes to establish in a designated area, whether it be in Brantford or in Blairmore it could do so, but its total assets in the city of Ottawa must represent 5 per cent of its total holdings when the new plant is built. I say that what we have really done by bringing this legislation before parliament is to open the door for foreign capital to enter this country, while closing it to our own corporations. If I am wrong in this contention, I hope the minister will explain to me, later on, what this means. My interpretation of this subclause is that it amounts to an economic boycott of Canadian industry. What is the partial solution, then? I intend to move an amendment to this clause—and I hope it will be accepted—to reduce the 95 per cent requirement. Though the fixing of any specified amount may result in a burden being imposed on certain business, a less stringent requirement would certainly be of some assistance. A partial solution, then, might be to amend the requirement from 95 per cent to 25 per cent, thus allowing smaller businesses to establish themselves, and permitting larger firms to establish subsidiaries or branch plants in the designated areas. I do not think the figure of 25 per cent is unreasonable, even if General Motors were to build a plant in one of the designated areas of the size and volume which would make the Oshawa plant representative of 5 per cent of their holdings here. I think some consideration should be given to this proposal, and I hope an explanation will be forthcoming.

I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the committee than is necessary, but I should like to summarize my views on this subject. I think the legislation as it stands precludes Canadian business from establishing subsidiary plants in designated areas, though it allows foreign companies to move into those areas and take advantage of the income tax holiday and the accelerated capital cost allowances. This purports to be legislation to encourage businesses to establish themselves in designated areas, but it appears to me to be ill-conceived and completely unworkable. In particular, I believe line 21 of subclause 3 should be withdrawn, or reworded to eliminate its present discriminatory character. This is the line which reads "and buildings wherever situated". In view of the declared intention behind this measure, the 95 per cent requirement is unworkable and amounts to economic boycott of Canadian industry. The entire clause 16, which enacts section 71A is, in my opinion, drawn in such a way as to encourage foreign investment while at the same time denying the incentive so necessary to Canadian business.

I therefore move, seconded by my hon. friend from Regina City (Mr. More):

That clause 16 section 71A. subclause (3) be amended by substituting 25 per cent in place of 95 per cent in line 17 and by substituting 25 per cent in place of 95 per cent in line 45.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, before we vote on this question I should like to point out that the hon. member is absolutely wrong in stating that this in any way favours foreign-owned businesses moving into an area. The reason for using 95 per cent is to ensure that industries which get advantage of the generous provisions provided under this clause, depreciation allowances, and so on, are new businesses. The reason 95 per cent is used is to ensure that new machinery, equipment and new buildings are constructed by these particular businesses.

Mr. Skoreyko: May I ask the minister one question. I pointed out the other day that I had a delegation in my office who were prepared to build a boiler manufacturing plant in the city of Brantford. By reason of the fact that new boiler manufacturing equipment in the United States costs a lot of money—in fact it is prohibitive—they were able to buy from a company in the United States who were enlarging their facilities second hand equipment at almost one tenth the cost of new. These people would be able to put 45 people to work the day they opened, but the law precludes their doing this at all. I say again that if you do not want to accept the figure of 25 per cent let us make it 50 per cent; but let us give these smaller people some kind of break.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. More: I do not want to prolong the debate, but am I to take it that the government's position is adamant, that there should be no change at this stage?

Mr. Caron: No change in plans.

Mr. More: Does the minister think that he will accomplish his purpose with this restriction in the clause?

Mr. Gordon: I thought we were on the amendment, but if I may answer the question I would be glad to. The whole purpose of this section is to concentrate on new businesses. If you include a provision which would allow these businesses to bring in second hand machinery, you are going to be competing with somebody else, which is the thing we do not want to happen.

Mr. Pugh: Surely where the business qualifies and meets the other requirements of the clause, taking the minister's words, what he is trying to do is to get new businesses, so surely the fact that new equipment may be necessary or may not should not make any difference. Does a new business need to have everything new? I think it is most unreasonable to say that they would have to get new equipment, that they would have to buy new equipment whether they are starting a new business or not. In other words, the cost of new equipment might preclude the starting of a new business. It seems to me most unreasonable that that should be the case. In other words, the minister says: "You are a new business, but look out, boys, we want to have no competition, or do not want you to compete with others". I do not want to use the word "ridiculous", but it is really a ridiculous assumption that this would preclude a new business from starting operations.

Mr. Gordon: Just in answer to that, if we went along with the suggestion made by the hon. member—and I must say I sympathize with him when he gets down to that specific case—if we did open it up like this, it would be an invitation to all sorts of businesses just to sell their present machinery to somebody else. This machinery would then become second hand and we would find we were trying to deal with something which we would not be able to handle.

Mr. Skoreyko: I may not have pointed this out to the minister, but the equipment which these people are buying from the United States is not procurable in Canada. Cannot that sort of restriction be put on it?

Mr. Gordon: I am sure there will be the odd case like that, but I do not think there will be very many. When this was being considered we attempted to find a broad definition which would not be subject to wide abuses, and that is why it is provided in this way.

Mr. Hales: I think the minister is at cross purposes with the principle of this business of designated areas. As I understand it, an area is designated to produce new jobs and raise the economic growth of the community. I think that is the principle, and we are all agreed about that. Does it make any difference to the minister whether a man works on an old lathe or a new lathe? His purpose is to create employment, and whether a man works on an old lathe or a new lathe, or any kind of machinery, should make no difference. I think the minister is out to create jobs, but the clause of the bill which my hon. friend just mentioned prohibits this very thing the minister is trying to promote.

Mr. Drury: Some representations were made to me about designated areas by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. One of the things which was worrying him considerably was the prospect, of which I think we have had warning, that industries now operating in a non-designated area would merely pick up their machinery and equipment and move into a designated area, thus depriving the designated area of the advantages of such an area. I suggest this is what is most likely to happen if the present legislation is amended so as to allow the advantages of accelerated depreciation and income tax incentives in respect of second hand or used machinery. It is precisely to avoid the likelihood of businesses which, rather than expanding and creating new operations, merely shift their scene of operation from one area to another that we need this provision.

Mr. Pugh: The amendment calls for the substitution of 25 per cent instead of 95 per cent. The thing I am trying to figure out is how the figure of 95 per cent was picked. Following along the statement of the Minister of Industry, it seems to me there is a lot of suspicion about Canadian business, that there is a sort of bureaucratic suspicion about Canadian businessmen. I cannot see any industry just packing up and moving to another town. That sort of thing is not undertaken quickly, and the minister has said that a business would have to erect a new building. Surely to goodness this would prevent any quick interchange of business. If a business is started in one place, I have yet to see where you can put it on a golf cart and walk across to the next tee or hole, as it were, and start it again in another place. You just cannot do it; it is a costly and time consuming business. So I come back to this word "suspicion", and I think this is wrong.

Mr. Skoreyko: The Minister of Industry a moment ago said that this legislation was designed to prevent movement of one industry from one place to another place or to a designated area. Not too long ago the Minister of Finance was being interviewed in Windsor, and I have a newspaper heading here which says: "A wonderful opportunity for Windsor". He was asked at that time by a Dr. Phillips:

Could you give me a quick clarification of the significance of "new" in this context? If I just change the name of my business but I continue to do the same as before, does this mean it is new?

Mr. Gordon: No, but if you form a subsidiary and you build a great big plant next door, it is new.

Mr. Gordon: With new equipment.

Mr. Skoreyko: That is the minister's word. Then may I ask the minister to explain line 21, which refers to "wherever the building, machinery and equipment is situated". Is that in Canada or abroad?

Mr. Gordon: There are no designated areas abroad so it would have to be Canada.

Mr. Skoreyko: So that what I said about this being an economic boycott—

Mr. Gordon: I am sorry, I think I am incorrect in my answer there. This particular paragraph means "wherever they are situated".

Mr. Skoreyko: Does that mean anywhere in the world, then?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, this whole clause, as well as the bill, is so ambiguously worded, so confused—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Progress reported.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might have leave of the house, before we go on with private members' business, to say a word about the estimates for tonight and tomorrow night, which I omitted to say before. If by any chance the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources should be completed tonight, and I would hope they might be, the Minister of Transport would be glad to go on with those items of his department that have not yet been taken. If the estimates of the Department of Labour should be completed during the sitting tomorrow night the Minister of Fisheries would be glad to go on and complete his department.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C., GRAIN ELEVATOR

On the order:

Notices of Motions (Papers)—Mr. Howard—That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports received by the government or any agency or branch thereof dealing with the grain elevator at Prince Rupert, B.C., since January 1, 1959.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might have permission of the house to discharge the order and withdraw this motion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH ROLAND COMTOIS, REPENTIGNY, QUE.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence exchanged since April 8, 1963, between the Minister of Public Works or officers of the Department of Public Works, on one hand, and Mr. Roland Comtois, of Repentigny, constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, on the other hand.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should not want to be too long, but I am most surprised that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) for whom I have some consideration, has not yet tabled the documents I requested. He is taking refuge behind the word "official".

I wonder if the correspondence between the Department of Public Works and a candidate who was defeated at the last election truly constitutes official correspondence. That is why I should like to have that correspondence tabled, Mr. Speaker, to prove that, for all practical purposes, it is not your humble servant who was elected at the last election but the man I defeated?

Mr. Gregoire: That is true.

Mr. Pigeon: It is he, Mr. Speaker, who makes the decisions in the riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. It is he who makes suggestions to the government and to crown ministers, including the Minister of Public Works up to now. If this is not true, I would like the minister to table this correspondence so that we will know what is going on.

I do not consider the stand taken by the minister as normal. It is improper to refuse to provide such correspondence to an elected member of parliament.

I shall give you an example among many, Mr. Speaker, of what has been going on in the constituency of Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm since the government came into power.

I learned some time ago that a painting job was being carried out at the post office of L'Assomption.

Mr. Speaker, the work is being done by a painting contractor who is not a resident of that locality.

I have heard it said that the Department of Public Works—not the minister himself, but perhaps one of his four assistants in Montreal—had got in touch with Mr. Roland Comtois to ask him the name of two or three persons who might be interested in submitting tenders concerning the painting to be done at the L'Assomption post office. It seems Mr. Roland Comtois contacted two or three persons and told them: "Get together and see that one of you puts in the lowest tender." So that the person who got those contracts—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) is rising on a point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, on a point order, it is my understanding that according to the rules of the house we should only discuss whether or not these documents should and must be produced, and not any substantive matters regarding the contents of the documents themselves. I respectfully submit to Your Honour that my hon. friend is discussing the substantive merits of what is or may be in the documents if they are produced and is not limiting his remarks, as they should be limited, to arguments whether or not the documents should be produced.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order just raised by the hon. member for Renfrew South, it is obvious that the hon. member quotes these examples to illustrate how important it is that these papers be tabled so that the house be thoroughly informed on the stewardship of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on the point of order, which is very important and very relevant? We are now discussing the production of papers and the question relates to the nature of the correspondence involved.

I do not think that my hon. friend is able, with his well known imagination, to go beyond this matter, which is basically a matter of principle.

As my hon. friend can see, the answer I gave on October 30 is mentioned tonight in the discussion. I think he himself will admit that it is no time tonight to go beyond that discussion.

My hon. friend is well aware that we studied twice the estimates of the department, and that they will soon come again before the house, perhaps next week. Then he will have the opportunity to speak a lot as he is wont to do in and out of season; he will be entirely free to do so.

Consequently, I would ask him to postpone the discussion, because the question is completely out of order.

Mr. Paul: As to the remarks made by the Minister of Justice, pardon me, of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets)—patronage is so rampant that one no longer knows which one of the ministers is the largest dispenser, which explains why I mentioned the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier).

If the hon. member for Mercier wishes to speak, perhaps he could take his seat, since he has one in the front row. He is a bit premature in his endeavours and it would possibly be wiser for him to be in the back row where he could make his observations to the Speaker.

In his remarks, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue indicated that the mover of the motion explains the reasons why he wants the documents to be produced. And it is in the light of the information given by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) that we will be able to decide on the validity of the arguments invoked by the Minister of Public Works who tells us about the official nature of that correspondence.

As long as we remain in the dark about the reasons why the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm moved that motion, we will be unable to decide whether or not the documents requested are of an official nature.

I submit that the remarks made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm are relevant to the motion he moved.

[Text]

Mr. Macdonald: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that basically the debate at this time should really be limited to the question of whether or not documents which have been refused by the crown can be refused for the reasons stated by the minister. I submit that if a minister comes into the house and states that by reason of the prerogative of the crown it would not be in the public interest to make documents available or alternatively, if he comes in here and says that the documents are private correspondence and the private property of some individual subject of the crown and for that reason should not be disclosed to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and to the world at large, hon. members are in the position of having to accept the minister's word. Therefore it would not be in order to go into the character of the documents or the type of correspondence it might be, because for that very reason the private interests of an individual citizen would be disclosed in public, and I would submit this would be against the proper order of the house.

If I may, I should like to refer to Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, page 249, where I find the following:

> Occasions may arise when the government will feel constrained to refuse certain papers on the ground that their production would be inconvenient or injurious to the public interests. A high authority writes on this point: "Considerations of public policy and a due regard to the interests of the state, occasionally demand that information sought for by members of the legislature should be withheld, at the discretion and upon the general responsibility of ministers."

Mr. Knowles: This is not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member is now going away beyond the point of order. He is actually debating the substance of the motion now before the house. The argument he is making now could very well be submitted to the house in the course of the debate.

The point of order which has been raised by the hon. member for Renfrew South is well taken. I am sure that the rules of the house are well known to every hon. member here. Indeed, all the comments made in connection with the point raised by the hon. member for Renfrew South indicate that members are substantially in agreement. If it is necessary to do so, I might again refer hon. members to a ruling made by His Honour, Mr. Speaker Michener, on February 8, 1962, which is reported in Hansard of that day at page 682. This is one of the classic references on this particular subject. I quote:

> The motion is one calling on the government to produce the documents referred to in the motion. The question in issue is whether or not they should be produced. Production of them has been objected to. It would be relevant to debate whether or not the grounds of objection were sufficient but in my view it would not be relevant to debate what the government should be doing about the breadth of international waters. That is another issue. The hon. member recognizes that the matter before the house is a narrow one. I hope we shall not turn this discussion into a debate as to what should be the course of the government in these international negotiations—

In other words, the point before the house is a very narrow one, whether these documents should be produced and whether the reasons invoked by the government for not producing them are valid. I am sure the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) will bear this restrictive statement in mind when he makes his comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to give concrete evidence of the fact that there has been correspondence between the Minister of Public Works or his department and Mr. Roland Comtois of Repentigny. That is what I had in mind. A typical case happened in the riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and the present situation is an insult to the people of the city of L'Assomption. Mr. Roland Comtois is given more importance than your humble servant.

[Text]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the hon. member is continuing to do the same thing he was doing before Your Honour made a ruling. He is now discussing what correspondence he alleges there was, which is contrary to the letter of this motion. The only thing he can debate, as Your Honour quite properly ruled, is whether or not the correspondence should be produced. He cannot allege, as he was alleging, that the contents of such correspondence was of such a nature. He can only debate the question of whether or not the correspondence should be produced.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is a repetition of a point of order which was raised earlier. Is the hon. member rising on the point of order?

Mr. Martineau: Yes, on the point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I may say that I had made a ruling on it.

Mr. Martineau: This is another point of order arising from the remarks of the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). He submitted to Your Honour that if a member of the government resists the production of these documents, then that becomes law. In other words, it puts the supremacy in the hands of—

Mr. Macdonald: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Martineau: We are on a point of order.

Mr. Macdonald: I rise on a point of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We cannot be on two points of order at the same time. Perhaps we should hear out the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue.

Mr. Macdonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege—

Mr. Martineau: The hon. member will have a chance to answer.

Mr. Macdonald: My point of privilege is that Your Honour interrupted me in the course of my argument. I feel that the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue should not be permitted to reply to an argument which I was not in a position to complete. Either I should be allowed to complete the argument, or the hon. member should be called to order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is quite right. I must say that I was just awaiting a favourable moment to intervene. Certainly, it seems to me the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue is referring to the argument which the hon. member for Rosedale started. I interrupted him because I thought that this was part of the debate. I believe the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue is also introducing an argument which should be submitted in the course of the debate.

We are, perhaps, being a little bit unfair to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, who is trying to submit to the Chair and to the chamber the very arguments, I am sure, that the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue is trying to put forward.

Mr. Martineau: I will be very brief on the point of order. I submit that because a member of the ministry refuses to produce a document, there is no reason—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Martineau: This is pertinent to the point of order. It is up to the house to decide whether or not these documents should be produced. It is not for a minister to decide; that is why we are having a debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We all appreciate what the hon. member is saying now. It is for this reason we should allow the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to submit his argument.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I will abide by your decision and will try to remain as close as possible to the motion now before us.

I only wanted to mention concrete cases. Actually, I mentioned one, and it is for this reason that I asked the minister to table the correspondence between Mr. Roland Comtois, of Repentigny, and the minister or the officials of the Department of Public Works. As a member of parliament, I am entitled to have that correspondence.

Mr. Speaker, when a member of the opposition asks, for instance, that the correspondence between the Prime Minister of Canada and the premiers of the provinces be produced, the government agrees in most cases. Therefore, I do not see why I should not have the right to ask the Minister of Public Works to table the correspondence with that "dispenser of patronage", with a man whom he encourages to engage in patronage. I have the right to have those documents, and I wonder why the minister refuses to produce them.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I remember well, a point of order was raised at the beginning of the remarks of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. You then rendered your decision to the effect that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm should confine himself to the question before us.

However, on two or three occasions, the hon. member swerved from the topic, thus forcing us to rise on a point of order, with the resulting loss of much valuable time which would perhaps make it possible for us to conclude the matter this evening.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about an exchange of correspondence, and in my opinion, that is a most important matter.

It happens fairly often that some members on this side of the house ask for the tabling of correspondence exchanged between the federal government and the premier of a province, and the government then agrees to do so. Why does the Minister of Public Works object to the tabling of the correspondence exchanged between himself, his departmental officials and Mr. Roland Comtois?

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Comtois was defeated by an overwhelming majority in the last general election. Does the minister attach more importance to a defeated candidate than to the premier of a province? Nonsense!

I feel that this is the very essence of democratic principles. As a representative of the people and in keeping with democratic principles, I have a right to obtain those papers even though the letters are marked "Personal" or "Confidential".

The minister refuses to table those letters. I actually know that correspondence was exchanged between Mr. Roland Comtois and officials of the Department of Public Works. What is the reason for the refusal to produce those documents? It is because a shameless system of patronage, the like of which has never been seen in Canada, is being concealed.

That is the only reason.

[Text]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order. Your Honour has ruled twice that the hon. member could not go into the substance of what he alleges is contained in these documents. If this house is to operate in any efficient and proper fashion, then the rules must be followed. There has been a great deal of criticism in the press of late about this house being a shambles. It is a shambles, and will continue to be a shambles if hon. members continue to ignore the rulings made by Your Honour. Not two or three days ago, but three minutes ago, Your Honour made a ruling, and in spite of that fact the hon. member continues to deal with what he alleges is in the documents, and not whether they should be produced.

I often think, Mr. Speaker, that the rules were made and conceived in this house in the knowledge that hon. members were gentlemen and would abide by the rules. Instead of that, it appears that some hon. members—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, the remarks made by the hon. member for Renfrew South imply that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is not a gentleman. We all know that he is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member for Renfrew South is going away beyond the point of order he was raising at the start. I feel that up to this point the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has not strayed too far from the subject matter. It is so limited that I suggest if he were to limit himself strictly to the point that the rules allow, he probably would not have anything to say. I think some degree of leniency should be allowed. I will try to remind the hon. member, in the course of his speech, if I feel he is not abiding by the ruling which was made earlier today.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I abide by your ruling and before concluding my remarks, I wish to ask the minister, in the name of fairness and justice, of the respect for democratic principles, to let me have photocopies of the correspondence between Mr. Roland Comtois and the Minister of Public Works or some of his officials. There can be no reason for not tabling that correspondence, unless we are to be prevented from making known to the public the shameless system of patronage now going on and which I expose in the name of democratic principles.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I am a little amazed at the way things are shaping up, because as far as I am concerned, I always considered the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) as one of the most perfect gentlemen in the house. Indeed, if there is one member of the cabinet whose sincerity and honesty I would not doubt, it is precisely the Minister of Public Works, and please believe that this is said in all frankness and sincerity.

Mr. Denis: I am jealous.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I hear the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) say that he is jealous, but I can tell him that I have confidence in his integrity, even if certain circumstances might have called some suspicion to be aroused concerning certain patronage within his department.

Mr. Speaker, if I rise in this debate, it is because some words lack precision.

If my memory serves me right about recent events, several notices of motions for the production of papers have been put on the order paper; while these motions were being submitted, the Minister of Public Works used an expression that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) had himself used a few moments before when he made some reservation by mentioning "all official documents," at the very moment when the Minister of Public Works was about to table the official documents, these words being thus invested with the same meaning the Minister of Justice had intended to give them.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the words "official documents" are of a specious character; that is why I would like to know what is meant by "official".

We have ourselves submitted several notices of motion for the production of papers. The Postmaster General stated he was ready to table all the official correspondence.

I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Justice and the Postmaster General, who must submit documents to the house, what they mean by the term "official"?

Suppose, for instance, that my former political opponent—I take this as an example—the former candidate in the riding of Lapointe who, needless to say, lost by a very large majority, writes to the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) in those terms: "My dear Azellus, ..."

Mr. Denis: Very good.

Mr. Gregoire: I find it in the list I have here. "...I am very pleased to inform you that my third daughter is expecting a child in three months."

And in the following paragraph, my former opponent adds: "With regard to the problem I mentioned about the job given to so-and-so, will you do something about it, will something happen?"

Then, Mr. Speaker, because of the paragraph about the third daughter's or fourth son's coming baby—I am not sure—will the Postmaster General consider that letter as official correspondence? We should know what to think. A man may very well write to a minister, calling him by his first name, saying "tu" instead of "vous", that is write a letter of a personal nature, although part of its contents might deal with the department concerned. In that case does the minister consider that, because the letter comes from a friend, it can be of an official character?

That is exactly what I would like to hear explained by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets), the Postmaster General and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), all three having used the word "official".

Does this sort of correspondence exist in the post office and the public works departments.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I have not been aware of any correspondence in my riding, which might have given rise to some patronage.

In regard to the Post Office Department, I requested the production of papers. I have copies of letters with me but I am waiting for the tabling of these papers to see whether all the correspondence will be tabled. I want to warn the Post Office Department that I have copies of the letters.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member for Lapointe is somewhat departing from the subject of the motion. I would ask him to come back to it.

Mr. Moreau: He is also moving away from his seat.

Mr. Gregoire: There is nothing in the standing orders that forbids a member from taking the most comfortable position to speak, and if we are at the far end of the house—I make this remark because of the interruption of the Liberal member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau)—it is precisely because of the unfairness of the hon. members sitting on that side of the house.

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We are fed up with the vacuous speeches of the Caouettists. The hon. member for Lapointe should stick to the subject under study. We are discussing the advisability of tabling the correspondence exchanged between the Minister of Public Works and a Mr. Roland Comtois.

We are fed up with vacuous and frivolous speeches. This has to stop, and I ask the hon. member for Lapointe to deal with the matter in an appropriate and relevant way.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I think that as far as insignificance is concerned—

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member is once more departing from the subject.

Mr. Gregoire: I am dealing with a point of order. There cannot be two points of order at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: I think it would be better if the hon. member for Lapointe would sit when the Speaker is standing. In my opinion, this type of intervention in our debates is perhaps useless. It would be better if the hon. member would revert to the subject matter of the present debate.

Mr. Choquette: Indeed.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for calling the remarks of the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) useless, and in that sense, useless is sensibly equivalent to insignificant.

Well, to continue—

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I say to the hon. member for Lapointe: you are not in a Creditiste suburb, but in the house, where respect and dignity are imperative.

Mr. Speaker, by the way he interprets your ruling, the hon. member for Lapointe departs from the dignity of this house. Let him deal with the matter in a pertinent way, that is all we want. He credits you with words you never uttered.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would point out to you that I have let the hon. member for Lotbiniere call my speech insignificant, but it was following interruptions which are not at all justified. I would ask the hon. member to take due note of that fact.

Mr. Speaker, I continue on a matter which is before us.

[Text]

Mr. Greene: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the hon. member for Lotbiniere and the hon. member for Lapointe are fighting for the heavyweight championship of the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I resume my statement. In concluding, I wish to point out that some of the papers retained by the Minister of Public Works and which are supposedly official documents are related to transactions which took place between his own department and certain people who, in most cases, are former political candidates. We have the proof that things went very much the same way when the hon. members on this side of the house were sitting opposite.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. We were never guilty of anything like that.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I am not without proof. When my hon. friend's party was on the other side of the house, Dr. Henri Vaillancourt, who lived in my county and knew next to nothing about postal service had the advantage of being a post office consultant.

Mr. Speaker: Once more, I must remind the hon. member for Lapointe to stay within the limits of the subject.

Mr. Gregoire: I would be glad to do so, if I were not interrupted from every side; I would ask the Chair to see that I am not interrupted any more. I am sure that the Chair realizes that those interruptions carry us beyond the limits of the subject under discussion.

Had I not been interrupted a few minutes ago by my hon. friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, I would already have said that I am quite willing to help him in the matter of these papers, by asking the Minister of Public Works to submit to the house all official correspondence. I feel that it would help maintain the democratic spirit of our parliament.

If there is any patronage, I should not want to cast any reflection on the minister since only the officials of his department are responsible. I trust that whatever its feelings may be, the government will throw some light on the situation by tabling the requested correspondence.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, when this order for return, which is No. 126, was called last October 30, I stated that the arguments put forward by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) concerning order No. 125 also applied to this order for return.

On page 4178 of Hansard for October 30 last, the Minister of Justice is reported as saying:

> Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this motion being agreed to. There is no official correspondence.

A question was then directed to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who agreed to withdraw the motion because of the reasons given by the Minister of Justice, to wit that there was no official correspondence.

Mr. Martineau: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Deschatelets: I am quite willing to do that but I should like to remind the hon. member that when he was speaking about unemployment, the other night, I rose twice to ask him very politely whether he would allow me to ask a question and he turned me down. However, I will let him ask his question this time.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I must agree that the Minister of Public Works is always extremely polite, but I must say that if I did not allow him to ask his question, it is only because I did not have enough time to answer him. Otherwise, I would have been very happy to oblige.

This is my question. Does the Minister of Public Works feel that correspondence dealing with matters under his jurisdiction or with matters of public interest may not be official correspondence?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) so wishes, I shall answer him and at the same time I shall reply to the hon. member for Lapointe, who asked for the definition of official correspondence. I think that here we are getting at—

Mr. Gregoire: The nub.

Mr. Deschatelets: —the nub of the whole question. I am happy to see the leader of the official opposition is here. I feel sure he will agree with the stand I am taking on this matter because, in the last six years, his own position has been the one I am taking tonight as regards motions for the production of papers.

Mr. Speaker, when I receive—

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the hon. member any evidence of that, or is it just his own statement?

Mr. Deschatelets: It is what we call, in French, "commune venommée". Everyone knows it and there is no need to prove what everyone knows.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when I receive a document marked "personal and confidential", I file it in my personal records. According to parliamentary authorities, tradition and practice, this is a document that I should not be called upon to table.

I shall give an example that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm will understand, I am sure. If one of my colleagues introduced a motion for the production of papers, letters and correspondence exchanged between the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and the previous minister for public works, I am convinced that the hon. member would be reluctant to have those personal and confidential letters produced.

So, there is a matter of principle that goes far beyond the few documents that the hon. member would like us to produce.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct merely one question to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Deschatelets: Certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: When some correspondence between the minister or the Department of Public Works, for instance, and Mr. Comtois entails expenditures on the government's part and when these expenses are paid, after all, by the people of Canada, have I not the right, as a representative of the Canadian people, of a portion of the Canadian people, to know about the documents that have led to those government expenditures?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, by notice of motion No. 126, the hon. member is asking two things. First, he is asking whether there has been correspondence between a certain Roland Comtois and the Minister of Public Works. In the second place, he is asking whether some correspondence has been exchanged between that Mr. Comtois and the Department of Public Works.

I answer that there has been no correspondence between that Mr. Comtois and the Department of Public Works. Moreover, if there had been correspondence marked "personal and confidential" exchanged between Mr. Comtois and the Minister of Public Works, which correspondence would have been filed in the personal records of the Minister of Public Works, I maintain that I should not be compelled to table it.

Mr. Gregoire: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Deschatelets: Certainly.

Mr. Gregoire: At that rate, any correspondence addressed to a minister by a former candidate or by a man who would like to extend his patronage to a riding could be stamped "personal and confidential" and would become untouchable since we could not ask to have it produced. And the sender could thus try to secure all kinds of information and, even though it would entail public expenditures, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, and even though it would give rise to the awarding of contracts without tenders or other things of the kind by the mere fact of being stamped "personal and confidential", such documents would not be official?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the case in point now submitted by the member for Lapointe, it deals with letters bearing the words "personal and confidential" and addressed to the minister, which would be placed in the personal file of the minister in his office or in his department; I must say that according to parliamentary experts and in compliance with the tradition followed down through the years, we should not be obliged, I do not say "not to table", but we should not be obliged to table that correspondence.

Mr. Gregoire: It is an unsound principle.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, the principle was laid down and all the experts made observations on it.

I have here May's book and at page 273 of the sixteenth edition, he comments as follows:

[Text]

The papers and correspondence sought from government departments should be of a public and official character and not private or confidential.

That author clearly said that documents between an individual and the department, or the officials of a department, can very well be tabled, but that it is different for a private and confidential document.

Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who was a member of a government which, during six years, consistently agreed to that recognized principle does not expect that I can be obliged to table personal and confidential documents which might be in my personal file. He has enough experience not to expect that.

Mr. Gregoire: What could be done in such circumstances?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, to reply to the observation by the hon. member for Lapointe, I must say that we are dealing here with a matter of principle.

The hon. member for Lapointe has enough imagination to go far beyond the matter with which we are dealing at the moment; but I feel quite sure that there must be in a minister's files some private file, with correspondence of a personal and confidential nature, that the minister should not be compelled to produce.

If the hon. members would think matters over, they might see things in that light.

Mr. Gregoire: Could I direct another question to the minister?

Mr. Deschatelets: Certainly.

Mr. Gregoire: You have not answered the question asked a moment ago by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. For the sake of argument, my hon. friend spoke of a private person who might write a personal and confidential letter containing a request entailing government expenditure. The letter is clearly indicated as being personal and confidential and it entails public expenses; if the letter of request is marked as personal and confidential by the sender, is the submission of that document to the house left to the discretion of the minister?

Mr. Deschatelets: My contention, Mr. Speaker, is that no minister should be compelled to produce a private and confidential paper which is in his own file, and not in the files of his department.

Now, I said a while ago that on October 30, 1963, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm admitted that my statement rested on solid grounds; the Minister of Justice had also expressed such a view. The hon. member agreed to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question on a particular point, just one word—

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I do not refuse to produce any correspondence between the man Comtois and some government official in the Department of Public Works. I have no correspondence, it does not exist. But I say that if there were a document, whatever it might be, with the mention "personal and confidential" in my personal file, the general and parliamentary jurisprudence as well as the customary practice—

Mr. Gregoire: It cannot be personal, it is a public matter.

Mr. Deschatelets: —should not compel me to produce such document.

Thinking the matter over, I believe that after considering the possible effect of such a motion, the hon. member would probably want to withdraw it.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another question?

Mr. Deschatelets: Certainly.

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing a basic principle of law which by far exceeds the comments of the Minister of Public Works. I always keep the remarks of the Minister of Justice in mind, because the Minister of Public Works bases his argument on them. And it is incorrect to maintain that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm recognized the remarks of the Minister of Justice as justified, because the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm realized with some delay, it is true that he should not accept the suggestion or the declaration of principle of the Minister of Justice. As a matter of fact, we see in today's order paper that motion No. 151 has been brought back for discussion at a later date.

The minister raises—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but I have to interrupt the hon. member.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major Alfred Fortier, Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house, went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An act respecting an Order of His Excellency the Governor in Council entitled the Surcharge on Imports Order, and to restore certain rates of customs duties and tariff benefits expressed to be withdrawn thereby.

Mr. Speaker: Since the business for tonight is the consideration of estimates I wonder whether the house will agree to go into committee of supply before we see the clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

1. Departmental administration including federal share of the expenses of the secretariat for the resource ministers council, $1,018,600.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, in making this, my first attempt, at explaining the estimates of the department and defending my management, I do so with some diffidence for a variety of causes. In the first place, I have been the minister of the department for only six months, and the estimates we are discussing tonight are estimates with which I had nothing to do. Indeed, most of them have already been spent. I think most hon. members will agree that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources probably has a wider range of responsibilities than any other government department. I have limitations as to those things I can usefully say at this stage. However, I shall be happy later to discuss specific programs and areas of work when the relevant votes come before the house.

I think hon. members are aware of the tremendous diffusion of the department. There is the administration of northern Canada, with all that that entails in the development of both human and material resources; research into water resources and advice on the management of water supply; the great national parks of Canada; and then, the cradle of our history which we call national historic sites and monuments; the management of wildlife in Canada, the national museum and a number of other related resource topics that all come within this department.

Last summer during the recess, Mr. Chairman, it was my good fortune to make an extensive tour of northern Canada. I must take note at this time that the hon. member for Northwest Territories did not like my proceeding to northern Canada. I can only assure him that I am going to do it again and again in the future. Like most hon. members, I had not previously had the opportunity of seeing northern Canada. I rather doubt if any great number of members in this house have been in what we call northern Canada, including the Arctic. Some of them have. I think they will agree with me that when you first see that country you change your predetermined concepts concerning it.

I do not propose to repeat a lot of platitudes about the north—and there have been platitudes. The north has subsisted, in part, upon reputation. There has been the romance of the north. I have nothing against romanticism. As a matter of fact I think the red shadow, for a period of a generation, kept alive a great stretch of sandy desert in north Africa. The stories that are coming out of our north country are giving a tremendous reputation to this part of the country, to the gratification of those who want to see it as a tourist paradise. I do not object in any way to the considerable writings about northern Canada at the present time. But it is a very difficult thing to understand any part of the country through second hand information.

The immediate problem which has been recognized by successive governments, and this is not a partisan matter, is how to make a reality of the human and material potential that is existing there. I think my predecessor in this post would agree with me that the fundamental problem of the north is economic. This is not entirely a problem for governments, though certainly they have a role to play in co-operation with soundly based private enterprise. What can be done to help broaden the economic base of the region so it can provide a satisfactory standard of living for its growing population and contribute to the economy as a whole? This is the question with which we are confronted in dealing with northern Canada. Let there be no mistake that the economic base must be broadened, or any doubt that the population is growing very quickly.

Historically, we would say that the important residents of the north, the Eskimo population, were able to depend on hunting and fishing to maintain their traditional way of living. These traditions are gone and will not return. With southern medicine and medical care, the population in most areas has grown far beyond the capacity of the local resources of game and fish to support it. The people in the south are no longer prepared to see disease and starvation hold the northern population to the limits set by the local food supply. The Eskimo people themselves have become aware of our southern comforts and conveniences and are no longer prepared to live in the way their forefathers did.

I found it very significant on my northern trip that virtually all the Eskimos with whom I spoke accorded first priority to the education of their children. At this point I should like to say that I sincerely hope, indeed I know, that every member of this house is prepared to take the stand that there are no longer any generically inferior people anywhere. This applies with a special emphasis to our northern people. I found the Eskimo people, pushed off on ice and rock, extremely able people. Those who have been given some education in our schools are shortly going to present themselves to Canadians, probably in other parts of Canada, as well informed, well integrated, well balanced people who want to take part in the future of this Canada, which is theirs as much as ours. This means education in the ways and techniques of the south, in schools based essentially on a southern pattern modified to meet northern needs.

As hon. members know, the schools are there. Most northern children, of whatever racial origin, can now go to school; and within about five years this opportunity will be open to all of them. Well qualified students will soon be graduating in substantial numbers and will be looking for work. However the jobs are not there now, and they will have to be provided. The economic base must expand.

With particular reference to the western Arctic, beginning at what I would describe as Hay River and going up the Mackenzie river, I find great promise at the present time. The projected railway to Hay River, with its branch line to Pine Point, is going to have the effect of moving freight up to about latitude 62. At Hay River, where a devastating flood took place in May of this year, the town has recovered, and in the shipping period from about June 8 until October 25 freight going up the Mackenzie rose 50 per cent over last year.

There is abundant evidence that mining companies, and resource companies, are going into the area, staking out properties, finding new minerals, and developing new mines. I want to pay my compliment to those companies, some of them giant Canadian companies, that are putting their money into an area where risk capital is needed. The tremendous mine at Pine Point, where investment is under way totalling $30 million, with a townsite that will be capable in the next four or five years of supporting 2,000 people, is one of the bright spots in Canada. Further north than that United Keno Hill, and other mines such as Giant Yellowknife, are doing exceptionally well, and by their actions are persuading an increasing amount of risk capital to go into the north country. On the western side of the Arctic, then particularly in the Mackenzie area, the outlook is extremely good.

In order to achieve these objectives, however, government must be as efficient as possible, and must reflect closely the needs of the area served. In my judgment, and I know my predecessor in the former administration agrees, this means that administration as far as possible be decentralized to the north.

The need to get government closer to the people most immediately concerned has been recognized in the bills respecting Mackenzie and Nunassiaq territories which are now awaiting second reading in this house. It is not my purpose at the moment, nor would it be in order, to discuss these bills. I would, however, like to underline the very great importance of giving them prompt and sympathetic consideration.

This urgency arises partly from the fact that the bills envisage the establishment of the new territories on April 1, 1964. This provides very little time for the federal and territorial governments and the Northwest Territories council to make the final arrangements which must await passage of the bills. A more immediate source of urgency arises from the fact that the life of the present Northwest Territories council will expire this month, on November 21 to be exact.

If the Mackenzie bill is not passed, the territories will be left without a legislature, and in that part of the world it is desirable for obvious reasons to avoid a winter election if possible. If these bills had not been before the house, an election would have been called probably for September last. As things have worked out, the territories will be without a legislature until an election can be held, or until the Mackenzie bill goes through.

This may not seem a serious matter, since the territorial council normally meets for only three or four weeks a year. However, the next meeting is scheduled for January when the annual territorial estimates will come up for consideration. The territorial council has the same authority over estimates as this house, although there is a difference in practice. Unlike our parliament, the territorial council normally considers its government's estimates before the beginning of the fiscal year to which they refer. In short, if there is no council meeting in January there will be no money available in the normal course for territorial expenditures in April.

Hon. members will be aware of the quick action of the council in passing legislation needed following the flooding of last spring. Let me say the time has now arrived when it is in the interests of the people there that they have more government on the ground and less government from Ottawa. I think the people who are there and are developing that country, are exercising and enjoying a greater confidence in their own ability to stay there and to prosper, and it behoves this parliament to extend to them as rapidly as we can further major conduct in control of their affairs at site.

As indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, northern administration is not a partisan matter. The federal government first took an active interest in northern development during a Liberal regime. The succeeding Conservative government, to their credit, carried on and expanded these programs, and added to them to meet changing conditions. The present government does not foresee a radical departure from the broad lines established earlier, although of course conditions are not static and policies must be flexible to support them.

My predecessors used the word "vision" to describe their attitude to northern development. They have a certain moral copyright on that word, if not on the ideas that it represents. I would describe our approach to northern policy as one of imaginative realism, and I want to be realistic in respect of the north, as I am sure the people who live there also want to be.

At the present time it is an enormous deficit area. We are putting somewhere between $40 million and $50 million a year, in moneys collected from taxpayers in southern Canada, into the north country, and those people who live in the north country should not be ashamed of those circumstances, because this is the history of pioneer areas in all parts of Canada. As Canada moved west the same situation existed then, but we want as early as we possibly can, as do the people who live there, to see that they be self-supporting, and it would seem to me to be the responsibility of the government here to adopt things and do acts in respect of assisting private enterprise to go in there, build up that country, employ people, and ultimately stand on their own feet. That is going to be our policy.

Whatever word is used, I think we would all agree that the north is an important part of the country that has been neglected for most of our history and that now deserves the best efforts and sympathetic attention of the government of Canada. To maintain, and retain our national sovereignty, because of defence and because of the resource development, it is imperative that we give continuing and even expanding attention to that country, and I was particularly relieved to note the vast new interest that is obvious in most of the Arctic, and particularly in the western Arctic, by people with private investment capital.

Now I want to deal with one or two other matters. I am quite certain my predecessor will agree with me that we have in our 19 national parks a very fine representation of the original Canada in its wilderness state, that we have preserved our national parks well, that we want to continue them for the enjoyment of the people of Canada, but at the same time we realize they have come to have a commercial aspect to the extent that they are one of the great magnets drawing an increasing number of people from other parts of the world, to visit Canada and spend their money here.

Due to the improvement of a considerable network of roads in Canada, and particularly with the imminent finalization of the trans-Canada highway, we seem to have repatriated a great amount of Canadian traffic that formerly used highways in the United States. I am aware that assisting in the repatriation has been the 92 cents condition of the Canadian dollar, but it must be admitted that our great national parks system is one of those tremendous magnets which are drawing a greater number of visitors to Canada annually, and that situation in turn is one of the bright spots in our balance of payments situation. I believe in recent years we have turned a deficit of $250 million annually into a favourable balance of some $50 million.

Historically our parks were set aside to be wilderness areas. This was the original concept, it is still the concept, and the traditionalist today who wants to go into a national park would prefer to find very few people there beside himself. He wants the great outdoors, but the traditionalist is being confronted by hard facts at this time. A generation ago most of those who visited our national parks, particularly those in the western parks system were relatively wealthy Canadians or very wealthy Americans who came by rail bringing their families with them, and who stayed in the great hotels—hotels which provided all the services needed. During the time of their holiday in Canada they spent a considerable amount of money.

All this has changed, and the automobile has changed it. The crowds today are on rubber tires and they are really crowds. Because of statutory holidays with pay, because of a good and always improving roads system, because of the fact that cars are owned by almost everyone, most Canadian families are today throwing the kids in the back of the car and saying: "Let us see Canada; let us go to the national parks". For one reason or another, in the case of our western parks, when they get on the highway they say: "We shall drive right through to Banff", or "We shall drive right through to Jasper". I am certain my predecessor is aware of the situation. We face a crisis in our national parks. It is a crisis of plenty, not one of paucity; thank goodness for that. But here is a situation where the traditionalist is in conflict with the situation as it exists. We are faced with the necessity of providing a new type of service in our parks for these people who come in on rubber tires.

I think it is a splendid thing that the ordinary Canadian can take his family to the national parks. But, as I have indicated, we must provide as far as we can the type of service he demands. These visitors want tenting facilities; they want a place to park the trailer and they want the kind of service which makes allowance for the fact that a considerable proportion of the money allocated for the holiday is already allocated to the gas tank. We have this situation to meet. We must meet it, and at the same time retain as far as we possibly can the traditional outlook toward our national parks. That is not going to be easy. As I have said, we have undertaken to divide the administration of the parks system. We are setting up at once a station for western Canada located at Calgary, a station for central Canada at Cornwall and a station at Sydney, Nova Scotia, for eastern Canada. So hon. members will see we are decentralizing the administration. When an organization does a substantial part of its business in two months of the year it has to make decisions quickly; it is not always practicable to wire to Ottawa and wait for a reply. We are putting responsibility for purchasing and for making decisions upon those divisional officials who will be responsible in those areas. We found last summer, particularly in the case of the western parks where a tremendous increase in visitors was experienced, that it was very difficult to take decisions in time to relieve the congested situation—a situation which was really something to behold. In Banff last year we had over a million visitors and in our parks across Canada we experienced a 24 per cent increase compared with the previous year. This was not foreseen by the department or by myself, and I am certain my predecessor would agree that an increase of such magnitude presents a startling situation. This demand for tenting facilities and parking space for trailers should not be regarded as short term in its nature. I think we must realize it is here to stay and we must make preparations to meet it.

Before I close I should like to say something about one or two of the other aspects of the work of this department. We Canadians often console our frustration over the problems of the day by reflecting that our land is a rich land, that its waters and rocks, its woods and its soils are an estate that provides a solid basis for our sovereign existence. We are not wrong in laying claim to bountiful natural resources, but we have heavier blinkers than those of the legendary Seraphim if we believe that simply having is enjoying. Our resources exist, but they are often hidden by more than physical barriers. Ignorance as to location and development techniques, well meaning parochialism as to the use of benefits, are two of the major problem areas, common of course to all states but of particular concern to resource management in a country where the interests of many governments are involved.

As in the days of the "voyageurs", although now for different reasons, waterways speak with a loud voice to dictate where the country may grow. Water is basic to human civilization; its purity and availability are taken for granted. We have come to feel this way precisely because of the scientific research which in past years has very unobtrusively supported the tapping of fairly extensive supplies. The drain grows day by day, uses multiply, the countryside is remodelled and so century old water patterns are disrupted. In the fact of this dilemma, antiquated water knowledge cannot be tolerated and for this reason I am proud of the team of water resource professional and technical people which has been built up in my department.

Their professional work falls under three headings: (1) hydrometric measurements; (2) sediment surveys and (3) studies of special current interest to the federal government. The hydrometric work relies on 1,750 stations through the country, 100 of which were established during the current year. The sediment work is relatively new—it is in its third year—but its value has proven itself. Indeed the life of costly reservoir works and navigation facilities cannot be divorced from the evolutionary processes that are constantly affecting any stream. Our sediment studies are bearing down on this area of ignorance. But pride in what is being done must not delude us into believing that all the answers to the problems of water usages in a complex society will be available without a constant vigilance to keep our research on top of the facts. It seems inevitable that our activity and our expenditure in this area will increase.

As I have mentioned, the department also conducts special studies in connection with current water development interest. In this connection I should like to make a passing reference to the Columbia river. I should like to say, parenthetically, that our involvement in the Columbia development project was, and is, under this heading of special studies. Extensive studies have, indeed, been undertaken by the department on this topic but since the current negotiations relative to the treaty are the concern of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I would suggest that discussion of this matter may be more appropriate during the consideration of his estimates. These special studies inevitably lead to the question of the respective roles to be played by the federal and provincial governments not only in the realm of water but in the wider relationship of natural resources.

At this stage, let me say I think our government has done all in its power to make the writing of a treaty in respect of Columbia water with the United States a practical thing as well as a valuable thing to Canada. While it is true that questions on the treaty itself must be directed to my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I do take pride in the fact that the technical men from my department have constantly supplied our negotiators with all the relevant facts necessary to the determination of a treaty which will be of benefit to Canada if and when it can be reached.

Current literature abounds in stressing the need for a multiple-use approach to any hydro development. This approach is the threshold to the concept of thinking in terms of regional economic units, and by the same token opens the way to a field of inter-government co-operative possibilities, as well as pitfalls. To co-operate with purpose on major resource projects, not only entails investing a gigantic share of the national wealth we of this age legitimately feel is a heritage to be handed to our children, but also requires sound technical knowledge. There must be no hesitancy in providing the professional machinery to keep all those who have an interest in Canada's resources technically well informed. But this is not all that is required. Co-operation is paramount.

True co-operation depends on a spirit of trust and optimism. I can think of no better area where this can be fostered than the area of resource management. And for this reason I am particularly happy about the growth of a child, born a few years ago though conceived much earlier, and rapidly becoming a firm institution of modern federalism. Indeed the resource ministers council is now a living fact and there is no doubt in my mind that the meeting of minds that it will give rise to, will be a solution source for Canadian resource problems. It will also make the often bandied about word, "dialogue", a working concept. I am confident that under its dynamic chairman, the Hon. Rene Levesque, the council will do much more than its terms of reference may indicate.

At this stage I should like to repeat what I said yesterday to a group of people interested in our natural resources. I said the position taken by the federal government had to be an extremely cautious one. I have tremendous hope and great confidence that when the provinces, through the resource ministers council, discuss resources beyond the confines of the individual provinces concerned, remembering always that though it is the responsibility of the province to develop the resources within its own borders it is possible to develop those resources in such a manner as to do harm to its neighbours, a stage will have been reached which could result in economic achievements of great value to all Canada. As far as the federal government is concerned we shall attempt to act as catalysts, but I think the government of Canada should stand ready at all times to assist the provinces as they discuss their resource possibilities among themselves, in any way possible, financial and otherwise.

I wish to say in closing that had I been consulted by the Prime Minister with respect to any department that I might have wished for, after six months of experience of the work of this extremely varied department, I would have chosen the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. There is a tremendous challenge in it because we are dealing with resources, not only of material but resources of people as well. I can only say I shall endeavour to make a study of all branches of the department to do the best I can to use the fund voted to this department by this parliament, and to bring along and extend the borders of Canada; because we are dealing principally in this department with the only great remaining frontier of Canada. It is extremely promising at the present time. It still has its problems, but the outlook is extremely bright. When I found the great mine at latitude 62, when I went on my trip to latitude 75, which I think is about 890 or 900 miles from the North Pole, to find them drilling for oil in an area where the geologists say the geology is such that oil must be there, and that when they find it it is going to be another Arabia—these are the terms being used—then I think there is tremendous hope for the north country. There are very few people in it at the present time, and in my view it is not a country which will support a great number of people. But it will support more than are there are the present time, and I am quite certain that the extended pursuit and search for resources is going to end in success. I am quite certain that these social capital advances we are making to the north country will in time be repaid, and if the pursuit goes on at the present rate I think they will be returned relatively early.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, on occasions of this kind it is customary to exchange the usual courtesies, especially when a new minister is introducing his estimates for the first time. I am aware that we have had an opportunity earlier to exchange these compliments, but I do want to repeat tonight that I appreciate the remarks of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. He has stressed that what we are discussing tonight are estimates in which I had some part when I carried the responsibility for this department. I think the sincerest form of flattery—this is a well known phrase—is imitation. Because of the fact that the minister has expressed so much unanimity as to the policies and programs of the former administration, it seems to me that there will be no purpose served tonight in extending this discussion to an undue length.

I was also pleased to hear the minister refer to the fact that we have important legislation pending concerning a major forward step in northern development; that is the legislation to deal with the granting of greater political autonomy to the Northwest Territories. As he indicated, this is not the occasion to discuss these matters, but I would seize the opportunity provided by his observations to suggest that, even though there is some pressure of time by reason of the fact that there has been delay, in proceeding with this legislation we should not try to foreshorten the discussion that I am sure will arise once this legislation is introduced.

I would hope that as soon as possible we could have set up in this house a committee to which the legislation could be referred. As the minister has already indicated in his observations, so very few members in this house have any personal knowledge of the north, and only those who have actually travelled north of 60 have an appreciation of the problems and the tremendous potential of this great, undeveloped and unexploited, area of Canada. I should think that the setting up of a suitable committee would make it possible for hon. members of this house who have the good fortune to serve on the committee to travel into the north. In this day of air transportation travel is no problem. We have the facilities, and within a few hours we can reach the farthermost points of northern Canada. I think it would make an outstanding contribution to an understanding of the problems and the potentials of the north were such a committee established. In addition to discussing the problems in detail, the committee could have the opportunity to meet with officials who are familiar with the problems; and hear some of the northerners themselves. This would be a big step forward in the understanding of this last frontier of Canadian geography.

My final remark on this point, Mr. Chairman, is to say that the reference of legislation before second reading to a committee is not without precedent. In this regard I mention one reference recorded in Hansard for May 14, 1946, where the house leader of that day, the Hon. Ian Mackenzie, referred the bill on reinstatement in civil employment to a standing committee before it reached the second reading stage. I think this step would obviate a lot of discussion which is bound to take place when this proposed legislation comes before the house, as well as provide an excellent educational experience for hon. members.

The minister has intimated that the north is still very much an unknown country. It has become much better known within recent years. When we have outstanding historians and political scientists of the day using the expression that Canada is a northern country with a northern heritage and destiny, I think that is indicative of just how far in recent years we have reached a new appreciation of this important part of Canada. This should not be new, of course, because the whole history of Canada has been that of a gradual movement into the northwest frontier. I am surprised as I travel around Canada to see how many communities there are, regardless of their location, who refer to themselves as a sort of gateway to the north. For example, Halifax regards itself as the guardian of the north, as does Fort William and Port Arthur. These cities refer to themselves as the gateway to the northwest, and they sit right on the United States boundary. But in the area north of 60 we have all the problems of geography, of climate, of distance, which have been peculiar to development in Canada right from the earliest moment of our history when Cartier, I believe it was, referred to the lush area along the St. Lawrence river as the land God must have given to Cain, as the country God had forgotten. We are a very rugged northern half of the North American continent.

When the minister referred to the deficit situation of the northern economy I was reminded of some of the statements made about another part of the Northwest Territories back in the 1880's when that part of Canada was regarded as an economic deficit area. In fact, people in responsible positions referred to the prairies as having no economic significance whatsoever. When the government of that day was building a railway through the prairies the critics said that this was a railway which would go from wigwam to wigwam and would not pay for its own oil. That was not long ago in Canadian history, a little over half a century. Now, with wheat pouring from the granaries of the prairies, from this part of the country which was a deficit economy and was not supposed to have much economic future, and with all the political pundits and fiscal experts saying that the wheat sales of the past few months and of the last couple of years are going to have a tremendous impact on the total economy of Canada, I am even a little more optimistic than is the minister. I would say that the same development could take place north of 60, once we have one of the great mineral resources brought into production. For example, the minister referred to oil. The Quirin report of three years ago exhaustively and carefully studied the oil potential. There had been a lot of romantic ideas and hazy notions about the oil bonanza that existed in the north, particularly in the Arctic islands. All these were confirmed by an outstanding oil geologist, Dr. Quirin in the Quirin report. He came up with phrases almost as ecstatic as the romanticists. When the first gusher comes in in the Northwest Territories I am sure it will have an impact on the economy much the same as in the case of the rapid growth and development of the wheat economy of the prairies in the early part of the present century.

It would appear that the new administration has accepted uncritically the policies that were enunciated and carried out over recent years by the former Conservative administration. This is a matter of satisfaction to me personally as well as to all members of the former administration. The department was organized in 1953. At that time prime minister St. Laurent used the phrase that over the years Canadians had administered the northern regions in a state of absentmindedness. That situation prevailed right up to the recent historical past.

Mr. Herridge: And until today.

Mr. Dinsdale: What was that comment?

Mr. Herridge: I said until today. They are still absentminded about the natives.

Mr. Dinsdale: In 1956-57 total expenditures for this department were more than $39 million and this year total expenditures will be approximately $83 million. If the size of the estimates is any criterion it indicates that some rather aggressive policies have been under way during recent years with respect to all the diverse responsibilities of this most interesting department. I am not going to enumerate, because these details are in the estimates. The program was one of national development in the best traditions of the Conservative party's national development philosophy.

An hon. Member: You have ruined the whole speech.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not intend to go back in history and point out that the Conservative party has always been identified with the development of new frontiers. This is a matter of record and requires no debate. However, I wish the minister would speak to his colleague, the Secretary of State and house leader, because I feel he has not quite caught the vision yet. I know the problems. It is not only the backbenchers in the House of Commons who fail to understand the great potentialities of this huge area in our northland. It is also the members on the treasury benches.

Mr. McIlraith: Be careful.

Mr. Dinsdale: From time to time the Secretary of State has indicated that he is one who has not quite caught the vision or, in terms of the new phrase, imaginative realism, he is not even imaginatively realistic about the north. When speaking in the maritimes just a few months ago he referred to the maritimes as the last frontier and rather downgraded what has been taking place in northern Canada.

To refer to this matter in passing, this is a program that was carried out by my colleague, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, in the first instance and more recently it became my responsibility. I could talk about roads, airfields, mineral discoveries and the railroad to Great Slave lake. This latter project was not entirely welcomed with open arms by hon. gentlemen opposite when it was introduced in the house some three years ago. I am not going to dwell on this fact because the minister embraces it just as enthusiastically as I and the others associated with me did, when we had the responsibility of government.

I see that my colleague from Peace River is in the house tonight. I hope he will take the opportunity afforded by the consideration of these estimates to make some remarks. If any member of the house more than any other can take credit for the launching of this realistically imaginative program it is my colleague from Peace River.

Mr. McIlraith: What about the late Mr. Hardie?

Mr. Dinsdale: The resource side of the north is most important, and I am optimistic in this regard. One comment I should like to make is that the members of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources who have been closely identified with this program over the past few years are all excellent and dedicated men. They seem to be caught up in the enthusiasm for this task of pioneering on this new frontier. I know that most of the men and women working in the department are enthusiastic and optimistic about the prospects of the north. This was the impression I always received in working closely with them.

Some reference has been made to the human resource aspect by way of an interjection by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I want to dwell on the human resource aspect of the north. While the population is not large I think one of the saddest periods of neglect in Canadian history is to be found in the long period of time it took for the government of Canada to assume responsibility and take an interest in the welfare of its northern citizens. When we remember that the residents of the eastern Arctic, for example, only received the franchise two years ago I do not think we have much to boast about with regard to our record in dealing with these Canadians—they are and always have been Canadians—north of 60, particularly in the high Arctic, in providing them with the normal amenities and services that are provided for Canadians elsewhere.

Two years ago they received the vote. They have now exercised their franchise in two federal elections. One of the reasons for the delay in granting the Eskimos the vote was the repeated argument, that they did not have the intelligence or the capacity to understand the issues that would be involved in a national election. In fact, I have even heard the phrase used—I will attribute it to no one—which is sometimes used by segregationists in the southern part of the United States, that the Eskimos would be voted rather than voting. They were given the vote and I would say they have exercised this right with an intelligence and responsibility equal to that of Canadians in any part of Canada and perhaps with a greater degree of intelligence. I see that the hon. member for Northwest Territories agrees with me.

But there is a strange anomaly here involving a matter of great importance. The Eskimos in the eastern Arctic have the vote federally and they do not have it territorially. No wonder there is a demand for a greater degree of self-government and autonomy in the Northwest Territories. This is why it is so important that adequate time and provision be made in the house for a thorough discussion of the pending legislation. We do not want to be pressured, which seems to be the tactic that the house leader is adopting. He is going to hold up the legislation until the last moment, and then say: You must pass it because if you do not there will be no territorial government for the Northwest Territories.

I would remind hon. members opposite that the last important piece of legislation which gave greater autonomy was debated for a period of almost four years. I refer to the autonomy bill that was finally passed in 1905 and gave provincial status to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. We do not want to be pressured on this matter, because there is a great vacuum of knowledge and hon. members must have complete freedom to discuss these important matters.

So far as human resources are concerned, the educational program has moved forward apace. I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay West agrees. There are now educational facilities for about 75 per cent of the young people of the north. There has been a tremendous increase in the past six or seven years. Then there is the welfare program. I hope that we might get some details of the housing program from the minister later on in this discussion. The Eskimo people are not primitive people. They have a complex culture. They are an intelligent people. This has been demonstrated by some of the northerners who have come to work in the department. I had an Eskimo secretary for several months, and she was one of the finest young ladies that you would wish to meet, capable in all respects. I could make reference to other northerners who have even outdistanced southern Canadians in competing in our complex society.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make on northern affairs. The minister referred to the new concept that has emerged in recent years on national resources. I want to pay tribute to the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Prince Albert, because it was his initiative, and no amount of carping criticism can ever gainsay this fact, that gave rise to the resources for tomorrow conference in 1961. It was out of that conference that this new concept emerged of wise management and multiple use of our renewable resources, as well as the new formula for resolving the problems of provincial-federal jurisdiction in this area. I know the hon. member for Kootenay West will confirm the fact that the log-rolling technique used to be used in dealing with the questions he asked in connection with conservation. The answer he invariably got was that this came under provincial jurisdiction and depended upon provincial initiative. This was no answer to the problem. The old buck-passing technique delayed action in the resources field far too long.

In 1961, after a period of very careful consultation, the federal resources minister and the ten provincial ministers meeting on a co-equal basis were able to come forth with this highly significant development, the resource ministers council with a supporting secretariat independent of the federal authority, independent of the provincial authority, and yet acting as the co-ordinating body between these two areas of administration. I recall one moment of inspiration that resolved a serious impasse. I recall that the resource ministers council was no longer willing to accept the chairmanship of the federal minister, which happened to be myself at the time. They said that the federal minister actually had no business on this council at all because the federal government had no resources. They condescended to allow him to remain on the council because of his responsibility in northern affairs where resources did come under his jurisdiction.

I know that suggestion was put forward with tongue in cheek, but the way we resolved the impasse was to conceive a rotating chairmanship. The first minister to assume this responsibility after the federal minister was the Hon. Mr. Spooner of Ontario, and now the Hon. Rene Levesque of Quebec is chairman. Then, it will be the turn of Prince Edward Island, the Hon. Mr. Rossiter, and so on through the whole resource ministers council. This is a major breakthrough in federal-provincial relations in the field of resources. It has been said in this house before that this formula might well be applied in other areas. As a matter of fact, it was applied in other areas by the former administration which practised, not only in word but also in deed, the vital policy of co-operative federalism.

Other examples were the roads to resources program; the Atlantic provinces power development, and the joint studies that are now under way on the national power grid; the Nelson river study; the use of the Canada Water Conservation Act on a co-operative basis by the three levels of government for the first time; the metro Toronto basin water development program, a multi-million dollar program which has the full support of the federal government; the upper Thames program; the Winnipeg floodway; all of these things came about because of the enthusiastic support of the idea of co-operative federalism by the former administration.

Then, of course, I should like to refer to ARDA, which is a development and a breakthrough of perhaps even more significance than the resource ministers council. If used intelligently and supported enthusiastically by all levels of government in this country, it will transform the face of our agricultural community over the next few years. There is just one point I should like to make in regard to this matter and that is the importance of a recreational parks program. This is a matter for federal-provincial co-operation. We had a discussion on this subject a few months ago. The parliamentary assistant to the minister, speaking on behalf of the department, accepted the idea of the urgent necessity for action in this recreational parks area. I only hope that the minister will be able to move forward as quickly as possible. I trust that this subject will come under discussion at the parks conference which will take place, I understand, on the 18th of this month. Here is another example of co-operative federalism that was initiated last year which, I am sure, is going to go a long way towards resolving a very critical problem that has emerged in the recreational park development area.

I could speak for a long time about parks tonight. The minister has referred to the pressure that is being felt year after year on our national parks system. I should like to add this little thought, that we did anticipate this tremendous increase in park population. We were referring to it three or four years ago. However, I would say that the current upsurge is larger than anyone could have anticipated and it arises in substantial part from the impact of the devalued dollar. This poor devalued dollar, which was supposed to lead Canada into bankruptcy, according to the critics of the policy at the time, has been one of the main contributors to the current buoyant state of the economy.

In the parks area there had been neglect for many years. Some of the things that were done in recent years were, first of all, the setting up of a planning division. Recommendations came out of the planning division of the parks department, and the first one concerned a western supervisor because it was early realized we had to decentralize the responsibility in this area. Then, new policies began to emerge. We have had many discussions of the problems that arose in connection with preserving the wilderness. We came to the conclusion the only way this could be done was to have clearcut zoned areas with a service centre area, a fringe of semi-developed areas and then a section of the park which was retained in its pristine purity. There would be no equivocation about it at all. No amount of pressure would separate the parks from the original intent of the legislation. I trust that this zoning policy is moving apace under the leadership of the new minister.

The Oberlander report was another development. I hope the minister might later on indicate just what progress is being made in the implementation of the Oberlander report, and what progress is being made in a similar study that is proceeding in Jasper national park. Then, I wonder if there is any further information on the new national parks association which was organized in Toronto last March, under the leadership of Mr. William Baker, who had been closely identified with the resources for tomorrow conference. This national parks association, I feel, has a large role to play in the future park program.

Then, there were the representations of the Audubon society who wanted a park development program to go forward in connection with the centennial celebration. This is a program that had the sympathetic support of the former administration. I trust that it is also receiving the support of the new administration.

All of these ideas have emerged within recent years, and I was pleased to hear the minister indicate that he is carrying them forward to the best of his ability.

The Chairman: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Unless he has the unanimous consent of the committee, he cannot continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: With regard to wild life conservation measures, the international joint committee on migratory water fowl had been meeting regularly to deal with the problem of declining population in respect to our migratory water fowl, and I trust that this work is proceeding apace. There would seem to be some indication of activity in this regard, because in my own constituency I notice where lands have been leased for a period of 20 years in order to preserve the wet land area, or potholes, to ensure proper breeding facilities for the duck population.

Finally, in addition to inter-governmental co-operation, in addition to the planning I have outlined, I would like to suggest that there is urgent need for intra-governmental co-operation. There are several departments of government that have responsibility in the renewable resources—the departments of agriculture, forestry, and fisheries, as well as national resources. I would hope that in addition to encouraging co-operation among the governments, the various federal government departments would move together on a co-ordinated basis in order to carry out the spirit of this new concept of wise management of renewable resources, and the multiple use of renewable resources. I think this is one way in which Canada can guard her national heritage.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, it is very interesting for me to take part in this debate, because this party has always been particularly interested in the conservation of human resources, and in the conservation and development of natural resources. I have no hesitation in saying that, from my experience in this house over a period of 18 years, with my pretty close knowledge of the internal workings of this department—and I have friends in each branch—and from my conversations with a lot of people closely connected with these subjects, the record of this department with respect to its treatment of human beings and natural resources is the worst of any department of government.

Having got that off my chest, I want to say I give the former minister, who has just taken his seat, full marks for what he did in his administration, particularly in his attempt to improve education for the natives in the north, to improve housing for them, and for his hard work in connection with the establishment of the resources for tomorrow conference and the principle of federal-provincial co-operation in that field. However, I do think that in certain respects he was too nice a person to deal effectively with some of the bureaucrats that exist in this department, some of these people whom you cannot mellow by ringing gospel bells. You have got to take a little tougher line.

Mr. Dinsdale: A soft answer turneth away wrath.

Mr. Herridge: My one criticism of the former minister is that he was a bit too nice.

Mr. Chairman, I notice the present minister is so interested in what I have to say that he has moved down opposite me and is listening attentively. I want to congratulate him on his appointment as minister of this department. Knowing his experience and achievements in the past, I presume he accepted this post because there are many problems to meet and it represents the major challenge of his life. I am sure that is what it will be, and I wish him every success in all he undertakes.

He faces a very heavy task and, as he mentioned, this department has wider responsibilities than any other department of government. I think that is generally recognized. In fact one must realize this department is an empire within which have grown several smaller empires. This is somewhat natural owing to its historical development, how it has evolved, and the fact that a great many people in the administration of it were living in Ottawa and not in the north.

I wish the minister every success in all he undertakes to decentralize this administration. I was very pleased with what he had to say this evening, that he is hoping decentralization will occur, and that government will be handed over to the local people directly concerned as soon as possible. This is a step which has been advocated by members of this group for many years. When it was first mentioned some years ago I had a chat with one of these centralizing administrators in this department, and he simply poohpoohed the idea that the people in the north were capable of governing themselves, and said that to think of including the Eskimos and natives in the proposition was out of all reason. I am glad this atmosphere has commenced to change, and I am pleased the minister is going to work in that direction.

There is another great need which the former minister mentioned. It is the need for more co-ordination and consultation within the department, and also between the department and other departments. You get this world famous water resources branch with its own computing machines adding up a mass of figures and getting one result, and you have the wildlife branch getting another result, with very little consultation as to the sociological effects of what they may undertake. You have one group looking at a matter purely from an economic point of view, and another group looking at it from the point of view of wildlife preservation for generations to come. There is need for a great deal more consultation within the department, and with other departments.

On a question like this members of this group take a strictly non-partisan approach. We try to be constructive, and I have some remarks to make with regard to administration generally, national parks and wildlife. Colleagues of mine will deal with other particular facets of this department later on in the debate.

As I said before, I firmly believe that for many years some of the administrators of various branches of this department have lacked vision. Some of them, I know from personal experience, from conversations and correspondence, have had no understanding or appreciation of the need for evolution of democratic institutions under the conditions that have existed in the north in the last 50 years. They have had little concern for the improvement of the lives of human beings in those areas, and little concern for the development of resources.

I remember on one occasion when Mr. Winters was the minister for this department, that the deputy minister, without consulting the minister, gave a permit to the American Aluminum Corporation to deal with the investigations concerning water resources in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. This is the type of administrators we had. But when the minister heard of it he called Mr. Wilson from the United States, they had a dinner in Ottawa and he cancelled the permit himself. Mr. Wilson was very upset indeed, but the deputy minister went off and got himself a job in a welfare agency in the United Nations. There is a big improvement since then.

I have found in conversations, particularly in recent weeks, there is an increasing interest among members in the house in this department. There is an increasing interest on the part of the informed public, those persons who concern themselves with these problems regardless of their parties. There has also been an increasing interest on the part of the press and of certain well known writers in this country. These people have all become generally critical of the policies of the senior administrators of the department.

Now I want to deal with just a few quotations from various reports to show how the department has responded to recommendations from committees, and so on. I cannot take the time of the committee at length, but in 1960 the estimates of this department were referred to the committee on mines, forests and waters. That committee had various officials of the department come before it who read nice little essays in some cases, and answered a few questions. However, in the report of the committee to the house, on Tuesday, June 28, 1960, in paragraph 4 it stated:

> Water is one of Canada's most important resources. Carefully planned use of this resource is of the utmost importance not only to the present generation but to all those to come....
> 6. The committee notes that the development of our nation is, to a marked extent, dependent on the orderly development of our water resources and that as our population and industry increase there is an increased need for careful planning of the use of water supplies.

[Mr. Herridge.]

> 7. With the increased growth of the nation there is increased need for the type of investigations which are basic to the orderly development of water resources.
> 8. Your committee, therefore, recommends that: the minister of northern affairs and national resources take the initiative in offering to the several provinces of Canada to undertake studies, in co-operation with the provinces, of multi-purpose river basin developments. This will require an expanded program of engineering and economic investigations designed to show the possibilities for the development of the water resources of this nation.

Having in mind the needs of the nation as a whole, not just of one province, I should like to ask the minister how the department has responded to that recommendation. I happen to know that some of his officials are pooh-poohing certain suggestions made with respect to the need for greater supplies of water in future in the prairie provinces, and the possibility of getting them from a very appropriate source.

Then the committee went on to make certain recommendations with respect to the power resources of this country. It said vigorous research was required to study long distance power transmission. It spoke of the necessity for establishing a national grid and for the economic use of the power resources of the nation. I should like to ask the minister if the officials of his department have carried on any studies in this field, having in mind the development of the power resources of this country in relation to the needs of Canada as a whole.

The committee dealt, also, with the important question of pollution. Paragraph 10 of the recommendations states:

> Your committee recommends that the federal government accelerate investigations of pollution problems in Canada, particularly in those areas where it has legislative responsibility. In addition, at the request of the provinces, it should provide information which would be useful in establishing objectives of water quality control.

The committee then goes on to recommend certain procedures in this regard. I should like to know what has been done by the appropriate branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to give effect to these recommendations on pollution control made by the committee on mines, forests and waters in 1960.

When I get an opportunity I take home one of the books containing the observations and recommendations of the royal commission on government organization, and use it as bedtime literature. Recently, I was using one of these books and I noticed a paragraph which reads:

> Research in the north of Canada is carried on by several departments and agencies of the federal government and by private organizations and individuals.

Later, it says:

While all scientific departments have some interest in the north, northern affairs and national resources has general and special interests and its responsibilities must be borne in mind in any assessment of the research roles of government departments in the north.

The report goes on to complain of overlapping of research work being done by a number of departments. Paragraph 31 of volume 4 of the report states:

Co-ordination of the multifarious northern scientific programs is in theory the responsibility of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The advisory committee on northern development has the following terms of reference:

To advise the government on questions of policy relating to civilian and military undertakings in northern Canada and to provide for the effective co-ordination of all government activities in that area.

The report goes on to imply that this is only the case in theory. According to the report, the officials are more concerned with building up their own little spheres of influence and things of that sort. Further on, conclusions are reached.

The present system is wasteful of money and personnel and does little to ensure that necessary research is being carried out. Certain conclusions are evident. Co-ordination of scientific work in the north and the determination of priority should be the concern of the proposed central scientific bureau.

The report goes on to deal with the way in which research might be carried on. Then the commissioner recommends, in paragraph 46:

1. That the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources meet its northern research needs by contracting with other federal departments or private groups, and

2. That facilities and services for research in the north be provided by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

There we find a definite criticism of the efficiency of the department in this respect. I should like to know what the department has done to remedy this situation since the report of the royal commission was tabled in this house.

Then, again, as will be found on page 162 of volume 3, the commissioner recommends with respect to the administration of the department of northern affairs:

That the operation of the northern school system be transferred as rapidly as possible from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in Ottawa to the several territorial administrations.

I should like to ask the minister if he has that suggestion in mind.

2. That the curricula used in northern schools be co-ordinated as closely as possible with those of the provinces immediately to the south of the several administrative districts.

I think that is a good suggestion and one which, if followed, would make sure that these children are getting a type of education similar to that received by the children to the south.

3. That the northern adult education program be revised on more practical lines and administered within the several northern districts.

The commissioner goes on to make several recommendations as a result of what he terms the inefficiency of the department in dealing with this question.

In his fifth book—this was my second night of reading—the commissioner has this to say:

1. The national parks be administered by a commission of members chosen from outside the public service, appointed for specific terms and remunerated for their services.

I am not suggesting I agree with that. But it is recommended because of the inefficiency the commissioner found in the administration of the national parks. He recommends:

2. The national parks commission be organized on essentially departmental lines but under a board of full time commissioners appointed for fixed terms and removeable only for cause.

I do not say I agree with that, either. Nevertheless, the recommendation is made in an attempt to improve the present situation.

3. The operation of the northern school system be transferred as rapidly as possible from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in Ottawa to the several territorial administrations.

I would agree with that. Then follows the recommendation:

4. The responsibilities of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration relating to Indians in the north be transferred to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

I do not know the reason for that recommendation. But the commissioner goes on to make several recommendations, and this is because he is critical of the administration of the department in these fields.

Now we come to the national parks. What does the commissioner have to say about them? I have been interested in national parks. I happen to know the Revelstoke national park fairly well indeed, and I know a large number of people who live in Revelstoke. I have some questions on the order paper with respect to the administration of that park and I am looking forward to getting answers to those questions. I would say this to the minister: the administration of the Revelstoke national park requires his closest scrutiny. I have talked to a couple of dozen well known citizens of Revelstoke, not necessarily members of our party, who are highly critical of what they claim is very wasteful expenditure in the administration of the national park in Revelstoke. I will deal with that subject in greater detail when I have had a reply to the other questions I have raised. The commissioner has this to say as will be found on page 38 of volume 2 of the report:

An undue involvement of park managers in detailed problems on a day to day basis compounded by delegation to them of insufficient authority to make decisions on the spot.

These are the unsatisfactory conditions he found. I judge from what the minister said tonight that he intends to remedy this situation by providing reforms which are long overdue. They have been delayed for years because there were administrators in Ottawa who would not let the reins of power go to provide for decentralization.

The commissioner goes on to say:

Financial records showing expenditures for local services and facilities not used to establish the basis of charges to residents for utilities, garbage collection and other municipal-type services.

Finally, he calls attention to:

An illogical and inconsistent pattern of rentals for land used for residential and commercial purposes.

He recommends that—

A complete review of national park policy should be undertaken.

I think that is a good suggestion. There is a tendency to give in to certain interests which would like to exploit the natural resources of the parks, either for mining, or for lumbering, or for some other enterprise. I think we have to be very careful not to trespass on the beauty and natural wealth of our parks in this respect.

The recommendations read, in full, that—

1. A review be made of national park policy and a comprehensive statement of future goals be incorporated in the relevant legislation.
2. The national parks be administered by a commission with members chosen from outside the public service, appointed for specific terms and remunerated for their services.

I have brought these things forward as reflecting the opinions of the commissioner. I am not saying I agree with all of them. However, he has found examples of inefficiency and maladministration in certain branches of this department. I have also referred briefly to the recommendations of the committee in 1960. I believe this department requires a thorough investigation and review of its activities. I believe such a review should be undertaken by the committee on mines, forests and waters next session—I am not suggesting there is adequate time in which to do it this session. I do think we should have a thorough investigation into the activities of the department carried out in a constructive manner in an effort to support the minister in his campaign for reform, progress and improvement. Let us hear the officials of the department. Let us hear witnesses from organizations which are interested in the work of all the various branches of the department. I think a thorough review along these lines would lay the foundation of information and knowledge which would enable the minister to develop policy and reorganize on lines to meet the needs of the present day.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, it goes without saying that on this question of the Northwest Territories and as regards the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, there are several matters to discuss.

Today, I should like to bring up another point concerning the Department of Northern Affairs an National Resources and the Northwest Territories. It has to do with a whole section of the coast line—and I feel the debate on these estimates provides a good opportunity to deal with it—which surrounds the provinces of Quebec and which is hers by natural and constitutional rights.

If we take the maps published by the Canadian government and look at map No. 10, in the Canada Atlas, entitled "Bathymetry and Orography—Eastern Canada", we see among other things the whole area of Quebec, including new Quebec, James bay and Hudson bay.

In the middle of Hudson bay, there is an inscription in very small type that says: All islands in Hudson bay and James bay are included in the Northwest Territories. It is written in very small type and may seem unimportant; it is somewhat inconspicuous from a typographic point of view, but it implies all the same very important and far reaching consequences for the province of Quebec.

When the Canadian government in 1912, turned over this part of the Northwest Territories, that is new Quebec, to the province of Quebec, the protocol of this transfer provided that the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec—and this is where the transfer becomes important—over the new territories would extend as far as the high-water mark exclusively, that is up to the limit of James bay and Hudson bay.

It means, in practice, that the area washed by the tides, high and low, and you know that in that part of the country the tides are often several miles wide on the shores of Ungava bay and all along the new Quebec shore line, that all that land, between high and low tide, lies outside the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec.

It means, in practice, that the province of Quebec does not have the right to build a wharf or a quay along the coast line of the province, from the Ontario border to the north, without the authorization of the federal government. Therefore the province of Quebec cannot have any outlet to the sea, any bridge or quay without Ottawa's authorization.

It means also that all the islands near the shore, even if they are only a few miles or a few hundred yards from the mainland, are considered thereby to be outside the province of Quebec.

In this respect, one might mention that a particularly serious case is to be found at Port Burwell, a post inhabited by 80 Eskimos and with no permanent white resident. Not so long ago, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources set up there a co-operative cold storage warehouse with a capacity of several thousand pounds. That post is located on Killinek island, which is separated from the mainland and, therefore, from the territory of the province of Quebec, by the strait of Forbes, which is only two and a half miles wide.

As illogical as it may seem, that post, located on an island of the province of Quebec, comes under the Northwest Territories administration, eastern Arctic region, with headquarters at Frobisher, south of Baffin island, which is quite a distance away.

To show what absurd consequences those limits that were imposed may bring, even as far as law enforcement is concerned, let us take for instance the case of an Eskimo residing in the province of Quebec. Should he have committed an infraction or a crime punishable before the courts of that province, he could escape from the Quebec police simply by taking refuge on an island located a few hundred yards offshore. The province of Quebec would then have to apply to Ottawa for permission to pursue a person subject to arrest or the mounties from Frobisher or Cape Dorset would have to travel a very long distance to come and arrest that person and then hand him over to the Quebec authorities for prosecution.

We must not forget also—and that is another of the very important consequences of the present boundaries of these islands and frontiers between the Northwest Territories and the province of Quebec—that commercial, industrial and mining corporations wanting to evade the laws of Quebec in fiscal, labour or social matters, might establish themselves on the very shores of new Quebec, but below the limits at high tide; consequently, those industries would be located on the shores but on the other side of the point reached at high tide; those industries, although on the normal territory of the province of Quebec, but because the tide goes a little higher, would be located in the Northwest Territories.

The same thing would happen if an industry or a plant were to locate on an island lying a few hundred yards from the province of Quebec, or even immediately adjacent to the shore. Then those establishments would be considered as part of the Northwest Territories and would not have to account to the province of Quebec for anything.

Those are obviously matters that must be put right to avoid Quebec being faced one day with precedents that might prove extremely dangerous to its territorial sovereignty.

That natural boundary, passing above the high water mark, as it is today, may moreover, result in a serious restriction of the rights of the province of Quebec in matters of toponymy. Indeed, the government of Quebec experienced some difficulties in this respect hardly a year and a half ago.

Actually, the government of Canada could refuse Quebec the right to name or change the names of any coast inlets: fjords, bays, creeks—as it happened indeed in late 1961, and, again, in February 1962—under the pretext that those geographical features are within the limits of the Northwest Territories.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it will be easily realized that the whole situation is really nonsensical, because the Canadian territorial waters limit off the Canadian coast is set at three miles. Consequently, the law should apply to the whole country, and also to each part of this country. At any rate, it should be pointed out that all the islands in the St. Lawrence and its estuary belong to Quebec, whatever their distance from the coast.

The foregoing remarks prove that it is absolutely essential to consider, with the briefest possible delay, the following rectification of the Quebec boundaries:

1. Awarding to Quebec of the whole coast lying at low tide—and I repeat low tide—from the Ontario boundary, at the end of James bay, to the eastern entrance to the Hudson strait.

2. Awarding to Quebec all islands within the territorial waters limit, according to the Canadian concept of that term, that is up to three miles off the limit at low tide, whereas today, the Northwest Territories extend to the limits at high tide.

We would like the whole boundary to be based on that three mile limit at low tide. Such a provision would imply among other things, that the province of Quebec take back the Button islands at the eastern entrance of Hudson strait, as well as the Diana Bay islands, the Digges islands, which are located immediately to the west of cape Iberville, at the western entrance of the Hudson strait, Smith island with Cap-d'Youville (cape Smith), the Jemmeraie or Hopewell islands, the isles of Nastapoka and Manitouc as well as Grande Ile (or Great island) on the Hudson bay coast.

3. We should also consider the annexation of various islands situated off the territorial waters limits of Quebec, which appears particularly appropriate: Akpatok island in Ungava bay, Charles and Wales islands, in Hudson strait, Mansel island at the western entrance of Hudson strait, the Ottawa isles, the King George and Sleeper islands, the Bakers Dozen and the Belcher, all in Hudson bay, and finally, Charlton island and the Twin isles, in James bay.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that if you study the map of the Northwest Territories and of their islands, which surround the province of Quebec, you will readily admit that Quebec is entitled to consider these islands as part of its territory.

All these islands are situated directly in the normal zone of influence of the province of Quebec, just as the island of Anticosti and Îles-de-la-Madeleine, though situated much beyond Quebec territorial waters, are very much within the zone of economic and maritime influence of Quebec; that is why they fall quite naturally within the jurisdiction of that province.

Moreover, most of the islands I mentioned are made of calcareous or crystalline rocks, as is the case for Charles island or for the Belcher islands which are used as hunting grounds by the Eskimos of the various posts in new Quebec.

It must be said that as a general rule, those islands do not seem to contain very promising mineral resources, although some contain limestone which could be developed for construction purposes. By the way, the Eskimos use them and bring out some chips.

It must be mentioned also that in the Belcher islands, are found some iron ore deposits which are said to be quite interesting.

The annexation to the province of Quebec of all those islands with a surface larger than that of all the islands located in the St. Lawrence river and in its estuary is an imperative and urgent need in order to put a stop to the present territorial nonsense, and especially to see to it that the province of Quebec is not completely surrounded by all that series of islands later on, should another province be constituted out of that part of the Northwest Territories.

In any case, it would be illogical to annex those islands and archipelagos to any influence zone other than that of the province of Quebec.

This revision of the natural boundaries will permit, moreover, to establish the undisputable sovereignty of Quebec on Killinec island, where is situated the Port Burwell post, and also on the whole zone of the movement of the tides, which is, for Quebec, of capital importance.

Mr. Chairman, now that I have dealt to the best of my knowledge with this question of the boundaries of the province of Quebec and the surrounding islands, I would like to touch on another subject which is particularly close to our hearts.

When we look at the official maps of the province of Quebec, and even at those of the federal government—I have one which has been published by the "Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources", we may read:

> The boundaries between Labrador and Quebec are not indicated, and for good reasons.

That is why those boundaries are not mentioned or marked on the geographic maps of the province of Quebec.

That simple note which appears on the maps of the province of Quebec sums up the whole problem of the boundaries between Quebec and Labrador.

In fact, the province of Quebec has never recognized, and rightly so, the principle of the decisions which were imposed by a judgment of the privy council, in London, in 1927, at the time of the trial that opposed Canada and Quebec to Newfoundland.

It is therefore the interpretation of the judgment and not the judgment itself which resulted in the fact that Canada and the province of Quebec never agreed on the new boundaries as they are shown in some instances.

In certain areas of that imposed boundary, the province of Quebec is facing an unbearable de facto situation.

According to reliable sources, it seems that mining concerns have assumed the right to draw the boundaries inside mining claims. Since those companies enjoy important material privileges in Newfoundland, such as lower royalties and provincial taxes, they have an obvious interest to settle on the so-called Newfoundland side and to push the boundary back to the Quebec territory, for the benefit of Newfoundland, and, of course, their own one.

They sort of play at see-saw, and they settle on the side where taxes are lower. This is prejudicial to both Newfoundland and the province of Quebec.

For instance, the Iron Ore company has installed at Labrador city, in the so-called Newfoundland territory an ore concentrator for which they pay operation taxes to Newfoundland.

Furthermore, Newfoundland demands that the majority of workers employed by that company, in that so-called Newfoundland territory, be Newfoundlanders.

Thus the province of Quebec is deprived of its due in many fields.

In view of such provocations, I am afraid that Quebec's empty protests are no longer sufficient because the mining companies are taking advantage of the Quebec government's present inaction.

Yet, the province of Quebec would have to make only one move to stop the shipment to Seven Islands, by railroad, of the iron which comes from the so-called Newfoundland territory. It would be so simple.

That is how, in our opinion, the question of boundaries should be settled.

The province of Quebec can obviously not remain idle in the presence of those facts.

We hope that action will be taken following the revealing statements concerning the frontiers of Labrador which were made by the Quebec minister of natural resources, Mr. Rene Levesque, when he made a tour of New Quebec, in July 1961.

This is how we disagree with the interpretation of the judgment which was handed down in 1927.

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Gregoire: This judgment of 1927 concerning the frontiers of Labrador—

The Chairman: Order. I see that the hon. member for Quebec South wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Lapointe has been dealing for the past five minutes with a matter which is completely irrelevant to the present discussion. It is true that there is a dispute between the province of Quebec and Newfoundland regarding their boundaries, but I wonder by what authority the federal government can settle this problem. Therefore, I ask that the hon. member be called to order and that he restrict his remarks to the responsibilities of the federal government.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, allow me to say a few words on this point of order.

This is a question of principle, as far as we are concerned. The boundaries have not been recognized. Therefore, according to us, the territory in question does not belong to Newfoundland nor, as a principle, to the province of Quebec so long as the problem is not settled.

That means that so long as a new interpretation of the judgment delivered in 1927, is not given, we believe that this territory does not belong to any province and that it rests with the discretion, the good judgment and the authority of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to make a decision on the matter.

That is why we are bringing the problem to the minister's attention today, since we are considering the estimates of his department. We want to entrust this responsibility to the Department of Northern Affairs and of National Resources.

I feel, therefore, that I should be allowed to refer to this problem and to call the minister's attention to it, because we do not accept the boundaries that are being imposed on us at present. This is reason enough to raise this matter.

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the hon. member for Lapointe has just recognized that the point is well founded. It is obvious that the territory in question belongs to one province or the other. However, it is not up to the federal government to decide the boundaries of that territory, especially since there is already a judgment on the matter. It is up to the courts, not to the minister, to decide the matter.

An hon. Member: Good. Neither one nor the other.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: I wonder if I might ask the hon. member for Lapointe a question? We have heard him make a number of requests about extending the frontiers of Quebec both to the north and the east. I am wondering if he is satisfied with the present boundaries to the south and the west?

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to answer the hon. member for Medicine Hat by saying that he will have to wait and see.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion my remarks are in order, because this question has not yet been settled and does not come under any particular jurisdiction, except that it rests with the federal government to take a decision in that respect as soon as possible. Among all federal departments, I think that the matter comes under the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and this is why I take this opportunity today to point out this matter to the house. I am asking the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Cantin) to let us deal with a problem which is so important for the province of Quebec and to which he should himself give more consideration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to explain a judgment delivered in 1927 and I will thus prove that my remarks are in order. Anyway, I will not take more than three or four minutes.

It will be recalled that the 1927 judgment essentially dealt with an interpretation of the term Labrador coast. This interpretation, Quebec has the right to reconsider it, because it is a real geographic aberration. The proof is that there is probably not a single geographer in the world who would apply to the word "coast" the description given by those who were responsible for the enforcement of the judgment.

In fact, on the strength of such an argument based on the interpretation of those who delivered the judgment, the coast of Brazil, through the Amazon basin, would extend to the Andes; the Mediterranean coast up to Ethiopia, through the White Nile and the Blue Nile; and the shores of the Black sea, through the Danube, would extend up to Austria, Hungary and even up to Switzerland, Germany and Czechoslovakia.

It is therefore because of such nonsense that the frontiers of the Newfoundland section of Labrador have been pushed back a distance of 450 miles or more within the province of Quebec, when they should have been set near the coast, as was recommended by representatives from Canada and Quebec.

A frontier established from the watershed is unacceptable to the province of Quebec; and it seems that the only reasonable and acceptable solution would consist in the determination or the setting of a frontier parallel to the coast, which would correspond, at a distance of from six to twelve miles within the mainland, to the outline of the present lay out, from the limits of the low waters on the coast, the low tide limits.

Thus, the unquestionable Newfoundland rights on the whole Labrador seashore would be fully respected and recognized. Such a solution would permit Newfoundland to maintain full and entire "jurisdiction"—which it exercises just the same nowadays—over the settlements at Forteau, Anse Eclair, Pointe Amour, Anse a Loup, St. Modeste, Carol Cove, on Simpson straits, St. Lewis Bay, Hawke Island, Cartwright Harbour, Northwest River, Goose Bay, Makkovic, Hopedale, Nain, Ford Harbour, Hebron and Saglec on the Atlantic Coast.

Such a solution would moreover represent a definite improvement over the proposal made by Canada in 1927, whereby Newfoundland was to be given a coastal belt of one mile only.

Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks on Labrador by saying that because of the serious prejudices the present anomalies and lack of precision in the natural and political frontiers of new Quebec represent for Quebec's sovereignty, the finding of an overall and final solution, consonant with the higher interests of the province in its new Quebec territory, has become an imperative and even an urgent matter.

Mr. Guay: What knowledge do you have of that?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I hear the voice of an hon. member who does not seem to be at all interested in the question. Maybe he should start studying this problem, if he wants to represent his voters adequately, especially those of the province of Quebec. If some of his colleagues wish to find out about this, the hon. member should not spend his time criticizing them, but should imitate them, otherwise he will always remain seated. Moreover, I do not know him, I never heard him speak. In fact, I do not know what riding he represents.

An hon. Member: Levis.

Mr. Gregoire: It is the member for Levis?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, it is surely the very first time the hon. member for Levis has spoken in this house.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources that he should take into consideration the few remarks we just made about fixing new boundaries between the Northwest Territories and the province of Quebec.

The minister will soon introduce two bills concerning the division of the Northwest Territories. We anticipate that this concerns the establishment of two new provinces, but before it is too late and while it can still be done, we urge him to seriously consider these points and to submit amendments himself concerning the islands surrounding the province of Quebec.

He can do so by convening a conference between the federal government and the provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec with a view to studying the fixing of new boundaries between the province of Quebec and Labrador.

Mr. Chairman, I made these few suggestions in good faith, without any bias, without political partisanship, in an effort to co-operate with the present government for the solution of this problem before it is too late.

Mr. Addison: Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe caused me to wonder if the premier of Newfoundland would be concerned, in view of the fact the hon. member seemed to be looking eastward towards the province of Newfoundland.

I should like to speak this evening, Mr. Chairman, about Canada's bid for the 1968 winter Olympic games. I am sure hon. members are aware of the fact that recently, in Baden-Baden, Mexico was awarded the 1968 summer Olympics. At that time there were a number of applicants, of which one was the United States and in particular the state of Michigan. The governor of Michigan attended the international Olympic committee and showed a film made by President Kennedy and various other officials. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, Mexico was awarded the games. It was stated at that time by the international Olympic committee that wherever it was possible countries who had not hosted the Olympics before would be given preference when decisions were made. This was the announced policy of the international Olympic committee.

In January of 1964, Canada's application will be placed before the Olympic committee at Innsbruck. It is expected that France, Norway, Finland, Switzerland, the United States, Japan and Canada will all bid for the 1968 games. All of these countries, with the exception of Canada, by 1968 will have been host to the Olympics. Unquestionably, Canada wants these games. A great deal of work has been done by private individuals, particularly in the Banff-Calgary area, in making a presentation to the Olympic committee.

As we all know in this house, Canada has produced outstanding gold medalists, particularly in the winter Olympics. We need only remember Barbara Ann Scott, Anne Heggtveit and Lucille Wheeler, as well as many others. We do have an excellent chance, Mr. Chairman, and I should like to bring this to the attention of the minister, to be awarded the 1968 games at Banff. If we are awarded these games I would suggest to him and to his department that we go first class, because Canada will be watched by every other nation in the world.

The Banff area is ideally situated for the winter Olympics. Of course many things will have to be done, but things can be done in this area that will prove to be great assets to the tourist industry and to the province of Alberta. Some of the things which have to be tackled are housing facilities for the athletes and providing food for them, corresponding to the fare in their native lands.

All this means financing, and this is the point I am stressing this evening—that each area of government, federal, provincial and municipal, must be 100 per cent behind Canada's bid. I suggest to the minister that these fiscal arrangements be settled at the federal-provincial conference on November 25, whereby the federal government, Alberta and the city of Calgary will participate; and I know that the city of Calgary, represented by its former mayor, now Minister of Agriculture in the cabinet, will give a very sympathetic hearing to such proposals. The Olympic games will be a lasting benefit, not only to the Calgary area but to all Canadians in encouraging them to participate in such sports.

In closing I would like to comment on the fact that, despite his professed interest in northern affairs the hon. member for Yukon has not found time this evening to be present when the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources are under consideration, and I would draw to the attention of the committee that an hon. member who has been on his feet so many times should be in attendance this evening.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, I am as anxious as any hon. member on the government side of the house to see the estimates of this department passed tonight, because more so than with any other department it is essential that the minister and his staff have parliamentary approval for their plans. The reason is that it takes considerably more effort in planning a northern development program, with all the problems involved of transportation and communication in the Northwest Territories, than it does in planning a program in any other federal department of government.

In brief answer to the previous speaker, I would point out that the hon. member for Yukon is not here tonight, not through any frivolous activity on his own part, but because he has a great deal of constituency business to do, including attending an annual meeting, which this house recognized by agreeing to pay his transportation costs.

Mr. Macdonald: What annual meeting?

Mr. Rheaume: Since I am asked, the annual meeting of the Progressive Conservative party of the Yukon territory. Apparently it is the only political organization in the Yukon territory that is active, so he must attend that meeting.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of recent interest shown in northern Canada, and an awakening and awareness of unprecedented proportions, all resulting from the policies of the former government under the leadership of the Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker. I know, and I feel very keenly, the fact that laughs and jibes have been directed at the Canadian north, and northern development, not just by members of any one political party but by a great many southern Canadian—southern Canadians who neither know nor understand what it means to breathe fresh air, and who have forgotten how to pioneer, the people who crowd the 49th parallel, and whose ideas of adventure is to sit on winter nights like great puddings with the sauce of television pouring over them.

Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, by any yardstick you care to use, be it miles of road, school classrooms, hospital beds, welfare houses, nursing stations, or that great old yardstick, dollars, more was done in the Canadian Northwest Territories during the period 1958 to 1962 than in all the years from confederation onward put together. In those four years there was massive extension of necessary administration, health, welfare and educational services.

Mr. Macdonald: When they had a Liberal member.

Mr. Rheaume: The hon. member for Toronto-Rosedale insists on interrupting me tonight as he did the other night, but this will not prevent me from laying the record, concerning the Northwest Territories, before the committee. One development of special local, national and international significance occurred during this period. By virtue of the Nielsen bill the federal franchise was extended for the first time to the thousands of Canadian citizens living in the eastern and central Arctic, and in the Keewatin district of northern Canada.

It had local significance because this is the first time the Eskimo people had been consulted in any meaningful manner. It had national significance because it showed that the bill of rights was in fact a viable and dynamic document guaranteeing to every Canadian citizen the right to vote. It had international significance because it showed that in Canada at least, and at last, we were a country that understood that the ballot, the right to vote, is the foundation of democratic government.

I want to deal now with a phase of northern development that has just begun. I speak of the greatest resource which the northern territories have: their human resource. We must never be fooled into thinking that schools, hospitals and roads by themselves constitute the human development program. It is not enough for northern schools to produce graduates if the potential resources to provide jobs for those graduates lie dormant. It is not enough for our multi-million dollar hospitals in the north to repair diseased lungs if hunger and cold await the discharged patients from those hospitals. Surely the immediate task that faces the government in the Canadian north is to tie in a physical resource development program with its human resources, to stamp out the double curse of poverty and disease that still afflicts almost every non-white resident of the Canadian Northwest Territories.

Surely a country that has the courage, foresight and the money to build highways, railways and schools can now focus its energies on the shacks, tents and igloos that still exist in the Northwest Territories to blight the mind and heart of everyone who has the eyes to see them. Surely the government can now devote greater energy to providing jobs for all our northern people, not just for the swarms of graduates starting to come out of our northern schools but for the older people in the Northwest Territories who are now dependent on meagre welfare handouts when they cannot eke out a precarious existence in 55 degrees below zero weather.

I for one cannot feel happy when confronted, as I have been on numerous occasions in my travels throughout the Northwest Territories, with the anomaly of superheated, fresh-vegetable-filled D.E.W. line sites put there at fantastic cost to the Canadian government, in the very presence of our Eskimo people who spill their tattered and ragged lives digging in D.E.W. line garbage heaps, attempting to survive under the worst living conditions on earth.

I have had the opportunity to hold private conversations with the minister of northern affairs and with his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. I agree with the statement the minister made to the press in relation to housing. While he and I may not agree on many things, as has been obvious from my grievance, we do agree that there is no point in attempting to rehabilitate an Eskimo or an Indian who is cold, who is hungry or who is in rags. In the last five years in the Canadian Northwest Territories some 400 housing units were built for these people. I merely wish to say this: The job has just begun. On the basis of my conversations with the minister I am sure that neither he nor his parliamentary secretary will be happy until every person living in the Canadian north has a decent house and an opportunity to preserve the health and decency of his family. We will not be happy until we know that no Canadian citizen must attempt, in 1963 or in some future year, to chase scarce caribou in 55 degree below zero weather in the hope of finding something for himself and his family to eat.

The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has a large staff in the Northwest Territories as a result of a decentralizing process which began about three years ago. There are now field officers in many parts of the Canadian north, and the minister, together with his parliamentary secretary, visited many of these men on his recent trip. I, for one, approve completely of the program whereby services in the remote parts of Canada were decentralized. I also wish to say that, with one or two startling exceptions, the staff of the department is excellent. I think the time has come when the minister, his deputy and his senior officers must see to it that these staff members are given greater authority. This is the only way in which they will be able to make their maximum contribution to the development of the Canadian north.

The myth is widespread in the Northwest Territories that the federal government has a monopoly on idiots. However, these officers are, for the most part, competent and dedicated men who are anxious to carry out programs which are in the best interests of the people of the north. They are capable of carrying out these programs. The reason they are capable of doing so is that, not only do they possess the qualifications which took them into a pioneer country, but they have the experience of living there. I myself lived for five years in the Canadian Arctic hundreds of miles from medical services. I know what it is to have children born two hundred miles north of the Arctic circle, with all the anxiety this places on an officer serving the crown and on the members of his family. I know that in many instances the competent and dedicated efforts of those officers who choose to go into the Canadian Arctic are hampered by a lack of authority. By this I mean that the staff of the department in the field must not be relegated to the role of message carriers. Too often this happens. I could give the committee an example. A field officer 200 miles north of the Arctic circle was not able, because of existing procedures, to approve a program whereby a young Eskimo girl could go to Edmonton to take a hairdressing course. The matter had to be referred to a committee composed of the heads of the department of northern affairs in Ottawa. It would have involved only $160 to settle this particular problem, yet the time alone of those senior officials who had to consider it was worth some $1,000. I will not take the time of the committee by giving further examples of this kind. I will merely say to the minister, now that he has decentralized responsibility in the Canadian north: For God's sake give these officers authority to act.

The Northern Canada Power Commission is also an agency for which the minister is responsible. I would ask that in his review of the department the hon. gentleman should take a close look at the cost of electricity to private consumers in the Canadian Northwest Territories. For the most part, those who use electricity in the north are civil servants or officers of the crown, and they do not pay directly for the cost of electrical services. But those people who are seeking to set up homes of their own and who are not employed by the crown, those who are seeking to establish businesses and develop the country, do have to pay their own bills. I do not exaggerate when I say that a typical light bill in the Northwest Territories for a private consumer will amount to over $100 a month for normal services. Somehow or other, the Northern Canada Power Commission must be convinced that, as a crown agency, it has a special responsibility to see to it that private citizens and private businessmen in the territories are not prevented from operating successfully or inhibited against entering the region because of the exorbitant cost of power.

I should like the minister in his dealings with the commission to consider the fact that in every Canadian northern community electrical services are provided only to those who are there as civil servants or as employees of the Hudson's Bay company, as members of the R.C.M.P. or of some other government agency. In every case when the commission installs a power plant in the territories, the people who benefit from the electricity and from all the things it can mean include everybody except the Indians and the Eskimos. I have asked questions about this, both of the minister and of the power commission and I am usually told: "The Indians did not ask for it"; or, "the Eskimos have failed to ask us for such a service."

Well, there are many things for which the Indians and the Eskimos in the Canadian Northwest Territories did not ask. But they got them. They got our Criminal Code. They got our regulations on trapping, hunting and fishing. They got our health standards which are now enforced. Surely, the Canadian government does not want to say that, until such time as the Indians and Eskimos come to them and fill out the necessary forms asking for electricity, electricity cannot be given to them. Surely, the time has passed when we should run a power line right over the roofs of the houses of the Indian and Eskimo people on its way to an R.C.M.P. station for example, without seeing that those people derive some share of its benefits? Surely if we can send our children in the north to million dollar schools—and I approve of this—we should not expect the same children to come home to study by coal oil or gasoline lamps if, indeed, they have such lamps. In many cases the only light available is candlelight.

I hope, indeed I am certain, that the minister will make a careful review of job opportunities for the Indians and the Eskimo people in the territories. For many years those of us who have worked in the department said to private enterprise: We have hundreds of Indians and Eskimos who are out of work; for goodness sake employ them in your projects. This has been going on for many years. The government of Canada has been the worst offender in the territories in making use of local labour, yet it is the major employer in the Northwest Territories.

We have made a promise to the Indian and Eskimo people of the north. Speaking on behalf of the people of Canada, we have said: Give up your children; give up your culture; give up your traditional methods of hunting, trapping and fishing; these things can no longer serve you; if you do, there is a new life for you. The minister of northern affairs must see to it that we do not let these people down after they have sent their children thousands of miles at six years of age to attend residential schools. Often they do not see their youngsters from one year to the next. They have done these things and, surely, we now have a special responsibility to see to it that the Eskimo and Indian children of the Northwest Territories who decide to throw in their lot, somehow or other with the people of southern Canada, are not betrayed in the trust they have shown. In this regard there have been some excellent examples of private enterprise and private industry in the Canadian north which have made extensive use of local labour. I think for example, of the Peter Bawden Drilling Company of Calgary, which went out of their way to make sure that, when they put down the first wildcat drill at Winter Harbour, on Melville island in the high Arctic, the men who operated the drill were Eskimos. I do not want to suggest for a second that Peter Bawden, who is a good friend of mine, does not know the value of a dollar; I merely want to suggest that he went out of his way to see to it, long before he commenced his operations, that Eskimo men were brought from the Canadian north, in co-operation with the department of northern affairs, trained in the work of a drilling rig, and taken back to carry out the job which he knew needed special men, men peculiarly adapted to the rather difficult climatic conditions of the Canadian north.

I think also of the Hudson's Bay Company; and believe you me, Mr. Chairman, there are many people in the Canadian north who would like to knock the Hudson's Bay Company. One thing about the Hudson's Bay Company—I have suggested this before in this house and I say it again—is that they made extensive use of local labour, the Eskimo and Indian people, in their operations in the Canadian north. They used them—and I use the verb in its best sense—extensively, to be sure that those people who were there had an opportunity to lead a decent life and receive a fair wage. I think of the mine at North Rankin inlet which made a point of using Eskimo labour when it opened up some 500 miles north of Churchill, a step which has now been followed by some of the mines in Yellowknife.

The Canadian government, which has the primary responsibility to see to it that this vast labour pool in the Canadian north is utilized, must start showing some leadership in this regard. It is not enough to go to a construction company and to say: "For goodness sakes hire Eskimo and Indian people", when at the same time the Canadian government, with its many departments—the Department of Transport, the Department of Justice, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of Public Works—is importing men from the Canadian south to fill jobs which too easily could be filled by Eskimos and Indians. You need look no further than the crown corporation, Northern Transportation Company, which this summer imported some 200 workers from the south, even for unskilled positions, to an Arctic community when there was a labour pool there of 120 Eskimo men trained in Arctic work, trained in navigation on the coast, and not one of them was hired. I think it is time that before the Canadian government starts lecturing private businessmen in the north they had better set the pace themselves.

There are other areas of the Northwest Territories, Mr. Chairman, which I hope the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will examine very carefully, with the whole of the government of Canada, through this department, carrying out functions which could better be carried out by private enterprise on the spot. I think, for example, of such things as the maintenance of the new Mackenzie highway to the Canadian north. Let me say that the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources now maintains several hundred miles of road into the Canadian north as a result of a decision made by the former government. The department of northern affairs owns the machinery and hires the staff to do it.

I also wish to go on record at this point as categorically saying that the decision to allow the government to do this in competition with the private companies which were able and willing to do it was a mistake. It was, I say categorically, a mistake. We should not allow the government of Canada to do this when other private enterprise companies are there. That was one of the mistakes which I hope will not be repeated by the minister.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and his parliamentary secretary that they can count on full co-operation from both the hon. member for the Yukon and the hon. member for Northwest Territories, as well as all hon. members interested in the north, to help them convince other hon. members that the Canadian Northwest Territories is an area of special importance both now and in the future. More than anyone else, perhaps, I realize that the minister has many other responsibilities apart from the Canadian Northwest Territories. His department is a complex one. My great hope is that the door to the Canadian north will not be closed, and I am satisfied from my dealings with the minister that this will not be the case, that he has his main interest in the north, as had any other previous minister of the crown.

I have suggested, Mr. Chairman, that there are many other responsibilities which the minister of northern affairs has. One of these is the national museum, and knowing that the hon. member for New Westminster has a few things to say in this regard, at this point I will take my seat.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join for a moment the hon. member for York North in urging upon this house the policy of supporting Canada's application for the winter Olympiad. It is perhaps unfortunate that the convenors of the Olympic games, in their wisdom, have encompassed within the Olympiad many sports, everything from volleyball to water skiing to bobsledding. Unfortunately they have not taken in that very popular sport of the talking marathon. If they had, we might get much more support from the great athletes of this house in that regard, and might have in fact a gold medal winner in the hon. member for Lapointe. Nevertheless, I urge upon the house to support the hon. member for York North in his endeavours in this regard.

I commend the last speaker from the Northwest Territories for the sincerity of his appeal, although I was in a quandary at one stage when he told us that things were never so good as they were in the last five years in the Northwest Territories, and subsequently told us of the ravages and ills which exist in that unfortunate part of the country today. So I am not quite sure which was the case. But whichever it was—

Mr. Rheaume: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member quoted me as saying, on the one hand, that things were wonderful initially, and that subsequently they were terrible. If he had been listening he would have found out that I said a massive effort had been made in the Canadian north, but that we had just begun, that there were still many tasks facing the minister of northern affairs, and I said I hoped he would continue with the maddeningly slow job of raising the living standards of the Canadian north. I said that only a start had been made.

Mr. Greene: I thank the hon. member for clarifying that point. I would point out it would thus appear that, in spite of whatever efforts they may have made, the last administration did not succeed in rectifying the great problems which exist. I believe the department under the present administration will take giant steps in this direction and undoubtedly exceed any efforts made by the past administration.

In this regard I should like also to join the hon. member for Kootenay West in commending the minister on his appointment, and in wishing him well. I feel, as the hon. member for Kootenay West stated, that this department has a challenge facing it second to none. There may be other departments upon which the spotlight of today, in the economic crises of the present, is focused more brightly from day to day; but I think there is no department upon which the tomorrow of Canada, and the day after tomorrow of Canada, depends more than upon his department. I believe in this minister and in this department we have great hopes for our tomorrow.

I think it is a fair criticism that posterity will have to level at our generation and at those who came before us, and it is one of the tragedies of this nation, that undoubtedly over the years we have prostituted our national resources. We have used them for today as we saw fit. We have been spoiling them, eating them and generally using them up for today's purposes without any thought of tomorrow. In this regard I suggest that one thing which is needed very badly, and has been needed very badly in the past, which comes within the compass of this department, is a national conservation policy whereby there may be some planning in the use of our resources, so that there may be some direction as to the use of those resources, their preservation and rehabilitation, to the end that we may leave something of the great yesterday for those who come tomorrow. I think this applies not only to water resources but also to timber resources, wildlife and other natural resources. I hope the minister and the department will have the ability, the great courage and the perseverance which it will take to conceive such a national conservation policy, to bring it to fruition and to fight tooth and nail against the many vested interests that would undoubtedly oppose such a policy. This is something that has been very badly needed and I suggest that, irrespective of the hurrahs of today in the newspapers, the mark of history will be great for whatever minister of northern affairs and national resources has the political acumen, the foresight and the courage to bring in a truly important national conservation policy. I hope this will be done during the tenure of the present minister, and in the not too distant future under the present administration.

If I may move for a minute to the more parochial area of and adjacent to my own riding, I would point out that within 50 miles of the great capital of this country we have areas which are still undeveloped, great areas bordering the Ottawa river which might be used as a national bird sanctuary. In this land of ours we do not have too many such sanctuaries. It is possible that the United States has left us behind in this regard. I suggest it would be a great thing for Canada to have such a sanctuary within 40 or 50 miles of the capital. Right on the great Ottawa river, in the riding of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue actually, there is a great undeveloped marshland where such a sanctuary could well be founded. I think it shows something of the impartiality of hon. members on this side of the house that I suggest that such a sanctuary be placed in the riding of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, because that part of the area is the best suited. If we were striving for industries I might not be so munificent, but I would be very pleased to let the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue have the ducks.

With regard to my own riding of Renfrew South may I suggest that in this very large riding there are great tracts of largely undeveloped land, land that has only been used to despoil it in some degree of its timber resources some generations ago, and which is now in the process of second growth. In this area there are great expanses of lakes which are as yet unopened because not even roads penetrate into some of these areas. These vast miles of undeveloped land are located some 75 to 100 miles from the capital of this country.

It is singular that we do not have a national park of stature in its pristine state, as the former minister said, within close proximity of the capital of the nation. I suggest to the minister that the lands in question are gradually being taken out of the public domain. They are being taken up for private use, and quite often by our friends and neighbours from the United States whom we are very pleased to have there in the summertime as campers. Nevertheless, in this area within 75 to 100 miles of the city of Ottawa it will not be too long before the land is used for private purposes to such an extent that it would be too costly to bring it back into the public domain for use as a national park. Unless the department takes action within the next few years the opportunity will have been lost forever.

May I urge upon the minister that he consider this possibility. I know that in so doing he will consider all areas in close proximity to the city of Ottawa, but I think the principle of having a national park close to the capital city of Ottawa is surely something worth striving for at the present time. Certainly with the centennial of confederation approaching it would be a monument that would be well worth while. May I urge the minister to consider this matter. It is my submission that in considering it he will find no area so well suited as the large area of lakeland and wild and undeveloped land in the great riding of Renfrew South. If the minister will do this, I believe he will win a place for himself in the hearts of the people of Renfrew South and in the legend and history of that riding. If at the same time he brings forth a truly worth while, comprehensive, universal, national conservation policy he will also win for himself and his department a very great and enviable place in the history of Canada.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to note the lateness of the hour and to observe the shortness of the time left to speak on the subject of Canada's northern affairs and national resources. However, I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment to this wonderful and important portfolio. I hope he will fill the appointment to the satisfaction of the people of Canada and will honour the position he now occupies.

Last summer I was very pleased to have the opportunity of meeting the new minister in Elk Island national park, which lies entirely within my constituency, on the occasion of the unveiling of the memorial to the pioneers of Ukrainian origin who settled in western Canada at the turn of the century. I might say that the people who were there at the unveiling were a little disappointed that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, the former minister, was not there to unveil the memorial, because he was the one who authorized it to be placed in Elk Island national park.

I also want to say that the memorial is a memorial for people like Mr. Wasyl Eleniak who was the first Canadian settler from the Ukraine. He settled in the district close to Elk Island national park in 1891. He came there some years after my people came to that district and the descendants of his family, his relations and the people he brought with him are my neighbours and friends today. He settled in what is now known as the Chipman area which is very close to Elk Island national park.

Up until about six years ago, I believe, Elk Island national park was the Cinderella park of Canada. It was originally started as a farm for the last herd of buffalo left in Canada after the great massacre of the 1880's. It was established as a reserve for the buffalo that were left. There are three phases to the operations of the park. It covers between 50 and 60 square miles and houses perhaps 500 buffalo. Many people in the area believe that the park should be able to provide plenty of food and pasture for 1,000 buffalo all the time. However, the wildlife experts think the number should be less.

This is one of the few parts that is comprised of the three phases. It has a wildlife phase, which embraces as I said about 1,000 buffalo, a great many moose, elk and deer; a recreation phase, composed of picnic areas, a swimming pool and other recreational facilities; and a farm where the food for the buffalo and other animals is raised so that they will not suffer in the wintertime. As I have said, many people around the area believe the basic herd should be approximately 1,000 instead of 500.

This park may seem like a local affair to some people, but it is not. There are approximately 200,000 visitors to this park each year and they come from every province in Canada as well as from the United States. As a matter of fact, they come from all over the world. It is truly, therefore, a national park. In addition to the recreational facilities which I mentioned, there is a nine hole golf course which is said to be one of the finest in the country. I would not know about that because I have never had a golf club in my hand. Some six years ago, as I said, this park was the Cinderella park of Canada. However, today there are two water purification plants, one for the use of the staff and one to serve the recreational area.

Since I do not wish to take up too much time of the committee, I want to say to the minister in conclusion that there are at least three things urgently required by this park. The first is a museum area. This area now contains only a replica of one of the original Ukrainian houses in our territory and a memorial to the Ukrainian pioneers. We wish that this museum area could be enlarged and a building erected that would house all the relics of the pioneers of western Canada. We also require a swimming pool, because at times the lake does not provide the best water for swimming. I have been told, too, that the recreational facilities would be improved with the addition of another nine hole golf course. If possible, it should be on a par with the one that is already there.

It may be that you think, as I said, this is a very local issue. It is not, because it concerns the people of Canada and the people who come from all countries to visit our national parks.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I think it is a remarkable combination of history and geography that sees my friend, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, presiding over an empire of some 1,500,000 square miles in extent. This is an area roughly half the size of the continental United States. So far as I can understand from the Canada Year Book, the total population of that area could be placed in the Empire stadium in Vancouver for one of the larger football games. This disparity and lack of population probably only adds to the problems the minister has. This northern half of the nation is pretty well under an administration form of rule, and the problem of administering this great area rests on the shoulders of the minister and his administrative officers.

I think it is a fair comparison to say that the minister is responsible for problems in an area about the same of, or rather larger in extent than that which is operated at the present time by Mr. Ben Bella, who is running an area called Algeria. This vast territory includes the Yukon, Northwest Territories and national parks. As you know, the national parks themselves occupy an area larger than several of the states of Europe. This department extends its activities and interests from the drilling of oil in the Arctic to luring tourists from San Francisco. It includes in its operations many museums. It has no less than 40,000 square miles of bird sanctuaries, an area especially for the birds. This department, with its responsibilities, its spheres of interest, has come to us as a sort of catch-all or northern upstairs attic in which a vast accumulation of things has been stored, or perhaps left in corners over the years. In our opinion in this party, this situation has prevailed for too long. It should be changed. We think the time is now for us to take, as a nation, a new look at the department of northern affairs and to bring under a more realistic arrangement some of its functions and responsibilities.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, that we should put it this way. We should go up in the attic of the northern affairs department to see what we have there after all these years, and certainly bring down what we can handle to better advantage or put in a better place. In a brief talk on this immense subject, one can do no more than to pick up, let us say, one small trunk out of the attic of northern affairs.

It seems surprising to me, and to many other Canadians, that this large department of northern affairs still has over-all responsibility for the national museum of Canada. Surely, with all its other officers and responsibilities, the department should be freed of the responsibility it has for the museum of Canada, the natural history branch and the human history branch. We say that these facilities should be made a separate entity. We think that they should be placed in the same category as the national film board and the national gallery, under a separate authority of their own. In time I hope to see developed in Canada what might well be called a national ministry of culture, which would bear responsibility for all these cultural activities.

I think that part of the dissatisfaction and trouble through which the national museum has gone, and is still going, has emanated from the fact it remains as a sort of leaf on the end of a branch on the end of a tree. In my view, it should be re-examined, strengthened and given a new foundation. It should have more scope to develop its own policies and resources. There is no use, Mr. Chairman, belabouring the present minister or the former minister of this department for the reported unhappy conditions in the national museum of Canada. Neither of them had the time or, I think, the energy to do all the other things they had to do and at the same time take up and solve the problems of the national museum to put it on a modern footing in 1963.

It is not my intention to belabour the unfortunate museum tonight any more than I can help. However, it will be fresh in the minds of many members that earlier this year, less than two months ago I believe, four prominent officials of the museum resigned. They were Dr. Russell, director of the natural history branch; Dr. McFeat, chief ethnologist; Dr. Larry Oschinsky, physical anthropologist, and Dr. MacNeish, chief archaeologist. When the government was asked why this happened they said, in effect, that it was too bad.

There was no connection between these resignations taking place at roughly the same time; it was sort of a coincidence. Perhaps these men had better jobs to which to go. This is hard to credit, particularly when I am told that over the last two years there have been no less than 30 resignations from the museum staff. I feel it is obvious there is a lack in the national museum of Canada in its present relationship to the northern affairs department. There should be scope for leadership. It is hindered by being kept tied to the apron strings of the department. It should be given new foundations, and its functions should be expanded and extended so that it can play a much more realistic part in our Canadian culture.

In conclusion I would ask that the minister and the government consider, first, taking the museum out of its present outmoded context as a corner in the department of northern affairs; second, that they make it a separate branch or entity, such as the national film board and, third, I would ask that they consider appointing a director general for the national museum system of Canada which we hope to see evolved in the future.

Item agreed to.

40. Grant in aid of the development of the international peace garden in Manitoba, $15,000.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks here on the basis of what had been under consideration in the department, under the previous administration. It may be that what I have to say might have been taken up privately with the minister, but after listening to the hon. member for Renfrew South I think I too should have the opportunity of stating my case for the area in which I live. Some time ago I had the privilege of putting a case forward for the extension of the small park that exists north of the Bruce peninsula at Georgian bay. This is a natural area for the extension of a park site, and includes Flower Pot island off the northeastern tip of the peninsula.

I listened to the minister saying how valuable our national parks were, and how our people, and many thousands from the United States, spend their vacations on the highways rather than going to specific sites, as was the custom previously. He told how they spend so much time on the roads travelling from one point to another, and this was exactly why I made my presentation to the department some time ago, and convinced the minister of that day that consideration should be given to this development.

I have before me a proposal for a national park on Bruce peninsula in the province of Ontario. Ontario does not have much of this type of institution, and this I believe is because of the farsighted programs of the provincial authorities. These programs are to their credit, but I believe that the provision of a national park would be valuable in this particular area.

We sometimes speak of the natural things we lose as the result of commercialization of an area. We speak of the loss to the country of certain types of growth, of certain aspects of natural beauty lost through commercialization. There are specific types of flora and fauna on the Bruce peninsula which will disappear in the not too distant future, if the investigation that was carried on with regard to a national park is not continued.

I also have a letter before me which I received earlier this year when I discussed the situation with one of the residents of that area. They are extremely enthused and interested in the project. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that this is not in my constituency, and therefore I feel I have the right to be very frank about my presentation. I have here an outline of all those things which would be of advantage to Canada, and in particular to the advantage of Canadians who visit that part of the country.

I agree with the minister when he says there is a trend on the part of vacationers to travel from site to site, using parks facilities and that sort of thing. Within about 90 or 100 miles of this area there are other provincial parks, and I believe this area would be an ideal link in the chain of great lakes parks. It would be valuable not only for highway travellers but for those who use the waters of the great lakes, and at present tremendous numbers of Americans enter Canadian waters at Georgian bay.

I think I can impose upon the good will and honesty of the minister to follow this up in the vein in which it was first thought of and presented. I hope he will allow me to discuss it on a personal basis with him in an effort to further this worthy project on the tip of the Bruce peninsula.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I was going to say a word on the general item, and pay numerous compliments to the minister, but that would be now out of order. I appreciate his comments about the use of the parks, and his rather gracious tribute to the prosperity which the country has enjoyed for the last six years, as indicated in the use of our national parks by the motor owning public.

Specifically I would like to direct his attention to the park in Prince Edward Island which, as his figures show, has the second highest attendance of all. I may say I have often quarrelled with the figures of his department, because they do a little process of cooking them with regard to a lot of people who go into the park several times a day. I know that when I entered Banff I was counted as a visitor, whereas I was going to British Columbia and should not have been called a visitor. Perhaps I will have to carry on the argument I had with the former minister, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris about the figures which the department uses—and I may add that the former minister was one of the best ministers in the government I supported. A certain part of Canada has been described as the land God had given to Cain, but I would like to quote Jacques Cartier, the first tourist to Prince Edward Island who in 1534 described it as:

> —the fairest land that might possibly be seen... full of beautiful trees and plains.

There is a fine national park in this area. It is very important to our economy, to our burgeoning and expanding tourist industry, and I would urge the minister most strongly to appoint a permanent superintendent for it. We have had two acting superintendents there since the departure of Mr. Kipping, who was one of the most outstanding men in the national parks field. To indicate the type of man Mr. Kipping was, he was a born Cape Bretoner, who became a Prince Edward Islander, and it is a man with judgment and experience like that whom we would like to have as superintendent of the park.

I mention this to the minister at this time, because next year is centennial year in Prince Edward Island, and I am sure the figures for attendance at the park will be greater than ever before. In my opinion it is of the utmost urgency that he do not revert to the earlier practice of having acting superintendents, but that he appoint a full time man to knuckle down to the important job of developing this park.

I would also like to say we are hopeful for a little more rapid development of the site at Fort Amherst, with which so much of our history is bound up, both of the French occupation and the English occupation. I would also commend to the minister a most careful study of the suggestions which have come from the provincial government regarding recreational areas in the provinces. A very pleasing thing about national parks attendance is that more of the native peoples are making use of these beautiful areas, and we also find this in Prince Edward Island. It is for these reasons I urge him to do these two things. I think the minister has, indeed, started out to be what one might call a good minister. I will make no comparisons with anyone else. I do wish him well and I hope he will earn a place of esteem and regard in his ministry comparable to that of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Douglas: Before we leave the question of parks, I should like to ask the minister about the prospects of developing Garibaldi park. There has been tremendous interest in the lower mainland of British Columbia in the possibility of developing that park. As the minister knows, there is a lack of park facilities in that area of the province. This park comprises one of the most beautiful locations in Canada. I know the minister is interested in this and I believe he has made statements publicly regarding his willingness to undertake such a project if he could reach an understanding with the government of British Columbia. I think it would be helpful to the committee to have something on record as to what the minister is prepared to do, what offer he has made, and what response he has received from the government of British Columbia.

Mr. Laing: I think I would be on happier ground talking about the Bruce peninsula park or about the Prince Edward Island park, which I have not seen, than I would be talking about the Garibaldi park. The so-called offer was, in fact, the renewal of an offer made by the Hon. Mr. Lesage when he was in charge of the department, and renewed, in 1958 I think, by my immediate predecessor, I think there is wide agreement that, of all the areas of Canada, both for summer and winter recreation, Garibaldi park is the outstanding place. I have talked with people who are very conversant with Europe and they say the Alps in no way compare with Garibaldi park. All I did was to renew the offer made by my predecessor suggesting that if the area were turned over by the province to the federal government, free of all encumbrances, as the National Parks Act requires, the federal government would develop it as a national park.

I am sure most hon. members would agree we do need development there. Instead of a great stream of tourists coming up from the south, pausing briefly at Vancouver and then going on to Banff and the other national parks, they would be retained for a time in British Columbia and would unquestionably spend more money there. We would also get back a great deal of money spent by our own people each winter in Washington on skiing.

I have hopes, though they may be growing fainter day by day, that the premier of our province will change his mind and decide to turn this great area over to the national government for development. I am certain it would be in the interests of our economy in British Columbia to do so. We are at the present time developing intermediate parks along the Pacific west of Jasper and Banff in order to hold some of the traffic which now is determined to get into the national parks, overcrowding them, requiring tenting facilities, and so on.

I should like to commend the hon. member for Grey-Bruce and the hon. member for Queens on the comments they have made. They have spoken of a common desire on the part of Canadians, a growing desire, I think, in the light of the fact that we are approaching the centenary of our confederation, that we should set aside amply and in good time those remaining great areas which may be required in the next 50 years as national parks. I am certain that in parts of Ontario today, when people look back, they are sorry a greater provision was not made for the spaces which today are required by our people and which are, also, a great magnet for visitors from abroad.

Mr. Douglas: When the offer was made to the province of British Columbia to develop Garibaldi park, was an estimate made as to what the cost would be and how much the federal government was prepared to spend on the development of that area?

Mr. Laing: The government's attitude has been that when an area is turned over free of encumbrances by the province, an inspection is made. The area is laid out then according to the best views of our planners, and anything that is required to make a job of it is done. In Fundy park, New Brunswick, which is a relatively small park, we expended something of the order of $8.5 million. The principal requirement in many of these places is roads, and where large areas of rock are encountered this can be an expensive item. Our total capital expenditure in all the parks is of the order of $200 million. I did ask the premier of the province if he would agree to letting our planning officials into the area to suggest what might be done with it. I have a letter from him agreeing to that proposal, with the condition that the resources by way of minerals and timber would be retained as the property of the provincial government and be subject to its exploitation. This, of course, is a condition which makes it impossible for us to establish the area as a national park.

An hon. Member: It is 10.30, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Laing: I think there are not many more speakers who may wish to take part in this discussion. May I suggest that we continue for some time, in which case we would probably finish these estimates tonight?

Mr. Churchill: We are prepared to go on for another half hour.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed?

An hon. Member: No, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Might we have from the acting leader of the house another of his concise outlines of business for tomorrow?

Mr. MacNaught: I will be as concise as possible. Tomorrow, we will continue with our consideration of the Income Tax Act, committee stage and third reading. Then we will take the resolution relating to the consumer credit committee; and if that is finished in time we shall take up the bills relating to the Northwest Territories. In the evening we will consider the estimates of the Department of Labour backed by those of the Department of Fisheries.

It being twenty five minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

The following items were passed in committee of supply this day:

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

1. Departmental administration including federal share of the expenses of the secretariat for the resource ministers council, $1,018,600.

5. Northern co-ordination and research including an amount of $70,000 for grants for northern research and for northern scientific research expeditions, $241,100.

10. Contributions to the provinces, pursuant to agreements entered into with the approval of the governor in council by Canada with the provinces, of amounts equal to one half of the amounts confirmed by the provinces as having been spent by them for campground and picnic area developments, $250,000.

15. Contributions to the provinces to assist in the development of roads leading to resources in accordance with agreements entered into by Canada and the provinces, $9,250,000.

National parks branch—

20. Branch administration, $308,900.

National parks and historic sites and monuments—

25. Administration, operation and maintenance, $8,875,700.

25a. Administration, operation and maintenance, $100,000.

30. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $14,295,000.

30a. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—To extend the purposes of vote 30 of the main estimates, 1963-64 to authorize expenditures on works on other than federal property, $1.

35. Grant to Jack Miner migratory bird foundation, $5,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 8, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BERLIN—REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING RECENT INCIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister regarding the series of occurrences on the autobahn which, while the matter is peculiarly one for the big three allied powers, affects all NATO nations. I would ask the Prime Minister whether representations have been made to the United States against indulging in actions that are provocative and dangerous in their implications.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the right hon. gentleman's description of United States policy in this matter, we are making inquiries, and I hope that as a result of these inquiries either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or I will be able to make a statement on Tuesday morning.

PAKISTAN—CANADIAN AID IN IMPROVEMENT OF DEFENCE FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Is the government of Canada giving any form of assistance to the government of Pakistan in connection with its program of reorganization, improvement and enlargement of its defence forces?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would repeat the question. I did not quite get it.

Mr. Herridge: Is the government of Canada giving any form of assistance to the government of Pakistan in connection with that government's program for the reorganization, improvement and enlargement of its defence forces?

Mr. Pearson: To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no, but I had better look into the matter.

SOUTH VIET NAM—RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, could the right hon. gentleman tell us whether there has been a change in Canada's stand toward the recognition of the new regime in South Viet Nam?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; that matter is under consideration.

NATO—U.S. ACTION RESPECTING ECONOMIC CREDITS TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Prime Minister say whether representations have been made by the United States to Canada and to other NATO nations in favour of denying the sale by any of those nations of unstrategic materials on a credit basis to the U.S.S.R.?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I understand that reports have appeared in the press recently concerning discussions among NATO members on the subject of long term credit to the Soviet union and other communist countries in respect of the commodities which the right hon. gentleman has mentioned. As the house knows, it is the custom for members of NATO to hold periodic discussions relating to these and other matters of interest to the alliance. These discussions are, of course, of a confidential nature but I may say that no representations have been made to the Canadian government on this matter by the United States government or by any other government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister not agree that if such representations were made—and there have been many reports that they have been made to NATO countries other than Canada—Canada should take the same attitude as the United Kingdom and continue to sell on credit regardless of the wishes of the United States?

Mr. Pearson: Since I have said no representations have been made, the right hon. gentleman's question is surely hypothetical.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not very hypothetical according to the New York Times.

TRADE

WHEAT—USE OF GRAIN COMPANIES IN SALE TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the matter of the recent agreement to sell wheat to the Soviet union, was the Canadian wheat board making use of grain companies as agents and, if they were, what part of this transaction was handled by grain companies acting as agents of the Canadian wheat board?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of that question is yes, the wheat board did make use, as usual, of its agents, and the Soviet union also made use of its agents in the transaction. It would not be in the public interest, nor would it be in conformity with public policy, to reveal the proportions or amounts done by individual agents.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, when the minister spoke of the Soviet union having agents, do I assume these were simply agents of the Soviet government, or was it using grain companies as agents on this continent?

Mr. Sharp: The Soviet union uses international grain trading firms, just as the wheat board does, the only difference being that it uses them for buying while we use them for selling.

Mr. Douglas: Did they use them in this instance?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, they did, Mr. Speaker.

POTATOES—STEPS TO PROVIDE EXPORT MARKETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am sorry I did not give him notice but usually, it seems to me, the hon. gentleman has his music with him. Can the minister tell us how he is getting along in his exploration for new markets for potatoes which are very plentiful and very good in the maritimes just now?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps the hon. gentleman would not agree, but I think we are making satisfactory progress.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS—PROVINCIAL WILLINGNESS TO SHARE IN INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister or the government expressed their willingness to share an additional $10 per month on old age assistance, blind and disabled allowances, so that the provinces may come to the November 25 conference prepared to accept such a suggestion without having to go back to their respective governments for agreement?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, all aspects of this matter were discussed in September last at the ministerial meeting in Ottawa.

Mr. Monteith: All I am asking is whether the provincial governments are in a position to come here to accept this. Have they been told this is available?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for provincial governments.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, has the government's announced policy of withdrawing from joint programs changed the hon. lady's position in this regard since the meeting last September, of which she made mention?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Quebec West.

Mr. Grafftey: I repeat my question. Has the government's announced policy of withdrawing from joint programs changed the hon. lady's attitude in this regard since the meeting of last September which she mentioned?

Miss LaMarsh: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): I have a further supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Is it Liberal policy, as outlined in this pamphlet, that an increase in the old age assistance pension to $75 per month will be made available to single women and widows at age 60, and the blind and disabled? Is it government policy, inasmuch as it was promised in the last election?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Orders of the day are not the appropriate place to discuss matters of policy of this kind as you yourself, Mr. Speaker, pointed out the other day in laying down the rules that should govern questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Another retreat.

Mr. Grafftey: I rise on a point of order, sir.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Which is it, a point of order or a question of privilege?

Mr. Grafftey: I may state my privilege very succinctly and briefly. The Prime Minister says that orders of the day is not the time for us to ask these questions regarding federal-provincial relations. May I inform this house, as I reach my point of privilege, that before the month of June last year I asked a series of questions of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, if I could have silence I would state my question of privilege. Howling down by this arrogant government is something that cannot be condoned. Last June I asked at least two ministers pointed questions about federal-provincial relations. Subsequently I put on the order paper three motions for the production of papers asking for information. This was before June 26 last. We are now, Mr. Speaker, less than two weeks away from a federal-provincial conference, and I am still without that information.

Today we asked the ministry questions relating to federal-provincial affairs, but we were told orders of the day was not the time to ask those questions. My point of privilege is this. This is a new, subtle, Machiavellian type of closure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: Hon. members may laugh, but it so happens that at this stage in Canadian confederation, federal-provincial relations are exercising the imaginations of many people. This is a new, subtle type of closure, when opposition members cannot get information.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have been as lenient as possible because, for obvious reasons, I was interested in hearing the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. It might be useful to recall to all hon. members citation 178 in Beauchesne's fourth edition:

> Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible. Within these lines an explanation can be sought regarding the intentions of the government, but not an expression of opinion upon matters of policy.

I do not believe the hon. member has anything more to add. At least the latter part of his statement I thought was out of order.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CARIBOU AIRCRAFT—INQUIRY AS TO RESTORATION OF CANCELLED U.S. ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Defence Production I have a question for the acting minister, of which I have given notice. Is it a fact that the United States congress has revised its decision and has now agreed to continue to participate in the Canadian Caribou II development program, as reported in last night's issues of the Ottawa Citizen and the Ottawa Journal?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Acting Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to advise that the report is incorrect. In the absence of the Minister of Defence Production, I am informed by his officers that to the best of their knowledge the whole matter of continuing participation in the development of the Caribou II aircraft is still under consideration by the appropriate committees of the United States House of Representatives and Senate. When a final decision has been taken, an announcement will be made by the minister.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—REQUEST THAT REPORT BE MADE AVAILABLE TO PROVINCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Transport reconsider his position on the question of the T.C.A. overhaul base in Winnipeg and make available to the Manitoba authorities the Dixon-Speas report so that the province can examine the arguments contained therein, which so far have been kept secret?

Mr. Speaker: I think this is a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister in connection with the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg. Has the Prime Minister suggested to the provincial government of Manitoba that a detailed and comprehensive submission should be made concerning the economic conditions surrounding that problem, and, if so, how can that be done by the provincial government without access to the Dixon-Speas report?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have not made such a suggestion myself to the Manitoba government.

FINANCE

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—REPORTED INCREASE IN U.S. TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The president of the B. F. Goodrich Company, speaking in Windsor, has said that his firm has found that tariffs between the United States and Canada are about 100 per cent higher than they were before the recent auto parts announcement. I should like to ask the minister if this is correct, and whether he considers that some act of retaliation is being exercised by the government of the United States.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know the laws of the United States on tariffs remain as they were. I cannot believe that the gentleman in question is quoted correctly, or that he was speaking about facts if he was, because the laws of the United States are acts of congress that cannot be changed overnight.

[Later:]

Mr. Douglas: May I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce following the statement I made a moment ago. Would the minister look into the statement made by the president of the Goodrich company of Canada in the course of his speech at Windsor that rubber sealing strips were now facing a tariff of 17 per cent instead of 8½ per cent, and that farm tractor tires, which formerly had been admitted without paying any duty at all, were now faced with a tariff of 8½ per cent? I wonder if the minister would look into this to see whether the statements are factual and whether they reflect any retaliatory action by the United States.

Mr. Sharp: I will be happy to do so. I can assure the hon. member that in any case this would not represent retaliatory action. If it has happened, it has been pursuant to laws passed by the United States before the auto parts announcement was made.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The matter was brought to my attention yesterday by the newspaper which mentioned that the Postmaster General and 16 other members from Quebec went to make representations to the royal commission on biculturalism. During that visit one member asked the commissioners not to be a smokescreen. Was this visit intended to make sure that the royal commission would not be a smokescreen?

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING CLAIMS FOR CHARITABLE DONATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Has he received complaints from taxpayers whose income tax returns were altered without notice, especially with regard to charitable donations?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that the Department of National Revenue receives many letters expressing different views on this matter, but I want to make it clear that so far as charitable donations are concerned, amounts are not reduced arbitrarily. As I have said before in the house, an attempt is made in all cases to verify the correctness of the amounts claimed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Could the Minister of National Revenue have an investigation made at the Quebec office to find out if the policy he mentioned regarding the procedure to be followed has always been carried out?

[Text]

Mr. Garland: I am glad to say I am regularly in touch with most of the offices, particularly the Quebec office, and I am quite certain that that policy is carried out in Quebec. The same policy is carried out in the Quebec office as is carried out in the rest of Canada.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING HEALTH INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the list of business which the Prime Minister gave us last Monday appears in the main to be a list of business for the next session of parliament, can he tell us whether that list, when it is completed, will include legislation respecting health insurance or medicare?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as this question seems to me to consider the next session of parliament, I do not think it can be considered urgent today.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether this subject will be considered at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Pearson: I think the agenda of the forthcoming conference has already been tabled, so my hon. friend will know what it is.

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister now in a position to say when the report of the royal commission on health services presided over by Mr. Justice Hall will be brought down?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am not, Mr. Speaker. My last information was that it would be available some time between the end of November and the early part of December, but I will make further inquiries.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—EXCLUSION FROM BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Could he explain why the deputy minister of public works does not sit on the executive of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as did his predecessor, Mr. Young?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question is in order.

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): I should like to answer it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: It is not in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): If the minister thinks he can answer my question, I feel the house would be interested to know why the deputy minister of public works, Mr. Lalonde, does not sit on the executive, as did his predecessor, Mr. Young, when he held the same post.

Is it because the new deputy minister of public works is a French Canadian that he is not allowed to sit on the executive?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Certainly that question is definitely out of order on several grounds, not the least of which is that matters of administration are surely the responsibility of the minister himself. While there is no particular objection to inquiring for this information, I suppose, certainly the last part of the question was completely out of order.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO TERMINATION OF JOINT PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Since the Prime Minister was, very properly, away yesterday, I was unable to ask him the following question. I wish to address it to him today. Is it now the stand of the government of Canada that shared programs with the provinces shall end?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The policy of the government on this matter has already been announced, and I have nothing to add to what has previously been said.

An hon. Member: By whom?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the Prime Minister read the words of the President of the Privy Council in this connection; his speech in Toronto? I ask the right hon. gentleman again whether it is the purpose of this government to do away with shared programs.

Mr. Pearson: As I have stated, the policy of the government on this matter has been announced. It has been announced both by myself and by the President of the Privy Council, and I have nothing to add.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Do I take it the Prime Minister is now saying that the statement made in Toronto by the President of the Privy Council, to the effect that the government would be prepared to withdraw from joint federal-provincial programs and to compensate provincial governments willing to take over such programs on their own, is the official position of the government with regard to this question?

Mr. Pearson: That statement is not a new one; it has been made before on behalf of the government—that we would be prepared to consider, with the provinces, withdrawing from these programs in certain circumstances.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Will he consider, not today but at an early date, making a clear statement to the house indicating which of these shared programs the government is considering withdrawing from, so that the uncertainties that are now created can be cleared up?

Mr. Pearson: There is no uncertainty of which I am aware, but I shall be glad to take the hon. member's suggestion under consideration.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister state whether the speech made by the President of the Privy Council represented government policy in regard to joint programs?

Mr. Pearson: I have already answered that question.

AGRICULTURE

SPOKESMAN IN CABINET FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane. Since the establishment of the joint department or of the double office of ministers of agriculture is postponed indefinitely, could the minister assure the house and eastern farmers that he will speak forcibly on their behalf to the cabinet and push the demands of eastern farmers in particular.

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, like all other Liberal members in the house, I shall always champion the eastern farmers.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Thursday, November 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act—Mr Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 16—Exemption of income from manufacturing or processing business in designated areas.

Mr. Hales: When we were last discussing the amendment to this clause, the Minister of Finance was going to give the committee his views on this section relating to the 95 per cent provision covering the cost of machinery, and we were discussing whether new and old machinery would be eligible. Has the minister any further remarks to make?

Mr. Gordon: I think we pretty well exhausted the subject, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, would you read the amendment?

The Chairman: Yes.

That clause 16, section 71A, subclause (3) be amended by substituting 25 per cent in place of 95 per cent in line 17 and by substituting 25 per cent in place of 95 per cent in line 45.

[Mr. Knowles.]

All those in favour of the amendment will please rise.

Amendment (Mr. Skoreyko) negatived: Yeas, 39; nays, 83.

Mr. Grafftey: Before this clause carries, would the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Industry or the Minister of Labour tell us what the government's future intentions are relating to consultations with municipalities before they are designated under this provision? I think by now hon. members opposite realize that we consider this principle of consultation extremely important. Is it the government's intention in the future to consult local officials before designating areas?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Industry has already stated that when we have had some experience with this legislation he will be considering ways and means of improving it. Apart from that I do not think I can go further at this moment, except to point out to the hon. member that if any consultations of that kind were to be conducted, the proper thing would be to talk to the provinces rather than the municipalities.

Mr. Hales: On this subject, would the minister give us an assurance that he will reconsider the designation of Brantford before the 12 months expire?

Mr. Gordon: I would be very pleased to give the hon. member an assurance that all the areas, and the formula, will be considered once we have had a little experience with it.

Mr. Lambert: I have one question for clarification of what the minister indicated the day before yesterday, that the areas are designated on the basis of reporting districts of the national employment service. It has been the practice of the national employment service to extend the number of its offices, and this will create new reporting districts. I am thinking of the case put forward by the hon. member for Renfrew South, when he indicated that in one reporting district there was great disparity of conditions but by reason of an average the district qualified as a designated area. In other words, within a reporting district there could be an area that would not qualify, an area that was pretty well off. What happens under that circumstance? Does that district lose its qualification, or what happens to any projects started in it?

Mr. Gordon: Quite clearly anybody who started an operation to take advantage of these inducements should not be penalized. Apart from that I really have not anything to add to what I have said already. If any of these national employment districts should be changed, then there will be a problem that will have to be dealt with, but I have not heard any suggestion that any of these particular areas are going to be affected in that way.

Mr. Hales: I wonder if the minister would enlarge on the wording in line 35 on page 13, "new manufacturing or processing business." What does he mean by this? Does a new manufacturing company have to be manufacturing a new product?

Mr. Gordon: The definition is the same that was used under the old section 40A, which was introduced by my friend the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings a year ago.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 17 and 18 agreed to.

On clause 19.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this clause be reconsidered, because here again the government is doing something that is definitely not very advisable. In this connection I would like to quote from Hansard of November 9, 1962 dealing with the question of special provisions for pipe line companies to deduct exploration costs as business expenses. The question which comes to my mind is, why would a pipe line company embark on the process of drilling and exploration unless it were going to embark on oil and gas production?

On November 9, 1962 the hon. member for Kingston, who since that time has been elevated another step in the hierarchy, had some very pointed things to say about special provisions being given to oil and gas companies. I remember thinking at the time it was an excellent speech, in fact I marked it very carefully in Hansard, and I am glad the matter has come up again. Quoting from page 1464 of Hansard for November 9, 1962 the hon. member for Kingston had this to say:

> That is fine. Resolutions 6 to 10 primarily affect the oil and gas industry in Canada. It was estimated by the previous minister when they were introduced that they will cost the treasury some $15 million in a full year. The oil and gas industry as such will contribute very little to the income tax revenue of the federal government even though its gross revenue exceeds $500 million. I can think of no other industry in Canada in this favourable position.
> It has been claimed that this industry needs further encouragement to find reserves. According to figures produced by the Canadian petroleum association, at the end of 1961 reserves on hand in Canada amounted to 18.9 years supply. If we compare our situation with the United States we will find that the United States had on hand at the same date some 12 years supply, and over the past 100 years the United States working inventory has ranged between 10 and 15 years—
> What we need is more and faster growing markets for petroleum products. If we had these we would not need tax concessions to stimulate the search for oil. It is noteworthy in this regard that we import far more oil than we export, in spite of our unused capacity, and this is a factor contributing to our exchange problems. Incidentally, although we have had a national oil program, according to bureau of statistics figures capital investment in oil producing was $561 million in 1961 compared with $697 million in 1957.

I suggest that the situation is no way changed from the time when the hon. member for Kingston made that very eloquent and telling speech, and I would urge the Minister of Finance, in view of his situation with regard to our national housekeeping, that he should cast a very dubious eye over this measure that he introduced some months ago, and determine whether this is justified in the light of Canada's present economic situation and in the light of his own views with regard to budgetary deficits. I should hope this particular provision would be reconsidered by the government in the light of the figures presented by the hon. member for Kingston, and in the light of the figures I myself presented during that same session, in 1962.

Mr. Benson: I thank the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands for complimenting me on my speech of last year, and I can assure him that my views generally toward these sections of the act have not changed. However, it was not deemed advisable to withdraw the sections in this particular budget, which was a decision of the government. In dealing with this particular clause, however, which is designed to extend the privileges which exist under the substance of the act to the pipe line companies, I am in complete agreement with it as such.

The majority of the independent pipe line companies in Canada are Canadian owned. As I recall it, three out of five are Canadian owned, and their position has been that they are not allowed the advantage of going out and developing their own raw materials to send through their own pipe lines. As these companies are to a large extent Canadian owned I would like to see them continue to exist, and they should have the same right as integrated companies to write off their exploration and development expenses. Integrated oil and pipe line companies can now write off their development expenses. The cost of going out and expanding their fields can be written off against the operations of their pipe lines, whereas an independent pipe line company cannot do this. In a similar sense you can take the large steel companies in Canada which have the privilege of going out west and writing off expenditures in this regard as against steel profits in eastern Canada.

The purpose of the section is to extend fair play to independent pipe line companies.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I find the hon. member's argument singularly unpersuasive. What he is telling us is that we are allowing some people unjustifiably to get into the public treasury and we should allow others to exercise their sticky fingers in the same way. Any pipe line company that embarks on a program of development and exploration becomes an integrated company. It has an integrated operation. At any rate, I suggest that last year the hon. member for Kingston considered these allowances to be scandalously unjustified; and to give them to other companies just because some companies have these allowances, which he considers scandalously unjustified, does not seem to me a suitable argument for extending the scandal a little farther even under the guise of these other companies being true blue Canadian companies.

I do not think it really matters very much to the Canadian consumer whether he is robbed by a Canadian or robbed by a foreigner. On the other hand, I do suggest this is something that indicates the necessity for a complete overhaul of this section of our fiscal set-up, and I would be much better pleased to see the minister come forward with a completely revamped structure in this regard rather than, as I say, compounding the mistake that has already been made in regard to existing companies.

Mr. Benson: If I may, I should like to make my position clear. Last year I was against all these allowances and the sections in the act dealing with them. Quite honestly I still have grave doubts with regard to their validity from a taxation point of view. Let me first state that. However, since it has been the decision of the government to allow these sections to stand, I think there is a strong argument that the same benefits should be extended to the independent pipe line companies as are extended to the large integrated companies at the present time.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in this hybrid section of the Income Tax Act for a good many years. I want to support what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has said. I cannot continue without complimenting him on his elephantine memory, which is very useful on occasions.

We object to this type of legislation regardless of the explanation, and one could see that the parliamentary secretary was most uncomfortable in having to make a retreat on account of expediency. We object in principle to this type of legislation which permits these corporations to deduct from their taxable income the cost of mining operations and in other cases the cost of well drilling and pipe lines. As a matter of fact, on account of this legislation being in the Income Tax Act the Canadian people have financed United States subsidiaries in Canada to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars. Then we are told we have not got the capital in Canada.

I want to take the opportunity to mention again something I have mentioned in previous years, because it is obvious that the government is going to continue this same practice on this occasion. We have been told repeatedly that this type of clause in the Income Tax Act was intended to promote investment and increase production in Canada. That is what we were told some years ago when it was first introduced into the Income Tax Act.

I want to ask the minister this question. On the basis of that argument, and if the principle is going to be continued, has any further consideration been given to extending the same advantages to farmers who increase production as a result of clearing, draining or irrigating land? All these activities increase production. The farmer, who is a small person compared to these companies, gets no advantage at the present time although he does exactly the same thing that these large companies which are taking advantage of the act are doing.

I also want to bring to the attention of the minister a paragraph in the annual report of the Department of Forestry for 1961-62. Under the heading "Study of the Effects of Income Tax on Private Timber Management" it reads as follows:

> This study was begun in co-operation with officials of the taxation divisions of the Departments of Finance and National Revenue in response to representations that have been made to the government. Its purpose is to examine the merits of recommended tax changes that would modify the taxing of income that is solely attributable to timber growth. The study should reveal conditions under which the growing of timber by private enterprise will be encouraged.

I want to ask the minister two questions before I sit down. First, has consideration been given to extending to the farmers of the country who increase production by any method the same privileges that are extended to these large corporations? Second, what has been the result of the study referred to in this report, and is the department giving consideration to extending the same privileges to tree farmers who are farming on management principles over a long term and who are increasing production while at the same time, because of their practices, maintaining a perpetual yield and conserving our forest resource capital in so far as that comes within their jurisdiction? Is the minister giving any consideration to amending the act in the future to allow these people to enjoy the same privileges as large corporations?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in the points that the hon. member for Kootenay West has just raised. Like him, I happen to be a tree farmer, although I suspect I am a very much smaller tree farmer than the hon. member. However, I know enough about it to be sympathetic. I think the matter should be investigated, and I will see that it is done. I am not familiar with the report the hon. member mentioned, but I will look it up and see that the matter is looked into.

As to the main point that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has mentioned, I not only compliment him on his elephantine memory but also on his pungent phraseology, some of which I do not always agree with. It seemed to me that his point was whether it is necessary any longer, if it was necessary originally, to grant fairly substantial concessions to a particular industry.

I must say that personally I think he has raised a very important point. It is something that the Department of Finance started to consider before the budget and then we decided that in view of the magnitude of the problem perhaps we should wait until we had heard from the royal commission on taxation, who I am sure are looking into the matter. It seemed to us that in the meantime these particular companies which are essentially in the same industry should not be penalized, and that is the purpose of clause 19. I agree with the hon. member that the broader issue should be investigated and looked at very seriously.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering where the hon. member for Kingston gets his information when he speaks of these pipe line companies as being mainly Canadian companies. If he has some information I would certainly be glad if he would give it to the committee.

Mr. Benson: I am speaking offhand, but I will be glad to check into the statistics with regard to the matter. As I recall the situation there are five of these companies, three of which are Canadian controlled. I do not have the information with me, but I will be glad to check. As I said, three of the five are Canadian controlled companies. With regard to the fourth there is some doubt whether control is in Canada or the United States. As to the fifth, the majority of the stock is held in the United States.

Mr. Douglas: If one takes the total capital assets of all companies I do not think there is any doubt about the fact that the preponderant ownership of the pipe line companies in Canada is located in the United States.

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member may be mistaken about that. The largest one, of course, is Trans-Canada which, according to my recollection, is 80 per cent controlled in Canada.

Mr. Douglas: Does this mean that the Texas buccaneers have unloaded themselves of their ownership and control?

Mr. Gordon: It means that control has changed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I think we would appreciate having some information on this matter, and maybe the Minister of Finance or his parliamentary secretary would supply it. I know something about the pipe line companies in the west, and I know that a good many of them are mainly owned in the United States. If the minister says he has some information I will be glad to sit down so he can put it on the record. I thought the minister was going to give it.

Mr. Gordon: I have not got it here.

Mr. Douglas: If the minister is not going to give it now I want to say that I think the whole question ought to be thoroughly investigated. I am not sure that the government is justified in saying that the matter is going to be discussed by the royal commission on taxation, and therefore the government should not do anything. If the principle is wrong we should be restricting it instead of extending it. The only justification for allowing companies to carry on drilling and exploration programs at public expense, which is what this legislation means, would be if we were faced with a possible shortage of gas and oil supplies. This is certainly not the case. What we have done in this country over the years is to finance, out of the public treasury, drilling and exploration programs that have resulted in fantastic profits for oil and pipe line companies, a goodly number of which are owned in the United States.

Instead of the government extending this I think it should be eliminated. We will certainly be watching with keen interest what the Minister of Finance does when he brings down his budget, and I certainly urge him not to wait till the royal commission brings down its report. I suggest that for his midnight reading, instead of perusing the Diefenbaker years he should read the speech of the hon. member for Kingston, and having read and digested it I hope he puts the fine conclusions to which the hon. member came into legislation when he brings down his budget.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 20 and 21 agreed to.

On clause 22—Tax.

Mr. Brewin: I have an amendment to propose to clause 22 to which I invite the attention of the committee. I shall move the same amendment to clauses 23 and 28 when they are reached.

Clause 22 imposes a special tax of 5 per cent on certain dividends and corporations which do not have "a degree of Canadian ownership and control". I invite the committee to notice the words "and control". I might mention for the sake of completeness that clause 23 uses the same phrase. It alters the rate of the withholding tax so as to impose a tax of 10 per cent after the date fixed in the clause dealing with dividend payments by corporations with "a degree of Canadian ownership and control"; it imposes a 20 per cent withholding tax on corporations which do not so qualify.

Clause 28 defines what is to be deemed, for the purposes of the act—that is covered by clauses 22 and 23—a corporation which has a degree of Canadian ownership and control. By clause 28 a corporation is deemed to have a degree of Canadian ownership and control if two alternative conditions and another condition exist; that is to say, if 25 per cent of the voting shares are owned in Canada; second, if shares are listed on a Canadian exchange and no one foreign shareholder owns more than 75 per cent of the stock; and third, there is another condition that not less than 25 per cent of the directors are resident in Canada.

My proposed amendment will strike out of the phrase "a degree of Canadian ownership and control" wherever it appears the words "and control". The effect of the amendment would not be to change the substantive tax; the tax will remain precisely the same. The purpose of the amendment is to remove from the act what might be called a false and misleading label or description.

It is not necessary for me to discuss the merits of the proposed change. At the resolution stage we expressed our reasons for feeling that the proposed change did not achieve the stated purpose of encouraging Canadian control of industry, but in fact discouraged it. We in this party are all in favour of effective legislation to encourage Canadian control of Canadian industry, but in my submission the label put on these corporations, which would benefit from the proposed incentives, of "a degree of Canadian ownership and control" is false and misleading. The words "and control" are meaningless. Under this definition a corporation can qualify for the incentives which could not, by any fair stretch of the language, be said to have a single trace of Canadian control. For example, a 25 per cent interest may in certain cases give a measure of control, but in the case of a wholly owned United States subsidiary, which is the most typical case with which we are dealing here, there would be no element of control whatsoever.

The same reasoning applies even more clearly to that part of the clause which states that all that is required to qualify is that shares should be listed on an exchange, and that no one foreign shareholder should own more than 75 per cent of the stock. Nor does the provision that one out of four directors should be resident in Canada give any measure or degree of Canadian control. It would be perfectly easy to have what is known as a dummy director, who to all intents and purposes would actually be 100 per cent subservient to the foreign shareholders. If I as a lawyer, or any other learned hon. member, were asked to give advice as to whether in the case of a corporation with 25 per cent of the shares owned in Canada and with one dummy director resident in Canada it could be said that there was any degree of control over that company, I would be negligent if I said yes. I would be fired from my job if were to be so misleading as to suggest that that state of affairs constituted any degree of control. There is no such thing as a degree of control; there is either control or no control. This state of affairs represents no control whatever.

My objection to the wording of the clause is not a frivolous or pedantic one. People are prosecuted who attach false labels to goods and then seek to sell them to the public, and they are rightly prosecuted. We condemn, and properly so, false advertising. Yet the government of Canada can sell this legislation to the public on the pretext that it is giving incentives and encouraging Canadian control over Canadian industry. This claim is not true. In my view parliament should set an example of honesty. According to the legal authorities it is true that parliament can declare black to be white and white to be black. I believe it was the famous Sir Edward Coke who said that.

But notwithstanding our right to declare white to be black and black to be white, we must not be misleading. It is my view that it is misleading to define a corporation, for purposes of tax incentives, as having a degree of Canadian ownership and control when there may well be not one iota or scintilla of Canadian control involved. Therefore I move:

That clause 22 of the bill be amended by striking out from subsection (1) (a) and (1) (b) thereof the words "and control".

If this amendment meets with the approval of the committee I will move a similar amendment in respect of clause 23, where the words appear, and clause 28 when the same phrase appears.

Mr. Lambert: I think this may well come as a surprise to the minister, but so far as clause 22 is concerned, which is section 105B (a), there is a complete divergence of expression. What is said in the French version is not what is said in the English version. The English version says:

—did not have a degree of Canadian ownership and control.

The French version says:

—n'était dans aucune mesure possédée ou contrôlée.

When we turn to clause 28, which is the definition clause, the meaning is the same in French as in English. Therefore there will have to be a necessary amendment to the French version to bring it in line with the thinking expressed by the act.

Having said that with respect to the drafting, I must say that I would go even further than the hon. member for Greenwood and repeat the remarks I made on the resolution stage and on second reading, that so far as the Canadianization or the patriation of capital is concerned, this provision means precisely nothing. It is already simple to have foreigners or non-Canadian citizens resident in Canada hold office for a period as managers or as local officials of companies. I refer particularly to smaller companies, not the larger ones; the privately held and controlled companies. I do not know many subsidiary companies in Canada which are public companies; they are primarily wholly owned or closely controlled subsidiaries of foreign corporations. To say that you are going to have a greater degree of control because you have Canadian residents or residents of Canada as directors is frankly nonsense. If you are going to have Canadian ownership and control, then these people must be Canadian citizens.

I realize the minister may say that this is introducing into the act a concept of nationality or citizenship which does not exist in other parts of the Income Tax Act. There is nothing else in the act which offers incentives to companies which have a Canadian nature, and the Canadian nature comes about by reason of this so-called ownership or control. The minister is himself introducing an exception into the act in this regard by providing for these incentives.

If he is trying to patriate foreign capital, let him go all the way. He is offering an incentive to capital. All right; let us make it Canadian. I cannot see the logic of the argument that because this provision does not exist elsewhere in the act it must not be introduced now; that we must not allow the principle of citizenship but, rather, that we must look merely to residence. I find the whole provision in this connection to be meaningless.

With regard to the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Greenwood, I think there may be some justification for it, though the words "and control" seem to be a reference to the directors rather than to the so-called ownership. It comes down to this. The hon. member is asking us to delete or subtract something from nothing.

Mr. Gordon: I was impressed by what the hon. member for Greenwood had to say, though I do not think it makes any great difference one way or the other. I do not think there is any real substance in the point. I could argue, I suppose, that the present drafting has certain advantages, and it has, but I do not think it really matters. I wonder whether the hon. member would be willing to withdraw his proposed amendment and allow us to pass a separate amendment which I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue to move in the following terms:

That Bill C-95, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended by striking out the expression "ownership and control" wherever it appears therein and substituting therefor the expression "ownership".

Thus we would be able to do it all at one time.

Mr. Brewin: Sounds all right to me.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the hon. member may withdraw his amendment?

Mr. Brewin: On the understanding that the minister will introduce an amendment which covers the same ground and goes one better.

Mr. Garland: I move the amendment which was read by my colleague.

Mr. Knowles: I do not wish to be pedantic, but surely amendments have to be in terms more precise than this. Should we not be told in what clauses and in what lines this change takes place?

Mr. Gordon: Not according to the Department of Justice, which prepared that amendment.

Mr. Lambert: Under which clause of the bill will this amendment appear?

The Chairman: May I suggest that the amendment be made in connection with a specific clause. Perhaps it might be made to refer to clause 22 in this particular instance.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if the committee would allow this amendment to stand until we have had a chance to consult the lawyers.

Mr. Brewin: I may have acted too quickly in withdrawing my amendment. It may be that my drafting is superior.

Mr. Gordon: We can always give the hon. member for Greenwood the opportunity to come back.

Mr. Brewin: I am glad the minister has accepted the principle. No doubt he can work it out.

Mr. Knowles: The Department of Justice notwithstanding, I think your ruling is a proper one, Mr. Chairman. We should make amendments to specific clauses of the bill. We cannot, in committee, amend the bill. We amend clauses. What is the Department of Justice thinking about?

The Chairman: We are on clause 22, and I submit this is the only matter we can amend at this time.

Mr. Nowlan: It seems that the amendment, like Lucifer, is suspended between heaven and hell. I do not know what will happen to it finally, but I am wondering whether the minister has any general statement to make on this clause. It is a clause which is far reaching in its implications, and it is one which introduces an entirely new principle. I think it is just as important as any of the clauses upon which we have spent a certain amount of time in the past few days, and I would hope the minister has a statement to make with regard to it before we begin dealing with it ourselves, in our discussion in committee and possibly by moving amendments later. Does the minister wish to comment or make a statement?

Mr. Gordon: I have made several statements on this subject. If the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has anything to say about it I am sure we would be happy to hear from him, but I am not sure whether this other matter ought not to be disposed of first.

Mr. Nowlan: I think we would wish to take a look at the proposed amendment. I assume the minister is not urging that there should be a division on this at once. I should like to look at it and see what effect the proposal might have. There is no point in having a vote on it right now, particularly in view of the ruling of the Chair that it must be applicable to a certain specific clause. I think we should study the application of the proposed amendment to the various clauses, and when we have done so we shall be in a better position to reach an opinion with regard to it.

I do not intend to speak at any length on this part of the bill. As the minister has just indicated, we have discussed the matter at some length on other occasions. I spoke on it, as did other hon. members, during the resolution stage. We spoke on it again on second reading and now we are in committee. I do not propose to reiterate arguments which have already been advanced, or to weary the committee by repetition.

However, speaking for members on this side, for the official opposition at least, let me say I feel this clause introduces a new principle into the taxation law, a principle which in my view is of very dubious merit and which may do tremendous damage to the Canadian economy. We cannot allow the clause to pass in silence, contenting ourselves with the reflection that since we spoke about it before we need not say anything about it now.

I think no one would quarrel with the minister's motivation, his desire to have a greater degree of ownership by Canadians in corporations in Canada. We should all like to see a greater degree of Canadian ownership of our corporate structure. We in Canada, of course, are in a different position from the United States where corporations were established many, many years ago before the incidence of income tax and succession duties, when there was a tremendous pool of capital in Britain to be used for the development of the United States through the purchase of bonds and fixed income securities. The holders clipped the coupons and paid no income tax on the dividends. Finally United States corporations paid up the bonds and secured ownership of the equities.

That could not be done today because of the incidence of taxation. Investors generally are looking forward to capital appreciation; they are interested in equity holdings rather than the collection of dividends. The result is ownership rather than the holding of money, and this is the way in which our corporate structure in Canada differs from that of the United States.

I accept the theory that it is desirable to have ownership in Canada. On the other hand, I do not necessarily accept the argument that ownership by outside interests of Canadian corporations or of corporations in Canada means there can be any great degree of political control of Canada or of Canadian institutions. I do not think this has been proven, and I doubt if it can be proven. There is, of course, a tremendous degree of foreign ownership. The minister has given us the figures of foreign ownership, mainly United States ownership, of our corporate structure. I am sure all of us who have had some experience with government know that from time to time problems arise in this connection. There are, perhaps, statutes in other countries which do tend to have an impact upon corporations outside the nation, but I have never seen them amount to any degree of interference with the Canadian political organization or with the government of Canada per se.

I do not believe it has existed. I do not believe it will exist, and I do not accept the argument that because a certain percentage of our corporate structure is owned by another country there is great danger of losing political control over our own institutions. I do not think we face this menace which is sometimes conjured up in week end magazines and newspaper headlines.

I noticed last week in Newsweek magazine —I do not suggest that this periodical has biblical authority, but it is sometimes quoted as being worthy of attention—an article referring to the degree of independence now being exercised by various countries which we used to call satellites of Russia—Rumania, Poland, and the rest—despite not only economic control but political control. The article, whether it is right or wrong suggested there was a fairly high degree of independence being exercised by those countries. If that is true, then it is rather fallacious to suggest we are going to lose control of this country because there are corporations in New York or Detroit which have ownership of our corporations.

Canada certainly would be a far different country if we did not have this United States control. We may not like it; we may not like to have the effects of it, but I wonder how much employment there would be in Canada today if we did not have this degree of United States ownership and control. I know in my own constituency, which is a rural constituency, there have been three corporations come in within the last 18 months. They are wholly owned subsidiaries of United States corporations employing several hundred people. Certainly they have integrated into the local economy, into the society of the community, and are becoming remarkably good citizens. The same situation applies all over Canada.

As I have said, we can have some sympathy for the minister in his desire, a laudable desire. If we were rewriting the history of the world or reconstituting this nation, things might be done differently. I do not believe this provision is as essential as the minister urges. However, that is not my worry. If it is not as essential, and I suggest it is not, then I can see where very real difficulties might arise from the implementation of these measures which are put forward in this legislation. Great difficulties might be created for this country in the future.

As I said, what is the future going to be in respect of Canadian subsidiaries in the United States? After I sit down I should like the minister to discuss with us the situation in relation to the United States-Canada tax convention. We have conventions, of course, as hon. members know with various countries such as the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and Germany. I could run through a long list of them. As I recall it, and I am subject to correction, there is only one of these conventions under which a provision can be abrogated immediately, and that is the Canada-United States convention. This convention provides that if one country takes action to increase the tax beyond the 15 per cent, then automatically that section has been abrogated. In every other case, the United Kingdom, Belgium, and so on, as I recall it you would have to give notice before the first day of June in one year and the notice of abrogation would become effective on December 31 of the next succeeding year. In this case, once we pass this bill which the minister has before us providing for an increase in the withholding tax from 15 per cent to 20 per cent, the Canada-United States convention is abrogated.

It may be argued, and no doubt this is the hope of the minister, that since this provision does not become effective until next year it will not be construed as an abrogation, that there will be lots of time to renegotiate the treaty; after all, this is only November and we have December, January and a few more months in which things can be done; that we can renegotiate the treaty in the meantime. I am sure the minister has had discussions on this matter with the authorities in Washington, and perhaps has received assurance as to what they hope can be done. Nevertheless I am suggesting that once His Excellency gives approval to this bill, then technically we have abrogated the convention. Although the measure does not become effective until next year, our friends in the United States could consider the passage of the measure now an abrogation of the convention. In any event, it is said, we have from now until 1964.

How long does it take to renegotiate a convention? I can tell the minister, I am sure the minister has been told, and if he has not his colleague the Minister of National Revenue could remind him very forcibly of what happened in the department not too long ago when this parliament changed from a succession to an estates tax act. This was merely a technical change. There were some changes in the rates, but there were no provisions in the bill applying to any one country. There was no resentment created. This was a simple matter for the Canadian parliament to decide, yet what happened? Immediately after the act was passed and the usual claims were going back and forth relating to the taxation of estates on the United States side, the United States said the treaty was broken. We had a succession duty act and now we have an estates tax act. It does not apply; we have to renegotiate the treaty. It was very simple; there were no problems. However, in spite of this, as I recall it took over two years to renegotiate this simple treaty. There was not so much time spent in the negotiation of it, because all that can be done by officials in a few hours, and it was.

We must not forget, however, that any treaty has to be enacted by the Senate of the United States. The Senate is a sovereign parliamentary body such as this. It does not intend to be pushed into the passage of an enactment, with the heavy calendar that it has. I am wondering just how long it is going to be or what the minister proposes in relation to the renegotiation of the treaty. If I understand the law in this regard—I may be wrong but I do not think I am—once this treaty is abrogated we are going to have a 30 per cent withholding tax. This is the United States taxation law, once a tax convention is abrogated. We have a good many Canadian corporations in the United States, perhaps not as many as we would like but I think Canadians are apt to overlook this. There are a number of Canadian corporations doing business in the United States. I have not had time to prepare a study of this, but if one reads the returns of the Department of National Revenue under tax schedule 1, or reads the report of the Bank of Canada, one will be pleasantly surprised to find the degree of ownership by Canadians of corporations in the United States.

I suggest, and I think the Minister of Industry and the Minister of Trade and Commerce would not quarrel with the argument, that this is one way we can develop our trade, by having subsidiaries in other countries and particularly in the United States. They are doing this. We can think of the Moore Corporation and probably a dozen others. If these corporations are going to be subject to a 30 per cent withholding tax, what is going to be the result? Obviously there is going to be a change, and a field day for corporation lawyers. I should like to exchange the seat I have now for a partnership in some firm in Toronto. Obviously the corporate structure will have to be reorganized in these Canadian corporations; at least this is a possibility, and I think more than a possibility. They will become holding companies, and the Canadian parent will become the subsidiary. The whole corporate structure of these companies will be changed very drastically. We may well end up with United States corporations paying taxes to the United States government, and we will have branches of what were once Canadian parent corporations.

This is one problem that could arise out of this bill. The minister may be able to clarify the situation this afternoon as we proceed with the discussion. As I have said, in my opinion this is one of the most important legislative measures to come before parliament, with all due respect to the very important matters we have discussed during the week. I believe that every section of an income tax bill or any taxation bill is important to individuals, sometimes to scores and sometimes to thousands. This, I think, is important to the nation as a whole, and is something to which we in this parliament should give very careful consideration.

The minister has said it is the intention of the government to pass this measure. I am not proposing to move any technical amendments to it at the moment. The purpose of the measure is to obtain a greater degree of ownership of corporations here in this country. Suppose you have United States subsidiaries here, and there are hundreds of them; and suppose that, rightly or wrongly, they believe this law may be changed some day, that it is unworkable. If they are paying dividends they could stop the payment of dividends for the time being, and what would have been paid in dividends to people in the United States, on which the corporation would have to pay this 20 per cent, would be transferred to capital reserve, and that money would be used for expansion in Canada. So there would be a greater concentration of American ownership in Canada because we were penalizing them for sending the money out, and they would use the money for expanding here in Canada. The last state would be worse than the first. What the minister is trying to avoid could easily become the reverse because of the situation I have mentioned.

I said I did not intend to speak at length on this matter, but I have developed a little further some of the general arguments I advanced previously. We feel very strongly that this is a matter to which parliament should give a great deal of attention. Giving the minister full credit for his laudable desire to develop a national spirit, and so on, we feel this is the wrong way, and that we are starting off in a tax situation where we are penalizing one class as against another.

We have discrimination for the first time, and the minister has replied that this has happened before. I am not going into a corporate debate on it; but after the minister said that, I had representations made to me that if in fact discrimination may have taken place previously it was done by corporation statutes rather than through taxation statutes. I am doubtful if there is any other tax statute in the western world, certainly not in the British commonwealth, where you get discrimination between two classes of taxpayers, as is proposed to be set up through this bill. I think it is a wrong principle and one—

Mr. Macdonald: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, but I cannot guarantee to answer it.

Mr. Macdonald: He has made reference to the fact that there are no tax statutes in other countries which control foreign investments in this way and that the same purpose was achieved by corporation statutes. Can he refer to any other country which has the same division of legislative jurisdiction that we have? Is he not aware that this is a constitutional problem?

Mr. Nowlan: It may very well be a constitutional problem, but we are dealing here with a tax statute and we have always applied equality of taxation. I suggest that we are departing from this principle in the bill that we have before us at the moment.

I am sure there are others of my colleagues on this side of the house who will want to discuss this matter, but I am particularly interested in hearing what the minister has to say about tax conventions and the possibility of renegotiating them. I do not have to remind the Prime Minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce of the negotiations which this country will have to carry on in GATT. As the Prime Minister once said, there are and will be no easy or automatic solutions to our problems in the future. They are becoming more closely interwoven and interlocked with the trading problems of other nations.

Already we have a document which has appeared in the United States press, and rightly or wrongly the United States resents this type of legislation. The United States press thinks it is anti-American. At any rate it is technically, because that is the only country in the world with which we have a tax convention which is automatically abrogated when we approve of this tax. We have to give notice to every other country, but technically at least this is anti-American, and it is creating a substantial degree of resentment in certain quarters in the United States.

We need United States capital coming into this country, and we need co-operation in our international negotiations which will be conducted this year, next year, and I suppose on into eternity, because they have become part of our permanent way of life. One should be very careful in bringing forward legislation such as this even for a laudable but sort of will o' the wisp—with all due respect—intention that the minister has in mind.

Mr. Gordon: I will try and answer some of the points raised by the hon. member. In the first place, so far as I could gather, he raised some very grave doubts about doing anything in this general area of trying to get a greater degree of control of the Canadian economy back into Canadian hands. He raised a number of bogies and a number of points which were raised previously and which we have tried to answer previously.

The one with the most substance was that if we do anything like this we will annoy people, and therefore we will not be able to get the capital we need in the future. I would remind the hon. gentleman that the most important part of this bill—it is not this clause but I hope I will be allowed to refer to it because it has a bearing on it—in some ways the most important part of this bill is that which relieves certain institutions in other countries from a withholding tax on bond interest that they receive, provided those institutions do not pay tax in their own country.

There has been very little said on this point, and perhaps I am at fault because I have not emphasized it. However, I do so in relation to this clause because it has a bearing on it. This means that with the passing of that particular clause, and with the exemption of withholding tax on this particular kind of interest, we will open up an opportunity in this country to sell securities to one of the fastest growing accumulations of capital funds that exists. These pension funds by and large would not touch Canadian bonds since the withholding tax of 15 per cent was imposed on bond interest in the budget of December, 1960. That action eliminated this very large capital pool from Canadian borrowers, and in addition that 15 per cent tax on bond interest payable to non-residents has increased the cost of money in Canada.

It is a firm part of this government's economic policy that we should keep interest charges as low as possible, having regard to the rates of interest charged in other countries. Therefore I suggest to the hon. member that this fear of his in relation to this withholding tax on dividends should be related, at least to some extent, to the other measures that are proposed in this bill, which to me, in so far as future capital requirements are concerned, are far more important.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not want to interrupt the minister, but does he have any other instances? Has he any other clauses similar to that which he wants to draw to the attention of the committee, or is that the principal one?

Mr. Gordon: No, I mean to get back to this clause.

Mr. Nowlan: This is the principal one to which the minister refers?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, for now. The hon. member in his recitation of the facts that troubled him about this particular clause raised the question of the tax treaties and the fact that they will have to be renegotiated. Well, that is true; quite apart from the tax treaty with the United States, our tax treaties with all other countries have to be renegotiated because of the changes in the withholding taxes imposed in December, 1960.

Apart from the one with the United States, in the case of all others notice must be given before the end of June. Notice was not given before the end of June 1961. Notice was not given before the end of June 1962. When I became Minister of Finance last April one of the questions that was raised with me, and to which I gave considerable attention, was whether in June 1963 we should give notice to all these other countries that we intended to renegotiate our tax treaties with them, as we must do. I thought at that time it would be better to wait until this bill had been passed before giving that notice. It is perfectly obvious however this is something that has been hanging fire for three years, and that it must be attended to in the very near future.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I said all the treaties have to be renegotiated. There are one or two which do not, but certainly the majority of them have to be renegotiated. In the meantime—and I do not think this has been fully appreciated—the recipients of dividends from Canada in quite a number of countries have been getting their dividends tax, despite the fact that the law provides for a 15 per cent withholding tax, and has done so ever since December 1960. They have got this income free of tax because these treaties have not been renegotiated.

I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is high time we attended to that particular piece of business, and I can assure him we propose to do so as soon as this bill is passed. As to the tax treaty with the United States, there is a provision in it that as soon as a higher rate than 15 per cent is imposed, then under United States law their withholding tax goes to 30 per cent.

As the hon. member suggested, we have had some preliminary conversations about this matter. As I said the other day, it was suggested to us that, first, these proposed changes in the withholding taxes do not become effective until January, 1965 and so, if I remember the words correctly, it was suggested that there was no immediate hurry. Second, it was suggested to us that it would be preferable from the standpoint of the officials who will be doing the renegotiation on the American side to wait until the bill had been passed. They asked me when the bill would be passed and I said, perhaps rather optimistically, that I hoped it would be passed by the middle of October. But things move slowly.

Mr. Knowles: What year?

Mr. Gordon: That is my out because I did not mention any year. I might say I do not expect to be confronted with quite the arbitrary approach that I think the hon. member perhaps had in mind. After all, when this matter is examined, naturally we will point out that the withholding taxes are being reduced from 15 to 10 per cent in a number of cases, not increased, and that they are being increased from 15 to 20 per cent in a number of others but not effective until 1965. It is anybody's guess as to how these things will balance out exactly, but my officials are inclined to think that we will be collecting a little less rather than more in the way of withholding taxes on these dividends.

I think also that most people know that the amount of United States investment in Canada very greatly exceeds the amount of Canadian investment in the United States, and I daresay this point will not be overlooked in the negotiations. Certainly we will point it out. The hon. member was worried about certain Canadian companies that have subsidiaries in the United States. I have no doubt he had in mind Distillers Corporation, Hiram Walker and Gooderham and Worts.

Mr. Nowlan: We have never heard of them down in the valley.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps the hon. member is not interested in the products of these companies. I am sorry about that; possibly I can change his mind after this committee rises. But these companies naturally have been making representations, as they are nervous about the matter; and I can assure them and also the hon. member that we will be keeping their problems very much in mind. I am not quite as convinced as he seemed to be that it is so simple just to move out of Canada and establish a head office in the United States. There are some technical problems about which his predecessor, who is now a leading counsel with a Toronto firm, might be able to inform him if the hon. member needs that information.

Mr. Nowlan: I am looking forward to it.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I could call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at one o'clock we were considering clause 22. Shall clause 22 carry?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment which the minister proposed to put forward, I think, or if not, I do.

Mr. Gordon: There are in fact two amendments to this clause, Mr. Chairman. During the luncheon recess we had some discussion about this matter, and before we get on to the particular amendment perhaps I might be permitted to finish the remarks I was making in reply to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

One of the points made by the hon. member was that he said he knew of no other instance where the taxing statutes were used in a way which was discriminatory, and that we and other countries have always used these tax statutes in such a way that taxes were applied equally. With the greatest respect I suggest to him that this may be true, but depending on the narrowness or breadth of the interpretation used. I remind him, to take a rather narrow example, that it was not very long ago that there were differences in the rates of withholding tax. The rate was 5 per cent in the case of dividends paid by subsidiaries substantially owned by corporations in other countries. The rate was greater in the case of dividends paid by other companies where there was not a very high degree of control. Certainly that form of discrimination existed, and I personally think that it was pointed in the wrong direction. I said that on many occasions to several previous governments. There certainly was a differential in the rates and to that extent there was discrimination.

Following up the point raised this morning by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, he said that certain industries in this country have for many years received incentives or a form of reduced taxation which did not apply to other industries. I think the hon. member suggested this gave the oil companies certain advantages. I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam suggested that this was one of the reasons why the oil industry in Canada is pretty well dominated by foreign concerns. I am not going into the reasons why this form of incentive was given. I do not even propose to discuss whether, in the end result, it was not quite useful, because it did result in the development of our oil industry. I mention it because the companies which received most of the benefit were relatively few in number, and they were controlled in other countries.

I suggest this could be interpreted as a form of discrimination in their favour. I mention it only because to me all taxation is bound to be discriminatory. Parliament decides on the rates, and in their wisdom successive parliaments have decided to charge different rates in the case of individuals, depending on the amount of their total incomes. I do not suppose there are many hon. members of the committee who do not believe that a progressive rate of taxation as far as personal incomes are concerned is a reasonable way to redistribute income and to some extent redistribute wealth. In any event the progressive personal income tax is established in this country and I doubt very much that it will be abandoned in the near future.

I could give a number of examples to show that by and large there are many forms of discrimination in the tax statutes; I suppose it is inherent in the method of collecting government revenues, and always has been. Someone might ask why in this enlightened age we still collect customs duties. Other people may think, as I am sure some of my hon. friends opposite do, that we would be better off if there was no personal income tax. I do not think the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands would share that point of view, but others might.

Mr. Knowles: When the minister refers to friends opposite, I think he should indicate what part of the house he has in mind.

Mr. Gordon: I do not think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should be so sensitive. Any reader of Hansard would be able to tell from the context of my remarks which particular friends I was referring to at a given moment. I am glad to say I have friends in all parts of the house; at least I hope so.

I do not think this issue should be interpreted as dogmatically as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings did this morning. The question has been asked why it was necessary to increase to 20 per cent the rate of non-resident withholding tax on dividends paid by companies which do not have a degree of Canadian ownership and control. That was the phrase originally used. I should perhaps now say "foreign ownership" in deference to the hon. member for Greenwood. The government desired to provide a worth while inducement for non-residents to release ownership of some shares in those subsidiaries in Canada in which there is now little or no Canadian participation. Since the non-resident withholding tax falls directly upon the non-resident who owns shares in Canadian companies, it is the tax which can best be used to encourage non-residents to make way for a reasonable degree of Canadian ownership.

To be effective, a tax inducement of this kind must amount to more than a few percentage points. Accordingly it is proposed that a relatively low rate of 10 per cent be provided where dividends are paid by companies with a degree of Canadian ownership, and that a rate of 20 per cent, which is more than can be absorbed by foreign tax credits in most cases, be imposed after a reasonable period in those cases where the paying company has not acquired a degree of Canadian ownership.

I do not think it would be particularly profitable for me to review at this point what I have said on other occasions about this clause. The fact is that this is, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said, if I recall his words correctly, a timid first step in the right direction. I am not prepared, in view of what has happened in the last few months, to admit it is as timid a step as the hon. member has suggested, but I am prepared to say it is a first step and I would hope all members of the committee would support it.

Mr. Knowles: What about the amendment?

Mr. Gordon: It has been proposed, Mr. Chairman, that instead of amending each of several clauses there be one amendment at the end which would deal with all the clauses and which would refer specifically to them and to the lines in the bill where the changes should be made. The amendment could be moved now.

Mr. Knowles: I think that would be better. Otherwise we would have passed the clause and we would have to reopen it.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Gordon: Well, I will ask my colleague the Minister of Public Works to move:

That Bill C-95, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended as follows:

1. by striking out the expression "ownership and control" appearing in the heading immediately preceding section 105D of the Income Tax Act as set out in clause 22 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership";
2. by striking out the expression "ownership and control" in line 22 on page 18 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership";
3. by striking out the expression "ownership and control" in lines 35 and 36 on page 18 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership";
4. by striking out the expression "ownership or control" in lines 26 and 27 on page 20 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership";
5. by striking out the expression "ownership and control" in line 39 on page 20 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership";
6. by striking out the expression "ownership and control" in line 42 on page 20 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership";
7. by striking out the expression "ownership and control" in line 5 on page 25 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership";
8. by striking out the expression "ownership and control" in lines 40 and 41 on page 26 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership";

Mr. Deschatelets: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Gordon: I think there is another amendment which the Minister of Public Works would like to move. It applies to the clause we are now considering. Between the resolution stage and the drafting of the bill certain words which were in parenthesis were omitted. They should be reinstated. The amendment reads:

That Bill C-95, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended by striking out line 17 on page 18 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"corporation (other than a non-resident-owned investment corporation) as, on account or in lieu of payment"

Mr. Deschatelets: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Monteith: Before the clause as amended is carried, I should like to say a few words concerning this part of the bill. The minister indicated a moment ago that these provisions represented at least a first step. I suggest it is a first step down the wrong path. It occurs to me that the minister is approaching this problem in an altogether incorrect way. I appreciate that there is a problem. I under- we are now considering. Between the resolu- stand what the hon. gentleman is trying to do. My hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings, when he spoke before the recess, also said he appreciated the problem which the minister faces. We all do; but surely this is the wrong way to go about remedying it.

I think this is a retrograde step. I think it will be found unworkable, and in the few minutes during which I intend to speak I shall try to point out the inconsistencies which it appears to me to contain. I believe this legislation is iniquitous and discriminatory. I suggest that an entirely different approach should be taken. Instead of penalizing people who wish to invest money in Canada, encouragement should be given to Canadian citizens to invest in their own equity securities. A more positive approach should be taken. The minister said this was a small step. I think it is a huge step in our relationship with other countries. I think the whole question should have been set aside until a report had been received from the royal commission on taxation.

The minister said my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings had indicated that this provision would annoy people. Then the minister commented that whatever kind of tax might be imposed, some people would be annoyed. It is true that everybody is annoyed when a tax which they have to pay goes up by 1 per cent, or when some move such as this is made. But this particular provision does seem to me to be going off the wrong end. I agree with the statement made in the Globe and Mail of October 21, that this does appear to be an egghead approach.

My hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings said there were three subsidiaries of United States companies in his riding. I could name innumerable companies of this kind. I was talking to a representative of one the other day. His company had a lengthy lease. It did not expire for another year, and they had been about to exercise their option to purchase. Well, they are now reconsidering the whole move. The expression used to me in this connection was "Why should we do this when there appears to be a climate in which we are not wanted?" The financial climate in Canada today is such as to discourage foreign capital from entering Canada, and to discourage the holding of capital in Canada.

Even if the steps which are now proposed were in fact taken, what would be the result? What would happen if a company were to sell 25 per cent of its interest in Canada in order to take advantage of the 10 per cent differential in the withholding tax? What would happen to the amount for which they had sold the interest? Undoubtedly the parent company would take it out of the country, to the United States or whatever country was concerned. If they were going to sell any share of the corporation they would undoubtedly remove any savings they might have accumulated in this country, any surplus cash they might have, before they actually put a percentage of the stock on the Canadian market. John Meyer, a financial writer for a Montreal newspaper, has estimated that these savings might amount to as much as $4 billion. This would, I feel, put the minister in a difficult position concerning his foreign exchange.

Another question that might be raised is, are Canadian funds actually available for the purchase of these equities if they are put on the Canadian market? Possibly some Canadian capital is available. However, in other cases those wishing to exercise their right to purchase some of these equities might have to borrow capital. They might go out of the country to borrow this capital. The interest payment on this borrowed capital might amount to more than the dividends if they had been left in the hands of the original holder.

I could go on, Mr. Chairman, pointing out these inequities. I should like, however, to give one small illustration in actual figures, which I believe to be true. As I understand it, if there is 76 per cent foreign ownership under the control of one person and 24 per cent Canadian, that particular company would have to pay the 20 per cent withholding tax. For the sake of argument, let us say a different company has 75 per cent held by one foreign person, 23 per cent held by another foreign person, and only 2 per cent Canadian. I understand, or my interpretation of the provision is, that this particular company would only pay the 10 per cent withholding tax. I suppose the company with the 76 per cent foreign control in one person and 24 per cent Canadian would be, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has put it in the past, considered to be the bad boys, whereas the company with 75 per cent foreign in one hand, 23 per cent foreign in another and only 2 per cent Canadian, would be considered the good boys. They would only pay the 10 per cent withholding tax.

Mr. Gordon: May I ask the hon. member a question? I will try to put it in the form of a question.

Mr. Monteith: I would be glad to be corrected if I am wrong.

Mr. Gordon: Then if I may correct the hon. member, 25 per cent of the stock would have to be listed on a Canadian stock exchange, the shares would have to be listed on the stock exchange, so Canadians would have an opportunity to buy them. The regulations of the exchange would require a substantial number of shareholders, or they would delist the stock.

Mr. Monteith: Does the minister mean that 25 per cent would have to be listed on the Canadian stock exchange and that no foreigners could invest in it, only Canadians?

Mr. Gordon: No.

Mr. Monteith: Then my original statement stands. I think a much more positive objection can be taken to this. My friends to the left may not agree, but I believe that consideration should be given to encouraging Canadians to invest in Canadian equities. We now have a situation where there is a deduction of 20 per cent on income tax on dividends received from Canadian corporations. Perhaps an increase in this amount could be considered as a positive approach. Another possible approach would be the broadening of the regulations under which insurance and trust companies are allowed to invest in equity stock. These provisions might create more Canadian interest in these equity securities and do it in a positive way rather than, as I claim, a discriminatory way which is going to discourage foreign capital investment which we feel is necessary.

This country is still young. The minister mentioned a moment ago the other sectors in which he indicated that perhaps he had not emphasized strongly enough the fact that he is trying to get foreign capital to come in here and invest in bonds rather than equities. I agree with this move. However, on the other hand he then penalizes them for investing in equities. Despite the fact that there may have been a day when other countries, for argument's sake, found that the borrowings on bonds, debenture debt with fixed interest rates was possible—despite this, I think that today if we want investment capital in Canada we have to give some encouragement.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that we are going completely in the wrong direction on this matter. I think this is unworkable. I do not see how the minister is going to regulate this. As I mentioned earlier, there was the one instance I pointed out of the 76 per cent foreign ownership on one hand and the 24 per cent Canadian, and that company still would have to pay the 20 per cent withholding tax. On the other hand the company with 75 per cent in one foreign interest, 23 per cent in other foreign hands and only 2 per cent Canadian would be considered the good boys and only pay the 10 per cent withholding tax. As one hon. member said, you do not even have to have 2 per cent Canadian, because all you have to have is 25 per cent of the stock listed on the stock exchange. You would not have to have any in Canadian hands, except for the qualifying directors.

As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has indicated in the past, this may well be a good field for lawyers. They will be receiving some great retainers. In fact at that time I would rather belong to that profession than the one to which the minister and I belong. There will be a gold mine for the lawyers in the appointment of these dummy directors, and so on.

I reiterate, Mr. Chairman, that in my humble opinion one cannot regulate the flow of capital in this way. You cannot do it by legislation. I do not think it is logical. I feel that we are going to disrupt the whole business community, and we are going to frighten the business community. This has happened already. I agree wholeheartedly with what the hon. member said this morning concerning this agreement, but I am not going into detail on that matter right now. I am referring to the tax conventions and how they will have to be amended. Then at this moment, of course, we are facing the possibility of the imposition of a 30 per cent withholding tax on Canadian corporations which have subsidiaries in the United States.

Sir, I come back to the fact that it is not only my opinion but the opinion of those whose financial experience is much broader than mine that this measure is only going to further undermine confidence in our financial structure. It is an indication that this type of capital is not wanted. I mentioned an experience I had this week. I believe this provision will create the kind of financial climate that would give the appearance that this capital is not wanted in Canada, and I do not think that ought to be the case.

Mr. Lambert: There is one question that bothers me.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps, so that we may proceed in an orderly fashion, I ought to bring to the attention of the committee that the minister might want to move the amendment proposed earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Monteith: He has done so.

The Chairman: It is a general amendment, but I think the amendment should be related to each individual section. The amendment, therefore, reads:

> By striking out the expression "ownership or control" in lines 26 and 27 on page 20 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership".
> By striking out the expression "ownership and control" in line 39 on page 20 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership".
> By striking out the expression "ownership and control" in line 42 on page 20 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership".

Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Lambert: I have one brief point to raise on clause 22, in connection with the matter of ownership and control, or ownership by Canadian residents. In a province such as Alberta memoranda of association are used, which provide that directors need not be shareholders. This is quite feasible and permissible. Therefore it is possible under the bill to specify that 25 per cent of the directors be Canadian residents, but they need not own any shares. This does not provide Canadian investment in Canadian companies. I am sure this does not apply only in the province of Alberta, but I can assure the minister it is a device commonly used. The requirement of Canadian directorship can be followed without one blessed penny being invested in a company.

Mr. Gordon: It can, but the rest of the clause would then not apply. Therefore I do not see this creates a difficulty.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Wahn: I would like some clarification from the minister of the definition of "management or administration fee or charge" which appears on page 21 of the bill. My remarks are directed specifically toward the wording which appears at line 32 on page 21, which excludes from the definition of management or administration fee or charge "a specific expense incurred by the non-resident person for the performance of a service that was for the benefit of the payer."

Perhaps I could make my question specific by putting a specific case. Suppose a parent company uses its own employees to perform for its Canadian subsidiary an identifiable service, for example purchasing, expediting, assisting in contract negotiations, architectural services or engineering services. There might be a number of services customarily rendered by parent companies to subsidiaries, and if a parent company charges a subsidiary a reasonable fee, perhaps cost plus a reasonable allowance for overhead and profit but a reasonable fee, will such a fee be subject to the 15 per cent tax? In other words will such a fee be considered within the wording of the bill as "a specific expense incurred by the non-resident person for the performance of a service that was for the benefit of the payer"?

If the wording had covered a specific amount paid to the non-resident person for the performance of the service I would have no worry, but I would like some clarification from the minister of what is meant here, because it would indicate what is in mind is an actual out of pocket expense paid out by the parent company to an independent firm. Does it cover a service performed by the parent company with its own personnel, and does it cover a reasonable fee which might be cost plus an allowance for overhead and profit?

Mr. Gordon: The subsection provides that the expression "management or administration fee or charge" does not include an amount paid to a non-resident person at arm's length for services which are performed as part of the non-resident's business, for example engineering or architectural services performed for a Canadian company by a non-resident firm of engineers or architects. Also the expression does not include amounts paid to a non-resident to reimburse him for a specific expense performed for the benefit of the Canadian parent.

Mr. Lambert: This will only have the result of increasing the management fee charged to the Canadian subsidiary by the American parent to take care of the tax paid.

Mr. Gordon: I do not think there is any danger of that, and this has been the case since 1960 when the withholding taxes were changed. It was open to a parent company, instead of withdrawing a dividend from Canada on which that 15 per cent withholding tax would be paid, to take the money out in the form of so-called management fees. This will stop that; or if the money goes out in the form of management fees the 15 per cent tax will be collected. So far as the treasury is concerned it will now be protected. If the management fee is for a specific expense then it is a legitimate expense it will be treated in the same way as all other legitimate expenses and deducted from the Canadian company's income and not subject to the withholding tax.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 26—Dividend stripping.

Mr. Lambert: The other day I queried the minister about the possibility of retroactivity, as appears at page 4292 of Hansard for November 1, and the minister indicated he wanted to make sure that he did not have any retroactivity in this regard. However, if we look at the clause carefully we will see it is still open to question as to whether there cannot be retroactivity. In other words it is discretionary with the Minister of National Revenue to determine whether the series of transactions did or did not commence prior to June 13, 1963. What is really needed is a clear indication within the legislation that the beginning of the transactions shall be a matter of fact and not open to discretionary determination by the minister.

Mr. Gordon: I completely agree with this point. There is no intention at all that this should be retroactive in its application. I understand the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings would like to amend this clause by changing the place where the words "in the opinion of the minister" appear, by deleting them from line 17 and including them at the end of line 21. If the hon. member for Edmonton West would agree I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue to move the amendment.

Mr. Lambert: That is fine.

Income Tax Act

Mr. Garland: I move, seconded by the Solicitor General:

That section 26 be amended by deleting the words "in the opinion of the minister" in line 17 and inserting the words "in the opinion of the minister" at the end of line 21 after the words "one of the purposes of which"

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Monteith: Before the clause as amended passes, I notice that in section 138A there is some discretionary power given to the treasury board. Could any of the officials give the minister an idea of how frequently, if ever, this discretion has been used in the last number of years?

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member's question had to do with section 138 of the act rather than this particular clause. Am I right?

Mr. Monteith: That is right.

Mr. Gordon: The officials inform me that provision has never been taken advantage of.

Mr. Monteith: What I fail to understand is that if section 138 has never been taken advantage of, why do we need 138A at this time giving discretion to the minister? I fail to understand the reason for it.

Mr. Gordon: I am informed that under the old section it was necessary to prove that something was improper, which is perhaps a question of judgment. This provision is to cooper it up and, if I may say so again, to plug one of the most blatant loopholes in the Income Tax Act. There may be differences of opinion as to the amount of tax that anyone should have to pay on corporate incomes, but surely there is no difference of opinion, that we should not have a situation where one lot of taxpayers get off scot free while the others have to pay a high rate of tax. This clause is intended to stop that.

Mr. Lambert: I should like to ask one clarifying question. With regard to the provision for appeal found on page 24 of the bill, could the minister tell me whether it will be mandatory to go through the tax appeal board before going to the exchequer court, or will the taxpayer have the right, as now exists, to elect to go to the exchequer court directly?

Mr. Gordon: It will be just the same as it is now. The taxpayer will have the right to elect.

Mr. Monteith: Is it anticipated that the department will be asked to give opinions? I know that in the past it has been impossible to get an opinion from the department whether such and such a deal was within the provisions of the law, and so on, or as to how it would stand tax-wise. As I understand the situation, the stand has been that people should go ahead and make their arrangements and if they are then taxable they will be assessed. Does the department not anticipate, as long as there is this ministerial discretion, more pressure on the minister actually to make a decision on the possible transaction before it has taken place?

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could say a word on this matter. For the proper exercise of discretion it is necessary for the minister to know all the circumstances surrounding the transaction or series of transactions, and this can only be known after the facts have been determined and each transaction has been completed. It will be recognized that the minister cannot exercise his discretion in advance or even find himself to exercise his discretion in a certain way in advance of the event. On the other hand, the officials of the taxation division are prepared, within limits, to discuss informally proposed transactions with taxpayers and their lawyers and accountants, but conclusions cannot be reached which will be binding on either the minister or the taxpayer.

I should add that any requirement imposed on the taxation division to provide a service of advance rulings would create a strain on the modest number of trained, qualified staff capable of this work, and would reduce the number of tax returns of wealthy individuals and important corporate taxpayers which could be audited each year. Any slackening in the already limited audit function could only result in the weakening of compliance and the loss of tax revenue.

None the less the taxation division officials, I want to emphasize, will be available for informal consultation. The government is prepared to look into the matter further if experience shows that the absence of advance rulings hampers the orderly development of business enterprises and the economy of the country.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 27 agreed to.

On clause 28—Where corporation has degree of Canadian ownership and control.

Mr. Garland: I move:

That clause 28 be amended by striking out the expression "ownership and control" in line 5 on page 25 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership", and by striking out the expression "ownership and control" in lines 40 and 41 on page 26 thereof and substituting therefor the expression "ownership".

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Mr. Gordon: Just before you leave the chair, Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank you for your assistance and patience, and I should like to thank the members of the committee for their great help during the past few days.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

Mr. Monteith: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

CONSUMER CREDIT

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General) moved:

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit, more particularly, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing, to inquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto;

That twenty four members of the House of Commons to be designated by the house at a later date, be members of the joint committee, and that standing order 67(1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; and to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be complete unanimity in the house concerning the desirability of passing as soon as possible this resolution relating to consumer credit. The fact that there are upwards of a dozen or so public bills on the order paper relating to various aspects of consumer credit would indicate the intense interest that hon. members have in this controversial matter. Articles have appeared in leading magazines and newspapers from time to time alleging, among other things, that exorbitant rates of interest are being charged by finance companies.

The terms of the resolution are broad enough to permit the committee to make a report on these allegations. If the resolution passes, as I hope it will, it is my intention to move that the subject matter of the various public bills on the order paper relating to consumer credit be referred to this committee for further consideration. In view of the desire of all hon. members that the resolution should pass without delay, I shall not delay its passage further.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the resolution brought forward by the Solicitor General I should like to say that it deals with a situation that has been before the house on many occasions in the last number of years. In that regard I refer not only to the last six or seven years but to many years before that.

I believe the main difficulty in the case of all the consumer credit bills now on the order paper is the question of jurisdiction. In each instance where the matter of consumer credit arises there has been a conflict as to the division of responsibility between the federal government, with its responsibility for interest, and the provincial governments with their responsibility for contracts of a personal nature. For that reason I hope if the resolution is passed and the committee is set up it will be composed of people who will be able to deal with the difficult constitutional problem.

After the constitutional problem is settled there is also the difficulty of passing legislation which will prevent people from being foolish at a time when they are badly in need of finances. All the bills on the order paper now, as well as previous bills, if they have been opposed when they have come up for discussion have been opposed on the ground that you cannot legislate common sense into people when they are making a contract. A person who is in a very difficult financial position is prepared to pay a large sum by way of interest in order to get the money which he badly needs at the time. It has always been another difficulty that if we legislate too stringently in connection with consumer credit it may dry up the legitimate source thereof and force people to other means of securing money when they require it.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, we also do not wish to hold up the resolution, so I would simply say we are prepared to support it. We hope the committee will make a very complete investigation of consumer credit. There are items of legislation in the provincial legislatures along the same line, and I feel we will have to consider the provincial legislation also to see that we do not overlap. But as I say, we are in support, in general terms, of this resolution.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the hon. members of this group welcome the setting up of this committee because we believe it has before it an important task. The problem of credit is becoming increasingly important, both because of the fact that the amount of credit being used by the people of Canada is rising at an alarming rate, and also because of the fact that there is in this business, as I suppose there is in every business, a small percentage of people who are so interested in making money that they really have no scruples or any friends. The newspapers of Canada from one end to the other have been filled with examples of people who have not only gone into debt to an extent they could not possibly afford, but in fact have been charged the most fantastic and exorbitant rates of interest. Recently the Financial Post carried a story about a recent immigrant to Canada who became the victim of a mortgage broker. This person borrowed $1,501 from the broker, and that is what he received; but he had to sign a note for $2,350, the extra $849 representing an arranging fee. After paying the prescribed $35 a month for three years he discovered that he still owed $1,580, which was more than he had borrowed in the first place. He was supposedly paying an interest rate of 7 per cent but he was in fact paying 30 per cent. There are dozens of cases on record along this line and there is no need that I list them.

This year the Ontario legislature appointed a select committee to inquire into the situation. They called before them mortgage brokers who testified that they had lent money on which they had charged interest rates of 80, 90 and 100 per cent. It is true the mortgage brokers claimed that they really did not know the interest rates. But that is not the important thing; the important thing is that people were forced to pay these rates.

I know this committee will have great difficulty, owing to the federal set-up of our country. Part of the responsibility for this question is federal and part is, of course, provincial. We had in the province of Manitoba until recently an act which provided for the orderly payment of debt. Under this act people who found they could not meet their obligations were able to go to court and were able to get the court to set the rate they could afford to pay their creditors, as well as the order in which they would pay. Within the last year or so the courts in Manitoba have ruled that that act was beyond the powers of the province and really came under the jurisdiction of the federal government. I think the committee should consult with provincial governments. They would also have the responsibility of calling in people who are in the credit business. I was going to say there may be people, but I think that is a little unfair: there are some legitimate people in this business, but there are some who are not. I do not think the whole business should be tarred with the same brush. I do not think the responsible and legitimate people should take, or indeed would want to take the responsibility for the misdeeds of the few. They should have the right to appear before this committee. For example, I saw recently a case where the head of a big acceptance company was arguing that the business had no objection to telling people what they would pay by way of return, but that it was impossible to state it in terms of simple interest. I disagree completely. However, the committee should hear all these people, and I hope when it reports back to the house the government will bring in legislation so that the kind of stories now prevalent from one end of Canada to the other, of people being gouged and mistreated, will disappear, and this whole practice be declared illegal and prohibited in the future.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to support the measure now before us proposing the setting up of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to inquire into and report on matters relative to consumer credit. We find today that many Canadians are placed in the paradoxical position of living in the midst of abundance, yet facing personal problems of poverty and in many cases destitution. We like to brag about our high standard of living, but on the other hand we must face the unpleasant fact that even in this country there are thousands living just above the borderline of destitution. I think this is an indictment of our society and the economic system which now operates.

We in the Social Credit party have always maintained that the amount of purchasing power in the hands of the people should fairly closely approximate the reasonable price of goods and services available. We believe that is essential if we are to maintain our economy at the proper level. At the present time this is not so. We find the income earned by our people is further drastically reduced by substantial rates of taxation at all levels of government, which further reduces the purchasing power of the people. I feel this entire problem needs real consideration, and we trust that the terms of reference of this committee will enable it to go into all these relevant fields.

I am sure that a survey of the homes in our nation would indicate a shortage of many of those appliances and other items which have become commonplace to many of us. On the other hand, as I have indicated, there is a superabundance of these items in our stores and factories. The result has been that in order to try and acquire these appliances many people have gone so far into debt that they almost find it impossible to extricate themselves. The temptation to buy on credit is, of course, very real. Walk down the streets of our cities and towns and see the neon signs everywhere proclaiming the fact that you can come in and borrow money, on supposedly reasonable terms and under very pleasant circumstances. But we do find that this contributes to the position in which many of our people find themselves when they buy on credit to such an extent their income is not adequate to cover the payments they must make. So we find that credit buying runs to between $3 and $4 billion, which is a considerable amount of money.

We have a proliferation of companies who are engaged in credit operations, and we do not object to that fact. However, there is increasing concern over some aspects of the problem, and this has been pointed up by the number of bills currently on the order paper, the subject matter of which we have been assured will be referred to this proposed committee for consideration. Most of us have received letters and other communications calling attention to alleged unethical practices indulged in by some of these companies. As the previous speaker said, we do not want to tar all these companies with the same brush because many of them are carrying on in a very commendable manner; but there are some which are not. I have received a communication in which attention is drawn to one of these practices. I hope I can refer this to the committee for consideration during its hearings. A man bought a piece of equipment. He got behind in his payments once or twice and was charged, seemingly, an exorbitant rate of interest. He then carried on his payments satisfactorily. But when he had almost come to the last of his payments he was told he must have the complete amount ready in two days. This placed him in an enormous impossible situation.

Circumstances such as this do arise from time to time. I believe many of those who are now engaged in the financing business would, themselves, like to clear up such practices. Many of them are trying to carry on their operations in an ethical manner and are concerned about others who, by their sharp practices, bring discredit upon the lot. I welcome the proposal to set up this committee and for our part we shall give it our full support.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I must say that this resolution on the appointment of a committee on consumers' credit is most welcome.

I can say without fear of being contradicted that Canada's economy depends on finance, on credits and on loans. The federal government is up to its neck in debt—if the simile may be forgiven—the provincial governments, or at least most of them, are carrying a much too heavy load of debts, and the same thing applies to municipalities, school boards—one of my hon. colleagues says that the same situation prevails among members —and private citizens.

When a child is born, the happy father rushes to finance companies and borrows some money in order to buy a crib, diapers and feeding bottles. When the child is old enough to go to school, parents purchase various items on credit in the stores or by mail order catalogues, and get 36 or 48 months to pay on the instalment plan. When the time comes to go to college or to the university, finance companies are visited once again.

And when the time comes to get married, money is borrowed either to buy a house, or to purchase furniture for the bedroom, the living room, or to buy a car or refrigerator.

Having reached 35 or 40 a man buys a house through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; he is allowed a period of 35 years to pay back his loan, so that he will be 75 or 80 by the time he becomes the owner of his house.

This thing has come to a point where morticians tell people: "Die now, pay later".

Mr. Speaker, such is the situation which prevails. Finance is with us from our birth to our death, and a person has to pay interest during his whole life. Our Canadian citizens do not know how to get out of it.

When a citizen, a small business or a small industry are in the hands of finance companies, they often have to pay extravagant interest rates and commissions.

I do not think it would be an exaggeration to say that in our region of Saguenay-Lake St. John, we have usurers who take advantage of the small people, the small worker and the small farmer, possibly to a greater extent than anywhere else in Canada. We have seen individuals who, in order to borrow $2,000, gave a commission of $1,000 and signed promissory notes for $3,000, so that in three or four years, they sometimes paid back up to $5,000.

It is when Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation refuses to lend money to farmers, that usurers take advantage of the situation. Finance companies will do the same when they lend money to an individual to buy furniture, a car, etc.

The time has come to put an end to all that, but when you take a look at the interest rate of the federal government, you must recognize that they too are excessive.

For instance, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is still lending money at 6¼ per cent, while chartered banks are prohibited by law from lending at more than 6 per cent. Therefore, I consider that the federal government sets a bad example by lending money at 6¼ per cent.

The object of the act is to enable the little fellow to build a house, but the federal government is the first to take advantage of him by charging him 6¼ per cent interest, while forbidding the chartered banks to charge more than 6 per cent, which it considers a reasonable profit.

The same is true in regard to the industrial development bank which, in certain cases, charges up to 7 per cent interest. I think this is an excessive profit, and we should examine what the federal government is doing in this field.

We might also—and I just mention it incidentally—look into the credit situation of the chartered banks. It would be an opportunity for us to discover who is creating credit in Canada and why credit is such a scarce commodity.

The resolution will enable us to call and question witnesses, and we have the firm intention to question those who are creating and making credit in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks I wanted to make to point out that this committee is needed, and also to show up to what point we should go to establish credit sources while trying to delve into the problem.

I hope that all hon. members sitting on that committee will carefully consider the credit situation and see to it that a sensible solution of the problem is reached.

Motion agreed to.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP, NAMES OF TERRITORIES, ETC.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved the second reading of Bill C-83, to amend the Northwest Territories Act and to rename the said territories, and to effect certain consequential changes in the statute law with respect thereto.

He said: It is my intention in moving second reading of this bill to make a brief statement concerning the proposal which, taken together with the succeeding bill, is intended to bring a greater measure of self-government to the people of the Canadian north. I hope that if any of those who take part in this debate wander from the terms of this measure to the extent of discussing the bill which is to follow, you will pardon them, Mr. Speaker, because these two bills are part of the same plan.

Some members of the house probably think that we are creating history in Canada today when we propose to establish two new territories in this country. I hope there will be participation from all sides of the house in the debate which is now to take place. We are dealing with the Northwest Territories, that remaining part of the Canadian frontier which is not within one province or another. I wish to remind hon. members, especially those who have not had the good fortune to visit this part of the country, what an almost unbelievable stretch of real estate we are discussing. This region embraces 1,300,000 square miles or about 34 per cent of all the land area of Canada. It is almost 1,800 miles from any corner, or any part, to the furthest opposite point of this vast territory. It is a region which we have found largely unmanageable even from a central position in Ottawa.

We have decided that the time has now arrived when an increasing amount of self-government should be granted to the people who live there. We think the efficiency of government in every sphere will be improved by moving away from centralized government towards a position where there will be more government on the ground, as I have chosen to describe it. We think that in the territory as a whole the time has now arrived for us to extend a great new measure of authority so as to enable the inhabitants to conduct their own affairs. I say this in the light of the increasing investment in the north, the increasing population, the higher standards of education and the greater understanding among those who live there of the resources available and of what can be done with them.

It has been decided, therefore, to divide this immense territory into two parts. It is the thought of this government, as it was of the preceding government, that if self-government is to be extended to this region it must be brought to at least something like manageable size. In the proposals contained within these two bills consideration is first of all given, as one might expect, to the historic division of this great territory, that is its division by nature. For reasons which will be readily understood, we are paying particular attention to the facts of transportation. This is a country where transportation appears to me to be the limiting factor.

We have therefore, paid attention to the western side which we propose to call Mackenzie. Outlining the boundaries there, we have set them along the Mackenzie river and up to the border of the Arctic ocean. The division line is the 105th longitude of west meridian; proceeding from the 60th latitude northward until it reaches the Arctic circle, thence surrounding Victoria island and Banks island, to take in these two major islands. This is to be incorporated in the territory of Mackenzie.

I am satisfied that this particular area is quickly going to be able to take care of itself. It is preponderantly, with the exception of Victoria and Banks islands, below the tree line. I want to remind hon. members that when they go to the Arctic they will see the unbelievable significance of a tree line in this country. When you leave the tree line of Canada it is like having the water cut off. Indeed, there is a relationship between the tree line and water. The western part of Mackenzie, which we propose to set aside, is largely treed. It has a great many things in common with southern Canada. Within the next several years. I would think by October, 1965, it will have a railway to latitude 62.

I am delighted to know that as a result of amendments that were made to the Railway Act in 1952, the laid down cost of carlots in Hay River, as a result of the provision then passed that freight to all areas in Canada in carlots must not exceed one and one third times the transcontinental rate, will be the same rate as for a car landed at Calgary, Alberta. This is going to mean a tremendous result in my opinion, in that country. I think it will have the effect of supplying goods to the western north at a saving of $10 to $15 a ton. This, in turn, is going to have the effect of reducing the cost of living, reducing the cost of operation of companies in that area in search of minerals and of oil to the point that some properties which they judge to be uneconomic may well be brought into the economic sphere.

At Hay River, which was unfortunately badly devastated by a flood in May of this year, rebuilding has taken place. As I think I told the house last night, freight shipments on the Mackenzie, down to the mouth of the Mackenzie by water, are some 50 per cent higher in 1963 than they were in the shipping year of 1962. At latitude 62, or just below it, we have the huge investment in the Pine Point mine. It, too, will be served by the railway, which will have its terminus at Hay River, by a spur line taken off some few miles below Hay River and running east to Pine Point. An enormous expenditure is being made there by the parent company, something in the nature of $30 million, on a lovely townsite.

After you leave Great Slave lake and go down the Mackenzie, there are a great number of locations of increasing importance populated by people in increasing numbers who have confidence in their ability to stay there and make their way. I think that with the many treasures of the future in the Arctic, particularly in the western Arctic, tourism is going to be one of our great industries. I was glad to note that a private company operating out of Hay River is setting in motion plans to have a tourist ship run on the Mackenzie river next year down to the Arctic. I would think it would be blessed with success from the start. It is exceedingly interesting country. One can, if he should get up, or should stay up, until 2 a.m. in the morning, still see the sun. There are situations there and people there of very great interest to Canadians from southern Canada.

In so far as the eastern Arctic is concerned, I must say at once that, due to the fact it is above the tree line, due to the fact that so far, in spite of investigations we have made, there do not seem to be comparable resources to those existing on the western side of the Arctic, the outlook for the future is more difficult. The fact is that, in spite of investigations made by our fisheries department and other departments, the amount of resources in the country seems relatively low in proportion to the people who are living there. Communication is exceedingly difficult. It is for this reason that in the bill respecting that part, in other words the residue of the territory left when we pass the Mackenzie bill, we have decided to retain the centre of government in Ottawa.

Let me remind hon. members that transport for officials, transport for those engaged in search of development of the country, is largely by airplane. It is costly and it is of such a nature in respect of the eastern Arctic that if one flies out of here, or from Toronto or Montreal to the north, there is no service either east or west to the various points up there. One has to come back to southern Canada and go from there to the next point in that country.

I do want to pay tribute to the indigenous people of the area. Canadians, by and large, did not know them 10 to 15 years ago. In the last 10 or 15 years, we have made a real effort to know them. Probably, in many cases, a selfish interest took us there because we were looking for resources other than people, but we found people there. I want to pay tribute to these people. I do not want to portray quite the terrible difficulties that were put before the house last night by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume) who spoke of the unbelievable hardships with temperatures down below 50 or 55 degrees. I am as fully aware as he that the kind of average climate up there is not the climate that I saw in the months of August or September.

However, I believe that successive governments have done a good job of taking those things up there that we want to leave there and taking to these people an increasing measure of the amenities of life to protect them from the elements. I admit that there are quite a number of people, particularly on the eastern side of the Arctic, who today have no home to put over their heads; none whatever. There are probably—this is only my estimate based upon having made one visit—1,000 or 1,500 indigenous persons who have no shelter from the weather. In the future, Mr. Speaker, I am going to propose to members of this house that one of the prerequisites for talking to these Canadians will be that we talk to them out of the weather. I would propose to this house in the future that we should find some means of taking these unfortunate people in out of the weather, by the production of homes which we could put in there for a reasonable price.

I saw what I believe was called a 10 by 24. The hon. member for Northwest Territories may correct me if I am wrong. It is just that —a house 10 feet wide by 24 feet long. I saw, in a number of instances, not one, two or three families but probably four families living in that one house. I do not want members of parliament to decry that condition because that is better than having no house at all, a great deal better. I hope that in the future, in respect of these people, we can move into an era where we can say these Canadians have a home and shelter from the weather, in an area which does not have the most hospitable climate in Canada.

In addition to the extremely low temperatures, I am informed there are winds accompanying these temperatures. I was told that the winds range from 80 miles per hour to 100 miles per hour with temperatures many degrees below zero. There are Canadians who know far more about the north than I who say that, in the end, the eastern Arctic may come off best. When I was there this summer I saw them drilling for oil at latitude 75. I endeavoured last night to pay tribute to the companies who are putting risk capital into that area. One of these drilling companies expended $360,000 to bring their drilling equipment into the area. I think it behoves Canadians in every part of Canada to give some marks to these companies who are taking the risk in that territory, when they could invest money in southern Canada and have it secure.

I think that their contributions should be emulated by a great many more Canadians, and should be accepted by members of parliament in the spirit in which they are risking that capital. A great deal of money is in there searching for oil, and if they find the fields which geologists are confident are present, then there could be the situation that the real riches of the Arctic rest in the east instead of the west. If that should be the case I would be extremely happy because I am content in my own mind that the future of the western part of the Arctic is secure.

I think our chief interest for some years to come is going to be in respect to the eastern Arctic.

I could go on to tell something about the populations. When these bills pass the house, and I hope they do quickly, as otherwise we will have no government in those territories, we will have in Mackenzie a territory so vast that there will be one person per 38 square miles, and in the territory of Nunassiaq we will have one Canadian per 200 square miles. The size of these areas is almost unbelievable, and their difficulties are great. The costs of doing or developing anything there are extremely high, and the problems of living in that climate are not easy.

I think these bills, supported by the council of the Northwest Territories by formal resolution at their council meeting in Inuvik in July this year, were developed not by this government but by our predecessors, out of resolutions passed by the council of the Northwest Territories, and I hope we move forward with them quickly as a very important new offer of self-government to the people in that area, to the extent that in the western area they will have a majority of elected members.

They will have a commissioner resident in the Mackenzie. They will have for the first time almost the same degree of self-government as the Yukon territory enjoys today, and I hope therefore, Mr. Speaker, we can move forward intelligently but expeditiously with these bills.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should to put a question to the minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lapointe want to ask a question?

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources. While the house is considering Bills No. C-83 and C-84 concerning the boundaries between the Mackenzie territory and the Nunassiaq territory, is it the minister's intention to propose also the marking of new boundaries with regard to the islands located within a three-mile limit of the territorial waters of the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the subject under discussion has to do with the internal boundaries of the Northwest Territories and not with the territory outside those boundaries, and in no way divides them. Therefore the question of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) would not be applicable to the two bills before the house. In further proof of the point of order I have before me the British North America Act and selected statutes, and here you will see in the British North America Act of 1871, an act respecting the establishment of the provinces in the Dominion of Canada, in which it sets out how the boundaries of a province are to be altered. Further, you will find the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act of 1912, an act to extend the boundaries of the province of Quebec. It is under acts similar to this in relation to the British North America Act that I submit the hon. member for Lapointe would find an opportunity for the question he brings before the house.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am just wondering whether we are not engaging in debate rather than discussing a point of order. I am not sure whether the minister wants to reply to the question posed a moment ago by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). If not, then I can recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West who wants to put a question.

Mr. Lambert: Could the minister advise the house what legal studies, if any, were made either from a constitutional or civil standpoint as to the implications of the proposed changes?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I had put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and we are now about to discuss another matter. I think it would be in order that an answer be given to my question before going on to something else. That is why I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to be kind enough to answer the question I asked him.

[Text]

Mr. Laing: As I understand the question the hon. member wishes some assurance that the delimitation or fixing of the boundaries shall be made after some thought, inquiry and study is given to it. I am fully aware of the commitment made to the house earlier this year that the bill, after second reading and if it is the desire of the house, would be referred to a committee, at which time we could go into a great deal more detail. I am quite certain we on this side of the house will be happy to move such a motion at the end of second reading, if that is the desire of hon. members. I will say I do not know the means whereby boundaries of provinces in Canada are changed, but I am quite certain a measure such as this would not be the avenue for such an act.

Considerable studies have been made—and this may answer the question of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert)—and we have gone back to the act of 1912 wherein, in respect of these particular areas the prime minister of Canada at that time, on March 18, 1912, said in the House of Commons that it was the full determination of the government to retain the offshore islands in those regions for the purposes of navigation and defence. Indeed in 1912 there was an act which was reciprocal legislation between the government of Canada and the provinces of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec in respect of the limiting and setting out of their boundaries. Certainly if changes were being made in the boundaries of the provinces, I am quite certain it would be by an act other than this. I want to say to my hon. friend that the limits of any province could not be altered without the participation of that province, and to tell him that we have had no representations from Quebec in respect of this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, still about the same matter—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to ask the minister another question?

Mr. Gregoire: As a matter of fact, I rise on a point of order. Since we have before us today two bills, that is bills 83 and 84, which are closely related and cannot be studied separately, because there is a direct and immediate link between the two, we have preliminary remarks to make on both of them before consideration of either one is undertaken.

The point I am raising requires a clearcut answer from the minister. Otherwise, I shall have no choice but to move that those two bills be referred to a special committee of the house for study. In my opinion, such a thing can be done, since that procedure has been followed in the past.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member will have an opportunity to make such a statement or proposal later.

I should remind the hon. member that the minister himself has indicated that, if it was the wish of the house to refer those bills to a special committee, as has been suggested, he would be agreeable. The hon. member for Lapointe will have an opportunity to make his comments when his turn comes up.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might have the indulgence of the house for just a moment. I apologize for being outside the house momentarily when this matter came up, but there was a discussion through the usual channels about what would happen when the second reading of these bills came up. It will be recalled that before the house adjourned for the summer recess I had given an undertaking that if the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), or any other hon. member wished to do so, we would find some means of putting a certain question to a committee before the second reading was proceeded with.

As I said in the house the other day, the hon. member for Lapointe was good enough to tell me he would not ask us to do that, and he would agree to the second reading of these two bills if the government in turn would undertake to send both bills, once they got second reading, to the appropriate standing committee. I gave that undertaking in the name of the government, and that is what the government intends to do. We intend, if the house will agree to give second reading to these two bills, to send them both to the appropriate committee where they can be considered. That is a firm undertaking on behalf of the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Secretary of State, it is true that we are ready to let the two bills be referred to a committee of the house, but we insist that the two go together, since they are directly related to each other.

Mr. Pickersgill: Agreed.

Mr. Gregoire: I must add one thing, however. The main reason why we are interested in those two bills, is that they concern the islands. We realize at this time that we might well be prevented from making our remarks, about those bills in committee, especially as far as the property of those islands is concerned.

That is why, before the bills are read for the second time, we would ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to give us the assurance that consideration will be given to the question of our boundaries, of the boundaries of the Northwest Territories and especially of the Nunassiaq territory and of the islands.

If we agree to the first, the second is automatically agreed to. This bill with which we are concerned deals with the islands off the coast of the province of Quebec and is the second one under consideration.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

If the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources can assure us that the problem of the boundaries of the Nunassiaq territory, that is the second bill also dealing with the boundaries of the province of Quebec, will be considered, we will then accept the suggestion of the Secretary of State.

But it is essential that we obtain a firm undertaking from the government that this matter will be looked into by the committee.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I understood that was precisely what the committee was going to study. It seemed to me that was the whole point.

Mr. Gregoire: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources just said. He said it was another problem completely. Another member over there said it was not in order in discussing these bills but that we might find another occasion to do so. We do not want another occasion. This is the occasion to study the boundaries of Nunassiaq territory.

Mr. Pickersgill: While it might not be possible to legislate at this time, Mr. Speaker, I am sure it would be perfectly possible to study the matter, and I give the undertaking as far as I can on behalf of the government that it is the intention of the government, if the house will be good enough to give these two bills second reading, to refer the bills to the appropriate committee and to bring the officials there and anyone else within reason who can throw any light on any of these questions so that they can be studied thoroughly.

Mr. Gregoire: Including the islands?

Mr. Pickersgill: Including the islands and including the mainland too.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the discussion is becoming a little involved, but there is a basic misunderstanding here. The Secretary of State is quite correct in what he has said. He has told us this afternoon that the government is prepared after second reading to refer the bills to a committee, if that is desired. The hon. member for Lapointe has a special reason for wanting certain matters discussed by a committee.

But where the misunderstanding is creeping in is in this regard. As far as we are concerned, and I tried to make this clear on other occasions, we have certain reasons of our own for wanting the subject matter of these bills referred to a committee before second reading. There is a great difference between the two positions. Second reading involves agreement in principle and the bill then goes to committee for study. But due to a misunderstanding that occurred last July—and we have been over this ground before, because we discussed the matter on October 11—the house passed the resolution stage expecting that a special committee would be set up to consider, or a standing committee would have referred to it, the subject matter of these two bills. That misunderstanding has not been cleared away.

We have reached the stage now where the government is asking for second reading of the bills and then reference to a committee. We still take the position that reference of the subject matter to a committee should be made before agreement in principle is given to the two bills. I do not want to enter into a lengthy discussion as to why this, that and the other thing should be done. Other people can do that. But that is the situation.

I understood the Secretary of State to say on October 11 that he would attempt to find some solution to that problem, but most of the discussion has centred on the argument of the hon. member for Lapointe with regard to the islands, with which I happen not to be concerned at the moment. If we can clear up the misunderstanding, perhaps we can get on with the job, but unless it is cleared up we cannot see our way clear to give agreement in principle to the two bills and then have them referred to a committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could say a word on this point. I think there is still some confusion, notwithstanding the commendable effort of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to clear it up. I cannot seem to find now the undertaking I gave in July. Perhaps somebody could find it in Hansard for me.

Mr. Pickersgill: The undertaking I gave in July, and I read the words again, had to do with the subject of the islands, not the subject matter of the bill. If somebody could turn it up we could look at the words. I do not know the rules very well but I am sufficiently familiar with them to know that if one refers the subject matter of a bill to a committee by amendment, that kills the bill. That is a rule of the house. It is not the case, of course, with private bills but it is the case with public bills. It was not our desire to kill the bill. If the bill is going to be killed we should go on to some other order of business. If it is the purpose of the majority in the house to kill the bill and to prevent the objective of the bill, which is to set up self-government in the Mackenzie valley, it is not the purpose of the government. It was not the purpose of the previous government which got this legislation all ready to be introduced into the house.

I may say that a motion to refer the subject matter of the bill to a committee would be wholly unacceptable to the government and would always have been unacceptable to the government. What I said in July was that the government, before the bills were brought forward for second reading, would find some means to refer the subject that the hon. member for Lapointe brought up, that is to say, the subject of the sovereignty over these islands, so that a study could be made of the situation.

In my view that question really is only related to the bill. It is not a part of the bill at all and it could be studied quite separately by a committee without affecting the ultimate progress of the bills through the house. But a motion that the bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter be referred to a committee would kill the bill. I might say that this legislation is legislation of the previous government and represents the policy brought into being by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). If the house is not disposed to pass this legislation and if the members who supported the previous government are not now supporting that policy, the sooner we know it the better because there are other urgent things to be done.

The whole problem could, of course, be met on another occasion. If somebody wants to move that the subject matter be referred to a committee and thus kill the bill and end this matter for this session of parliament he is perfectly at liberty to do so in this free parliament, but here is the undertaking I gave on the 8th of July which has now been drawn to my attention. I said:

> I do not think it would be possible to sit before the bill is presented, but I am sure we could make some arrangement to have the matter considered before the bill is proceeded with. What we want to get is the first reading of the bill so that it can be seen by the Northwest Territories council; but we would not proceed to second reading for a good long time. I would be quite prepared to give an undertaking that in some fashion or other this matter would be remitted to a committee so that the matters the hon. member wishes to raise could be raised, if that is satisfactory.

I think it is quite clear there that it was not the bill or its subject matter, but the subject that the hon. member for Lapointe had brought up that I had in mind and that I was prepared to find some means of bringing before a committee. But when the hon. gentleman removed that difficulty by saying that he would agree, on behalf of himself and his friends, to the second reading of both these bills if he got an assurance that that subject would also be considered in committee when the bills were considered I thought that solved our problem. That is why the government called this bill for today. But if it did not solve the problem, if other hon. members wish to make a motion, which they have a perfect right to make, that would have the effect of killing the bill, we will just have to see what will happen, of course, when that is done.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in an endeavour to be co-operative in the house we lay ourselves open to an attack by the Secretary of State. If he has said something about killing the bill once he has said it six times. Let us hold the Secretary of State to the agreement that he made on July 8. He read part of his statement. I will read the rest of it. Let us not have any omissions. The Secretary of State just referred to the first column on page 1968. In the second column on that page this is what the Secretary of State said. Let us put it on the record again.

> I will give the hon. gentleman the assurance I have already given the hon. member for Lapointe, that once these two bills are seen, if there is any demand from any quarter of the house that some of the matters in the bills or other matters related to them could usefully be reviewed by a committee, I will undertake to ask my colleagues to have this done, and I feel sure they would agree with me.

Then looking at this sentence—

Mr. Pickersgill: Go right on and read the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. Churchill: I intend to read every word in that statement.

> In fact I am quite prepared to commit the government to putting a motion on the order paper for a reference to a suitable standing committee of the house to consider these matters before we proceed with the legislation itself.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Churchill:

> This could be done, unless hon. gentlemen would be equally well satisfied when they have seen the bill to having it read a second time and then having it sent to the committee for revision. I will undertake to discuss it with hon. gentlemen and meet their reasonable wishes in the matter.

Mr. Gregoire: Read the next paragraph.

Mr. Churchill: Then on October 11 the issue came up again, and it was quite properly pointed out that it is not normal to refer bills to committees before they have passed second reading. Even then—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman give me the page?

Mr. Churchill: Yes; page 3469. The hon. gentleman admitted that he made the commitment in July in these words:

> Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no question that I did make a very precise commitment and I intend to carry out that commitment if there is any insistence on the part of any hon. member that I do so.

Then he said that that commitment was to a specific matter; but that is not what he said in July. Then he went on to say that you cannot send bills to a committee before second reading, but that if a reference were restricted to the frontiers of the territories, that might be considered by a committee. The difficulty is that the Secretary of State kept putting his mind constantly to the particular problem raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and we had great difficulty getting him to consider his commitment in July.

That is the situation we are in now. We are not anxious to kill the bill, but the problem, as has been pointed out from time to time in the house, is that people who live in these areas should have a chance to make certain representations. This is democracy and I think they should have that chance. It is surely not beyond the scope of ingenuity of the government to discover some method of having this problem considered before we pass second reading of these two bills.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think I should be permitted to reply directly to what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) said. If he would just refer again to the words of mine which he read, reported at page 1968, I said:

> I will undertake to ask my colleagues to have this done, and I feel sure they will agree with me. In fact I am quite prepared to commit the government to putting a motion on the order paper for a reference to a suitable standing committee of the house to consider these matters before we proceed with the legislation itself.

An hon. Member: Why did you not do that?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because the only member who asked for that was the hon. member for Lapointe; and when he withdrew his request and no other hon. member made any such request to me I understood that we were prepared to go ahead with the second reading of both bills and refer them to a committee; and I so said on one occasion in the house when announcing the business. But I still consider that I am bound by that commitment, and if any hon. member feels that the government will not be carrying out the commitment or will be breaking its word, or that there is any other matters which should be raised—and the only matter I recall being raised in July when I gave the commitment was the question of these islands and the frontier—then I am prepared to move that we adjourn this debate at once, and I will endeavour to carry out my undertaking to the letter and consult with my colleagues, and draft some kind of motion, to put it on the paper and to have a reference. I will ask the help of hon. gentlemen opposite in an endeavour to get the kind of motion they want, to bring the subjects they want before a committee, and we will leave these bills on the order paper until such time as that is done.

I did give that commitment in the name of the government and the government is not going to break its word, or even appear to be breaking its word, to any hon. member. But the government is not prepared to accept an amendment which, under the rules we operate under, would kill the bill. We cannot do that. If hon. members feel that they are committing themselves to any principle they do not want to commit themselves to, by voting for second reading of the bill before such reference is made to a committee, I am unable to say what day such a motion could be brought up or how soon it would be possible to set up that committee. All I am saying is that I will carry out the undertaking I gave to get some kind of motion on the order paper which we can take up whenever we can. In the meantime we will just leave the legislation on the order paper, because obviously we cannot do both things at once.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Speaker, on this very point, when the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) says that the request came from only one member I must draw his attention to the fact that as early as June 7 I had begun directing questions to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing). As reported on page 780 of Hansard I directed this question to the minister:

> In view of the far reaching implications of this measure—

That is, the bill—

> —to the people of the north, will the minister assure me, and through me the people of the north, that he and his colleagues will consider the establishment of a special house committee to examine this proposal, in consultation with the people of the north, who after all are the ones most affected by the measure?

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources replied at that time, in part:

> I think that with regard to any possible change in the present policy of presenting bills to the house I will have to take the question as notice and make a further study. I may be doing that in a few days.

Subsequently the minister of northern affairs did suggest that this would be done.

On this topic generally, Mr. Speaker, I think I should point out to the house that, although parliament opened on May 16 of this year it was not until July 8 that the Secretary of State and house leader chose to introduce the resolution stage of this bill. I think hon. members should be aware that this was a mere 48 hours before the Northwest Territories council opened its sittings in Inuvik, Northwest Territories. At that time the house leader said to the house, in effect: "You must proceed with this immediately. Please don't debate it. We will give any kind of undertaking; we are short of time". I submit that there was no reason to be short of time, even at the resolution stage, because from May 16 the government knew the Northwest Territories council session opened July 10. It was left to within 48 hours of this event before the resolution was pushed through, with certain commitments. The commitments were that if any member of the house asked for a special committee the government would undertake to set one up. It would not have the effect of killing the bill.

As recently as last night the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) gave a precedent in this regard. If reference is made to Hansard for May 14, 1946, the house leader of that day, the Hon. Ian Mackenzie, referred a bill on reinstatement in civil employment to a standing committee before reaching second reading stage, with the concurrence of the house and without having the effect of killing the bill.

I think it is most important with this kind of legislation that we realize that no one in this house is asking for the bill to be killed. We are merely asking, and have been ever since I got into this house on June 1, that some opportunity, some vehicle, be provided whereby residents of the Northwest Territories—who I must say are not all in agreement by any means that division of the north is a good thing—have an opportunity to be heard. There is a wide disparity of opinion on that question, from pretty eminent individuals such as a judge of the court of the Northwest Territories and a former Liberal member of this house who travels extensively through the north, and who has said categorically in press statements and in decisions to juries recently that division will be a bad thing. I merely point out some rather highly placed and eminent people peculiarly suited to understanding the implications of this issue have asked for a special committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member speaking to the point of order?

Mr. Rheaume: Yes, I am. I am pointing out to the Secretary of State, in connection with his assertion that any effort to cause extra inquiry to be made would be interpreted as an effort to kill the bill, that we categorically deny this is in the minds of any of the members on this side. Rather, we are acting in response to requests received from many people in the Canadian north.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. member feel that giving these bills second reading and then referring them to the committee will make the committee's deliberations any more restricted? If the bills are not given second reading and sent to committee, the committee will have nothing before it except such a motion as I might draft. What objection is there to giving these bills second reading? That does not make them law. Let them go to the committee and be subject to as full an inquiry as is desired. The government is quite happy to have that done.

Mr. Rheaume: The answer to that proposal is that many people in the north are not in agreement with the principle of the bill and they want to be heard. This does not mean the bills will not eventually be enacted. It merely means there is no point in going through a charade. What is the point of saying to them: "Come on down and let us know whether you think the north should be divided" when it has already been decided that this should be done, because approval has been given to the bill in principle.

Mr. Baldwin: On the point of order, may I refer to the precedent referred to by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and tell the house that that involved a government bill, Bill 54 concerning the reinstatement of the civil employment act. A motion was moved that the bill be not read a second time but that the subject matter be referred to a select committee. We are, therefore, reinforced in our thinking that this is a sound practice, unless there has been a change in our standing orders which would preclude such a course from being considered.

I have not the latest edition of Beauchesne, but I have the third edition, and at page 498 reference is made to a similar incident. An act to amend the Railway Act was introduced by the government and in the course of the debate an amendment was proposed that the subject matter be referred to a committee. The Speaker, I think it was Mr. Speaker Black, ruled that this was a valid amendment. An appeal was made from his decision, but the decision was sustained. This is to be found on page 501. If the only fear of the Secretary of State is that a motion of this kind will kill the bill, I think his misgivings might be allayed by these precedents.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the honourable and learned gentleman a question? He knows I have the greatest respect for his knowledge of the rules, a knowledge which I think is much greater than my own. But I was not arguing that a motion to refer the subject matter of the bill to a committee would be out of order. I recognize, as I imagine does everybody else, that it would be in order. But I say it would, none the less, kill the bill.

Let the hon. member ask this question: What would the committee do? The committee would no longer have the bills before it. There would be nothing to come back to this house but the report of the committee—no bill upon which this house could proceed. In some fashion, another bill would have to be introduced and we would have to start all over again with another resolution. The other bill might be identical in language to the one before us now, but it would have to be introduced with a resolution preceding it, it would have to be given first reading and second reading and then go to committee again. That is a process which this government believes to be totally redundant and this is why I ask the hon. member for the Northwest Territories what objection he has to our sending this bill to the committee, together with the other bill. The house can still defeat them on third reading if it wishes to do so. The committee could keep them in committee indefinitely, if that is its wish. Every argument could be used in committee precisely as it could be used if the subject matter of the bills were sent to it. But the bills themselves would be intact, so that after the committee had done its work they could come back to the house as bills, if the committee wanted them to go back, and be considered by this house.

If any hon. member wants to hold me to the undertaking I gave in the name of the government on July 8, that we would suspend this legislation but that I would draft a motion and put it on the order paper, a motion having to do in particular with the islands referred to by the hon. member for Lapointe, and with the question whether the territory should be divided at all, we should be ready to do that. However, I think it should be clearly understood what the consequences would be. It is not reasonable to hope that this legislation could possibly get through during this session of parliament. That process would inevitably involve delays. It would involve putting on the order paper a motion giving 48 hours' notice and it would mean finding parliamentary time in which to discuss the matter. Yet we could get the whole thing through the committee in ten minutes, right now, if we had a mind to, and it would not commit us to anything more. I appeal to the hon. member who, I feel, is conscientiously trying to represent his constituents to let the bills be given second reading. Let them go to the committee and then let us take all the time necessary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are listening to a speech, now, not to the discussion of a point of order. This is a suggestion by the Secretary of State as to what should be done, rather than an argument on a point of order.

Mr. Gregoire: On the point of order, I should like to say that whether the question of the islands is studied in committee before second reading or after second reading is not a matter of importance to me. But I should like a clear undertaking by the Secretary of State that it will be possible to study this question of the islands and that it will also be possible for the government to amend Bill C-84 in accordance with the facts produced before the committee, even if the bills have been given second reading. If I could have such a clearcut statement from the Secretary of State I would be willing to accept his proposition.

Mr. Baldwin: Surely, if this house could reach that degree of unanimity for which we often strive but which we too seldom achieve there could be an order of the house that the subject matter of the bills be referred to a select committee without prejudice to those bills being retained on the order paper to come up for second reading after the committee had completed its deliberations.

My reason for taking my present attitude is this: I have certain objections to specific parts of this bill. Some of the provisions are repugnant, I think, to certain residents in the territories. This is an omnibus bill containing a number of amendments. There are some with which I am in perfect agreement. With others, I am not. Consequently, I find it difficult to say I am in agreement with this bill in principle. This is why I put forward the suggestion I have just advanced.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member is perfectly right. There is no doubt that if the house wished to do so it could, by unanimous consent, have the subject matter of the bills dealt with by committee but leave the bills themselves on the order paper in a state of suspended animation until such time as the committee had completed its deliberations. This would really be doing what I said might be done on July 8, though in the somewhat more elegant form which the hon. gentleman has given to it.

I do not think the government would mind accepting a suggestion of that kind if there were unanimous consent, but I would defer to my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I feel sure he would be happy to agree, but perhaps he could say for himself whether such a course would be satisfactory to him.

Mr. Laing: My hon. friend's colleague, the minister of northern affairs, is not happy. This is legislation which was drawn up by the government under the leadership of the ex-prime minister of this country. Now we find members supporting the opposition taking the stand that we should place this matter before the committee before giving it second reading. There is apparent in that suggestion an unmistakeable determination by members of the other side of the house to see that progress is completely impeded.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You know that is not true.

Mr. Churchill: You are spoiling it; that is not true.

Mr. Laing: The term of the council of the Northwest Territories ended yesterday or the day before.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why didn't you get the legislation on before?

Mr. Laing: Well, of course, this is the favourite argument of the right hon. gentleman. It was the argument of his colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume). On Monday night his colleague from the Northwest Territories berated the government for not introducing this legislation, and told us we were introducing it too late. Now, here we have it and could proceed within two minutes, but it must be delayed. We have to bring visitors down from the north. We have to have objections from people in the north. The hon. member from Northwest Territories spoke about various people, and incidentally, I shall not quote those people in this house because I think it would be improper for me to do so.

Mr. Rheaume: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, since the minister has mentioned my name. Is the minister aware of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition gave his word to the executive officer of the Liberal party that the legislation would go to such a committee? Is the minister aware of that, and since he is so very anxious to fulfil the commitments the previous government made, will he fulfil this one?

Mr. Laing: I have no objection to my hon. friend from the Northwest Territories playing both sides of the fence between Monday night and Friday night; none whatever. I just want to remind him of the consequences, because we are going to have no territories government up there. If he chooses to say to the people he is supposed to represent that he is not concerned over whether they have a government or not, that is his responsibility.

Mr. Rheaume: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am not supposed to represent them: I do represent them.

Mr. Laing: At this moment, I will be content to use the word "supposed", in the light of what has happened in this house recently.

I want to read into the record a resolution passed by the representatives of the Northwest Territories. These are the people elected by the people of the Northwest Territories to represent them in the government of the Northwest Territories. This is what they said:

Whereas the council of the Northwest Territories has reviewed the bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act in order to create the territory of Mackenzie and the bill to create the territory of Nunassiaq, as given first reading in the House of Commons on July 8, 1963;

And whereas the bills embody the provisions requested in the resolution passed by the council of the Northwest Territories in its session in Ottawa in January, 1962, after more than two years of consideration and study, and are satisfactory in all respects to the council;

And whereas there will be great inconvenience if the bills are not passed by November 7, 1963, at the latest, with effective date for the establishment of the new territories from April 1, 1964, as provided in the bills;

Now, therefore, the council of the Northwest Territories respectfully expresses its appreciation for the submission of legislation to carry out the action that it has requested in the interests of the progress and development of government in the territories.

Then, my hon. friend from the Northwest Territories, which he says he represents, is quite prepared to obstruct in every respect—

Mr. Churchill: You are spoiling it now.

Mr. Laing: I have no opinion on how much time should be used here in assertion and denial, but quite a bit has been used so far, and the result has been that these bills are being delayed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Delayed because they were not introduced earlier when they should have been.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; pursuant to a recent order of the house, I assume it is the unanimous desire of the house that this debate be adjourned. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-10, to amend the Interest Act.

He said: I move the second reading of this bill so that my friend, the Solicitor General, can move an amendment to send the subject matter to the special committee set up earlier today.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move:

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed today to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit.

Motion agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

[Translation]

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau) moved the second reading of Bill C-55, to amend the Interest Act.

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit.

Motion agreed to.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT REQUIRING STATEMENTS OF TRUE INTEREST RATE CHARGE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-14, to amend the Small Loans Act.

He said: On behalf of the hon. member for Winnipeg North I make the same motion in respect of this bill.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move:

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed today to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit.

Motion agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE MAXIMUM INTEREST RATES

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (for Mr. Gauthier) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-23, to amend the Small Loans Act (cost of a loan).

He said: On behalf of the hon. member for Roberval I should like to move the same motion as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move:

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed today to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit.

Motion agreed to.

AMENDMENT REQUIRING STATEMENTS OF TRUE INTEREST RATE CHARGE

The house resumed, from Friday, June 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Orlikow for the second reading of Bill No. C-9, to amend the Small Loans Act (advertising).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to resume the debate on this so that a motion can be made for the subject matter to be referred to the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud):

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed this day to consider the problem of consumer credit, for further consideration.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacNaught: I wonder if I could have the unanimous consent of the house to have several of these bills called in order that they may be referred to this committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

AMENDMENT TO PREVENT FRAUD IN RETAIL CREDIT TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Peters) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-33, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act (instalment purchases).

He said: On behalf of the hon. member for Timiskaming, I move the second reading of this bill for the same purpose.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move:

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed today to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

PROVISION RESPECTING CONTROL OF CONSUMER CREDIT

The house resumed from Friday, June 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Scott for the second reading of Bill No. C-6, to provide for the control of consumer credit.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I revive the debate on the second reading of this bill so that the Solicitor General can move the appropriate amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud):

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed this day to consider the problem of consumer credit, for further consideration.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING WAGE EARNERS' ASSIGNMENTS

The house resumed, from Friday, June 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Orlikow, for the second reading of Bill No. C-12, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (wage earners' assignments).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I resume the debate on the second reading of this bill so that a similar amendment can be moved.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud):

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed this day to consider the problem of consumer credit, for further consideration.

Motion agreed to.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-100, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (Captive sales financing).

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could resume the debate on this bill.

Mr. Churchill: No, you have to start it.

Mr. Byrne: If the house leader of the official opposition would move this, I feel it would be appropriate.

Mr. J. A. McBain (for Mr. Noble) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-100, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (captive sales financing).

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud):

That the subject matter of this bill be referred to the select joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed this day to consider the problem of consumer credit, for further consideration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the last of the bills we are dealing with in this way this day, and before the motion is put I trust we can have the assurance that an early meeting of the joint committee can be called, so that it can get to work on the tremendous amount of business we have given to it.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the house that every consideration will be given to activating this committee as soon as possible so that these bills, along with other matters relating to the subject of consumer credit, can be considered.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRY

PROVISIONS FOR DISTRIBUTION OF INDUSTRY AND REDUCTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-29, to provide for the development of certain provinces by the distribution of industry and for the reduction of unemployment therein.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it has been some time since I first introduced this bill, and in the interim steps have been taken by both governments, which have been of some benefit in providing tax incentives to various areas which have had high unemployment for a long period of time. However in my opinion the decent step of designating certain specific areas that will provide certain benefits for industries that locate within them, is too little and too late, from a maritime point of view.

We must take very comprehensive, realistic and bold steps that will give a guarantee of revitalizing the economy of the Atlantic provinces by ensuring that industries will look upon the area with interest because of the incentives provided. I do not feel that selecting certain areas in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick is going to do the job. I do not think it is very realistic for a government to tell the people of Prince Edward Island that they have no area within which incentives should be provided for the location of new industries, and that they should go it alone and try to compete against other areas in the Atlantic region because these other areas are faced with more severe problems than they are.

Only recently the Atlantic provinces economic council placed this matter before the royal commission on taxation, and stated that if areas were to be designated, then the whole Atlantic provinces should be designated as an area where special and very broad tax incentives should be provided. Certainly nothing government has said or done to date is as comprehensive as the action that would be forthcoming if the bill I have introduced were adopted.

I believe the statement made by the present Minister of Fisheries, (Mr. Robichaud) when this subject was last debated in the house, should be looked at closely. I look forward to hearing from him in this debate later on. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, (Mr. Martin) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) also took part in that debate, and were most anxious to see the government of that day adopt it. I hope the Minister of Fisheries will fortify the remarks he made on that occasion and, as a result of the persuasion he must have with his colleagues, see to it that the bill is adopted today instead of being talked out.

There is much to be done in the Atlantic provinces, and there is much that can be done if the purpose that is embodied in this bill is adopted. I look forward to its being adopted by the government and to seeing great new development take place in the Atlantic provinces because of the incentives inherent in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to place on the record a portion of an editorial which appeared in the Fredericton Daily Gleaner of November 5, which says in effect what we need in the Atlantic provinces in the way of special tax incentives:

> The federal government's tax concession policy, if it can be called that, is to pick a few scattered communities, declare them as high unemployment areas, and then give "qualifying" industries establishing in them a three-year corporate tax exemption. That is a most inadequate way of dealing with the economic ills of the Atlantic provinces. Such a policy stands about as much chance of checking rising unemployment as a popgun has of stopping a charging rhino.
> The Atlantic provinces economic council would change all that. In a brief to the royal commission on taxation, it demands that the entire Atlantic region be designated as a single area where new industries can qualify for tax exemptions and other incentives.
> This is neither a new request nor a new concept. Many maritime voices have made similar pleas throughout the years. And there have been many precedents for such measures. Britain, a number of European countries, and some parts of the United States have tried them with success.

The editorial ends by stating:

> The principle of regionalism has to be applied here with the massive investment and the tax concessions that will change the standard of living of the whole area.

May I also point out that there is growing concern in the Atlantic provinces that as a result of actions taken to date by the present government we are going to fall behind to an even greater degree than has been the case in the past. Only recently we lost in effect $100 million in business with the cancellation of the frigate program, in that no alternative program was made available to the people of our area. It is estimated that for every $1 million of shipbuilding business made available employment is provided for 150 to 160 people. That means that the cancellation of the frigate program has in effect eliminated the possibility of jobs for 15,000 to 16,000 people in our area.

Ours is not an area that can take that kind of blow. Ours is not an area that can look forward with any satisfaction to a decrease of investment in our economy. During the debate on the amendments to the Atlantic development board bill we heard what great things the $100 million fund would do for our area. We were told it would revitalize the economy of the Atlantic area. What are we to anticipate now, when we find $100 million in shipbuilding taken away from our area and then are faced with the subsequent announcement that new submarines for our navy are going to be purchased outright from another country?

This is no alternative to shipbuilding plans in the Atlantic provinces. This is no alternative to high unemployment in our area. This is no example of steps that are going to revitalize the economy of our Atlantic provinces. There are many more examples of similar treatment that we have received since this government took office.

This bill may help to undo a great deal of the damage that has already been done by the government. This bill has inherent in it possibilities for attracting new industry. I might say that the government of Nova Scotia, with its able premier, Robert Stanfield—

An hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Coates: My hon. friend says "who" and I can understand why. He and a few of his Liberal friends would not know Premier Stanfield. They would have no idea who this man is who recently won 39 of 43 seats in that province. That is probably one of the reasons the Liberals received the beating they did. They are so out of touch with things in Canada today and in Nova Scotia particularly that they do not even know who the premier of Nova Scotia is. Certainly they do not have to be concerned, because the people of Nova Scotia know who he is and they know how to look after him because of the policies he has put into effect and because of the manner in which he has looked after the people of Nova Scotia. If only this government would take some of the same farsighted action he has taken, the hon. member and his colleagues from Nova Scotia would be in a far better position than they would be today if an election were called.

An hon. Member: What about the last six years?

Mr. Coates: What about the last six years? The last six years in the Atlantic provinces have been six years of progress. It is only in the last six months that we have stopped progressing and have started to go backward again. Ask the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught) who must have had to put up a tremendous battle recently. Thanks to the assistance he received from the two members from Queens the air base is going to remain at Summerside. Can you imagine a government, Mr. Speaker, even considering for a moment the elimination of an air base that is an integral part of the economy of Prince Edward Island? With a representative in the cabinet I could not imagine it. Certainly it is not the type of treatment that the Atlantic provinces received from the former Conservative government.

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say I think the last remarks of the hon. gentleman were out of order but the point of order I wish to raise is far more important. After having studied some of the clauses of the bill I believe it provides for the appointment of additional government officials and therefore it is out of order for a private member to introduce such a private bill. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to page 2093 of Hansard of July 11 last where the Speaker quoted Mr. Speaker Michener as having said:

> Before calling on the hon. member or recognizing the hon. member, may I say that I feel it to be my duty to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this bill has some of the characteristics of a money bill or one that requires a resolution. I therefore feel that if the debate proceeds I should at least indicate the possible difficulties with a bill of this kind so that it will not be taken as a firm precedent for similar legislation.

On July 11 the Speaker went on to say:

> On May 17, 1918, Mr. Speaker Rhodes decided that a motion to amend a bill to provide for the appointment of additional government officials was out of order as it involved an increased grant of public money.

This can be found in Beauchesne, third edition, page 439. As found on page 2094 Mr. Speaker went on to quote Mr. Speaker Casgrain as follows:

> When money is voted, the main conditions imposed on its expenditure are embodied in resolutions. All the circumstances concerning its destination form part of the appropriation with which they are considered and if any alteration is to be made it must be by the same process as the original resolution.

And still further, Mr. Speaker, and this is extremely important:

> —the circumstances under which an expenditure is to be made are indivisible from that expenditure.

This quotation is taken from Mr. Speaker Casgrain, February 21, 1936. On July 11 last the Speaker went on to quote him as saying:

> I am therefore of the opinion that the proposed measure has all the earmarks of a money bill and cannot be introduced by a private member. I declare it out of order.

I draw this point to your attention, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of being consistent with respect to which private members bills are going to be permitted and which ones are going to be ruled out of order. Several times during this session private members' bills have been ruled out of order because of the fact that "the circumstances under which an expenditure is to be made are indivisible from that expenditure". I think the house is seized—has accepted the Speaker's ruling on a number of occasions that any private member's bill or any public bill sponsored by a private member that involves the expenditure of money either directly or indirectly is out of order. As long as that ruling has been made with regard to some of the bills that have been brought forward I think we have to apply it to all of them.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the point raised by the hon. member may I say he used one word near the end of his remarks with which I agree when he said that the house is seized of this bill. I believe that is exactly the case. The bill has been called, it has been introduced, the sponsor has made his speech on it and half of the hour allotted for discussion of this bill has now passed. It seems rather late to raise an objection to the validity of the bill at this time. I would suggest that such a question should have been raised at five o'clock when the bill was called.

Mr. Olson: Out of courtesy to the hon. member who introduced the bill I wanted to hear his introductory remarks. While I was reading some of the clauses it became abundantly clear to me that in clause 5 there was provision for the setting up of a board and that no one could read the bill and honestly say to himself, after having read its provisions, that no expenditure of money would be called for by the federal government. As I have pointed out, it is certainly out of order for a member to sponsor a bill that involves any kind of public expenditure.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleague, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), in saying that if there was any objection it not only should have been raised before the debate started, but should have been raised some time ago. This bill has been on the order paper in successive sessions of parliament. It was debated in the house in 1961 and it is being debated today. Certainly the law officers who peruse these bills must have determined some time ago that there is no conflict here, that the bill is in order and should be debated in the house.

Mr. Moreau: Before the debate is allowed to go on, a ruling from the Chair as to the propriety of this debate should be made.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Lambert: With the greatest deference I feel that, notwithstanding the caveat of His Honour when the bill was introduced and read for the first time that they would be reviewed at the time of second reading as to whether they are acceptable or not acceptable, the fact that the bill was called and allowed to proceed on second reading indicates that it is acceptable. To raise the matter some 20 minutes after debate has proceeded seems to me to be going about this in the wrong way.

Mr. Olson: I do not think that argument holds water, because item No. 4, which has been on the order paper since May 20 calls for a parliamentary proctor, and this is exactly the same type of bill which was ruled out of order when called on July 11.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): With reference to the point of order which has been raised I have serious doubts as to the legality of the bill. It is true that when the industrial development bank was constituted it was not preceded by a resolution. However the Bank of Canada, which subscribes to the shares of the industrial development bank, was itself incorporated in 1934 by an act which was preceded by a long resolution. Furthermore, the last time the Industrial Development Bank Act was amended, as set out in chapter 50 of the statutes of 1960-61, the amending bill was preceded by a long resolution which began with the words:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act to enlarge the classes of loans that may be made under the act so as to include therein all business enterprises without limitation of the kind of business carried on—

In Bill C-29 now before the house there is provision to allow the bank to make grants or loans toward providing basic services and toward the establishment or assistance of an industrial enterprise. Furthermore, there is provision that the bank may make grants or loans in an area of persistent high-level unemployment and to relax their restrictions at the bank's discretion as to the type of enterprise and conditions of assistance. If it were thought necessary in 1961 that the measure to amend the act so as to enlarge the classes of loans which could be made should be preceded by a resolution, I am not sure that a similar measure could now be introduced by a private member in a different manner. It is true that in 1961 there was also an increase in capital from $25 million to $50 million; also an authorization to increase the borrowing authority of the bank, and other provisions. To say the least, this is a borderline case, but since the discussion has already started I will authorize a discussion of the bill. But I must indicate the possible difficulties that a bill of this kind will present and that the same bill will not be taken as a firm precedent for similar legislation. I would consider it proper for the discussion, since it has started, to continue.

Mr. Coates: Since a good deal of time has been taken up on the point whether or not the bill is in fact in order, I do not intend to spend much more time discussing the possibilities which will be available in the Atlantic provinces if the bill is accepted and passed by the house. But I would urge upon hon. members to consider the intention of the bill and the fact that interest free loans are available to industries if they locate in areas of high-level and chronic unemployment, and to give every possible assistance in order to try and establish many industries in the Atlantic provinces as is possible through the very broad incentives available through this bill.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak against this proposed measure, but before doing so I wonder whether the hon. member who proposed the bill will inform the house who introduced a similar bill in 1961. Would he answer that question before I proceed?

Mr. Coates: Well, I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he pick up Hansard for 1961 and read it.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) having resumed his seat cannot rise again with Mr. Speaker in the chair to answer questions. I think the hon. member will realize that.

Mr. Lloyd: It is not essential to my comments, except to observe that the hon. member did mention that a similar bill was introduced in 1961, which was then in order. It therefore surprises me that no action ensued during the period of time when the party of which he is a member sat on this side of the house.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when I examined this bill I intended to be somewhat analytical of its contents. It was my purpose to discover, if possible, something useful to the Atlantic provinces in this proposed bill. I prepared myself to see whether in some way we could salvage some progressive steps to be taken in the interests of the well-being of the economy of the Atlantic provinces. I fully expected that the hon. member who sponsors the bill would in due course present some comprehensive arguments in support of it. I regret, Mr. Speaker, to have to say on this occasion that I found very little or nothing by way of constructive criticism of the economy of the Atlantic provinces which resolved itself into a constructive proposal presented in a bill. I did listen to a long dissertation on the capability of the hon. member to produce a bill by way of contrasting the program of the government of today. I find it rather difficult to believe, however, that any member of the house would be persuaded by such a spurious argument. I am sure the hon. member recognizes that the economic problems of Canada are very challenging ones, no matter where one lives, whether in the Atlantic provinces, in Ontario, on the west coast, or in the Northwest Territories about which we were speaking a short time ago.

If there is any doubt in anyone's mind about this, perhaps some reference to comments appearing in the Telegram for Thursday, November 7, might drive the matter home to all of us. The editorial is headed "Automation" and goes on to say that—> —automation and other rapid technical changes hang over the economy like a cloud. Whether they will bring lush production and widespread human benefit, or unleash forces that disrupt and erode present patterns of human welfare, will depend on how well we prepare the ground for them in advance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill is a very feeble effort to provide a tool for the government to meet the challenge expressed in this editorial. On the contrary, the hon. member was more concerned about eulogizing a recently elected provincial government than he was in attending to his duties as a present day member of this house. He made reference to the cancellation of a frigate program and referred to $100 million. His degree of accuracy is certainly open to question because, as I understand it, these particular vessels would not exceed more than $40 million each, and the greatest expectation in Nova Scotia was that they would be allocated one. Then there are the off-site problems—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): How many frigates could there be in the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Lloyd: We could have two, but if I said the Atlantic provinces I am sorry. There would be one in Nova Scotia. So that would make two, involving $80 million.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker,—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) just referred to the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) as eulogizing the premier of the province of Nova Scotia. I think it is quite clear to all hon. members that it was in answer to a question from one of the Nova Scotia members as to who Mr.

Stanfield was, and the hon. member was only providing him with the necessary answer.

Mr. Lloyd: May I say that my partisanship does not extend to the point where I refuse to acknowledge the abilities, the capacity and the objectivity of the premier of Nova Scotia. I am not as narrow in my partisanship as that.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lloyd: I think I must advise the hon. member that after I have finished my remarks I shall be glad to answer any questions he may have.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Do not be eulogistic, then.

Mr. Lloyd: I have been advised I should not eulogize. I shall attempt to restrain myself in that direction.

I think the motive behind this bill is a sincere one. I believe the intention is to focus attention on the serious economic needs of the Atlantic provinces. It is a matter of keeping constantly before this house the need to devote the attention and resources of the government to the development of those provinces. However, if the hon. member's motives are sincere, the remedy he proposes is a feeble one. I think the bill itself only confuses the present situation because the government of the day has already taken measures which largely serve the purpose he has in mind. The national economic council, proposed by this government, recognizes the challenge expressed in the editorial on the subject of automation which I read a few moments ago.

Mr. Douglas: When are you going to appoint it?

Mr. Lloyd: As rapidly as possible, and more rapidly than the hon. member got round to doing things when he was premier of a province.

Mr. Robichaud: And with more success, too.

Mr. Lloyd: I thank the minister for that observation. However, I see the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is greatly concerned about the early appointment of members of an economic council. He believes the government is right in setting up such a council. He thinks the government is taking a wise step and he wants to see it accomplished at the earliest possible date. We agree with that, but "early" is a relative term. It is a term which has relation to the processes of this house and to the way in which it operates—a process to which some of the newer members are only now becoming accustomed, not without a certain degree of frustration, because some of us recognize that there should be some way of speeding up what might be referred to as our activity. We certainly think we should proceed with all possible speed to set up this economic council. It represents a basic step toward meeting the challenge of providing better economic housekeeping in Canada in the years ahead.

Mr. Douglas: It will not provide one dollar, though.

Mr. Lloyd: The next measure for which this government is responsible is the setting up of the Atlantic development board.

An hon. Member: Plenty of dollars there.

Mr. Lloyd: In addition, I am sure the amendments to the Income Tax Act must have been comforting to the directors of Industrial Estates of Nova Scotia. The president wrote to me recently indicating that this amendment would prove of great value in the establishment of secondary industry in Nova Scotia, at least. I am sure the same would apply to the province of New Brunswick. The decision makers in industry—I am thinking about them, now, not about the people who only speak in the House of Commons, but the men who have to take risks with their capital and the capital of shareholders given in good faith—appreciate that these amendments do offer attractions to encourage secondary industry to locate in the Atlantic provinces. These are some of the bold measures which the hon. member said we needed—though I notice he did not suggest anything except this somewhat feeble bill; I am even doubtful whether it is in order or not.

I have already mentioned the hundred million dollar fund for the Atlantic development board. I should like to mention another matter, namely the organization of the government and the redistribution of seats.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order.

Mr. Lloyd: If hon. members consider the elements of the government's program as it was presented in the speech from the throne, they will see that great benefits are bound to follow from the aggregate of all these steps which have been taken and which are to be taken. I think they will find the government has supplied the answers to the economic needs of the Atlantic provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the hon. member rise on a point of order?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes. I am surprised I have been recognized. In addition to being out of order in his remarks, the hon. member for Halifax is out of order with regard to the position he occupies in this house at the moment.

Mr. Lloyd: I realize it is difficult for some members to place any value on anything this government proposes, and that it is hard for them to comprehend some of the measures which have been prepared to overcome the difficulties which this bill feebly proposes to meet.

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Lloyd) points out it is difficult for members on this side to comprehend his position. That is precisely my point of order. He is speaking from somebody else's seat.

Mr. Lloyd: That is one of the things I have to learn in the house. I have seen people perform in a variety of ways. I have seen them turn their backs and put their hands out. I have seen them strip the backs from their earphones. I have seen them stand, raving, at the end of the aisle without objection being taken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I must remind the hon. member that one of the rules of the house is that when the Speaker is in the chair members must sit in their own places. I hope we can get on with the discussion of Bill C-29.

Mr. Lloyd: The opportunity to speak in this house is a greatly valued one. It will not be too difficult to abide by the rules and I regret if I have violated them by stepping a few inches aside. I hope this rule will be observed by all members of the house in future and, of course, I shall be ready to speak to a point of order should the occasion arise.

To sum up—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Lloyd: The argument against the bill is a simple one. The government has now taken measures which render Bill C-29 unnecessary. It has taken the measures that are called for to provide the government with the tools it requires to attend to the problems of areas such as the Atlantic region. As I say, the bill reflects a sincere desire to draw attention to the needs of the Atlantic provinces, but beyond that it is without merit.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My remarks will not be too long. I see it is five to six.

An hon. Member: They won't be.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I will conclude very quickly, probably before I even get started, in order to give hon. members an opportunity to vote for this bill.

Incidentally, before I commence these few remarks, I must say that I was actually astonished to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax, the one with the blonde hair. He took exception to this bill, in spite of the fact he is one of those who genuflect and worship at the feet of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud), who were so loud in their praises of this bill when it was last before this house. They certainly did not see anything wrong with it then. It seemed to be in order, and seemed to be a wonderful thing.

In any event, as the representative from Cape Breton, which incidentally is the industrial heart of Nova Scotia and indeed the industrial heart of the Atlantic provinces, I am naturally very interested in the bill and the laudable objectives that would be achieved by its passage. As I have attempted to show, there should not be any difficulty about having this bill accepted by the present administration, because on March 24, 1961 when a similar bill was before the house, the present Minister of Fisheries said he was rising to give his wholehearted support to the bill which had been introduced by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates). At the same time, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), now the Secretary of State for External Affairs, supported the principle of the bill.

As has already been mentioned, the Atlantic provinces economic council has already requested that the whole Atlantic area be a designated area in order that industry may be attracted to the area. I suggest, too, that the passage of this bill would be a help. There are many other things that I should like to say concerning the bill, but because of the time consumed by the verbose member for Halifax my time is limited and I am unable to say all that I should like to say. I do want to see this measure brought to a vote and I want the members from the Atlantic provinces, regardless of their affiliation, to participate in the vote on this measure. After all, we are all from the Atlantic provinces and interested in what is good for the Atlantic provinces, whether we are Liberals or Conservatives.

Before resuming my seat I want to compliment the sponsor of the bill, as the hon. member for Halifax has done in some sort of way. Incidentally, someone has said, who is Stanfield? Well, he is the guy who left only three or four Liberal seats in Nova Scotia for seed, but let me assure the hon. members for Halifax that seed will not be fertilized for many years to come.

An hon. Member: You are going to talk it out.

Mr. Regan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, but do not be too long.

Mr. Regan: Would the hon. member indicate to the house whether or not he feels a bill of this type is still necessary and would still have all the beneficial effects that he has conferred on it, in view of the fact that the Atlantic development board has now been granted $100 million and has been made an active, efficient organization through the enlargement of its membership. In view of all these things does the hon. member now feel—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, I certainly do feel, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Regan: —that there is any need to go ahead with this measure at this time?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I certainly permitted a question when one of your colleagues did not. This government has given with one hand and taken away with the other all the good that was done by the Diefenbaker government in the last six years.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It is half a minute to six. I am sure we will recall that it was the member for Halifax who killed this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; I must advise the house that the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Rheaume: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon, during the discussion of the Northwest Territories bill—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Rheaume: —I stated that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), the prime minister of that day, had made a commitment to the Liberal association to have the subject matter of the bill considered by a committee of the house. The commitment, in fact, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; I fear the hon. gentleman is not raising a question of privilege.

The business at seven o'clock will be the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Labour. Would the house agree to going into committee now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. Regan.]

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. I understand the hon. member for Northwest Territories would like to raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon in the course of the discussion on the Northwest Territories bill, I misinformed the house when I stated the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, when prime minister, had made a commitment to the Liberal association of the north to have the subject matter of the bill submitted to a special committee of the house for consideration.

The commitment in fact was made to mayor E. R. Horton of Yellowknife, and in his capacity as mayor of Yellowknife rather than in his capacity as an officer of the Liberal association. The letter referred to reads as follows:

Ottawa, February 1, 1963.

Dear Mr. Mayor:

I know my colleague, the Honourable Walter Dinsdale, has been in touch with you in regard to the same matters as you raised in your letter to me of January 10th. I am informed that the Northwest Territories council favours Fort Smith for the capital of the proposed new territory of Mackenzie when it is organized.

However, I have noted what you have said in your letter and would think that when the legislation is brought in, arrangements could be made to receive the views of any interested groups in regard to the questions of the capital and such other matters as may arise.

I am,

Yours sincerely,
John G. Diefenbaker

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

1. Departmental administration including grants as detailed in the estimates and the expenses of the international labour conferences, $1,290,400.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in introducing the estimates of the Department of Labour I should like to make as brief as possible a statement on the work of the department. Members of the committee will realize that in the course of this session labour matters have received quite exhaustive treatment, and that the opportunities which have been provided on two supply motions, and in the debate on the trusteeship legislation, will not make it necessary for me to enter into the detail that might be necessary in the absence of these other opportunities.

On Tuesday of this week the house as a whole had an opportunity to deal with quite a number of matters relating to the Department of Labour. It will be my endeavour not to duplicate what was said on that occasion. I will confine my remarks to putting to the committee some views on the activities of the department as a whole. Last Tuesday I told hon. gentlemen that when introducing my estimates I would make a general statement with respect to the Minister of Labour's responsibilities in connection with employment and unemployment.

I think that in the house, and elsewhere throughout the country, the Minister of Labour tends to be held responsible, sometimes one would think exclusively, for the problems of employment and unemployment, and I thought I might indicate my conception of the role of the minister in this important field. First of all, I would suggest that the Minister of Labour has the responsibility for reporting to the House of Commons on the level, character and source of unemployment.

He also has a primary responsibility, working with other groups, for the development, adaptation and efficient utilization of manpower resources, and effective measures of this kind can contribute to the promotion of employment and to the prevention or reduction of unemployment. In addition the minister and his department can help contribute to this reduction or prevention by encouraging short run measures to create employment opportunities. These are clearly responsibilities which fall mainly on the Department of Labour.

To move to a broader sphere, it must be understood that so far as unemployment results from a failure of demand to employ fully all available and qualified labour supplies—and this is the case to some extent today—the Minister of Labour's responsibility for the level of unemployment, so far as the federal government is concerned, is shared with his colleagues. Primarily, responsibility for government action to stimulate demand sufficiently and to promote long term economic growths, rests with the government as a whole.

Several major government measures to help stimulate the economic growth of the country have already been discussed in the House of Commons. Opportunities arising from the minister's primary responsibilities in relation to unemployment and economic growth involve the training and development of the nation's youth to meet the requirements of the economy, the upgrading and training of the labour force to meet industrial and economic change, and the development of measures to create more employment opportunities at specific periods such as the winter, when seasonal unemployment is high.

The young people now in our educational and training systems will need to be equipped for the rapid changing conditions characteristic of the Canadian economy in an age of technological and industrial change. This will involve continuing assistance by the federal government to support the provinces in developing technical training programs for youth and adults. This is a necessary form of investment as an integral part of the process of economic growth and employment creation. A well trained and adaptable labour force not only is a necessary element of growth but also plays a role in stimulating growth itself.

Rapid economic and technological changes today require great ability on the part of employed workers to adapt and adjust in order not to be replaced as their skill and educational levels become inadequate. If the labour force is not upgraded and adjusted to changing employment requirements, a greater volume of structural unemployment will accumulate. Therefore active programs in cooperation with the provinces are essential ways to upgrade the employed, and the training of the employed labour force to facilitate its adaptation to technological change. Seasonal unemployment will continue to push up total unemployment in Canada, particularly in the winter months, and there is scope for further governmental action in this field. Similarly cyclical unemployment will continue to be a problem and will require short term direct action to create employment in slack periods. The formulation and execution of manpower and development programs of these kinds clearly require a close working arrangement with other government departments and agencies on all levels and with non-governmental groups. Similarly, the Department of Labour must maintain a close consultative relationship with these public and private agencies and develop those aspects of government economic and social policy which have an important bearing on employment and manpower resources.

Finally, the Minister of Labour has important statutory responsibilities for carrying out research and current analyses of manpower development, employment and unemployment in the Canadian economy. These include undertaking research and presenting appropriate information and observations designed to assist in the formulation of government policy in this area. It also involves informing the public in an objective manner of current and future labour market and employment developments.

I should now like to turn to a number of specific activities for the current fiscal year. The committee will be asked to provide $220,831,000 in the main estimates, $47,967,000 in supplementary estimates A and $60,650,000 in supplementary estimates D. Of this total the Department of Labour itself requires $225,998,000 and the unemployment insurance commission $103,449,000. The combined figure for the Department of Labour and the commission represents a decrease of approximately $30 million over the 1962-63 main and supplementary estimates. In referring to the 1962-63 estimates I should point out that the final supplementary estimates for 1962-63, which totalled $62 million, are not shown on page 176 of the blue book which hon. members have before them. These supplementary estimates were released after the main estimates were printed.

I should also like to bring to the attention of members of the committee a reduction which I think is possible under item 30 of the main estimates. This item can be reduced by $5,000. Instead of requesting $525,700 as appears in the printed estimates, a careful review of our cash requirements indicates we shall require $520,700. This reduction of $5,000 is to be made in the primary vote, payments to provinces pursuant to federal-provincial farm labour agreements, which appears on page 183 of the details of services.

A word about administration. The first vote covers the costs relating to the general administration of the Department of Labour, international affairs and the women's bureau. Item 5 in the estimates makes financial provision for the activities of the economics and research branch. Research in the Department of Labour plays a key role in illuminating the complex manpower and industrial relations problems which we face and in providing a sound, factual basis in the development of programs and policies. The branch is the central federal agency for analysis and research in the labour field. It conducts major surveys and studies of wages and working conditions, union organization, collective bargaining, professional manpower and employment and unemployment. The results of these studies are made available not only to the government but to labour and management groups, to international agencies and to the public generally through the Labour Gazette and the many special reports and publications issued by the branch.

In its activities the economics and research branch is to an increasing extent developing studies of departmental programs such as municipal winter works and training of the unemployed in order to assist in evaluating their effectiveness in helping to improve job creating potential.

I would ordinarily have a great deal to say about the industrial relations activities of the department, especially in an effort to provide a current review of major industrial relations problems, but in view of the rather full discussions we have had in the house, particularly in connection with the longshoremen's strike and the developments on the great lakes, it may be that it would be possible for me to allow members of the committee to ask specific questions with respect to the activities of the industrial relations branch.

It might be of interest to members of the committee to learn that an encouraging report has come out of Chicago today with respect to the possibility of restricting or eliminating the picketing of Canadian ships at that port and elsewhere. I am informed that the labour relations board of the United States has held discussions with the labour bodies in that country, especially the S.I.U., and that there is a strong prospect that some success will be had in overcoming the picketing in the port of Chicago and elsewhere. I do not have all the details nor a complete picture of the situation, but I thought I should indicate to the committee that there is at least an encouraging indication this afternoon with respect to this continuing problem which has exercised the attention of members of the House of Commons for some months now.

If I may refer to civilian rehabilitation, because of the relative newness of this program, item 25 of the estimates provides for the financial needs of the civilian rehabilitation branch which administers the provisions of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act. This act came into effect on April 1, 1962. New federal-provincial agreements under the act have been signed with nine provinces. Under this legislation the branch co-ordinates the activities of federal government departments and assists provincial governments as required in the establishment, development and operation of the national rehabilitation program for disabled persons. The branch collects and disseminates information regarding rehabilitation methods and services and maintains liaison with the provincial authorities, voluntary agencies and professional associations regarding rehabilitation services for the disabled.

Through the program an increasing number of disabled Canadians are being enabled to lead more useful and satisfying lives independent of public assistance or financial help from relatives. In the past few years the program has restored almost 10,000 disabled Canadians to usefulness. This group and their 6,300 dependents were costing annually more than $6½ million for support. Collectively they now earn almost $18 million annually. In the period covered, without the benefit of vocational rehabilitation services they would have cost almost $24½ million. Instead they have earned more than $63 million in that period.

Earlier in the week I covered a large number of the special programs of the Department of Labour, including the municipal incentive winter works program and other new programs, and unless hon. members wish to ask questions I have no intention of holding up the committee by a discussion of items that have already been covered recently, especially this week.

Items 35 and 40 of the main estimates can be dealt with together because they provide for the technical and vocational training programs. These are well known programs in which hon. members have taken a very keen interest. Hon. members will have noticed that there is before us on the order paper a resolution providing for certain changes in the program with respect to capital costs and the contributions made by the federal government for the training of the employed and the training of the unemployed, and because the house as a whole will have an opportunity to go into these particular programs in detail when the resolution and bill come before it. I do not intend to go into detail in my statement. I would be pleased however to answer whatever urgent questions hon. members should like to ask this evening. I do not pass over discussing this matter in detail because of any lack of regard for its importance, but simply because hon. members will have an opportunity later to deal in detail with all these matters as they debate the resolution and the bill.

There is nothing further I wish to add in making my opening statement to members of the committee, because we dealt with so many programs of the Department of Labour earlier in the week that it might be better for the minister, in the interests of time and economy, to set a good example and not take any longer this evening in opening the debate.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, my remarks in respect of the estimates of the labour department will be somewhat similar to those made by the Minister of Labour, because it is our intention to pass these estimates without any undue delay, although with careful examination. I only hope there are no obstructions from the government side in the expedition of these estimates, because I noticed as recently as last night that the minister of northern affairs, who had his estimates before the house, managed to talk them out and did not get them passed.

The Minister of Labour said that unemployment was dealt with exhaustively on Monday and Tuesday on the motion to go into supply. It is not our intention to deal tonight with this subject, because it was discussed on Monday and Tuesday, but I do not agree with him that it has been gone into exhaustively. There will be ample opportunity, either in this session or the following one, for unemployment to be gone into exhaustively by the opposition.

At this time I should like to say that in my opinion, and in the opinion of other hon. members of the official opposition, the passing of supply is probably the most important business of the house. It is necessary that money be voted for the running of the country, and at times we find that other business comes before the consideration of supply. I think this is a mistake and I am sure the government will try to correct the error.

I do not intend to question the items listed in the estimates because I had some small part in their compilation, but I do want to make some remarks about certain matters which I noticed when I had this portfolio. The labour department has been considered in the past a poor cousin of all other governmental departments, but in the last five years or so I think its prestige has risen tremendously, until it now ranks as one of the most important departments of government administration. When I became minister of labour we had a yearly budget of something like $26 million, but it has risen to ten times that amount, simply because the labour department took on the responsibility of capital projects to help alleviate the unemployment situation, particularly during the winter months.

The minister made some remarks to the effect that he should not be responsible for the unemployment situation. I do not want to go into past history, but it is strange how one's attitude can change when responsibility rests on one's shoulders. I am glad to hear that this attitude has now been adopted, because when I was minister for some five and a half years it seemed to me as though I was a target for the unemployment situation by hon. members now on the government side, when they were in opposition.

The Minister of Labour mentioned that short term measures can be taken by the labour department to deal with unemployment during the winter months. This is entirely my idea, because during my term of office the labour department took many short term measures to deal with the situation. The minister also mentioned that during the winter months the seasonal aspect of unemployment will rise again, and has a tendency to raise the percentage of the unemployed over the whole year. While I agree with him entirely, this is exactly the sort of thing I tried to point out to the opposition when I was minister, but they paid no heed and treated the matter as though it were a year-round situation. However, there is a change of attitude when you have responsibility, as I can readily understand, and I hope when the hon. member and his colleagues are back on this side of the house they will remember that burden of responsibility.

As I mentioned before, in the last five years the labour department has become one of the most important departments in government administration. I say this not because the departmental heads are in the gallery but because it was a great privilege to work with such a fine group of departmental officials. They were most helpful and one certainly does not need to prod them into action. I think they accept responsibility willingly and with enthusiasm. During my five years of office we took on some large programs, such as the technical and vocational school building program, municipal winter works and the stepping up of a "Do it now" program which certainly has considerable merit. The training of the unemployed is, I think, one of the most important areas to which we should put our minds in order to help bring employment to the country. When I was told that 70 per cent of our labour force attained only grade eight education or lower it was an appalling shock to me. It was evident then that we should provide facilities and proper training for the labour force, simply because jobs available nowadays require 70 per cent skilled labour and 30 per cent unskilled. This 30 per cent is growing smaller each year, and consequently we must measure up to the demands of labour and endeavour to provide the necessary trades and skills demanded today.

Automation is another area, and it is interesting to recall that a study was made of this question, not only in Canada but in the United States. We should be very conscious of the fact that in Canada automation may be replacing workers at the rate of 2,500 people per week. Consequently we should take some steps to remedy that situation. It is regrettable that the government has not seen fit to put forward the bill which we had on the order paper dealing with manpower adjustment and automation. The government is going to deal with this matter by agreement. I feel that if they are to do this they should call a national conference of labour and management. I think you have to "sell" a program to people who are going to participate in it. You have to generate enthusiasm for it among those who will benefit as a result. It is not enough just to sign an agreement with the provinces and have so much money available for this program from the federal treasury. I think you have to "sell" the program in one way or another. I regret that this bill has not been put forward again, because I think it would have sold this idea to those who would benefit from it. Even though the government has decided that the problem should be dealt with through agreement, I suggest to the minister that he consider holding a conference of employers and employees in order to discuss the merits of such a proposal.

With regard to industrial relations, this section of the department has always been very interesting to me. It is exciting, in that you deal with disputes in the country. I want to remind the committee that for the past six years now we have had no disruption of our national transportation system, and in this regard I think a great deal of credit must go to the head of the industrial relations department and his officers throughout Canada for their efforts to bring about this situation, or to at least hold the situation without suffering a further disruption. I might mention that during my term of office we had two very difficult situations to settle. One of these was concerning diesel locomotive firemen on freight and yard operations.

It had to be done in two stages, first on the Canadian Pacific and second, on the Canadian National systems. This was done successfully and without disrupting our transportation system. If we look across the border we find the same situation has been dragging out there for well over a year, possibly for two years, and that no settlement is in sight. A great deal of credit should be given for this. In the annual report of the department, mention is made of the settlement of a dispute involving 110,000 non-operating employees of the railway. For the first time in history the recommendations of the conciliation board were unanimously adopted. This was a historic occasion because, ordinarily, it is not done. I hope this is an indication of things to come and that from now on there will be an understanding that the report of the conciliation board shall be adhered to by both sides without the government being asked to deal with these questions. I think this is a matter for the parties concerned, and it is up to them to devise a system by which they can reach agreement.

I said earlier that training of the unemployed was most important. We took steps in 1960 to give an impetus to training of this type. If I remember correctly, the number of those trained in 1960 was 4,000. At the end of 1962, because of the impetus we had given to this program, the number had risen to 138,000. That is still not enough but it is certainly an improvement on the figure for 1960—almost ten times as many. This program should be continued so as to provide proper training for those who need to learn new skills.

The municipal incentive program, a new program which is only in its sixth winter, is a worth-while program. I shall not deal with it at any length except to read from the annual report, which says:

> The municipal winter works incentive program during the 1962-63 winter provided an estimated 6,170,000 man-days of on-site work for an estimated 145,200 men. The previous winter's program had provided 5,870,000 man-days work for 147,700 men.

So this is a good program even though it was originally criticized. I went into some detail in respect to it during the debate on Monday and Tuesday. These are all the remarks I wish to make with respect to the estimates at this time. As I said earlier, I hope the government co-operates in getting these estimates passed as quickly as possible, the usual care being given to the expenditures involved.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister made such a good beginning in helping to settle the longshoremen's dispute, and then in getting legislation passed with respect to the seaway union, that I was really disappointed by his introduction to the estimates of his department tonight. Gone are all the speeches in which we were told what the government was going to do to solve the unemployment problem. Gone were the promises we heard for so many years about what the Liberal party and Liberal minister would do for labour. We gather tonight, from what the minister had to say, that all he has to do is to administer a department which is doing everything necessary to meet the situation.

I intend to refer to certain measures which are badly needed and to which no reference was made tonight. We need some major changes in our labour legislation. We need some major new acts, some of which members of the Liberal party, when they sat on this side of the house last year, indicated they were ready to support. We hoped the government would bring in this legislation. I certainly hope the minister would give some indication about his intentions tonight. For example, this country needs a new fair wages act providing for union wages and conditions on all government contracts, covering both prime contractors and subcontractors. We need a maximum work week act providing for a 40-hour week. I am told that in 1919 spokesmen for the Liberal party promised to bring in a maximum work week act. Well, a long time has gone by since then but still no action has been taken. We need a national minimum wage act providing for a minimum wage of $1.25 per hour. Last year members of this group introduced a bill on these lines. It received support from the Liberal party of that time, but there is little indication of any action being taken on it by the government in the near future. We need an amendment to the holidays with pay act. This proposal, again, received support from hon. members opposite last session. We should like to see the government proceed to bring in such amendments. We need amendments to the provisions of the Criminal Code which deal with the right to picket. We need amendments to those parts of the code which deal with trespass.

We also need real amendments to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. Workers in Canada, under the protection of this act and under the protection of the various labour relations acts in the provinces, are guaranteed the right to join trade unions. Employers are forbidden to dismiss workers who have joined unions or to penalize employees for belonging to unions. In fact, these are nothing but theoretical rights. Every year during the last ten years hundreds of workers across Canada have been fired by their employers because they were foolish enough to believe that the laws of Canada mean what they say, and that they could join unions without the risk of losing their jobs. In fact, employers have ignored the provisions of the act in this respect. Indeed, it seems that we have one law for the rich and another for the poor; one law for the strong and another for the weak. If a person commits an offence against the law, if he robs a bank, or steals a car, or sells liquor illegally the police will apprehend him and prosecute him. But if an employer breaks the law, what happens? The worker or his union is required to make a complaint to the labour relations board. After hearing the details of the case, the board may behave in a very magnanimous way; it can give the worker or his union the right to prosecute.

I do not need to tell the committee or the minister how useless this procedure is. It takes time, it takes money, and then the case must be presented before a judge who often knows little or nothing about labour legislation. Even when an employer is found guilty, the penalty is usually of such a minor character that all it amounts to is a licence to go on breaking the law.

There was a case in Winnipeg a couple of years ago which illustrates this point. A brewery workers union organized a Pepsi-Cola plant in the city. The company did what so many other companies have done—they fired a number of the key people working in the plant who were active in the union. The union got the provincial attorney general to take action against the company under the relevant provision of the Criminal Code. The case was brought before a magistrate and the company was found guilty. What did the magistrate do? He assessed against the company a fine of $100. This, of course, was of no use to the union. It did nothing to protect the workers. In fact, the union was wiped out.

It seems to me that what we need is a thorough revision of our federal law and of the provincial labour acts, so as to give our labour relations board the authority which the national labour relations board has in the United States—the right to issue an order to a company to cease from discriminating against workers, and the right to issue an order for the reinstatement of workers who have been dismissed. The board should have the right to say to a company: You should not have fired this employee and you must pay his back wages during the time he has been unemployed. Without this kind of amendment to the labour laws of Canada, it seems to me that these laws are really only a snare and a delusion. In fact, they only create difficulties for the workers who believe that we mean business when these laws are passed. Until we pass this kind of legislation, both federal and provincial, the workers are not going to get the rights which, in fact, they have been promised.

It seems to me that not only should the federal government introduce this kind of amendment, but it should take the lead in calling a meeting of the various provincial labour departments to seek the passage of this kind of legislation in other provinces.

Now, I want to deal with another provision which has been extremely harmful to the workers and trade unions of this country. I refer to the provision of the Criminal Code which deals with trespass. As a result of this section of the code, trade unions have been denied access to workers on great projects all across this country. The workers in the lumber camps of Quebec and Ontario, the workers at Benson mines at Blind River, the workers at Seven Islands, the workers on the great International Nickel project at Thompson, as well as workers in other areas where companies have obtained concessions to develop great resources, have been denied their rights. In some of these areas the housing is provided by the company and is located on company property. The company uses this excuse, that the workers are living on their property. They say that this is private property and union organizers are denied the right of access to the workers on these projects.

They were building a power plant at Kelsey in the province of Manitoba, and employing in the neighbourhood of 2,000 workers for two years. It was completely impossible for trade unions to get in to talk to these workers during that time. The place was completely isolated and the only way one could get in was by railroad on a spur line off the Hudson Bay railroad. You could not get in there without a pass from the company. Naturally, the company would not permit any union organizer to go in there. I have sworn affidavits to prove that the workers were compelled to work as much as 100 hours a week for six months at a time. If they did not do so, they were told they would be dismissed. The fact is the employees worked these hours without any overtime paid, without any of the benefits they would have received had a trade union been there. The union was unable to get in before the project was completed.

Similarly at Thompson where the International Nickel Company gained control of a hundred square miles through an agreement with the Manitoba government, for a period of almost two years the trade unions were completely prohibited from entering that area. Not only trade unions but members of parliament, members of the legislature, were prohibited. At that time I was a member of the legislature. I want to tell the members of this committee that it took me about a month, going from minister to minister, from deputy minister to deputy minister, before I finally went into the area without getting permission. The local government administrator, supposedly working for the government of Manitoba, was in fact an employee of the International Nickel Company. He simply refused to let me or any union organizer enter. I got in by telling him I was going in and if he wanted to get the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to take action, he could do so, but I would refuse to pay any fine which the court might assess and I was prepared to go to jail. Of course, at that point they acceded to my request, because it would not have looked very good for International Nickel.

This is the kind of thing which companies are doing consistently. As we move to develop our resources in the north, we are going to see more and more of this type of thing. One of these days the unions are going to say that they are not concerned with the law because the law is being misused. They are going to exercise the rights supposedly granted to them under our labour laws. They are going to enter one of these areas, and there is going to be trouble; there is going to be violence. Perhaps after we have that kind of violence the government of Canada will wake up and pass the kind of amendments to the Criminal Code which are required to deal with trespass. I would think we would be wise enough to pass this kind of amendment before we have that kind of trouble.

There is one other provision with which I want to deal, and that is the use of injunctions under the labour relations acts, both federal and provincial. Workers have a right to strike. I know people become disturbed when we have strikes, and that is understandable. Many people in Canada do not realize that 99.5 per cent of the labour agreements are renewed without strikes. We only hear about the times when there are difficulties, when there are strikes. In Canada, because of the labour laws we have, it is more difficult and takes longer to get into a position where you can legally strike than in almost any other democratic country. I am not going to discuss at this time whether this is good or bad. This is part of the heritage bequeathed to this country by that great labour statesman, Mr. Mackenzie King. There is this whole business of the need to have bargaining in good faith between employer and employee, the need to call in a conciliation officer; and if you do not reach an agreement the need under the law to establish a conciliation board, before a trade union can go on strike. Anyone who has worked in this field knows how long it can take before a conciliation board can reach any kind of agreement or get to the point where they make their report.

If a union does all these things, if it does get into a position where it can strike, and even if it is a legal strike, Mr. Chairman, injunctions may be taken out. Even though the Criminal Code sets out clearly what is legal in the form of picketing, we have an increasing number of employees going to the courts to seek an injunction before there is any difficulty, before there has been any illegal action. A few days later they go to the court and get these temporary injunctions made permanent. The courts, in fact, are rewriting the law by their decisions, and picketing is virtually becoming illegal. Recently there was a strike in the city of Ottawa which happened to concern a building project of this federal government. The employees of one of the subcontractors went on strike, legally and properly, as they were entitled to do. They established a picket line around the job, since that was the only way they could inform people they were on strike. The company went to the court and got an injunction. The judge granted the injunction on the grounds that in picketing this place they were also picketing the prime contractor whose workers were not on strike. The argument of the lawyer for the union to the effect that if they did not picket this site where they were working, they could not picket at all, was simply ignored by the judge.

I suggest that if this government means business they had better get busy and rewrite the provisions of the Criminal Code so that union workers who find it necessary to go on strike will have their rights protected. I think it would be a good idea if the Minister of Labour were to convey to the various provincial ministers the idea of making a survey to see how many injunctions against picketing there actually have been in the various provinces in the past number of years.

These are some of the things which I hoped the minister would talk about in the field of labour relations legislation. I should like to spend a few minutes talking about the Department of Labour. When I say things which I shall say, I am certainly not being critical of the people who are working or have been working for the department. I think they do an excellent job when one considers the staff they have and the scope which they are given. It seems to me that if we are going to function properly in the complex urban society in which we are living, we have to do a better job of equipping the people of Canada to get and hold jobs which will be available in this country. In order to do this, it seems to me a number of things are necessary.

First of all, you have to reorganize our educational system for this century, to make it effective, rather than making it the kind of educational system which fitted us for the last century. It is not my intention to go into detail tonight. We are all happy with the beginning which has been made in the field of vocational training. However, can the minister tell us what has happened to the people who have taken training in these new vocational training schools? Have they been able to find jobs? Have we been training them in the right skills? I am certain the minister cannot tell us, because we have not yet set up that kind of research organization which we ought to have in the Department of Labour. We ought to have a much greater technical training program at all levels, beginning with the grade six level and going right up to the university level.

When we read what is happening in the United States, and when we read the summary—because that is all we have had a chance to see—of the Robbins commission report in Great Britain, I am sure the minister will agree that what we have undertaken up to now is really a very meagre program. I am not critical when I say this. We have at least made a beginning, but I would hope that in the not too distant future the government, in co-operation with the provinces, will undertake a basic examination of what is needed and stop using the excuse that it is the provinces' responsibility. Let us co-operate in building a technical training program which would meet our needs, and to do these things we require a different kind of department of labour than the kind we have had up until now.

I believe it was the former minister of labour who said the labour department used to be the poor department of government. I think it is still the poor department, but it should be the most important department of government. The department has a role to play which it has never accomplished because we have never given it the tools to do the job.

The department has to stop being mainly a quiet referee in the field of industrial disputes. It should be made the major department of the government, and should be given the main responsibility to secure adequate employment and decent wages for every Canadian.

I was disappointed with the speech the minister made the other day, when he was proud of the fact that we have some 10,000 less unemployed than we had this time last year. Of course that is better than having 10,000 more unemployed; but in the year 1963 to have a quarter million people unemployed is a disgrace to the country, to the government and to parliament. It is something we ought not permit to continue.

If we are to achieve the aim of full employment, then the labour department should be given the job of taking over and reorganizing the national employment service. It should make that service an aggressive, forward looking instrument of public service. So long as the employment service remains at the tail end of the unemployment insurance commission it cannot do a good job. If anyone thinks it is doing a good job, then let him take a look at the yellow pages in any telephone book in any Canadian city, and compare the number of private employment agencies in business in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Hamilton in 1963 with the number which were in business in 1953 or 1948. If the employment service were doing a good job these private agencies would never get the business they have.

The objectives of a reconstituted national employment service in the labour department should be, first, to maintain a continuous review of Canada's manpower and to develop a long term plan for the effective deployment of the total manpower resources of the country.

I was disturbed tonight when the minister spoke of an extension of the department's role of counting how many people are unemployed and how many jobs are needed. I did not detect in his speech any note of urgency concerning aggressive action on the part of the department in planning for full employment.

Second, the reconstituted national employment service should ensure that everyone who needs employment has access to a job which makes full use of his productive capacity.

I commend to the minister a thought expressed by a man whom nobody in this house would consider a flaming radical, the head of a large business organization, the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, Mr. R. M. Fowler. I am told he is also a pretty prominent Liberal, and I wish to read into the record a short paragraph from a statement he made before the special committee of the Senate on manpower and employment in 1961:

> In the modern industrial state, there is a responsibility of society to provide work for people who want work. It is no answer to make statistical arguments that the existence of some degree of unemployment makes other economic problems easier to handle—such as, for example, the control of inflation. Nor is it any answer to say that present unemployment afflicts only a minority of Canadians; for that minority it is still a major misfortune. These human losses are also national losses; the goods and services that a man could have produced on a day when he is unemployed are lost forever and the total wealth of the nation is reduced by that amount.

That is an excellent statement. A few years ago it would only have been we woolly minded socialists, who did not believe in private enterprise, who would have made that kind of statement; but Mr. Fowler is a pretty hard minded businessman, and the minister should consider his kind of thinking seriously and get on with the objective of obtaining full employment in Canada, rather than putting up with the 5, 6 or 8 per cent unemployment which we have experienced since about 1956.

Lastly it seems to me the reconstituted national employment service should ensure effective mobility of labour through adequate training programs and travel grants, to encourage real upgrading and reallocation of the labour supply.

To do these tasks the employment branch of the Department of Labour needs to have a staff trained and directed to place top priority on job placement today, as well as making plans to meet the new problems which are being created every day and week by automation and technical innovation. Only last week I read in an Ottawa newspaper that Mr. John Snyder, a former secretary of commerce in the United States, estimated that 40,000 jobs are being lost every week in the United States due to automation. I do not know if we can apply that figure proportionately in Canada, but I do not think it is far out, and we are only beginning to tackle the task of finding jobs.

I hope the minister will not continue to be as satisfied as he seemed to be tonight. The Prime Minister has told us about a few of the goodies which he hopes parliament will pass before Christmas, but when we come back in 1964 I trust the minister will try to do some of the things I have mentioned and, if he does, the members of this group will support him and see that they are passed through the house.

Mr. Olson: My first words are to congratulate the minister on his appointment to the office he holds. I think members of the committee will agree that one of the very serious problems which faced Canada during the past few months was one directly involving the Department of Labour. I refer to the problem of the maritime unions on the great lakes, and I am sure all hon. members of the committee would wish to commend the minister for the manner in which he handled that situation.

I have been accused of commending the government on a number of previous occasions for certain actions which it has taken. That does not worry me very much. I also commended the previous government when I thought it deserved it, and when the present government deserves criticism I can assure it that I will be offering that criticism.

Tonight I want to deal with one very important matter, the problem with respect to the manifestation of the division between French and English speaking Canada. A large part of the root of this problem lies in unemployment and in low, or lagging, economic conditions in the province of Quebec. I spent last week end and the previous week end driving through various parts of Quebec trying to pick up local opinion with respect to this division between English and French speaking Canada, and from the conversations I had I am convinced that if we could do something to enhance the economic conditions in Quebec we would move a long way toward solving this division.

I wish to quote from a speech made by the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine as reported at page 4374 of Hansard for last Monday, November 4:

> —I believe that as far as my own province, the province of Quebec, is concerned, unemployment and the economic situation of its population are probably the main cause responsible for the uneasiness which prevails in the federal-provincial relations and in the relations between French speaking and English speaking Canadians.

On that same date the hon. member for Quebec West had this to say, as found on page 4372 of Hansard:

> Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to mention again to the hon. members that they committed themselves, during the election campaign of last May, to stop unemployment once in power, and in my opinion it is about time that they seriously think that over and introduce adequate legislation in that connection.

I hope you will forgive me, Mr. Chairman, because I have a number of other quotations I want to read into the record from speeches in the house by members from Quebec who have stated repeatedly that the unemployment problem is at the root of the division and that they expect the federal government and the parliament of Canada to do something about it. Again, the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine had this to say on May 22 this year as found on page 153 of Hansard:

> Well, Mr. Speaker, how can the citizens of the province of Quebec, who consider themselves as full-fledged citizens, who want to be considered as equal partners in Canada, be willing to accept a situation where they are at a financial disadvantage compared to the citizens of Ontario?

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who I am pleased to see is here tonight, had this to say as found on page 328 of Hansard for May 27 last:

> Nothing contributes more to frustration and bitterness or loss of confidence in one's country and its social system than long periods of unemployment. The relatively poor economic conditions in Quebec provide a major source of discontent among the working people and farmers in that province.

The hon. member for Lake St. John had this to say, as found on page 328 of Hansard for May 27 last:

> I come from Quebec, a province which is most particularly affected by the unemployment which prevails in Canada. Nearly 10 per cent of our labour force are out of work and all the people of my province have their eyes turned toward Ottawa to see what the federal government intends to do, through the provincial governments and especially through the Quebec government, to reduce the number of unemployed.

After having spent a few days in Montreal and one day in the city of Quebec and several days in other parts of the province, I believe there is a genuine frustration among some of our French speaking Canadians who do not have a sufficient command of the English language to aspire to some of the top positions in commerce in Canada today. But I wish to contend that the international language of commerce is English, whether we like it or not. Furthermore, it is not because of anything that English speaking Canadians have done that this has come about. I do not think it is even something that England itself has done in latter years that has brought this about. I think it has come about because of the expansion of American influence in the world, particularly in the world of commerce, for certainly that expansion has been carried out in the English language.

Therefore I implore our colleagues from the province of Quebec to stop blaming the English speaking members of this house for this problem. Even if Quebec were a separate state the people there would still be faced with the international language being English in dealing with all the countries in the north Atlantic region, and in many other places in the world.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I am genuinely interested and concerned in doing something about this problem. The members from the province of Quebec whom I have quoted have stated one after the other that it is the responsibility of the federal government and this parliament to take some action to equalize the situation. So my challenge to these members tonight is to come before parliament with some kind of program that will do the job and at the same time be acceptable to the province of Quebec.

We know, for example, that in past years when the trans-Canada highway program was established it was rejected in its initial stages by the province of Quebec. We know, for example, that when assistance with education, particularly to universities, was offered to all students at any of these institutions all over Canada this was rejected by the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: By Duplessis.

Mr. Olson: If we turn to more recent history we find that the municipal development and loan fund established at this session of parliament was also partially rejected by the province of Quebec, even though this legislation was supposed to do more than anything else to solve the unemployment problem in Canada.

Mr. Pigeon: The province was right, too.

Mr. Olson: I want to say in fairness that we in this party have asked for years that a municipal development bank be set up and we are still of that opinion. There is a slight difference between the operations of a municipal development bank, such as we have advocated, and the municipal development and loan fund that was actually established. There are provisions for the forgiveness of certain amounts and there are also provisions that the money must be used for certain things.

Taking that into consideration and at the same time taking into consideration the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, which demands that money voted by parliament be accounted for to parliament, the department administering the development and loan fund has got to follow through to see that the money is used for purposes that were authorized by parliament. That part of the legislation is not acceptable to Quebec, if I understand their attitude correctly.

The province of Quebec has contracted out of the Canada pension plan even before it has got under way. It is not under way, and perhaps they saw the light first because in my opinion it was introduced before all of the problems had been anticipated. Its introduction was premature.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Pigeon: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I think the province of Quebec has its reasons for refusing to enter into an agreement with the federal government and I think we from the province of Quebec have no lesson to learn from the hon. member.

Mr. Olson: There is no question of privilege or order or anything else. I would remind the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that he and I are members of the parliament of Canada and that we should always keep that in mind. I am not here tonight to try to teach a lesson to anybody from Quebec or anywhere else. The fact is, however, that parliament has been under a steady barrage of complaints from members from the province of Quebec that we should do something to relieve the unemployment situation there. As I said, I am willing to support measures that will do this, but I want to know that the province of Quebec is going to accept them. Many of the things that have been done over the years have been rejected out of hand by the province of Quebec on the pretence that they infringed on provincial autonomy.

There are precedents for passing legislation that is of benefit to certain regions in Canada. In this session of parliament, for example, we have passed the Atlantic Development Board Act and have provided a fund of $100 million for the special benefit of that area. I have no objection to passing such legislation, even specifically for the province of Quebec, provided they will make use of it.

I also remind hon. members that back in the 30's a number of such acts were passed by parliament. For example, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act was of specific benefit to one area of Canada alone. We appreciated that and it has done a lot of good over the years. Then there is the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act which also assisted a certain area. It is no disgrace to any area of Canada that it should happen to be lagging behind some other area economically. It would be a strange situation indeed if one particular province or one particular area would be ahead all the time.

In the past we have passed legislation in this house for the benefit of the prairie region, while in the last few months we have passed legislation for the benefit of the Atlantic region. I have no objection to supporting legislation that will be of benefit to any other area that is economically depressed at this time. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I should like to have some assurance that if we do what we are expected to do and a program is brought in and passed it will be accepted and used for that purpose.

I should like to spend a couple of minutes on the vocational training program. The member who spoke immediately before me said it was not proceeding rapidly enough, and perhaps that is true. It is true if you take into consideration the number of unskilled workers in the country who are unable to obtain jobs. I want to be fair and I would even congratulate the former minister for setting up this program in the first place; but it should be drawn to the attention of the committee that the people at the local administrative level who are trying to make the best use of the vocational training program are breaking new ground all the way. They had no programs or surveys of what was required. They did not have the staff or facilities to get on the with job. We have one of these schools in Medicine Hat and I am glad it is there. About $2½ million worth of school building and equipment are ready to be used. But when it comes to programming and finding the needs required to fit programs to train people it becomes a different kind of task. I know a number of members on the school board, particularly the superintendent of public schools, in Medicine Hat in charge of setting up these training programs and educational programs, and it is not easy; but they are moving as fast as they can and it is a matter of trial and error. Quite frankly I congratulate them on the progress they have made to this point. It is not as rapid as it perhaps could be, but this is not because of lack of effort. We have excellent facilities. The school is almost overbuilt and the present facilities cannot be fully used either this year or even in two or three years to come. I think it is rather an unfair criticism therefore to say the program is not going ahead as fast as it should. I have looked at some of these statistics and the provinces of Ontario and Alberta took the greatest advantage of this program. After a while the other provinces will be able to benefit to a large extent from the experience learned in these two provinces.

In closing, I just wanted to draw these few matters to the attention of the committee and hope that in weeks to come, when we hear of unemployment problems in various regions of Canada, we may also hear suggestions from those same areas which will in fact be an acceptable solution to these problems.

Mr. Regan: In rising to make some brief comments on the estimates I would not only compliment the minister on his appointment but also compliment him on the manner in which he has carried out his heavy responsibilities. Everyone in Canada agrees that no minister of labour was ever faced with more serious problems in so short a time as the present minister over the last six months. I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North and to a great extent found myself in agreement with him, when he deplored the lack of a review and systematic amendment of our labour legislation. I agree the time has long since passed when all the labour legislation of our country should have been thoroughly reviewed and changes brought about to bring it up to date in light of changing conditions, both in labour and management, during the last 20 years. The recent trouble with the S.I.U., culminating in the present trusteeship, is an excellent example of the need for changes in our labour legislation. In speaking in the debate at the time the trusteeship was established I had occasion to mention that our legislation should be brought up to date so that other gangster czars of the Hal Banks type would not have the opportunity to come into power in the future. I suggest in that direction it is time we considered seriously the necessity of outlawing the "closed shop" in certain types of industries in order to prevent a would-be union czar from having too much control beyond our democratic processes. There are also many active today in the union movement in Canada who agree that we need some form of review by governmental or other appointed authorities of union welfare plans and finances so that members' interests can be protected. In this regard caution must be shown by this house in amending legislation so that the freedom and independence of our labour movement would be protected.

Nevertheless there is no question that the parliament of Canada by default has given to the courts the job of deciding the course of development of our labour laws during the past 20 years. Owing to the fact that we made no changes in our labour laws to keep them up to date it has been left to the judges to adjudicate upon all types of situations which arise in modern management-labour relations, many of the present situations being of a type not even contemplated at the time when our first labour relations legislation was enacted. I suggest that in many instances there would be a goodly number of Canadians who would disagree with the course the courts of this country have seen fit to follow in this direction.

Mr. Regan: No. We need statutory clarification of the right to picket peacefully, and of the legality of secondary boycotts in view of decisions made by the courts, which have not seen fit to follow the rather liberal interpretation of workmen's rights as established in England by the Crofter-Veitch and Thompson-Deacon cases. In this country the courts, acting in the absence of the legislators through default of parliament, have seen fit to invent with great imagination and originality a supposedly new tort of conspiracy. We have now reached what I call an unreasonable condition that any strike not wholly in accordance with the law becomes outlawed to the point where it is conspiracy in the eyes of the law, so that in effect strike activity can be restrained and the rights of the workers to collective representation is, in the end result, invariably lost. In other words, under the present status of the law if the union, in carrying out the necessary secret vote before a strike is called, make some technical error and does not comply with the letter of the law, everything happening thereafter becomes an illegal conspiracy making the union subject to injunction, and to be sued for very heavy damages.

These are situations which I suggest were never intended by parliament and which do not exist under the laws of England. I submit that the spirit of the bill of rights and, indeed, in the spirit of the earlier decision of the Aristocratic case in British Columbia in 1951, which decided that workers at all times have the right to free speech and to communicate their side of any dispute regardless of whether they were in the right or in the wrong, has unfortunately not been followed subsequently by our courts. In order to bring our labour laws back in line with developments in this branch of the law, it is high time we had a complete review of the labour legislation of this country.

I intend to be brief, but before sitting down I should like to say I am looking forward to the establishment by this government of a national labour code. I hope and feel it will not be long in coming and it is certainly badly needed. Before concluding I should like to say that we in Canada have been very fortunate in our labour relations inasmuch as we have had in the past, as we have today in the Canadian Labour Congress, a union organization which represents the great majority of the responsible law-abiding progressive unions of the nation.

We are very fortunate in having such an organization which has at all times taken a broadminded approach to the problems of the economy of this nation, an organization which other countries would be proud to have as their central labour organization.

Finally, I would urge that the government make every effort to see to it that an early review of the now outdated labour legislation of this country can take place so that we in Canada can again become leaders in this field.

[Mr. Regan.]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of taking part in this debate but in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), I felt it was my duty to protest strongly on behalf of the vast majority of people in my province.

True, the province of Quebec does have 40 per cent of the total number of unemployed in Canada. My province needs its powers of taxation to settle its problems, including unemployment.

Quebec's culture and outlook are different from those of the other provinces, and that is what made confederation possible.

My province is quite willing to co-operate with the other provinces to make Canada stronger and more powerful, as long as the federal government, regardless of which party is in power, respects its wishes. That is how Canada will become a strong and powerful country.

For several years now, the central government has been infringing upon the jurisdiction not only of Quebec but of all provinces. No protests were voiced by some provinces but Quebec was right in speaking out because it is not a province like the others. It has its own characteristics and I think that the various and successive provincial governments opposed joint programs, and I agree fully with their stand. In fact, I hope that at the next federal-provincial conference, the central government will accede to the request of the province of Quebec. Should it fail to do so, it would be responsible for the secession, before long, of French Canada from English Canada.

I wish to emphasize this, because under our constitution certain rights have been recognized to the provinces.

At the time of the war, the federal government infringed upon the rights of the provinces, and it should as far as possible comply with the requests made every year by the province of Quebec, so that the latter could regain control of certain fields and carry out some work projects.

If the federal government were to agree at the next federal-provincial conference to turn over to the province of Quebec, and to other provinces as well—because the province of Quebec is not the only one to want it—more taxation powers in order to promote education and other economic and cultural endeavours, I am convinced that this would be the best way of solving the unemployment problem, not only in the province of Quebec, but in the other provinces also.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, I did not intend to speak but the hon. member for Medicine Hat criticized the province of Quebec for refusing to co-operate with the federal government about the pension plan. Well, Quebec needs the money in that reserve fund precisely to meet its own economic needs and thus help check unemployment.

I also wished to protest strongly, and I say it again, against the remarks made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. In fact, the hon. member does not know the province of Quebec well because spending only a few hours there, as he did, is not enough to enable him to know the feelings of the province of Quebec.

In my opinion, the hon. member should instead spend two and even three months there, but even then I would be very much surprised, in view of the mental capacity I find him to have, if he managed to understand the aspirations of the province of Quebec.

The province of Quebec will work for a greater Canada, as long as its rights and privileges are respected.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we appreciate the desire of the minister and of the hon. member for Ontario to deal with these estimates as expeditiously as possible, but we feel the committee should take at least sufficient time to recognize the importance of the department with which we are now dealing. I know we have been criticized in the press for wasting time on unimportant matters, but that is no reason for our not giving adequate attention to important matters.

In the same vein, may I say it is interesting to notice these box scores in the columns of the press on the attendance of members of the House of Commons. I do not know whether it is because I have got to my feet, but I notice there are now five representatives in the press gallery. During most of the evening there have been only two. I hope that box score will be published as well. I may say our proceedings have been well covered by the charming representative of United Press International and by a capable representative of the Canadian Press. But the representatives of the newspapers of Canada who have so much to say about our attendance and our discharge of our duties seem to have taken Friday night off. I hope they will report this. I hope, at least, it will be transmitted in the dispatches of the Canadian Press and United Press International.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member knows a bit about the rules. Is it in order to draw attention to people in the gallery?

Mr. Knowles: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has raised a good point of order. I am glad he did not raise it until I had completed my remarks on that subject.

An hon. Member: What the hon. member drew attention to was the fact that there was almost nobody in the gallery.

Mr. Knowles: As the members of the committee know, Canada holds a seat on the governing body of the International Labour Organization by virtue of the fact that we are recognized as one of the ten most industrialized nations of the world. We are also aware that the nature of our economy has changed across the years, particularly in recent decades. We have become a highly industrialized nation and, in all probability, this trend will increase. I mention this in order to support the point of view expressed earlier this evening by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North to the effect that the Department of Labour should become much more than just a set of referees in industrial disputes; it should become a department which takes a positive lead in the promotion of full employment, in the promotion of education, in the promotion of training and retraining, and in bringing forward legislation which will enhance the position of those who work in Canadian industry.

This is why we feel full attention should be given to these estimates. This is why we had hoped that the able and scholarly Minister of Labour, who is capable of giving an excellent treatise on these matters might have given us a little more substance in the remarks he made tonight. I know he indicated his willingness to answer questions after other hon. members have spoken. I hope that having listened to whatever speeches are made tonight he will give the speech he should have given at the start. I hope he will have noted not only the remarks which were made on this side of the house but the appeal addressed to him by the younger member for Halifax—at least, I think he is the younger one—for action on the question of a national labour code. We have labour legislation on the books of this country. We have had a trade unions act for a long time. We have had other bits of labour legislation for many years. But it was not until 1948 that we got anything comprehensive in terms of federal labour legislation. I refer to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, which we did not get until 1948. We did not get the Unemployment Insurance Act until 1940. These two pieces of legislation came in those years, despite the fact that in 1919 the party which is now in power pledged itself to go to the limit with respect to the items that were incorporated in the 1919 peace treaty and set out in the terms under which the International Labour Organization was established.

It not only took all those years to get on the statute books the two main pieces of legislation to which I referred, but since then very little has been done. There have been no significant amendments to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act since 1948. While the Unemployment Insurance Act has been amended a number of times since it was enacted in 1940, it is now due for a thorough overhaul. We have been promised that something will be done in this field, but it looks now as though this cannot be counted on until the next session of parliament.

There is another area, Mr. Chairman, in which labour legislation is required, apart from measures such as the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act. I have in mind what is now generally referred to as a labour code. I was glad to hear other members, particularly the Liberal member for Halifax, talk about the need for a labour code. Sometimes he talked about the need for revising it. The difficulty with the use of that word is that there is no labour code to revise. It is a purely arbitrary exercise to say what items are included in a labour code, what items are included under the heading of industrial relations, and so on. But it does seem to be generally recognized that a labour code ought to include at least these five things: legislation respecting minimum wages; legislation governing maximum hours of work; legislation on a maximum work week; vacations with pay, and statutory holidays with pay.

There are other things, such as the question of a check-off of trade union dues. There is the question of legislation for equal pay for equal work, which we have on the statute books. If I may confine myself to the five items that I said were really the minimum elements of a national labour code, I should like to point out that, so far, only one of them is on our federal statute books, namely legislation for vacations with pay. Even that was not put on the statute books by the Liberals. It was put on the statute books while the Conservatives were in power, despite the fact that as long ago as 1919 the Liberals, in that great convention that selected Mr. King as leader, promised significant legislation in this field.

About once a year I like to get from the library the book that reports the 1919 Liberal convention. It is a very interesting document. As a matter of fact tonight, for the first time, I found that one of the delegates at that convention in 1919 was the late Mr. F. C. Hamilton of Winnipeg, who was chairman of the board of the church in which I was minister the first time I ran as a political candidate back in the federal election of 1935. Let me say that although he was an active Liberal, and even though he did not agree with my politics, he recognized my right to enter the political field.

Mr. Munro: This is a constructive contribution.

Mr. Knowles: I missed that.

Mr. Munro: May I ask the hon. member if he feels that he is making a constructive contribution to the debate tonight?

Mr. Knowles: I did not think it was destructive to refer to the fact that a Liberal recognized the right of an individual to political freedom; but if my hon. friend thinks it is, I could withdraw it.

Mr. Munro: I thought it was an exercise in partisanship against which the hon. member is always talking, and for which he has a considerable distaste.

Mr. Douglas: It probably depends on your powers of comprehension.

Mr. Munro: It does not take much comprehending to discern a partisan speech by the hon. member.

Mr. Starr: May I just refer to the remarks made by the hon. member for Hamilton East, when he spoke of a partisan contribution? After all, that is a matter that is basic.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or making a speech?

Mr. Starr: I am rising on a point of order in respect of the remarks made by the hon. member for Hamilton East about partisanship in debate.

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member could be given the opportunity of making these remarks afterwards. It seems to me the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor now and he should be allowed to make his speech.

Mr. Starr: I think I have the agreement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to do this. I should like to refer to Hansard for January 30, 1963, page 3287, where I find the following:

> Mr. Pickersgill: If I may be permitted, respectfully, Mr. Speaker, to raise a question of privilege for just one moment, I suggest that the idea that any debate in this house should be non-partisan is foreign to our whole parliamentary system.

Mr. Munro: If I may, I would suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a very able defender in the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Douglas: A profound observation from a person so lacking in profundity.

Mr. Knowles: I did not realize that a mere favourable reference to a late friend of mine who happened to be a Liberal was going to produce this exchange and this point of order. I was just inviting members to do as I do once in a while, and read the promises made by the Liberal party in 1919. Amongst other things, of course, they promised measures in the social security field that perhaps are not relevant to the discussion tonight. I will quote them again on another occasion.

However, the Liberals did promise in 1919 that they would adopt the proposals of the International Labour Organization, that we would have a maximum hours per day law and a maximum days per week law. Hon. members would be quite proper in drawing my attention to the fact that I have not mentioned the number of hours that was promised in those days. We have moved from that day to goals that are more advanced, but on the federal statute books there is no law fixing the maximum number of hours or the maximum number of days per week. There is still no minimum wage law and there is still no provision for statutory holidays with pay. In so far as annual vacations with pay are concerned, there is a bill on the statute books but it was put there by a Conservative government when it was last in power. The Liberals, when they were in opposition, agreed with us that this legislation should be improved, but as yet nothing has been done about it.

When the Liberals were over on this side of the house in the last parliament, they were strong in their insistence that there should be a national labour code; that this kind of legislation on minimum wages, maximum hours, a maximum work week, vacations with pay and statutory holidays with pay, should be introduced. They have moved across the way and they still think it should be introduced. The hon. member for Halifax said so tonight. The hon. member for Essex West on May 30 in this session when speaking to one of my bills in this field suggested that this was not the way to do it, bringing in one bill at a time, but that what we should do was to bring in a national labour code. He admitted he could not speak for the government, but he was sure that before long a national labour code would be introduced by the Liberal party.

On that same day the hon. member for Kootenay East, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour, expressed the same sentiment. The way to do this, he suggested, was not by bringing in one piece of legislation at a time but to wait for Liberals to introduce a national labour code. On May 21 the Prime Minister was asked about one of these items, namely minimum wage legislation. He replied on that day that it would be introduced as soon as possible. I asked the present Minister of Labour on June 5 of this year when these items for a labour code which had been promised by the Liberals in the last election campaign were going to be introduced and he assured me, as can be found in Hansard for June 5, page 699, that these matters were under active consideration and would be on the order paper in due course.

Well, Mr. Chairman, there is the order paper; look at it and you will see that not one of these items is on it in the name of the government. There is no indication of a national labour code. The other day when the Prime Minister told us what the business would be for the balance of this session, there was no reference to a national labour code. Even when we look over the promises that the government has made for the next session, this does not seem to be in sight.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite fair on my part to refer back to 1919 and to speak in terms of the Liberal party that we have today as the Liberal party that came into power at the next election after that year's Liberal convention and which has continued the traditions of that time. It is a long time to wait, from 1919 to 1963, 44 years, and still not have implemented the things that were promised at that time. For the benefit of the hon. member for Hamilton East, let me read a paragraph from Mr. Mackenzie King's speech at the end of that convention, the convention that adopted these progressive labour planks such as the labour code to which I have just referred. This was his speech which concluded the convention at which he had been elected leader, and was away to his future career. These are Mr. King's words:

> If more is needed, that more is to be found in the platform which has been laid down by this convention. That platform, ladies and gentlemen, is the chart on which is plotted the course desired by the people of the country, as expressed through the voice of the Liberals assembled here. So with this chart and this compass, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, let us press on from this moment, a great, a united, a mighty force, making ever for new liberty, for wider freedom, for greater righteousness in the public affairs of this nation; press on, ever more zealous and united, till we have reached the goal where the principles and policies laid down on this historic occasion will have become——part of the law of our land.

—and I pause now to emphasize the next two words—

> —through legislation—

—and the rest of the sentence reads—

I do not think it is unfair on my part to say to the Liberal party in power today that these many years later we should not still have to be asking, as the hon. member for Halifax was asking tonight, for the Liberals to put into legislation the things they have promised across the decades. I urge upon the minister as strongly as I can to pay heed to what has been said to him from both sides of the house about a national labour code.

Proposals along these lines are before him in terms of private members' public bills that we have placed on the order paper. We are willing that these bills be passed or that their subject matter be referred to committees, or that any other course be taken, provided the government will recognize the importance of a national labour code to the industrialized economy we have now in this country.

I just want to mention one or two other things, and I mention them briefly, because the main part of what I wanted to say I have now presented to the minister. I want to hear from him on this question of a national labour code before this item of the estimates is concluded. I also want to tell him that when we get to the item that deals with the International Labour Organization we would like to hear what the government plans to do by way of ratifying some more of the conventions and recommendations passed by the International Labour Organization.

Canada has been a member of this organization since its inception. Canada has voted for many of the conventions and recommendations passed at the annual conferences of the I.L.O., but we have ratified very few of them. I hope this government will do better than the last Conservative government, and better than the previous Liberal government did in this important field.

I also support the position taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, that the national employment service should be separated from the unemployment insurance commission where it is used, we feel, mainly as a test of employment for the purposes of getting or being denied unemployment insurance. We think it should be brought directly under the Department of Labour and pushed as a major activity of that department.

These are the main things we want to place before the minister tonight, and I express the hope that he will deal with the points raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, and this whole question of a national labour code.

Now that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has slipped behind the curtains and may not raise another point of order, I wish to say I have received a note from the press gallery from the faithful representative of the Winnipeg Free Press. He was hidden by the post and I did not see him. I am happy to include him among the members of the press gallery present tonight.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we are considering tonight the estimates of a very important department, namely labour. In fact, the department is probably the one which is most influential, works the hardest, offers the greatest number of suggestions and carries out the largest number of studies concerning the various solutions which are proposed to the provinces and the whole of Canada.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) receives representations from all sectors of the Canadian economy, be it mining, industry or even agriculture. Day in and day out, he is always besieged by problems. Mention was made tonight of the feeling and the turn of mind prevailing in the province of Quebec regarding its economic situation. It was even asserted that members who represent Quebec ridings, that the people in Quebec, are not satisfied, because it is simply an economic matter if there are in Quebec more unemployed than anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member for Medicine Hat said earlier that the province of Quebec was turning down any assistance from Ottawa and that the great number of unemployed in our province was due to the turn of mind of the people and the members from Quebec, I say this to him: Ottawa collects $640 million more from the province of Quebec than the province gets from Ottawa; that is the difference between what is collected from and what is given to Quebec—$640 million.

It will be claimed that this amount is used to help either the maritime provinces or some western provinces, especially when we had to subsidize wheat in the west because foreign takers or buyers could not be found, or to subsidize the maritime provinces which are depressed at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, Quebec is not asking Ottawa for preferred treatment. But if Quebec refuses to participate in joint programs, or pension plans, it is because it wants to preserve its sovereignty, its autonomy. Quebec does not want Ottawa to interfere in its affairs. Quebec is only asking Ottawa to leave to Quebec what belongs to Quebec. I think the province of Quebec could very easily find ways to use those $640 million which are taken from it.

The situation of Quebec is different from that of Alberta or British Columbia. At the present time, British Columbia is asking Ottawa to ratify a treaty between British Columbia and the United States regarding the development of the Columbia river. You do not hear Quebec complaining about that request by British Columbia.

You do not hear either the province of Quebec complaining because Alberta deals directly with the United States about the operation of its oil wells. Certainly not.

The province of Quebec is not complaining either because industrialized Ontario sells directly to the United States or even to other foreign countries. Quebec is far from asking for preferred treatment. Quebec only wants to be respected.

With respect to the hon. member from Alberta, that is the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), who asserts that the outlook, the turn of mind of the hon. members coming from the province of Quebec is not right, that is probably the cause of separatism and independentism in that province. Well, Mr. Chairman, I say that the economic question is of prime importance in our province, just as it is in the other provinces, as well as in every part of the country.

The Minister of Labour, whose estimates are now before us, is well aware of that. We received the day before yesterday a telegram from the Lauzon shipyards' workers union, signed by Rene Barras, which reads as follows:

> We protest against the indecision of the government with respect to Canadian shipyards. Some time ago, the government cancelled its program for the building of eight frigates and now it informs us through the press, of the purchase by Canada of three English submarines at a cost of $30 million. These workers would like to know the future policy of the government. Does the government advocate the disappearance of Canadian shipyards, or what?

I suggest to the Minister of Labour that the situation at Lauzon is getting worse, that there is an ever-increasing number of unemployed. These are economic conditions caused by the policy of this government which, instead of providing work for our unemployed by having them build ships, frigates, prefers to purchase them from foreign countries.

We are in favour of buying those things from other countries when it is necessary to do so, but at the present time the situation is urgent in Canada itself, because a large number of workers are having a very hard time.

Mr. Chairman, it has been claimed that the province of Quebec has no solution to offer. But we do have solutions. We are asking the federal government to respect provincial autonomy. We are asking the federal government to give back to the province of Quebec what belongs to her.

That telegram proves that a shipbuilding program cannot be carried out in the western agricultural provinces, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, because they lack the required shipyards. But Quebec and Ontario have them. So why not give the benefits, the priority, to our own Canadian workers?

I give my utmost support to the maritime workers' union which is asking the government for shipbuilding projects, for new contracts which will enable our workers to earn an honest and decent living in their country, in their province and, in this case, in the province of Quebec.

We do have solutions. We have one which has been put forth by the province of Quebec. Quebec has offered a solution to the federal government, that of handing back to Quebec what belongs to her, of handing back to Ontario what belongs to Ontario and of handing back to the other provinces what belongs to each one of them.

Instead of centralizing, let us decentralize and respect provincial autonomy. This is what we are asking, not for one province but for all of them. How can a member from Quebec or elsewhere agree to any other solutions?

The pension plan suggested by the government might very well be applied provincially and by the province itself.

The provinces do not need Ottawa to set up joint programs. Why resort to Ottawa in order to pay an increasing number of bureaucrats and prevent the provinces from enjoying complete autonomy, when they all have an efficient administrative set-up and machinery?

Why not give to the provinces the financial means to look after the decentralization of planning, the development of their natural resources and of the industrial potential now available in Canada? This is the situation prevailing in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada. Quebec is no exception, and it is only a question of Ottawa recognizing the fair demands of the province of Quebec, as well as those of the other provinces.

Mr. Chairman, economic conditions now prevailing in Canada call for the immediate attention of the Minister of Labour. The minister knows that the solutions we are suggesting are practical, applicable and readily workable.

Instead of racking and cudgeling its brains to find new schemes to take from the provinces what little is left to them, why does the government not use the available means, that is the Bank of Canada?

We say over and over again, why should the policy which we are advocating not be applied? It is a possible solution. Why not use the Bank of Canada, in order to develop our natural resources and thus assist the provinces, school boards, municipalities, public bodies in the public administration? This is what the Canadian people are expecting from us, and the government is now trying to meddle in all fields of private enterprise to lower the human being, private enterprise and private efforts. For what purpose? For the benefit of a financial system which has shown its inefficiency.

In fact, was it not the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Towers, who stated in 1939 that the only restriction to the credit required to wage war was the availability of manpower and materials? Credit was available inasmuch as manpower and materials were available. Since we have from 400,000 to 500,000 unemployed—registered and unregistered, listed and unlisted but unemployed just the same—and since between one and two million people suffer from the present economic situation, why not apply the same principle as in wartime?

Mr. Chairman, why not apply in peacetime, in 1963, the same policy as we applied in wartime to put Canada on a war footing?

Why not set Canada on a peace footing, on an economic development footing?

We have the unemployed, we have the manpower and the brains, in fact we have everything we need except the credit which the government refuses to make available when it comes to take advantage of our industrial potential.

Social Credit has a solution which is not based on division. Saying that Quebec does nothing but beg from Ottawa, that it refuses to co-operate with Ottawa and to accept its conditions, does not help in the search for a solution.

Man does not live on bread alone. There is also the mind, the morals, the supernatural, the liberties. The freedom of man is as important as the food he can consume. This freedom we seek for individuals, we seek it not only for the province of Quebec, but also for all the provinces of Canada, without exception. What we are after is not dissension, but unity, a sort of unity based on an economic system which will ensure the development and emancipation of the provinces, and that of the human person in all the provinces.

Then, the Minister of Labour, the officials of his department and all of us will be happy to go before the electorate and tell them: While we were sitting in Ottawa, we passed legislation to put finance at the disposal of the human person, instead of putting the latter at the disposal of the former, as has been the case so far.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Peters: Before the hon. member takes his seat may I ask a question? So far as the Canada pension plan is concerned, Quebec has suggested it will be able to handle this matter itself, which I think is probably true. However, the result will probably be that the other provinces of Canada will not have a national pension program. What answer is the hon. member going to give to people living in his riding, but who work in my riding in another province and who will not be able to obtain a pension based on the work they do, whereas if we had a Canada pension plan the border between our ridings, being a provincial border, would be of no consequence?

Mr. Caouette: Any province in Canada can do exactly the same as the province of Quebec.

Mr. Peters: It would be too slow.

Mr. Caouette: If it is too slow they should move faster. If the province of Ontario wants its own plan, it is up to the province of Ontario, just as it is up to us in the province of Quebec to have our own plan. There is no objection. On a national scale there is no objection from the province of Quebec to meeting with all the other provinces to work out a mutual national plan that could be accepted by all the provinces, but without the intrusion and control of the federal authorities in the matter. If Ottawa can help, all right; but if Ottawa cannot help, then the province of Quebec can look after itself just as Ontario can, and the hon. member's riding also.

Mr. Webster: Mr. Chairman, although education is constitutionally a primary responsibility of the provinces in Canada, the simple fact is that at least 20 different federal departments or agencies are involved in the expenditure of money on some type of educational program. The departments that are most affected by this common trend toward federal participation in the federal field are national defence, citizenship and immigration, northern affairs and national resources and labour, as emphasized by the minister this evening and by his immediate predecessor.

This condition of federal participation is the result of the needs of our northern people and of our native population, of the members of the armed forces and their families, and of the unemployed, the handicapped, penitentiary inmates and other special groups. But it is due even more to a growing conviction that a modern democracy must view education as a basic human right and that survival depends upon the maximum development of every individual within the country.

Accordingly, Ottawa has become engaged in a wide variety of educational projects including subsidies, grants, scholarships, living allowances, etc. In addition, 84,000 children and 3,500 teachers attend federally operated schools. This federal activity accounts for 10 per cent of all public money spent on education in Canada.

It is significant that the Glassco commission refers to the administration of this varied program as "fragmentation" and emphasizes the fact that no machinery of any kind exists to co-ordinate these numerous educational activities at the federal level. The government should consider establishing, in co-operation with the provinces of course, a federal office of education or a secretariat to perform the following services:

1. To supervise the educational activities of more than 80,000 students at present attending federally operated schools at a cost in excess of $50 million annually.

2. To administer a program, in co-operation with industry, of research and retraining of workers required to meet the demands of automation.

3. To encourage and publicize the comprehensive programs of adult education at present offered by extension departments of universities across this country.

4. To act as a clearing house for matching grants and other contributions paid to the provinces for university construction, vocational schools, student loans, scholarships, special courses for new Canadians, handicapped children, apprentices, unemployed, etc.

5. To provide a medium for the distribution among provinces of information resulting from research studies and experiments conducted at the local level by school and university authorities.

6. To promote a greater understanding among educators through the exchange of teachers and professors from one province to another.

7. To encourage the provinces to take steps to facilitate the transfer of students from one part of Canada to another with a minimum of disruption in their programs of study.

8. To co-ordinate the educational work of the Canada Council, the national research council, the medical research council, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and UNESCO.

Let me repeat that these educational services are being performed now, when they are being performed at all, in a fragmentary and hit-or-miss fashion. I suggest it is time that serious thought was given to setting up a co-ordinating agency of some kind with the approval and support of the departments of education in the ten provinces of this country.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to participate briefly in this debate. First of all I would refer to the ministers of labour who have served successive governments since I first had the privilege of coming to Ottawa in 1953. We have been exceptionally fortunate in the calibre of men occupying this position, who have faced their various problems with a real sense of responsibility and sincerity. They have endeavoured to find solutions to these problems, and in this I include the present minister as well as those who have preceded him.

This has been a very interesting evening. It seems as though hon. members have been engaging in pleasantries, and the atmosphere seemed quite congenial until the sudden outburst from the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm in his reply to some harmless observations of my colleague from Medicine Hat.

With regard to the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference, I sincerely hope that the quiet representations and requests from the province of British Columbia will not go unheeded in the thunder of the demands which will be made on the federal administration from other sources.

Although my remarks tonight will be general, they will contain one or two specific points to which I will call attention. We have dealt with unemployment, and looking back across the years this seems to have been a favourite topic of discussion. However, it is not because various governments have failed to recognize the issue but rather that they have been unable to find a satisfactory solution. When the Liberals were in office the Conservatives lambasted them roundly for their lack of concern, but with a change of government this argument has merely shifted around a little. However, that does not detract from the earnestness with which various administrations have applied themselves to the task. We have all recognized the existence of this problem, but its very existence in a society such as ours is an indictment of our whole system. The matter of unemployment can only be dealt with effectively at the federal level, and that through a proper attention to monetary and fiscal policies.

Reference was made to the statement made by the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine which appears on page 4374 of Hansard as follows:

> In my opinion, nobody questions the responsibility of the federal government to ensure full employment. It seems that it has been said a long time ago that full employment is at first a responsibility of the federal government.

We fully recognize the fact that provincial administration and policies have much to do with this problem. However, basically I agree that the major responsibility rests with the federal administration because, as I have said, the conduct and direction of monetary and fiscal policy in the wider sphere is the responsibility of the federal government. It is an indictment of this system when we look around and see the hundreds of thousands of unemployed year after year. It seems we just cannot do anything about it. We keep referring to the increasing number of those employed, but yet face the fact that there is an increasing number entering the labour market each year for whom we are failing to find additional opportunities for employment. This has an effect on the morale of our people, and it is understandable that many of them are driven practically to the point of desperation through their inability to meet the demands of, and provide effectively and adequately for, their families. There is also a loss to society as a whole. There is a host of men and women anxious to engage in productive enterprise and gainful employment who, because of the economic situation, are unable to put their abilities and skills to work, not only in their own interests but in the interests of the nation. We must therefore recognize this problem and apply ourselves diligently to seek a solution thereto.

In a previous debate the Minister of Labour enumerated a variety of measures which the government had put into operation in an endeavour to solve the problem. He spoke about our training program, the winter works program, the winter house building program and others. I believe they are all good, but this does not get down to the basic problem. Until we do this these measures will just be palliatives and will not solve the problem of unemployment from the long term view. I think that the various departments of government rather tend to work against each other in the solution of this problem. A short time ago I gave an illustration where the Minister of Finance introduced certain measures in his budget resolution which we, as well as the people across the country, insisted would be detrimental to labour opportunities. Although there was some relaxation of these particular measures we find they were applied in part and will be further applied in stages as we go along. This has more or less frustrated the activities and plans of the Minister of Labour in his effort to solve the problem.

I wish to refer briefly to the plan to promote employment of workers over 45 years of age. The minister is giving this matter consideration and is urging that older workers be given the opportunity of gainful and productive employment. I suggest it would be a good thing in this regard to clean up our own house first. Someone sent to me a cutting from the Edmonton Journal of Monday, June 24, 1963, which is an advertisement for a handyman, and then in parenthesis appear the words "camp steward". This advertisement reads:

> Required for mine operation in northern Saskatchewan, must essentially have carpentry background, with knowledge of routine mechanical and plumbing maintenance, to service company townsite facilities. Applicants must be single, and between the ages of 30-45, position offers starting salary of $450 per month, five weeks annual leave, plane transportation, group pension and welfare benefits, apply in person to—Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd.

This company is a crown corporation, and it might be a good thing if the government were to give attention to the matter of giving older workers equal opportunities for employment in these agencies which are part of their responsibility. I suggest that matters such as this be taken under advisement and that something be done to ensure that government agencies or crown corporations themselves will not be guilty of discrimination against those over the age of 45. Certain considerations may enter into this problem, but I do not think they should debar these people from providing for their own needs and the needs of those dependant on them.

Perhaps, this matter I am about to raise does not fall directly under the control of the Minister of Labour, but it is a labour problem. The other day on orders of the day I asked a question about certain conservation regulations which have come into force as a result of which a great many fishermen in my area have been unable to engage in fishing during the past fall. When we come back to the fisheries estimates perhaps I will debate this a little further, in light of the minister's reply. Nevertheless an indication was given some time ago that certain measures would be taken to employ these people and to see they had sufficient work to keep them going. Once again, the department should have a vital interest in promoting labour opportunities for those who are deprived of the opportunity of making a living in the field in which they have been engaged. As far as the items on the order paper in connection with vocational training are concerned, they receive our wholehearted support. They are very important because of the changes which are taking place in our economy and in our society. I read recently that it is possible that one person may have to retrain from one to three times during his lifetime because of the changes which are taking place, so it is tremendously important that this work should proceed and that retraining facilities should be made available to all those who because of economic circumstances, have to move from one type of employment to another.

Mr. Peters: It is pleasant to see the easy manner in which these estimates are being handled. However, an intervention did take place tonight which highlighted one of the most important issues which has arisen in the labour field. I am referring to the provincial attitude which, I believe, will result in the loss of the Canada pension plan.

When I first came to Ottawa I was aware that in many of the areas under provincial jurisdiction there would never be a pension plan because of the management of certain companies and industries. I worked for the gold mining industry. That industry has probably the most reactionary management group ever assembled in any country at any time. It is certainly hundreds of years behind the times in labour relations. The federal government has not given the proper amount of consideration to the situation in this industry, though it should have done so, because to a large extent the industry comes under the jurisdiction of the central government. It is true that many matters which directly affect the lives and welfare of the employees come under provincial jurisdiction. This industry operates differently from any other. The shareholders who own it seldom live in the gold mining areas; they are dispersed throughout the nation and across the world. They have no connection with gold mining and, often, no connection with any other industry except for the shares they buy and the dividends they clip. This has made the industry difficult to organize and difficult to work in. In these circumstances the workers have looked to the federal government for help in solving at least some of their problems.

In none of the gold mines I know of is there any kind of pension plan. The miners have, accordingly, followed with great interest the suggestions which have been made with regard to pension plans over the past five or six years. I believe a great deal of enthusiasm for the Liberal party was generated by its spokesmen who went across the country campaigning on the basis of a Canada pension plan. Well, if the government had gone about making a mess of things it could not have done a better job than by letting the Minister of National Health and Welfare carry the ball in this field. Not only did she allow the province of Quebec to exercise the provincialism which it finds so very easy to operate when it wishes, but she allowed Ontario to make a stipulation that unless there were changes in the plan Ontario would not be interested, either. As a result tonight, when we are studying the estimates of the Department of Labour, there is no indication before us whether those engaged in the mining industry, the lumber industry and similar industries will be receiving a pension or not.

I was interested in the two provincial statements which were made tonight, because in my opinion they are so unrealistic. I believe the border between one province and another would be a much more physical thing than it is if, say, unemployment insurance benefits were paid on a provincial basis. I am certain there would be as many conditions and stipulations attached to the receipt of unemployment insurance as there are now to the other segments of the labour code administered provincially. There would be no uniformity and no opportunity for workers to travel readily from one province to another. I think it is unrealistic to suggest that the province of Quebec could go it alone, as the hon. member for Villeneuve has indicated it could. It might be his statement is true, as far as it goes. But Quebec only came into its own, industrially, within the last 15 years and there was a long period during which the people of Ontario and other provinces provided many benefits for Quebec which that province was not capable of providing for itself.

I doubt very much if it would be financially possible for the federal government to bring in a Canada pension plan if the provinces of Ontario and Quebec did not participate. I am almost certain it could not be done by the other provinces. We hear people speaking of co-operative federalism, the theory by which the provinces will get together and tell the federal government how far it will be allowed to go. I think this should also be the attitude of the federal government. They should say this. They cannot afford to allow the Minister of National Health and Welfare to go around the country peddling the idea of a plan. Let us call the provinces together immediately, and let the Minister of Labour see what co-operation he can get for a national labour pension plan placed under the Department of Labour, where it rightly belongs.

We have nothing to brag about in Canada with regard to the Department of Labour. I agree that the present minister has done an excellent job since he took office. I agree that the former minister also did well. I will agree that the officials are probably, in the main, better than the officials of some of the other departments which I shall not mention. But I still do not think there is anything to crow about. Our Department of Labour has many shortcomings. Let me give the committee an example. A young fellow who lived in a bunkhouse at Frobisher Bay got into an argument one night with some of his friends about whether the boss of his construction company should pay annual vacation pay. He wrote a short letter to me indicating that this was a simple problem, one which I would probably find no difficulty in answering quickly. Well,

I consulted the deputy minister of labour. He did not have the faintest idea. He referred me to Mr. Wilson who had an idea, because he had made up his mind. He had decided these things many times in the past. He makes up his mind and reaches a conclusion, not because the law is there but because he makes the decisions. That is the way in which it is decided. Well, I did not agree with him. I went to the Northwest Territories council and asked them. The chairman did not know whether this applied in the Northwest Territories or not, though the act says it does. He said he would have to ask his lawyer. I telephoned the lawyer. He said he had not been counsel to that body for over a year. He did not know, but he believed the opinion I had received from the other officials was not correct. We then checked with the Department of Public Works because they were the ones who had the contracts. I found it all hinged upon one simple fact—whether or not the government had declared the contract to be in the interest of Canada, or for the good of Canada.

Unless parliament has declared the contract to be in the interest of Canada there is no right to this holiday pay. One might think that since parliament has, presumably, voted money for the project it would automatically be considered as being in the interest of Canada, but apparently that is not the case. A particular little official has to decide that it is in that category. So, after going through four or five departments I had scarcely any more information than when I began. However, the Department of Public Works intends to be specific next time. Next time they sign a contract, the contract will specify that vacation pay must be paid. We will get around the problem by specifying it in the tender. However, it seems to me if we are going to brag about our Department of Labour we should at least make sure that it does the things we have already decided, as members of parliament, we want to do. Vacations with pay should be granted to the people who come under federal jurisdiction. Let us make this provision apply to contractors in the Northwest Territories.

It is a very remarkable thing that the same young gentleman writes me he is now at home because he has a broken leg. He came out of Frobisher with this broken leg, and he was not getting any money. Where do you think we found the money was coming from? It was coming from a trust company in Montreal and not from a compensation board in Quebec, which is the province adjacent to that area in the Northwest Territories. The payment was coming from a trust company simply because some other arrangement had been made. We cannot take much credit for laws like this.

It has been suggested tonight that we should develop a national labour code. I think I can give a warning now that we are going to try to do this when the new territories are set up. We will hold up that bill until we are satisfied with the labour legislation that will be applicable in the new territories. If we are going to set up a new province, let us set up model legislation for the various departments over which the federal government has jurisdiction. Let us not put in some haywire set-up such as we now have which does not apply to those under federal jurisdiction and is completely discriminatory. You almost need a Philadelphia lawyer to find out what it does mean.

We have computers at North Bay now, so perhaps we could use those facilities in order to develop the type of legislation we need. I think a much easier way would be to write in black and white the various provisions we need, so that this federal government would be able to say it is leading the way. Certainly there are members on the liberal side of the house who are familiar with some of the major problems in the labour field. Surely they will have enough gumption to help us develop a labour code of which we can be proud. Let us apply it to the area in which the federal government is responsible.

I am only guessing, but I would think that the federal labour department is probably the third largest such department in the dominion. It would probably follow behind the departments of labour in Ontario and Quebec. It would not be a bad idea, therefore, if the other provinces that were developing new legislation could look at the federal department and say: This program appears to be working on the federal scene, so we are willing to accept it as a minimum in our province. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that about 10 per cent of the working force comes under the jurisdiction of the federal Department of Labour. I think we would find very few of them would be hurt by a minimum wage of $1.25 per hour. I do not imagine anybody would get a wage increase at that level, unless it might be the char staff of the House of Commons or other people in that category. I would think that the eight or nine statutory holidays we would suggest as a minimum for the labour code would be holidays for which the majority of people under federal jurisdiction would be paid. I would think the compensation laws and regulations probably are not worse in the federal field at the moment than the minimum standards we would be able to establish, but they are better than those in most of the provinces.

I think the same situation would apply in nearly all fields that the federal labour code would cover. It would provide the provinces with an opportunity to upgrade their legislation and in many cases establish unity that is now sadly lacking in much of this legislation.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the minister is not going to be too proud of the federal Department of Labour until he can come before the house and say that he and his representatives have been willing to endorse the labour convention adopted in Geneva. We, in Canada, have adopted less of this labour convention than many of the newly emerging nations in Africa. I think it is time the Canadian public demanded of the federal Department of Labour that they give support to these labour conventions. In many cases it is only because the general public is not aware of the fact Canada has not endorsed them that has allowed the government to continue ignoring many of these conventions.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned many of the problems we have in organizing and establishing union-management relationships. Many of these problems stem from the fact that we have not endorsed and do not support many of the labour conventions that have been endorsed in other parts of the world. These are some of the things to which I think we should give consideration. The hon. member for Halifax mentioned a national labour code, and this has been referred to by the Liberal party since 1919. We have come a long way since that time and yet things that were suggested in 1919 have not been put into legislative effect. I suggest there are many other things that would bring the labour code up to date and give the federal Department of Labour a position of leadership to which the provincial authorities would give consideration.

There are other problems with which we should concern ourselves. I believe one of them is the lack of intervention by the federal Department of Labour in the many contracts that are signed by this government. Many of these contracts are yellow-dog contracts. They are contracts that are a disgrace to this country and a disgrace to democracy. There are contracts that are signed between unions and companies when there are no employees at all. Contracts are being signed years before they are even going to be ratified. I believe this is something to which no government should be willing to lend its support and should not in any way endorse. On many occasions we have raised specific cases of this nature.

I am sure there are many members who have raised specific cases in relation to the building of the trans-Canada pipe line, because it was one of the worst offenders in many of these labour relations fields. The same situation has applied to all gas line construction in every area where secondary lines are being established. You will find contracts being agreed to before there are any employees of the contractor. This system has worked fairly well for the unions and fairly well for the companies, but damned poorly for the employees whom both of them were supposed to be protecting. I think the government should give some consideration to this matter. The one example I cited in the Northwest Territories illustrates the reason I believe the federal government should always supervise the contracts that are being let in those areas in which the federal government has jurisdiction, in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon. Certainly, it would appear to me that when the Department of Public Works signs a contract with a contractor which does not contain the minimum requirements of federal labour laws, that is not in keeping with the spirit or intention of the labour provisions of the government itself. This is something to which the government should give its attention.

There are many things, Mr. Chairman, I am sure that we could say about the Department of Labour that would be good as well as bad. I am sure the minister will hear the good things from other members. There are some faults in the department that should be corrected. I am sure that as they are drawn to the minister's attention they will be corrected. I would strongly urge him, when he replies, to give us an indication of whether or not he is willing to fulfil this pledge that has been made all across the country to establish a national labour code which would result in the improvement of the standards in all the provinces. If he does this, I am sure it will add to the stature of the Department of Labour and the responsibilities they have.

I feel the minister should be congratulated upon what he did in connection with the recent labour dispute which resulted in the establishment of a trusteeship. Although I am not in agreement with what he did, I think he handled the matter very well. I think he made a good choice in the trustees. The minister should be given credit for the manner in which he has handled this matter, and for the fact he is now willing to have the trusteeship report periodically to parliament. I would only caution him that he is going to have a great deal of difficulty in the future every time there is a problem of national importance. I presume the next problem will be in connection with the railway workers. As soon as there is a problem there will be a huge outcry from the public demanding trusteeship as a solution, in each case where the national economy is affected. This is going to be hard to do and I am sure the minister will give his attention to the matter.

In closing I would like the minister to keep in mind that his department has been very neglected in the past, in relation to the number of people it serves. In the main the people it serves are highly paid workers in government services across the nation. They enjoy better wages and higher standards than many other people, and if the minister will give the leadership that he is capable of giving, then this can become a much more important department of the federal government.

Mr. Herridge: I will detain the committee for only a few minutes, but I cannot resist saying a few words as an old, unrepentant socialist, as a socialist who realizes our economy is controlled by the power elite who own the commanding segments of our economy, as they do in the United States, in Great Britain and in a large part of Europe. However, regardless of this unfortunate situation, I wish to congratulate the minister on his appointment and we all wish him well in all he undertakes to modify the ill effects of the system under which we live. I know he is well intentioned, as are most of the members of the house. All of us want to do something to improve the situation under which we live, by pecking away at it slowly from day to day.

I am one who recognizes that under a capitalist democracy it is parliament's role to do what it can to bind up the casualties of capitalism by labour legislation and by unemployment insurance, which in reality is an insurance against revolution. If we did not have unemployment insurance we would have unemployed workers marching down the streets of every city in the country. We all want to do the best we can with social legislation, and so on; but regardless of this, here we are living in this prosperous country, rich in natural resources, and we have hundreds of thousands of Canadians unemployed. Why? They are unemployed because parliament does not control the economy of the country. That economy is controlled by the power elite I first spoke of, whose first concern is the profits of their corporations and not the welfare of the Canadian people or their responsibility to them as a whole.

I give due credit to the minority who do something to consider the communities in which they live, and for the employees whom they employ. However I want to illustrate this situation briefly because it sticks in my gizzard when I think of it.

The other evening I mentioned a mine in British Columbia, the Reeves MacDonald mining company which is a subsidiary of a United States corporation. The minister's parliamentary secretary knows all about it and I am sure he is sympathetic to the plight of the unemployed miners. Here is a company which refuses to pay its workers the going wage in the district, workers who have the moral support of all communities in the Kootenay area. This company, which made large profits and transferred them to the major holding in the United States, although it has this large Canadian natural resource, refuses to do the right thing by its employees.

Then there is the Falconbridge mining company which has done very well out of Canada and which has very valuable property in it. But because of automation and changing smelting methods it has laid off hundreds of men, and it does not consult the government of Canada to see what it can do for their benefit. However I am sure the minister will do all he can to modify the ill effects of this type of lay-off.

Then we have International Nickel, which has disclosed its intention to lay off about 2,000 workers, at a time while we in this house are trying to do what we can about the unemployment situation. I say without any hesitation that these large corporations are not accepting their responsibilities to the Canadian people and to parliament.

We have large coal resources in Alberta and British Columbia, and we have this manpower idle. I am not saying they can all be coal miners, but what are we doing? We are inviting capital from Japan to develop our coal mines.

Our farmers on the prairies have prospered in recent times, but we cannot pat ourselves on the back on that account. They are prosperous because of the needs of the people of China, the Soviet union and various other countries.

I want to emphasize the fact, and I do not think it can be satisfactorily denied, that powers beyond the control of this parliament actually dictate the direction of the economy, who shall work and who shall be unemployed. All we in parliament can do is bind up the wounds caused by the defects of the system under which we live. I say this without any fear of contradiction, and recognizing all that has been done by parliament to remedy the situation in, shall I say, a tidbit approach, which is the only approach it can take under these circumstances unless it is willing to face the situation head on and challenge these corporations.

Unemployment for thousands will continue as one of the effects of the system under which we live, periodic large scale unemployment, poverty for many people in our country, low standards of living conditions, and insecurity for many people until parliament is willing to take action to own or control the major sections of our economy. When I say "control" that does not mean we are going to interfere with the day to day operations of corporations, but rather make them accept some responsibility as a result of their control of natural resources which have been granted to them by federal and provincial governments.

In wartime we can mobilize all our labour, create prosperity and do anything we wish to undertake that is physically possible. But in peacetime we sit here doing the best we can, improving this piece of legislation and that piece of legislation, and yet not really doing anything to solve the problem over a long term basis. In 1945, during the last world war loan, we raised over $2 billion in Canada.

I suggest we have got to meet this challenge head on in the not too distant future if we are to maintain democracy in this country and give the Canadian people the prosperity and security to which they are entitled. Parliament can meet these needs at the present time if it is willing to do that, if it is willing to challenge the power of these people who will not accept their responsibility, if it is willing to employ the capital resources of the country and say profits will not come first, but rather the welfare of the Canadian people. That is all I have to say, but I could not resist these few remarks.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I will not delay the minister too long from making his final comments, but there are a few things which have to be said when we are discussing this problem of unemployment. I should say, perhaps in contradistinction to my distinguished colleague from Kootenay West, I feel I am not so much an unrepentant socialist as an analytical socialist, and it is because I am an analytical socialist I feel some things have to be said in the context of this debate on unemployment.

I always have the feeling when we discuss unemployment that we are dealing in unrealities, or that we are trying to fit facts into a framework that no longer exists. I have much the same feeling when we discuss defence matters, that we seem so foolishly to be attempting to devise a policy for defence that is fitted to a set of circumstances that dissolve before our eyes.

I would like to put on the record one or two quotations from a document produced by a very responsible organization, the fund for the republic research organization in the United States, under the presidency of Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president emeritus of Chicago university. They produce what they call occasional papers and they have issued one quite recently called, "Consumers of Abundance" which is very apropos of our debate tonight:

> The advance of science has for many years been undermining the two pillars of our economy—property and work. Each at length has fallen from its place. Property is no longer the primary source of economic power, and ownership no longer establishes the significant, functioning connection between people and the things they consume... Public understanding must eventually overtake this transformation in the relationship of modern man to his physical environment. Fundamental changes in the social order—in man's relationship to man—are therefore in prospect and are already in process... Full employment, for example, now seems to be not only an unattainable but an outmoded objective of economic policy. What takes the place of wages in a workless society? If such a question must be asked, then others follow. Does profit remain a useful standard of accounting in a propertyless society? But these questions are not only too big; they are premature. Before they can even be asked, the scientific revolution that occasions them must be more closely examined.

Then the paper proceeds to examine some features of the scientific revolution. There is one very interesting report concerning the Middle East with regard to which they say:

> Obviously, the purpose in designing the automatic petroleum refinery is not to replace the one or two human operators who still remain on the payroll. This was the naïve idea of a Middle Eastern petroleum prince for whom an American oil company was building a refinery not long ago. Out of consideration for the underemployed fellaheen who were to squat in the sand outside the refinery fence, he asked whether jobs might not be created by disengaging the robots from the valves. The engineers took him seriously enough to re-examine the entire control system. They had to conclude that no team of human beings could be trained and co-ordinated to do its work.

Then they have some interesting figures.

> In the last 10 years, however, as the index of manufacturing output has climbed from 75 to 110, the number of production workers has hovered around 12 million. It is evident that the number is now due to decline. In the electrical industry, for example, production employment shrank by 10 per cent in the six year period from 1953 to 1959; during that same period production in this industry increased by 20 per cent.

Then they have this to say:

> In the long run, larger questions must be asked and answered. If a fraction of the labour force is capable of supplying an abundance of everything the population needs and wants, then why should the rest of the population have to work for a living? Preposterous alternatives come forward: give away programs on television suggest that television might be employed to give the abundance away instead of trying to sell it. If production cannot be maintained at a profit under such circumstances, then why should a profit be made? Some other standard of accounting might serve even better to reduce waste and inefficiency.

Then they also say:

> The nation's principal economic problem has become that of certifying its citizens as consumers of the abundance available to sustain them in tasks worthy of their time. What disturbs the scarcity economist, of course, is that such certification is likely to be provided by the public payroll. It must be recognized, however, that these activities—along with urban rapid transit, the enhancement and conservation of natural resources, public works, the best kind of medicine, the operation of museums and so on—have never been or can no longer be conducted at a profit. Most of these activities and institutions are now short-changed. With abundance to support the expanding portion of the population engaged in them, we may anticipate that they will assume a higher priority in our civilization.

Then they go on to say:

A really adequate program of assistance to the underdeveloped countries might engage large numbers of disemployed factory workers in teaching their skills to people now entering on their industrial revolution. For some time to come, we can be sure, the real work that remains to be done in the world will stave off the spectre of universal leisure.

But I would point out that in order to do so there will have to be what some of us have been advocating in season and out of season for a very long time, that the productive capacities of our society must be placed at the disposal of such work. It will be impossible, for instance for Canada or any other industrialized country to play a significant part in this work of developing the undeveloped areas of the world unless the surplusses which accrue from our industrial society are made available for that work.

That will require a vast overhaul of our entire fiscal system. It will entail a vast overhaul of our whole system of private ownership. It will necessitate enormous public expenditures both directly within our country and in the shape of long term credits to these areas.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that until the government, either now or in the very near future, faces this problem it will be wasting its time and destroying the hopes of the Canadian people if it produces again and again these ideas that in some way or another we can solve the problem of unemployment in a world which has a decreasing demand for human labour and an increasing capacity for producing material goods. These are the problems we should be facing now, rather than introducing gimmicks to try to put one or two men to work here and keep them at work a little longer or retrain them in the hope that the job for which we retrain them will not disappear before they come on the labour market. Let us reorganize our economy and really solve this problem of production and distribution in a modern industrial society.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I will not take very much time in replying briefly to the comments which have been made by hon. members. First, I wish to thank all members who took part in the debate and who were kind enough to extend their good wishes to me and to the Department of Labour, and also to those members who pointed out to me and the department ways in which the service of the Department of Labour could be improved. I want to assure members of the committee that each of the suggestions put forward tonight will be given the most careful consideration in an effort to apply them in the way that has been suggested by hon. members opposite and on this side of the house as well.

I might mention to members of the committee that in the past several months the energies and activities of the Department of Labour have been almost entirely absorbed in problems of industrial relations. I think it is a fact that in this field the Department of Labour carried the heaviest burden it has carried since away back in the war years, at least, according to some of the experienced personnel of the department. I certainly share the views expressed by the hon. member for Ontario and others with respect to the capacity and dedication of the officers of the Department of Labour.

But notwithstanding these other absorbing activities in the field of industrial relations we have been actively aware of and actively concerned with a number of other problems that have been raised by hon. members opposite. The national employment service is a very important service and I do not think its role has been overstressed at all by the discussion this evening. As I indicated on Tuesday, we have taken steps to strengthen the personnel resources of the national employment service to make it more aggressive and more effective in the allocation of manpower in Canada in a systematic way.

The Gill committee recommended that the activities of the national employment service could be strengthened by severing this service entirely from the unemployment insurance commission and placing it under the direction of the Department of Labour, so that the two phases of the manpower problem, the placement phase and the policy phase, could be properly interrelated and integrated to the benefit of both sides of the equation. At present this problem is under very active consideration and I hope that in the near future it will be possible for me to make an announcement indicating that some steps have been taken in this direction in strengthening the further work of the national employment service.

The matter of the labour code has been raised by the hon. member for Halifax, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Timiskaming and others. I certainly share their enthusiasm and interest in a national labour code covering most of the items enumerated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which are also in my own mind as the principal ingredients of such a national labour code. It is my view that it might be preferable to bring all these items together, if possible, into a single piece of legislation and have it regarded as a code setting a level for employment standards in Canada.

It is true that the national leader of the Liberal party indicated to the people of Canada in the last election campaign that this would be undertaken by a new Liberal government. As far as I am concerned as Minister of Labour, I have not lost my interest or my determination to pursue this particular commitment to a successful conclusion, and the Department of Labour has already undertaken very extensive preparations in the direction of the development of a national labour code. I hope that the words I used in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will be appropriate and valid as time goes on.

Mr. Knowles: How long does it have to go on?

Mr. MacEachen: The words "in due course" are indefinite, but I hope they will not be so indefinite as to test the patience of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre unduly. We are working actively on this matter at the present time. I should like to be able to assure the committee, but I am not in a position to do so, that this problem will be dealt with at once, but it is not being neglected by any means and it is under consideration not only by the Department of Labour but by the government as a whole at the present time.

A number of other matters were raised. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the ratification of I.L.O. conventions. We are presently taking steps to ratify the convention with respect to discrimination in employment in occupations in Canada and are seeking the concurrence of provincial governments to ratify this convention at an early date.

I think these are the main general points raised by hon. members requiring immediate reply. All proposals which have been made with respect to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act will receive consideration in an orderly development of the program to strengthen the efficacy of the Department of Labour in the fields I have enumerated.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether the minister would summon up courage and assure us that these things he has talked about will appear before us in the form of legislative proposals not later than next session: amending the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act; a national labour code; implementation of whatever is to be taken from the Gill commission report? I could go on, but if he would assure us of those three for the next session he would be a great Minister of Labour.

Mr. MacEachen: Subject to the approval of a number of other persons directly involved, I have no hesitation in saying that we will want to take action on the Unemployment Insurance Act and the labour code within the time mentioned by my hon. friend. I would be very rash indeed to give the same kind of assurance with respect to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act because, as at the present time, I have not, nor has my department given the kind of consideration in depth to the proposals put forward to justify my giving an assurance of that kind. However, we will consider these proposals and perhaps at a later date I will be glad to add this particular suggestion to the rather optimistic prospect I have given in connection with the other two.

Mr. Churchill: We are in a very co-operative mood tonight on this side and have not said a word for two and a half hours. Could we continue a little longer and pass this department? I point out the fact that by way of interim supply we have already passed eight out of the 12 months supply for the fiscal year 1963-64. Money has been spent and programs are going forward. There are still another 15 departments to consider before the Christmas recess and we are prepared to sit longer tonight and pass the department. However, if there is not a disposition on the part of the house generally to complete the department I am not sure we would want to sit more than another 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. Knowles: We are all in a co-operative mood but we have been in session since eleven o'clock this morning, and many of us started at nine o'clock. Speaking for my friends over here we would be willing to let item 1 carry so that the general discussion will be over, but we feel the other items are important and deserve more consideration. With the passing of item 1 I think we should recognize it is ten thirty.

Item agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Ten thirty.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the acting house leader if he can outline the business for next week?

Business of the House

Mr. MacNaught: On Tuesday we will have a supply motion. On Wednesday we will take the third reading stage of the Income Tax Act. When that is completed we will consider the resolutions, first, respecting the appointment of a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping and, second, with respect to vocational training. I am not sure in which order these resolutions will be taken. I regret very much I cannot project the legislation beyond that stage but negotiations will go on on Monday to arrange something.

Mr. Churchill: Tuesday.

Mr. MacNaught: I would remind the house that we meet at eleven o'clock on Tuesday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being ten thirty o'clock, pursuant to special order passed on Friday, November 1, this house stands adjourned until eleven o'clock on the morning of Tuesday next.

It being twenty seven minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

The following items were passed in committee of supply this day:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

A—Department

General administration—

1. Departmental administration including grants as detailed in the estimates and the expenses of the international labour conferences, $1,290,400.

1a. Departmental administration, $15,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 12, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ORLIKOW—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT RESPECTING T.C.A. WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On numerous occasions in this house questions have been asked of the government in respect to the proposed move of the T.C.A. repair facilities from Winnipeg to Montreal. The matter has been debated on various occasions in the house, and an important factor in the decision to move the repair base was a report submitted to the management of T.C.A. by a management consultant organization, Dixon-Speas.

On numerous occasions members of the house, as well as the government of the province of Manitoba, have asked that this report be made available to them so that the information and recommendations contained in it could be analysed and assessed. To date the government has refused to make this report available, either to members of the house or to the government of Manitoba; yet the Winnipeg Free Press of November 5 carried a report that the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mrs. Konantz) wired the Prime Minister urging the appointment of a new person or tribunal to study the whole question.

The same news story reports that the Prime Minister replied that such an appointment would be an evasion of the government's responsibility and merely another delaying action, and the Prime Minister suggested that:

> —the government of Manitoba and appropriate bodies in Winnipeg put forward all the evidence they could assemble on these other factors.

The same issue of the Winnipeg Free Press reports:

> Mr. Pearson's telegram was read at the Winnipeg South Liberal association meeting Monday night. Mrs. Konantz said she had seen the Dixon-Speas report and could understand why it could not be made public. She said it contained information which could not be given to Canadian Pacific Air Lines, T.C.A.'s main competitor.

My point of privilege is that members of the house and the Manitoba government have been refused access to this important document upon which rests the main argument for the movement of T.C.A. repair facilities from Winnipeg to Montreal, while the document has been shown to the hon. member for Winnipeg South. This demonstrates again partiality to government members and is an infringement of the rights of all other members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak to this question?

Mr. Knowles: We would like to hear from the Minister of Transport.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I only heard part of the statement as I was coming into the chamber. However, if I heard it correctly it raises a very important matter. Certainly I would want to consider it quite carefully before making a statement on it, because this report has not been shown even to my colleagues. Probably I should not develop the subject without knowing what was said by the hon. gentleman. Perhaps I should look into his statement quite carefully when I have the actual text.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In this connection, may I say that this appears to be another step toward contempt of parliament, and I should think the Prime Minister would be the one who would answer as to whether information was made available to the Liberal association of Winnipeg that has been denied to the parliament of Canada.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I can deny that statement at once. Naturally I would be very glad to look into the report that has been given to the house from the press, and, either the Minister of Transport or I, if there is anything to be said on this matter, will say it in the house. Surely we cannot be expected to comment on a newspaper report of this importance without having had an opportunity to look into the matter. However, as far as the hon. gentleman's statement is concerned, I can deny it at once.

Mr. Speaker: I have to decide whether there is or is not a question of privilege. Once more I should like to refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 113, which reads in part as follows:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy.

I noticed that no motion followed the question of privilege. In the circumstances I must rule this is more in the nature of a criticism or a complaint than a question of privilege.

Mr. Orlikow: May I say that I shall be glad, after I hear the statement by the minister explaining precisely what has happened in this matter, to move a motion tomorrow or whenever the minister may make his statement.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I think it should be made clear this is not merely a complaint. The hon. member is raising a matter which is of vital concern to the privileges of this house, in that a document which has been denied to members of parliament and the government of Manitoba allegedly, according to the press, has been made available to a member of this house sitting on the government side. This is certainly a matter of privilege and not merely a complaint, if the hon. member's own statement is correctly reported. I think an explanation is due from the government as soon as they have an opportunity of interviewing that member and finding out whether she actually made the statement attributed to her.

Mr. Speaker: As I said before, there is no doubt about the importance of the matter. However, if it is that important it should be followed by a motion. No motion was presented this morning. I do not mind taking the matter under consideration for a day or so. I think we will just leave it there, and I will take it under consideration and give a final decision tomorrow.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister tell us whether he has shown a copy of the Dixon-Speas report to the hon. member for Winnipeg South?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that question is wrapped up with the allegation made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I did not hear the whole of that allegation; I heard only the latter part of it, and it seems to me it is of the utmost gravity and seriousness. Therefore I would prefer to take the question as notice and leave it to be answered with the other.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Jorgenson: I presume then the answer is yes.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member has no right to make any such presumption.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): How could he make anything else?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport or the Prime Minister whether arrangements have been made with a delegation from Manitoba to meet with the federal government, concerning the question of the transfer of the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base from Winnipeg and, if so, what will be the date of that meeting?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there has been no request for another meeting, but I will have to look into that matter and see if a request has come in over the week end. If a request is made, naturally we will be very glad to receive the delegation.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the minister need notice to answer the question whether or not he showed the Dixon-Speas report to the hon. member for Winnipeg South?

Mr. McIlraith: The answer to that question would be no.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, in view of the minister's clear statement that he does not need notice, then will he not now answer the question?

Mr. McIlraith: Well, it should be perfectly clear to the hon. gentleman that I did not show it to the hon. lady. The question arises out of the press release referred to earlier. I did not hear the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, except the latter part of it, and since that time I have tried to obtain a copy of his statement. Regrettably, I have not been able to obtain it because he had only one copy and it has gone to the Hansard staff. He did however send me the press clipping, the latter part of which there is an allegation to the effect that the hon. member saw the report. I certainly did not show the report to the hon. member.

Mr. Jorgenson: On a supplementary question, perhaps I can help the minister here. I have a copy of the Winnipeg Tribune of November 5, and in quotation marks there is a statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South:

"Mr. McIlraith showed me the Dixon-Speas report last week in Ottawa and I can understand why it cannot be sent out at this time".

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a loaded question.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a loaded quotation.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, earlier today you indicated that you would consider between now and tomorrow the question of whether or not there is a prima facie case of privilege on the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I rise to ask that in considering this you will bear in mind the statements now given to the house, one by the hon. member for Winnipeg South, through the press, that the Minister of Transport showed her the Dixon-Speas report, and the other a denial by the Minister of Transport. Surely in the light of these statements, if substantiated, there will be a prima facie case of privilege for a motion tomorrow.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Winnipeg South is not here, it would perhaps be chivalrous and also courteous for the house to let the hon. lady speak for herself before we reach a final decision on whether any question of privilege exists.

Mr. Knowles: Is not the Secretary of State aware that she spoke for herself at the Liberal association meeting?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a newspaper report.

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF CORPORATION

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-104, to amend the Broadcasting Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to substitute for the names Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and La Société Radio-Canada a name having the same meaning in both official languages; Radio-Canada.

[Text]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPRESENTATIONS OF CANADIAN LEGION RESPECTING RED ENSIGN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell the house what answer he gave yesterday to the delegation from the Royal Canadian Legion which asked that the Canadian ensign be continued as, or redeclared to be, the national flag of Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not asked by the delegation which I had the privilege to see to give any answer to their statement on this matter, and no answer was given. I repeated to them, however, the commitment that this government had entered into for the production through parliament of a Canadian national flag within two years of being elected.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister say whether such a flag will come before parliament, or simply be declared by way of order in council to be the national flag of Canada?

Mr. Pearson: This is a very important question of government policy and procedure affecting action to be taken in the future, and I do not think the matter can be dealt with on orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of importance now in view of the representation made yesterday. I therefore ask the Prime Minister whether he will give the house the assurance that the government does not intend to take direct action in this regard by order in council.

Mr. Pearson: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to give the house that assurance.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—STATEMENT RESPECTING MULTILATERAL NUCLEAR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. The NATO parliamentarians' conference have brought down a report from their military committee in which they describe the United States proposal for a mixed manned nuclear force as a military superfluity and therefore a waste. They go on to say that any increase in the nuclear force at the disposal of NATO would be superfluous.

I wish to ask the Prime Minister to what extent the Canadian government accepts this recommendation and agrees with it; and whether these views are being taken into consideration in the formulation of Canadian policy on defence and external affairs.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have not seen the report in question, but I shall have the privilege of consulting with the chairman of the Canadian parliamentary delegation to the conference at lunch today. As far as a multilateral nuclear force is concerned, the position taken by the Canadian government regarding its participation has already been declared. As to the general question, I think I should wait until I have consulted with the chairman of the delegation and studied the report.

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF SUBMARINES FOR CANADIAN NAVY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister tell us why he did not ask for price quotations from Canadian shipyards for building submarines in Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Because there has been no requirement for submarines, except for the three training ships which were ordered as part of production sharing arrangements.

Mr. Balcer: Why did the hon. gentleman not inquire among Canadian shipyards to see whether it would have been possible to build submarines in Canada before these three training submarines were ordered?

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure it would have been possible to build them here. I do not know what the price would have been. But, as I tried to make clear to the defence committee, this was a production sharing arrangement involving other considerations, and it was on that basis that the decision was made.

CLARESHOLM, ALTA.—DISPOSITION OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry. What are the present plans of the government regarding disposal of the buildings and the property of the former R.C.A.F. base at Claresholm, Alberta?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, this has been a somewhat long and difficult disposal problem with respect to Claresholm. I am glad to say that negotiations are now under way with the government of the province of Alberta looking toward an early conclusion of this particular problem.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

ROYAL COMMISSION—SUGGESTED REDEFINITION OF TERMS OF REFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister arising out of public discussion relating to preliminary hearings of the royal commission on biculturalism. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has given any consideration to redefining or reissuing the terms of reference of the commission, particularly as the discussions appear likely to involve the federal-provincial conference.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No. It was felt that the original terms of reference would be satisfactory for the purpose we had in mind. If as a result of the hearings now being held the commission itself feels there should be some change in the terms of reference, we would be pleased to consider the matter with the commission.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Is the Prime Minister thinking of inviting observers from the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism at the next federal-provincial conference to be held in November of this year?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I do not think that would be a very constructive idea.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question to put to the Prime Minister.

Since it seems obvious that the main stumbling block at present is the taxation question, does not the Prime Minister feel it would be a good thing if the members of the royal commission were made aware of the opinions of both parties as regards tax redistribution?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: It might be of some interest to them, as it would be of interest to the royal commission on taxation and to the royal commission on health problems.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council.

Does the minister intend to revoke the terms of reference of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, since the "Conseil de la vie française", through Mr. Florian Carriere, has found the commission's terms of reference to be unconstitutional due to the fact that culture, the same as education, comes under provincial and not federal jurisdiction?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the minister tell the house whether he will ask the commission to begin by recognizing both the existence and the equality of the two nations, as suggested by the St. Jean Baptiste societies, so that the work of the commission will not be hindered?

Mr. Lamontagne: I believe the terms of reference of the commission are sufficiently clear on that subject.

[Text]

WATER RESOURCES

SUGGESTED DIVERSION OF COLUMBIA WATERS TO PRAIRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is logical, topical and national in scope.

An hon. Member: The Kettle valley railway.

Mr. Herridge: My question is based on the fact that Canada has complete control of the Peace and Athabaska rivers and can divert these waters for the use of prairie consumers whenever required in the future.

Would the minister inform the house whether serious consideration is being given to the proposals made by the government of Saskatchewan for diversion of 6,000 cubic feet per second of water from the Columbia to meet the near future consumptive needs of the prairie provinces before Canada loses the right to divert such a quantity of water under the proposed treaty?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have had a considerable amount of correspondence with the premier of Saskatchewan on this very subject. The premier has made public the correspondence between the two governments concerned. I felt that this was not the way in which to conduct public business, but since the hon. member has asked this question I shall be glad to table the correspondence I have had with the premier of Saskatchewan on this matter.

I might also say that there are no provisions in the proposed Columbia river treaty which derogate from or purport to interfere in any way with the right to use the waters of the Columbia river system in Canada for consumptive purposes. The phrase "consumptive uses" is defined in the treaty as use which would meet demands for irrigation purposes.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs says there is nothing in the treaty that prevents use for consumptive purposes, does that mean we can divert 6,000 cubic feet per second from the Columbia under the proposed treaty?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That means that the demands of irrigation are not in any way involved or precluded under any term in the Columbia river treaty.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BERLIN—REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING RECENT INCIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at this time perhaps I might deal with the question asked on Friday by the Leader of the Opposition and that asked on Thursday by the hon. member for New Westminster with regard to the autobahn to Berlin.

I should say at once, of course, that we reject the implication in at least one of the questions with regard to the recent incident; it was suggested that the incident arose from provocative action on the part of the United States. On the contrary, the incident was the third in less than a month when the Soviet union has interfered with legitimate allied traffic.

There has, therefore, been no need on the part of Canada to make representations to the United States authorities. Throughout the recent incidents United States policy and resultant actions have been closely co-ordinated with the United Kingdom and France, who share primary responsibility concerning Berlin. We have been, of course, in close contact with the United States and our NATO allies who have acted in this matter, I believe, with care and restraint.

Although focused on what may seem to be minor points of procedure, incidents of this kind represent a continuing pressure by the Soviet union on the essential western right of free access to Berlin. They serve both as a reminder that this divided city remains a serious friction point in the improved east-west atmosphere and as a warning that the basic issues between east and west remain unsolved. Moreover, they reflect the ambivalent policy of the Soviet government, which on the one hand proclaims a policy of peaceful co-existence and, on the other, has recourse to military pressures in situations like those surrounding western rights of access to Berlin.

It is, of course, our view that all countries should seek to avoid provocative action particularly in delicate situations such as Berlin. We therefore hope that the Soviet union will ensure that their forces on the Berlin autobahn will cease to mar the improved atmosphere in east-west relations by such pressures, and will approach relations with the west in a manner which will be conducive to the conclusion of further and, we would hope, important agreements.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that free access to Berlin for the three powers is essential is not denied by any Canadian. In view of the rather lengthy reply by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in which he pointed out particularly the shortcomings of the U.S.S.R. in this regard, I ask him whether he has made any representations to the ambassador of the U.S.S.R. as to the need of there being no provocation on the part of the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On this specific point I have made no such representations to the ambassador of the Soviet union in Ottawa, but I have talked with the ambassador on a number of occasions about various matters and I have made suggestions which I believe, if followed, could considerably improve relations between east and west.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises from a hot dispatch from Newfoundland to the effect that the premier was invested with the grand cross of Prince Henry the Navigator, thereby entitling him to be called Sir Joey. Does this indicate a reversal of policy on the government's part with respect to titles?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is, of course, that there has been no change of policy, unless the hon. gentleman wishes voluntarily to assume one.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER PLANT—INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether the atomic energy control board have recommended that the heavy water plant which is in contemplation should be located in the Crowsnest pass area and, if so, is this recommendation going to be accepted by the government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the atomic energy control board have not recommended that the heavy water plant be located at Crowsnest pass.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister what location they have recommended?

Mr. Drury: They have made no recommendation as to location.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REPORTED AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS FROM FEDERAL TREASURY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance?

I know that without being given notice of my question, he will not be able to give me the exact figures, but I would like to know if the premier of British Columbia's statement to the effect that the province of Quebec has drawn last year $69 million more than it had paid in the federal treasury seems sensible?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what the Premier of British Columbia said. I will look it up and give my hon. friend an answer tomorrow.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR ACTION RESPECTING RISING PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice, which has just come to mind. In view of the fact that sugar is now selling at 22 cents a pound in the province of Quebec, has not the time arrived for drastic action on the part of the government to meet the situation?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member was in the house last week when, in answer to a somewhat related question put by his leader, I said it was the intention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to deal with this matter in a statement in the early part of this week, and I understand that is still the intention of the minister, sometime either today or tomorrow.

Mr. Howard: What about British Columbia?

Mr. Chevrier: He will deal with the British Columbia situation as well.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID IN RESTORATION OF OLD QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Does the federal government intend to share financially in the restoration of old Quebec, that is its historical section, as it does at the present time for the fortress of Louisburg?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reply I might say we have had no representations in respect to this matter at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Should the minister receive an official request from the government of the province of Quebec, would he comply with such a request?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order, and I think the first question should have been on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSUMER CREDIT—INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Could he tell the house when he intends to appoint the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the problem of consumer credit, and when will that committee start to function?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I understand, sir, that on Friday the house agreed to set up this committee, and I have no doubt that my hon. friend the Solicitor General and the assistant government whip—because the chief whip is ill—will be in touch with hon. members in other groups and parties in the house right away with a view to getting the appropriate personnel.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio. As the self-appointed champion of our farmers, does he intend to submit representations to the government and ask for the re-establishment of the 25 cents grant per hundred pounds of milk, the abolition of which has inflicted a loss of $6 million on our milk producers?

[Later:]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister without Portfolio. Does his refusal to answer the question indicate the extent of his interest in the farmers' problems?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FINANCE

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—REPORTED INCREASE IN U.S. TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked me a question arising out of a newspaper report of a speech made by the president of the B. F. Goodrich Company concerning United States tariff treatment of certain imports from Canada, tractor tires and rubber sealing strips, and he asked me specifically whether there is any retaliatory action involved by the United States.

I stated at that time I was confident there was no retaliation, and I would like to confirm that. About a year and a half ago, in May 1962, the United States enacted the U.S. tariff classification act of 1962, which was the latest of a series of laws enacted with the purpose of simplifying and modernizing their tariff schedules. U.S. law specifically states that the intent of this reclassification is not to raise duties, but there are increases and decreases in rates of duty involved in the application of the new U.S. tariff classification law, resulting from the rewriting of the schedules. The law was proclaimed on August 21, 1963 and brought into effect by the United States on August 31, about two and a half months ago.

We have been concerned for some time past about the fact that rates of duty on a number of products such as farm tractor tires would be effectively increased by the new classification, and we have drawn these concerns directly to the attention of our United States counterparts. As regards rubber sealing strips exclusively for automobiles, I am informed that no change is involved. The United States has undertaken to consult with Canada and other members of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, to assess precisely what tariff changes are involved in the new classification, and to seek mutually satisfactory solutions for any inherent problems. We will be pursuing these matters thoroughly in the consultations with the United States.

SUPPLY

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

LACK OF CONSULTATION ON MATTERS UNDER PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, this is the sixth and last supply motion of this session. I think perhaps the public can well understand that it is the privilege of the government to make certain that we have these six occasions on which to present motions of no confidence in the government. The timing of these motions is usually at the discretion of the government in consultation with the opposition. After almost four or five consecutive weeks of supply motions, we have come to the last one.

This amendment that will be moved by the official opposition to the last supply motion will deal with a subject that is very much in the minds of Canadians at the present time. The events of Sunday and Monday, when people all across Canada met in their churches and before their cenotaphs to pay respects to the more than 100,000 men who left the shores of this country never to return, form a background for the realization that this country of Canada means a great deal to all of us. At the time of the commemoration of these several wars we are faced with the fact that within two weeks we will have a dominion-provincial fiscal conference. It will start on November 25. As we approach this dominion-provincial conference we find there is a lack of that sense of well-being in Canada; we find that the politics of Canada have been stirred up like a hornet's nest.

This conference meets on November 25 under the shadow of what has been described as an ultimatum by Premier Lesage. We have to do certain things or else. This conference meets in the light of the obvious disturbance amongst the provinces over the Canada pension plan, which has been rejected out of hand by the province of Quebec. This plan is under very serious study by the province of Ontario, and generally speaking the provinces feel that on this subject there has been a serious invasion into the fields that are rightfully theirs.

Then again, we have had the recent blow-up in connection with the municipal loan and development fund. The members of the government of this country had to go to Quebec to try to pacify that province, because again there was a suggestion of the invasion of the jurisdictional field of the provinces. On reading the newspapers over the week end we noticed evidence that this crisis was not lessening. We have a minister of the Quebec government, municipal affairs minister Laporte, stating that there must be a rewriting of the constitution. This conviction is shared, in another way, by the leader of the opposition in that province. I point out these things to show that there is a hornet's nest.

Then Premier Bennett of British Columbia who says he speaks for Alberta as well, points out that they will not give any concessions to Quebec. I suggest therefore that we find the premiers of the provinces expressing grave concern about the invasion of their rights by the federal government, with various observations being put forward concerning what should be done about the situation. I think it is time the people of this country, particularly the members of parliament, had an opportunity to declare whether they have any confidence in the leadership that has been given in this house.

I should like to extend these remarks briefly by pointing out that other provinces, in addition to those I have listed, are showing deep concern. The province of Manitoba, which has always been noted for co-operation with any federal government, is deeply concerned over the new Department of Industry. The premier of Newfoundland, who is not known as an enemy of the present government, is very concerned about the actions of this government in relation to fisheries. I could continue and expand this list in great detail, but I think it suffices to say that even amongst the ranks of the government there exists confusion and disagreement.

I should like to quote now from the Toronto Star of November 4, in which there is a report of a statement by a member of parliament, who is supposedly a loyal Liberal, which is critical of the present leadership of the Liberal party. This criticism can only be understood as opposition. The hon. member is Steven Otto, Liberal M.P. for York East. He was speaking at an annual meeting, and this is what he said according to the report:

—said last night he will oppose his party's Canada pension plan if Quebec is allowed to remain outside the federal scheme.

Exempting Quebec from the national plan represents Quebec's "first step out" from confederation he maintained.

Quebec then could even "contract out" from defence, he stated.

The outspoken member said he was angered that government members have sat quietly while groups have proposed the equivalent of separation of a province. "Talk of separatism is almost treachery", be added.

He forecast a provincial plan in Quebec would run into trouble . . .

He charged the government with "apathy" for accepting a plan without Quebec. He said the government believes Quebec's opposition to the federal plan is "insurmountable". But he noted that despite rumblings of secession if Donald Gordon was reappointed, there was "not a peep" when the Liberal government named him to continue as Canadian National Railways president . . .

Mr. Otto said his stand has been endorsed 100 per cent by his riding association. He said he was in Toronto last Monday—

And so on. These disturbances, Mr. Speaker, and this opposition within the ranks of the Liberal party, the deep concern of the provinces over the invasion of their jurisdiction, are things that should be considered by the Prime Minister of this country. Not only are the provinces concerned about invasion of their rights, but the President of the Privy Council has stated very plainly that it is the policy of the federal government to withdraw from joint plans and joint operations upon which the two levels of government have embarked for many years. This statement by the President of the Privy Council, supported in the house by the Prime Minister, means that right before our eyes a retreat from the concept of federalism is taking place. This will be the subject of our amendment today.

I suggest, however, that the attitude the house should take should not be one of pessimism. It should not be the attitude that there is no hope. All is not lost, Mr. Speaker. There are signs that people do recognize there is a positive alternative to this rudderless ship that is now the government of Canada. I cite, for example, the words of a man who I think is known all across Canada as the spokesman and advocate of Quebec nationalism. I should like to quote the thoughts of Rene Levesque, one of the Quebec government's ministers. Just two weeks ago he said there was one way in which we could save confederation. This comment has been noted by the newspapers across the country. I intend to put forward the way to which Hon. Mr. Levesque was referring.

I should like to quote from some newspapers to show that there is an awareness coming into the editorial rooms of the newspapers across this country of the fact that there is an alternative to this retreat, to this letting federalism go and allowing this country to go back to a league of independent states. I quote from the Winnipeg Tribune of October 31, 1963:

While the Tories may be tempted to say, "I told you so," the Liberal government would be reckless and stupid to abandon policies consonant with the national interest simply because they had been initiated during the Diefenbaker tenure of office. It is to Mr. Pearson's credit that he has retreated from some of the stands taken during the election campaign and is now carrying on sound measures he inherited from the former administration.

This common sense attitude makes it all the more difficult to understand why Mr. Pearson and members of his cabinet seem to have rejected one of the most constructive and promising policies initiated by the Tories—what Mr. Roblin and others call co-operative federalism. This was a positive endeavour to get Ottawa and the provinces to work together in fields of divided jurisdiction—to neutralize the intolerable pressure of centralizers on one side and provincial-righters on the other.

Here you have evidence that thinkers across Canada realize that there is some alternative way. The Montreal Gazette for Tuesday, October 29, speaking about the Canadian pension plan, says this:

In both these cases it would obviously have been far better if the fullest exchange of ideas had taken place first. For the result of proceeding without earlier consultation has been much harshness of conflict (which is not for the benefit of federal relations), and great modification of uncertainty of legislation which does not enhance the prestige of the federal government.

It may also be that federal-provincial conferences may be held at more regular intervals. And these would be far more effective if much of the preliminary work of exchanging viewpoints had previously been carried on through a permanent federal-provincial secretariat, and through councils of ministers in particular fields.

It is important that federalism should display enough flexibility to grow in response of the needs of new times. The Canadian council of resource ministers may be the beginning of important new developments toward a more modern federalism.

The Montreal Gazette of November 6 last, speaking once more of the type of co-operation which had been carried into effect by the previous government, said:

This type of development could give Canadian federalism new life, new hope, new fellowships and new effectiveness. It will open up the prospect of future co-operation instead of conflict. The possibilities for developing this co-operative federalism are as numerous as the denial of such co-operation will be ominous.

I cannot speak in those beautiful words, Mr. Speaker, which I have just read, but I am going to do my best to point out that there is hope for new life for our federal system if the practices slowly and gradually evolved by the previous government are followed in regard to the relationship between the provinces and the federal government.

It was my privilege, Mr. Speaker, during the last two election campaigns to travel through the rural areas of both western and eastern Canada. During those two campaigns, in every speech I made I emphasized this one point, that Canada could not be strong if some parts of Canada were weak and if some parts or groups of Canada were being discriminated against. I asked the people of the rural areas to support the government of that day in our efforts to lift up those parts of Canada which had fallen behind, and to lift up those groups which had fallen behind or were being discriminated against.

An hon. Member: Like you did in the maritimes.

Mr. Hamilton: No government ever did more for the maritimes than the government led by the right hon. gentleman who is now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). Just as an illustration of this in other fields than that about which I have been talking, the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix for October 29 refers to a matter raised today by the hon. member for Kootenay West, namely water resources. This, Mr. Speaker, is the judgment of a Liberal paper:

> What appears to be lacking in all these considerations is a co-ordinated federal-provincial-municipal drive toward a comprehensive Canadian water resources policy and program. Leadership, we think, must come from the federal authorities in water conservation and development.

This is federalism. It is not domination of the provinces; it is working together for the mutual advantage of all Canada. Yet the President of the Privy Council says that this co-operation we have achieved in the past will be wiped out. This is the policy of the government. It is no wonder there is a hornet's nest buzzing around the ears of the Prime Minister today. The question in the minds of the Canadian people is, will he be strong enough to take a stand for something? One day it is this way, the next day another way, and another day another way. As the farmers say, every day the wind blows the weed bends.

During our period of office we tried to give some leadership. It is true that that leadership had to be quiet, careful and responsible. It is true that that leadership had to be moderate and restrained. It is true that that leadership had to be with complete frankness and friendliness. That is why when you look back over those five and a half years, with one or two exceptions there was relative peace between the governments at the provincial level and the federal government, because certain things were being done.

Mr. Pickersgill: Term 29.

Mr. Hamilton: We all heard and recognize the empty laugh of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. If he ever writes another book I hope he will then tell us the whole story.

Mr. Pearson: Are you going to read from a book?

Mr. Hamilton: I am going to quote from the dominion-provincial conference proceedings of 1957, as published by the queen's printer. For a start I will quote the words of the then prime minister on the evolution of a new concept in federalism.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman has brought my name into it I wonder if he would permit me to ask him a question. Would he quote what Mr. Frost, the then premier of Ontario, had to say at that conference about the attitude of Mr. St. Laurent on federal-provincial relations?

Mr. Hamilton: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, now Secretary of State, always likes to get up and run a rabbit across the trail. When I am hunting for moose I do not shoot rabbits.

Mr. Pickersgill: He used to be a white rabbit.

Mr. Hamilton: If you recall, Mr. Speaker, in 1957 the previous administration, under Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, had made agreements with the ten provinces respecting the fiscal relations which would exist for a five year period. The contracts were signed and these agreements were to be in existence for five years. A new government took office, a new government which had been expressing in opposition its concern over this constant tendency toward centralization of power in the federal government. This federal centralization was very noticeable in dominion-provincial relations, so it was only natural that there should be a statement of policy by the new government the minute this conference was called.

Let me emphasize again, Mr. Speaker, that there was no obligation on the new government of 1957 to call this conference. There were contracts in effect for five years which would have meant that we could have carried on without those tremendous increases in payments by the federal treasury to the provinces, which would have wiped out all the deficits we had during those five years. But in spite of the fact that there was an agreement with every province in Canada the new government called the provinces in, and in the opening paragraph of the report of the proceedings I have here appear the words of the then prime minister, Mr. Diefenbaker, the present Leader of the Opposition:

> There have been times in the past when we have criticized the extent of federal participation in various common efforts on the part of the dominion and the provinces as inadequate. We have given our undertaking that when new fiscal arrangements are determined on, no province will receive less than it is now entitled to. But I want to make this clear at the beginning. We are not placing before you any "take it or leave it" attitudes; we are not taking any hard or fast positions. We are not placing before you any rigid formulae. This conference was convened to seek your ideas and your proposals. Clearly we cannot expect to solve all our major problems in two days, but we can hope in that time to have a general survey of many of them.

I quote that statement, Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate that from the very beginning of the Diefenbaker government there was an attitude that something had to be done about this relationship between the provinces and the federal government. Traditionally in Canada, like all federal states, there is a constant tug of war going on between the power of the provincial governments and that of the federal government. As conditions change the tendency is to swing one way and then another. Usually this tendency shows up in the federal house by the party in power tending to increase the position of the federal government and the party in opposition taking the opposite position to that taken by the party in power. This is normal and natural in the working out of democratic processes. For most of the early years of this period the federal government was represented by Conservatives. Naturally enough there was a strong movement to give power to the federal government as part of the effort to build up the country. The opposition to this growing strength came from a number of directions. The Liberal party defended the position of the provinces and became known in many areas as the provincial rights party. However, when the great emergency of the Hitler war arose the federal government gathered to itself tremendous powers, and used those powers in ways which were not always in keeping with tradition.

After the war was over this centralizing tendency continued and it was only natural that the opposition in those days should begin to express concern about this concentration of power in the hands of the federal government. It was understandable that when the Diefenbaker government took power we should have gone to the provinces, as the then Prime Minister did, and said to them "Let us have your ideas. They will be given consideration and then, after discussion, we shall arrive at a new fiscal arrangement".

Without going into detail about that arrangement, suffice it to say that the provinces were in fact granted a new deal. It cost the federal treasury a great deal of money. I might also say that in those discussions some of the provinces put forward demands which could only be described as extreme. Following the submissions and the discussions which took place some decision had to be made and, rightly or wrongly, it had to be made by the federal government at that time. However the offer of discussion was a step forward in this new concept which was evolving.

The next step had to do with my own department, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It was the wish of the federal government to link the great resources of the north with the several areas of Canada to the south. We proposed to proceed with this undertaking, and we therefore suggested to the provinces a co-operative program of roads to resources. Roads are, of course, the prerogative of the provinces. Still, there is no use building a network of roads in the territories unless they are linked with the settled areas of the provinces.

The negotiations which took place in this connection lasted 14 months or more, because not a single agreement was signed with one province until every province had agreed to every clause and every comma. The type of discussion which went on was bilateral in character; we went through the long and arduous process of getting agreement in every province for agreement in every other province. Very soon we recognized that no government could carry out its propositions in such a way. No government could spend so much time on a single type of contract. The next step was to speed up the process.

The government decided to call a conservation conference. A decision to this effect was announced in Winnipeg on February 12, 1958, by the then prime minister. It was announced again in the house on August 30, 1958. In getting the plans ready it was clear once again that these renewable resources belonged, in most cases, to the provinces and were administered by the provinces. The federal government had joint responsibility in connection with fisheries and agriculture. So we had this situation; 10 provincial governments had the ownership and management of their own resources, while the federal government was responsible for ownership and management of the resources in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon, and the continental shelf off our shores.

In planning this conference the federal government took the lead in calling the ministers of all the provinces together. It said in effect "These resources are under your jurisdiction, but they will not amount to a great deal until we plan together for their best use; and their best use depends on trade policies, on monetary policies, on fiscal policies and, yes, even on taxation policies." We put this thesis before the 10 governments.

They were governments of various political complexions. Two of them were Social Credit governments. One was a C.C.F. government. There were several Conservative governments. I have forgotten how many Liberal governments there were. But they all agreed as Canadians to work together for the better use of our resources. In this way there was co-operation in planning from beginning to end.

At the conclusion of that conference one of the recommendations was that the technique developed in the planning of those meetings should continue afterward in the management of our resources. So today we have for the first time in Canada's history a Canadian council of resource ministers. This council, representing 11 governments, is served by a secretariat which is bilingual, which does not owe loyalty to a province and which does not owe loyalty to the federal government; its loyalty is to the concept of the best possible development of our resources in Canada. This is the council which is receiving such favourable comments from newspapers across Canada. Let me read from the background paper put out by the Canadian council of resource ministers:

> The Canadian council of resource ministers represents a new co-operative approach by the eleven senior governments of Canada to the many and varied problems in the field of resource development.
> The council was founded on the basis of co-equal participation of the eleven senior governments and a rotating chairmanship. This operating formula has provided for the first time in Canadian history an intergovernmental forum within which resource policies are examined and co-ordinated.

It goes on to describe the organization of the council, pointing out that the present chairman is Hon. Rene Levesque from Quebec. Then it continues:

> The Canadian council of resource ministers was established following the resources for tomorrow conference which took place in Montreal in October, 1961. The conference originated in an announcement by former prime minister John Diefenbaker on February 12, 1958, that a national conference on conservation would be called.

These are not my words; these are the words of the Canadian council of resource ministers.

> The provincial premiers were invited to participate in preliminary discussions of the planning for such a conference. All provinces responded favourably, and the first meeting of the national steering committee, consisting of ministers from all provinces and the federal government was held November 17, 1958.

That is how far back precedent exists for this type of co-operation.

> The conference reached a number of important conclusions. It found that lack of co-ordination between governments and between departments within governments had created a serious gap in resource development and management.
> At the same time the conference recognized the existing system of Canadian federalism, in which the ownership of natural resources largely rests with the provinces, while fiscal, monetary and trade policies are the responsibility of the federal government.
> The senior governments subsequently agreed to the formation of a council. The council's formation was announced on February 6, 1962 following the final meeting of the resources for tomorrow steering committee.
> At the same time an advisory committee was established to prepare for the first full meeting of the council in Toronto September 20-21, 1962.

I put those passages on record because they tell a story of accomplishment. They tell a story of what can be done when there is leadership, and patience in that leadership. They tell a story of how men of different political persuasions can sit down and work together as Canadians to achieve an end which will be of benefit for all Canadians. There was no hornet's nest stirring around the leadership of the government in those days in connection with resource development because we followed a type of co-operative federalism which took the tension out of the usual tug of war between the provinces and the federal government.

Mr. Hamilton: It has been suggested that I page Mr. Bennett. Let me tell the house that from 1944 to 1957 progress in discussions with the United States on the development of the Columbia river was almost exactly nil. There were 13 years of debating such silly subjects as only the record will show.

In 1957 and 1958 we laid the foundations for the treaty with the United States by two or three techniques. One of them was to set up a liaison committee between the federal government and the government of the province of British Columbia, with two ministers from each government on that committee. Every step that we took was agreed to by both cabinets, including the final draft of the treaty. Up until that time there was complete co-operation between the two governments.

I will not go into the reasons that caused the delay, but I will say that the present government know what the reasons are now that they are in power. All their talk in the house and throughout the country during the last two or three years that we were in power of how when they got into power they would solve the Columbia river problem just like that was nothing more than a fraud committed by a political party. Never question me about the Columbia river. If some of these people had put as much time and work on this matter as some others of us did they would know how hard we worked. When the record is placed before the committee which will consider this matter, many members are going to get the surprise of their lives when they see the efforts made by the two governments, federal and provincial, to achieve co-operation and to make the project a success, because to go ahead with it would have been a matter of great pride to all Canadians.

I want to move on, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes the term "co-operative federalism" is not too well understood by provincial governments. Most of them refer to this approach as the ARDA approach because of the fact that the peculiar timing of events has made this phrase stick in their minds. If I may, I should like to go back in history a bit. In August, 1958 the then prime minister announced in the house a seven point national development program dealing primarily with agriculture. One of the points was a conservation policy, because the problems of agriculture could not be resolved purely within the realm of traditional agriculture alone.

It was our plan that the resources for tomorrow conference would be held in the fall of 1960. When the experts told the 11 governments that if it was held in the fall of 1960 they could not guarantee its success because their preparations were not complete I recall saying to the conference of ministers, as minister of agriculture at that time, that I would agree to the holding of the conference in 1961, a year later, to make sure it would not fail. However, I said that the needs of agriculture were such and our planning in the federal field in regard thereto had proceeded so far that we knew fairly well where we wanted to go, and as the federal minister I asked the steering committee to give me permission to go ahead and discuss with the provinces the subject of ARDA. We did not call it ARDA then; we just called it redevelopment.

They examined the situation. If you will go back and read the records of the House of Commons you will find that I gave my word that ARDA would in no way contravene the principles of the resources for tomorrow conference to be held that fall. The bill went through the house in the spring of 1961. Those provincial ministers accepted my word. We had established a condition of trust among us, and they accepted my word that ARDA would be co-ordinated with the efforts of the resource ministers council whose object was to bring together all departments of the federal and provincial governments in order to plan in the best interests of Canada. I honoured my commitments to the ministers on that council, and they honoured their word. They did not hinder me in any way in my efforts to get ARDA on the statute books before the resources for tomorrow conference was held.

As a matter of fact I saw all the agriculture ministers, first of all in conference here and then individually. Many members in the house will know that I visited those ministers. When I met the agriculture ministers I explained to them that the federal government wanted to achieve certain ends. I pointed out the necessity of moving in a certain way in connection with low income farmers across Canada. I said that before the federal government brought forward this legislation I should like to consult with each of the provinces individually and some of the provinces as a group.

It was during the ARDA discussions that the provinces first experienced this type of co-operative federalism, in that the then minister of agriculture or his officials discussed with them the planning of a new type of legislation that we wanted to bring before the house in Ottawa. I went to the extent of making speeches across the country advocating these principles. When I had secured the agreement of all the provinces for the type of thing we wanted to do I went to my colleagues in the cabinet and said "You asked me to prepare this legislation. I have consulted the provinces, and the legislation is the result of the co-operative efforts of all 11 ministers. There will be agreement all across the country".

The ARDA legislation was introduced into the house with the backing of all the provincial ministers and farm organizations. Even the opposition then did not oppose it. In fact there was so little opposition to the bill that I was forced to debate it on third reading myself in order to point out that there were some weaknesses in it. That shows you the extent to which you can get the provinces, farm organizations, business interests and political parties to work together if we put the needs of the country first and foremost. So the provinces refer to this co-operative federalism as the ARDA approach, and I am grateful for it; because it shows the complete harmony we had in introducing this legislation and carrying it out.

There is one thing more I should like to say in connection with ARDA, which I have already said but which I should like to emphasize. I guaranteed as a federal minister that nothing would be done under ARDA to contravene the principles that would be established by the resources for tomorrow conference. I kept my word. No minister throughout Canada, whether he is a minister of agriculture or a resources minister, will deny that, because they know I kept my word in so far as agriculture was concerned. Even though agriculture is one of the oldest and most strongly entrenched departments of the federal government, we always took our problems to the co-ordinating committee and cleared them with that committee. That was our intention, and all I can say at this time is that I hope this practice is still being carried out; because if you want to destroy something fine, if you want to destroy something good for Canada, just destroy the type of co-operation that we achieved in working out the ARDA program, and the type of program we achieved in working out the Canadian council of resource ministers.

I take some pride in telling this story. I hope it will be told all across Canada. I think our actions created a new concept of co-operative federalism compared with the former situation. Where federalism used to be a tug of war we tried to establish a basis on which we could work co-operatively in those fields where there is joint jurisdiction, in those fields where the provinces wanted us to work with them or we wanted them to work with us.

But it was not only in the department I headed that this course was followed. Sitting beside me in the house today is the former minister of labour. I recall where the idea came from for the winter works incentive program. I recall the tremendous efforts he made as minister of labour to consult not only with all the provinces but right down to the municipal level before introducing this program. He always considered their wishes with regard to this matter as having priority.

Here you had in the Department of Labour under the Diefenbaker government the same type of approach by way of co-operative federalism that I have demonstrated was the case in the resource field, and particularly with regard to agriculture. Furthermore, when I went to the then minister of labour with the story of how there were great problems in education in the rural areas of Canada it was he who took the initiative in the field of education by calling the provincial ministers together with their staffs. We had a great backlog of uneducated Canadians with less than the normal opportunity to obtain an education. What kind of curriculum could you set up to give these many thousands of Canadians the opportunity they deserved? There was no resentment on the part of the ministers of education and their staffs. We simply put forward the need, and the governments of the provinces, representing every national political party, co-operated. But the leadership came from the minister at the federal level. He knew he had no rights with regard to education from the point of view of jurisdiction, but Canadians had a need so far as this particular aspect of education was concerned. Naturally I worked through the minister of labour. I tell you these things because this philosophy was pervading all departments.

I also recall the efforts made by the former minister of national health and welfare in talking to the provinces and holding long consultations with them before he did anything. So far as hospitals are concerned he went right down to the hospital organizations and medical associations. There was always consultation ahead of time. His efforts were always directed to trying to achieve the maximum support for various ideas that would help the whole of Canada. Yet surely health is the prerogative of the provincial governments.

This concept of federal-provincial co-operation extends into many fields. My young colleague the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, has tried so hard in the house to put forward the idea the Montreal Gazette put forward, after he proposed it, that there should be a secretariat to deal with dominion-provincial fiscal relationships. We all know what happened to that particular bill. It was slid out of here pretty fast on the ground that it was contrary to the rules. Now he has brought back a resolution and this young man, believing in this country, puts forward these ideas to extend the concept we evolved, and which we proved by experience will work in this very difficult and delicate situation now existing between the provinces.

How many hon. members on the government side, even though they go outside the house and grumble, will stand up in their places and grumble out loud on behalf of this young man who speaks for Canada? This is the place for a federal co-operative system, and this is the place for accepting the lessons we have learned over the last five or six years.

The other day I took the liberty of speaking on the forestry estimates, and one of the proposals I put forward to the Minister of Forestry was that he should examine into the principles of ARDA, that he should examine into the principles of the Canadian council of resource ministers, and realize the opportunities that exist in his department to put this same type of co-operation into effect. The forest industry is the most important one we have in Canada. Once again the forests are owned and managed by the provinces, but the federal government has to give leadership because it has a tremendous influence on forestry through trade, fiscal and monetary policies, and through taxation.

If we sit back and say we are going to get out of this field and let the provinces go it alone, we will go back to the type of situation they had in the United States before 1787; 13 separate, sovereign states with a little government up on top that had no power and was useless. Canada is our country. We were second in the world in pioneering the federal concept. We think that in this new dimension we have added to federalism we have added a dimension that equals the original concept of confederation as pronounced at the 1787 convention of Philadelphia. We have given a type of example which will be extremely useful to the 20 federal nations in the world today.

When representatives of new countries like Malaysia come to Canada, do not tell them about these fights between Mr. Lesage and the Prime Minister of Canada. Do not tell them about the lack of leadership at the centre. Tell them about the positive things that will help them; and the positive things that will help them are the things that will work. We believe that you evolve new concepts, and only after you evolve them and prove that they work do you work out a theory to explain them. I suggest to these new countries that we in Canada have set a precedent. I do not want to cover the whole field but I would like to mention—

Mr. Macdonald: Complete a few more points of your biography.

Mr. Hamilton: The hon. member who has just interrupted reminds me of a type of wheat we used to grow in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Macdonald: It is all sold.

Mr. Hamilton: It was long in the straw, big in the head, but when you threshed it there wasn't much in it.

Mr. Monteith: That is Rosedale.

Mr. Macdonald: So they sent you down east then.

Mr. Hamilton: Before the election the premier of Newfoundland published a book on the necessity of doing something for the fisheries on the Atlantic coast. If you read that book carefully, and I recommend it to all hon. members of the house, you will see Mr. Smallwood raised a cry for help on behalf of the fishermen on the east coast. What did he say in that cry? He said the answer is in the ARDA approach, and is in the way they do it out west. The book is a eulogy of the five and a half years of the previous government led by Right Hon. John Diefenbaker.

Do you think the premier of Newfoundland is going to sit idly by and see that five, six or seven Liberals are elected from Newfoundland to the federal house if they do not follow the example of co-operative federalism which we set? You are all going to find out who runs Newfoundland if you do not get into line fairly fast and realize that if you want to hold Joey Smallwood, you had better start thinking of co-operative federalism and doing something about the fishery industry; and not on the basis of handouts. That whole book describes what I have just described, and I would particularly recommend it to the Secretary of State. I am sure he did not write that one.

Now I wish to say a word about what this government has been doing. I know that members of the government, when they sat on the opposition side, had complete confidence that if only they could get back on the treasury side all would be well. I recall one of the members of the opposition at that time saying he had all the answers; he had written a book, and all the answers were there. One of the oddest things was that about the only people who read his book were Liberal politicians—

Mr. Pearson: You must have read it.

Mr. Hamilton: —and the ones who read it began to mouth the things that appeared in it. They did not realize that what they were espousing was a philosophy that was turned back in history 400 years ago. This book took our economic theories back to the days of mercantilism, to the days of restrictions; and when members of the present government took office they naturally carried out the instructions in the book.

The 30 per cent transfer tax was the first item and all these poor dupes, this cannon fodder, got up and said they had confidence in the government. Then the Liberal press jumped on the poor Minister of Finance and said he was to blame. That is wrong. It was all in the book.

Mr. Macdonald: Now tell us about the renegade.

Mr. Hamilton: It was all in the book and these people accepted it. They got elected on it, and when the Minister of Finance began to carry this out they got their back door boys working and said "Get rid of Gordon." Why were they trying to crucify one of their number when they knew the real culprit sat in the Prime Minister's office?

The Prime Minister went down to Hyannis Port and surely, Mr. Speaker, if you are going to do anything as serious as this you will consult with the other party. What did happen at Hyannis Port? There was the 30 per cent transfer tax, to be followed by a 15 per cent transfer tax on their side. I can just see it happen. Canada gets the blame for the 30 per cent transfer tax and Canada suffers for the United States 15 per cent tax at the same time.

The confidence of the Liberals was all right 15 years ago when they had a man who could lead them, and that man was Howe. Sure, he did not care about parliament; he did not care about the democratic procedures, but he did have the brains to put forward proposals.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: I hear them say "Hear, hear" over there. I agree. Rubber stamps are still with us. The government stands condemned for having the same arrogance, but no leadership. This is my charge. Look at the record. The municipal loan and development fund means interference with provincial rights, and the provinces tore into that. Then the government went crawling to Quebec city and came back with their tails between their legs, with complete surrender on their part. The Liberals, Mr. Speaker, call this leadership. "Peace at any price Pearson"; this is how the Liberal leader is known across Canada.

They retreated on this municipal loan and development fund. What do I say? I say it was wrong for them to interfere in the provincial field, and it was equally wrong for them to retreat. There is supposed to be co-operation. There is a need for the federal government in this type of assistance to municipalities, but it should not be accomplished by arrogance or by interfering with the provinces. Surely there should have been some consultation ahead of time. Surely men of good faith from the ten provinces and the federal government could have evolved a scheme that would have been acceptable. Now we have four provinces going one way and six going another. As we say in an area far from here, this government does not know whether it has been punched, bored, countersunk, or reamed out with a steam shovel.

Well, it is all in the book. They enunciated a Canada pension plan. Surely this was an invasion of provincial rights. Surely the Liberals must have been aware of the fact that when the Conservative government was in power it was proceeding slowly and carefully toward some sort of pension plan in co-operation with the provinces, respecting their constitutional rights, respecting the rights of individual groups who had plans of their own. We were working steadily toward this objective. The Liberals were not prepared to use the co-operative approach; they were not prepared to use the evolutionary approach. They had to move in a la Howe, but without his brains. So the Canada pension plan has been smacked by Quebec, demurred at by Ontario and the other provinces, and has been put under the rug in the hope that something will come from it. The only way something will come from it is to go back to the principle we established of consultation with the provinces and with other groups. This is the approach of co-operative federalism.

Once again I have noticed this Liberal technique. The minister who was responsible for this gaff is being crucified. I refer to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh).

An hon. Member: By you.

Mr. Hamilton: The ex-party whip says by me. All he has to do is read the Liberal newspapers and he will ascertain what they suggest should be done with Judy. Once again we see this Liberal technique of destroying one person when the real blame falls upon the Prime Minister. Just let the Prime Minister go back to that day in the middle of September when his minister of health was saying there was no intention of bringing up a certain subject at the meeting with the premiers. Then the Prime Minister stated they were going to make the decision that there was to be an increase of $10 in the old age pension. You can imagine how the minister felt. This is another illustration of how they jumped in with the Canada pension plan and then had to retreat.

There is one other problem I should like to mention, and that relates to the Department of Industry. This Department of Industry was established because we needed some extra incentives. Some of the work of the Department of Industry was being done by the Department of Trade and Commerce, but more emphasis was necessary. Once again there was no consultation with the provinces. In fact when the letter comes forward from the premier of Manitoba and appears in public you are going to find this Department of Industry condemned in very clear terms, not only as a direct infringement of the rights of Manitoba but of other provinces—

Mr. Byrne: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member is sufficiently well acquainted with the rules to realize that he cannot reflect upon past proceedings of the house, nor can he refer to another debate in the same session. These prohibitions are contained in standing order 35 and set out in citation 149 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. The citation reads:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 35; it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada that a member while speaking must not:

Then there are the rules to which I referred. Since the outset of his remarks the hon. member has been breaching these rules, and I thought it would be only fair to bring this fact to the attention of the house.

Mr. Hamilton: I have listened with some amusement to the objection made by the hon. member for Kootenay East. I do not blame him for not liking this catalogue of the government's failures—

Mr. Byrne: I did not object; I have raised a point of order.

Mr. Monteith: Sit down and make your speech later.

Mr. Byrne: I ask for a ruling on this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A ruling will not be long in coming. In a supply debate it is well understood that great leeway is given, and it is partly a matter of good taste on the part of the hon. member speaking. It seems to me that the hon. member is entitled to refer to some of these things in order to make his points.

Mr. Pearson: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman a question. He has just referred to a letter which presumably has not been made public from the premier of Manitoba dealing with the establishment of a Department of Industry. May I ask him if he is going to put that letter on the record and, if not, whether he has seen the letter?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Wasn't that a profound question?

Mr. Hamilton: I think it is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that I have seen the letter or I would not be paraphrasing it. There is a motion of mine, which has been accepted by the government, for the production of that letter. The motion was made, I think, two weeks ago, and the letter has not been presented as yet. I know the premier of Manitoba is quite willing to have the letter produced, and I thought under the circumstances it would be quite all right if I referred briefly to its contents.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman a question. Is the hon. gentleman telling us that the premier of Manitoba showed him a letter, as a member of the opposition, which was addressed to the government of Canada and has not yet been made public? Does he approve of that kind of conduct in federal-provincial relations?

Mr. Knowles: Page the Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Winnipeg South.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, of all people to raise that objection, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not an objection, it was a question.

Mr. Hamilton: —should be the last to raise it. When he was in the opposition he read things to us, as the government, before we even got them.

Mr. Pickersgill: I must rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I challenge the hon. gentleman, who has a very faulty memory, to produce one tittle of evidence that I ever quoted in this house any document from the premier of Newfoundland that had not been made public. I challenge him to find a single bit of evidence, and not just give his obviously blurred recollections.

Mr. Hamilton: I was hoping to finish my remarks by one o'clock, but I do want to emphasize this one point. I do not believe I mentioned Newfoundland. It was the hon. member himself who mentioned Newfoundland. I do not know whether there is any guilt there, but I should think the challenge would be an interesting one to look up. However, I am not going to do so now.

I know the members of the government have been listening very intently to my speech because this withdrawal from the municipal loan and development fund, this retreat on the Canada pension plan, and the Department of Industry, all these fluffs that have been made by the present Prime Minister indicate a lack of leadership. In so far as the Department of Industry is concerned, you will find it will not be only the province of Manitoba that will be objecting, but other provinces are going to suggest that you use the approach we used. Do not belittle this approach because we brought it into being, but use it and accept it. Earlier I mentioned the withdrawal from joint programs referred to by the President of the Privy Council. I wonder if there was a discussion with the provinces before that announcement was made. I wonder if their feelings were considered, or was it just a unilateral statement by a member of the cabinet, backed up by the Prime Minister, and now these long established programs are going to go?

I do not know what the people of Canada believe about these things like hospitalization, the various grants to those between 65 and 70 years of age, to the handicapped, and so on. I could mention also the roads to resources program. We have been making money available for the development of vocational schools to help with unemployment. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has a place in this structure. Surely we do not have to go back into a little hole when these provinces make these extreme demands. We expect some strength of will on the part of the government, and that means the Prime Minister. We want to work co-operatively with all three levels of government.

We heard a speech the other day by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer). This was a great cry coming from 85 per cent of the people of Quebec. We are not sent here, as he said, to bisect the country. I charge the government with pursuing policies which will not only bisect the country but dissect it. This government stands condemned by its actions, its retreats, its statements. The government is not even trying to make an effort to get out of this impasse. This country is worth too much to let it go by default. We can sit down with any group in this country and discuss their problems, and I will gamble my whole life on the faith that Canadians will always find a solution.

I think that solution has to be co-operative and evolutionary, and must provide several criteria which have to be accepted by all Canadians. One is that there is a place for the federal government. We must maintain a strong federal government. At the same time we must do what we can to strengthen the provincial governments within their spheres of jurisdiction. There are going to be many cases of overlapping jurisdiction. There are going to be many cases where the provinces will want the federal government to work with them, because we do have so much effect on their policies through our trade policies, our monetary and fiscal policies, and so on. I suggest there is an answer. But to get up and say they are going to get out of all these provincial co-operative schemes and withdraw from the joint programs is a negation of the federalism I know and intend to struggle for.

An hon. Member: We never said that.

Mr. Hamilton: How much plainer could it be put than that they are going to withdraw?

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hamilton: Very well; I will carry on later.

Mr. Knowles: I realize the hon. member can carry on afterwards, as is his right, but in view of the importance of this subject would he do the house the favour of letting it know before one o'clock what amendment he proposes to move?

Mr. Pickersgill: Let him read it so we may know what it is; he need not put it.

Mr. Hamilton: I thought I could finish in the next minute or two, but I realize it is impossible. I was going to wind up with a catalogue of sins of the government and then move this motion:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"that this house condemns the government for its failure to carry out the spirit of co-operative federalism and for its neglect to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall wholly or partly within provincial jurisdiction.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Hamilton: When the house took recess I was on the point of moving an amendment to the motion that you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker. I read the amendment into the record so that all parties would have an idea what it was. I should like to sum up what I was saying this morning by listing the indictment I tried to make.

We condemn the leadership of the present government on the grounds of its behaviour and action in connection with the municipal loan and development fund. We condemn it for its failure to act with regard to the Canada pension plan. We condemn it for its attitude in connection with the Department of Industry, not only because of its decision to designate areas without consulting the municipalities concerned but also because of the serious overlapping which occurs with the powers and activities of municipalities.

We condemn the present government and its leadership for the method used in announcing its withdrawal from the joint programs. We know this intention was originally announced in the course of a speech at a nominating convention in Quebec city two elections ago when the President of the Privy Council was nominated. That speech was made by the present Prime Minister, who was then leader of the opposition. We have since heard the President of the Privy Council repeat this speech at a meeting in Toronto and go into great detail with regard to the proposal. This has caused serious disturbance in the minds of members of provincial governments across this country. Possibly it is because the President of the Privy Council has a reputation in Quebec as a centralist that he was forced to make the statement he did in order, if possible, to prove he was not a centralist. However, by making this speech he has encouraged even more extreme statements to be made by people who would ordinarily have awaited developments before reaching conclusions.

The way this statement was made is another example of confusion and bumbling by the present government in making announcements which seriously affect agreements between the federal government and the provinces. Tremendous confusion has been caused by this approach. I could mention many examples, but I should like to remind the house of what was said in connection with university scholarships. Just after the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources took office he went out to the west coast and announced that a far reaching scheme would be set up immediately. This aroused great expectations. As far as we can gather the provinces were never consulted about this scheme. Well, an announcement was made and nothing happened. I am simply saying it looks as though there is another retreat in this area, too. The minister says something is going to be done, but there is no action. Therefore we must assume the government has retreated. Once again they have gone into a provincial sphere and talked about what they were going to do. There is no evidence that any province was consulted, and now we find no evidence of action.

I notice that the Minister of Agriculture is not here, but I wonder if he has ever called together the eastern advisory committee of the Canadian wheat board. There is a serious problem facing the eastern part of Canada, the maritime provinces, in connection with grain. We have here a board representative of the provinces concerned which when occasion demands, meets with the government agency, the Canadian wheat board, to help resolve difficulties of this kind. There is no evidence that the present government is making any use of the consultation machinery which was provided by the previous government as a means of supplying answers to these problems.

But the most damning indictment of all, especially in the mind of the public, is based on the course of events with regard to the Canada pension plan. Here we had a plain statement of the government's intention, the central plank of the election campaign. Yet because of a waspish and witch-like attack on the premier of a province, the whole matter has become embroiled in side issues. The government has had to retreat and, once again, the general wishes of the provinces are not consulted.

However, there are some signs that certain members of the government are aware of the need for co-operation. For example, the Minister of Forestry, in the statement he made on his estimates, did indicate his awareness that he could get good ideas from the provinces and that more rapid progress could be achieved in this field by working in co-operation with the provinces.

On the other hand the Minister of Fisheries does not seem so convinced. I have been watching for some sign of leadership from the central government so the great knowledge and experience which has been built up federally can be used to do something of benefit for the fishing industry in co-operation with the premiers of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec as part of a joint program. A great need exists, yet there is little evidence of such leadership coming forward. The only leadership of which I have any evidence seems to be coming from the provinces themselves. So for every sign that something is being done there are ten signs to the contrary.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question? He has referred to a joint national program for fisheries. Is he aware that a federal-provincial conference on fisheries has been called for the week beginning January 20?

Mr. Hamilton: That is the point I am trying to make. The government has called this conference. There is to be a consultation of ministers, but there has been no preliminary work, no preliminary consultation.

An hon. Member: Ridiculous.

Mr. Hamilton: That is what they say now, is ridiculous. That shows the difference of attitude. When I see evidence that the proposal put forward by the premier of Newfoundland is acted on, not as a bilateral deal between the federal government and the provinces but as a joint agreement between the federal government and the five eastern premiers, I will know that some effort of a co-operative kind is being made; something which meets the situation, not this pick-peck type of approach.

Mr. Pickersgill: Four months behind.

Mr. Hamilton: I see that the Secretary of State is agitated. I want to make it very clear that the accusations I make against the government do not include the Secretary of State. Even if others have failed to consult and discuss and do the preliminary work necessary to avoid these confrontations that have shaken and rocked us, the Secretary of State is a different type. Everyone knows he has been around and knows about his consulting with the C.B.C. and B.B.G. all the time. He is a great man for consultation, and he does not come under the indictment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the C.B.C. a province?

Mr. Grafftey: It is the minister's province.

Mr. Hamilton: I am sure the Secretary of State caught the full implication of what I said. Finally, Mr. Speaker, in exemplification of my remarks I want to say that in view of the encouragement that has been given by the President of the Privy Council to ministers of the province of Quebec, like Hon. Mr. Laporte, to come forward and make statements such as were made over the week end; and in view of the counter-statement made by Premier Bennett, which was quite extreme and obdurate, I say that the conference called for November 25 and 26 is doomed to disaster.

Mr. Pearson: Gloom and doom.

Mr. Hamilton: This conference—

Mr. Pearson: That is what you would like.

Mr. Hamilton: —is going to be a confrontation of premiers stirred up like hornets because the federal government has interfered with their jurisdiction and when challenged has backed away and has not fought for the federal position. This is a situation that can only be described as one of great weakness on the part of the leader of the government. Never has confederation been in greater danger, though not in any danger because of the fundamental feelings of the people. They are sound enough. The people want to stay together as Canadians. Nevertheless confederation is endangered because of the fumbling and bumbling of the present government.

The members of the government are not aware of the techniques of co-operative federalism which have been built up carefully and gradually evolved. They are using the technique of interference, but once they are caught interfering they run the other way without any regard to the maintenance of the rights of the federal state.

We have been trying to find out about their approach to the forthcoming conference. We have been trying to find out exactly what has been done. It is evident, however, that every proposal they are going to put forward has been hastily conceived. There is no evidence of consultation or of prior general agreement on principles at all. As I said, all we have is even more confusion and more bumbling. There is lack of leadership. We can at least say that during our five and a half years in office we had strong leadership. All that the Liberal members can say after the first seven months is that they have had weak and waffling leadership.

An hon. Member: Too strong for his own cabinet.

Mr. Hamilton: I read today from an editorial in the Montreal Gazette dated November 6. I want to put forward with all the persuasion I can that there is some hope, that there is no need for the government to run off into a corner and give away its position all the time. There is a place for the federal government and for the provinces, and the federal government should not run away from their position all the time and lead us toward some form of confederacy which as a political form disappeared many years ago.

Let me read the last paragraph of the editorial again. The editorial is headed "The hope in 'Co-Operative Federalism' ". Here is the editor of a great newspaper saying that there is some daylight in the gloom. The last paragraph reads as follows:

> This type of development could give Canadian federalism new life, new hope, new fellowship, and new effectiveness. It will open up the prospect of a future of co-operation instead of conflict. The possibilities for developing this co-operative federalism are as numerous as the denial of such co-operation will be ominous.

An hon. Member: Hallelujah.

Mr. Hamilton: The hon. member says "hallelujah". I say "amen". At this time I move, seconded by the hon. member for Three Rivers:

> That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "That this house condemns the government for its failure to carry out the spirit of co-operative federalism and for its neglect to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall wholly or partly within provincial jurisdiction".

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. gentleman takes his seat I wonder whether he would permit me to ask him one question. Was the hon. gentleman, when he talked about me conferring with the C.B.C., accusing me of conferring with the C.B.C. about his notable appearance on C.B.C. television in regard to Peter Newman's book?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, the seriousness of that question is typical of the hon. member. All I should like to say is that the fact he has asked the question indicates a guilt that I think we can all see.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not the "gilt", it was the gingerbread.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, on behalf of the official opposition, has moved a no confidence motion condemning the government for its failure to carry out the spirit of co-operative federalism and for neglecting to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall wholly or partly within provincial jurisdiction.

I was extremely interested in the speech made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and I want to congratulate him on some of the points he raised. However, it was not clear to me at some points in his speech whether he was moving a motion of no confidence in the present government or asking for a vote of confidence in the previous administration. As a matter of fact there were long sections of the speech in which I thought there was being added to the Diefenbaker years an autobiography on the Hamilton years.

Mr. Knowles: "Renegade out of power".

Mr. Douglas: However, the hon. member has raised what is a crucial question for parliament and for the people of Canada, and I think he has performed a great service in raising this matter. Sir John A. Macdonald once said Canada was a difficult country to govern. Again and again throughout our history there have been times when it appeared that Canadian confederation was going to disintegrate, but always the good sense of the Canadian people has rallied and we have managed to resolve our difficulties and go on as a united people.

I am convinced that in this present critical situation the good sense of the Canadian people will once again assert itself. I believe we will meet the difficulties which now confront us, but it will only be done if we are prepared to look carefully at our problems, be as non-partisan as possible in seeking solutions, and endeavour to get a spirit of unity in working out the problems of confederation.

One of the difficulties is that we are confusing two questions. We are confusing the matter of biculturalism and the matter of federal-provincial fiscal relations. I think we have to separate them in our thinking. We must first of all accept the spirit of co-operative federalism, and by that we in this party mean that the two founding races, the French speaking and English speaking races, came together in a pact which we call the British North America Act. That constitution guaranteed to the French speaking people of Canada certain basic rights; and there is a feeling in the province of Quebec today, which I personally think is justified in some respects, that English speaking Canada has not always lived up to the spirit of confederation. Whether we agree with that statement or not, the fact remains that even if people feel they have a grievance then there is a problem, and I think all Canadians have to stop and accept the fact that in French Canada today there is a sense of grievance. There is a feeling that they have not been allowed to play their full part within the spirit of Canadian confederation, and this is something which has to be faced up to honestly, patiently, and with understanding.

The present government recognized this when it set up the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. I am sure all of us hope that as a result of the representations which are made to that body we will get a report that will chart a course for the future, that will bring the two races together in a spirit of harmony within the Canadian confederation.

Of course this situation is not helped by the extremists on the one hand who talk about taking Quebec out of confederation, who use the most violent terms associated with separatism; nor is it helped on the other hand by statements such as those contained in yesterday's Globe and Mail, reporting a speech made by the premier of British Columbia, which says:

> B.C. will not even listen let alone agree to any basic changes in the British North America Act at the interprovincial conference in Ottawa this month, Premier W. A. C. Bennett said Saturday night—
> Mr. Bennett indicated that Quebec cannot expect British Columbia to support its demands for a special place for the French language and culture in Canada.
> "Federal civil servants should be appointed on merit and merit alone," he said. "We will not stand for civil servants getting more money for talking two languages, or three languages for that matter."

If anything is needed in Canada today it is for people, particularly leaders in positions of responsibility, to approach this problem with an open mind and an understanding heart.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are much deeper problems which should not be confused with the question of biculturalism, and they are problems that have beset confederation ever since 1867. A federal system is always difficult to administer, and the Canadian federal system has been no exception. The Rowell-Sirois commission was set up in the late 1930's because parliament and the government of that day recognized there were three problems facing the federal and provincial governments. The first was that since confederation the responsibilities which had been allocated to the provinces under the British North America Act have grown and expanded, without any increase in the sources of revenue with which the provinces might discharge these increased responsibilities.

In 1867 giving to the provinces responsibility for education, welfare, health and resource development did not involve large sums of money. In those days there were no such things as unemployment insurance, old age pensions or widows' pensions, and no one thought of health services as much more than elementary sanitary services. Consequently the provinces were not allocated fields of revenue that could meet expanded services in education, health, welfare and resource development.

With the passing of the years, with the growing pressure of public opinion for better education, better health services, expanded pensions and more adequate resource development, the provinces found they were not in a financial position to discharge the responsibilities allocated to them by the constitution. The people of Canada saw new programs surging ahead in other nations. They saw universal pensions, unemployment insurance and health services being introduced in Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries, and they demanded that something of this sort be done in Canada. The provinces since then have been finding it increasingly difficult to do these things on the very limited tax revenues which have been allocated to them.

The second problem which has been bedevilling confederation is that the federal government, viewing the whole national picture, has been increasingly aware of the fact that there has been a lack of uniformity in the minimum standards of education, health and welfare enjoyed by people in different parts of Canada. Now, it is not the concern of one province to worry about the standards of another province, but it is a responsibility of the federal government to recognize that a Canadian citizen has a right to the same minimum standards of education, health and welfare whether he lives in Prince Edward Island, in the province of Manitoba or the province of British Columbia. Therefore the whole question of equalization has been to the fore.

The third problem that has faced confederation is the lack of capital resources to develop the natural resources of the respective provinces. Some of the provinces have the capital, or nearly enough capital, to develop their resources, but many of the provinces in Canada cannot and will not be able to develop their resources unless there is some equalization of capital allocation.

What have we done about these three problems? The Rowell-Sirois commission made certain recommendations. Hon. members will remember that those recommendations were scuttled by the premiers of two provinces. During the war there were temporary tax rental agreements. After the war Right Hon. Mackenzie King called a federal-provincial conference on reconstruction with a view to returning to the problem that the Rowell-Sirois commission had examined and had sought to solve. Out of that conference we began to move toward a solution of the three problems which the Rowell-Sirois commission had put forth in such clear and succinct terms. We tried to meet the problem of the provinces having inadequate tax revenues with which to discharge their constitutional responsibilities by entering into tax rental agreements. Surely nobody in Canada ever wants to go back to the tax jungle that existed prior to the tax rental agreements coming into effect. This is one thing to which the parliaments of Canada and the provinces should adhere.

The other thing that has developed has been equalization grants to reduce the disparity in income as between various provinces in Canada. When I hear some individuals making speeches about the fact that the province of Quebec could manage its own financial affairs if only the federal government would stay out of certain tax fields and leave these matters to them, I think those persons ought to remember that the province of Quebec receives a larger share of the equalization grants than any other province in Canada. If I remember correctly it is some $69 million a year. They are entitled to it; I am glad they get it, but it should be remembered that Quebec is one of the provinces whose average per capita income falls below the national average, and the province of Quebec has as much of an incentive as any other province in Canada to continue tax rental agreements and tax equalization.

The other way in which this problem of provincial revenue has been overcome has been by means of shared programs. I submit that these shared programs have been of great value, and I think many of them ought to be retained. Also we have had conditional grants under which the federal government has made certain moneys available to the provinces providing they spend them for certain purposes and in certain ways. I will have something to say about the question of conditional grants later on. We have sought to establish some equalization across Canada by means of giving the provinces a share of the taxes which can be used for education. I believe that one of the best ways we could help the provinces which are going to be under increasing pressure for better educational services is not for the federal government to get into the field of education, which will only arouse antagonism in certain parts of Canada, but rather to give to the provinces a larger portion of the shared tax fields in order that they can use this money to lift some of the school tax burden off their municipalities.

We have helped establish better social services by means of pensions, family allowances and shared programs. Hospital insurance has been another means of equalizing the burden of providing social services in Canada, and some assistance has been given to the provinces for resource development. So we have begun in Canada to find some solution to the problems that beset federal-provincial relations.

But while we want to do everything we can to enable the provinces to have sufficient financial resources of their own in order that they may discharge their responsibilities, and while we want to have a minimum of interference in provincial jurisdiction, I suggest to those who talk about provincial rights that they must give equal consideration to leaving the federal government the power to discharge its responsibilities. If the federal government is weakened in its fiscal capacity to meet the problems of economic stagnation and unemployment, then we will be in a bad position in Canada. No provincial premier will say that he is responsible for unemployment in his province and is prepared to take the burden off the federal government. Every provincial premier, and rightly so, says unemployment is primarily a federal matter. But if the federal government is to assume responsibility for promoting economic growth and providing full employment, it must have the fiscal means at its disposal to put money into circulation in times of deflation and to contract the amount of money in circulation in times of inflation. It must be able to—

Mr. Grafftey: It is monetary.

Mr. Douglas: My hon. friend says it is monetary. It is more than monetary. Monetary policy has to do with issuing the money, but fiscal policy has to do with distributing it; that is, so it can raise taxes and take money out of circulation, and ease taxes to put more money into circulation when necessary by providing housing, and so on; so it can have a shelf of public works, federal and provincial, by which money can quickly be put into circulation to create employment.

In my opinion no prime minister in Canada has a mandate from the Canadian people to preside over the dissolution of confederation. My plea to the Prime Minister is that, while approaching this problem of federal-provincial relations and doing everything possible to help the provinces meet some of the problems which I have just outlined, he should not weaken Canada in its capacity to deal with the great major problems of economic growth and full employment in this country. I cannot do better than quote the words which Right Hon. Mackenzie King used when he was opening the federal-provincial conference on reconstruction in 1945. They are worth remembering. He said:

> The lessons of war have taught us the vital importance of co-operation in an effort to reach a common goal. Without unity there is frustration. Now that we are coming face to face with the problems of the post-war years, the need for unity and co-operation is not less than it has been: from some points of view, it is greater. The enemies we shall have to overcome will be on our own Canadian soil. They will make their presence known in the guise of sickness, unemployment and want. It is to plan for a unified campaign in Canada against these enemies of progress and human well-being that we have come together at this time.

I suggest that these enemies of sickness, unemployment and want are still present in our society, and that the federal government must retain the fiscal powers necessary to cope with them. I suggest that we need power to deal effectively with the economic fluctuations. We need the power to forestall economic stagnation and unemployment. The federal government needs the necessary power to provide the equalization of services as between the various areas of Canada. When some provinces say "We can go it alone", it seems to me that this is a very narrow and parochial outlook.

It is true that a provincial government has to think primarily in terms of its own citizens, but we in this parliament and the government have to think in terms of all the people of Canada. Nothing would do more to wreck confederation than to balkanize Canada, to give up fiscal powers that would result in one part of Canada enjoying prosperity while the other parts of Canada lived on a level of income that bordered on degradation. Part of the responsibility of the federal government and the federal parliament is to see to it that there is a distribution of income among the various areas of Canada so that a Canadian citizen, whether he comes from the middle of Canada, the Pacific coast or the Atlantic coast, is guaranteed a certain minimum standard of living, and has the right to a job and to a decent measure of economic security.

The federal government must, in my opinion, retain sufficient revenue so it can provide capital investment for resource development, particularly in the underdeveloped areas of Canada. We hear a great deal these days about helping the underdeveloped areas of the world. There is no party, Mr. Speaker, more interested in that or more anxious for Canada to do its part in that regard than this party. But charity begins at home. We all recognize that in Canada there are provinces with vast resources which cannot be developed unless they get some assistance in terms of capital investment.

I agree that the federal government should proceed with preparations for the Canada pension plan. There has been some criticism that the provinces have not been consulted. I agree that they should be consulted. But I maintain also that the present government made a commitment to the Canadian people to provide a contributory, universal portable pension plan, and that the Canadian people took that commitment at face value. This government has a responsibility to put that plan on the statute books, after consultation with the provinces; and no province should be allowed to stop the Canadian government from doing what it promised the Canadian people it would do.

There has been some criticism of the fact that the government did not consult the provinces about the municipal loan and development fund. I think that was regrettable. However, after they did consult the provinces the provinces recommended certain changes which were accepted and put into effect. This plan is in operation. I think instead of criticizing the government for the municipal loan and development fund legislation, we might do well to remember that the provincial governments and the mayors and municipalities of this country, have been pleading with successive governments for 18 years to put that kind of legislation on the statute books. It was long overdue.

I would say the same thing is true with reference to the Canada development fund. The Canada development corporation is something which is badly needed to stimulate economic growth in the underdeveloped parts of Canada, particularly to supply the kind of capital that the provinces cannot possibly supply to promote economic growth in their areas and to provide jobs for their people. Again, I think where the provinces are involved there should be consultation, but that consultation does not give the federal government any excuse for failure to proceed as expeditiously as possible to put that plan into effect.

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. member permit one question?

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Mr. Grafftey: Having said what he has said, does the hon. member feel then that the Liberal government should have consulted the provinces before they made the promise on the universal pension plan, instead of before they introduced the legislation?

Mr. Douglas: No, I do not feel they should have consulted the provinces before they made the promise. I think the responsibility of any federal party going before the Canadian people is to map out what is constitutionally possible, to decide what their program is, and then consult the people of Canada. Then the responsibility is not to get cold feet when they meet opposition, but to carry out the commitments they have made to the people of Canada.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has moved this motion of no confidence in the government because of its failure to carry out the spirit of co-operative federalism and for neglecting to consult with the provinces. I want to say, in the first place, that I doubt very much if the Conservative party can pat itself on the back to any extent for either its development of the spirit of co-operative federalism or for its consultation with the provinces. If we are in a mess today, then both the previous Conservative and Liberal governments contributed to it. When I was listening to the exchange of religious pleasantries by the Secretary of State who said "Alleluia"—

Mr. Pickersgill: I deny that, sir.

Mr. Douglas: I exonerate the Secretary of State. One of the Liberal members said "Alleluia" and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said "Amen". I was going to suggest that they both ought to come to the penitents bench when we are looking at the mess in which Canada is at the moment. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come to stop blaming each other. I do not believe the people of Canada care very much whether it was the Conservatives or the Liberals who made things worse than they were. As a matter of fact I am not as pessimistic as some speakers. I am not as pessimistic as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who says that the federal-provincial conference later this month is likely to be a dismal failure. I think we have made some progress.

I attended the conference in 1945 called by Mr. Mackenzie King, the federal-provincial conference on reconstruction. We have come a long way in the 18 years that have intervened, and both Liberal and Conservative governments have contributed in some measure to the progress we have made. We have not made nearly enough progress. We are in a critical situation now, but it will not help to solve the problems if we spend time trying to allocate blame. What we have to do is recognize that this country faces a crisis in federal-provincial relations.

We have faced such crises before, and our forefathers met them successfully. I believe we can meet these crises which are now upon us, both that concerning biculturalism and that which has to do with fiscal relations as between the government of Canada and the respective provinces. But if we are to do that we will have to approach this problem not as citizens of a single province but as citizens of Canada. We will have to start with the assumption that Canada must continue as a great nation; that the government of that nation must have the necessary powers to act like the government of a great nation; that the provinces have problems, and that they must be helped to solve those problems. But it will not help the provinces to solve their problems if we denude the federal government of the fiscal authority it needs to lead this country along the road toward prosperity and economic well-being.

I am going to propose an amendment, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is hardly fitting to criticize the government, or to go further and condemn the government, for its failure to carry out the spirit of co-operative federalism when this government has been less than seven months in office.

Mr. Grafftey: Look at the mess.

Mr. Douglas: My hon. friend says look at the mess. I can assure him the mess was not all made during the last seven months. I think what we have to do instead is to urge the government to be more aggressive than it now is in tackling this problem; that we must say to the government "We expect you to implement more fully the spirit of co-operative federalism. We expect you to co-operate with the provinces. Above all, we expect you to give this country the kind of leadership it needs in the present world situation". Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Port Arthur:

That the amendment be amended, (a) by deleting the words "condemns the government for its failure to carry out" and by substituting therefor the words "urges the government to carry out more fully"; (b) by deleting the words "for its neglect"; and (c) by deleting the words "wholly or partly" and by substituting the words "to any extent", so that the amendment as amended would then read:

"That this house urges the government to carry out more fully the spirit of co-operative federalism and to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall to any extent within provincial jurisdiction".

In moving the amendment we are not saying we are satisfied with the way in which the government has conducted federal-provincial relations. The government has only been in office a short time, but we would urge them to be more vigorous and aggressive; and if they are we can assure them they will have the support of the great majority of Canada's citizens.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that while the extremists on both sides are most vociferous, I believe the great majority of the Canadian people want to retain Canada as a nation; they want a government at Ottawa with the power which will enable the country to act like a nation and conduct itself like a nation. If we are to find the answer to the problems of federal-provincial relations we shall do so only if we come to them in a spirit of unity and also in a spirit of sympathy and understanding. Unless we are prepared to see that many of the grievances which have arisen need rectification, unless we are prepared to see each other's point of view, this crisis will grow worse. But if we are prepared to approach each problem in a spirit of sympathy and mutual understanding, then I am convinced that this parliament and this government, if it aggressively tackles the problem, can do much to establish in Canada a spirit of unity.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to express my gratitude to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle for bringing up this topic which he has introduced this afternoon. I am convinced that it is one of the most urgent and vital problems with which we should be concerning ourselves in this house, because as the previous speaker has just mentioned certainly our nation stands at a critical time in its history.

There is a saying "Marry in haste, repent at leisure". In this regard I agree with the mover of the amendment in condemning certain programs to which the government has hastily become wedded. Such would include the municipal development and loan fund, some of the budget resolutions, the Canada pension plan, and there are others. However, in fairness to the government I believe I should say that it has shown quite an unusual capacity for repentance. It repented a little in regard to the budget; it reached a compromise with the provinces in relation to the municipal development and loan fund. Two weeks from now the subject of the Canada pension plan will be raised at a meeting of the federal government with the provincial premiers. I sincerely hope this will provide the opportunity for a little more repentance.

As leader of a minority party and as a member of the opposition in this house, my choice in these debates is at best that of the lesser of two evils. This not only applies to many of the arguments which have been brought up by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle concerning his charge against the government; it also relates to the record that his own government set in the previous administration, and I think as it relates to this particular subject with which we are concerned this afternoon it certainly concerns the government that that party followed as well.

In the twenty fifth parliament the government appeared not to do very much at all, and because nothing was done to solve the problems we are thinking about, not many mistakes were made. In the present parliament, in many instances which could be mentioned, the government has rushed in where the angels of the previous government feared to tread. Some of the policies introduced were obviously ill advised. On the other hand, the government's surprising capacity for having second thoughts and taking a second look has saved us from any actual disaster.

We have heard a lot today about co-operative federalism. Accepting the premise that we do face a great number of problems in Canada which concern the provinces, as well as the federal government, which concern the whole nation, as well as the question of Canada being a nation at all, I think that what we need at this moment is a little bit of co-operative parliamentarianism. I believe we could solve some of our difficulties more effectively if we showed more of this spirit than our record in the past several months has indicated us capable of doing. I say this particularly in light of the fact that for the second time in as many years we find ourselves in a situation in this house where the government does not command an absolute majority.

In these circumstances I certainly believe it would not be in the best interests of the country if the government were overthrown on the basis of the proposition which has been advanced this afternoon. For one thing, we would be denying the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) the chance of hearing directly from the provincial premiers what they feel the government should be doing in the field of federal-provincial relations. We would also be denying him a further chance to repent with regard to certain measures which, I believe, have been brought in too hastily without adequate consultation with the provinces.

We heard a good deal about co-operative federalism in the speech from the throne. I imagine this is a phrase which has been left without an owner since the days when the old co-operative commonwealth federation became the New Democratic party. I imagine that both the old line parties, seeing a policy of such shiny appearance and high sounding name lying around unclaimed, have hastily grasped it to add it to their bag of tricks. Like the expression biculturalism, it is one of those expressions which are easy enough to use but far less easy to define. Nevertheless, if what it means is an exchange of ideas between the provinces and the federal government before they are put into effect, I am all for it. Indeed, this is why, according to my understanding, the forthcoming provincial premiers conference has been called.

The former minister of agriculture called attention to an important matter when he spoke of the need for more co-operation at the government level especially with regard to the development of our natural resources. His comments apply particularly to the ARDA program to which he referred in the course of his remarks. He spoke about the spirit of ARDA. But as I look back on the history of that project, all that I recall the federal government saying at that time was that they were willing to invest some federal funds in this project for the rehabilitation of agriculture across the country, while the real work was done by the ministries of agriculture in the different provinces. That is probably not wrong; and is as it should be. But what was needed in those days, as it is needed now, is the motivation and the desire, as well as the necessary mechanics, to make sure that consultation to these ends should take place at both levels and at the time it is called for.

Mention might be made of the whole program of vocational training. We have a number of fine institutions built with the taxpayers' money across this country. We have one such institution in my home city and I am sure many other hon. members have similar institutions in their own communities. Here again, there was a woeful lack of consultation before this program was put into operation. Its result is only too apparent. In many instances building construction was completed far in advance of the actual need. In others, buildings were located in places where it was impossible to give maximum effectiveness to the program. This emphasizes once again how important it is to make sure that when the federal government brings forward any proposals or any legislation which overlaps certain functions of the provincial governments, such proposals should be carried out only after there has been the necessary consultation.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle was perfectly right to point out that businessmen and even politicians could work together when they put the interest of their country first. I am confident, as I have said before, that no one individual, or no one group in this house, has all the answers to the problems which we face today. If we expect co-operative federalism to mean anything, then it is time we demonstrated a spirit of co-operative parliamentarianism in our work here as well. We can do with plenty of this co-operative spirit in the house. I share the enthusiasm the hon. member for Qu'Appelle displayed about the way we do things out west. I believe the two Social Credit governments in the west are an example to us, particularly with regard to resource development in the interest of their people. Looking across this nation I believe any prime minister would be hard put to develop on the national scene a government which could equal the efficiency and the standard set by most of the provincial governments in Canada at the present time.

This brings us again to the problem we confront in making Canada a nation. All too often, our provincial loyalties and our sectional interests are more firmly based than our national concern. Here again, if we are to make confederation work, it is essential we should begin at the national level so that the impact of what we are doing may spread to the provinces. Already many of the provinces are ahead of us. When we look at the machinery which exists to provide for co-operation between the federal government and the provinces, machinery which the present government inherited from the previous Conservative government and which they, in turn, inherited from the previous Liberal government, we find it is pitifully inadequate.

Perhaps it is because of the commission on biculturalism and bilingualism which has just begun its work; perhaps it is because there is so much talk in our country now about whether we are to survive as a nation, that I am concerned about interpreting afresh what was in the minds of the original fathers of confederation when they brought into being the Dominion of Canada, to which has been added the succession of provincial divisions since 1867. As I study these early debates and the proceedings of the Quebec conferences which were beginning to take form about 100 years ago today, I find there were two basic principles involved. First, there was a determination to make one nation of this country despite all odds and discouragement. We might say that there was a negative motivation then, because there was a strong desire that this part of North America should not simply fall into the hands of the United States. But whatever the underlying purposes were, these men faced tremendous decisions and tremendous problems which in my view were greater in their day than those we face now. But they did so and they succeeded because there was a determination to make sure that a nation, Canada, came into being and that it did so on such a basis that it could survive.

Second, there was the determination that in making this nation the freedom of every individual would be preserved, that every inhabitant would have the right to preserve his traditional way of life and that in so far as possible these rights would be preserved by law and constitutional safeguards. This did not just apply to the individual. It also applied to the individual provinces concerned. This is why when we go back and study the terms of the act which gave us this country, Canada, we find there were certain definite safeguards outlined and that the authority of the provinces and the authority of the federal government were defined. I maintain that if there were a little greater concern and determination on our part today to make sure that Canada remains a nation and if there were just a little more determination and clearcut thinking on how we can safeguard the rights of the provinces and at the same time give ourselves a federal government that would project itself into a continuing nation, we would not have all the problems we face now.

The second principle of protecting individual rights and provincial rights is in direct contrast to the melting pot theory that has been so common and so dominant in the political development of the United States. It was the basis of confederation and is the very essence of Canadianism today. I believe it is to these two guiding principles that we refer when we talk about the spirit of confederation, that very spirit which is at the heart of Canada itself. If we can face our present problems unitedly in the same spirit of purpose and in the same spirit of intent, then Canada and Canadians can look forward to the future with more enthusiasm and more optimism than is the case at the present time.

The instrument that was designed to carry out these purposes was the statute passed by the United Kingdom parliament that we know as the British North America Act. This act constituted the original provinces into a new nation, Canada. Most significantly, it abandoned the original idea of a single unified government consisting predominantly of French Canadian Lower Canada and Anglo-Saxon Upper Canada and divided them into the two provinces which are our largest provinces today, the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. It reserved matters of legislation for the federal government, and this was essential if Canada was to become a nation. But it also reserved certain subjects of legislation for the provinces, generally those of a local nature as we can see if we study the document. It gave the assurance that the individual rights of the provinces and of the people who live in those provinces would be safeguarded. It embodied certain guarantees of religious liberty and freedom in education and, whether intentionally or not, it made sure that these techniques would be made effective by requiring that no constitutional amendment could be made without action first by the United Kingdom parliament.

Undoubtedly, however, the development of Canada has in some ways not taken place as our founders intended that it should. This is the reason for the discussion we have today relating to the co-operation and the working together of the provincial governments and the federal government here in Ottawa. As I have already mentioned, I believe that the provinces in many ways and in spite of their difficulties have done a better job than has been done at the federal level. Many Canadians, and this does not apply only to the people of Quebec, have a loyalty to their own province, their own people and their own characteristic ways of life that runs more deeply than their loyalty to Canada as a nation. This is understandable and it is not a basically undesirable thing.

But this does bring us to the point that in one area we have fallen short of the original intention of the founding fathers, to make Canada a nation. In too many cases there has been a complete lack of continuous liaison between the federal and provincial governments. In some areas, indeed, the provinces have been forced, through lack of federal action in a field, to assume powers that originally were contemplated to belong to the federal authorities. We have come a long way from the intention of our founding fathers that, come what may, we would make a nation.

In the last two election compaigns the Social Credit party has insisted that the federal government should take a more realistic approach to the problem of liaison with the provinces. We have talked about it continually in the house. During the private members' hour in the last parliament it was my privilege to present a proposition based on this very same thing. We intend to do the same again in this parliament. The proposition is simply that it is time that the federal government established, not just a secretariat but a full and complete department with a cabinet minister in charge of it which might be called the ministry of federal-provincial affairs. This ministry would be charged with the responsibility of working out those matters which relate to both levels of government.

In reading the agenda of the forthcoming conference with the provincial premiers on November 25 I am very pleased to find that under item 5 there will be a discussion of continuing federal-provincial liaison arrangements. I would urge the Prime Minister at this time to seize this opportunity to discuss with the provincial premiers their opinions with regard to setting up such a department at the federal level. This is not a new idea. It is something that a great number of men concerned with provincial governments are talking about now, and already several of the provinces have taken the lead and have set up their own departments of provincial-federal affairs. I mention this now because I think this is an excellent and opportune time for definite discussions to take place towards this end.

This country is in urgent need of development on a national basis from the point of view of national programs. We need a national highways program. We will never have a system of national highways if we look at the matter only from the point of view of sectional interest alone. The use of our water resources is also a very important matter. The problem of water pollution is something that concerns the nation as a whole, and measures cannot be planned effectively except on an interprovincial basis. There is the question of a national electric grid, which is something that at the present time requires more action and less talk. There is the matter of federal-provincial financial arrangements which is highlighted by the request of Premier Lesage of Quebec. Many of the points Premier Lesage is asking for, as he seeks to meet the fiscal needs within his own province, are the very items that were guaranteed in the original confederating arrangement. They are things which more than just one province is thinking about and talking about today.

We have heard some discussion this afternoon relating to the various cost sharing programs; but why, and under what definition of administrative efficiency can we expect, or should we expect the federal government to be collecting taxes, which in turn it hands back to the provinces? In order to hand them out, it has to retain a certain amount of control. Why should not the federal government step out completely from some of its tax collecting fields and give the provinces the responsibility?

If I understand correctly what I read in the papers and hear from different politicians at the provincial level, the whole question of hospital insurance is in desperate trouble at the present time. We will need a federal-provincial conference to talk about this before too long. There is also the question of the federal government's responsibility in the field of health. Mr. Speaker, it is not good enough that we continue as we have been going on.

Not to belabour the point, or take too much time in the discussion this afternoon, I would only say that if the federal government is not to become hopelessly bogged down in the future, in introducing programs here and withdrawing them there, making enemies of the provincial governments more through clumsiness than through conflicts of policy, such a ministry or department of government is urgently required. Such a department could provide the channels of organization and communication, backed by the authority of a minister of the crown. It would on a permanent basis be able to discuss with the provincial governments the impact of the different levels of government on each other.

This proposition is not something new. In the United States, which has a federal government set-up, there is a secretary of the interior whose basic responsibility is the very thing I am talking about. In the commonwealth of Australia, where the autonomous rights of the states are even more clearly defined than some of the rights of our provinces, it has moved forward to take such action.

I would respectfully urge the Prime Minister to consider this, and consider it in the immediate future. We should not be dragging the provincial premiers to Ottawa every three or four months, each time a problem comes up on which their advice is needed. This is the type of crisis government which has been too typical of our federal administration for too long. Why cannot we see into the future and anticipate some of these problems before we come to them? That is why the consultative aspect of government, particularly on the federal government level, is something which is most urgent.

My sincere hope is that this coming federal-provincial conference will be the starting point for some permanent means by which provincial consultation in all fields can take place. Somehow I wish yesterday had not been a holiday. Our debating time on this important subject is limited now because the debate on the supply motion closes tonight. I do hope we can come back again to this very important problem during the course of the present session and hear from all corners of the house so that we can demonstrate effectively, not only to the nation at large but also to ourselves, that co-operative federalism begins at this moment through co-operative parliamentarianism in this chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased about the present discussion, because it will allow us to become aware of the situation prevailing in Canada, since the need to make the necessary suggestions is being felt.

It is a comfort to know that the present debate, after many other occasions, is an indication at least that people are eager and willing to use their brains in order to find solutions to the problems now existing in Canada with regard to the relations between the two great races.

Mention was made of joint programs, of the action taken generally by the federal government in that field, as well as all the problems regarding federal-provincial relations.

This situation has been simmering for a long time.

Personalities from all political parties, from the federal and provincial governments, from the business world and universities regularly discuss it.

I should like to quote a few excerpts from various conferences showing the importance of the problem. Thus, on October 3 last, the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) mentioned, as reported in Le Devoir of October 3, 1963, the following:

> The hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine stated yesterday in Montreal that the time had come for the federal government to withdraw from provincial fields of jurisdiction, especially the social security field.

That was the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine speaking.

The leader of the Union Nationale party stated last June 16:

> If Ottawa does not meet the demands of the younger generation, we will eventually be faced with separatism.

The premier of Quebec, the Hon. Jean Lesage, stated, as reported in the Globe and Mail on October 1, 1963:

[Text]

> On the question of joint federal-provincial programs Mr. Lesage said Quebec would always denounce federal incursions into fields reserved to the provinces by the British North America Act.

According to the November 4 issue of Le Devoir, Mr. Rene Levesque, minister of natural resources in the provincial government, also gave his views as follows:

> Mr. Rene Levesque stated Saturday that Quebec will have to think of withdrawing from confederation if it is found impossible to have the two great nations of Canada live on equal terms in a federal system. Mr. Levesque added, when asked to deal with the taxation problem, that if Quebec does not succeed in making its opinion prevail at the next federal-provincial conference on taxation, there will be very few chances left to renegotiate the Canadian constitution.

According to La Presse of October 22, 1963, Mr. Gerard Levesque, a member of the provincial cabinet, said:

> The old worn out trick of the "fait accompli" will be all the more intolerable as we shall be left with a choice between two equally unacceptable alternatives, abject subordination or total independence.

Le Droit of October 31, 1963, quotes Mr. Guy Rouleau, member of the House of Commons, as saying:

> Unfortunately, French Canadians who travel outside of Quebec feel they are in a foreign land.

Mr. Speaker, those are statements which speak for themselves.

On June 29, 1963, Mr. Maurice Sauve said:

> French Canadians do not feel at home outside of Quebec borders, and we feel also that the federal government is not truly our government.

Mr. Speaker, here is indeed abundant proof that we should stop and consider this national problem.

Today, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) spoke in favour of joint programs.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam even referred to the statement made by the premier of British Columbia to the effect that, under the equalization program, the province of Quebec had received $65 million more than it had contributed, and that it had everything to gain by remaining within confederation.

Lack of Consultation with Provinces

Mr. Speaker, I took the trouble to look up the most recent statistics and I find that it gets less than its contribution to joint programs. In fact, under our federal system, it gets much less than it contributes. All my figures are taken from statistics prepared by the federal government.

Let us take first of all the annual report of the Department of Forestry for 1962, that is the last one which is available.

Out of a total amount of $11 million paid by the federal government to the provinces in respect of forest inventories and reforestation, the province of Quebec receives absolutely nothing.

As for the grants to the provinces for forest fire protection and forest access road construction, the province of Quebec got $1,277,233, that is 18 per cent of the total amount of $8,823,680.

Again, the province of Quebec has not received a penny of the $4 million which the Department of Forestry has provided for air spraying operations.

My province has received nothing either of the $13 million paid out by the federal government for reforestation under forestry agreements. That is the situation within the Department of Forestry.

Let us come now to the report of the Farm Credit Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962, the last report which is available. We find that only 1,869 mortgage loans amounting to $7,074,000 were granted in the province of Quebec out of 34,175 loans amounting to $217 million.

So, I say that the $65 million paid out to the province of Quebec under the equalization system is already more than offset by those various grants.

In fact, if we consider what has been received by some provinces much smaller than Quebec, we see for instance that Alberta borrowed $46 million, Saskatchewan $66 million, Manitoba $15 million, Ontario $65 million and, as I have already said, Quebec $7 million.

And the allotment by province of farm loans approved during the year ended March 31, 1962 indicates that out of 5,885 loans made in Canada, only 109 were made in the province of Quebec, that is 5 per cent; besides out of the total amount of loans, that is $68,574,000, Quebec received only $1,786,000, when loans made in Ontario amounted to $17 million, $5 million in Manitoba, $19 million in Saskatchewan and $18 million in Alberta.

A study of the same report reveals that out of 20 supervisors of credit working for the corporation, two are assigned to Quebec, five to Ontario, two to Manitoba, four to Saskatchewan and five to Alberta.

Of the 132 credit advisers in the country, four are in the province of Quebec, 25 in Ontario, 12 in Manitoba, 36 in Saskatchewan and 32 in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to understand why the former premier of Saskatchewan declares himself for joint programs, when in his province alone, there are 36 credit advisers of the Farm Credit Corporation, while there are only four in the province of Quebec.

In analysing the report entitled Technical and Vocational Education in Canada, published in English only, one sees that the federal government's share in the building of technical schools in the province of Quebec amounts to $25,714,000 while it amounts to $200,017,000 in Ontario. On the other hand, the province of Alberta, much smaller than Quebec, has benefited from a federal contribution totalling $37 million, as compared with $25 million contributed to Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, this does not apply only to this government, but rather to all the governments which succeeded one another over many years.

The annual report of the Department of Labour for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961 reveals that in the field of training given the unemployed, the federal government has largely contributed, and that out of a total of 10,774 there were 4,170 unemployed registered under this scheme in the province of Quebec. I believe that it is in this respect that the province of Quebec gets the most assistance because it has more unemployed than any other province in Canada.

On the other hand, for vocational training of the handicapped and for federal grants, we find that total payments amounted to $329,566 in 1961 and that nothing at all went to the province of Quebec.

As for training in primary industries and in domestic economy, the federal government paid out a total of $100,877.03 in grants and the province of Quebec received absolutely nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I see that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) is in his seat and I shall take this opportunity to discuss the annual report of the Canadian civil service commission for the year 1962. In so far as the grouping of the federal government employees by provinces is concerned, we find out that out of a total of 201,657 federal civil servants, the province of Quebec has only 31,952, that is about 15 per cent, while the province of Ontario has 87,369.

Those figures, Mr. Speaker, are thought provoking.

Mr. Speaker, if we take the annual report of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962, we find that the payments made by Canada to the provinces taking part in the hospital insurance scheme amounted to $678,533,000. I suggest the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam have a look at the statistics to see whether or not the province of Quebec wishes to keep on participating in joint programs.

An hon. Member: One would have to see Mr. Bennett.

Mr. Gregoire: The premier of British Columbia is the same as the others.

Out of this amount of $678,533,000, which is the total sum paid by Canada to the provinces taking part in the hospital insurance scheme, the province of Quebec received $86 million, Ontario, $274 million, British Columbia, $81 million—that is nearly the same as the province of Quebec.

Let the premier of British Columbia say that Quebec gets more than the others if he wants to. He is getting $81 million out of a total of $678,533,000, while Quebec only receives $86 million. Saskatchewan got $52 million, Alberta, $61 million and Manitoba, $46 million. Those three provinces together are smaller than the province of Quebec and yet they receive twice as much.

Mr. Speaker, those figures speak for themselves.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Is it not true that the provincial governments get a percentage of what they spend, and therefore if they spend more, they get more?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, even if it was spent according to a quota, as suggested by the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, it remains just the same that the figures are there and that, if you talk about dollars and cents, we help through our accumulated taxes, to make up that total amount. And what amount do we get? That is the difference.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that, in the province of Quebec, the hospitalization needs of the population are as great as in the other provinces. But, in our province, it often happens that sick people have to wait three, four and even five weeks to be admitted to the hospital because there are not enough beds.

But if the province of Quebec received its share of revenue, then it could build its own hospitals.

I think, however, that I could answer the question asked by the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

It happens that the province of Quebec, because of its mentality, its desire to grow according to circumstances that are peculiar to the French Canadian group, often does not accept all the federal government's laws and regulations. That is precisely why the province of Quebec does not get all it should from joint programs.

Now, if you look at the statement of federal payments for assistance to old people, the blind and the disabled—when the figures are favourable, they must be quoted also—you will find that out of $16 million, the province of Quebec gets $7,460,000, or almost half the total amount. I wish to give all the figures, those that are in our favour as well as those that are not.

By the same token, according to the federal-provincial agreement on unemployment insurance, the province of Quebec received in January, 1962, $2,957,000, out of a total of $10 million, that is to say approximately 30 per cent.

As far as the geographical distribution of full time jobs is concerned, on March 31, 1962, the province of Quebec had 358 such jobs out of a grand total of 5,213. Those figures are taken from the annual report of March 31, 1962, issued by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

If we look at the annual report for 1962, which we have just been given, I mean ARDA and not the Farm Credit Corporation Act, we will find in it highly significant figures.

Some of the loans are categorized according to provinces or to objectives, there are loans for buying new or second hand farming implements, loans for construction, repairs and alterations of houses and other farm buildings, loans for buying of cattle, and loans earmarked for various improvements. Out of a total of 72,621 loans, 3,244 loans have been granted to the province of Quebec, 13,508 loans to Ontario, 9,639 loans to Manitoba, 20,368 loans to Saskatchewan, (observe the difference with Quebec), 21,523 to Alberta.

If we express the total in dollars, we see that out of $118 million, Quebec has been granted $5 million, Ontario $23 million, Manitoba $15 million, Saskatchewan $31 million and Alberta $34 million.

I come now to the loans for the purchase of farm machinery. The province of Quebec got only 2,660 loans out of a total of 55,955, or $3,770,000 out of a total amount of $87 million.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, those figures are revealing.

The 58th report of the board of transport commissioners December 31, 1962, also contains some interesting figures.

In fact, statement 1 of appendix B, entitled "Expenses by population for grade crossing protection from 1909 to December 31, 1962" indicates the percentage of population and the amount paid out of the railway grade crossing fund. Out of a total of $62 million, $8.7 million were spent in the province of Quebec. With 28 per cent of the over-all population of Canada, Quebec got only 13 per cent of the amount paid out of the railway grade crossing fund. Ontario, with 34 per cent of the national population, received $31,950,000, which is 50 per cent of the total amount.

As for grade separation, reconstruction of grade separation and relocation of public facilities, Quebec got only 24 projects, or a measly one eighth of the total number of 194.

Of the 582 automatic signaling devices covered by the grade crossing improvement program, 76 were installed in Quebec, 70 in Alberta and 260 in Ontario.

Those are self-explanatory figures, Mr. Speaker.

Out of a total of 1,380 other projects carried out under orders issued by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, 288 were in the province of Quebec—that is 1 out of 6—454 in Ontario and 240 in Alberta. that is more than in the province of Quebec.

We could keep on giving statistics of that kind. Let us have a look at the Post Office Department, for instance, and more particularly at the annual report for the year 1962. Under the following heading "Address-book, sales and distribution", one can see that out of a total of 9,739 post offices, 1,532 are located in the province of Quebec, 3,112 in Ontario, 1,329 in Alberta and 1,103 in Saskatchewan. Those are statistics that speak for themselves.

According to the 32nd annual report from the fisheries department, that is available in English only, mind you, total expenditures for all provinces in 1961-1962 reached $23,-097,000. How much has been spent in the province of Quebec—$555,473 or 2 per cent of the total amount. In Ontario, the amount was $394,000, a little less than in Quebec, in British Columbia, $8,165,000; in New Brunswick, $2 million, that is four times that of the province of Quebec, and in Newfoundland, $4,600,000, which is almost ten times the amount spent in Quebec.

Now, let us take the report of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. There is a whole list of statistics; I will skip over some of them and will mention only the most important ones—development of roads leading to resources.

According to the 1962 report, Canada has spent $747,000 up to now for the province of Quebec out of a total of $34 million. No other Canadian province receives less than the province of Quebec. Newfoundland's share is $1,929,000, Prince Edward Island's, $3.5 million, and the province of Quebec gets only $747,000, while Saskatchewan receives $4,457,000. Those are the figures, Mr. Speaker.

Let us look now at what we give. It will be interesting also to see what is given to the federal government in return for what is obtained.

I find, for instance, in the report of the Department of National Revenue, statements of the returns yielded under the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act for the fiscal year April 1, 1961 to March 31, 1962. This is the last report that I could get in French. For the province of Quebec, the total is $925,722,000 out of a grand total of $3,588 million, that is 28 per cent in proportion to the population. In this case, we do pay our share.

If we look at the general income tax and the old age security tax under the heading "Direct payments by individuals", we find that the province of Quebec pays $130 million out of $557 million. Here again, we do pay our share. Under tax deductions at the source, we find that Quebec pays $339 million out of a total of $1,530 million for all Canada. We do pay our share.

With regard to the tax on the profits of crown corporations, the province of Quebec provides $405 million out of a grand total of $1,303 million. When it comes to paying, Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec pays its share indeed.

Now, let us consider the excise tax: $410 million. If we refer to the table entitled: "Summary by provinces"—we have to look on the back of the report to find the French titles—we read the following:

> Report of the Department of National Revenue, including summaries concerning the proceeds from customs and excise and other services, etc. ... for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1962.

Total receipts for import duties, sales tax, other taxes or excise taxes, various levies; total receipts for the province of Quebec $410 million; the province of Ontario, $497 million; plus the receipts from the regional offices, that is an additional amount of approximately $500 million and another sum of $50 million for the province of Quebec. We do more than our share in this field. And what does the province of Quebec receive in return?

When it comes to storing nuclear arms in Canada, over two thirds of the nuclear bases are located in the province of Quebec.

Such is, Mr. Speaker, the contribution of the province of Quebec. And we are told that we must maintain this co-operation. Well, I say we give but we do not receive proportionately to what we give.

They talk about the $65 million which we draw under the equalization plan, but this is offset by the contribution we make, as all other provinces, to all joint plans, but from which we do not receive the share to which we are entitled.

It is not surprising there is agitation going on at the present time in the province of Quebec.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we did our great part and that we are in a position to ask that this system be reconsidered, to ask that the province of Quebec be allowed to deal from now on with its own problems and find by itself solutions to them.

Time has come, Mr. Speaker, to set out exactly what the province of Quebec wishes and what it expects of a reconsidered constitution and a revalorized confederation.

First of all, and I think that the evidence which I presented at the beginning by quoting various excerpts of speeches given by ministers of the government of Quebec is conclusive on that point, the most important point on which we, Quebeckers, are insisting, is that the fiscal agreements must be reconsidered so as to restore to the province of Quebec its sources of revenues in order that it can develop in accordance with its own aspirations, its own culture and its own atmosphere, in short in accordance with the culture proper to French Canadians. That is the first point to consider.

We want to put an end to joint programs. We are convinced that if the province of Quebec is given back its own sources of revenues, so that we can levy ourselves taxes which we need for our own development in the province of Quebec, then we will settle the most important of the problems which are now facing confederation.

I should like to point out to the present government and to the Prime Minister in particular that the province of Quebec unanimously support the ultimatum given by its premier (Mr. Lesage) concerning the 25 per cent of corporation taxes, 25 per cent of personal income tax and 100 per cent of succession duties. At the time, Mr. Lesage stated that that was only a beginning.

Indeed, the final objective—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time is over, unless there is unanimous consent of the house to allow him to finish.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I shall be through in four or five minutes.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Denis: Not more than five minutes.

Mr. Balcer: Go on.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not think that the hon. member has unanimous consent. Order—

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I would hope the hon. gentleman would be given another five minutes to complete what he has to say.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Secretary of State and the hon. members of this house as well; I will only take five minutes to make my representations and draw the conclusions from the figures which I just mentioned.

The first means is the fiscal readjustment up to 100 per cent of our sources of income. And this has indeed been agreed to by the Prime Minister of Canada himself in a statement which he made in the house on December 17, 1962 in connection with the problem of bilingualism and biculturalism in this country. Here are his words:

> It is now clear to all of us, I think, that French-speaking Canadians are determined to become directors of their economic and cultural destiny in their own changed and changing society.

The Prime Minister himself was thus admitting that French Canadians are determined to become directors of their economic and cultural destiny in their own changed and changing society. We realize that and it is for this reason that we have given top priority to this plank of our platform. There is no way to save our culture if we do not control our income sources, if we do not control our economy, if we do not control our spending capabilities, so that our expenditures will be tailored to our own revenues and our own requirements. That is the first condition which will allow us to save our culture.

I heard a moment ago the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam tell us that the government would emerge weakened in its taxation policies if it gave up joint programs.

To this, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the government will never be weakened in its economic and fiscal system, or, rather, that it should not base its economic and fiscal policy solely on the levying of taxes from the people, it should base its economic and fiscal policy on something other than the taxes paid by the people, it must base it rather on the assets and the possibilities of development of the country, and not on the taxes it is able to collect.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in the budget he presented last June made the same remark. I would tell him it is why French Canada, at the present time, does not wish to be controlled in its economy and claims 100 per cent of its total sources of revenue.

There are other subjects, other problems, which must be settled, but I believe they will easily be settled as soon as a re-shaping of the constitution takes place so that two races shall live side by side without discrimination is allowed to develop economically The day this is realized the French Canadian nation is allowed to develop economically and culturally, then it will be possible for understanding to exist between the two races in the country, and those two great races will be able to develop by themselves and for themselves. Until then, it is useless to think of it.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I call for the co-operation of everyone and I ask them to understand before it is too late. If some people, lately, feel an obligation to make statements on separatism, nationalism, the future of confederation and the future of joint programs, it is because they feel there is a problem in Canada. That problem must be dealt with. I ask everyone to seek a solution in the right direction and co-operate before it is too late.

We must realize our present situation instead of trying to elude the problems, but we must seek a legitimate, an appropriate solution before it is too late. That is the wish I should like to express.

Let us realize that at the present time, the French Canadians would like our two great nations to be able to live on the same footing and in an equal partnership.

Before the royal commission on biculturalism, a spokesman for the Ontario junior board of trade recently suggested that the French Canadians have been complaining for a long time. That is why our position may now seem demanding. That same spokesman for the Ontario board of trade also stated that biculturalism is no problem because a century ago, French Canadians were 60 per cent of the population, they are now 30 per cent, and in 100 years from now, they will not even number 10 per cent of the population of Canada.

That is possible, but before it happens, before it is too late, Canadians want to consolidate their position and they want a confederation founded on a basis which would give more weight to the fact that they are a nation which they want to develop by themselves and for themselves, regardless of their numbers.

Only the government of the province of Quebec can ensure blossoming of French culture. We do not rely any longer on the Ottawa government for the development and expansion of that culture, and that is why we want to have 100 per cent of our financial possibilities with which we will be able to develop by ourselves and for ourselves.

People want a strong Canada based on the two greatest cultures in the world, the English culture and the French culture.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think all members of the house will be grateful to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) in at least one respect—that he moved an amendment which made it possible for this house to discuss what is perhaps the most serious domestic question which faces us at the present time—as important a question as any which has faced Canada for many generations, because it is one which goes beyond the narrower limits of fiscal and other relations between the provincial government and the federal government; it goes into the whole question of confederation and, inside confederation, the relationship between the two founding races.

Perhaps I might be permitted to say at the outset that I agree 100 per cent with the closing words of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, if I understood them correctly, to the effect that it must be possible within confederation for Quebec to develop its own identity, its own rights, and to enjoy its own privileges, but inside a strong and united Canada. I should like to express my appreciation of the constructive and forward looking contributions made to this debate by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) speaking on behalf of their parties. I think they treated the subject as it deserved to be treated and as I think it can be treated in the House of Commons, namely as one which is of an importance beyond party politics, even though it is impossible at times to discuss it without bringing party politics into it. Because we are all human, especially, perhaps, those of us who sit in this House of Commons. But the subject has been raised to a high level of debate by the contributions I have just mentioned and I hope I shall be able to keep it at that level.

I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that on the eve of a provincial conference, where very far reaching decisions will be made affecting the future and the destiny of our nation, it is more important to work out policies which will achieve the right objectives of strength and unity—unity without uniformity—than it is to allocate, at least at this time, praise or blame for what has been done or neglected in the past. Perhaps the hon. member will allow me to say that it may be a little easier for the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam to do that than it would be for the right hon. gentleman opposite and myself, because up to the present, at any rate, not having experienced the privileges and responsibilities of office, the hon. gentleman and his friends have no record, in this respect at least, on which they can be praised or blamed. I hope, therefore, the hon. member will not think me disrespectful if I say it is somewhat easier for them to put on the cloak of purity and perfection in this matter than it is for us, who are the products of everything that has gone on before.

The hon. gentleman who moved the amendment adopted what I have often heard referred to by himself and his friends, when they were sitting on this side of the house, as a scattergun approach to a motion of no confidence. I cannot help but recall—and I do it, as Humphrey Mitchell used to say in this house, "in a kindly way,"—that when we erred in that respect, when we were on the other side—and I was one of the sinners in this regard, talking for a long time on a variety of subjects dealing with what I considered to be the iniquities of the government of that day before coming to the motion of no confidence—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have not changed in that respect.

Mr. Pearson: We all change, depending upon where we sit. Some change for the better, and some change for the worse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: But hon. members opposite will certainly recall the indignation which used to be expressed at that time by the leader of the house, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and by the former minister of finance, Mr. Fleming, because we were out of order in making that kind of approach to an amendment. Well, we did not raise this point today, and I am glad we did not because the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was able to roam far and wide over the whole field of government iniquity and opposition purity. He was, in doing so, unduly preoccupied, I thought, with personalities and partisan matters but I make no complaint on that score.

Mr. Herridge: He did it in a kindly way.

Mr. Pearson: Well, once or twice I was tempted to think he fell from grace in that respect, but perhaps I am unduly petulant these days—or, at least I am, according to one of the hon. gentlemen opposite. He was certainly preoccupied with the record of his party, which is understandable, and to that record he gave a paean of praise based on press clippings, on books and on some autobiographical material of his own. He was also very preoccupied—and he looked hard at me when he got on to the subject—with the leadership of this government and of this party. I admired, I was about to say, his audacity in dealing with this matter of leadership. He talked from time to time about divisions within this government because of its leadership, and about disunity inside the cabinet. He even went on to compare this with the great days of a year, two years, three years and four years ago and said that there were hornets nests stirring around the leadership today and there were no hornets nests stirring around the leadership in those days. I will leave him to his reminiscences on that matter.

Toward the end of his statement he moved this amendment:

> That this house condemns the government for its failure to carry out the spirit of co-operative federalism and for its neglect to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall wholly or partly within provincial jurisdiction.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) pointed out, he has condemned us for our failure in the field of co-operative federalism after less than seven months in office, during which time, Mr. Speaker, there has been constant consultation with the provinces. I think it will be shown by the forthcoming conference with the provinces that that consultation and the spirit in which it has been conducted will be successful in terms of results from that conference.

I am sorry that the hon. gentleman is not in the house at the moment because I dislike talking about him while he is not here. I am sure he has a very good reason for being away. He may be on television again. He has condemned us because during this period of seven months, and seven months is a very short period in the life a government which will extend for four or five years—

Mr. Starr: Why do you look at the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) when you say that?

Mr. Pearson: I was not looking at the hon. member for Red Deer. I was looking at the right hon. gentleman opposite when I said that. The hon. member condemned us because we had not consulted with the provinces. Indeed, he used very strong language as to the state of relations now existing between the provinces and the federal government because of our attitudes, our lack of consultation and our procedures and policies. Indeed, we were condemned by one hon. member opposite, whom I am looking at at the moment, in an interjection which indicated that we should not have brought into the House of Commons certain policies and certain legislation which concerned the provinces, admittedly without having consulted with those provinces, before we were elected to form a government, which would be a new version of co-operative federalism. With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can go quite so far as that in consultation.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), citing various ministerial delinquencies in this field of non-co-operation and non-consultation, mentioned specifically, among others, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud). He gave him, if I may use a vulgarism, quite a going over because in his field he had done nothing to consult with the provinces before the conference on fishery matters with all the provinces, which has been called to meet in January of 1964, I believe.

The Minister of Fisheries gave me the result of some inquiries he had made for me. I wish to point out that already in his relatively short period in office he has met with the ministers responsible for fisheries in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and he has received specific proposals from each of the ten provinces in connection with the January conference. I think that is a very good record in regard to consultation and a record which I think other ministers could, if not equal, at least approach.

I think we all agree that whatever may have been the practice in the past—by the past I am not thinking only of the last five or six years but the last 25 years—whatever may have been the record, whatever may have been the attitude of the federal governments in those years, the time has now come that we must consult with the provinces in what we now call co-operative federalism on every matter, not only those which are within their jurisdiction, in which case consultation must be obligatory and automatic, but also on all matters that are of direct concern to them.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle referred to his own experience in this regard leading up to the resources conference. I think that was a desirable and effective initiative on his part and on the part of the former government, resulting in a very constructive conference which was responsible for the setting up of federal-provincial machinery which I agree should be a model for this kind of thing. This is not the first time this has been done, but it is the most recent occasion on which it has been done on such a large scale. As a matter of fact, I do not know whether it has been done previously in this way on such a large scale but I hope it will be the kind of model we will follow in the future. If it is successful, as I am sure it will be, undoubtedly it will be a model for the future. There may well be that kind of a conference with a council emerging from it of federal-provincial ministers in other fields. Perhaps something will emerge from the forthcoming provincial-federal conference in this direction. I hope so, because that may be the direction along which we should proceed so far as consultation is concerned.

We were also criticized this morning and we have been criticized in the house very vigorously previously as a government, because we did not adopt the right courses in regard to consultation with the provinces on such matters as the municipal development fund, the contributory pensions plan and others. I mention only the two matters now, the municipal development fund, which is certainly within the jurisdiction of the federal government, and the contributory universal portable pension plan, which is also certainly within the jurisdiction of the federal government as the result of a constitutional amendment by agreement with the provinces that brought it within its jurisdiction.

Therefore, constitutionally, the federal government has the right to go ahead in these matters, and in putting forward proposals on behalf of our party when we were in opposition I think we were quite entitled—in fact, there was no other way of doing it—to put forward proposals for a municipal development fund and a contributory pensions plan. We have carried out one of these proposals and we intend to carry out the other. However, when we took on the responsibility of office we were then confronted with the problem which I suppose confronts any government in a situation of this kind, or certainly will in the future. That problem is whether the consultation which is required in respect of a matter in which the provinces express their direct interest and in which perhaps they share jurisdiction—they do in the case of the pension plan—should take place in advance of anything being brought into the house, on the general idea that we should secure their agreement in principle and perhaps even in detail with regard to the legislation before it is even introduced into the house in the form of a resolution. Or whether on the other hand we should consult with them on the basis of a resolution which has been introduced into the house and perhaps even legislation which has received second reading with the idea of changing that legislation in certain circumstances as a result of the consultation.

I think the latter course was the better in the cases I mentioned, and I think it will turn out in the future to be generally the preferable method of consultation, that is, to consult with provincial governments on the basis of a concrete proposal. You do, however, take the political risk in the event of the consultation, of withdrawing in some respects from your own proposals that you submit to them, and you will be accused of altering your proposals, of giving in to pressures and all the rest. But I do not think that is a very high price to pay if, as a result of the consultation and the changes you make, you then have a piece of legislation which will be acceptable not only to the federal parliament but also to the provincial legislatures.

Mr. Herridge: May I ask the Prime Minister a question? Would he say under those circumstances what he is doing is that he is actually in effect working from experience by having a motion before the house?

Mr. Pearson: I think, Mr. Speaker, I have said that in these particular cases that was the best way to proceed. I am not going to say this will always be the best way to proceed, but I think it will turn out to be in the majority of cases that require consultation with the provinces.

The contributory pension plan is another example, quite apart from the fact that a decision of a provincial government, in this case Quebec, taken after we had assumed office, made some change in the resolution which we had introduced inevitable in any case. I think we were well advised to follow the course we did in introducing a resolution and explaining that resolution in detail, and then submitting the details of the resolution to the provinces for consideration before proceeding, even though that means, as it will in this case, changes in our ideas, plans and original proposals, but changes which I think will make the proposals and legislation acceptable, I still dare to hope, to all the provinces of Canada.

But in any event this is the kind of legislation on which the federal government can proceed even if one province, one major province, contracts out. In that case, if that contracting out continues—and this is the responsibility of the government in question—we will still have further conferences with the provinces, as a result of which we will introduce legislation which I hope will be acceptable to them, and we will do that without any delay that can be avoided. I give that pledge, because I was asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam whether we still felt the same way about our promise in this field.

We are, as I have said, facing a vitally important conference with the provinces. We had, if I might term it—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the Prime Minister goes on, could I ask whether or not he or the government of Canada were aware of the plan of Premier Lesage prior to the time that the Minister of National Health and Welfare introduced the resolution regarding social security in this house?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the decision of the government of Quebec, taken for reasons which I do not quarrel with at all, and with which I am sure my hon. friend does not, but for reasons which were considered very strong in their case. I was not aware of their decision to contract out before we introduced our own scheme.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What were the reasons?

Mr. Pearson: And I may say our own scheme was drafted on the assumption that all the provinces would be co-operating with it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was the Prime Minister aware of the Quebec position at the time the resolution was introduced, not when the matter was first discussed?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have not got the dates in question in my mind, but I will be very glad to look that up. I am not trying to avoid the answer. I am not sure exactly when the resolution was introduced or when we were informed by the provincial government of Quebec of the action they were going to take. I will find that out, and it can be found very quickly.

Now, we had in July what I have described as in essence a preliminary federal-provincial conference. These matters of joint concern were discussed. It is quite true that the federal government, as a result of this conference, made changes in certain proposals which it had submitted or intended to submit to the House of Commons. I am thinking particularly of the municipal development fund. But in making those changes in the case of the municipal development fund the principles of the legislation we had introduced into this house were maintained. We did not default on the principles of the legislation which had been introduced. In respect to the contributory pension plan we have made it clear that we propose to proceed with a universal, contributory portable pension plan.

It was suggested, in fact more than suggested, it was stated this morning by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that relations between the federal and provincial governments had deteriorated, that they were in a bad way and that we were responsible for this. Indeed this is the foundation of his motion of no confidence. I think it is necessary, because of what he said this morning, to put on the record some evidence, as he put on the record newspaper evidence to support his case.

I will put on the record statements made by provincial leaders at that conference, as to what they thought about the results of the conference and the way it was conducted. The premier of Quebec, in his press release at the end of that federal-provincial conference on July 27, issued this statement:

> The Quebec government expresses its satisfaction for the spirit of co-operation on the part of the federal government and the comprehension of the various provincial delegations.

He went on:

> It is now evident that it is possible within the Canadian confederation to find formulas and agreements which give satisfaction to the legitimate point of view of Quebec without depriving the other provincial governments of their rights to obtain different conditions.

Then the provincial secretary of the government of British Columbia told a reporter after the conference ended:

> Good will was going out of everybody's ears. We could stand a lot of the co-operation that was established there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did he say the day before yesterday?

Mr. Pearson: I have another quotation from the Canadian Press account of the conference. On July 29, 1963, the Canadian Press reported Premier Lesage as saying in part, and it quotes him:

> It would appear that the system of confederation has entered into a new era

And it is evident from his press statement that he meant a better era. Premier Lesage went on to tell the reporter, and I quote from the Canadian Press report:

> Never have I seen such a spirit of good will and co-operation.

And again, to complete the quotation:

> The former government would say, "We will consider your demand," or "this is our decision." But at this conference, the government was willing to discuss particular amendments to its bills and accept our suggestions.

Mr. Pigeon: What did Rene Levesque say?

Mr. Pearson: The conference did not have the pleasure and the privilege of having Mr. Rene Levesque as one of its members. Possibly the next conference will, and it may be we will be able to get the same kind of statement from him after it is over.

The Canadian Press report goes on to say:

> Senior advisors who have sat through such meetings for years—either on the federal or provincial side—said the kudos, coming from practically all delegates, appeared genuine.

They noted that a communique usually refers to a "spirit of co-operation" but in this case they were "not just words".

This is confirmed by some of the remarks made at the end of the conference, according to Southam News Services, by provincial leaders:

> "Great improvement", said Manitoba's Duff Roblin.
> "I am happy," said Ontario's John Robarts.
> "Everybody's delighted", cried Joey Smallwood expansively.
> "This is by far the most successful federal-provincial conference we have had since I assumed office", said New Brunswick's Louis Robichaud.
> "I'm happy with the result and even more happy with the spirit of the conference", said Alberta provincial treasurer E. W. Hinman.

In the face of that reaction, that response to the conference which the provincial leaders held last July, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said, on the eve of this forthcoming conference, that he is convinced it is doomed to failure; that it is doomed before it has begun, because of the success of the conference last July. He laments this inevitable failure. I am not sure why he laments it. There were times during his speech this morning when he seemed to lament it because the federal government was going to abandon certain shared programs, or withdraw from them, and at other times he seemed to lament it because we were becoming too centralized and were the historic, old Liberal party of centralism. His speech this morning, interesting as it was, was a little confused with regard to the reason for his lamentations, but they were there.

I do not think any member of this house, whatever he may say in the house, feels that this conference is doomed to failure. It would be a sorry day indeed for our country if it were doomed to failure. It is not doomed to failure; it is going to be successful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: The agenda for the conference has been distributed and all members of parliament have no doubt had a chance to read it. Just one glance at the agenda shows how vitally important it is that this conference should be successful. We are going to talk about the state of the Canadian economy, employment measures and unemployment, economic and industrial policies, conditional grants and shared cost programs, including hospital insurance costs and operation, and categorical assistance programs. We are going to talk about fiscal relations, a national agricultural marketing board, the administration of Indian and Eskimo affairs, a Canada pension plan, medical services, provincial lotteries, and continuing federal-provincial liaison arrangements. Therefore it is of the most vital importance to the future of our country that this conference should not be doomed to failure but should be successful. We on this side will do everything that we can, subject to our responsibility as a federal government, to ensure that it is successful.

The hon. gentleman who spoke this morning was particularly critical of the record of the government, certain statements that had been made, in connection with shared programs and what he was pleased to interpret as a kind of arbitrary and unilateral withdrawal of the federal government, by announcements made inside and outside the house, from these programs and, presumably, by this kind of withdrawal weakening the authority and the responsibility of the federal government in these important fields. He did not quote from it, but he referred to a speech made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) on this matter, from which he drew some very gloomy conclusions. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I had better read what the President of the Privy Council said. I will read from the text of his speech and would ask my hon. friend whether he disagrees with this. If he does disagree with it, perhaps he will indicate to the house that he does, because he certainly gave the impression this morning that he disagreed with this policy. It will be very interesting to get the record straight on this matter because he spoke, no doubt, for his party on this and other matters this morning. I quote from the text of the speech made by the President of the Privy Council to the Canadian club in Toronto on November 4, 1963:

> In the political field, our federalism needs a new orientation. The federal government should be prepared to withdraw from existing and well established joint programs in areas which have been assigned to the provinces and to compensate financially those provincial governments which are willing to assume these additional responsibilities.

I emphasize those words, "which are willing to assume these additional responsibilities". I ask the hon. member now whether he is not in accord with the policy which makes it possible for the provincial governments, if they so desire, to withdraw from certain existing and well established joint programs in areas which have been assigned to them, for which withdrawal they would be compensated financially by the federal government so they should be able to discharge these new responsibilities. I ask the hon. gentleman whether he objects to that; and if he does object to it, presumably this is to be the policy of his party in opposition on the matter of shared programs.

Mr. Graffiey: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman said last week there were certain conditions under which the federal government would withdraw from the joint programs. Are those the certain conditions?

Mr. Pearson: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, there is one very important condition, and that is that the provincial governments should wish the federal government to withdraw from certain programs and take on these responsibilities themselves. That is a very important condition and it is on that condition that we have put forward this policy in regard to shared programs, which the hon. gentleman opposite, speaking for his party this morning presumably, repudiates. Let us understand a little better what he repudiates, I go on to read what the President of the Privy Council said:

> I am certain that such a general approach to the problems of Canadian unity is completely unacceptable to the extremists on both sides. I am quite sure that it would be supported by most French Canadians as a much better alternative to separatism.

Then he went on to say:

> The movement for greater economic emancipation has already begun in Quebec. A federal-provincial conference will be held in Ottawa at the end of this month. I hope that this will be only the first of a series of meetings designed to reconsider and redefine our federal structure of government. A royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism has been set up and is now getting prepared to hold what I call a referendum on these vital matters. In the meantime, the preparations for the centennial of the Canadian confederation are under way. But we will not have much to celebrate if we fail in those attempts to rebuild our unity. We began in 1864 to develop the compromise which was accepted in 1867. It will not be too early to get to work together in 1964, if we want to celebrate a new alliance in 1967.

I do not take exception, no matter what my hon. friend may say, to that new concept of co-operative federalism expressed in those words. Just to show that this is not a new policy put forward since this party once again took on the responsibility of office, I would point out that this policy in respect to shared programs was first put forward in our rally of 1961. It was a formal part of our election campaign program of 1962 and was put forward as such before the general election of 1962. I want to read these words just to show that this policy is not new. This is under the heading, "We will assure flexibility in joint programs", and it goes on to explain what we mean by that.

> If some provinces wish, they should be able to withdraw, without financial loss, from joint programs which involve regular expenditures by the federal government and which are well established. In such cases, Ottawa will compensate provinces for the federal share of the cost, by lowering its own direct taxes and increasing equalization payments.

Again, I ask the hon. gentleman who spoke this morning for his party whether he takes exception to that statement of policy on these matters.

We will be considering these matters at a provincial conference at a time in our history when there is a great deal of unrest in regard to the working out of confederation and at a time when, as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) said a few moments ago, there are French speaking Canadians who feel that in the working out of confederation they have not been fairly treated. We have to take that feeling into account. As a result of this feeling, which I think has been stronger during the last year or so than perhaps ever before in our history in peacetime, it is all the more important that this conference which meets in two weeks should be successful in dealing not only with the specific matters on the agenda or in setting up machinery which can subsequently deal with them; but also in developing a new spirit of co-operation between the provinces and the federal government so that all the provinces and all the people of Canada will feel that confederation is working to their advantage and to the national advantage.

In this difficult period through which we are going, on the one hand we have the extremists and, on the other we have the voice of moderation which was heard in this house today. We have on the one hand, the extreme of separatism against co-operation. We have defeatism against faith in the future of our country. We have prejudice, against understanding and we have bigotry against reason as we face these problems of confederation and national destiny. I think it is high time, as I have said outside the house and as other members have said outside, that the voice of reason, moderation and understanding should be heard and strongly heard, as it was here in this house the other night when the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) spoke. It should be heard both in English and in French. It should be a voice for a country which is greater than its parts, a country which will rise above these agitations and these discords which would reduce our country to the level of separate and competing groups.

I know hon. members of this house will reject, as I reject, any such dismal and disunited destiny for Canada. At the same time I realize, as hon. members realize, that in a federal state with a relatively few people spread across half a continent, a state which would be difficult to govern even if it were a unitary state, there are bound to be today as there have been in the past, pressures pulling us apart which must be counteracted by stronger pressures to keep us together. Surely, the House of Commons can give a lead to the country in this regard. I think therefore, Mr. Speaker, there should be positive action emanating from this house, certainly from the government, which will achieve that purpose of keeping us together. We all have to admit frankly and honestly that when we talk about these matters while we are thinking not only of Quebec we do think primarily of Quebec, because it is Quebec and the French speaking Canadians who seem to have a sense of incompleteness, almost of grievance in the way confederation has worked out for them.

There is the problem of federalism. There is that of national unity. We have heard about them as linked and in some way complicated by the problem of the relations between English speaking and French speaking Canadians. Because the federal parliament and the federal government have an English speaking majority, although there are 11 French speaking members of the present government, they are inevitably regarded by some people in Quebec as somewhat remote from and perhaps at times almost even hostile to the aspirations of the French speaking people in Quebec. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) uttered what I thought were some very wise words this afternoon when he said that our efforts to discharge our responsibilities as a federal government are often interpreted as a threat of some kind to the special position, the special rights or privileges of Quebec as a province inside confederation.

When I listened to the hon. member for Lapointe this afternoon talking about the province of Quebec on the one hand, and the federal government, the federal parliament and the federal authorities on the other, as if these two things had to be separated, I thought to myself that the people of Quebec should also remember they are represented in this House of Commons and in the federal cabinet. While the provincial government in Quebec, of whatever party, will always have a special obligation and a special desire to protect the people of the province of Quebec, as any provincial government would have, let us not forget that that same desire to protect and advance the interests of the people of Quebec is shown by the Quebec members of this house and the Quebec members of the cabinet. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I reject this idea that there must be some inevitable conflict between Ottawa and Quebec.

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Gregoire: First, I should like to say that I never mentioned a conflict between the two governments. Would the Prime Minister admit that when each level of government has its own responsibilities and the means to take care of its own responsibilities, then the areas of conflict between both governments will be eliminated and there will be chance for complete understanding between both governments?

Mr. Pearson: I am sorry if I misinterpreted what the hon. gentleman said. I did not mean to do so. Of course, I agree with him that the greater the clarification of responsibility—and that has been going on ever since 1867, sometimes successfully and sometimes unsuccessfully of the division of taxes, resources and other things—the more clarification that can be brought into these matters, the less likelihood there will be of trouble between the federal and provincial levels of government. I entirely agree with him on that.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is possible to believe sincerely and completely in a full and equal French speaking and English speaking partnership, as I think all members of this house do believe, without denying to the federal government enough authority and adequate resources to discharge the responsibilities imposed on it by the constitution, which are essential for the people of the nation and also for the well-being of the people in the provinces, as my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam pointed out this afternoon. I believe not only that the rights and privileges of the provinces inside confederation are a basic essential for co-operative federalism; I also believe that the federal government must have enough authority to do the job entrusted to it by the people of Canada. Surely these two things can and must be reconciled.

As far as I am concerned, adapting and perhaps misquoting the words used by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, who in turn was referring to the immortal words of a very great man, I do not feel that I was chosen to preside over the liquidation of the Canadian confederation. Because I believe in the Canadian nation inside that confederation, a nation strong and a nation united, just as I believe in full and accepted French speaking and English speaking partnership as the only possible foundation for strength and unity. To accuse any federal government of any party, as has been done, of being dangerously centralist merely because it seeks the legislative and financial resources to discharge its Canadian responsibilities is as wrong as it is to accuse a provincial government of being separatist because it seeks adequate revenues, an adequate revenue base, in order to discharge its own provincial responsibilities. Federal and provincial responsibilities need not, and should not, conflict in these matters, although it is very easy for that kind of conflict to develop unless there is good will, and understanding on both sides. It is also easy for conflict to develop through the action of extremists on either side, which action produces an extreme reaction on the other side. That is developing in our country today and it is our real danger. These two things must be reconciled, especially—I do not apologize for saying "especially"—in the province of Quebec, which is in so many ways not a province like the others. These things must and can be reconciled; but this reconciliation will not be easy to bring about. It has never been easy to bring about in any federal state, and it will not be easy in Canada either, where we have some very special difficulties facing us in this regard, not only in our relations between the races inside Canada, but also because of the relations between our own country and our neighbour, and indeed our relations inside the Atlantic community.

There is one special situation which arises here—I do not like to call it a problem, although it may be a problem; but it is also an opportunity—when we talk, as we do, about the two founding races. And I think we have a right to talk about the two founding races, because we must remember that there is not, and there is not ever likely to be, a Canadian race. This is especially true if we remember that not only did pioneers from England combine their efforts with pioneers from France to build up this country, but that today almost one quarter of our population is made up of Canadians whose origins are neither French nor English.

Mr. Pigeon: More.

Mr. Pearson: Someone says it is more than one quarter.

Mr. Pigeon: One third.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps it is almost one third if you include the Irish. We sometimes call this one quarter or one third, perhaps inaccurately and rather loosely, "new Canadians". But they are new Canadians who have adopted one or the other of the two official languages in this country without giving up their own culture, their own customs and their own traditions which themselves are making an invaluable new contribution to the development of a new country. One of these people is reported to have said the other day before the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism that he was worried about the use of the term "biculturalism", as if it divided all Canadians into two cultural groups, either French speaking or English speaking. This gentleman said there could be no second class citizens in this country, that you could not lump all these people not originally French speaking or English speaking into a group which was inferior in any way, or which felt inferior in any way, to other Canadians. Of course there can be no second class citizens of any kind in this country, whether through colour, race or creed. The only way in which we can maintain unity in Canada is by recognizing and glorying in our diversity. Canada is a country which must also be based on recognition and respect of equal rights.

Also very much in our minds as we approach the federal-provincial conference is the fact that there is a constitutional and financial duality to our federalism which must be understood. I have already touched on this. For instance, if the federal government at the request of the provinces, a request they have been making for a good many years—and in any federal system the provincial level of government or the state level of government is bound to make this kind of request—turns over more and more of the shared fields of taxation, or indeed all of them, to the provinces—or perhaps I should be more accurate and say to the provincial governments—then the federal government must either find the money which it has to have from some other source—and ultimately the Canadian taxpayer wherever he lives and in whatever province he may live is the single source—or it must ask the provinces to take over full responsibility for expenditure now undertaken, in whole or in part by the federal government. That, in a nutshell, is the fiscal problem. Again it is a problem of reconciliation between the federal and provincial levels of government. It is not going to be easy for any government in Ottawa to raise more money—and I am looking at the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon)—for its own increasing needs—and they are increasing—resulting in turn from the increasing demands made upon it by the people of Canada, the peoples of the provinces. It will be difficult to get the additional revenue required to meet these increases and often perfectly justifiable demands, and at the same time make larger money grants to the provinces, however justifiable the request for such grants may seem to the provinces. The federal treasury has exactly the same limitation as provincial treasuries. They are not self-renewing and each can only be replenished from the same source. There are those who argue that the transfer of both new funds and new responsibilities to the provinces would be the simplest and best course. I expect the hon. member for Lapointe would be among them.

But those who argue in this way sometimes ignore the character of our Canadian federalism. Their argument was met by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. There is a great disparity between riches, resources and, indeed, needs, in one province as opposed to another. As we all know, this disparity, which now exists and which is one of the facts of the present situation, has resulted in the concept of the equalization of economic opportunity and social benefits between Canadians in the various provinces as an obligation of the central government. That is now accepted, and it has been for some years—the obligation upon the central government to equalize opportunities and benefits by making the financial resources available in a calculated way to the provinces. We are committed to that on this side of the house as, I understand, all parties are now committed. To keep confederation strong, and to make national unity based on it stable, will require this recognition of the necessity of equalization, just as it requires continuous effort and willingness to adjust our basic constitutional structure to changing conditions.

It is obvious that the founders of confederation and those who drew up the British North America Act could not foresee the conditions which were to exist a century later. They were even uncertain as to political developments in their own time, and this uncertainty led a good many of them to prefer a unitary to a federal Canadian state. Fortunately the federal concept, with all the problems it involves and all the difficulties it created, prevailed. But federalism, if it is to be strong, must be flexible in the sense that it must adapt itself to change. We should not be afraid about that. This means constant re-examination and, when necessary, reshaping the constitutional act and the constitutional structure.

Today of course we all agree as to the necessity for such a re-examination and reshaping. As I have said more than once, and others have said this outside the House of Commons, while it may be a time for the re-examination and reshaping of the constitutional structure it is not a time for tearing down the building on the pretext of repairing and strengthening it. That would be as tragic for our future hopes as it is unnecessary for the solution of our present problems. All I have been trying to say means that there must be a close, continuous and co-operative association between the federal government and the provincial governments.

In the light of the amendment, as it has been moved, I am willing to admit that co-operation should be closer, perhaps, than it has been in the past. I agree, also, that there must be some permanent machinery set up to make this co-operation and this consultation more effective in the future than it has been in the past. I cannot refrain from adding, when I say this, that consultation is a two way street in any federal system. While it is important that the federal government should consult the provinces on all matters which lie within their jurisdiction—and indeed it must do so; I believe, also, that the provinces should be consulted, too, on all matters in which they have a great and immediate interest. The federal government should, equally, be consulted by those provincial governments which give effect to far reaching social and economic plans which have a national significance. That is what I mean when I say consultation is a two way street. However, we must provide some continuing machinery for consultation and this is one of the items on the agenda of the conference.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle referred to this question this morning and indicated that we had turned down a suggestion to this effect put forward by, as he described him, his young friend from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). But this proposal is not new. It has been put forward on several occasions in the past, but for one reason or another it was never carried into effect. If I may be forgiven for introducing a personal note, I can remember, back in the 'thirties when I was secretary to provincial conferences, asking some of the political leaders of that day why such a system could not be introduced. One of them was Mr. Bennett and the other was Mr. King. I made the same inquiry once of Mr. St. Laurent. The objection at that time, as it was given to me—I think it was valid in its day though its validity has, I think, diminished—was that if provincial representatives were permanently established in Ottawa to start continuous consultative machinery it would amount, almost, to diplomatic representation. The presence in Ottawa of such representatives would tend to accentuate the differences between the provinces and the federal government and, possibly, create a feeling of separation, increasing rather than lessening the differences between the two.

As I say, I think that argument has less validity at the present time than it might have had in those days, and I believe there is a great deal to be said for a provincial secretariat. I think the idea of such a secretariat as a liaison measure between conferences is not a new one. Nova Scotia suggested such an agency 25 years ago in its brief to the Rowell-Sirois commission. The idea was reviewed, later, by the Tremblay commission and in July, 1960, the premier of Quebec asked for a continuing secretariat in his brief to the federal-provincial conference of that year. I hope we shall be able to make progress with this idea at the forthcoming conference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question? He mentioned a conversation he had with Mr. Bennett. Does he recall what year that was, because my understanding is that Mr. Bennett was in favour of such a liaison and that he came to this conclusion in 1935 shortly before he was defeated. I should like to know when Mr. Bennett made that statement.

Mr. Pearson: I am not trying to hold Mr. Bennett down to a definite statement of policy as prime minister, but I remember asking him about this when we were going over on shipboard to the jubilee imperial conference in London. That would be in 1933 or 1934—one of those years.

Anyway, there will have to be changes made, and one of those changes will have to be the development of some kind of machinery for continuing consultation between conferences. Another will be the holding of conferences more often, perhaps periodically, between the provincial and the federal governments.

Meanwhile, as consideration is being given to changes which may be required in our federal relationship, financial, constitutional, and economic, the federal government has to perform its task now, and within the limits of its jurisdiction now; and it has to do what is necessary for the security, welfare and prosperity of all Canadian citizens who, after all, are the same people whether under provincial or federal authority. In the discharge of this responsibility I repeat there must be no suggestion of federal policy being imposed on any province by Ottawa in matters which are in any way within provincial jurisdiction. The federal intention is to co-operate with the provinces in truly national policies which respect provincial rights, while protecting and advancing the interest and welfare of all the Canadian people. This, I submit, is the only way the problem of federalism and of English speaking and French speaking relations as an aspect of federalism can be solved. It is our most important domestic, political problem and it affects our very survival as a nation.

I do not underestimate, and I am sure no hon. member of the house could possibly underestimate, the difficulties in finding the right solution, but I do not wish either to exaggerate those difficulties. Nor as we face those difficulties should we allow our sense of proportion to be distorted by the noise from extremists on one side or the other. One hundred years ago the fathers of our country had no illusions about the task they were undertaking, but it did not daunt them and it did not defeat them. Here is an excerpt from one of the speeches in the confederation debates of 1865.

An hon. Member: Were you there?

Mr. Pearson: No, I was not there but sometimes I feel as if I might have been there.

Mr. Pigeon: The President of the Privy Council was probably there.

Mr. Pearson: I quote:

> We are endeavouring to adjust harmoniously greater difficulties than have plunged other countries into all the horrors of civil war. We are striving to settle forever issues hardly less momentous than those that have rent the United States of America and are now exposing it to all the horrors of civil war. Have we not then great cause of thankfulness that we have found a better way for the solution of our troubles than that which has entailed in other countries such deplorable results?

The building of a strong united confederation, Mr. Speaker, on the foundation of the two basic races of Canada is still the better way. That is still the great Canadian challenge as it was in 1865, and I am sure that as our forefathers met this challenge in 1865 the people of Canada will be able to meet it in 1963.

We have had an amendment, Mr. Speaker, and we have had a subamendment moved by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). The subamendment deletes the words of the amendment and replaces them with the following:

> That this house urges the government to carry out more fully the spirit of co-operative federalism and to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall to any extent within provincial jurisdiction.

I have been talking now for quite a long time about what we can and should do as a government and as a parliament to carry out more fully the spirit of co-operative federalism and to consult more closely with the provinces on matters which fall within their jurisdiction. So the subamendment moved by the hon. member is clearly not a vote of want of confidence but an affirmation of a principle acceptable to the government.

I assume, Mr. Speaker, that when the hon. member who moved the subamendment talked about "programs which fall to any extent within provincial jurisdiction" he meant that if there is a program inside a joint field that is not a provincial field, and he was referring to exclusive provincial jurisdiction. We interpret the subamendment in that sense and I understand that is the interpretation which he himself gives to it. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have no difficulty whatever and, indeed, we are very happy to support the subamendment. If the subamendment should be carried I shall then ask one of my colleagues, under standing order 56 (4)(e) to move that the Speaker do now leave the chair.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak—

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask the Prime Minister one question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is some difficulty here. The hon. member for Lapointe has risen for the purpose of asking a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Gregoire: Would the Prime Minister make some comments on this subject with regard to the requirement from the province of Quebec of 25 per cent of income tax and 25 per cent of corporation taxes?

Mr. Pearson: I could but I do not think I should take any time away from the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Gregoire: That is the most important problem.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons is a place where things happen that are unexpected. We had that experience in 1958 in the month of January when, as a result of the activities of the present Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill)—he received the honour of having suggested it—an amendment was moved by the then opposition that the government of that day should resign and make way for the opposition.

An hon. Member: It obviously should have.

Mr. Chevrier: It was premature by just a few years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that amendment received its answer a very few weeks thereafter. I followed the Prime Minister today with the greatest of interest in an address that was obviously prepared for the dominion-provincial conference but was utilized today to meet the debate. It is very obvious that an address such as that could not have been prepared as a result of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton).

We moved an amendment to the motion to go into supply. We moved:

> That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "that this house condemns the government for its failure to carry out the spirit of co-operative federalism and for its neglect to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall wholly or partly within provincial jurisdiction".

Mark what has happened. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has moved that the amendment be amended by deleting certain words. With the deletion of those words, Mr. Speaker, the motion to go into supply is struck out. I point out that the motion is that the house go into committee of supply.

We moved that all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor.

The subamendment proposes that our amendment be accepted, except in so far as the changes suggested by the hon. member in moving the subamendment are concerned. That means that if the members of the government support this subamendment they are voting against the motion to go into supply and, as a result, will be voting themselves out of office.

This is one time when they have outsmarted themselves, and I want to go into this in greater detail in the time at my disposal, but I now emphasize the fact that on the one hand there is a motion that the house go into supply, and on the other hand there is accepted a subamendment in which all the words after "that" had been deleted.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what is the consequence, and the position in which the members of the government will be, in voting in support of something that will wipe out the motion to go into supply?

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the right hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I am talking. Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: Very willingly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Secretary of State got into his difficulties in January of 1958, and apparently it is again his suggestion that puts the Prime Minister in the most difficult position that any prime minister has ever been put, in the history of our country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read standing order 56.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now they are trying to get back on the rails after they vote in favour of the subamendment. I certainly appreciate the fact that they realize and recognize the error of their ways; that they realize they should now use more fully the spirit of co-operative federalism; that they consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall to any extent within provincial jurisdiction.

We congratulate them on their conversion. Never since the days of Saul en route to Damascus have we seen a conversion to equal this which has befallen a political party.

This is really one of the most interesting situations that has ever developed. As I endeavoured to say when I rose, I did not intend to participate in this debate. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) seconded the amendment this morning and intended to speak , but the turn of events made necessary my placing before the house the situation. I am going to wait with interest these hon. gentlemen opposite voting for the subamendment that strikes out every word after "that," because when every word after "that" is struck out there will be no motion to go into supply, and the result will be inevitable.

I am sure Your Honour will be taking advisement, for this indeed represents the greatest somersault in smartness that has ever been placed before the House of Commons on a motion. It has all the earmarks of having been fathered by the Secretary of State, but the paternity of the speech on the part of the Prime Minister today will be the subject of consideration for years. I am sure that never before has a leader of government in this country decided, on behalf of those associated with him, to accept a subamendment that in reality condemns the government for its failure, while deleting the words of condemnation. A motion of non-confidence requires no such words as "condemn," or "for its failure," or "neglect." It can be worded as generally as is this subamendment, and I see a fine predicament for the government in the hours ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: Read the standing orders.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Look at it as you will. By this decision they have delivered themselves into the position of the opposition.

Now, sir, concerning the general views expressed by the Prime Minister about maintaining confederation, and as to making our contribution to assure it shall be preserved, that is our purpose and aim. That is the determination of members in all parties in this country.

The Prime Minister used a quotation from 1865. He did not say who it was who made the statement in question, but I seem to recall that those words were the words of Macdonald. Similar words were spoken by Macdonald, and at the time of the civil war in the United States Canada was engaged in nation building. The determination was made that this part of North America should remain under the British crown, and the means to achieve this were the establishment of a federal system.

The American system would not work in Canada. Weaknesses had been found in that system. Wherever matters were not specifically allocated to the central government in Washington, they became matters of legislation within the exclusive jurisdiction of the states.

As a result of the discussions led by Macdonald, and with the co-operation of Cartier, George Brown and others who participated, a plan was arrived at whereby we would assure the maintenance and preservation of the rights of the French, both in their language and in their religion, and would assure to them, not only for that generation but for all generations, the preservation of these rights. Educational rights also were left exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provinces. That was the plan; that was the objective; and I remember so well hearing in 1945 or 1946, when the then prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent said that those rights could be taken away by a simple vote of parliament. That was not then, is not now, nor ever was the position of the Conservative party. Those rights are unchanged and unchangeable, and must remain so, so long as this nation remains.

I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, just before the recess I was dealing with the unusual situation created by the Prime Minister's announcement that the government was going to support the subamendment moved by the leader of the New Democratic party. I would point out immediately that the leader of that party did not say that his subamendment was not one of non-confidence.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, yes, he did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now we have the strange and unusual position of the Prime Minister rising and stating that he pleads guilty on behalf of the government to the failure of the government to exercise that degree of consultation that it ought to have exercised, but having pleaded guilty to the fact that there has not been enough consultation he then, as a defensive measure, contends that the government will do better from now on if it is given another chance.

That is a most unusual attitude. To find a somewhat similar situation one almost has to go back to 1958, when the Secretary of State was given the credit of having been the father of the amendment that was produced at that time. I would like to have dealt with the particulars of that amendment but the time limitation prevents it. The question before us is that of consultation and the need of carrying out the spirit of co-operative federalism; that the government should consult the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall wholly or partly within provincial jurisdiction.

The Prime Minister advances a new variety of consultation. What he says in effect is that the government will decide what is to be done, will put it into legislative form and will then start to implement the legislation it has brought in, without consultation. If, however, the provinces object, then the legislative program will stop and consultation will take place. If the experience of the past few months is to be any criterion for the future, we know that changes will be made in accordance with the strength of the pressure exerted by the various provinces. In other words the new type of consultation suggested by the Prime Minister will bring about in this country disorder, disunity and disagreement that would only weaken confederation. It is indeed a policy of confusion, creating a climate in which confederation will be torn asunder. We have only to consider the experience we have had in connection with the Canada pension plan, which was brought in here with trumpets blaring and is now being withdrawn, held in suspension, because the provinces asserted that they had the right to be consulted. This is not consultation within the concept of confederation. Consultation should take place before the program is proceeded with.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Consultation after the event and after the federal government's decision can only bring about uncertainty, division and disunity. It will assure that a division exists between the federal government and the provinces that is the negation of the concept of confederation. The Prime Minister talks about abandoning joint programs. While he speaks of that, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) makes a speech outside the house. At the very time this is going on the government has plunged into areas of provincial jurisdiction under the municipal loans program. Then there is the question of the designated areas. First the government designates areas and, having designated them, when there is objection to them there is to be consultation thereafter.

The proposition advanced by the Prime Minister today is one that can only undermine confederation. He expressed himself as though he were Horatius at the bridge, standing as the guardian of the constitution and against the possible disintegration of confederation. Yet in the last few months, as a result of the failure of this government to carry out the principles of consultation as they ought to be carried out, more and more uncertainty has developed and there is more cleavage as between province and province, people and people and area and area than ever before in this country.

I need only read a quotation from the Montreal Star of November 7 in this connection to illustrate my point. I need quote only one small portion of it:

> Mr. Pearson must have the taste of ashes in his mouth. Also he must be cursing the bush-league flack who foisted that "Sixty days of decision" catch-phrase on him. He has had to announce the postponement until a new session, early next year of several pieces of major legislation promised in the speech from the throne last May.

Then it says this:

> The explanation that the portable pension plan is being shelved because it would be "inappropriate" to go ahead with it before the federal-provincial conference later this month falls some way short of conviction. Why has the "inappropriateness" only now been discovered? Or is the government having second thoughts about the pension machinery—as it had earlier about its budget?

What has happened in consequence of this haphazard, uncertain procedure on the part of the federal government is that now when any legislation is introduced without consultation pressure groups in the various parts of the country, provincial pressure groups, commence to operate. The result is that whatever legislation is brought in is not in keeping with the demands of the people but rather because of the necessity of placating the provinces because of the failure of the federal government to do that which is essential to confederation, namely to co-operate and at the same time to discuss, consider and view it from the point of view of both provincial and federal governments when matters come within the jurisdiction of both.

Now, sir, an example of that is the royal commission set up on biculturalism. I wish I could discuss that this evening. I hope it succeeds. I would point out the warning I gave on February 4 last in this house when I said that if it were set up it would not solve anything. What do we find? We asked for a dominion-provincial conference on the question of amending the constitution and bringing the constitution back to Canada for the settling of disputes between the provinces and the dominion, as well as providing for those symbols of our unity that must be established if full nationhood is to be achieved.

They set up a royal commission. It is just like the cave of Adullam. Many of those who are appearing before the royal commission are separatists who have ideas that are not in keeping with our constitutional development. The result is we are going to have a hodge-podge of representations which have little relationship to the need of Canada. When the commission completes its work in one, two or three years from now, there will be no finality. Then a dominion-provincial conference will have to be called and the whole matter gone over again.

Before I conclude sir, I want to refer to the subamendment. So far as the subamendment is concerned, we take objection to it because it alters our amendment. We believe that our own amendment quite adequately describes the actions of the government. We do not want our amendment amended in any way. Therefore, in so far as the subamendment is concerned we shall vote against it since it does interfere with the amendment we have moved.

However, if the subamendment should pass, and there is every possibility of that, Mr. Speaker, with the support the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has given—

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: Howled down again.

Mr. Monteith: Look at the clock.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member speaks of being howled down, but he is trying to prevent me from explaining, in the minute I have, the vote we are about to cast. This is an old game on the part of the hon. gentleman. If the subamendment should pass, we will view it, as we have said, as a vote of non-confidence, in that it clearly suggests that the government has not done enough in the field of federal-provincial relations. Whether or not the government pleads guilty to the charge, the full charge or only half the charge, they still will be pleading guilty by voting for the subamendment. Therefore, though the strong wording of our amendment may be watered down by the subamendment, we will then support the amendment as amended. We will vote for the main amendment, whether it is in its original form or in its amended form. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite, in that move today they were playing games. These games were not in keeping with parliamentary procedure. I hope that this evening the house will speak on the question of non-confidence, early and definitely.

Mr. Speaker: Order; it being 8.15 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to a special order made on Friday, November 1, 1963, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendment or amendment to the amendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Douglas) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment as amended carried.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Secretary of State.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 4(e) of standing order 56 I move, seconded by Mr. Gordon, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): On a point of order—

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had recognized the house leader, the Secretary of State.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is all very well, but we have a right to rise on a point of order, and have a right to challenge your ruling.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Speaker, I was paired, and had no opportunity—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I have a motion that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) be now heard.

Mr. Chevrier: There is a motion before the house now.

Mr. Speaker: When the Speaker is faced with two motions he must, it seems to me, accept the first one. I had recognized the Secretary of State.

Mr. Woolliams: That is nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: And the motion is: pursuant to section 4(e) of standing order 56; Mr. Pickersgill moves, seconded by Mr. Gordon, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair.

Mr. Douglas: I rise to register a grievance—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Douglas: My grievance, Mr. Speaker, is the appalling rise—

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, there is no grievance at this time. We are speaking on a substantive motion by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Speaker: The motion before the house is that the Speaker do now leave the chair in virtue of standing order 56 (4) (e). Is there a point of order against that?

Mr. Aiken: My point of order is that we are now speaking on a further substantive motion moved by the Secretary of State, and it is not a grievance period at all. We are now speaking on the motion as it was heard this morning, and it is strictly within the rules. My proposal, Mr. Speaker, is that the official opposition ought to be the first party to be heard in speaking in reply to the substantive motion that the Secretary of State has moved. That is the reason I have moved that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot be now heard.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), if I apprehend him correctly he is not taking any exception whatever to the motion I have made. He is simply asserting, or seeking to assert the right of a member of the official opposition to mention the first grievance, rather than a member of any other group.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking on the point of order, which I did not clearly understand. If the hon. gentleman is seeking to call into question the motion I made, I would draw Your Honour's attention to the standing order which seems to have escaped the attention of distinguished members of the house earlier today, and that particular standing order, No. 56(4)(e) reads:

> When a motion "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair" is superseded by the adoption of an amendment at any time before the expiry of either the said two days or the time carried forward from a former debate, as the case may be, a like motion may be forthwith made by a minister of the crown. In the event of any such motion being proposed, the proceedings thereon shall be deemed to be an extension of the debate concluded by the adoption of the said amendment; provided that the second motion shall not be subject to amendment if it is proposed after the time specified in section (4) (d) of this standing order.

That is to say, the time of the taking of the vote. So I contend that under the standing orders which I recited in making my motion, my motion is completely in order. I could cite in support of that contention very distinguished authorities who sat in this house, a former leader of the opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —followed by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), who in 1951 moved an amendment to a motion made by the Hon. Alphonse Fournier that the house go into committee of supply. Mr. Drew moved a motion in amendment thereto.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was Mr. Drew's amendment?

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Drew's amendment was that the house was of the opinion that appropriate steps should be taken—he struck out the usual words.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just read it, not striking out anything.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman, who sets himself up as a model of courtesy in this house, would not allow me on two occasions this afternoon to ask him simple questions, and I would prefer this evening not to be interrupted by the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall, however, read the whole motion:

> That all the words after "that" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "This house is of the opinion that appropriate steps should be taken for the appointment of a select committee to consider with Mr. Speaker the procedure of this house for the purpose of making recommendations designed to assure the more expeditious dispatch of public business and to suggest any changes that may be desirable."

Mr. St. Laurent, who had a very large majority supporting him at that time, as the right hon. gentleman will recall, accepted that motion made by Mr. Drew which superseded the motion that the house go into committee of supply. It was accepted by the house. Immediately Mr. Alphonse Fournier moved the motion that I have just moved, and it was also accepted by the house.

Then in 1952 another distinguished associate of the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Donald Fleming—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —also moved a motion deleting the motion that the Speaker leave the chair, which motion was seconded by Mr. Fulton. Mr. Fleming moved this amendment to the motion:

> That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "in view of the impending departure of the Prime Minister for Washington this house desires to record its opinion that further vigorous efforts should be made by the government to bring about the removal of the restrictions imposed by the United States on the importation of Canadian agricultural products, in violation of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

That motion was also accepted by Mr. St. Laurent and was adopted by the house. In the same procedure as I have followed on this occasion, Mr. Fournier moved that the house resolve itself into committee of supply, which motion was accepted by the Chair, uncontested by any point of order, and adopted in due course. There are a great many other precedents going back to 1898 which could be cited, but it seems to me I should not take up the time of the house in citing them.

There is also, of course, the authority of Bourinot, who is the leading Canadian authority on parliamentary procedure, at page 424, which says:

> An amendment moved to the motion to go into committee of supply (or ways and means) does not necessarily involve want of confidence in the administration. When such an amendment simply affirms—

As I maintain is the case here, and as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister maintained earlier today:

> —a general principle, or sets forth a public grievance, and does not directly or impliedly challenge the conduct or policy of the government, it is not, in a parliamentary sense, a motion of want of confidence, and consequently cases often occur of the government agreeing to the passage of such motions.

That is precisely what happened in 1951, what happened in 1952 and what happened today.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not what happened today.

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman was substituting one word for another and straining the normal meaning of words in reading into the motion of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam things that were not there. What the hon. member did was to urge the government to carry out more fully, thereby admitting that it was carrying out a certain policy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member said, to carry out more fully the spirit of co-operative federalism, and the whole tenor of the hon. gentleman's admirable speech today was precisely in that sense.

Mr. Grafftey: Shame.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member's motion was to carry out more fully the spirit of co-operative federalism and to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs, and so on. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister, in an exchange with the hon. gentleman, established beyond peradventure the meaning of these words, and there was no doubt whatever that all the hon. gentleman was asking the government to do was to go on doing things that the government was doing, that the government intended to do and which we would have been quite hypocritical in pretending we were opposed to doing. Therefore we have acted in this matter according to the precedents, according to the standing order and according to the rules of the house.

An hon. Member: And according to the deal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, methinks he doth protest too much. As a matter of fact there is no case since 1890, and we have read them all, in which such an amendment was not considered as a vote of non-confidence.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just cited two.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The particular amendments were amendments in no way of non-confidence. This subamendment was one of non-confidence, and this is simply a subterfuge explanation to get around the difficult position in which the government now finds itself, as can be seen by the reddened faces that characterize each and every member of the government.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Speaker: I can say with feeling that the situation is an interesting one but it seems to me it is not as difficult as some hon. members might make out. I hope I am right in this. The Secretary of State moved that pursuant to standing order 56 (4) (e)—which motion was seconded by Mr. Gordon—Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair. The Secretary of State did that by virtue of standing order 56 (4) (e). The motion is non-debatable in so far as that is concerned. So that in my opinion we now have a grievance period.

Then two hon. members rose. I recognized the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). Then the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), rising on a point of order, moved that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) be now heard. The hon. member did this by virtue of standing order 29. It is his right to do this, because standing order 29 says:

> When two or more members rise to speak, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who first rose in his place; but a motion may be made that any member who has risen "be now heard", or "do now speak", which motion shall be forthwith put without debate.

It seems to me that we are now in the grievance period and that the dispute is between the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I now have this motion before me and it is up to the house to decide whom it shall hear.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, on a matter of clarifying the procedure, do I understand that while the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) and the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) were both on their feet and I moved my motion, Your Honour had then recognized the Secretary of State and his motion?

Point of Order

Mr. Speaker: I recognized the Secretary of State first, and as a matter of fact I was at least three quarters of the way through reading his motion when I saw that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) was also on his feet.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, earlier—

Mr. Caron: There is no debate on the question.

Mr. Speaker: The question, surely, is which of the two hon. members shall now speak. There is a motion before the house moved by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot be now heard. This motion is by virtue of standing order 29.

An hon. Member: And is not debatable.

Mr. Speaker: All I can do in the circumstances is ask the house to decide which hon. member shall now be heard.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, my motion was directed towards the earlier dispute between the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) and the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard). If Your Honour has ruled that you did hear the hon. Secretary of State, then, with the unanimous consent of the house, I herewith withdraw my motion.

Mr. Speaker: I have so ruled, and I think correctly. Do I understand the hon. member is withdrawing his motion as to priority on behalf of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot?

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Then, in that case, there is only the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) left.

Mr. Ricard: Earlier today, Mr. Speaker, you were informed that I was to take the grievance period tonight. I was given to understand that I would be the first one to speak here, and by being deprived of my right to speak tonight, I want to place before the house the fact that this is another kind of closure about which the country should know.

Mr. Knowles: I regret having to speak on this question of privilege, but I should like to clear up a point. I indicated to Your Honour a week ago tonight that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam would be speaking at this point tonight since there was no opportunity for him to speak at that time. I gave notice on behalf of the hon. member, not this afternoon but seven days ago and I confirmed it today.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No one wants to hold up proceedings, but I should like to know to whom the notice was given and by whom it was given.

Mr. Knowles: I gave it to Mr. Speaker, myself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I believe a short explanation is in order. It is quite true the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot spoke to me some time today. I said at the time that, so far, no one else had mentioned the matter to me. Subsequently, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre approached and said, "You recall I spoke to you on behalf of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam some time ago." Two or three weeks ago, I mentioned that it was very difficult to give reservations on the right to speak, and that reservations should not be given. I immediately communicated with the whip for the official opposition, and suggested that the two parties get together to try to regulate the matter. At six o'clock I did the same thing. When there is a dispute such as this it seems to me the way to solve it is by the use of standing order 29.

Mr. Gregoire: May I make a suggestion on that point, Mr. Speaker? On the previous occasions the Conservatives had the opportunity of rising first on these grievances. Two weeks ago, an hon. member for the New Democratic party had an opportunity to raise a grievance. Since the Social Credit members from this group have had no opportunity at all, I suggest that perhaps one of the members from this group should raise a grievance.

Mr. Winkler: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it seems to me it might be wise to have a member of the Conservative party recognized this evening, because it seems to be the only legitimate opposition that is left in the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: I endeavoured to raise this question of grievance—

Mr. Skoreyko: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I was paired with the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) because I understand there is serious illness in his family. I only want to inform the house this is the reason I am on my feet now, and had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

SUGAR—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO CONTROL PRICE INCREASE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): At long last, Mr. Speaker, I am to have the opportunity of registering a grievance.

Mr. Ricard: At my expense.

Mr. Douglas: I hoped to do so a week ago tonight, but the other grievance that was raised took all the time until ten o'clock. The grievance I wish to raise is the appalling increase in the price of sugar, and the fact that the government has taken no effective action to deal with the situation. There are indications that fantastic profits have been made out of the increase in the price of sugar, and so far the government has done nothing except to take refuge in their lack of constitutional authority.

The facts in connection with the price of sugar are known to every housewife in Canada. In the past 12 months the price of sugar to the consumer has doubled. There have been more than 90 changes in sugar prices in the past year. At the moment the price of sugar in Canada is at its highest peak since 1920, an all-time record for 43 years. This increased price of sugar has reached into the pocketbook of every housewife in Canada. It not only affects the sugar which the consumer buys for use in his own home, but it enters into the cost of processed foods, of fruit preserving, jams, jellies, soft drinks and a great many commodities. In every case, the burden of this increase in price falls on only one person: It falls upon the Canadian housewife.

We have endeavoured to raise this matter repeatedly ever since parliament reassembled. My friend, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather), raised this almost as soon as the house met on September 30. A week ago last Friday my colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) sought to adjourn the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the rising price of sugar. Frequently on orders of the day we have raised this question. The only answer we have been able to get from the government is that the rising cost of sugar in Canada is due to the rise in world prices.

I think we ought to take a look at this argument. We should recognize, first of all, that the figures given to us by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) this spring indicated there was no sugar shortage in Canada. If I recall correctly, he said that there were over 400 million pounds of sugar in Canada, which was slightly higher than the stockpile of sugar in Canada in April of the previous year. I am told that there is no shortage of sugar in Canada today, and that the stockpiles in Canada now are as high or higher than they were 12 months ago. The world price, therefore, had nothing to do with the sugar stockpiled in Canada and which had already been purchased.

If the sugar companies made, in addition to their regular profits, another five cents a pound—I think that is a very low estimate—it means that they pilfered another $20 million out of the purses of the housewives of Canada. A very fat profit has been made by somebody out of this very rapid increase in the price of sugar. The other fact which has to be kept in mind is that about 20 per cent of the sugar we consume in Canada is made from sugar beets produced in Canada, and certainly that part of the sugar supply is not affected by the world price.

Therefore, what do we find? We find that the sugar companies in Canada have been able to increase the price of beet sugar and have treated the price of beet sugar as though it were the price of imported sugar. The people buying sugar on the prairies close to the refineries in Winnipeg and Lethbridge have thus found that their sugar prices have gone up, even though that sugar is produced on the prairies. It is rather interesting to see that in the Chicago market beet sugar has been selling for $9.50 to $11.25, whereas beet sugar in Canada has been selling for $17.50 a hundred. One of the things which has disturbed a great many Canadians is that, while prices in Canada have risen to astronomical heights the price of sugar in the United States does not seem to have been affected by the rapid rise in the world price. For instance, in the northeastern states of the United States sugar is now selling for $13.45 to $13.55 a hundred pounds. At the same time a hundred pounds of cane sugar in the city of Montreal costs $18.65, in the city of Vancouver $16.60, and in the city of Toronto $18.55. It is very difficult, Mr. Speaker, to explain to the Canadian housewife in the city of Toronto why she should pay 97 cents today for a five-pound bag of sugar when United States newspapers carry advertisements, some of which I have here, advertising cane sugar for 49 cents for a five-pound bag. It is 97 cents in the city of Toronto; 49 cents for the same bag of sugar in the United States. This means that the Canadian housewife is paying almost twice as much as the housewife in the United States.

I think there are indications, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a great deal of profiteering by the sugar companies of Canada. I think they have taken advantage of the decline in the world sugar supply. I think they have made fabulous profits out of the large stocks of sugar that were in Canada long before the world price rose. The fact is that there is no sugar shortage in the world. It is true that the world surplus has been reduced but there is no shortage of sugar A statement has been issued by Mr. Arthur E. Beeby, executive vice president of Salada Foods Limited, and part of his statement is as follows:

> The recent series of increases in sugar prices cannot be explained on the basis of supply and demand. There is no world sugar shortage. At the start of this year, there was a large surplus. At the end of this year, there will still be a surplus although a reduced one....
> Reliable estimates for this year indicate that a 12-million ton carryover at the beginning of the 1962-63 season will be cut to 9 to 9.5 million tons by year-end. This certainly does not suggest a sugar glut but neither does it represent shortage....
> Cane or beets for sugar are grown in more than seventy countries. It is obvious that orderly marketing of the resulting multi-million ton annual crops in the form of raw sugar calls for the buying and selling facilities of recognized commodity exchanges including future markets. The volume of future trading has been skyrocketing. On the London market, the 1963 volume was recently reported as $11.4 million. For the same period of last year, it was less than one quarter of this total, suggesting that the explanation of price pyrotechnics in sugar is to be found in this market performance.
> As a major Canadian buyer of refined sugar, we are forced to the conclusion that the rising costs of this staple food item on world markets do not result from demand but from speculation.

I think, Mr. Speaker, those facts speak for themselves. We started the year with a surplus in the world of some 12 million tons of sugar. We shall probably finish this year with anywhere from between 9 and 9½ million tons of sugar in the world. The surplus has been reduced but there is no shortage of sugar. The increase in the price of sugar has been due to speculation, due in part to a rumour that the U.S.S.R. might import large quantities of sugar this year. This has given rise to speculation in the sugar market. But the tragedy is that the Canadian housewife has been the victim of this speculation. She has had no protection whatsoever from this government. The best the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) was able to do was to tell the house that someone in the restrictive trade practices branch had telephoned Mr. Beeby and that Mr. Beeby was not claiming that there was any price fixing or anything improper going on.

Mr. Chevrier: He denied a portion of the statement you have just made.

Mr. Douglas: Well, he cannot deny this statement because it is a printed statement sent out by Salada Foods Limited. I am not quoting from a newspaper report.

Mr. Chevrier: That is exactly what he denied.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Douglas: I am quoting from the printed statement which was sent out by Mr. Beeby's own company to thousands of people across Canada. I imagine that every member of parliament got a copy of this, as I did.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Was he in the house the other day when I put on Hansard the statement which was given by Mr. Beeby in connection with what the hon. gentleman has just read?

Mr. Douglas: I certainly was.

Mr. Chevrier: He stated quite clearly that in his opinion his statement did not disclose any breach of the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Douglas: Exactly. I was in the house when the minister made the statement and I was amazed that the minister made it. I was amazed at the minister having his officials telephone a man, a private citizen, to ask him to establish whether or not the Combines Investigation Act had been violated. That is the responsibility of the minister and his officials, not the responsibility of private citizens. That is exactly what this government has done. It has sat on the Combines Investigation Act and said to the Canadian people: "If you can prove there is something wrong we will do something about it". I am saying that it is the responsibility of this government to find out whether there is something wrong, and it is for them to do something about it.

What can the government do? The minister has made us one promise only. The restrictive trade practices branch will, he said, keep the matter under careful scrutiny and will take action under the combines investigation legislation if there is evidence of price fixing and collusion. Well, we expected it to do that. But I would point out, first of all, that this is too slow a process to do anything about the exploitation of the Canadian housewife. The investigation by his department and any legal action which might follow would take months, and probably years.

Even if the branch were successful in getting a conviction, this would not punish the sugar companies. Every hon. member knows the record of the sugar companies. The restrictive trade practices branch and the Department of Justice brought three of the largest sugar companies of Canada into court—the Atlantic Sugar Refineries Company, now called the Acadia-Atlantic Sugar Refineries Limited, the Canada and Dominion Sugar Company Limited and the St. Lawrence Sugar Refineries Limited. These three companies were brought into court and last January they pleaded guilty to a charge of making an illegal profit on 80,000 tons of sugar. In March they were fined $25,000 each or a total of $75,000. So there was a total fine of $75,000 on 80,000 tons of sugar which amounts to a fine of less than $1 a ton—a fine of less than one twentieth of a cent a pound. I say to you now, Mr. Speaker, and to the house, that these companies did not pay a fine; they paid a licence to commit piracy on the housewives of Canada. Do not let the minister tell us that the combines investigation legislation is going to protect the housewife.

There are things which the government could have done. First, there is the matter of price control. The Minister of Justice says this is a provincial matter. I want the government to tell this house whether it has ever consulted the representatives of the provinces in order to find out whether the provinces would be prepared to agree to emergency legislation for price controls on sugar. Has the government ever asked the provinces whether they are prepared to delegate to the federal government authority to legislate in this field on a temporary basis or an emergency basis? After all, the provinces are also much concerned about the price of sugar. They each have authority to legislate concerning the price of sugar. The federal government has to give some leadership. What leadership have they given? Have they ever called the provinces together and said to them: You must be concerned, as we are, about the rising price of sugar. Are you prepared to delegate authority to us, or to act in concert so as to pass uniform legislation to control this situation?

There is another thing which the government could do. It could do what other countries are doing and go into the bulk purchasing of sugar. If necessary, after consulting with the provinces, the government could declare sugar refineries and sugar distribution facilities to be works for the general advantage of Canada. It could set up a sugar control board. It could sign the commonwealth sugar agreement under which countries in the commonwealth buy sugar in quantities under agreements extending over a period of time. This is why the people of Great Britain are getting cheaper sugar. This is why the American housewife is getting cheaper sugar. Here in Canada we are selling wheat under long term agreements. One of the reasons we are able to do so is because other countries buy our wheat knowing they can do so at an agreed price. There is nothing to prevent our buying sugar at an agreed price. At the present time many members of the commonwealth have signed the sugar agreement and are buying large quantities of sugar at agreed prices spread over a period of years. This would protect us from speculation in world sugar markets.

Has the government made any move to take action along these lines or to investigate the possibilities of such action? I say to the government: It is not too late now to look into the possibility of the bulk purchase of sugar and the setting up of a sugar control board. I say to the government: please do not take refuge again behind the lack of constitutional authority, because I am sure there is not a provincial government in Canada which would not co-operate with the present federal administration if it were prepared to do something immediately about stopping this profiteering in sugar. The provinces are just as concerned as we should be, because it is their citizens who are being exploited. They, too, are hearing the complaints of Canadian housewives. All they need is someone to give them a lead to attack this problem. Action in this matter has been delayed too long and I accuse the government of dilatoriness, of negligence and of dereliction of duty in failing to tackle it. I say the time has come when the government should cease sitting on its dignity and begin stepping on those who have been profiteering at the expense of the people of Canada.

I say to the government: the time has come to stop wringing your hands and to start ringing the changes on those who have been pilfering from the pockets of the Canadian people. I say to the government: If you continue to do nothing, the people of Canada will recognize that you lack the courage to face up to a critical situation. I say that if you do something, and do it promptly, you will earn the gratitude of the housewives of Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make some comments on the speech which has been made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). I should like to deal at the outset with three questions he has raised, perhaps to set some of the facts straight, and then I should like to say a word about government policy.

First of all, why have sugar prices risen? Second, why are sugar prices in eastern Canada higher than they are in western Canada? Third, why are they higher in Canada than they are in the United States or in Britain? The answer to the first question is relatively simple. There has been a profound change in the world sugar market in the last couple of years. I might refer to the Cuban situation in this regard. In 1961, Cuba had an export surplus of more than 6 million tons. Last year it had declined to 5 million tons. This year, as a result of hurricane Flora, it is down to 3 million tons. Throughout eastern Europe sugar beet harvests have been very low indeed. These are the facts about the change in the world sugar situation.

The hon. member quoted some statistics in which he suggested there were great stocks of sugar available in the world to meet this temporary shortage. Perhaps the best answer to that is to quote from a press release issued the other day after the sixteenth session of the international sugar council:

> The council considered this estimate against the first forecast of supplies available for world destinations in 1964 and concluded that taking the year as a whole it would appear that requirements would again be considerably in excess of supplies. Thus the council envisaged a continuance in 1964 of the present tight supply-demand situation.

There are no large stocks of sugar in the world. If there were, we should not be faced with the situation which arises today.

Mr. Langlois: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Sharp: I should like to finish this before ten o'clock if I may be permitted to do so because there are one or two things I should like to say at the end about the policy of the government which I think hon. gentlemen would like to hear.

Mr. Langlois: I think the minister will still have time to finish.

Mr. Chevrier: There are others who may wish to speak in the debate. Go ahead.

Mr. Sharp: World sugar prices have recorded these fundamental changes and they have been very fundamental. On the London market, which is recognized as a world market, raw sugar prices were the equivalent of around 3 cents a pound about a year ago. As a matter of fact, for some years sugar prices have been drifting along at about the 3 cent level, as I have reason to know because I participated in some of the efforts to stabilize the world sugar market to prevent its collapse. This was a time when there were monumental supplies of sugar overhanging the world market, but these have tended to disappear recently.

Last May, when we had the first upward thrust in prices and the first decline in supplies, prices reached a peak of between 12 and 13 cents in London and then declined. As hon. members will recall, there was a very sharp reversal of the sugar market and prices came down, until in August they had dropped to between 5 and 6 cents. Then, after hurricane Flora they soared again to the peaks of last May where they are today.

I think hon. members will see that the proportionate rise in world prices of sugar is parallel to that of sugar prices in Canada. Indeed, the hon. gentleman quoted some sugar prices in Canada. I happened to be doing some shopping for my wife last Saturday and I made a special visit to the sugar counter in the chain store. There I noticed the changes that had been taking place. A ten pound bag of sugar was over $2 and I can recall a year ago when it was down around 80 cents.

There can be no question about the rise or about the fact these prices are very closely paralleled in world markets. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in Canada the price of sugar is directly related to the world sugar price as reflected in the London market, and we in this case buy raw cane sugar on the basis of the London price.

I should like now to come to the second question. Why should the price in eastern Canada be higher than the price in western Canada? According to my information there is a differential of something like $2 a hundredweight between Montreal and Vancouver. The reason for the differential is this. On the west coast the only refiner of cane sugar, B.C. Sugar Refining Company, bought the sugar it is now using some months ago when the price was lower, and it is now selling this at cost plus what it considers a reasonable profit. In other words, consumers in western Canada are getting the advantage of the lower prices that existed for sugar on the London market some time ago when B.C. Sugar Refining Company bought their sugar from Australia and Fiji. Eastern Canada refiners, on the other hand—

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister where he gets his cheap price? In Winnipeg sugar is selling for $17.50 a hundred pounds which is $1 less than the price at Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. Sharp: The price varies across the country, depending upon the basic point. I should also like to say a word about the reason why beet sugar prices are the same as cane sugar prices. I think hon. gentlemen would not really want to see price controls applied only to producers in Canada. I think that would be unfair. I do think that sugar is sugar and it sells in competition, cane with beet, almost on an equal basis. Usually there is a small discount for the beet, but it is the same product. I do not think hon. gentlemen would suggest that our producers in Canada should be subjected to a lower price than would apply to cane sugar, or beet sugar produced abroad and imported into this country.

In eastern Canada the refiners buy on the basis of the going London world price. They do not price the sugar until it moves into the refinery, and then they buy it on the basis of the London price at that time. They changed their practice some years ago in order to avoid speculation. They said: We are not going to speculate on our inventories; we are going to take it into the refineries at the equivalent of the London price.

This means, of course, that recently we have had eastern Canada prices following the London market up, and in western Canada the sugar that had been purchased earlier has not been following the London price because it was priced at the time it was purchased. Since the prices on the London market have been rising rapidly we have had this differential. As a matter of fact, dealing with the question of competition, some western sugar is moving into eastern Canada. People are buying it out there and moving it into eastern Canada because of the differential in price. So one cannot say there is no competition in the Canadian market. One has only to talk to the refiners, who are quite concerned at the moment about the fact that western sugar is moving east.

I think hon. members will know how closely dependent Canadian sugar prices are on world sugar markets like London. On the other hand, the greater part of world trade in sugar, as my hon. friend has said, is carried on under special arrangements between the producing and the importing countries. Great Britain and the United States, the two largest importers of sugar, maintain a policy of managed markets with respect to both domestic production and imports. An important feature of the British control is exercised through the commonwealth sugar agreement under which the British government negotiates a guaranteed price for a predetermined quantity of sugar imported from commonwealth suppliers. Over the years this negotiated price has remained relatively level and, except for very short periods, has been substantially in excess of the price for sugar available on the free market. We are now in an exceptional period when the situation has reversed itself and the commonwealth sugar agreement has meant that the United Kingdom for the time being is able to get its sugar more cheaply than we are, while ordinarily the situation is the opposite. This arises out of the fact that they have had this long term guarantee arrangement.

In the United States the production, importation and marketing of sugar have been subject to comprehensive governmental control since 1934. This system for managing the sugar market has over the years had the result that United States domestic prices have generally been very much higher than the free world market prices that we enjoy. Indeed, so attractive were these prices that many sugar producers in the world were very restive about the fact that the United States allocated its import market to Cuba, because this was a very valuable concession. This year the United States has issued import quotas for more than they will need, and because the Cuban quota has been removed or withdrawn the competing supplying countries are very anxious to build up a record of performance in supplying the United States so that when the United States again imposes import controls they will get a good share of the market. The result has been that these suppliers have been pushing supplies into the United States and have depressed the United States market. This is the reason why in the United States today prices of sugar are lower than they are in Canada.

As I say, here in Canada our policy has been traditionally geared to an open market. Subject only to the tariff, Canadian refiners and distributors have been free to purchase their requirements at the lowest price available on world markets, and it seems to me that over the years this policy has served the interests of Canadian consumers fairly well by making available in Canada adequate supplies at prices which reflected competitive conditions in world markets. These prices have generally been lower than they have been in the United States or in the United Kingdom. By the same token, of course, in this unusual period of shortage our prices have risen higher than theirs because theirs have been stabilized by their domestic policies.

In order to complete this explanation I should add, of course, that the United States does not permit any export of sugar, so that we are not able to go into the United States and buy cheaper sugar. Otherwise the price would be the same in both countries. They have sealed off their market.

The government has been considering alternative courses for dealing with the present situation. First let me say a word about the prospective supply situation. No shortage of any kind is in sight. No difficulty has been experienced in obtaining supply to meet Canadian requirements. Stocks of raw and refined sugar, as recorded by the dominion bureau of statistics, are 10 per cent or more higher than a year ago and this, of course, is the time of year when stocks of raws and refined are normally at their peak to carry us over until the reopening of navigation. The refineries have advised my officials that stocks are adequate for all foreseeable requirements. For domestic production, acreage devoted to sugar beets was up substantially this year, and I expect it will be up substantially again in 1964 because of the stimulus of high prices.

Hence the problem for Canada relates to prices rather than supplies. We have weighed the advisability of removing or reducing import duties on sugar. Generally speaking, imports of raw sugar are subject to a duty of $1.28 per cwt. under the most favoured nation rate, and to a British preferential tariff of 28 cents per cwt. The preference of $1 per cwt. is a contractual obligation to the British West Indies and other commonwealth countries.

Commonwealth exporters attach a very high value to their preferential position in our sugar market, and from our point of view it is the means by which we are assured adequate supplies to meet our requirements at all times. It would be open to us to suspend the British preferential rate of 28 cents, but that would simply amount to a reduction of a quarter to one third of a cent a pound, and would be comparatively meaningless in the present situation.

Another alternative is to pay a subsidy to consumers of sugar. We have looked at this proposition, and if we were to pay a subsidy of 5 cents a pound this would cost about $85 million annually. It will be evident that expenditures of this order must be appraised in relation to other pressing demands on the government and in terms of a realistic order of priorities and objectives. In other words, these two proposals, to remove the duty or to pay a subsidy, do not change the price of sugar to Canadians as a whole. They simply redistribute its costs.

The hon. gentleman spoke about price controls, and he knows, as well as I do, that we have no constitutional authority to impose price control. May I suggest to him in connection with his own suggestion, and to repeat again what I said, that I do not think I would be in favour of placing a price control upon sugar produced from beets in Canada alone. It seems to me if price controls were to be effective they would have to be effective on over-all prices, and this would be beyond our control. And if we put a price control on sugar in Canada, if we placed the price of sugar below world market prices we would not get supplies. I do not think this would be a feasible alternative, either, in connection with purchases of bulk sugar from abroad.

The government has been looking into the possibilities of a change in sugar policy of a more fundamental character. This is a problem of great complexity and is fraught with many uncertainties. It is clear from the experience of Britain and the United States that managed markets with respect to both imports and domestic production of sugar can lead to expensive commitments involving higher prices to consumers, and may in any event be inconsistent with our long term economic interests and our international trading relations.

Nevertheless, recent experience during this period of scarcity has not been satisfactory, particularly when we see sugar from Canada's traditional suppliers being offered more cheaply to United States buyers than to Canadian buyers. I am sure hon. gentlemen will agree with me that, when we see sugar from commonwealth sources being pushed into the United States in order to establish a record for future import quotas, it is a little difficult for Canadians, who do not happen to have that sort of system to pay higher prices in consequence. The government is examining with an open mind the possibility of a change of policy.

The British and Canadian markets have constituted for many years the main outlets for commonwealth producers. A few years ago, in order to assist expansion of commonwealth production, Britain, through the commonwealth sugar agreement extended a guaranteed annual market at annually negotiated prices to the commonwealth producers. At the same time, in an article of the agreement, the commonwealth producers recorded their intent to give priority to the requirements of Canada through ordinary commercial channels, as I have described.

The commonwealth producers traditionally take advantage of the Canadian tariff preference margin in their sales to Canada by conceding about 15 cents out of the preferential dollar, taking the other 85 cents themselves, the 15 cents being for the purpose of ensuring that they get the business rather than some non-commonwealth suppliers. This margin of preference is sufficient to give them command over our market.

Commonwealth producers have begun to interest themselves in obtaining a significant share of the United States market, now that this market is open to all comers. For this purpose, commonwealth production is being expanded beyond consumption within the commonwealth preference area, and there are also new sources within the commonwealth, for example India, and these changing conditions may have an important bearing on a future Canadian policy on sugar.

As I indicated in my remarks to the house last May, the international sugar agreement does not provide the sort of protection to consumers I would like to see, and the government would like to see, and we are very much interested in examining a more effective form of agreement. We are also prepared to explore the future of Canada's relationship to commonwealth producers. We have been aware that similar thoughts have been in the minds of the commonwealth sugar exporters, from informal contacts made with them, and today we have received the following cablegram from the chairman of the commonwealth sugar exporters group:

Commonwealth sugar exporters now meeting in London are anxiously considering supply of commonwealth sugar to Canada and would welcome opportunity of discussing the practicability of offering annual quantities of commonwealth sugar to Canada for several years ahead at stable prices. We can assure you of adequate commonwealth supplies at all times to meet your requirements. Grateful you cable whether your government would welcome such broad proposals before the end of this year. Respects and regards.

We received another from Salisbury in Rhodesia:

Rhodesia sugar sales would welcome early opportunity of discussing with you possibility of long term agreement for supplying sugar to Canada with view to helping stabilize your internal price.

I intend to advise both the commonwealth exporters group and the Rhodesian producers that the Canadian government would be interested to consider with them any proposals they may wish to lay before us. So, in summing up, may I say there is no shortage of sugar in Canada. Stocks are higher than normal, imports are normal, and domestic production is rising. Prices in Canada have followed world market prices because they have been closely related to world market prices.

The government, however, is not satisfied the present arrangements give adequate protection for Canadian consumers, and will be discussing with commonwealth producers the possibility of long term contracts.

Mr. Douglas: If the government were to accept the offer which is indicated by the cablegrams the minister read, to purchase quantities of sugar at agreed prices over a period of years, what machinery would the government set up to make sure that the savings made thereby would be passed on to the consumers?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to give a technical answer, but I think it is quite possible to work out arrangements that would give us the necessary protection. I know that refiners would be willing to cooperate, and the beet producers in Canada. Therefore I would not anticipate difficulties in ensuring the benefit of such an arrangement would be passed on to the consumers.

Mr. Herridge: Would not the minister admit this is the normal workings of the capitalist system?

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the precedent that you have established this evening, I now give notice that I will have a grievance to raise on the next supply motion.

Mr. Speaker: I thought I was very clear in saying that the reservation system which seemed to have been in force is not in force at present and will not be followed.

It being ten o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to special order passed on Friday, November 1, to put the question. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Monteith: On division.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1d. Departmental administration, $665,000.

LEGISLATION

1. The Speaker of the Senate—Allowance in lieu of residence, $3,000.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

1. Department administration—Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's fee for membership in the pan-American institute of geography and history, $1,290,100.

PRIVY COUNCIL

1. Payment, notwithstanding anything in the Financial Administration Act or the Senate and House of Commons Act respecting the independence of parliament, to each member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who is a minister for whom no salary or allowance in addition to the allowances under section 33 and section 44 of the Senate and House of Commons Act is provided (the acceptance of which shall not render such member ineligible or disqualify him as a member of the House of Commons) of a salary of $7,500 per annum and pro rata for any period less than a year, $7,500.

SECRETARY OF STATE

1. Departmental administration, $317,600.

Proceedings reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister has not in the meantime visited the Governor General, I wonder if the house leader might outline the business for the remainder of the week?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be glad to indicate what business we will take for tomorrow, but I should like to have a word with the hon. gentleman, who I take it is acting for the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in his absence on public duties, and with other hon. gentlemen opposite before I agree about the rest of the week.

If I could just repeat what was said by my hon. friend, the Solicitor General, about tomorrow, we would take first the third reading of the income tax measure; then, we would take the vocational training resolution and, if there was time, the resolution setting up a committee on the C.N.R. and the other transport agencies owned by the government. If these matters were concluded, I would arrange with hon. gentlemen about having enough business to keep us going until six o'clock.

It being five minutes aften ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 13, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ORLIKOW—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT RESPECTING T.C.A. WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at the opening of the session the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) made a statement, as a question of privilege, concerning a press story in the Winnipeg Free Press of November 5, referring to the Dixon-Speas report. I did not hear the earlier part of the hon. gentleman's statement, as I came into the house when his remarks were nearing conclusion.

In the course of his statement he quoted from the Winnipeg Free Press of November 5, part of which quotation was as follows:

> Mrs. Konantz had seen the Dixon-Speas report and could understand why it could not be made public. She said it contained information which could not be given to C.P.A., T.C.A.'s main competitor.

Later in the day at the question period questions were asked on the same general subject matter by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and in the course of these questions and answers I said I did not show the report to the hon. member for Winnipeg South.

The facts are that the hon. member for Winnipeg South came to my office, and among other subjects pressed me to do all I could to make sure that the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base did not move from Winnipeg, and asked me why I did not table the Dixon-Speas report. The Dixon-Speas report was on a table behind my desk where I had been working on it.

Mr. Starr: Kind of handy there.

Mr. McIlraith: I explained to her why it could not be released. I pointed to it and indicated that four of the volumes contained almost exclusively material which could not be tabled because of its confidential nature, in that it gave detailed technical information that must remain confidential to the air line and that would be most useful to competitors.

The report was not removed from its place, nor was it opened or examined by Mrs. Konantz.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on this question of privilege that was raised yesterday, and to which the Minister of Transport has now spoken, may I say there seems to be some question as to what the hon. member for Winnipeg South meant when she said, as reported, that she saw the report.

We note with interest the explanation given by the Minister of Transport. I understand that the hon. member for Winnipeg South will be returning from the United Nations to the House of Commons today or tomorrow, and we are prepared to wait until we hear from her before we consider whether any further steps should be taken.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*WORLD FAIR—ACCESS TO SITE

Question No. 1,316—Mr. Fisher:

1. In the recent announcements by the Minister of Public Works that arrangements are completed for the construction plans for the access to the World fair site was the reference to (a) the complex consisting of the ice boom; the Point St. Charles-St. Helen's island bridge, the St. Helen's island-Ile Notre Dame bridges and the Ile Notre Dame to Jacques Cartier bridge ramps; or to (b) the provincially sponsored long span, high level bridge from Point St. Charles to St. Helen's island, the connecting bridges from St. Helen's island to Ile Notre Dame, and the tunnel under the seaway from Ile Notre Dame to St. Lambert?
2. If it was to (b) what contribution by the federal government is planned on the latter plans?
3. Has there been a finality in plans for access to the fair site and, if not, what possibilities are still under investigation or unapproved?

Mr. Badanai: 1. The minister elaborated in a general manner various projects for the construction of the approaches which will be necessary to provide access to the site of the world exhibition.

2. The Canadian World Exhibition Corporation has suggested the construction of a bridge to connect St. Helen's island to Point Saint Charles and from St. Helen's island to Notre Dame island and the tunnel under the St. Lawrence seaway connecting Notre Dame island to the south shore: cost sharing will be established after the plans and specifications have been completed.

3. The plans regarding the approaches to the site of the world exhibition have not yet been definitely laid down but they soon will be as they constitute the priority works of the exhibition.

*GRAIN BOATS AWAITING LOADING

Question No. 1,335—Mr. Rapp:

1. How many grain boats were waiting to be loaded with Canadian wheat and flour during the longshoremen's strike in Montreal harbour?
2. Of what registry were these boats, and for whom were they supposed to take on grain and flour?
3. What is the estimated loss of shipping, by bushels, of wheat and flour during the recent strike by the I.L.A. in the ports of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec?

Mr. Cantin: The national harbours board advise as follows:

1. Sixteen.

2. (a) Registry of vessels—6 Russian, 1 Norwegian, 1 Israeli, 2 Greek, 2 British, 1 Swedish, 1 Liberian, and 2 German; (b) This information is not of record with the board.

3. This information is not of record with the board.

COST OF TELEVISION SERVICE, FLIN FLON AND THE PAS, MAN.

Question No. 1,423—Mr. Simpson:

1. What is the total capital expenditure by the C.B.C. in relation to T.V. service for Flin Flon, Manitoba, and The Pas, Manitoba?
2. What is the annual operational cost of this service?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Total capital expenditures to September 30, 1963 for: (i) Flin Flon, Manitoba, $251,431; (ii) The Pas, Manitoba, $116,831.

2. The C.B.C. television station at Flin Flon is coupled with that at The Pas. They were planned as a complex and are operated jointly using television recording. The cost of television recording for a non-connected station is a national program charge, and is not included in the operating cost of these stations. There are no local program originations at either station.

A staff of four people is based at Flin Flon to handle the television recording and to provide maintenance service for both stations. Aside from the salaries of these four employees, operating costs are confined to those for building and technical maintenance, line costs, tube replacements, light, power, etc.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT CONTRACTS, CHARLEVOIX CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,426—Mr. Belanger:

1. How many contracts have been let, or for how many contracts have bids been called by the Post Office Department since April 8, 1963, for the constituency of Charlevoix?
2. Who were the bidders on these contracts?
3. What were the bids of each of them?
4. To whom were the contracts let?
5. Who was responsible for distribution of tender forms?

[Mr. Badanai.]

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOAN APPLICATIONS FOR IMPROVEMENTS

Question No. 1,463—Mr. Laprise:

1. In addition to loans granted under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, for the purchase of farm implements, the construction of farm buildings, and for the purchase of livestock, how many applications have been received for loans for other improvements (a) in Canada (b) in Quebec (c) in the county of Chapleau?

2. How many of these applications were refused (a) in Canada (b) in Quebec (c) in the county of Chapleau?

[Translation]

Mr. Benson: 1 and 2. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the government guarantees loans made by the chartered banks. Data on the number of applications made to the banks, and on the number of those rejected, are not available. Statistics on operations under the act are compiled only for loans actually made. Loan statistics, as published in the annual reports on operations under the act, show loans made by purpose and by province, but not by counties. Provincial breakdowns of loans classified by purpose have been available only since 1953.

MENTAL HEALTH GRANTS AND COMMITMENTS

Question No. 1,474—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many psychiatrists in training are in receipt of training grants from the federal government?
2. What is the value of each grant?
3. What is the total value of the grants?
4. What are the plans for next year's grants?
5. What commitments have been made for the next five years to the universities and the medical colleges, in the field of mental health?
6. What requests have been made by the medical colleges for the next five years in the field of mental health?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Under the national health grants, 180 psychiatrists are in receipt of training grants during the fiscal year 1963-64.

2. Payments to trainees in psychiatry under the national health grants are made as follows:

(a) Bursaries to trainees taking professional training are set by the provinces according to the need of the individual, but they are not to exceed $250 monthly for persons without dependants and $300 for persons with dependants. Besides a bursary, a trainee may receive travel expenses to and from the place of training, only once during the training period; transportation costs to and from the place of training when a trainee is out on field work outside his training centre; tuition fees as actually charged by the training institution; and an allowance for books and technical supplies not exceeding $50 for the full course. Bursaries may be claimed for trainees during the period of actual training. This period may include a reasonable period of travel to and from the training centre. It is understood that the provinces, in certain cases, supplement the federal assistance.

(b) For short training courses, the duration of which does not exceed three months, actual, reasonable living expenses may be requested. Living expenses are to be accounted for on the basis of provincial regulations governing travelling and maintenance expenses.

3. For 1963-64, an amount of $285,370 is being allocated for the training of psychiatrists.

4. The national health grants represent a federal-provincial program. Provincial plans for the submission of projects against next year's and, to some extent, subsequent years' grants, are presently under study in all provinces. The resulting submissions of projects and consultation with provincial planners will take place over the next few months.

5. See answers 4 and 6.

6. The annual submissions of projects received from the provinces on behalf of training, research and health services in medical colleges request the continuance of federal assistance in subsequent years, although a five year period is not always specified.

MENTAL HEALTH TRAINING PROGRAMS, ETC.

Question No. 1,478—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What was the number of training programs, bursaries, and short courses in the field of mental health in each of the years from 1952-53 to 1961-62?
2. What was the total amount available in mental health grants for each of these years?

ENTERPRISE, ONT., POSTMASTER

Question No. 1,481—Mr. Webb:

1. Who was the postmaster at Enterprise, Ontario, from January 1, 1963 to August 27, 1963?
2. Was the widow of the deceased Clare Stewart at Enterprise approached following her husband's death to take over the said post office?
3. Is she a veteran?
4. What was the total revenue of the said post office in each of the years, 1961, 1962, and 1963, to date?
5. Who has been appointed as postmaster, and is such appointee a veteran?

Mr. Denis: 1. Mr. Clare A. Stewart.

2. The widow of the deceased Clare Stewart was placed in charge of the office on a temporary basis pending a new appointment.

3. Not a veteran entitling her to veterans preference. Mrs. Stewart served in Canada only.

4. 1960-61, $1,303.04; 1961-62, $1,269.52; 1962-63, $1,421.85; 1st April to 30th September 1963, $611.53.

5. Mrs. Thomas Dillon. Mrs. Dillon is not a veteran.

*EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT TO PRIVY COUNCIL PRESIDENT

Question No. 1,492—Mr. Valade:

1. Is a Mr. Brady employed as executive assistant to the President of the Privy Council?
2. Did the Prime Minister receive a letter dated July 2 from the mayor of Montreal relating to the activities of Mr. Brady and, if so, what was the nature of its contents?
3. Has Mr. Brady been in touch with the mayor of Montreal or Mr. Saulnier on behalf of the President of the Privy Council since April 8, 1963 and, if so, for what reason?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. The answer to part one is yes.

2. The answer to part two is as follows:

The right hon. Prime Minister received from the mayor of Montreal a letter dated July 2.

This letter was not about Mr. Brady's activities. His name was mentioned incidentally with regard to a telephone call he had made to Mr. Lucien Saulnier from the Prime Minister's residence.

3. The answer to part three is no.

*USE OF GOVERNMENT VEHICLES FOR PRIVATE ACTIVITIES

Question No. 1,496—Mr. Herridge:

Which departments of government permit the use of government vehicles by officials, employees or their wives for church attendance, shopping and recreational activities where these facilities are more than a mile from the residences of those persons so favoured?

Mr. Benson: In its circular letter of November 25, 1954 (1954-24), the treasury board directed departments that the non-official use of government vehicles was prohibited unless the specific approval of the treasury board was obtained. In this regard the board in the same letter indicated that such approval might be granted in special cases where units are situated in isolated areas, and where there is no alternative transportation or the alternative transportation is most inadequate. Also, approval would be confined to such purposes as collection of mail, essential shopping, transportation of children to school, medical and dental attention, etc.

Employees of the following departments, who are working under the foregoing conditions, have been permitted to use departmental vehicles to attend to their personal needs and activities on the strength of individual authorities granted to their departments by the board:

Department of Agriculture, experimental research station at Manyberries, Alta.; Department of Citizenship and Immigration, assistant superintendent at Battleford Indian agency, Sask.; Department of Forestry, forest research stations at Cornerbrook, Nfld., Fredericton, N.B., Quebec, P.Q., Maple, Ont., Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Winnipeg, Man., Saskatoon, Sask., Calgary, Alta., Vernon, B.C., Victoria, B.C.; Department of Justice (penitentiaries), use of penitentiary bus to transport employees to annual picnics; Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, dominion observatory research stations in Alberta; Department of National Defence, defence research board, Suffield experimental station, Alta., D.R.B. northern laboratory, Fort Churchill, Man.; Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, national parks and northern administration Arctic posts personnel; Department of Transport, in isolated areas of the country where remote airports and aeradio stations are located.

FRENCH CANADIAN PRESIDENTS OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 1,498—Mr. Boulanger:

1. (a) Since his appointment as president of the Canadian Commercial Corporation, has Mr. Marc Lamoureux succeeded in increasing the turnover of that firm (b) have Mr. Lamoureux's duties and authority been reduced and, if so, for what reason?
2. Is Mr. Lamoureux the only Canadian of French origin who is president of a crown corporation coming under the Departments of Industry or Defence Production and, if not, are there others, what are their names and, in each case, have their authority and prerogatives been reduced?

Mr. Drury: 1. (a) The contracts handled through Canadian Commercial Corporation have expanded significantly over the past few years. This has been due mainly to increased orders for military equipments from the United States under the production sharing program. The responsibility for the production sharing program rests with the Department of Defence Production, with Canadian Commercial Corporation providing certain services in connection with United States government prime contracts for goods and services in Canada.

(b) Mr. Lamoureux's duties and authority are in the process of being changed, along with those of a large number of other officers in the Department of Defence Production and its associated crown corporations, to bring them into line with reorganizations recommended by the Glassco commission and in the process of being implemented by the government.

2. No. Mr. J. R. Brisson is president and general manager of Canadian Arsenals Limited, and Mr. Louis Richard is president and general manager of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. Their authorities and prerogatives have not been reduced.

EDMONTON AIRPORT TERMINAL—INSTALLATION OF MURALS

Question No. 1,501—Mr. Lambert:

1. Have any murals been completed for installation in the terminal building of the Edmonton international airport and, if so, how many?
2. Who were the artists commissioned, and what was the amount of their respective commissions?
3. On whose recommendation were the said artists commissioned, and by whom were their works approved?
4. If the recommendation was by a committee or board, who were the members of the committee or board?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. Two murals have been completed for installation in the new Edmonton terminal building.

2. Mr. Denis Burton was commissioned for a mural 5'x21' in the amount of $4,500 and Mr. Jack Shadbolt was commissioned for a mural 18'x37' in the amount of $18,000.

3. The artists were commissioned on the recommendation of the fine art committee for the Edmonton terminal building.

4. Miss Suzanne Rivard, of the Ecole des Beaux Arts, Montreal, Que.; Dr. Charles F. Comfort, director of the national gallery of Canada, Ottawa; Dr. Henry Kreisel, head of the department of English, University of Alberta, Edmonton; Professor John A. Russell, director of the school of architecture, University of Manitoba; Professor W. Gerson, acting director, school of architecture, University of British Columbia; Mr. John C. Parkin, chairman of the national design council; Dr. Fred Minsos, consulting architect for the terminal building; Dr. Nathan Stolow, of the national gallery of Canada; Mr. W. A. Ramsay, chief architect, major terminals, Department of Transport.

C.N.R. TRUCK SERVICE FROM LEVIS, QUE.

Question No. 1,504—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the C.N.R. applied to any board for permission to supply trucking services in lieu of, or complementary to, rail service from Levis to Riviere du Loup?
2. If such service is established is it projected by C.N.R. planners that this will lead to less rail freight traffic between these points and beyond and, if so, how do these changes affect the implementation of the act to provide for the building of a railway between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1 and 2. The company entered into a contractual arrangement with a local truck operator, operating under temporary permit from the Quebec transport board to perform this service as a complement to existing train services.

The service has to do with less carload freight traffic in the territory between Levis and Riviere du Loup as a consequence of adjustments in passenger train consist resulting from improvements in passenger train service. It is not considered that this service has any relation to transportation service between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts.

*SOCIAL AND OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

Question No. 1,514—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. Does the Department of National Health and Welfare have any statistics showing the number of persons in Canada receiving social assistance or old age assistance benefits?
2. How many persons are receiving benefits?
3. What is the federal government's share, in dollars, of such social assistance or old age payments?
4. What percentage does that amount represent with regard to the contribution made by the provinces?

[Translation]

Mr. Haidasz: 1. Yes.

2. As of March 31, 1963; the number of recipients of old age assistance was 103,159; the number of persons being assisted under the Unemployment Assistance Act was 754,164. This figure includes children and other dependents and recipients of other social security benefits who have been granted supplementary aid.

3. For the fiscal year 1962-63; old age assistance—$38,179,057; unemployment assistance—$96,184,792.

4. The cost of old age assistance is shared equally by the federal government and the provinces.

Under the terms of the Unemployment Assistance Act, the federal government pays 50 per cent of assistance costs. However, these exclude certain specified costs, including health costs and costs by way of mothers' allowances which are deducted on a formula basis.

4. What are the names of the members of the diplomatic corps or other persons who represent Canada at the NATO organization?
5. How many Canadian servicemen are directly committed to NATO?
6. How much did it cost Canada to maintain these forces during the last fiscal year?
7. What other commonwealth countries are NATO members and what is their share of the cost in relation to Canada's share?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Canada's direct commitments to NATO are the army brigade group and the air division in Europe. In addition, the R.C.N. and R.C.A.F. have earmarked certain ships and aircraft to be assigned to SACLANT in an emergency. There are also direct expenditures on mutual aid including contributions to infrastructure and NATO budgets.

2. Annual expenditures: 1959-60, $342,578,000; 1960-61, $408,916,000; 1961-62, $455,545,000; 1962-63, $465,129,000; 1963-64, $415,598,000*.

*Estimated. Approximately $200,000,000 of the 1963-64 appropriation has been spent to October 31, 1963.

3. No official information is available concerning alleged criticism of NATO countries for not fulfilling their obligations to the alliance.

4. The Canadian permanent representative to the NATO council in Paris is Mr. G. Ignatieff. He has the rank of ambassador. Other members of the Canadian delegation are: military adviser, Air Vice Marshal R. A. Cameron, C.D.; counsellor, R. H. Jay; counsellor (defence production), P. Solly-Flood; counsellor (defence), A. PRINCE RUPERT, B.C., GRAIN ELEVATOR

Question No. 1,520—Mr. Howard:

Since January 1, 1962 have any representations been made to the government or any agency or branch thereof suggesting or proposing that the grain elevator in Prince Rupert, B.C., be sold or otherwise disposed of and, if so, what are the details surrounding any such suggestions or proposals?

Mr. Hays: Representations have recently been received by the Minister of Agriculture and the board of grain commissioners inquiring if the board would entertain the possibility of leasing the Canadian government elevator at Prince Rupert to a group of local businessmen, whose identity was not disclosed. The inquiry contained no detailed suggestions but asked what the yearly lease would be if the leasing proposal was entertained.

MOTOR VEHICLE SUPPLIES, R.C.M.P. DETACHMENT, NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 1,523—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria.

Since 1950, what are the names and addresses of the suppliers of gas, oil, tires and other services to motor vehicles of the North Sydney, Nova Scotia, detachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Chevrier: Records are destroyed after five years; however, since 1958 the following firms supplied gas, oil, tires and other services: Austin's Service Station, P.O. Box 96, North Sydney, N.S.; L. A. Steele, P.O. Box 344, North Sydney, N.S.; Gateway Motors Ltd., P.O. Box 757, North Sydney, N.S.; McCormick's Esso Service Station, North Sydney, N.S.; R. J. PASSENGER ACCOMMODATION, C.N.R. RAIL LINER, SYDNEY-HALIFAX

Question No. 1,524—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Have any complaints been received by the Canadian National Railways during the past six months in regard to overcrowding and shortage of seating accommodation on the rail liner operating between Sydney and Halifax, Nova Scotia, and, if so, what remedial action is contemplated to eliminate the causes of these complaints?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

During the past summer months travel between Sydney and Halifax was exceptionally heavy and on some occasions it was necessary to handle by bus or taxi overflow traffic from such points as New Glasgow and Stellarton. Since mid-September overcrowding has been experienced on five occasions. A complete reexamination of all aspects of the Halifax-Sydney daylight service is being conducted.

1. Is the government considering the creation of a tourist and information department to consolidate existing government services particularly with respect to the world fair and the Canadian centenary?
2. If not, what positive action is being considered in order to co-ordinate publicity and informational material with regard to the 1967 exhibition and the centenary?
3. Which minister will be responsible for the publicity aspect of the world fair?

Mr. Pearson: 1. No.

2. The Canadian World Exhibition Corporation and the national centennial administration are agencies of the crown, and each has its own information services.

3. As indicated above, the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation has its own information services under the direction of the commissioner general. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is responsible for the publicity and information aspects of the Canadian government participation in the world's fair.

*MEETINGS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE, NORTH PACIFIC FISHERIES COMMISSION

Question No. 1,552—Mr. Howard:

1. Has the advisory committee to the north Pacific fisheries commission had any meetings since its appointment and, if so, upon what dates, where, with whom, and for what purpose?
2. Are any meetings of the said advisory committee scheduled and, if so, upon what dates, where, with whom, and for what purpose?

Mr. Robichaud: 1. Yes. May 31, 1963, at Vancouver, with Dr. A. W. H. Needler, deputy minister of fisheries and chairman of Canadian delegation to the then approaching discussions at Washington, D.C., re the north Pacific fisheries convention. Purpose of meeting was presentation and discussion of committee's views.

2. Yes. November 15, at Vancouver, with Dr. Needler. To deal with problems concerned with annual meeting of the north Pacific fisheries commission and further negotiations regarding the convention.

T.C.A.—TRANSFERS TO MONTREAL FROM WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Question No. 1,553—Mr. Churchill:

How many personnel have been transferred from the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg, to Montreal, since April 22, 1963?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advise as follows:

During the period in question, there have been five transfers, all of supervisory category, four of these at the individuals' request and one at company request. No nonsupervisory personnel have been transferred in the period.

FISHERIES—FEDERAL MEMBERS OF JOINT B.C. COMMITTEE

Question No. 1,554—Mr. Howard:

1. What are the names, addresses and positions held by the members appointed by the federal government to the federal-provincial committee on price and wage disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry?
2. Upon what date, by what authority, and by whom, were these members so appointed?
3. What are the terms of reference and authority of the said committee?
4. Has the committee held any meetings and, if so, upon what dates, and at what locations, and what plans exist for future meetings?

Answer: 1. W. R. Hourston, Vancouver, area director Department of Fisheries; J. J. Quinlan, deputy director of investigations and research (Combines Investigation Act), Department of Justice; G. R. Currie, Vancouver, industrial relations officer, Department of Labour.

2. October 18, 1963, on authority of the Minister of Fisheries.

3. To examine in detail the problems concerned with price and wage disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry and to submit to both governments recommendations of action necessary to minimize interruptions of fishing operations in the future.

4. The first meeting will be held on November 14, at Vancouver.

Questions

SALES TAX ON SOFT DRINKS

Question No. 1,563—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is it the intention of the government to eliminate the sales tax on soft drinks to help offset the increased cost of production caused by the drastic increases in the price of sugar?

Mr. Benson: The repeal of a tax is a matter of government policy. If the government were to consider recommending such action it would be made known to the house at an appropriate time.

MEGANTIC LAKE REGION—DESIGNATION AS DEPRESSED AREA

Question No. 1,564—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is the region of Megantic lake within the constituency of Compton-Frontenac considered as a designated depressed area and, if so, what parishes are included in this area?
2. If not, for what reasons is this area not considered a designated area?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. The Megantic lake district within the constituency of Compton-Frontenac is part of the national employment service Megantic area. This area has been designated as an area of high winter unemployment, but not as a development area. The national employment service area comprises the entire county of Frontenac with the exception of the townships of Adstock and Price. Included are the township municipalities of Chesham, Gayhurst, Gayhurst Southeast, Marston South, and the united townships of Ditchfield and Spaulding, the municipalities of Milan, Winslow North, Winslow South, Sainte-Cecile-de-Whitton and Saint-Hubert-de-Spaulding, the parish municipalities of Saint-Augustin-de-Woburn, Saint-Leon-de-Marston and Saint-Sebastien, the village municipality of Saint-Sebastien and the town of Megantic, which are in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac. Also included are the municipalities of Lambton, Saint-Evariste-de-Forsyth, the parish municipality of Courcelles and the village municipalities of Lambton and La Guadeloupe in the constituency of Megantic, and the municipality of the united townships of Risborough and part of Marlow, the parish municipalities of Saint-Gedeon and Saint-Hilaire-de-Dorset, the village municipalities of Saint-Ludger and Saint-Gedeon, and the municipality of Saint-Robert-Bellarmin in the constituency of Beauce.

2. The national employment service Megantic area was not designated as a development area because it did not qualify under the established criteria.

DISTRIBUTION OF MEASLES VACCINE

Question No. 1,574—Mr. Gauthier:

Does the government intend to sponsor a program for the free distribution of Enders living virus vaccine for the prevention of measles and, if not, is there any federal legislation that can be used to control the prices at which the vaccine is sold to the general public?

Miss LaMarsh: No. The subject of measles vaccine was thoroughly discussed at the dominion council of health and there was no suggestion that it be included as a vaccine for free distribution.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has no power under the Food and Drug Act to control the price of the vaccine.

PUBLICATIONS BY CHIEF, ARCHAEOLOGY SECTION, NATIONAL MUSEUM

Question No. 1,575—Mr. Fisher:

In respect to the titles of publications edited or written or prepared by the chief of the archaeology section of the national museum, what are they, and in what publications (date, page) can they be found?

Mr. Laing: As far as they are known to the department, Mr. Taylor's publications to date are as follows:

EXTENSION OF MUNICIPAL LOAN FUND TO SCHOOL DISTRICTS

Question No. 1,580—Mr. Cantelon:

1. Has the government received representations from the Saskatchewan school trustees association requesting that local school districts be entitled to share in the benefits of the municipal development and loan fund under the terms of the agreement with the government of Saskatchewan for the control of disbursement of moneys?

Questions

2. Is the government prepared to change the regulations so that the benefits of the act may be extended to school districts?

Mr. Benson: 1. Yes.

2. The act and regulations do not exclude the possibility of extending the benefits that are available to school districts. Should a province wish this to be done in its case it should advise the municipal development and loan board accordingly. On receipt of such a request the board will recommend to the governor in council that school districts within that province be designated as municipalities under section 2(d)(i) of the act, provided they are incorporated bodies and have the authority to raise money by issuing debentures.

AKLAVIK, N.W.T.—ATTENDANCE OF SCHOOL CHILDREN ELSEWHERE

Question No. 1,582—Mr. Rheaume:

1. How many school age children from Aklavik, N.W.T. attend school hostels at other points in the N.W.T.?
2. How many of these children are in each of the following categories (a) grades 1 to 6 (b) grades 7 to 12 (c) vocational training (d) other?
3. What is the total estimated cost per year for transportation, maintenance and incidentals for these school children in each of the four categories in part (2) above?
4. Has the government any plans to establish a school-hostel at Aklavik, N.W.T., and, if so, when will this be done; if not, will the government look into the possibility and desirability of providing a school-hostel at Aklavik, N.W.T.?

Mr. Laing: 1. 61.

2. (a) 33; (b) 24; (c) 4; (d) nil.

3. (a) 42,009; (b) 30,552; (c) 5,092; (d) N.A.

4. Not at present; the situation is being kept under review.

APPLICATION FOR TRANSPORT LICENCE, YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,583—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Has the board of transport commissioners received an application from Frenchy's Transport Limited of Yellowknife, N.W.T., for a license to transport goods by water and, if so, when was this application received, and what decision has been made?
2. If no decision has yet been made, what is causing the delay, and when does the board estimate it will be in a position to reach a decision?

Mr. McIlraith: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

1. Yes, on October 17, 1963. No decision has been made to date.

2. Other persons already providing transport facilities within the Mackenzie river watershed are entitled to file submissions with the board with respect to this application not later than November 22, 1963. Frenchy's Transport Limited is also entitled to make reply to such submissions. When these submissions and replies have been received, the board will be in a position to determine the matter.

[Mr. Cantelon.]

MAGNETISM SURVEY OF NORTH

Question No. 1,584—Mr. Rheaume:

1. What will be the total estimated cost of the magnetism survey of the Canadian north beginning next week?
2. What amount will be paid for the charter of aircraft?
3. What companies or firms will do the flying?
4. Were public tenders called for the charter of aircraft and, if so, which companies submitted bids, and what were each of these bids?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. $104,950.

2. Approximately $100,000.

3. Wardair Canada Limited.

4. No, but 19 companies reported by the air transport board as holding valid class A licences were invited to tender, and the company submitting the lowest tender was selected.

*REVELSTOKE NATIONAL PARK—SUPERINTENDENT'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 1,586—Mr. Herridge:

1. When was the residence of the superintendent of the Revelstoke national park built?
2. What is the total area of the floor space in this residence?
3. What was the total amount paid to the contractor for the construction of the residence of the superintendent of the Revelstoke national park?
4. What additional expense was incurred by the employment of park employees on further improvements to the basement rooms, etc. and for the material required for this work?
5. What amount has been paid to contractors or other persons for this residence since it was built?

Mr. Laing: 1. 1960-1961 (completed in May 1961).

2. 1,732 square feet.

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS PARK—VETERANS PREFERENCE

Question No. 1,587—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is veterans preference being observed in regard to the hiring of personnel for the winter works program at the Cape Breton highlands national park?

Mr. Laing: Yes, in conjunction with the preference which is given to heads of families who are in need of employment and who live in close proximity to the park.

LEGAL AND STATUTORY HOLIDAYS

Question No. 1,589—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many "legal holidays" are there in the year and what are they?
2. How many "statutory holidays" are there in the year and what are they?

Mr. Chevrier: The meaning of these expressions depends upon the context in which they are used. Legislative jurisdiction as to holidays is divided between parliament and the provincial legislatures depending upon the subject matter and purpose of the legislation. Each may legislate with regard to holidays within its sphere of jurisdiction. Thus, the Interpretation Act of Canada defines holidays for the purposes of federal statutes and the interpretation act of Ontario defines holidays for the purposes of statutes of Ontario. Non-juridical days are set out in s. 43 of the Bills of Exchange Act. Days to be observed as holidays within the federal civil service are set out in s. 62 of the Civil Service Act. Days on which business may be transacted in provincial court and government offices depends upon provincial legislation.

BUTTER SURPLUS

Question No. 1,596—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What was the amount and the value of surplus butter in Canada for each of the last five years?
2. How much of the surplus butter was disposed of during each of these five years through sales or gifts to underdeveloped countries?
3. How much does the storage of this surplus butter cost?
4. How many pounds of surplus butter are stored in the province of Quebec?
5. What administrative costs are associated with this surplus butter?

Mr. Hays: 1. Agricultural stabilization board holdings of butter and butter oil as of March 31:

| Year | Butter lbs. | Butter Oil lbs. | Inventory Value $ |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1959 | 49,611,273 | Nil | 32,391,822 |
| 1960 | 64,578,932 | Nil | 42,256,010 |
| 1961 | 71,761,333 | 22,645,984 | 66,962,738 |
| 1962 | 67,767,096 | 78,032,698 | 112,311,843 |
| 1963 | 90,181,798 | 81,707,747 | 129,172,971 |

2. None.

3. Storage costs of butter purchased by the agricultural stabilization board were, by fiscal year: 1958-59, $1,602,906.04; 1959-60, $2,275,591.62; 1960-61, $2,863,277.79; 1961-62, $3,960,325.50; 1962-63, $4,422,361.24.

4. As of October 31, 1963—there were 95,131,064 pounds of butter and 46,856,448 pounds of butter oil held in storage in the province of Quebec.

5. Since officials of the dairy products division, Department of Agriculture, act as agents of the board for many of its operations, costs other than for storage and transportation cannot be segregated from departmental costs.

Mr. Hays: An amount of $867,246.36 was paid to the dairy establishments listed from the date of implementation of the policy to March 31, 1963.

ASSISTANCE TO FRUIT GROWERS

Question No. 1,605—Mr. Winch:

1. During a fairly recent visit to the United Kingdom, did the Minister of Agriculture make any announcement relative to the government's plans to assist fruit growers?
2. Is legislation to be introduced to (a) provide insurance to growers against losses to their crops (b) renew attempts to find markets for the growers of fresh fruit, and (c) provide fruit farmers with long term loans?
3. When can the house expect these measures to be introduced by the government?

Mr. Hays: 1. No.

2. (a) The provision of crop insurance is the responsibility of the provinces. The Crop Insurance Act authorizes federal assistance to approved provincial insurance programs.

(b) The Departments of Agriculture and Trade and Commerce work closely with the fruit industry in the development of markets.

(c) Fruit farmers are eligible for long term loans under the Farm Credit Act.

3. Not applicable.

*OFFICE OF QUEEN'S PRINTER

Question No. 1,609—Mr. Fisher:

Will the personal office of the queen's publisher be established in the printing bureau and, if not (a) where is it to be located (b) are the offices being prepared (c) when did the preparations begin (d) when will the queen's publisher move there?

Mr. Drury: The creation of the post of queen's publisher and related changes are still under consideration.

Questions

CANADIANS IN UNITED STATES

Question No. 1,610—Mr. Mather:

1. How many Canadians left Canada to live in the U.S.A. during 1962?

2. Has the government an estimate of the number of Canadians and descendants now living in the U.S.A.?

Answer: 1. Immigrant aliens admitted to the United States, whose country of last permanent residence was Canada: Calendar year 1962, 47,579; Source: United States department of justice, immigration and naturalization service.

2. (a) Number of Canadian-born living in United States: United States census, 1960, 952,500; (b) Number born in United States of Canadian parentage: United States census, 1960, 2,228,551.

COST AID TO MCINTYRE PORCUPINE MINES LTD.

Question No. 1,612—Mr. Peters:

1. How much money was paid in cost aid to the McIntyre Procupine Mines Ltd. in the first nine months of 1962?

2. What was the increase in the amount paid in the same period in 1963?

3. To what extent is this increase in cost aid attributed to the labour dispute at their Castle subsidiary?

4. To what extent is the increase in cost aid attributed to the copper development at the Porcupine mine?

5. If substantial losses had not been encountered, would an increase in cost aid have been anticipated?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. The advances paid under the provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to McIntyre Porcupine Mines Ltd. for each of the first three quarterly periods of 1962 are as follows: 1. $260,900.64; 2. $322,616.77; 3. $279,249.32.

2. The advances paid for the corresponding periods of 1963 are as follows: 1. $396,739.50; 2. $210,495.25; 3. None to date.

3. The operation of the company's Castle mine, which is a silver producer, is not related to the determination of assistance payable with respect to gold produced from the McIntyre mine.

4. The costs of producing copper are segregated and do not enter into the calculation of the amount of assistance payable on gold produced from the McIntyre mine.

5. The amount of assistance payable is a function of the cost of production of gold and the quantity produced. The profit or loss position of the operator is not involved in the calculation.

URANIUM—ADDITIONAL SALES TO U.S.

Question No. 1,617—Mr. Starr:

Have any agreements or other arrangements been entered into since the 10th of April, 1963, between Canada and the United States for the sale by Canada and purchase by the United States, or by private interests in that country, of additional amounts of Canadian uranium to the United States and, if so, on what date or dates, and what are the particulars thereof?

Answer: No.

FROZEN FOODS—FREIGHT RATE TO U.K.

Question No. 1,623—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Is the government aware that the Canada-U.K. freight conference has stated that it will be increasing the freight rates by 26 per cent, effective January 15, 1964, on certain frozen food products shipped from Canada to the United Kingdom?

2. Has the government received any representations from the government of Prince Edward Island or from the frozen foods industry pointing out the detrimental effects such a freight increase would have on the frozen foods industry of Prince Edward Island?

3. Has the government taken any action which would lessen this detrimental effect on this important export industry?

Answer: 1. The announced increase in the freight rates on frozen French fried potatoes ranges from 21 per cent to 35 per cent over the existing rate. On frozen vegetables, new rates range from unchanged to approximately 12 per cent over the existing rate.

2. Yes.

3. A meeting between representatives of the frozen food processors and the Canada-United Kingdom freight conference is to be held in Saint John. Officials of the federal government will attend and it is anticipated that officials of the governments of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island will also attend.

WHEAT AGREEMENTS

Question No. 1,625—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

On what dates were the last wheat agreements signed with each of the following countries: Great Britain, Germany, Japan, Poland, China, Czechoslovakia and Russia?

Answer: 1. The Minister of Trade and Commerce signed on behalf of the government long term wheat agreements with the following countries on the dates indicated: Poland, November 5, 1963; Czechoslovakia, October 29, 1963; Russia, September 16, 1963; Bulgaria, October 8, 1963.

2. With regard to the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan, the details of sales of wheat to these countries are a commercial matter between the Canadian wheat board and the country concerned, or an accredited export agent of the Canadian wheat board and an importer, and it is contrary to Canadian wheat board practice to reveal dates or any other information relating to such sales contracts.

3. With regard to China, the Canadian wheat board has negotiated two long term agreements with the China national cereals, oils and foodstuffs import and export corporation. These agreements are not firm sales contracts but rather a declaration of intent which sets out procedures to facilitate the sale and purchase of wheat through subsequent individual sales contracts. The first long term agreement was dated April 22, 1961, and the second long term agreement was dated August 1, 1963.

MEETING BETWEEN PREMIER SMALLWOOD AND U.S. ATTORNEY GENERAL

Question No. 1,627—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Were the good offices of the Canadian embassy at Washington utilized in arranging a recent meeting between the premier of Newfoundland and the attorney general of the United States?
2. Were such good offices requested?
3. Is the government aware that an affidavit has been filed with the United States securities commission declaring that at said interview the premier of Newfoundland attempted to halt a fraud case involving John Doyle of Canadian Javelin Limited?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. The Canadian embassy was advised that Hon. J. R. Smallwood had arranged an interview with the attorney general of the United States in April and was requested to confirm with the attorney general's office that the premier of Newfoundland was proceeding to Washington for this interview.

2. Answered by the above.

3. The Canadian government is not aware that any such affidavit has been filed with the United States security and exchange commission.

AID TO UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

Question No. 1,639—Mr. Matheson:

In the last year of record, stated in American dollars, what was the per capita contribution in official aid to the underdeveloped countries from the following members of the organization for economic co-operation and development, namely: (a) France (b) United States (c) Germany (d) United Kingdom (e) Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Data in the following table relates to the calendar year 1962. Column one shows the magnitude of the net official flows to less developed countries, and includes all non-military grants in cash and in kind, as well as lending from official sources for maturities exceeding five years. The source of this information is the OECD report "Development Assistance Efforts and Policies." Population estimates for 1962 are derived from the OECD statistical bulletin.

| | U.S. Million | Thousands Population | $ U.S. Per Capita |
|---|---|---|---|
| France | 996 | 47,573 | 20.93 |
| U.S.A. | 3,606 | 188,062 | 19.17 |
| Germany (F.R.) | 427 | 55,074 | 7.75 |
| U. K. | 417 | 53,441 | 7.80 |
| Canada | 50 | 18,767 | 2.66 |

EXPORT CREDITS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Question No. 1,641—Mr. Matheson:

1. Since the launching of Canada's export financing program in January 1961, what moneys have been loaned to what foreign countries (in the order of the volume of credit advanced) for the purchase of Canadian exports?
2. What percentage of said moneys was advanced to assist in the sale of Canadian machinery or manufactured goods?

Answer: 1 and 2.

Total of Export Credits Insurance Corp. financing authorized by orders in council as of November 12, 1963; (% thereof relating to machinery or manufactured goods).

|---|---|
| (i) Argentina | $15,334,000 (100%) |
| (ii) Brazil | $11,035,750 (100%) |
| (iii) Ceylon | $10,800,000 (86.2%) |
| (iv) Chile | $19,900,000 (80.4%) |
| (v) Israel | $2,300,000 (100%) |
| (vi) Liberia | $1,616,719 (100%) |
| (vii) Mexico | $56,692,937 (100%) |
| (viii) Pakistan | $12,351,000 (86.2%) |

Total moneys disbursed by Export Credits Insurance Corp. in respect of export transactions as of November 12, 1963; (% thereof relating to machinery or manufactured goods).

|---|---|
| (i) Argentina | $12,284,352 (100%) |
| (ii) Brazil | $2,557,800 (100%) |
| (iii) Ceylon | $450,000 (0%) |
| (iv) Chile | $11,467,328 (87.7%) |
| (v) Israel | Nil |
| (vi) Liberia | $280,907 (100%) |
| (vii) Mexico | $23,826,898 (100%) |
| (viii) Pakistan | $4,663,000 (90.8%) |

BROADCASTING—NAMES OF ARTISTS, WRITERS ETC.

Question No. 1,643—Mr. Valade:

What are the real names of all performers, commentators, newspapermen, writers, song writers, and others who received fees from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for their services under pen or stage names on television or radio from the beginning of 1955 to date?

Mr. Pickersgill: It may be questioned whether the expenditure required to produce an answer to this question could be justified by any public interest which would be served, but any question relating to specific persons would be submitted to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for a reply.

CHRYSLER COMPANY TENDER FOR STAKE TRUCKS

Question No. 1,648—Mr. Lambert:

1. With reference to the replies to questions 1,500 to 1,556, what were the tender's specifications with respect to rear axle and rear springs of the vehicles the subject matter of the tender call?
2. In what way did the vehicles offered by the lowest tenderer not meet with these specifications, and what was the nature of the capacity deficiencies in the rear axle and rear springs of the vehicles offered by the said tenderer?
3. Did the vehicles offered by any of the other unsuccessful tenderers not meet the said specifications or capacity requirements, and in what way?

Answer: 1. It was a requirement of the specification that no axle or spring should be loaded greater than its rated load when the vehicle was carrying a payload of 8,000 pounds evenly distributed over the body floor.

2 (a) The capacity of the rear axle and rear springs of the vehicles offered by the lowest tenderer was not sufficient to satisfy this requirement of the specification. (b) The capacity of the rear axle was deficient by approximately 140 pounds. The capacity of the rear springs was deficient by approximately 640 pounds.

3. The capacity of the rear axles and springs of the vehicles offered by all other tenderers was sufficient to meet the requirements of the specification.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ARMED FORCES ESTABLISHMENT

Question No. 1,198—Mr. Douglas:

What was the establishment by ranks and by services of navy headquarters, army headquarters, and air force headquarters on January 1, 1939, January 1, 1945, January 1, 1963, October 1, 1963, and what was the total strength, by services, of the armed forces on those dates?

Return tabled.

SERVICE CONTRACTS, CAMP GAGETOWN, N.B.

Question No. 1,512—Mr. MacRae:

1. What service contracts have been awarded for Camp Gagetown since April 1, 1963?
2. Who submitted the tenders and what was the amount of each tender?

Return tabled.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before you call notices of motions for production of papers I wonder whether I could have the consent of the house to revert to motions to table a couple of documents that have been requested.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, before we leave questions may I inquire with regard to question No. 1,164 appearing in my name under date of September 30. As I require up to date information and have not received an answer to this question yet, may I now change the date from September 30 to October 30?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before consent is given to the minister I should like to raise a question of privilege with regard to one of the starred questions. If you would like me to do so now I will, or I am prepared to wait until we have finished with matters under motions. It is immaterial. My question of privilege involves starred question No. 1,349 in my name and starred question No. 1,316 in the name of the hon. member for Port Arthur, which question was answered today.

My question, No. 1,349, was filed a month ago tomorrow and it is a simple one. It reads:

What is to be site of the Canadian world exhibition?

The second part of the question asks when the decision was made to select this site, who made it and by what authority. So far no answer has been given to this question. Today the parliamentary secretary answered the question of the hon. member for Port Arthur, which reads in part as follows:

In the recent announcements by the Minister of Public Works that arrangements are completed for the construction plans for the access to the world's fair site—

And so on. Reference is made there to a site. Then the hon. member proceeds to elaborate on what he wants to find out. I submit it is within the knowledge of the minister what is to be the site of the Canadian world exhibition, and I cannot possibly understand his reluctance to answer such a simple, straightforward question, unless it is that the site for the Canadian world exhibition has been chosen contrary to the restriction placed in the statute setting up the Canadian world exhibition, and the minister and the government are embarrassed about answering this particular question.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the hon. member that unfortunately this question has been overlooked. At the first opportunity it will be answered with the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. Howard: Monday?

Mr. Deschatelets: Any time.

Mr. Howard: Right now?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder if I might now renew my request to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling two orders for returns requested on several occasions by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi for his enlightenment. I apologize for being unable to table the third return, but the government is awaiting the consent of the premiers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which is being urgently sought.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

SECURITY PROCEDURES AND INVESTIGATIONS

Motion No. 146—Mr. Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence received since January 1, 1963 by the Prime Minister and/or the Minister of Justice from organizations or individuals dealing with the problem of security procedures and investigations and the replies to same.

Mr. Chevrier: The motion is accepted subject to the usual reservations with regard to correspondence between ministers of the crown and interdepartmental correspondence and communications marked "personal and confidential". It is subject also to a reservation with regard to letters from or about named persons involved in any security investigation, since those communications must be regarded as confidential and it would not be in the public interest to disclose them.

Motion agreed to.

RESULT OF 1963 ELECTION

Motion No. 154—Mr. Caouette:

That an order of the house do issue for a return of the complete results of the general election in Canada on April 8, 1963, showing, for each constituency by provinces, the total votes cast for each candidate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I owe the house an apology for the statement I made in respect to this motion when it came up the last time. I thought I was giving a completely accurate statement, and I was correct in saying that the information sought has to be printed, but under the statutes it does not have to be tabled. I was therefore quite wrong in saying the house would be ridiculous in passing this motion. I apologize for having done so, and I think the motion should pass.

Motion agreed to.

MCINTYRE PORCUPINE MINES—GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE

Motion No. 156—Mr. Knowles (for Mr. Peters):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, reports, documents and replies thereto since January 1, 1961, between the McIntyre Porcupine Mines, Ltd., and the government of Canada or any of its departments, concerning matters related to cost aid paid under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

Mr. Benidickson: This motion is accepted, subject to the usual reservations in respect of any correspondence that might be marked "personal" or "confidential".

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS, JOLIETTE-L'ASSOMPTION-MONTCALM CONSTITUENCY

Motion No. 158—Mr. Choquette:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence received by the minister or any of the officials of the Department of Public Works in connection with all works carried out under the jurisdiction of the department in the constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm since April 1, 1958.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: We have no objection to accepting this motion. On the other hand, it is understood that personal and confidential correspondence is privileged material for the reasons I outlined in a similar case recently.

I do not think that I should table personal and confidential correspondence.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, in this connection I can say, in the first place, that a defeated candidate and a member should not be confused. Another point also, it rests with the minister to take his responsibilities and not with me.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion is not debatable. If hon. members desire it can be transferred for debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: I would be pleased if that motion was transferred for debate.

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a question of privilege.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member resume his seat. There is no debate on this motion. The motion is transferred for debate.

AGREEMENT ON CONSTRUCTION OF STEWART-CASSIAR ROAD

Motion No. 159—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the province of British Columbia and any amendments thereto relating to the construction of the Stewart-Cassiar road.

Mr.Laing: This is an agreement signed under the roads to resources program, and is tabled herewith.

Motion agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNITED NATIONS

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING PALESTINE-ARAB REFUGEE PROBLEM

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him what is going on in the United Nations with respect to the unresolved Palestine-Arab refugee problem. What discussions are taking place, and what advance has been made toward a solution of this problem?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition knows from his acquaintance with this problem, it is one that has been with us for some time. This does not mean that there is not the fullest appreciation of its seriousness. The matter continues to be the subject of discussion among countries concerned and among those countries which are assisting in the maintenance of the refugees. Canada is one of these countries. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that discussions are going on both here and at the United Nations. Beyond this I can say nothing more at this stage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister might be able to enlighten the house and let us know whether there is any possibility now, in view of the discussions taking place at this very moment, of a breakthrough in regard to a problem that has continued for some 15 years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish I were in a position to say there were some such indications, but I am not in a position to indicate that there is a breakthrough.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SUPPORT OF U.S. UNIONS FOR HAL BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Labour. It arises out of press reports in all the newspapers this morning that the A.F.L.-C.I.O. are going to back the S.I.U. in their fight against the trusteeship in Canada and, in effect, support Mr. Hal Banks. I am wondering whether the minister could inform the house as to what action this labour organization in the United States intends to take, and whether there have been negotiations or consultations with the United States government to protect Canadian ships in United States ports.

[Mr. Laing.]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have no report to make on the activities of a trade union meeting in the United States. I have read, as has my hon. friend, press reports with respect to the attitude that has been expressed there on this particular matter. Beyond that I have nothing to say, except that the situation in United States ports with respect to the harassment of Canadian shipping has eased considerably. Naturally the Secretary of State for External Affairs is keeping in close touch with the situation.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of his assertion in Windsor last week to the effect that he has been in constant touch with the United States state and labour departments regarding the boycotting of Canadian ships, and in view of the statement made by Mr. John W. Leslie, the United States deputy assistant secretary of labour, who said they had no knowledge of such consultations or of any planned action, I wonder whether the minister could advise the house what is the true situation in this matter.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my attention has not been directed to the statement mentioned by the hon. member. I had discussions on this matter yesterday in Ottawa with our ambassador to Washington, and this statement was not mentioned. However, I will look into the matter further.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FEDERAL PREPARATIONS FOR COMING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Will the minister assist the next federal-provincial conference in Ottawa at the end of November and will he be ready to face the requirements of the province of Quebec regarding new fiscal arrangements; and are the advisers of his department—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Gregoire: —getting ready for these requirements?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think all I can say in reply to that question is that the government is preparing very assiduously for the forthcoming conference which, as the Prime Minister said yesterday, we hope and we expect will be a great success.

I would, while I am on my feet, like to reply to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Labelle—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question that is supplementary to the question I just asked. Will the minister state at this point the actual policy of the government in the next federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

Mr. Gregoire: Why?

QUEBEC—REPORTED AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS FROM FEDERAL TREASURY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may now answer the question that was asked yesterday by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard). According to the press reports, Premier Bennett is alleged to have stated that these equalization payments are in fact subsidies. He went on, I think, to say that only Ontario and British Columbia contribute more than they get back from the federal government. The estimated equalization payments to the provinces for the fiscal year 1963-64 are as follows: Alberta, $1,546,000; British Columbia, nil; Manitoba, $12,033,000; New Brunswick, $16,302,000; Newfoundland, $14,521,000; Nova Scotia, $19,422,000; Ontario, nil; Prince Edward Island, $3,147,000; Quebec, $69,539,000; Saskatchewan, $23,174,000.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I hope he will excuse my ignorance. He said a while ago that Quebec received $69 million in grants. Now, I refer to the statement by Mr. Bennett that Quebec had received $69 million more than it had paid into the federal treasury. Would this mean that Quebec received $69 million more than all the taxes paid to the federal government?

Does the minister understand my question correctly?

Mr. Bennett said that Quebec received $69 million more than what it paid into the federal treasury. Is that correct?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I did not read the reports of what Mr. Bennett said in that way. The total taxes collected from citizens of Quebec by the federal government would certainly exceed $69 million.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. Could he tell the house whether his department intends to hold an investigation in order to find out who is telling the truth, Mr. Bennett, premier of British Columbia, who said that Quebec receives $69 million from the federal government or the Creditiste hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), who claims that Quebec pays $640 million more than what it receives from the federal government?

[Text]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO SITUATION OF ARRESTED CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Addison (York North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last Thursday the hon. member for Red Deer directed a question to the Minister of Justice, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with regard to the two Canadians held in Cuba. I wonder whether the minister would like to make a more complete statement at this time with regard to these two gentlemen.

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government takes a serious view of the situation of these two prisoners. Later this afternoon I hope to see the Cuban ambassador, and our ambassador in Havana is endeavouring to see the Cuban foreign minister this afternoon. We are anxious to know the nature of the charges. We are anxious to make sure that the trial takes place under procedures that will command the belief that full justice will be accorded the prisoners. Beyond this I do not think it is desirable for me to say anything further at this time.

PAKISTAN—CANADIAN AID IN IMPROVEMENT OF DEFENCE FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a question I asked the Prime Minister two or three days ago, on which he said he would get further information. Has the Prime Minister any further information to give the house about whether the government of Canada is giving assistance to the improvement of the defence forces of Pakistan?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has asked me to deal with this question, which I think was raised by the hon. gentleman on November 8. The government of Pakistan has not informed the Canadian government of any request it wishes to make of Canada in this regard, and accordingly no provision has been made.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, so there will be no misunderstanding may I say to the hon. member for Kootenay West that there has been no request for military assistance. The only request which has been made was for the provision by Canada of a technical expert to assist the Pakistani government in the matter of its science research program.

SHIPBUILDING

PROTESTS RESPECTING CANCELLATION OF FRIGATE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has a statement to make to the house or whether he could report to the house on the talks he and other members of the cabinet had yesterday with a delegation of shipyard workers from the province of Quebec who came to Ottawa to protest the cancellation by the government of the frigate program.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no prepared statement to make on the subject, but I am glad to advise the house that I met with the delegation of about 40 persons representing the shipbuilding yards in the province of Quebec. I discussed with them rather fully the shipbuilding program, and particularly the shipbuilding program in relation to prospective employment in the yards, that is to say the time when certain shipbuilding contracts would go to tender and when the construction would take place in terms of employment in the yards.

It was quite a thorough, and at least for my part, satisfactory discussion with these workers.

Mr. Balcer: As a supplementary question I wonder if the minister could tell us whether he indicated to the delegation the building of any new ships for the Department of Transport which were not already included in the estimates for 1962-63 or 1963-64.

Mr. McIlraith: I used as a basis for discussion the statement I made in the house, and we discussed in particular the program for departmental ships disclosed in that statement. The different dates were indicated in the statement, and I pointed out the expected time of tender calls. I also made reference to some commercial vessels, construction of which I expect will be started very shortly. I should add, however, that with respect to these commercial vessels the government has no direct or immediate control over them when they go to tender.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask him whether his department, under this government, is going to institute a program of shipbuilding in this country. To clarify the situation, I mean one which has not been initiated and already announced by the previous government.

Mr. McIlraith: At the moment, Mr. Speaker, the government has been continuing the shipbuilding subsidy program initiated by the former government. The government has sought to clarify the policy and has regularized the provision of funds to meet the commitments and has brought about an orderly program, but substantially it is following the subsidy program laid down by the former government. On that point, when any changes of policy are to be made they will of course be announced in the usual way.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question. Am I to understand from the minister that there is no new program instituted by this government?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of his institution yesterday of a policy of public confession of his shortcomings, would he provide a forum for true confessions to the house by some of his colleagues?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the preamble to that question indicates that no reply is expected.

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could he give us the names of the 14 members on the government side who have signed a petition asking the government to apply Social Credit theories, as the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) is reported to have said in New Westminster, British Columbia?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the list may well have been mythical. Therefore I could not give the names on it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Maybe it is some of those who voted for debt free money in October.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the Quebec government requested another meeting with the minister to consider the possibility of transferring the jurisdiction over the Eskimos of new Quebec to the government of the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter from Hon. Rene Levesque suggesting we meet with him to discuss the setting out of some basis for discussions at a meeting to be held on November 19.

EMERGENCY MEETING OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister able to confirm reports that all members of the Northwest Territories council have been summoned to Ottawa for a special emergency meeting beginning Monday and, if so, can he give the house any further information?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to presume to interfere with the duties of the Northwest Territories council. However, in the light of the probability that the legislation that is before us, which would extend their tenure of office, may not pass the house in time for them to continue, the commissioner for the Northwest Territories suggested to me that he would feel much happier with a meeting of the council in Ottawa, to arrange, among other things, for supply of the necessary services beyond the date of expiry of the powers of the council. When this was represented to me in such form I approved his suggestion that the council be called.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

QUEBEC—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING TREATMENT OF ARSENAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister inform the house whether he is aware of the treatment which has befallen for some time the employees of the Val Cartier arsenals, near Quebec city?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question of the hon. member as notice.

TRADE

TOBACCO—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED SALE TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the Japanese tobacco monopoly decided to purchase a large quantity of Canadian tobacco and, if so, what is the amount of money involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I take this question as notice.

BUTTER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister advise the house concerning the proposed sale of butter or butter oil to Great Britain and other countries?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think as of the present moment we have been able to sell something in the neighbourhood of 21 million pounds of butter and butter oil. This is still being offered and there is considerable interest.

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—INQUIRY AS TO SURVEY OF STORM DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the Department of Fisheries investigating the large losses suffered by fishermen along the coast of Halifax county, and elsewhere in Nova Scotia, as a result of damage to their equipment by hurricane Ginny?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. member that a survey is being made by officials of my department in order to determine the extent of the damage done to fishing boats and gear by hurricane Ginny in the area mentioned.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could the minister inform the house what progress the committee on juvenile delinquency is making in his department?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Well, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have received a number of reports and representations having to do with the amendment of the act. They are under consideration and I trust it will be possible, in the not too distant future, to bring in legislation to that effect.

HAL BANKS—ABSENCE FROM COUNTRY WHILE ON BAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Did Hal C. Banks have leave of a competent court to leave the jurisdiction and go to the U.S.A. when he was on bail in reference to a pending indictable offence?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING PURCHASE OF NEW PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. It has been asked before but it has more urgency now because of an interprovincial and intercity row that seems to be brooding. When can he tell us the decision by T.C.A. regarding the plane that they are going to purchase, and what the government's policy is with regard to T.C.A.'s wish?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should hope to be able to satisfy the hon. gentleman very soon.

Mr. Fisher: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether he is responsible for the information that has been released and that has been accepted across the country, that T.C.A. has asked for and wishes to purchase the DC-9?

Mr. McIlraith: I am afraid in this instance I have been responsible for none of the information that has appeared in the press on the subject.

SUGAR

MEMBERSHIP OF CANADIAN REFINERIES IN INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on a matter arising from last night's debate on the grievance. A statement was made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam to the effect that three different sugar refineries had been fined $75,000. The Minister of Trade and Commerce later stated that the international sugar council of New York had been giving reports as to the present sugar situation. Are the three different Canadian refineries which were mentioned yesterday also members of this international council?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

PROTECTION OF CANADIAN PRODUCERS IN LONG TERM AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the minister's statement last evening concerning the possibility of Canada entering into long term sugar agreements, can the minister assure the house that the interests of our sugar beet producers and those connected with these producers will be adequately protected?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can give that assurance, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—ABOLITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Does he propose to recommend abolishing tolls on the Champlain bridge, in Montreal, as it was promised during the Liberal election campaign?

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the intentions of the government will be made known in due course.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is a supplementary question following the minister's answer a moment ago.

I am asking the minister whether he could not assure the house that his government intends to consider the question of abolishing tolls on the Champlain bridge before the next session, considering the importance of giving the city of Montreal the necessary bypass roads during the work carried out on St. Helen's island for the world exhibition, as the situation is creating rather serious bottlenecks.

I am asking the minister whether he could give the assurance to the house that the matter will be considered before the next session.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I directed a question to the Minister of Transport, and then the Secretary of State for External Affairs got up to answer a previous question. I should like the Minister of Transport to reply to my question, which was very simple.

Mr. Pigeon: Yes or no.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO STARRED QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State in his capacity as house leader. I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he could make an effort to have the starred questions on the order paper answered as quickly as possible; there are quite a number there. I believe the intention of a starred question is that members can get a fairly quick answer to a reasonably simple question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I will be very glad to do so, sir. I notice there is one dated October 9, and that does seem a rather long time.

GRAIN

EXTENSION OF POWERS OF COMMISSION TO EASTERN PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it the intention of the government to extend the power of the Canadian board of grain commissioners from the western provinces to the eastern provinces, without having it stopping at the lakehead?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this matter is not under my jurisdiction.

Mr. Langlois: Then would the Minister of Agriculture tell me whose department it is under? I will direct my question then to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-95, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak at length on this question. The official opposition has taken the strongest exception to the manner of approach to United States investment in Canada. We have stated that the tax on dividends paid by corporations not having a degree of Canadian ownership does not meet the situation, and in its present form it is detrimental to investment in our country. However, having opposed these particular sections of the Income Tax Act and the other parties having generally given them support, there is no purpose in going over the ground again.

This is the last stage in the budget, a matter which goes back many months. It was a budget that was jerry built and has not stood up. After the budget was introduced there was a general demand for the removal of the Minister of Finance, but the government decided to get out of the budget practically completely and hold on to the minister. On the basis of what remains of the budget one can understand the description that was given to the Canadian economy; "a rudderless mess". There was the budget of a few months ago. The promises which were made have not been carried out. My mind goes back to 1961 when the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) set out a financial and fiscal plan for Canada which was to be the salvation of the finances of this nation. He proposed four fiscal measures. The first of these was a temporary reduction in the rate of income tax. That was the promise made by the Liberal party in 1961. Instead of any reduction, the Canadian people today are being taxed approximately $250 million more than was the case when the present government came into office. Hon. gentlemen opposite said they would amend the Income Tax Act in this regard. They have done nothing to carry out this undertaking and their failure to do so cannot be explained on the ground that there is a deficit this year. When the undertaking was made in 1961 there was also a deficit, and the attitude then of the Liberal party was that there would be a reduction of income tax.

The second undertaking was that they would proceed to increase vocational training assistance. We have no quarrel with that, because it formed part of our own program. I believe, in this connection, the government should give consideration to encouraging adults to continue their education in part-time or night classes by allowing them to deduct tuition costs and expenses under the income tax. There are many thousands across Canada who today are attending night schools and there are many more who would attend if encouragement were given. Indeed, I think one of our primary purposes must be to expand and enlarge the vocational training plan which we brought into effect, so as to ensure that those who are middle aged and who wish to continue their education may have an opportunity to do so. At the same time, those who are younger in years and who desire to further their education by attending night schools should be entitled to the same deduction as if they were attending day schools.

The next proposal was a renewal program to be broadened and increased in the field of urban development. Finally, as part of the long term policy of the Liberal party, there was the medical health plan. This was the program of 1961 and 1962.

If we are to encourage the expansion of our country—and, at that time, the prime minister of the day said this was a necessary course to take—then tax cuts are necessary. But in place of carrying out the undertaking which was then given, the government has added extra burdens upon the people. In particular, I refer to the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and production machinery, a tax which should never have been imposed. Today, the rate of 4 per cent is in effect, and will be to the end of this fiscal year. I think there should be an immediate announcement made that the government will not press for the increase but will freeze the tax at the present rate. To sum up, the promises of 1961 in connection with income tax have followed the course of so many other promises which were made: they have not been carried into effect. Indeed, as far as taxation is concerned, instead of a reduction there has been a marked increase.

This is the background material. It indicates that the government has failed in the budget, or in what remains of the budget, to carry out the undertakings which were given. Having asked for reductions in taxation to meet the situation that exists in our country, following the lead of the United States in that regard in the message to congress by the President, I now come to one matter to which I should like to direct the attention of the house, and I intend to confine my remarks to it. It has to do with the subamendment which was accepted by the government last night. Its acceptance indicated a change of attitude on the part of the government. We had, from time to time, been demanding that there should be full consultation concerning all those matters which fall within the provincial arena. That has not been the attitude taken by the government, or the course which it has followed. The motion last evening was in the following terms:

> That this house urges the government to carry out more fully the spirit of co-operative federalism and to consult with the provinces before announcing or undertaking programs which fall to any extent within provincial jurisdiction.

I do not intend to go into the circumstances surrounding the somersault last evening or the trickiness of the government's move. I shall accept it not as a tricky move designed by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). I intend to regard it as a conversion. I am going to regard it as a change of attitude, and I think that is the fairest interpretation one could place on it. A review took place last evening of previous occasions when a similar course was followed, but there never was an occasion in Canadian history when a government, realizing it was facing a vote of want of confidence, decided, because it feared the result, to accept an amending motion. It simply means that from now on, however an amendment of non-confidence is moved, the government can say: we have more confidence than we think the opposition would have, and this being the case we are prepared to support the amendment in order to save ourselves.

They will never hear the last of their vote last evening.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order. Maybe we shall never hear the last of it, but perhaps we should hear about it when it is in order to refer to it. The debate now is on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) for the third reading of the income tax bill. The prime minister is now seeking—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, that was worth doing, to give the ex-prime minister the first moment of real pleasure he has had since he left that office. For the last few minutes the former prime minister has been seeking to say all those things he was not bright enough to think of in the debate last night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no point of order in what is being said.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are not the Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the Secretary of State is going to raise a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. My point of order is that it is contrary to the rules of the house to revive a debate on a question that has been settled. This question was settled not by one vote but two votes last night, in one of which the hon. gentleman voted one way and then on the identical motion voted the opposite way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: He has no right under the rules to take up the time of the house today in reviving that debate when we should be debating the income tax bill, and I suggest, sir, that the right hon. gentleman, like the rest of us, be asked to abide by the rules of the house.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I also rise on this point of order. I have listened very attentively to the point of order raised. In addition to bringing up a point of order the Secretary of State, as usual, is debasing parliament, bringing in partisanship and doing more damage to the House of Commons than anyone else in the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Byrne: —the Secretary of State is quite correct. The Leader of the Opposition is out of order under standing order 35.

Mr. Ricard: The situation is becoming darker and darker now.

Mr. Byrne: I will read the relevant citation. Citation 149 in Beauchesne, fourth edition, reads as follows:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 35, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:—
> (k) reflect upon the past acts and proceedings of the house.

After all, Mr. Speaker, it was only last night that this matter was discussed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the point of order raised by the Secretary of State, may I say I am sure the Leader of the Opposition knows that he should limit himself as much as possible to what is contained in the bill which is now before the house for third reading.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I could not be more in agreement with you. I point out that the Secretary of State chose a phony point of order in order to make statements that are completely without foundation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This shows that the guilty conscience for last night's damage to parliament rests with him and that he feels a sense of deep guilt.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What I was trying to do in a perfectly unprovocative way was to lead up from last night's conversion. I want to know whether or not it is just one of those one-night conversions or whether it is going to be reasonably permanent—because there are two kinds, those that last while the hallelujah chorus is being sung—

Mr. Pickersgill: Ask Alvin.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and those that last while there is fear that condemnation is about to come. These deathbed repentances do not often last long. However, I am taking it for granted that last night's was not a deathbed repentance, that it was more than a piece of trickery and that it actually means a change in the attitude of the government.

Believing that, I am going to give the opportunity to the members of the government and its followers to support an amendment I am about to move.

Mr. Knowles: Are you jealous?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hasten at once to say that I do not want the government to be frightened, and while we will not consider the amendment as a vote of non-confidence, we will also look upon it as a vote of confidence on the part of members supporting the government, as in the vote they gave last evening.

I am referring particularly to the question of designated depressed areas. For a long period of time various members of the official opposition, the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales), the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Weichel), the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Stenson), the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), have pressed on the government the necessity of there being consultation with the provinces before there is designation of a particular area or municipality as a designated area. In this regard I am going to look for support from the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). I refer him to his speech of November 6 as found on page 4474 of Hansard in which he stated in effect that there should be consultation. He said:

> Certainly you have the provincial government to which these local governments are responsible. How much more effective it would be if these governments were consulted, if they were allowed to express their opinions on this.
> I am in favour of this amendment for two reasons, and one is that the consultation aspect of government must be continually protected and preserved. It is only in this way we can get the full co-operation not only of local governments but also of people in industries and commercial enterprises in these communities. This applies even to the provincial governments because, after all, our municipalities are responsible to them.

The hon. member often speaks of the need to be consistent. I was interested today, Mr. Speaker, when somebody asked who were the 14 Liberal members of whom he spoke who had signed a petition on behalf of Social Credit. I could only decide that some of those that voted for debt free money in November, 1961, took their vote at that time seriously.

Mr. Knowles: It was 1962.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But I am asking now for the support of this hon. gentleman. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) also made a very clear and definite statement in this regard. As found on page 4475 of Hansard for November 6, he said:

> —if the hon. member who introduced this amendment—

He is referring to the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Wellington South.

> —would replace the word "municipality" by the word "province", then the amendment would be not only acceptable but desirable. It would follow that the federal government would no longer have to deal with the municipalities but only with certain provincial governments. That would relieve the federal government of extra work, difficulties and problems.

Then, I call my next witness, the present Prime Minister who, while he was leader of the opposition, spoke on this subject on March 20, 1961. At that time he said there should be a six point program for these areas of chronic and serious unemployment. I quote from page 3137 of Hansard for that date:

> An area rehabilitation agency should be set up within the federal government to implement in co-operation with provincial and local authorities, an over-all program of economic assistance to the depressed areas of our country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that statement of policy made by the present Prime Minister on March 20, 1961, coupled with the views expressed by the leader of the Social Credit group and the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), as well as the unanimity last night on the part of government members concerning the need for consultation, makes one begin to see that today, on third reading of this measure, we are faced with the need for taking the first step along the line of full consultation with the municipalities through the medium of these provinces. This was the attitude taken by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) when he was minister of labour. He discussed these matters. He was able to bring in a winter works program which was operative because he had co-operation.

Now, sir, there have been areas that have been designated that have not been too well pleased with the designation. Brantford is one such place. I understand, from the explanation that was given, how it came to be chosen, but it is also well to remember that the mayor said he could not understand it. Apparently he lost sight of the fact that one of the ministers of the government, the Hon. Senator Macdonald, represented that area.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: True.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is just a circumstance. I do not know why anyone should be disturbed over that. The fact is he was.

I want to speak now of the change that has taken place in the thinking of hon. members opposite. When we were asking for consultation when this measure was introduced to designate areas, the answer we received was in the negative. On October 2, as recorded on page 3125 of Hansard I asked the Minister of Labour a question. If I leave out the unnecessary words it was in effect; before a municipal area is designated as a distressed area in order to qualify, are the officials of the municipality consulted? The answer by the Minister of Labour, in part, was as follows:

> We felt as a government that, given the opportunity, we ought to take responsibility, as we said we would do, for areas which ought to be given special assistance, not to do as the former government did and ask the municipality to come forward and make an application.

So, they went ahead and decided that there would be no consultation with the provinces. We asked for this, and yet no municipality was given the opportunity. We consulted with the municipality, but this government decided not to do so. This has been one of the major shortcomings in this particular piece of legislation up to this moment.

Yesterday the principle was accepted, finally, absolutely and unanimously in this house. The motion was not regarded as in the nature of a non-confidence motion. The principle of the fullest consultation was accepted, it being essential where there is any interest of the province or municipality, before and not after decisions are taken. In this way the support of these bodies would be enlisted, and without that support, as the hon. member for Ontario has said, it will be very difficult to make this program succeed. We have tried over and over again to get the government to accept the idea of consultation, not to designate an area until that area has been consulted, through the medium of the provinces if you will. The answer in every case has been that it is unnecessary.

Last evening the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) joined with those sitting around him, all the ministers of the cabinet, in accepting the principle we have been advocating. In other words, the principle is now accepted by the government. Having been accepted, what could be more reasonable than that an opportunity be now given so that the government and its members may, within 20 hours after this great declaration of change on the part of the government, vote on the very thing for which they voted last evening in that subamendment which they accepted. I am sure that this idea will have a widespread appeal to the members supporting the government. I make it very clear, and I do not want any misunderstanding, that this is not a vote of non-confidence that I am now moving. This is simply a means of giving to the government the opportunity to carry out that for which they voted last night, that which they condemned for several months as unnecessary when the hon. gentleman to whom I have referred over and over again pressed for the need for consultation with the municipality.

I want to give the fullest opportunity not to have directions given by the governor in council under the Department of Industry Act without consultation. Section 9 of that act reads:

> The governor in council may designate as a designated area for the purposes of this act any district or locality in Canada that is determined to require special measures to permit economic development or industrial adjustment by reason of the exceptional nature or degree of unemployment in that area.

The bill before us is one that contains no reference whatever to consultation. We have tried from the very beginning of this debate to bring about amendments, but they have been defeated. Let the past bury its dead. The members of the government voted against the amendment moved by the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) and other amendments that were proposed in this connection. However, they did so b.c., that is, before conversion which took place on November 12. I am asking today the opportunity for those who stood up last evening and supported this great principle, which is a necessary principle for confederation, to give this assurance that there shall be no abrogation of provincial jurisdiction.

Now I ask, is it not proper and appropriate, with the change just behind them, with the warmth of their sudden conversion still on their cheeks, that they now have the right, as they should have, to carry out the great and abiding principle of confederation that received unanimous support in this house last night. It just shows that out of evil may come good; out of fear may come principle; out of victory has come survival. Now, sir, so that the house will know what the amendment is, I will read it. I will make some further references to it, if I may, later on. This amendment is seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Chaplin), and if I may interpolate here, I am sure the house as a whole will be glad to see him back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has been seriously ill for months and is back in the house today. His heart must be warmed by the kindliness of the reception of all hon. members in all parts of the house. That is one thing about the House of Commons: whatever our division and however strong and bitter sometimes our disagreements, it is surprising the degree of camaraderie that prevails, without which democracy could not be preserved under the parliamentary system. I thank hon. members opposite for their reception to the return of this member to the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sir, I would now return to the amendment, which is:

That this bill be not now read the third time but be referred back to the committee of the whole with authority to add after paragraph 71A, subsection 1(b) the following words; that is to say: "providing that the municipal authorities with jurisdiction over the area in question, through their respective provincial governments, have requested the governor in council to have such area so designated".

If I may proceed before Your Honour places it before the house, I would again emphasize that this will in no way be construed as a vote of non-confidence. I want to re-emphasize that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I go further than was gone last evening in that connection, because I know the avidity with which they will accept the amendment, which will translate into actuality the theories of last night. As a result of the change made, the reading of the section would then be:

"designated area" has the meaning given to that expression by the Department of Industry Act, providing that the municipal authorities with jurisdiction over the area in question, through their respective provincial governments, have requested the governor in council to have such area so designated.

I do not want to say any more. It is a great opportunity for parliament to speak. There is no question at all of there being any lack of confidence and the government accepting this amendment. The acceptance of it will be exhibit A for all time to come as to the integrity with which the government members last night accepted with such avidity the subamendment.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, you may wish a little time to decide whether this amendment is in order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, yes.

Mr. Gordon: But perhaps while you are considering that question, if I am permitted to make a few remarks I would certainly like to join the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in welcoming back to the house the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Chaplin) who has many friends on both sides of the chamber. I trust that in view of the rather wide range of matters touched on in the extensive remarks of the Leader of the Opposition I may have a little more licence than usual in what I have to say to begin with, before I get down to the particular matter on which the Leader of the Opposition concentrated at the end of his remarks.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) questioned whether the proposed amendment was in order, I feel that before the debate is allowed to go any further, it would be advisable for you to rule whether the amendment is in order or not.

The same problem arose recently in the house and I think the Speaker gave his ruling before allowing the debate to continue.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Does Your Honour wish to hear any argument on the question as to whether the amendment is in order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) or any other hon. member would like to make submissions for the guidance and enlightenment of the Chair on the question of the point of order, I should certainly be pleased to hear such representations.

Mr. Pickersgill: The amendment seems to be of a very technical character. It reads:

That this bill be not now read the third time but be referred back to the committee of the whole with authority to add after paragraph 71A—

I cannot find, in a hasty perusal of the bill, anything that could properly be regarded as paragraph 71A of this bill. By "paragraph" one assumes "clause" is meant, and the bill appears to have 28 clauses.

It is true that clause 16 contains an amendment to section 71A of the act, which is not quite the same thing, but even when you look inside it, it says in section 71A (1)(b) the following words shall be added:

—for which the business is certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business carried on in a designated area.

It does not seem to me if you read the words, "Providing that the municipal authorities with jurisdiction over the area in question," that these would make much sense in relation to the rest of the bill because, as I understand it, the designated areas are not municipalities at all. They are areas covered by employment offices. This seems to be importing something entirely new into the matter, and something that is foreign to the bill itself. Therefore it would make nonsense of the bill. But these are technical objections that I felt ought to be considered, since the point was raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire).

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I think there is no doubt whatever about the propriety of the amendment, and I refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 415:

When a bill comes up for third reading a member may move that it be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it in any particular. The motion for third reading is debatable under S.O. 32.

There is no limitation whatever on the purposes for which the bill may be recommitted. It can be recommitted for amendment in any particular, and I think this type of amendment has been used many times.

I cannot understand why the Secretary of State would try to put forward any suggestion that there is anything out of order about the amendment. So far as the paragraphs are concerned, there seems to be no particular difficulty involved in paragraph 71A (1)(b), because it is an addition to the wording which is expressed in that clause. I cannot see how there can be any objection to the form of the amendment.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the point I wish to raise is not so much as to whether or not the amendment is in order but rather as to whether or not it is in good form, whether or not it will achieve the purpose that the Leader of the Opposition has in mind.

As I look through clause 16 of the bill, which writes in a new section 71A, I find the words "designated area" appearing in five or six different places, yet the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition would put in this qualification about a request from the provinces with respect to the phrase "designated area" in only one of these places.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the definition of "designated area."

Mr. Knowles: No, I am sorry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, designated area.

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition has not taken the trouble to read the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is usual.

Mr. Knowles: I have the amendment which came to me from the Leader of the Opposition, and he wants to add something after subclause (1)(b). That subclause reads:

—for which the business is certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business carried on in a designated area.

A little later on, in subparagraph (2)(b) there is a definition of "designated area," and I suggest that the Leader of the Opposition's homework leaves something to be desired.

Not only are there these two places in the clause where the phrase "designated area" appears, but it appears again over on page 14 and again on page 15, and all these have to do with designated areas. It seems to me that if he wants to apply it to the whole clause he should put it in a better place than he proposes.

One of the requirements of an amendment is that it makes sense. I do not think this makes sense in the form in which it has been presented to us.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): The propriety of this amendment can be reduced to the fact that if there is no place to put it, then if you go back to consider Bill C-95 it would be out of order since there is no section 71. It seems to me it is only a technical error, but the Leader of the Opposition will have to put it together a little better so that we understand what it means.

Mr. Byrne: Put it in the garbage can, where it belongs.

Mr. Aiken: In connection with the objection that has been raised, certainly if one looks at the bill under clause 71A(1)(b) which appears at the top of page 13, a designated area is there described. Now, if someone wants to raise an objection it would be perfectly logical to put it in exactly where it has been put in.

I think the intention was that it should go into paragraph (2) (b) under the definition of a designated area, and to that extent, if the house agreed, it could be changed to paragraph (2) (b).

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Aiken: I hear some objection from across the way, so it can be left exactly where it is because the words "designated area" appear there, and this particular amendment will qualify those words.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have one point to raise with respect to the regularity of the amendment itself. I submit that the amendment is clearly beyond the scope of the bill before the house because it attempts to alter the method of designating these particular areas to be eligible for assistance.

The Department of Industry Act was passed by this house, in which the method for designation was set forth, and that act established a way by which these designations could be made. If there are additional proposals as to how the areas should be designated, through municipal and provincial participation, then it is within the scope of that particular act that the effort ought to be made.

In the particular bill before us we do have the appearance of the expression "designated area," but it is not open to us, under the scope of this bill, to determine the method by which these areas can be designated, a matter which was dealt with separately, and therefore the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Aiken: On this particular point may I just say to the Minister of Labour that the amendment we are now discussing was brought before the committee of the whole, was not objected to, and in fact it was voted on. It may not be much of a precedent now to refer back, but certainly it was not objected to at that time, and we had a vote on it. Therefore I cannot see how on earth it can be out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I am not saying anything about the substance of the amendment; I am only interested in knowing whether the amendment is in order or not.

It seems to me that at the present time we are discussing two distinct problems. The first relates to the technical or clerical errors which the amendment may contain. On that point I submit that any such error in the drafting of the amendment may be immediately rectified. There is no error of substance here but only an error as to the form. Consequently, I feel that hon. members would be ill-inspired to reject a change made at the proper time, as we are only confronted with a clerical error. If the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) wants to bring the necessary modification to his amendment, I think everything will be quite in order.

As to whether the amendment departs from the subject matter of the bill or is entirely foreign to it, that is to say the manner in which the depressed areas are designated personally I do not think that such is the case; the amendment does not modify the manner of designating the areas, if that amendment is proper for the whole, it should be proper also for that part. That is why I submit that the amendment is completely in order.

[Text]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, on this question of the amendment I should like to refer the house to the book "Procedure in the Canadian House of Commons" by W. S. Dawson, published in 1962, which I submit is the most recent authority in this regard. I should like to refer to page 177, the top paragraph, where I find these words:

> The rules which govern the content of amendments are largely those dictated by common sense.

To that degree the amendment of the right hon. gentleman is certainly out of order. The right hon. gentleman also said something about B.C., although it might have been more appropriate to refer to "A.D."—"after Diefenbaker". Anyway it will not be long before that is apropos in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: I might also refer to page 178 of the same publication.

Mr. MacEwan: What about Renfrew South?

Mr. Greene: That will be all right as long as I am there.

Mr. MacEwan: You made a speech on this already.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Greene: I refer to page 178, a sentence which reads as follows:

> It is improper to present an amendment which repeats any question already decided by the house in the same session.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-74 has already been passed by this house. That bill showed how designated areas were described and how they would be found. I submit with respect to Your Honour that this bill having already been passed and that question having already been decided, this amendment is purporting to present to the house the repetition of a question already decided by the house in this session when it passed Bill No. C-74, which defined how designated areas were selected. That being the case the amendment is palpably out of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on this point I think it is quite possible for certain words or combinations of words used in different enactments to have different meanings. This amendment is not attempting in any way at all to try to do that suggested by the hon. member who has just spoken. We are not going back to the Department of Industry Act to change the meaning of "designated area". But I submit we are entitled for the purpose of the Income Tax Act to say that a designated area shall have the meaning given to it in the Department of Industry Act with certain qualifications added. That is all we are trying to do. This amendment relates to the meaning of "designated area" for the purpose of the Income Tax Act, not for the purpose of the Department of Industry Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: These are, of course, very interesting comments and suggestions made for the guidance of the Chair. I must say that I am not too impressed by the substantive objections which have been made to the validity or regularity of the amendment. I think if we go to the citation which has been referred to by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), namely citation 415(1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, we have the basic principle which should guide us in this particular instance:

When a bill comes up for third reading a member may move that it be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it in any particular.

It seems to me that this is what this amendment intends to do, and I would think that as far as the substance of it is concerned it is quite in order.

I go along with the argument submitted by some hon. members to the effect that there are technical difficulties or errors, but they are strictly technical. For example there is the fact that the amendment should have perhaps been brought in after subsection 2(b) rather than subsection 1(b); but if it were the will of the house the right hon. member could change his amendment at this time quite easily. This is not a substantial difficulty. Reference was also made to the fact that the amendment refers to paragraph 71A, subsection 1(b) rather than to clause 16 of the bill itself. To my mind that is also a technicality and should not be taken into account by the Chair so as to declare the amendment out of order.

For these reasons I would rule that the amendment is acceptable in its present form.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, some little while ago I was saying that I hoped, in view of the range of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, I might be given a little more licence than perhaps might be usual in introducing the remarks I should like to make with regard to the particular subject the Leader of the Opposition concentrated on toward the end of his comments. His criticism should really be examined in the context of the government's whole broad program for expanding the economy and reducing unemployment. He referred to a matter which went back, I think, to 1961 and to what, according to him, had been proposed at that time. If I may I should like to summarize very briefly the actions being taken, to date, in connection with the government's broad program for stimulating business activity and for creating new job opportunities.

1. I should like, first, to mention the initial constructive action of the new Department of Industry to develop a new automobile policy. It is hoped that this policy will result in increased production of automobile parts in Canada to the amount of between $150 million and $200 million. This, of course, will create many thousands of new jobs.

2. A municipal development and loan board has been established with a fund of $400 million. Agreements or arrangements have now been made with all the provinces and the board is engaged in making loans. The increased construction activity which will result from this program should provide thousands of new jobs this winter and next winter.

3. An Atlantic development board has been created, with a fund of $100 million. It is designed to strengthen the whole economic structure of the Atlantic area and in doing so it, also, will create many thousands of new jobs in that part of Canada.

4. The technical and vocational program for training the unemployed has been expanded.

5. Further encouragement has been given to municipal winter works incentive programs by raising the federal government's contribution from 50 per cent to 60 per cent of the direct payroll costs of approved projects in designated areas.

6. The federal government has speeded up its own construction programs in designated areas—or will speed them up—this winter.

7. A new program has been approved to encourage the employment of older workers. This is provided for in the part of the budget to which the right hon. gentleman referred. The federal government will pay 50 per cent of the monthly wages paid to workers over 45 who have been out of work for a consecutive period of nine months, up to a maximum of $75 per month.

8. A bonus of $500 will be paid to the first purchasers of winter built houses.

9. The necessary funds have been provided to permit the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to finance an expanded house building program during this coming winter.

10. Generous tax incentives have been approved—I should say we hope they will now be approved—to encourage new manufacturing and processing businesses in areas of slower growth and persistent unemployment. This is one of the matters under discussion in the bill which is now before the house.

11. Incentives are provided for industries with a degree of Canadian ownership to expand anywhere in Canada. This, also, is in the bill before us.

We are very hopeful that this new broad program will be successful. We think it will be. We are very hopeful that the particular program designed to assist unemployed workers over 45 years of age will be successful. The right hon. gentleman referred once or twice to the budget, and I should like to remind him that this was provided for in the budget. It is something about which all of us on this side are very proud. It is the first time a special program of this kind has been developed to help re-establish as useful members of society men in middle life who have been out of work for a long time.

I should also like to say that we are receiving encouraging reports about the program for stimulating winter house building and that the original estimates of what might be achieved under this program are now being revised upwards.

The policy for stimulating economic activity in areas of slower growth is a new one for Canada although similar policies have worked successfully in Britain and in most of the countries of western Europe. The government is hopeful that the generous incentives provided for in the bill which is now before the house will encourage new manufacturing and processing businesses to establish themselves in these areas. These are the areas where unemployment has been exceptionally high and where it has persisted for some years. The new policy is aimed directly at the solution of this evil. This policy for stimulating activity in areas of slower growth is, as I have indicated, only one item, though an important item, in the broad and comprehensive program which has been developed by the government. Though it has worked successfully in the United Kingdom and in various countries of Europe, as I said a moment ago, it has not previously been tried in Canada and we believe it is high time that it should be. It is time a real effort was made to revive and reinvigorate these areas of slow growth where the level of unemployment has been high and chronic.

Conservative spokesmen have opposed this new policy on three grounds. First, they have opposed it because it is a new and untried idea, at least in Canada. We all know that some people do not like new ideas.

Mr. Pigeon: If the government respects the autonomy of the provinces, it is all right.

Mr. Gordon: I will come to that in a moment, but I suspect, despite the interruption of the hon. member, that the main reason for the criticism from the benches opposite is just that this is a new idea and, therefore, suspect per se.

The second criticism—and this is the point to which I have just referred—is that this policy interferes in some way with the rights of the provinces or of the municipalities. Well, I do not know why a province should object if the federal government does things which will create more jobs in certain areas of persistent unemployment. Furthermore, I doubt, if upon reflection, municipal officials will object very much if this policy results in a great deal of activity and many more jobs in their areas. The Leader of the Opposition referred to Brantford and to the mayor of Brantford. I am informed by my colleague the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) that the mayor of Brantford is delighted to have this chance for his area and to have Brantford included among the areas designated.

I would remind hon. members that no formula has been put forward by anyone, in or out of parliament, for effective consultation in advance of budget changes, and the policy we are discussing was put forward in the budget; it is part of the tax bill. It is not many months since some hon. members were implying—without any foundation whatsoever, as it turned out—that there might have been some leaks prior to the introduction of the last budget. I repeat that these implications were without foundation and I do not think any members of this house seriously believe them any more. But I should not like to think what might have been the case, or what might be the case in the future, if budget proposals were discussed in advance with representatives of provincial governments and their municipalities or, for that matter, with anyone else outside the federal government itself.

An hon. Member: What a conversion.

Mr. Gordon: That was an interesting remark but I did not quite get its implication. I should like to raise another matter which seems to me of paramount importance in connection with this particular criticism. We Liberals believe, and I am sure some members of other parties believe, that the federal government must take some responsibility for the level of economic activity and the opportunities for employment throughout the whole of Canada. This should not and cannot be left to the ten provincial governments acting independently. We were elected to do our very best to improve conditions in Canada and to take whatever action may be needed to provide jobs for the people who need them so badly. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite that we cannot shirk that responsibility by saying that it is the responsibilty of the provinces, as was implied by the Leader of the Opposition.

The third criticism of this whole policy for stimulating economic activity in areas of slower growth and high and chronic unemployment is that the areas that have been singled out for special help should have been designated in some other way. No one has said just how this should have been done; presumably no one has any idea of how this should be done or he would have suggested it.

As I explained in the house on November 6, and the reference is Hansard, page 4473, the criteria for the selection of designated areas have been based on the employment and unemployment record for the summer months rather than the annual average, in order to avoid undue emphasis on winter unemployment in areas where the main problem is not of a seasonal character. At that time I reviewed in detail the criteria for the establishment of a designated area and I also pointed out that provision had been made for flexibility in altering the boundaries of designated areas and for adding new national employment service areas as soon as or if they fulfil, and I hope they do not, the criteria of eligibility. I hope they do not, because that might suggest we were going to have substantial unemployment in other parts of the country, which we would all deplore.

Opposition spokesmen have concentrated their attacks with regard to designated areas on questioning whether one particular area, namely Brantford, should have been included in the list. My colleague, the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury), dealt with this question in detail on October 16 and his remarks will be found in Hansard at page 3651. As he pointed out, representations from all 35 areas designated, including Brantford, have registered only satisfaction with having been so designated.

I think I might also point out that of the total of 31 surplus manpower areas declared by the previous government, 11 are identical with the present list of designated areas and in a number of others there is some degree of overlapping. I think some hon. members may have got the impression that the definition of a designated area is something new and very different. I should like to summarize the definition of a surplus manpower area that was developed previously and show how closely the new definition follows it.

Under the surplus manpower definition it was provided, first, that areas with a labour force of 10,000 or over must be classified by the Department of Labour in a surplus labour market category for 75 per cent or more of the summer months, May to October, 1953 to 1960; also, industrial employment must have declined. Under the first requirement of the definition of a designated area the area must be classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one half or more of the summer months—in the earlier one it was 75 per cent—May to October during the past eight years, and it has experienced an employment increase of less than one half the national average over the same period.

There are alternatives. The first one under the surplus manpower definition provides that areas with a labour force of 10,000 must have been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus market for 50 per cent or more of the summer months, 1953 to 1960; also, industrial employment must have deteriorated over this period. Under the new definition of a designated area the alternative is that it has been classified by the Department of Labour as a labour surplus area for one third or more of the summer months, May to October, during the past eight years, and it has experienced an employment decrease over the same period.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have been arguing about two definitions that are very similar, and for the life of me I cannot understand what all the fuss has been about.

Mr. Pugh: You had better consult the communities.

Mr. Gordon: Let me repeat that no one has come up with a better formula. The criticism has been purely negative in its approach.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if he bothered to read the suggestions with regard to the formula that were placed before him in previous debates. I take exception to his statement and I should like the minister to comment. In my view some of the suggestions put forward by myself and my associates with regard to the formula were constructive.

Mr. Gordon: If I have offended the hon. member in any way or if I have not taken into account some of the proposals that were made, I am sorry and I apologize. But in the broad sense, I have been suggesting that while the formula may not be perfect, it will be revised in the light of experience and in the light of the proposals that have been made by other members of the house. But apart from that, Mr. Speaker, we believe that this program for stimulating areas of slow growth and areas where unemployment is particularly high is a good one. As I say, I am not suggesting it is perfect, and if it can be improved in the light of experience I am sure everyone on this side of the house will be very happy to improve it.

In the meantime, we believe that this program will go a long way towards restoring life and vigour to areas that have been too long neglected. We believe it will provide more jobs where they are most needed. So far as the government is concerned, we propose to push this measure just as hard as we can.

Now, in doing so, I suppose we must expect criticism from those who, as I said a few minutes ago, perhaps are not quite temperamentally ready for new ideas. But despite this, I should like to repeat that we intend to press forward with the kind of new program, the kind of new ideas that are needed to make this country prosperous, including this program of assistance to areas of slow growth. We believe that this is what the Canadian people want, and we know that this is what the people elected us to do.

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask the minister why the government refused to submit this project to the provinces?

Mr. Gordon: I will answer your question in a moment.

I say to hon. members, and especially to the Leader of the Opposition, that it is time we stopped jockeying for position. It is time, and I say this with respect because I know I am a relatively new member, we stopped these endless votes of confidence, and this is a vote of confidence.

Mr. Monteith: Why don't you just run a dictatorship and be done with it?

Mr. Gordon: It is time we got down to work.

Mr. Winkler: Give us decent proposals, then.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm asked why this program has not been or is not to be presented for discussion with the provinces, and presumably the municipalities because they were mentioned by other members, before it is implemented. As I have said, first of all, it is a budget proposal. I do not believe anyone seriously expects that budget proposals should be discussed with the provinces and municipalities ahead of time. Then, it is a tax proposal. Surely, the federal government must take responsibility for the kind of taxes it imposes. But above all, I have said that this is a proposal to get people back to work. With the greatest respect, I say that is a responsibility of the federal government, and I hope we shall all live up to it.

Mr. Starr: Before the minister takes his seat, may I ask him a question. In view of what he has said, that you would not expect the government to ask for any advice from the provinces in connection with budgetary matters, how does he then square this with the suggestion that before the next budget is introduced he will seek the advice of various parts of our economy such as farmers, labour, and so on?

Mr. Gordon: I am really very pleased the hon. member for Ontario has asked me this question because it gives me the opportunity to range a little farther than perhaps I should have been able to do otherwise. I do not believe anyone has come up with a final solution to this problem of budget making under our system of government. There are those who have suggested we should adopt the United States system. When you get down to thinking about the United States system, you realize it is really not appropriate for a parliamentary system such as ours. Before the last budget, I considered whether or not the whole principle of the way it has been done for generations under our system should be changed. I wondered at that time, and I still wonder, whether it would be practical to have a series of public discussions ahead of time to get the views and suggestions of various people, not so that the government could duck this responsibility, because in the last analysis under our system the government must produce a budget and must accept responsibility for it, but mainly to get the benefit of other people's ideas.

I have been thinking about this recently, as I am sure other hon. members have been. It seems to me that at the moment the best we can do is to invite the principal organizational groups to put forward their ideas, let the government have the benefit of their ideas at an early stage and not have these briefs and representations coming along after the main budget proposals have been pretty well decided. This year we have asked that these representations or proposals be made to the government, preferably in December but in any event by the end of January.

Now, this is a beginning or I hope it will be a beginning. I do not say it is the final answer, but at the moment it is a beginning. To answer the hon. member's question directly, I think that if we had tried to hold a federal-provincial conference before the last budget was introduced, we might not have made that time table that I have been trying to forget.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question? Is it correct to assume from what the minister has said that what he is proposing now is to follow the present system of consultation through briefs and suggestions by organizations but have them presented a little earlier?

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we are all looking forward to this federal-provincial conference that is going to begin a week from Monday. I will be very disappointed if we do not get some useful suggestions at that time.

Mr. Pugh: May I ask a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising to ask a question?

Mr. Pugh: Yes, if I may. The minister said he was asking that representations be made well in advance of the next budget; but has he asked the municipalities—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I submit that the Minister of Finance, the present questioner and the hon. member for Ontario were completely out of order in raising the whole question of the budget. We are now discussing the Income Tax Act and the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pugh: If I could speak to the point of order, it seems to me that this amendment is on consultation. The suggestion has been put forward that before the next budget consultation will be requested well in advance. I am suggesting that we were talking mainly about the municipalities and the notice they receive as designated areas. I am asking, is the minister looking so far ahead that he will be asking the municipalities if they would care to be consulted in the future?

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to answer the question if I am permitted to do so. I certainly hope that the federation of mayors and municipalities will submit their usual briefs to the government well in advance of the next budget, and that that brief will include their usually constructive suggestions on a wide variety of subjects.

Mr. Pugh: Didn't their last brief contain suggestions?

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to hold the house up very long on this. I am interested, however, to hear the great regard which the members of the official opposition apparently have for the rights of the provinces when at the same time they introduce an amendment which clearly and completely cuts out the provinces from any consultation, because the provinces are to have no authority whatever of their own; they can act only on the authority of the municipalities.

In that regard I would say also, Mr. Speaker, that it may be true in the old home of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker)—I believe it is—that the entire province is divided into municipalities. It is not true in many other provinces. It is not true in my province, and I for one would not dare support this proposed amendment, when it would clearly cut out the rights of people living outside municipalities in the province to be designated as being in areas requiring special control. It may just be another case of the careless draftsmanship for which the official opposition seem to be so skilled.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIntosh: Is that in order?

28902-5—300

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): But I would suggest that this is not merely a question of draftsmanship. This is a question of the actual wording of the amendment, and the amendment is that the provinces are not to be consulted.

An hon. Member: They are not now.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member says they are not now, so he is apparently satisfied with the situation, because he supports an amendment that is going to continue to exclude them, and not only exclude them by practice but exclude them by legislation. From now on the federal government would not be permitted, if this amendment were to pass, to consult with the provinces unless the municipalities had taken the initiative in approaching their provincial governments.

I cannot believe that this amendment was presented as a serious contribution toward improving the Income Tax Act, when we see the terms in which it has been drafted. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have every sympathy with the Leader of the Opposition, being myself at the same melancholy stage of existence, and I can well believe that now and again he hears the words of Andrew Marvell saying:

> But at my back I always hear
> Time's wingèd chariot hurrying near;

But I would suggest there is something odd in this determination to thumb a ride on time's wingèd chariot to oblivion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Chaplin).

Mr. Rynard: I just wanted to ask a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Waterloo South who, I understand, seconded the amendment.

Mr. Gordon Chaplin (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity of thanking the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) when I came into this house today for his extremely generous words in connection with myself. I was very much taken aback by the reception given to his words by the house, and I do not quite know how to answer or how to thank hon. members and particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) for his very gracious reply. This has been a very heart-warming experience for me and has gone a long way, I might say, to making up for some rather dreary months that I had to spend during the summer. I would say to the Minister of Finance, however, that it has presented some problems to me, because when I heard him speak and heard the reception given by, not only my own friends and associates but those on the benches opposite,

I had to hurriedly go through my notes and discard many of them, as I felt he had completely disarmed me.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that speaking at this very late date on Bill No. C-95 there is the danger of indulging in some repetition, but I hope to be able to bring forward some new viewpoint, or at least be able to underscore some of what I feel are the objectionable features of this bill, for the further consideration of the government. Hon. members opposite, when they were sitting in opposition, were most vigorous and vociferous in attacking the government of that day and blaming it for the unemployment that existed in this country. One got the impression at that time that every community in this country was wallowing in the depths of depression, that unemployment lurked everywhere; but today it is very gratifying to note that this designated areas legislation of the government, which is supposed to be a very important step in the curing of unemployment in this country, is found to be necessary and applicable in such relatively few places across the country.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this point to make it very clear that I am not opposed to the principle of this legislation in regard to designated areas, as long as it is applied to communities that are truly in need. Those places that have been mentioned in the list of such areas—those in the maritimes, for example—I feel qualify for this type of assistance. Due to geography the maritimes are in a relatively poor manufacturing position in this country, particularly in relation to the markets of central Canada. Transportation enters into this question; inaccessibility and availability of supplies is probably another factor. So in my opinion at least it is quite right and proper to offer every assistance possible to encourage industry to become established in that general area.

I am not completely familiar with the conditions in Quebec, but I have no reason to doubt that all the places that have been mentioned there have valid claims. I will come back in a moment to Ontario, but at this time I want to say that one of the most striking features about this list of designated areas is the almost complete ignoring of western Canada. I realize that under the strange, backward looking formula, if I may say so, that the government is using to qualify areas as designated areas, perhaps few places in western Canada could qualify. I know there has been prosperity on the prairies for the last several years, and it is quite likely that this will continue for some time to come. I am sorry that he is not in his seat at the moment, but I would at this point like to offer my congratulations to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) on the success he has enjoyed in selling western wheat to communist countries.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Mr. Chaplin: This has been an extension and an expansion of the successful policy of the previous government, when it started to sell wheat to China. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, while I am mentioning that matter, I might say that hon. members opposite, when they were sitting in opposition, viewed the Conservative government's wheat policy with very little enthusiasm. The then leader of the opposition, now Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), was somewhat less than enthusiastic, and if my recollection is correct, the leader of the Social Credit party was actually hostile. Now all the boys have climbed on the band wagon and everybody thinks it is a wonderful thing. I understand that the Minister of Trade and Commerce now feels that the sale of wheat to communist countries is likely to become a permanent pattern in the future. If that is so, he is more sanguine than I am, because I still look upon this as a windfall which will be, or can be withdrawn just as soon as it suits the Russians and Chinese to do so, although I firmly believe we should take full advantage of this favourable situation while it exists. We must at the same time recognize that the more we come to depend on it, the more vulnerable we are. Therefore I feel it would be only common sense to diversify the western Canadian economy as much as possible. I believe the farmers have done this to a large extent in certain areas, and I would think one way to do this would be to encourage, in every possible way, the establishment of industry in western Canada.

I simply cannot understand the ignoring of western interests because if such a policy were successful, and if it holds the high hopes that the Minister of Industry and the Minister of Finance have indicated, it would strengthen immeasurably the western economy, and the economy of the whole of Canada. I think that this situation highlights above all others the basic weakness of this legislation, in which it fails to provide for consultation with the provinces, because the question of these designated areas is of the utmost importance.

After all this talk we have heard about cooperative federalism, it would seem to me the first thing the government would do, or would want to do, is bring the provinces into the picture. Had they done this they would not be in the mess they are now in, relative to the city of Brantford.

Again I come back to Ontario. I am not going to quarrel with the designated areas that have been built up and are dependent on single industries, or with a city like Elliot Lake whose troubles are very real and entirely beyond the control of the citizens in that community. But I do object very strongly to the misuse of public money for the subsidization of the establishment of industry in an area that is on the perimeter of one of the richest, most properous and most progressive areas in Canada. As I said earlier, there was no provision for consultation, co-operation or co-ordination with the provincial governments. There has, in fact, been no effort to get in touch with them in setting up designated areas, and not only was there no consultation with the provinces but neither was there any consultation with the officials of the municipalities concerned.

The mayor of Brantford learned in the press about the city becoming a designated area. The rest of that community woke up one morning and found they had become the adopted and retarded child of the federal government.

An hon. Member: A Liberal government.

Mr. Chaplin: Well, it happens to be the same thing.

Some few days ago the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) made a factual and well constructed speech, and went to considerable pains to point out that the legislation such as we have been considering in regard to designated areas had been successfully used in European countries, and more particularly in Great Britain. In fact I think she pointed out at that time that they had gone very much farther than we had attempted to go in this country.

I would certainly corroborate her statement in this regard because I had some experience, some years ago in England, in the interests of the company with which I am associated, of trying to develop export business. At that time the British government offered very interesting incentives to have us start an operation in Britain, but the point was that this operation had to be established in the depressed areas. From memory I recall they offered to build a plant to our specifications, and lease it to us if we would establish in a certain area in Wales, and I recall, as the hon. lady mentioned, that there were extremely attractive incentives for the establishment of industry in Northern Ireland and in various other places in Great Britain.

But the point is that there was no premium for industry to establish in London. There was no premium for industry to establish on the rich and wealthy south coast, nor I believe in the industrial midlands. That is exactly the point I want to try and make and stress here today. There should not be any subsidy for industry to establish in any community that borders on the perimeter of one of the richest, most industrialized and progressive areas in the whole of Canada.

As I tried to indicate earlier, I have the highest personal regard for the Minister of Finance, and I am sure he will not take any undue offence, but can you imagine his consternation if he woke up one morning and found that an adjoining constituency to his riding in Davenport had been declared a depressed area? One may say that obviously in a metropolitan area such as Toronto a riding could not possibly be made a designated area without including the whole metropolitan area. That is the point I am trying to make here.

The distance between Galt and Brantford is some 15 miles. This is considerably less than is encompassed in metropolitan Toronto, and I suggest most strongly that the government cannot proffer special treatment to one community without damaging the adjacent communities. This is particularly true when the proposed designated area has no physical handicaps, as compared to its immediate neighbours. Its location is comparable. It has comparable transportation facilities. Its power rates are comparable and, although I have not gone into this, I do not see any reason that its assessment or taxing structure would be out of line with the surrounding communities. The climate is the same. There is no difference in terrain. The designated area is centrally located, and there simply is not any reason that can be explained to me why Brantford cannot stand on its own feet.

Now, if I have seemed unduly critical of Brantford, that was not my intention. I do not blame the officials of Brantford for taking advantage of this unexpected windfall. They have done what anybody else would have done under the circumstances, and I do not blame them at all for it. They simply cannot afford to look a gift horse of this kind in the mouth. This is the kind of gift horse they would gladly see stay on the government payroll in perpetuity, and I believe the minister has certain experience along that line.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to relate to the house the story of a certain community in Waterloo South, and I speak of the town of Hespeler. I might explain that back in 1958 it was a one-industry town dominated by and dependant by and large on the huge Dominion Woollens plant that had operated there for years. This plant had thousands of employees during the world war, and up until 1958 it employed some 600 or 700 persons. Then, in April of that year, the plant closed down putting those 600 or 700 persons completely out of work and with apparently no possibility of getting work in that community.

This in a community of 4,000 people, so you can see, Mr. Speaker, the crisis which faces them. This action left 11 acres of factory space empty. I am not going to dwell at length on this, but these people did not come crying to the government asking for government subsidies. They got off their fat seats and went out and brought industry into the community, and today the floor space in that plant is filled. New industries have come in during the last few months and established themselves, and the community is now in a stronger position than it has ever been in the past. I use that simply as an illustration of the initiative shown by this one small community.

I do not want to appear unduly critical of Brantford, as I say, or make odious comparisons, but I think that what this small community has accomplished is obvious. I feel the Minister of Industry, and perhaps the Minister of Finance who has been defending this bill, in making this decision to designate Brantford as a retarded area have been the victims of their own statistics. Statistics have their place and their value, but at best serve merely as a guide line. Certainly they have to be understood. Looking back into the past it seems only a short time ago when the Liberal party during the last election had a full head of steam and were in full flight. The whole country reverberated with their slogan: "Take a stand for tomorrow".

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chaplin: Someone says hear, hear. To me that slogan indicated an interest in the future; that some forward-looking stand would be taken. The Minister of Industry is now looking eight years backwards. He is not looking to the future. He has made his judgment on stale and rancid statistics which are today meaningless.

What does the future hold for Galt, Kitchener, Preston, Guelph and that whole area that it does not hold for Brantford? There is a $13 million Massey-Harris plant being built there, and it will be interesting to note whether this plant will qualify for these subsidies. From what I have said I do not mean to suggest that Brantford has been without any problems. One of the serious problems which has confronted that community has been the fact that the production of some of the major industries has been rather seasonal in nature, which has resulted in higher than normal lay-offs during the summer. This is where the statistics have been deceptive. I suggest that the subsidization of new industry to establish itself in a community will not correct this situation. I am afraid I never did know what was to be the ultimate function of the new Department of Industry, but I respectfully suggest that the minister or a representative from his department might have consulted with these particular industries to explore the possibility of their levelling out their peaks and their valleys of production. That might indeed have proven fruitful, and this should have been done before the minister committed himself so hastily to a policy of subsidizing industry in an area which really does not need it and for which there is no justification. Government speakers from time to time have admitted that this particular part of the legislation is discriminatory, and they have tried to justify this discrimination. Coming from an adjoining area I feel that this is vicious discrimination which has already proved damaging to adjacent communities.

I do not want to take too much time in quoting from the press, but I have before me a copy of the Brantford Expositor of Wednesday, November 6. There is an article headed: "City sends stream of mail to new industry prospects" and it goes on to say:

> Brantford may be a "designated area" industrially—indicative of slow economic growth—but it is fast taking advantage of the label.
> A stream of mail—outlining the tax benefits of locating new industries in Brantford—has been shot out of acting industrial commissioner Harry Richards' office to all and any industry of which he can think.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that speaks for itself.

And now what of the future? In fact, what of the present? If hon. members look at the copies of the Canada Labour Gazette they will find statistics given relative to the labour supply. They will find that in the month of September certain things happened. In the September issue there is a table showing the classification of labour market areas, and it is broken down into areas of substantial labour surplus and moderate labour surplus, showing the approximate balance and labour shortage. In September Brantford was in the approximate balance group, as was Kitchener and Guelph. Looking back to August the situation was the same. Going back further Brantford is shown in some situations as an area of moderate surplus labour. At the same time Galt, Kitchener and other areas in that vicinity are also shown as moderate surplus areas. I have been trying to point out that Brantford suffers from no natural hazards or handicaps common to other sections of the area. These other communities have no natural advantages, certainly no substantial advantages, over Brantford, and as I said earlier

I feel strongly that this is a matter of the application of public funds.

I also said earlier that I agree with the general principle of this legislation and what it was supposed to accomplish, but I think that this legislation would have been infinitely stronger and the government would have been greatly strengthened had they provided in the legislation consultation and co-operation with the provinces. I suggest that had they done so, and had they consulted with the Ontario government, they would not find themselves in this particular difficulty with regard to Ontario today.

I should now like to refer to another clause in the bill. I believe it is 71.A.(3). At any rate, it has to do with the capital cost of machinery. I will not read this particular paragraph, but having read Hansard in connection with it I feel there has been considerable confusion as to its meaning. I gather from the statement made by the minister that the direct effect will be to ensure that industries establishing themselves in designated areas must supply themselves with new machinery at least to the extent of 95 per cent. I have read the comments of the Minister of Finance on this and I can understand the point he is making when he says he does not want people bringing in second hand machinery to compete with established firms. I think there is a certain validity about this point. I also noticed the comments of the Minister of Industry in this regard to the effect that it is to precisely to avoid the likelihood of businesses which, rather than expanding and creating a new operation, merely shift their centre of operations from one area to another, that a provision of this kind is needed.

I think the possibility of such a thing happening is much more apparent than real. It might be possible in certain light industries, for example the needle trades, for all concerned to pack up over the week end and move to another location. But—apparently, the minister does not appreciate the problems which would be involved in moving a heavy or a medium sized industry. It would take months. There would be great difficulty about maintaining production, providing for continuity of supplies to customers and so on. Formidable problems would be presented and from my own experience I can say that no company would go to such trouble and expense unless the move were part of a long-range plan not likely to be predicated upon tax incentives of a few years duration, such as this one.

Nevertheless, I feel that the clause providing for 95 per cent new equipment as contained in this legislation is unrealistic. In my opinion some lesser figure would meet the requirement of the Minister of Finance. I see that an amendment was moved to reduce the figure to 25 per cent, but this was not acceptable to the government. I should like to suggest that 50 per cent would not be unreasonable and that if, in conjunction with it, there were a provision specifying that this 50 per cent be Canadian made, I think we would have something which would be both workable and beneficial. Thus, when a new company sought to establish itself in a designated area under this legislation the effect would be to stimulate other industry in this country. I believe this would not be far out of line with the objectives expressed by the Minister of Finance himself, namely to have more manufacturing done in Canada.

My own experience provides some basis for this suggestion, that 50 per cent of the machinery should be Canadian made. The company with which I am associated has, in the last two or three years, undertaken a large capital expenditure program involving certain heavy equipment which could not be obtained in Canada. But in every case where this equipment was built for us we insisted on having the manufacturer in the United States assign as much work as was possible to be done in Canada, out of Canadian materials and parts. It is surprising what can be accomplished in this direction if a determined effort is made. Thus I have found that even when machinery and equipment cannot be purchased complete in Canada, a 50 per cent Canadian content is not at all unreasonable. Moreover, there are many companies working in Canada today under licence agreements enabling them to bring in certain essentials and use certain designs, though the majority of the work is done and completed in Canada.

For these reasons I say that the percentage of Canadian content I have suggested would not be unreasonable. On the contrary it would be very practicable and I respectfully suggest that the minister give this proposal serious consideration and incorporate it into the legislation now before us.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I rise to make some suggestions respecting the amendment before us and to answer some of the exhortations made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) who moved this amendment.

First, if we were to take the wording of the amendment and consider what effect it would have were it passed, I think the whole house would be in a quandary. At least a great many of the words it contained would have to be amended so as to fit it into the bill which it purports to change. With respect, Mr. Speaker, even though the amendment has been ruled in order I suggest there is nothing the house could do with it unless subsequent changes were made in it, supposing it were allowed to pass.

What concerned me were the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition when he asked us in the Social Credit party to remain consistent. Oh, the worthy exhortations of those who are without sin. I can recall when, back in 1958, the right hon. gentleman who was exhorting us this afternoon said: I will not rest as long as one man in Canada suffers as a result of unemployment. That statement was followed by an acceleration of the unemployment rate in Canada to the highest level in peacetime history. How inconsistent can you be? I hope the right hon. gentleman had a good rest on April 9, 1963.

I remember, too, the speeches he made to the people of Canada over the television and radio, and so on, before June 18, 1962. He told the people we were at the highest economic level in our history and that there were no problems facing Canada at all. He said that until June 18. And on June 24 he and his friends went on television again telling us that we were in a crisis. What is even worse, I heard the right hon. gentleman in a nation-wide broadcast trying to tell the people of Canada even after that date that the whole international crisis concerning the balance of payments developed between June 18 and June 24.

As I said before: Oh, the exhortations of those who are without sin. At the time the television broadcast was made, subsequent to the imposition of those surcharges on June 24, 1962, people across Canada laughed at a man who had built such an image, only to destroy himself in such a short time.

Mr. Pugh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Olson: Point of order all you like. Why did you not call order when the hon. gentleman was asking us to remain consistent?

Mr. Winkler: Why don't you walk across the floor and get it over with?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Is the hon. gentleman raising a point of order?

Mr. Pugh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, despite all that was said by the last speaker I would point out that we are on an amendment having to do with consultation, and the only thing I wish to suggest is that the hon. member should be brought to order and told to stick to the point.

Mr. Greene: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the last speaker spoke about everything from wheat, to industries, to his trips abroad. Hon. gentlemen let him go on, but when the party of that hon. gentleman is quite properly catching it, and when the Leader of the Opposition is catching it, then it is a point of order.

Mr. Monteith: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, we had a second budget debate today by the Minister of Finance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I would think there has been a good deal of leniency in this debate.

Mr. Knowles: All afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Maybe I could suggest to the hon. member for Medicine Hat that we should get back to the amendment before the house.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Manning's slave.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say it is pathetic to see a Canadian statesman destroy the image that gave him the greatest mandate in Canadian history. I will just let it go at that. I want him to know what we think of his exhortations that we remain consistent.

There have been a number of retreats from the original proposals in the budget, but taking into consideration the composition of the house at this time I think that may be a desirable thing. We in this party have stated a number of times that when a party has the responsibility of governing the country and is in a minority position in parliament there is an even heavier burden on members of the opposition to help the government to govern.

An hon. Member: Move over.

Mr. Olson: These gentlemen over here do not agree with that. They cannot understand any kind of government except the one-man dictatorial type we had in the past four years with a whole horde of subservient and unquestioning supporters. That is the only kind of government they can understand. So, Mr. Speaker, I just want to tell the house and particularly the right hon. gentleman that we are going to remain consistent by assuming our share of the responsibility for the governing of Canada.

Mr. Southam: Why don't you walk across the house and be done with it?

Mr. Greene: Not just obstruction.

Mr. Olson: This party has made a number of suggestions with respect to some of the proposals in the budget. Not all of them have been accepted, but some very important ones have. I suggest this is a desirable new departure in government in that it has listened to the opposition on occasion.

Mr. Winkler: Is this the last Liberal speaker?

Mr. Olson: With regard to the amendment, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) has suggested that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) was not really serious. In my view the evidence that the right hon. gentleman placed before the house this afternoon bears this out completely, because as soon as he moved the amendment he left the house. He did not even stay to listen to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) had to say about the amendment.

Mr. Pigeon: Where is the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson)?

Mr. Olson: We have said on a number of occasions that there should be consultation locally with regard to designated areas. Clearly the amendment is out of order. It is poorly put together. They have not even got the right numbers in the right places.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker ruled on it.

Mr. Olson: Therefore, considering all these things there is no question that we cannot support it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. Since the beginning of the discussion on the amendment proposed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), reference is made to consultation between the federal government and the provinces. And the question of provincial autonomy is always to the fore.

When reference is made to provincial autonomy, I think in most cases, it concerns the autonomy of the province of Quebec.

In reading the amendment over and over again, and taking into account our past experience and the statements made yesterday, I cannot help but think that the political parties have only one objective at this time and it is to try and make the people of Quebec believe that they have realized the problem facing that province and that they are prepared to settle it, although they have really understood nothing of the present problem of federal-provincial relations.

Indeed, the crux of the problem is on taxation reform. And it is precisely that matter which the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Leader of the Opposition would not discuss last night.

The problem really concerns taxation reform between the federal government and the provinces, rather than an amendment like the one moved by the Leader of the Opposition, under which the federal government would first designate some regions which in turn, through their provincial government would ask the federal government to accept them.

I think that it is a way to evade the question, a way to throw a smokescreen over the true problem. Well, we will not be a party to this evasive action by the old line political parties.

Mr. Speaker, we do not wish to take any part in endeavours to divert attention from the real problem and this is why we will not fall into the snare set for us when we are told that it is in order to protect the rights and privileges demanded by the provinces.

We feel that this amendment is no solution to the real problem. We would like the problem to be really considered from the point of view which we have suggested, that is to give each province the means to look after its own affairs and not always treat the matter lightly by submitting amendments as it is now done.

The amendment, I must add, is very complicated. No matter how much we would consider and reconsider it from all angles, in our opinion, it remains just as complicated.

I wonder who could find a meaning to it. It it had been explained to us, perhaps we could express our views, but I must say that we will vote against it at this time.

Provincial autonomy would no more be respected if the municipal authorities were asked to voice their feelings to the federal government. Municipalities being creatures of the provincial governments have no business, in our opinion, to deal with the central government; that is up to the provinces.

[Text]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I will forgo what I wanted to say on the amendment, and the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Weichel) will do the same, in order that the amendment can be voted on and so that hon. members opposite can endorse what they voted for last night by voting for the amendment that is before us now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Diefenbaker) which was negatived on the following division:

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten).]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. If I had voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Brantford. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Rinfret: May I, with unanimous consent of the house, revert—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, is the house ready for the question on the main motion? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Monteith: I wonder would the house leader give us an outline of the business for tomorrow and Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Tomorrow we will take the vocational training resolution, and if it is completed and first reading given to the bill, we will then take the resolution to set up the committee on the C.N.R. If that should be completed I think we would be prepared to go on with the motion preceding the centennial bill, or any other relatively non-contentious items on the order paper. Tomorrow evening it has been agreed that we should take the estimates of the hon. lady, the minister of citizenship—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it is a bad day for me—the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If they should be completed before 10.30 the Minister of Fisheries would be glad to supplement them with those items of his that have not been completed.

I will have some discussion with hon. gentlemen opposite about legislation for Friday up until five o'clock. There had been some discussion about having my hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, proceed, but I understand there is some difficulty about that. In that case we would probably take the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys on Friday evening, and if they were completed we would go on again with the estimates of northern affairs.

Mr. Monteith: Might I ask if the resolution stage of the vocational training bill were completed tomorrow, would we take the second reading of that on Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. I understand my hon. friend, the Minister of Labour, might not be able to be here, but if the house would excuse him and allow his parliamentary secretary to proceed with the bill, I think the government would be very glad to get on with that bill on Friday.

Mr. Pigeon: What about the post office estimates?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman will get his turn.

It being twenty minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 14, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MRS. KONANTZ—STATEMENT ON REPORT RESPECTING T.C.A. WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Mrs. Margaret Konantz (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to be permitted to say a few words on a question of privilege raised in my absence from the house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Yesterday afternoon I returned from the United Nations in order to come before the house to answer some of the questions which were asked here last Tuesday afternoon. On Tuesday night I sent the Minister of Transport a wire from our Canadian mission in New York, which reads as follows:

Winnipeg Tribune reporter called me at 2.30 p.m. local time today asking me what I had meant in the story of our annual meeting in Winnipeg South at Lois Parkhill November 5, when I said "Mr. McIlraith showed me the Dixon-Speas report."

I explained that I had made a courtesy call on you while in Ottawa when attending the federal Liberal women's conference. At that time you stated the Dixon-Speas report could not be released and pointed to four volumes on the table behind your desk. The reporter asked me if I had been talking to Ottawa today, to which I said no. He told me of Mr. Orlikow's statement in the house.

Now, there are two points I would like to make. Because of my deep concern over the problem of T.C.A., this summer I went through the overhaul base and visited with the men. On another occasion I met with management. I was shown reports, records and documents, so that when I saw the Dixon-Speas report on the minister's table I well understood this report would probably contain confidential information. At the annual meeting of the Winnipeg South constituency, when reporting on the T.C.A. question I did say, without giving any details, that the Minister of Transport had shown me the Dixon-Speas report. It was unthinking of me to allow any impression that I had seen the report itself.

On reviewing the newspaper stories of our meeting I realized how I must have embarrassed both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport. For this reason, on Tuesday night I telephoned the chairman of my advisory committee in Winnipeg to ask him if at any time I had given any suggestion that I had read the Dixon-Speas report. As a result the following wire was sent to the Minister of Transport from the Winnipeg South Liberal association and a copy was sent to me in New York yesterday morning:

Mrs. Konantz did not say at her annual meeting or elsewhere that she had seen and therefore read the Dixon-Speas report but did say that the five volume report was pointed out to her by the minister. From her conversation with him she could well understand why the information contained in it could not be made public because it would then be available to the competitors of T.C.A.

Yesterday morning the Minister of Transport wired me to come to Ottawa. I have now had a chance to read the questions which were raised in the house on Tuesday. I believe I have given frank answers to them all. I have read the statement made by the Minister of Transport to the House of Commons. Needless to say, it is entirely correct.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXPANSION OF ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I should like to make an announcement on a subject which I am sure will be of considerable interest to the house and to the Canadian people. I refer to Canada's program of economic assistance for the developing nations of the world. The record demonstrates, I think, that since 1950, when Canada was one of the founding members of the Colombo plan, Canadian governments have regularly reviewed the adequacy of their aid programs and have made provision for increases whenever national circumstances permitted. Last year only was a reduction made in the level of our assistance as part of a general program to reduce expenditures in every area of government activities.

When the present government took office it became increasingly apparent that because of the changing framework of international assistance a fresh look was required at our international aid effort. The requirements of the developing countries are urgent and growing, and economic assistance for them has become an established policy of all of the advanced nations of the free world which have recognized the need to co-operate in assisting to the best of their ability those countries in the process of economic development.

Accordingly, our Canadian aid effort cannot be viewed in isolation but rather as part of a broad collective effort. We would be failing in our responsibilities both to the developing countries and to other advanced countries with which we are associated, if we did not ensure that Canada played its proper role in this common aid effort.

As an integral part of our foreign policy our Canadian aid programs have, I am convinced, the broad support of the Canadian people. By sharing our resources, skills and experiences we not only benefit others but also help to expand and enrich our own experiences. Our aid programs provide a stimulus to the domestic economy and contribute to a betterment of employment conditions, since the main part of our aid funds is spent in Canada to purchase Canadian goods and services required in the developing countries.

Taking all these factors into account, the Canadian government has now formulated general plans for an expansion of Canada's aid programs beginning in the fiscal year 1964-65.

The main proposed area of expansion would be in special Canadian lending for development purposes. If Canada is to be in a position to provide assistance on terms commensurate with the needs of recipient countries, consistent with the agreed objectives of international bodies of which we are a member, and in line with what other major donors are providing, there should be available for implementing Canada's bilateral assistance programs facilities for lending of the type now carried out by the international development association, involving such features as long maturity periods, liberal grace periods, and little or no interest. It is proposed, therefore, that a lending program of this type should be commenced in the fiscal year 1964-65 with an initial ceiling for commitments of $50 million.

It is the government's intention to ask parliament to make separate provision beginning in 1964-65 for a food aid program, as already announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and for Canada's contribution to the Indus basin development fund, which was set up in an effort to resolve the difficult dispute between India and Pakistan over the use of the waters of the Indus basin. These are now included in Canada's bilateral grant aid programs, which will be continued in 1964-65 at their present level of about $50 million, but which will in the future be limited to the provision of project assistance, the supply of industrial commodities and the carrying out of technical assistance for the developing countries. The result will be a significant increase in our grant aid.

These improvements in our aid programs would, of course, be additional to Canada's other existing programs of assistance, including our long term financing arrangements under the Export Credits Insurance Act and our contributions to the multilateral programs of the United Nations. Recent references have been made in the house to the increased Canadian contribution to the United Nations special fund and the international development association.

In the current fiscal year it is expected that the over-all level of Canada's expenditures for assistance to less developed countries will be in the neighbourhood of $120 million. It is the government's intention to seek authority to make available an additional $70 million in 1964-65. It is, of course, not possible at this stage to forecast an actual expenditure level for 1964-65, but it is expected that with the new resources available, the level might be in the range of $180 million to $190 million.

The over-all program which I have described will be a flexible one designed to place Canada in a position to make an effective response to changing national and international circumstances. In particular, it will provide:

(1) aid to Colombo plan countries of Asia at a higher level than was provided prior to the reduction in 1962;

(2) a more comprehensive and sizeable Canadian program for the commonwealth countries of the Caribbean. In this connection, it will be remembered that when the Prime Minister of Canada saw the President of the United States he indicated that it was Canada's intention to increase its assistance to the commonwealth countries of the Caribbean with which Canada, of course, has a long and historic association;

(3) a larger and more effective program for Africa, including the French speaking states;

(4) a further contribution to Latin American development, in close co-operation with the inter-American development bank, through the availability of new and additional lending resources.

I make this announcement at this time in view of the O.E.C.D. ministerial meeting in Paris next Tuesday and Wednesday, at which the subject of aid to developing countries will be discussed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to follow the minister in the detail in which he indulged without having before one the actual figures and the computations that he has before him as he speaks. However, in so far as a program is concerned which will raise standards in other parts of the world and will assure technical assistance, in what the minister has stated he represents the viewpoint of the Canadian people.

As a matter of fact, when we came into office we made alterations in the amount of assistance given under the Colombo plan by increasing the amount from $35 million to approximately $50 million. Furthermore, during our period of office we brought into effect assistance for those developing French speaking countries in Africa, a work which was particularly appreciated by those people in view of the dual nature of our country. Mention is made in the announcement of expanding assistance to the Caribbean countries. This is a continuation of a course which we launched in 1959. It is a worthy one, for those nations have much in common with us, and contiguous to us as they are within the commonwealth they have a particular claim upon our consideration.

In so far as the loan plan is concerned, that is something that will have to be examined with care. I believe that Canada, as a member of the commonwealth, should do her part toward encouraging within the commonwealth the establishment of a commonwealth loan plan for the assistance of countries within the commonwealth, because represented within the commonwealth are almost all the races and colours of men. What the minister has said, in effect, is that Canada, as a leading nation desiring peace and the raising of standards throughout the world, accepts her responsibility as nations must today as being their brother's keeper.

In so far as the general purport of what he has said is concerned, there will be widespread approval. The particulars, however, will require examination to the end that in any contribution we make internationally in this regard, first consideration should be given to the commonwealth countries.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is quite correct when he says that the bulk of the Canadian people will support a generous program of aid to the underdeveloped and emerging nations of the world. I believe they will welcome the announcement which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made regarding proposed increases in Canada's assistance in the coming fiscal year.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has such a marvellous capacity for wrapping up any gifts in tinsel, fancy ribbon and gift packaging that one might tend to be a little deceived as to just how much is in the package. Even after the increases which are proposed for the coming fiscal year, Canada's aid to underdeveloped countries will amount to less than one half of one per cent of our gross national product, and part of this amount of some $185 million to $190 million will be in the form of loans at low interest rates, so that it will not be entirely a gift.

I was surprised that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made mention of the assistance given to the Caribbean countries which have passed through very difficult times in recent months as a result of tornadoes. Our contribution to the entire Caribbean area was $20,000 in cash and skim milk powder worth about $80,000. This is a total contribution in cash and kind of about $100,000 to cover several countries which suffered very serious damage.

The government and the people of Canada have to take seriously this question of economic aid to underdeveloped areas. The latest figures available show that the share of the world's goods which goes to these nations is less now than it was before the war. It is greater in total, but in terms of the share of the world's total production it is less, because western production has grown so rapidly that the underdeveloped areas are today getting a smaller share of the world's total production than they used to get.

If the world is to have any hope of living at peace, then we must be prepared to spend more money assisting these underdeveloped areas. In the long run this will do more to maintain peace in the world than will the billions of dollars which the western world is spending on armaments. Many of these countries not only require immediate assistance but their most crying need is for capital and capital equipment, so they can increase their productivity and raise the living standards of their people.

We in this party welcome the announcement which has been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but we think that even with this small increase we are doing far less than we ought to be doing.

We should not be satisfied with anything less than 1 per cent of our gross national product, and we in this party have for years advocated that our goal should be 2 per cent of Canada's gross national product as an investment in peace and in bringing economic prosperity to the underdeveloped areas of the world. We contend that the best hope for future generations to live in peace lies in this kind of aid, and that we ought to be diverting more of our money in this direction.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made this announcement today. Certainly any increase in the aid we can give to those in a less favoured position than our own is to be commended, but I am concerned that even though this word is encouraging it is still only a very small part of what we could and should be doing.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has mentioned that this will be adding something more than 50 per cent to the budget for this particular type of aid in the coming fiscal year. Even at that, and considering the statistics he gave to us yesterday, it will bring us only to approximately one half of what is being given per capita by the United Kingdom and West Germany, and only to a quarter of what is being given by the citizens of the United States and France. This is not good enough. I think we should realize that it is not only our moral obligation but it is also our privilege to be in a position where we can be doing more, and it is not to our credit that more is not being done.

I note with interest the areas to which this assistance will be given, and I agree with previous speakers that it is our first obligation to the commonwealth countries to prove that the spirit of understanding and good will that we have in the commonwealth should express itself in the type of assistance afforded in the Colombo plan that we have known so well down through the years. It is of particular interest that this assistance will be aimed to further helping the Caribbean area. I think this is a timely opportunity for us, because this is an area right on our own doorstep which is part of a volatile situation that could blow up at any time as far as Latin America and the neighbouring area of central America are concerned. It is an area where we could be making a total contribution that would really do some good. I trust the government will see fit to still further increase the aid that they suggest be given to the Caribbean area.

It is good, also, that we have Africa in mind. The Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke of Latin America, and certainly there is no more needy part of the world than this. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs might be considering tying in this materialistic assistance with the moral aid for which the people of Latin America have been looking for a long time, in our becoming a member of the organization of American states. I think this is a very important question, and we cannot very much longer avoid taking a decision on it.

I suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that one of the greatest developed resources we have as Canadians is that reserve of good will which Canadian people have created for themselves and for their country. We should be making sure this resource is exploited to the maximum in considering this program of aid.

I also suggest that in planning the distribution of this aid we should make sure that it goes to areas where the assistance can make a distinct contribution in the field in which it is needed. It is not just in giving away that we can help these countries. Therefore I think it is a good thing that financial assistance is being made possible at no interest cost. We have this ability to help other people help themselves. I think this is a phase of aid which is not considered often enough. It is not just a hand-out that is wanted; it is assistance that will help people help themselves.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we support wholeheartedly what has been said here today, but we do hope it is only a small part of what is to come in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people will, I am sure, welcome the announcement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) to the effect that Canada's assistance to underdeveloped countries will be $190 million, that is an increase of $140 million over the contribution of the past few years. Canadians are anxious to help the have-not countries in the world through their government.

Canada's economic aid to underdeveloped countries will take the form of financial and technical assistance. As stated by those who spoke before me, financial aid is important but technical assistance is even more important since it enables the recipient countries to initiate projects, for if those countries need our financial help, they need above all the means to become self-supporting eventually. That is how we can contribute to the protection of those countries against subversive ideas.

We have been contributing to the Colombo plan for years. I am quite in favour of helping certain members of the commonwealth, that is certain, hard-pressed Caribbean countries. When I was in Jamaica, over a year ago, I saw people who wanted not so much our credit to purchase products as our technical assistance to improve their condition. Those countries have their own natural resources and they can develop themselves if we show them how and if we help them.

Now, it is a fine thing to help those countries, but I should like to remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that we still have in Canada areas which are underdeveloped and where people experience hard times in the midst of abundance. We approve and we commend this assistance to the underdeveloped countries but the government should also have some thought for the Canadians who contribute to the development of this country of ours.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which is related to his announcement about external aid. Is the cost of bringing students to Canada from overseas for courses to enable them to contribute to the development of their own countries included in the cost totals that he gave today, or is this an additional amount?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That kind of program could be included. It is a matter for decision in each case. The program to be covered by the expenditures is a matter to be decided when dealing with the application and with each project.

SOUTH VIET NAM—RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs say what the decision has been regarding recognition of the provisional revolutionary government of South Viet Nam. What are the considerations that impelled the government to its decision, and would the minister deal in general with the ominous situation in that country consequent upon the change of administration?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. When he asked me the other day about this matter I was not in a position to deal with it, for a number of reasons. One was that there had been no request for recognition from the provisional government of the republic of Viet Nam.

Since then such a request has been received and this question has been examined. The government has decided to accord recognition to the government of the republic of Viet Nam. The considerations which the Canadian government examined were: The fact that the government is in actual control of the major part of the territory of the state; it has undertaken to observe international obligations entered into by its predecessors, and it has secured the acquiescence of the population. It has also promised to protect foreign lives and property and to guarantee fundamental freedoms "within the framework of the anti-communist struggle and the security of the state". Moreover, the Vietnamese government has undertaken to maintain co-operation with the international supervisory commission on which Canada serves.

IMMIGRATION

MRS. MIRIAM STEVENSON—INQUIRY AS TO DEPORTATION ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Press reports today tell of a Mrs. Miriam Stevenson, aged 53, of Vancouver, who has been ordered deported from Canada on the ground that back in the depression of the 1930's she belonged to the communist party in Los Angeles for a period of one year. I should like to ask the minister whether it is the policy of his department to deport an individual for having belonged to the communist party 30 years ago. Is this considered a crime in the eyes of the present government?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest of the hon. gentleman in this matter may I say that yesterday, because of certain representations made to me by two sources to the effect that they wanted to make further representations and supply additional information, I ordered that the deportation be deferred for two months so as to give me the chance to look further into the matter.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

PURCHASE OF NEW PLANES—REQUEST FROM MONTREAL COMMITTEE PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he replied to the request of the chairman of the executive committee of the city of Montreal, Mr. Lucien Saulnier, concerning the purchase of Caravelle aircraft by T.C.A.? If so, what was his reply?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think a reply has been made. To the best of my memory the letter was received only yesterday or the day before, but I will look into the matter at once.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Has he the power or the authority to repeal the decision made by T.C.A. directors to purchase the DC-9 aircraft instead of the Caravelle? If the Prime Minister has such authority, does he intend to repeal this arbitrary and autocratic decision of the T.C.A. president?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member will allow me to point out that his question should be put on the order paper. In addition, it is out of order because it expresses an opinion and is controversial.

[Text]

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I simply asked the Prime Minister if he had the authority to revoke a decision made by Air Canada to purchase the DC-9. I just want an opinion from the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The question, of course, as you have said, Mr. Speaker, was out of order, especially when an adjective such as "autocratic" is used in putting it.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC AGAINST IMPAIRMENT FROM SMOKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the minister of health, and in her absence I will address it to her parliamentary secretary. A Dr. Frederick Bock, a cancer research specialist, has made this statement as reported in the press:

> Dr. Frederick G. Bock, associate cancer research scientist at Roswell Park Memorial Institute in Buffalo, said 2,000 to 3,000 Canadians died in 1962 of lung cancer, the most prevalent disease arising from smoking. This figure, coupled with the number of heart and bronchial diseases bred by smoking, put cigarettes well ahead of traffic accidents and infectious illnesses as a killer, he said.

My question is, can the minister, or in her absence the parliamentary secretary, state what has been done in the preventative field to date?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER IN DEALINGS WITH U.S. ADMINISTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether the minister could tell us whether it has been possible for the minister's officers in the United States, particularly in Washington, to be of any assistance to the premier of Newfoundland in his dealings with the Kennedy administration on the Canadian Javelin matter?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give consideration to that question. I am not presently familiar with the full situation to which my hon. friend directs my attention.

[Later:]

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue relating to the same subject I brought up with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Under the provisions of the Canada-United States tax treaty has the minister's department obtained transcripts of the evidence at hearings before the United States courts regarding gifts made by Mr. Doyle of Canadian Javelin to one certain Canadian?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could take the hon. gentleman's question as notice.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on this question I have had an opportunity to consider further my reply to the question which the hon. member asked me. I now refer him to the reply tabled in the house yesterday to question No. 1,627 by the hon.

member for Queens, which will be found at page 4687 of Hansard.

HONG KONG—CONTINUATION OF EMERGENCY RELIEF MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of his statement on external aid, and I think it can be answered quite briefly. Does the minister's announcement mean that the government has now decided to continue the emergency food program to Hong Kong which was commenced in 1962?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that question will be considered when I deal with my estimates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No decision yet.

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING ARRESTED CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I understand that yesterday afternoon discussions were carried on with the Cuban authorities regarding the two Canadians who are being held as prisoners by the Cuban government. Can the minister tell the house what was the outcome of these discussions?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I saw the Cuban ambassador, and I impressed on him the desirability of a postponement of the trial, which had been scheduled for Saturday, I think. I pointed out that not enough time had been made available to provide for a full appreciation of the charges, to provide for counsel and to permit the necessary preparation of the defence. The Canadian ambassador saw the foreign minister of Cuba last night and repeated the request which I made in Ottawa to the Cuban ambassador. I can now say that the trial will not proceed on the originally scheduled date but will take place some time later. I do not know the exact date yet, but I have been assured that there will be a postponement of the original date.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what is the charge against these men; and will the minister say whether he discussed with the Cuban authorities the right of these accused to have their own Canadian counsel?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the precise nature of the charges because they have not been made available. This has been one of the subjects on which the Canadian government has been seeking information from the government of Cuba. With regard to counsel, some ten days ago I suggested to the Cuban ambassador that in order to give the assurance we would want that acceptable standards of justice were going to be observed, Canadian counsel should be provided by the government or by the accused themselves. This has been denied to us. However, I can say that the vice consul, who himself is a lawyer, has had the opportunity to see the accused. This aspect of the matter continues to be a subject of discussion between us.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the minister to give us a general idea of the nature of these charges. He says he does not know the particulars, but what is the general nature? Is it making an armed attack on Cuba? What is the nature of the charges?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in the interests of the accused themselves, I believe it is not desirable that at this time I should give partial particulars of the charges, which have not yet been made completely known to us. If I thought it was in their interests to give the partial particulars I would unhesitatingly do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the reason for secrecy as to the nature of the charges against the accused? That is what I do not understand.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My answer is that in my view the way to protect these Canadian nationals is to take the course I have indicated in the responses I have just made.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NOVA SCOTIA—PROTEST RESPECTING OFF-SHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the house of the federal government's policy regarding off-shore mineral rights as a result of the protest being lodged by the government of Nova Scotia relating to the granting of a licence to the Shell Oil Company for gas and oil exploration off the Nova Scotia coast?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer that question at the moment, but I will be glad to look into it and give an answer tomorrow.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BRIEF FROM FEDERATION OF MAYORS AND MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Following the speech he made in this house yesterday, is it the minister's intention, or that of his government, to ask the federation of mayors and municipalities in future to submit a brief to the federal government, thereby overlooking the rights and privileges of the provinces in this field?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities customarily presents a brief to the government of the day each year. It is usually a good brief, and I hope they continue the practice.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Since the number of unemployed is still increasing, would the minister tell the house whether he has any plans to eliminate unemployment, as was promised during the election campaign?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the house that the results of the October labour force survey are on the whole fairly encouraging. Total employment increased by an estimated 11,000 between September and October, whereas it usually decreases during this period. Also, the situation in the province of Quebec has altered; the October survey showed that employment was 100,000 or 5.8 per cent higher than a year earlier.

Mr. Ricard: A supplementary question. Could the minister give me an explanation of the difference between what he says and what is printed in a bulletin issued at 10 a.m. on November 14, which shows, under the caption "Unemployment", that unemployment rose from 250,000 to 265,000?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction between what I have said and the normal chain of events.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Could the Minister of Labour advise the house whether this includes all the unemployed Liberal candidates in the last Nova Scotia election?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour relating to the previous question which he answered. Does the Minister of Labour now feel that sufficient time has elapsed since the last general election to enable the government to take credit for increases or discredit for decreases in employment?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is an argumentative question.

Mr. Aiken: No, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State says this is an argumentative question, but I believe we should know now whether the minister takes credit for increases or decreases in the labour force.

BANCROFT, ONT.—PROVISION OF EMPLOYMENT FOLLOWING MINE SHUT-DOWN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour what consideration is being given by the government to alternative means of employment in the Bancroft area, in view of the impending shut-down of the Faraday uranium mine.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): This morning I had a chance to discuss this matter with representatives of the Bancroft area. The government will naturally apply all its special programs that can be applied to this particular area. The action already taken by the government has been successful in at least postponing the difficulties to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): May I ask a supplementary question. Does this mean the government will consider naming Bancroft as a designated area?

Mr. MacEachen: The government has stated already that these designations will be subject to review periodically, and on the occasion of that review the Bancroft area will be considered for designation.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER PLANT—REPORTED CALL FOR TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether any tenders are to be called for the construction and location of a heavy water plant in Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; a decision has not yet been reached on that matter.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Would the right hon. gentleman either confirm or deny the statement appearing in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald allegedly made by his parliamentary secretary that tenders will be called for a heavy water plant?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary secretary has assured me that the statement attributed to him is inaccurate.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TRUSTEESHIP LEGISLATION—REFERENCE TO UNITED NATIONS BY U.S. UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour a question?

Could the minister tell the house which Canadian affiliates of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. shipping trade unions wish to go to the United Nations to seek the abolition of the Canadian trusteeship over shipping unions?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): This question is not within the administrative responsibility of the federal government.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the Canadian government intend to take the necessary steps or to protest officially so that the fight against the trusteeship under which the Canadian government put the maritime unions will not be submitted to the United Nations, since the matter is a domestic one?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that question was addressed to me, but I can answer it by saying that there is no basis whatever for bringing this question before the United Nations. It is a domestic matter, or a matter concerning relations between Canada and the United States; and I would be very surprised indeed if the United Nations would entertain it should an attempt be made to bring it before that body.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I offered to bring on the estimates of the Secretary of State for External Affairs tomorrow at 2.30. I would be glad to repeat the offer now in view of the nature of the questioning today, if the opposition would like to consider it.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO SUPPLY OF SILVER DOLLARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the supply of annually minted silver dollars available in the banks across Canada be sufficient to meet the Christmas demand this year?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I am informed by the master of the mint that despite the limited capacity of the mint it will be possible to issue additional silver dollars for Christmas sale. I am informed the mint has issued more than double the number of silver dollars to date than at this time last year.

The current scarcity of the 1963 silver dollar is due to the unprecedented demand for 25 cent, 10 cent, 5 cent and 1 cent coins. Preference in production is given to these lesser denominations because they are used more in conducting commercial transactions than are the dollar and 50 cent coins.

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Did the minister take this action on the advice of the hon. member for Red Deer and his supporters?

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I have a question which I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the recent admonition of Mr. McNamara, chief commissioner of the Canadian wheat board, to farmers in western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan to move their wheat into marketable position, would the minister check into the serious shortage of box cars in these areas which prevents these very farmers from marketing their grain, as is necessary to meet our overseas commitments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There is no over-all shortage of box cars. The box cars are being utilized more effectively and on a much greater scale than ever in the past. But, as I have explained on other occasions, there is a great diversity of treatment of various areas because of the necessity of moving as much wheat as possible to the lakehead in order to meet urgent demands before freeze-up. I am hopeful that after freeze-up it will be possible to move toward much greater equality.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Does that policy mean that some marketing points in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are being discriminated against because the movement of grain from those points cannot be expedited, or dealt with as fast as it might be from certain other points?

Mr. Sharp: I do not know whether it could be called discrimination. It is the necessary consequence of the policy being followed by the Canadian wheat board in an effort to move as much grain as possible out of Canada during this crop season.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Does the minister not think it will be preferable to allow those points which are still on the initial quota extra cars so that they may be able to deliver the grain before the snow falls? I have a letter here bearing on this very subject, and I shall be glad to let the minister see it.

Mr. Sharp: I shall be happy to bring these suggestions to the attention of the Canadian wheat board. I have discussed this matter with the chairman of the board from time to time. He is very much aware of these complaints, and he regrets very much that it should be necessary for such a great difference to exist, but it is an inevitable consequence of the situation we are now facing. I am sure that by the end of the year all hon. members will be glad that the board has persisted in its policy of moving as much grain as possible.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Would it not help in preventing some of this discrimination if the Canadian wheat board had its powers extended from the lakehead on to the eastern provinces so that it might take the grain directly from the western provinces into eastern Canada, and then it would satisfy our needs?

Mr. Sharp: This is being done.

EXTENSION OF POWERS OF WHEAT BOARD TO EASTERN PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the Minister of Agriculture for giving me notice he would not be in the house today—

An hon. Member: So what else is new?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Langlois: —and also for pointing out to me that he had misunderstood my question yesterday and thought I was referring to the wheat board when in fact I was referring to the board of grain commissioners, which is under his department. I am glad he has learned that from his department. I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the serious grievances brought up a while ago by some of the western members, is the Minister of Trade and Commerce considering extending the powers of the wheat board to control the movement of wheat from the western provinces right into the eastern provinces?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was unaware that my hon. friends on the other side had any grievances against me.

Mr. Langlois: A supplementary question. Is the minister up to date? Does he not know that Canadians in the east have many grievances?

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN REACTION TO PROPOSED EMBARGO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister advise the house why the Canadian United Nations delegation did not support the resolution so strongly endorsed yesterday by the assembly, calling for an embargo on oil shipments to South Africa?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian delegation fully supported the basic aims of the resolution to which the hon. member directs my attention. We support, in principle, its reaffirmation of the right of the people of South West Africa to self determination and independence, and its condemnation of South Africa's persistent refusal to co-operate with the United Nations. We were in favour of a renewed effort to establish the United Nations presence in South West Africa.

The Canadian delegate pointed out yesterday that the imposition of sanctions in specific cases is a matter which, under the charter, reposes in the security council and not in the general assembly. Moreover, in the view of the Canadian government enforcement action by the United Nations should await the outcome of the proceedings presently before the international court as well as the reaction of the South African government to the findings of that court. In our view it weakens rather than strengthens the United Nations if such important principles of orderly procedure are disregarded.

I should like to emphasize the deep concern felt by this government about developments in South Africa. We deplore the application by that government of the policy of apartheid in South West Africa, where it has a duty to administer the territory under international authority in the best interests of the population. The present serious situation could develop in such a way as to call for support by Canada of measures in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations charter to enforce respect for international obligations.

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, that answer is an example of why the question period does not work.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I just say that the question asked by the hon. member for Queens was a vital one. It was one which was dealt with by my predecessor at considerable length. If the hon. member does not fully appreciate its importance, I regret to say he will have to take some time to inform himself of its significance.

Mr. Bell: I stand by my statement.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain to the house how it was possible for Canada to express support in principle while at the same time voting against the motion?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman is wrong in the last statement he made. Canada has expressed strong condemnation of the policy of apartheid, but Canada has taken the position, along with other countries, that the imposition of sanctions is a responsibility given under the charter to the security council and not to the general assembly. Because Canada believes in observing the constitutional practices and provisions of the charter, this does not mean that our condemnation of the policy of apartheid as practiced by South Africa is, on that account, less sincere.

Mr. Douglas: Does the minister not think that the other members of the United Nations who voted in favour of this sanction are as concerned about the jurisdiction and the correct functioning of the United Nations as the Canadian government and its representatives?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would not want my answer to the hon. gentleman's question to be interpreted as a reflection on the action taken by those states which did not agree with the position we have taken juridically. But the fact is—and the hon. member as a student of these matters knows this to be the case—that responsibility for sanctions rests with the security council. The African states feel, naturally, very keenly about the policies of discrimination which are being applied in South Africa. It is understandable, since they wish to express their deep condemnation of those policies of discrimination, that they should in the circumstances have pursued yesterday's course. However Canada, as a loyal member of the United Nations, considers that the integrity of that body presupposes a recognition of established constitutional procedures in order to maintain the organization as an effective instrument for peace.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a further question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the Canadian delegation intend to abstain on the resolution soon to be brought before a plenary session of the general assembly opposing racial discrimination, or will Canada continue to cast a vote of abstention as it did in the third committee?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government gives consideration to the positions it is going to take, and it is not the custom to announce policy in this house before that consideration is completed, even if a course is recommended by an hon. gentleman sitting to Mr. Speaker's left.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR STAMP COMMEMORATING FOUNDING OF 4-H CLUBS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to have a stamp issued commemorating the 50th anniversary of the birth of the 4-H clubs in Canada, which took place at Roland, Manitoba, in 1913?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—ABSENCE FROM COUNTRY WHILE ON BAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I wonder if his parliamentary secretary has an answer to the question I asked yesterday concerning Mr. Banks being absent from the jurisdiction while on bail.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): I regret that I have not got an answer today, but I will bring it to the minister's attention when he comes back.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO CHECK ON LANGUAGE USED ON PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a question for the Secretary of State. I wonder if he could let us know if there is any authority that scrutinizes C.B.C. radio and television programs to determine the decency and good taste of the language that is used on these programs?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I regret very much that I could not hear the hon. gentleman's question. I will read it in Hansard and endeavour to reply tomorrow.

TRADE

TOBACCO—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED SALE TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is now in possession of information which would enable him to answer the question I put to him yesterday concerning the possible purchase of Canadian tobacco by the tobacco monopoly of Japan.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes; I was looking to catch your eye, Mr. Speaker, to answer the question. We have received no advice as yet from the Japan monopoly corporation, which controls the purchase and importation of tobacco into Japan, that they have decided to purchase Canadian tobacco. However for some time my department has been attempting to convince the Japanese authorities that Canadian tobacco is suitable for their requirements and, in this connection, we are sponsoring a small Japanese trade mission to Canada for the purpose of acquainting the appropriate Japanese monopoly officials with the Canadian tobacco industry. This mission from Japan will arrive in Canada next week.

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 2, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

That it is expedient, as a means toward the further development of manpower in Canada and toward increasing employment opportunities for Canadians, to introduce a measure to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act:

(a) to provide that in respect of the costs incurred by a province as training allowances for unemployed persons, the contributions payable by Canada to the province be increased from 75 per cent to such percentage, not exceeding 90 per cent, as may be specified in the agreement made under the act between the Minister of Labour and the province;

(b) to provide in respect of the costs incurred by the province for such part of the program for training employed persons in industry as may be specified in the agreement, the contributions payable by Canada to the province be increased from 50 to 75 per cent thereof;

(c) to extend, until such date as may be specified in the agreement made under the act between the Minister of Labour and the province, the period during which the contributions payable by Canada to the province will be 75 per cent in respect of costs incurred by the province for capital expenditures on training facilities; and

(d) to increase the number of members of the technical and vocational training advisory council from twenty three to twenty eight and to provide an honorarium for the chairman thereof.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, when the government introduced this resolution for consideration by this house on October 2, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour, the hon. member for Kootenay East, made a statement on behalf of the minister. Amongst other things that day he said this resolution set forth the government's new employment and manpower development program. This is indeed a surprise, when the government describes this resolution as a new employment and manpower development program. This has been the habit of the government since it took office, to adopt all those good programs that were put on the statute books of this country and camouflage them to the extent that they describe them as new. Later on he said these measures are designed to improve the federal-provincial program of technical and vocational education.

Well, there is nothing in the statement or in the resolution itself to show what the improvement will be, except that the government is agreeing by this alteration of the existing legislation to increase the federal contribution. I should like to deal with this matter item by item as set out in the resolution.

I want to say, first of all, that this resolution does not introduce any new or improved legislation. All it does is raise the federal government's contribution in order to carry on the program the Conservative government initiated and pressed forward from 1960 on. I immediately say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this last observation of mine is generally looked upon in this session of parliament as a sort of partisan statement. There seems to be a new point of view in parliament, at least this session, that partisanship should not have any place in this house. Well, I recall the days when government members were sitting on this side of the house, and they claimed that if partisanship had no place in parliament then parliament would almost die on its feet. I think it is only normal and natural that those who are in the opposition should criticize the government, and should also take advantage of the opportunity to point out that they inaugurated programs of this type when they had the opportunity.

I feel, too, that when one is referring to what has been done in the past the record should be kept straight, and that any misleading or camouflaging statements by this government should be challenged. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour went on in his statement to say that the provision of capital facilities for the training of youths and adults under the Technical and Vocational Training Act of 1960 is far from complete in many of the provinces. It is therefore important to continue a high level of federal financial assistance to those provinces which still need to develop extensive training facilities.

In this statement there is an admission by the government that this is not a new program, but rather that the program should be continued in order to provide additional facilities in those provinces that did not avail themselves of that opportunity in the period from April, 1961 to March 31, 1963. However, it is regrettable that in his statement the parliamentary secretary failed to set out what has been done in this school building program since that time.

Before we launched into this program we asked the provinces to set out what they considered would be their facility needs for the next five years, and it is interesting to note their responses to this query. Newfoundland stated that it would need some $6,300,000 worth of facilities, Prince Edward Island $750,000, Nova Scotia $9 million, New Brunswick $9.5 million, Quebec $53.5 million, Ontario $50 million, Manitoba $9.5 million, Saskatchewan $6.5 million, Alberta $28 million and British Columbia $19 million.

We of course set out to plan and provide for these needs. What has happened since then? There has been a total projects estimated cost of $511,274,390, and the federal government contribution has amounted to over $326 million. A total of 519 projects were completed in that time, including 254 new schools, four technical institutions and 47 trade schools, providing space for some 138,000 students each and every year.

When this program was nearing completion the ministers of education for the provinces met with me here in Ottawa, and only the province of Quebec felt it had not had its full share of the program. It was pointed out to Quebec that there was no ceiling set on the amount of money available for the construction program, but that it was left to each province to proceed with its required needs as it foresaw them during that period of time. I may immediately say all but one of the provinces signed the agreement with the federal government some time in April, 1961, but Quebec did not sign an agreement until six months later. Therefore it is understandable that Quebec did not proceed as rapidly with this program as some of the other provinces, particularly Ontario.

In his statement the parliamentary secretary set out the policy to guide the federal government in its contribution of 75 per cent, and the basis upon which this contribution would be considered, having as a ceiling $480 per capita applicable to the population in the age bracket of 15 to 19 years. Evidently this has been based on the amount of construction which has been carried out in the province of Newfoundland.

I decided to work out how much money would be available to each province as a result of this new formula, having in mind what the federal government had already contributed to this program ending on March 31, 1963. It is discovered that from now until March 31, 1967, Newfoundland will have been overpaid by some $17,000. Prince Edward Island will have some $2 million in contributions from the federal government coming to it in the next four years. Nova Scotia will have $24 million coming to it, and New Brunswick will have a credit of some $20.5 million. Quebec will have a credit of $199 million, Ontario $9 million, Manitoba $29 million, Saskatchewan $26.5 million, Alberta $10.5 million and British Columbia $40.5 million. The Northwest Territories will receive some $751,000 and the Yukon will have been overpaid or overdrawn on this program by some $312,000.

These figures are approximate, but when you examine them you will note that some of the smaller provinces in the maritimes will have a sizeable credit coming to them between now and 1967. But you must also consider that they have to put up 25 per cent of the cost of construction of these schools. Therefore the question arises to what extent will these provinces avail themselves of this program in addition to what they have already done? How far can they extend their financial resources to take advantage of this program?

Ontario certainly cannot do very much. All that is left coming to it is some $9 million, so its building program between now and 1967 will be very slight. Quebec is the outstanding province and can avail itself of some $199 million in federal contributions. It is all well and good.

In the field of training the unemployed, and this has been a very worth while effort, we increased the federal contribution by 25 per cent. Until 1960 very little training was carried out in this area. In the year 1959-60 some 4,638 people were trained; in 1960-61 this figure increased to 10,774 because of the increased federal contribution to the provinces; in 1961-62 the number of applicants trained was 26,887. Then in the last year, 1962-63, some 38,439 people were trained. One might reasonably criticize this figure and say it is not sufficient, and I would be inclined to agree. I think this program is very worth while and should be accentuated. However, one can immediately see that the action taken in 1960 has increased the number of people trained under this program by some 34,000. This is indeed a worth while program; because those who find themselves unemployed, whether they are young or more elderly, can benefit from the courses that are provided under this program.

Under this resolution the government proposes to increase its share by 15 per cent; that is to say, from 75 per cent to 90 per cent. I would like to spend just a moment or two making some observations in respect to this program of training the unemployed. It has always been a puzzle to me why this program was not endorsed by organized labour, and particularly the Canadian Labour Congress. In reverse, however, there has been a great deal of criticism stemming from some hon. members. It was pointed out at one time that this program was so unco-ordinated that in one instance nine welders were trained by an experienced welder and then they all became unemployed. This story was repeated in the election campaign by some hon. members who now sit on the treasury benches. I think they did a great disservice to this program, because I think if everyone co-ordinated their efforts to make it successful, many thousands of Canadians would benefit.

I would like to cite as an example the city of Cornwall. This city was left in the position where it had a great many unemployed after the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway, first of all, and then because of the closing down of a textile mill. However, people were not despondent about the situation. They gathered together and organized, and every part of their economy grouped together in one combined effort. They were able—and they did not have to try very hard—to persuade the provincial and federal governments to take part of this mill, convert it into classrooms and provide $85,000 worth of equipment in order to retrain their people. I think 800 people were retrained, and 90 per cent of them were placed in jobs as a result of that retraining program in this area. The amazing thing is that the program that was instituted in Cornwall brought to that city two new industries, because they were able to train people and provide the skills required by those industries. Therefore I think all of us in this country should give encouragement to this program in order to help those who need new skills and trades.

I attended the opening of this training school in Cornwall, and I was very much impressed to find a gentleman who was 62 years of age working on a lathe alongside a young man 19 years of age. I was curious about the elderly gentleman and asked him whether he was learning machine work at his age. He said "I used to be a machinist in the old days, but I have not engaged in this trade for quite a number of years. However, I find myself unemployed and I am here taking this course in order to brush up, because I now have a job available to me". So this program is not just for the purpose of training young people; it has had the effect of inducing older citizens to take part in this retraining program in order to reinstate themselves in employment.

There are a number of things in this resolution to which we could refer. One is paragraph (b), under which the government proposes to increase by 25 per cent its contribution to the provinces for the training of employed persons. This is very necessary. We started a pilot project in the town of Leaside, in which three industries each contributed ten employees, making a total of 30 students, in order that they might upgrade themselves and learn those skills that were required for this upgrading. I think that pilot project will be of great help to industry in the retraining of people in order to provide them with better jobs and consequently better financial remuneration.

I think this program is one that will be the basis in our battle, in the war that we are waging to provide jobs for Canadians and to alleviate the unemployment situation in this country. I think we have taken forward steps in this regard. I do hope that the provinces will avail themselves of this additional 15 per cent increase, to 90 per cent, and establish more training centres in order to provide training facilities for those who find themselves unemployed. Education is a very worth while thing. Not very many years ago we in this country particularly were stressing the three "R's" type of education; that is to say, in the academic field. It has been somewhat difficult to sell people this new type of education upon which we launched in 1960. However, I think people now understand that every person in this country cannot apply himself to academic training, but many have certain skills with their hands and could usefully perform these skills. We must of necessity provide this opportunity.

For many thousands of Canadians education is the frontier of the future, and I feel certain that technical and vocational training forms a very essential part of that frontier. I had always believed that in no single field is a concerted, co-operative effort on the part of provinces and the federal government of more importance to the future of the development of our country in this regard. Education, of course, is subject to fads, just as any other branch of human endeavour, and for many years a classical and academic education represented the ultimate achievement for many young people in this country. But the pendulum has swung back in the last few years, and there is a new emphasis on those branches of knowledge relating to the technical and the practical which in the past were neglected except for the efforts of a few pioneers. One need only travel across the country today and visit some of these schools which have been opening and are opening at this moment to receive a tremendous revelation at what is being done. One would be very impressed indeed at the enthusiasm of those who are taking their places in these schools and learning the skills and trades afforded to them.

Criticism was made at the beginning to the effect that many of these schools would be half empty, that the enrolment would be insufficient to fill the classrooms. On the contrary, most of the schools which have been opened have waiting lists, and I think this condition will be accentuated. Certainly where it is greatly accentuated the provincial authorities should take steps to provide more facilities for those who want to avail themselves of this type of education.

There is a new recognition, Mr. Chairman, of the place in society of those whose genius is along practical lines. Opportunity is being provided for those who are doers as well as those who are thinkers. This is only fitting in face of the impressive and revolutionary accomplishments of the physical and technological sciences in recent years. In the physical sciences man, having spanned the earth, has now taken the first step toward spanning the universe. In technology we are moving toward a state of affairs where new electronic and mechanical processes will eliminate the routine processes of production in so far as men and women are concerned. But in that elimination of what is routine will be posed the challenge to our working force to adapt itself to operations demanding skills of a high technical quality. This, of course, means the acquirement of basic skills and a high degree of adaptability and mobility in our labour force.

I said earlier in my remarks, Mr. Chairman, that we are providing an educational plant capacity for more than 139,000 additional students. This is over the accommodation which was available only three years ago. A program of this type cannot be conceived in terms of money alone. This has cost the federal treasury many hundreds of millions of dollars, but it is a worth while expenditure when we are investing in the future of our citizens. When we do that we are investing in the future of our country. Therefore I say that this program must not be conceived only in terms of money but in terms of what it can accomplish in the upgrading of our labour force and in bringing about a condition where those in the labour force, rather than being at the mercy of the sudden shifts and changes of the automation age, will be able to play a constantly expanding role in production.

I must repeat that during the last parliament we introduced a bill, No. C-83, with respect to industrial change and manpower adjustment. In doing that I thought we were moving in the right direction to deal with those who would be displaced by automation. We tried to make that bill as flexible as possible in order to fit into the conditions of any industry which would avail itself of the services thus provided. We felt that we must bring to the attention of those who would be affected by such technological change the services available to them under the bill, and we intended to do this by calling a national conference of employers and unions in order that they would have the opportunity, based on their own experience, to offer to us suggestions upon which we would base our regulations in respect thereto. I only regret that the government has seen fit to abandon this item of legislation.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the hon. member shall continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: I can only regret, Mr. Chairman, that the government has not seen fit to reintroduce that bill but rather is proceeding now under agreements with the provinces. I do not think it will have the same success in capturing the imagination of the people of this country as had the previous bill, which received many favourable comments from all parts of the country and from all segments of our economy.

These programs for conducting training cannot be treated each one in isolation. They must all be taken together and dovetailed in mutually complementary fashion. However, I am sure that with the progress we are making in providing training facilities across the country, in placing trained students in the working force, in encouraging industry to produce in Canada, and in encouraging labour and management to work together to cope with the far reaching shifts and changes which must be faced if we are to remain competitive—with all these things we are working toward a better and brighter world of tomorrow in which those who are engaged in production will offer a contribution which will be both more efficient and more valuable to the economy as a whole.

I should like to say at this time, Mr. Chairman, that I feel that boards of education in our cities, towns and areas of our townships who play a part in the construction of these particular vocational schools, in addition to the high schools, should be congratulated for their co-operation and their clear-sightedness in launching upon this program in co-operation with the federal and provincial governments.

The teaching staffs have been a problem in this whole area. For those provinces which availed themselves of the opportunity offered by the federal government in its contribution of 50 per cent toward the cost of training those teachers there has not been as much difficulty as others have experienced. It was reasonable to assume that there would be a shortage of teachers, because when you are providing only the short space of time which has been provided under this program you must certainly launch yourselves on a crash training program of teachers. But that is not the only profession in which we have a shortage in this country. There is a continuing shortage of nurses, and there are shortages in other fields of endeavour as well. I think we have done well in providing teachers to staff these schools.

These are in total my remarks today. I hope the government does not lose its drive. I hope it does not allow the momentum in this area to diminish, but that the Department of Labour and its minister will keep on top of all these things and encourage the provinces to take advantage of these incentives which the federal government has offered during all these years.

Mr. Webster: The hope has been expressed that at the resolution stage of this bill a contribution by one speaker from each party will suffice. We agree, on the understanding that there will be no such voluntary restriction of debate on second reading. I am sure a number of hon. members will speak at that time.

It is the responsibility of this parliament to strengthen the capacities of our people in order that they may make a maximum contribution to our economic growth and our cultural advancement. I and my colleagues in the New Democratic party are pleased to support this resolution, which is designed to improve existing provisions for vocational and technical training across this nation. Education, not of the few but of the masses, is essential in the twentieth century. To attain this objective there is urgent need of more facilities and more effective training of our young people. Today, Canadians are not a well educated people. According to recent labour statistics only 32 per cent of our students complete high school; fewer than 10 per cent enter university; only 4 per cent graduate from an institution of higher learning.

In the technical field the story is the same. Canada has never trained enough manpower to meet the needs of industry. One out of every three Canadian youngsters leaves school totally unprepared for work. This constitutes a national catastrophe. The real tragedy lies not so much in the cost of unemployment and welfare benefits but in the loss to the nation of the abilities of mind and hand of thousands of able young people. In five skilled occupations recently studied, one third of the men were trained outside this country. Records indicate, too, that the flow of this type of immigrant is slowing up because of favourable economic conditions in Europe.

The following editorial appeared in the Globe and Mail of July 6, 1963:

> Education has so consistently held the spotlight of attention during the past few years that most people have been under the impression that Canada was taking large strides in the field, and that the children of the nation were being graduated into the working force with more and better education than ever before. It comes as a shock, therefore, to discover that the number of school dropouts is on the increase and that more young people are being turned out every year without the education or the skills to make an adequate living.
> This gloomy picture emerges from a survey conducted by the Ontario department of education and the national employment service of students who leave school early, and of their employment prospects. The survey discloses that 36.4 per cent of students, who left school in Ontario in 1962, earned neither certificate nor diploma.
> The employment side of the survey indicates that the fate of these early school-leavers is to spend their lives chasing unskilled and semi-skilled jobs in a world where such jobs are becoming progressively fewer and in which they can look forward, therefore, to frequent periods of unemployment.

What can we do to raise educational standards among the working force of Canada? In seeking an answer I suggest seven points as worthy of consideration by educational authorities:

1. Parents must express an appreciation of the value of education in terms of employment and future happiness and income. Youth must be convinced that to be uneducated is to be handicapped for life. They should be told that only 30 per cent of the jobs in Canada are available to the unskilled or semi-skilled workers, and the number is decreasing rapidly with the advancement of automation. Recently Professor Marcus Long of Toronto predicted that automation will make any student without grade XII education unemployable within ten years. Young people should be encouraged to remain in school until they possess skills that are currently in demand.

2. Greater prestige must be associated with occupational education in Canada. Unfortunately, too many people are inclined to look down on hand work even in a very specialized field. We should remember that our complex society cannot function without many different varieties of highly trained personnel. Without downgrading academic achievement we should elevate the status of the skilled artisan. Prejudices by parents against vocational courses are foolish and antiquated. They try to make professional types out of boys best fitted to become mechanics, technicians and tradesmen. Too frequently, as a result, they end up academic failures and embittered unemployed.

3. A critical assessment needs to be made of the courses of study in our vocational and technical schools. Narrow specialization to the exclusion of general knowledge should be avoided in order that the student may develop a flexibility of mind that permits a shift from one job to another with a minimum of difficulty. His training needs to be as up to date as possible and related to the dominant needs and interests of the community in which he lives.

4. More qualified teachers and administrators should be attracted to the new technical schools which are being opened across Canada. It is urgent that we should train an increasing number of science teachers if we are to take advantage of the fast developing technological revolution in North America.

5. Importance of continuing education must be emphasized for all ages. More facilities for trade and occupational classes at post-high school level should be provided. In an era of rapid change there is no better insurance for the worker and the citizen than to improve his skills and add to his knowledge and experience at every opportunity.

6. Training programs will be successful only if there is the closest co-operation between federal and provincial authorities in the field of education. The final decision in such matters must always rest with the provinces. There must be no suspicion of domination by Ottawa.

7. Closer partnership is needed between the school and industry. The activities of the classroom should be co-ordinated with those of the workshop. According to a recent report only 31 per cent of manufacturing establishments in Canada had any training program at all designed to assist a boy to fit into his first job.

In a recent article entitled "Employers' Role in Job Training", J. Bascom St. John wrote as follows:

> Far too little responsibility for the transition from school to work is taken by employers. An incredibly small proportion of them have any special training program, or any system of induction into work methods or skills.
> They take a boy from school, let him flounder in an unfamiliar environment and if he does not happen to light on his feet they get rid of him. Nothing the school might have done, or could do, will get over the problem of the irresponsible employer. No guidance program or teaching pattern can prevent the harm that selfish employers do when the schoolboy enters the world of work.
> We expect far too much from our schools if we assume they can do the whole job of work training. You learn the techniques of work by working, and it is through a partnership between the schools and employment that the most effective progress may be made in meeting the needs of skill and the special training for work in the technological era.
> The question of the relationship between education, work, citizenship and national economic and employment policies cuts through all aspects of our society. The schools ought not to be asked to carry the burdens that other interests are too lazy or too unimaginative to deal with.

Finally, I wish to say that facilities relating to training in the occupational field are as important to the future economic strength and social well-being of Canadians as those in the areas of secondary and higher education. All obstacles must be removed to permit not only youth but men and women of any age to take full advantage of the educational opportunities available in this country. If we are wise we shall determine to provide for these purposes in the future a larger percentage of our gross national product than we have been willing to do in the past. Education must be given a higher priority in our national thinking and our national planning.

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, I feel the members from Quebec must give very special attention to the resolution under consideration which would amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

I cannot but take advantage of this opportunity to point out the complaints of the province of Quebec in connection with that act. It is unfair and discriminatory with regard to Quebec, and if the minister does not make the necessary changes, we shall bring in amendments to protect the interests of the province of Quebec.

The Quebec minister of youth, the Hon. Paul Gerin-Lajoie, released last winter a statement regarding the capital expenditures contemplated under that act, from April 1 to November 5, 1962. The figures quoted by the minister are revealing; they show that Quebec's share is only 3.3 per cent of the total number of students covered by that act throughout Canada, whereas Ontario's share amounts to 73.1 per cent.

Out of a total of $511 million—and these are recent figures published by Ottawa—the province of Quebec got only $25 million, or 5 per cent of the total, whereas Ontario got over $200 million, or 40 per cent of the total.

We claim it is unfair that our province should have to pay its share of federal taxes, when other provinces benefit from them to a larger extent.

Mr. Chairman, that act, which was passed in 1960 and gives such results, works entirely against the interests of the province of Quebec because it is based on discriminatory and unfair principles. In fact, as it stands now, that act is tailored according to the needs of the English system in the other provinces of Canada and does not suit the province of Quebec whose education system is entirely different.

In Ontario, for instance—and I suppose also in other English speaking provinces—secondary vocational schools are part of the high school system. In that case, the federal law applies, and we see that the province of Ontario received grants enabling it to build almost 200 high schools and vocational schools.

In Quebec, secondary educational institutions, like elementary schools, are not under the government but under the public education council. In that province, vocational schools, whether they be trade schools or other schools, are not considered government institutions as in other provinces. Consequently, if federal grants cannot be used for technological institutes and trades schools, in the province of Quebec, whereas they are used also for secondary vocational schools in Ontario and other English speaking provinces, we have here a discrimination which the Liberal and Conservative members let go through at the time.

It is therefore not suprising that the province of Quebec is unable to take full advantage of the federal technical and vocational training program, because its educational and professional training system differs from that of other provinces.

Here is what the Quebec minister of youth, the Hon. Paul Gerin-Lajoie, had to say on that point at a meeting in Dorion, last March:

The problem with regard to federal assistance in the building of training centres is the following:

1. Ottawa contributes in the same degree to the financing of training centres and to the financing of technical and vocational schools;

2. The federal contribution is always proportional to the provincial government contribution;

3. In every province except Quebec, training centres are subsidized by the provincial government only;

4. In Quebec, however, the apprenticeship centres are developed not only with Quebec subsidies, but also with subsidies from the apprenticeship commission, a joint employer-employee body unparalleled in Canada;

5. Therefore, Ottawa subsidizes apprenticeship centres in Quebec only according to the provincial government contributions and not according to the total grants paid out to training centres.

In the light of the treatment meted out to Quebec, Mr. Gerin-Lajoie speaks of discrimination.

"To date, the federal government has refused to contribute to the financing of apprenticeship centres in Quebec to the same extent as it does to the financing of technical and vocational schools.

Ottawa does not take into account the expenditures made by the Quebec apprenticeship commission out of its revenues for the setting up of apprenticeship centres."

The minister responsible for education said that an end must be put to such discrimination at any cost; indeed it is a repetition of the one created by Ottawa's refusal to continue for a certain period its 75 per cent contribution to technical and vocational training in general. Because of that refusal, the contribution is brought back to 50 per cent without Quebec having had by far the same opportunity as Ontario to take advantage of supplementary grants.

Then, stressing the importance of the report of the committee for the study of technical and vocational training, Mr. Gerin-Lajoie came to the conclusion that the main thing was to adapt our educational system to the needs of our economic development.

In conjunction with economic development, we must, he said, "train our young people in relation to the special requirements of modern industry and business...So, I find it particularly significant that the first building under construction in the first youth centre should be a training establishment, precisely an institution where education and work are directly related."

Here is, Mr. Chairman, another statement published in Le Devoir of February 16, 1963, which reads as follows:

Deficiencies in federal assistance to vocational training. Grits and Tories in Ottawa largely responsible.

In Ontario and other provinces, some form of vocational training is given in vocational schools which are part and parcel of the high school system. In Quebec, vocational training and technical courses are given in trade schools, training centres and technological institutes which are not part of the high school system.

Consequently, Ontario has been able to use—

At that time, that is on February 16, 1963.

—$186,700,000 from the federal treasury to build and improve 207 vocational schools, 7 technological institutes and 14 trades schools to meet the needs of a school population of 93,056 students.

On the other hand, the province of Quebec was able to use only $13,600,000 in federal funds to build 3 institutes...

...To give justice to all the provinces, the federal government has only to amend its act and I would say that it should.

It can do so in various ways. First, it can adopt an equalization formula or use the formula which existed previously in that field: giving federal grants in relation to the number of students or young workers between 14 and 19 in each province.

Another way to right an obvious injustice with regard to Quebec is to allow it to receive federal grants for training centers now in existence.

Here is what the Quebec minister of youth stated in Quebec city at the conference of the education ministers of the ten provinces:

The minister of youth said yesterday that the decision of the federal Minister of Labour to extend for six months only the agreement by which Ottawa pays 75 per cent of the construction cost of technical and vocational training schools is a provocation.

That federal contribution was to be reduced to 50 per cent by April 1, 1963; but the education ministers from all the provinces had asked for a continuation of the 75 per cent contribution until 1967.

To that request, the federal minister, Mr. Michael Starr answered on Thursday by offering a six month extension for works started before October 1 and for which contracts had been awarded before April 1.

Mr. Paul Gerin-Lajoie, chairman of the conference of the education ministers of the ten provinces stated yesterday that Mr. Starr's decision did not meet in any way the request made by all the provinces.

"As far as Quebec is concerned," he added, "far from being a solution to the problem, such a decision appears as a provocation. It will favour even more the provinces which are already engaged in a large construction program."

In fact, explained the minister, as far as the development of technical training is concerned, Quebec finds itself today in the situation which confronted the province of Ontario in April 1961.

"Moreover," said Mr. Gerin-Lajoie, "it must be realized that the implementation of a vast program of physical development in the field of technical education (which will cost hundreds of millions of dollars and will mortgage the future for many years) must not be considered as an obstacle race between the provinces".

Federal moneys should not be intended as a reward to provinces succeeding in completing as soon as possible a building program—especially not when they are in an uneven position at the start.

The federal program for assistance to technical training should be designed rather as a means to solve the problem of labour training throughout the country.

In order to achieve this goal, the ministers of education of the ten provinces jointly urged the federal government to review the existing agreement.

Mr. Chairman, there is another point of divergence between the province of Quebec and the other provinces; this difference can be found also in the concept of vocational training.

Vocational and technical training means any kind of education aimed at preparing a person for a profitable job in a primary or secondary industry or a profitable employment in the service industry, or at increasing his skill or technical ability in a similar job or employment. And, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, this includes the training thus directed in relation to any of the following industries or employments: agriculture, fishing, forestry, manufacturing, mining, communications and, as a general rule, any primary or secondary industry or any employment in a service industry which asks for a knowledge of scientific and technical principles, and their application.

Therefore, any intelligent person can conclude that vocational training, whether it is given in factories, in private institutions or in state schools, qualifies as vocational training within the meaning of the present legislation.

There is in the province of Quebec a vocational training system which is controlled not by the department of youth but by the department of labour.

Under the jurisdiction of the department of labour, there are training centres for all building trades in Montreal, Sherbrooke, Quebec city, Joliette and Chicoutimi. There is a school for shoe workers in Montreal and other vocational training institutions of a public character, for they do not belong to individuals but to professional bodies.

Those professional institutions give a better vocational training, according to several experts, than the state-owned trade schools and institutes of technology.

In 1960, 846 regular day students attended the only building trades school in Montreal, and since this centre was built in 1946, 15,446 apprentices and journeymen have taken refresher courses.

It should be recalled that since that date, this body has contributed $4,044,314 to provide vocational training for construction workers, while the contribution of the provincial government was only $375,000, or an annual subsidy of $25,000.

Now, there are no real vocational schools in the other provinces. As a result, there is no provision in the present federal legislation for a federal contribution or assistance to those schools. This is discriminatory to the province of Quebec which has very special institutions that it intends to preserve and with which employers and workers are entirely satisfied.

Mr. Chairman, since the resolution does not contain anything to make up this deficiency in the act, I move, seconded by Mr. Gauthier:

That this house urge the federal government to hand back to the provinces, except those which prefer the status quo, a percentage of the income tax equal to the amounts the federal government would otherwise pay them as its contribution to the vocational and technical training assistance program, in order to enable the provinces to set up their own vocational training system as they see fit.

The amendment is in French and in English. The English version is a translation of the original amendment.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Kindersley.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was an understanding, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that there was to be one representative from each group. I think the hon. member for Medicine Hat stood up.

The Chairman: I appreciate that. I might mention that I came to the chair rather late in the proceedings. I did not realize a representative from the group to which the hon. member for Medicine Hat belongs had not spoken as yet. Perhaps the hon. member for Kindersley will not mind, therefore, if I recognize the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: About the amendment—

[Text]

The Chairman: Yes, this is a matter I have to look at.

Mr. Olson: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, while you are considering the amendment I could begin.

The Chairman: There is an amendment which has been proposed by the previous speaker, and perhaps I should read it at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are just reading it; you are not putting it as yet?

The Chairman: No, I think I should read it first.

[Translation]

It is moved by Mr. Beaule:

That this house urge the federal government to hand back to the provinces, except those which prefer the status quo, a percentage of the income tax equal to the amounts that the federal government would otherwise pay them as its contribution to the vocational and technical training assistance program, in order to enable the provinces to set up their own vocational training system as they see fit.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to reserve the right to say a word at the appropriate time about whether or not the amendment is in order. Perhaps the hon. member for Medicine Hat wants to proceed in the meantime.

[Mr. Beaule.]

The Chairman: Is this agreed? The understanding we have now is that we will allow the hon. member for Medicine Hat to make his contribution, subject to the Chair having the opportunity to look at the amendment and decide whether or not it is in order. Perhaps I could hear argument from hon. members on this point in due course.

Mr. Olson: I wanted to say just a few words, Mr. Chairman, on the resolution before the amendment is put. At the outset, I want to say that my remarks will be brief because, as will be found by referring to page 3353 of Hansard for last February 1, we did spend some time outlining the views of this party in respect of technical and vocational training generally.

We are now presented with a formal and considerably more specific resolution to take some legislative action in four separate fields. We agree that there is a need to train and retrain a large number of people who, from time to time, find themselves unemployed because they lack skills that are required for the jobs that are available.

If we accept the premise that it is the responsibility of the federal government to take action in respect of unemployment, then we have to accept the provisions in this resolution and agree that they will go some distance towards meeting the problem.

At this time I think it would be fitting for me to repeat the commendation I made with respect to the former minister of labour when he established the technical and vocational training program. It was a good move, and from it came an admission by the federal government that it had some responsibility and was prepared to spend some money. However I am convinced that both provincial and local authorities have had to do almost all of the spadework and research work in formulating programs to meet their needs.

I am not going to repeat a lot of what I said. We are basically in agreement that there is a federal responsibility and that the various items in the resolution before us do meet some of the need. However I would like to point out, and this may be relevant to the proposed amendment, that in this field of vocational and technical training lies a tremendous opportunity for Canada to do something constructive in the field of foreign aid.

I remember last year being a member of a delegation from the commonwealth parliamentary association, Canadian branch, that went to Africa, and I was impressed by the lack of technical people required to keep the African economy moving and to expand it in the way which the African peoples want to see it expand. When we mentioned to some Nigerian officials that Canada had embarked on a large vocational training program they were very interested, and suggested the possibility of sending some of their bright young people here to participate in it, young people who would go back to their own country and be of assistance there. If we did this we would be helping them to help themselves.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, it being nearly five o'clock, and before adjournment of the debate, would it be possible to ask you to reach a decision regarding the proposed amendment? I am of the opinion that this would be more consistent with the rules.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. member for Medicine Hat had concluded.

Mr. Olson: No, but I had very nearly.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, that is my very point. If the hon. member for Medicine Hat asks you to call it five o'clock, we shall not have the opportunity to discuss whether the amendment is out of order or not.

The Chairman: The hon. member will understand that there are barely two or three minutes left before this debate comes to an end.

Moreover, there will be no limitation or restriction whatsoever on the debate as to whether the proposed amendment is out of order or not when this measure will be considered again, tomorrow or later on. Therefore, it seems to me that it might be more convenient to allow the hon. member for Medicine Hat to complete his remarks, and we could discuss later on whether the amendment is in order or not when the question is up for debate again.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be more appropriate as regards the business of the house, to deal with the amendment first, before other members give their views on the subject. I believe that it would be more in order.

The Chairman: It is almost two minutes to five o'clock now, and should we let the committee members express their opinion, they could not possibly do it during the two or three minutes that are left.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the unanimous consent of the house so that we could go on dealing with this point, even after five o'clock, in order to settle this matter today?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think the intervention of the hon. member for Lapointe is completely unjustified. No one interrupted any other hon. member. The committee agreed to let the hon. member for Medicine Hat proceed and complete his speech, as other hon. members had done, before we considered this point. I do not think any one of us should interrupt him, any more than the hon. member for Quebec East was interrupted.

Mr. Olson: I thought we had unanimous agreement from the members of the committee that we were going to carry on until Your Honour was pleased to give a decision. You may interrupt me any time you are prepared to give that decision, but I see now it is five o'clock and so we will have the decision the next time the committee meets.

The Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers), and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Ryan—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, a few brief remarks only on Bill S-28, to incorporate the Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada.

This company seems to take advantage of the legislation recently adopted providing that when the degree of ownership of companies is 25 per cent Canadian, these companies may be considered as Canadian.

Actually, we do not wish to prevent transactions in the insurance field or in any other field, but to state our views about this inflow of American capital, because in fact, the Allstate company is 87½ per cent controlled by Americans and only 12½ per cent Canadian owned.

We have been told that the assets of the company are made up of 25 per cent of Canadian capital and 75 per cent of American capital. However, if it is considered that the company which holds 25 per cent of the Canadian capital is the Simpsons-Sears Company which is itself jointly owned by Canadians and by Americans on a 50-50 basis, that is its capital is made up of 50 per cent Canadian funds and 50 per cent American funds. This means that, actually, the Allstate Company of Canada is 87½ per cent controlled by Americans and only 12½ per cent by Canadians.

We urge the Allstate company to increase Canadian representation on its board of directors and also the Canadian participation to 50 per cent of its assets or 50 per cent of its subscribed capital, so that we may have at least a 50 per cent Canadian company, because throughout the country, we are asked to encourage by all possible means the establishment of new Canadian companies. We are not asked to authorize the investment of new foreign capital in Canada but rather of Canadian capital which could be used for the expansion of our economy.

Insurance companies, and Allstate is no exception, are the second largest trust in Canada after the chartered banks. Therefore, we must take positive steps to prevent the American trust from taking over our economy through insurance companies or otherwise. That does not mean that we should close the door to foreign investments.

Still, we must force those people to make concessions which will raise economic standards in Canada because, in the final analysis, the important thing is the economic strength of Canada.

In this case, it is obvious that Allstate will pay taxes but it will still be making profits from the people and industry of Canada and this American company will make further profits from their investment in Canada.

As I said, we do not want to forbid completely foreign companies from settling in Canada. But we suggest to that particular company, as I mentioned before, that it increases the Canadian ownership in its assets.

In clause 1 of Bill S-28, we find the names of the citizens who make up that company: Messrs. John Atkinson, insurance executive; Edgar Gordon Burton, merchant; James Wilson Button, merchant; Gordon McCalla Graham, merchant; John James Illingworth, insurance executive and Norman Currie Urquhart, financier, all of the city of Toronto.

This company will have a part to play—actually it does play it now, and we all wonder why this bill is before us when this company already operates in Canada, holds a federal licence to sell insurance in all Canadian provinces. In fact, we have seen for a long time Allstate advertised in the Simpsons-Sears catalogue. But we have before us today a bill to incorporate that insurance company which already holds a licence, and that without the matter having been submitted to the House of Commons. That company has therefore been operating until now. So, what advantages—there will certainly be no disadvantages—does that company anticipate in having this bill brought before us, if it operates in all the provinces?

We suggest to the company—and this is not separatism—to take into account the existence of two cultures in Canada, and to have among its directors both French and English Canadians, since it will operate, as it is already doing, in the province of Quebec as in the rest of Canada.

Those are suggestions we make to further improve the relations between the various ethnical groups but especially between the two major ethnical groups in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has no other purpose than to give recognition to a company which is 100 per cent American-owned and which is already in operation.

There is a slight improvement in that 12.5 per cent of the shares will be held by Canadians and 87.5 per cent by Americans.

I will say no more about the bill except that we strongly suggest that this proportion of 12.5 per cent should be increased gradually but as fast as possible until 50 per cent of the ownership and management of Allstate of Canada is in Canadian hands.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I shall only take a few minutes.

On several occasions Bill S-28 concerning the Allstate Company has found its way on the order paper for consideration during the hour reserved for private members' business from five to six o'clock. We have repeatedly blocked the bill and we have stated our reasons for doing so.

We have now decided to allow the bill to pass if that is the wish of the house, and here is the reason why.

When we spoke against other legislation like, for instance, federal subsidies to the C.N.R., we had received representations from trucking associations or individual truck drivers who were backing us in our efforts.

When we objected to Bill S-7, an Act to incorporate the Pharmacy Examining Board of Canada, we were receiving lots of letters, telephone calls and messages encouraging us in our fight.

As concerns the Allstate Life Insurance Company bill, we never received a single remark, a single telephone call, a single letter, a single message, from any insurance companies, insurance brokers or insurance agents whatever in Canada. This shows, in my opinion, that insurance companies that are Canadian to the extent of 100 per cent or 90 per cent, as well as insurance brokers or insurance agents, are not at all interested in the work we do in trying to prevent other insurance companies from getting a foothold in Canada, inasmuch as Canadian companies can very well look after all our insurance needs.

For these reasons, and also because we want to see what the work of the members of the other parties in this house will be in that respect, we have decided not to oppose any longer the adoption of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, we are still convinced that Canadians are able to look after the insurance needs of our country, but in view of the lack of co-operation on the part of insurance companies, brokers or agents, and their lack of interest in that matter, we have decided to let this bill pass.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-36, respecting the Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists—Mr. Honey.

THE CANADIAN EQUITY INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Wahn for Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-42, respecting the Canadian Equity Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to change the name of the Canadian Equity Insurance Company to the Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada and also to give the company the corresponding French name. By way of explanation, the company now known as the Canadian Equity Insurance Company is a subsidiary of an English company called the Guildhall Insurance Company Limited which has carried on business in Canada since 1925. This English company, the Guildhall Insurance Company Limited, is in turn a subsidiary of the London Assurance Company which was incorporated in England by royal charter in 1720. It is now the intention that the English company called the Guildhall Insurance Company Limited will withdraw from business in Canada and the business previously carried on by that company will now be carried on by the company known as the Canadian Equity Insurance Company. It is for this reason that it is desired to change the name of the Canadian Equity Insurance Company to the Guildhall Insurance Company of Canada.

As this request is sometimes made in the house, perhaps I might mention that the great majority of the directors of the company are residents of Canada. There are ten directors in all, of whom eight are residents of Canada. If there are any other questions I will be glad to do my best to answer them.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the hon. member, where is the sponsor of the bill?

Mr. Wahn: I believe the sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Asselin), is a member of the defence committee and is at present in Europe with that committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

ADANAC GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. J. H. Addison (York North) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-44, respecting Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Addison: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give the Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada a French version of its name. Hon. members might be interested in the background of the company. In September 1962 the company entered into the writing of non-standard automobile liability insurance, such as under age, over age and for those with previous losses and/or convictions in Ontario. In February 1963 the program was extended to Alberta and Quebec. The Quebec branch employs four full time employees to service the independent insurance agents throughout the province of Quebec who write insurance on behalf of the company. The intentions of the company are to open subsidiary offices in the city of Quebec when the need arises.

Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada is a wholly owned subsidiary of Delta Acceptance Corporation Limited. Delta is a Canadian company with 25 per cent of the shareholders resident in Canada. Fifteen to 20 per cent are resident in Europe and the balance are resident in the United States. Two thirds of the directors of the Adanac General Insurance Company are Canadian citizens. I will be glad to try and answer any additional questions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

TRIASSIC PRODUCTS TRANSMISSION COMPANY

Mr. J. H. Addison (York North) moved the second reading of Bill S-40, to incorporate Triassic Products Transmission Company.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to allow Pacific Petroleums to incorporate Triassic Products Transmission in order to return to Westcoast Transmission Company Limited, Vancouver, a similar federal charter which Westcoast had given to Pacific so it could construct without undue delay an important new Canadian industrial project. This $33.5 million project, now nearly completed, includes the building of the world's largest natural gas treatment plant at Empress, Alberta, and a 577 mile, 6 inch diameter pipe line from there to Winnipeg. The plant will process raw natural gas for the Trans-Canada Pipe Line Company by removing by-products, including propane, butane and ether liquid hydrocarbons. This is a necessary procedure and it results in the production of pure pipe line gas, methane, which is then moved by Trans-Canada to markets across the prairies and eastern Canada, and liquids, which will be moved through the new 577 mile unit.

Definitive plans to proceed with the project followed an agreement in 1961 between Pacific Petroleums and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. Engineering and preliminary work proceeded at once and plans were made to appear before the national energy board for a permit to proceed. However, the company had to be incorporated to appear before the board and to incorporate an interprovincial pipe line required a federal charter. Due to pressure of business in the House of Commons during the session that began in September, the company decided that it would be difficult to obtain a charter in time to commence construction. Pacific, therefore, requested of Westcoast Transmission that it receive no payment other than expenses for the loan of the federal charter of Petroleum Transmission Company which had been incorporated by Westcoast in 1955. Westcoast agreed to the transfer of the charter on the understanding that as soon as Pacific was able, it would request incorporation of a similar company and return—the borrowed charter—back to Westcoast. Thereupon the company appeared before the energy board and subsequently received permission to build.

Westcoast considers the return of a charter to be important to its business, particularly today when oil and gas exploration is expanding northward. Within a short time it is evpected that a movement of oil or liquid hydrocarbons may be contemplated from the Yukon or Northwest Territories.

[Mr. Addison.]

Without a liquids pipe line, oil and by-products may be wasted in the production of natural gas. If Westcoast did not have this charter it could possibly face delays similar to those which would have been experienced by Pacific.

Westcoast Transmission Company, Vancouver, was incorporated by a federal act in 1949. This company, Canada's first major international pipe line, which went into operation in 1957, moved natural gas from northern Alberta and northern British Columbia down through British Columbia to the lower mainland and the Pacific northwest states. Building and operation of this pipe line has resulted in the greatest development northern Canada has ever seen. It is also an important factor in the development of the west and an important source of United States funds for Canada.

Pacific Petroleums was incorporated in British Columbia in 1942. This company is today one of Canada's major independent oil companies. Pacific found and pioneered the natural gas fields of British Columbia and for many years staked its future on the development of the north. Pacific sponsored Westcoast Transmission to bring these large new reserves to market, and it saw Westcoast through nine years of hearings in Alberta, Ottawa and Washington, D.C. Today the two companies have been entirely split apart with different management and different fields of operation. Pacific still maintains a share interest in Westcoast.

Both Pacific Petroleums and Westcoast Transmission qualify as companies 25 per cent of whose shares are available for purchase by Canadians.

Both companies were founded by Canadians, and shares have been traded since they began in business on Canadian stock exchanges. In the case of Westcoast it is 63.12 per cent Canadian owned. Pacific Petroleums is today 46 per cent owned by Phillips Petroleum Company, the remainder of these shares are available to Canadian purchasers. As of the moment, more than three million shares, representing 10,650 shareholders, are held in Canada.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments with respect to this bill, not so much with regard to the principles underlying the measure itself but as to the purpose behind it to which the hon. member for York North (Mr. Addison) has referred.

My eye was caught by an item which appeared in the Globe and Mail on October 18 last with regard to the reference of this particular bill to a committee of the other place. I do not think I am entitled to go into detail, and I do not intend to do so. The headline in the newspaper said: "Swap of Pipe Line Charters Causes Flurry in Senate". Some indication is given in this article of what took place before that committee. I attempted to check the minutes but I found that, apparently, with regard to this particular matter there were no minutes of the proceedings in the other place. Consequently, it is impossible for any member who may be interested to follow what happened there, what was said and what reasons were advanced to support the request made in this particular measure.

I hope, therefore, that if and when this proposal goes before a committee there will be a full inquiry as to the purposes behind the incorporation which is sought in this instance. It may well be that in certain cases there is perfect justification for an exchange of charters, as seems to be the case in this instance, but I do think a heavy burden lies on those who seek the special privilege which is involved in the granting by parliament of a private charter of incorporation. If these charters are to become the subject of traffic, sale, or agreement made outside parliament we should be entitled to the fullest knowledge of the circumstances. As I say, there may be a good explanation, but I hope that when this matter goes before the committee there will be a thorough inquiry into the particular aspect I have raised, so that when the bill comes back to the house members who are interested may be able to make up their minds as to the disposition of this matter, based on the answers to questions which have been asked in the committee.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak only briefly about some of the provisions in the bill. First of all, I should like the house to know that the gas treatment plant referred to by the sponsor of the bill is located in my constituency and, of course, the beginning of the pipe line will also be there. As he pointed out, a great deal of work has been done on the construction of the plant. There is no doubt in my mind that it is an asset to Alberta and to Canada, particularly to that part of Canada because it has brought about a rather large increase in employment opportunities in the area, which will carry on for some time.

I am not quite sure whether I understood the hon. member correctly with regard to one point. I believe he said that both the natural gas treatment plant which will remove the by-products and the pipe line to be built from that site to Winnipeg will be owned by Triassic Products Transmission Company. As I understood his remarks, that is what he said but I should like him to clear up that point. If this is not so, perhaps he might explain where ownership of the plant will lie.

Another point I am interested in is whether or not, if the bill passes, any of the shares of Triassic Products Transmission Company will be offered to the public. Furthermore, will there be any special effort to make them more available to Canadians than on the world market, if I may call it that? I bring up this matter because in Alberta we have had experience with regard to the Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company which was set up to gather and deliver natural gas to the border. As a matter of fact, the Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company will be delivering all of the gas from this plant and to the border. The act incorporating this company was a provincial statute, because the pipe line does not cross any provincial boundary. However, at the time of incorporation of the company there was an agreement that in the first instance all of the common shares would be offered to the residents of Alberta. If there was ever any doubt in the minds of Canadians that Canadians would invest in this kind of enterprise, that doubt was removed by what happened in this instance. The number of shares offered was oversubscribed about 15 times.

In the present case we have a somewhat similar situation, although the pipe line will not be confined to Alberta. It will start in Alberta and go across Saskatchewan into Manitoba. But I think it is fairly certain that this company is going to be what one might call a low risk investment and in some respects it could even be called a common carrier or a public utility. I contend that the shares of a company engaged in this kind of operation should certainly be offered to Canadians in the first instance.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) asked a question or two about the reason for the swap of charters. I think the reason this was done was to expedite the necessary construction. However, if we find in the committee that the swap of charters has already determined where ownership of the company is going to lie and has precluded Canadian ownership of the common stock in the first instance, then I think parliament will have to look at the situation very closely and perhaps make some changes in the regulations. I know that quite often when companies of this kind seek federal charters granting all of the powers necessary for the building of a pipe line some concession is made to them to allow them to expropriate land and so on. In view of the fact that we will be granting such concessions we would certainly be remiss in our duty if we did not also see to it that preferential treatment is given to Canadians, so that through the purchase of stock they may gain ownership of the company.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put it on record, as this is a pipe line bill, that it has been a tradition of our party to take an acute interest in pipe line bills, and I also wish to say that we look forward to a close examination of all the details with respect to the bill when it comes before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. The only comment I should like to make is that it seems most unlikely that the bill will be dealt with this session, since that committee already has some matters before it and will shortly have others to consider.

I should like to suggest to the sponsor of the bill that in the interim it might speed things up if he would have the company prepare information with regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and also with regard to the questions that were brought up in the other place when the bill was discussed there. We certainly will not object to second reading, but the fact that we may approve of the bill in principle is no indication that we will not take a stand against the bill or certain parts of it in committee, and later if it is returned to the house.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words on the bill. Several hon. members have adverted to the fact that some publicity was given to the proceedings in the other place with relation to the bill involving the incorporation of this proposed company. As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has said, it would not be appropriate or in order at this time to comment on this, but my understanding of the situation is that it was necessary to make an early start on construction and that it may well have been the political uncertainties that have dogged federal affairs in the last year and a half or two years which made it difficult for the particular group to come to parliament to obtain the necessary incorporation.

As hon. members are aware, the provisions with regard to the jurisdiction of the national energy board, and the procedure in that connection, make it essential that a special act of incorporation be passed by parliament so that the company may exercise the rights which the national energy board may grant to any particular company. Without purporting to have any expertise on this question, I simply suggest that perhaps this was the reason for the particular conduct engaged in to which reference has been made. This indeed will be one of the questions which will be before the committee and upon which I am sure all hon. members will be interested in having some comment.

I should like to make a few remarks with regard to the general principles underlying the incorporation of companies of this kind, and their implications for the economy of Canada, and particularly for the economy of western Canada. Over the years hon. members have, I believe, noted with interest and with approval, the secondary implications of the growth of the oil industry in western Canada. I refer in particular to the utilization of those by-products which are produced in the process particularly of treating sour gas and the process of refining oil, which have resulted in the development of chemical components which it has been found possible to make available in a commercial way through industrial processes. With particular reference to the gas industry, I would refer in this connection to the development of a very substantial Canadian production of sulphur.

I believe I am right in saying that sulphur is one product which, no longer than a decade ago, was an essential Canadian import, a product which was in short supply in this country and which we had to import from abroad. As a result of the development of the Canadian oil industry, and particularly the development of secondary industry based on the oil industry, Canada has not only ceased to be a net importer of sulphur but has become a major exporter of this product. Under these circumstances, this particular product has been added to the list of products Canada sells abroad.

This, in turn, has had a particular importance for western Canada. Over the years, as hon. members know, western Canada has been dogged by the fact that the area is a single or limited product economy. The diversification which is being built into western Canada's economy by reason of the exploitation of by-products has not only increased employment but also lessened the effects of certain other economic vicissitudes, such as a decline in the market value of some grains, problems of drought in the agriculture industry, and so on. Those adverse factors will not have the same impact they would have had 25 or 30 years ago.

Some reference has been made to the question of foreign ownership, and particularly to the question of whether or not the common stock of this particular company will be made available to Canadians. I think this is a question to which the committee will be interested in having some answers. I should like to make reference to the fact, as the hon. member for York North (Mr. Addison) has pointed out, that the company is being proposed for incorporation by Pacific Petroleums, a name that will be well known to many members of this house in connection with activities in the Canadian oil industry. The parent company, as the hon. member has pointed out, is one of the last of what unfortunately appears to be a diminishing breed in Canada, the independent oil company. So many of the major companies are now engaged in the business. However, it is a company in which there is a substantial proportion of stock available for acquisition by Canadian shareholders. The incorporation of this particular company, Mr. Speaker, will add another arrow to the quiver of possibilities available to the parent company, and therefore another area in which Canadians will have some opportunity to invest their funds. This is the kind of opportunity this government has been attempting to stimulate in Canada by various taxation measures. It is for this reason I feel this parliament should give serious consideration to the incorporation of this particular company, which would make possible the construction at an early date of the particular products pipe line in question, make it possible for the industries that will be dependant upon the pipe line to develop, make it possible for the products to be produced by those industries and for the pipe line itself to produce income, and particularly to produce Canadian dollars to ease the balance of payments situation which has become so pervasive in our discussions not only in recent years but since the war.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend to the house the approval of this particular measure, and I should like to commend to the hon. member for York North the suggestions made with regard to bringing items of information to the members of the committee, so that the committee may satisfy itself on these particular points and may report favourably upon this bill, which it seems to me will produce great economic benefits to all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I should advise the house that if the hon. member for York North speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. J. H. Addison (York North): In closing this debate, I should like to answer the questions posed by various members. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) raised a question about trafficking in pipe line charters. I should point out, as was pointed out in the other place, that Westcoast and Pacific Petroleums are both extremely substantial companies and have world-wide reputations. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), whose constituency is fortunate enough to be the site of one of these companies, asked a question concerning the ownership of this particular plant. The charter, if the company is incorporated, will be returned to Westcoast Transmission Company.

A question was also asked as to what percentage of ownership will be available to Canadians. Since Triassic will be returned to Westcoast Transmission Company, which is owned 26 per cent by Phillips Petroleum, and as of March, 1963, 63 per cent of Westcoast Transmission Company was owned in Canada, the hon. member will be able to judge for himself. A question was also raised as to how much of the funds have already been spent. I can say that between 85 per cent and 90 per cent of the funds have been spent on this pipe line, which is an aggregate amount of over $30 million.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) raised the point that it may be difficult to bring this bill before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I sincerely hope that we will have an opportunity to do so in this session, but if not in this session then early in the new session, so that all the questions may be answered by the officers of this company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

POINTE-AUX-TREMBLES BRIDGE

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard) moved the second reading of Bill S-41, to authorize the construction of a bridge and a causeway over the St. Lawrence river near the city of Pointe-aux-Trembles.

He said: The sole purpose of Bill S-41 is to authorize the petitioner, Developpement Central Ville de l'Isle Inc., which is a company incorporated under the Quebec companies act, to construct a bridge and causeway over the St. Lawrence river to connect two islands lying off the east end of the island of Montreal near the city of Pointe-aux-Trembles. The area of the islands is about 2,000 acres and about 90 per cent of the area is held under options by the company. It is intended to develop a residential community on the islands with a town to be established having the name of Ville de l'Isle.

The nearest island called Ile-aux-Asperges is about 500 feet off shore and the water between is navigable for very small river craft such as small motor boats. Ile-aux-Asperges will then be connected to Isle Ste-Therese by means of a short causeway crossing a very shallow stretch of water. Ordinarily, the only approval that would be required for a bridge of this sort would be by way of an order in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Public Works. However, because the bridge is over part of the St. Lawrence river, the approval of parliament is required. The bill, however, contains the usual safeguards, namely that the governor in council must approve the plans and location, and that the company must observe such regulations for the security of navigation as may be prescribed by the governor in council. The usual time limits are placed on the commencement and completion of construction.

The officials of the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport have already seen the plans, and the officials of those departments who were present before the Senate committee on transport and communications indicated that there was no objection in principle to the bill.

The bill in its original form provided for the construction of a toll bridge. However, when the bill was being considered by the Senate committee, the promoters suggested that all reference to a toll bridge be eliminated from the bill. It was felt that the matter of tolls was one for the provincial authorities who normally regulate such matters. The bill in its present form, therefore, merely gives authority for the construction of the bridge and provides the usual safeguards.

For the benefit of my hon. friend, the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) I would like to add that 100 per cent of the interest in the company is Canadian and French Canadian at that.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, before this bill is allowed to pass, I should like to ask the sponsor a few questions. I should like to know the names and addresses of the directors of the corporation. Also, if it is a good thing for individuals, I think it would be more sensible for the federal government and the province of Quebec to undertake jointly the building of such a bridge over the St. Lawrence river in the east of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against private enterprise. On the contrary, I am in favour of it, but I think this is a public utility and it would be advisable for the federal and the provincial governments to build the bridge themselves.

In the past, the province of Quebec had several toll bridges. In fact, there is still one at Terrebonne which causes some inconvenience and jeopardizes the development of a part of the Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm constituency.

If this bridge is built by private enterprise, the day will come when the federal government will probably have to purchase it, and this will give rise to serious trouble.

Before I resume my seat, I ask the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) to give us, first of all, the names of the president and the directors of that corporation.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, as far as—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I should point out that if the hon. gentleman speaks now he will close the debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) for the explanations he was kind enough to give us in English. He has an excellent command of English; however, I would like to ask him a few questions in French, and I hope that he will feel free to answer in whatever language he chooses.

If I understood correctly, the hon. member told us there was a deadline for the building of the bridge. Would he tell us what is that deadline?

Besides, could he tell the house if it is supposed to be a toll bridge?

I have another question. Could the hon. member tell us whether there has been an agreement between the federal and provincial governments about the building of the causeway?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that these questions should be cleared up before we go on with the second reading of this bill.

[Text]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words on the second reading of this bill. I hope the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) will not feel I am rushing in with undue haste if I welcome him as a social democrat in view of what he said just a moment ago, but I am happy to agree with him that where we have moved in the direction of public ownership of construction under public authority we should not reverse ourselves.

It seems to me that the building of bridges over navigable rivers, and particularly over a river like the St. Lawrence, which come under federal jurisdiction, is something which should be done by public rather than private authority. I feel that the sponsor of the bill should deal adequately with this question before he expects the house to give it second reading. Perhaps there are others who may wish to speak about the bill, and that will give the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) a chance to think about this and present his views with regard to it on another occasion.

We recognize the need for a bridge over this part of the St. Lawrence river. Obviously hon. members from that area are interested in it; but when an hon. member such as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm wants to slow down a bit so that this can be done by public authority rather than by private authority, in a word that was used here yesterday I say "Amen".

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): This is a rather unusual request, seeking permission for a private company to build a bridge over a navigable river. Other hon. members have asked many of the questions I wished to ask, but I still have one question. If this is a toll bridge, is there to be a toll paid only by the residents on the island, because I understood the sponsor to say that it was the intention to develop this island as a residential area? Will these people be given passes, or will they be in the position of prisoners who will have to pay tolls to get back and forth from their residences?

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I am slightly nonplussed by the questions asked a moment ago on the bill by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I do not see any relationship between the statement of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Because we would like to see public works done by public authority, the hon. member states that we are socialist fellow travellers. It seems to me that it is the socialist party which is getting closer to the Conservatives, for we are trying to draw back from socialism by creating new public services.

Mr. Speaker, we have a few relevant questions we would like the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) to answer. I feel that we should postpone the discussion on the bill, as that would give me a chance to get an answer to the questions I have in mind.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that it is six o'clock?

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock it is my duty to inform the house that the hour for private members' business has expired. As the business, pursuant to special order made on Thursday, October 17, to be considered at seven o'clock will be the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, does the house agree to go into committee of supply now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, vote No. 1, Department of National Health and Welfare. Shall this item carry?

1. Departmental administration, $1,973,500.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, in presenting to the committee the 1963-64 estimates for the Department of National Health and Welfare it should be remembered that this is a department which spends the second greatest amount of public money, being superseded only by the department of my good friend and colleague the Minister of National Defence. I believe that his expenditures represent some 24 per cent of the federal budget, as opposed to about 19 per cent for this department. I feel certain that the Minister of National Defence would be as happy as I to see the day when we can both offer this committee and the country a drastic cut-back in our estimates, if perhaps for somewhat different reasons. In the case of defence spending, I am sure all Canadians would be glad to see world tensions relax to a point where our military requirements would be less demanding, and I am equally sure we would all like to see Canada's economy boom once more to the point where the welfare needs of our people might also be diminished.

I think it will already be clear to all hon. members that these two objectives, the reduction of world tension and the expansion of our national economy, continue to hold the highest priority in the government's thinking and planning. As far as our nation's health is concerned, we will of course continue to spend whatever is necessary to assure Canadians the highest possible standards of health. May I assure the committee that there will be no skimping in this area. The blue book shows that the estimates for the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year 1963-64 amount to $1,204,910,550, or an increase over the last year of $104,908,300, or 9.5 per cent. This is roughly a normal annual increase due to the natural population growth and other reasonably constant factors. However, these figures do not include an additional amount of $3,500,000 made available to the department last year by way of supplementary estimate. That was mainly for the general health grants and hospital construction grants programs. The total amount that I have mentioned, this year as last year, excludes provision for payments under the Old Age Security Act. Until 1962-63 such payments were included within the department's estimates but were classified as a non-budgetary expenditure. As a result of the recommendation of the public accounts committee, however, the department was instructed to delete this item from the main estimates and has done so.

As usual, by far the largest part of the department's budget is earmarked for statutory outlays. These add up to approximately $1,105,700,000, or 91.8 per cent of the total vote. They include $542,900,000 for family allowances, $385,000,000 for federal contributions to hospital insurance, $110,000,000 for unemployment assistance, $38,700,000 for old age assistance—this, of course, is separate and apart from the old age security payments —$19,250,000 for disabled persons allowances, $5,000,000 for payments under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act, and $4,870,000 for blind persons allowances. The remaining 8.2 per cent, or approximately $99,200,000, represents items to be voted by parliament. It may be that hon. members would appreciate having a breakdown in general terms, and that $99,200,000 is to be spent in the following way: $31 million for payments to the provinces under the general health grants, $20 million for payments to the provinces under the hospital construction grants, $30,063,000 for medical services—which includes provision for Indian and northern health, quarantine, immigration medical, sick mariners, civil service health and civil aviation medicine programs—$2,890,000 for administration of the Family Allowances and Old Age Security Acts, $2,610,000 for our laboratory and advisory services, and $3,459,000 for administration of the Food and Drugs Act, the Proprietary or Patent Medicines Act and the Narcotic Control Act. I might point out here, Mr. Chairman, that the figure of $4,438,000 shown in the bue book as the increase in the voted items actually excludes the $3,500,000 made available as a supplementary estimate late last year. That, of course, means that the real increase is only $938,000, instead of $4,438,000, in this year's estimates over those of last year.

Two significant items contribute to this increase. One is the provision for the food and drugs directorate of an additional $653,000, more than half of which is designed to cover the first phase of a three year program to strengthen and expand the directorate. The second is the fact that provision for the first full year's operation of the welfare grants program has been increased to $500,000 from $250,000.

The estimates show an increase of $100,470,000 in statutory expenditures, which relate largely to higher federal contributions under two specific programs. The first is an increase of $60 million in the hospital insurance and diagnostic services program, where rising hospital costs, the growing number of hospital beds and greater bed utilization have all inflated the costs. The second is in unemployment assistance, where the development of this program results in an increase of $21,750,000 in the printed estimates. The increase in the provision for old age assistance, blind persons allowances and disabled persons allowances programs, totalling $11,820,000, results mainly from the revision of these three acts. The increase in family allowance payments of $6,900,000 results from the normal growth in the population of those under 16 years of age.

The committee is aware, of course, Mr. Chairman, that a $10 increase was recently voted in our old age security payments. The present forecast of an increase of $71,200,000 in old age security payments comprises $56,700,000 resulting from this $10 increase, which began last month, and the remaining $14,500,000 from the normal increase in the population of people over 70 years of age.

These expenditures by no means represent the total effort and scope of operations of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Indeed, as many hon. members know, we have been stepping up our activities in a number of directions. Much preparation has already been carried out in connection with the Canada pension plan and, as the house is aware, it remains our firm intention to introduce the necessary legislation as soon as possible. When this measure becomes law, it will give this country one of the finest social welfare programs available anywhere in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Miss LaMarsh: I thank my hon. friend for his signal of approval.

Mr. Knowles: That is a go ahead signal.

Miss LaMarsh: I am sure my hon. friend will let me go ahead with my speech, and I propose to do so. Discussions are now going on with regard to the Canada pension plan at the technical level with delegations from both the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario in order to see how the federal plan and the provincial plans may be meshed together. I might add that the Canada pension plan will be, as many hon. members already know, placed on the agenda of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference on November 25 and 26. As far as this department is concerned, Mr. Chairman, those will be a busy two days. Simultaneously with the federal-provincial conference we will be holding another conference on the reported connection between cigarette smoking and lung cancer.

The hon. member for New Westminster sent me notice of a question about this earlier today, and I might inform the committee now that we are hoping this meeting will provide for an exchange of viewpoints between many of the groups concerned and will reveal those areas in which co-operative action might be taken to ensure a co-operative and effective program.

The participating departments or agencies will include provincial departments of health and, in some cases, provincial departments of education; also represented will be a number of professional and voluntary organizations, such as the Canadian Medical Association, Association des Medecins de Langue Francaise du Canada, Canadian Public Health Association, National Cancer Institute of Canada, Canadian Cancer Society, and the Canadian Heart Foundation.

Tobacco growers and industry will be represented by the Ontario flue cured tobacco growers marketing board, the burley tobacco marketing association of Ontario, office des producteurs de tabac jaune du Quebec, and the Canadian tobacco manufacturing industry. In addition to my own department we will have representatives from the Department of Agriculture. All told, we are counting on 60 delegates to the conference.

As many hon. members are aware—indeed, questions on the matter have been posed to me in the last few weeks—the government is also currently reviewing with the provinces the question of old age assistance payments, disability allowances and blind persons allowances. As hon. members already know, this will be an item on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference to be held in a week or so, and it will be discussed as part of the item with a number of cost-sharing programs.

In the area of food and drug control, Mr. Chairman, a matter which has received even greater attention in the last year owing to the distressing thalidomide matter, we have already taken action to implement recommendations relating to the introduction of new drugs, and to the tightening of quality control by the manufacturer. New regulations covering these areas were put into effect quite recently, and the staff of the food and drug directorate has been strengthened accordingly.

One other program to which we are paying special attention in view of public interest is that of radiation protection. Authorization has recently been given for the establishment of an advisory committee drawn from universities and other private agencies to sit with our own experts and assist them in the supervision of our radiation protection program. I might add that the division concerned will be moving to a new and specially constructed building on February 1 next. My department is eagerly awaiting the report of the royal commission on health services. Our latest information is that it should be available toward the end of the year, and I am sure all hon. members look forward to an opportunity to peruse this study. All in all, with the funds available to the department as outlined in these estimates, I feel that we will be in a good position to achieve our one basic objective—to make Canada an even healthier, happier and more secure country in which to live.

Mrs. Casselman: Mr. Chairman, may I begin by mentioning that the former minister of health and welfare, the hon. member for Perth, is unavoidably absent at this moment owing to a previous commitment; hence my beginning the debate on behalf of our party. However, he will be here within the hour.

May I at the outset express my personal good wishes on the floor of this house, although I have expressed them privately to the minister, for her very good health during her tenure of office. I will not elaborate on that, but I do wish her well and hope she has much personal satisfaction and a sense of achievement from her very heavy schedule. There is a general desire among the members of our party to facilitate the passing of estimates generally, particularly these estimates tonight. Therefore, I will endeavour to express only a broad interest in all aspects of the department's efforts, and also to avoid the very obvious controversial aspects of some of the problems facing us in the future. I will endeavour to keep my comments on the estimates for the year 1963-64 to a minimum and as concise as possible.

We in this country happily enjoy the second highest standard of living in the world, which brings with it peculiar and particular problems, problems peculiar to a country adjoining another country with ten times the population. The question is asked on all sides how our services are paid for. This places a very heavy responsibility of leadership upon any government, a very heavy responsibility on Canadian citizens in their requests and desire for services. The Minister of Finance has warned us that unless the national budget is moved toward balance Canada will find itself on the rocks. This is a comment which is well made, but it is easier made in opposition than in government. I wish to express my great sympathy for the Minister of Finance, considering the staggering job he has to do. Businessmen are constantly criticizing government, and I presume they will continue to do so for incurring expenditure which, they fear, will cripple the economy. We must pay regard to such criticism, if we are to maintain the respect of businessmen, who, after all, must face the problems of heavy world competition, and if we are to maintain the respect of the Canadian citizens whose money we are spending.

We must keep uppermost in our minds means by which measures necessary for our national health and welfare can be taken simply and economically. Such an approach has been adopted by many people over the years, particularly by the able staff of the department of health and welfare. When I was connected with the department I noticed how generously and unselfishly the staff worked to meet sudden and unexpected demands on their time and energies. I think it is up to members of this house to meet the social problems which confront us in the same spirit, when it comes to the working out of social policies. We know that the attention we give to health and welfare problems affects our daily lives and personal happiness to a large extent, since it is closely connected with social order and social harmony in our country. I am sure that no one inside or outside this house has any quarrel with the theory of hospital insurance. It is needed, useful and right. But the justice of its administration is something which must be watched carefully and constantly. According to the estimates of 1959-60 the cost of hospital insurance was about $150 million. This year's estimates show the cost to be $285 million, an increase over last year as the hon. lady has stated, of more than $60 million. We realize that to some extent the increase was inevitable due to an increase in the number of hospitals and in the number of people using and staffing the hospitals. In 1958 we almost doubled the amount of federal assistance given to hospital building, alterations and renovations. No one could quarrel with this step, having regard to the improvement in the health of Canadians and in our society generally which has resulted; but from my own observations and from comments made by doctors it seems to me there is an area of outpatient assistance where the service might have been strengthened. One hears of many cases where patients, particularly chronic and elderly patients, go to hospital because their families for one reason or another cannot afford to keep them at home, though they would wish to do so if it were possible. It may be that a relatively slight increase in expenditure on public health nurses who could visit such cases would be helpful in meeting the needs of patients of this kind.

Undoubtedly, many ideas could be obtained as a result of concentrated efforts, working in co-operation with hospital boards, doctors and all groups interested in the care of the sick. I urge the minister to encourage a continuance of grants by which assistance is given to research into social problems, and to the training of essential workers in this field. It seems to me it would be penny wise and pound foolish to go on indefinitely increasing the already high cost of the care of the sick if we did not pay equal attention to research into cure of disease. Not only should we pay the closest attention to research in our own country but we should improve our communications with other countries and with organizations such as the World Health Organization, so as to be able to take the best advantage of all the work which is being done outside Canada in this field. I feel that in an age of greatly increased research this is one way in which we may be able to reap benefits and eventually avoid the skyrocketing costs of illnesses which we do not yet know how to cure. Along the same lines, I would urge the minister to continue to pay attention to the fitness and amateur sports program, in which I am personally much interested and which, I believe, has a direct relationship with what I have just said about the necessity of research into illnesses and diseases. Both lead towards the goal we should all like to see attained. Both constitute a definite and positive approach to health problems in Canada.

In an effort to avoid repetition I have tried not to deal with particular aspects of the work of the department which will be considered intelligently and constructively by other members of this party.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this seems to be ladies' day in the House of Commons. The hon. member for Winnipeg South was the first member to get the floor when we met this afternoon and thus far tonight the ladies have had all the say.

It is a pleasure to have an opportunity to take part once again in the debate on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I noted the interesting remarks with which the minister began her speech. She pointed out that the Department of National Health and Welfare is the second largest department of government in terms of the amount of money provided for it. The hon. lady indicated that 19 per cent of the federal budget is appropriated to the Department of National Health and Welfare. I think it is profitable to reflect on this for a moment, and to remind ourselves that the word "health" did not appear even once in the British North America Act of 1867. The word "hospitalization" appeared a few times, but the word health not at all. The fact that we now have a Department of National Health and Welfare, with a budget the size of the one before us, indicates the degree of social change that has taken place in the century during which this country has been in existence, as it indicates the importance of the tasks which are the responsibility of the present minister.

I noted too the minister's expression of hope that the sums of money required by the two largest spending departments might in due course be pruned somewhat. She said that the reasons for seeking to cut down the expenditures of the Department of National Defence and the Department of National Health and Welfare were different. I agree with her that the moneys we are spending on defence we hope one day to be able to cut back, and I agree with her there are some kinds of expenditures that are appropriated for her department that we hope we can cut back, expenditures such as unemployment assistance which could be cut back if we had full employment, expenditures perchance on pensions for disabled and other conditions if by programs of positive medical research, such as those just referred to by the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas, we could improve the health of our people. But I think it would be both an illusion and a mistake to suggest that welfare payments generally should be pruned.

I suppose this is a matter of definition, a matter of semantics, and I am sure if the minister and I discussed it a little more fully we would find ourselves in agreement. If by welfare payments one means payments to overcome needs that should be avoided or corrected, yes, we hope the need for such payments can be reduced. But if by welfare payments one means such programs as old age security and the Canada pension plan, which I was glad to hear confirmed again tonight and applauded on the Liberal side of the house, if by welfare payments one means money spent on health care, hospitalization, medical research, let us not anticipate these expenditures being pruned. Let us accept it as a responsibility of our kind of society to do more of this kind of thing on a civilized, on a social, basis. In those terms I should like to amend the minister's statement by saying that I hope the estimates of the Department of National Defence can be pruned so that she, or rather her department, whoever the minister may be, can have more of that money in the not too distant future.

I think it is good that both the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas have drawn attention, even in their brief speeches tonight, to the broad range of interests and responsibilities of the minister's department. It not only has the responsibility for pension programs and for hospitalization and health insurance measures, on which I intend to spend most of my time, but it deals with such matters as the control over foods and drugs, research and so on. Another brand new item that not only was not thought about when the British North America Act was drafted but was not thought about not very many decades ago is the question of protection against radiation. These references that have been made both by the minister and by the previous speaker indicate, as I say, the broad range of responsibilities of this department, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare is quite justified in a feeling of pride that it is her honour to preside over such an important department.

So far as this party is concerned, though we share with other members a desire to deal with the estimates of all departments as expeditiously as we can, we do feel we are dealing again tonight with one of the most important services to our people provided by the government of Canada, in co-operation with the governments of the provinces and at other levels, and we think it is a constructive use of our time to have a thorough discussion of the various aspects of this department. The previous speaker indicated that other members of her party would be dealing with some of the specific subjects and the same is true for members of our party. Other members who will follow me will be dealing with matters of research, mental health and various other aspects concerning which we think there should be a tremendous increase of activity on the part of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

I should like to speak for a few moments now on the so-called welfare section of the work of the department. The department is, as we all know, divided into two general divisions with two deputy ministers, one a deputy minister of welfare and the other a deputy minister of health. The programs that come under the welfare branch of the department have already been alluded to tonight, old age security, old age assistance, the Blind Persons Act, the Disabled Persons Act, the Family Allowances Act, unemployment assistance and so on. These are programs, of course, that the fathers of confederation never dreamed of. Some people look at them in terms of their huge cost to the Canadian taxpayers. We think it is a mark of growth and a mark of maturity in a country like ours that we have reached the point where we do go in for these transfer payments, or whatever you may want to call them, where we do have this co-operative effort as a people to provide for the security and the needs of our people.

We think that one of the best jobs that the Canadian parliament has done for the Canadian people in the last few decades has been to develop programs of old age pensions, old age security, old age assistance and all the other programs we now have. But, Mr. Chairman, the fact that we have got these programs should not leave us feeling that there is nothing more to do. Every one of the programs now on the statute books, every one of the programs now in effect, needs improvement.

I am going to leave the question of old age security and its companion piece, the Canada pension plan, to the end of this group of programs about which I want to say a few words, and mention the others. Old age assistance, the program under which a pension of up to $65 a month with a means test is paid on a 50-50 basis by the provinces and the federal government, obviously needs improvement right away. I know the minister's answer will be that this is going to be discussed at the forthcoming two day federal-provincial conference, and it certainly is going to be a very busy two day period. Frankly, I think all the other departments should stay away from the conference. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare needs the whole two days herself with the provincial representatives, once she starts dealing with these things.

Take old age assistance, to begin with. Many people in Canada today, even though they are able to understand the federal nature of our government and the difference between provincial responsibilities and federal responsibilities, cannot understand why the pension is now $75 a month for those 70 years of age and over but only $65 a month for those between the ages of 65 and 69. I know that to make that change means that one has to make all the other changes as well. I know this puts an extra burden on the provinces, and that one has to consider all of the welfare responsibilities of the provinces; but I plead with the minister to take all the time she can get out of those two days with the provinces, so that decisions can be made at the conference and so that progress can be made on these matters without interminable delay.

The same is true of the pension for the blind. It is still at the $65 figure. This pension, as we all know, is paid 75 per cent by Ottawa and 25 per cent by the provinces. Here again, those who are receiving the pension cannot understand why it has not been raised above the $65 figure the way it has for those 70 years of age and over. The same is true of those on the disabled persons allowance. In referring to it, I want to mention also that this is one of the programs which needs a particular review. I have in mind especially the definition of total disability and the list of requirements that are in the act and in the regulations in order to qualify for this pension.

There are a number of people, as all of us know, who by ordinary standards seem to be totally disabled, seem to be unable to work, but who are denied this pension. Sometimes it is because they can feed themselves, which is about all they can do. It is incredible that they should be denied the pension. I run into cases where the man of the family is disabled and unable to work. He still is a man; he still feels he would like to be doing something that would contribute towards the upbringing of his family. The wife has to go out to work because the disabled persons allowance, by itself, would not provide sufficient income. She makes enough that the means test comes into play and he cannot draw any portion of the disabled persons allowance. This cuts two ways. On the one hand, he does not get the money needed to help bring up the family and, on the other hand, he is also hurt in his spirit because he feels he is becoming nothing but a dependant on his wife.

I am raising problems here to which there may not be an immediate solution. But I suggest there are human angles to this legislation as well as financial angles, which call for the legislation to be reviewed. It was a good day in parliament, and I remember it very well, when after years of pressing for it we got a disabled persons act. It was a good day when we got all these other programs. However, let us not think that because we have them, because the administration is handling them in a routine way, all the problems are solved. All of these programs need to be reviewed. Later on in this debate tonight, other members will mention other programs.

Then, there is the family allowance program. I know that others who will take part in this debate will have plenty to say about that. It is quite a long time since the amounts paid by way of family allowance were fixed, and they have never been changed in any real sense from the beginning in 1945. Today we have only two levels of payment rather than four, as was the case at the start. In any event, the maximum amount of the family allowance has not been changed since the act first came into effect on July 1, 1945. There have been many promises across the years to increase the amount of the family allowance. There have been many promises in recent years, particularly by the party now in power, to extend the family allowance beyond the age of 16 for those who are still in school. As yet, we have seen no sign of anything of this nature.

I trust I have said enough in respect of these various programs that come under the welfare branch of the department to substantiate my suggestion that they need to be reviewed. I recognize the state of federal-provincial relations in this country. I recognize the virtue of co-operative federalism to which the Minister of National Health and Welfare made reference the other day. This is an expression which I think, so far as political parties in this country are concerned, was first given currency by this party in the program we adopted at our founding convention in 1961. I am glad to see that it is now in such general use. But let us not allow the need to consult result in interminable delay. Consult not for two days but for two weeks, and keep at it. Let us get these various programs sorted out, so that some of the feelings of injustice, some of the sufferings our people are enduring, are overcome.

I have left to the last of the items coming under the welfare branch of the department the joint question of old age security and the Canada pension plan. From now on, there is no question but that these two items are companion pieces; these two programs go together. Our movement started supporting some years ago a two-stage pension plan. We called for an improving of the universal pension by bringing it to the higher amount it is now, $75, and building on top of that a contributory pension plan for all our people. I say quite frankly that we were delighted when the Liberals started talking in language similar to ours. We were pleased when the Liberal party made a promise to the electorate in 1962 and 1963 that a two-stage pension plan such as we had advocated would be brought into effect. I need not at this time repeat the remarks I made on October 29 during the grievance period at the end of a supply debate to which the minister responded. I simply remind the committee that we think we are reflecting the views of the country generally when we express our regret that the plan that was promised so specifically in the election campaign, promised so precisely in the speech from the throne, is to be delayed.

I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare to work as hard as she possibly can to sell this plan to her own cabinet colleagues, to sell this plan to the provincial governments with whom she will be meeting on November 25 and 26. I call upon her to launch various programs of education, if she will, to sell the idea of the Canada pension plan. I think it can be sold to the Canadian people. I think it is disgraceful, and I might use a stronger word, the job against the Canada pension plan that has been done by the insurance companies and other vested interests. I noted what the minister said on October 29, that the government is not free to spend public money to try to answer that program. However, the government has 125, more or less, Liberals over there. They are not very busy in the House of Commons. I am sure they are looking for something to do. They support the Canada pension plan. Every time one calls for its inauguration, every time the minister says it is still coming in, they applaud. Why not give them material, give them information on the plan, and give them the job of selling to the country the virtues and values to all the Canadian people of the kind of pension arrangements that are envisaged in the Canada pension plan.

If the minister is prepared to accept suggestions from me, I suggest she might put something in the hands of all members of parliament. I think the Liberals would be glad to do this job. I think every member of parliament would. I am not too sure, when I hear the complaints about the Canada pension plan that have come from members to my right, where that group stands. However, I believe even they could be sold on the idea. If the minister wants a specific suggestion, I remind her that a long time ago, before she ever thought of coming to parliament—as a matter of fact on July 29, 1944—there was laid on the table of the House of Commons a draft bill respecting health insurance, public health, conservation of health and prevention of disease. I am going to refer to this when I get to the health section of my remarks, but I mention it now in relation to pensions. At that point the government of that day was promising it was going to do something about health insurance in the immediate post-war period. It found a way—the record shows it and I could explain it to the minister—to lay on the table of the house a draft bill with no resolution ahead of it, no first reading, and no debate at all.

The draft bill was tabled, printed and widely circulated. As a matter of fact Liberal candidates used it extensively during the 1945 election campaign as an indication of what they would do; but my point in raising this is that I think the minister could find a way to lay on the table of the house a draft bill of the Canada pension plan. There can be the safeguarding kind of note that makes it clear this is not the final form, that it is subject to change after consultation with the provinces and after reviewing various facts, but I think it would be a help to the job of education if she did so, or if some such piece of literature were made available.

The white paper that she tabled on July 18 was an excellent document, but I have run into people who do not see it that way. They do not think it explains things in detail. I am satisfied it does, but if in addition to the white paper we could have a draft bill or some such document for the public to see it would be an awfully good idea.

There are other things to be done. The minister's speech, or at least the speech made on her behalf on September 30 in Toronto, was an excellent reply to the critics of the Canada pension plan. This is something which is not only the possession of the Liberal party and the present government, but it is also the possession of the parliament of Canada and the Canadian people. Let us have the objections brought out in the open, and if changes need to be made let us make them. But let us not lose the plan. Let us not have it go down the drain for want of our people knowing or understanding it, while its opponents, who have a vested interest, have a heyday in their fight against it.

I suggest that the minister consider presenting a draft bill, or referring the subject matter to a committee. In fact I think a tremendous job could be done by hon. members in selling this idea, and to do this at this stage I suggest would be extremely valuable.

As I indicated, Mr. Chairman, the Department of National Health and Welfare has its two main branches. I have spent my time thus far talking about the welfare branch, but there are the two branches, each being presided over by a deputy minister. As a matter of fact the hon. member for Winnipeg North, who will be following me a little later, will speak about one particular aspect of the health branch, but the one point I want to emphasize now is that we think the time has come for health insurance or medicare in this country.

I know that the Liberals get a little tired of my reminding them that sickness insurance, which was the language used then, was promised in those two words, plain as could be, by the Liberals in 1919. In 1944 this draft bill I have been talking about was laid on the table of the house, and it is included in the Journals of that session for July 29, 1944. There were also two or three reports about that time, huge documents, and all kinds of work was done on it.

The proposals were then laid before the federal-provincial conference of 1945, and across the years this idea has been held before the Canadian people. Meantime, of course, we get the propaganda of those interested in private insurance, that most people are covered. I thought Pierre Berton answered that very well in a recent article entitled "The Big Lie About Medicare Insurance", which made it clear that those who have some kind of medical insurance do not constitute 70 per cent of the total, as private insurance people claim, but that only 50 per cent have any kind of insurance, and something of the order of only 18 per cent have health insurance that is really worth anything in time of ill health or medical crisis of any kind.

These things add up to the urgent need in our time for a medicare or health insurance program, and there is no question but that the best way in which to have such a program in this country is similar to the hospital insurance legislation, for the federal government to pay a certain percentage of the cost—we think it should be a rather high percentage—leaving the administration of the program to the provinces.

If Quebec seeks some particular arrangement for itself, we think the government of Canada should be prepared to agree to that particular arrangement; but our plea is that the government not rest on its oars because it has got hospitalization on the statute books but that it move on in this very important field of medicare and health insurance. It took nearly 40 years from the first promise of sickness insurance in 1919 to get the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act on the statute books.

The Liberals got that act on the statute books, but it did not come into effect until they went out of office. I remember when they were in office and gave us this act we felt it suffered a deficiency in that it did not include tuberculosis and mental illness. Then the Liberals came across to this side of the house and tried to get the Tories, who succeeded them, to put into the act what they themselves did not want to put in it; and now they are back on the other side of the house again, but they are silent on these points.

This is another piece of legislation that needs to be improved. It all adds up to these two things, that the legislation we have in this field, whether it is on the welfare side or the health side, needs review and needs to be improved. This goes for all of the welfare programs and for the hospitalization and health programs. But, over and above the need for improving these things, we need early action on the Canada pension plan and medicare or national health insurance.

We know these things are costly and we know there are difficulties today, in the light of federal-provincial relations, in sorting these things out; but surely we Canadians are not people who are stalled in our tracks because things are difficult or costly. If they are worth while we can find a way; we can effect the necessary co-operation.

We think that these things that will bring a better day in terms of the security and the health of our people are worth while, and I call upon the minister and the government to give parliament and Canada a lead so that we can get on with these important programs.

[Translation]

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Chairman, if there are estimates which are hard to criticize, it is truly those of the Department of National Health and Welfare. When the house is in supply, members of the opposition usually claim that the expenses are too high in certain fields and they try to make suggestions.

Since I have not yet heard such remarks, I would say that the opposition parties want the government to spend more in some respects. As far as I am concerned, if I had any suggestion to make, I would spontaneously mention family allowances, a topic which has already been dealt with by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Now, I feel that the most important question the minister will have to consider is that of assistance to large families. Indeed, she probably would just have to spend a short while with the Minister of Finance to have part of the revenue from the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials transferred to the heads of families who are out of work because construction has slowed down in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I must say that I somewhat sympathize with the Minister of National Health and Welfare whose political impartiality is well known, since she is now at the head of a department where she has to keep nearly all her party's election promises and try to please everybody.

I believe that it is customary to make, on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the most attractive promises during the election campaign. I feel therefore sorry for the minister, Mr. Chairman.

This afternoon, I was looking at the British North America Act. I think the minister would do well to look up subsection 16 of section 29. She would find that her only responsibility, according to the constitution, would be as "Minister of the Quarantine", since at that time, this was about the only power allotted to the federal government in the field of national health and welfare. That would probably relieve the minister, and during her leisure hours she could go on with her studies of constitutional law, diplomacy section.

Mr. Chairman, I must direct my remarks also to the Minister of Finance since, although it is up to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to fulfil election promises, it is up to the Minister of Finance to foot the bill.

I think the problem we have to face is a harrowing one for both ministers. The best example we have in this respect is the pension plan, which has been promised, which we have been and are still waiting for and which we shall be waiting for, for a long time to come.

That is why I say to the minister that if she really wants to make her department a success, she should go back to the constitution and look after "quarantine", and this is just a preamble to my remarks on her estimates.

I considered the estimates which have been presented and I found that at least ten and even 12 joint programs are mentioned, plans for a federal contribution to certain provinces, including the province of Quebec and several other provinces, in the welfare field.

This gives me an opportunity to express my opinion on a word everyone uses now and which used to make the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre happy; he said it was coined by his party and marked the beginning of a new era, the era of a new federalism. All parties and all provinces talk of the new federalism.

The other day I was listening with some interest to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) when he dealt briefly with this aspect of the question. The hon. member for Three Rivers has been criticized in certain places and congratulated in others. But it is the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who drew my attention to this, when he introduced a motion to censure the government's attitude concerning federal-provincial relations. And when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle blamed the federal government for bringing in measures that came under provincial jurisdiction without consulting the provinces, I must admit that he was right.

Because we heard again this evening accusations which are often levelled in the house at the Conservative party who, allegedly, has done nothing during the six years it was at the helm, I feel I must praise the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and the Conservative party for their action in the fields of federal-provincial relations, of bilingualism, and biculturalism; they have certainly achieved more in six years for the province of Quebec than Louis St. Laurent when he was in power. I have to admit it. It is true that when the Conservative party was in power, it tried to complete the work left undone, while from various sides one heard cries of "too little and too late". It was not really too little or too late, though it might have seemed to be too little because patience was wearing thin.

Quebec had waited a long time for action. I must give its due credit to the Conservative party, who has really tried, and opened the door to the improvements that are brought in today by the party in power. Quebec was looking towards the Liberal party, and waiting hopefully for a solution. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle is quite right on that point.

Since it came to power, the present government has only brought down two or three pieces of legislation, and even so it has been compelled to beat a hasty retreat at the last moment. If Messrs. Daniel Johnson and Rene Levesque had not intervened, the newcomers of the Liberal party, set against any centralizing measure, would have been overcome by the old guard, who were hardened centralizers.

Does all this mean that on this matter, the present Prime Minister, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) are insincere? No, I do not think so. But after listening during several weeks to speeches in this house, after listening to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said recently, I thought to myself that what is wrong, is that the very concept of confederation is out of true. We got to a point where the Prime Minister only has to invite over a representative from each of the provinces of the country and tell them: "Now, I am going to interfere with your jurisdiction, if you see no objection." If those representatives say they have no objection, everything is legalized and becomes constitutional. And we are expected to believe that the principle is safe. When I hear Daniel Johnson say that there is no constitution—

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but may I remind him that we are now discussing the estimates of the national health and welfare department? I should like him to relate his observations to the item now before the committee.

[Mr. Girouard.]

Mr. Girouard: Very well, Mr. Chairman. I expected that invitation and I have a reply all made out. I want to help the minister and, when I finish my remarks, to tell the hon. lady in what way it would be easier for her to award that part of taxation to the provinces, because I think that her burden is already excessive and she should reduce it.

When speaking of taxation as being a financial burden for the Minister of National Health and Welfare—I see, Mr. Chairman, that you will presently urge me to conclude my introductory remarks—I recall Mr. Daniel Johnson's saying that federal-provincial conferences were replacing the constitution. He was perfectly right.

Mr. Chairman, to come to the point which you want me to discuss, I would like to mention that when the government legislates in matters of defence, no province is consulted, the bill is introduced and either accepted or rejected.

Why? Because, at the time, the government feels that the matter is within its jurisdiction. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) seems to call me to order, because I am speaking of provincial autonomy. I hope that the Chair will forgive me.

When the government calls a federal-provincial conference to discuss a pension plan, it admits right from the start that it will have to legislate in a field which is not under its jurisdiction. To take all the trouble of gathering the representatives of the ten provinces around the conference table, just to ask for their permission to legislate. To my mind, that is the great weakness of our present system.

I did not want to engage in a discussion on confederation versus federation, but as the estimates before us give me a chance and as we have prominent professors of political science in the house who do not want to do so, I shall try to explain why those concepts are all wrong. I think that a true confederation is a union of ten independent provinces pursuing a common aim.

A federation, or the new federalism which is so much discussed, is a different thing. It means a group of states or provinces gathered around a central mandatory government.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it seems to me that his comments are in no way relevant to the item presently before the committee and I would invite him to speak more directly to the item presently before us.

Mr. Girouard: Very well, Mr. Chairman. To revert to the estimates, I shall take into my hands the blue book, at page 256. When I look at the various appropriations I see this:

Health services, including assistance to the provinces.

A few millions.

General public health grants, to assist the provinces.

A few millions.

Hospital construction grants to assist the provinces.

A few millions.

Contributions to provinces under agreements entered into pursuant to hospital insurance act.

A few millions.

Medical services.

A few millions.

These few votes I have mentioned have to do with provincial grants. This is the point I want to make. Now, if the present government, if the Minister of National Health and Welfare is able to bring up an estimate of the contribution which the central government may make to the provinces, it means those millions which are to be returned to the provinces must originate somewhere.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) stated that if we were to hand back to Quebec 25 or 50 per cent of her taxation rights, we would still have to levy taxes and go and get that money from the same place.

In my view, if the Minister of National Health and Welfare handed back to the provinces their responsibilities at the same time they got back their taxation rights, this share we have in the estimates would not constitute an obligation because, if the province of Quebec could tax up to 100 per cent, 80 per cent or 70 per cent as she wished, at the same time she could take over her own full share as regards old age pensions, family allowances and other social benefits.

I feel I have come fairly close to the matter now before us. At this point, may I say that when the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) told us the other day that, if the provinces were to become a bit too powerful, this could weaken Canada, I do not think he quite meant it that way. In any case, I disagree with him.

It seems to me that if instead of talking about a new federalism we really went back to the true spirit of confederation—for instance, in matters of aid to municipalities, family allowances or old age pensions—if we were to let the provinces have this field of taxation, the estimates at hand would perhaps be reduced by one fourth. Then it would be up to the provincial governments to talk about family allowances and every one would not be inclined to blame the federal government.

Mr. Chairman, I talked rather a long time about this matter—thanks to your patience I was able to explain why things are not going well in our federal system.

In my opinion, federal-provincial conferences, like the forthcoming one, can help just the same—

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member is going to talk about the next federal-provincial conference. May I ask him to come back to the vote now under consideration?

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Chairman, I wish that the question of the portable pension scheme could be settled at the next conference, but it will be necessary to come back to the spirit of confederation if a Canadian entity is to be achieved.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that the debate on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare gives me the opportunity to discuss the social legislation in general that this department administers.

In the last 30 years, the house has agreed to pass various social measures to help those Canadians who found themselves in a less favourable situation than their fellow citizens as a whole.

In fact, legislation to help children, families, old people, the disabled and the blind was enacted. And although those measures were meant to help those people, when the time came to implement them, they were found to contain provisions that made it impossible to attain the objectives we had in mind. That is precisely the point on which I want to call the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh). She should certainly consider my suggestions if she wants to help the government set right certain injustices.

Our legislation concerning old age security and old age assistance are examples of this.

Under those two pieces of legislation, if the head of a family has reached the age where he is entitled to the old age pension but his wife has not reached that age, both he and his wife have to live on a pension which was established for one person only. This kind of situation is not normal and should be set right. In my opinion, the Minister of National Health and Welfare should bring in an amendment to enable both spouses to get a pension even if the wife is ten years younger than her husband.

Both the Old Age Security Act and the Old Age Assistance Act should be amended along those lines.

Let us move on to the Disabled Persons Act. A short while ago, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) stated that, for the purpose of the act, the definition of total disability is very strict.

In fact, as mayor of the town of Beaupre, I was asked to study the case of certain disabled persons and to help them get a pension. That is how I came to realize that serious injustices were done because the definition of the word "disability" is much too strict. In that connection, allow me to speak of a man who had both legs and one hand amputated because they had been frostbitten. In fact, he had only three fingers left on the other hand. I tried to get a pension for that man and when I was turned down I had to tell them: Are you going to wait until he has his head cut off?

This is an anomaly that should be corrected at all costs in order to make this act more humane and to see that it serves the purpose for which it was enacted.

There is also another provision under this act that should not be applied. It is paragraph G-2, subsection 2, of section 3. This section provides that a disabled person is not entitled to a pension when husband and wife earn $1,980. It is utterly inhuman to oblige two persons to live on $1,980, more especially when one of them is disabled.

As far as the Blind Persons Act is concerned, the situation is somewhat different, in that two people are allowed to earn $2,460.

Now, what happens when a family head is disabled or blind? Because she wants to give a little more comfort to her family, to her children, in short, enable them to live as well or almost as well as their neighbours, the mother goes to work in order to earn a few dollars. When that happens, the officials of the department reduce the pension of the blind or disabled person, and that because these people have shown energy and courage in trying to improve their lot. They penalize them. They say to them: If you work too hard, if you earn too much money, we shall reduce your pension.

That is another anomaly which I suggest the minister should correct immediately.

Mr. Chairman, I come now to the Family Allowances Act.

During the last electoral campaign, supported in this by nearly all the other political parties, the Liberal party promised to increase family allowances and to extend them to age 18. As for us, we had asked that they be extended up to age 21.

Well, at the beginning of the present session, we suggested that family allowances should be increased and we even submitted a notice of motion to that effect. I should like to say that the comments we have received on that score have been, on the whole, rather favourable.

On June 17, 1963, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) said, as can be seen on page 1251 of Hansard:

> Our party is committed to extending family allowances to children at school to the age of 18 years. At the appropriate time, I am sure this legislation will be brought before this house to implement the commitment which was firmly made during the course of the election campaign. However, I presume one of the purposes of this measure would be to extend family allowances and make them the basis of a salary for students attending university.

The hon. member carried on for a little while, as if he were not satisfied that we would thus be reminded that we had brought pressure to bear on the government since the beginning of the session in order to obtain an increase in family allowances.

On July 3, when the house was still dealing with family allowances, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) said, as reported on page 1806 of Hansard for that day:

> I conclude by saying that we have a policy on family allowances. We did mention it during the election campaign, and the program will be fully carried out but give us a chance to catch our breath. We must be given sufficient time to see what should be done. If that is not enough, do not forget that we did much more in 60 days—

Mr. Chairman, four months have gone by since the Minister of Justice asked us to give a breathing spell to the government. They must surely have caught their breath since then and they should be able today to increase family allowances, for if we fail to do so, we seriously wrong our Canadian families and our Canadian children. Since the beginning of this session, we have voted millions of dollars for large firms and municipalities, in short, we have voted millions for this and that.

I am in favour of these things, to improve markets, promote the economy. Our party supports all that.

But we also know that there are no better means of activating the economy than to increase the purchasing power of families all over Canada, because if it is distributed all over this country, it will promote the national economy and at the same time we shall solve a part of the unemployment problem by activating consumption which, in turn, will activate production.

I think it would be the most just and human means to activate the economy of this country.

Consequently, in view of the excellent steps taken by the government until now and in order to do justice to Canadian children, I move with the support of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare should, in the opinion of this house, consider the advisability of increasing family allowances as soon as possible.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman—

[Text]

The Chairman: I am wondering whether any member has any comment to make in connection with the validity of the amendment now proposed.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, as I intimated when I made my observations a few moments ago, I favour an increase in the family allowance. I do not intend to develop that statement; I just want it to be clear that it is from this viewpoint that I rise to make a comment on this amendment, because I am also concerned about our procedure in the House of Commons.

We are now in committee of supply dealing with estimates. What is before us at the moment is a resolution in accordance with citation 238 of Beauchesne, fourth edition:

Resolved that a sum not exceeding... be granted to Her Majesty for... for the year ending 31st March, 1964.

That is the only resolution which is before us.

Mr. MacNaught: Could I ask a question? What was the number of that citation?

Mr. Knowles: I was reading from the end of citation 238 which appears on page 201 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. Now I would ask members to look at citation 242 on page 203. The first paragraph is a lengthy one. Let me read the last part of it:

Each resolution for a grant forms a distinct motion which can only be dealt with by being agreed to, reduced, negatived, superseded or withdrawn. The committee may reduce the amount of a grant by the omission or reduction of the items of expenditure of which the grant is composed. Here the power of the committee ceases.

Subparagraph 2 says:

The only motion allowed, when a resolution is under consideration in committee of supply, is that the amount be reduced or that the chairman leave the chair (either without making a report or to report progress on certain resolutions).

Subparagraph 3 states:

Each resolution can only be dealt with by being agreed to, reduced, negatived, superseded or, by leave, withdrawn, and the withdrawal can be made although the decision of the committee has been taken upon amendments proposed to the resolution.

Then, once again, follow the words:

Here, the power of the committee ceases.

Another sentence in the same paragraph states:

It is not allowable to attach a condition or an expression of opinion to a vote or to change the destination of a grant.

I think the point is quite clear, Mr. Chairman. I am all in favour of my friends in the corner trying to get the government to implement its promise to increase family allowances. I urge my friends to make all the speeches they want about the matter and to move their amendments at the proper time, but I plead with them to recognize the clearly established procedures in committee of supply. There are many other opportunities to move substantive amendments, but when we are in committee of supply we do not have the opportunity to move these expressions of opinion.

I make this as a contribution to the point of order debate, but I also make it as an appeal to my friends in the corner not to treat this as the kind of thing to appeal and to put the house in the ridiculous position of appearing to vote on the subject of family allowances, when we would not be doing that. What is before us now is the established and proper procedure of dealing with money votes, and the only thing we can do is vote for the item, vote against it or reduce it. We cannot change its destination; neither can we attach a condition to the vote. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think it is clear that the proposed amendment is out of order; but I hope that, even as you permitted me to speak on it, you will hear others who may wish to speak before you make your ruling.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. For the reasons given by the learned gentleman the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, if I may preface my remarks as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did, I too want to put our party on record as urging the government most strongly to fulfil its election promises concerning family allowances, but I do feel that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has expressed our viewpoint with regard to the amendment being out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could say a word for the attention of the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment. It seems to me that in doing so and in getting this expression of opinion from all parts of the house he has really accomplished what he is seeking to do, that is to say, to bring the matter forcibly to the attention of the committee. I think there is no question that the citations made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are perfectly correct. This amendment is not the kind of amendment that, under the rules can be moved at this time, and if we are to make progress and have order in the house we do have to abide by the rules.

It seems to me it would serve very little additional purpose to press a matter of this kind, and have a ruling, and so on, which could only take one form. In the interest of getting on with the business of the house, now that the hon. gentleman and those associated with him have had the opportunity to bring this matter very forcibly before the committee, I wonder whether the hon. member would not agree to withdraw the amendment.

In saying that, I might also say that the government has every intention, as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has said in the house as well as elsewhere on more than one occasion, of carrying out the undertaking given to the electorate about family allowances at the earliest practical time. But we cannot introduce it into these particular estimates at this particular time. Therefore, now that hon. gentlemen have accomplished what they set out to do, to bring this matter forcibly to the attention of the committee and to get the matter on the record, I wonder whether they would consider expediting matters by withdrawing the amendment.

Mr. Leboe: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment is out of order, I do not think there is any question of withdrawing something that is out of order.

Mr. Caouette: I thank the hon. member who has just spoken, but even if the proposed amendment is out of order I think it is up to the member who presented the amendment to withdraw it or to insist on a vote. According to my understanding of what the Secretary of State has said, in order to expedite the work of the house he is asking the hon. member for Charlevoix to withdraw the amendment. Personally I feel that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has given us enough information. It is true that we wanted to bring the matter before the House of Commons, and it is our hope that the Secretary of State and the government as a whole will take due notice of what we are asking for in the amendment. I would personally ask the hon. member for Charlevoix to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, just before the hon. member for Charlevoix speaks I should like to remind the government that we urged the Minister of National Health and Welfare to study the possibility attentively, and not too long ago—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order, please.

[Translation]

Would the hon. member for Megantic allow me to remind him that he cannot speak on the point of order now? If he intends to make any remarks, he can wait, for he will have the opportunity to do so during the debate. I recognize the hon. member for Charlevoix.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, having heard the expression of goodwill from all the parties in the house and being comforted by the promises which the Secretary of State has just made, I am pleased, in order to contribute to the progress of this debate, to withdraw the motion I have just moved.

[Text]

The Chairman: Has the hon. gentleman leave to withdraw the proposed amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, we have just been witnessing, a moment ago, another burst of demagogy—

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have just withdrawn my motion. Therefore, I submit that the hon. member for Lotbiniere has no right to say that I have acted in a demagogic fashion. Since I have withdrawn my motion, he has no right to debate it because it no longer exists.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. I made no reference to that motion, and here the hon. member—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member understands that he must not make any reference to what has happened. He must limit himself to the discussion of the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I am always eager to comply with the decision of the Chair, in the conduct of the discussions in the house.

I do not understand the emotion of my colleague from Charlevoix. I merely said that we had been witnessing a burst of demagogy, and that without any reference to anything whatever. I do not intend to talk about—

An hon. Member: You do not know what you are talking about when you say that.

Mr. Choquette: I do not intend to talk about the motion which has just been withdrawn. I merely want to make some remarks about the typically "oppositionist" speeches which we just heard.

It is obvious that the primary role of the opposition is to ask and to ask always more than it is possible to grant.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, we are now studying the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare and not the function of the opposition. If the hon. member wishes the opposition to withdraw, we are ready to do so in order to let him speak.

An hon. Member: Don't try to be witty.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I have not yet spoken three sentences and I am plagued with points of order.

An hon. Member: This is because you are not complying with standing orders.

Mr. Choquette: I am pleased to see that my hon. friends are afraid of the terrifying words I am about to say about the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare which we are studying tonight.

I am happy, as are all my colleagues, to see that the Liberal party has been a real pioneer in the field of social legislation.

We are indebted to the party now ruling the destinies of our country for the beneficial welfare legislation existing in our country because, in fact, the principle on which the government based itself is a very liberal doctrine which respects the dignity of the individual, recognizes the family as the basic unit of society, insures the security of the aged, protects those who are unemployed and provides the necessary care to the sick.

The Liberal party is responsible for all welfare legislation; knows how to administer it in accordance with our good parliamentary institutions.

We heard a moment ago some people asking for more from the government. I can say I believe, that we on this side of the house even more than the hon. members opposite, favour an increase in family allowances because in our estimation they are inadequate at the present time. And we are able to intercede for those who are in need just as well, if not better, than the obstructionists and the demagogues who sit across from us.

Mr. Chairman, there are members of the New Democratic party; at least they think. There are also the people—

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Is the hon. member allowed to call the members of the house demagogues? Is that a parliamentary word? As I lack experience since I am a new member I am asking you.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, be it parliamentary or not, I say again that they are demagogues.

Mr. Chairman, we have in this house members of the New Democratic party, who think; there are the Caouettistes, who talk; but there are on this side of the house people who think, talk and act. That is the difference between us and those who do nothing but make unreasonable demands, knowing quite well that it is impossible to comply with their requests.

Here I refer to Hansard of February 4, 1947. At that time, there was the hon. member for Villeneuve who is still sitting, but not for long. What did he promise? He promised at that time a dividend, and I quote his words literally—

The Chairman: Order. Once more I take the liberty of reminding the hon. member that he must limit his remarks to the estimates now before the committee.

Mr. Choquette: Then, Mr. Chairman, to revert to the estimates—

Mr. Caouette: On the point of order, when the hon. member for Lotbiniere wants to speak of a national dividend, it seems to me that this would come within the purview of the department of national health and I submit that he should be allowed to go on and talk about this national dividend.

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a question of privilege. Since I have the honour of sitting in this house, every time I rise it is always the same group on the other side who makes noise and prevents me from delivering the speech I am entitled to. This is the question of privilege I am raising. Would it be possible to stop the row made by those who disregard the dignity of this great parliamentary institution?

Mr. Gregoire: On the question of privilege, I should like to point out, with regard to the remarks of the hon. member of Lotbiniere, that last year when he was not sitting in the house, there were no such demonstrations and rows. This is simply due to the example he has been setting since the beginning of the session.

The Chairman: Order. There is obviously no question of privilege in the point raised by the hon. member. I ask him therefore to co-operate with the Chair and with his colleagues in the house by reverting to the matter under discussion, that is, the estimates now before the committee.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I was pleased to see the Conservatives cheering with the Social Crediters. Birds of a feather flock together.

As for the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare—from which I have never departed—I must say that when we mention the Department of National Health and Welfare we are practically speaking of a Liberal institution and I wish to insist on that point, Mr. Chairman. If this department is now showing such consistency—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Choquette: It is due to the impetus—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, each time I speak, always the same fruitless, shallow, useless and childish interruptions can be heard. I wish to state briefly and objectively my views in regard to the present Department of National Health and Welfare directed by a most intelligent and competent minister of whom we are proud.

Mr. Pigeon: Would the hon. member allow me a simple question? Does he feel that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is smart when she says that Quebec is a nazi province?

Mr. Caron: She denied ever having said that.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Choquette: That is such a simple-minded question that I choose to ignore it.

Canada's social legislation compares favourably with that of any other civilized country and we have a right to be proud of the present system which was set up not by people who had the habit of making pompous promises which could not be carried out but by people who could conceive a workable system. Thus the predecessor of the present minister—

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Since the beginning, the hon. member for Lotbiniere was to limit himself to the estimates now before us. He talked about everything, except the estimates. A moment ago, he spoke on a point of order; then he spoke on a question of privilege; he spoke about demagogy, but he still has to utter a word on the estimates now before us.

The Chairman: I understand that the hon. member for Lotbiniere wishes to lay down premises for the speech which he intends to deliver, and it is in that sense that I interpret his words. On the other hand, I agree with the hon. member for Megantic that this is not the time to make a statement on political principles.

Mr. Choquette: Do you have other questions to direct? Do you have other points of order to raise?

Mr. Gregoire: Stick to the estimates and everything will go along smoothly.

Mr. Choquette: If you have other objections, be kind enough to state them now.

Mr. Gregoire: No, just speak about the estimates.

The Chairman: The hon. member should address himself to the Chair.

[Mr. Choquette.]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, as I said, my remarks will be very short, because I only wish to underline—

Mr. Valade: All this makes no sense whatsoever.

Mr. Choquette: —the tremendous efficiency of the minister of health. I wish to point out the fact that public money and more particularly the moneys earmarked for that department have been spent very adequately according to our imperative needs. We should look after needy people, bring security to our senior citizens, think of families in want, help the unemployed, and adopt measures that would allow the sick to receive adequate and sufficient care. I maintain that such a program covers most of the citizens' needs. Having studied the estimates which are submitted to us tonight, I state without fear of being contradicted, that the program of the department cannot be bettered.

Mr. Chairman, there will always be room for progress and advancement. That, we are able to request. We, on this side of the house, and more particularly the members from the province of Quebec, also can exert some pressure on the government authorities in view of a wider public assistance being granted to those who are generally called the underprivileged.

Mr. Chairman, I shall conclude my remarks which will please my hon. friends; I see that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) did not like my motion yesterday.

Mr. Chairman, in order to finish my remarks, I shall say this: the federal-provincial conference—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago, you called to order an hon. member because he was speaking of the federal-provincial conference. Now, the hon. member for Lotbiniere also wants to deal with this matter. It seems to me that he too should be called to order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, the federal-provincial conference is due to start in the near future.

Mr. Gregoire: Order.

Mr. Choquette: During that conference, the pension plan, which may be a controversial matter, will certainly be discussed.

We should expect much from that conference, as it is to be hoped that it will work in great harmony, because this government's policy which is obviously based on what we have henceforward agreed to call co-operative federalism, may certainly give us hope.

The pension plan is becoming a compelling necessity and, once again, it will be another achievement of the Liberal government. Once again, we will be able to claim that the whole social legislation in Canada is the essential and vital work of the Liberal party.

Mr. Chairman, that is relevant to the matter before us tonight, since the Department of National Health and Welfare will have to incur additional expenditures for the administration of that plan. That is relevant to the estimates before us, with all due deference to my hon. friends.

Mr. Chairman, once again we will be able to contemplate that wonderful policy which is aimed at the welfare of all citizens.

In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I say that providing we give jobs to the unemployed, providing we give security to the underprivileged, providing we give our farmers an equitable income, the relations between our provinces, the relations between the two great racial groups in our country will become harmonious. That is the wish I make and which all of us are expressing from the bottom of our hearts.

Mr. Valade: May I ask the hon. member for Lotbiniere a question?

Mr. Choquette: If the question is as simple as the one asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—

Mr. Valade: My question is as simple as the hon. member who just took his seat.

Did I understand the hon. member for Lotbiniere to say a while ago that the estimates brought down by the Minister of National Health and Welfare were the best estimates he had ever seen introduced in this house?

Mr. Choquette: No, never. I never said that.

Mr. Gregoire: He did not even talk about the estimates.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, once again I rise on a question of privilege, and I am putting it this way: lately, this parliament has been taken to task in certain newspaper articles for the childish manner in which its members have been behaving. Now, we have here the situation where an hon. member asks me a question and, before I can begin to answer, once again we have this shouting and hollering from the other side of the house.

I have a right to protest for the sake of the respect and dignity to be shown in this house, because ever since the "Caouettists" have been disgracing parliament and our race, we have been accused of making fools of ourselves.

Mr. Valade: Did the hon. member for Lotbiniere answer my question?

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Springfield.

Mr. Slogan: In the first instance, Mr. Chairman, I want to extend my best wishes to the minister and her parliamentary secretary on this auspicious occasion when they are presenting for the first time the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I am sure they will agree it is a very fine set of estimates, and they may thank the former minister for diligent work in that regard.

The hon. member for Grenville-Dundas said that we in this party were willing to shorten our speeches, and the number of them, and were prepared to see the whole of the estimates pass this evening. I am sure the minister now sees she is being hampered by her own party, by one of the most irrelevant, inconsistent—

Mr. Pigeon: Stupid.

Mr. Slogan: I could use many other adjectives about the speech of the last speaker. Certainly if anybody is making a farce out of parliament, it is the government members themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Slogan: I was very pleased to see the minister come into the house today her very affable and amiable self. I am glad she discarded that "bull in a china shop" attitude which she sometimes displays. I am particularly glad to see her with such a broad and handsome smile, displaying such a fine set of pearly teeth. I as a dentist commend her for that. I hope she will use those teeth and sink them into some of the suggestions I will make in my remarks, especially those regarding dentistry.

I think the hon. member for the Northwest Territories will deal in more detail with the northern health branch. I just want to say a few words in regard to the northern health services as they pertain to my constituency. In this regard I would like to commend the former government for bringing to the north a very fine and expanded health service. We in Springfield have two nursing stations, one at Little Grand Rapids and one at Berens River, serving the inaccessible areas of my constituency. Indeed, we have a veritable flying doctor service, and I might say that the people manning these stations are doing a wonderful job. I think that if they were given more staff and leeway this service could be further improved. The Glassco commission handed down a report which suggested, among other things, that Indian health services should wherever possible be integrated with normal community health and hospital services. We in Springfield are doing just that. A new hospital wing is being constructed at the Pine Falls general hospital, where the Indian health services and the community health services will be combined and integrated. I must compliment the people of that community for the very fine attitude they have taken to this step. This hospital wing is presently under construction. It is going to cost in excess of $500,000, and I am sure that when completed it will be a credit to the community and to the department.

In this regard I would caution the minister about the manner in which she answers questions that are put on the order paper. With regard to this hospital I asked three questions. One was No. 776. To this question I really did not receive any answer at all. Another question was No. 1,129, to which the minister replied that the federal grants amounted to $375,000 for this hospital. Then there was question 1,325, to which she replied that the grant amounted to $405,000. I think that if the minister and her colleagues would pay a little more attention to the manner in which they answer questions they would be more consistent in their replies than they were in this case.

While I compliment the northern health services and the expanded facilities in general, I must say that when it pertains to dentistry it is a different story. I think a great deal of improvement could be made in the dental health services in the north. I might give just one instance. There is a lack of dentists in a great many of these northern areas and it falls upon the R.C.M.P., the missionaries and other people in these areas to extract teeth in an emergency. I am thinking in particular of one missionary at the Hollow Water reserve whose father was a missionary before him. This man undertook this role and has performed it up to this time. Now the Department of National Health and Welfare has cut off the supply of local anaesthetic to this missionary. When dealing with this matter I may be treading on rather precarious professional ground, but I must implore the minister—and I wish she would listen when I am imploring her—to do something in this regard. I would tell the minister that it is not very much fun having teeth extracted without anaesthetic, and if I need to prove that assertion to her or any of her officials, I would be only too glad to do so. I would implore her to reinstate the practice of supplying this missionary with local anaesthetic so that in the case of an emergency he may make an extraction and will not have to do so without anaesthetic.

Also in my riding we have the model town of Pinawa. A $600,000 hospital will be constructed there shortly. In this regard I might say that when the Conservative government came into power in 1958 we increased the federal health grant from $1,000 to $2,000 per bed. I think it is time the department reconsidered these grants, especially in view of the action taken by this government in imposing a tax on building materials, to see whether they should not be increased further. I think other speakers will have more to say about this matter. I wholeheartedly agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas who said the increase in the cost of the hospitalization program is alarming. I think several things could be done by the department to perhaps curb this expenditure. I am not going into detail on this question because I am sure other hon. members will deal with it.

Previous speakers mentioned family allowances. I am wholeheartedly in favour of the principle of extending family allowances beyond the age of 16 years to those children attending school. I certainly hope the present government will not do what it did with the increase in the old age pension in 1957, when they implemented it just before an election and left the succeeding government to pay for it. I hope they will bring this about, and bring it about soon. I would like to say a few words about the old age assistance, and pensions to blind and disabled persons. I think the government is certainly not following the good example set by the former government, which increased the old age assistance and the pensions to blind and disabled persons simultaneously with the increase in the universal old age pension. I am at a loss to understand why the department has not taken similar action. We said we were willing to pay the increase if the provinces would agree to do their share and implement this program. We have been talking about federal-provincial conferences and everything else in this house as if this were some new principle that was being introduced. As far as I am concerned, the government is offering no leadership whatsoever in this regard. These are the very people who need this increase most, because they are being paid these pensions on the basis of need. I can only conclude that the government is trying to mark time and put this matter off as long as possible in order to reduce somewhat the record deficit which they are going to have.

These are a few suggestions on general matters that I wanted to place before the minister. Now, as a member of the dental profession, I would like to say something about the role dentistry plays in the community and what part the federal government should play in extending dental services more universally. The people of Canada spend about $125 million a year on dental services. This represents 8 per cent or 10 per cent of the amount of money spent by the Canadian public on health services. I think that is a quite significant fact. It will be more significant, I think, when I say that of the national health grants only 1 per cent is allocated to the field of dentistry and dental health. I think it is incumbent upon the government to at least raise this amount to the level of the percentage of money spent by the people on dental health services as compared to the health dollar in general. I think this percentage should be raised to 10 per cent. That is certainly not out of line. The niggardly amount of money that is being spent on dental research is illustrated when we see that only 15 cents is spent on dental research for every $100 that is spent on dental treatment. I know that a certain amount of money is being provided by the federal government to be spent through the national research council. I think the grant is something in the order of $200,000. This amount should be substantially increased. I am taking the liberty of quoting these figures to show the importance of dentistry to the community as a whole. I might say that I feel the staff in the dental division should be increased. I understood they have provision for three full-time dentists in the dental division. There is one vacancy there now. I hope that vacancy will soon be filled and that as soon as possible the staff is substantially increased. I am not criticizing the members of the dental division because I think they are dedicated, optimistic, and are trying to do a very good job with very limited financial support and encouragement from the department. But I think more and more emphasis must be placed on this field. As I say, that can be done through increased dental health grants toward dental research. I know the staff have on the boards a large number of very vital research projects, such as research into oral cancer and research into the etiology of periodontal disease. When we think that one out of every two teeth lost is lost because of periodontal involvement, then these developments are very important.

I place particular emphasis on research because dental diseases are almost universal. At the same time it is sad to think they are almost universal, because they are also largely preventive. It is in the interests of our economy that the federal government should encourage research and preventive and educational measures in order to cut down substantially on the incidence of dental disease and on the amount of money which needs to be spent by the public and by the government on dental treatment.

I think emphasis on dental education of the public has to be placed on proper oral hygiene and proper diet, because preventive measures can largely eradicate a large number of dental diseases which lead only to disastrous and expensive complications. When we consider that only one quarter of the population receive any regular dental treatment it is understandable that education will do a great deal to bring this number up.

One of the preventive measures we can encourage and emphasize is fluoridation. I mentioned fluoridation once before in the house and I got all sorts of letters from all sorts of people, and even all sorts of threats. However, this is a measure I commend to the people of Canada as a whole and to the government in particular. Studies across Canada show that five out of every ten of our four-year-old children and eight out of ten of our six-year-old children have suffered from dental decay, and that the average child when beginning school has five decayed teeth. This is quite a sad commentary on the state of dental health in Canada. In the town of Stratford, where they have natural fluoridation, the incidence of dental decay in the same age group is about one quarter of what it is in the population as a whole. I think this would show that fluoridation of community water supplies is a very important and economical preventive measure in dentistry.

Let me say that the cost of fluoridating a community water supply runs about 20 cents per capita per year. In other words, the cost of a single filling will fluoridate the water supply for a person for 20 to 30 years. All sorts of studies on millions of people have shown that fluoridation of water supplies will cut down the incidence of dental decay in children by two thirds, and this general dental health is carried on into adulthood. Surely we can see the millions of dollars which will be saved by the public in general if we adopt fluoridation more widely. It is being adopted more widely across this country now, but I hope it will be adopted even more widely when we compare the 20 cents which it might cost to fluoridate a community water supply per person per year with the average expenditure of over $20 per person on dental treatment.

I should also like to speak about health insurance in its relationship to the dental profession, and the attitude of this profession towards health insurance. I should also like to make some remarks with regard to the implementation of dental health insurance in conjunction with the universal form of contributory or other medical health insurance. I think the Canadian Dental Association should be commended for its very broad-minded approach to this subject. They have come out in favour of a dental health insurance program. They have done a great deal to study the problem, but the problems which face dental health insurance are far more serious than those which face medical health insurance. A relatively predetermined amount of people every year have to undergo medical treatment. However, it is recognized that almost everyone has to undergo dental treatment, and it is therefore very difficult to apply general insurance principles to universal dental coverage.

The dental association is very cognizant of this fact and is very careful in laying down the ground rules under which dental health insurance can be brought forward. They say that they are willing to co-operate with the government but that there are certain principles which they would like to see recognized. For example, the principle of freedom of the patient to choose his dentist; the freedom of the dentist to choose his patient; a system of remuneration which is mutually acceptable and preferably based on a fee-for-service basis. There has to be co-operation between the patient, the dentist and the government. The people who are chosen to administer this program should be people who are approved by the profession, and the public, and they should not serve strictly a political function.

There are various methods of introducing a program of this sort. The first one is that the government must bear some responsibility before introducing such a program for doing something to provide assistance to educational institutions and to provide the personnel necessary to carry out this program. That is one of the first things the government must recognize.

This is, of course, largely a provincial matter. However, I think that if the federal government is going to impose a system of compulsory dental health care universally it must recognize that it has a role to play in educating the personnel. Second, it must recognize that through education of the public a large amount of dental treatment can be avoided. Therefore, a great deal of emphasis has to be placed on public dental health education, and a lot of it at the federal level. The third matter is that if a comprehensive dental health program is introduced there is obviously going to be the necessity for auxiliaries because of the shortage of dental manpower, and very careful steps must be taken in this program to institute a training scheme for these auxiliaries.

There are two principles which could be brought to bear in the introduction of a dental health program. First of all, you might as well wipe out of your mind the idea that everyone can be covered at the beginning. There are only two ways in which a dental health program can be attached to a general health insurance program. The first of these would be by introducing the lower age levels or school age levels, and then advancing the plan to include the general public. Second, they could adopt some such plan as now exists in Manitoba. Here the service is provided for those who are indigent, in receipt of mothers' allowances, and so on. These all have medicare cards. They present them to their dentists and are entitled to free dentures and other services as required. The dental association itself administers this plan. It is paid a per capita fee by the provincial government to cover expenditures, but the administration, as I have said, is carried on by the association itself. We prefer this because it is less complicated than filling out endless forms in duplicate, triplicate and quadruplicate as has to be done now in dealings with the Indian affairs branch, the Department of Veterans Affairs and so on. If we do not adopt one or the other of these approaches a situation will be created in which the best interests of dental health will not be served.

In Manitoba the dental association recognized its social responsibility by agreeing to accept a lower rate of remuneration for the work done for these indigent patients. It realizes that it must do something for those in the community who could not otherwise be looked after. I think the program in Manitoba works very well, and it may be one way of introducing a program on the national level. More idealistic people feel, of course, that eventually everyone should be covered. I agree with that view, and I think the dental association would agree with it. However, we must avoid the pitfalls. Let no one think it is possible to sit behind a desk and figure out that people will get dental coverage on the same basis as medical coverage, because the dental field defies insurance principles. If an attempt is made to cover all Canadians, premiums will be so high as to be prohibitive.

At the present time, dental associations are studying prepaid dental plans. Pilot projects are being instituted, but even on this basis they are running into all kinds of difficulties actuarially. For this reason I want to emphasize the need for proceeding with due regard for the difficulties of the situation. I believe the dental profession in Canada should be complimented for its public spirited attitude towards the need to extend dental care services in Canada. I think they are trying to play a role commensurate with the ideal of rendering the best dental service possible to the people of Canada. I believe that with the co-operation of the government such a service could be extended universally. I look forward to that day and I can assure the government that it will get the wholehearted co-operation of the dental profession.

At the same time, I should like to see steps taken immediately in the fields of education and prevention to see that the groundwork is laid for the day when this plan can be realized. I hope it will not be brought about merely as a measure of political expediency as has happened recently in a province, causing turmoil and friction between the profession and the community. I hope we shall never see that happen in Canada at large, and that the experience in Saskatchewan will teach us that that was the wrong way to go about it.

Mr. Douglas: Any health service you have in Manitoba you got from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Slogan: I do not think the hon. member should complain too much, because he was run out of that province as a whole, for what he did in Saskatchewan.

I commend to the minister the suggestions I have made and I hope she will sink her teeth into them.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, in speaking to these estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Springfield upon the constructive suggestions he has made. It was an interesting speech and I am sure it will be of benefit to the country as a whole. In the course of his remarks he made a comment to the same effect as one which the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas had made previously, namely that the expenditures under the heading of health and welfare were mounting so rapidly as to be worthy of careful scrutiny.

I wish to comment on this very theme, because the cost of health and welfare in this country is rising at such a rate as to place many of the provincial prepaid hospital schemes and medical plans in serious jeopardy. The cost of hospital care is rising like a meteor in the sky. In the estimates themselves it will be seen on page 264 that the statutory payments for hospital services, including assistance to the provinces under those agreements, in the current year ending March 31, 1964, have increased by $60 million from $325 million to $385 million. That is an increase of almost 20 per cent in one year.

When the prepaid hospital plan was first introduced it was announced in no uncertain terms that this was to be a three way partnership. We were told, and many of us believed it for some years, that it was to be a three way partnership between the provinces, the individual premium payers and the federal government. We were told that this partnership would work in harness like a troika, or three abreast. After a few years of interesting work in the field of health, I find the troika is still in harness but that it is operating as a tandem now, with the provincial department of health in the lead, the premium payer in the centre and the federal department of health and welfare bringing up the rear. The second and third partners in the team have to take the pace from the leader.

I am certain that many of the expenditures being made today by the provinces under the heading of health with the co-operation of the federal government could have a lot of the fat trimmed from them, and I should like to make two or three suggestions which I believe are worthy of consideration. Indeed, consideration must be given to them, since costs are mounting day by day. First of all, let me say I found it a pleasure to stand shoulder to shoulder with the Minister of National Health and Welfare in her work. She has her heart in her department and she gives it the closest of attention. She took part in the provincial election campaign in Ontario eight weeks ago, and I was happy to stand with her at that time on the questions of the day. The committee may recall that the hon. lady emphasized the fact that the Canada pension plan could be introduced without funding. That is a straight statement of fact: It can be done. It would not require funding because the government, having the power to tax, is in a position to keep the plan in operation without its being funded. But I draw attention to the situation in the province of Ontario, a situation which, no doubt, is being duplicated in the other nine provinces. It was only in January, 1960, that the hospitals of Ontario instituted a pension plan for their employees. Previously, individual hospitals had not been able to offer a pension plan because they could not afford its cost. Those who held employment in hospitals either had to look forward to working until they died or had to hope that the small insurance policy they were paying for 100 per cent themselves would carry them in their old age.

But on January 1, 1960, a pension plan was instituted among the hospitals of Ontario under the Ontario hospital services commission. There is an interesting thing to be found in the first two annual reports of the hospitals of Ontario pension plan. There have only been two annual reports so far. The first report covered a period of 18 months from January 1, 1960 to June 30, 1961 and the second report covered the period of a year from July 1, 1961 to June 30, 1962.

The interesting thing about the reports is the fact that when the pension plan was introduced on January 1, 1960 a large number of employees of Ontario hospitals went on pension immediately, although there was no funding of the pension plan at that time. They had completed the necessary years of service and had attained such an age that they were eligible for pension. But in the second report for the year ended June 30, 1962, an amazing statement is made by the auditing firm that audits the pension plan. It is pointed out in the second annual report that the hospitals of Ontario are paying into the pension plan the astounding sum of $3,400,683 a year.

In an editorial last Friday with reference to the need for more nurses the Ottawa Citizen makes the statement that when the Ontario government introduced its hospital insurance plan it acquired a vested interest in the province's hospitals. That, of course, is a straight statement of fact. The hospitals have no individual autonomy today under the Ontario hospital services commission. As a hospital man from Port Arthur stated, individual hospitals are free to do anything they are told. I mention this so that hon. members will understand how much the government, through the department of health, dominates the work of the hospitals in the province.

When the hospitals of Ontario are paying $3,400,000 per year into the pension plan compared with a contribution by the employees of $2,255,000, then I put my finger on what I can only describe as an unnecessary expense. The pension plan of the hospitals is the responsibility of the Ontario government. The Ontario government through its department of health should collect from its hospital employees but it should not be paying $3,400,000 a year into that pension plan.

In a paragraph in the second report it is interesting to find a statement by the pension committee of the hospitals of Ontario pension plan, which committee, of course, is being advised by insurance executives and insurance agents. With respect to the year ended June 30, 1962, they say:

> Past service costs of the plan were amortized over a 30 year period and this unfunded amount will require annual payments of $539,785 over the remaining 28 years.

There is no requirement whatsoever that this pension plan be funded. It is a government responsibility, and to state that we must have a funded pension plan when the government is behind it is ridiculous. If the government should go bankrupt, all pension plans in the provinces would fall by the wayside, and this extra expense is absolutely unjustified. That sum of over half a million dollars a year for the next 28 years will amount to $15,113,980, and bear in mind that the federal government is paying approximately one third of the cost of this more than half a million dollars into a fund that is not required at all.

I also hold in my hand the annual statement issued by the hospitals of Ontario pensions plan to a hospital employee of some years standing. It is interesting to note that on the back it says:

> The hospitals—

That means the government.

> —pay the entire cost of past service pensions.

Under the Old Age Assistance Act, whose payments the public calls pensions but are properly described as old age assistance, there is no funded plan to make sure that the payments of $75 a month are made to the elderly, and if we have no great fund behind the old age assistance plan why do we have to go to the expense of building up a fund behind hospital pension plans throughout the Dominion of Canada?

I am very happy that the minister has brought in her estimates before the federal-provincial conference in two weeks time, because I do believe this is one subject that should be taken up with the provinces. It should be pointed out to them that some of the expenses should be carefully scrutinized, because some of them are unnecessary.

Another point to which I should like to refer has to do with a question I asked the government to advise how much money had been allocated year by year to hospitals throughout Canada by way of grants toward nursing. If hon. members will look at page 263 of the printed estimates they will find midway down the page a reference to the fact that the federal government pays $750 per bed for living quarters for nurses. I would point out that nursing is the only profession, the only career, the only form of employment in which the candidate for education has to be given residence accommodation. If a girl wishes to be a lawyer she has to look after her own residence accommodation. If a girl wishes to be an architect she has to look after her own residence accommodation. If she wants to be a veterinarian she looks after her own residence accommodation. If she wants to be an artist she looks after her own residence accommodation. But if she wants to be a nurse the provinces go into a tizzy and build palatial residences at a cost to the taxpayers that in my estimation is unnecessary.

Mr. Douglas: The hon. member is forgetting that while the nurse is taking her training she also works about eight hours a day for nothing, or possibly $6 or $8 a month.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, that is a point I intended to mention this afternoon in discussing the resolution respecting technical and vocational training assistance and which I intend to refer to on Monday when the bill comes before the house. I believe that girls who decide to train as nurses should be paid by the hour for the work they do, and with the money in their purses they can then look after their own accommodation. I do not believe that in the year 1963 we should have indentured labour being paid on the basis of board, lodging and uniforms.

Mr. Douglas: Your hospital costs would really go up then.

Mr. Cowan: I was referring to the cost of residences for nurses. We have this great Department of National Health and Welfare, and I believe it was the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas who mentioned that it is the second largest spending department of the government. When one considers some of the demands that people make on it, he wonders how long it will be before the department becomes the largest spending department of the government unless there is careful scrutiny of the requests that are made.

I presume that in no place in all of Canada is there more uproar today over the shortage of hospital beds than in my own city of Toronto which now has a demand before the federal government for millions of dollars for necessary hospital construction. To my mind, to spend millions of dollars at this time on a calculated shortage of 2,360 hospital beds in Toronto when we have been having annual deficits nationally of between $500 million and $700 million a year would be ridiculous. At the present time there are in the city of Toronto 1,791 beds for student nurses scattered among 23 hospitals in the city. I can see no reason why the bed accommodation in these residences for nurses, who are young and most active and vigorous, should not be made available for hospital bed accommodation to meet the shortage of hospital beds in the area at this time. There is a calculated shortage of 2,360 beds, with 1,791 beds being used by active young nurses in training. These figures would indicate that the nurses are getting better treatment than the patients who are sick, injured and dying because we are told that hospitals are refusing entrance to patients since the hospitals claim there are no beds. The administration of the expenditures under the co-operative scheme between the provinces and the federal government, could certainly stand close scrutiny for the benefit of the taxpayers of the Dominion of Canada.

There is another angle to which I should like to draw the attention of the committee and the Department of National Health and Welfare, and that is connected with nursing education. Many hospitals operate schools of nursing. Why is this so? It is the only field of education that does not fall under the departments of education of the ten provinces. If doctors can be educated under the direction of the department of education, if dentists can be educated under the direction of the department of education, why cannot nurses be educated under the direction of the department of education? There is an expenditure involved in educating nurses. Most hospitals will tell you that there is a cost to them for educating student nurses, even when consideration is given to the services that they perform now for penurious remuneration. But if the education of nurses were to be placed under the department of education in all ten provinces, where it properly belongs, then the cost to the departments of health in the ten provinces would be reduced and the money that the federal department of health allocates to hospital work would not need to be squandered on nursing education under the guise of health grants. These payments could be diverted 100 per cent to health services.

The interesting feature here is the fact that only last Sunday the largest hospital in my riding, Humber Memorial Hospital, Weston, held open house for its new addition. It now has approximately 360 beds, and opened up four extra floors last Sunday with about 500 people going through the corridors examining this greatly improved institution. The hospital authorities gave the visitors small booklets describing the work of the hospital. One of the paragraphs in the booklet points out that the hospital is going to build a school for nurses, which will be the first school for nurses in Ontario not requiring residential accommodation. This morning I spoke to an unimpeachable source at Queen's Park, Toronto, by telephone and asked if the requirement that a hospital desiring to operate a school of nursing must have residential accommodation had been withdrawn. I was advised, no, the requirement has not yet been withdrawn from the hospital regulations of the province.

I was told, too, that Humber Memorial would not be the first to have a school for nurses without a residence because another hospital, which was not named, had made application to institute a system of training nurses without having hospital beds provided for them. This indicates that there are at least two hospitals in Ontario that realize it is not necessary to spend money on nurses' residences in order to educate nurses in our province to the degree of registered nurse. I believe that if the federal authorities would state they were going to withdraw this grant of $750 per bed for living quarters for nursing students, they would establish a precedent that would be followed all across the Dominion of Canada. We would find the present residential accommodation turned into hospital beds for the sick, and the young girls who wished to be nurses would seek their own residential accommodation the same as other students do.

Now, I am talking about the fat that can be removed from these expenses.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. A few minutes ago the hon. member for York-Humber made a statement about money being squandered on nursing education. I am sure that he really does not mean that. Could he please explain what he means by that statement?

Also, I should like to point out to him that the nursing profession is Canada's oldest profession. There is a plaque out in the hall honouring Jeanne Mance, a nurse, the first professional person to come to Canada in the seventeenth century, and I am sure the hon. member does not mean those words.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, if I used the word "squandered", I should have said "expended". I regret if I did use that word and I thank the hon. member for drawing it to my attention.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A supplementary question, Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I am sorry, but there could not be a supplementary question to a point of order.

Mr. Cowan: I have but one more point to make. When I first rose to make my remarks, I stated that I agreed 100 per cent with the hon. member for Springfield and the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas that there must be corners in which the expenditures made by the Department of National Health and Welfare could be reduced, if careful attention were paid to the money that is being spent. I should like to refer to one small matter, perhaps, but right now the hospitals in the province of Ontario are engaged in a study of insurance against malpractice suits. This insurance is taken out by all hospitals in order to protect them against any suits that may be instituted by patients, their relatives or friends, who may claim that the hospital technique was faulty and sue for malpractice. We have been investigating this question of malpractice insurance for the past 14 months, and within the next four or five months I am sure a very interesting statement will be made by the Ontario hospital association on that matter. Let us stop to consider the question of expense.

In the November issue of the Canadian Doctor, there is a long article in which the author points out that, in his opinion, hospitals should increase the amount of malpractice insurance they carry. This makes me wonder why the hospitals should pay the premiums for malpractice insurance. As it is now, the hospitals are paying the premiums but the hospitals do not perform the operation. The doctors are not the employees of the hospitals; they are individual practitioners. This is an expense that is saddled on the hospitals today, and this is something that could be investigated to the profit of the taxpayers of Canada.

I should like to say that I only make these suggestions because I believe there is fat in the estimates that could be cut out. As I said before, we are running in tandem, we are not running in troika. I sincerely hope the minister will bring up these matters at the provincial conference in two weeks time for the benefit of every Canadian taxpayer from coast to coast.

Mr. Rynard: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate madam minister and her secretary upon the presentation of their first estimates in this house. I should like also to remind her that one of the first acts of the Conservatives that were elected in 1957, and then in 1958, was to double the grants for hospital beds. At that particular time the province of Ontario was making a grant of $2,000 per bed. Shortly after we made that advance the province of Ontario went to $3,000. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, the minister is well aware of the fact that just a short time ago the province increased that grant by another $1,000 per bed. I would say to madam minister it is high time the federal government again doubled its grant per bed to all the provinces. Other grants were made by the previous government for the building of interns' quarters, nurses residences and quarters for x-ray laboratory technicians, and personnel.

In this day of spiralling costs many municipalities cannot afford the same share of the cost of hospital building that they contributed previously. The only place they can raise their share of the money is through municipal taxation, and today education accounts for 50 per cent or more of the tax dollar. To reiterate, I ask madam minister to increase the grant per bed, double it as the previous government did, and lighten the burden on the municipalities.

The department the minister heads is the second highest spending department in the government. It spends somewhere between one fifth and one quarter of the federal budget, and it will not be too long until it is the highest spending department.

Perhaps when increasing the grant per bed the minister would also take a good look at the construction costs of building. I know this is the responsibility of the provinces, but these costs have gone up during the last few years from $10,000 per bed to $20,000 in some cases.

Are we building hospitals too costly and with a view to their permanence in a world that is changing so rapidly? I hope madam minister heard that question. New ideas, new architecture and new technologies are closing in on us like a rain storm. Will the modern building of today be completely outmoded tomorrow? Someone said that in some cases buildings are outdated before they are built, but I cannot entirely accept that contention, although it may be true in special cases. Should the life span of a hospital be planned for a minimum of 25 years instead of ad infinitum?

Costs of construction might be cut anywhere from 25 per cent to 50 per cent if a shorter life span were proposed. The money saved could then be spent on providing more beds and more hospitals or, if there are enough of these, it could be invested in securities that would yield money to replace a hospital when its 25 year life span is ended. Through investment it could provide from a half to three quarters of the cost of a new building.

I have been told over and over again that it is almost as cheap to tear down a building and erect a brand new one as it is to repair an old one and equip it with all the modern technology that has been involved since it was first built. This would give work to unemployed people in all fields and professions, and would also allow us to build many wings to hospitals that need them at present, or to build new ones.

In my opinion more beds must be provided for the chronically ill because, as the human span of life lengthens, we have more people ill. These beds must be provided through grants to municipalities, or else we must pay hospitalization to approved privately run homes. I know the Ontario hospital commission pays $5 a day to approved homes, but this of course only covers those approved for care. There may be some homes that do not come into this category.

I would like the minister to tell us when pensions will be raised for the blind and disabled. How many provinces have now agreed to such an increase, and how many have the machinery ready to give it? What provinces have not agreed?

I now want to refer to the tax on drugs, and since the Minister of Finance has come into the chamber perhaps he will listen to this. In my opinion the tax is one of the factors in the high cost of drugs. Recently I read a very factual report on this subject, the Ottawa report by Patrick Nicholson entitled "Tax on Drugs Real Factor in Costs" —Mr. Nicholson is a special correspondent to the Thomson newspapers, and this article appeared in the Packet and Times of Orillia:

> The largest controllable factor in the make-up of drug prices today consists of government taxes, which now add up to more than double the total net profit made by the industry...
> Based on the latest year analysed, the drug industry in Canada is operating at a net profit level of 5½ per cent of sales. Unlike the building industry, its raw materials often cost only a small fraction of the selling price of the finished product.
> But a significant slice of the selling price pays for processing, research and scientific costs. Brilliant and highly-paid doctors and scientists labour in drug laboratories to create, test and perfect the drugs which will save thousands of lives and put an end to untold physical suffering...
> But this expenditure on research and development is not extravagant because we cannot put a dollar price tag on the life which might be saved by any one of these experiments.
> The ethical drug industry is operating on a net profit margin of about 5½ per cent. This figure convincingly squashes any suggestion that drug manufacturers make excessive profits. In fact it is the federal government which, by levying a luxury sales tax on prescribed drugs, profiteers from sickness. Canada is the only country in the world suffering such a tax.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if madam minister has made any progress in the fight against cancer of the lung. I am willing to admit that she has set a good example herself. But I would like to know what she has come up with in the way of prevention, because speaking the other day in Buffalo, near her own home city, one of the doctors who carry on cancer research stated that between 2,500 and 3,000 people would die of lung cancer this year in Canada largely caused by cigarettes, and many would die of coronary disease, vascular disease, bronchitis, and other diseases, in which cigarettes played a part, which is more than are killed in highway accidents. I would like to ask the minister what has been done in this connection and what has been started in the meantime, so that she may save some of these people from an untimely end.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, in these estimates the government proposes to spend almost $500 million for the health needs of the people of Canada. The major part of this amount of money is to be spent—and we in this group certainly have no objection to this —in the provision of grants to the provinces toward the hospital plans which have been enacted. Yet one would have to look at the estimates with a microscope to find the amount of money spent by the federal government in the field of mental health. This is, to say the least, an amazing fact when we realize that half the hospital beds in Canada are now occupied by people who are mentally or emotionally ill. More than 70,000 people are receiving treatment in Canadian hospitals for mental or emotional illnesses. Twenty five thousand new cases are admitted every year.

This government has failed to realize that one in every 16 Canadians born today will spend part of his or her life in a mental hospital. The government seems to have failed to realize that people in mental hospitals are not stupid; they are not defective; they have received the same education as the rest of us and until they became ill they were able to work and support themselves and their families. Of course, the minister will deny that the government has a defeatist attitude in this regard, but one has only to look at the expenditure for hospitals to realize this is a fact. We are today spending over $23 a day to keep a person in a general hospital, while we are spending $5.90 a day to keep a person in a mental hospital. Why this disparity? I suggest the main reason for this disparity is the decision of the former Liberal government when it instituted the hospital plan, continued by the Conservative government, and decided to keep mental hospitals out of that plan. The result is that we are spending this very small amount of money in mental hospitals.

What does this mean to the patient? I want to read a very few paragraphs from a report which appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune of May 28, 1960. This report is over three years old, but not much has happened in the province of Manitoba in the field of mental health since then. Indeed, not much has happened in any other province since then. I would remind members of the committee that the Winnipeg Tribune is a Conservative newspaper. It was describing the program in the province of Manitoba under a Conservative government. I did not think it intended to exaggerate; in fact I am certain it did not exaggerate. Yet what do they say:

> Rigorous austerity, idleness and lack of rehabilitation facilities highlight the tragic conditions endured by some 3,000 mental patients in Manitoba.
> These men and women of a forgotten cause are crowding the wards of six mental hospitals in this province—and get less recognition than criminals in the penitentiary.

Lord knows, that is bad enough. Then they say:

[Mr. Orlikow.]

> Unwanted and unknown, they wait in apathy for recognition that will bring their standard of treatment and accommodation at least level with those existing in federal prisons.

Further, they say:

> Patients who could be rehabilitated if given proper treatment remain on in their drab wards indefinitely and usually develop a second mental disturbance called "desocialization and degradation", a man-made condition resulting from loss of hope.
> Of Manitoba's six mental hospitals, two are overcrowded, three are full and have waiting lists and only one operates with a slim margin of empty beds.

The article continues:

> Brandon mental hospital has a total of 1,622 patients and a bed capacity for 1,317.
> This hospital has a staff of two certified psychiatrists and one psychiatrist who is about to receive certification. It has no trained social workers and no rehabilitation facilities.
> Selkirk mental hospital has been forced to stretch its facilities to the limit. It has a capacity for 1,005 patients and houses 1,245. It is also seriously handicapped by shortage of staff, old buildings, overcrowding and no adequate rehabilitation program.
> It has a staff of three certified psychiatrists and one experienced psychiatrist. Like Brandon, it has no trained social workers.

It is no wonder that the people who become mentally ill and who are forced, because there are no better facilities, to enter one of the provincial mental hospitals, stay there for months and years longer than they ought, when you compare the program of activities and the rate of recovery in the provincial mental hospitals with the rate of recovery in the psychiatric wards, small as they are, in the general hospitals. There is a fantastic difference in this respect. But this is not surprising when you realize that the psychiatric wings in the general hospitals, which consist of 50, 60 or 20 beds, usually have as many as or more psychiatrists at work than there are in the provincial mental hospitals. This is not criticism of the provincial mental hospitals. In every province they have increased their expenditures in this regard at a great rate; but they are meeting the same kind of cost problems in this as in other fields. They have said, in fact that there is nothing more they can do at this time.

Tremendous progress has been made in this field. The vast majority of patients can get well. But they will not get well, or they certainly will not get well as quickly as they could, if we do not do more than we have done up to this time. The first step we ought to take is include mental hospital costs in the payment of hospital grants by the federal government, or at least the same share of mental hospital costs as we now pay in regard to other hospital services. I suggest that we will not meet the costs and problems of mental illness by building more hospital beds, because that is what we have been doing essentially. We are not going to meet this problem until we are prepared to take the lead in getting more people, more psychiatrists, more psychologists, more psychiatric nurses and more of the other technical facilities and people needed to work in this field. We will not do that until the federal government is prepared to take the lead, in co-operation with the provinces, in extending the program of training psychiatrists.

The Canadian psychiatric association in its brief to the royal commission on health estimated that we need to double in the next ten years the number of psychiatrists we are training in our training institutions. In Canada in 1961 we had one psychiatrist for every 30,000 people, while in the United States they had in the same year one psychiatrist for every 14,000 people. In Soviet Russia they had one psychiatrist for every 12,000 people, and in Great Britain they had one psychiatrist for every 20,000 people. To reach by 1970 a ratio of one psychiatrist for every 15,000 people, which would still be less than these other countries had in 1961, we would have to double the number of specialists in psychiatry. The cost of training this number of psychiatrists has been estimated by the Canadian psychiatric association to be $4 million a year. To attain this end, of course, we will have to do more than just provide training grants; we will have to provide a much larger number of teachers at the university level and in the hospitals. The Canadian psychiatric association has estimated that this will cost $1 million a year for university training purposes. Similar expansion is needed in the field of clinical psychologists and psychiatric social workers, occupational therapists, and so on, and this only the federal government can do. I suggest that if the basic problem of mental illness is not tackled, costs will rise to an astronomical level and tens of millions of dollars in the coming year will be spent merely to keep people in hospital. These are people who could be out of hospital if we did the job which needs to be done.

One of our biggest lacks in recent years is in the field of research on mental illness. In 1961 the United States government spent $48 million on mental health research. In the same year in Canada we spent on a per capita basis 16 per cent of that spent by the United States. Last year we spent just over $700,000. It seems to me the height of foolishness to spend this piddling amount to deal with what is the greatest unsolved medical problem in the country. Yet the medical profession over the years has recommended that we get down to the problem.

In 1957 the former Conservative government appointed a committee to review the question of support for medical research by the government of Canada. This committee made a report which was tabled on November 12, 1959. I will not deal with it in detail but I should like to read some of the conclusions reached by this expert committee. The minister will find this on page 32 of the report:

> The present level of support falls far short of requirements. The most obvious inadequacies are as follows:—
> (a) Grants: Many important projects are not supported because of lack of funds and others are restricted to only a fraction of their full development.
> (b) Fellowships: Present stipends of research fellowships are too low. More fellowships are required.
> (c) Scientific personnel: The Canadian medical schools lack the funds to employ an adequate research staff.
> (d) Fluid research funds: There is a need for fluid research funds in the medical schools, to be administered by the deans.
> (e) Research facilities: Research space is inadequate in all medical schools; in many cases this is the most serious restriction on research development.

This report dealt with the conduct of more medical research, but the lack of research facilities is particularly noticeable in the field of mental health. Yesterday the Governor General opened a new research centre in the field of mental health in the city of Montreal. This is a tremendous institute and it was a great day for the Dominion of Canada. But I point out to hon. members that this is the only research institute in the field of mental health of its kind in the country. If we are to get the people to work in this field and begin to attack the problem at its roots, then we will have to do much more than we have.

Mention has been made of the cost of mental health to the people of the country. The direct cost has been estimated by the Canadian psychiatric association for the year 1960 at $239 million: $149 million has been spent by the provincial governments in their mental institutions; $10.5 million by the federal government in grants in aid to the Department of Veterans Affairs and other departments, such as justice; $14 million in psychiatric beds in general hospitals; $2.5 roughly in psychiatric beds in private hospitals; and $63 million in medical care paid to medical practitioners and for medication. But the Canadian psychiatric association has calculated that the indirect cost of mental illness in 1960 was $626 million: $100 million for the loss of average manpower earnings by resident patients in hospitals, and $526 million for the loss of earnings of patients in industry due to mental illness and emotional disturbance. So, Mr. Chairman, we can see what a tremendous and fantastic problem we have to face. I should like to think that in the next ten years the federal government will do ten times as much as it has in the last ten, because even with that amount of money we would only begin to touch the fringes of the problem.

Comment has been made about spending too much money. We are spending a great deal of money every day and every week in the field of health and welfare, but no money could be better spent because we are losing fantastic amounts of money in private treatment, and by people who can ill afford it, because the governments of Canada, both federal and provincial, have not really faced up to their responsibility.

In my constituency a few years ago, before the institution of a national hospital plan, one man was in the position where his wife was ill and he was advised to send her to another province for the particular kind of assistance she required. The cost of keeping her in hospital ran to some $200 a week and she was in hospital for four months. When this man added the cost of the medical bill of the doctor, which was not exorbitant if one thinks in terms of his experience and training, the only way he was able to meet the cost of this particular case of mental illness in his family was to sell the one asset he had, his house.

Another constituent of mine whose wife was ill was a member of the Manitoba medical services, which the doctors of Manitoba, and I think rightly, feel is the best plan of its kind in the Dominion of Canada. Unfortunately, the group to which he belonged was disbanded because it was too small. He was therefore not eligible, because of the decision of the Manitoba medical services, to join as an individual member, so he had to meet the cost himself. His wife was going to a psychiatrist once a week and paying a fair fee, from the point of view of the psychiatrist, of $15 for a one-hour visit. This meant that this man was paying $60 to $70 a month to enable his wife to see the psychiatrist. He had three children in the family and the normal cost of medical service for those three children ran in the neighbourhood of $10 to $15 a month; so you can see from that, Mr. Chairman, that his medical bill ran to around $1,000 a year.

Very few of us can afford that kind of bill. I am not being critical of the doctors; I am simply pointing out the kind of expenses people are forced to pay in the field of mental illness simply because we have not devised a plan which will meet their needs. People plagued with mental illness are able to offset their medical costs by deducting them from their income tax, and this is a step in the right direction. But we have made no provision for a situation where a husband has to hire a housekeeper as the only means of keeping his home going. So the cost of mental illness in Canada amounts to an astronomic figure. This would be largely unnecessary if Canada were to establish a system of the kind which has been established in some other countries and in certain states of the United States. I disagree completely with hon. members who have said tonight that hospital costs could be reduced. Hospital costs will have to be substantially increased if the federal government is to accept its full share of responsibility and include the same percentage of grants to provinces in respect of mental hospitals as they do now with respect to general hospitals.

I hope the minister will come to the house next year with proposals which will help improve the position of people who are suffering greatly in this field.

[Translation]

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Chairman, first I want to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) who was piloting her department's estimates in the house for the first time. I am convinced that she will administer that department well, her love for work and her devotion to duty being well known.

Since there is very little time left, I would like to point out a few facts.

I am happy to note that a very important correction has been made with regard to the province of Quebec in the estimates for the current fiscal year. At page 263 of the estimates, I find that in the field of grants for the building of hospitals, Quebec will get 23 per cent of the total amount this year, compared with 18 per cent in 1962, which means that if there was an injustice in 1962, a timely correction is brought at this time.

Second, I want to point out that the Department of National Health and Welfare is a very important one and the party to which I belong, has always been interested in the activities of that department.

During this session, we have made some improvements within that department. I wish to point out here that we have followed our program and even though some are accusing us of not having implemented it in full, we have already carried out part of it. We have increased by $10 a month, the old age pensions.

In my opinion, it is reasonable to assume that we cannot implement, in one session only, the whole program which we have laid down for the administration of our country, for a period of four years. We intend to carry out the program we outlined to the electorate. We will implement it because we will be in power long enough to do so.

I take this opportunity to ask the minister to give special consideration to the program of allowances for young people of 16 to 18 years of age.

In my opinion, it is increasingly important to introduce such legislation because more and more parents provide an education for their children.

We must help families give a proper education to their children. This piece of social legislation should be introduced as soon as possible to promote education in all the provinces.

I should also like to say a word about amateur sport. I notice that this comes under the minister and that some items of our platform deal with that topic.

I feel that physical education is unsatisfactory at present in Canada. We should have a better physical education program so that our young people would be physically fit for the tasks they will have to face in life.

I submit that the minister should attach particular importance to amateur sport. Although we often spend millions of dollars in other departments, to increase the prestige of our country, we unfortunately find that all amateur sport bodies, at the present time, complain they do not receive enough assistance to develop athletes able to adequately represent our country in the various international competitions. I think a healthy national pride is involved and I consider that the minister should give this point a very special attention.

Frequent reference was made to research during the few contributions to the debates of the house today. I submit to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that research is a very important field since, at the present time, solutions to certain diseases which are constantly spreading should be found. And I believe that should we improve the research situation in that field in granting more credits to research, we could thereby cut down the sums we are presently appropriating for hospitals. I feel that the present department should conduct more thorough studies in that respect.

I would also like to touch on another very important point, which is of tremendous interest to the members of the province of Quebec. It is the pension plan that was submitted to the house and was deferred until a later session. It is essential for the country to establish a pension plan equally favourable to everyone. We must take into account, however, the present requirements in the country. On the other hand, we know that under the British North America Act, social security comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. But through some amendments, it was possible at a certain time to allow the federal government to intervene in that field. I am convinced that the present government acted very wisely in establishing this plan, thus showing to the house that we really intend to carry out our program.

While negotiating with the provinces, we have realized that certain difficulties had arisen, but I am convinced that through negotiations and discussions, we will find an acceptable solution, so that each worker in our country may take advantage of a satisfactory pension plan.

Mr. Chairman, it is now ten thirty.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Monteith: I wonder whether the leader of the house could outline the business for tomorrow, and maybe, for the first part of next week.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to give as complete a picture as possible. I hope there is—and I am inclined to think that there is likely to be—an understanding that, by unanimous consent, on motions tomorrow I would move a motion, for the drafting of which I am indebted to the hon. member for Peace River, which would have the effect of bringing the subjects related to the two bills on the territories before the mines, forests and waters committee next week. I understand this might be agreed to without debate and the two bills would be left on the order paper for consideration after the committee's deliberations have been concluded. I have discussed this with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is agreeable to having this course taken if there is an understanding that it could be done as a most exceptional and unusual arrangement, really in exception to all rules and only by unanimous consent and only if everyone is genuinely agreed that this is the right way to make progress and that we will do it without debate. It is an exceptional course, but I think everyone feels we have got into a situation that we want to find a way out of. I am not asking for unanimous consent now. I will ask for it tomorrow on motions and if I do not get it we will not be able to do it, of course. I thought it only fair to give notice of it. I have talked to hon. members of all parties and groups opposite but I thought I ought to let everybody know.

When we reach orders of the day tomorrow we will go on from where we left off with the vocational training resolution, which I gather we have practically disposed of. If we can get first reading of that bill we will then take the bill itself as the first item of business on Monday. If we dispose of this matter the next item tomorrow will be the motion to set up the special railway committee, to be followed by the resolution, No. 14 on today's order paper, regarding the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act. We would hope to dispose of the resolution stage and first reading of the bill. I believe the hon. member for Kingston has had some conversations with hon. gentlemen opposite and there is an understanding that rapid progress could be made with that bill. We would hope it would also be available for Monday after the vocational training bill has been disposed of.

There are some other resolutions we would like to get on with if we could. It will be a long day. These resolutions, of course, are just preceding bills and it is generally better to debate the bills when we at least know what we are talking about. There is No. 15 on today's order paper, the resolution respecting the National Centennial Act which we would like to get through if we could, so that we could have that bill available for the beginning of next week. Then there is a very small matter, No. 19 on today's order paper, an amendment to the Admiralty Act which the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice is prepared to take tomorrow.

Then there are a number of resolutions standing in the name of the Minister of Transport, order No. 16, regarding grade crossings, order No. 17, regarding the St. Lawrence seaway authority and order No. 20 regarding the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation. We would be glad to take any of these we could tomorrow. I may say that these items would not be called on Monday because the Minister of Transport will not be available, but we would hope to have any of them that are not disposed of tomorrow available again on Tuesday.

On Monday, in addition to the vocational training bill and, I hope, the currency, mint and exchange fund bill and any of these other measures that have advanced sufficiently to be dealt with, if we should run out of business by any chance I believe the Minister of Justice is prepared to have his parliamentary secretary proceed with the amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. Quite frankly, I am not quite optimistic enough to think that it will be reached, but I do not believe any of these matters I have mentioned are contentious at all and it would be quite a display of businesslike activity if we could dispose of all of them. I can assure hon. members that if that should happen before Monday evening there are one or two items on the order paper that could be called to keep the house busy until ten o'clock. The same program would be carried on on Tuesday for all items that have not been finished.

Mr. Monteith: May I ask about the estimates for tomorrow evening?

Mr. Pickersgill: As I announced last night, we hope to open the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the government would be very happy if it could be concluded. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will be available to conclude his department as well.

It being twenty two minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 15, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF BILLS C-83 AND C-84

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): In accordance with the notice I gave last evening I am now prepared, if there is unanimous consent in the house, to make the motion to which I then referred. Perhaps it would be of convenience to hon. members in these circumstances if I were to indicate the motion I am prepared to make. It is the motion drafted by the hon. member for Peace River, and is in the following terms:

That the subjects dealt with in Bills C-83 and C-84 be referred to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters for consideration; provided however, that despite this motion the said bills shall remain on the order paper as orders for second reading without prejudice to the right to make or proceed with motions for such second reading.

If, Mr. Speaker, you could ascertain whether there would be unanimous consent to having this motion made and dealt with in summary fashion, as I indicated last night, I would be happy to proceed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): As far as the official opposition is concerned, having suggested this course we are naturally in agreement with it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the assumption that there will be no debate, for it would amount only to duplication, we are prepared to agree with the course proposed.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): We agree to follow the same course.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): That is agreeable, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank hon. gentlemen opposite for their co-operation and in these circumstances I move the motion, seconded by my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ATOMIC ENERGY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGREEMENTS WITH INDIA

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that yesterday representatives of the governments of India and Canada concluded and initialed in Ottawa two agreements in the atomic energy field of far reaching significance to both countries. An announcement along this line is being made in New Delhi today. These agreements will be formally signed in New Delhi shortly, and I shall table them at that time.

One of these agreements provides for extensive technical co-operation between the atomic energy authorities of the two countries. Valuable information already developed as a result of Canada's special experience in heavy water power reactor systems will be transferred to the government of India for full commercial use in India. This information, which has been valued by the government of India at $5 million, is to be supplied without cost to India and without deduction from Colombo plan or other assistance.

Under the other agreement between the two governments Canada and India will co-operate in the construction of a nuclear power station of the Candu type with a net electrical output of 200 megawatts to be located in Rajasthan state in India. The government of Canada will provide credit facilities for the purchase of services, material and equipment supplied from Canada, which are estimated to cost approximately $35 million out of a total cost of about $70 million.

Half of the initial charge of uranium fuel for this reactor will be procured from Canada. At current prices this half supply would be worth approximately $2.1 million. Canada will also supply such additional fuel for the station as may be required by India from time to time, provided that Canadian fuel is not more expensive than any other foreign fuel.

Canada and India have agreed to exchange information regarding the operation of this station and its counterpart, the Douglas Point nuclear generating station now under construction in Canada. They have also agreed that the two stations shall be used only for peaceful purposes, and the agreement includes appropriate provisions to this end.

The two agreements reflect the long-standing co-operation between Canada and India in the peaceful uses of atomic energy and will further strengthen the close and friendly relations between the two countries.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT AND LOAN BOARD

TABLING OF RETURN RESPECTING CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted to table the return to an address of the House of Commons dated June 26, 1963. Normally these are just tabled, but I do this so the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi will be aware that the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have agreed to comply with the request for this information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is also pretty late, as usual.

Mr. Pickersgill: We just got permission from the premier of Manitoba yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When did you ask for it?

Mr. Starr: The day before yesterday.

[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the answer given a few moments ago by the Secretary of State. When did the minister ask the provinces concerned for permission to table the correspondence?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid the matter was not one which came under my jurisdiction but under that of another minister.

Mr. Pigeon: Which date?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not the date, but I will be very glad to get it for the hon. gentleman from the minister concerned.

Mr. Pigeon: You do not know the date?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I do not know the date.

Mr. Pigeon: I am surprised at the hon. gentleman's statement that he does not know the date.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know the date.

Mr. Pigeon: I think that was an irresponsible answer.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

PENHOLD, ALTA.—REPORTED RECONSIDERATION OF CLOSING OF AIR BASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a question, and I assure the minister that it is not a loaded question. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport what is being done by the government to retrace its steps regarding the closing of the Penhold air base. Will he give the fullest reconsideration to this question, and when may the house expect a favourable answer in this regard?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Penhold is a Royal Canadian Air Force station, and any decision in respect of its closing, while a government decision, becomes the responsibility of the Department of National Defence. I regret, therefore, to have to tell the Leader of the Opposition, much as he may regret it, that his question will have to be directed to my colleague the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope the answer is loaded with the truth. Will the Minister of National Defence give the answer?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman would mind repeating his question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, Mr. Speaker. This shows the degree of attention the defence minister gives to matters coming under his jurisdiction. I ask him what consideration is now being given to a change of attitude on the part of his department in respect of the Penhold station.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, no change of attitude; because with a 20 mile buffer zone between the air lanes and our airspace, it is impossible for us to do jet training in that area.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So the final decision is that the Penhold base will not be used; is that correct?

Mr. Hellyer: That decision was made some time ago, and there has been no reason to change it in the interim.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has not the Minister of Transport been giving the fullest consideration to this matter in the last few days, along with representatives from Red Deer, and did he not tell them the matter was being reconsidered?

Mr. McIlraith: In answer to that series of questions, I did meet with representatives from Red Deer and they did make certain representations regarding safety regulations as applied by the civil aviation authorities under the jurisdiction of the department. In the last two or three days they raised with me some new matters having to do with certain other airports. I undertook to have these regulations, and their application to those airports, mentioned by the delegation, examined thoroughly, and that is in process of being done now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: By whom; by your department?

Mr. McIlraith: By the civil aviation branch of the department.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Transport. He said he left the decision to the minister of defence. Well, the minister of defence approved it to start with, and it was the Minister of Transport who vetoed it. I should like to ask him if that is not correct.

Mr. McIlraith: No, that is not correct, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister inform the house whether the rigid enforcement of the new 20 mile buffer zone with respect to jet flying training schools threatens the status of the schools at Portage la Prairie and Moose Jaw.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, at the moment I do not think it does, but I am having this matter examined technically and very carefully.

OLD AGE SECURITY

ACTION BY BRITISH COLUMBIA TO NULLIFY RECENT PENSION INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and ask her if she is aware that at least in so far as British Columbia is concerned, the department of social welfare in that province is decreasing by $10 the amount of old age assistance payable to people in the province. The reason for this action, as set out in one of the forms to recipients of old age assistance, is that the old age security payment to the spouse was increased from $65 to $75 monthly.

Will the minister undertake to look into this niggardly, mean approach by that particular province, to assure that when parliament passes increases of this amount or any other amount for these pensioners, provincial government or other organizations do not take steps to reduce the payments and thus leave old age pensioners in substantially the same position as they were before?

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

PURCHASE OF NEW PLANES—TELEGRAM FROM MAYOR OF ST. LAURENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a telegram from Mr. Marcel Laurin, mayor of the city of St. Laurent, asking that the government take the necessary steps to help Canadair so as to alleviate the unemployment which results from the lack of contracts at that plant?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I received that telegram, and the subject matter of the telegram will be given consideration, as will other representations received on this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): I should like to ask a supplementary question on that point, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government will consider the representations made to him concerning the DC-9 before T.C.A. reach a decision on that matter.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we are examining that matter now before any decision is taken.

LOTTERIES

EXTENSION TO PROVINCES OF RIGHT TO HOLD LOTTERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I had a question which I wanted to ask the Minister of Justice, but possibly in his absence I may direct it to the Prime Minister. Is the government giving consideration, as reported in today's press, to extending to the provinces the legal right to conduct lotteries?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I will take that question as notice and discuss it with my colleague the Minister of Justice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF STUDENTS FROM KITCHENER, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware we have as guests in the end gallery 75 students and teachers from the Kitchener Eastwood collegiate, Waterloo North?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has already made me aware of that fact.

REQUEST FOR YEAR ROUND EMPLOYMENT OF MEMBERS' SECRETARIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, the question I am directing to the Secretary of State results from another question I asked in this house on October 22, 1963, and which appeared on page 3848 of Hansard. The Secretary of State said on that occasion:

> Mr. Speaker, I will have a look at the question when it appears in Hansard and see what I can say in reply.

Today the same question is being asked once again.

Is the Secretary of State in a position to inform the house whether the working conditions of members' secretaries will be improved, and whether changes are being considered so that they may remain the year round in the members' service?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as one of the commissioners of internal economy I can tell the house that the question raised by the hon. member is under consideration by Your Honour and by the commissioners of internal economy, and we are seeking to find the solution which will be acceptable to the house.

NATIONAL REVENUE

EATON-KAYE ESTATE—CONSULTATIONS WITH U.S. OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Does the minister intend to eliminate the possibility of double taxation in the Eaton-Kaye estate by having his officials hold a conference with their opposite numbers in the United States?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the implication that there is a lack of consultation in this case. I can only say that there has been consultation between the two government departments concerned over many years.

PENSIONS

BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS—INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has to do with disabled and blind persons pensions, in view of the statement made on Tuesday, October 9, by the premier of Ontario in the legislature of that province, when he referred to these two areas of pensions and said:

> We are presently attempting to find out what their intention is—

That is the federal government's intention.

> —in regard to the other levels in order that we can make up our minds what we are going do.

Can the hon. lady tell us whether the federal government has made up its mind and reached a decision in respect to these pensions?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Starr: I asked the hon. lady a question. Is she not going to reply?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, of course the federal government has made up its mind; but as I have explained a number of times—and explained again last night when my department's estimates were opened, and I am very sorry the hon. member did not see fit to come in to listen—this is a matter which is open for discussion. In only two weeks time there is going to be a conference between the provinces and the federal government, as hon. members know, and I am sure my hon. friend does not want to prejudice a free and open and co-operative discussion by asking questions at a time when any possibility of agreement might be frozen by inappropriate things said at this time.

Mr. Starr: Could the hon. lady explain what she meant by what she said?

Mr. Knowles: It was worthy of Paul Martin.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST GERMANY—CANADIAN ACTION RESPECTING WAR CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It is based on a report of meetings held in Bonn on September 25 and 26 this year between representatives of the government of West Germany and representatives of nazi victims' organizations from all over the free world.

My question is, in view of the fact that it is becoming obvious that the government of West Germany is reluctant to meet the just claims arising from nazi persecution, would the Prime Minister inform the house what action the Canadian government is taking to support the claims of the Canadian citizens involved?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received notice of my hon. friend's question just as I was coming into the chamber. Perhaps he will give me a day or two to look into the matter, and I hope to reply to his question next Monday or Tuesday.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING BOYCOTT OF CANADIAN SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can give me a lucid answer to the question I asked of him the day before yesterday.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's question was not too lucid.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

CONTRACTS FOR RURAL DELIVERY LET WITHOUT TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can he tell the house if under the present government contracts for rural mail delivery are awarded without public tenders being called?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, under the present administration, everything is done according to the law.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. It concerns a statement made by the hon. member for Northumberland and reported in the Ottawa Journal last November 14—

[Text]

She said that the bids for rural postal routes, in particular, still operate under patronage.

[Translation]

I ask the minister whether he agrees with the hon. member for Northumberland?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I have not read the statement referred to by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. But he, whose party was in office for five years, must be even better aware than I in regard to the procedure to be followed so far as contracts with or without tenders are concerned. I must assure the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that everything which has been done to date under our administration has been done in compliance with the regulations and the law.

Mr. Pigeon: Your Honour—

FINANCE

TEN NATION STUDY OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Is it a fact that ten countries, including Canada, have met to discuss a new international monetary unit?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the group of ten countries has undertaken a study of the functioning of the international monetary system. They have had one meeting and will be meeting again at the beginning of next year. All the main proposals for improving the international monetary system will come under review, including that of Mr. Bernstein, to which reference was made in an article in the New York Times yesterday.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there a relationship between these conferences and item No. 14 on the order paper?

Mr. Gordon: There is no relationship at all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gregoire: I have another supplementary question. Are there the same purposes involved in these conferences of the ten countries to form a new international monetary unit that are involved in the measure set out in item No. 14 on the order paper?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, when I said that the group of ten countries was undertaking a study of the international monetary system, I did not suggest they were proposing a new monetary unit. However, I did suggest that all proposals would be considered by this group, including that one. The resolution in connection with the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act relates to another matter, and it will be explained fully as soon as the matter comes up for debate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTED REFUSAL TO ACCEPT CANADIAN DOLLAR IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that the Canadian dollar is considered as being among the ten strongest currencies in the world, how come a 10 per cent discount is charged on the New York market, while in the southern United States our Canadian dollar is not accepted at all, and the same holds true of the large American air lines, as reported by Mr. Laurent Lauzier, financial editor of La Presse?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report in La Presse, but I can assure the hon. member that the Canadian dollar is good anywhere in the world and should be accepted everywhere.

REQUEST FOR INTEREST FREE LOANS TO CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

We know that Canada is wealthy enough to lend money to other countries, without interest or at a nominal interest rate. Why could not the present government extend the same facilities to needy Canadians?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question should really be directed to the Minister of Finance, but I may assure the hon. member that the government takes to heart the interests of all Canadians.

REFUSAL OF CANADIAN CURRENCY AT OVERSEAS MILITARY BASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask the minister whether he is aware of the report that our Canadian defence committee has complained that they could not change Canadian dollars in the military bases in Europe during their tour; and if he is not aware of that report, would he inquire and make a statement in the near future?

[Mr. Gordon.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I had not heard that report, but it is well known that the medium of exchange used at bases overseas is United States currency, and I am surprised that hon. gentlemen were not apprised of that before they went over.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE SALARIES OF SENIOR EXECUTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State and ask him whether treasury board has as yet made any decision or recommendation regarding increases for the president, vice president and other high officers of the C.B.C.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill: (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to that question must be no, and so far as I know the matter has never even been before treasury board.

AGRICULTURE

FARM CREDIT CORPORATIONS—LAWYERS EMPLOYED IN JASPER-EDSON RIDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that just recently his department or that of his colleague the Minister of Justice removed all the solicitors from the Farm Credit Corporation in my riding? Is this the way he is going to increase the services of this corporation, by making my farmers drive over 100 miles in order to sign a paper?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that so far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned everything we do is in the interests of farmers, so that the loans are made on a proper basis and with dispatch.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): A supplementary question. Is the minister not also aware that all the lawyers in my riding were Liberals?

An hon. Member: Not now.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, they are very wise men.

Mr. Peters: A patronage-ridden government.

PUBLICATIONS

COMPETITION WITH CANADIAN EDITIONS OF U.S. MAGAZINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I should like to ask him whether to his knowledge there is any urgency to, or any marked depreciation in, the situation of Canadian publications vis-à-vis competition for advertising revenue from the so-called Canadian editions of United States publications?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This matter is under consideration, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to take the hon. gentleman's question as notice and see whether I can usefully add anything to what has been said in the house on this matter.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER PLANT—INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister related to the question I posed to the right hon. Prime Minister yesterday in regard to a heavy water plant. To refresh the parliamentary secretary's memory I might mention a headline in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald stating that the heavy water plant rivals may have to bid again. It reports that in a so-called interview—

—Mr. Davis denied reports that Nova Scotia had been definitely selected as the site for the plant.

May I ask whether that is a correct statement?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A question like that should be addressed to the minister in charge or to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Well Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to know which minister is in charge of what. This government of decisions has been playing around with this question for months.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ATTENDANCE OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATIVE AS OBSERVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the councillors of the Northwest Territories government will be in Ottawa next week at a special session, would the Prime Minister consider inviting a representative of that government to sit in as an observer at the federal-provincial conference which is to be held at that time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will give consideration to this matter, but I think the normal procedure is followed in federal-provincial conferences, and as it has proved successful in the past I think we should not depart from it without great consideration.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he could give the house with more precision than he was able to give a month ago an indication when he will be introducing or placing on the order paper what I presume will be a resolution preceding the introduction of the bill to establish the Indian claims commission.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, about a month ago I said quite clearly that it would be before the end of this year, and I now say it will be some time around the beginning of December.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—ABSENCE FROM COUNTRY WHILE ON BAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I hope my question will not prove as stormy as the last one. I should like to ask the illustrious parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice, in the absence of the Minister of Justice, whether he has an answer to the question I raised with regard to Banks being absent from the jurisdiction while on bail.

Mr. Donald S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): I hope my answer will be equally lacking in stormy qualities. My present information is that the recognizance used in this case was in the form customarily employed in the province of Quebec, and that it contains no provision requiring the accused to remain in Canada. However, a special report has been requested from the prosecuting counsel, and if the position should be otherwise a full report will be made to the house.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask the hon. gentleman this. Was the bail for Mr. Banks provided in the form of cash, or was it the usual recognizance of a surety by two other parties?

Mr. Macdonald: I cannot answer that question by giving full particulars. My understanding is that it was cash bail.

Mr. Woolliams: Then I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to deal with the answer given by the parliamentary secretary in reference to cash bail. With the greatest respect to the hon. gentleman, I submit that if it was a case of cash bail Mr. Banks had no right whatsoever to leave the country because, according to the principle of cash bail—

Mr. Greene: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think I am able to take care of this, having had some experience in that particular province. The hon. member is proceeding to make an argument. What is his precise question of privilege?

Mr. Woolliams: It is briefly this, that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice, whose function is surely to enforce the laws of this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Woolliams: If I am going to be interrupted I shall remain silent. My point is briefly this. The parliamentary secretary said that in view of the fact that the bail was cash there was no violation.

Mr. Pickersgill: He said nothing of the kind.

Mr. Woolliams: By the terms and conditions of any bail, the person receiving it becomes subject to the custody of the person who puts up the bail. What I am saying is this. Banks is in the custody of himself; and surely, being in the custody of himself, he had no right to leave this country.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the question is difficult. Bail was granted by a judge in the local jurisdiction of the city and district of Montreal according to the law as it is applied there, and I think it is up to the judge to determine the rights of the parties concerned and the conditions under which bail is granted. If that is not correct, or if there is any doubt about this point, the parliamentary secretary has said he will secure a full report. I think the hon. member should await such a report and read it carefully before raising any further points. I frankly do not see any prima facie case of privilege at all.

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect to you, sir, I am about to cite authorities to show that the parliamentary secretary has in my submission misstated the facts and misstated the law. Surely I have a right as a member of this house to speak on such a matter on a question of privilege, particularly since it involves the enforcement of the law, when the law has been misstated. These facts and the law should be placed on record.

Mr. Macdonald: I think it is patent that I have misstated no facts. As to whether there has been any misstatement on a question of law, I would point out that a debate or discussion on this question, or even the proferring of advice on a matter of law, would not be in order, and I did not purport to do so. I merely stated it is my present understanding that it is the procedure in Quebec not to require, when granting bail in ordinary cases, the particular provision in a recognizance to which I referred. If the situation should be otherwise I shall find out from the special prosecutor, but I earnestly protest that there has been no misstatement of fact.

Mr. Speaker: I must say I agree with the last statement, and I repeat that I do not see any question of privilege, though I admit the point raised is a most interesting one. I do not think it is at all in order for the hon. member to continue a legal argument as to whether the learned judge, seized with authority, rendered the right decision or not. This is not the place for an argument of that sort.

Mr. Woolliams: On a second question of privilege, the parliamentary secretary has said that if he is wrong in fact and in law he will have the situation investigated and make a clean breast of it—

Mr. Speaker: I have listened to the argument on both sides.

Mr. Woolliams: I have not been able to present my argument.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to the presentation made by the parliamentary secretary to the minister. While it was interesting, it did not particularly influence me. The point I have to decide is whether there is or is not a question of privilege, and I decide there is no question of privilege at this time on the facts as presented by the hon. member for Bow River.

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, November 14, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

That it is expedient, as a means toward the further development of manpower in Canada and toward increasing employment opportunities for Canadians, to introduce a measure to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act:

(a) to provide that in respect of the costs incurred by a province as training allowances for unemployed persons, the contributions payable by Canada to the province be increased from 75 per cent to such percentage, not exceeding 90 per cent, as may be specified in the agreement made under the act between the Minister of Labour and the province;

(b) to provide in respect of the costs incurred by the province for such part of the program for training employed persons in industry as may be specified in the agreement, the contributions payable by Canada to the province be increased from 50 to 75 per cent thereof;

(c) to extend, until such date as may be specified in the agreement made under the act between the Minister of Labour and the province, the period during which the contributions payable by Canada to the province will be 75 per cent in respect of costs incurred by the province for capital expenditures on training facilities; and

(d) to increase the number of members of the technical and vocational training advisory council from twenty three to twenty eight and to provide an honorarium for the chairman thereof.

Mr. Olson: When the committee rose at five o'clock yesterday I was about to complete the remarks I had to make on the resolution stage. At that time I was talking about the tremendous opportunity that Canada would have to make use of a program of this kind in helping some of the underdeveloped countries to train technicians so they might return later to their own people and improve conditions among them. I believe this is a most appropriate program for Canada to undertake in view of the size of our nation and its significance in the world of international politics and economics. I believe there would be a tremendous response from some of these emerging nations if Canada were to invite them to participate in such a program.

We know that several hundred millions of dollars have already been spent in providing buildings and equipment for use in connection with this technical and vocational program. Many of them are now in a position to go ahead with their work. A great deal has been done to acquire and train the necessary staff for these schools. I think it is right and proper now that we should make some arrangements in the area of financing the training so as to get this project under way as soon as possible.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Yesterday, some time before the committee adjourned at five o'clock, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Beaule) moved the following motion:

That this house urge the federal government to hand back to the provinces, except those which prefer the status quo, a percentage of the income tax equal to the amounts the federal government would otherwise pay them as its contribution to the vocational and technical training assistance program, in order to enable the provinces to set up their own vocational training system as they see fit.

It was agreed then that the ruling on the validity of the motion introduced by the hon. member would be deferred until the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) had concluded his remarks.

In the meantime, I had the opportunity to look into the motion of the hon. member for Quebec East, and unless some hon. members wish to comment on validity and the propriety of the amendment I am ready to give my ruling.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the amendment.

At first glance, I would say the motion is out of order since it substitutes a new proposal to the one under consideration. At any rate, if we were to recognize the principle stated in the proposal, the province of Quebec would lose the advantages it could derive from the motion moved by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen). In fact, it is because the former Quebec government refused to participate in this program, that technical and vocational training is behind the times in that province.

The purpose of this government proposal is to give equal treatment to Quebec and other provinces which did not, due to special circumstances, fully benefit from this legislation.

In my opinion the proposal made by the hon. member for Quebec East would destroy that equality, and I am sure that consequence escaped his mind, but the fact remains that such would be the result.

The hon. member's motion is a mere statement which does not affect the measure now before us, but should the principles to be drawn from it be inserted in the proposed legislation, the benefit of equality being sought for the province of Quebec would be removed.

For that reason, and also in order to avoid the inconvenience of having to ask the chairman to give a decision which, in my opinion, would have to be against the motion, I hope the hon. member who made that proposal which, personally, I find quite acceptable in its general terms, but which nevertheless remains an amendment to the motion now under discussion, will agree to withdraw his own motion.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, first I hope you will allow me to wander a little from the subject to offer my most sincere congratulations to the Secretary of State who spoke in good French, clearly and with the correct accent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as far as the amendment is concerned, there is this first point: is it in order or not?

It has been suggested it is not in order according to the standing orders, because it would result in substituting a new proposal to the one before us. I maintain that this amendment by the hon. member for Quebec East is not intended to substitute a new proposal to a previous one, but merely to offer an alternative, because it is clearly mentioned: except to those which will prefer the status quo.

So we maintain it should stay as it is in the original resolution, but by our amendment, we want to offer an alternative to those who would so desire.

The same thing happened in regard to the measure with respect to federal loans to municipalities, when a provision was inserted to the effect that the provinces that wished to do so could take a sum equal to the loans which would be made to these provinces, with a view to lending directly to municipalities.

Consequently, the same thing happened before by means of an amendment to a resolution and this was agreed to by the Speaker, the chairman and the present government.

This is why I submit that this proposal is in order.

With regard to the second argument raised by the Secretary of State, that this amendment would have a damaging effect for the province of Quebec and that if it were accepted it would destroy any equality which might exist between the various provinces, I would answer this. Let us accept the amendment, and if the province of Quebec thinks it preferable to remain in the status quo, it will have an opportunity to do so according to this amendment. But if present conditions are disadvantageous to the province, Quebec may then resort to the power offered under the amendment.

In 12 or 18 months from now, when equality has been established among the various provinces, Quebec may choose to abandon the status quo and revert to the principle set out in this amendment.

That is why I maintain that through this amendment, the province of Quebec will have the choice between the status quo and the new system.

Mr. Chairman, I submit—and this is in keeping with the standing orders and with the principles set forth by the present government as supported by their vote two days ago—that this house should unanimously accept this amendment.

[Text]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, after having heard the remarks of the Secretary of State I am beginning to wonder how long it is going to be until we decide to do things on the basis of principle, on the basis of what is right and what is wrong, and forget about appeasement time after time. For the Secretary of State to ask the hon. member to withdraw the amendment in my opinion is tantamount to agreeing that it is in order. I contend that it is out of order. In the first place if we read the resolution as it is found on page 3135 of Hansard of October 2, the day it was introduced, we see that it says:

> That it is expedient, as a means toward the further development of manpower in Canada and toward increasing employment opportunities for Canadians, to introduce a measure to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

I suggest that the amendment seeks to amend the Income Tax Act, which is not under consideration at all. Therefore I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we should make a decision now on the basis of what is right and what is wrong and forget all about the appeasement that has been going on for so long.

Mr. Knowles: I agree with both the Secretary of State and the hon. member for Medicine Hat that the proposed amendment is out of order. I suggest to the hon. member for Medicine Hat, however, that there is nothing wrong in giving a member an opportunity to withdraw an amendment if he has been persuaded it is out of order. If he does not, and if it is quite clear that the amendment is out of order, then the chairman will so rule. I hope the hon. member will realize that this amendment is out of order and will withdraw it.

If he is not prepared to follow that course, Mr. Chairman, I suggest you have no alternative but to take into consideration citation 250, paragraph 4, of Beauchesne's fourth edition, as found on page 216. It reads:

> The fundamental terms of a money resolution submitted to the house with the Governor General's recommendation upon which a committee of the whole is set up cannot be amended. Amendments will only be in order if they fall within the terms of the resolution.

As the hon. member for Medicine Hat has just pointed out, the proposed amendment does not fall within the terms of the resolution which is before us. It seems to me, therefore, there is no question but that the proposed amendment is out of order. I still think that if the hon. member who has moved the amendment realizes this and is prepared to withdraw it, this is all to the good. If he is not, then of course, Mr. Chairman, you have to rule appropriately.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add just one word. The Secretary of State and the hon. member for Medicine Hat suggested that this proposed amendment was out of order, but they did not put forward any citation or any provision of the standing orders. I submit that the only point put forward is the one mention by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that is citation 250, paragraph 4, of Beauchesne.

In the circumstances, I should like to point out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that our amendment falls within the terms of the resolution as it appears at item 22 of today's order paper. We strike off nothing from the resolution. Our amendment only adds one thing without taking anything away, and the proposal which is added falls within the terms of the resolution, because it adds one alternative, which is optional and in no way compulsory, for the provinces.

That is why I maintain that paragraph 4 of citation 250 from Beauchesne's does not apply in the present case, and I submit that this argument is out of order, especially at the resolution stage, since at that stage suggestions are made to the government to be incorporated in the bill which will be introduced, if they are accepted. That is why I maintain that our amendment is in order and in accordance with the standing orders.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Just so the record will be straight, may I say I agree completely with the views expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Translation]

The Chairman: I had the opportunity to study the proposal made yesterday by the hon. member for Quebec East. I naturally listened closely to the comments made by the hon. members of this committee during the discussion which just took place.

In the first place, I think that the proposed amendment is out of order in its present form. It seems to me that the object of an amendment is to alter the main motion and that it can be introduced, according to citation No. 201 of Beauchesne's fourth edition by one of the three following procedures:

(a) by leaving out certain words;
(b) by leaving out certain words in order to insert other words;
(c) by inserting or adding other words.

Besides, I think that an amendment must be related to the motion it tends to modify, that is to say that the substance of that amendment must not only refer to the substance of the main motion, but also be directed towards the main motion and fall within its provisions and details.

Generally speaking, an amendment should tend to restrict rather than to enlarge upon the terms of the main motion.

I feel therefore that not only is the motion out of order in its present form, but that it is defective in that it does not fall within the framework I just mentioned. Consequently, it is not germane to the resolution put by the minister.

That being the case, I think the hon. member's proposal is really a substantive motion and that, as such, it cannot be acted on before the notice prescribed in that respect has been given, and that when the Speaker is in the chair.

If my conclusions are right, I think that the hon. member's proposal departs from the terms of standing order 44, namely:

44. When a question is under debate no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the orders of the day; for proceeding to another order; to adjourn the debate; or for the adjournment of the house.

I do not suggest that all these procedures would be acceptable when the house sits in committee of the whole. I suggest that the motion of the hon. member is inconsistent with any or all of the provisions of standing order 44.

Consequently, for the reasons indicated and having considered the arguments put forward this morning, I regret to tell the hon. member for Quebec East that his motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, I appeal against your ruling.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, before appealing against your ruling, that is before the vote is taken on your ruling, since you especially raised the question of vice of form and since the same problem occurred two days ago in this house and that you allowed to correct the vices of form of a motion and not the substance, would it be possible to correct this faulty drafting in order that this motion may be acceptable to the house?

The Chairman: Order. The Chair has given its ruling. I take the liberty to remind the hon. member that the ruling is not or cannot be essentially based on the question of form, because I put forward arguments about the substance, on which I based the ruling I have just rendered.

Mr. Beaule: I maintain my decision, Mr. Chairman, and I appeal against your ruling.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, sir, before you leave the chair if hon. members would agree, in order to expedite business, that the matter could be settled by unanimous consent here in the committee instead of going to the trouble of having the Speaker called back to the chair and ringing the bells for a division. If there is any objection we would have to follow the usual course, but it does take up time.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, I accept the Secretary of State's suggestions that the matter be settled by the committee.

[Text]

The Chairman: Do we have the consent of the committee to act in this way?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: Could the Secretary of State tell us how he wishes to proceed?

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: One way that would save considerable time would be to bring the Speaker back to the chair and have a voice vote, without having five members stand to call for a recorded vote.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is a very much better suggestion, because then we would not be departing from any of the standing orders, if that could be agreed upon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker resumed the chair and put the question as follows:

In committee of the whole, when a resolution to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act was being considered, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Beaule) proposed the following motion:

[Translation]

That this house urge the federal government to hand back to the provinces, except those which prefer the status quo, a percentage of the income tax equal to the amounts which the federal government would otherwise pay them as its contribution to the vocational and technical training assistance program, in order to enable the provinces to set up their own vocational training system as they see fit.

[Text]

The chairman ruled that the amendment was not only defective as to form but it was also irrelevant and, as such, it was in the nature of a substantive motion. Whereupon the hon. member for Quebec East appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

Is it the pleasure of the house that the chairman's ruling be confirmed? Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the ruling of the chair sustained.

And the house having resumed in committee:

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, in rising to discuss this resolution I think I should first point out that I know I am the second speaker on the Conservative side, and so I disagree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who said there was going to be just one speaker from each party. I have some views which I want to communicate with regard to this resolution, and I thought it better to do so on the resolution stage than on any other.

Second, I confess I am quite at a loss to understand the objections of the hon. member for Quebec East. He seems to feel that the original act, and the modifications which the resolution suggests, are unjust toward Quebec in that they were made for the English speaking provinces. I must say I am unable to see this argument at all. It is true Quebec has used only a very small portion of the money available to it, but Quebec is not the only province in that situation. My own province, Saskatchewan, has used a surprisingly small portion of the money that was available, and so I cannot see his objections.

The resolution contains four provisions. The first two, increasing the federal percentage of training allowances for unemployed persons, and for training allowances for employed persons in industry, should make it possible for the provinces to increase the aid they are now giving in these two fields. The third provision, which extends the date for payment of the 75 per cent of capital costs, should enable the provinces that were less ready to take advantage of federal assistance to do so now, provinces like Quebec and Saskatchewan.

Of course I support, as I think do all hon. members, these three provisions. It is very easy for a Conservative to support them, since they merely continue and extend to some degree legislation which the previous government introduced in December, 1960; legislation which I feel certain would have been imaginatively and constructively improved by this time rather than merely continued.

The original bill demonstrated the Conservative party's belief that skilled manpower is of prime importance in fostering national development. This principle is recognized in other countries, and in fact the Labour party in Britain intends to fight the next election on this premise. They believe that the future of Britain depends upon establishing a well educated class of workmen, with a large and well trained group of scientists creating the new products and the new processes which will provide the jobs for these super workmen. Surely we believe in the same thing.

As the hon. member for Cape Breton South said in the House of Commons on December 9, 1960, speaking to the original bill:

Anyone who has studied the bill will have to admit it is the most positive step forward in the training field ever taken in this country.

It was the previous government which had the imagination to take this step, and coupled with that imagination concern for the people and the welfare of the country to produce this fine piece of legislation. I believe I should also add that it had the administrative skill to make the bill work effectively, administrative skill which the present session has demonstrated is so sadly lacking in this government.

The legislation which was then introduced empowered the federal government to enter into agreements with the provinces to provide financial assistance toward the costs of providing technical and vocational training programs for adults. This was quite a change and enlargement in assistance. Formerly programs of technical and vocational training were available only to unemployed persons, students in technical and vocational courses in secondary schools, apprentices, supervisors in industry, and disabled persons.

Therefore we see that in December, 1960, for the first time the Progressive Conservative government produced legislation which enabled it to share in the costs of providing the necessary technical and vocational training to persons who required skills to work as technicians, to persons over regular school leaving age who needed training to develop or increase occupational skills and, third, to teachers, supervisors or administrators who were to carry out the training programs.

While providing this assistance to the provinces to train these people, the previous government also recognized the need to provide funds so that additional training facilities could be provided across Canada. Thus the government provided contributions of up to 75 per cent of the capital cost of such facilities and equipment. These new facilities included technical and vocational schools, technical institutes and trade schools.

The need for such legislation was very great. It was a need that had existed for a long time during the governing years of the previous Liberal administration, and the program meeting this need was tremendously successful. More than 450 projects, involving 221 completely new vocational high schools, trade schools or technical institutes were constructed. In all accommodation was provided for some 130,000 more technical and vocational students. The estimated cost of these approved projects was in the neighbourhood of $442 million, and that $442 million was one of the reasons that the Conservative administration had such large deficits during its period in office. I for one, and I am sure many other Canadians, applaud deficits like these, deficits which educate our people, deficits which help to assure a fine future for our country.

Besides doing this, the previous government paid 75 per cent of the cost of training unemployed persons. It also shared with the provinces, on a 50-50 basis, the operational cost, including student allowances, of approved training programs. That Progressive Conservative government provided 50 per cent of the cost of training programs for apprentices, disabled persons and supervisors in industry. This was done because the previous government believed that industry itself must accept a larger share of the responsibility for the establishment of suitable training programs to meet its own needs. Provision was made to assist industry in this regard to develop active training programs in (1) apprenticeship training, (2) the utilization of training facilities in industrial establishments for training unemployed persons, (3) the enlargement of present programs for training instructors in industry, and (4) the introduction of new training programs by industry to upgrade the skills of employees to meet continuing manpower needs and changing occupational requirements.

All that the resolution now before the house will do is increase to some extent the financial contributions and, more significantly, extend the April 1, 1963 time limit on federal contributions to capital costs of training facilities built by the provinces to March 31, 1967. The resolution also introduces a limiting factor in that no province can receive more than $480 per student in the 15 to 19 years of age training group. The apparent reason behind this move is that the old time limit discriminated in favour of the provinces where technical and vocational training was well advanced.

The $480 limitation is one feature of the resolution which disturbs me. There is quite evidently no attempt to apply the equalization of educational opportunity principle to the financial provisions. In brief this principle is that every Canadian should have an equal right to a good education. It is equally obvious that all provinces are not equally capable financially of providing this right. It should therefore be the purpose of the federal government to provide financial support for those least able to provide it themselves. In other words, Mr. Chairman, I believe very strongly that it should be an axiom of federal aid in all educational fields to provide funds which will enable every Canadian to have that equal educational opportunity. I am afraid that by bringing every province's aid up to the limit set, the need of those who require it most is not being recognized.

I would like to quote from a report in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of recent date on comments made by Dr. J. T. Montague, director of the industrial relations institute at the University of British Columbia, which I believe emphasizes the main fault of a program such as this resolution presents. This article is headed "Roundhouse blows at ill defined target" and says:

"The federal government has dashed to the scene with answers which show strong conviction about the trends which are evolving"—

Then further:

But, Dr. Montague said, "Indications of change in the labour force are seemingly without sufficient pattern from which to picture clearly the labour force of the future.

"Firm answers have taken hold in an area where it is next to impossible to describe anything more than the most general labour force adjustments needed to meet industrial adjustments which as yet are without definite shape".

The article continues:

"Even a quick glimpse leaves me spinning in questions of whether we will find in the long run that today's efforts have assisted in overcoming structural difficulties within the labour force or whether, by carrying out single-skill programs which are often dead-end in character, we have guaranteed to complicate the future".

Programs set up under this act are not designed to correct the root of the matter. Only the establishment of an efficient, widely based, general educational program designed to raise the educational level of our people to the highest in the world is good enough for this country. Some of the provinces may be able to do this for themselves, but unless all the provinces do it this country will continually be plagued by an overabundance of cheap, uneducated, unskilled labour; and all labour, all people, all provinces, rich and poor, will suffer from a depreciated standard of living as a consequence.

In this respect, Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to what the hon. lady from Northumberland said on Friday, October 25. I will not actually quote her words but will merely paraphrase them. She spoke of the fact that over 1,700,000 of the residents of the 17 metropolitan areas came from other countries, and almost one million of the residents of those 17 cities came from a province other than that in which their respective city was located. The implication should be obvious to the wealthy metropolitan areas. They should, in their own interests, have no objection to assisting in the education of the less fortunate. This is recognized by the school trustees association, which recently presented a brief to the royal commission on taxation which contained a number of practical suggestions. I again quote from a report in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of recent date:

The federal government must make more tax dollars available to lower levels of government if the ballooning costs of education are to be met, the Canadian school trustees association said today.

The article says further:

The association recommended that local government be given the responsibility for elementary education, with necessary assistance from provincial governments which would also take care of secondary education. Higher and vocational education would be looked after by the federal government. Additional assistance should be given to the Atlantic provinces, and any other provinces that need it, to help bring expenditures per pupil in line with the national average.

These are good, concrete suggestions, and no matter what may be the expressed opinions of some members about the interference of the federal parliament in the rights of the provinces, I contend that help given to universities and help given to the provinces for improvements in vocational and technical education does not interfere with provincial rights. We are doing it now, and no one can honestly say that the dominion has in any way interfered in provincial control of education by offering financial aid where it was badly needed.

I would like to conclude by saying that I am quite disappointed that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has not yet presented his bill for the granting of 10,000 scholarships. Surely he is not worried about the cost, because this government seems willing to spend money on almost anything else; the deficit grows by leaps and bounds. Surely this program is not being delayed because the government is suddenly growing parsimonious. There are so many other places in which millions of dollars could be cut off, with less loss to the country. For example, the new Department of Industry is to have some 125 executive employees each drawing over $11,000 a year, for a total of $1,500,000 yearly. The enlargement of a high priced bureaucracy is proceeded with apace, but the education of our people is relegated to a minor position.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Byrne). During an election campaign, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) made the following promise:

The payment of a small salary to students attending technical schools with a view of relieving their parents from their burden.

Could the parliamentary secretary inform us whether the Minister of Justice made representations to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) to the effect that a salary be paid to students in order to give some relief to their parents?

Mr. Caron: You are no longer against patronage?

Mr. Pigeon: I am referring here to a public statement made before a large number of witnesses by the Minister of Justice during an election campaign.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to receive an answer.

[Text]

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of matters to which I should like to reply, but in view of the fact that there has been some sort of arrangement made amongst the leaders of the various parties that we would limit debate at this time, I think it would be appropriate if I were to make my statement on the second reading of the bill. In the meantime I will bring this matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Pigeon: I agree.

Mr. Smallwood: Just one short question for the parliamentary secretary. He has referred to vocational training schools, and I should like to use the example of Camrose, Alberta, where a school was officially opened last September. A member of parliament from that area who lived some 60 miles from Camrose was invited there, but your government sent an official from Ottawa at the expense of the taxpayers just to make a five minute speech at the opening of this school. Is that the policy of your government, to waste the taxpayers' money on that sort of thing?

Mr. Byrne: I think it is quite appropriate, and it is usually done by decision of the local people who have gone to very great efforts to bring these projects forward. When they send an invitation to the Department of Labour the department, which in most instances has undertaken to pay up to 75 per cent of the cost of construction, considers it only a courtesy that someone from the department attend. I am sure the committee will agree that this is normal procedure.

Mr. Smallwood: Then do I take it that this man was sent to Camrose at the request of one of the consultants to the Postmaster General in that district?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to make a speech, but I do want to give notice to the person who is now sponsoring the resolution that when the bill goes into committee I want to ask a series of questions in relation to the utilization, for actual vocational and technical purposes, of the plant that has now been created as a result of the working of this act over the past three years. I intend to ask for fairly detailed information at that time.

Mr. Byrne: I can assure the hon. member that this information will be available at that time.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mint and Exchange Fund Act

Miss LaMarsh (for Mr. MacEachen) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-105, to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CURRENCY, MINT AND EXCHANGE FUND ACT

AUTHORIZATION TO PURCHASE SECURITIES OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, before the next order is called I wonder if I could say a word about the business. I think there is an understanding that if we called the currency, mint and exchange fund resolution the resolution could be disposed of very quickly so the bill could be debated on Monday after the bill which has just been introduced. If that is the correct understanding I should like to have it called before the railway committee resolution. However, if hon. gentlemen want to have any prolonged debate on this matter we would stick to the program which was announced last night and call the railway committee resolution first.

Mr. Monteith: We would agree to that procedure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have to be away on Monday, Mr. Speaker, but I have only a few sentences, if that is acceptable.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily we are more than pleased to cooperate with the government and, on this matter, we agreed yesterday to adopt the resolution as quickly as possible. However, in the light of events that transpired since last night, and in view of the fact that the resolution constitutes inevitably a first step towards the creation of an international currency, we feel we have to express our views on this resolution, not by stretching the debate too long but by having at least one member speak on this matter.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Then in that case, sir, it seems to me that we could proceed with this item so the bill would also be available by Monday, as well as the other bill. I will be glad to make the motion on behalf of the Minister of Finance, seconded by the Postmaster General.

Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Gordon) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

Mint and Exchange Fund Act

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act to authorize the Minister of Finance to purchase out of the exchange fund account maintained under the act, securities of the international monetary fund.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to thank members of all parties opposite for their very generous agreement to allow me to make a purely explanatory statement concerning this motion and move on to second reading of the bill with the minimum of debate. My statement will be slightly longer than would ordinarily be the case at this stage in order that the purpose of the legislation may be made quite clear, to the end that this explanation may assist hon. members opposite by indicating what the government intends to achieve by the proposed legislation.

Under the provisions of section 22 of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act the exchange fund is permitted to acquire and to hold certain types of foreign assets. At present these assets are limited to (1) gold; (2) convertible currencies such as U.S. dollars and sterling, and deposits in such currencies; (3) treasury bills and other obligations issued by the U.S. government. The amendment proposed is a very simple one. It would add one further item to this list, specifically "securities of the international monetary fund maturing not later than five years from the date of issue". This amendment is needed so that Canada can participate in the arrangements for the provision of supplementary resources for the international monetary fund, known as the "fund decision on general arrangements to borrow".

Hon. members may recall that on January 8, 1962, the minister of finance at the time announced that, subject to parliamentary approval, Canada would join nine other leading industrial countries in undertaking to provide stand-by credits to the international monetary fund up to specified amounts. These credits, if and as required, would provide the fund with supplementary resources to support the reserves and balance of payments of one or more of the participating countries if they came under special pressure; in other words, to avoid exchange crises in the participating countries. The agreed purpose is "to forestall or cope with an impairment of the international monetary system".

The ten participants in this arrangement are Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. Switzerland, although not a member of the fund, is also expected to participate. All the other nine countries have already adhered formally to the arrangement. Total pledges of support by the ten participants under these arrangements amount to the equivalent of $6 billion in terms of United States currency. The maximum which Canada might be asked to lend under these arrangements would be the equivalent of U.S. $200 million or Canadian $216,216,000 at our current fixed rate of exchange.

Such loans, of course, would not be a budgetary charge. It is anticipated that loans which might be made available by Canada under these arrangements could involve the use of existing resources in the exchange fund account and would consequently not necessarily require net additional Canadian dollar borrowing by the government.

If a participating country makes a loan to the fund under these arrangements it may receive, upon request, securities of the fund equal to the amount of the loan, and bearing interest to maturity based on a formula which at present yields a rate of 1½ per cent per annum. The maturity of any such security will not exceed a maximum of five years. The agreed interest rate corresponds approximately to the average rate earned at present by the fund. If the scale of charges made by the fund on its various forms of accommodation were increased, the rate payable to countries providing special resources would be increased accordingly. The fund will also pay a transfer charge of one half of one per cent on each borrowing transaction.

The amendment proposed will provide the legislative authority to allow the exchange fund to invest in securities to be issued by the international monetary fund. Since the purpose of such an investment would be to promote stability in exchange markets, and since any participating country may recall its investment if it experiences balance of payments difficulties, it is appropriate that any supplementary resources called for by the I.M.F. from Canada should be provided through the exchange fund.

The procedures which the ten participants will apply in making supplementary resources available have been embodied in an exchange of letters between the French minister of finance and each of the nine other ministers. On January 8, 1962 the text of the exchange of letters was released by the then minister of finance. In brief, the arrangements would be brought into play on the initiative and under the guidance of the managing director of the international monetary fund. In the very unlikely event that agreement could not be reached among the lending countries regarding their relative shares in any particular transaction, an arrangement for a formal voting procedure is provided.

Canada, because of its dependence on trade, played an important role in the founding of the international monetary fund. Canada was one of the sponsors of the general increase in quotas four years ago, and in fact accepted an increase in its own quota greater than the average.

We are also, as hon. members know, participating currently in international discussions relating to the working of the international financial system. I am sure hon. members will agree that Canada should continue to play a constructive part by participating in the special arrangements now proposed to enable the fund to carry out its growing responsibilities.

In addition to the amendment just outlined, the government proposes another of a purely technical character. This relates to section 22 of the act. This amendment would make it clear that the proceeds upon maturity of securities held by the exchange fund, as well as the proceeds resulting from the sale of such securities, are to be credited to the exchange fund. This amendment is really required because of an oversight in the original legislation; however, it is currently important because securities to be issued by the international monetary fund will be non-negotiable and hence will be held to maturity if they are not called by the fund for repayment.

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure the committee has listened with interest to the statement which has just been made by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. As he has pointed out, the primary purpose of this legislation concerns a matter which has been under discussion for a substantial period of time. The letters embodying the conditions under which it is proposed to operate were tabled by my predecessor in January, 1962, I think the hon. gentleman said.

I believe legislation along these lines is desirable because it will serve a valuable purpose. This proposal is the legislative culmination of a series of discussions which have been going on over a period of months, if not years, and I hope the committee will see its way clear to adopt the resolution without undue delay, though it is not, of course, for me to say what discussion there should be on it.

As for the second part of the proposal, it is of a purely technical nature necessary to clear up one phase of the operation as far as we are concerned, and I am sure it will commend itself to the committee.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not propose to hold up the committee for very long. I just want to make some comments on this subject because I have brought this question before the house on a number of occasions. I refer to the difficulties in which the world is getting in regard to international trade.

In spite of the reply given by the Minister of Finance to a question I put to him, I am unable to place any other interpretation upon this bill than that it is a stopgap proposal, or a small, faltering step toward a final solution of the problems of international trade. It is significant that the ten countries which are at present engaged in negotiations in Paris should be the same ten countries which are involved in this proposal. There have been repeated news reports both from Europe and the United States about the Paris discussions, and there have been a number of plans put forward for improving the situation with regard to international liquidity. One of them was referred to recently in the New York Times, the Bernstein plan; and there is another which is perhaps more far reaching in its implications and which has also been discussed.

I hope Canada will not be among the countries which will drag their feet when it comes to moving more rapidly toward a final solution of these difficulties. There will certainly be opposition to any radical changes. Some of these objections were voiced by the new director of the international monetary fund shortly after he took office. Not long afterwards, though, he beat a retreat and suggested that while in his opinion there was no present serious shortage of international exchange, such a situation might arise and it would therefore be as well to proceed with investigations.

I hope we will not stop at investigations. This is reminiscent of the days some 30 years ago when national economies were trying to free themselves from the restrictions of the gold standard. The same sort of objections were raised then to any departure from the gold standard that are being raised today against more revolutionary proposals for an international unit of exchange. I hope the Canadian government, through its delegation, will be among those who will be pressing for the exploration of every possible means by which the world economic community can move into the position which is now occupied by national economic units in relation to the exchange medium.

Mr. Thompson: The principle involved in this resolution is of vital concern to us. As we were in extreme difficulties during the thirties, when the gold basis of our national monetary unit was proving unsatisfactory, so are we today in difficulty on the international scene as far as the gold standard is concerned. However, following the principles we have enunciated when speaking about reform as far as the operation of the rules in this house are concerned, we are content to let this resolution pass now and take the opportunity of examining the serious aspects which are involved in this proposal when it comes before us as legislation.

We find this measure brought before us on exactly the same day that press reports have come out regarding plans for a global currency system now under consideration by ten nations. We find that these are the same ten nations involved in this particular resolution. This situation causes us to wonder. I wonder, myself, why Switzerland is not in this arrangement. However, there will be an opportunity to debate and discuss this matter fully when it comes before us as legislation, and we shall deal with it more specifically on that occasion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I believe the few questions I had the opportunity to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) today during the question period succeeded in opening the eyes of some of the other members of this house to the results of this resolution which appears as item 14 on the order paper.

In my opinion, were it only a matter of studying the resolution in itself and in a general way, there would probably be no problem.

The question is simply to establish a reserve fund for the various countries so that, should one of the ten countries—Canada, France or the United States—find itself in difficulties in respect of its foreign exchange reserve to deal with the others, that ten-country club, known as the Paris club, would lend money to that country, so that it would find it easier to carry out its transactions.

We must not forget one thing, however. This famous Paris club has ten members, practically all countries belonging to the common market except Luxembourg, Great Britain, Canada, the United States and Japan.

Those discussions were followed by a second stage where efforts were made to set up an international currency. This is where we raise objections. History proves that there was at the first stage, a chain reaction which is difficult to stop.

The next step will be the establishment of an international currency, as the New York Times stated recently. That scares us a little, Mr. Chairman. Why? Because Canada, like the nine other members of the Paris club, does not control its own currency.

Our monetary unit, at 92.5 per cent, that is credit, and we do not even control it.

And now countries which do not even control their monetary unit will agree to create a monetary unit that will be under whose control then?

The danger lies there. If you consider those ten countries that make up the Paris club and if you consider which ones control their credit, you will find that control vested in four or five international credit trusts: Kuhn and Loeb, J. P. Morgan, the Rothschilds, the Lazares. Here is where it all ends: four international financial trusts, and London's Barclay's Bank.

I can see the Minister of Finance seems to find it funny that trusts such as these should be mentioned. But, Mr. Chairman, let us not forget that when, for instance, the Imperial Bank of Canada and the Canadian Bank of Commerce merged—two of our most important chartered banks—to form one of the largest banks which controls money and credit in this country, and when that merger was announced in the official Canada Gazette, it was seen in the last paragraph that those two banks were controlled by the Barclay's Bank of London.

Now, if we take a look at all our chartered banks, if we examine the situation of the banks controlled in the United States, in France, in Italy, in the Netherlands, in Belgium, in Japan, in West Germany, we find that the same four big international financial trusts I mentioned a while ago control credit and the growth of credit in each of those countries.

And as a first step, which may seem very normal—it seems to be a procedure designed for mutual help—those ten countries propose: "That loans be made or at least securities issued on the market, which will be meant to guarantee us against the difficulties one of the ten countries might have." But who will control the securities and the $200 million worth of securities issued at the start by Canada, to be deposited if need be—not immediately if there is no immediate need, but if needed—in this new monetary fund?

Mind you the terms used are, as I can see it, rather ambiguous—they do not tell the truth; they say "securities of the international monetary fund". It is not a matter of putting moneys in some international monetary fund or a matter of doing business with the international monetary fund, it is a fund which is entirely distinct from the international monetary fund; the one we are now being asked to approve would be just a fund available to those ten countries.

We are afraid of that step, Mr. Chairman. While, today, Canada is the only country in the ten member Paris club which has signed the agreement to which parliament has not yet affixed its signature and about which it has not as yet made up its mind—it is assumed that Canada will follow, as usual, England, the United States and the other countries, it is assumed that Canada will always follow in their wake—we are presented with the second stage, which is the creation of an international unit for the ten countries included in the Paris club, whose international units and control lie precisely with the same four financial cartels.

Mr. Chairman, the reason given is that the countries can be in need of this and may meet with difficulties in the field of international trade. Well, as far as this is concerned, I shall tell the Minister of Finance that if Canada, under the present administration as well as under the previous one, experiences or has experienced difficulties, this is not because of the economic situation of Canada during peacetime but because of the mismanagement and wrong monetary system that we now have in Canada.

Instead of attempting first to do things like that, we should rather think of making the necessary changes in our monetary system, in order to be able to anticipate, so that we will not have the difficulties we now experience, like those we had in the past.

The economic situation of Canada might be very sound, but it is badly affected, not because of men or because of the wealth of this country, but because of the monetary and financial system we have in Canada. This is a mistake the Minister of Finance should correct, instead of committing us to another system of international control by financial trusts.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that this resolution should have been much more carefully scrutinized, so that we could have roused public opinion on the venture in which the government intends to launch us at this time.

However, we will accept the resolution in order to see at least, how far the bill can lead us. But the government will have to guarantee that Canada will not join this famous Paris club, a club of ten countries all "controlled" by international finance trusts.

When the bill is before us, we will be in a better position to discuss it, because we will then know what it is all about. However, I wish to warn the Minister of Finance right now that with all the latest developments we can open our eyes and foresee where this first stage of the Paris club of ten is leading us.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, it was agreed that there would be only one speaker for each party at the resolution stage, so I should just like to give notice that I will have something to say when the bill is before the house.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister of Finance wants to make some remarks on the resolution we would agree that he should be permitted to do so before the bill is presented. We would then have the opportunity to study his reply to the remarks made by opposition members before the bill is presented. We would agree to the Minister of Finance making such remarks when we reconvene at 2.30.

Mr. Gordon: Question.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-106, to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved:

That a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government be appointed to consider the accounts, estimates and bills relating to the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines and such other matters as may be placed before it, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys, and that the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time, and that notwithstanding standing order 67 in relation to the limitation of the number of members, the said committee shall consist of 26 members.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a motion made each year to set up a sessional committee which is charged with the responsibility of examining the operations and accounts of the publicly owned railway system and its subsidiary, the air lines system. Its work has to a limited extent been disturbed in the last two years by the calling of elections at times when they interfered with the regular routine of the session.

The motion, as will be seen, has been on the order paper since July 10. For my part I must say I am very glad that it has come forward now. I think I represent the views of all members in this house if I say that we look forward to having it set up so that hon. members can have the opportunity of examining the officers of the two crown-owned corporations and examining their affairs. The importance of the transportation system to the economy is so self evident that it would be redundant were I, at this time on this motion, to attempt to develop that theme.

I hope that later in this session I will be presenting to parliament general railway legislation which will have rather far reaching effects, and which will be based on the study of the royal commission on that subject. Of course hon. members have been looking forward to the introduction of this legislation for some time. I hope also, before the end of the year, to be making a statement on air policy. In any event, these two particular questions are not germane to this motion. However, the statement of air policy, the railway legislation that is coming forward and certain other related transportation legislation that is either on the order paper or coming, together with the work of this committee, should represent rather extensive activity for this session of parliament in the whole field of transport.

Perhaps no useful purpose would be served at this stage by saying more in asking the house to concur in the motion to set up the committee. I should like, however, to indicate that if the motion carries I propose immediately to move to refer the annual report of the railway and of Trans-Canada Air Lines to the committee.

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask the minister a question. How many members will there be on that committee?

Mr. McIlraith: There will be 26, I think, according to the motion.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the minister made very brief remarks on this resolution, and I understand very well the reason for his brevity. There have been some important matters raised with which the minister could have dealt when he introduced this resolution. We should like to hear from the government at this stage what the responsibilities of this committee will be. I think the minister, in avoiding some of these problems, did not want to implicate the government by giving the committee directions, and his failure to do so indicates a lack of comprehension of the problems that have been raised in the house in the last few days.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, is quite an important one. As the minister said a while ago, elections have interfered with the work of the committee, and this is something we all regret. However, if the Liberals had not felt an urgent need for an election, and conspired with some other parties to bring one about, there would have been an opportunity to proceed with the work of the last parliament.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I find that the minister considered it his duty, his obligation, not to mention certain projects and situations which deserve to be submitted to the house, so that the committee might get a general idea of the duties its members will have to face.

Referring to the resolution proper, item 12, on page 6, I find this:

> The committee is to consider the accounts, estimates and bills relating to the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines and such other matters as may be placed before it.

Among the matters that may come before the committee there is one which is certainly with us at this time, and it is the decision of T.C.A. whether to acquire Caravelle type aircraft or not.

This morning, we asked the Prime Minister some questions to this effect, and the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) even addressed one to the Prime Minister. Following my subquestion, the Prime Minister seems to have given his assurance that no decision on this matter would be taken without parliament being given an opportunity to express its opinion.

To my mind, that is a wise decision. We remind the Prime Minister of that undertaking, because we consider this to be a most important matter, not only for the city of Montreal, but for Canada as a whole.

I should perhaps also remind hon. members that three proposals have been made to T.C.A. One concerned the purchase of a new type of aircraft—and you may remember that T.C.A. hesitated between the BAC-111, manufactured in England, where the manufacturing company had apparently undertaken to take back the Vanguard type aircraft in exchange, and other aircraft.

Unfortunately, as everybody knows, an unfortunate incident which happened recently modified the company's decision. T.C.A. announced almost officially, through its president, its decision to ignore the wishes of parliament, the city of Montreal, the province of Quebec and various organizations, and had, in short, practically decided to acquire the DC-9.

You also know, of course, that this aircraft is built in the United States, and that this American company had decided to place part of the order, that is 12.5 per cent, with Canadian subcontractors if T.C.A. bought that plane.

There was another alternative, and it was to buy a Caravelle or a Super Caravelle. The company which sells that aircraft made a most interesting offer, in the hope that T.C.A. would take a closer look. However, I am sorry to say that the president of T.C.A., acting in what one might call an autocratic way, had decided before hand not to listen to any representations. Actually, the Sud-Aviation company, which builds that aircraft, had offered Canadair, in Montreal, to join it in a common venture; it was ready to grant Canadair the exclusive right to build the Caravelle and the Super Caravelle that would be sold in Canada and all over North America.

It is quite clear that such a proposal would have been extremely beneficial to Canada and to the whole Canadian aviation industry.

At a time when Canada is plagued with unemployment, more particularly in the province of Quebec and in the city of Montreal, thousands of workers would have found jobs.

The minister has consistently refused to give this house relevant information about the decision or the motivation behind this T.C.A. deal. We hope that he will now find it possible to reconsider the purchase of the Caravelle. We also hope that the committee to be appointed will be given detailed information and that it will have occasion to read the report which T.C.A. engineers had prepared on that matter.

Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the reason why the minister wishes to surround with such mystery the purchase of those planes. T.C.A. employs more than 365 engineers, almost as many as Canadair, which is a private enterprise, and I wonder why there is so much difference in the interpretation given by those two organizations.

In fact, according to the information I could unofficially gather, it seems that the engineers of Canadair have studied the three different types of planes, and that there was no doubt as to the superiority of the Caravelle aircraft over the two other types of aircraft I mentioned a moment ago.

I hope the minister will give us his assurance that the committee will be able to study this whole question before an arbitrary decision is made by the T.C.A. board of directors. This is a prime and vital question for Canada, and especially for the members who will be on the committee.

And if I refer to the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) this morning, we are assured that no decision, I repeat, will be made before parliament has a chance to express its opinion in advance on the choice of the type of aircraft T.C.A. intend to acquire.

Mr. Speaker, there is another matter I want to point out to the house. If we examine the set-up of the T.C.A. board of directors—and I am sorry to have to say it—we find only one French Canadian on a total of 18 directors. It is Mr. Jean Louis Levesque, a Montreal industrialist and financier. And, on this point, I must say it is all to the credit of our party and our leader that Mr. Levesque was appointed during the Conservative administration. Unfortunately, he is the only French Canadian on that board of directors.

In view of the statements made in good faith by the chairman of that crown corporation, we hope that the situation will improve and that this corporation will give French Canadians who have made a name for themselves in the business sector, an opportunity to become members of the board of directors.

Of course, the committee will also have the responsibility to scrutinize the expenditures and the investments of that corporation. Before coming to the estimates of the C.N.R., I should like to ask the minister whether he could not see to it that Canadian currency is accepted by the T.C.A. offices all over the world. In fact, a few years ago, I happened to go to a T.C.A. office in Florida and the Canadian money I offered for an airplane ticket from Miami to Montreal was turned down. It seems unthinkable that Canadians who happen to travel abroad could not buy tickets at T.C.A. offices with Canadian currency.

I also wish to point out to the house that I had the same experience during a recent trip in Europe and I am sure that other hon. members probably had the same misfortune. I realize that this is a matter of internal administration, but I think the committee could certainly discuss the problem in order to find a solution, because it is completely illogical to find such an attitude in the offices of T.C.A., a crown corporation.

Mr. Speaker, the committee will also have to criticize and study the operation of the C.N.R.

Now, so much has been said about that crown corporation and especially about its president, who has just been reappointed by the present government, that I should not want to raise those issues once again.

When Mr. Gordon was given a new term of office, a short while ago, he showed a lot of goodwill and wrote a letter to the Prime Minister to assure parliament that the only reason for his seeking another term of 17 or 18 months was to balance the company's budget before retiring.

I think all hon. members will agree with me that it is unfortunate that Mr. Gordon should have waited so long to express the desire to balance a budget which has been in the red since he took over his present position.

Mr. Speaker, there are other comments I should have liked to make, but I do not wish to refer again to personal incidents which have made Mr. Gordon internationally famous.

However, I must congratulate him for promising to improve the French Canadian representation on the board of directors and among the staff.

As a matter of fact, it will be recalled that, before the Conservative party came to office, there was not a single French Canadian among the directors of the company. And here I wish to pay special tribute to the leader of the Conservative party who, as soon as he took over the government of this country in 1958, complied with the wishes and requests of the Quebec members and improved the French Canadian representation on the board of that company, a fact which the province of Quebec did not fail to recognize.

We hope that the progress of this exchange between the country's two ethnic groups will not only continue but will increase, in order to further national unity.

Mr. Speaker, another problem that the committee should study concerns the relation of the C.N.R. with private transport companies. For a number of years already, the C.N.R. has been competing in an illogical and abnormal way with private transport companies. Many briefs have been submitted to the government authorities in that connection and we hope that the committee will study the results of the disastrous competition the C.N.R. is waging against private companies.

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that when the C.N.R. shows a deficit, it resorts to government grants. On the other hand, when the operations of a private transportation company show a deficit, the company cannot do the same and it must make up for the deficit by personal loans or by committing its future.

I trust that the members of the committee will take under consideration this problem which must definitely be settled.

Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Gordon stated in his letter to the Prime Minister, that he intended to balance the budget of the C.N.R. before he leaves, I am of the opinion he took too much credit, since the former minister of transport, the present member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), had already placed before the house, namely on December 4, 1962, proposals that would make it possible to balance the financial situation of the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. on a long term basis.

As the then minister (Mr. Balcer) said on that occasion—and at this stage I want to pay tribute to him—he had suggested to Mr. Gordon some ideas and instructions which would eventually enable him to balance the budget of this crown corporation.

The C.N.R. system includes a large number of business concerns whose operations, in my opinion, go against the principle of private enterprise which we, members of the Conservative party, have always advocated.

I find here, in the 1962 C.N.R. annual report, on page 20, a list of all kinds of companies which are owned by this national system; there are about forty of them, many of which are trusts. For instance, I see here The Canadian National Railways Securities Trust, Eastern Transport Limited, Montalta Holdings Limited, Mount Royal Tunnel and Terminal Company Limited, Central Vermont Railway, Inc., in short the names of a whole series of companies which, in my opinion, should not be owned by a government transport system because they come in competition with private companies, which are the very basis of our economy, and it weakens them.

A few years ago, the Quebec trucking association objected to the purchase by the Canadian National Railways of two Canadian trucking companies, that is the Midland Superior Express Limited and another one whose name has slipped my memory—

Mr. Beaule: The Husband.

Mr. Valade: The Husband Transport Limited. Representations made at the time were well founded and the then minister of transport promised to consider the problem. Unfortunately, the events mentioned by the minister a while ago—the election—have postponed the investigation. I hope that during this session, the committee will call the people concerned with truck transportation, highway transportation, with a view to bringing about a solution and preventing the state from competing directly with private enterprise.

There are indeed in this connection many questions to be discussed, the implications of which the committee will have the opportunity to investigate thoroughly when it will sit.

I would also like to draw, the attention of the house on the fact that there is another company which is a crown company, and which is known as the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation. Here again we find that, unfortunately, there is only one French Canadian out of ten directors. Yet, the head office is located in Montreal, in the province of Quebec. I would like to mention incidentally that I do not question at all the qualifications, the loyalty, the trustworthiness of the other directors of that corporation, but it seems to me that French Canadians should be given greater opportunities so as to be able to make the most of themselves in that company.

Besides, I think the committee should study certain matters which the minister did not want to raise but which come under the terms of reference of the committee. In particular,

I should like to stress that it is important for the committee to study the proposed abolition of tolls on Champlain bridge.

It will be recalled that it took the Conservatives little time to abolish tolls on Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges, a step which the Liberal party had been promising for 22 years. If the Conservative party fulfilled that promise, it was not as a matter of political expediency but rather because it was a matter of necessity.

Mr. Beaule: May I ask a question to the hon. member for St. Mary?

Mr. Valade: The Conservative party realized how important it was for the development of the Canadian metropolis to have access roads to ease the flow of traffic between the two shores of the St. Lawrence river.

If my friend the hon. member for Quebec East wants to put a question, I shall answer him.

Mr. Beaule: Could the hon. member for St. Mary tell me for what purpose the Conservative government had set up an automatic toll system if it intended to remove it afterwards, if not for a political purpose?

Mr. Valade: I am very pleased to answer this question.

As everybody knows, Montreal harbour is administered by the national harbours board, an organization made up of the province, the city of Montreal and the federal government, each sharing one third of the responsibilities, the obligations and the profits.

When the Conservative government assumed office, certain members of the national harbours board were against the removal of tolls on Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges. That is when it was decided to establish an automatic toll system, not by the government, but by officials of the time, under some authority that I know nothing about. I think I can take to witness the director of the national harbours board in Montreal, Mr. Beaudet, who stated, when we abolished tolls on the bridges, that it was a very bad thing for the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec. We questioned this opinion but that is the view he held. Since Mr. Beaudet is harbourmaster, I feel that his opinion certainly influenced the decision to levy tolls.

As a result of the pressure brought to bear by the Conservative members of Montreal and the province of Quebec, we finally succeeded in eliminating red tape and convincing the government that it was in the interests of the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec to abolish tolls on the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges. This was due to our efforts and far from being a political move, it was a sensible and intelligent administrative step.

I hope that the hon. member for Quebec East who asked me a question is satisfied with my answer and that he will approve my suggestions to ask the committee to consider the opportunity of removing tolls on the Champlain bridge.

This question is all the more urgent because, we are organizing the great world fair of 1967 and that, at the present time, the traffic on the two access roads to Montreal from the south shore is much too heavy.

During peak hours, traffic is tied up on both the south and north approaches of that bridge, causing a tremendous bottleneck. I feel it is in the interest of the metropolis and of the world fair that tolls be abolished on the Champlain bridge.

In fact, I should like to remind our Liberal friends of the promise they made in that connection during the election campaign. All Liberal members from Montreal promised that the tolls would be abolished on Champlain bridge if their party was elected. If they were sincere, I hope the Minister of Transport will recommend the abolition of the tolls to the committee.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I do not want to restrict the hon. gentleman, but I do not know what the bridge under the control of the national harbours board has to do with the motion which is before the house. I just do not see the relationship between the subject matter under discussion and the motion before the house.

Mr. Valade: I do not know whether the minister is raising a point of order, but if he is I must say that he has not read the resolution. My copy is in French, but when I look at the English translation it refers, among other things, to:

—and such other matters as may be placed before it—

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Valade: I think the communications and the bridges fall under the responsibility of the Minister of Transport. Perhaps the Minister of Transport does not want this question to be discussed, I do not know, but—

Mr. McIlraith: That is not the point. The motion is quite clear in its language, and there is no possible way of connecting or relating the activities of the national harbours board to this motion to set up a committee to examine into these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Certainly there is.

Mr. McIlraith: The Leader of the Opposition says certainly there is. He is a good enough lawyer to know that is not the fact. There is no possible relationship, and if he reads the motion he will see that it relates to a committee on railways, air lines and shipping—

—owned and controlled by the government... to consider the accounts, estimates and the bills relating to the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines and such other matters as may be placed before it——and so on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And the hon. member wants this matter placed before it.

Mr. McIlraith: If the hon. member is going to argue that any matter that anyone cares to suggest could be referred to the committee can be debated on the motion to set up the committee, then I suggest that proposition is untenable.

Mr. Pugh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, when the minister was speaking in introducing the resolution I wrote down at the time, because there were one or two things which I might want to comment on, his exact words, and he referred to "the whole field of transportation". "The whole field of transportation" certainly covers all forms of transportation across those bridges in Montreal.

Mr. McIlraith: I did not make any such reference.

Mr. Valade: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is your decision, but it seems to me that my remarks fall within the scope of the resolution, and if this bridge is really annoying to the communications between the minister and his party, perhaps he will abolish this difficulty between his party and the organization. But I suggest that I am within the scope of the bill. I was making the suggestion that when the committee is organized it should bring this subject forward for discussion and call witnesses to study these matters. I do not know why my remarks should fall outside of the realm mentioned by the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I can easily understand that my remarks should slightly annoy the minister because he is faced with his colleague's promises which are irresponsible and impractical like many others.

However, I feel that this question is vitally important for the economic development of Montreal. In my opinion, the minister would do well to accede soon to the requests which were made to him in that connection.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point I wish to make and I am wondering if the minister will not again rise on a point of order. I maintain that Montreal harbour and its approaches are the responsibility of the Minister of Transport. It then follows that I would be pleased if the committee could examine the possibility of Montreal becoming a winter port, that is to say a year-round port. I realize there are difficulties involved. There are natural seaports such as the one to be found in Halifax or Vancouver. But Montreal has a harbour which is the gateway not only to the sea but to several inland provinces. I suggest the government should submit the matter to the committee.

The question is an important one. The former minister of transport, Mr. Hees, had given some thought to Montreal harbour becoming a winter port. I hope the minister will make it a point to suggest to the committee to hear witnesses who will no doubt have some interesting things to say on that matter.

Moreover, some time ago, the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec complained about an important decline in maritime traffic due to the fact that they did not participate to a sufficient extent in the administration of the national harbours board's business.

I do not know if that matter falls under the jurisdiction of the committee itself, but I take this opportunity to point out to the minister the representations made in that respect as well as the requests made by the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec to have more say in the administration of the Montreal harbour.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other questions I could deal with now, but just now, I hope that the minister will take steps to ensure that the committee will consider also the whole question concerning the water and highway transport system in Canada.

For many years already, national organizations have urged the Minister of Transport to revise its entire maritime policy and I hope that we shall have the opportunity, as we sit on the committee, to examine those questions in the light of experts' knowledge as well as of the suggestions that will be made by the members of parliament.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): The motion before us has been on the order paper for a long time, but I must say that in my opinion bringing it forward at this time is as suspect as almost anything which has come before the house. The minister knows there is a committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines which usually overlaps in terms of membership and interest with this particular committee, and that this committee is at the present time involved in considering subject matter for legislation. We also have a couple of private bills including pipe line bills coming before us, and now practically the same personnel are going to be involved with this annual report. It almost seems to me a deliberate attempt to put on pressure in order to get through the C.N.R.-T.C.A. reports at a time when the committee is considering other matters, one of which has a close relation to the discussions with Mr. Gordon in the field of railroading.

I think it needs to be remembered that both direct and informative since he has taken over this portfolio; and I feel that any initiative which the government may have had in the transport field when it took over, with the good will that was there, has been dissipated because we have been given so little information as to government policy.

I think it needs to be rememberd that both the C.N.R. and T.C.A. fall under the umbrella of transport policy. We have no idea where this government is going or what its intentions are, and I defy anyone to find out its intentions from anything the minister has said in the house. We have a general idea that the recommendations of the MacPherson report are going to be brought in. We do not know what the intent is. We do not know which part of it will be taken. We have no idea where the government stands as to the whole relationship between T.C.A. and C.P.A., the whole idea of one national air line wing. We have no conception where the government stands on its policy toward trucking by government owned railways. We have no idea what the policy is with regard to shipping and our merchant marine, which is of course involved with the Canadian National Railways which was once a shipping company of some substance.

The general impression we have is that it could be one of two things. It could be the fact that the government has no policy of any kind in this area and is simply postponing and delaying on the basis that the only possible approach to transport matters is an empirical one. Or if you do not want to go even that far, it is a pragmatic one; in other words you go from day to day without ever setting out any clearcut line. Or perhaps it would be, and this would be the idea of the more hopeful ones among us, that the minister is very busy with his officials and is at some time going to blossom out with a completely new and radical policy and we shall have put before us a new transportation policy for the whole country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. gentleman tell the unlettered among us what the difference is between a pragmatic approach and an empirical approach?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, I would be glad to do that for the unlettered among you. An empirical approach is based on examination of a process known as the inductive process whereby you look at a number of things that have happened and come to a conclusion that there is where the trend goes. You arrive at a deduction from the inductive process, and so you have carried out something empirically.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is worthy of Paul Martin.

Mr. Fisher: I think if the hon. member will read it he will understand it. A pragmatist is someone who does not take that deductive step to a conclusion. He goes strictly from point to point. In other words he never gets out of the inductive process. I am sorry to make this aside to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, but if he wants to know the definition I suggest he is a complete pragmatist and the hon. member for Essex East, the minister for external affairs, is what I would call an empiricist.

Mr. Pickersgill: I go from point to point, like a railway.

Mr. Fisher: The shock we had when the hon. member for Ottawa West was made Minister of Transport was really not shock at any question of his ability or competence to take over such an important field where the burden of administration and the need for policy decision are so great, as that someone should have been chosen who had taken so little interest and who had followed, from all I can find out in the parliamentary record, almost no avenue in the transport field at all.

I consider that this is the most important of the administrative departments of government. I think in many ways it is the most difficult one. I cannot, like hon. gentlemen to my right, postulate a golden age when Mr. Hees or the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) was in charge of the department. I do not feel it was any golden age. But if I can get back to the period before the war and immediately after, it seems to me our transportation policy did have some purpose even if it wound up being debilitated by royal commissions which never really came to any decisions.

In recent years we have had a long public debate on transport issues. I disagree with many of the recommendations of the MacPherson commission but I am prepared to admit, and my colleagues in the main are prepared to admit, that many of the recommendations of that commission are acceptable at the present time despite the fact that the previous government claimed it had legislation; that this legislation was ready; that it had been worked out in consultation with various groups including Mr. Gordon and Mr. Crump and with all the associations involved. The fact remains that this government was elected in April; here we are in November, and last week it was indicated by the Prime Minister that we would have to wait a good bit longer still. I think this is as unsatisfactory as the fact that this week we shall be examining the two annual reports of these crown corporations while at the same time there is another almost due.

I want to make some comments about the reappointment of Mr. Gordon. Mr. Gordon told us last year that he was born in December, 1901, and I think those of us who have had any contact with him are quite aware that he seems to be a healthy man. There is no evidence of approaching senility. He is a very vigorous person, and he still seems quite able to state his views and his ideas very positively.

Mr. Knowles: He is like the member for Port Arthur in many ways.

Mr. Fisher: That is just size. Mr. Gordon has been reappointed with a time limit placed upon the appointment. I assume this is a bargain that has been struck because of differences within the Liberal party and the government, and I can sympathize with their differences because I know that somewhat the same differences existed in the previous administration with regard to Mr. Gordon. But the point is that if the 18 months limitation means anything, Mr. Gordon will be retiring before he reaches the normal retirement age of 65, and it would certainly seem to me that it would be a retirement before he had exhausted his capacity for service.

Personally I am delighted that the Canadian National is going to see the end of Mr. Gordon in 16 months from now or 18 months from the date of his reappointment, but I do feel that in this period the government should be giving a great deal of consideration to whom his successor is going to be. I suggest that a considerable amount of care needs to be taken in the selection, and I think it is worth while suggesting to the minister that the appointment should not be a political one in any way, and that whoever is appointed it should not be someone who is committed at the present time either to one side or the other in the whole matter of labour and management; because one of the great challenges of the next president of the C.N.R. is the whole matter of relations with labour within the company. There will need to be a tremendous effort to uplift the morale of the employees and get better co-operation from the workers of the railway than Mr. Gordon has been able to achieve.

I think the matter requires a great deal of consideration, and I mention it because I have been shocked, and I hope many other members of parliament have been shocked, by the rather loose speculation that the present Minister of Justice is being considered as a potential president of Canadian National Railways. I can think of nothing that would serve to accelerate the destruction of Canadian National Railways more than such an appointment. I do not say this in order to make fun of the Minister of Justice. It is just the fact that neither his background in transport nor his political connections are the kind of thing that we want in the man heading this important crown corporation.

The main criticism we have had of the operations of Canadian National Railways in recent years has centred on the fact that despite the tremendous amount of money that has been poured into the railway by the taxpayers, the debt of the railway has gone up somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1,600 million. I believe the annual interest burden has gone up from around $120 million a year to approximately $380 million a year.

Throughout his regime as president Mr. Gordon's argument has always tended to be twofold. If the structure of Canadian National Railways could be modernized, then it would become a going concern and he would be able to show lots of black ink in the books. If hon. members will look at the last page of the C.N.R. annual report, where there is a 25 year synoptical history of Canadian National Railways, they will see that in the period of Gordon's presidency there have been only four years when the railway was not in the red, and in recent years the annual deficit has been substantial. I have been somewhat amused by the fact that in the part of the 1961 report, for example, under the heading "The Outlook" there is this sentence:

> The 1961 financial result was a cause of deep concern to the board of directors and the management. Over the past several years, despite the most resolute and intense efforts, Canadian National operations have resulted in successive and substantial annual deficits.

Then it goes on to say:

> There are, however, some hopeful signs which could lead to an opportunity for the system to bring a break-even position within its reach.

Then we go to the 1962 report and we find the following:

> The foregoing report records improvements, additions and service changes to C.N.'s complex plant and facilities. It is significant to note, as well, that the new form of administrative organization, now in its third year, has contributed to the improved sales showing and is considered to have brought a new spirit of enthusiasm throughout the system. The organizational structure, which emphasizes local responsibility, is producing more flexible operations tailored to customer demand. The board of directors and management, however, feel that the true impact of the accomplishments of 1962 and prior years, which produced a major rehabilitation of the property, is obscured by the heavy burden of long term debt. There is a marked divergence between what might be termed the "service result" and the "bookkeeping result".

In other words, what Mr. Gordon has been trying to tell us is that we have a good, going operation from a service and equipment point of view, but that it is never going to look worth a darn unless the railway can get the huge annual interest burden and the big debt off the books. Here again it would be interesting to hear from the minister—I hope before the committee—what he plans to do in this regard. After all, I believe it is 18 months since Mr. Gordon made his presentation to the ministry in regard to this very question.

When Mr. Gordon is not blaming the heavy debt structure for the poor annual operating picture in terms of revenue he is blaming those hungry people, the railway workers, and saying that any gains that are obtained by Canadian National Railways are chewed up by the insatiable demands of the workers when they enter into contract negotiations. It is worth reflecting that right at the moment Canadian National Railways, like Canadian Pacific Railway, has before it demands from almost all the unions that have contracts with management, and these demands are again going to be of considerable size in terms of both wages and fringe benefits. I think these are necessary demands, because in my view they reflect the needs of the railway workers to keep up with increases both in wages and in fringe benefits in other areas. Just because railway workers are scattered across the country in so many communities I think they should be the bellweather of our whole labour force and its wage rates.

But the excuse of heavy debt and the excuse of the insatiable demands of labour have never really been met, it seems to me, by Mr. Gordon in his presidency. It seems to me the reason is that Mr. Gordon has never really been able to make up his mind what he wants to do with Canadian National Railways. I insist that the Achilles heel of Canadian National Railways has simply been the fact that Mr. Gordon has played around the idea that if he only had the money to invest he could have a money maker, and the fact that we as politicians and the country as a whole make demands upon the Canadian National transportation system that defy and go against the whole opportunity of having that kind of enterprise. We see other examples of this. Right now, my colleagues from Winnipeg are raising cain over the movement of the T.C.A. depot to Montreal. Hon. members from Montreal are getting up and suggesting the government ought to saddle T.C.A. with what I think is, in modern times, an archaic aircraft, the Caravelle.

However, these things are done, and the intentions of hon. members are of the best in terms of their own area and the objectives they want to achieve. Well, you could multiply examples like those on the railroads, particularly the Canadian National Railways, a dozen times. I have always felt that every hon. member who took an interest in railroading should read Colonel Stevens two-volume work on the Canadian National and how it developed out of the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial. They would see so many examples contradicting the possibility of operating the Canadian National Railways as the kind of free enterprise of which Mr. Gordon dreamed, showing black on the books.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, I think the fundamental mistake of Mr. Gordon has been to kid himself and to kid the country that it will be possible to achieve this kind of operation. One of the interesting things that happened when these two corporations were before this committee last year, was the evidence of Mr. McGregor, the president of T.C.A. He was being pressed with regard to the financial picture of T.C.A., which last year was not good. He was explaining that T.C.A., unlike C.P.A., was carrying a whole bunch of what he called social routes, and came up with this particular answer about social routes:

I do not know whether C.P.A. will move into the black in 1963. I know Mr. McConachie said so, but I also know that he has said the same thing about other years when he did not move into the black.

T.C.A. however could move into the black in 1963, with the rider, however, which is most important, that there will be no further encroachments on our traffic position. There are three or four routes now under application by C.P.A., so I would like to stress the absolute need for the rider that our calculation concerning the 1963 operating position is based entirely on no worsening of our competitive position.

Now, about the social routes, so-called, many of these are operated by T.C.A.

One can think of a number of them, such as Windsor to London, Vancouver to Victoria and some of the maritime lines. Then, Mr. McGregor goes on:

Whether or not they move them from black to red is really of no great importance. If the company is black with the social routes, then it would have been blacker without them. Without the social routes the ability of the company to reduce fares would have been greater than would be the case if the social routes are depressing net revenues.

I have recognized that many of these social routes have to be operated in some way or other—a place cannot just be thrown to the wolves so far as air transport is concerned, simply because it does not have the ability to generate enough air traffic to keep a line alive, particularly if it is in a remote area or across water, or something of that nature—I think it must be recognized that social routes as such, as long as they are operated are a drain on the finances of the company. However if the finances of the profitable routes are such that they can support those social routes, and still not go into the red, probably everybody is happy.

This was the contribution Mr. McGregor made in pointing out that T.C.A. carries the burden of these so-called social routes from its more prosperous routes on which the jets and Vanguards fly. This particular principle has really never been to the fore in the thinking of Mr. Gordon about Canadian National Railways. He has always had his eye on the goal that some day, probably like Sir Henry Thornton or Mr. Crump or Sir Edward Beatty, he would be able to show a consistently black balance at the end of every year. Then, he would be able to feel he had proven that a government enterprise, in the competitive field, could do the job. I do not think it is possible, after looking at his record over these years, for this to be done. I would hope that in considering the next president of Canadian National Railways the government would consider that we need a president like Mr. McGregor who is willing to accept and put forward the possibility of carrying, if you will, social routes, the non-competitive part of the system, because this is part of national transportation policy.

It has always seemed to me that Mr. Gordon has been in conflict with this generally accepted idea in this country, the idea that the balance sheet is really not as important as the service that is supplied to the people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the things I wanted to comment upon in connection with the Canadian National Railways is the position Mr. Gordon put the railway into with his appearance before the committee last year. I was sitting in the committee, and I could see what was coming when he shrugged off one of his assistants and made that answer to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) that led to the fuss and furore over French Canadians who worked for Canadian National Railways, and the fact that none of the top executive positions in the company was held by a French Canadian. It seems to me that in this particular discussion, both those who felt Mr. Gordon was justified and those who were critical, would be well advised to draw away from the matter and leave it alone for a while.

I suggest this for two reasons. First, it seems to me there is an indication of some new efforts on the part of Canadian National in this regard. They are going to do their best to meet the requests and demands of the French Canadians to have better representation in the system at all levels. Second, if these people do not leave the subject alone I fear that there will be, within the personnel of the railway, an extremely strong reaction, particularly in that portion of the Canadian National which operates in a part of the country remote from large groups of French Canadians. I put this idea forward to my colleagues in the house, rather than to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith).

I find that Mr. Gordon's popularity with the majority of Canadian National workers has never been extremely high, but that it has improved markedly as he has been under pressure over this matter of employing and advancing French Canadians in the railway. I would hope that both the president and the railway would have an opportunity over the next year or two to show their good faith without the consistent harping pressure, for example, based upon whether a conductor's hat is lettered in French words or English words.

One of the other points in connection with Canadian National Railways has been touched upon by the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade), and that is the trucking operation of Canadian National Railways. One of the anomalies, it seems to me, of the recommendations of the MacPherson royal commission is the emphasis on competitive modes of transport. The essence of the MacPherson recommendations is that there should be intense competition between competing modes of transport. Nobody has really looked at the point, Mr. Speaker, that both the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways have competition in all the modes except, I suppose, pipe lines and passenger automobiles. If the object is real competition between the modes, then it surely seems to me that when monopoly ownership jumps from one mode to the other, that is the real danger to any fruition of the competitive principle.

Mr. Gordon was broached on this last year before the committee, and to me his statement just did not make sense. This is a quotation from page 54 of the committee proceedings where I had been questioning him. He said:

I will put it this way. In every mode of transport that we can see as being feasible to use for the purpose of handling traffic and to give our shippers service, and in respect of which we can make some money, certainly we will use anything.

I asked him:

Do you see any conflict at all between the transportation policy that emphasizes competition and the role that you play in providing a public service in an area which is not now and likely never will be on a competing basis?

Mr. Gordon said:

I do not see anything wrong with that. The commission says quite definitely—and I am speaking from memory—that the railways will not be and should not be expected in the future to provide any services which would mean that they lose money on it; but they go on to say that if there is any, whatever the service may be which the board of transport commissioners finds on examination is required in the public interest, then that service should be continued by the railways and should be paid for by supplementary subsidies. So, the commission is perfectly consistent in saying that the railways should not provide any transportation that loses money. I repeat that if a particular service is regarded as being in the public interest, then the commission says flatly that the railways should be compensated for their losses.

I do not say he did it deliberately, but in effect Mr. Gordon evaded the point, that if you are going to have competing modes of transportation how does it bear with both major railways in the country, involved in the major modes of transportation? How can you have genuine competition unless you look forward to the extension of these giants, particularly in trucking, 50 per cent owned by C.P. and 50 per cent by C.N.? That is the direction in which truck ownership is moving, and that is why a lot of trucking people are worried.

The royal commission suggested that trucking is such an easy mode to enter, that the amount of capital required is so little, that there will always be a truly competitive factor there. I do not think this is so, because I do not think the capital requirements are that small. In fact it seems to me they are increasing. But even more, what is required in trucking is the obtaining of a franchise and the control of a franchise.

Not one of the provinces at the present time is opening up any of these franchises, and there are a great lot of interceders when there is a franchise. In other words, it is not wide open, and it is exactly there where the C.N.R. and C.P.R. are bringing to bear the pressure of their immense capital resources to obtain routes, and also the legal services they have to appear before provincial boards, such as the one in Quebec, in order to extend their operations.

I suggest there is a real conflict here between the recommendations of the MacPherson report on competition, particularly since we are involved in this as politicians, and the extension and permeation of the trucking business by the C.N.R. This is something we need to examine quite closely when we look at the operations of the C.N.R. in the committee.

There is one other point I want to touch on in connection with Canadian National Railways problems. There is a tendency, because of the abruptness and directness with which Mr. Gordon speaks, that when he comes out with a major pronouncement it gains considerable approval, particularly in our business press, and the critical reaction that follows is usually slow and not nearly as effective.

One of the things Mr. Gordon did over a year ago was to go into western Canada and make a speech about the handling of wheat in western Canada. He suggested Canada was 50 years behind the times, and we needed to revert to a master plan. He outlined how that master plan would work, and ever since then the prairies have been kicking; but I do not think they have really caught up with the masterful case that sounded so simple and attractive when Mr. Gordon put it forward. For that reason I want to put on the record some comments from the northwest line elevators association in criticism of this master plan. I think this points out some of the reasons we need a master transportation policy that is controlled and directed by someone in the federal government.

I had this letter in December last from Mr. Lamont, president of the northwest line elevators association in which he says:

Mr. Donald Gordon, president of Canadian National Railways, recently appeared before the House of Commons committee on railways and during the course of his examination Mr. Gordon made certain statements relating to the grain elevator handling system of western Canada. His statements before the committee were along the lines of a recent address made by him before the Canadian club of Winnipeg on the same subject, copy of which we have read.

We do not feel that Mr. Gordon's statements were made in the light of informed knowledge of what has actually taken place in the elevator trade of western Canada.

In other words, Mr. Gordon did not know what he was talking about.

For this reason we have written to Mr. Gordon and we enclose for your information, copy of the letter directed to him under date of December 7.

I have that letter here, and I just want to make the point that the letter contains a number of quotations from Mr. Gordon's remarks. Here is one of his remarks:

The system of grain handling established before the first world war—the collection, storage and transport of the prairie crop—has changed very little.

Here is another:

Many of the existing country elevators are now well below the optimum size for the best economic costs of operation and also for the most economic cost of transshipment by railways.

Here is another quotation:

The second factor involves the economies that can be obtained through a program of elevator consolidation that would eliminate those existing elevators that are operating well below the size required to ensure the lowest cost operation.

Another one is:

Elevator consolidation on main lines would enable the railway to pick up more cars at one time and reduce transportation and switching costs.

Then the letter continues:

The press report of your appearance before the railways committee said that Mr. Gordon was expanding on suggestions on grain handling he made in a speech to the Winnipeg Canadian club in September.

Then the association goes on to point out its experience in the grain business. It says they have been in operation since 1899 and have had a considerable share in this elevator traffic. Now I want to put down some of the points they concluded with, in connection with Mr. Gordon's suggestions. They said:

Would your proposed system of main line "master elevators" serve the farmer more efficiently and at less cost than existing elevators?

We feel sure that this would not be the case for the following reasons:

1. The farmer would have to haul his grain longer distances to market and every additional mile brings added costs in gasoline, wear and tear on trucks and man-hours consumed going to and from the elevators.

2. If the farmer, through branch line abandonment, was forced to haul his grain double the existing average 10 mile haul to market, it would cost him an additional five cents per bushel to market his grain. This would be equivalent to a freight rate increase of 42 per cent based on present average freight costs of 12 cents per bushel.

3. You do not make it clear under your plan whether the government or the railways propose to compensate the farmer for the additional haulage costs. If you do not, then you are in effect increasing the farmer's freight costs by 42 per cent. If you do, then the cost would have to be borne by the taxpayer and as a taxpayer the farmer would participate in these added costs.

These sound like pretty good arguments to me.

4. The farmer would be faced with long waits for his turn to unload his truck at the "master elevator". This could only be overcome by building plants that would be equivalent in most aspects to a terminal plant except in size, and the costly nature of the workhouses would not be compensated as at terminal points, through spreading it over large capacity.

5. Under existing conditions of elevator operation, the country elevator agent assumes the capacity of local manager and in periods of heavy deliveries operates his elevator for long hours to serve his customers. At a central "master elevator", located many miles from the farm, the manager-customer relationship would be lost. Hours of delivery would have to be regulated or two or three shifts would have to be engaged, all of which would add to the cost of handling grain.

6. Grain elevator storage charges today are the same rate as they were in 1912. Elevation charges on wheat have increased only one and one quarter cents per bushel compared with 1912, with similar percentage increases for other grains. We do not know of any other non-subsidized industry with such a record for holding down its charges. These charges could not be maintained under your plan.

Then the last two points deal with the fact that royal commissions have investigated grain handling in Canada many times since 1899:

Invariably they have commended the efficiency of Canada's grain handling methods. Where improvements have been recommended, they have been adopted.

[Mr. Fisher.]

Point 8 is this:

You have dealt too lightly with the time-consuming factor whereby the farmer, under your scheme, would have to spend much more of his time delivering grain. During the farming season the farmer's time resources are pressed to the utmost. The fact is that the labour situation is such in the large farm units of today that there is no spare help, and the farmer's own time is fully occupied.

That pretty well concludes the main arguments against this master plan of grain delivery. I wanted to put this on the record, not because I am tremendously interested in this problem—because I do not represent a prairie constituency—but the Gordon approach here is identical with the Gordon approach with regard to the changes that have been made on the railway in spending this tremendous sum of money for dieselization, central traffic control, all these master agency schemes and the new build-up of the organization where he is decentralized and has chiefs all over the place. The Indians on the railway are disappearing very quickly, but we are getting a great many more chiefs. The whole burden of Mr. Gordon's arguments throughout all this change is that he is going to create a more efficient railway and cut down costs. I suggest that he has had 12 years to prove what he can do, 12 clear years, and yet look at the situation in terms of the debt and interest charges of Canadian National Railways. In the process, this kind of approach manages to damn the man who works on the railway; he wants too much; he is inflexible; there are too many unions; they are not co-operative enough; they get in management's way. I suppose that in so far as this master plan of grain delivery is concerned, it is the farmers in the west who are the nuts and obstructionists now.

In other words, I am trying to suggest that in Mr. Gordon you have an able, hard working, even overbearing president who has been charging down various lines to create an efficient operation almost on the perfect free enterprise or private enterprise model. He has mistaken the real purpose of what the Canadian people want out of their government-owned railway. In the process he has managed to heap—I can think of an obscene word—opprobrium, let us put it that way, upon the working force on the railway, and in this particular case he seems to be doing it with the westerners, the farmers and the whole grain organization they have built up. I want to bring this to the attention of the house and my colleagues because I hope they will join with me in quizzing Mr. Gordon on these points when he comes before the committee.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. member?

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I might mention that the hon. member had exhausted his time when he sat down. However, a question may be asked of him with the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gregoire: The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) mentioned in his speech a few moments ago that it would be preferable not to talk about the bilingual problems on the C.N.R. this year, now that the C.N.R. is making progress. Does not the hon. member believe that if there is progress being made it would be far better to put this matter before the people of this country so they will realize that progress has been made, and be glad about it?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member misinterpreted my remarks. I was the first member to raise this whole question of the fact that the C.N.R. had 17 vice presidents and not one of them was French Canadian. I was the first member to do this, to my knowledge, publicly. This happened three or four years ago. It was when my hon. friends from the Social Credit party arrived in the house and, in this "hell bent" way of theirs, in order to rectify all the grievances that have been accumulating amongst French Canadians for generations, took this matter up that it was made the issue that led to effigies being burned, hanged, and so on.

I am really saying to them, in essence, that they can go too far in this kind of belabouring of an organization. In a sense they have made their major point. Now for God's sake leave it alone for a while, because I am telling them that there are two sides to this argument—I do not mean two sides in justice, but two sides in prejudice—and if they keep on hammering at it they will raise some prejudice that is going to bowl them over whenever the pendulum comes swinging back. Now, that is my opinion.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I have just one more question. I fully appreciate the point of view put forward by my hon. friend from Port Arthur—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I mentioned just a moment ago that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) had exhausted his time. I am wondering whether it is the wish of the house that we continue with these questions.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Louis Frenette (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I never thought that the resolution now before us would give rise to such a protracted debate and to such long speeches as those of the two previous speakers who expressed their views in the matter. I was under the impression that this resolution merely gave us an opportunity to say whether or not we were in favour of the setting up of the proposed committee.

Nevertheless, the brilliant remarks of the members for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) and Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) have given us an idea of the magnitude of the problems facing the members of the committee.

The problems are many, even more numerous than ever, and I believe that it will be in order, during the discussion, to take into account those problems, which are increasing all the time.

The hon. member for St. Mary mentioned a particularly important aspect of one of those problems, namely establishing a parallel between public enterprises and private ones. In this regard, I am glad to tell him that I hold identical views and I will point out, if I may, to the hon. members who will sit on that committee that they will have to take into account the present requirements of private enterprise as against those of the crown companies.

The hon. member for Port Arthur stressed that point also when he spoke of the apparent conflict between the various transport industries and that crown corporation, the C.N.R., especially in the province of Quebec where the trucking association repeatedly made representations of all kinds.

In my opinion, the sessional committee should hear the spokesmen of the trucking association since truckers will undoubtedly have well-founded grievances to make.

Following the ever increasing number of labour problems, there is growing unrest among certain employees of the C.N.R., T.C.A. and other crown corporations which operate transport facilities. I feel that members of the committee would also have the opportunity to look into that situation, inquire about workers' grievances and seek what solutions are being advocated by the heads of those crown corporations.

The problem of automation in the C.N.R. is becoming increasingly serious while assuming greater proportions. As a result, there are fewer jobs for the workers who, at the very beginning, were happy to work for the C.N.R., believing that they were not only getting good pay but also a great deal of security which enabled them to face the future with confidence. But due to automation which is constantly gaining ground within the C.N.R., those workers are really concerned.

I think that the committee now under discussion should also look into this problem.

On the other hand, the problem of bilingualism has been raised. In fact, last year, during the meetings of the committee on railways, the matter was extensively discussed. The effects of some rather stormy meetings of the committee on railways were felt throughout the province of Quebec. We still hope to hear about these meetings, especially in the province of Quebec.

We are entitled to some representation within state bodies and we hope that what was undertaken last year will be continued, because whether we like or not, French Canadians are not satisfied with crumbs and wish to have their rightful share of these administrative duties, to the extent that they will be in a position to provide qualified personnel and I am truly convinced that they can do so.

Mr. Speaker, of course the committee has no intention to interfere in the administration of crown companies; its terms of reference rather empower it to suggest to the presidents of these companies such measures as might improve the companies' business and be beneficial to the whole of Canada. We know that all these problems are highly involved, and I am thinking particularly of automation, as applied by the Canadian National Railways. It is sometimes hard to reconcile public and private interest, but if all people concerned really wanted to pull together, it should be possible to find solutions which would serve the interests of the people at large.

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, when we saw that the resolution of the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) spoke of a sessional committee on railways, we, on this side of the house, felt extremely pleased, because to us, that committee is of particular interest.

I cannot agree at all with what my hon. friend of Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said a moment ago, when he advised us to let the sleeping dog of bilingualism lie in the case of the Canadian National Railways. I think it would be wrong, because the dog has been sleeping too long. If things went on as they are, the president himself might go to sleep never to wake up.

First of all, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport if, during the hearings of the committee, we will have simultaneous translation or bilingual stenographers, so that any question we might direct to the witnesses would be published in the proceedings. I remember that last year, in the committee on railways, we had some difficulty in being understood, because the proceedings took place in one language only. This year, I hope the minister will see to it that we have simultaneous translation or bilingual stenographers, so that all of us will be able to express ourselves in our mother tongue.

In my opinion, if the C.N.R. has had large deficits for quite a few years, it is due to a lack of co-operation between departments. For instance, when several projects are started, quite a few remain incomplete; a certain number will be discarded because there is a danger of a washout. Let me explain. It will be recalled that when the C.N.R. bought diesel locomotives to modernize its system, they continued to build coal bins, repair shops for steam locomotives, so that when these shops and bins were completed, they were useless because diesel locomotives were in use.

The same thing happens in other areas. For instance, in the field of passenger transportation, a new kind of ticket is in use. That was tried out last year.

That is why I ask, as a member of the committee, that we should be informed of the changes made in the last year. The C.N.R. should inform us on the economic soundness of the new passenger rates. I think it is important for the members of the committee and the members of parliament to know whether the changes made by the crown corporation were an attempt to get more substantial income or if it was merely the trying out of a project which was finally discarded.

And when the Canadian National Railways decided to enter the cartage field, they had to give some consideration to private industry, as was mentioned by hon. members for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) and St. Mary (Mr. Valade).

The representatives of the trucking association of province of Quebec, made a futile effort to stop the C.N.R. from impinging on the trucking field in the province, and it is only because of repeated pressure by the trucking association that an agreement was reached.

We hope that when the committee is sitting, we will be able to ask the president of the Canadian National Railways every relevant question, and that his answers will be clear and to the point.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the discussion any longer. We shall wait for the committee to be set up to get further information. We trust that the minister will consider our request, namely that bilingual stenographers be available for the committee sittings, or that a room equipped for simultaneous interpretation be used.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, we have been listening this afternoon to a very interesting and wide ranging debate on this resolution to set up a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping. This was, of course, to be expected because of the great complex of these public utilities under the control of the federal government. Their very existence under this control is meant to ensure that our far flung land and water areas can be knit together to form a cohesive whole. The value of binding the nation together with a modern transportation system I believe cannot be estimated in dollars alone. Unwillingness on our part to accept this fact could spell disaster for our country.

With this in mind I should like to discuss briefly with the committee this afternoon two single items now confronting our transportation system. The first is in connection with the proposed removal of the T.C.A. repair and maintenance depot from Winnipeg. The second is the matter of railway branch line abandonment. With regard to the removal of repair depots, there is always the danger under our federal system of a trend toward greater centralization. It is true this may make it easier for administrative purposes and it may even, in some circumstances, result in lower costs. However, the fact that Winnipeg lies on the trans-polar route would indicate that perhaps in the not too distant future that city will become one of the important air links in North American transportation.

The Winnipeg Free Press of June 19, 1963 had this to say:

> There are powerful arguments for the retention of the base in Winnipeg. Montreal is the air line's centre for servicing long-distance jets. The suggestion of the (Manitoba) delegation is that Winnipeg's base be converted to take care of the overhaul and maintenance of smaller, domestic jet aircraft which will replace the Viscount and Vanguard aircraft now in use; the base ought to be capable of taking care of larger aircraft as well. Furthermore, the removal of the base would be contrary to the national interest in respect to national defence and civil emergency policy.

If this trend toward centralization is to continue—and it is a trend which, because of defence and other considerations is highly undesirable—we may end up with two or three super cities gathering the industries of the country together to the detriment of the whole economy. I am not proposing that the question of the repair and maintenance base be studied by the committee as yet, because all Manitoba members expect the minister to announce his decision in this regard very shortly. They hope for a favourable decision, and their optimism is based on the remarks of the Liberal candidate for Winnipeg South Centre in the last election when, referring to a telegram he had received from the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) he said: "This ensures that the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base will continue in Winnipeg". I realize the Prime Minister has denied he made any commitment in this regard, but the right hon. gentleman has said, as reported in the Winnipeg Tribune of May 21, that his party is committed to a policy of decentralized regional industrial and economic development. This policy should be a major consideration in reaching any decision on the T.C.A. base.

The second matter I should like to bring to the attention of the committee concerns branch railway line abandonment. Until such time as a complete analysis has been made of the prairie region and until a national transportation policy has been established to take into account the social as well as the economic needs of our people, it seems to me that any further abandonment of railway branch lines does not make good sense. This is particularly true since we have made these huge wheat sales to the communist countries. There is every indication that such sales will continue, at least into the foreseeable future. The decision of the former government to suspend applications for railway line abandonment opens the way for a more careful study by this government of this complex problem, should it choose to undertake such a study. The Manitoba Co-operator for January 10, 1963 had the following to say in this regard:

> The decision reached at the high level meeting in Ottawa January 4, with the railways suspending applications to abandon branch lines in western Canada, is a good one. It paves the way for a knowledgeable and sensible solution to the problem of rail line abandonment.

Another article which appeared in the same newspaper on September 5, had this to say:

> The approach to individual line abandonment must be made with extreme caution. A railway line is part of the economic and social fabric of an area, and the decision as to whether it goes or stays will have far reaching effects on the people of that area. At the same time, every branch line is a part of our over-all national transportation system which will be affected every time a line is abandoned. Because of this, and because of the many factors to be taken into consideration in planning a sound national transportation system, a broadly-based railway rationalization board is necessary.

The MacPherson royal commission stressed the need for co-operation between the railway companies, railway labour and the shipping industry in the creation and discharge of a transportation program, but it does not provide for the co-ordination of a program of line abandonment and grain handling consolidation. It urges that an agency of the board of grain commissioners, or another body named by the government, be made responsible for the planning and control of a program designed to consolidate the existing grain storage and handling capacity so as to provide a more economic and better system in conjunction with possible changes in rail transportation. The commission was not required to deal in any detail with the problems presented by rail line abandonment, and it did not do so. But I think this leaves the western farmers wondering what is likely to happen to them as far as their future is concerned. Under the commission's findings the farmers could haul as far as 25 miles economically to an existing line. If this happens they agreed that perhaps up to 9,000 miles of prairie rail line could be abandoned. Take anything like 9,000 miles of branch line out of the prairie provinces and consider the number of towns and villages along those lines which would face economic disaster. I think careful consideration should be given before rail line abandonment is made on any large scale. The Prime Minister, speaking in Selkirk, Manitoba, on March 8, said that if elected a Liberal government would establish a committee of inquiry to investigate the effects of railway branch line abandonments. He added:

> The committee's report will be the foundation of a railway policy based on the best interest of all concerned groups and designed to maintain essential branch line services.

An hon. Member: That will be marvellous.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I hear someone say: "That would be marvellous". Let us hope it will be done. I also hope that the government, in considering branch line abandonment in the future, will give careful consideration to the important considerations which I have raised.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I read in the paper that T.C.A. had chosen the DC-9. I feel that decision should be examined and even reversed by the cabinet, in order that Canadair, which needs contracts, may get them to provide work in a Quebec industry. That decision is all the more surprising when you know that the province of Quebec holds the dubious honour of having the highest unemployment rate.

I heard that the DC-9 is in part a copy of the original Caravelle. The company that drew the plans for the DC-9 had to pay royalties to the French company in order to copy, I think, some details for the DC-9's back ailerons.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member and I do not want to restrict his comments unduly but he will understand, I am sure, that he must confine his remarks, as much as possible, to the need to set up a committee.

The hon. member may certainly refer to some problems which should be considered by that committee but he cannot go into all the details of these problems.

Mr. Pigeon: In my opinion the scope of the resolution is rather broad as it involves the consideration in committee of the T.C.A. and C.N.R. activities. It is a suggestion that I should like to offer so that the committee may reverse, if possible the decision taken by T.C.A. so that Canadair may obtain those contracts.

I shall give you an example of the significant effects on the labour market if Canadair were to get the contract for building 12 aircraft a year. It would represent an amount of $86 million in labour and materials, and, please take note of this, 11 million man-hours.

I would also like this question to be submitted to the committee.

I noticed that in French speaking newspapers, advertisements use the name Air Canada but in English speaking papers, Trans-Canada Air Lines is used. I wonder whether there would be some inconsistency there. I know that many hon. members suggested in the house that the government amend the act if necessary with a view to adopting the name Air Canada.

I have also noticed, for instance, at the international airport terminal, that the inscriptions on the caps and uniforms of the employees were in one language only. It is a detail, of course, but when foreigners arrive in Montreal and see those inscriptions in one language only, they form a wrong opinion of the country.

Another subject I would like to touch upon is that of Mr. Donald Gordon's term of office which was renewed for an 18 months' period. I was quite astonished when the government renewed his term of office for 18 months, for I well recall the statements which were made last year by several hon. members, including supporters of the present administration; and, to give an illustration, I may refer to the debates of November 27, 1962, at page 2060 of Hansard.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said the following:

> This problem was raised in the committee, and I am not in agreement with the argument made at that time by the president of Canadian National Railways, Mr. Gordon. I think he should go back to banking and quit trying to run a railroad.

Such was the statement of an hon. member.

I shall now quote another statement, which appears on page 2062 of Hansard of the same date, and I now quote the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), who is now parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister:

> That is unfair, but I am not surprised that, with the president it has now, the C.N.R. should be able to have its way, because that man is certainly not qualified to fill the post he holds at present.

On the same page, I note a statement by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). I was astounded to hear his comments when the government renewed for 18 months the term of office of the present president of the Canadian National Railways. Here is what the hon. member for Lapointe said at the time:

> Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at the stand taken by some Liberal members, as I remember that Mr. Donald Gordon, the public servant who probably renders the greatest disservice to the Canadian public at present, was appointed by the Liberal party of which he is a product. Actually, he was appointed by the then minister of transport, the present member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier).

Even the hon. member for Laurier made some statements on the same date, as can be seen on page 2064 of Hansard. Here is what he said:

> That is why, on several occasions, I drew the attention of the present president of the C.N.R. and of his predecessor to the fact that only an insignificant number of Canadians of French origin held executive positions in the C.N.R. I think that the present president has, on several occasions, been made aware of this deplorable situation, and I am not ready to accept the answer he gave to the committee.

Mr. Speaker, those statements I have just quoted, not only from private members but also from a crown minister, disapproved Mr. Gordon's attitude, and that is why I was quite surprised to see the government renew Mr. Gordon's term of office.

I even have here a statement which appeared in the newspaper La Presse on October 5, 1963, coming from the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger).

> Later in the day, the Liberal member for Montmagny-L'Islet, Mr. Jean Berger, made public the text of a letter he addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), to inform him he is unable "to rejoice" on account of the "limited" renewal of the term of office of the president of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out to you that the St. Jean Baptiste society in Joliette, on the occasion of its last regional convention, disapproved Mr. Gordon's nomination, and I again quote an article which appeared in La Presse on October 5, 1963:

> The delegates to the eighth annual convention of the St. Jean Baptiste societies of the Joliette diocese maintained their position with respect to the resignation of the president of the C.N.R., Mr. Donald Gordon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Once more I take the liberty, much to my regret, of interrupting the hon. member to remind him, as I said a while ago, that he should restrict his remarks to the advisability of setting up the committee in question.

Such is the subject matter of the motion now before the house. Perhaps the hon. member could suggest to me in which way his comments relate to the advisability of setting up that committee?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, several members have departed from the subject before me. They also discussed T.C.A., the C.N.R. and Mr. Gordon.

Even the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) dealt at length with this matter, and this is the reason why I discuss it.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the president of a crown corporation whose salary is paid out of the taxpayers' money, does not have the right to make statements which endanger national unity. If a French Canadian had been president of a crown corporation and had indulged in the same type of statement against his English-speaking fellow citizens, I would have been the first one, Mr. Speaker, to demand his resignation. I would like the committee to ask Mr. Gordon a few questions and request him to carry on with the program tending to promote bilingualism within the C.N.R., particularly in the French speaking areas. The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) mentioned some time ago that one still sees on our trains notices in one language only, and the same thing goes for the conductors' caps. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you might think that those details are unimportant, but to me, they are shocking.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would like to point out something else, and it is this. Every year Canadian trucking associations complain about the encroachments of the railways in the field of transportation. As you know, trucking companies pay large amounts in taxes to the federal treasury, and that money is given by the government to the railway companies, which use it to compete against the trucking companies.

I am aware of the fact that Canadian railways try desperately to increase their income. I know what their problems are. Let them not however seek prosperity at the expense of private enterprise. I also know that the Canadian government makes large grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

I wish that, some day, we would have only one railway company in this country. For instance, between Montreal and Ottawa, there are two railway lines almost side by side.

Their maintenance is therefore twice as costly. And yet, all the nation's economic needs could be met by a single railway by combining both companies under one administration. I submit that we would attain greater efficiency in that way.

Mr. Speaker, may I illustrate the difference in efficiency between private and public enterprise. When we travel on the Canadian Pacific trains, we have a better service, the cars are cleaner and the schedules better observed than on the Canadian National. I think that those members who will have the privilege to sit on that committee should give that matter close attention.

I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, why our national railways should be so inefficient. In Europe, railway schedules are much better observed. In this country the Canadian Pacific sets a quoteworthy example of efficiency, which favourably compares with government enterprises elsewhere.

In closing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I shall once again repeat that, as I said a few moments ago, I would like, if possible, the members of the committee to reverse the government's decision, to enable Trans-Canada Air Lines to get the manufacturing contract for the Caravelle aircraft, which has gained an international repute. I lately had the opportunity of accompanying a Canadian delegation to Yugoslavia. Well, the Yugoslav government, though communist, did buy Caravelles. If that aircraft is good enough for European countries, it is certainly good enough for our Trans-Canada Air Lines. And, as I said before, the DC-9 was partly copied—

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question? I wanted to follow this part of his argument carefully, and I have been having great difficulty with it. Is he arguing that an aircraft should be bought that would be made by Canadair, or is he arguing for a particular model that would be made by that company?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Briefly, Mr. Speaker, what I mean is that I would not like to see Canadair being deprived of contracts. I should like the minister to reconsider T.C.A.'s decision in view of the pressures made by Mr. Rene Levesque, of the government of the province of Quebec, and by Mr. Lucien Saulnier, chairman of the executive committee of the city of Montreal, so that Canadair can get substantial contracts. If T.C.A. adopted the Caravelle, I think the problem would be settled for Canadair, since they would get profitable contracts, to the advantage of their employees.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I do not understand the argument clearly. Is it any model that would be made by Canadair that he wants to purchase, or is it one particular model?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I mean the Caravelle. In other words, Mr. Speaker, if there is a possibility, I would like that aircraft to be chosen, and this, for two reasons. T.C.A. should adopt the Caravelle, because it would choose the best airplane in the world; according to some experts, the DC-9 is partly a duplicate of the Caravelle. The company which designed the DC-9 had to pay royalties to the French company which developed the Caravelle. Second, if Canadair is equipped to carry out that contract, it would help to settle part of the unemployment problem prevailing in Montreal.

[Text]

Mr. Kelly: Would the hon. member consider answering a question? Would he urge the minister to form a transportation policy that would deal fairly with the huge trucking industry which employs over 100,000 people in Canada?

Mr. Pigeon: I spoke about that.

[Translation]

That is why, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I find amazing that the government should make large grants to the Canadian National Railways, whose deficit it makes up each year, and, with the help of such funds that the Canadian National Railways should enter into direct competition with the trucking companies.

I would like the committee to study this situation in order to reach a compromise. In other words, the Canadian National Railways should live and let live, but not to the detriment of private enterprise, that is of the truckers.

Mr. Habel: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Speaker. Should the hon. member for Cochrane wish to make a speech, he will have ample time to do so after I am finished, for we know he is not very talkative in the house, and he will certainly have an occasion to assert himself.

Mr. Habel: I have a question to ask of the hon. member—

Mr. Pigeon: You make your own speech.

Mr. Habel: Do you agree? I see that you do not; it is because you know whom you are dealing with.

[Text]

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): We have made fairly good progress on this motion to set up this committee. I do hope that today the house leader will have a change of heart and let me speak for a few minutes on this subject. The other day I mentioned the motion to set up this committee, and the house leader said that if I was going to speak he would not bring it before the house. I hope, sir, that the hon. gentleman will recall that when his party was on this side of the house they used to filibuster on these motions to set up committees to a far greater extent than we do. Surely, he will not regret it if he gives me about five minutes to speak.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Smallwood: I have the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wanted to say that there is no one—

Mr. Smallwood: I have the floor, Mr. Speaker; the hon gentleman knows the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Secretary of State rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, there is no member of the house to whom I would rather listen than the hon. gentleman. I like everything about him, and especially his name.

Mr. Smallwood: That was another one of the hon. gentleman's phony points of privilege. We will forget about that and come to this matter of railroading.

I believe a great many of the points I was going to raise have been covered. However, I do feel it is time that parliament created an opportunity to take a closer look at the operations of the Canadian National. We have left this railroad in the hands of a great financier, Mr. Gordon, who likes us to vote him millions of dollars in about an hour or two so he can spend it building up his push-button railroad.

Miss LaMarsh: Go and tell Balcer that.

Mr. Smallwood: I am sorry, I did not hear the hon. lady. Perhaps we must put up with these interjections. We are passing these huge amounts of money for Mr. Gordon to spend on the railway. We are called upon now to vote another $365 million for him. We, in western Canada, are very concerned about this railway problem. I hope the minister will take a good look at all these matters.

I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) refer to this master grain handling system about which Mr. Gordon talked of putting in in western Canada. I do not believe I have anything further to say on that, because it was well explained. I think the minister could understand what a great hardship it would be on the farmers of western Canada if they were forced to haul their grain 50 or 60 miles to central depots in order to allow Mr. Gordon to adopt this centralized system.

Before I resume my seat, there was one other point I wanted to bring to the attention to the committee. It is the master agency plan which is being forced upon the people of Alberta from Edmonton, and there is another one which is being forced on the people of Moncton, New Brunswick. I am sure the minister has had representations from the hon. member who represents Moncton, an hon. member who is himself a railroader and supporter of the government.

Canadian National Railways placed the master agency in Edmonton, with no warning to the people whatsoever. The officials came into my constituency and told them, "This is where you will pick up your express from now on. If you want to send a telegram you will phone Edmonton. If you want to purchase a railroad ticket you will phone Edmonton." Then they went up to the local station agent and told him, "We will keep you here for a year. You are not going to do anything; you cannot sell a ticket or send a telegram, but you will be paid."

I got suspicious and I came to Ottawa and asked the board of transport commissioners if the railway had applied for permission to close these stations. The C.N.R. has now closed them and is retaining its station agent, even though he does nothing; but the company has not applied for permission to the board of transportation commissioners to close the stations.

I know what will happen. In six months time the railway will say it has received no business from a particular station and will apply for permission to close it. I hope the minister will take a good look at this master agency plan before its implementation goes too far, because it is causing great inconvenience to the residents of those communities and is also throwing men out of work.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was glad to note the effort made by the minister to rise. I trust this means he is going to exercise his opportunity to close the debate and that, when he does, he will deal with some of the matters that have been discussed.

I wish to call his attention to one subject that has not been brought forward in this debate and I would like him to give a report on it. I may say I do not agree with all of the things that have been said this afternoon about the operations of the Canadian National Railways, particularly by a few of the recent speakers. Without going into detail I can say there are improvements which can be made in any operation, but so far as Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines are concerned, we in this country have something of which we can be proud.

The one point on which I would like the minister to make a statement covers the question of doing something about the pensions of C.N.R. employees who retired prior to April 1, 1962. As the minister knows, a decision was taken in April of that year which improved the pension position of those then in service, those retiring after that date, but nothing was done with regard to the position of those who had retired prior to April 1, 1962.

The Prime Minister indicated to me in answer to a question on orders of the day on May 30 this year that this matter would be looked into. The previous government had also been looking into it, but what is the status of this matter now? Is it going to be studied by the committee which we are now establishing? Is it being studied by C.N.R.? Is it being looked at by the government? Who is doing something about it, and when?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I must say I have listened with a great deal of interest to the various matters discussed on this motion to set up the committee. I cannot say that I agree with all that has been said. I suppose it is proper to say that some of the observations were not relevant to the motion before us, but none the less they were interesting. Some of the ones that were not relevant were perhaps of more importance than some others that were discussed.

Those matters that were relevant to the motion are, of course, matters that should be discussed before the committee, and I for one am very glad that the committee is now at long last being set up. I have made clear on previous occasions in the house that I have been anxious to get the opportunity to have this done. I had in mind early this session, and put forward the idea, that we should adopt another procedure which would permit this committee to be set up very early in the session, rather than having to wait for its turn in the priority list of matters of urgency that have to be dealt with by any session of parliament.

There are some comments I should make with regard to some particular matters that were raised, because some of them contained bits of misinformation that must not be permitted to go unanswered and left on the record in that state, lest they be taken as accurate statements of fact. In that connection I have particular reference to the remarks of the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade). He spoke about the purchase of aircraft by T.C.A. and kept referring to three aircraft that were considered. Certainly with inaccuracies like that it is quite improper to make any such reference.

The whole matter of the purchase of aircraft by T.C.A. is, as I have indicated previously in the house, now before the government, although technically the matter is exclusively within the responsibility of T.C.A. We did however give the house certain assurances that it would be looked at by the federal government, and that is in process of being done. It is quite wrong and misleading to say there were only three aircraft considered. That is not a responsible statement.

Mr. Valade: I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but he said that these statements I made were improper, wrong and misleading. I do not think the minister should be allowed to use these words.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why shouldn't he?

Mr. Valade: Because as members of the opposition we have no access to the kind of information that is submitted to the minister, and we must discuss the things that are told us and the information that reaches us. I do not think members of parliament should be accused of acting improperly when they bring forward some questions of this nature. We ask questions of the minister because we want to know the answers.

Mr. McIlraith: Sometimes the questions asked are asked at a time when it is not possible to answer them. In any event the point I make is that I am sure the hon. member does not wish reports to go across the country that there were only three types of aircraft considered. I am sure he would wish me to correct that impression at once.

I am sorry he saw fit to make the references he did to the president of T.C.A. When you are running a publicly owned system—

Mr. Pigeon: Excuse me, sir. You don't use "Air Canada".

Mr. McIlraith: In referring to a publicly owned system it does not seem proper to me to make personal remarks attacking the persons of its officers. Their conduct of the business and their fitness for the positions they hold can be attacked as vigorously as any hon. member wishes, but when personal remarks are made against them it can only do harm, because great public enterprises must be managed by public servants employed for the purpose.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order—

Mr. McIlraith: We have in this air line one of the—

Mr. Valade: On a point of privilege. The minister just inferred that I made a personal attack on the members of this crown corporation. I never said anything of that nature. I never made a personal comment on the conduct of these individuals. I mentioned the decision. I know the minister is a lawyer and he should know the difference. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. McIlraith: On this point I want to make it clear that this publicly owned air line company has the reputation of being probably the best operated air line company in the world. We in Canada should be very proud of this fact and should be very careful, in putting forward criticisms of the personnel, to criticize only those matters that have to do with their conduct or their fitness for office, and ought not to make criticisms of a purely personal nature.

We have in this country the two major railway systems, as well as certain others. I think the two major systems enjoy a very high reputation among the 80 or so major railways on this continent. Canadians have every reason to be proud of the management of these enterprises in both the public and private sectors. I wanted to make that point, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) went on to criticize the directors of T.C.A. I think I am duty bound to point out to him that all of them were appointed by the government which he has supported for a number of years, and unfortunately there has been no opportunity for this government to make the appointments that would justify his criticism of me in this regard. Whether the appointments by the former government were good or bad, they were made by that government and I have had the responsibility of carrying on. The same thing applies to Canadian National Railways, except as to one director. One director died and a replacement was appointed very recently.

As to the matter of the Jacques Cartier bridge and the Champlain bridge, I would point out that the hon. member took great credit for the government which he supported having taken the tolls off the Jacques Cartier bridge. I think the house ought to know that they were taken off some years before the money put into that bridge by the taxpayers of Canada was repaid to those taxpayers. They were taken off in a way that left the responsibility for that part of the roads system with the federal government, and the federal government is having to raise taxes from taxpayers in Canada to pay this part of the maintenance of the roads system of which he speaks. The matter is not as simple as the hon. member suggested. It is an important matter, but it is more complex than he indicated. In any event, Mr. Speaker, it is not relevant to this motion. Both those bridges are owned and operated by the national harbours board, and the national harbours board is not in any way involved in the business before the house this afternoon.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question on this matter?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Valade: I wonder if the minister is aware that the upkeep and expenses in connection with that bridge are no more a federal responsibility, because it has been sold to the provincial authorities. Therefore I do not understand the minister's reference to taxpayers.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the government is well aware of all the facts in connection with that bridge, and it is regrettable that the hon. member is not correctly informed.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) made some personal reference to me. I can only say I regret that the impression I have made on him is so bad. His inability to find a parliamentary record in regard to my previous parliamentary experience may be due to another factor, and he should have considered that very carefully before making the remarks that he did make.

Mr. Robichaud: He was too busy writing.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps the hon. member was too busy writing and had little time to read or examine the record properly. In any event, Mr. Speaker, all I wanted to say was that I did not propose answering the personal remarks the hon. member made about me. I noted his remarks about the next appointment to the head of the C.N.R., and I noted also the apparently different view of his own competing position vis-à-vis that of other hon. members of the house. I can assure him that his application will be considered along with others, but I will not give him any assurance whatever as to how lengthy that consideration will be or what the result of it will be. I think it should be very self-evident to him, and indeed I think he would wish that it would receive very brief consideration.

The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Beaule) raised the question of simultaneous translation in the committee room when the committee is meeting. That is a matter exclusively for the committee. However, the facilities are now available and I would anticipate no difficulty whatever in this regard, although I as minister have no right to give any assurance on the matter because it is one exclusively for the committee.

Reference was made to the air maintenance base at Winnipeg. This matter was raised by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir). I agree that it is a very important matter. It is receiving consideration now. The study has been made on the economic aspects of it as these affect the air line company, but there are larger matters of policy that have to be considered. These are being considered by the government, and as I indicated in the house on October 8, I think it was, I expect to be able to make some announcement on this subject before the end of the year.

Important matters were raised on the question of what was called rail line abandonment. I prefer to refer to that very important subject as rail line rationalization, because I think that is what it really is. Some of the figures quoted with reference to the number of lines involved are very much higher than is the fact; but in any event, that is a matter for the legislation arising out of the MacPherson royal commission, and it will be before the House of Commons very shortly. The hon. gentleman from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised the matter of pensions. I expect he will raise it again in the committee, and I will try to deal with it at the time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask the minister. I think it is quite important that he should answer this question, because he said at the commencement of his reply that some of the points raised were quite irrelevant. Therefore I think the house should know which points are irrelevant, because all the points that I raised I wanted to discuss in the committee. If some of these points are irrelevant, as the minister suggested, I would like him to indicate to the house those which are irrelevant so that we may take some other opportunity of raising them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand the minister closed the debate. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I know it is practically five o'clock and I know, also, that I am asking a great favour of the house, but I am going to ask it anyway. There is a resolution standing in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) was prepared to go on with. I believe that anything that could possibly be said on the resolution could be said equally as well on the bill. Therefore if the house would be willing to consider allowing the bill to be given first reading, it would then be possible to call the bill on Monday after the vocational training bill is disposed of. I am quite sure there would be no limitation on anything that any hon. member would wish to say at that stage.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I think we have really made very good progress today. There may be one or two hon. members who wish to say something on this bill. Perhaps the house leader would like to raise it as the first item on Monday and get the bill before us, and it could be dealt with quite rapidly later. I think we had better call it five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR DISCLOSURE OF COST OF CREDIT

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-31, to amend the Interest Act (finance charges).

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words on the second reading of this bill I should refer to the fact that it was first introduced in the House of Commons two years ago, when I believe it was talked out. As you know, Mr. Speaker, over the years a number of bills of this nature dealing with consumer credit have been introduced, and some have been sent to the other place during this session for study. You are also aware of the fact that during the past sessions of parliament a great deal of consideration has been given this matter in the other place. All of these studies have led me to the conclusion that at the present time there is enough information in the hands of those on the treasury benches to enable them to give consideration to the implementation of legislation to take care of this particular problem.

During the present session we have seen the spectacle of many of this sort of bills being allowed to stand week after week at the request of the government. There was an understanding that the government would set up a committee to deal with this question. Despite this, some people may have wondered why one bill was not included in that arrangement, and I want to elaborate a little on this matter today. However, before I do so I should like to point out that a great deal of delay was occasioned in the study of this matter by the House of Commons owing to the continuance of the request on the part of the government from time to time to have a number of these bills stand.

The present bill is a little different from many of the other bills which have been presented for consideration, because it deals primarily with the requirement that those extending credit should outline the extent of that credit and the percentage charged; and the bill presented today would also provide a penalty for anyone who failed to follow that direction. It would also make it illegal for anyone to collect anything at all if he failed to state clearly the amount of interest and the percentage charged on any particular transaction.

There is nothing in this bill which infringes upon provincial jurisdiction, as far as I can ascertain. In view of the fact that other bills have been sent to a committee for study, and knowing the slowness with which committees deal with these matters and the importance of doing something to alleviate hardship caused to many people faced with the problem of credit payments, which in some cases they really did not understand and had no knowledge of the amount of interest involved, I feel the house would be well advised to pass this measure at the present time, asking credit companies to place on their tags the actual interest rate charged in any transaction involving consumer credit. This would not in any way interfere with the problem of whether interest rates are too high or too low, or interfere with a number of other matters in that connection which have been dealt with in other bills presented by hon. members.

I know all hon. members are familiar with this matter, Mr. Speaker, so I do not intend to take up any more time of the house. I hope the bill receives favourable attention at the hands of hon. members.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, as the house knows, the vast majority of these bills relating to consumer credit and finance charges generally have been relegated to a joint committee of this house and the other place for the purpose of reviewing the entire legislative picture as it applies to government at the federal level. In spite of the hon. member's explanation, I do not fully appreciate why this particular bill has been left out of the series of bills which were relegated to that committee. I think we all agree that the entire question of consumer credit needs very serious review and that we should go to the very basis of the subject matter, as this committee will be able to do.

One of the defects of this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, is that possibly it has not been gone into in sufficient detail, particularly with regard to its constitutional aspect. I do not think we can possibly resolve the very deep-seated problems which affect credit generally in this country, and consumer credit in particular, without considering them in relationship to the constitution of the country. Unfortunately, at this level of government we have under our constitution, jurisdiction over interest pursuant to the British North America Act, but we do not have jurisdiction over private property and civil rights. Pursuant to the constitution that matter falls within provincial jurisdiction.

I do not think that this problem can be solved at either one level or the other. If we approach it from the provincial viewpoint of private property and civil rights, I think we inevitably run afoul of the federal powers under the constitution which give control of interest to the federal government. On the other hand, I do not think that in approaching this problem purely by virtue of the powers of the federal government over interest, as does this bill so attempt, we arrive at a full solution to the problem either. I think there is no doubt that this is one of the very fundamental matters which has belaboured us in this house, particularly in past years and certainly in this session. I am referring to those things which we may do here within the constitution and which we deem necessary for the welfare of our people, and those things that are necessary for the welfare of our people which may not be done either constitutionally or under some new concept which has now come into being in our federalism and in our constitution. Even though it is constitutionally proper for the federal government to do certain things, by reason of this new concept, they can only be done with the approbation of the provinces, although these things are within the federal sphere under the constitution. This shows how difficult it is to legislate in these matters.

I think all of us were very pleased to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) say the other day in no uncertain and in very positive terms, paraphrasing Sir Winston Churchill, that he had not come to this house to see the liquidation of the Canadian constitution. These were indeed reassuring words, especially as we have heard so much in the house, since parliament convened in April, about provincial rights, parochial rights, municipal rights, but so little about Canada, the powers needed federally in order to make Canada a strong land which could forge ahead, and about giving the proper federal powers needed in this very complex world to do the things socially and economically required by our people. It was reassuring for us on this side to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) speak as he did. If there is one thing which binds us together on this side of the house, it is the great part which the Liberal party has played in bringing back to the federal government the powers it needs in order to confront the many problems with which the 20th century presents us. I think that when the constitution was formulated it was intended that the reserve power under the peace, order and good government clause should reside in the federal government. The fathers of confederation were farsighted enough to see that, as economic and social needs grew, the federal government must have the legislative and fiscal power needed to enable it to satisfy these new needs.

Unfortunately, as a result of narrow-minded and incompetent judicial decisions by the privy council early in the century, the federal power under the clause to which I have referred was truncated and emasculated, until, if the privy council decisions were to be heeded, residual power was virtually vested in the provinces. I think history will record that the great thing this party has accomplished in its 22 years of office was the recovery of so much of that residuary power. The great place in history of Mackenzie King in particular will result from the fact that, through his wisdom and his understanding of the problems of Canada and its peoples, without creating any great provincial turmoil and, in a large measure, with the approbation of the provinces, he was able to bring Canada back to the position which the fathers of confederation had intended, namely that the residual power, the vast residue of power, should rest with the federal government. We have seen that in the United States—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I wonder if he proposes to relate his remarks to the bill which is before the house.

Mr. Greene: I certainly intend to do so. As I said when I began, the weakness of this bill is its lack of appreciation of the constitutional aspect of the problems presented by consumer credit. This must be considered if we are to address ourselves to the grave matters which the hon. member has raised. I do not think we could do this purely at the federal level under the constitution as it now stands. Accordingly, I wish to address certain remarks to the possible weaknesses of the constitution as it exists at present.

A new term has become applicable to our constitution over the past few years, namely co-operative federalism. This, in some manner, has become a popular euphemism, such as "nice guy" or "without sin" or "for matrimony". It has achieved a high place in a short time. While there may be areas in which this co-operative federalism is a proper approach, I would say this: any federal state is founded on the premise that it has a constitution which clearly defines the powers which are to be enjoyed federally and those which are to be enjoyed provincially. Any doubt is resolved by the judiciary. In my humble view, this new approach by way of co-operative federalism belittles the constitution and may lead to government by men rather than government by laws. How are we going to know from day to day what governments, provincial or federal, may do if this new approach—

Mr. Nasserden: Despite the admonition which you addressed to the hon. member opposite he is continuing in the same vein as before. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that he has wandered far from the question under discussion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the hon. member does realize that there is a bill before the house and that his remarks should be related to the terms of that bill. I ask him once again to bear that in mind.

Mr. Greene: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I stated earlier, while I appreciate the motives of the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill—he is against transactions in connection with which persons are not made fully aware of the rate of interest they have to pay—I submit, with respect, that a fundamental shortcoming of this measure is that he has forgotten about our Canadian constitution. It may be that the constitution will have to be revised in order that the worth-while objectives which the hon. member has in mind may be achieved. If that type of revision should be necessary, I am sure that we on this side would be pleased to support the hon. member in approaching the provinces to that end, should it be the type of amendment, as I imagine it would, where the consent of the provinces was required in order to amend the constitution so as to make legislation of this comprehensive type valid at the federal level. If this is to be done, I would be the first to agree with the hon. member that such a change in the constitution should be made by amending the constitution, not by expedients, or day to day meetings, or discussion with the provinces; not by some nebulous term such as co-operative federalism. I say it should be done by a clear amendment to the constitution, so as to carry out what the fathers of confederation had intended.

I agree there might be great difficulty about amending the constitution but, if, in 1865 there were men in this land who had sufficient vision—if that is not a nasty word—and sufficient energy, foresight, and courage to draw up the original constitution then, surely, little can be said for us who sit in this house today, if we do not have people of such calibre and sincerity as to achieve our objectives by a forthright amendment to the constitution, rather than leave these wide overlapping areas of jurisdiction. Nobody knows whom these areas belong to. Apparently legislation concerning them should be carried out now, under this new heading of co-operative federalism. Well, there may be a narrow area which would best be left in this nebulous field, but by and large I suggest it would be far better to have government by law, by placing with the federal government the powers it needs to carry out its task and by placing with the provincial governments the powers, both fiscal and legislative, which they need in order to carry out theirs. Governments at both levels would be able to raise the funds they needed and do what they had to do, clearly within the constitution, so that we might continue to have government by law rather than government by men.

Mr. Nasserden: I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has just said, but I would point out to him that interest rates are one of the things that come under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Greene: I concur in what the hon. member says, but may I relate once more to the bill in question what I have said respecting our constitution. May I point out there is a vast area that the hon. member has attempted to leave out of the bill, because he very clearly saw that it was not within the constitutional ambit of the federal governmen. But I fear that even here he has transgressed on provincial authority by referring in the proposed section 16 (b) in the bill to such things as brokerage fees and charges, bonuses, service charges, subscriptions, dues and premiums. These matters may well come within the area that has been defined judicially as being private property and civil rights, rather than interest, and if such is the case then to that extent his bill would be unconstitutional.

I think that all matters, even what may appear on its surface to be a humble bill such as this, will run into these difficulties until such time as we in this house are of sufficient stature to amend the constitution as it so very badly needs amending today. I would point out to the hon. member that only recently a very beneficial Ontario statute, which purported to achieve the worthy ends that this bill attempts to achieve, was declared by the supreme court of Ontario to be unconstitutional. I refer to the Ontario unconscionable transactions act.

Under that legislation the province of Ontario had purported to legislate under their authority pursuant to section 92 of the British North America Act and their overriding authority with respect to property and civil rights. They had passed this bill which gave power to a county court judge to revise the interest rate or declare the entire transaction null and void if he should deem it to be unconscionable. This was a very meritorious piece of legislation which covered instances such as the hon. member may have in mind, where someone has been persuaded to sign a contract involving a very heavy interest rate without understanding what he is doing. The act was taken before the courts by some grasping and greedy finance company, no doubt, and ultimately the courts had to declare it unconstitutional and the very worthy purpose that this act had been serving for so many years can now no longer be achieved.

This is the kind of thing we should consider very seriously in this house. We should consider at the federal level whether the constitution could not or should not be amended, and again this is something that undoubtedly, according to precedent, would have to be done with the consent of the provinces, in order to provide either at the federal or provincial level clear, constitutional authority to legislate for the entire field of credit generally and certainly for consumer credit in particular. We know that banking comes under a federal measure and there again there is a conflict with regard to interest, banking, and private property and civil rights.

Here is an area where the joint committee of the house and the other place will be able to do something worth while, and surely in this area we can secure the co-operation of the provinces. While the Canadian constitution apparently has been beyond the ability of mere politicians to amend in recent years in any real comprehensive sense, at least in some areas we have made some headway in amending our constitution and I believe that in the area of consumer credit we would have a very good chance of obtaining the consent of the provinces, which is no doubt needed, to effect a new area of federal authority whereby consumer credit and credit in all its aspects could be controlled at the federal level. No doubt we could pass a statute analogous to the unconscionable transactions act which would protect consumers of credit all over Canada in an equitable manner. I think if we amended the constitution to give the provinces individually entire authority in this regard the provinces might set up different standards throughout Canada with regard to the protection afforded to consumers of credit, and I do not believe this is something we want to do.

So I say I am in complete accord with the lofty and worthy objectives of the hon. member. I know that all members on this side of the house are willing to work very hard for a pervasive amendment of our constitution so that authority with regard to all fiscal and other legislative matters will be defined as clearly as possible within the constitution, thus leaving minimal areas where the new approach of co-operative federalism will hold sway. To as great a degree as possible, let us have a constitution that defines the rights and responsibilities of the various levels of government in such a way that they may be interpreted judicially as clearly as possible. We hope that the revising of the constitution can be carried out in the not too distant future, and when that is done I trust that the entire problem of consumer credit will find its proper place within comprehensive legislation which will protect consumers of credit all over Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, there are a few words I should like to say concerning Bill C-31 put forward by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden). I hope I shall abide by the rules and stick to the subject, as opposed to the hon. member who has just spoken.

No doubt is there much to be said in favour of Bill C-31, since it is designed to compel loan and credit companies to show on their contracts the interest rate to be paid by borrowers.

At first, that bill might seem attractive because, so far, there is no way for the borrower to find out exactly how much interest he will have to pay not only per year but per month.

However, following various pieces of legislation that were brought forward in the past and certain special taxes imposed by different governments, we realize easily after having studied the budget that the people get used very rapidly to formal changes, whereas there is really only one way to prevent certain abuses.

At the present time, finance companies are said to lend money at an annual rate of approximately 24 per cent and as there is no indication on the contract, creditors may insist upon receiving amounts of money the borrower never thought he would have to pay.

The problem remains the same since, in many cases, people who apply to finance companies are known to be insolvent. They can then obtain credit by simply paying a much higher interest than the one charged by chartered banks and credit unions. I am pretty sure that even though finance companies were compelled to show in their contracts the amount of interest charged, that is 24, 26 or 20 per cent, this would in no way prevent people from applying for loans to those companies.

I feel that if the public is to be really protected, the answer is not to legislate on the methods to be used by finance companies, but to legislate mostly on the rate of interest charged by them, because, after all, the consumer is exploited when he has to repay large amounts of money.

Individuals whose credit is good enough may very easily obtain margins of credit from banks; evidently, those people are not involved.

The only persons involved are those who are denied any credit except by finance companies. This is why I respectfully submit that in spite of the interest which this legislation may arouse and in spite of the undeniable good faith of the hon. member for Rosthern, actually the public would not be sufficiently protected, unless finance companies are prevented by legislation from lending at prohibitive rates.

The hon. member for Rosthern mentioned that he had previously introduced a similar bill in former years and that its fate had been similar to that of all private bills. I think he could have put to good use the time his party was in office to enter this bill in the statutes.

In passing, I notice that section 2 of the bill states that the present act will come into force on September 1, 1962. I wonder how the hon. member for Rosthern decided to make his bill retroactive.

On the other hand, the member for Rosthern says that he wants to protect his constituents, when in fact he does not protect anyone because all those who will need money will know beforehand if they are going to pay 24, 26 or 20 per cent, whereas in the past they did not know. That will in no way prevent loans from being made, small consumers from being prosecuted before the courts eventually, or small consumers from losing by seizure of goods bought in good faith because of the bad faith of those who have loaned them the money.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I simply submit that this bill does not adequately protect the consumer and I would ask the hon. member to be kind enough to withdraw it.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the sponsor of this bill. Contrary to what the previous speaker said, I maintain that even if the bill is not without fault and this I admit, it deals with part of the crucial problem which we are now facing. It is something, because in my opinion the sponsor of the bill has endeavoured to draw the attention of the house on the matter. Even if it had only enabled us to hear the statement made by the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene), I would say that this bill has provided the opportunity of hearing a lecture on constitutional principles.

One fact remains however and it is that today the people are swindled by a gang of illegal lenders and this nobody can deny. We are before an accomplished fact.

The federal government is being asked today to attempt to correct this unbearable situation and the hon. member for Renfrew South can only reply by putting a question. He even goes as far as to state that matter does not come under federal jurisdiction. For 90 years, it has been wondered whether it rests with the federal or the provincial governments to determine interest rates and the procedure to be followed for the granting of a loan. When the hon. member for Renfrew South maintains that the matter does not come under federal jurisdiction, he is absolutely not putting forward the views of his party. In my opinion, the present Liberal government has never had any scruples about taking over fields reserved to the provinces and even about infringing upon provincial rights.

I notice that neither the federal government nor the provinces feel responsible when the time comes to enact legislation to give some protection to the public and the small wage earner. However, when it is a question of protecting a company or a trust, everyone takes his responsibilities and looks after the company or trust concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the federal government has a role to play and that it must play it even to the point of seeking an agreement with the provinces, if necessary, to determine who is going to put a stop to this state of affairs which is leading the people down the road of bankruptcy.

The object of this bill is to make a credit financier criminally liable. In fact, the sponsor of the bill goes quite far, he even states his case boldly:

> The purpose of this bill is to make a credit financier criminally liable when he does not, before the credit transaction, clearly disclose in writing to the debtor the cost of the credit calculated as a total dollar amount and as a yearly percentage of the credit amount to be granted.

That is the purpose of this bill. On the other hand, I feel that its ultimate end does not fulfil completely the aim sought today.

> This criminal liability attaches only to the individual or company who grants the credit.

I would have liked the sponsor of the bill to indicate here some companies which do more than lend money at exorbitant rates and do not divulge them.

I consider charter banks as private companies which have the gall, with a deposit of $8 only, to loan $100 to the government. That is a crime.

I do not quite agree with the sponsor of the bill when he says:

> The liability does not attach to the person who grants credit but not as a business—

As a matter of fact, I know personally several individuals who, today, loan money, without making a business of it, at even more usurious rates than the legally and officially constituted finance companies. That is why I said earlier that, in spite of that, there was some good in the bill.

Credit companies do not willingly give particulars of all interests included in sales contracts, and certainly the mover can attack interest rates, because that is where the evil is. Everything hinges upon that question. The companies use all possible means to try and hide the prohibitive amounts of interest which are added to the contract prices.

Here I should like to give you a few examples selected among the hundreds I know, because I myself have been in business, when I entered into numerous contracts and have been in some public offices.

I have here assertions by judges and lawyers to the effect that individuals lend at an interest rate as high as 75 per cent, and that it is impossible to take legal action against those thieves.

Nowadays, we go to great lengths to pass legislation in order to catch people who commit small larcenies, when for the last 90 years, we have not found ways to arrest those large scale thieves, to legislate with a view to preventing such thefts.

We must have legislation that will check what I would call "those big thieves". As we are discussing this matter today in the house, we can still hear hon. members declare that "it does not fall within our jurisdiction" or that "it does fall within the provincial jurisdiction". Who is to blame? We will have to assume our responsibilities tomorrow.

Let us take the following example. A man needs $5,000. Somebody comes to him and is willing to lend him the amount, provided that the borrower pays a 15 per cent commission, which amounts to $750. And one must add to this searching expenses, counsel fees, and so on. Formerly, such a transaction would have cost only $40, but nowadays—and I have seen contracts in a notary's office—a plain $3,000 insurance contract can cost $350. To the $750 commission you must add at least $300 in contract fees, which makes a total of $1,050 on a $5,000 loan.

Now, as it is not sure that the customer will make his first payment, an amount of $200 is withheld. That brings the cost of the loan to $1,250 so that the borrower will get only $3,750 out of a $5,000 loan.

Interest will be calculated on $5,000 for 36 months. At present rates, the interest will amount to $1,500 for 36 months and the borrower will have to make 36 monthly instalments of $200. If he always pays on time, he will reimburse $7,500 even though he has received only $3,750. That is one of the finest examples of such loans.

Here is another example. The same person borrows $5,000 on the same conditions from a private individual or from a private company this time, under what is called a small loans plan, a family plan or a budget plan. This is where things get out of hand. The borrower is told: "You will reimburse $7,500 in 36 months." However, the lender knows full well that the borrower will be in financial straits for two or three months, especially in marginal areas, and that it will be impossible for him to make his payments. The borrower who is a well-established and rich farmer, is told: "There is no hurry; take your time."

Three or four months later, when there is a downward trend on the markets, the borrower is reminded that he now owes $800. Then, the farmer who is pennyless and has nothing left says to himself: "It is useless; I will have to sell some stock or anything to pay that amount." But the lender reassures him once more: "No, do not hurry. We will just add the $800 to the $7,500 and you will repay the whole amount in 36 months."

And this keeps on until he realizes after three years that he has to repay $15,800 for a $5,000 loan. I have seen many such cases, Mr. Speaker.

It happens every day in our district, because—

Mr. Boulanger: Does the hon. member include car financing in this?

Mr. Gauthier: No, I was not referring to those finance plans. Even though I have nothing against car salesmen, I think that those plans are not to be encouraged. We may belong to Social Credit, but we do not recommend them, because those are not our views about credit.

I am a furniture dealer myself and my customers have to pay through finance companies, but do not think I like it. I would much prefer obtaining credit from the bank, because I would send my customers there and they would save 18 per cent in interest. Unfortunately, it is impossible in the present situation.

Mr. Boulanger: There is always a beginning.

Mr. Gauthier: There is some improvement, but not much. I must point out once again that I am not against large finance companies, even though some of them charge 18 or 20 per cent interest, because they transact business fairly and normally. I am against this kind of finance plans such as we have in our area today which have succeeded in laying hands on at least 100 cultivated lots belonging to farmers who had been compelled to borrow $3,000 and who now owe up to $22,000. It is against such individuals that I bear a grudge. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I have here some letters from judges and lawyers who have written to ask me to expose those rascals.

Mr. Belanger: Yes, they are rascals.

Mr. Gauthier: This is right, they are thieves. I admit, Mr. Speaker, that we do not have any control on interests. The hon. member for Renfrew said so: "There is no limit on the interest rate". Nowadays, if an individual wishes to lend money at 300 per cent, you are unable to stop him. But if a labourer steals $3, you will have him jailed for a month, while the other individual will rob you blind and you will be unable to prosecute him.

There is another kind of case which I would like to bring to the attention of the house. I shall have to curtail my remarks, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to kill this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I could mention several cases but, as my time is running out, I abbreviate my speech to enable another hon. member, who informed me of his wish to take the floor, to make a few remarks on the bill before us.

As a matter of fact, I myself introduced Bill C-23, which was more precise than this one, which wants to establish the interest rate. I have been advised to refer it to the committee on consumer credit. I readily did so. I was told that this would be the quicker way. Unfortunately, I find that the credit committee has, I think, become a rest room where nothing more is heard of the bill referred for consideration.

As this famous credit committee—I have been told so since, because at the time it had just been appointed, and I thought it quite adequate—seems to have been only set up to kill our bills in the gas chamber, it might as well not have been created at all.

We should, once for all, legislate to control this kind of business, because it has become quite shocking for this country not to be able to control or fix interest rates to stop usury. It should be our policy to fix interest rates, definitely and finally.

I shall now, incidentally ask the committee which is to study our bills, to accelerate matters a bit, give us a report and let us have the means of protecting each and every Canadian citizen against the loathsome business of those finance companies which are taking away our homes, our land, not only in my district but in the whole province of Quebec.

That is the problem in Quebec today. The federal government should act—if necessary, in agreement with the provinces—it should act once for all and give us some legislation to put the brake on such monstrous practice.

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in the limited time that I have available to me I wish to make certain comments on Bill No. C-31. Nine public bills on this subject have been referred to the special committee which this house set up on November 8 last. At that time the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught) moved a resolution to establish a select joint committee of the other place and of this house. It is interesting to note that the resolution states that a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons shall be appointed to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit. It goes further and says this committee shall report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto. The third section reads that the committee shall have power to call for witnesses, papers and records and examine witnesses.

Although all parties in this house were unanimous in the setting up of that committee, as they should be, and although the principle of this bill is the same as that of the other nine public bills, I think it would be quite improper if at this time we were to allow this particular bill to pass, although we are all in favour of its principle, when nine other public bills are before the select committee that has been set up. I am opposed to this type of amendment to the Interest Act at this time, because I am opposed to any piecemeal amendment to any legislation. We have had problems with the Income Tax Act and other legislation because it was amended piecemeal. We will also have problems with this act if it is amended piecemeal. In my view, Mr. Speaker, the Interest Act should be completely reviewed and amended in total rather than sections thereof being amended piecemeal. I think the only way to deal with such an important piece of legislation is for the federal government to introduce a new act to deal with this particular problem.

The committee has the power to call before it persons, papers and witnesses. According to the information I have received, no other committee has ever been set up with this power to look into the problems of consumer credit. I think it is very important that before any legislation is introduced, as much as we may wish it to be implemented, such legislation should not be implemented without the committee calling witnesses before it who can deal with these problems. Not only should the committee call before it witnesses from the judiciary, from the bar associations across this country, from finance companies and people who deal in consumer credit and interest rates, but there should be a complete review of this matter right across the country. The committee should have before it evidence as to consumer credit, interest rates, collateral mortgages, chattel mortgages, conditional sales contracts, and so on. In this way we will receive recommendations from the select committee which can be incorporated into legislation that will deal with this problem.

The hon. member who introduced this bill stated that he first introduced it two years ago. I question his sincerity in introducing it again at this time, because he had two years in which to bring it forward and I gather from his remarks that he did not bring it forward last year. It seems strange to me that when his party was in office at that time, with a very large majority, such an amendment to the Interest Act was not implemented. I leave that with the house, Mr. Speaker, just as my own personal opinion.

As I stated, nine public bills have been introduced in connection with this matter. There was Bill No. C-10, an amendment to the Interest Act, which was referred to the committee; Bill No. C-55 was another proposed amendment to the Interest Act, which was referred to the committee; Bill No. C-14 was introduced, to amend the Small Loans Act, requiring statements of true interest rates. The bill before us at this time also includes this as one of its purposes. There was Bill No. C-23, an amendment to the Small Loans Act, to reduce maximum interest rates, which bill was also referred to the committee. Bill No. C-9 was another proposed amendment to the Small Loans Act, requiring statements of true interest rates, which was also referred to the committee. Then there was Bill No. C-33, a proposed amendment to the Bills of Exchange Act, and Bill No. C-6, to provide control of consumer credit. To my mind there was a sound reason for the setting up of the select committee to deal with this matter, and we should not pass any piecemeal legislation to amend the Interest Act, the Small Loans Act or the Bankruptcy Act. The legislation which we all wish to see enacted is much too important to everyone to be treated in a piecemeal fashion.

Then there is the problem of education. It is very fine to have legislation, but legislation is only as good as it can be implemented and enforced. However, the problem here is that a man or woman who requires funds badly—and this is the reason for the high interest charges which people have to pay—go to finance companies and similar institutions to borrow money and do not care what rate of interest they have to pay, as long as they receive the money. After they have received the money and spent it, they complain about the high interest rates. That is why I say the problem here is also one of educating the people to be aware of the legislation which is enacted to improve this situation.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that you are becoming a little agitated. It must be nearing six o'clock. May I call it six o'clock?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the house that the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired. As the business, pursuant to special order made on Thursday, October 17, 1963, will be the consideration of estimates, will the house now agree to go into committee of supply.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, vote No. 1, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. Shall this item carry?

Departmental administration—

1. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's fee for membership in the Pan-American institute of geography and history, $1,290,100.

[Mr. Macaluso.]

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, in presenting estimates of this kind we are in a rather unique position in that basically these are estimates prepared by the previous administration.

Mr. Dinsdale: They are good ones.

Mr. Benidickson: I see the Leader of the Opposition facing me at the moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And he is smiling.

Mr. Benidickson: I want to say that my predecessor is not in this house to ask me about future programs, because he is on a very important mission with the defence committee overseas. I think however that this committee is entitled to some explanation of these estimates, whether they originate with the official opposition or with the new administration.

We have before us departmental estimates for 1963-64 in excess of $45 million, which are $2 million less than the previous year's. Since the new administration has come into office I have received advances from the new Minister of Finance, and naturally so, to see whether we could in some way curtail some of the items having regard to the expected and announced deficit. However, I must tell this committee of supply that I have not been able to recommend any changes on the reduction side among the items in the estimates after the austerity program of the previous government and after the $2 million which I have mentioned had already been cut off; but I think I am able to tell the committee of supply that I feel pretty much assured that in the present session I will not be asking for any supplementary estimates to cover any increases, which of course so often change the figures from those in the basic blue book we are considering tonight. We are preparing some new estimates at this time for the 1964-65 term, and I hope they will include some of the items I have been hearing about from colleagues not only on this side but on the other side of the house, knowing as we all do how important is the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys to the economy of the whole of Canada.

At this point, and in view of these special circumstances, I am accepting wholly the proposals of my predecessor for this current year. I will say no more, but after hearing comments of all hon. members of the committee of supply I will perhaps comment further on their suggestions and advice, which is very much sought at this time.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, in opening my remarks tonight I join with the minister in hoping that the estimates of his department, an extremely important one regardless of the size of its expenditures, will pass this committee of supply tonight, in order to give him and his officials an opportunity to carry on with a most important phase of Canadian activity. I have said before in the house that I hope the minister will soon be in a position to give us and the Canadian people an indication of whether or not the provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act are to be carried on as they now stand, whether they are to be extended, or whether they are to be changed in some other way, in order that the mining communities throughout this country may have ample notice that changes are contemplated.

I know from previous conversations with the minister that he is anxious to bring before the house a statement as to the policy of the government after January 1 when, as hon. members may know, the provisions of the regulations under E.G.M.A., as we call it, run out. We fully realize that the purpose for which the special provisions under the act were introduced requires re-examination. When these measures were enacted into law, the emphasis was laid on gold production. In the years which have intervened, the provision of this special assistance which allowed mines in many areas to continue to operate, has been accompanied by social implications. We have found this out with regard to so many of the measures enacted since the second world war. For example, the closing down of a military base has tremendous social and economic implications, and such a decision must be weighed not only in terms of its direct effect but also in terms of its ancillary effects upon the Canadian economy, and in particular on the communities affected.

The provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act were introduced by a Liberal government. They were continued in the period 1957-62 by a Conservative government, although I must say they were examined carefully and extended so as to recognize the new factors which were present. Perhaps for the first time, the provisions of this act were understood in the light of their social and human implications. This was a forward step. I intend to be brief, and my point is simply this: if changes are to be made, it is necessary that the minister be given an opportunity to announce them well in advance, so that the mining communities of Canada, and there are many of them, may know as quickly as possible what policy the government intends to follow in relation to this matter.

To come closer to the area in which I am more particularly interested, let me say that the future of the Northwest Territories is almost totally dependent upon mineral exploration and exploitation. For that matter, the future of all Canada depends, in a way, on how well our mining companies are able to exploit the resources we possess. After all, two thirds of the pre-Cambrian shield lies in our northern regions. As the former prime minister so often impressed upon the Canadian people, ours is a northern destiny. It is to this area that Canada must look for much of its future welfare, and particular importance attaches to the possibility of exploiting the mineral resources which we know exist in the north, especially in the Northwest Territories. The reason I call attention to the emergency gold mining legislation is that for the years immediately ahead the exploitation of gold presents the greatest hope, because gold is a product which returns the greatest revenue per ounce when it is placed on the market.

In closing these brief remarks I wish the minister well in his efforts to make a statement of the kind I know he wishes to make, so as to reassure the mining communities all over Canada. I urge him to bring to his department any ideas which may be new or different. I have in mind the kind of suggestion which my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle made to his successor in office, namely that the role of a minister is to bring to his department a new approach. He should not simply accept the recommendations of his senior officials, though it is not my intention to disparage or detract from the dedicated and competent continuity which those officials bring to a department. I am merely suggesting that in the years which lie ahead, even though the hon. gentleman's department may now represent, relatively speaking, only a minor budgetary expenditure, it is likely to play an increasing role in the Canadian economy, as we take advantage of the fact that the door to the north has been opened in the past few years and that the north does have a potential greater than southern Canadians have ever dreamed.

At the same time, I urge the minister to bring to his department a large measure of flexibility in reaching the kind of decisions they will have to make. The areas we are opening up are different; we have different problems. This was recognized by the former government. I am sure the minister will carry on this policy of bringing in a fresh approach.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): First, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister on his appointment to office. It may seem late to do so, but this is the first opportunity we have had. I do that on two grounds, the first of which is a purely personal one. If the minister thinks back to 1957 I believe he will recall he was the first member of parliament I met after I was elected in that year.

We met on the train going west. In the second place, I am also very pleased to see that a member from the north country, which is the real mining area of this great land of ours, a member who has lived all his life there and who understands us, is at present holding down this portfolio. I think it bodes well for the understanding required for this very important aspect of our economy.

In my remarks tonight I should like to deal in general with the gold mining industry. I think this is quite natural in that I represent a constituency that is almost completely dependent on that industry. I believe there is more gold produced in my constituency than in any other district in North America and, with the possible exception of one region of South Africa, than in any other place in the world.

We realize that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act is going to have to be dealt with before the end of the year and it is not my intention tonight to deal with it at great length. We will have an opportunity later in the session to do so. However, the fact still remains that the act is so tied in with gold it is almost impossible to deal with the industry as a whole without touching on the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

I believe all hon. members have received a copy of the very excellent brief presented on behalf of the gold mining industry. It is entitled "Extension of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act" and is a submission to the federal government on behalf of the gold mining communities of Canada. I should like to deal with certain sections of the brief, as it tends to deal with the gold situation as a whole rather than particular aspects of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. I will start on page 3 of the brief where it deals with the basic implications of the act that make the continuation of the industry possible. It has this to say:

> Despite extensive mechanization which has helped restrain inflationary cost pressures—by reducing the number of employees—

My first objection to the brief is to that latter statement. I think that the industry does not have a proper or healthy outlook if they think that is the only way that inflationary pressures can be reduced. The brief continues:

> —mining still requires considerable human effort. About 55 per cent to 60 per cent of mine operating costs go into wages and salaries. Mining is very much a "job creating" business.

This is very true, and as I develop my remarks further I should like to point out to the government how important this industry can be to the country and in meeting the problems that face our country at the present time. For example, if you compare the job creating possibilities in gold mining with the job creating possibilities in the winter works program I think you can see the point I am trying to make. In the efforts of the present government to find some way to cure unemployment this is one place they could look with the hope of having very beneficial results. The brief continues:

> For every $1 paid out in cost-aid a payroll of approximately $5 is protected, and a further expenditure of $2 made possible for operating supplies from many parts of Canada. This is a potent effect in human terms.

I should like to endorse that statement wholeheartedly. Any time that for the expenditure of $1 you can obtain the results outlined here is a very worth-while project indeed. The brief goes on to say:

> The companies and people kept working, mainly as a result of the existence of the act, have paid back to the federal government probably close to 50 per cent (including sales tax) of the cost-aid received; and this percentage would, as we read the Quebec metal mining association brief, be close to 75 per cent if all levels of government were included. While it is true, of course, that these people get valuable services from their governments, too, it is also clear that cost-aid is by no means a complete loss for governments.

This again is a very good point to keep in mind. The present figures for emergency gold mining assistance do not necessarily represent a true picture of the actual cost to the government, because as a result of the money expended and pumped into the industry benefits accrue to the government so that the actual cost is far less, possibly 25 per cent or more less, than the actual assistance figures.

The fourth point made in the brief was a very important one.

> No such accounting calculation can comprehend the far reaching secondary effects of the injection of federal funds. These effects multiply and echo through the national economy in diverse ways. The act therefore appears to us to be, in human terms, a productive expenditure program and not merely a package of more or less sterile transfer payments.

This, of course, is very true. The moneys paid for this purpose can turn up in many places. They can turn up in equipment and supplies needed to operate the mines and purchased from producers in other parts of the country. Some of these mines could only keep going because of assistance paid by the federal government in the past.

I should like to turn briefly to the gold situation throughout the world and more particularly the gold situation in the United States, because it affects us. If we refer to the brief again we find that at December 31, 1957 United States gold reserves stood at an all-time high of $22.9 billion while at that time only $11.9 billion was required to back United States currency. It is also pointed out that despite the $15.2 billion in foreign short term dollar balances the dollar-gold position appeared to be reasonably good at that time.

The situation has changed drastically since then. We find that by August, 1963 United States gold reserves had declined to $15.6 billion while the currency requirement had risen to $12.2 billion leaving a current margin of only $3.4 billion compared with $11 billion just six years ago. During the same time the value of foreign short term dollar holdings had risen $10.3 billion to $25.5 billion. The brief goes on to say that the United States faces a gold and foreign exchange crisis of unprecedented proportions for such a nation.

This points out, Mr. Chairman, the growing need for the production of more and more gold. As I have said, the brief is an excellent one. There are a few points I disagree with and possibly I can deal with them tonight. It is obvious, however, that a tremendous amount of work has been done on the preparation of the brief. I would urge all hon. members who have not read it to do so, because I think it will give them a much better picture of the gold situation than they have had previously.

The problems that have led up to this situation are listed on page 4. I quote from the brief:

> World gold production has fallen far behind the growth rate required by expanding world trade under a gold exchange standard.

It may be said we are not on the gold standard, and that may be quite true. But the fact still remains that gold is the one commodity that is accepted anywhere in the world. It is one cash crop that any country would be glad to have. We in Canada are very fortunate in that we have gold reserves that have never even been scratched yet. The main problem is, how are we going to start developing them? If hon. members will look at the picture across Canada from coast to coast I think they will find that since the start of gold mining assistance in 1948 very few gold mines have gone into production. I know that there are none in my particular area of the Porcupine gold camp. No new producers have started since 1948. This is not because there is no more gold there. There is plenty of gold there. No one who has the wherewithal has been willing, under present circumstances, to put up the necessary funds to bring a gold mine into operation.

This leads us, Mr. Chairman, to look at the situation as it exists now. Over the last 15 years, since the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act has been in effect, the Canadian taxpayers have poured some $170 million to $180 million into the gold industry. The situation today is not as good as it was back in 1948. It is true that a lot of good has been done by this money. It has maintained a lot of mines, which in turn have maintained a lot of jobs, which in turn have maintained some gold mining communities. However, this measure is not the solution to the gold situation.

In the first place, I think we have to make up our minds just what we want to do in regard to gold production. We have to make up our minds if it is worth while to produce gold. I think anyone who has studied this problem will realize that gold is an almost indispensable product in the world today. Certainly, in so far as any country situated like Canada is concerned, it is extremely urgent that we do everything in our power to increase the gold production of this country. Let us face it, the day a gold mine opens it starts to die. Every day that goes by, every month and every year's production means that mine is that much closer to being finished. Regardless of whether or not we subsidize the mine to enable it to remain open, it is going to come to a close. Possibly if we had spent the money we have on the emergency gold mining assistance for the development of new mines, this country would be far better off than it is. Emergency gold mining assistance has not prevented Buffalo Ankerite from closing. It has not prevented the mines from closing and making Matachewan into a ghost town. It has not prevented Hollinger from announcing that it expects to close down at the end of next year.

We have to realize that the gold mines in the Porcupine camp are today about 50 years old and they cannot go on forever. Some two years ago the Hollinger gold mine poured a brick to celebrate $500 million of gold produced from that one property. It cannot go on forever. While we need this subsidy, as is explained in this brief presented to the government, to even maintain the status quo, what we really need in this country is a new mine to replace the Hollinger gold mine, and not a few more million dollars to extend the life of the mine for another year or two. We have ample evidence to show the need for the production of gold. I think we have ample evidence to show that we have the gold to produce. I think we have ample evidence to show that if the government takes the lead in ensuring the greater production of gold, it is going to solve many of the other problems with which we are faced, that is the serious ones. What we have to do is get on with this job.

As I mentioned earlier, it is not good enough to just pay this subsidy. This is not stimulating the gold industry. Unless we are prepared, as mentioned in the brief, to accept the fact the emergency gold mining assistance is an old age pension being paid to a dying industry, then it is time we took a new look at the gold mining industry. It is time that the government adopted a courageous and vigorous attitude in its attempts to solve these problems. I think we can go one step farther, Mr. Chairman. As I have said, the assistance the government has given in the past has not stimulated any new production. None of the mining companies seem prepared, seem to have the courage or the desire, to develop new gold mines.

I think this government should, first of all, show the industry that they really think that the production of gold is worth while and should be stimulated. The present gold mining assistance should be increased, but even more important I think the three-year time limit that has always been attached to it should be abolished. It takes about three years to develop a mine to the point where it starts producing. As long as a company is only sure of its future for a three-year period, it will not take that gamble. I feel that until a longer term is available, until you see fit to abolish the three-year time limit and extend it to a ten-year period or, better still, extend it until such time as a more realistic price is available for gold, new production will not be developed. The government should adopt this program so that the mining companies are prepared to keep this industry alive, because they know it is something the country needs. Furthermore, if the companies are not prepared to go ahead when they know the government is going to back them, then they should be told to step aside and allow the government to go ahead. I think this is something of vital importance to this country and it is something that should receive the full attention of the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, although I am not an expert in mineralogy, I should like to make a few comments on the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Like those who spoke before me, I should like to congratulate the minister for his report. In the course of his remarks, the minister blew his own horn because he had cut down the expenditures of the department by close to $2 million compared with last year.

At this stage, I wonder whether he deserves congratulations or blame. In order to reach a fair judgment, we must look into each item to ascertain which ones were cut down.

If he did cut down the expenditures of a probably top heavy administration of the past years, he deserves congratulations. But if he has cut down the items concerning research or some other fields, I think he should deserve a little blame. However, we will wait till we have more information before we pass judgment. We shall tell him a little later if he did well or not.

Mr. Chairman, everyone is aware of the fact that the province of Quebec is one of the richest provinces in all kinds of ores, but when you take a look at the estimates, and more particularly at item No. 35 concerning the international boundary commission, you are a little puzzled, because we then resemble that man who looks too rich and who is surrounded by all kinds of people trying to pick up some of the crumbs of his fortune.

After the minister's observations, two ideas came to my mind.

The first is concerned with the determination of boundaries. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) has drawn the shape of things to come, in the house, the other day, in order to forewarn the department. This evening, without any bias, I would like to mention that point to the minister, so that he could this year look more often towards the northern and western regions of Quebec. Thus we might perhaps avoid waking up one day with only the centre of Quebec left, because the periphery of the province would have been gnawed away, piecemeal.

At this stage of the debate, I would like to speak of the boundary around James bay, Hudson bay and along the coast line.

I submit that the people in the mapping division should apply to Quebec the rule which generally applies to other provinces, and see to it that the water line is determined not at high tide but at low tide.

I wish to state once again that the province of Quebec does not ask for the lion's share. I, for one, would be quite satisfied with limits drawn at low tide, which would allow Quebec to protect all the islands along its coast line. It seems to me that it is vital for us to protect these islands which have unheard of resources.

That is why the province of Quebec is so attached to them. The provincial government has set its heart on them, and the federal government should do its part, and co-ordinate its activities with those of the government of Quebec, so as to determine once and for all the dividing line, and allow us at last to know how we stand in regard to James bay and to the whole coast line.

I should now like to go on to another question, perhaps a more burning one this time. I refer to the Quebec-Newfoundland boundary.

Some years ago, we agreed to hand over a strip of the Quebec sea coast to Newfoundland so that this province could raise her economic level by grabbing, if I may put it that way, some of the splendid mining resources of the province of Quebec.

We, in the province of Quebec, were hoping then that the coast would at least not extend, on the average, beyond 12½ miles from the shore line. Well, today, we realize that the mining companies, thanks to a misinterpretation of a court decision, have gone beyond that 12½ mile limit and have been penetrating more and more deeply into the province of Quebec.

In fact, they are now more than 450 miles from the coast. If they keep going at that rate, I would say that in a year or two they will have taken over half the province of Quebec.

While the hon. member for Lapointe was speaking, I heard someone ask: But do you intend to take over other boundaries to the south? He meant: Do you intend to take over other regions belonging to other provinces? That is not our intention, Mr. Chairman. We intend to stay in our own province. We are ready to make concessions to give other provinces a chance, but to give all we have, that is something else again.

That is why I raise that point. I hope the present minister will take these two matters into consideration and will take action, this year, to define once and for all the boundaries between Newfoundland and Quebec.

Tonight we are not asking for the moon. It seems to me that our requests are absolutely logical and proper. I am convinced, knowing the minister's good will, that he will do us justice in that respect.

[Text]

Mr. O'Keefe: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of delaying in the least the adoption of these estimates, yet I am most anxious to make a comment or two on behalf of a desperately depressed mining area. But first of all may I congratulate the minister on his appointment and wish him well in his responsible position.

A few short years ago 2,500 men worked the Bell island mines in Newfoundland. Today only some 800 are precariously employed, never knowing from day to day just when their turn may come to receive the dreaded dismissal slip. And remember, Mr. Chairman, when a man is laid off on this island it means much more than the loss of a job. It means his little home, so often the only tangible evidence of his years of employment, and often of frugality, is worthless, or nearly worthless. It means his whole life's investment in his community, school and church is gone. The unemployed miner has to move away and no one wants his home. He can get little or nothing for what, in effect, is his whole life's savings.

I would urge the minister that he examine the possibilities of a subsidy. This would overcome the price handicap, if price handicap or price is a problem, and it usually is. I would also urge investigation into the possibility of establishing a direct iron or steel plant at the Bell island site, and I would once again urge the possibility or practicality of stockpiling.

A few days ago I was intensely interested to observe at first hand exciting experiments now being carried out by experts in the minister's department. We all anxiously await a technological breakthrough, but I know the department is moving steadily ahead, and in my opinion it is an enthusiastic and dedicated department.

Yet, with regard to Bell island, surely someone should be doing something positive about the Wabana situation. In my view there are two distinct aspects to the problem. The first is investigation of it. An assessment should be made of the precise minimum level of production at which the mine could continue to operate. This would require frank and open discussions with company management, by a board or by this department. The board should do a thorough analysis of the age, skill, sex, education, etc., of all those living on the island, and take an inventory of the island's social capital. Some of this information may be available, but it requires completion and analysis.

The investigational aspect would have to be backed up by a program of action approved and supported by the provincial and federal governments. It might be possible to bring some form of small economic endeavour to the island to support a part of the present population, particularly the older members of the community. In the main, however, the islanders require information as to the possible magnitude of the problem, possibly as to the federal assistance available for movement to jobs elsewhere, and as to retraining opportunities. To date, attempts to employ Bell islanders elsewhere in Canada have not been very successful. Some form of pension scheme for early retirement might be part of the answer. It has worked well elsewhere.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that Bell island could be symbolic. It could be symbolic of what this Canadian government can and will do for its own. I hope we can somehow arrange for Wabana to be an experiment in assistance—a kind of pilot plant, if you will; an example of the rekindling of human hopes and lives and the reconstruction of an economic area. Here we have, first of all, a concentration of population on a very small site, an island nine miles long, three miles wide, with a population of 12,000 to 14,000 Canadians. That very fact simplifies the initial problem of gathering the vital statistical information on which a plan of rehabilitation must be founded. It simplifies gathering the facts about education standards, aptitudes, interest in remaining on the island, and studying to acquire the academic knowledge essential to entering into a variety of technical and skilled occupations. On this kind of information an effective program can be founded that will attempt to deal in a well organized way with the many problems that are involved.

We have, apart from provincial resources with respect to education and vocational training, partial support during the completion of a training program, help in agriculture and fishing, among other things, and such organizations as the Atlantic development board, the new Department of Industry and other federal agencies. With all these powerful resources from which aid may be drawn, it should surely be possible to provide the solid basis for a viable community with a diversity of economic interests. It may not be expected that Bell island can show any measurable growth in population. The important thing at the moment is first of all to give those people hope. I repeat that this is a challenge to all the agencies, old and new, that exist in Canada for economic rehabilitation. Surely there are many, such as APEC, A.D.B., A.D.A., ARDA, plus a few provincial and federal ancillaries. The problem of Bell island cries out for solution, not sympathy.

A few evenings ago I noted with interest, some amusement and more amazement, a speech by the hon. member for Lapointe in which he discussed the possibility of tearing Newfoundland Labrador from Newfoundland. I think the same idea was expressed tonight by the hon. member for Roberval. They seem to have forgotten completely that Newfoundland Labrador was awarded to Newfoundland by the privy council in 1927 when Newfoundland was not Canadian, when I was not a Canadian. So that in effect Newfoundland, with confederation, brought Labrador back to Canada; not necessarily to Quebec, but certainly to Canada. This is one gift of the many that Newfoundland brought to Canada with confederation, and for which she has received very little credit.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, I have the opportunity this evening to pay my respects to a department which, during the time I was a minister of the crown, served me very well and won my complete admiration. Now as a member of the opposition I would like to say in public in this house what I said in private to those in that department when I was a minister of resources. Knowing the workings of several departments, I do not think I am being unjust to any other department when I say with deep feeling that there is hardly a collection of officials in our government where so many brains, so much enthusiasm and dedication is concentrated in one area.

Mr. Benidickson: How very nice of you to say that.

Mr. Hamilton: I want to emphasize in my remarks this evening, as I welcome the new minister who is presenting his first estimates, that his department holds for Canada a very important place. They must always be, as they have been in the past, the eyes and ears of the development of Canada's resources. They are a department that has gone ahead and surveyed our country, mapped it and put the research into a form that private business and other governments can use. We see large newspaper headlines when a private company discovers some mineral or oil resource, but usually the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, in some report sometimes hidden away in their files for many years, has already indicated the possibilities of such a find in that area. This applies to such dramatic finds as those in Blind River, as well as the oil surveys and showings in the northern territories.

Therefore this department is providing tremendous assistance to private enterprise in providing maps and information for use in exploration. Those who are going out to locate minerals or petroleum products underneath the surface of our soil would be wise always to send their exploration people first to the files of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. If they search those files carefully they will usually get the clues as to where to look, and thereby save a great deal of time and money.

My remarks this evening on the various programs of the department will be, I hope, exceedingly brief. I would like to say that I hope the new minister adds his weight to that of previous holders of this office in supporting the extended hydrographic program. The announcement made by the minister in the house recently indicates that this will be done. I also hope the minister will continue to support previous ministers in regard to the oceanographic institute in Halifax. The report given by the minister recently indicates that this will be his attitude.

One may wonder as to the importance of a hydrographic survey and an oceanographic institute. I recall that I once asked, when I first became minister, how long it would take to find out the depth of the sea off our shores at the rate at which we were proceeding at the time we assumed office. The answer was—I suppose it was an estimate—that at the rate we were proceeding in 1957, it would take 250 years. So we embarked upon a program of doubling the hydrographic service areas and we cut that figure down to half. What I am really saying is that this increase in program, such as the new program of shipbuilding, and so on, that is being put into operation, means we can concentrate on where the need is, and instead of our having to go to the United States navy and have them carry out a hydrographic survey for us to find out how deep are the waters off our shores, or what is the access for other countries, we will have the facilities in our own department. I am glad the minister has shown an understanding of the importance of this program in the long range planning of the development of our resources.

There was one program about which I wanted to speak with some feeling this evening, but I have decided not to go into it too deeply at this time. I refer to the polar continental shelf program. I hope the minister is watching this program very carefully. I think he understands and fully appreciates the tremendously important results of the work now being undertaken under this program.

It will be recalled that in 1958, at the law of the sea conference in Geneva, four articles were passed by the conference. One of them said that land under the sea off the shores of any country was the property of that country as far out as it could be developed. As far as I can find out from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, this acquisition of the right to explore and develop the continental shelf off our shores has added approximately one eighth to the area of Canada, roughly 12 to 13 per cent. If we had gone out and by force of arms added one eighth to our resource area, this would have been a great headline story in all the papers around the world. But because the nations of the world in free discussion made this part of international law, we have added to our territories this immensely valuable resource area. Indeed, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys started immediately on a polar continental shelf program to explore this very valuable additional territory.

At this moment I should like to suggest to the minister that the polar continental shelf is a co-ordinated program, with all types of scientists engaged in a study of that area. It was no accident that we started on the northern fringes of the islands. It is no accident that we are working back into the Arctic archipelago in order to get the information we need. But I now suggest something about which there is no urgency but which should not be forgotten. We cannot find out all about the geology of our continental shelf and of our islands in the Arctic archipelago or the north generally until we know more about the earth's surface below the Arctic ocean.

I would remind the minister that a conference was called in Calgary under the auspices of the Canadian geological association some three years ago in which the nations of the northern hemisphere brought all their knowledge to bear and had a series of discussions about Arctic geology. This conference was very valuable to all the nations which attended. Many of us were tremendously impressed and awed at what seemed like the tremendous knowledge of the Arctic ocean of the neighbours of Canada across the Arctic ocean, namely the U.S.S.R. Some of us hoped at that time that this example of a conference of the northern nations concerning Arctic geology would be carried forward into an active program participated in by many of the countries of the northern hemisphere in a systematic attack on finding out what we need to know about the earth's surface underneath the Arctic ocean, so as to know more about the geological province which lies adjacent to our country.

We are completing at the present time a tremendous world-wide program known as the geophysical year. I think the actual physical work has been completed for some two or three years, but the accumulation of all the papers is still going on. Here is an example of the countries of the world co-operating, moving into each other's territory and finding out about the earth's surface in a massive, world-wide co-operative effort, in this program we know as the geophysical year. Would it not be a good suggestion if we could apply this co-operative approach to having the nations of the northern hemisphere start thinking in terms of a joint program supported by all these nations on finding out about the geological province which exists underneath the Arctic ocean? It would be of great value not only to the United States because of its interest in the state of Alaska, but also to Canada with a great area in the north. This would apply as well to the Danes, the British, the Norwegians, the Swedes, the Finns and the Russians. I think all these nations would gain tremendously from such a joint program. I know we are not very far advanced with the subject of oceanography; other countries are away ahead of us. We need to know more about these currents, so as to know how to use them to our advantage.

But on the question of the earth's surface, about which I was speaking, I hope the suggestion I have made will be considered by the minister over the next two or three years and that this idea will not be dropped. The original credit for it goes to the geological association of Canada, but I hope the government will always be in a willing mood to discuss this with any country. As hon. members know, the previous government offered to the Russians co-operation in making available that information which we had, if they did the same for us. I hope that this same offer will be continued by the present government.

I should like to conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, with a short statement on the ground water surveys in western Canada. In that area, like many other parts of the country, we are face to face at all times with the necessity of obtaining water supplies. We have made a move or two to reserve some of the surface water in the prairie areas through our dug-out programs, our dams on the streams running into the stems of the major rivers, our dams on the Saskatchewan river and the Qu'Appelle river, the irrigation works in Alberta, and I hope also one of these days the dams which will be constructed in the eastern Rockies. We are doing a fairly good job with the surface water, but of course other things of tremendous moment have to be done in the next ten or 20 years. However, I hope that the ground water component of the water supplies to the western prairies are not overlooked.

I know that in the final analysis the discovery of water in underground sources, whether it be in a river or in a great underground pool, and whether it is salty or potable, will depend on the drilling of wells; and this is exorbitantly expensive. But knowing the tremendous genius of the scientists of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, I think that a technique can be evolved that at least gives some indication where to look when we have to start a well drilling program. I hope that what we put into the estimates some time ago will enable a start to be made on a groundwater survey program by air to see if this technique could prove out and be proceeded with, because the actual first work which was started was very tentative. I hope the program commences at the United States boundary in Saskatchewan and works its way north, because there is a desperate need for some sort of water supply greater than we can get on the surface. If the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys can point the way towards these underground rivers and these underground pools of water, if they are in sufficient quantity I can assure the house that the monetary return to the general wealth of Canada will be immediate, because several chemical operations would start up all through that portion of the so-called Palliser triangle if water supplies were available for chemical operations.

If we want to provide diversification of industry in Canada and if we want to strengthen those areas which are too dependant on a one-product economy, then this particular area of southern Saskatchewan is one sector of the country where we would like to see the ground water table survey extended and continued. I know that the item of cost is not very high because I am not asking that there be a well drilling program, although this will have to come eventually. But I should like to see whether the genius which I know exists in the department could not be brought to bear on the airborne technique, which would give us indications of where water supplies are underneath the surface of the earth.

That is all I intend to say for the moment, Mr. Chairman, but I do want to serve notice on the minister that I will be asking some questions on these matters I have raised in more detail when we reach items 40, 70, 75, 80, 90 and 130.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I too should like to say a few brief words about the mining industry and the estimates of this department. However, before doing so I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment. Coming as he does from a mining area, he is bringing considerable knowledge and competence to his department. Personally I have heard nothing but good of him as well as of his officials in the operation of his department since his appointment. The main burden of my remarks will be the mining industry in relation to the rest of the country, and its growth, and more particularly the operation of the mines department in the context of all the government's activities. These certainly need to be co-ordinated if we are to obtain the best of all possible worlds.

The mining industry has grown very rapidly. It has grown more rapidly than our other principal resource industries. This is a fortunate thing for Canada because considerably more than half of this great nation of ours can produce only mineral resources as a major product. Agriculture is limited in extent. Even our forests are limited in area. But our territories which can produce minerals are vast indeed and encompass not only the land area of the nation but the continental shelves, and many of the lake and river bottoms. So it is fortunate that the mining industry is expanding and that the future holds promise of an even greater expansion than most of the primary activities of this country.

It is a big volume industry which depends very much on international trade. If it is to produce more jobs for Canadians it must contain a great deal more processing within its compass. This is where a good many jobs in the future lie. The mining industry has become immensely more efficient, so employment in the mines themselves is not a major source of income in this country. It has to be in respect to producing the machinery, the capital goods required, the transportation systems and, more especially, the processing plants that employment must be sought. Here is where the great prospects for employment and income lie.

The industry has to look much further ahead than in years gone by. The big investments necessary are made only in the light of long term market analyses. This is another reason why the government is well advised to be making its plans, not on an annual, but on a five-year basis. Contracts should be awarded for more than one year at a time. In this way the mining industry will obtain more guidance from the government and be able to make sounder investments. The market analyses carried out by the government economists, the mineral specialists in the resources division and those who work with them should be looking over the entire field to see what is happening, not just with regard to minerals but with regard to competitive materials. In the field of energy, for example, we should not focus our attention upon only one means of production, be it oil or coal or nuclear power. We should be looking across the entire field to weigh up the competition and how the market should be shared. This is one of the reasons why activities in government should be co-ordinated to a greater extent.

In the field of energy we have the national energy board concerned primarily with oil and natural gas. The Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned with the export of various by-products. The department of northern affairs is concerned with water-power, the new Department of Industry with atomic energy and the mines branch with the coal. It is all very well if these activities go on separately with respect to the purely technical side of their administration. It might be satisfactory to have these things compartmentalized, but there has to be a measure of co-ordination especially where market analysis is involved. Perhaps this could be done in a summary way under the new national economic council, but I suggest that it would be better if more of these activities were transferred to the national energy board. I am thinking now in particular about market studies and trade prospects, the guide lines we shall be using to determine which areas of investment are most attractive, which warrant more government assistance, and so on; in other words, the orientation of these programs in the general context of business prospects is essential.

I should like to boost the mineral resources branch which certainly has been looking at longer term prospects of this industry. It is beginning to look abroad and I trust its activities are being co-ordinated with those of the Department of Trade and Commerce with respect to world markets, trading arrangements and so on.

The surveys and mapping branch has been in existence for a longer period of time. Its extensive reports over the years have been a virtual mine of information to prospectors who have spent their winters reading in well thumbed notebooks where the occurrence of one mineral or another has been recorded. From such information as this have come important discoveries. From the more extensive surveys has come the elaborate data necessary for the discovery of big volume resources such as oil, industrial minerals, potash, salt and so on. Then there are the aerial surveys promoted by this department. These have provided a great source of information for Canadian industry. Aerial surveys, magnetic surveys and the like can be carried on under contract in other countries. The Colombo plan has provided an outlet for this type of expertise, and a new Canadian industry of this character has grown up largely as a result of the activities of this branch of the department.

The mines branch has done a tremendous job with regard to the processing of minerals, chemical extraction techniques and so on. The new nickel extraction industry on the prairies is one of the products of this research program. The upgrading of iron ore is also carried on. New mineral resources have been developed and their processing has been advanced. The processing of uranium has largely been perfected by the mines branch in Ottawa. Many new developments are likely to take place in the future and I can think of one in British Columbia which is typical of the prospects which are now before us. These will result from increased investment in research and processing techniques. I refer to extensive coal deposits on the edge of my own riding, one of the largest in western Canada. This is undoubtedly one of the cheapest sources of energy on this continent, if not in the whole world. It contains a high percentage of ash. This ash is rich in alumina, the raw material from which aluminum is produced. Today we import this product from foreign countries; yet here, in a large coal deposit in western Canada, is a vast supply of this raw material. The mines branch can carry out research on raw materials such as these and help develop techniques which are best suited to the resources of this country so as to make us increasingly self-sufficient with respect to raw materials.

I have been stressing the importance of research. Research, generally speaking, must itself be referred to as a growth industry. Certainly, it is one of the fastest growing industries on this continent; it has been roughly doubling in size every five or six years. No other industry can match this pace. It is an industry of ideas, and one idea tends to give birth to another. As I say, this expansion is going on and we should not leave too much initiative to other countries. We should concentrate this generation of ideas upon the areas of greatest advantage to our resource industries and, more particularly, upon the processing of our raw materials. The mines branch is doing just that. This is one of the reasons why I personally would urge that proportionately, and in the aggregate, considerably more money should be spent in mineral research, processing research and research in the area of mining in this country. Such research will result undoubtedly in unique resources attracting unique processing industries, and we will attract and hold industries which will last and will be more competitive than some of our secondary industries in international trade. Because they are essentially unique they will be located in the more remote outlying areas of Canada, which are otherwise very difficult to develop.

I have really been emphasizing in my remarks the fundamental economics of not only much of Canada, but all of Canada. To a large extent we are living off our resources. Mining, like forestry and agriculture, is one of our great bread and butter industries. This industry deserves considerable attention and support. Personally I do not believe in subsidies. I believe that the government can help through research, through negotiations in respect of tariff barriers and encouragement of further processing. However, subsidies may occasionally be necessary and if they are necessary they should be introduced with the idea of eventually tapering them off and eliminating them in the long run. This requires at the same time long term forecasting, looking well ahead, long term research, research aimed at the second and third decade.

I believe that in the mines branch this sort of thing is going on. In my view, more of it should be carried on in Canada, and I believe we are well on our way to improving our economic lot and finding jobs for Canadians in parts of Canada which otherwise would not develop as rapidly.

[Mr. Davis.]

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I would feel I had not discharged my duty tonight if I did not make a few remarks on the first item of the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. First of all, I wish to associate myself with other members in expressing congratulations to the new minister on his presentation of the estimates for the first time. I have known the genial minister for a number of years. I have also had a close association with the officials of his department and I have found them to be intelligent and sympathetic in helping to solve some of the problems in my riding. They are greatly appreciated indeed.

I should also like to associate myself with the remarks made a few minutes ago by my colleague, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, when he referred to the fact that we should not treat the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys as an insignificant department. When I think of the policy of the former government in developing roads to resources and the surveys that have been made by members of this department together with members of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and realize the great potential for the future that lies not only in those parts of Canada with which we are more familiar but in some of the areas of the north that have been mentioned, my only regret is that I will not be around 50 or 100 years from now to see what actually develops in this regard. Looking into the future I see a terrific amount of work and a terrific development in the department, and the contribution it will make to the standard of living in Canada in particular, and in the world in general.

As I come from an agricultural area in Saskatchewan where 60 per cent of Canadian wheat is produced, some members may wonder why I am taking the time of the house to discuss matters having to do with mines and technical surveys. I believe I mentioned on another occasion in the house, and I repeat it now, that 20 per cent of the coal deposits in Canada lie within the boundaries of my riding of Moose Mountain. Twenty per cent of the lignite coal deposits in Canada are centred around Bienfait and Estevan. These deposits, together with our agricultural resources, make up a large part of the industries and resources of my riding, and as the member for that riding I wish to bring certain matters to the attention of the house and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

In passing may I say I appreciate very much the attention that the coal industry has been given in my riding. I recall now the fact that recently Mr. Mel Brodie was appointed to fill the recent vacancy on the dominion coal board. Years ago Mr. Brodie's father pioneered the development of the coal industry in that part of Saskatchewan and this work is now being carried on by his illustrious son. This appointment has stimulated a great deal of interest among coal producers in that area.

Another move that was greatly appreciated and which was undertaken by the former government under the Leader of the Opposition and the former minister of mines and technical surveys was the amendment of the Coal Production Assistance Act. Under the old act passed by the house in 1949 we found ourselves greatly handicapped in that under that act approximately 30 cents a ton at the pithead was required to repay a loan. This sounded fairly reasonable, but it was more or less based on the fact that the wholesale cost of hard or anthracite coal was around $9 to $10 a ton at the pithead, and 30 cents a ton for the repayment of loans was not too big an obstacle to overcome. However, when this formula was applied to lignite coal, which is worth about $1.90 to $2 a ton at the pithead, 30 cents a ton percentagewise was exorbitant and worked quite a hardship on coal production in our area. Since the application of the new amendment to the Coal Production Assistance Act the repayment factor has been cut down from 30 cents to 18 cents a ton, and this has greatly assisted and accelerated coal production in our area and has made the prospects of economic stability for the industry a lot brighter.

There is another thing I should like to mention in passing, which was referred to in the house a month or two ago by the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he made a statement on the attitude of the government so far as the national energy board is concerned. He referred to the fact that the present government was going to follow through on the policy espoused by the former government with regard to the development of a national grid system in Canada. We know that sources of power are the sinews of industry. A few moments ago I referred to the fact that in the riding of Moose Mountain we have 20 per cent of the total lignite coal deposits in Canada. Naturally the people of that area are very interested in the development of a national grid system because here in the centre of Canada there is a great source of cheap power that could be fed into such a system and, of course, directly and indirectly this would enhance the economy of that whole area.

At the present time the Saskatchewan government has quite a large steam-turbo power generation development at Estevan, Saskatchewan in which I believe there has been an investment of about $40 million, but this development is only in its infancy compared with the total potential. I believe the production cost now is somewhere in the neighbourhood of three to four mills per kilowatt. Engineers understand more about the production of power than I do and they will appreciate the fact that this is a very low cost factor and that the possibilities are terrific if we think of the development of power in the future in the area in and around Estevan, and the feeding of this cheap power into a national grid system. As I say, we are looking forward with great anticipation to the enhancement of our economy by this development in the years to come.

I think the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys will also be interested in becoming more acquainted with the fact that along with coal production in our area there is a vast oil production development in Saskatchewan, particularly in the southeastern part of the province. The figures I have available to me indicate that something like 5,025 or 5,028 producing wells are now active in the province of Saskatchewan and I was very happy to find on checking further that over three quarters of them are in southeastern Saskatchewan within the boundaries of my riding.

This, in itself, in the opinion of a lot of people, is going to enhance the economy of that part of the province. Of course, anything that can be done under the national energy board to further expand the market for oil is naturally going to be of great interest to the people in Saskatchewan. We want to fully develop not only our agricultural resources, but we want to become known for the industrial and mineral development in our province. We want to develop a reputation that we do not live by bread alone.

There is another development in our corner of the province about which I want to question the minister later under some other item in his department. I refer to the production of clay products. We make some of the finest bricks in western Canada at Estevan, Saskatchewan. They are made by Saskatchewan Clay Products. For some reason that I have not been able to discover, we have not found a large market for these bricks. They have not been used in the construction of federal buildings. I have had a number of inquiries on this point, and I am going to make a further investigation in order to ascertain whether this is due to some weakness in our purchasing system or to some flaw in the product itself. If there is some flaw in the product, we would like to know about it. We have not, as yet, had a definite answer as to why Estevan clay products have not been used in the construction of federal buildings.

We have, of course, other minerals in Saskatchewan apart from those found in my area. I do not want to usurp the time of the committee, but I think most members are aware of the fact that Saskatchewan has become the leading potash producer in the world. In the riding of Melville, a short distance north of Moose Mountain, we have the International Chemical Company potash development. It has become recognized as one of the world leaders, as a result of the development of a system of mining which was finally successful after a great deal of financial hardship and a great deal of work. However, it has turned out to be one of the most successful potash mine developments of which we are aware. Of course, we have salt mines and other minerals in minor quantities. I thought I should mention these facts in passing, Mr. Chairman.

I shall have further remarks to make, perhaps later when we are discussing the other items that come under this department. I felt however, I should bring some of these matters to the attention of the committee at this time.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join with others who have congratulated the minister on his appointment to this office. I do so for two reasons that have not been mentioned. The first is a very important one, and that is the fact that the minister comes from northern Ontario. Second, he is the only member of the cabinet with the political affiliation of Labour-Liberal. I think both of these facts are to his credit.

The department of mines, Mr. Chairman, has been of great importance to a large segment of our economy. I think it is of interest to look at the department of mines in conjunction with a number of other departments, because these departments have problems which are similar in nature. I refer to the departments of mines, forestry, fisheries and industry. The Department of Agriculture, as everyone knows, has received more attention from the members of parliament than probably all the other resource departments put together, because of the rural representation we have had in parliament for years.

However, there is a division of responsibility between the province and the federal government in each of these resource departments. I am sure that the people interested in these resource industries find their connections with the provincial departments much closer than with the federal departments. I am not one of those who think that this is a good thing. I believe it may be to the advantage of many of those engaged in these industries if there were an extension of the jurisdiction from the federal field into the provincial field, rather than a division. I think this is true of the department of mines, just as it is true of several others.

We in northern Ontario look to the department of mines as an indication of what is going to happen in connection with the newly formed Department of Industry. We have found that very little more was accomplished as a result of the establishment of the Department of Forestry than had been accomplished in the past. In spite of the raves that preceded the introduction of that department, the results have not been spectacular in so far as individuals engaged in that field have been concerned. This, of course, has been true of the department of mines as well. There are very few miners, I would suggest, in this country who have ever met a representative from the federal department of mines. This does not mean that the federal department of mines has not been very active in their affairs or interested in their problems. However, the contact between the federal department and the miner, or those working in the mines, has been slight to my knowledge.

The same situation prevails, of course, in other departments. The reason I put forward these suggestions is that we are looking back at mining to some extent in my part of the country and looking forward to the Department of Industry being able to accomplish some of the things that have not been accomplished by the development of primary industries. Timiskaming, in common with other like areas, is looking forward and hoping that some of the problems that have developed in the past will not be carried forward. This is my reason for comparing the two departments.

We have in Timiskaming, in common with the hon. member for Timmins, a major portion of the gold mine production of Canada. As the years go by this production continues to decrease. It is true that in my riding we have a new producer on the horizon. It is true also that since the report of the emergency gold mining assistance was presented, two mines that were in production then have ceased production. It is to be expected, of course, that there will be a continuation of prospecting and developing of gold mines, but this is something that is not going to be discussed during the consideration of these estimates because it involves the Department of Finance as well. However, the storm warnings are flying across the world indicating the need for a discussion of the relative positions of gold and silver in the monetary affairs of the world. At the moment there is a shortage of these two basic commodities, gold and silver.

The United States is being pressed to make concessions in connection with both of these commodities and has already done so to a limited extent in connection with silver. Very little has been done about the problem of world demand, Mr. Chairman, but some of these problems could be solved if the price of gold were set at $100 per ounce. There are those who would say this is unrealistic, and I am not the one to say whether it is or is not.

The government has received many representations on this subject. Only recently the Prime Minister was given a copy of a presentation from a Mr. Crump who has been making suggestions on international monetary matters for some time. He presented his latest one to the Prime Minister on May 29 last, and pointed out that the problem in relation to gold in the international field is as serious today as it was in the 1930's. He pointed out that in the United States in the 1930's $60 billion in currency and deposits was backed by only $4 billion in gold. Then, because the problem became acute, the United States raised the price of gold from $20.67 an ounce to $35 an ounce, but the situation has not got any better. It has gone from bad to worse, because the amount of currency is increasing by $300 million annually and is only backed by $16 billion in gold.

I am not going into an argument as to whether we should have the backing of gold for our basic transactions, but Canada should study this matter and see what it can do to its own advantage. If the price of gold goes up, there are very few countries in the world which would benefit to the extent Canada will. We have large exports of gold at present, and in my opinion if the price of the product could be raised substantially we would increase the value of our exports.

However, we have been told, "Let's not rock the boat." I remember the former minister of finance replying to a question of mine, which asked whether the government intended to press for an increase in the price of gold at an international monetary fund meeting, and he said, "Good heavens no; we will rock the boat; something may happen." I have thought about that answer a great deal in the interim. I have also read a lot on the subject and I am of the opinion that the only way it could rock the boat would be to our advantage.

But if this were not the case, then so what? If the price dropped completely out of the market, so what? Unless it is given another shot in the arm the gold mining industry is already on the downhill slope. In my riding the largest producer of gold on the North American continent faces a very limited life because of the depletion of ores and because of the geographical situation. Therefore unless Canada is interested in facing the problem of gold and what to do with gold in relation to its economy, the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, and other crutches we supply will not be of much advantage.

I know we will be discussing E.G.M.A. later this year, and we will be asked to extend this legislation. I do not expect there will be another 25 per cent boost in the payments, such as was provided last year. I have not heard any rumours which would lead me to believe this is going to happen, but I think the minister should indicate that he will remove the word "emergency" from the title of this act, because this would stop municipalities and gold mining communities having to come to Ottawa time after time asking for a continuation of this emergency aid.

The act was passed in 1948 as a remedy. It did not provide the full remedy, but it is a crutch upon which the industry has been hobbling along, and that crutch will have to remain until the industry ceases to produce gold. Let us be realistic and decide what amount gold should cost on the international market, and how we can actively press for that price.

In addition to representing the gold industry and one of the largest iron mines in the nation, I also represent nine of the 11 primary silver producers in Canada. This industry is being treated in much the same way as the gold mining industry, except that for years the gold mining industry has been able, through highly priced, successful lobbyists, to bring its grievances to the attention of the government in a much better way than the silver industry.

There is a world shortage of silver, and the industry should be given government assistance for stockpiling purposes. It is located in a sufficiently small area and is controllable enough for the federal government to be able to buy its total production for coinage, if for no other use. We all know silver has two uses, one a monetary one and the other industrial. It is a very valuable substance, but the decline in the supply of silver is causing the United States government grave concern.

Its price has been raised from 91 cents to $1.29 to protect the supply which the United States has, but not enough is being produced and used for industrial purposes. Here again the federal government should do more to assist the silver industry. If it did we would not have the Minister of Finance getting up, as he did the other day, and saying not enough silver dollars could be minted for those who wished to buy them.

If the price of silver were to reach its own level, without the restraints that have been placed on it by the United States, the price would rise rapidly and many of the industry's problems would be solved. I believe the federal government should get more control and involve itself deeper in the production of silver, particularly from the refinery stage onwards. The previous government signed a contract with the Cobalt refinery whereby it agreed to purchase a sizeable sum of silver from this refinery, but until all the mines in the area take part in supplying the refinery, difficulty will arise in maintaining a price which will be competitive with the smelter in Montana. So long as the federal government co-operates, as it has done in recent years, in making concessions in the freight rates on ore being shipped to the United States, it will be difficult to encourage the Canadian mines to ship their silver locally.

One of the big producers finds that until this refinery is in a position to give a guarantee of being able to handle all their silver at a set, agreed rate and provide guarantees that will make it possible for them to reach this long term agreement, they are not in a position to give up their contracts in the United States.

I think some sympathy has to be given to the company, because they were dealing previously with a Canadian company, and when the Canadian company decided to fold up, this left the Canadian producers without markets and they had to go outside our country for the refining of their product. This meant, of course, that the Canadian government had to go to the United States to buy back the silver that we use for coinage purposes. I think that we as a growing nation, a nation not only of one nationhood but several, should be in a position to supply our own coinage from silver that is refined in this country and delivered to the mill. I suggest this program should be undertaken. It is not very much to ask for, because I am told that our silver meets the requirements of the Canadian mint and I think the industry has been able to convince the provincial and federal governments that there is a need for establishing the guarantees necessary to allow the mining industry to deal with this refining.

The silver industry would like other things. It would like the assistance of the department in bringing to the attention of the minister's colleague in the Department of Finance the need for providing silver producers with the same precious metal mines depletion allowances that have been provided for gold producers. All mines, of course, receive a depletion allowance, and the gold mines are in a more favourable position than silver producers. We think the precious metals depletion allowance should be applied equally to silver producers. I ask for the intervention of the minister in this connection because until the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys considers silver to be a precious metal under the terms of the act, it is doubtful whether the Minister of Finance will consider the tax exemptions that would accrue from this designation.

We in northern Ontario desperately need a geological survey conducted by the federal government. We believe this would be worth the government spending a considerable sum of money in accomplishing. Hon. members will remember the history of Canada back in the days of the silver boom of 1904 in Cobalt. Certainly I do not have to tell hon. members of this house the history of the gold mining industry in northern Ontario. I am quite sure every member here has a relative who either became very rich or went bankrupt because of buying stocks in some of the mines in the early days of Cobalt. I am sure there are in parts of Canada other than in northern Ontario rooms in houses which are papered with mining stock that is about as valuable as wallpaper today, except for its souvenir value. This was an area of fabulous wealth. The survey carried out by the federal government so long ago is now greatly out of date and could be added to immensely by a survey conducted by the government at this time.

We are on the edge of the pre-Cambrian shield, an area of proven mineral wealth, and it seems to me that until the day governments —and this day does not seem to be getting any closer—are able to meet the problems mentioned by the hon. member in regard to Bell island, by the hon. member from Cape Breton island, by the hon. member from Timmins, and the hon. member from Alberta in regard to strip coal, we are not going to solve the problems that must be solved in these areas. Each of these areas was built around a primary producer and many of these problems have arisen because the areas have been unable to make the transition to industry. We have this department and its facilities, and I ask the minister to give consideration to carrying out a geological survey in depth, as the thinkers of the nation now say. We do not mind how they do it, whether by diamond drilling or otherwise, but the survey should be of a type similar to that carried out in United States. In that country anyone can go into the library and find out the potential of a particular area. They can ascertain whether there is a potential in an area by research at the library. It would seem to me that many of the prospectors who are now covering areas that have been well covered so many times before would find it advantageous to know what possibilities may exist in areas that they have not considered to be lucrative in days gone by.

I know the department has expanded. I was going to refer to the committee report of a few years ago, which said—and I thought they were being very foolish—that the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys should go out and buy new buildings, hire more people, and so on; in other words, they should expand. I always think it is foolish to tell senior civil servants to do this, because they seem to do it by themselves. However, I know this department has expanded. We were told this evening by the former minister of northern affairs and national resources that people have been added to the department, and I am quite sure this is so. The department has been highly complimented by many of the mining companies in my area on the work they have done in the fields of dressing, preparation and new methods of handling ores. The most recent of these accolades came from the Jones & Loghern Company in the United States which is developing the Adams iron mine at Dane. This company is well equipped to handle a great deal of their own development and refining processes, and yet they have nothing but praise for the officials in Ottawa who have helped them, when requested, in the dressing field.

I would also like to urge the minister to give consideration to the many new techniques being used in mining, and the difficulty of obtaining designations that would indicate the change in the type of mining. I am referring in part to the developments that have taken place in this field, where instead of drilling a shaft and doing the mining in this way, they are now drilling holes and using hydraulic processes to extract minerals. I think this is an ideal method of mining. I hope to see the day in Canada when many of the coal fields that we have will be operated by drilling, burning and distilling, thus obtaining the benefits of the mining resource in this manner.

I think it is unfortunate that the act is so difficult, or appears to be so difficult, to change in order to bring up to date the wording to allow for changes in the new types of mining which develop at any time. I hope that during the forthcoming year the minister will give consideration to this major problem that we have in monetary metals, the gold and silver ores, to see whether we can devise some system that will allow the mining industry certain—you might call it free enterprise—opportunities, so that if gold will sell at a price that is profitable to the mining communities, and the mining companies quite often think this is possible, they will have this opportunity. I do not think it means throwing them out on the free market, but we could help to develop in the international monetary field the role that Canada must play as an exporter of silver and gold metals.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I rise to join the other speakers in congratulating the minister upon his appointment. I know that experience, ability and affability are enjoined in him in such happy proportions that it portends well for the future of his department.

I rise to tell hon. members of the committee a brief story which, while local in origin, coming from the riding of south Renfrew, I think has a moral which may be of interest to all hon. gentlemen in general and to the minister in particular. I rise to tell the story of Calabogie. Calabogie is in the township of Bagot and Blythfield in my riding and is situated on the banks of the roaring and majestic Madawaska river. The Calabogie area was developed when Bytown, which is now the great capital of Canada, was but a village. As history and time went on Calabogie was left behind, because when the timber resources were depleted there was nothing else there. For many years the people of Calabogie, which is fondly known as Calabogie with the blue skies above, where I come from—

An hon. Member: And nothing below.

Mr. Greene: That is quite right; for many years there was nothing below. Then about ten or 12 years ago new hope came to that area—new hope of employment and new hope for a better today and an even brighter tomorrow. Iron was discovered in the area, and it was discovered to a very large extent through the study of surveys, geological and otherwise, which had been made by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys from the beginning of the century. Iron in great quantities was discovered and it appeared as though new industry and employment would come to these people.

As soon as the development of this iron reached the proportion that it was clearly commercial and profitable, in came the commercial giants, and it was not too long before the great Algoma company, under its subsidiary Algoma Ore Properties which does the developing for that corporate mining giant, had tied up all these properties which, taken together, could make a thriving commercial enterprise and give employment to the people. This was some ten or 12 years ago.

You may say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a private matter and that neither the minister nor this committee can do anything about it even after ten or 12 years. But

I say that is not so. This corporate giant has other iron resources elsewhere which it can mine more cheaply and thus more profitably, so if anyone else wishes to develop the iron resources to give employment to the area they should be given the opportunity to do so.

Surely it should not be within the power of any corporation to control natural resources, which are the heritage of the people of the country, and not of any one company. They should not be allowed to remain in control for 50 or 100 years paying nothing but a menial tax annually in order to hold these resources instead of developing them in the interests of the people.

I suggest there is a precedent for this type of conduct which encourages corporations to develop their resources at a faster pace than at present. It was not too long ago that, as I understand, the petroleum controllers of the country were successfully urged to increase production at a faster pace than before. I am not quite certain how this was done, but I think it was Teddy Roosevelt who used to say, "Tread lightly but carry a big stick". Perhaps the minister with his affability and geniality can use the art of gentle persuasion. The big stick is legislation. However, I suggest it is in the best traditions of the party to which I have the honour to belong that over the years it has encouraged free enterprise or private enterprise, whichever you wish to call it. It has maintained the incentives and the virility of private enterprise while at the same time seeing to it that the fruits of production and the resources developed by private enterprise were used in large measure for the welfare of the people of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member answer a question. Under the former Liberal administration Frank McMahon of Calgary made $5 million out of the trans-Canada pipe line. I was wondering whether those fruits were shared by the people of Alberta.

Mr. Greene: I think that question can be answered very simply Any debt owing to this country and to the government has been fully repaid by that company with interest. I very much doubt whether the hon. member for Bow River would want that pipe line removed from western Canada. I think it has served a good purpose and created a lot of employment. I suggest that a company such as Algoma, which has spent very little money because the iron was already in the ground and did not cost much to develop, should be given some protection. They should be given a reasonable amount of time to develop it themselves. But if they will not do so, surely they should not be permitted to hold these resources in perpetuity for private profit at the expense of the people of Canada, who would benefit generally from the development of the resources, as well as at the expense of people living locally, who would gain employment and a better future were these resources developed.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I think it is in the best traditions of this party that resources such as this be developed within a reasonable time by private corporations; or alternatively, they should be compelled to sell to corporations who would develop such resources within a reasonable length of time.

Mr. Clancy: May I ask a question.

Mr. Greene: If you will let me finish I will answer any questions from now until 10.30.

Mr. Clancy: I want to know—

The Chairman: The hon. member is not prepared to yield the floor so he should be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. Greene: I urge that the minister take some action toward the development of this particular property in the interests of the people I represent, and formulate some policy whereby such resources cannot be tied up in perpetuity for profit at the expense of people. I think this party has always had the interests of the people ahead of the interests of profit, and I think it should continue to do so, at the same time giving a fair and equitable measure of protection to private interests who have developed these resources. I suggest, if the minister does these things, that when that mine at Calabogie is flourishing and working there, with high employment and the blue skies shining above, he will indeed have a memorial to his administration of the department of mines. In so doing I also suggest that in formulating a national policy with regard to our mineral resources which will to a reasonable degree protect the private developer while at the same time assuring that those resources will be used in the immediate future for the benefit of the people as a whole, if he can formulate that type of policy, there will be a memorial to him not only at Calabogie but in the history of this great country.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have always said in this house and elsewhere that I am a man of brevity. Tonight I will show my laconic brevity. I will only say how happy I am to have this opportunity to congratulate the minister. He is a man I have known for many years. As the hon. member who has just spoken has said, he is a man of affability, a man whose attitude in this house has always won for him a high regard and warm affection. I wish him well in his portfolio. I will not say how long I hope he will be there flourishing, but I do wish him well. He has always been a friend of mine and a sincere parliamentarian.

I am not an expert on mines. I am looking forward to hearing on this subject from my hon. friend from Bow River who knows the mining field as well as he knows the legal field. I want to commend one thing to the minister. In the province of Prince Edward Island where we derive our riches and greatness from our sterling people and wonderful soil, and where we have very little by way of minerals—we do not have many oil wells, or Kitimats, or Ungavas—we have developed a young industry to which I should like the minister to give his special attention and that is the peat moss industry in the constituency of the Solicitor General. I have recently become impressed by the potential of this new industry. I thought, at one time, it would come within the responsibility of the Department of Agriculture. At another time I thought it would come under the department of northern affairs. But I have now been truly informed that it is a responsibility of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I ask him to lend the good offices of his department to this industry, which could mean so much for my province where we have very little at our disposal with respect to more mundane mineral wealth. I look forward to the co-operation of the department, by way of research assistance and more tangible assistance, in developments which will mean much in the economic life of Prince Edward Island.

That is all I have to say, except that I am happy to raise such an important subject in such a hopeful and optimistic field of endeavour with a minister of whom I am more hopeful and optimistic than of some of his colleagues.

Mr. Leboe: I hope I shall be even more brief than the speaker who preceded me, if only to show him there are people who can be more brief than he. Besides, there is not too much to be said in connection with this particular department.

However, I should like to answer some remarks made by the hon. member for Renfrew South in connection with the attitude—he was almost ready to term it a dog-in-the-manger attitude—taken by people who were holding resources and not using them. There are two things he should know. In British Columbia they have legislation in operation which prevents this sort of thing happening. The other thing we should bear in mind in considering this question is the possibility of markets. There must be markets for any commodities we intend to produce; otherwise, what is the point of producing them?

There are great volumes of minerals present in the province of British Columbia. There certainly is no market at this time for the great volume which could be produced in that province. We have a tremendous potential. British Columbia is the province of the future in this respect, although there are many good mines in production at the present time. We have scarcely scratched the surface in British Columbia as yet.

I should like to ask the minister if he could dig up some figures. First, I should like to congratulate him on his appointment to office. I have known the hon. gentleman for a good many years now. I felt that when he was the financial critic he used to dig in pretty deep and, as a miner, possibly he will get in even deeper. I should like to ask him if he can dig up some figures on power production from coal in Wabamun, Alberta. Before this plant was built there was discussion in the house as to whether it would be cheaper to run it on coal or natural gas. I understand that the plant has converted to coal, and I would be interested in any figures the minister may have in this connection.

I would also be interested if he could tell us anything about the progress of the development of equipment designed to make economic use of coal for firing locomotives, particularly on railways. I believe this was a motor of the turbine type to be used for developing power from coal burned almost as a gas. There is another question I have in mind. I hear many complaints as I travel among the farmers of western Canada, more particularly in my own area, in connection with fertilizer. Fertilizer is a by-product of the mines in many cases and I am wondering whether or not the minister can tell us if there is a monopoly in the fertilizer industry and, if so, whether anything can be done to change that position. There seems to be a general feeling among the farmers that there is a monopoly in this industry. It has been said that though at one time fertilizer was a by-product which was thrown away it has become one of the most valuable products of the mining industry.

I have nothing more to say, though I may have some questions to ask on the estimates when they come before us in detail, should I happen to be here when they are before the committee. This is not always possible.

Mr. Dinsdale: I want first of all to join with my colleague, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, in wishing the new minister well as he takes over the responsibilities of this department and particularly as he presents these estimates to the committee for the first time.

I was pleased to hear the minister acknowledge that the estimates we are now discussing are those prepared by the former administration. I think this has made it possible to shorten the discussion considerably tonight. I am also pleased to hear him say that they are being presented without any major changes. This, it seems to me, is typical of a minister with whom I have had friendly relations over the past number of years. I think it is encouraging to those who are interested in the activities of the department to know that the work so well begun is going forward under his direction. I should also like to say that I think the minister is wise in taking this stand. There are other departments of government which have endeavoured to blaze new trails since the change of administration last April, with the result that in many instances there has had to be some retracing of steps. The policies and programs that were vigorously promoted by the government of the present Leader of the Opposition have turned out, upon closer analysis and study, to have been in the best interests of the Canadian economy.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has indicated, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys plays a very important part in the over-all programs of development and research in this country. Indeed, there can be no satisfactory development unless there is adequate research. Reference has already been made to the quality of the officials who serve in this important department. This is the first opportunity we have had to discuss the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys since the highly respected former deputy minister, Dr. Marc Boyer, passed away, and I should like to pay my tribute to the leadership he gave the department over a number of years. My direct association with Dr. Boyer was of rather short duration because back in 1960 I had the responsibility for this department for a short period of only two months.

Mr. Benidickson: As acting minister.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. I was not only impressed by the quality of Dr. Boyer but of all those who were associated with him. This is to be expected, I suppose, from a department whose personnel are made up largely of scientists. This is one of the unique government departments in this respect where the officials are pure scientists, not political scientists, not political artists but pure scientists who are dedicated to the pursuit of fundamental and basic research. I shall always remember carrying the responsibility for presenting the estimates of the department during that period and depending almost entirely upon those dedicated and well qualified men.

There is only one point I wish to make as I take part in this brief discussion. I wish to emphasize the importance of co-ordination and co-operation in connection with the activities of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. In his speech a few moments ago the hon. member for Renfrew South skirted around this point when he was making an appeal for some activity with regard to Calabogie. The only way that the federal Department of Mines and Technical Surveys can have any influence in regard to a problem of that kind is by ensuring that there is the closest possible co-operation with the provincial government. As we know, resources, except in the area north of 60, are the responsibility of the provincial governments. If we are going to ensure a rationalized program of national development in the resource area, it can only be achieved as the federal government and the provincial governments are willing to work together.

This afternoon I listened to a statement of the hon. member for Renfrew South with respect to another matter, and at that time he rather downgraded the importance of the new concept of co-operative federalism that was promoted with enthusiasm by the former administration. I should like to point out to the hon. member that if he wishes to have an intelligent and comprehensive resource program it can only be achieved to the extent that Ottawa is willing to work with the provinces. The machinery has already been established through the resource ministers council, and I would imagine that this new agency, which is carrying forward with such enthusiasm the new concept of co-operative federalism, would be glad to take under consideration the particular problem outlined by the hon. member for Renfrew South.

As the former minister of northern affairs and national resources I should also like to express appreciation for the close co-operation that department has enjoyed with the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. Indeed, the program of northern development could not go forward otherwise. It could not have made the tremendous and impresive advances that have been made in recent years were it not for the increased tempo of geophysical, geographical, geological and oceanographic research that has been undertaken by this important department.

The thought has been expressed from time to time that Canadians today have less pioneering spirit and are not willing to undergo the hardships involved in mastering the great land mass that we have inherited. This certainly does not apply to the officials of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys who have gone into the north, the high Arctic and the archipelago. They have been carrying out research there under difficult and in some instances adverse weather conditions. I think the progress that has been made in the obtaining of information through research has been worthy of the pioneering that was done by such intrepid early northern explorers as the well known Stefansson, for example. In many instances these men have been young men.

The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has been working together with the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys in other respects as well. The department of northern affairs realizing that the economy of the north depends upon the discovery, exploitation and development of mineral resources, is establishing at the present time a research co-ordination centre at Inuvik on the Arctic shore, and I am sure this will provide excellent facilities for the research programs now being carried on by the department under discussion at the present time. The department of northern affairs also encourages prospecting for minerals by prospectors' assistance programs as well as by improving the regulations.

But the one important point I should like to make is to encourage the minister. He indicated in his opening remarks that he intends to carry on in all respects the important research projects that are already under way. If I may, I should like to point to one of these as perhaps being most significant. I would draw his attention to the aerial magnetometer survey that is under way now in the northern part of the province as well as in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory. It is a ten-year program which will cost something like $18 million. I spoke in these terms last week when we had the estimates of the department of northern affairs before us. From time to time, we have heard rumblings from the government benches that there is a desire to withdraw from these joint programs. This viewpoint has been expressed in particular by the President of the Privy Council.

I would certainly hope, Mr. Chairman, that this joint program of magnetometer research that is being carried on in all of the provinces having northern regions is not one of those programs from which it is intended to withdraw. As I have pointed out, we can only proceed to develop and expand our geography as we are willing to work in the closest possible co-operation with the provinces. I hope the machinery that is already set up under the program of co-operative federalism will continue in this, as well as other areas, and that the government, having the responsibility for administration, is willing to continue the program that has been so well begun.

These are the few remarks I should like to make at this time, Mr. Chairman. I close by once again expressing appreciation for the conciliatory and co-operative note that has been established in the discussions by the new minister. I am sure that if he will adopt that same attitude within the privy council we need have no uncertainty concerning the continuing progress of the work of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am happy in rising to speak this evening to see that there are six members of the press in the press gallery. I am interested, too, in noting that there is a new commentator in the press gallery.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the press gallery.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Herridge: Now, I should like to continue in a serious vein. I am rising to speak briefly and when I say briefly I mean briefly. I have listened with interest to a number of speeches that have been made this evening. The minister, after very excellent service to the country in time of war, arrived in this house in 1945. I think we arrived here as a result of the same election. I have known him ever since he has become a member of the parliament of Canada, and to become a member of the cabinet is no mean honour. I wish him every success in all that he undertakes in fulfilling his duties as minister in charge of this department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these estimates are not as glamorous as some with which we deal because this department is largely concerned with scientific and technical affairs. This does not mean it is not a very important department. I would be inclined to say that of all the departments this is the silent service. It renders a great service to this country, and we hear very little about it. I would criticize them to some extent in this respect because they are not as keen on using the press to advertise their own wares as some other departments are.

I rise to ask the minister a question or two and deal with a matter I have mentioned on a number of occasions through the years on these estimates. First, when the minister replies to the remarks which are made on this item, I should like him to inform the house how the programs that are undertaken by the various branches of this department are decided upon. This has always interested me and I have been asked to make this inquiry as the result of interest on the part of others. Second, I wish him to inform the house of the developments in connection with the studies in the Arctic. Some years ago there was a proposal made in a conference in Montreal, in 1961 I think, that there might be mutual studies made in the Arctic with scientists from the U.S.S.R. I wonder if there has been any development in that respect.

I should like now to raise the question that I particularly wanted to mention, that is the provision for the Canadian people of national daylight saving time as the result of federal-provincial co-operative agreement. In wartime, of course, the federal government had complete jurisdiction in this respect as a result of emergency circumstances. However, it seems a completely foolish thing, in my opinion and in the opinion of a good number of persons with whom I have discussed this matter, for us to have daylight saving at various times in various provinces throughout Canada. I think it would be to the great advantage of Canadians generally and to the travelling public if this matter could be brought up by the minister at a dominion-provincial conference. This matter is related to the dominion observatory item which comes under the jurisdiction of the minister. There could be an agreement between the federal government and the provinces so that we would have daylight saving established in Canada on the same day right throughout the country. I do suggest to the minister that serious consideration should be given to this technical matter. We have continued this policy of one province declaring daylight saving time on one date and another one on another date, to the inconvenience of the travelling public. I suggest that this is something upon which agreement should be easily reached.

The other matter I wanted to mention was that this department's public relations are not as good as they should be. I am not blaming the officials in the department, or the minister. A large number of Canadians are not aware of the work that is being done by this department, to which reference was made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I endorse what he said about the work of this department. It is surprising how few people outside of those interested in mining and certain scientific studies, know about the work of this department. I suggest there could be some consideration given to informing the Canadian people generally about the work done by this department. There are a lot of people who do not realize the services that can be provided by this department, and I am thinking particularly with regard to the purchase of maps and reports on particular subjects.

I think some consideration should be given either to the use of press releases or the use of officials addressing local organizations, particularly those officials concerned with surveys in certain areas. This would be an excellent recess hobby for the parliamentary assistant. He could go around to the various organizations and speak about the work of this department. I think more should be done in that respect because we really could not carry on our plans for the future development of this country, for its settlement and things of that sort, without the basic studies made by various branches of this department. I just make those two or three suggestions and urge the minister to give them some consideration.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to say a few words in reference to the estimates before the committee, particularly in view of the fact that we in Alberta feel we have about one eighth of the coal supply of the whole world, and have other resources that could be mined.

Like other speakers I would like to say something in reference to the minister himself. Some of my friends urge me to be brief, and I will be brief. In fact I think I should be brief, because when I look around this chamber, particularly on the opposite side and also over on this side, it seems to me this is the way to get estimates through, in view of the number of empty seats. They speak for themselves.

The minister was one of the first members of parliament I met when I was first elected. In a kindly manner he showed me how to get to my office, what to do, and a few other things. It is that little touch of humanity that endears him not only to his own party but to the whole house. I have always been most happy that I have not been a Conservative, or a member of any other party, running in his constituency against him, because I know how difficult it must be to get elected in a contest with a man so kindly as he.

Now, I shall deal with the estimates and I have some recommendations to make. I have spoken about the coal mining industry on several occasions. There are three particular types of coal, three particular coal mining areas in the Bow River constituency. In the mountains there is found the anthracite coal which is marketed, shipped and exported to Japan. We have the bituminous coal in the foothills and the subbituminous, or soft domestic coal at Drumheller.

One of the things that has helped the coal industry was the setting up in years gone by of the coal board. The industry works in conjunction with that board and I have one recommendation to make in connection with it. It has been made to other ministers, and even to our minister at the time when this party formed the government, and it is that one of the members of the united mine workers of America from western Canada should be appointed to sit on the coal board with its present members.

I believe at one time there were negotiations in the department in this regard. After all, in a day when we have such relations between management and labour, when they must work harmoniously together to be successful, this would be one way to make this industry a success, and I strongly recommend the appointment of one member from the united mine workers of America from western Canada to the coal board.

I would like to mention some of the difficulties affecting the coal industry of western Canada, and in particular the industry in Bow River. As the minister is well aware, and he has been in this house longer than I, the coal industry has run into serious competition with the petroleum industry in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. At one time large quantities of coal were used by the railroads, and as domestic fuel on the farms and in the urban centres. Today it has been supplanted by natural gas, petroleum or other by-products and as a result the industry has been, to put it midly, dislocated and disturbed.

Alberta boasts of being one of the richest provinces in Canada, but there are areas in that province in which the most dire poverty exists. I have said this before and I want to emphasize it again. These miners were just as great pioneers as the farmers and other people who came to western Canada. They went great distances underground, at the risk of their lives, to mine coal so that the other pioneers as they developed western Canada had the use of that resource, particularly during the long winters, in their development work.

I have said to the Minister of Justice, to the minister of northern affairs and to other ministers, that in this welfare state, about which sometimes I have a lot to say, many basic welfare programs do not apply to the miner who has been unemployed for a long time. He is usually a man aged about 45, 50 or 55 years and he becomes unemployed long before he qualifies for old age security. He has no chance to get other kinds of employment. As a result of his long employment he cannot get unemployment insurance, and social welfare is not sufficient to maintain his family in dignity.

With a great sense of hospitality I invite the minister—and I trust it will be soon—to visit that area of the Drumheller valley which is rich in farmland, but very poor so far as mining is concerned. I invite him to visit such towns as Wayne, Rosedale, Macmine and Newcastle, which I might describe as lit up cemeteries. There are people living there in what might be called hovels, with no basis of income whatsoever because, as I have said and I am going to repeat, they have no unemployment insurance and have very little social welfare.

One might ask, why do they not leave these areas? Well, if they leave, they leave what little capital they have created, their homes and other buildings, and they are only fitted and trained for one particular vocation, and that is mining.

I have not the figures before me, but I have quoted them often enough and I am sure I will give them correctly. Some time just after the last war there were 26 mines open in that area, employing more than 2,000 men. Today I believe there are three mines left in that area and I am given to understand—and this is no criticism of the Liberal government because I am certain it would have happened even if the Conservatives had been in power—another mine is about to close. This is part of the evolution and development of other energy sources, but as a result the mines now employ only about 180 men, and when this mine closes there will be only 100 employed.

I do not know how many of the 2,000 original miners are still in that area, but as I say, as one drives through these places they are like lit up cemeteries. After leaving that mining area one can then drive into the farm region of Bow River and Acadia, which is represented by my hon. friend behind me, and these have some of the richest agricultural land anywhere in western Canada.

Yet there is this small area crowded with people living in poverty. One can look at all that is being done for the agricultural industry. Every one of us has supported the steps taken to help it, but now the time has come to do something to help these people. Nothing has been done for them provincially. I am not criticizing the provincial government in that regard, and decidedly nothing definite has been done federally to assist them.

A lot of these people came to that area during the last world war. There was a demand for the type of fuel produced in it, and it was needed for the war effort. Men were brought from Nova Scotia and other coal mining areas to Drumheller and dumped there, but when the mines folded the men were left unemployed. They need some definite plan of assistance to help them in reference to the plight in which they now find themselves.

Of course during the last few years we have found a new market for anthracite coal. The subvention on anthracite was increased to $4.50 a ton, and as a result in one year we were able to export 700,000 tons to Japan. I believe that figure was duplicated in another year, and the export of it is still continuing. There is no doubt that many of those miners, situated in what we call the Drumheller area, moved to Canmore, Alberta, but as I pointed out there is a saturation point, and there are only so many of those people who can be moved and can be employed by coal operators in the Canmore area. We have a new minister of this department and I ask him as earnestly as I can to find some plan to help these people. I have said once before in this house that if I never did anything as a member of parliament, if I never made any contribution at all to my country, and I could make one contribution in being partly responsible for these people receiving help from any Canadian government, I would feel I had made a real contribution as a member of this house.

While I am dealing with the competition that exists in petroleum and natural gas, I would point out that there is this type of thing to consider. At one time many of the natural gas wells—and I see the hon. member for Coast-Capilano on the other side of the chamber, who is well aware of this subject and appreciates what I am saying—were found when they were drilling for oil, and the wells were capped. We had the Borden report. We found that in the province of Alberta alone we had proven reserves of 23.7 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. This was not estimated; it was proven. We needed for Canada's needs in the foreseeable future, not only for domestic needs, projecting it over 30 years, an average of 12 billion cubic feet per year. After the report and after the energy board was set up, for the first time in Canada we started to export natural gas.

Practically every urban centre in Alberta, and even many farms in that province, is today heated by natural gas. These farms used to use domestic coal. Those that are not near a gas pipe line are today using other by-products of the petroleum industry. Therefore the market for soft fuels throughout western Canada has gone. They are in competition with natural gas and petroleum. That competition is so great that it has put operators out of business; and when business goes, there are no jobs. I have spoken to these people many times. They belong to a union, and they sometimes had very radical ideas. I have pointed out to them—and I am sure hon. members of all parties will agree with me on this—that unless the operators themselves are able to show a profit, there cannot be jobs for them. They now appreciate the fact that as the operation disappears, so employment disappears. I do not want to emphasize this, but once again I would ask the minister to do something to help these people. I saw him making a note in his usual kindly manner and know he will give consideration to my request. I sincerely hope that a member of the united mine workers of America from western Canada will, for the first time in Canada, be appointed to the coal board so these people can express their ideas about the industry and their ideas as far as their relationships with management are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to turn to one other aspect of this question for a few moments. I have only two points to discuss tonight. I shall now deal with the question of the north. I say this again in a kindly way: There are some people in the house who used to scoff at the previous government when we talked about the vision of the north. I am not one of those who believe that the first government to ever get people to go to the north or industry to become interested in the north was a Conservative government, but I think even the present Liberals will accept—they may accept it because it would have happened anyway—that there has certainly been great development in the north. Whatever way you look at it, that is the fact.

I have here a map of Canada, and particularly a map of our northern area. I want to ask one serious question. I think the minister or the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources should take a serious look at this question. I was a member of the mines committee in 1958-59 when that committee considered this very subject. I recall asking one question in that committee, "Where is the border of northern Canada?" I am sure that there is not an oceanographer or any other kind of scientist up there who can say we could draw a line tonight between what might belong to a foreign state and what might belong to Canada in that area. This is an important matter. When the oceanographers and hydrographers came before the committee and were asked certain questions in reference to their work, we found out—perhaps there has been an improvement in this situation—that at that time their salary was less than that of a topnotch stenographer in a good oil company in the city of Calgary. How can we expect to attract people to the civil service to undertake these important scientific jobs if we do not pay the salary they are worth? Some of them were at university for as long as 10 or 12 years and then had practical experience of three or four years. At that time I think we had two oceanographers working in the department. Consider this in relation to the size of northern Canada. I think we had two other scientists working in reference to the boundaries. The committee will appreciate how inadequate this is compared to the size of northern Canada.

My second suggestion is this. If we have not the financial resources to complete the vision that we have, whoever created it, for the development of the north—and I think we made a great contribution in that regard: perhaps I am prejudiced, but I think we did —we should make some kind of deal with our friends outside the iron curtain, to make certain that we develop the north to such an extent that we push back those boundaries in order that we on this side of the iron curtain control the majority of the northern hemisphere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: We have done quite well, when you think of it. When you look at the map, you find we have now started to drill wells as far north as Banks island and Bathurst island, and there is some development going on in Ellesmere island. We know there is some development going on by the Americans under that part which is called the ice shield; they are going under this area in submarines. But we should work in conjunction with these people, because this is really the northern boundary as far as Canada is concerned. The more we develop it, the further north we push industry, the further our borders will extend to the north.

Most of us believe that we own all the north, but those foreign countries which have started development on the islands in this northern area will not be pushed out in the near future because we get into the niceties of an argument or set up an international commission that says, "This is Canada's land; you should not have drilled these wells". I believe—and I have the figures here—that the total potential world development at the present time, of known crude petroleum, is 273 billion barrels. Of these 273 billion barrels of known crude petroleum, we in Alberta have projected reserves of 5 billion barrels. It is believed that there are probably 100 billion barrels of crude petroleum which could be developed in the far north. I say that, now we have started this development in the north, let us not allow it to lag. I recall that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, the former minister of northern affairs and national resources, endeavoured to sell their cabinet on the development of the north and did a good job in the vision of developing that part of our country. Let us keep that development going, because this does not only mean development in the northern part of Canada; it means a great deal to the whole of Canada. When these industries are developed it will mean what eastern industrial centres mean to western Canada in relation to their industrial products; because they are the manufacturers, they are the ones who sell the commodities being developed from these resources. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this vision should be carried on, that this development should be carried on and encouraged.

I was rather amused to hear my hon. friend talk about their sharing the riches. In that connection I just wish to point this out. Many of us have always accepted the idea, except a few who seem to be diminishing in number day by day—the intellectual type of socialism does not seem to be around anymore, or the ones who seem to think they are real socialists do not seem to be around anymore—that things can be done better under free enterprise. However, you have only to look at what the Borden report says—although I will not name the trans-Canada pipe line—about sharing the riches. I think free enterprise is everyone having the same opportunity to compete. I recall particularly in one place the Borden report stated that one man made a capital gain out of receiving shares—he was an executive of a crown company at that time—worth $1,400,000, and still got 10,000 shares in another company at $8, which at the time he took the certificates were worth about $34.50. If that is the kind of free enterprise we are talking about, I am sure it is not the kind the hon. member for Renfrew South was talking about. Free enterprise means that all people have the opportunity to go in and develop.

I raised this question on the budget debate when special tax rights were given to certain pipe line companies. I said that if special privileges and taxes were given to pipe line companies to drill a hole for petroleum in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba or in the north, why could they not be given to any company or any syndicate that wished to pour money into it and explore for petroleum in the north or on the prairies? I was told that this would be soliciting business for people who wanted to get rich and live in suburban areas. Surely, if it is fair for the pipe line companies to have that kind of tax exemption, it would be fair for members sitting across from me now, who are smiling, to form a syndicate and put our money in. And if it was a dry hole, why should we not get exemption on our tax forms, the same as a pipe line company? It is that kind of thing that will develop the country. But every time we give out special privileges we are putting hobbles on those people who would develop the country.

An hon. Member: What about M.P.'s selling oil stocks?

Mr. Woolliams: I hear someone talking about M.P.'s selling oil stocks. The most refreshing thing I heard this evening was the hon. gentleman talking about free enterprise in such glowing terms that I knew we had won him over after all. He used to speak only in socialistic terms when I first came here. He was one of the intellectual, honest socialists. Either his philosophy has faded or he finds it more popular to follow along with free enterprise. I think that is the best answer I can give to that interruption.

The best comparison is this, that you only have to compare the economy of the province of Alberta with that of Saskatchewan to have the answer. There is one thing which I will say about this government. They say more oil; but I was glad to have the question put to me. What happened to the oil rigs in 1944 when the socialists took over? They left Saskatchewan and went to an economic climate where they could do business. When they found oil they at least knew they could share it and the royalties with the government. Saskatchewan had a good plan, one of the finest in the world. They were told to risk their capital and to do the research with their seismographs, and all the rest of it. They were told: "You build a well and we'll own the oil". But that was not too appealing to the average Canadian and the average American, so they left for Alberta. Now my good friends, with that kind of program, say to me: "Why have you so much petroleum in the province of Alberta?" I pay that government the greatest compliment I can pay them. During the years they were in office they created the proper economic climate for the development of the province, which I think accounts for the reason they are rich today, whereas in mines and resources Saskatchewan is still struggling.

I recall reading in Maclean's magazine some years ago about the "hottest square mile in the world". I did not know what they were talking about, but they were talking about uranium. That uranium was mined by a crown corporation. The hottest square mile in the world in 1947 was the square mile that brought in Leduc No. 1 which developed the petroleum which made the province of Alberta rich. The proper economic climate was there. Some people tell me that the backbenchers of the Liberal party today are all left-wingers. Then someone else whispers that they are all right-wingers. But whichever it is, I hope they influence their government to stay on the trail of free enterprise, because without it another group of people will take over control. What happened in Saskatchewan could happen throughout Canada, and I hope that will not be the plaque left with the Liberals of today. I trust that there are enough free enterprisers left over on that side to make certain that their left-wingers do not get control.

Mr. Kindt: I should like to add a few words to the discussion, but I shall be very brief. First of all I want to add a word to those of others concerning the new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I have known him ever since I became a member of the house and I have the greatest personal admiration for him. I wish him every success as minister during the length of time he holds that office. I also wish to pay another compliment to him. It was my good fortune to recommend to the former government that we start subventions on coal shipments to Japan. That program has worked out very successfully, and over the past five years of operation has gradually grown. The operators have been feeling their way. Tests have been made as to the value of coal for metallurgical purposes, and apparently it is excellent when mixed with Japanese coal. Therefore Japanese processors have come back year after year with new contracts for our coal.

In order that our mine operators could operate efficiently it became evident that we should give them a longer period in which to adjust their contracts and also solicit new business. We had meeting after meeting among the operators on that very point, as well as among the miners. I suggested that the subsidy on coal to Japan should be extended by at least five years so that these operators would be able to do an efficient job of planning. I am pleased to see that the present minister has extended that subvention for a five-year term. It is a very good move.

Mr. Benidickson: We intend to.

Mr. Kindt: I understood it had been.

Mr. Benidickson: No, it is promised. We need legislation to do it.

Mr. Kindt: I see. Your intention is to do so. Thank you. I hope it will be extended, because these people need that additional time in order to make their plans for the future. The Crowsnest pass area has recently been designated as a slow growth area. It is the only area in Alberta which has been so designated and any help which the minister can give to assist it by way of new industries or coal subventions or the development of projects which would utilize coal, natural gas, iron ore, or forest products which are so abundant in this area would go a long way toward providing jobs for the people there. Such assistance is needed in the development of that district.

I should like to say to the minister in closing that we would like him to come out and visit us. I can say personally I would be glad to take him in my car down to the Crowsnest area and if it happens to be the shooting season, I can guarantee him some good shooting down on my place.

Mr. Benidickson: You would be a good companion.

Mr. Knowles: Who is going to shoot whom?

Mr. Kindt: I do appreciate the minister's efforts in extending this subvention on coal and I will certainly support the measure when he brings it to the floor of the house.

Mr. Byrne: I wonder if the committee would bear with me for a few moments. I am one of those members who have been associated with the present minister since 1949—that is, with some breaks, although I have kept in touch with him throughout all those years. I want to add my congratulations on his appointment. I am not going to suppose he will do a good job. I know he is doing a good job, judging by actions he has already taken.

I think, also, that in view of the fact that I am perhaps the only member registered as a miner in the Parliamentary Guide, it would be appropriate for me to say just a few words. The hon. member for Macleod mentioned the subsidy on coal shipments to Japan. I wish to say this has been a very successful operation. On June 26 the minister did announce that the coal subvention policy would be continued for five years. On that understanding the coal operators in the pass area have already signed a three-year agreement. Previously the agreement had been on a one-year basis. The operators have now signed a three year agreement for 600,000 tons, in this particular area alone. The contract provides, also, that they may increase this amount by 100,000 tons a year, which would make it 800,000 tons from the Crowsnest pass area. I would hope to have the support of members of this committee in urging upon the government the desirability of raising the ceiling upon which they are prepared to pay this subsidy. These shipments are having an admirable effect on the economy of British Columbia generally, because of the number of jobs they generate in addition to the employment in the mines themselves. So I hope a policy of increasing the ceiling on the amount of coal which may be shipped under the terms of the subvention will be adopted.

The hon. member for Macleod has said the Crowsnest pass area is the only area in Alberta which has been designated as a slow growth area. I want to remind the committee that it includes a portion of British Columbia which is being served by the Blairmore unemployment insurance office, so Fernie, Natal and Michel are towns which are receiving assistance because of this subvention.

That is all I want to say on that subject. As a miner, I am also connected with a company which produces fertilizer and I wish to assure the hon. member for Cariboo that the fertilizer industry is not a monopoly. It is one of the most highly competitive industries that exists today. There is some connection between the fertilizer industry and the mining industry, but not in every respect. A great deal of fertilizer is produced on the prairies through using natural gas. The industry is by far and away the least monopolistic in Canada today. I feel the department itself is doing an excellent job. There is one industry in my riding to which it has directed a great deal of attention. We have hundreds of millions of tons of iron which has already been mined, and which is now stockpiled in the form of concentrates ready to be made into steel. It was with the assistance of the department, after it had conducted a number of tests and experiments, that we finally developed a steel which could be produced from this ore. It is the beginning of a great steel industry in this area. It might well become the the Pittsburgh of Canada. I wish to thank the department for its assistance. I just thought that because I am a miner I should say a few words on these estimates.

Mr. Bigg: The great district of Athabasca is one of the neglected areas of Canada and it is hard for me to understand why. We are worried today about the balance of international payments. I sincerely believe that if one resource in the Athabasca district alone were to be developed, its crude oil, we could largely take care of that whole problem.

The question of pipe lines causes many eyebrows to be raised. I do not intend to add my voice by raising any recriminations about pipe lines which have been built. I will only say it is high time we built a pipe line from Alberta to Montreal to carry crude oil. If that were done, and if we had protection for the market in Montreal, we could go into full time production of crude oil from the Athabasca tar sands. I can say that the known reserves in the tar sands in that area alone amount to more than 300 billion barrels of oil. So far they are completely untapped. If they were tapped we could supply the whole of the heavy industrial fuel oil market of eastern Canada. In order for this to be done it would not be enough to build a pipe line.

We must protect the market. This would mean placing restrictions on the importation of Venezuela crude.

There are not too many people today who are brave enough to face the oil combines of the world. Perhaps we can; I do not know. I would like to try. I see no reason at all why we cannot protect our markets in Canada, as well as other countries can protect theirs. It has been the policy not only of Conservative but of Liberal governments in Canada as well to protect our own local markets, and here we have a market for industrial fuel oil alone which would bring in several hundred million dollars to the exchequer of Canada, and the payrolls of our people.

The time is long overdue for the building of a crude oil pipe line from Alberta. If it cannot be built with private funds then it should be built with government funds because in this way we would be developing our own country. There is a great deal of talk about Canadianism, biculturalism and a square deal all round. If we got down to brass tacks and developed our country in the way it should be developed we would not have to worry about a square deal all round. We would have to bring in workers from all over the world to take up the slack. There would be no unemployment if we would only get down to developing our own resources and looking after our own markets.

I should like to close with a compliment to the department for their wonderful work in technical surveys. There are new developments in air surveys and I think that in the near future we will have a much clearer picture of what our resources in the north are. I think that parliament should vote almost a blank cheque to technical surveys so that they may show us what we have in our own country. When we know what we have we can take the logical steps for development.

I also want to pay my personal respects to the new minister. Although he is a senior member of the house he has always looked upon backbenchers like myself almost in a fatherly way, and we appreciate this. It is an example of the kind of comradeship we need throughout the house if we are going to develop our country in an efficient manner.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there are quite a number of items in connection with this department about which I wish to speak and some questions I wish to put to the minister. In northwestern Ontario at the present time, where mining is part of the basic economic structure, there is a certain amount of optimism due to the fact that the minister of mines of Ontario represents Port Arthur and right next door we have the federal Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys representing Kenora-Rainy River. If that were not enough, next door in Fort William we have the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works. So there is considerable optimism that with all this power, we will have some attention paid to our interests, particularly in the mining field.

The reason for this hopefulness, of course, stems from the fact that most of the people in our region in looking forward to the future have to recognize that the opportunities of expanding at all in the direction of value of product or in range or variety of product in the forest industries are quite limited, whereas the prospects in the mineral industries are much more open, not only on the basis of future discovery but also on the basis of what has been blocked out already. It is for that reason I want to bring to the attention of the minister publicly, not in a niggling or needling sense and not really to tell him something he does not know, some of the matters that are of interest in our area.

The first one is somewhat esoteric, and I put it forward to begin with since it does not involve a great deal of detail and really is a matter of optimism, I suppose, or idealism in connection with the mining industry. I should like to make an appeal to the minister to do something substantial for the prospectors in this country. I make the point to the minister that this particular department has been expanding its facilities and the kind of contribution it makes to delineating our mineral resources and mapping and surveying. Traditionally in their printed form the department's publications and contributions have been most useful. I know I once looked after a library in Port Arthur that had a set of the geological surveys from 1842 up to 1930 and it always amazed me. You never knew what time of the day or evening you would get a telephone call from a prospector wanting to look at these reports. As a matter of fact, it was the use of one report in connection with Manitouwadge that led to the interest, follow-up and discovery of Geco and the very large property there.

I get complaints repeatedly, particularly from the prospectors association in Port Arthur and Fort William, about the fact that there is really no provision at all for support by the federal government in this field. Yet more and more the kinds of publication and surveys that the department is turning out are getting to be beyond usefulness so far as many of the prospectors are concerned who are not supported by the big syndicates. It is quite apparent that the whole trend in this field is toward scientific elaboration. You have these very large corporations which, partly because of the tax incentives involved, spend a great deal of money exploring and following up all the leads that are opened up both by the federal mining service and the provincial mining service.

I am not quarrelling with this. Some of the results have been very good. But the opportunities for the ordinary person who is interested in mining, the kind of people who go to the provincial prospectors' schools, the kind of people who will go out after the big companies have been through an area with their magnetometer surveys and have made the other kinds of readings that are made from an aircraft, the kind of people who cover the area on the ground, are becoming more limited. In my view this is still a very important part of prospecting in this country. At the present time these people have no incentive at all. They have no subsidies of any kind. I believe the province of Saskatchewan has some kind of arrangement which I understand has been successful. I think there is some semi-arrangement in British Columbia and I believe there is one in prospect in Manitoba.

Mr. Dinsdale: Northern affairs too.

Mr. Fisher: Northern affairs, yes, but that is not in the provinces and it does not affect the part of the country in which I am interested. I think the most exciting thing the minister could do, and one which would make the memory of his period in this portfolio a happy one which would last for a long time, would be to introduce some kind of program—I am not talking about anything huge or extravagant—under which the federal government would contribute in association with the provincial government to the support of prospectors.

What is a prospector? It seems to me he is a man who will go out and search, search and search, always looking for the dream. I have a prospector friend who is 73. He lives alone. I would say that for nine months of the year, provided the weather permits, he is out prospecting. He is always looking for the mother lode, the big strike. A couple of times he thought he had it. A few years ago he thought he had something north of Armstrong that was going to be another Sudbury, but unfortunately it turned out to be just a single plug that came up.

But it is that kind of person we need. We have a great many prospectors in our part of the country who are in their 60's and 70's and who are beginning to fall away and we have not got young people in the 30's and 40's with the same incentive. I suggest there is a real field here for a certain kind of person that we produce in our bush country, people who do not have to have a great deal of technical education but who have the know-how, a sense of the bush and the lakes, a practical man's knowledge of rocks, and who can cover the countryside with an intensity that even the great big surveys cannot match. Before I call it 10.30 I should like to add that the minister could really make a contribution if he would get some kind of program under way in this field.

Mr. McNaught: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether we could have unanimous consent of the committee to sit for another few minutes. We have had a very thorough and a very good discussion, I might say, on the first item. I understand the hon. member for Port Arthur is the last speaker, and if we could sit a few minutes probably we would get the first item through.

Mr. Hamilton: We have been here for three and a half hours, and we have had a good discussion, but we would be glad to sit for another 15 minutes or so if we could get the estimates through.

Mr. Fisher: I call it 10.30, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hamilton: I wonder if we could have some indication from the acting house leader what the plans are for the early part of next week?

Mr. McNaught: On Monday we will consider the second reading stage of the act to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Act; then, we will consider the resolution preceding the amendments to the National Centennial Act. When that is disposed of, we will consider the resolution preceding the amendments to the Admiralty Act; then, the resolution preceding the Canadian National Railways Financing Act. If there is any time left, we will take the second reading stage of the act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and the second reading stage of the act to repeal the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act, 1939.

On Tuesday, we will consider the first three items I mentioned which have not been concluded and then, the three resolutions in the name of the Minister of Transport, namely item No. 16 on today's order paper, the railway grade crossing fund; item No. 17, the St. Lawrence Seaway Act and item No. 20, the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation Act. Then, if there is any time left, we will take the balance of the items not disposed of on Monday, but not necessarily in the order I gave them this evening.

It being twenty five minutes before eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, November 18, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

VACANCIES AMONG DIRECTORS, EXHIBITION CORPORATION

Question No. 1,338—Mr. Howard:

1. Since July 3, 1963, have any vacancies occurred on the board of directors of the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation?
2. In filling such vacancies what consideration, if any, was given to the appointment of persons of native Indian ancestry?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Three, Messrs. Paul Bienvenu, C. F. Carsley, and Harry E. Price.

2. Messrs. Bienvenu, Carsley and Price were replaced respectively by His Excellency Mr. Pierre Dupuy, ambassador, Mr. Robert F. Shaw, professional engineer and business executive, and Hon. George Hees, former minister of trade and commerce. In filling these vacancies the government considered that the incumbents, on account of their past experience, were eminently suited to meet the requirements of their functions with the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation.

*WORLD FAIR SITE

Question No. 1,349—Mr. Howard:

1. What is to be the site of the Canadian world exhibition?
2. When was the decision made to select this particular site, what is the authority therefor, and who made the said decision?

Mr. Badanai: 1. The site of the Canadian universal and international exhibition to be held in Montreal in 1967 will be on the island of Montreal and on or in the vicinity of Ile Ste. Helene, Ile Ronde, Ile Verte and Ile Notre Dame.

2. On March 28, 1963, and confirmed on May 12, 1963; an act to establish the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation as passed by the House of Commons on December 20, 1962; the Minister of Public Works in agreement with the city of Montreal and the government of the province of Quebec, and with the approval of the governor in council.

INTERDICTIONS UNDER LIQUOR ORDINANCE, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,371—Mr. Rheaume:

1. For each of the calendar years 1961, and 1962, how many persons in the N.W.T. were interdicted under the provisions of the liquor ordinance of the N.W.T., or any other ordinance, act or regulation?
2. Of the above, how many were interdicted in each year at the request or on the recommendation of (a) the R.C.M.P. (b) other federal or territorial officers?

Mr. Laing: The commissioner of the Northwest Territories informs as follows:

1. 1961, 23; 1962, 8.

2. (a) The R.C.M.P. advise as follows: 1961, 3; 1962, 1. (b) Territorial records do not provide this information; court records in Yellowknife indicate that five interdictions were made by the court after hearing recommendations from welfare officers during the period 1961-62.

WORLD FAIR PUBLICITY

Question No. 1,393—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What agency will be responsible for publicity concerning the 1967 world fair at Montreal?
2. What funds will be provided for such publicity?
3. Does the government intend to ask advertising agencies to submit tenders for the account?
4. Have special funds been provided to the Canadian tourist bureau in this regard and, if so, what is the amount of such funds?
5. How much money from the publicity budget of the world fair will be spent in (a) the United States, (b) Europe, and (c) elsewhere?
6. Will the civil service commission hold competitions for information and publicity officers in connection with the world fair?
7. Will the information or publicity responsibility be that of the government or the world fair corporation?

[Translation]

Mr. Badanai: 1. The following agencies have been entrusted by the directors of the Canadian World Fair Corporation with the publicity for the fair in Canada: Cockfield Brown and Company Limited; Agence Canadienne de Publicité Limitée; Desroches, Inkel, Poirier et Associès Inc.; Public and Industrial Relations Inc.; Monty Perger and Co. Inc.; McKim Advertising Limited; McConnell, Eastman and Company Limited; James Lovick and Co. Ltd.; Publicité Huot Limitée.

2. Estimates are being prepared.

3. The Canadian World Fair Corporation is responsible for the selection of the advertising agencies.

4. That matter does not fall under the jurisdiction of the Canadian World Fair Corporation.

5. Funds for promotion and public relations will be allocated for use in (a) the United States, (b) Europe and (c) elsewhere following an investigation now under way to establish the possible number of visitors.

6. Being a crown corporation, the Canadian World Fair Corporation does not come under the jurisdiction of the civil service commission.

7. Information and publicity services will fall directly under the Canadian World Fair Corporation.

DREDGING OPERATIONS, PICTOU ISLAND, N.S.

Question No. 1,507—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the government to carry out dredging operations at Pictou island, Nova Scotia, and, if so, when will this work be carried out?

Mr. Badanai: Yes; the work will be carried out during the 1964-65 fiscal year subject to the approval of funds by parliament.

TENDERS FOR RAILWAY MAINTENANCE, CAMP BORDEN

Question No. 1,526—Mr. Madill:

1. Has the government called for tenders for the maintenance of the government owned railway track in Camp Borden and, if so (a) were the tenders publicly advertised or were they called by invitation (b) did the terms of the tender call provide for (i) maintenance of road crossings (ii) snow removal at road crossings (iii) maintenance of culverts and drains (iv) weed killing (v) brush cutting (vi) fence maintenance?

2. If the above items do not form part of the proposed contract, who will provide these services?

3. What is the estimated cost of these services and were these services taken into consideration in the reply to question No. 956 when it was estimated that there would be an over-all saving of $3,049.16 annually?

Answer: 1. Yes, through the Toronto office of the Department of Defence Production, (a) by invitation, (b), (i), (ii), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), No.

2. As in the past, these services will be provided by 24 Wks Coy RCE.

3. It is estimated these services cost $1,000 annually. They were not taken into consideration when the over-all saving of $3,049.16 was estimated since under the tender call the track maintenance crew was not and will not be responsible for these services.

[Mr. Badanai.]

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, CADILLAC, QUE.

Question No. 1,578—Mr. Caouette:

Was a contract awarded for the construction of a post office in Cadillac, constituency of Villeneuve, and, if so (a) who were the tenderers (b) what was the amount of each tender (c) to whom was the contract awarded?

[Translation]

Mr. Badanai: No.

(a), (b) and (c)—N/A.

[Text]

HOSTESSES EMPLOYED BY T.C.A.

Question No. 1,579—Mr. Caouette:

How many air hostesses were employed by Trans-Canada Air Lines since June, 1962, and of these, how many were (a) English speaking (b) French speaking (c) fully bilingual?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advise that the company has no employment category of "air hostess" but that there is a category of "cabin attendants" which include stewardesses and pursers. In this category since June, 1962, the number employed total 95, all of whom spoke and understood English. Of these 53 spoke and understood French and English.

Question No. 1,611—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the percentage of families borrowing under N.H.A. in 1962 in the income group below $3,000?
2. What is the percentage of all Canadian families in that income category?

Answer: 1. 0.03 per cent.

2. Data for 1962 are not available. For 1961 the percentage for non-farm families was 22 per cent.

Questions

LEASE OF SPACE, FULLER BUILDING, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,620—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Has the Department of Public Works entered into an agreement to lease or rent space in the Fuller building, Slater street, Ottawa?
2. If so, how much and at what rate?
3. For what purpose is the space intended?
4. Were rates sought for alternative space?
5. From what firms?
6. What were their quoted rental rates per square foot?

Mr. Badanai: 1. It is understood that this question refers to the MacDonald building on Slater street in which case the answer is yes. A formal lease has not yet been executed although a commitment to enter into a lease has been made.

2. 96,420 sq. ft. at $384,000 per annum.

3. To provide accommodation for part of the departments of defence production and industry by January, 1964.

4. Yes, but there was no alternative which would have provided the space required at the time required.

5. Answered by 4.

6. Answered by 4.

DEEP SEA FACILITIES, PORT MOODY, B.C.

Question No. 1,628—Mr. Douglas:

Has the government any plans for the development of deep sea facilities at Port Moody and, if so, what are they, and has this information been made known to the municipal authorities?

Mr. McIlraith: Plans for the development of harbour facilities at Port Moody will have to be considered in the plans for general development of Vancouver harbour which will be studied by the Vancouver harbour land use committee.

NORTH SHORE HARBOUR DEVELOPMENT, VANCOUVER

Question No. 1,629—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the government any plans for the development of the north shore of Vancouver harbour and, if so, what are they, and has this information been made known to the local municipalities?
2. Has consideration been given to the establishment of an independent board of Vancouver harbour commissioners and, if so, what is the result of such consideration?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. A Vancouver harbour land use committee has been formed for the purpose of setting up a long term plan for the optimum use of land and waterlots within the limits of Vancouver harbour. Such limits, of course, include the north shore. The committee's functions will be advisory and plans prepared by the committee will show, for the guidance of municipal, provincial and federal authorities and property owners within the limits of Vancouver harbour, a general type of use to be made of the area. The committee will consist of representatives of municipal, provincial and federal authorities and business organizations having an interest in the matter.

2. As this relates to a matter of government policy any announcement will be made in the usual manner.

*INCREASED WELFARE PAYMENTS—REPRESENTATIONS BY MANITOBA

Question No. 1,633—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Has the government of Canada received representations from the government of Manitoba requesting that the old age assistance, blind and disabled persons allowance be brought into line with the recent $10 increase in old age security payments and, if so, what is the nature of the representation?

2. What reply has been made to the government of Manitoba?

Mr. Haidasz: 1. and 2. (a) Copies of the following resolution passed by the legislation of Manitoba on May 6, 1963, were received; that this house request the government to petition the federal government for an increase for old age and blind pensioners in the province from $65 on the basis of need to $75 per month or higher.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare replied to the hon. minister of welfare of Manitoba on May 27 referring to the announcements of welfare measures which the federal government would be submitting to parliament, and indicating that while she could not say at that time what consideration might be given to the two acts referred to in the resolution, provision for elderly and blind persons was a matter in which this government would always maintain a deep and sympathetic interest.

(b) A letter dated September 4 was received from the Hon. Duff Roblin acknowledging a letter from the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning the federal-provincial conference on the Canada pension plan. Mr. Roblin repeated that Manitoba was prepared to implement now its share of the associated increases that will necessarily have to be made in old age assistance, blind and disability pension programs.

Since this was a letter of acknowledgment and since the matter was to be discussed in relation to the Canada pension plan at the conference a few days later, no reply was made.

(c) A telegram was received on October 31 from the hon. the minister of welfare of Manitoba asking consideration of the implementation of changes necessary for an immediate increase of $10 per month in old age assistance, blind and disabled allowances.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare replied on November 1 indicating that this is one of the matters which will be discussed at the federal-provincial conference later this month.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

*CHANNEL DREDGING, LAKE WINNIPEGOSIS

Question No. 1,647—Mr. Forbes:

What has been the total cost of clearing channels by dredging on lake Winnipegosis for each of the years 1956 to 1963 inclusive?

Mr. Badanai: The total operating costs to maintain dredging services on lake Winnipegosis from 1956-1963 have been as follows: 1956-57, $41,187; 1957-58, $36,462; 1958-59, $41,233; 1959-60, $39,247; 1960-61, $54,122; 1961-62, $47,974; 1962-63, $47,393.

BREAKWATER REPAIRS, WEST ARICHAT, N.S.

Question No. 1,650—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. How much money has been expended on repairs to the breakwater at West Arichat, Richmond county, N.S., within the last month?

2. Who was in charge of the job?

3. What were the names of all the employees and what remuneration was received by each one?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Approximately $1,900.

2. A contract was awarded to Curtis Babin, Arichat, N.S. for breakwater repairs at $1,900. And the work, which has now been completed was under the over-all supervision of the district engineer for the Department of Public Works at Halifax, N.S.

3. All employees were hired by the contractor and the department does not have a list of their names.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAITS TEST BORINGS

Question No. 1,653—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Have Hersey Soil Investigations Limited completed their test borings in Northumberland strait, at the site of the proposed causeway?

2. Has any report been made to the government on the result of these tests?

3. If such a report has been made, does it support the conclusion that the building of a structure carrying a highway across Northumberland strait is feasible from an engineering standpoint?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes, Warnock Hersey Soil Investigations Limited has completed the 1963 test drilling program. Whether or not additional test borings will be required in 1964 will depend upon design development during the winter.

2. No, the drill cores obtained by the drilling are still being analysed.

3. Not applicable.

GRAIN EXPORTS THROUGH CHURCHILL

Question No. 1,654—Mr. Simpson:

How many bushels of grain were exported through the port of Churchill in each year since 1946?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Answer: Ocean shipments of wheat from Churchill, season of navigation 1946-63.

| Year | Shipments[1] bushels |
|---|---|
| 1946 | 2,929,000 |
| 1947 | 4,976,000 |

| 1960 | 19,585,000 |
| 1961 | 19,351,000 |
| 1962 | 21,525,000 |
| 1963 | 22,864,000 |

[1] To nearest thousand bushels.

*MONUMENT TO PATRIOTS OF 1837

Question No. 1,660—Mr. Pigeon:

Does the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, through the historic sites and monuments board of Canada, intend to build a monument to the memory of the patriots of 1837, either in St. Denis or St. Charles on the Richelieu river?

[Translation]

Answer: After having reviewed the various proposals submitted to the historic sites and monuments board of Canada in the last few years, I must say that no general proposal has been submitted to the board with a view to having erected a monument to the memory of the patriots of 1837, and that neither the department nor the board contemplates for the time being the possibility of erecting such a monument.

However, if the hon. member wants to submit a proposal to that effect, I shall be pleased to pass it on to the board asking them to advise me of their views on that matter.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

HOUSES BUILT IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 1,342—Mr. Rheaume:

1. For each of the fiscal years from 1953-54 to 1963-64, what were the number of (a) low cost houses (b) welfare houses, built by government in the Northwest Territories for (i) Eskimos (ii) Indians (iii) others?

2. What is the number of houses in each of category (a) and (b) above and for groups (i), (ii), and (iii) above planned for each of the fiscal years 1964-65 and 1965-66?

Return tabled.

EMPLOYMENT OF DISABLED PERSONS

Question No. 1,447—Mr. Scott:

1. Has the government received representations asking it to establish a quota requiring employers to hire a certain percentage of disabled persons and, if so (a) from whom were such representations received (b) when were they received (c) briefly, what was the nature of these representations, and (d) what was the government's response to them?

2. What types of financial assistance does the government supply in the field of rehabilitation, and what were the totals for 1961 and 1962?

3. Has the government received requests for such financial assistance to be increased and, if so, from whom were such requests received?

Return tabled.

QUEBEC—CONSTRUCTION GRANTS FOR FISHING VESSELS

Question No. 1,566—Mr. Bechard:

1. Does the government grant any aid for the construction of fishing vessels with a view to the expansion and modernization of the fishing industry in Canada and, if so, what amounts were spent from January 1, 1963 to date (a) in the province of Quebec (b) in the Paspébiac shipyard, Paspébiac, Bonaventure county?

2. What amounts are included in the estimates for fisheries in the province of Quebec?

Return tabled.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

DESTROYER ESCORTS—REPORTED PLAN TO REDUCE CREW

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence concerning a report over radio station CJCH, Halifax, this morning to the effect the government plans to reduce the number of personnel on certain types of destroyer escorts of the St. Laurent class. What has the minister to say in this regard?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I did not see the report, Mr. Speaker, so I am not able to comment upon it. The only thing that comes to mind is that when the St. Laurent class are converted to helicopter deck-type escorts, I think the complement is reduced. The report may have had reference to that.

TRADE

WHEAT—REPORTED DIFFICULTIES RESPECTING SALES TO RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture perhaps I might ask this question of the Minister of Finance, because it might involve his department as well. My question is related to an article in the Yonkers Herald Statesman in which it is alleged that Canada's wheat sales to red China are turning sour. The article goes on to say that there are behind the scenes manoeuvres to get money from the world bank or other sources to lend to communist China in order to pay for this wheat. I wonder if the minister would like to take the question as notice, or possibly give an answer now.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I think perhaps I will take the question as notice. In the meantime I should like to say that any suggestion that there is anything that might interfere with the wheat sales to China would come as a great surprise to all of us on this side.

GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, or in his absence for the Minister of Trade and Commerce; but since apparently he is absent also I will ask it of the Prime Minister and request him to direct it to the proper department. My question is related to the situation in which box cars Nos. CN 476732 and CN 507276 have been lying on a siding for 10 days fully loaded while there is an apparent shortage of box cars. Why must this situation prevail when the maximum utilization of box cars is essential, and when it results in lower quotas in many areas, as I have repeatedly pointed out?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSION TO FORMER GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Would the minister confirm or deny reports that Mr. James Coyne, former governor of the Bank of Canada, has commenced receiving a pension of $25,000 a year?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at a meeting of the board of directors of the Bank of Canada on July 22, 1961 the operation of the provision in the bank's pension fund bylaw affecting the governor's pension was suspended pending review. Following the review the suspension was terminated. Mr. Coyne has been in receipt of a pension of $25,000 a year effective from the date of his retirement.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF LINDSAY COLLEGIATE STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles Lamb (Victoria (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, as this is a very dull day I want to bring a little sunshine into the house and say that I have 40 honors students of the Lindsay collegiate sitting up in the ladies' gallery.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—DATE OF TRIAL OF ARRESTED CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the government yet received any information as to the exact date of trial of the two Canadians presently under confinement in Cuba?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Department of External Affairs learned this morning from our embassy that the text of the formal charges to be laid against the two Canadians would be received by them from the Cuban authorities in Havana this afternoon. We expect to have further information when that is received, and I hope to be able to make a statement to the house on the matter tomorrow.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO SECOND HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works that concerns Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Is the government giving active consideration to the co-operative construction of a second trans-Canada highway which will follow the Yellowhead pass route in British Columbia, and giving this consideration with a view to early announcement of this policy?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, some time after the federal-provincial conference has taken place we will be in a position to make a statement concerning government policy in relation to the new highways program.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED OFFER OF ATOMIC WARHEADS BY FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of National Defence. Has the government any comment to make on the report from Europe to the effect that the French are offering atomic warheads to the members of the defence committee over there at the present time?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I read the dispatch with considerable interest. It was the first time this had come to my attention.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED CANAL ON RIVIERE DES PRAIRIES AT MILLE ILES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works?

Following the brief he received from the committee for the canalization of the Back river and the Mille Iles river, does the Minister of Public Works intend to have his engineers make a detailed study to find out if it is possible to canalize these two rivers?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under study.

[Text]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NOVA SCOTIA—PROTEST RESPECTING OFF-SHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister now able to answer my question of Thursday last on government policy relating to off-shore mineral rights?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker the hon. member for Cumberland asked whether I would be able to inform the house of the federal government's policy regarding off-shore mineral rights as a result of the protest being lodged by the government of Nova Scotia relating to the granting of a licence to the Shell Oil Company for gas and oil exploration off the Nova Scotia coast.

I am not aware that the government of Nova Scotia has made any protest to this government—none has come to my attention—on this question of exploration rights granted to the Shell Oil Company. In any event, it is the policy of this government to encourage exploration for oil and gas so as to bring about the most expeditious development of the natural resources of our country.

If the hon. member intends to raise a legal question regarding this matter, I would advise him that the oil and gas exploratory permits now being issued to the Shell Oil Company off the Nova Scotia coast are issued under authority of the Canada oil and gas regulations, P.C. 1960-474 of April 13, 1960, and P.C. 1961-797 of June 6, 1961, as amended, which regulations were made pursuant to the Public Lands Grants Act.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement just made by the Prime Minister, and in view of the fact that there is this dispute not only in Nova Scotia but also in British Columbia arising out of the claims of the provinces to have priority over the federal government, and the view of the federal government that they have the right to grant exploratory licenses in respect of off-shore exploration for minerals, oil and the like, has the government given any consideration to determining this question by way of a submission to the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision as to whether this matter falls exclusively within the ambit of the federal authority or whether it is one of joint responsibility and control?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been under consideration, and in a day or two perhaps I will be in a position to make a more extended reply to the question of my right hon. friend.

LOTTERIES

EXTENSION TO PROVINCES OF RIGHT TO HOLD LOTTERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister is in a position today to reply to my question of last Friday as to what, if any, consideration the cabinet is giving to conferring on the provinces the legal right to conduct sweepstakes.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did see the hon. member's question in Hansard when I returned. The answer is this. Since this matter is on the agenda for discussion at the dominion-provincial conference which opens a week from today, I think it would be rather premature on my part to make any statement. I think what should be done by the government is to listen to whatever representations the provinces have to make in that respect, and determine the policy afterward.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR STAMP COMMEMORATING FOUNDING OF 4-H CLUBS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that we have a number of young Canadians in the gallery, and there are thousands of others across the country for whom the 4-H clubs are rendering a great service, would the Postmaster General reconsider his refusal to have a stamp issued commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of that organization?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): With great pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INVESTIGATION INTO REPORTED FRAUD INVOLVING $30,000

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice? Could the minister tell the house whether the R.C.M.P. has completed its investigation at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation concerning an alleged $30,000 fraud?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell the hon. member, who was kind enough to give me notice of that question, that the R.C.M.P. informed me that they are not aware of such a theft.

In any case, if one has been committed the R.C.M.P. will surely let me know, but on the date I was given notice of the question, no report had been received.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

LEGISLATION REDUCING VOTING AGE FROM 21 TO 18

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It arises out of the report in the newspapers of this morning that the right hon. gentleman expects to introduce legislation reducing the voting age from 21 to 18. I have such a measure standing in my name, being Bill No. C-60. I wondered whether the right hon. gentleman would consent to having this transferred to a government order, thereby saving the time and trouble of our overworked staff in preparing legislation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, this party has been committed to the reduction of the voting age to 18 years of age for some years, and we are anxious to see that it is done as quickly as possible.

Mr. Scott: A supplementary question. I merely wanted to bring this to the attention of the Prime Minister so these people could vote at the election which Mr. Keith Davey is going to call soon.

IMMIGRATION

HAL BANKS—ABSENCE FROM COUNTRY WHILE ON BAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Did his officials at the ports of entry between Canada and the United States question the legality or propriety of Banks leaving Canada for the U.S.A. while charges were pending and he was out on cash bail?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer this question, but I will inquire.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EVIDENCE IN U.S. COURTS RESPECTING CANADIAN JAVELIN COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Port Arthur posed to me a question supplementary to one he had directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am pleased to tell him that I have had an opportunity to inquire in our department and the answer to the question is no.

PENSIONS

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, BLIND AND DISABLED PAYMENTS—PROVINCIAL WILLINGNESS TO SHARE IN INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister received a letter from the minister of welfare of the province of Manitoba asking her to correct the impression which she gave in an answer to a question of mine on November 7, when she was unable to say with certainty whether Manitoba had offered to participate in increases in the payments made under the various joint pension plans? In the light of the information given to the house today by her parliamentary secretary in answer to starred question No. 1,633, can she now make a definite statement on this matter?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did receive such a letter. When my hon. friend asked me whether I could say which provinces had indicated they would take part in these programs I had not had any notice and could not remember, so I answered no. Then my hon. friend also asked me specifically with reference to Manitoba whether I could remember its decision, I could not remember what attitude Manitoba had expressed, and so I said I could not answer with certainty.

Apparently this has been misconstrued in Manitoba as indicating that the Manitoba government had taken a position which in fact they had not taken, namely that they would not wish to participate in these cost sharing programs. I am pleased to have this opportunity, and I thank my hon. friend for providing it, to correct this impression, and set the record straight.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister straighten out Mr. Keith Davey as to who has been calling the seemingly endless supply motions and confidence votes?

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES, ETC.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-105, to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the minister or his parliamentary secretary is supposed to reply to the questions we addressed last week, and we hope to have the answers.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on the resolution stage a number of questions were posed by hon. members on the opposite side of the house, and a number of statements were made. I wish to thank hon. members for their contributions, and for their co-operation in getting the resolution through in what can be termed markedly short order.

The hon. member for Ontario, the former minister of labour, is a man for whom I have great admiration. He and I are probably among those members least qualified to be ministers of education; our alma mater would seem to be the school of hard knocks, and for this reason I have great affinity for the hon. member. I have been going through the Parliamentary Guide, and I notice that we have both received a great deal of our education since we found it necessary to make our own way in life.

However, this need not deter me from commenting on some of the points he raised. The hon. member took exception to my statement that this was an entirely new measure. If he will examine what I said he will find I was referring to a statement made by the Minister of Labour on June 10, at which time he put forward what he termed a new manpower development program. Some of it was entirely new, and other parts of it constituted an extension of the program already in existence.

The hon. gentleman took exception to the fact that the bill introduced in the previous session of parliament by himself with respect to manpower adjustment had not been revised. If that criticism were valid I think it could equally be said that it was unnecessary in 1961 for the government of that day to have brought in the technical and vocational training act because there was already in existence, as of 1942, the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act. There is not a great deal of difference between the two acts, and amendment would have sufficed. I am sure the hon. member will feel upon reflection that the introduction of amendments at this time to the technical and vocational training act is quite in order.

Aside from that, the hon. member made a constructive contribution, as did the hon. member for Medicine Hat, the hon. member for Kindersley, and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. The hon. member for Kindersley has obviously had a great deal of experience in the field of education and vocational training.

The hon. member for Quebec East made some statements, however, which I believe are not valid. If we reread them we will realize that the hon. member was speaking of the past and of the circumstances which prevailed before these amendments were introduced. He referred to the minister of youth for Quebec as having made certain statements suggesting that Quebec was not receiving its share under this program, and that the program discriminated against Quebec. Well, this has no relation whatever to the facts. Mr. Gerin Lajoie, who is minister of youth in the province of Quebec, is also chairman of the provincial ministers who have met on occasion and who, at their most recent meeting, drafted a statement to the federal Minister of Labour asking specifically for the amendments which are contained in his measure. I should like to quote from that brief in order to demonstrate that this is a fact. The second last paragraph of the brief presented to the Minister of Labour by this committee says:

> For the reasons here briefly set forth, we now believe that the national interest makes it imperative that the federal technical and vocational training act be amended so that the federal government's contribution in respect of capital expenditures incurred by the provinces be calculated at 75 per cent of all such expenditure made prior to the end of the agreement, the 31st March, 1967.

That is the essence of the amendments now before us though there are, of course, several other provisions having to do with the training aspects of the program.

I have a brief prepared statement which I should like to read to the house since hon. members now have the bill before them. I might say that I am unable to answer the question raised by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I have not had an opportunity to discuss the matter he raised, but perhaps tomorrow on the orders of the day he may be able to have his question answered by putting it directly to the minister concerned.

The provisions of Bill No. C-105 reflect in detail the proposals announced in the house by the minister on June 10 and explained in more detail when the resolution was introduced on October 2. These measures are designed to further strengthen the federal-provincial program of manpower development and training, having particular application to the provision of suitable and adequate training facilities, the training of the unemployed, and encouraging the training of adult employed workers so they may adjust to changing employment conditions.

The first section of this bill provides that in respect of the costs incurred by a province in providing training allowances for unemployed persons, the maximum contribution payable by Canada be increased from 75 per cent to 90 per cent. As the minister pointed out on June 10, 1963 when he drew attention to the major feature of the government's employment and manpower development program, there was at that time the anomaly of high unemployment and a shortage of skills.

Last year training was provided by the provinces for 38,439 unemployed persons, with the federal government contributing 75 per cent of both training costs and living allowances. This was an increase over the previous year's enrolment of approximately 43 per cent, but the program must be increased beyond last year's enrolment if it is to provide for those unemployed who would benefit from training. By increasing the federal contribution to living allowances while maintaining the 75 per cent contribution to direct training costs the provinces will be able to release more funds to support the additional training required. This program for the training of the unemployed is extremely important and must be expanded, but in the longer range it is equally important to provide upgrading and retraining programs for those employed persons who are in danger of becoming unemployed in the future. This then is the purpose of the second amendment.

In subsection 2 of section 1 provision is made for the federal government to contribute an additional 25 per cent of provincial costs in respect of certain programs for employed adults. The purpose of this amendment is to stimulate training in industry beyond the short range production requirements which heretofore have been the general pattern. This extra incentive will be directed to the longer range programs including upgrading of the general background of employed workers in mathematics, science and communications skills, and to the long term, organized development of skilled craftsmen through apprenticeship. It will also provide for the retraining of workers who are in imminent danger of lay-off because of technological changes in industry. It is not the intention of the government to relieve industry of its traditional responsibility for training its employees to meet production requirements, but rather to stimulate provinces to take a more active part in participating with and encouraging industry to undertake training programs that are in the national interest.

Although there has been expansion of the training facilities in excess of 144,000 student places, the development has been uneven among the provinces. Some were in a position to take very limited advantage of the provisions of the legislation. These variations ranged from $51 per capita in the 15-19 age group in Quebec to $480 in Newfoundland. The experience has shown that in spite of the increase in student places up to the present, the response on the part of the Canadian people has been such that even further increases are needed, especially in the provinces where lesser amounts have been claimed.

Section 2 of Bill No. C-105 provides for an extension of the period during which contributions payable by Canada for capital expenditures incurred by the provinces on technical and vocational training facilities will be 75 per cent of provincial government expenditure. The contribution will be continued at this level in each province until the $480 has been contributed on behalf of each person in the 15-19 age group or until March 31, 1967, whichever is earlier. After this time the federal contribution will be reduced to 50 per cent of provincial expenditures. This will allow provinces to share in the provisions for capital facilities to an equal extent, and will at the same time give more time to put these facilities in place. On this basis the amount which would be available to each province before the rate of contribution is reduced to 50 per cent of provincial expenditures would be as follows:

Estimated Federal Contribution If All Provinces Reached $480 Maximum

| Province | Total federal contribution 1961-1967 $(000) |
|---|---|
| Newfoundland | 21,055 |
| Prince Edward Island | 4,164 |
| Nova Scotia | 30,860 |
| New Brunswick | 25,708 |
| Quebec | 224,547 |
| Ontario | 209,176 |
| Manitoba | 24,016 |
| Saskatchewan | 35,003 |
| Alberta | 48,561 |
| British Columbia | 54,118 |

Section 3 provides for an increase in membership of the national technical and vocational training advisory council from 23 to 28 members. This increase in membership is intended to give greater representation on the council to representatives from industry, labour and other interested groups. Subsection 2 of section 3 of the bill provides for an honorarium for the chairman of this council. Because of the growing requirements on council for consideration of matters of national concern, the demands on the chairman are growing. It is therefore proposed to provide an honorarium.

After close study of the total manpower training needs the government feels that these amendments to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act are required to meet adequately the training needs of Canada. I ask the house for a continuation of the co-operation already extended, and because the bill is so vital in the interests of the training of our youth and in the interests of all Canada, I hope it will be passed by the house as expeditiously as possible.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak I hear some of my colleagues opposite shouting "question". When we were at the resolution stage we were urged not to speak then in order to save time, and to leave our comments for second reading of the bill. I might tell some of my hon. friends opposite who represent farming constituencies that I intend to deal principally with the need of extending vocational training to the young farmers of this country. Apparently they are not interested in this problem.

I rise to support the principle and purpose of this most important piece of legislation, and to support the suggestions made by various speakers on behalf of this party who spoke at the resolution stage. However, this afternoon I wish to deal with one particular aspect of vocational training, namely vocational training in agriculture, for which there is a growing need in Canada.

I speak as one who has had a rather close association with agriculture and forestry all my life, and I have a great respect for the opinions of farmers and other rural people. I think everything possible should be done to assist the young people in our farming communities to carry on as successful farmers, succeeding their fathers in the days to come. I have heard this question discussed at meetings of farmers, fruit growers and people representing other types of agriculture; I have discussed it myself with a number of individuals including some of the educational authorities of British Columbia and with practical farmers, those who are particularly concerned with the application of this type of legislation to rural communities.

I suppose it is almost a truism to say that everyone interested in farming these days talks about the need of extending vocational training in agriculture, but very little has been done about it to date. As I see it, the main reason so little has been done about vocational training in agriculture is the many different opinions as to what is required to meet this need, and to some extent I have no hesitation in blaming some of the agricultural organizations who I think have failed to grasp the significance of this type of legislation until recent months. However, changing circumstances and growing awareness of the need are causing farmers' organizations to take a more positive approach to this problem. I think this is particularly so in the province of Saskatchewan and also in British Columbia.

Labour organizations and industrial and commercial leaders have already given active attention to this type of legislation and the problem it is supposed to meet, to ensure that in so far as is possible under the present economic system, vocational training will fill their future needs. However, to date the federal Department of Labour and the provincial departments of education have been given little guidance from farmers' organizations and educational groups with respect to the needs of extending vocational training in agriculture. I give full credit to the federal Department of Trade and Commerce for giving some leadership to industry in the use of vocational training grants, and some provinces have co-operated in analyzing the needs of industry and commerce.

I understand the federal Department of Labour, which is responsible for carrying out the terms of the Vocational Training Assistance Act, has attempted, in so far as federal jurisdiction is concerned, to pursue the same course in respect of agriculture. I hope the minister listens to what I have to say at this point, because I am trying to be my usual constructive self. I am advised that the Department of Labour made a survey of what was required in agricultural training in each province, and they used this information as the basis for discussion at a conference of agriculturists and educationalists that was later called in Ottawa. However, I am advised that with the exception of Saskatchewan the provinces carrying out this survey never sought the advice of practical farmers, but were content to limit their investigations or to obtain their advice from the educational authorities in the provinces concerned.

I do not wish to throw a shadow upon the ability of educational authorities, but in this particular field, when you come to deal with the practical problems related to agriculture which change so much from province to province, from region to region and from one type of agriculture to another, you cannot get sound advice by simply consulting educationalists. You must seek some advice from farmers' organizations and also from practical farmers. We must recognize the fact that the needs in agriculture are changing so rapidly it is difficult to assess them and plan a long term program. We all recognize that difficulty. Agriculture is faced in that respect with the same difficulty as other segments of the economy.

On the other hand, while our program so far as agriculture is concerned is practically in the embryo stage, we must recognize that 13 per cent of the farm labour force of the United States are now using vocational agricultural training facilities, while in Canada to date only 3 per cent of our farm labour force is doing so. There is a big contrast here which should spur us on to greater action.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Now, let us see what is being done in some of the provinces in this respect. I have not the full information, but I have some information from some of the provinces. I am advised that Ontario is offering ten 12-week courses in the fundamentals of maintaining and operating a farm. This is all to the good. I am advised that Quebec probably has the most comprehensive program operating on three levels. I am very taken with the result of my inquiries as to what is happening in Quebec. I am very pleased indeed to see it. I am informed that there are three institutions offering technical agricultural training, and 14 local school boards in Quebec have a good, comprehensive adult training program for men and women at the local level to meet their circumstances, to meet their needs, to meet their convenience and their pocketbooks.

In Manitoba I am advised that apart from the high school diploma agricultural institutes there are practical short courses of three or four days' duration given once per year over television between 10.30 and 12 o'clock, using a special network at low cost when these stations are usually off the air. This is one field that could be investigated and the same principle applied in other provinces. Saskatchewan, I am advised, among the many other aspects of its program, is offering a new two term course in farm machinery upkeep and repair. This is a very necessary course with the increased mechanization on our farms. I have repeatedly gone on farms and found operations at a standstill because no one on the farm could make a minor repair to a combine or some piece of machinery which is very complicated from my point of view. All my early farming days were spent with a walking plow, an axe, a cross-cut saw and a grub hoe. There is training needed in this field, and Saskatchewan is giving a lead in respect of the training of persons in the repair and upkeep of farm machinery.

I am very sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that in British Columbia our record is rather poor. Out of a total farm labour force of 28,000 there were only 149 students attending day courses and 57 taking advantage of the night courses early this fall. However the agriculture occupational courses at the University of British Columbia are today using vocational training methods.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this could be interpreted as being the fault of too few locations for training in British Columbia, located too far away from prospective students and perhaps not providing the type of training the students want. I have heard that complaint made about the training program that is being undertaken at the moment. In my opinion British Columbia should establish a permanent practical agricultural school farm giving two season practical courses available to people of all ages who have discontinued their formal education. This program could be interwoven with the vocational training assistance program. This is a very necessary program in respect of the training of young farmers and others who wish to further their training in agriculture in British Columbia.

There are a number of other alternatives I should like to mention, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the simplest of these would be that both governments should share the cost and more modern and practical courses should be established. We should again encourage our school boards to make agriculture a positive course in rural high schools. I think there is room for considerable improvement in that respect. In conjunction with this, the school facilities and teachers should be available for night classes for adults and for young farmers who wish this additional training. I think that could be woven into this technical assistance program.

Another idea, Mr. Speaker, would be to leave it up to the department of education and the school boards to decide whether they wished agriculture as a vocational training course in their schools, or would like the assistance of the university extension service and government financial aid made available in each part of the province for three or four day courses, each covering one basic facet of agriculture at a time but all of them including accounting and a basic knowledge of soils and fertilizers. I mention these sorts of fringe aspects of technical training because they are all interwoven. I think there has to be a good deal more study given to such technical and vocational training for our young farmers.

However, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a special plea for further consideration on the part of the minister to the great need for agriculture vocational training in all its various aspects. I suggest the federal departments of labour and agriculture and their provincial counterparts should consult representative farm organizations across Canada and other related organizations, including the agriculture institute of Canada. In addition I suggest that the provincial governments should follow the example of Saskatchewan and seek the advice of practical farmers in various fields of agriculture under varying regional circumstances and conditions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I again emphasize the need for greatly expanded vocational training in agriculture, and urge that every effort be made to meet this need as soon as possible as a result of co-operation among federal and provincial governments, organizations of various types and farmers. I would say when it comes to something of this type I have great respect for the intelligence and common sense of the farmers of this country who, I am confident, would be ready to offer their wholehearted co-operation to the federal and provincial governments to make sure the young farmers of today have the opportunities they are entitled to under this legislation.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, before discussing the purposes of this bill I would like to take a little time of the house to extend to the minister, a colleague from Nova Scotia, my congratulations on the better than average job he has been doing since he took over this portfolio. I wish to tell him that we in Nova Scotia are proud of the job he is doing and proud of the fact that, as usual, Nova Scotia is holding up its end in the federal cabinet.

I might also say that as a minister from Nova Scotia he has used the good common sense Nova Scotians seem to be endowed with, in following the policies introduced by the previous minister, the hon. member for Ontario, and in realizing the merit inherent in the legislation that is now being amended.

I am sure that since he assumed the duties of a cabinet minister he has become aware of the fact that there is no magic formula for curing unemployment, and that the best method of effecting the cure that must be carried out is to see that our young people are properly trained and fully capable of entering the labour market, and that our older workers are retrained in a manner that will provide them with their own saleability from an employment point of view.

The minister has proposed four main amendments to the act. The first is to provide that the federal government's share of the cost of training allowances be increased from 75 per cent to 90 per cent. The second is to assist to a greater degree in the "training in industry" programs, by increasing the federal contribution from 50 per cent to 75 per cent of the costs. The third is to extend the period during which contributions payable by the federal government for capital expenditure incurred by the provinces on training facilities will be 75 per cent, and the fourth is to increase the size of the council from 23 to 28 members and to pay an honorarium to its chairman.

I find no objection whatsoever to the first three amendments, and I would just as soon leave the fourth one. There seems to be a growing tendency on the part of the government to increase the size of boards, but I find more can be accomplished with a smaller group of individuals than with a large group, and the effectiveness of a council is usually predicated on the number of individuals placed on it. However, I must say I am in full agreement with the amendments put forward and will certainly vote for them.

If the minister could assist in persuading his colleagues in the cabinet to extend family allowances he would help this program to an even greater degree, for it would allow people with families to keep their children in school longer so they could take advantage of this vocational training to an even greater extent.

Speaking in Newfoundland on November 12 the minister, among other things, stated:

> Over 530 projects, designed to expand existing vocational schools or to establish new ones, have been approved since April 1, 1961—
> The total cost of the buildings and equipment alone will exceed $525,000,000. The federal government has agreed to contribute more than $330,000,000 toward this investment in Canada's future.

I agree with what he said, but I think he should have pointed out, without detracting in any way from his own contribution, that the hon. member for Ontario and the former government put this program on the road. They saw where the problem was and how it could be eliminated. They took the necessary action that today is bringing the rewards we are able to note in the fact that there are over 140,000 new students obtaining this type of technical and vocational training.

There is one matter I would like to raise regarding the calling of tenders for the construction of these institutions to which the government contributes 75 per cent of the cost. I bring it to the minister's attention in the hope something might be done to eliminate grievances that have been developing among certain subcontractors who are not receiving the type of protection that is available to them under the Department of Public Works.

In my constituency there are a number of firms which from time to time submit subtenders to prime contractors for projects of this type, but unfortunately, because the subcontractors do not receive the protection afforded by the Department of Public Works, they find that the prime contractors do either one of two things. An individual prime contractor has either used the subtender, after a contract has been awarded, as a method for renegotiation to force the subcontractor down in his price if he wishes to carry out the work, or the prime contractor has listened to the government of the province, in this case New Brunswick, and has ignored a subcontractor who happens to come from Nova Scotia. This is a result of interference from the government of New Brunswick, and in one case a firm that should have carried out the work was completely eliminated from the job, although unfortunately it was kind enough to provide the prime contractor with the price on which he made his bid and which allowed him to secure the contract.

I realize that the amount of interference the federal government should exercise in the field of education is a matter of some concern to some provinces. However, when the federal government is putting up 75 per cent of the cash I think it has a right to request that certain things be done, and done in a proper manner. In this respect one particular firm, which to my knowledge lost at least two contracts, has been treated unfairly. I do not think the taxpayer has been treated fairly, and I believe the federal government has the right to and should demand protection for all subcontractors who submit bids on these projects. Certainly if this had been the case there would have been more employment in my constituency, and more employment for this very competent firm.

There is also the fact that if this program is continued—and there is every indication that it will be—we will restore a degree of confidence in our unemployed citizens that they did not have before we brought this program into being in 1961. It has been very noticeable in the town of Springhill in my constituency that men who are without jobs and the means of securing employment because of lack of training very quickly become despondent and are not capable of making the full contribution they once did. This retraining of older workers, especially at the higher rates that we put into effect, makes new men out of older men. It gives them a new hope and a new determination, and it makes Canada a better place in which to live.

Anything we as a government can do to improve the education of our people is of great importance to all Canadians. Certainly the investment we are making with regard to this program is tremendous. I think the results are tremendous also. I believe we will have a more qualified working force because of it. However, I think we must take further steps, such as those mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West in the field of agriculture. There is still a need to provide a greater degree of training in this field where technology has taken over, perhaps not as noticeably as in the field of industry but to the same significant degree. Anything that can be done to interest our young people in agriculture to a greater degree, and better train them so that when they enter work in this field they are of more value to those who employ them, will be of benefit to the Canadian nation. I recommend to the minister that he give very careful consideration to the recommendations made by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by urging the minister to work as hard as he can to convince his colleagues in the cabinet that family allowances should be extended at the earliest possible date, so that parents who are considering what they should do regarding the further education of their children might decide to take advantage of the numerous vocational schools that have been built by the Stanfield government in my province and by other governments in the other provinces of Canada. These parents would be given the security that is available with even this small cheque each month. I would also ask the minister to see that the subcontractors who are submitting tenders to prime contractors for the construction of these institutions are given the protection that they deserve and should have, for it is neither right nor proper that federal funds should be used by a provincial government to discriminate against firms because they happen to be located in one province, whereas the work is being done in another.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to unduly spin out this discussion, but I feel I would be remiss if I did not make some observations at this stage of the bill.

My first remarks will be to commend the minister for having revised and reconsidered this legislation in order to meet at least the representations expressed last spring by the minister of education of the province of Quebec who called for an extension of the act so that our province could take advantage of it at least until 1967.

I do not intend to recall here all the disadvantages entailed by this act the day it was passed by the federal government. From an educational standpoint, several provinces, like the province of Ontario, were then ready to take advantage of the act. But statistics show that the province of Quebec did not fully profit from it.

I also commend him for having thought of making an adjustment in the per capita grants for the students in the 15-19 age group who, in the province of Quebec, will attend high schools, technical schools and trade schools. This adjustment will more adequately equalize the technical and vocational training all across the country.

I should like to recall here some of the principles at the basis of those representations. At the beginning, when the legislation was introduced, accepted and passed by parliament, I think that the majority intended to facilitate that technical training needed by our young people and, at the same time, provide some assistance for the recipients of those benefits during a period of seasonal unemployment. In brief, those who were completely without means were given allowances while acquiring a better technical or vocational training in the trades already carried out by those older people.

However, I feel that in some cases that training did not turn out exactly as it was expected at the time the legislation was enacted. In fact, I remember certain cases in my riding where this legislation was not a happy experience for young people of 20 to 30 years of age.

Under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, those young unemployed were taken on a free bus ride of 20, 25 or 30 miles each morning, in winter, to the Beauceville armouries where they were given a certain training.

The first week of the course was somewhat similar to the period when we used to pass our military tests. For a week endeavours were made to find out the aptitudes of the students.

During the second week, training in first aid was about all they got; for a whole week, they received stretcher bearer and hospital orderly courses.

During the third week, they were taught the meaning of some signs on the uniforms of service men in this country; what the stripes on the sleeves mean: if there are two it is a lance corporal; if there are three, it is a sergeant. That was during the third week.

At the end of the fourth week, the teachers tried to stress the advantages of voluntarily enlisting in the army for a period of three years, since the students were out of a job.

That was all there was at the time, to the so-called "technical training" of hundreds of young people in our province. It seems to me that such methods are, to some extent, along the lines of the philosophy expounded the other day by the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel), that is, that the best way to train our young people is to have them undergo compulsory military service.

I feel that there should be other means of giving technical and vocational training to young people. We have, in the province of Quebec, as well as in other provinces, numerous institutions which might, through the instrumentality of the law, offer technical and vocational training to our leaders of tomorrow. In so doing, we would work in the best interest of our fellow countrymen of today and of tomorrow.

I wished to make these few remarks, in the hope that the present type of training might be discontinued, at least in the province of Quebec. I have also noticed that in the province of Quebec the act discourages those who should have priority in matters of education or who would derive the greatest benefits from a refresher course in their own field.

Here again, I believe that this legislation does not meet completely the requirements of certain trades.

For instance, let us think for a moment of the train of thoughts of a person 45, 48 or 50 years old who, for 25 or 30 years, has been a house painter and who faces unemployment due to the winter season. He is then invited to attend refresher courses. And often, the instructors are young 22 or 23 year old men who never painted an 8 by 4 wallboard, whilst the students, as it were, are persons who practised their trade for 30 years.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that, under such circumstances, the people do not get a very high idea of how public funds are spent for vocational training purposes.

However, I would not like my remarks to be construed as to mean that I am not in favour of this improvement in the field of vocational training.

On the other hand, in the province of Quebec, together with representatives of the federal Department of Labour, employers and the officials of certain union groups, we have carried out experiments and designed a method of improvement and education for workers in industry and the trades which proved perhaps more efficient than that to which I referred previously in connection with various trades.

Mr. Speaker, when the act was passed in 1961, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) took part on two or three occasions in the discussion on that legislation which seemed badly needed in this country. However, going through his remarks, I did not find any reference to the fact that this legislation is a direct interference in an exclusively provincial field. On the other hand, the member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) referred to this fact. As for us we have strongly objected to the interferences of the federal government in a field which was and still is, according to our constitution, exclusively reserved to the provinces.

In this connection, I should like to quote an editorial which appeared in Le Devoir of February 18, 1963 and reads as follows:

> This claim made by Quebec is all the more legitimate as the funds given by Ottawa for vocational training belong to the provinces. The long term aim of a dynamic government must be to hand back to the provinces the funds which Ottawa grabbed under cover of war and the endless state of emergency which followed.
> But until fair agreements have succeeded in fully restoring the spirit of the confederation act, we would in no way be justified in permitting that other provinces than Quebec spend a great part of the amounts that we pay ourselves into the federal treasury.

[Mr. Perron.]

> If the present situation should last, the provocation referred to by Mr. Gerin-Lajoie would result sooner or later in serious consequences for the future of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not discuss the matter any further, but I am confident that hon. members will take those claims into account and that those who will take part in the next federal-provincial conference will better understand our position that may seem uncompromising to those who are not familiar with the problems of the province of Quebec.

Lately, we have heard a fair number of speeches concerning the withdrawal of joint programs in certain fields of economic activity in our country.

Mr. Speaker, I do hope that, in dealing with the measure now before us, we shall not forget that the province of Quebec does not wish to interfere in any way with normal development in the field of science or technology or with progress in any occupational area whatever, and that on a national scale, but it wants to be treated fairly when making claims which it believes to be reasonable and just.

That point of view must be taken into account, and especially in the way those courses are offered. Help is given to improve the knowledge of those who have had a trade or occupation for a good many years or of young people of 20 to 30 years of age who go and take technical or vocational training, in spite of the deficiencies I mentioned a while ago, a training which is very much similar to a military service training and where there was not even the slightest hesitation in handing out to the students—and free, if you please—khaki uniforms used by the armed forces of our country.

Mr. Speaker, that is further proof of the fact that Quebec is right in claiming those amounts which, if they are due to the province, should be paid back to it through its department of youth. Thus, when the legislation is finally adopted, the training would correspond to the aspirations of those youth and meet the standards of our system of education instead of consisting in rather strange technical courses for the training of people between the ages of 20 and 30.

Mr. Speaker, those are some of the remarks I wanted to make. I have no intention of repeating the figures quoted last week by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Beaule) but, for the information of my fellow citizens of the province of Quebec and other provinces who are interested in this problem, I should like to point out the discrimination which took place in the past under this legislation.

It will be realized, in the other provinces, that they are not being treated unfairly if, in the next three years, the province of Quebec seems to get an amount of approximately $254 million, while Ontario will only be getting $9 million, Alberta $48 million and British Columbia $54 million.

I think that it is simply the result of the fact that we were not ready or that our education system in high schools and technical schools, under the direction of the board of education, did not meet the legal requirements, at that time.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that these few remarks will be taken in serious consideration during the next federal-provincial conference so that there will be a better understanding, in the end, of the Quebec position and its claims. I hope that this is not merely a case of political balloon to which one government or another may resort, at any level whatsoever, during an election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should also take steps to ensure that the country will be able to make a maximum use of the nation's vital forces. I have here the report issued following a survey conducted by the "J.O.C." in the province of Quebec, in 1960. Very interesting statistics have been disclosed as well as some discouraging ones.

For instance, a survey carried out in regard to 1958 and 1959 graduates of the various professional schools and technical institutes in the city of Quebec alone, showed that out of a total of 94 graduates having sent answers, 42 were engaged in the trade they had learned, 33 had jobs but outside their trade and 19 were unemployed.

Now, that happened a year or two after they had left our own institutions where they had studied for 10, 12 or 15 years.

As for the situation in the city of Three Rivers, an ideal industrial location, according to what is said in the province of Quebec, out of 76 graduating students who replied, 20 were doing what they had studied for, 20 had jobs having nothing to do with their trade and 36 were unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, I think there are gaps not only at the technical and vocational training stage, but also at the formal education level.

The survey that was made shows that, out of 265 answers which were received, 88 persons or 33 per cent were practising the trade that they had learned; 104 or 39 per cent had jobs unrelated to their craft; the unemployed numbered 73 or 27 per cent.

Those figures prove that the gap is not only to be found at the educational level, because, Mr. Speaker, between a well-educated unemployed and a less-educated one, the problem remains the same.

We wish more and more to allow our young people to train to meet the requirements of automation, science and progress, which are our heritage and even more the heritage of future generations.

I feel that the deficiencies regarding this disastrous period of unemployment at home should be seriously considered together with technical and professional training.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to drag on this debate, but I am convinced these few remarks concerning the moneys which by right belong to the province of Quebec will be taken into consideration. As I said, I think that a very large part of the Quebec people wish to see that field, which is properly theirs, belonging to them and remaining theirs, according to standards already established and legislation already recognized by the very spirit of the confederation act.

Mr. Herman Laverdiere (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity of taking part in the discussion of this technical and vocational training scheme.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the present world is in such rapid evolution that some sort of intellectual revolution is called for, among our young people as well as among the adults. Formerly, one could for instance, get along after a period of working as an apprentice with a man who thoroughly knew his trade. Moreover, a few years of elementary schooling were good enough for most people to succeed in life. For a large number of young people, especially in rural districts, elementary schooling consisted in a few years spent at school while waiting to be sturdy enough to work. Also, the greatest number were able to secure permanent employment where no particular training was required.

But, particularly in the last few years, applied science has upset our way of life. Automation added to an industrialization which is developing at a pace unknown before especially in Quebec in the last few years has taken us unaware. And that is why we see in every district which did not manage to become industrialized at the same rapid rate, the proportion of unemployment is extremely high, and even where industries are in full development, we have to face another major problem in the lack of trained workers and technicians needed for the operation of those industries. That is quite obvious in the province of Quebec in particular.

We were taken by surprise by this technological revolution, and the present government is doing what it can to remedy the situation.

I am sure that this bill will provide both long term and short term solutions by making possible the technical training of adults, but especially of the younger generation.

Assistance is urgently needed in the province of Quebec since it has the highest percentage of unemployed. That is largely due to uncontrollable circumstances which have prevented us from being ready for certain positions. We need skilled labour and specialists in all fields, but especially in industry. We must make haste to meet growing needs.

In the province of Quebec, we need immediately five additional technological institutes which would train the technicians we need so badly to advise and direct our farmers in connection with ARDA, for instance.

In the field of agriculture also, mechanization has revolutionized farming. It is no longer possible to run a farm in a haphazard way.

Farming must be done on a scientific basis. If a farmer wants to succeed, he must run his business methodically, carefully, according to particular rules and accurate knowledge. Unfortunately, most of our farmers, and they are not to blame for that in any way, are not ready to operate their farm in such a manner. A great number do not know where they are going. They know only one thing: that they do not show much of a profit at the end of the year. How can they change that? They do not know, or rather they are waiting for experts in agriculture to help them, advise them, watch over their progress, technicians and agronomists to organize the ARDA program, which my region in particular needs urgently.

In our rural areas especially, a great many young people quit school in the ninth or tenth grade, sometimes much before the ninth grade, to become lumbermen or labourers. Therefore, they do not learn any trade. Yet, those young people are not without talent, but their parents cannot afford to send them to institutes of technology in a distant city because their travelling and boarding out expenses would be too high, not to mention that there are not enough technical schools.

In order to put to good use the talents of young people who are not gifted for advanced studies and to ensure that the younger generation will not be faced with the same problem as a great number of unemployed who, at 35 or more, are unskilled and without a trade, the necessary steps should be taken as soon as possible.

Let us place at the disposal of our young people the institutes of technology they need. This is an investment which in the long run will bring unlimited dividends as compared to the total loss which, for example, unemployment assistance represents, even if it is a most necessary makeshift at the present time.

Within a year or two, more than 30 regional secondary schools will be set up in the province of Quebec. It would seem a good thing to me if technical training were incorporated in those schools with the science course, the general course, the classical course or any other course. However such an organization is under provincial jurisdiction, so I shall restrict myself to those remarks.

One cannot insist too much either on the help for which rural areas have a special need. In large centres, it is easy to get organized, but it is much more difficult for rural areas, and yet they are the ones where the need is most urgent. Besides, the best way to help the farmers' lot, the lot of those whose income is insufficient, is education. We cannot have another lost generation. The future of our industry, particularly in Quebec, makes it necessary to train technicians.

In Quebec, out of the 300,000 students in our public secondary schools, more than 45,000 should be directed towards technical or vocational training. These 45,000 young people would join the 32,000 who are already in various types of vocational training.

In view of the foreseen and necessary increase in the number of students' registrations—which is a most encouraging fact—and as technical training costs about twice as much as secondary school training, the cost of technical training in Quebec will increase by about $16 million a year, which shows that the province is greatly in need of financial assistance in the field of technical and vocational training.

It happens that because of special conditions the provinces, until about 1962, were not all in a position to take advantage to the same degree of the agreement under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

For instance, during these last few years, Ontario, with 34 per cent of the Canadian population, is said to have reaped to date 65 per cent of the total benefits, while the province of Quebec, with 28 per cent of the population, hardly received 5 per cent. I am pleased to note that this legislation will correct a seriously unfair situation toward Quebec.

That unfairness will be corrected by this legislation because of the extension of this assistance provided by this government, since the share of each province is based on $480 per capita in the 15 to 19 age bracket, and the province of Quebec will receive some $70 million more on a total additional amount of over $121.5 million.

We must make headway, and fast. Our young people are growing up realizing that their parents are almost smothering in a world which changes too fast. The younger generation must not face the same lot. We should not allow one single young Canadian to quit school before knowing a trade or a profession and the authorities concerned have the responsibility to make the required training facilities available to them.

I think it was Edgar Dale who said that the saddest funeral oration one could make about somebody would be to say that his hidden talents remained unknown. We only have to note how well attended our adult classes are to realize the profound need felt by all to get a higher education.

Then, what about the assistance to be provided for adult training? A sociologist once said: "If you think you know everything about something you are old already and if you think there is no better way than your own, then you are old; but if you readily admit that you know very little in any field, then you are still young".

Mr. Speaker, it is easy at any age, with a little effort, to improve one's education. In fact, the ideal time is when you are an adult and your life is at its height. Only frivolous or lazy people will say: "I am too old to learn". It is not one's age that counts but one's outlook on life.

By providing adults with the required training facilities, we achieve three important objectives as follows:

1. The teaching of a trade to persons who otherwise would nearly always be victims of unemployment.

2. The reduction of government assistance in social welfare activities of all kinds.

3. The use, to good advantage, of part of the workers' free time.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me say with Mr. Coady: "The man who has ceased to learn should not be allowed to run around loose in times so dangerous as ours."

[Text]

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Let me say at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, that I regard our vocational and technical training program as one of the most progressive steps forward in our fight against unemployment. When a Progressive Conservative government introduced this far reaching program back in December, 1960, it had as its intent not only fighting unemployment, but its main purpose was to plan for our future needs and head off unemployment. My friend, the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis), said at the time the legislation was introduced that anyone who had studied the bill would have to admit it was the most positive step forward in the training field ever taken in this country. So say we all.

The impact of this program in three short years has been tremendous. When we left office in May of this year, the building program had approached the $450 million level. Of this total, the federal government had contributed 75 per cent or, in other words, an investment by the federal government of $340 million in the training of skilled manpower and human resources. I am pleased to see that the present government is following along the path we blazed for it. However, last week in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) reported that the program was now at the $525 million mark and that facilities had been made available to train 140,000 new students each year. I am amazed, however, at the bland and nonchalant statements contained in the minister's speech. Not one word does he devote to the history of the vocational and technical training school program. In other words, he would lead his audience and other listeners to believe that all this came from big daddy. However, on a subject as important as this, I do not want to drag the debate into a partisan arena.

I should like to say that I am entirely in favour of the program which, to date, has been a resounding success. I heartily commend the present government for its vision for continuing our program, and I hope that those provinces which have not participated as fully as they might will now take advantage of the opportunity to do so. It is now evident that the expanded technical and vocational training program promoted by our former minister of labour and the then government will have a beneficial effect on the whole educational system. Furthermore, other countries have shown an interest in the happenings in this field of development because it is obvious that the former government made great progress. Most important, Canadians have a new interest in education and appreciate as never before the importance of proper preparation for careers and the need to keep abreast of the times—yes, ahead of the times.

In my own riding, four projects were undertaken. The total cost of these improvements was over $2.6 million, and the federal government's share amounted to almost $2 million. Training facilities were provided for more than 1,100 students. It has been my pleasure to visit most of these buildings and I am certainly very much impressed by what is taking place. Before closing, I should like to point out that our government took the trouble to clear these arrangements with the provinces. All applications originated with the municipalities and there was a close accord and harmony between the federal government, the provinces and the municipalities. A word to the wise, I believe, is sufficient.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, two parliaments ago when this legislation was initially introduced my colleague at that time, the hon. member for Peterborough, Mr. Pitman, and I were critical of some aspects of the legislation, although we supported it. I should like to go into the justification for that criticism, which I think is still relevant. I do not believe these amendments meet it, and I do not suppose they were intended to do so.

The criticism that we put forward at that time really related to the fact that the legislation, because it did not fall within any kind of framework or plan, was not going to meet what most of us, and the minister, put forward as the justification for it, that is that this was going to be a measure that would provide Canada with the kind of plan and facilities and teaching set-up that would enable us to tackle the problem of the unemployed who were short of qualifications. I was interested in the good speech the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) made, in which he said, as reported at page 4729 of Hansard, that in the time he was responsible for this particular measure a total of 519 projects were completed, including 254 new schools, 4 technical institutions and 47 trade schools, providing space for some 138,000 students each and every year.

Now, let us look at those figures again. There were 254 new schools, 4 technical institutes and 47 trade schools. In other words, the major point that we made initially still holds good. I think the pattern which has developed since the new government took over would support the statement that by far the overwhelming proportion of building that has taken place has been for institutions that fit into the secondary school framework, and not for technical institutes and trade schools which are primarily the kind of institutions which will meet the problem of retraining the unemployed worker who is having difficulty with both his mobility and finding the kind of job to suit his talents.

This point is to me perhaps the most important one in underlining some of the gaps that still exist in our national educational program. It is probably true that the constituency of Port Arthur gained more per capita out of this legislation than any other constituency in Canada. I know a big vocational school is being opened there this coming Saturday, the Grom Morgan school in Port Arthur, and the parliamentary secretary was up in Port Arthur not too many months ago for the opening of another new school. There have also been many extensions to school buildings and a new composite high school down in Geraldton.

In my riding, and in my province, one of the consequences of this legislation is that we have had this marvellous upsurge in plant, but we are no nearer having a coherent program for advanced technical education, or for retraining people in the labour force who are having difficulties meeting the requirements of employers in that labour force, than we were several years ago.

There is no doubt we have an excellent building program. I can understand the authorities in Quebec, in their complaints and bleats which have led to one part of this legislation, that is, the extension of the time limit, because it was quite obvious Quebec was not ready, and misunderstood the intent of the original act. I have seen statements by Mr. Rene Levesque and Mr. Gerin Lajoie to the effect that they misunderstood the intention of the legislation, that it was primarily in the technical institutions and trade school field, but that instead they discovered it was taken up by Ontario and British Columbia as a means of meeting the cost of a great new secondary school building program.

I think we ought to be realistic and admit that out of the act so far we have got a magnificent contribution on the part of the federal government and the provinces that responded to the problem of providing the country with more secondary schools. I insist the program has not really met head on the problem of retraining the older worker, the unemployed worker. The responsibility for this particular challenge is still resting with the local boards of education, many of which are having difficulty meeting it, not only in terms of funds but in finding the teachers and in meshing in a real training program for the older workers in this kind of school plant created as a result of the act, which plant is primarily being used for secondary school purposes.

We have had a lot of well wishing with regard to this legislation, and the idea that it is going to give great opportunity to our young people to have technical and vocational education. We have heard it said that there should be no stigma attached to this kind of education, and that we need more of it. Admittedly this is so, but in essence the new technical schools and vocational schools we have in Ontario are fulfilling merely part of the secondary school program, which I insist is not principally a training for a specific job or for the development of greater skills within this particular age group that will enable them to go right out into the work force.

All that the government has done in providing secondary school places is fine, but it is still not meeting the other challenge. One of the disappointments in this respect is that the legislation merely consists of three parts which are important. I do not think the last part, dealing with the honorarium and expansion of the council is vital, but the other three parts are important.

The first is that maximum contribution for training allowances for unemployed persons has been raised from 75 per cent to 90 per cent. This is excellent. This is one contribution that will certainly help the local school boards in meeting the cost. The other amendment, increasing the contribution from 50 per cent to 75 per cent of the cost to the provinces for those people being trained in "training in industry" programs, is also excellent; but again neither of these two important items is really going to meet the fact that we have not a coherent national program in this field.

I think I can make this point best from an article by J. B. St. John which appeared in the Globe and Mail on March 22, 1963, entitled "Money now, a plan later." It reads:

A country caught up in the technological age inevitably faces new and profoundly complex educational problems. The issues of technical education and training for skill do not challenge the principles of the humanist education, but they force an accommodation and a measure of adjustment. In our kind of society, it is not any longer a question of either a cultural education or a technical education, but rather that both are necessary.

In a simpler society, 200 years ago and more, there were only a few occupations, dominated by agriculture and to some extent by commerce. Most of these forms of work were learned at home, or by apprenticeship or indenture arranged by the home.

After the rise of the industrial revolution, with its machines and impersonal factories, the old methods of learning occupations began to break down. Apprenticeship survived for a time in certain types of skilled jobs. But the refusal of many employers to accept the responsibility and expense of training apprentices created the idea of the technical school to fill the gap. The first of these began to appear in Europe and elsewhere around 1890.

There was a considerable interest in technical education in Canada mainly in the first decade of this century, and following the first world war. The purpose of technical schools was misconceived, however, and they were used as dumping grounds for the academically slow, and after a comparatively small number of technical schools had been built, interest virtually died among the public and in the higher levels of official education.

I think I might divert here to say I agree with this analysis completely because I followed the royal commission on technical education after the first world war, and have seen the developments in Ontario where, during the early twenties and mid-twenties there was this spirited upsurge of technical schools, which failed very largely in their purpose because they did become dumping grounds. The article continues:

Today, nobody could call our society simple. There are thousands of occupations ranging from inexpressibly difficult intellectual work down to the most menial and repetitive of jobs. But the dominant fact of modern life in Canada is that technology has destroyed many basic forms of work for good, and this has left people lacking an adequate education virtually unemployable. Also, the special skills needed in industry we have tended to import, instead of training our own people. These outside sources are becoming unavailable. Our indifference to technical education has produced a crisis.

The dominion Department of Labour has been struggling since the war to rouse some interest in a broad pattern of technical education in Canada. Rehabilitation, vocational programs, trade training and the like, have been the subject of many conferences, but the effort has not caught the public ear. It was only when a block-buster approach of an enormous grant for building technical schools, trade schools and other types, offered by the dominion government, was tried that the provinces came to life, and grabbed the money while it was going. Plans came afterward.

The block-buster referred to here was the act introduced by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) when he was minister of labour. Mr. St. John goes on:

How far short we are in this country of having a well co-ordinated, thoroughly planned technical training program is evident from the details of the speech by C. Ross Ford, federal director of vocational training, to the conference on education, concluded in this space yesterday. It should be emphasized that Mr. Ford's intention was factual, not critical, but any inference that may be made from this remarkable catalogue of other countries' programs only underlines the woeful inadequacy of what we are doing.

Technical training on all its levels, is not just a matter of schools, teachers and a course of study. It involves a close and active liaison between the school system, employers, unions, parents, young people and adults. It requires the definition of standards of training, co-ordinated examination levels, a clear understanding of the various forms and purposes of technical education.

It also involves the elimination of overlapping and wasted facilities, the abandonment of outdated restrictions, such as the provision that people over 21 cannot be taught elementary subjects in school. It requires the acceptance of school training on an appropriate level, as a substitute for or alternative to traditional forms of apprenticeship. There must be an elimination of restricted admission to some occupations, in view of the huge social necessity for employment opportunities for the millions of post-war young people.

It is a pity that there was not a proper recognition of the foundations for a national technical training program before the financial inducement was offered.

The remark made at the first Canadian conference on education that "there is nothing much wrong with Canadian education that a great deal of money, properly applied, would not set right", is largely fallacious. We do need money, but far more than money we need thoughtful planning, a huge degree of persuasion and public enlightenment and, most of all, an understanding of the structure, mentality and needs of Canadian society.

Then this is the concluding paragraph that puts the thing in focus to me:

Here in Ontario we plunged headlong into an incredible spending spree for technical high schools and additions, amounting all told, if the politicians are to be believed, to nearly $200 million, and we had no plan beforehand. It may not be too late to start.

I do not know whether there is any plan, but I do know that the school boards which have gone for these new schools are getting caught up in the higher cost of the technical and vocational programming that follows from the building. Mr. S. J. Rendall, who is prominent in the Ontario department of education, revealed that technical and commercial courses add 30 per cent to school bills:

> Vocational classes have 20 pupils, on average, compared with 30 in academic courses, putting teacher salary costs higher.
> To claims that in metro Toronto vocational classes cost twice as much to operate, Mr. Rendall said metro school boards write off much of their night school costs in day pupils, distorting the school boards' statistics.
> Ontario, with only 430 high schools of all types, is building 225 new projects under the vocational training scheme agreed on in 1960 by the two senior governments.

That is from the Toronto Star of March 22, 1962. I make this point because there is no provision in this bill for a higher contribution toward these built-up costs that will go to the school boards now dealing with and working in these plans. I think that is a criticism of the bill that can well be made. I think that because these added costs hit the school boards they should receive a larger contribution from the federal government on a continuing basis. I do not know why the government hesitated to do this. I do not know whether it was because of the stock fear that all of us have when we hear the screams from the Quebecers; but it does seem to me this is something that will have to be brought within this program if it is going to be national in scope.

I want to turn to something that is much more current than Mr. St. John's analysis of a year ago. This is the brief that was presented just the other day by the Canadian teachers federation to the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Prime Minister of Canada. This is an excellent brief which really sets out to analyse the situation in Canada with regard to education, and equality of opportunity for education. I think it is a brief that all hon. members should read. I would particularly recommend it to our friends in Quebec who are so anxious to get everything in education within their own province and not have the federal government contributing at all. Some of the statistics, both in terms of the amount of money that Quebec is actually spending for education and the percentage of dropouts in Quebec, are likely to shock them. One of the conclusions to which I came after looking at the statistics was that Quebec, like many of the other provinces, certainly needs to do something desperately about its education. I still remain unconvinced, having heard the arguments, particularly from over here on my left, that the way it should do it is by cutting itself off completely from any relationship to a national plan or national objectives, and in doing this probably scuppering or destroying the intention and the wish of most of the rest of the country to have a national plan and some kind of national framework in this particular field. The Canadian teachers federation says this:

> We intend to state our conviction that this is not merely a provincial problem, but a national one.

I will repeat that for the hon. member from Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin). This is what the Canadian teachers federation says:

> We intend to state our conviction that this is not merely a provincial problem, but a national one.

They continue:

> It is not one that might quietly fade with the passage of time, but one that is increasing in urgency. Nor is it merely an emotional argument. It is one that is logical, and based on the knowledge that education has a direct relationship to a nation's economic growth.

I would like to suggest to the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabasca, and other members in this house who have expressed similar views to his, that if he would accept this argument of national economic growth I think he would have to agree that this national economic growth is indivisible in terms of Quebec or the rest of the country. But there is another point in this connection. I want to conclude that part dealing with the analysis of the problem, and the urgency, and come down to this. On page 2 the brief says:

> Canada has long since reached a state of national emergency in education. Educational costs are expected to double in the next decade. The post-war boom in enrolment has not levelled off: indeed the ratio of young children to the rest of the population has been increasing rapidly. Even the practical matter of unemployment is affected more by the general level of education than by limited, short term measures such as the Technical and Vocational Training Act.

In other words, the teachers federation of Canada has come to the conclusion that this particular measure is a limited, short term one. This is the basic criticism that we advanced about this program several years ago and it is one that I repeat here: it is a limited, short term program. I would like an answer from the minister or his parliamentary secretary—a candid answer—as to whether the government intends to make this more than a limited, short term program. I would like to know what answer they are going to give such an analysis by the Canadian teachers federation of this particular program. In the candid answer that I hope the minister will give I would like him to present us with an analysis of what factors apply in the government's thinking at this time. The factor

I want to hear about is whether all these screams, yells and howls from Quebec in connection with such program may be the reasons, or may be associated with the reasons, for the government and the minister not going forward with something that is long term and embracing. The brief continues:

> Measures in any one field can never be satisfactory if built upon an unstable base. Additional training or retraining for jobs requiring technical skills cannot be effective unless those being trained have an adequate basic education. It is at this level—the provision of a generally high quality of basic education—that the problem continues in ever increasing magnitude.

The brief then goes into some of the indicators of inequality. The arguments and statistics in this brief bowl one over when you realize just how unequal are educational opportunities in Canada, both in terms of the proportion of teachers and the retention rates at the junior matriculation level by provinces. I think members from Alberta should be proud of the fact that their province has a 60 per cent retention rate at the junior matriculation level. This goes away down; the bottom rate is for Quebec, 18 per cent amongst the Catholic schools in that province. The Protestant schools in Quebec have a somewhat better record of a 34 per cent retention. The brief goes into the reasons for inequality in terms of the basic wealth that is available to the provinces and the amount of effort the provinces could make.

The conclusion that you come to—at least, that I have come to, and I am sure anyone who looks at this brief closely will reach the same conclusion—is that we desperately need an equality of educational opportunity in this country, and we cannot do it as long as there is one part of the country that says no, or withdraws itself and insists that the other nine parts, in terms of provinces, have to accept the same basic attitude. I do not know what may be the solution to the particular dilemma that we face in this regard, but I do know this.

I am convinced that English speaking Canadians want a national program in a field such as this. They will support wholeheartedly the argument put forward in this brief; and if that means that this approach is unacceptable to the people of Quebec, then in this very important field it seems to me we ought to do what they ask, and that is to have a federal-provincial conference specifically on this question so that we can see where we stand, can get the lines drawn, and know who on the one hand are going to co-operate and accept or ask for leadership and contributions from the federal government, and who on the other hand are going to go along the line of running things on their own. I am convinced that the magnitude both of the problem implicit in this act and in the whole educational picture is such that it has to be met on a national basis with a national effort.

If we are truly two nations—I am sure I can speak with more confidence on this than on anything else I may have sounded off about or gone out on a limb on—I am convinced that English speaking Canada wants such a national program, and that they will respond to the kind of arguments and requests put forward by the Canadian teachers federation. I think all these arguments and points put forward by the Canadian teachers federation are germane to this particular piece of legislation before us, and if the Prime Minister pays attention to this brief and sets up this kind of federal-provincial conference, which seems to me both timely and necessary, then before too many months have passed we will have the act back here with a much grander scope and with greater objectives to meet the national purpose.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too much of your time, but I would like to devote a few moments to state my position with regard to the legislation now before us, that is Bill C-105.

I want at the outset to commend the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), for implementing a piece of legislation introduced by his predecessor—

Mr. Lamontagne: And which you obstructed.

Mr. Ricard: —who, by means of that legislation, wanted to do a great deal for our young people, our students who are getting ready for executive positions in the industrial or other fields where education is required.

It must be comforting, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) to see that the warnings he gave with regard to the welfare of our young people, are now heard by those who, at a certain time, went as far as to ridicule the proposed scheme. It should be a great comfort for him today to see those people finally realizing that his efforts were not to make political capital, but to help our young people prepare their future.

I still seem to remember the words of the former minister of labour, who urged our young people to continue their studies and not to leave school too early.

His advice was undoubtedly based on his personal experience as the head of a family and also because he had learned during his career that to compete against his fellow-workers, he needed knowledge and education.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider that the degree of education required by industries generally is much higher than it was only ten years ago, we then realize that we must constantly endeavour to encourage our young people to help themselves to improve their lot. Each year, a large number—far too large a number—of young Canadians leave school to enter into the labour market. Unfortunately, due to circumstances, many of those young people will be compelled to accept second-rate positions all their lives and may never carry out anything but a manual trade; they may perhaps be compelled to operate a machine repeating the same movements hour after hour, day after day, week after week. If there is anything disheartening, it is the monotony of certain jobs and this greatly contributes to discouragement among young workers.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, it is so important to give very special attention to the vocational and technical training of our young people.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL LOCATION COUNCIL

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the establishment of a national location of industry council for the purpose of directing new industry into those regions of the country which are dependent on a narrow industrial base and those which are areas of surplus manpower; and empowering the national location of industry council, in co-operation with the monetary and fiscal authorities, to offer incentives to attract new industry to such regions when requested by provincial and municipal governments.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving this resolution this afternoon I am very concerned, as is the government, with areas which are not receiving their fair share of national development. It has recently been said in this house, and rightly so, that many of the areas now falling behind in industrial development are very much concerned at their being designated depressed areas. The area I represent is not a depressed area but one that has certainly lagged far behind the national trend of industrial development. I believe this question is something to which the federal government must give immediate consideration.

There are those, I am sure, who would say that the development of industry is not necessarily a responsibility of the federal government but that it should be left to free enterprise. However, the people of Canada have proven, over the years, that they do wish to do something to help certain types of industry, such as the gold mining industry, in particular circumstances. They have indicated this to the extent of a large portion of the $120 million which has been paid in cost aid to the gold mining communities over the last 16 years. Recently, within the last month, representatives of the gold mining communities came to Ottawa and presented a brief to the federal government in connection with the extension of emergency assistance. Those who are familiar with that presentation will be aware that many, though not all, of those communities had accepted cost aid as something of a permanent nature. Many of them, including the town of Timmins, had accepted it as the solution to the difficulties now being encountered by those communities. Others, including the township of Teck, believe that this form of assistance had not proved the answer to those difficulties. They do not believe it provides a future for the townships concerned and, in their view, it is only a means of maintaining an industry which could not otherwise survive. It is argued that the federal government, instead of raising the price of gold, or negotiating an increased price for that commodity, has preferred to give assistance to the mining communities, and that this alone has enabled them to survive for the last 16 years.

Because of the way in which this primary industry, of such great importance to Canada, has developed, I believe the day should never come when these communities are left to their own resources unless, of course, the situation has radically changed. Some will say that the federal government ought not to involve itself in the community affairs of a particular area. However, we are already doing this, in a sense, by the assistance which is now provided to the designated areas. We have done it, too, in the Atlantic area by the creation of the Atlantic development board and the attempts made to develop new industry in that area. I believe the time has come to give consideration to the needs of other areas in this nation. I have in mind, particularly, the gold mining industry which, it seems to me, can count on no future unless it has the support of provincial and federal governments, and unless the efforts of government at the local level are supported by the presence of new and diverse industries.

I am sure all members are well aware of the contribution which was made by this industry to the national welfare in the 'thirties, especially, when this country was suffering from the effects of the depression. Many men from other parts of the country came to northern Ontario to work in the gold mines which were then enjoying a relatively prosperous period in relation to other industries. Many of the industries which were then established in the province of Ontario depended upon wealth being produced by the gold mines for their own livelihood. The prosperity of the gold mining industry was a stimulus to the economy of the entire nation. However, these mining communities are now reaching the end of their natural development and there is a need to provide them with assistance in new ways. By the phrase relocation of industry we do not mean taking industry out of one community and moving it to another. We mean that the federal government should provide incentives to encourage industries to enter Canada, or the province of Ontario, in which I am of course most interested, and establish themselves permanently. Possibly special incentives could be given with respect to areas where a certain percentage of the mines are in decline, or where a certain number of mines have been closed down. No doubt, if assistance of this kind were given, industry would be encouraged to enter such areas.

Action along these lines has been taken in Great Britain, though for a different reason. It was found that the facilities available in the traditional industrial areas were heavily overtaxed—there were not enough school houses or services of a municipal nature to allow the addition of substantial new industry in those areas. On the other hand, there were areas, such as we have in Canada, where there was a surplus of manpower and community resources readily available, though the latter could only be used to advantage if industry chose to settle in those districts. Anyone who travels to Britain today and examines the industrial development which has taken place in the north of that country, a region which 20 years ago depended primarily on the shipping industry and on mining, will be surprised at the facilities which have been provided, and the way in which declining industries have been replaced by young and vigorous new enterprises.

It is true that in Britain the government finds itself able to exercise a degree of control which the Canadian government is not yet, and may never be, in a position to use unless the tax relationship between the central government and the provincial governments is radically changed. In the United Kingdom the government is able to decide what concessions shall be made to attract industries to locate in any given area. It is also able to influence the decision whether or not a company may raise the finances necessary to expand or locate in a given area. We may not be in such a position here in Canada, but I do believe there are incentives which could be granted so as to encourage development wherever it was thought desirable to do so. There is no area in Canada which does not possess certain advantages. All areas have assets which could be taken into account by any federal government which wished to provide the machinery necessary to assist them.

I am sure the Department of Industry is going to do this for Canada as soon as it has the facilities available. This is a new department, and I am pleased to note that some of the up to date councillors of the township of Teck—they are not all up to date—have decided that this is the future for their community, that the gold mining economy cannot be bolstered up forever and that new industry is going to have to be provided for the people of that area with the assistance of the federal and provincial governments and a great deal of hard work on the part of the municipal officials all working toward this end.

This has been one of the problems we have faced. I am sure it is also true in the maritimes and in any area where there is an industry that is decaying and disappearing. This is particularly so in the case of mining, because the resource is not renewable. Yet you will find many municipal officials who are pledged to maintaining to the very end the economy of that industry. The situation is no different in the areas I represent or in any other area of Canada. We quite often find municipal officials pledged to maintaining something that is really disappearing and they are not looking forward to the day when something has to replace that which appears to be gone.

As I mentioned, there are assessable assets in any community. There are the people of the community who build their homes and raise their children there. The human asset is one of the most difficult to transfer from one place to another. We have all been aware of the difficulty that always arises with the displacement of labour within a given area, and trying to move that labour to another area where employment may be available. It is not only a question of the remaining that is necessary. There is the fact that people have their roots in the community, which I think gives a great deal of stability to any community and is a most valuable asset. Therefore I believe we should not think of moving people, but rather should think of making assets available that will make it possible for the community to flourish and be a success again.

In each area there are community service assets such as streets, roads, hospitals and fire departments in addition to the new materials in the area. In any given area there is always some natural resource that is an asset to the development of industry in that area. While I am not suggesting that all industry should be based on natural resources, certainly the federal government can survey these assets if they provide this type of service to municipalities and provincial governments requesting it.

Lastly, one of the greatest assets any community can have is its transportation facilities. I am quite happy to say that in northern Ontario we have many forms of transportation which would be a vital asset to any industry wishing to settle in that area. So far as many commodities are concerned, there is no difference between moving them from areas close to Toronto or Hamilton and moving the same type of commodity from northern Ontario to Toronto. Coming north or going south there are none of the great traffic bottlenecks that there are in the metropolitan area, or in the Hamilton-Niagara area, from the point of view of the movement of transport trucks. I have been told by truck drivers that they can leave Kirkland Lake, unload in Toronto and be on their way within the same period of time as a transport coming from Hamilton to Toronto during the day. All it means is another eight or ten hours wages for the truck driver and another barrel or two of diesel oil. This is the main difference so far as transportation is concerned.

We also have the provincially owned railway which is willing to make concessions toward the development of industry, and this certainly will not be a roadblock in developing industry in northern Ontario. We also have air transportation, and as far as the people are concerned the transportation facilities generally are sufficient.

We have another asset that many people do not know about or have not paid any attention to, in that many of the gold mining communities are less than 200 miles from a salt water port. Rail facilities are available, and in time a large percentage of the flow of goods will be to Europe via the port of Moosonee.

In moving this resolution I do not expect that the government is going to accept it immediately because I think it takes a great deal of planning, a great deal of pushing and a lot of hollering before the federal government ever decides to move in any direction. I suggest that we will holler just as loud as the maritimers, but perhaps we will have to holler for a shorter period of time than they did in getting assistance for their area, because I think the idea is generally accepted now that it is not a bad thing for the federal government to assist areas where such assistance is desired by the municipal and provincial governments.

I am sure that the areas of northern Ontario that I represent, particularly those dependent on the gold mining industry, have now come to the conclusion that they are going to have to have assistance from the federal government if they are going to be able to accomplish the secondary industrial development which they need. I should like to add in closing that in our areas community spirit is a very important factor. We do not want to displace our people. We want to use whatever method is possible to keep them there, and if the government wants to make a suggestion on the matter of relocation of industry I will be very happy to listen to any proposition they put forward and try to obtain the necessary support for it.

We have a unique situation in the gold mining industry. Eighty per cent of our people working in that industry are heads of families. Sixty per cent of them own their own homes. The average age of the people working in that industry is over 50 years. I think these factors will indicate to the house and to the country that there is a great desire on the part of these people to stay in that community and to find employment for the people we are training, because within a radius of 100 miles from Kirkland Lake we have the training facilities that will provide highly skilled and trained young people for any industrial development that can be brought to our area. At the present time these people are all being exported to southern Ontario, other parts of industrial Canada and to the United States. I believe that so far as our area is concerned retraining is not going to be the answer nor is relocation of the people. But if we investigate the possibilities that have been opened up by the developments in England and some of the northern European countries, we will be able to do something by way of relocating industry that will be much more satisfactory than relocating our citizens.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Berger (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of interest that I looked upon the motion put forward by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). As a matter of fact, a rather large part of the riding I have the honour to represent in this house is especially interested in industry. We already have firms that export quality products outside Quebec and are gaining an ever-growing reputation, which is saying a lot.

Indeed, who has not heard about the famous Belanger or L'Islet products, whether they be stoves, furnaces and refrigerators, or furniture, textiles and foodstuffs, to mention only those.

But it so happens that we also have a fairly great number of smaller industries which, unfortunately, are faced with too many thorny problems in the finance, labour, marketing and development fields.

It seems to me quite natural in this world of ours, in the middle of the twentieth century, that our areas should try desperately to get more industrialized, particularly in Quebec where we have to suffer an unforgivable lag compared to certain of the other provinces which, I have to admit it, managed to move ahead before we did. But let us not cry over spilt milk, let us face the future with more serenity, thanks to wiser measures which are better suited to our present and future needs.

However, I must say in passing that small industry, back home as elsewhere, is far from being sufficiently protected. It is being bled white and, on account of that, it is too often faced with impending bankruptcy because of our idleness, so we must act quickly. I wish to quote the famous words spoken by a former mayor of the city of Montreal, who was also a member of parliament: "Hurry up, it is urgent".

It is all very well to ask for the establishment of a national location council for industries in order to distribute them more evenly, but I agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming when he says that we must also give adequate warranties of success at all levels, federal, provincial and municipal. Moreover, it is most urgent that before venturing too far in that field, we seek primarily to strengthen and improve the position of the small industries that already exist.

In my opinion, it is absolutely necessary to admit that loans must be made easier by revising credit restrictions and offering to those interested lower interest rates, to make it easier for them to meet their numerous obligations.

The services offered by the industrial financing bank in Quebec, for instance, fall far short of the demand; and when one wants a loan, the maximum amount is so low that it becomes more of a hindrance than a help.

With regard to the chartered banks, they have too often merged, with the result that our people are sent to Roy. Nat. or to what I would call other trusts of the same kind.

Even the income tax is endangering to an alarming extent the survival of small industries, when the advantages granted to bigger plants are considered. I feel it would be advisable to review our taxation system in that connection with the co-operation of the provinces.

That is why I add here that I strongly hope we will secure many tangible proofs of good will from our various governments in that respect, following the federal-provincial conference that will start right here in Ottawa in a few days.

Would we not find there, in that increased assistance to small industries, the ideal means to fight even more effectively unemployment which is the bane of our modern world? Personally, I am convinced of it, and I would dare say, in considering the countless number of small industries operating across our country —I am referring more particularly to the province of Quebec—that nearly 65 to 70 per cent of our unemployed would find jobs if such measures were adopted.

For instance, in wartime, if I am not mistaken, the government had implemented a policy under which it would pay a certain percentage, decreasing with the length of service, of the wages of newcomers or apprentices in some industrial trades. I am thinking for instance about printing or machine shops; we had thus placed on the labour market better qualified workers, men and women better prepared to make a place for themselves, a more desirable and more promising place which has kept improving ever since, as far as they are concerned.

Would it not be possible to consider similar measures, other than the one recently put into effect by the present government with regard to aged workers, and for which we commend it greatly?

We need not have any apprehensions about the participation of our municipalities in such a program, because there is already evidence that they are looking forward to such a measure; in this connection let me give you a concrete example taken in the municipality of Notre Dame Du Rosaire in my riding. Here are a few excerpts from the daily newspaper Le Soleil of Tuesday, October 29 last, in that regard:

> In order to bolster the sagging economy of the small municipality of Notre Dame Du Rosaire, in the county of Montmagny, the local municipal councillors have just taken a step which is, so to speak, unique in the province.
> As a matter of fact, the councillors of that municipality, which is presided over by the mayor, Mr. Joseph Morin, decided to grant a municipal tax exemption for a period of ten years to any industry which would settle in the municipality.

The municipality of Notre Dame Du Rosaire is situated on highway 26, a few miles from the county seat, Montmagny, and it has a population of 726.

National Location of Industry Council

To industries that would like to settle in Notre Dame Du Rosaire, that municipality offers excellent transportation facilities, namely highway 26 which is entirely paved, and the C.N.R. network. The municipality has waterworks and it is situated near the South river. Moreover, a lot of land is available at very reasonable prices for industrial purposes.

The economy of Notre Dame Du Rosaire being mostly based on logging and farming, it follows that the activity is on the down-grade.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, today:

The members of the municipal council show no preference as to the type of industry which could eventually settle there, as long as it can employ about 20 men all year round.

As you may realize it, that community is not that particular.

Here is, Mr. Speaker, an example likely to prompt us to proceed farther with our work.

Our most complete co-operation is assured to the government to which I have the honour to belong, but although I respect and favour the plan contemplated by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I must at the same time, in all fairness and decency, point out that important achievement of the present administration, namely the establishment of a Department of Industry.

As was recently indicated by the minister in charge of that important department, there is no intention to take over the part of the provinces as regards the incentives to be provided for private industries.

Just recently, the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) stated:

That the objectives of his department were to set up close and continuous contacts with industrialists and businessmen, without overlooking any consultation with economic bodies already set up in the provinces.

He said that the federal government will only mind its own business, wishing to play a part which it is often the only government in a position to play effectively because of its powers.

The minister then recalled that his department covered the whole range of industrial activities in Canada, from textiles to aeronautics, and he underlined that more emphasis would be put from now on, among other things, on the economic development of the communities most seriously affected by unemployment.

Spokesman for the Canadian manufacturing industry in the federal government, the Minister of Industry promised in no uncertain terms to fulfil that obligation and to seek the necessary co-operation of both the private industries and the provinces, in order to achieve a better solution to the economic problems of our country.

[Text]

I would like to bring to the attention of my good friend from Timiskaming a booklet, courtesy of the Civil Service Commission of Canada, entitled, "Department of Industry," which outlines briefly but effectively the functions and the work of this new department. May I quote more specifically:

—the department will:
promote the establishment of industrial research and development facilities—work in closest co-operation with provincial departments of industry—work with all agencies at various levels of federal, provincial and municipal government to provide industrial opportunities in designated areas.

The organization of the department follows as much as possible the natural groupings of industry. Within the 10 operational branches there are 33 divisions, each of which encompasses a major segment of an industrial group and centres its interest on an area of industry which is homogeneous as to raw materials, work processes and end-products.

The major role of the area development agency will be one of co-ordination and promotion. It will depend on line divisions and branches to do much of its research and program administration.

I think this gives an idea and proves to a certain extent I was right in mentioning the facts, as I have been doing so far.

[Translation]

Following the establishment of the department I have just mentioned, which has become an accomplished fact, and the statement of the minister concerned on the policy of the said department, I reached the conclusion that the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming, commendable and well meaning though it may be, has practically no further object, since all he requests is now being happily realized by the present administration, which I want to congratulate, once more, for its successful venture in that important section of our economy I hope, nevertheless, the few remarks I have humbly and personally brought forward will be studied carefully, and, above all, will be implemented for the greatest good of my fellow citizens and of the country at large, for which, you may rest assured, they will be forever grateful.

[Text]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to discuss for a few minutes the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). The areas to which it refers include the maritime provinces, and especially the constituency of Pictou which I represent. In that constituency the closing down of coal mines, which commenced about 13 years ago, has resulted in the causing of a labour surplus there. The men who worked in the coal mining industry were unable to get other work.

The largest employer in the area is the Eastern Car Company at Trenton, Nova Scotia, which manufactures rolling stock for the railways. The area is dependent a great deal on this type of industry. When engaged at full capacity it employs approximately 1,200 men, but the difficulty now is that the two main railways, the C.P.R. and the C.N.R., need only a certain number of cars and are going into specialization. This has made the area one of continuing labour surplus. It has been so designated by the government, and was also designated a labour surplus area by the former government.

What is needed is other types of secondary industry to employ the workmen in the area. Although the intentions of the hon. member are worthy of commendation, I am not quite sure I agree with his recommendation for a national location of industry council. We have many commissions and councils at present. We have the Atlantic development board; and when I questioned the Secretary of State, who is answerable to parliament for that board, I gathered from his remarks that the Atlantic development board was set up to look into matters of importance to the whole Atlantic area, to provide the necessary climate for development, to provide help in transportation and freight costs, and thereby help the whole area. I also understood that the area development agency under the new Department of Industry would be assisting in attracting new industries.

Perhaps as the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger) has just said, the terms of reference of the area development agency, under the Department of Industry, are wide enough to carry out the intentions expressed in the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming, but I sincerely believe that extraordinary measures have to be taken to get areas, such as the one I represent, on their feet.

The hon. member for Timiskaming says that the council he seeks to establish would work in co-operation with the monetary and fiscal authorities to offer incentives in order to attract new industry. It can be pointed out that the former government introduced the incentive of double depreciation, and the present government, through the income tax bill passed recently, has given other forms of incentive. It can also be pointed out that the former government, through the then minister of finance, was able to attract an automobile plant to the Dartmouth area, the Volvo plant from Sweden. I am not an economist or a financier. I do not know what additional incentives would be needed, but in the present situation I feel something out of the ordinary has to be effected.

In the province of Nova Scotia a crown corporation, Industrial Estates Limited, has been set up. This has been able to attract a large number of small industries into the province, including the automobile plant. They construct buildings and rent them to firms, giving the firms an opportunity to purchase the buildings once they are on their feet. In a conversation with the president of that corporation, who lives in the same area as I do, I gathered he felt in order to assist areas such as ours there had to be additional help from the federal government. Industrial Estates have only so much in assets, and federal government assistance is necessary. As I have said, perhaps the new area development agency can carry out this role, but I believe it will have a lot of work to do, and I hope it will have the necessary machinery to do it.

In my own area there is a voluntary organization known as the Pictou county research and development commission. This was set up a few years ago and includes members of the clergy, the steel workers union and representatives of the industries in the county. This commission is attempting to do something for the area. I suggested at a meeting that they get in touch with the Atlantic development board. I believe they have done that, and they have also talked with Industrial Estates. I hope, once the area development agency is set up and the new Department of Industry starts to work, the agency will have people who can go there and talk to the members of this commission. This is a voluntary organization. It can do good work, and I think it is a most necessary thing.

I might point out that in that area the vocational school was opened this fall to help our younger people learn the necessary trades. A labour report was issued after the prime minister of the day, now the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), had representatives of the Department of Labour and the Department of Trade and Commerce go to the area and carry out a survey. The report was confidential at the time, but I have been able to see it. The report pointed out that the people in the area, even those who were older, could be educated in the various skills and trades, as well as the younger people. Therefore the necessary labour force is there.

As I said originally, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak very much longer on this matter. My own constituency is certainly the type that would be assisted by measures along the lines of the measure introduced by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I repeat, they must be extraordinary measures in order to cure a chronic blight which the people of our area have suffered. A couple of good sized industries brought into the area would make all the difference in the world and would give the people of Pictou county a glimmer of light. About two years ago the former government arranged, by way of export credits to assist the Dominion Steel and Coal Company to sell rolling stock to Argentina. It was estimated that the order, amounting to about $25 million, would keep that plant running for approximately a year. Unfortunately a revolution occurred and the order was of course cancelled. The glimmer of hope was there, but it was soon obliterated upon the cancellation of the order. However, Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for the good intentions he has exhibited in this bill. Perhaps this council would be the proper way to do it, but I urge the government to look into this matter, and in areas such as my own accelerate the program and provide extraordinary measures to assist them.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have read this evening the notice of motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters); incidentally, the hon. member's constituency is close to mine, in the northwest section of Ontario. It seems to me that the notice of motion rests upon serious motives. Its objectives are similar to those embodied in legislation brought in by the government not so long ago.

Here is the hon. member's notice of motion:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the establishment of a national location of industry council for the purpose of directing new industries into those regions of the country which are dependent on a narrow industrial base...

I am thinking, at the moment, of some regions where that base is very narrow indeed. Take for instance our own area: La Reine, Rouyn, Noranda, Val d'Or, Malartic, Cadillac, Amos. It goes without saying that it would be a good thing if new industries were implanted there. A moment ago, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger) spoke to us of the needs of his constituency for new industries.

However, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fact that all these objectives are highly commendable, and that the motives are very weighty, it must be admitted that the results obtained so far are not very satisfactory, good intentions notwithstanding. Our section of the country is marking time; no new industries have sprouted there, and we seem content to listen to the goodwill statements of the government and of certain members of our assembly.

This morning, before I left Rouyn, I inquired about the number of unemployed in our area. In November 1963, there are over 1,600 unemployed. Family heads are clamouring for jobs: we suggested they try the winter works program and some found jobs there.

This morning, I had the visit of two bachelors, two young Canadians who want to earn a living. One of them was over 40 and the other one was only 23. The U.I.C. office in Rouyn told them: "You are bachelors and we have to give priority to heads of families." We understand that a father who has many children to support certainly needs more assistance than a bachelor.

However, what are we going to do about bachelors under this well-meaning system?

Mr. Habel: They only have to get married.

Mr. Caouette: I hear my hon. friend from Cochrane say that they only have to get married. They cannot even afford to do so.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to say to Canadian bachelors: "Get married", but where are they going to find the money to do so? Where will they find the job that will make it possible for them to consider matrimony?

Those are not solutions, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) meant well when he introduced this motion because we do need new industries but we have been talking of new industries in northwestern Quebec and northeastern Ontario for ten years now.

The government is well intentioned. It encourages industries to establish themselves in the so-called depressed areas. In spite of those good intentions, just go and see whether a single new industry has settled in those areas following the legislation which was introduced recently by the present government and which grants a tax holiday to new industries which would settle in depressed areas.

Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming goes on as follows:

> —and empowering the national location of industry council, in co-operation with the monetary and fiscal authorities, to offer incentives to attract new industry to such regions when requested by provincial and municipal governments.

Now, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet was right when he said a few moments ago that the government had already enacted legislation to that end.

> —to offer incentives to attract new industry—

However, we are still at the same point. We are grappling with the problem in Bill No. C-105 since it intends to create new jobs or to help retrain workers displaced or replaced by machines, enabling them to get some training, to become technicians, to acquire new skills in order to be in a position finally to find work.

Now, once again in spite of all those fine intentions, under the present system, an unemployed worker is trained, and instead of having an unskilled unemployed worker, you have a trained one, who will still be without work. Moreover, there are many such workers in our firms and industries. For example, in my own business in Rouyn, I keep two or three employees—why? So that they will earn a livelihood during winter—while I could have done without their services very easily during that season. Now, these employees have remained in my service so that they could provide for their family and children. I believe our employers do likewise, in order to prevent many Canadian families from being poverty stricken.

Mr. Speaker, I endorse this motion whose purpose is to direct new industries towards our regions and our depressed areas, to develop Canada's natural resources and to help heads of families and our youth improve their lot. If we could do that, I believe we would have achieved something worth-while but I doubt very much that it will be so because automation is making constant inroads with the result that it is difficult for men to earn their living.

We, on this side of the house, are quite willing to co-operate and to go along with the experiments that are suggested but let us do something, let us encourage the establishment of new industries and let us see what will happen in five or ten years from now. That is fine but I hope it will be possible for me, at some other time, to express my views and to set forth a constructive program for the development of Canada's tremendous resources and possibilities. Then, I think Social Credit will have made its contribution to our legislation.

[Text]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on this measure, for I believe there is much in it to commend itself to the attention of the house. In my constituency recently a seminar was held at Bridgewater to discuss the recurrent problem of winter unemployment. This seminar was attended by municipal councillors, wardens of the municipality and mayors of the different towns in the area, and their problem in that section of Lunenburg county was the traditional one of unemployment during the winter period. We know that this is a seasonal situation; but we have industrious, ambitious people in that section of Lunenburg county, and I believe part of their problem could be solved if secondary industry could be induced to locate in that area. It is quite possible that with the extra incentives suggested in this motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) new industries would locate there.

The idea proposed by the hon. member is not new. I recently returned from the United Kingdom where I had the opportunity of sitting in the British house of commons and listening to proposals put forward. These were recorded in the Daily Mail and I believe are worthy of mention:

> Top priority is to be given to the socially depressed northeast in the government's plans for modernizing Britain.
> Its population of 2,875,000 will get a bigger share than any other part of the country of expenditure on new roads, houses, schools and factories.
> There is to be a continuous improvement in all public services, from libraries and swimming baths to street lighting and parks.
> These and other great changes are envisaged as part of the biggest recovery operation for an area hit by high unemployment ever conceived and sanctioned by a British government.
> The program for the northeast and another for Scotland, published yesterday as white papers, call for long term investment costing scores of millions of pounds.

I believe something of this nature should be done. When the Conservative party were in power we made a start along these lines. Our subsidies for shipbuilding were a great inducement toward providing employment, especially in Nova Scotia, where our shipyards are booming. But while this has provided employment for a section of our people, there are still some citizens who throughout the winter period are unemployed. I feel that something outstanding must be done. I do not agree that a national location of industry council should be set up. We already have a new Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) and I believe these areas are now known to the minister and his assistants. I think it would be possible to consult with those provincial and municipal authorities who are well aware of the problem and who could give valuable information to the new department as to what industries could be located in these depressed areas, areas where there is unemployment, and new measures thereby brought into effect which would assist new industry to locate there. I think extraordinary measures are needed. For too long were we in Nova Scotia looked upon as the depressed maritimes. In my view, now that we have the Atlantic development board, this is one problem which could be referred to it, and in consultations between the directors of that board and the new Department of Industry I believe new incentives would bring about an improved situation which would help the areas most affected by unemployment, especially in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I should point out to the house that if the hon. member for Timiskaming speaks now he will close the debate. The hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I just want to raise a point of order. I think the hon. member in the Social Credit party who is sitting next to the hon. member for Timiskaming has tried to rise to speak on several occasions.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that no one else wishes to speak on this motion because this will give us the opportunity of taking a vote and I do not wish to delay that, I appreciate the support which has been given to this motion and welcome support in the vote.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hon. gentleman is not able to speak now. I warned the house that if the hon. member for Timiskaming spoke he would close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question? Moved by Mr. Peters that—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No. Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock I must advise the house that the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired. The house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, might I suggest that you were already in the process of calling the vote and the only reason it has been delayed was because of questions which were raised. I suggest the house continue with the question which you were in the process of putting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I shall have to call it six o'clock unless the house decides otherwise. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen for the second reading of Bill No. C-105, to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned at five o'clock, I was saying that the house should give a lot of attention to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act because of its great influence on the career of a great number of Canadians.

The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) had been concerned for a long time with the question of technical and vocational training. Therefore, as soon as he was appointed minister of labour, he called for a detailed study of the matter. He did not want to enter lightly into such a complex field. And before launching such a program, he wanted first to know the means then at the government's disposal in order to avoid useless duplication.

The provinces were then invited to make their needs known so that a general program that could give satisfaction to all interested parties could be formulated.

These studies have led to the conclusion that the total cost of construction works required to get the program under way was approximately $511 million. Out of that amount, the federal contribution totalled $326 million.

Last week, the hon. member for Ontario told us that the capital mentioned resulted in the construction of 254 new schools, 4 institutes of technology and 47 trade schools.

These new facilities make it possible to accommodate 138,000 new students each year. Fast developments in education, in every aspect, require constant efforts to keep up to date in the field of education as well as the field of vocational training.

I am pleased that the authorities of my province decided to avail themselves of the advantages offered by this legislation initiated by the previous Conservative government.

I have in my hand a summary indicating the projects approved in the province of Quebec between April 1, 1961, and March 14, 1962. It is indicated that 19 institutions in our province benefited from the provisions of this legislation. The estimated construction costs of those institutions was close to $11.25 million with a federal participation of nearly $8 million. The said institutions can provide facilities for some 2,550 students.

It is with pleasure that I bring to the attention of the house the fact that two institutions in the city of St. Hyacinthe took advantage of this act, a Conservative conception. It was, first of all, the textile institute which received grants totalling close to $36,000 for the purchase of machinery and equipment. Then, a grant of $3 million was paid out for the purpose of helping in the construction of the farm technology institute and the buildings are under construction.

Besides the substantial grants just mentioned, several industrial training classes were organized by the local unemployment insurance office for the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the textile industry in the province of Quebec, and more particularly in the constituency I have the honour to represent in this house, I plan to direct the rest of my remarks to the need of preparing the technicians and leaders needed in that important sector of our economy.

The primary textile industry is the second largest employer in the province. It provides work to approximately 44,000 workers and the gross value of its production reaches more than $500 million every year. There are primary textile factories in a hundred localities of the province of Quebec. It is essential, therefore, to provide for the technical training of the personnel required to take charge of this industry which is so important for our workers.

According to a recent survey, 3,000 more workers having received a technical training will be required in the textile industry of Quebec within the next ten years.

The same survey has shown that in 1960, 2,500 persons were employed in administrative and technical positions. Moreover, it has been estimated that as a result of separation due to illness or retirement, the textile industry in Quebec needs at the present time at least 75 new graduates in textile each year.

In 1970, at least 150 graduates will be required each year to meet the needs of this typical Quebec industry.

According to the experts' estimates and provided that the domestic market and imports follow their present trends, the Canadian textile industry will provide jobs for 121,000 workers in 1970.

I, therefore, urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) to devote his full attention to this problem, reminding him that the St. Hyacinthe textile institute is administered by a qualified staff who has already trained a large number of technicians and professionals in the textile industry. In fact, those professionals and technicians now hold prominent positions in industry not only in Quebec but throughout Canada.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) will undoubtedly agree with me that the director of the St. Hyacinthe textile institute and his loyal associates will co-operate extensively with the proper authorities to ensure the continuation of this project in the province of Quebec which came to life under another government and which received subsidies from the previous Conservative government, to train leaders who will be able to make a success out of the Quebec textile industry in the interests of the province and of the country at large.

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words with regard to the bill now before us, and particularly as to the amendments having to do with the provision of training to persons in industry. I should like to ask the minister if the legislation is going to help apprenticeship training in industry. I do not feel that the act covers apprenticeship training and I should like to speak on this point for a few minutes. First may I say that our country must feel embarrassed at times at having to go abroad to secure skilled workers for our industries when there are so many unemployed people throughout the country.

Apprenticeship schemes existing in a variety of industries are subject to the uncertainties of Canada's economy. Many schemes do not have legal recognition, as a result of which the government insists that, come depression or boom, apprentices will be guaranteed their full term of training. However, apprentices in a few designated trades are protected in Ontario by a government training program. Outside these designated trades management, conscientious as it may or may not be, has no obligation to apprentices. If lay-offs are necessary the apprentice may be asked to leave in the middle of his training.

There is no general scheme whereby this half-trained young man can be absorbed by his industry elsewhere in Canada so that his training will not be interrupted. He is left to his own resources. He may have to seek entirely different work and he is always susceptible to the temptation of higher wages in a job having a limited future. An unscrupulous employer can also take an apprentice on with the sole purpose of gaining cheap labour. When depression hits the plant a fully trained journeyman, unless protected by a union contract, can be laid off and the apprentice kept on to take over at a lower wage.

This shortsightedness on the part of the employer has raised the ire and the suspicions of labour. The result is that most unions insist on rigid seniority clauses in their contracts to protect the journeymen. A certain number of apprentices are permitted in ratio to journeymen and, if necessary, lay-offs abide by the same ratio. Out of all this situation arguments come from both sides. Management accuses labour of sacrificing apprentices in times of lay-off. Labour accuses management of using apprentices for selfish ends when they should be treating them as an operational cost and an investment in the future of their particular industry.

This situation is not general. Many companies have apprenticeship plans that are working to the satisfaction of management and labour. The Ontario government has made some advancement in implementing training programs, and each province has been assisted by the federal act which was brought forward by the former Conservative government. I should like to quote two gentlemen, one a union leader and the other a factory manager, in order to point out their views in regard to apprenticeship training. Mr. Ralph Sullivan of the united electrical union has this to say:

> Companies tend to render the subject of apprenticeship to the rise and fall of production. We are naturally opposed to the journeyman being laid off so that management can eventually bring in new, untrained people as cheap labour. Management must take on the obligation of training new workers but not at the expense of experienced men with established service.
> Lack of incentive among young men toward apprenticeship is not governed by high wages in other occupations. It is simply because industry will not guarantee them being able to serve their full time. No security is offered. This is what is discouraging youngsters. I know examples where a man has had to spend eight years of his life instead of four to get his trade because his training has been deferred by lay-offs.

Mr. Robert Barrett, factory manager, has this to say:

> An apprentice must be guaranteed his training time. Perhaps the best idea would be to have a training scheme that is outside of labour's seniority clauses and beyond the reach of management as a source of cheap labour. Management-labour committees could be set up within industries to protect apprentices along these lines.
> Government should have a hand in this, of course, perhaps on a provincial basis but within a national scheme so that an apprentice can go elsewhere if he is affected by lay-offs. The provincial government—

Mr. Barrett is speaking of the Ontario government.

> —has already done a lot of groundwork on this problem but could be more directly involved. Perhaps governments could subsidize apprentices by paying part of their wages while they are training on the job. This would take some of the onus off management and assure labour that the apprentices are protected.

One can see from these two quotations that these men, leaders in their own fields, are interested in apprenticeship training. There is a lot of talk about the need for expansion in industry, but how can we expand if we have not got the skilled labour? I feel that the Department of Labour, and especially the minister, should give serious thought to instigating proper legislation to improve our apprenticeship training program. It should be possible to secure men for skilled trades in Canada. We should not have to go outside the country to find the necessary skilled workers.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, when we are considering this question of further assistance to the vocational and technical training of the young people of the country I look upon it as a very happy coincidence that parliament at the present time is considering the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, because these two matters can be intermeshed to the benefit of Canada and Canadian taxpayers as a whole. When the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare were introduced on Thursday the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Casselman) and the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Slogan) pointed out that, with such vast expenditures being made by this second greatest spending department of the government, there must be opportunities for reducing expenditures if they are closely examined month by month and year by year.

Speaking along the same theme on Thursday night, I made the suggestion that the first big cut that could be made in the expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare, one which would save many of the provincial prepaid hospital insurance schemes now in jeopardy, would be to transfer the training of student nurses from the departments of health in the ten provinces to the departments of education. I pointed out at that time the departments of education of the ten provinces now train young people for every career, trade and vocation there is, except nursing. I suggested that by putting nursing under the departments of education, money would be saved the departments of health.

The Ontario government is making haste slowly in this direction. I sincerely want to compliment them and commend them for what they are doing under the direction of the Hon. Dr. Dymond, the minister of health, and the Hon. William Davis, minister of education. The Ontario government, under the department of education, has been conducting for some years a course for registered nursing assistants at the Beal technical school in London, Ontario, where they are graduating registered nursing assistants. About four years ago they extended this effort to a school in my own riding of York-Humber, the Weston collegiate and vocational institute which now has a course for registered nursing assistants.

I point out that these courses in the Beal technical school in London, Ontario and the Weston collegiate and vocational institute in Weston are under the department of education. This has been a great departure on the part of the provincial department of health in putting these courses under the department of education. In addition, the province of Ontario, with the ready co-operation of the Hon. Dr. Dymond and under the careful eye of the Hon. William Davis, is instituting a new course for nurses at the Ryerson polytechnical institute. The legislation now before us lends itself to adaptation for the education of nurses throughout the ten provinces.

It is the great anomaly of the present day that, when we have so many unemployed throughout the country, the one vocation that could use more and more employees is nursing and other hospital employment. There is nothing but a shortage of applicants in this area. This is due primarily, of course, to the lack of pay the graduate nurse can expect to receive upon graduation. Second, it is due to the present method of education of nurses. Many young girls resent the convent-like atmosphere of being in by ten every night of the week with one late night in the month. They would sooner have freedom and train for secretaries, stenographers, artists or any other vocation but nursing, because under the nursing education system in use they are cabined and confined in their student days.

By moving the education of nurses over to the department of education under the legislation we are now considering, great assistance can be given to the provincial governments for the education of persons to become registered nurses. It is true that student nurses for generations past, and at the present time, are largely confined to that class between 18 and 22 years of age. I would urge upon the ten provincial governments to give serious consideration to training, under the moneys made available to them under this legislation, married women between the ages of 35 and 40. It seems that in this day and generation women give up bearing children by the age of 30. By the time they are 35 or 36, the youngest child is in school and the mother is at home alone during the day. If attention were paid to educating married women from 35 to 40 and they were advised that they would be trained as registered nurses or certified nursing assistants at a nearby collegiate, vocational or technical school, I am certain that thousands of women would be attracted to this new avenue of employment.

I would suggest that the students who go to these technical and vocational schools, with the assistance provided by this legislation, should be paid by the hour for the work they do at the hospitals where they will be given their clinical experience. Their lectures could be taken in vocational and technical schools or at university buildings, if close; but the clinical experience would be gained at the hospital, where they would be paid at the going rate for the work they do. With these women, both the girls from 18 to 22 with whom we are familiar and the proposed new class of possible nurses, the married women from 35 to 40, I am certain we would attract a large number of applicants, because they would be paid for the work they are doing and thus be able to look after their own expenses while in training.

Of course, suggestions such as these, and the actions of the Ontario department of education in assuming the education of certain nursing assistants in London, in Weston and at the Ryerson polytechnical institute in Toronto, are meeting with a great deal of cluck-clucking on the part of the women who for years have dominated nursing education in hospitals. They are always "viewing with alarm." The provinces have to take a deep interest in this field of nursing education now and for the next few years, because it is the dominant fact facing hospital administrators today.

In the Ottawa Citizen of Friday, November 8, there is an editorial entitled, "The Need for More Nurses". This editorial comments on a motion passed at the 1963 convention of the Ontario hospitals association in which that association urged the provincial government to assume the major responsibility for providing new facilities for training nurses. The motion points out that the efforts of hospitals, universities and the nursing profession have failed to meet the existing demand for nurses. The Ottawa Citizen states that when the Ontario hospital services commission was brought into effect, the Ontario government had the obligation of seeing that there are enough nurses to support the scheme. The Citizen is commenting on the motion of the Ontario hospitals association, but the statement that it is incumbent upon the provincial government to see that there are enough nurses to staff the prepaid hospital scheme applies equally to all the ten provinces as it does to the province of Ontario.

The Toronto Globe and Mail, under date of October 15, commented editorially on a report presented to the provincial government by a committee of experts representing the nursing and medical profession, the nursing schools, hospitals and the Ontario hospitals services commission. This report advised the Ontario government to institute a crash program of training in order to get sufficient nurses to staff the hospitals now in existence, and those about to be built. This report states that instead of graduating 2,500 nurses a year as at present, it will be necessary by 1968 for Ontario to graduate 5,000. With graduate nurses from 18 to 22, experience shows that within four years 75 per cent of the girls are married and only 25 per cent of them are left at work.

If the provincial governments will take advantage of the legislation now being passed —I am certain it will be passed because the Conservatives state that they fathered the bill and the Liberal party is like a mother hen clucking over it—I am sure we will have a very good hatch. I am sure if provincial governments will take advantage of the assistance available to them to put nurses in training in existing buildings, they will be able to produce the number of nurses recognized as necessary, if the hospitals are to operate at their maximum capacity.

The Globe and Mail refers to a crash program for nurses, and this is as good a description as any that can be applied to the present necessity. Some years ago there was a tremendous shortage of school teachers, particularly in the secondary schools, and then in the primary schools. The provinces instituted crash programs whereby they gave certificates of teaching ability, to students who had just finished grade 12, for public school teaching, and to students who had just finished university for secondary school teaching. With the crash programs, in a matter of about four years there was a plethora of graduate teachers, and we found that with the shortage of teachers salaries had moved up, so much so that educated persons who were qualified teachers were leaving business to return to the profession.

If teachers will leave business to return to the teaching profession, as has been proven in the case of schools, through the lure of higher pay, then it can be done with regard to the shortage of nurses. There are thousands and thousands of graduate nurses now married; and with a premium rate of pay for holiday and Sunday work, and shift differentials, they can be attracted back from their homes into the gaps that exist in our nursing field. But it is necessary that even more younger and inexperienced people be trained in this field at this time. I sincerely hope that the departments of education will realize that this is, shall I say, a parliamentary-sent opportunity, to introduce the training of nurses under departments of education, with assistance from the federal Department of Labour.

Of course we are going to hear loud outcrys from defenders of the status quo: Where will the teachers come from? I can only suggest on this occasion that during crash programs the teachers for graduate nurses or certified nursing assistants should be routed throughout the provinces in much the same way as are the assize court judges. They travel from county to county holding courts, and because of their legal training, ability and experience they are highly respected in the county court towns where they preside. If teachers now holding forth in schools of nursing should be circulated among new schools of nursing, under the heading of technical and vocational training assistance, they would bring the same high experience to the students.

About three years ago a leader in the field of nursing commented to me that the way nurses are being educated in hospitals leaves much to be desired in some fields, and pointed out there can be a town X where the instructress in maternity will pass all the student nurses of her school on provincial examinations, and the instructress in medicine, not being of high calibre, will have a great number of failures; but in town Y you will find a very expert teacher of student medicine will pass all her nurses, whereas the teacher in maternity, not being of the same high calibre, will have half her students fail. By having experienced teachers travel from school to school a greater majority of the students will pass.

I have already suggested, when speaking on the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, that we should drop the federal grants for nursing education. This will result not only in the expenses under that heading being transferred to another, namely education, but it will at least be in its proper perspective. If departments of education can train doctors and dentists, they certainly can train nurses.

There is an article in this morning's Globe and Mail which points out that, because of growing specialization in medical practice, many patients are losing their identification once they enter hospital doors. So many experts look at a patient today that the doctor does not know the patient and the patient does not know the doctor. The article is illustrated with an interesting cartoon in which a patient is lying in bed, and is looking up and saying, "I realize it is none of my business, doctor, but how am I doing"?

This can be adapted to the taxpayers of the country. The country is being besieged at all hours of the day and night by minions of the nursing hierarchy throughout Canada who are urging, "No change, no change, no change." The Globe and Mail says we have to have a change; we must have the crash education programs; so that we can turn out 5,000 nurses a year instead of the present 2,500 in Ontario. I presume the figures are relative for the rest of Canada, but we must have an increase in salaries in order to attract girls into this profession. The incentives held out through the legislation we are now discussing will help attain that end, and I would point out to the 10 departments of education in the country that the federal government is willing to consider adapting these grants to nursing education under the heading of technical and vocational guidance.

I had not intended to make any reference to the comments of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) and the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Weichel), in which they were claiming great credit for having introduced this idea of technical and vocational training assistance. If they were getting satisfaction out of the claim it is quite satisfactory with me; but when the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) stood up this afternoon and stated he well remembered the day in 1960 when the former administration had brought in this great assistance to technical and vocational guidance, I became a little provoked. Surely he remembers that great Canadian, C. D. Howe, who as long ago as 1942 introduced technical and vocational assistance to the schools of the provinces of Canada, in order to get aircraftsmen and air technical crews to make the R.C.A.F. the finest fighting air force in the world.

We have no objection to those who fanned into flame in 1960 the embers of the vocational assistance act of C. D. Howe which operated from 1942 to 1947. I know whereof I speak, because after the war I was able to secure a grant, with the co-operation of the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) who was then in the house, of $700,000 to help build the George Harvey vocational school in the riding of York South. That was the last grant made under the vocational assistance wartime act; and that was in 1947. There is no finer technical school in the province than the George Harvey vocational school, and it was made possible, I would advise the hon. member for Port Arthur, by the genuine and generous co-operation of the then hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would be angry with myself if I did not take part in this debate on Bill C-105 which provides for an increased federal participation in technical and vocational training in Canada.

The purpose of the measure is the further development of manpower and the increase of employment opportunities—

[Text]

Mr. MacNaught: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry to make this point of order because I enjoy very much listening to the hon. member speaking, but I believe he has already spoken in this debate this afternoon.

Mr. Caouette: No, sir.

Mr. MacNaught: I am sorry.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: This afternoon, I was dealing with the motion put forward by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Habel: For once you are right.

Mr. Caouette: I forgive the minister for his interruption. It will help me a bit in my comments.

Mr. Speaker—

—"as means towards the further development of manpower.

(a) through general education"

—which, in our opinion, is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Canadian provinces, according to their education system.

(b) through vocational training.

Here is the definition of vocational training: "To train people who will become an asset in the development of our resources and the establishment of new industries.

(c) The agreements authorized by the statute.

For those agreements, see subsection (b) of section 3 of the act at page 38 which provides this:

For the training of persons in technical or vocational courses given in regular secondary schools in the province where such training is given as a part of the regular secondary school program.

The purpose of this act, according to the resolution that was discussed before the dinner recess, is about the same as that advocated in the resolution or the notice of motion.

In this case, it would be a matter of encouraging people 50 or 60 years of age to go back to school so that our unemployed may acquire new knowledge by attending high schools or vocational and technical schools of the province or the country.

Mr. Speaker, that is, I think, federal interference in the provincial field of secondary education, in the field of basic education which will make it possible to train technicians.

In the province of Quebec, the education system is not the same as in the other provinces. That is why the federal legislation, so far, has helped the other provinces to a greater extent than Quebec.

Consequently, will Quebec have to adapt its education system to the federal system? Or is it impossible to set up here in Ottawa an education system that would adapt itself to each province's system? That is all we are asking for in our province.

Statistical data establish, without any doubt, that with the exception of Quebec, all the provinces have benefited from that act. Why is it so? Probably because assistance to Quebec is necessarily limited to vocational schools placed under the aegis of the department of youth to which the Quebec schools are responsible. Our federal government is interfering in an educational field which should be placed exclusively under provincial jurisdiction.

In order to treat the province of Quebec equitably, we should allow that province to develop its own system of vocational training.

If the government decided to contribute 90 per cent instead of 75 per cent of the cost of education at the secondary, primary, technical and vocational levels in some provinces or all across Canada, the grants should be paid to the province which should be free to use that money as it pleases and to allocate the amounts where the money is needed most.

The purpose of this bill is also to improve employment opportunities. Well, as I said this afternoon, everybody is keen on improving employment opportunities, but despite the efforts of everyone to achieve the highest level of employment in Canada, the number of unemployed is going up and at the same time production is increasing. Why? Because we have to face automation.

It already existed in 1950 and it is still with us in 1963. We will not settle the problem of automation by trying to create more jobs because the matter is to decide whether machinery, or automation, was invented to serve man or man was created to serve the machine. If development, science and automation were created to serve the human being, the human person, let us try and find another system than full employment which is an untenable solution in the present system because it has no respect for the human being.

We respect the very existence of progress, of science, of automation and, yesterday, the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay), stated this in Quebec before the young Liberals:

> We have a complex problem in Canada.

He claimed there were quacks going around the country and attempting to suggest solutions.

I see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) is applauding. It is surely because he can readily understand the ideas put forth by the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane. Here is what the hon. member said, and I quote:

> While continuing to accuse one another, the two clans will keep on proposing the "alleged Social Credit solution" to the problems now facing Canada, either in the Thompson version or, with Gregoire undertones, in the Caouette version.
> [Mr. Caouette.]

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, an economist making such a statement—

An hon. Member: Minister of what?

Mr. Caouette: That, nobody knows yet. It is probably because he makes speeches like that at cabinet meetings that his future remains to be decided.

Mr. Speaker, a little further on, the minister said:

> Social Credit took advantage of the hard times which Mr. John Diefenbaker brought with him when he came to office in 1957. A country with increasing unemployment despite tremendous natural resources was a good place to spread a Social Credit doctrine which called such a situation absurd.

He calls the situation absurd. I congratulate the minister for saying so. It is true the situation is absurd when one considers our enormous potential.

May I remind the minister that hard times were not created by the members of the Social Credit party, but entirely through the implementation of the Liberal doctrine or that of the Conservative party within the Canadian nation.

And the minister added, a little further, talking about charlatanism:

> The Minister without Portfolio denounced the charlatanism in the measures advocated by the Social Crediters and their promise to distribute money to one and all.
> Mr. Tremblay sees there an exploitation of the people's misery because it creates a temptation.

Quite true, it creates a temptation. People going through hard times are tempted to get out of them. Let the minister show us that the Liberal party is able to solve the problem and propose a solution other than Bill C-105, which wants to make professionals out of our unemployed, who will remain professional unemployed.

Then, if the Liberal party can provide each and every Canadian with at least the necessities of life, the right to live, I, the member for Villeneuve, personally undertake to vote for the Liberal legislation, when it is introduced.

Mr. Speaker, we are not the only ones today to propose unusual solutions. I admit that our suggestions do not jibe with the present system but we have had others, not only from those who play at politics but from people in trade, in industry, from sociologists and economists.

I have here a statement, made by Mr. John Snyder, president of the United States industrial corporation, published in the Western Producer of October 31, which reads as follows:

[Text]

> Mr. John I. Snyder, Jr., chairman and president of United States Industries Inc., was the man who really focused the sense of urgency. His company makes automated equipment. It is now, I understand, busy developing computer systems to take control of the already automated factories, shoving the need for human decisions back a whole stage further.

His company finances the American foundation on automation and employment for reasons which he acknowledges, are practical as well as humanitarian. He talked bluntly of a 'lost generation' growing up in the United States 'with no jobs and no hope'.

[Translation]

Conditions are the same in the United States.

[Text]

It includes the young 'for whom there are no opportunities,' and the older workers who have no hope of learning to cope with new machines.

Mr. Snyder emphatically contradicted most of the myths with which most of us have tried to console ourselves.

It is not true, he said, that the new technologies will provide as many jobs making machines as those machines displace. Machines will cut down the jobs in present factories; they will reduce the number of new jobs; and the 'vertical integration' of automated plants will mean closing down many small plants, such as parts suppliers.

It is not true that retraining will solve the problem:—

[Translation]

This is a direct attack against Bill C-105.

[Text]

—nor that it will take many people to build and maintain automated equipment; not that increased mobility will solve the problem by moving workers to new locations.

[Translation]

For instance, in 1932, Jacques Maritain wrote the following in "Les droits de l'homme et la loi naturelle" which I trust, the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane has read:

In other words, one should not only consider the law that human labour tends to free itself from servitude. Freedom from physical hardship corresponds to other rights of the social person which numerous forms of social assistance and the old age security program are supposed to guarantee and will no doubt better guarantee if those measures are pluralist in nature (which enable the state to play a role however reduced) than if they are state-inspired.

And a still more profound right requires that everyone, as joint heirs of the common weal, should have his free share—

Note those words, "free share". And not through loans in New York, in Chicago or Boston. Let us use the Bank of Canada, Mr. Speaker.

—his free share of the essential goods, both material and spiritual, brought by civilization to the extent that the community and its organized groups can provide their use free of charge—

Not through mortgage or indebtedness, but for nothing.

—to the human persons of whom it is made up, thus helping them to free themselves of material needs and to move forward through a life of reason and virtue.

Jacques Maritain wrote this in 1932. In 1934, the originator of our system, Major Douglas, wrote:

I would advise my hon. friend, the member for Matapedia-Matane, to read this important work by Major C. H. Douglas. This is what he says:

[Text]

The objective of an industrial system.

In attacking an engineering problem the first point we settle, with as much exactness as possible, is our objective. No engineer observer of the discussions which take place in political and lay circles on the industrial problems of the present day can fail to be struck with the fact that the problem itself is rarely stated with any clearness. For instance, the paramount difficulty of the industrial system is commonly expressed as that of unemployment. Therefore the suggestion involved is that the industrial system exists to provide employment, and fails. Those who are engaged in the actual conduct of industry, however, are specifically concerned to obtain a given output with a minimum of employment, and in fact, a decreasing amount of employment. Consequently, those who are talking about industry and those who are conducting industry have in their minds objectives which are diametrically opposed and incompatible.

The main objective of industry is not to find jobs for people nor to offer jobs to Canadian workers or the unemployed in Canada. Industry is supposed to offer services and goods at the lowest possible price in order to be in a competitive position on the domestic and international markets. Those, Mr. Speaker, are industry's true objectives in any country in the world, including our own.

What about industrialization in the bill we are studying? It is all very well to speak of the government's intention to create new industries, to finance the training of our unemployed and to find jobs for them. But after these unemployed have gone through vocational training, in two, three, four or five years, automation or mechanical progress will already have eliminated the need for them.

Mr. Speaker, industry must face competition, it must lower its production costs for it must sell its products, and that is why Canadian industry makes such little progress.

It is true that our industralists are invited to come and settle elsewhere; but the government has become aware of the fact that they do not seem interested. Why? Because, at the present time our industries find some difficulty in selling their products. Management is thus naturally wondering about the advisability of increasing production, or of creating new industrial branches, for it knows that sales are slow. It goes without saying that we have to set a limit on our production, because the consumers are reluctant to buy.

Mr. Speaker, what is the difference between the automation system and the system under which we have lived for so many years? Within the framework of our present system, but taking into account the needs of automation, could we find enough jobs for everyone and hope for full employment? It seems to be mathematically and materially impossible; it is impossible, on the national scale, to attain full employment with the introduction of new machines, of automation.

Unions demand better wages for their members, and we are with them on that point. However, at the same time, industries partly close down, and lay off some of their workers to replace them by machines.

Under those circumstances, what could we do to find jobs for everyone?

Trade unions ask for a reduction of the work week and we wonder, and rightly so, what would be the impact of the implementation of such a policy.

Let us take, for instance, the case of an automated modern plant employing 500 men whose average yearly salary is $4,000. This means a total of $2 million distributed as salaries every year by an automated industry.

On the other hand, let us take another plant, which has not been modernized and which employs 1,000 men (instead of 500) and who receive also $4,000 a year. The operating costs of this plant would amount to $4 million instead of $2 million.

By cutting the work week in half, in order that both plants may attain equal production the following result would follow. In the plant employing 1,000 men instead of 500, reducing by half the working hours would cost $4 million a year.

Now, in the second plant which is not automated and not modernized, and which employs 2,000 men instead of 1,000 expenditures for salaries would amount to $8 million a year. The inevitable result would be that the non-automated plant would have to close shop and yield its place to another plant more modern and better adjusted to new conditions.

It can then be seen that the trend is toward automation and it is to that situation that the government does not wish, so it seems, to adjust itself; it is the problem which the government does not wish to see. In short, it is the problem which our economist, the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane, does not want to face and which he does not want to consider important.

If the Social Credit continues its imposture, as claims my good friend from Matapedia-Matane, who finds fault with us, at least this solution of our party is better than the one which he offers himself or the one which the government brings in.

It is proposed to give assistance for the education of the poor. Now, will this abolish poverty? I submit that such plans were not proposed in 1939, 1940 and 1942 for the technical and vocational training of our citizens who were going to fight for us on the battlefields in Europe. Nobody inquired then whether the young people had been to high school or not. But work was found for everyone: making munitions, setting up the war industry, making cannons, shells, in short, destructive engines.

Why not direct these forces to the construction of peace machines today. Why not direct to this ideal those young people who, at that time, were perhaps two or three years old, but are now 25, 26 or 27?

Mr. Speaker, our country has tremendous assets, but people do not want to face the problem. They get round it. They procrastinate. They waste their time seeking solutions without issue.

Bill C-105 aims at promoting the building of technical or vocational schools so that we may be able to raise the educational level of both our young and older people. But the result will nevertheless be the same as the one we have to face today.

When we meet again in ten years from now, whether it be here or outside this house, we will still face the same problem. As long as the automation problem cannot be considered and settled more responsibly than it is now by the government in office, we will not be able to solve it.

In a book entitled "Automation: position et proposition", Mr. Georges Levard, president of the Confederation francaise des syndicats chretiens, deals with this problem. What does he suggest? A social income produced automatically by the automatic factory. As a matter of fact, here is what we read in his book:

> But there, the essential innovation that automation will compel society to introduce in the field of salaries or, more precisely, of distribution of purchasing power, is not yet emphasized.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that my good friend from Matapedia-Matane read this article. I continue:

> Since the beginning of mankind, there has been a direct connection, although it was not necessarily exclusive or easy to figure out, between the amount of human work needed for the production of an article or its value. Indeed, that conclusion represents for Marx, who was not the first one to come by it, an important part of his economic doctrine. Now, at best, in an unattainable situation, one can imagine an automated factory with a considerable production, without manpower having any significant part to play. Systems for the long range adjustment of prices and salaries will no longer work, for because of automation, the rational remuneration of the staff employed and the importance of production do not compare any more.

Neither is that phenomenon completely new, but its magnitude calls for more drastic solutions than that which somehow or other have been invented for the machine-age production. If we are to avoid a bottleneck, we have to assume that the automated enterprise will have to "breed" buying power at the same time as it produces.

Mr. Speaker, that is what Social Credit has been calling for, suggesting and preaching for nearly 30 years now in Canada.

And the author continues:

But it will not be possible for that buying power to be allocated in its greater part to persons according to the part they will have played in production. It can only be a social buying power, or, in other words, socialized, that is placed at the disposal of mass consumption. In other words, it must be upheld that social contributions, now based on salary, will have to be increasingly based on production.

Mr. Speaker, that means that social contributions will no longer have to be based on salary, but rather on production.

And as soon as the Canadian government, whether it is a Liberal, a Conservative, a Social Credit or any other government, agrees that the income of the individual must be based on production, then our friends on the other side will stop laughing at our idea of a national dividend to all and everyone.

The same remarks apply to our friends to the right who, also, will stop laughing at Social Credit proposals to the effect that the means to attract industry is to expand industry in Canada through the establishment of supplementary buying power in the hands of the consumers.

We suggest the vital minimum to be guaranteed to all and everyone, inasmuch as the national production can permit, and it does. There is not one single hon. member who questions the huge possibilities which we have in Canada to guarantee to all and everyone a vital minimum. Such is, in my opinion, the greatest contribution a government could make to the administration of public affairs in its own country. At the same time, it would be an example to give other countries facing the most abject poverty and which are unable to develop. Why? Because they do not have the financial means to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I believe—

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: The remarks of the hon. gentleman are very interesting but they certainly do not relate to the measure now before us.

Mr. Caouette: I am sorry, but I think all my remarks are pertinent to the bill we are discussing.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-105 is a measure to further the development of manpower, but we must have the possibility of employing that further developed manpower, and that is just what we do not have.

Now, in closing, I submit that Social Credit does propose an acceptable solution, with all due respect to the economists who are going around the province of Quebec shouting that we are rousing people up, just like my friend from Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette), who says Social Creditistes in Quebec are demagogues.

Mr. Speaker, it is not a queston of demagogy. It is the livelihood of the people of our country that is at stake. We are not proposing impossible things, no, but we want Bill C-105 to be of some use.

However, we cannot see how this bill will help solve the problems facing us in this house and which faced those who were here before us ten and 15 years ago. Even during the depression years of 1929 to 1939, those same problems were already with us.

Today, we are faced with the problem of having an immense surplus production together with the material impossibility for Canadian consumers to buy those products.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the present government is in a position to introduce a bill which would put finance at the service of the Canadian people, which, instead of providing for an opportunity to get an education, an opportunity we already have, would help solve another problem, that created by the men of 40 to 45 years of age who do not have the required knowledge today to follow secondary school courses. They might have the aptitudes required, but not the required knowledge. That is another problem. And we are faced with that problem at the present time: men of over 45 who can no longer find a job in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, let the government come forward with a definite measure which would concern each and every one in Canada and would, at last, put finance at the service of the Canadian people.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few remarks to make. We, on this side of the house, are ready to adopt the bill this evening, before ten o'clock.

However, I should hope that at the coming federal-provincial conference, the federal government would leave the provinces free to accept or refuse the joint programs. If a province does not wish to sign an agreement on a joint program, it should be given, and without conditions, the funds it will need to administer its own program.

I will now show why it would be logical to do so. For instance, the province of Quebec has nearly 15 training centres and the federal legislation does not take into account those institutions which can be found only in the province of Quebec.

I protest against the statements made this afternoon by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). I feel that education comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, which must take their responsibilities in that respect. The federal government should not interfere in that field.

I have here a volume of the report submitted by the royal commission on constitutional problems. A few years ago, an inquiry was held which gave all the Quebec organizations an opportunity to express their views and their wishes. Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to pages 288 and 289 of volume 2, book 3, of 1956:

The province of Quebec and the federal grants

This scrupulous adherence to the principle of federalism has been clearly obvious and has imposed heavy sacrifices in the field of taxation, especially as regards the question of grants, which is the main issue in the controversy between the federal government and the provinces.

Like the other provinces, the province of Quebec accepts the statutory grants provided for in the constitution. It even went as far as to ask, in 1887 and in 1907, that they be reviewed. Those grants were established to compensate for taxes which the provinces were compelled to surrender: without such a surrender, confederation would not have been possible. It should not be wondered therefore that the provinces seek from time to time to have this compensation adjusted according to the rights yielded, as their extent is being revealed. There is nothing in this contrary to the confederation act of 1867.

The same does not apply to conditional and fiscal grants which the federal government has made, especially in the last 20 years, one of the instruments of its constitutional policy. Fiscal grants are paid by way of compensation for taxes the surrender of which by the provinces is in no way essential to the stability of the state. In fact, it is the very opposite that is true: as long as the federal system is not abolished, the proper operation of the state requires that the provinces keep taxation powers proportionate to the extent of their constitutional obligations. The province of Quebec preferred to do without substantial revenues rather than agree to a system of grants involving a lessening of its autonomy and a surrender of its prerogatives.

Listen closely to this, Mr. Speaker:

If the province agreed at times to the payment of conditional grants, as in the case of technical training and old age pensions (1st stage), it is due to the false position in which the interference of the federal government in fields outside of its jurisdiction unavoidably place the provinces.

By refusing federal grants as it did in various circumstances, the province of Quebec not only deprives itself of amounts that are being made available to it but contributes, through federal taxes, to the amounts taken advantage of by the other provinces which are less concerned about federalist loyalty.

In short, and this is the major point to remember in these history pages, in taxation as in all other constitutional matters, Quebec's stand has never changed: it abides by the interpretation according to the spirit of federalism of the agreement concluded in 1867.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that if after so many years, we still have to contend with difficulties arising from the federal government, it is especially on account of its joint plans which, by the way, are quite satisfactory to the nine English provinces—I do not blame them, it is their business—but the province of Quebec is not interested, and as long as the federal government will not find a solution to save the province of Quebec from joint plans, I maintain that confederation, in my opinion, will be jeopardized.

That is why I am asking the federal government and the provinces at the next federal-provincial conference to find the necessary means to provide a final solution.

As I said earlier, if the English speaking provinces wish to enter into joint plans, it is their business; but if the province of Quebec does not want to do so, then, the funds owing to Quebec should be handed back unconditionally.

Mr. Speaker, incidentally, I again read in newspapers, a statement made by the Quebec government and the federation of municipalities blaming the federal government for violating provincial autonomy with respect to municipal loans.

In addition, I listened Sunday night, that is last night, to a press conference given by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) who was being questioned by newspapermen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, such a reaction on the part of hon. members opposite indicates, I believe, that many members on government benches have not listened to the hon. President of the Privy Council.

An hon. Member: He was very good.

Mr. Pigeon: He had quite a time answering questions. His answers were rather shifty and contradictory, and I shall prove it.

An hon. Member: Very well, prove it.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the summary of the press conference given by the President of the Privy Council, which was published in today's issue of La Presse. Briefly here is what the President of the Privy Council had to say about the forthcoming federal-provincial conference and the federal government's policy:

Ottawa will abolish some joint programs but it will create others.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that is an inconsistent policy. I feel that, if the federal government wants, as stated by the President of the Privy Council, to venture into other joint programs, it will assume that responsibility and will be hearing more bitter criticism from the Quebec ministers and the elite of that province, protesting that new intrusion by the federal government in a field of provincial jurisdiction, that of Quebec in particular.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces, might open a new period of liberation through the forthcoming federal-provincial conference.

An hon. Member: It has already started.

Mr. Pigeon: And not only begin to give options with regard to joint programs, but also answer not only Mr. Lesage's ultimatum but that of other provinces. Mr. Lesage asked for $200 million to meet the needs of the province of Quebec in the cultural, educational, economic and social fields but the other provinces should also be able to receive the money they need, and each should get its relative share in order to be able to grow within confederation.

In my opinion, it is by decentralizing and giving back to the provinces the power to levy their own taxes that Canada will grow stronger, more united and greater.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Would the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm allow me another question?

Mr. Pigeon: About Mr. Pierre Laporte? With pleasure, because he blames the federal government—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Would the hon. member allow me to put my question?

Mr. Deschatelets: Go ahead.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to make a speech, it will give me great pleasure to listen to him because he has been very silent in this house since his election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm will recognize that his comments are not in order.

Mr. Pigeon: Let the hon. member for Longueuil make a speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Portneuf.

Mr. Jean-Louis Frenette (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, there are times when it is really interesting to take part in debates and today's discussion seems doubly interesting, because it proves once more that everyone agrees on the seriousness of the unemployment problem.

Here, I should like to refer to an address delivered by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) in this house on June 10. I think we all agree with what he said. I quote:

> The government is convinced that we cannot continue to tolerate the excessively high levels of unemployment of recent years. Over the past five years, unemployment has averaged 6.6 per cent of the labour force.

And he went on:

> The stimulation of employment and the reduction of unemployment are major problems which the government is determined to tackle vigorously.

We must recognize, Mr. Speaker, that in the last few weeks, the government has launched a very unusual effort to find a solution to that especially thorny matter.

And the minister went on:

> It is now widely recognized that the growth of our economy and the stimulation of employment are greatly facilitated by the improvement of the quality and skills of youth entering the labour force and by the adaptation of workers to constantly changing job requirements. The need for adaptation and retraining of our labour force is a consequence of a much stepped up rate of technological change in recent years.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-105, dealing with training of workers, technical and vocational training, should prompt us to give more consideration to the unemployment problem.

Of course, like everybody else, we realize we are faced with a problem due to a large degree to automation which is constantly spreading and takes jobs away from our workers. Consequently, that is one of the causes of unemployment.

There are also the demands of industry for a more skilled and more specialized labour.

I think that the bill which is really aimed at the training of that manpower, comes at an opportune time and will allow people who are affected by almost chronic unemployment to train for new jobs which will meet the needs of industry.

Past results were good in nine Canadian provinces; I make one exception: the province of Quebec. Great numbers of workers were trained and given new jobs, thanks to the training received in special training schools. Everywhere in Canada schools were erected and they have certainly become an asset for those provinces.

The fact is that a delicate problem remains, that of the province of Quebec. I shall not labour the point further because other speakers have talked about it eloquently enough so as to make the Minister of Labour and members of the cabinet realize that our situation is not similar to that of the other provinces, that we are a separate province. And, as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) pointed out so well, the fact remains that Quebec, on account of the terms of the legislation, did not enjoy fully its benefits. Special arrangements ought to be taken so that Quebec workers may enjoy the benefits of the legislation.

I readily understand, Mr. Speaker, that it is difficult, at a given moment, to legislate in order to meet the needs of Canadians from coast to coast, the needs of a country made up of two different nations. But I think that we should not forget the fact that we have rights and privileges, and that we want to keep them.

Mr. Speaker, I would like also to take advantage of these few minutes to make suggestions to the Minister of Labour with regard to the training of technical labour. In my opinion, the Minister of Labour would benefit greatly from further consultation with the labour organizations of the country in order to receive from them appropriate suggestions with regard to labour problems and, in particular that which we are dealing with at this time, that is, technical and vocational training.

It seems that there is an increasing tendency towards centralization, in short greater importance is given to the central government. But I think that if this government really wants to assume its responsibilities and attain its objectives it must necessarily call upon these in-between bodies that are labour organizations and movements.

Mr. Speaker, it is an undeniable fact that we must gather up all our energies in order to find a solution to the unemployment problem. Workers' training, of course, is one of the solutions—but not the only one—which is before us tonight. In my opinion, the special committee established by the Senate, to inquire into the matter of manpower and employment, prompts us precisely to work in that direction. If I may, I shall quote one of the findings of that committee. Here it is:

> Unskilled labour made up a greater proportion of the total monthly registration in metropolitan districts and large industrial areas with a labour surplus, than in the two other kinds of surplus areas in the labour market.

Obviously, the members of that committee found that in the communities where workers are unskilled, unemployment is higher and more acute. We should therefore pool all our resources to train qualified labour, which will not only answer the needs of industry to the greater benefit of industrial enterprise, but will also be of advantage to the working class and, consequently, the whole Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I remind the house that the minister will now close the debate.

[Mr. Frenette.]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): In beginning my brief remarks at this stage of the proceedings on this bill, I wish to thank all hon. members for their contributions to this debate. I want to say a special word of thanks to my fellow Nova Scotian, the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates), for his kind remarks as he began his speech this afternoon.

The debate has ranged over a very wide field, in so far as any of the suggestions that have been made relate to technical and vocational training, they will be given the fullest possible consideration by the Department of Labour. As hon. members will realize, the general framework for the national system of technical and vocational training is set forth in the act respecting technical and vocational training assistance. The act as a whole is not before us. We have before us an amending bill, confined to a number of specific items in the act itself. There are five of these items.

One amendment increases the federal contribution of living allowances paid by a province to unemployed persons receiving training, from 75 per cent to 90 per cent. This increases that portion of the federal contribution for this phase of the training program to 90 per cent, or an increase of 15 per cent.

In addition to that we propose by another amendment to increase the contribution made by the federal government to costs incurred by provinces in training programs in industry, from 50 per cent to 75 per cent. Hon. members will appreciate that relatively little progress has been made in this important field of training in industry. For that reason we expect to give this phase of technical and vocational training a greater impetus by increasing the percentage assistance from 50 per cent to 75 per cent.

It might be of interest to hon. members to know that this particular phase of the program will extend to training programs in industry covering apprenticeship training, the problem which engaged the attention of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Stenson). This will apply to basic educational development, to programs in industry providing basic education to employees, to place them in a position to acquire skill in advanced jobs or advanced technology.

The third phase of this training program in industry is to provide assistance for training to meet prospective automation. Even though the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) dealt with automation in his speech, he did not relate his comments to this provision of the amending bill, which will allow employers to collaborate with the provinces, with federal assistance, to accelerate training in industry for employees whose skills may become obsolete as a result of automation and who, if there is a response to this program, can be placed in a position to acquire additional skills.

The third aspect of the amending bill is to extend the time period for the additional 25 per cent for the provision of capital facilities for technical and vocatonal training. There is no doubt that a great expansion in training facilities has taken place under this program. On Tuesday of last week I assisted at the opening of a new college of trades and technology at St. John's, Newfoundland, a splendid institution that will have a great impact on the economy of that province. I want to tell the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) that on that occasion the premier of Newfoundland expressed publicly his appreciation of the work and co-operation he had received from the hon. member for Ontario during his period as minister of labour.

Mr. Nowlan: You built more schools for him, Mike, than he ever built himself.

Mr. MacEachen: As I say, the premier took that opportunity to express the appreciation of the government of Newfoundland to the hon. member for Ontario, whose efforts in this field have not gone unrecognized, at least in that province of Canada.

The purpose of this particular amendment, as hon. members will know, is to permit all provinces of Canada to participate to the maximum achieved up until March 31 of this year by the province of Newfoundland. The per capita contribution of the federal government in the age group 15 to 19 years reached $480 for the province of Newfoundland. This amendment will allow all provinces to achieve that maximum up until the expiry of the agreement in 1967.

For example, it will permit the province of Quebec, whose per capita quota is $51, to participate to the extent of $480 per capita in that age group. This amendment is of particular importance to the province of Quebec where many additional millions of dollars will be made available for the expansion of training facilities. The same is true to a lesser extent for all other provinces, except the province of Newfoundland.
