'if her child is like her.' 'Eva-my Eva-was the sweetest gayest, most amiable of dispositions. Selfishness and she were perfect strangers, and she was one of those quiet natures which surprise one by their capacity for strong feeling. I loved her like a sister. She reciprocated the affection, and our friendship was con-

In his tary the banker had said he bursting in like a whirlwind.

He was a young fellow of about 23, frank, generous of disposition, hand-some of face, devoted to art, was an artist by profession, and most charmingly romantically poor. Perhaps this was why he, especially, was my favorite; also why I had made him my heir, though of that he was ignorant.

'Aunt,' he cried 'put aside your letters and come out: Don's say no—you must! I have seenone of the sweetest faces I ever saw in my life!' 'Holty, toity!' I exclaimed,' my dear Jack, this looks ominous—dangerous. Is this marvel a native?'

No; a visitor, like ourselves,' replied Jack, who had crossed to the window and was peering out to the right,' then to the left, 'They came last night, and Fred Norris, who fortunately' knows them, is going to introduce me.
