OFFICIAL REPORT

Monday, May 12, 1930.

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Fourth report of the select standing committee on railways, canals, and telegraph lines—Mr. Cahill.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

CALLS AT FOREIGN PORTS

Mr. MacLAREN:

1. Do the Canadian National steamships running between Canadian and Australian ports call at foreign ports, either on the outgoing or incoming voyages?
2. Have ss. "Canadian Transporter," "Canadian Leader," "Canadian Commander," "Canadian Conqueror," "Canadian Highlander," "Canadian Scottish," and "Canadian Victor," on homecoming voyages from Australia, discharged cargoes at Boston, Massachusetts, during the months of January, February and March, 1930?
3. If so, is this a settled arrangement?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. Never on southbound voyages. Calls are made at foreign ports on northbound voyages if cargo offers and the ships cannot be filled for Canadian ports.
2. Yes.
3. No.

LIGHTKEEPER AT RIVIERE A MARTE

Mr. MARCIL:

1. What is the name of the lightkeeper at Riviere a Marte?
2. What is his salary?
3. Under what circumstances was he appointed?
4. To what pension is he entitled?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. Joseph Litalien.
2. $2,040 per annum, out of which salary he is required to provide for the services of an assistant. He receives also $50 a year as signal agent.
3. The appointment was made by order in council, dated 16th March, 1912, P.C. 21/609, following the dismissal of previous incumbent.
4. If Mr. Litalien retired now on the ground of ill health, he would be entitled to an annual superannuation allowance of approximately $670. If he resigned or was dismissed he would not be entitled to any allowance.

SCALLOP FISHING—ALBERTON, P.E.I.

Mr. MacDONALD (Kings):

1. Did the government buy a boat in connection with the scallop fishing at Alberton, Prince Edward Island?
2. If so, who was the owner of this boat?
3. If not, was a boat rented from any person in Alberton?
4. What rent or hire was paid for the boat, and to whom?
5. How many of a crew were on this boat?
6. What are the names, addresses and salaries of the crew?
7. How many scallop beds were found or located?
8. Where are the beds located?
9. Where is the boat which the government bought or rented, at the present time?

Mr. CARDIN:

1 and 2. No.

3. Yes.

4. A boat was chartered from Howard Clark of Alberton, at rate of $14 per day, charterer to furnish engineer. Payment was not made for Sundays or legal holidays on which boat was not in use.

5. Two in addition to engineer who was employed by charterer.

6. Seymour Young, Alberton, captain and observer, $7.50 per day, he to find his own board. Morris Perry, Alberton, deckhand, $100 per month, he to find his own board. Engineer employed by charterer and name unknown.

7 and 8. Nine scallop producing areas were located off coast of Prince Edward Island as follows:

1. Off the north end of P.E.I. on the east side between Cape Kildare and North Point.
2. Off the north end of P.E.I. on the west side between south of Cape Gage and North Point.
3. Off the north coast of P.E.I. between Cape Kildare and Cape Tyron.
4. On the north coast of P.E.I. at the entrance to Malpeque harbour.
5. Charlottetown harbour.
6. Off the south coast of P.E.I. across the entrance to Hillsborough bay.

7. Off the south coast of P.E.I. from north west of Bell Point to south west of South Point.

8. Off the south coast of P.E.I. between Little Sands and White Sands.

9. Off the east coast of P.E.I. from south of Cape Bear to south of Rollo Bay.

9. Not known.

OSTREA I

Mr. ERNST:

1. Has the Lunenburg Foundry Ltd. been awarded the contract for the construction of a scallop dragger or oyster dredge named "Ostrea I"?

2. If so, what is the contract price?

3. Who is constructing the hull of said boat?

4. What motive power is being supplied?

5. What portion of the contract price relates to the hull and what portion to the cost of motive power and installation hereof?

Mr. CARDIN:

Questions 1 to 4 covered in answers to question by Mr. Ernst at page 1401 of Hansard No. 34.

5. No information. Contract price included. cost of engine installed.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

HENRY C. LEWIS

Mr. ERNST:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, telegrams and other documents of whatsoever kind, relating to the appointment of Henry C. Lewis, as supervisor of fisheries, district number 3, province of Nova Scotia.

DREDGE OSTREA II

Mr. ERNST:

For a copy of all reports made by one, Captain McLeod, and/or any person or persons, respecting the oyster dredge Ostrea II.

EXPORT DUTY ON PULPWOOD

Mr. GRIMMER (for Mr. Arthurs):

For a copy of all letters, or other communications or recommendations regarding any proposal for an export duty on pulpwood or for the prohibition of such export.

PRIVATE BILLS

THOMAS BERNARD BOURKE

Mr. R. H. JENKINS (Queens, for Mr. Jacobs) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. 50, respecting a certain patent application of Thomas Bernard Bourke and George Percival Setter.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

[Mr. Cardin.]

On the preamble:

Mr. BENNETT: Has this bill been dealt with by the commissioner of patents, and has he been satisfied that no vested interests are affected?

The CHAIRMAN: It has been before the select standing committee.

Mr. BENNETT: The question is whether or not the commissioner of patents has gone over the bill carefully and made a report as to the effect upon existing rights of patentees. That always is the important question in these cases, and usually the minister makes a statement in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN: Perhaps the bill had better stand.

Bill stands.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 54, to incorporate Pine Hill Divinity Hall.—Mr. Black (Halifax).

Bill No. 73, for the relief of Herbert Vaughan. —Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 77, for the relief of Walter Joseph David Penly.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 97, for the relief of Margaret Piton. —Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 107, for the relief of Harry Jackson Carr.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 109, for the relief of Margaret Malvina Cole.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 110, for the relief of Quartus Bliss Henderson.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 114, for the relief of Mildred Alma McCallum.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 116, for the relief of Mabel Monk. —Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 117, for the relief of Harry Edward Elvidge.—Mr. Tummon.

Bill No. 119, for the relief of Emily Anderson.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 120, for the relief of Helen Marie Ferguson.—Mr. Hubbs.

ST. CLAIR TRANSIT COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 121, respecting the St. Clair Transit company—Mr. Gray—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On section 5—Commission to be created in the United States before transfer, et cetera.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It is impossible to hear what is being said; what section of this bill are we considering?

The CHAIRMAN: Section 5 of Bill No. 121.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Section 4 refers to order in council No. 1206 of June 7, 1922, and I would like to ask the sponsor if he would not consent to this bill being amended in order to include the terms of Bill No. 49 recently passed through the house.

Mr. GRAY: As I understand it, Bill No. 49 has not yet become law. I have no objection to the amendment suggested but I am instructed by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon), that this bill should pass and the change could be made when Bill No. 49 becomes law.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 61, for the relief of Herbert Chick.—Mr. Black (Yukon).

Bill No. 62, for the relief of Albert Edward Saunders.—Mr. Young (Toronto Northeast).

Bill No. 63, for the relief of Marjorie Gladys Picken.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 65, for the relief of Raymond Garbutt Little.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 67, for the relief of Florence Isabel Naughton.—Mr. Stinson.

Bill No. 68, for the relief of Lucy Beryl Marshall.—Mr. Black (Yukon).

Bill No. 76, for the relief of Kathleen Mary Davies.—Mr. Thorson.

On division.

FOREST FIRES IN NOVA SCOTIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to direct the attention of the government to the fact that forest fires have been raging through the southern part of Nova Scotia, not only in the county of Yarmouth and Shelburne represented by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), but even in worse form in the county of Queens and now, I believe, in the county of Lunenburg. In Queens about 150 people have been rendered homeless and desolate. Relief associations have been formed and the provincial government has made contributions. The city of Halifax and some of the towns and municipalities throughout the province have also made substantial contributions. I should like to ask the government to take under consideration the question of affording substantial relief in connection with this situation. There is a precedent for assistance being given because some years ago it was done in the case of Jamaica.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Unfortunately the Prime Minister is not yet in his seat, but I will call his attention to the matter.

IMPORTATION OF FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I have a question I should like to put to the Minister of Finance, but as he is not in his seat I shall content myself with asking the question of the Minister of National Revenue. I have had several complaints from Winnipeg with reference to the new duties on fruits and vegetables. According to reports I have received, the increases average from 29 per cent to 386 per cent. I should like to know whether these increases which have been put into effect by the Department of National Revenue, are exactly in accordance with the new tariff schedules?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): My attention has also been drawn to an item which appeared, I think, in the Winnipeg Tribune, stating that the department is collecting both specific and ad valorem duties on fruits and vegetables. I would like to say for the information of the house that that is absolutely incorrect. As the house knows, the duties collected are either specific or ad valorem, and that is being carried out now. As regards other statements, we are making investigations, but I think I may assure the house that whatever duty is being collected is being collected under the new schedules.

CIVIL SERVICE

MINIMUM SALARY OF ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS A MONTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I have a telegram from the Amalgamated Civil Servants, Calgary. I should like to ask the government whether they intend this year to put into effect the $100 minimum for civil servants?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I will bring the matter to the attention of the leader of the government.

NEW ZEALAND TREATY—CORRESPONDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): It has been customary to table the correspondence dealing with tariff items and in the particular instance to which I direct attention, namely, the New Zealand treaty which, according to the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), is to be abrogated on October 12 next, we should have before us the correspondence. It will expedite the discussions in committee if the correspondence and the order in council upon which the notice of abrogation are based are laid upon the table at the earliest possible moment. I did not have communication with the Minister of Finance, but I asked my secretary to get in touch with his and the latter said that the matter would have to be dealt with through the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is not in his seat, but I now ask that notice be taken of the request and that the correspondence be brought down at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Certainly.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Thursday, May 8, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett, and the amendment to the amendment thereto of Mr. Fansher (Last Mountain).

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, this, I think, is the ninth budget in succession that has been brought down in parliament by ministers of finance acting on behalf of the Liberal party. On nearly every occasion of the introduction of the budget, particularly in the earlier days of the advent of the Liberal party in power in parliament, very severe criticism was directed at the budget proposals of the Minister of Finance. Those introduced by the late Hon. Mr. Fielding covered a period in Canadian history that from an economic standpoint was, to say the least, very difficult, but the budgeting on those occasions brought about the results that were anticipated, and while in the beginning some slight increases in taxation were necessary, despite all the criticism that was offered and the amendments that were moved, the budgeting brought to this country a period of prosperity such as it has seldom witnessed. Mr. Fielding was followed by Mr. Robb and again the same criticism was levelled at Mr. Robb, but I am bound to say, having been a colleague of both, the situation was not as difficult as in the earlier days when this government took office. We all well remember the success of the work of the Hon. Mr. Robb in budgeting for the Canadian people. Despite the strenuous criticism that was offered and the resolutions moved from the opposite side of the house in condemnation of his proposals, no one will deny that Mr. Robb has a record that ministers of finance in any country might well be proud of. He has undoubtedly left a record that it will be difficult for his successors to emulate. Perhaps it may be said with some truth that Mr. Robb was particularly fortunate. I know that our hon. friends opposite will say that he budgeted in days of prosperity and did not have to meet so serious a situation as his predecessors. However that may be, we who were supporters of Mr. Robb and we who supported Mr. Fielding, claim that their budgets were the result of careful thought applied to the tariffs of the country for the very purpose of bringing about that prosperity which resulted. May I say that in no period of Canadian history perhaps did we pass through such difficult times as in 1922? I am not going to deny for a moment that the conditions of those times were largely the result of the great war which had cost us so much in men and in treasure. Nevertheless, that was the situation, and a remedy had to be found. What remedy was applied? As I said before, both Mr. Fielding and Mr. Robb, as many hon. gentlemen who were present when Mr. Robb delivered his budget speech upon that occasion will remember, stated that this country could not go on piling up additions to the capital debt of the country, and so they proposed slight increases in some taxation then existent, and the addition of some new taxation to meet the situation. Year after year, reductions of taxation were made to assist the basic industries of the country, agriculture, mining, lumbering and fishing, until 1926. I do not need to say very much about 1926 because in the forty minutes allowed to me I can only touch the high spots and cannot devote much time to details. In 1926 we found that our policies had brought about, or to say the least had assisted in bringing about, a period of prosperity. The policies that we had adopted in connection with the Canadian National Railways, for instance, were designed to bring about that result, and from that moment on Mr. Robb was able during the next two or three years not to add to the capital debt of the country, but to reduce it by no less a sum than $82,000,000.

I come now to the present budget. With respect to the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), I think we will all agree that he is a worthy successor of the two finance ministers who preceded him, and I think we may well expect that his record will be quite as brilliant as that of his predecessors, and that his administration will bring about the same happy results as were obtained under their administrations. The people of Canada believed that the government, through its Minister of Finance, would make provision in this budget for meeting many of the difficulties that it was recognized the country was encountering, because we are passing through a period of world-wide economic deflation.

There is another feature in connection with this budget that I wish to mention. There has been up until lately continued violent opposition to our Prime Minister. It has been stated that the Liberal party lacked the initiative or were too friendly, and some even went to the length of saying too cowardly, to bring down legislation to meet the ever-increasing customs duties imposed by the United States against Canada. But we do not hear that statement made to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not any doubt, Mr. Speaker, that they will continue to talk that way if they feel that there is some party advantage to be gained thereby, but they will not be in a position to prove it, as they thought, so emphatically. Why?

An hon. MEMBER: The death knell of protection.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No longer can the cry be raised that our Prime Minister gives more to the United States than he is willing to give to the mother country. That has been one of the statements of the opposition to which I have continually taken exception and to which I take exception to-day, and I am going to have a word or two to say to my hon. friends opposite in connection with their attitude towards the British preference. Let me say in the first place that this budget is a complete answer to every statement which they have made in that connection. It is more than that. It is no mere lip loyalty on our part. It is not the mere expression of a sentiment. This budget is action, bold and forward action on our part in connection with the British preference. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that our hon. friends opposite can never expect the country to believe their statement that this government headed by the Prime Minister has been more friendly in its attitude in any particular towards the United States than we have always been ready and willing to be towards the mother country.

This budget places on the free list a large and important list of goods that we import from Great Britain. Here again we are following the well-established practice of this government of extending from time to time the British preference. By so doing we hope to increase our trade with the mother country. That, briefly, is what the budget means, Mr. Speaker. It means that we hope to transfer a large volume of trade in goods that we must use in Canada from countries that are unwilling to trade with us to those that are willing and anxious to trade with us. That is the position in a nutshell. It is for the benefit of those countries that have shown their willingness to trade with us by buying the goods that we have to export from this country.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): You took the duty off hay.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What about wheat?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friends are very clever. The finance minister made it abundantly clear that he had wiped the duties off a great number of articles, almost one hundred in number—

Mr. SHORT: Hay and cider.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, hay. Why should he not wipe off the duty?

Mr. BENNETT: Who put those duties there?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not able to answer that question nor am I concerned about it. The thing was a perfect absurdity and it was fully explained to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

point to the record of Mr. Fielding and Mr. Robb, and perhaps we will point a year or two later to the record of Mr. Dunning—I repeat, we are emphatic in saying that an increased exchange of goods will take place, and the net result will be a lessening of the cost to the consumer. The budget meets the very general desire of the Canadian people that the volume of our business with Great Britain should be enlarged. Hitherto this feeling has been largely sentimental. Quite true. That is the complaint I have had against my friends across the way; they are always strong in sentiment but lacking in action. But now plainly the value to us of the opening of the British market is being appreciated—these are some of the points I want to get across to my hon. friends opposite—the value to us of the opening of the British market, I say, is being appreciated by the Canadian people as never before. But there having been a partial loss of market, there is apprehension that further losses may be suffered. The desirability of strengthening our position in the British market by offsetting our sales with purchase is now pretty evident to Canadians, and Mr. Dunning's effort to facilitate this exchange of commodities will be strongly supported by public opinion.

An hon. MEMBER: What are you reading from?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am reading from a few notes I set down that I thought would be intensely interesting to our good friends across the way. Ours is not a lip loyalty, nor is it a mere expression of sentiment; it is a straightforward and direct offer to Great Britain without any strings upon it; it is a direct offer to Great Britain to transfer a large volume of our imports from other countries to our kith and kin.

Mr. QUINN: Do you call that flag-flapping?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am afraid the hon. gentleman will not be able to wave the Union Jack this time and talk about loyalty. That had always been the recourse of a few hon. gentlemen across the floor of the house, and I think it is time it was stopped. There has never been any attempt on our part to preach sentiment, to talk about loyalty; this government on every occasion have given evidence by their works of what they believe. It makes me tired to hear gentlemen across the way talking of wrapping the flag about themselves. I have been in politics for forty years, and that is one of the things in my experience that has frequently been resorted to by hon. gentlemen across the floor. Not only that, but they have decried the loyalty of the leader of this government and are still seeking to arouse prejudice against him. I say it is time that that sort of thing came to an end. This budget, so far as this government are concerned, is a complete answer as to where we stand in this connection with respect to the British preference.

The basic principle running throughout the changes in the budget is the transference of a large volume of imports now coming in from the United States to Great Britain, thereby short circuiting our exchange adjustments, which in the past have had to be transferred from Great Britain and the continent to the United States to pay for our excess imports from that country. Our next thought was the consumer. We sought to avoid increasing costs to him by an extension of the British preference.

I now propose to deal with some of the statements made by the hon. leader of the opposition. His first statement was that we had increased taxation and thereby added to the burdens of the Canadian people. That, to say the least, is very misleading.

Mr. BENNETT: It is true.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He set out the amounts of taxation from 1923 to 1930 and stated we had increased the burden of taxation which we derived from the business tax, amounting in 1923 to $335,000,000 and in 1929 to $378,000,000. May I simply say, in passing, that I do not intend to go into details to prove my contention to hon. gentlemen opposite. But if we have a larger volume of business on which we raise our general taxation, surely no one is going to be hurt because the amount collected has increased. Individually it does not mean any greater burden. But may I say to the hon. gentleman that he does not take into consideration that not only did we collect more money, but we collected it in the face of reduced taxation, and the general business of the country was so buoyant that even after the reduction of the income tax and general taxation we derived more revenue.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What about the sales tax?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am going to speak about that in a moment. I hope to satisfy my hon. friend on the sales tax. I am going to repeat to-day what I have said on former occasions with respect to the sales tax. I have no quarrel with his statement that the $147,000,000 which he sets out in some detail in his speech the other day should be added—and is added—to the general revenues of the country. He states—and I want to make it clear that it is his statement—that we are not entitled to all the credit that we are seeking to take for the reduction of the public debt by $257,000,000. I say to the hon. gentleman—and I think he says so himself—that there is nothing new about the $147,000,000 that he referred to. It has always been the same, there is no increase in it, it was the same in 1923 as it is in 1929; therefore it cannot be very well taken into account except that it swells the general sum of taxation. Let me be clear about this. The general taxation, or the turnover tax on business, although it was reduced, produced more money. How? By the increased volume of business. But it did more. It reduced the general taxation per capita. That is what happened, and that is what my hon. friend did not make clear to the Canadian people when he was making that statement. It is not an increase of taxation upon the individual, but rather the reverse. That is the real situation with respect to the statement of my hon. friend that this government increased the general taxation.

Let me deal for a moment with the sales tax. My hon. friend pointed out that in 1923 this government found the sales tax at 3 per cent. But how did we find it applied? It was applied upon the general sales throughout the country. Every hon. member will recall the agitation that was in effect throughout the country with respect to the collection of this tax. Every retailer had to make a return. It was a most exasperating tax. Not only that, but may I tell my hon. friend from Lincoln—who no doubt will remember this—that that tax was pyramided, sometimes as much as 8 per cent, upon commodities purchased by the consumers of this country.

Mr. McGIBBON: So was the 6 per cent pyramided.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have no recollection that the 6 per cent tax was pyramided. The 6 per cent tax was collected, and was designed to be collected, either at the entry of the goods or when they were manufactured. Some complaint was made that the tax was passed on to the consumers on the various sales.

Mr. McGIBBON: Pyramided as it went.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Only to the extent of the first tax. If my hon. friend means that they were pyramided because there were subsequent sales made plus taxes, yes; I certainly agree as to that; but that is not pyramiding. That is not collecting a tax every time a sale takes place. Take a suit of clothes, for example.

An hon. MEMBER: Somebody else collected a tax every time a sale took place.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friends can make nothing of that. There is no comparison whatever with the pyramiding of taxes of which I am complaining. The tax was one collected on every transaction. The turnover was derived on every transaction from the date of the entry of the cloth that went to make a suit of clothes, through the wholesalers to the tailors and passed on to the customer; in every one of those transactions a tax was collected. That is what we were complaining about, and that is what I hope my hon. friends will take the precaution to understand when they state that we materially increased the sales tax when we made it 6 per cent. I hope I have made that matter clear, and that we shall not again hear the statement boldly made that we increased the sales tax and that we are not to be credited because of the fact that we increased it from 3 per cent to 6 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Did you not increase it to 6 per cent?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are the amounts collected each year for sales tax?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will consult Hansard he will find a statement made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. BENNETT: As long as my hon. friend admits it was increased to 6 per cent I am satisfied.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall now direct my remarks to a few items in the tariff. There is one statement to which I shall refer before I deal with particular items, that is a statement made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. I forget the name of the person to whom my hon. friend attributed the statement but he is reported to have stated that so far as the empire is concerned a factory in Canada was as good as a factory in England. I think that statement is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the sense of the statement which I made. To be more accurate, I quoted the statement that a woollen factory in Canada is as valuable an asset to the empire as a woollen factory in Yorkshire.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): With that statement I have no particular quarrel. I believe that a free interchange of commodities or as near as possible a free interchange within the empire would be very desirable. I know there are people who do not believe in such a policy. I do not believe that my hon. friends opposite believe in it, because my hon. friend the leader of the opposition made the statement a short time ago in this house that we would have to exercise due care and that we would have to see whether or not our business interests were going to be affected. So far as I am aware we have not bargained to any extent in that particular respect, but I wish to reiterate that as far as our preference to Great Britain is concerned there is no bargaining in connection with it. We have offered it.

Mr. BENNETT: The preference is not limited to Great Britain.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is limited to Great Britain and her colonies.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is the British Empire to which it is limited.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, yes, I beg your pardon; it is the British Empire. I do not expect that the budget has pleased my hon. friend in that respect, and I did not think for one minute that it would please him. The reduction in the British preferential tariff number 270 as against 11 increases and as a result of this budget 589 items in a total of 1,188 are entirely free under the British preferential tariff. Let me say in passing: Wipe off the hay and straw and the hundred items to which my hon. friend has so often referred; throw them into the discard.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is where they belong.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I wish to make it clear that nobody is making the claim that these items were intended to be misleading in any respect.

An hon. MEMBER: Why were they put in?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) made it clear to my hon. friend, if he had cared to listen. He said they were placed on the schedule for the purpose of wiping them off altogether. So that I say if you consider the hundred items complained of by my hon. friend you still have a very respectable list remaining. The extensions in the preference made this year alone affect commodities which Canada imported last year to the value of $200,000,000. The matter of iron and steel has constituted a very important subject for discussion in this country. Such tariff increases as are made are, in almost all instances, on those primary forms which are used in manufacturing and they will be absorbed almost entirely by the manufacturers who process the primary forms into secondary products. Thus these increases will benefit the iron and steel industry without laying any burden upon the ultimate consumer.

A great deal has been made of the fact and references have frequently been made to the increases in the iron and steel schedules. It has been stated that such increased prices would in the end increase the price to the consumer. In this connection I shall deal with item 377b:

> Ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, n.o.p., of iron or steel, valued at not less than 3 cents per pound, when imported by manufacturers of steels for use exclusively in the manufacture of steels, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

And the item before that:

> Blooms, cogged ingots, slabs, billets, n.o.p., sheet bars, of iron or steel, by whatever process made, n.o.p.

The British preferential rate is $2.50 whereas it was formerly $1.50. May I say that the whole idea is to bring materials to Canada, to produce in Canada the primary products necessary for the manufacture of iron and steel. I wish to point out that this will not mean an increase to the ultimate consumer. Why is that so? Bars and rods are the product of the billets, and the schedule says:

> Bars or rods, of iron or steel, including bilets weighing less than 60 pounds per lineal yard, hot rolled, as hereunder defined, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

This item was given at $4.25 per ton, and there is no change. So that the rolling mills will have the benefit of importing their iron in the same manner as they have imported it in the past, at the same price, and at the same tariff schedule. There is no increase in this commodity; any increase which may have been placed upon the primary manufacturer is absorbed in the secondary, and it is not passed on to the consumer. A great deal has been said by my hon. friends in connection with the fact that there have been no reductions which would affect the agricultural classes. May I say that I can see a large list of items which have been placed on the free list. For one thing I notice the necessary steel for the manufacture of horseshoe nails and chains. Surely to goodness chains—and logging chains in particular—are used very largely by agriculturists.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There are no logging chains there.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes there are.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They are not the size of logging chains.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not the number of the item before me, but I make the statement that the chains in question can be used for agricultural purposes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They could not be used for logging chains; they are not logging chains, because they are too small to be used for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Indeed, in spite of increases in duty on these more primary forms there are scores of reductions on the finished products in iron and steel. Reductions in rates under iron and steel are numerous and important. Some of these which will affect the consumer directly or indirectly are: Decrease on structural steel in weights not made in Canada but in which Great Britain can compete; free listing of steel plates in sizes and weights in which Great Britain can compete; reduction under all tariffs on galvanized corrugated sheets used for granaries, culverts, siding, and so on. I suppose my hon. friends will say the farmers do not get any advantage from these reductions. Then there has been an extension of the British preference on wire, springs and saw steels. Will my hon. friends say the farmers get no benefit there?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I absolutely deny that they will get any benefit.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will have a chance to explain his attitude when the proper time comes. I am making the statement now, and my hon. friend can refute it when he makes his speech. That extension of the British preference on wire, springs and saw steels will mean much to the people of this country. There are reductions under all tariffs on tractors and parts which were formerly dutiable. Surely that will mean something to the farmers of this country. My hon. friends do not like this story, and I do not blame them very much. There has been also a free listing under the British preference of all agricultural machinery, including milking machines, pasteurizers, dairy equipment and so on. I am taking the list the leader of the opposition read the other day in some detail, and in connection with which he stated that under some items there were some importations, while under others nothing was imported. I have left out those items under which he said there had been no importations, and this list includes, in addition to what I have mentioned, spraying and other horticultural equipment, potato diggers and planters, incubators and brooders, scythes, sickles, rakes and forks, separators and electric power generators. Material reductions have been made under all tariffs on machinery and equipment for use in printing, and the entire list is made free under the British preferential tariff. Surely that will mean something to the newspaper men of this country and it should mean something to the newspaper readers of Canada also; with our cheaper newsprint and with cheaper machinery for manufacturing newspapers perhaps they will not cost so much in the future.

Then we have reductions under all tariffs on a very wide range of construction machinery such as is used by municipalities and individuals for draining, ditching, road building, excavating and so on. Under the British preference such machinery, formely dutiable, is now free, and this list includes: Concrete and asphalt road machines, cranes; shovels; back fillers; steam and air driven pile hammers and turntables. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, I have taken these articles from the list furnished by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition the other day, and I am giving them as proof that this budget does mean something and indeed means a great deal to all classes of people in this country who in future will be consumers of the articles mentioned in these schedules.

Reductions have been made under all tariffs on machinery for carbonizing lignite coal. This will be very important to the western provinces, and to the eastern provinces as well; in the future this should have a great effect on the development of this industry in Canada. Reductions have been made under all tariffs on machinery for making clay products, which industry now is being developed in western Canada. This will be of great importance to the brick and tile industry; no one will deny that. In addition, reductions under all tariffs and free listing under the British preference have been effected on all unspecified machinery, the importations of which amount to millions of dollars. Some of the machinery affected includes air compressing machinery, cranes and derricks, icing and refrigerating machinery, metal working machinery, pulp and paper mill machinery, power pumps and parts, steam and other shovels, steam boilers, internal combustion engines, steam engines, switches and switch boards, spark plugs and magnetos, rheostats, controllers and motors, fuses and fuse plugs and so on. We have also free listing from Great Britain and reductions under all tariffs on electrical apparatus of a class not made in Canada, including electric light fixtures, electric light bulbs, lamp shades.

gas meters, flashlights, headlights, enamelled hollow ware, plain hollow ware and tinware for shipping milk or cream. I am not going to say very much about tea; there will be no argument about that, but I might mention that there have been reductions under all tariffs on hand or power washing machines, sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, floor polishers and domestic refrigerators. There have been reductions also in the British preference rate on enamelled kitchenware, enamelled bath tubs, lavatory equipment and so on, which Great Britain is equipped to produce. All parts of Canada will benefit by this reduction. Reductions ranging from 7 to 15 cents per pound have been made effective on tea already.

Mr. SHORT: Where do you get the 15 cents?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The large companies advertised in the press that all retailers had received instructions to cut prices immediately, and this reduction became instantly effective throughout Canada. All householders should benefit by the free entry from Great Britain and her colonies of tableware, china and porcelain. This trade runs to about $4,000,000 annually, and the greatly increased spread should divert it almost entirely to Great Britain. Surely this will mean something to the Canadian consumer, and it will mean also an increase in our trade with the mother country.

Western Canada in particular has gone in for the wide development of rural hospitals. The budget puts on the free list, under all tariffs, an extremely wide range of hospital supplies and equipment, much of which formerly entered Canada from the United States at rates ranging from 17½ per cent to 35 per cent. This reduction directly affects the ordinary citizens in every province.

This budget, Mr. Speaker, is not a free trade budget, nor can it be construed to be a protectionist budget.

An hon. MEMBER: What is it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know my hon. friends will take a lot of time pointing out what they consider to be weaknesses in the budget, but they will have a hard task ahead of them. Neither can this budget be said to set up a revenue tariff. What we are endeavouring to do is to transfer our trade to Great Britain and countries which are willing to trade with us, but realizing the situation as it exists to-day the government, after a most complete investigation by the tariff board, have endeavoured so to adjust the tariff as to give the maximum possible scope to international trade, upon which we know the prosperity of every country rests. It is not designed in the spirit of irrational, extreme, economic nationalism which is rampant to-day throughout the world and with which Canada shows some signs of being affected.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time is up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Just one further word and I am through. I think the Minister of Finance has shown remarkable skill in producing a tariff which comes so near to pleasing all kinds of divergent opinions, which does not seek to exact any substantial sacrifice from any considerable section of the Canadian people and which will be fully appreciated only when the full effects of the changes become apparent.

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to follow the remarks of the minister closely; having only forty minutes I have something to say in addition to what he has said already, but I do want to say that I do not understand how we can get a reduction of 15 cents on tea when the duty was only 7 cents and 10 cents. One of the largest tea dealers in Canada advertises reductions of 10 cents and 7 cents per pound, but there is no mention of a reduction of 15 cents. I would like to know how a duty of 7 cents can be magnified into one of 15 cents.

An hon. MEMBER: It is a mystery.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Oh, yes, it is a mystery. I denied the statement of the hon. minister that this budget would bring any trade to Great Britain. He referred especially to saw steel, and he told us that no one could deny that that item being in the British preference would bring trade to Great Britain. I know something about that business. Twenty years or more ago we purchased from Great Britain every pound of saw steel used in this country. For the last twenty years we have not followed that course. Why? In the first place, there are three or four American saw companies who have branch factories in Canada. The steel is manufactured by them in the United States and shipped to these factories. Does it seem reasonable that any one of those companies will buy British steel to manufacture saws in Canada, no matter what the duty may be.

An hon. MEMBER: It would come in at a cheaper rate.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why did we stop purchasing from Great Britain, especially when the duty was lower on goods imported from Great Britain than those imported from the United States? Did we do that because of a love for the United States? No, it was because of the necessity to continue in business—the steel had to be purchased at the cheapest price. British preference on saw steel is not going to bring any British steel into Canada. There are other things to be considered besides that of price. There is the closeness to the market which permits the carrying of small stocks. The purchasing of material in the old country necessitates buying twice a year, during the spring and the fall.

Mr. BROWN: Is not the hon. gentleman afraid he is proving too much?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, I am not. I am telling the facts and the truth about the matter, that is what counts.

Mr. BROWN: And at the same time the hon. member is changing his tune.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not changing my tune at all. The hon. minister who just spoke (Mr. Stewart) has changed his tune. That was the same gentleman who a few years ago sounded the death knell of protection. It was the same gentleman who was burying protection; he has resurrected it, he has breathed new life into it and it lives again. The hon. members on the other side of the house are following him. They have turned protectionist. I do not say that they have stolen our policy, what I say is that they have paid us the greatest compliment by following in our footsteps and accepting our advice. If they stole anything they would not know what to do with it when they got it.

An hon. MEMBER: Perhaps the hon. member knows that better himself.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When I first looked over the schedules attached to this budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) the first thing that came to my mind was the French treaty presented to us by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). That gentleman returned from France with a treaty which he inflicted upon this country. There was a list of over 250 articles contained in schedule B, but with the exception of two or three items, none of those articles has been manufactured in this country.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend should be careful; he was lost once in the bronze powder.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There was only one item in the lot which the hon. gentleman could find to be incorrect. This treaty contained a list of over 200 articles which we were permitted to export to France under special trade conditions, and I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that out of that list there were not half a dozen which we manufactured, and only two or three which we have exported. Out of those two or three articles exported, only one or two have been exported to France. Is it any wonder that I suspect the Minister of Justice of having had something to do with this proposition of the British preference. The schedule contains dozens of articles which Great Britain will never send to us. Why have they been put there? I asked the hon. minister who has just spoken, and he said: what else could we do? The easiest thing would have been to strike them out of the tariff, but they did not do that. They wanted to swell and pad up the budget.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is my hon. friend suggesting that they should be taken out of the tariff?

Mr. CHAPLIN: There is no reason in the world why that should not have been done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Hay, for instance?

Mr. CHAPLIN: From England?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But the tariff covers all countries.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the preferential tariff.

Mr. BROWN: They have been asking for an increase for the last two or three years.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would like to put on record some of the items included in the French treaty. I want to serve notice upon the government and upon the people of Canada that if this party ever comes into power that treaty will be abrogated.

An hon. MEMBER: That may be a long time.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It may be a long time, but I venture this prediction: whether or not we are in power, this government will abandon that treaty because it is no good and never was any good. It is a detriment to the trade of this country. If the Minister of Finance did not receive the assistance of the Minister of Justice in preparing these schedules, he must have thought that it would be a good scheme to try.

Beginning with item 04 of the French treaty, and continuing down that page to item 073, and from item 074 down to item 0247, and then on the following page from item 0248 down to item 0379, one is able to see the variety of items included in this treaty. This list includes a number of names made up of a number of letters, many of which are unpronounceable. I intend to spell out some of them, but I will not attempt to pronounce them, and I do not think the Minister of Justice could pronounce them. Item 0246 is d-i-e-t-h-y-s-u-l-p-h-o-n-a-d-i-m-e-t-h-y-l-m-e-t-h-a-n-e. I am told that that article is really a sleeping powder. I heard it said the other day that because chloroform was allowed to enter this country free of duty, probably the government has used some of it upon certain of the outside members in order to prevent them from doing anything in regard to this particular tariff. If they do not find the chloroform effective, I would suggest they use this, because it can be brought in by the carload and the Minister of Justice can get it for them.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Spell another one

Mr. CHAPLIN: I shall be glad to do so. This is one: m-o-n-o-m-e-t-h-y-l-p-a-r-a-m-i-d-o-c-r-e-s-o-l. This is a really good one: t-e-t-r-a-m-e-t-h-y-l-d-i-a-m-i-d-e b-e-n-z-o-p-h-e-n-o-n-e.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I wish my hon. friend would try to pronounce that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: My hon. friend might give me some help in that regard.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I wish he would pronounce the one that I give him now.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Let the hon. member try it first.

Mr. CHAPLIN: T-e-t-r-a-c-h-l-o-r-o-p-h-t-h-a-l-i-c. I am satisfied for my hon. friend to have a try at pronouncing that. I could give another one that might be easier with only about fifteen letters if the minister thinks he could try to pronounce it.

As I said, there are more than 200 items padded into this list, and as regards not more than one or two did we ship 400 pounds. Just imagine that, and yet we have used more paper in printing this treaty and the customs books with these extra pages than the whole thing is worth!

A protective tariff, if properly and faithfully applied, would have the same effect if administered by a Liberal or a Conservative government. I am willing to admit that. I do not care about anything but the principle; I am not disturbed by the government taking over protection. As I said a moment ago, the very highest compliment is paid to us by their adopting something to which they have been diametrically opposed for ten years. What is worrying me is this: will they give it a fair trial? Are they taking it to seek to destroy it? Is it a game to fool the people? I say a game, because the government have tried more than once to do that kind of fooling. On the other hand, do they now actually believe the tariff on the items referred to will accomplish any good purpose? If it is true that it will accomplish a good purpose, why did they delay ten years to put it into effect? Will the people believe that the government has had a change of heart? Will they believe that the government has a heart at all, or is this nothing but a change to catch a few votes? Will the people believe that those who have opposed an increase in duty on butter, eggs, fruits and vegetables have now sincerely changed their minds? I think it can be demonstrated without a shadow of doubt that almost the entire cabinet and most of the members on that side of the house have, during the past few sessions, gone on record against any increase in tariff on these articles. A few weeks ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) argued in this way: Well, if you do put a duty on butter and eggs it will not do any good, because in a little while production will overtake consumption and you will be back where you were before. Why does he not apply that to his furniture? Instead of that he brings the other minister to his relief and gets him to raise the duty on furniture.

Mr. EULER: Nothing of the sort.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The government did not raise the duty on furniture?

Mr. EULER: I am contradicting the statement made by the hon. gentleman that the Minister of Trade and Commerce induced the Minister of National Revenue to do this.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am willing to accept that statement by the minister. I am sorry to have made that remark. The fact remains that the one gentleman is the furniture man and the other is the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister of National Revenue raises the tariff upon furniture. I do not know at whose behest this was done, but he raises the duty so that more duty is collected on furniture. What for? Because it is being, so they say, dumped. I ask the minister this question: Is he going to apply the same principle to other businesses in this country?

Mr. EULER: If conditions are the same.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Conditions are the same, but none of us happens to be in the bedstead business. Some of us are in other businesses.

Recently during this very session members of parliament have gone on record that a duty on eggs and butter is of no use; that it would not do any good. Some since the introduction of the budget have somewhat regretted it. I think the minister might get a little more chloroform and hand it to those fellows because they are not in line with the others. Of course that chloroform has been used further. The Minister of National Revenue himself once or twice has been chloroformed too.

Mr. EULER: The hon. member is referring to my thumb, I hope.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, I am referring to the liquor business.

Mr. EULER: The anaesthetic was, I should judge, pretty generally administered to everybody on the other side.

Mr. CHAPLIN: My friends on this side never came out so boldly as the minister himself and told us what was going to happen, and nobody knew more about it than he did. I will admit he knew, but he did not stick to his guns as I have seen somebody else do.

An hon. MEMBER: He did not hide behind the curtain.

Mr. CHAPLIN: One thing sure is that I did not vote for the bill—I wanted to vote against it—because on principle I will not vote to give anything to the United States.

Mr. EULER: Why did my hon. friend not vote against it?

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. member is in deep water now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am in no deep water at all and do not find the subject embarrassing in the least. I had my own reasons, and as I heard one hon. gentleman say, it is none of your business. I certainly would not vote for it anyway.

We now have the spectacle of a discredited party ready to go before the country with a policy that is diametrically opposed to what is generally supposed to have been their policy, judging by their actions in the past several sessions. They are now ready to abandon their own principles knowing that the tide of feeling in the country is running against them. They pretend to want to take action against the United States, to put up the tariff against the United States and reduce the British preference, so that trade may be diverted from the United States to Great Britain. I wish to refer briefly to some of these items.

On the first page of the budget proposals of the Minister of Finance, I find such articles as animals, live hogs, meats, canned meats and other meats, tallow, beeswax, eggs. Let me just say this, that that is a bunk sheet so far as the British preference is concerned.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): What is the meaning of bunk?

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is pure, unadulterated bunk, and if you dont know what that means you had better get the dictionary. Let me take these items in turn. There were four head of cattle imported into this country under the duty. There were no live hogs imported. And yet Great Britain is being offered the sale of this stuff to us! On canned meats the British preference is reduced by 2½ per cent. In other meats Great Britain might have done some business with us, but the government took good care not to reduce the British preference on that item. It remains at two cents a pound as it was before. Why? Because the government has had the experience of reducing the duty on Australian meats and butter, and their friends did not support the government too long on that, and the government had to abandon it.

The next item is tallow. There have been no importations of tallow into this country for years from Great Britain, but we do get a lot from the United States. Of beeswax we import none from the United Kingdom. Of eggs in the shell a few dozen came from Great Britain. But on the second egg item, broken eggs, here is what happened. This is a line of goods in which the British send us nearly 1,000,000 pounds of eggs, $120,000 worth. What did the government do with respect to that business? They raised the tariff. They did not want Great Britain to continue in that line of trade. They were scared. But on the very next item of eggs, in which the trade was not very heavy, only $4,000 of importations, the government reduced the tariff, making the British preferential rate 10 per cent instead of 15. That is exactly why I call these proposals bunk.

Take butter. But what is the use? Does Britain sell us butter? A few pounds came in, but who knows where it came from? Great Britain is a world trader, trading everywhere. What is more, we do not want butter from England any more than we want it from Australia or New Zealand.

I come to the item, compressed yeast. The government is going to force that business over to England, I suppose. At present all the imports come from the United States. The Americans have yeast offices all over this country.

Take buckwheat, and beans. Beans are made free from England. There is a duty under the general and intermediate tariffs, and it is free under the British preference. Why? So that our people can buy beans grown all over the empire to bring in against the beans grown by our own people. That is not the kind of protection that I would like to see. We allow buckwheat and barley and cornmeal to come in free. That is on the second page of the resolutions, another bunk page, and the hon. gentleman need not ask me what bunk means either.

Now I come to oatmeal. We bought from Great Britain in 1929, 438 pounds of oatmeal. Of rye in the last four years our total importations from Great Britain have mounted to 106 bushels. Of rye flour we imported none from Great Britain and these are made free of duty.

The government is also allowing wheat to come in free from Great Britain. That is another bunk proposition. Here is the situation about wheat and wheat flour. We got 75,000 barrels of flour from the United States in 1929, and from Great Britain 134 barrels. The funny thing about it is that that flour came in free from Great Britain. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, we put this on the free list! It was free before so far as Great Britain is concerned, and under a free tariff Great Britain sent us only 134 barrels against 75,000 barrels from the United States who are paying a fifty-cent tariff. If the Minister of Finance really wanted to cut off the trade from the United States and hand it over to Great Britain, he did not go the right way about it.

Let me summarize. There are 387 items in the old tariff printed in the Minister's proposals, 387 items in which no change is made in the American tariff. There is not one cent of change in them; they stand the same. There are 70 items upon which the tariff against the United States is increased, and 105 items on which the tariff against the United States is decreased. Now what is the way to get imports from a country? It is to decrease the tariff. That will bring imports. Now there are 105 items in the Minister's proposals, coming from the United States, on which there has been a decrease of tariff. My figures do not exactly agree with the minister's; I cannot make them gibe, but when we examine the items in detail we shall find out who is nearest correct.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It is a low tariff budget then?

Let us examine this thing a little further. If that proves to be true—and there are protected articles here, there is no doubt about that—if those articles are really protected, then Britain cannot sell them to us, so how is Britain going to increase her trade with us? If our steel mills are now well looked after so far as construction steel, ingots, and other things are concerned, how can the English mills come in here and get that trade? If these things are well protected here very few of them will be imported from Great Britain. That is what I said in the first place, that this government did not know the difference between a protective tariff and revenue tariff. I do not apply that remark to every member of the government, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) knows the difference, and so does the other minister (Mr. Malcolm) who is in the manufacturing business: but evidently they have been chloroformed, they are not in the running in respect to this tariff.

Now Mr. Speaker, I have not yet begun to get through the list of what I call, and which are, "bunk" items covered by the British preference in this tariff. There is just as much bunk in these items as there was in the French treaty that I quoted. But let me continue with these items. After wheat and wheat flour comes rice-bran. Well, we got $62 worth in 1929, and in the nine months of the present fiscal year not a dollar. Macaroni and vermicelli have been made free; they enjoyed a 75 per hundred weight tariff before. Now, what is the object of putting these articles on the free list? We are making macaroni in this country—there are three macaroni plants in my district. Does the minister want to put these people out of business? Do the government intend to continue strafing the industries of Canada? Do they want to see a few more men out of jobs? Hay and straw comprise the next item; there is no use saying a word about it. Natural flowers; these are made free coming from Great Britain. Well now, should that item have been inserted? Are any natural flowers imported from the old country?

Mr. MANION: They will be imported for the funeral of the government.

An hon. MEMBER: You can bring them in by aeroplane.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I suppose you get lots of them out in Winnipeg. Potatoes have been made free all round, but we have got the countervailing duty. In other words, Mr. Speaker, heretofore we have had a duty of this kind, but we always made the tariff ourselves, the rate of duty always appeared in our own tariff book. Now, the duty is not inserted at all. We have a government that is scared to put any duty in the tariff; it is going to let somebody else do that. When the commodity comes from the United States the United States authorities will make the tariff; if the goods come from some other place, their entry through the customs cannot be made until we know what the tariff of the other country is. Apparently we have not got enough nerve ourselves to legislate for our own people, we let somebody else make our tariff. I have no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, in saying that so far as potatoes or any other vegetables are concerned which we produce ourselves, I do not care where they come from, if they interfere with the products raised by our own people, while those native products are available in abundance, I say we should have a tariff to stop the importation of similar vegetables. If high-priced fruits and vegetables are imported out of season, there is all the more reason why there should be a duty on them because only the wealthy people can buy them, and they should pay for the privilege. The same remark applies to imported strawberries and other high-priced stuff. Onions are free from England or British colonies or British possessions. The tariff is 30 per cent on the general tariff which is the same old tariff; but the minister has done something more, he has put on a specific duty, which he says shall not be less than three quarters of a cent a pound.

That puts me in mind of one other matter that probably I can deal with before my time expires. The Minister of Finance says that he has made an orderly tariff. I wonder where we have heard that word before? I think it has come from the west. I have heard the word out there. I have no doubt that when the minister made these proposals in the first place he had an idea that he could turn a certain amount of trade away from the United States to Great Britain. Let me quote his words about an orderly tariff. He said first:

> When this revision is completed the Canadian customs tariff will consist of 1,188 items of which 589 will be free under the British preference.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, he paid more attention to the number of items than he did to the quality of the items, or what the items amounted to. That is one reason why I propose to show the falsity of many of the items. It would take me three hours to go through the full list, but if I had the time I could show on every page a bunch of stuff that is nothing more than junk. It has no right to be in the tariff so far as bringing any business to Great Britain is concerned. He says further:

> The importance of this enlargement of the preference is indicated by the fact that Canada imported last year over two hundred million dollars worth of the commodities on which we are now increasing the British preference.

I do not deny that at all. But the minister is very careful not to say. "I predict that as a result of this extension of the British preference so many million dollars worth of goods will come from England." He could have done that had he put a proper tariff on American goods that would have ensured the import of similar goods from Great Britain. But he did not want to do it. Even the reductions that have been made have just been moderate, and the increases are about the same. As I pointed out a few minutes ago, there are 387 items that are not touched at all. Do you mean to say that the people who have been favoured with that business heretofore are going to lose it? Not on your life. I have met some steel people from the United States since this budget has been brought down, and they are not worrying. There may be two or three items that they cannot touch, but the minister knows that if he had increased the tariff on the articles that I am speaking about the goods would be made in this country, and it would only be necessary to see that the people favoured by the tariff did not exploit the domestic consumer.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak after the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin). I have listened with rapt attention to the speech of the hon. gentleman and I must say that it was delivered with the energy of flaming youth. In his opening remarks he said that the government was falling into the footsteps of the Tory party. He was mistaken in that respect and also in the advice which he gave to the government. If such advice were followed the cost of living would be greatly increased.

I think this would be a proper occasion upon which to mention the eloquent speech delivered on Saturday by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I read the report of his speech as it appears in the press. His remarks are not new by any means and they are as follows:

"Countervailing tariff meant" he proceeded, "that the Canadian tariff would be made at Washington." "So," Mr. Bennett went on, "You have this beautiful condition that when the President of the United States at Washington signs a tariff ruling, that will be the tariff in Canada."

I wish to make reference to a statement which appeared in the Montreal Star of May 3:

Most of lumber items put back on United States free list. Washington house members on tariff rate-slashing rampage.

The point is that most of the statements made by the leader of the opposition are reversible, and it would be nearer the truth to say that the American tariff was made in Ottawa rather than to say that the Canadian tariff was made in Washington. In answer to the statement of my hon. friend from Lincoln as to the policy of this government and as to the policy of the Tory party, it might be fitting to quote the definition of Liberalism which was given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) at the meeting held on March 19, of the Twentieth Century Liberal Association of Canada:

Freedom and Equality

Liberalism is above all else identified with freedom and equality. It seeks to destroy the strength of privilege and the restraints which privilege, for its own ends imposes on those who are not permitted to share its rights and enjoyments. You can see that the moment freedom begins to assert itself through its advocates in any given sphere or at any given time, immediately there will arise those who will seek to conserve for themselves, and for those who share their privileged position, the privileges and rights which are already theirs. They, in their turn, come to be known as Conservatives.

The Liberal attitude, in contrast to the Conservative, is based upon a belief in the general interest as being superior to any special interest, the supremacy of general interests over particular interests. It is based upon a belief in the subordination of class interests to the interests of the community. It implies that the good of all is the good of each; that in our organized social life we are members one of another.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. QUINN: Liberalism is dead, and it is waiting for the undertaker.

Mr. POULIOT: That is what will happen to my hon. friend after the election.

At the last annual meeting of the Royal Bank of Canada held on January 9, 1930, Sir Herbert S. Holt, in moving the adoption of the directors' report, suggested that Canada should follow President Hoover's example. That represents another occasion when Tories have made the suggestion that we should follow the example of the United States, and establish a non-partisan advisory council composed of men of outstanding ability who would be representative of industry, agriculture and labour. In moving the adoption of the report he used the words:

Men representative of industry, agriculture and labour, who would assist the formulation and execution of effective measures for the maintenance of that equilibrium which would ensure state prosperity.

The following morning the Montreal Gazette in its columns praised the suggestion made by Sir Herbert Holt. It would be interesting to know what was behind the suggestion made by this newspaper. On April 25 the same paper published another editorial supporting the request of the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Company and other privately-owned power companies in Quebec for the repeal of "the discriminatory federal income tax which exempts the customers of publicly-owned utilities, such as the Ontario Hydro-Electric, and exacts a heavy payment from the users of power supplied through privately-owned services." After that editorial, the cat was out of the bag. The price of electricity is very much higher in the province of Quebec than in any other province. As my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Raymond), very wisely pointed out on March 6, 1928:

If the consumer pays too high a price for electricity in the city of Montreal, and in fact he does, it is not on account of the federal tax paid by the company but of the exorbitant profits made at the consumer's expense; and when, under the plea that an Ontario company, the Hydro-Electric Company, is not taxed for, among others, the good reason that it makes no profits, it asks for an exemption of taxes on the profits realized, not only on the electricity sold to the citizens of Montreal, but on that sold to the United States, on the sale of gas and other articles in the various branches of commerce, also on its investments. It simply wants to ward off the public's suspicions, who rightly claim lower rates for electricity.

A share of the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Company purchased in 1908 for $85 has brought to date to its owner the grand total of $1,770. Imagine that! On May 6th my hon. friend from Mount Royal (Mr. White) said:

> In a word, in my judgment the only way to bring about equity in taxation is to abolish the income tax entirely with regard to public utilities.

The day after the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Company increased its dividend! On May 3, Sir Herbert Holt, in an interview with the press, repeated that such just taxation "created an unfair discrimination." If his argument was listened to, the sky would be the limit with regard to profiteering. As the county council of my constituency and the councils of other local municipalities have protested against Sir Herbert Holt's request, I congratulate the Minister of Finance upon having declined in the public interest to grant it. Have we not already a council composed of men of outstanding ability, representing, industry, agriculture and labour, which formulates and executes measures for the maintenance of that equilibrium which ensures prosperity? Do we not find such a council right here? We already have it: The Mackenzie King government, which I am glad to support.

1. I shall first deal with labour. Labour was at an earlier date represented by the Prime Minister; the present Prime Minister was also the first editor of the Labour Gazette; he prepared the Industrial Disputes Act; under Sir Wilfrid Laurier he became Canada's first Minister of Labour; he was responsible for the appointment of a royal commission on technical education; he is the author of a famous book entitled Industry and Humanity, and he is an authority on labour problems and constitutional law. The present Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), locomotive engineer and deep sea diver, was born under a thatched roof in Ireland. He is the father of the Old Age Pension Act, from the operation of which 43,000 people are to-day benefiting in Ontario and the four western provinces.

Mr. QUINN: The hon. gentleman had better go down and take a look at the bottom of the sea.

Mr. POULIOT: I can see from my hon. friend's remarks that there are good and bad Irishmen. When my hon. friends get old they can migrate from Nova Scotia to the west and enjoy the benefits of that act. However, I do not think they will have to go to that trouble; soon a Liberal government will be in power in Nova Scotia and will come under the provisions of that measure. The minister is responsible for several orders in council regarding contract labour and the forty-four hour week for Dominion government employees. This year he brought in bill No. 49, which I have advocated several times, with respect to fair wages and the eight-hour day for labour employed, by contract or otherwise, on Dominion public works. During the minister's tenure of office there have been approximately 160 disputes, any one of which might have been disastrous to the country; in all those disputes in which this department has been asked to assist, settlements have been made without loss of time, and the minister has intervened personally in many cases in order to prevent strikes.

2. Then let us consider how industry is represented. Senator Dandurand, Minister of State, leader of the government in the Senate and a former president of the League of Nations, is a banker; he is president of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank and of several other important business concerns. The Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. King), is president of the King Lumber Mills Limited, of Cranbrook, British Columbia. Last year the amount of pensions paid to victims of the great war amounted to about $39,000,000, or $6,000,000 more than when he took charge of this department. This year he will bring in new legislation regarding pensions, based upon the unanimous recommendations of a parliamentary committee which has been working under the very able chairmanship of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). The very efficient Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler), has a most ungrateful task; he must collect the money. When he was appointed the total revenue from his department amounted to $361,891,072·37; he reorganized his department into three branches, customs, excise and income tax, and last year he collected $400,091,784·40, or roughly $38,200,000 more than was collected four years ago. The minister is well known as a first class business man, and certainly deserves hearty congratulations.

Then we have the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), a young manufacturer, who has done much for the expansion of Canadian trade in many ways. He has been very much interested in research and is responsible for the extent to which the National Research Council has continued and expanded its scholarships, assisted research programs and organized and developed new activities of the greatest importance. He has furthered the post graduate training of research workers, the coordination of research work, the organization of cooperative investigation, the prosecution of research work through assisted research grants and the establishment of national research laboratories. He has increased the efficiency of the commercial intelligence service; during the past eight years the number of offices has been increased by 50 per cent and the personnel by over 100 per cent. Due to the efficiency of this department, which was reorganized last year, our exports have become 28 times what they were in the year of confederation.

3. Let us now consider how agriculture is represented. We have the genial Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), who is a practical farmer and who was formerly Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan. He is very congenial and popular. The most important achievements of his department since he took office have been the winning of the fight against wheat rust on the prairies; the discovery of Garnet and Reward wheat, bred and developed by Mr. Newman, Dominion Cerealist, which varieties of wheat mature from a week to ten days earlier than marquis wheat and which have extended the seed belt of this country one hundred miles to the north, opening up vast areas hitherto supposed to be useless for that kind of agriculture; the eradication of bovine tuberculosis and the inprovement in the Canadian hog. Canadian bacon has improved so very much in quality that Canada is eating very much more of it, and it compares favourably with the Danish article, which is supposed to be the best that reaches the market.

We also have the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), a farmer and a former premier of Alberta who, as the Minister of the Interior, returned the natural resources of the western provinces and who, as acting Minister of Immigration, cut out the assisted passage of immigrants, which step had been advocated for a long time throughout this country. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Crerar) was born and raised on a farm and was Minister of Agriculture in the Union government, resigning the year after the war. He was the leader of the Progressive party in the House of Commons until November, 1922, and has been president of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association since 1907. Upon the appointment of the present Minister of Finance the Prime Minister called him to take over the portfolio of Railways and Canals. He is working on the consolidation of the debt of the Canadian National Railways; he is concerning himself with the Montreal terminal; this year he will inaugurate the Welland canal, which is a marvel of civil engineering, and the Hudson Bay railway. He is a fair-minded man and a hard worker, although apparently he does his work in a very easy way.

The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) was vice-president of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Asosciation and the organizer and general manager of the Saskatchewan Cooperative Elevators. He is a practical business man. The Minister of Finance was born in England in 1885, and is not yet forty-five years old. This young immigrant, who came to Canada in 1902, was appointed provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan when only thirty-one years of age and became premier two years later. He resigned the premiership to come to Ottawa in the dark days of 1926, since when his varied experience, sound judgment and practical views have proved to be of invaluable assistance to the Liberal party, especially with regard to the building of the Hudson Bay railway and the Halifax, Toronto and Vancouver terminals, and the complete reorganization of the Canadian National Railways. Several times the minister has been offered positions in the business world at salaries ranging from $25,000 to $50,000 yearly, but with praiseworthy self denial he has refused these offers. Upon the death of the late Mr. Robb he was chosen Minister of Finance, and his first budget speech has proved the wisdom of that choice. It is the most fair to all, although the most technical budget, since confederation, thanks to the intelligent work of the tariff board, the wise recommendations of different members of the cabinet and many private members, and the clear vision of the new minister, who continues the splendid work of his predecessor in reducing the debt of this country as well as the taxes.

I have mentioned the ministers who particularly represent industry, agriculture and labour in the cabinet which, however, includes also several other men of great ability. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) attended the conference in London last fall on the operation of Dominion legislation and merchant shipping legislation, with regard to the disallowance of existing statutory provisions requiring reservation of Dominion legislation for the assent of His Majesty; the present position as to the competence of Dominion parliaments to give their legislation extra-territorial operation and also the repeal of the Colonial Laws Validity Act. No one, I am sure, can forget his able leadership as acting premier in the first months of the hectic session of 1926.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) is a very modest man who always chooses to remain in the background, although he is one of the most eloquent platform speakers and parliamentary debaters. As Minister of Marine, he had a survey made of the Hudson bay and strait, sufficient to determine what aids and improvements were necessary to enable shipping to navigate the route with safety; hydrographic charts were made and wireless direction finding stations established; a new and powerful icebreaker is now nearing completion in Halifax for service in these waters. Increased activity in the deepening and widening of the river St. Lawrence ship channel between Montreal and the sea is forecast in the proposal for a very much enlarged appropriation now before parliament. Dams have been devised and are now under construction at the head of lake St. Peter with a view to retarding the flow of waters from above. Experiments are being made all the time with a view to keeping these waters free of ice for as long as possible in the spring and fall and to this end an additional icebreaking steamer was placed in commission last fall which helped materially in keeping the channel open. New harbour commissions have been established at various points, where rapid advancement is being made to provide adequate facilities. Efforts are being made towards the production of hydrographic charts of all navigable waters in Canada within as short a time as possible. A complete survey is also being made, as rapidly as possible, of all coastal waters for the determination of ocean currents as they may affect navigation. Persistent effort in recent years has resulted in a material modification of the differential in marine insurance against Canadian ports as compared with United States ports. The meteorological service and radio beacons newly established have proved to be a great help to navigation. In addition to these 161 principal lights, 58 gas and signal buoys and 12 fog alarms have been established within the past four years at various points throughout the country, all with a view to the betterment of navigation.

As Minister of Fisheries, he has done the very best to increase the fisheries production and went personally last year to the maritime provinces in that connection. The marketing value of the fisheries had increased considerably during recent years. I am sorry that the time at my disposal does not permit the opportunity to give more details in this respect but this branch has grown up to such an extent that the government has decided to establish a separate ministry of fisheries.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) comes from an old Liberal family of Ontario. As Minister of Public Works, he is the guardian and has to look after the building, maintenance and upkeep of the houses of parliament and of all the Dominion public buildings throughout this country. He is a very active man. The growth and progress of the country and the following expansion and development of several departments necessitated the erection of the new Confederation buildings, of which he is justly proud.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot), formerly collector of customs and afterwards premier of New Brunswick, inaugurated the penny postage in this country and extended the same to the British Empire, reduced postage rates between Canada and France and also South America. When he took office, the postage on a parcel of 11 pounds from Canada to South America was $2.75, the same rate as a 20 pound parcel from the United States to South America. Due to his efforts the rates are now the same, which means a great advantage to trade by providing facilities to Canadian merchants to send samples to South American customers at cheaper rates. He is the father of the air mail service in this country.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) is a barrister of note. In England the Solicitor General receives a salary of about $20,000, besides his fees in each case, twice as much as that of the Canadian Solicitor General. In Canada, the Solicitor General receives no fees when he argues a case on behalf of the government and I am glad to say that the Solicitor General has been successful in most of the important cases which he has argued before the Supreme Court of Canada and the Privy Council. The last case that he has won before the supreme court was that of the Sun Life, in which case the decision of the superintendent of insurance, Mr. Finlayson, was supported by the exchequer and supreme courts. I wish to pay that tribute to that honest civil servant who was not impressed by dealing with a big company.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret), a journalist and a former member of the press gallery settled last year a long pending question—the war claims. He was well fitted for such a settlement because he is such a kind, amiable and peaceful citizen. He is presenting legislation to amend the company law in order to fit it to modern exigencies. He increased, in 1927, the salaries of the civil service by $3,000,000, and now he is considering the Beatty report on technicians. Before he reaches a decision I would humbly suggest to him to give a flat increase of $10 per month to everyone in the civil service and to fix a minimum salary of $100 per month for civil servants, who work exclusively for the Dominion government.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) went to France on February 10, 1917, and served continuously until the armistice in 1918. He is one of the best debaters in the House of Commons. During his tenure of office, Canada, by actual administration and development, has made a greater and more varied use of aviation than any country in the world. The air services have been reorganized. The station at Camp Borden provides training for officers and airmen. In the prairie provinces where forest fire protection patrols are operated, the stations are all linked up by wireless, so that communication between aircraft and ground stations is maintained during flight. In addition eight photographic detachments operate in various parts of the country taking air photographs for mapping purposes. The work of the civil government air operations also includes exploration and surveys, transportation of men and supplies for survey parties, Indian treaty flights, crop and forest dusting, fishery patrols, airmail investigation, et cetera. This branch, in conjunction with the Department of Marine and Fisheries, was responsibile for carrying out the survey and observation on ice conditions in the Hudson strait. Besides that, there is the excellent work done by the civil aviation branch and the aeronautical engineering branch. With regard to empire communication, the R-100 is about completed and expected to make an initial flight to Canada shortly and, to use the minister's own words: "We hope that the experiment in closer communication between our British brothers and ourselves will be crowned with success." The minister proved to be a very distinguished representative of Canada at the last naval parley on the limitation of armaments at St. James palace and the fact that our Minister of National Defence advocates peace is a great credit to the government.

As Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has attended several imperial conferences in London where his advice was often sought. He also signed in Paris last year the Kellogg pact for peace.

These are the men who have assisted the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in the careful preparation of the budget which has been presented this year, and, to paraphrase the words of Sir Herbert Holt, they have formulated and executed effective measures for the maintenance of that equilibrium which will ensure state prosperity.

I am not in favour of high protection, nor am I in favour of free trade; I think a moderate protective policy is the wisest, and that is what this government advocates. The present budget essentially is a technical one, and that is the reason why some of the hon. members on the other side of the house do not understand it. On June 12 of last year the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) said that the tariff board was "a glorified commission to enable the minister to escape responsibility." When he made that statement he did not know the kind of budget which would be presented this year. At that time the government were working on the preparation of this budget, but it would have been impossible to draw up such a budget without the assistance of everyone who was in a position to obtain reliable and complete information from the people, who are the ones interested in this matter. Tribute is due to the tariff board for the amount of information they have supplied to the government. The present budget is not one which gives benefit to certain sections of the country; it is a budget for the whole of Canada and everyone will receive benefits. Even those hon. members who speak against it because they do not understand it will receive benefits as well as all other citizens of this country. Last year we had hon. gentlemen speaking of a "wait and see" policy. We have waited and now we can all see. I believe the result is satisfactory. I am frank enough to say that I do not approve all the appointments that are made by the government; sometimes I think they could have been better, but we must consider the general policy of the government which is very satisfactory. I trust the present leaders of the Liberal party in this house, because it is the real Liberal party. The leaders that we have here are sound and able.

Mr. McGIBBON: What about Quebec?

Mr. POULIOT: In Quebec they might call themselves Liberals, but my hon. friend will remember that last year when I asked hon. gentlemen oposite who was the greatest man in the Tory party, he himself said: "Taschereau." So my hon. friend has the same views as I have with regard to his qualifications. I am glad to support the general policy of this government, although it is not perfect. No one can expect to find anything perfect in this world, but the government is the nearest approach to perfection.

Speaking as a Conservative, I think the Conservative party have had paid to them in this budget one of the greatest compliments that has ever been paid to any party in any legislative hall in the world. For fifty years we have been advocating a policy of adequate protection for industry, the farmers, the labouring men and the consumers. During all that time we have been met with policies that have varied almost with the seasons and that have been discarded almost as often as the birds discard their nests. We had hon. gentlemen advocate unrestricted reciprocity under the treaty of 1911, free trade as they had it in England and, last but not least, the platform of 1919. All of these were more or less of one nature; that is, they bordered upon free trade. It is true that during the election of 1921 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) disregarded his platform and said that he had a "chart." I suppose we have the fruits of that navigation to-day when in this budget the Prime Minister has practically discarded all the past and has come out for a policy of protection. We are told in history that prophets have been stoned by their lineal descendants. While it may be true that the present Minister of Finance has not stoned all the ministers of finance and lieutenants of the party of the past, he certainly has built their sepulchres and has cremated their policies into ashes.

But you cannot steal other people's brains successfully, and this budget has failed because hon. gentlemen opposite have not the skill, the experience, the ability and the courage to enforce it properly. We who have been forced to make our living by practising surgery have at times been compelled to ask our clients to undergo severe operations. When we see the stage of dissolution appearing, when we see their strength fading, we sometimes have to ask them to give us greater liberty to take some risk of their lives. Sometimes it is necessary to cut deep into the vital organs to remove some dangerous growth. At other times we have to transfuse into their arteries life-giving fluid in order to prolong their lives. In this budget it seems to me that the Minister of Finance has been attempting to transfuse into the old sclerotic arteries of the Liberal party some of the life-giving fluid of the protectionist doctrine which this party has advocated for many years gone by. But he has failed because he lacks the skill, the technique and—and this is the greatest cause of all—because he lacks the courage to do the thing properly.

On one occasion Disraeli, criticising the government of the day, stated that there were three courses open to it: the course they had left, the course they had pursued, and the course they ought to have pursued. I want for a moment or two to view the actions of the government somewhat in that fashion. I will not say much about the course which they have left except that what they have done is a confession that for thirty or forty years they have been preaching false doctrines to the people of Canada and at last they have been converted. It may be a deathbed conversion, as we think it is; and in that case I should like to remind them that sacred history records only one successful deathbed repentance, that of the thief on the cross. So much for what they have left.

Forgetting for the moment the intermediate course, I want to ask them what they should have done. The answer has been given in the language of my leader when in his speech in the house the other day he said that it was their duty to vacate their seats and give place to Canadians who would produce a Canadian policy for the Canadian people. That is what I conceive was their duty. In place of that we have, as has been pointed out this afternoon and in days gone by, a policy that has its genesis in the city of Washington and that is written by the president of the United States. Sir, we object to that. We think that the policy of this country should be written by Canadians. As far as that limited part of the budget is concerned, all that the finance minister has succeeded in doing has been to move the American eagle from Washington to the 49th parallel of latitude, and there he flaps his wings, stretching from the frozen sea of the Arctic to the torrid gulf of Mexico. We on this side of the house object to policies of that kind. We believe in a policy that will start the wheels of industry in this country rolling, that will give the farmer greater remuneration for his toil, that will bring to the home of the labouring man greater comforts and a better standard of living.

If I had to discuss this budget from only one or two standpoints, I would say first that it is a budget of hypocrisy. Second it is a budget of camouflage. It is a budget of hypocrisy because we have in it the great recantation not only of the government but of the whole Liberal party in the house. I must say that the Minister of Finance has a lot of courage when he asks the whole Liberal party to turn their backs on the past and put their heads upon the executioner's block, for that is what it means for many of that party at the next election. When I look back over their history and recall many of their expressions in this house and their protestations throughout the country, as well as their past policies, I am not altogether surprised. Those of us who have been in this house for some years have seen them steadily year after year steal from the Conservative party those principles which we by an educational process have made popular in this country. We have seen them steal the credit for the national railways, although you, Mr. Speaker, will remember that we had to sit nearly all night in the old museum and almost hold a pistol at the heads of hon. gentlemen opposite in order to carry the legislation through making what are now the national railways the property of the people of Canada. Some hon. gentlemen will remember that this country very nearly lost the national railways. There was a plan, and a deep laid plan at that, to retain for the shareholders the Grand Trunk Pacific proper, which was the paying part of the road, and leave upon the hands of the people those white elephants which were fast bringing this country—I was almost going to say into bankruptcy, but at all events were heaping up great deficits. I was told at the time by one of the ablest lawyers in the house that that plan would have come very near to succeeding had they not forgotten one thing, and that was the War Measures Act had not been repealed. It was still in existence, and I was told at the time that it was stretched to the very limit in order that the country might get possession of the national railways. Now, that the national railways have become successful and are more or less paying the interest on the debt to the public at large, we see that they are taken like a foundling to the bosom of the government who now claim the system as their own child.

We have also seen the government in the Duncan report incorporate a large part of the policies upon which we went to the country in 1925, and we do not hear anybody giving the Conservative party credit for those policies. It is to the Conservative party that credit is due. And now in this budget we have an attempt to steal some part of the Conservatives' protectionist policy. It is true that they have not done it successfully, because, as I said a moment ago, one party cannot steal another party's brains, and the genuine article will always outshine the counterfeit.

I want for a moment to recall some of the statements that have been made in this house by members of the government and of the party opposite. In Hansard of February 24, 1927, I find the present Minister of Finance uttering the following:

> That is the fault I have to find, and that is the distinction I draw between our attitude on this side of the house and the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite. Why, we had a plea for the onion growers. There are three hundred of them in Canada, and my hon. friends opposite want to tax all the people of the Dominion for the benefit of those three hundred onion growers.

And yet, sir, what do we find in this budget? We find this same minister who uttered these words bringing down a budget putting a duty of 45 cents a bushel on onions. Was there ever a greater exhibition of hypocrisy than that? Further on in the same speech, the present Minister of Finance said:

> Had the Conservative party been in power to-day and honestly carried out what they led the people of Canada to believe is their policy, we would have a tariff as high as the tariff now existing in the United States.

"Brick for brick." He was ridiculing such a policy in 1927, and in 1930 he puts that policy which he ridicules upon the statute books of this country. Further, in the same address he said:

> We are between the devil and the deep blue sea.
> Mr. Manion: Which is the devil?
> Mr. Dunning: Well, if I have to define the term, I am afraid I shall have to say that the Tories are.

I was reading the other day in the Winnipeg Free Press something that possibly explains that attitude. The Winnipeg Free Press says:

In some of his western speeches Mr. King is reported to have said that the Progressives were "in the nature of outlaws in parliament," and that they "are simply helping to make the west ridiculous."

I suppose, sir, that that is the reason why the Minister of Finance has turned from the deep sea to the devil of the Tory party.

I have also here some of the statements that have been made in the past by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), who, this afternoon, in a sort of jocular way, amused the house by his address. We all remember his famous statement about the "death knell of protection." He was quite willing to be its executioner. I see my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) in his seat. Looking through Hansard I find him designating protection as "bunk." Possibly he might translate that classic word for the benefit of his followers who were so anxious to get at its meaning this afternoon.

Let me also quote some words uttered by the deputy speaker. He used this classical language in the days when we were in the old museum:

I believe that the trouble that exists to-day can be directly traced to the protective tariff that obtains at the present time.

Then, sir, listen to this expression of opinion. The hon. gentleman was then opposing a sales tax of 3 per cent; he afterwards supported one of 6 per cent. On May 18, 1921, he said:

You cannot expect to have the perfume of roses while you have a polecat under the table.

As I say, we had at that time a sales tax of 3 per cent. I wonder how many polecats are under the table to-day.

An hon. MEMBER: Who said that?

Mr. McGIBBON: The deputy speaker. Let me complete the quotation:

Neither can you expect to have fair methods of taxation imposed by a government whose policy is dictated by and wholly in the interests of the big interests of the country.

Then, sir, I have one more quotation which is of some significance considering that we have behind the ministery a fair number of so-called Liberal Progressives. I do not know whether they are Progressives or not, but the only thing that to my mind qualified them as Liberals in the past was that they seemed to be willing to give away their country and their policy and everything else to retain office. The then member for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston) had this to say:

I may say that in 1916, shortly after this policy—

That is, the farmers' platform.

—had been adopted by the Canadian Council of Agriculture, every candidate in the federal field in Saskatchewan was circularized by the secretary of the grain growers' association there and asked whether, if elected, he would be prepared to support the policy as laid down by the Canadian Council of Agriculture.

That, Mr. Speaker, was practically a policy of free trade. To remove any doubts on the point, let me quote the platform, which, I take it, in the past was supported by all those hon. members sitting to your right, sir, who now are supporting this protectionist budget. This farmers' platform was drafted and issued by the Canadian Council of Agriculture at Winnipeg on November 29, 1918:

A.—By an immediate and substantial all-around reduction in the customs tariff.

I wonder if our friends opposite are getting it in this budget.

B.—By reducing the customs duty on goods imported from Great Britain to one-half the rates charged under the general tariff, and that further gradual, uniform reductions be made in the remaining tariff on British imports that will ensure complete free trade between Great Britain and Canada in five years.

I wonder, sir, if they are still supporting that plank.

C.—By endeavouring to secure unrestricted reciprocal trade in natural products with the United States along the lines of the reciprocity agreement of 1911.

I wonder if there are any men in the west to-day who, even if they got the chance, would accept that policy and submit the farmers of this country to the tender mercies of the great trusts of Chicago and other centres in the United States. I venture to say that if a vote was taken not one of them would stand up in favour of it. Here is another plank of the farmers' program:

D.—By placing all foodstuffs on its free list.

Here is another plank:

E.—That agricultural implements, farm and household machinery, vehicles, fertilizers, coal, lumber, cement, gasoline, illuminating fuel and lubricating oil be placed on the free list and that all raw materials and machinery used in their manufacture also be placed on the free list.

Now, sir, if we placed everything from Great Britain on the free list and were getting everything from the United States that was to have been given to us in 1911, we would have the pure free trade policy, that, I take it, everyone of these so-called Liberal Progressives pledged themselves to support in the past. In view of this, is not the Minister of Finance putting a severe strain on their free trade faith when he asks them to come out and support his protectionist budget? It will be interesting to watch the member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), the member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) and other hon. gentlemen opposite, whose voices were raised heavenward in the past for free trade, and see how they will take this budget. We will watch their course of action with considerable interest. Then there is my good friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Crerar) whom I must not forget. I must say that I think he has a very pleasant personality. I supported him once—I hope I may never do it again. I feel like apologizing for that one vote I cast to keep the hon. member in power. We watched him come into office and followed his career there.

I should like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, as I did at the beginning of this address, to the absolute indifference of the members of this government to getting their budget throught the house. It makes me think that they really do not want it accepted, that it is simply a budget of distress. Well, we shall see before the debate ends. On the government side at the present moment we have the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) and three other private members, while on this side we have a pretty fair representation of members who still have the interests of the country at heart and want to do something for Canada.

Now, sir, in order to make my record complete I desire to place on Hansard the letter to Sir Robert Borden containing the resignation of the hon. Minister of Railways. It was read to the house the other day by my leader, but I desire again to quote it. The letter was dated June 4, 1919:

> The government, in its consideration of the budget to be placed before parliament tomorrow, has reached, I take it, definite and final conclusions as to the form it will take. As you are aware, I am not in accord with it and therefore cannot support it, either in the house or in the country. Having reached this decision, there is only one course for me to follow, and I therefore tender you herewith my resignation as a member of the government. The reason for my decision shall be given more fully when the subject is under discussion in the house.

That, as I say, was written on the 4th day of June. On the following day the budget was introduced. The Minister of Agriculture admits that he knew it was to be a protectionist budget. There is a significance there, sir, that I shall draw to the attention of this house and of the country before I conclude. May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. McGIBBON: Before the house rose at six o'clock I was pointing out the inconsistencies of the actions and policies of government members. I had brought to the attention of the house the fact that they had recanted on everything which they had advocated in the past and that they had purloined at least in part the policy of the Conservative party. Before the recess I had put on Hansard some statements made by different ministers of the crown and by Mr. Deputy Speaker. I had pointed out that in the past these hon. gentlemen had expressed opinions contrary to the policy outlined in the budget which is now before the house. Directly before the adjournment I was dealing with statements made by the present Minister of Railways (Mr. Crerar). I had read his objection to the budget of Sir Thomas White in 1919, and the objection of the hon. gentleman at that time was that it was a protectionist budget. At this time I wish to put on Hansard a few more statements made by the Minister of Railways as they are reported in Hansard of 1919, page 3329:

> When I joined the government I made it perfectly clear that I had not surrendered or given up any of the principles that I believed in and as to which I had endeavoured, in my small way, to educate this country prior to that event.

I shall also put on Hansard a record of what those principles were. For the edification of this house and of the country I have read the platform of the Canadian Council of Agriculture. I would like to call to the attention of the house the action of the present Speaker of the house when in 1918 he asked the present Minister of Railways what he thought of that platform. At that time he rose in his place and said that he thought it was a good platform when it was adopted and that it was still good. If the hon. gentleman were in his place to-night I would ask him if he still held that view and if so what right he has to sit in the present government after the introduction of the present budget. On page 927 of Hansard, 1919, (second session) the present Minister of Railways is quoted as follows:

> To me as a westerner and as a man who believed profoundly in reciprocity with the United States, and believes in it yet, the discussion has been decidedly interesting.

At page 2909 of Hansard of 1920 we have this statement from the present Minister of Railways:

> If my hon. friends want a moderate tariff for revenue only, and if the government desire to wipe out special privilege in this direction, why did they not start on the tariff schedule in respect to cotton goods when arranging their budget? On the contrary, these cotton duties are maintained. And the same condition applies not only to the textile industry, but to many other industries as well.

If his objections were well founded at that time they are equally well founded to-day, because the same duties on textiles are maintained. At a later time when cross questioned by the then Minister of the Interior, Mr. Meighen, he said:

I want to know what are the views of my hon. friend opposite on this question. I would like the Minister of the Interior, in his next speech, or the Minister of Immigration and Colonization, to state his views as to what duties should prevail on, say, agricultural implements, on textiles, and on iron and coal.

At that time the hon. minister was deriding the duties upon iron, coal, cottons and woollens; yet to-day he joins the government in bringing in a tariff which is doubling the duty on iron and coal. At a later time the hon. gentleman makes this statement:

I make the statement in all seriousness that the protective tariff has been the greatest agency for exploiting our people that was ever devised.

I wonder if he holds to-night the same opinion about the protective tariff; if he does I wonder what right he has to sit in this government. Then, again, on March 14, 1922, at page 55 of Hansard he expressed himself thus:

There are some changes forecast in the customs tariff . . . . I hope it forecasts a revision of duties downwards. I cannot conceive for a moment that the government would think of revising the tariff upwards. I hope that will not be done.

These are only a few of the many statements of the hon. gentlemen opposite wherein they expressed themselves in opposition to the principle of the tariff and budget which they have brought down this session and have asked parliament to adopt. Then in Hansard of March 4, 1920, we find the following at page 148:

What is the purpose of a tariff? It is designed to benefit a particular section of the people, it operates in no other way, and consequently the operation of this protective system in our fiscal policy, which has obtained largely for the last forty years, has conferred upon a special class a privilege that in my judgment is not compatible with a true democracy. And I would point out to my hon. friend from Brantford and to other hon. gentlemen also who believe in a protective tariff, that protection is nothing more or less than a type of state socialism.

These are the opinions of the present Minister of Railways. I could multiply the quotations if time permitted, but I must hurry on.

For a minute or two I wish to deal with statements made by the Acting Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) who has held himself out to be the friend of the farmers in this country. I find that the hon. gentleman was sworn in on October 12, 1917, as Minister of Agriculture, and his very first act as a minister of the crown was to pass an order in council permitting the manufacture of oleomargarine. Some hon. gentlemen opposite were anxious the other night to find out something about this, and I wonder why they did not direct their attention to the present Minister of Railways. He was the man who put that into force in this country. Not only that but his next act on behalf of the farmers was to buy all the screenings from the elevators at the head of the lakes. These screenings had been sold at an average price of $8 for some six years previously; the hon. gentleman bought them and sold them to the farmers at $35 a ton. There was a loss to the government of Canada of something like $96,000; that is an instance of the manner in which he looked after the interests of the farmers of Canada. Let us go a little further. He also permitted them, by an order in council which cancelled certain regulations, to mix with the foodstuffs of this country certain seeds from the west. The analyses of these seeds, which have been placed upon the records of this house, show a large percentage of poisonous seeds which were detrimental to the health of the live stock of Canada.

What else do we find? In 1918, I believe it was, he confiscated all the butter in this country except that which was held by those who were manufacturing oleomargarine. Of course he could not touch the vested interests, but he could confiscate all the butter belonging to the farmers of Canada, while he protected his pets whom he had allowed to make oleomargarine with which they mixed the butter of the farmers so that it lost its identity.

Then there is another point to which I should like to direct attention. Before six o'clock I mentioned the fact that the hon. gentleman resigned the day before the budget was delivered, and by that budget the duty on agricultural implements was lowered in several instances. At that time the minister's company was in the implement business, and before the commission investigating the high cost of living his secretary, Rice Jones, stated that the company had not lost a dollar because their goods were in bond in Winnipeg. I should like to know where they got that information as to what took place in the cabinet council, information supposed to be kept secret?

Now, sir, I must hurry on because I have only a few minutes left. I should like to touch on the connection of the hon. gentleman with the Home bank, of which the minister was a director from about 1908 or 1910 until after he joined the government in 1918. From information which came to him as a director of that bank he knew as early as 1916 that the capital and the reserves of the bank had been wiped out, and that since 1916 they had not been earning their dividends. From 1916 to 1923 that bank did not earn its dividends; the capital and the reserves were gone; the stock was worthless, yet the minister sat around the council board of that institution and not only voted himself dividends but paid those dividends out of the money of the depositors, of whom I have 1,800 in my constituency. I claim that their savings were taken illegally to pay the interest on the stock, and the minister was one of the directors. It is true that be brought the matter to the attention of the then Minister of Finance, but, sir, I believe that if he had done as he should he would have used his position as director to force one of the other banking institutions to take over that company at that time. Had that been done at least the depositors would not have lost their money because, as you know, there is a double liability provision and since then the auditors have told us that the amount raised in that way would have covered the amount of the deposits. That was not done. His company had $100,000 in the stock of that bank; he had some $6,000 or $7,000 worth of that stock and other members of his company had invested $4,000 or $5,000. Had he forced action not only would they have lost the money they put in; they would have had to go down into their pockets and pay out as much more money to protect the depositors. What did they do? They just sat around the council board and voted themselves money, which the depositors lost.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order; the hon. gentleman's time is up.

Mr. McGIBBON: One further word and I am through. Not only that, but they sold their stock at one hundred cents on the dollar when, according to the report of the auditors, it was not worth anything. That is the position I feel bound to bring before parliament, because in my constituency I have 1,800 people who have been robbed in this way.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. F. W. PERRAS (Wright): Mr. Speaker, I am decidedly happy to have the opportunity of expressing to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) my heartiest congratulations on the budget which he has presented to the house and which reflects in an accurate manner the progress of Canada on both economic and national lines. This, his first budget, gives to the Canadian people further reasons why they should be confident in the future of this great country.

May I associate myself with those who have spoken of the matter previously in saying how deeply the people of this country regret the passing of the former Minister of Finance, but I must say that we are very fortunate in having to succeed him a man with the ability of the present Minister of Finance. For many years Canada has been particularly fortunate in having as ministers of finance men of outstanding ability, and now that the voice of the people is to be heard shortly it is a source of gratification to those who sit to the right of you, Mr. Speaker, to know that the administration of Canada's finances is in the hands of such a worthy successor to Fielding and Robb.

From the reports which are pouring in from the four corners of Canada and from the expressions of opinion heard on all sides the present budget has been received with the greatest of pleasure and satisfaction by the vast majority of the Canadian people, and only those few whose unfortunate duty it is always to criticize will endeavour, against their own convictions, to argue to the contrary. Indeed, Canada has reason to be proud of the administration of its national affairs at the hands of the present government. Every budget since 1921 has revealed an increasing state of prosperity within our borders, a yearly reduction of the national debt, a decrease in direct taxation and an improvement in the affairs of our national railways. Every budget has shown the possibility of redeeming outstanding obligations to the extent of millions of dollars with reduced taxation, and every year we have seen increases in surpluses. Every budget has shown that Canada has emerged from the great crisis which followed the war with renewed vigour and in a better position to continue its triumphant march towards progress. There has been a reduction of over $258,000,000 in the national debt in the last four years, with a reduction of over $120,000,000 in the income tax, yet the surpluses have shown increases amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. Truly the administration of Canada's finances is in the hands of men worthy of the confidence of the Canadian nation.

During those four years Canada's national status has grown along much broader lines; Canada has at last really found its place amongst the nations of the world and is that leading star in what it pleased Sir Wilfrid Laurier to call the British Empire, a galaxy of nations. The establishment of legations in the United States, in France and in Japan and the establishment of legations by those countries in Canada, constitute a tangible and concrete evidence of Canada's unparalleled development.

Canada's stand at the league of nations; Canada's representation at the latest world's conference in London, so ably headed by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), is another tangible proof that Canada's word is heard and listened to in the council of the great nations. Canadians may well feel proud that under the able administration of the present government Canada's interests have been well advanced.

In the four great basic industries of Canadian national existence, marked progress has also been felt. The mining industry has developed in proportions beyond expectation; in the last year we find the exports from that industry to be $30,000,000 ahead of those of the preceding year. Only an infinitesimal portion of our great mining resources has been tapped, and as time goes on, and so long as the mining industry is looked after with the care and attention which it has received at the hands of the present government, Canadians may feel sure that in the production of ore, precious minerals and minerals of all kinds, Canada will continue to make progress.

The development of our fisheries has, under the present administration, received such an impetus that it is now found desirable and necessary to place the fisheries under the care of a separate minister, and the government is to be congratulated upon having decided upon that policy so that that industry on our Pacific coast so flourishing and the Atlantic seaboard, known to the world, shall receive the care and attention to which they are so well entitled.

The products of our vast forests have increased by leaps and bounds; our lumber is marketed the world over, and the production of pulp and of pulpwood has in the last few years increased to over $300,000,000. But especially in agriculture has the progress been marked, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) is to be congratulated for the wonderful success which that branch of our natural resources has attained. Speaking for the county which it is my privilege to represent, the county of Wright, I feel that what has been done in this connection has been well done, and that the great basic industry of agriculture has been well taken care of.

The legislation for which the present administration has been responsible was conceived for the purpose of assuring to that most important portion of our population the safeguard which it so well deserves. It is an indisputable fact that the majority of the working population, the one that produces the most effective results, is that which comprises the agricultural classes, and it is only proper that their interests should be adequately looked after.

It is a source of gratification to a vast proportion of the Canadian people that this year's budget benefits to a considerable extent those who most need such measures. Amongst the many improvements which it contains the foremost one affects one of the primary commodities of everyday life; I refer to the abolition of the tax on tea produced in British dominions. Already, in this city and the neighbouring districts tea has decreased in price by some ten or fifteen cents per pound. The housewives the Dominion over and those whose duty and obligation it is to look after the welfare of the family will now feel that because of the wisdom of this administration a considerable burden of taxation has been removed.

Those who for years have paid income tax will find additional relief to that provided by last year's budget in that further exemptions have been granted with respect to dependents. This administration is to be congratulated upon having extended the exemption to parents and grandparents whose existence is dependent upon the head of the household.

I wish further to say that the Canadian people will be benefited because the finance minister has been able to reduce taxation and at the same time reduce by one half the sales tax. It only goes to show how much can be accomplished in the way of tax reduction by an administration that knows equally well how to administer in a business like manner the national affairs. I wish to lay stress upon the manner in which the Minister of Finance has been able to deal with the British preference. It was the doctrine of that great Canadian statesman, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that England should have a preference in tariff matters in so far as Canadian trade is concerned—that is, that England should be allowed to dispose in Canada of its goods under a lesser tariff than that applicable to foreign nations—and that it was only proper that the mother country should deal with its grown-up children in the same way.

I am confident that the whole of the Canadian nation is proud of the fact that greater facilities are now being afforded, not only to Great Britain but to all portions of the empire, to deal with Canada by way of imports in a manner which will be conducive not only to the better interests of Canada but at the same time to greater facility of trade on Canada's part with the other portions of the empire.

I have learned with satisfaction that it is the intention of the present administration to acquire in my county a large tract of land for a national park. I have said it before, and I know that I am upon solid ground when I state that there is no portion of Canada which in natural beauty and picturesqueness can compare with that part of the Gatineau valley which is the county of Wright and which it is my privilege to represent in this house. I understand that it is the intention to set out in the southern or northern portion of that county a large tract of land for the preservation of game, fish and birds, without in any way interfering with the rights of the holders of the land. That is a project which is well worthy of the forethought of this administration and its desire to promote the conservation of wild life.

There are many other matters, Mr. Speaker, that might be spoken of at this moment; there are many other things that might be said to emphasize the fact that the present administration has had at heart the welfare of the Canadian individual without at the same time losing sight of its desire to foster in every possible manner the development of the national domain. Many other subjects could be touched upon which would reflect upon the wisdom of this administration, but in the near future the great popular voice of the Canadian electorate will be asked to show its appreciation of what this government has accomplished in the last four years, and I am sure that the Canadian nation, desiring to march continuously onward in the path of that wonderful progress which has marked its advancement during that time, will on that occasion express in an unmistakable way its appreciation of and its entire confidence in the present administration.

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I cannot follow the last speaker (Mr. Perras) and take up the several arguments that he has advanced in an attempt to show why the present government should be retained in office. He has spoken of the general prosperity of Canada and I think I am quite safe in saying that no matter what government we have in power we cannot keep this country back, but under a government with a fiscal policy more in the interest of Canada our country would have made greater advances than it has done during the last five years.

As regards the budget, let me say in the words of the amendment that I welcome and approve of every measure that will afford to Canadian agriculture, industry and labour an equal opportunity and fair competition in the development of the rich and varied natural resources of the Dominion. I do not intend to-night to deal with the financial portion of the budget. That has been very ably dealt with by my leader. Others have discussed the British preference and still another hon. member on this side has very thoroughly dealt with the budget from the standpoint of industry. My intention to-night is to touch upon a few matters concerning one industry that the last speaker mentioned, namely, that of agriculture and, in particular, those branches of it in which the people in my constituency in British Columbia are particularly interested.

This budget contains certain measures designed to relieve the agricultural industry. For years certain branches of it have pleaded for protection and session after session the party to your left, Mr. Speaker, have demanded protection. Now at the eleventh hour, on the very eve of a general election, the government have right-about-faced and tendered certain relief. Speaking as one interested in the small fruit industry, I Iam bound to say that in these measures of relief there lurks a great danger. The fruit and vegetable branch have for years sought relief from the dumping of foreign produce on the Canadian market in competition with our own good Canadian product. The remedy given in the budget is an increase in the general tariff to apply for the twelve months of the year. This application is the very opposite of what was requested by the producer. Under the new law the highest duty will be collected at that season of the year when we have no product to market and the lowest duty will be collected when our own product is available. I want it thoroughly understood that it is not the wish of the fruit and vegetable growers to penalize the consumer by high duties when their product is not ready for the market, but they want the Canadian consumer to buy their Canadian product when it is available instead of the dumped foreign article.

I should like to spend a few minutes in referring to the record of the present government in regard to this industry. In 1926 the Conservative government came to the relief of these growers by the imposition of a dumping duty which remained in force for the season of 1927. Under this law the producers benefited and the consumers suffered no hardship. It was working out very satisfactorily when early in 1928 the government removed this protection by order in council. The question is: Why did they remove it? Simply because strong pressure was brought to bear from the free trade section of the Liberal party headed by the so-called consumers' league. I feel sure this particular body has not changed its views in regard to protection; at least we know it had not changed when the application of this industry was before the tariff board, because it opposed that application very strenuously. Nevertheless, the consumers' league has not raised a voice in protest during the present debate. What has happened? Has some kind of truce been declared or agreement entered into between this government and this group? Is it possible that the consumers' league has agreed to permit the government to grant these increases in tariff with the understanding that after the election they will be reconsidered and possibly removed? If this be the case, all I have to say is that the consumers' league is taking big chances, because I do not think the present government will ever have an opportunity again to remove the protection from this industry. The growers will do their part to see that there is returned a government which they can trust.

Relief to the poultry industry has not been given by the raising of the Canadian tariff on eggs in the shell. This tariff still remains the same: British preference, two cents; intermediate, two and a half cents and general tariff, three cents, but provision is made for what is termed a countervailing duty. That is:

> Provided that, if any country imposes upon eggs in the shell produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed upon such commodities entering Canada from such country.

This means that the tariff of a foreign country applies.

I might also mention another product to which this provision has been applied, and that is potatoes. Prior to the present budget the general tariff on potatoes was thirty-five cents per hundred pounds. That has been removed and potatoes appear on the Canadian tariff as free under the three rates, but the same countervailing duties have been applied. As I said, this is a tariff set by a foreign nation, or, as we might as well admit, the United States. It is a Washington-made and controlled tariff. I say "controlled" because it must be borne in mind that power is vested in the president of the United States to raise any tariff by 50 per cent, or to lower any tariff by 50 per cent at any time. This power was exercised a year ago. On May 14 of last year the president of the United States exercised this right and raised the tariff 50 per cent on milk and cream. What the poultrymen of this country want is a Canadian-made and a Canadian-controlled tariff.

During the last four or five years we have hammered this into the government from this side of the house and demanded for this industry a protection of at least eight cents per dozen. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that this matter was brought forcibly to the attention of the house on March 17 last when under a motion to adjourn moved from this side of the house protection was urged for this industry. The opposition came from the Liberal ranks. On that occasion I drew to the attention of the government the unsatisfactory condition of the poultry industry. I pointed out that in 1928 fifty per cent of the total importations for that year were dumped on the Canadian market in one month, and that in 1929 seventy-five per cent of the total importations were dumped on the Canadian market in one month, that of March.

What has been the action of this government in the matter of this dumping? All hon. members of this house will remember that in January, 1927, a dumping duty was imposed on imported eggs. This was successful in checking the wholesale importation of eggs at low prices but allowed eggs to come in freely when the price rose above 45 cents a dozen, thus giving relief to the producer and working no hardship on the consumer. The operation of this dumping duty was withdrawn by this government by order in council on March 29, 1928, and we all know that prices at that time did not justify such action on the part of the government. The Conservative party have continually urged for better protection for this industry. On May 14, 1928, an hon. member from this side of the house introduced a resolution urging the restoration of the dumping duty, and a division was taken upon that motion on March 16. I would ask hon. members to turn to page 3081 of Hansard for that year, where they will find recorded the vote on that division, and they will see that every Liberal member of this house voted against the restoration of protection for this industry.

But on the eve of a general election this government brings down protection in the form of countervailing duties. I say to the poultrymen of this country: Consider the record of this government in dealing with the problems of your industry. Are you going to trust them in the future, or are you going to look to the party that believes the Canadian market must be preserved for the Canadian producer?

This budget also provides relief for another branch of agriculture, the dairy industry. The government have told us that they have notified New Zealand that the treaty arrangement with that country will be cancelled on October 12th next. The tariff has been increased, but the harm did not come from the general tariff. It was the New Zealand treaty entered into five years ago that was responsible for the sad condition in which the dairy industry finds itself to-day. With the lowering of the duty on butter to one cent a pound in 1925, butter importations into this country have rapidly increased. In 1925 we imported about 7,000,000 pounds of butter, and for the twelve months ending March of this year these importations have increased to 42,000,000 pounds valued at $15,000,000. Just to show you how rapidly this importation has grown, may I point out that it increased by $5,000,000 in one year as compared with 1928. Bear in mind what the importation of this quantity of butter means. Forty-two million pounds of butter is the product of 10,000 ten-cow farms, or 100,000 high-grade milch cows. Those who have opposed relief for this industry have continually quoted the price of whole milk, but any one familiar with the industry knows that the whole product cannot be disposed of in that form. It is necessary that the farmer should have a profit on the products of milk, such as butter and cheese. Conditions in the industry are such to-day that it does not pay to make butter or cheese, and the farmer is consequently losing the by-products of butter making. Dairy herds have in consequence decreased and our farms are losing their fertility. It affects the production of poultry on the farm. It has greatly affected our pork exports, which were very large a few years ago, but which have been gradually disappearing, falling from $27,000,000 in 1925 to $10,000,000 in 1928. The tariff tinkering and the treaty making of this government are responsible for this condition and the Canadian farmer is the victim.

Strong appeals were made from this side of the house during every session since 1926 down to the present to have the government cancel or amend this treaty. There were also protests in the form of resolutions and delegations from the dairy organizations throughout the country urging the abrogation of the treaty, but to all these representations the government turned a deaf ear. To-day, on the eve of the general election, the government comes through with a statement that the present arrangement will terminate on October 12th next. I fear that it is too late. The dairymen of Canada have suffered for five years under the policy of this government and they are not going to be hoodwinked into supporting them by offers of relief at the eleventh hour. They will look to the Conservative party, I believe, whose policy is the Canadian market for the Canadian producer.

Protection must be given to the three industries I have mentioned, namely, the fruit and vegetable industry, the poultry industry and the dairy industry—protection sufficient that these industries may enjoy to the fullest extent our own Canadian market. For this purpose we have in Canada to-day three tariffs—the British preferential, the intermediate and the general tariff. In addition we have a provision in the statute for the imposition of a dumping duty. But we find that in this budget provision is made for a fourth tariff, applying exclusively to a list of articles coming from the United States. This is uncalled for. The Canadian people are not aiming to hit the United States or any other country. They are concerned solely to benefit this Dominion and to promote closer trade relations with the empire as a whole. We have no particular grudge against the United States, but we do believe that Canada through its own tariff should control its own home market just as the United States controls its own home market. The countervailing duties are not in the best interests of Canada.

There is another matter that is of vital importance to those in my particular district who are engaged in farming. It is a matter to which I have directed the attention of the house on several occasions, and one which I believe has been before this government for the last six or seven years. I refer to the question of freight rates. As I mentioned before, a large section of the province of British Columbia is engaged in the dairy industry; another large section is engaged in the poultry industry, and we require all kinds of feed. The farmers of the prairie provinces have that feed for sale, but when we want a carload or two of feed grain in our district we have to pay over double the freight rate that is charged on export grain. The rate on domestic grain from the prairie provinces to Vancouver to-day is 41½ cents per one hundred pounds, while the export rate is 20 cents. This we claim is a great injustice to the farmers in our province and demands a remedy. When we approach this government on the matter they say: it is in the courts. True, the province of British Columbia have had from 1922 up to 1928 a legal man looking after their interests at Ottawa, and I understand that between $100,000 and $200,000 have been paid in the way of legal expenses in order to fight for the rights of our province. But up to the present time nothing has been done, and it is now up to the government—in fact, action is long overdue—to step in and correct this inequality of freight rates.

We have heard a great deal about the British preference. As Canadians we should and we must give preference to trade within the empire; but, as my leader has said, only up to the point where such preference does not interfere with our own Canadian industry. Further, this preference should be reciprocal. I have in mind an industry of this country that is suffering to-day because of the unfair British preference as well as the general tariff. I refer to the hop-growing industry, which owing to climatic conditions is confined to one part of Canada, the lower Fraser valley of British Columbia. The production of hops in this area under favourable conditions is about 2,000,000 pounds a year and gives employment to a large number of people. The Canadian tariff on hops is the lowest in the world, being 4 cents under the British preferential and 7 cents under the general tariff; while the British tariff against Canadian hops is 17½ cents, the American tariff is 24 cents and the Australian and New Zealand tariffs are also 24 cents a pound. I should like hon. members to bear in mind the fact that our British preferential tariff is only 4 cents while the British tariff against us is 17½ cents. Up to the time when the British tariff was imposed we enjoyed a considerable export business to the British isles. Since that time this industry has had to look to Canada as the market for its entire crop. The total consumption of hops in Canada is about 3,000,000 pounds a year, and if this industry was given a fair deal it could supply a large percentage of the Canadian requirements. No hop-growing country is able to grow hops in competition with all the other hop-growing countries of the world, because in most years one or more countries have large exportable surpluses, which are dumped upon such countries as do not adequately protect their hop growing industry.

This industry appealed to the Minister of Finance in 1925 for relief, but as the Liberal party at that time was a party of "low tariff," relief in the way of protection could not be given. A conference was arranged and an agreement entered into between the buyers and producers of this product whereby the former agreed to take the Canadian crop at a certain price during the years 1926-27-28. The growers were unable to renew the arrangement and quite naturally again appealed to this government. I was in hopes, since our friends opposite had changed their policy from that of low tariff to one of protection, that this industry would have received some consideration. The condition of this industry to-day is very serious. One of the growers writing to me states:

> The position in regard to hops is becoming daily worse; there are enormous hop surpluses now in every hop growing country, and I do not see where the next British Columbia hop crop can be marketed, even at a loss.

Another branch of the agricultural industry that should have received consideration at the hands of this government is the tobacco growing industry. This industry has spent considerable money in presenting its case to the tariff board, and it went to great trouble to place the whole matter before the government. According to our trade returns we imported from the United States last year about 18,000,000 pounds of unmanufactured tobacco, free of duty. Tobacco growing has become a very important industry in this country and should be encouraged. The acreage in my own district has more than doubled in one year. These growers have a great problem in marketing their product and are certainly entitled to relief either through the tariff or through the excise tax.

There is one resolution of the budget that will receive my support, namely, the one providing for "exemption from income taxes of cooperative associations." This is a matter that has been before the courts during the last few months, and I think in almost every case decisions have been rendered in favour of these associations, with perhaps one exception, the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association. I may say this is a bona fide cooperative association with a membership of 3,000 dairymen, selling milk and its products for its members and returning the proceeds after deduction of its actual expenses. It is a non-profit-making organization. The adoption of this resolution will clear the air and I trust provision will be made for the withdrawal of the demand by the Department of National Revenue on this particular association for this tax dating back to 1923.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am convinced, knowing well the policy of the Liberal party, that these matters of relief provided for in this budget are dictated by expediency rather than by conviction. Coming as they do on the eve of a general election, it must be quite apparent to the people of this country that the budget is purely and simply an election budget designed for the sole purpose of getting votes and securing another lease of power.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Temiskaming): Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me say that I am unhesitatingly and wholeheartedly in favour of the budget. It is an outstanding budget that will go down in our political history as "the 1930 budget," and it will be an epochal one, the same as the 1903 budget was. It is typical of the budgets that the Canadian people have become used to during the last nine or ten years. The Robb budgets made a strong appeal to the people, and I believe the principles that he applied so effectively have also been applied by his successor, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), and I feel certain that the Canadian electorate will remember this as the Dunning budget. It has been enthusiastically received in every section of the country, both by the press and the people.

There are a few salient features in this budget that are as clear as crystal. First of all, there is a reduction of the national debt; second, a decrease in taxation; third, there is an enlargement of the British preference, and fourth, an expression of our willingness to deal with nations that are willing to deal with us on even terms. I believe that these four points alone are sufficient to commend this outstanding budget to the people of Canada.

We see in the budget—and the opposition has seen fit to criticize it—some of the wonderful work done by the tariff advisory board. It is a comprehensive study of the economic and industrial situation. The tariff board, wielding no power it self, but patiently sifting facts, becomes a highly successful institution. In this connection may I quote from the issue of Saturday Night of the 10th instant:

> The tariff board is comparatively young and in this budget for the first time has been able to show the fruit of its labour. Its chairman, Mr. W. H. Moore is credited with having given great aid to the Minister of Finance in preparing the new schedule, and in connection with the steel industry alone has shown great ability in straightening out a complex tangle of opinion.

On that score alone we can readily understand that some of the Conservative papers are more fair minded than are the official opposition in the house in discussing the budget items. There are so many items in the budget that it is impossible to deal with them in detail. No doubt they will be fully discussed in committee and before the country.

We have heard a lot of talk in this house of free trade and high tariff parties. I for one, after listening to a good many budget debates, am firmly convinced that there is no such person as a free trader to be found throughout the length and breadth of Canada, and I am also positive that there are no high protectionists in this country. Not later than last fall the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) said that the Conservative party was not a high protectionist party. We all know that free trade is absolutely a theory, impossible of practical application in this country. If there were any free traders they would come from the part of northern Ontario that I have the honour to represent, for the very simple reason that what we produce must find an outlet in the markets of the world, and all the commodities that we need we must buy in the large industrial centres, such as Winnipeg, Montreal and Toronto, etc. But we are logical enough to realize that as long as the government needs a certain amount of funds for administration purposes it must get some of those funds from indirect taxation, and some from direct taxation. There is no conflict between protection and free trade. There is no free trade party in Canada. It is a question simply as to what tariff protection is necessary for Canadian development. There are people who want a tariff for revenue only, and there are people who want a tariff for robbery only; a very few want no tariff at all. However, between and apart from these schools stand the mass of Canadians who want a development tariff. They are not interested in protection for protection's sake; they are not interested in protection for a few manufacturers' sake, but they are interested in it and believe in it solely for Canada's sake. They want it because they want work for Canadian workmen, purchasing power for Canadian people, home and outside markets for Canadian farmers, traffic for Canadian railways and development for Canada as a whole. However, belief in a fiscal policy is not sufficient. Canada now realizes that this government will apply fiscal policies consistently and fairly, when and where they are needed, regardless of expediency or votes. Protection ought not to be subject to the whims of men who are the champions of tariffs which might have been applicable for 1878, 1896 or 1921, but certainly not for 1930. This is the situation as Canadians throughout the length and breadth of this country understand it.

Following this thought I wish to quote a comment as it appeared in the Saturday Night:

> Undoubtedly Hon. Charles Dunning, after a little more than six months' experience as Minister of Finance, has scored a coup in framing a budget which in its main principles undoubtedly reflects the sentiments of Canadians as a whole. It is impossible for a budget to satisfy everyone; it has never been done and never will be done.

I wish to read the following citation from the Globe of May 6, 1930:

It is humanly impossible to frame a tariff to please every one. What is one firm's finished product is the raw material of another. It is a nice problem to decide when the country benefits more by conserving home payrolls and paying, possibly, a slightly higher price for the commodity than by sacrificing the workman and giving the ultimate consumer the advantage. One guiding point the government has is the established fact that, given volume business, Canadian manufacturers have the ability to meet competitive prices; then it becomes a question of encouraging methods to get the volume. Another guide is the knowledge that trade creates wealth. Hence, with reciprocal trade arrangements between empire countries as the great objective, and increased general prosperity the inevitable result, it becomes a matter of encouraging volume in each country, that purchasing power and trade may be enlarged. Apparently the government has had all this in mind in dealing with the complex situation.

One of the impressive features observable in connection with the budget announcements is that little criticism had been heard at home and nothing but praise has come from Great Britain. Even Mr. J. L. Garvin, in the weekly Observer, who a few weeks ago commended the Liberalism of Mr. Lloyd George to the British people, declares that "the Canadian budget is one of those rare strokes of policy which illuminate the realities of empire." If only all political parties throughout the British Empire would drop their preconceived and traditional fiscal theories long enough to examine the significance of this Canadian gesture in the light of empire realities, the dawn of a new era would be at hand. And this applies to the Canadian opposition as well as to governments and opposition parties elsewhere. Mr. Bennett's declaration that he is "in favour of every proposal that will make for the advancement of Canada as an independent economic unit" is as short-sighted at this time as the other extreme which sees no good in an empire country and applauds all and sundry to the limits of Siberia and Timbuctoo.

As to countervailing duties, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) said that it was a retaliation of the "brick for brick" policy as enunciated by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. Just a few days afterwards, speaking on the same subject, one of his first lieutenants, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), said that it was a mere gesture of retaliation, and that it was not strong enough. Those utterances, coming from the opposition and showing conflict within their ranks, clearly signify that the opposition fully realizes that the government is dealing in a national way with the situation in hand.

I am going to read an article from the Toronto Globe under the heading "More Political Humbug."

The political ways of a newspaper organ are tortuous and confusing when it tries to keep step with the expediency movements of the masses, but it must be exceedingly difficult for a Montreal-owned Toronto-printed publication to adjust itself rapidly enough to meet all emergencies. The strain on the Mail and Empire, indeed, must be terrific, if one may judge by the number of somersaults it seems obliged to take.

Yesterday the chief St. James street organ in Ontario exhibited a feeling of tender regard for the people of the United States by publishing a leading editorial under the heading: "Crude and Rude Is the Countervailing Duty," remarking that "our neighbours have reasonable ground for complaint against the Dunning tariff for the discrimination it makes against their country in what is called the 'countervailing duty.'" No fault could be found with an expression of friendliness for a neighbouring country; Canadians have no other attitude. But can such an expression be considered sincere when it comes from a source which less than a year ago was howling loudly against the American tariff proposals, calling for retaliation, and demanding that parliament show that it would not stand for such treatment without prompt reprisals?

This is the tragedy of it—here to-day and there to-morrow. What a humbug on its readers, and, in this case, on the people of the United States if any of them pay attention to it.

During last year's session and afterward the Mail and Empire published editorials almost daily severely criticizing the King government for being too considerate of the United States. On June 21, 1929, it even called inferentially for countervailing duties when condemning the speech of Hon. Mr. Lapointe at Grand Bend. "So," it remarked ironically, "there are to be no countervailing duties against Uncle Sam's tariff increases on products of this country. He is to have the same wide-open door into our market." On May 6, 1930, it says: "He (Mr. Dunning) ought to be able to manage better than to leave the impression on the neighbouring country that Canada has a special grudge against it," although Mr. Dunning's speech made no reference to the United States or any other country. Again: "Its countervailing duty is simply a piece of clumsiness, which seems the more unaccountable because of the government's frequent declaration that its tariff policy will not be one of reprisals against the United States."

Apparently the Mail and Empire was not worrying like this when it published the following on July 26 last:

How ridiculous it would be for the United States, or for any of that country's apologists in Canada, to say that any policy pursued here as the result of the reactions of Washington's tariff revision would be a consequence of rancorous Canadian feeling. As the United States finds it advisable to adapt its tariff to conditions in its own and other countries, so must Canada be free to do likewise when one of the paramount conditions to be met is of the United States' creating.

On July 12 it wanted to know, "Why is the King government giving silent consent to the United States boycotting of Canada's farmers? Four days later it said:

The most direct way of grappling with the problem would be to make reasonable endeavours to avert the ill consequences that are staring our farmers in the face. But the King administration has made known to the people of Canada, and to the world at large, that, however it may govern itself accordingly, it will not do anything by way of retaliation. . . . Canada must have a government that will be its champion, and not the servile instrument of the United States.

And as the countervailing duties designed particularly to protect the farmers of Canada are now called "crude and rude," on June 25 last year the Mail and Empire gibed at the government because it would not adopt "anything so rude as retaliation." On that occasion its comment was:

What a jumble of confessed cowardice, of hypocritical empire sentiment, of pretended moral feeling against anything so rude as retaliation, of servility to the United States, and of sincere zeal for free trade, is the government's advertised stand in regard to the situation the Washington tariff-makers have created.

In view of these criticisms and more like them, before the Dunning budget was framed, it is impossible to find any sincerity in the present criticism which declares "our neighbors have reasonable ground for complaint for the discrimination it makes against their country."

I know some hon. members, who last year were concerned in a certain movement looking to an increase in their indemnity, who would not have been sorry had the government adopted the principle suggested by the leader of the opposition, that we should sit here until the United States established their new tariff. Certainly that would have brought us a certain amount of extra money last year, which would have been welcome to many of us. Every one knows that congress has been working on the tariff revision for almost two years, and practically nothing has been done as yet. The leader of the opposition seems to think that the application of the countervailing duties would give too much latitude to the government on account of the rapidity with which certain items might be changed in the United States tariff schedule. We do not need to entertain any fear on that score, for the good reason that both houses at Washington have been working overtime for nearly two years, and so far practically nothing has been accomplished.

I have already said that this budget is very popular. In the Toronto Saturday Night of May 10, there is an article by Mr. P. M. Richards, which ends as follows:

Excepting for the fact that the new budget involves many more reductions in the tariff than increases, which in broad principle, is inimical to the best interest of the Canadian industrial fabric, in a general way Mr. Dunning's budget will no doubt be well received, and is outstanding in its wide departure from many of the more or less conventional budgets of the preceding years.

We have had the spectacle, during the discussion of the budget, of hon. gentlemen opposite calling this a high tariff budget and the opposition in the southeast corner calling it a low tariff budget. We know the people call it just a national, good Liberal budget, and they are satisfied with that. The following comment appeared in the Toronto Globe on Thursday, May 8:

It is unfortunate indeed that the great Conservative party has to be hampered with leadership which condemns another party for attempting to improve its policy while itself adhering to a circumscribed rule-of-thumb idea which is palpably ineffective as well as narrow-visioned. Mr. Bennett, of course, will have to explain on many an occasion what he conceives the British Empire to be "next to Canada," why he does not regard Canada as part of the empire. And he will also have to explain how Canada can shut herself up in a shell and exist, where the farmers of the prairies are going to market their wheat, and what the manufacturers are going to do with their $4,000,000,000 worth of products.

Why should it be called a high tariff budget, when we have increases on only 100 items while we have decreases on 414 items, giving as a ratio of decreases to increases of over four to one? Really no one who knows anything about figures will try to make this out to be a high tariff budget. It is a low tariff and a national budget.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the financial critic of the group in the southeast corner, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine). Before I came to this house I was told that the hon. member was a wonderful orator, and I was not disappointed when I heard him speak. He has very complete mastery of the English language and is a born orator, but at the same time I have to ask myself whether the hon. member really believes all the theories which he advances. This evening I was reading an editorial commenting on the speech delivered by the hon. member, which stated that it was too bad that the rules of the house would not allow such a man as the hon. member for Westaskiwin to speak for more than forty minutes upon such important matters. During the course of my hon. friend's remarks he said he could see no leaders who could put into effect his ideas on the government side; he intimated that there was no leader on the Conservative side, so naturally we were to infer that the hon. member for Wetaskiwin was to be the man who would lead the Canadian nation into realms of great happiness and an arcadian period.

Mr. IRVINE: Hear, hear.

Mr. BRADETTE: I hear my hon. friend applauding. I remember this year, during the discussion in connection with the construction of a trans-Canada highway, hearing the hon. member for Wetaskiwin state that if the government did not have enough money to build this road, the war debt might be cancelled. I can see what a wonderful thing it would be if we had a minister of finance like him. We, would have no taxation; we would not worry over debt; this would be the best part of the world in which to live. He would forget all about the war debt and the national debt; he would do away with taxation of all kinds. These are some of the theories to which we have to listen, and I must say if I attempted to advocate these theories I would be well defeated, and rightly so, in my own constituency. I hope the Ottawa Journal, which contained the editorial to which I referred, will get the hon. gentleman to tell this government how to wipe out all these debts, which certainly would be a wonderful thing for Canada, but I doubt whether it will know how it could be done after listening for one hour to the absolutely impracticable theories of the hon. member.

Both the amendment and the subamendment are negative in themselves. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I think if hon. members of this house could vote according to their own ideas the budget would be adopted without very many adverse votes. An hon. member of this house once said that if hon. members could do as they wished, without the whips assisting them, the results of some votes in the house would be very different, and I am sure if we had no whips the members of the opposition would gladly vote for this budget. We have been told that this is a high tariff budget, but we heard the same story in previous years; last year the Conservatives said we brought in a high tariff budget because we had collected in customs duties nearly $300,000,000. This is not a new story at all. I well remember the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), the financial critic of the opposition, criticizing the elimination of the tax on Pullman tickets, stating that Pullman travel was a luxury. It is not a luxury at all for those of us who have to travel great distances across this country.

The leader of the opposition ridiculed the idea of removing the duty on tea. Certainly tea is not a luxury. Perhaps if it were consumed in Ontario only a reduction in price might mean a loss of revenue to the liquor commission here, but tea is used all over the country. I know that throughout Canada the housewives are absolutely satisfied with the situation. This afternoon it was stated that the decrease in the price of tea was only 10 cents and not 15 cents. The day after the budget was delivered advertisements appeared in several papers stating that the prices of certain lines of tea would be lowered by 15 cents, and certainly that is a benefit to Canada as a whole.

As the budget affects northern Ontario I must say it is very popular. We are especially gratified with the readjustment of the scale of taxation on the sale of shares, which will materially affect the transfer of shares of no par value. The mining industry is satisfied with the present situation. Last year during the budget discussion I was amazed to hear it suggested by hon. members opposite that we should have a high tariff against mining machinery brought in from other countries, and I was further amazed at a resolution passed last year by the Canadian Manufacturers Association at their annual convention held in Nova Scotia, to the effect that the government should increase the tariff on mining machinery until Canadian industry could supply the demand. It would be a fine thing to have the development of our mining interests in the Porcupine district, the Sudbury district or the newer mining areas in Manitoba and Saskatchewan wait until the machinery could be supplied by Canadian industry. We cannot wait; we must have that machinery when new mining areas are to be developed. We are coming more and more to the point where our mining machinery can be supplied in Canada, and eventually our Canadian companies will be able to supply that demand, but we should not be expected to hold up the development of these areas until that time arrives. In the meantime we must go ahead with the development of our mines.

One item in the budget which makes a very strong appeal to the people of northern Ontario is the enlargement of the British preference. They were amazed by the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition in this regard. We will be able to attend the imperial conference with something more definite to offer to the British commonwealth of nations. The hon. leader of the opposition has offered an amendment which is absolutely negative, which really shows that his party is in favour of this budget. The Canadian people are well aware of the present situation.

Another thing which amazes me is the blue ruin talk which we hear from the members of the opposition. The leader of the opposition was on the same platform the other day with the Premier of Ontario, the Hon. Mr. Ferguson. He spoke of the blue ruin which was facing Canada, and yet five minutes later the premier stood up and said that Ontario was prosperous. We know that that province is well administered, and it is hard to understand the leader of the opposition on the one hand saying that the country is faced with blue ruin while the premier of the province, on the other hand, states that that province is absolutely prosperous. Ontario is a part of Canada, and should be considered as such; and in this matter we are more inclined to listen to Premier Ferguson than to the leader of the opposition. When a new hotel was planned to be built in Toronto, a member from that city said that it was not necessary because foreigners were going to use it exclusively to sell their wares to Canadian people and that in turn would force our people to leave the country. However, when we visit Toronto to-day we patronize that new hotel and find it well filled and really we of northern Ontario cannot be called foreigners even in Toronto.

The hon. leader of the opposition referred to the steel industry, and stated that if an increase in duty were allowed on these products certain plants would increase their capacity. The steel plant at Sault Ste. Marie is erecting new buildings, but the hon. leader of the opposition is fully aware that that has been under consideration for some time. Those buildings are not being erected because of an increase in the steel tariff, but because this company is fully aware of the modern situation and it has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in increasing its plant capacity. New industries are being born, not only every year but every week. The reports issued by the presidents of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways show that not only dozens but hundreds of new industries have been born during the last twenty-five years.

It is impossible to have a tariff which will please everyone. The hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) offered a sub-amendment asking that the British preferential be increased on textiles, while, on the other hand, the Conservative opposition are asking for more protection on this commodity. Some people claim that the woollen industry is not prosperous. The following is a despatch from Arnprior which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of October 2, 1929:

> Kenwood mills, one of Arnprior's principal industries, is being considerably enlarged to take care of the increasing business which the company is doing and there is keen satisfaction amongst the townspeople at this indication of the growing importance of Arnprior as an industrial centre.
> An additional structure 150 feet in length and 60 feet wide is now being built to the main plant, brick and steel being utilized in the creation of a modern factory building. The cost of the work will be between $40,000 and $50,000 and it is being done by men in the employ of the woollen company.
> Several residential buildings are also being constructed by the same company, work on five dwellings now being in hand. They will be for the accommodation of the plant superintendent and other officials.
> Plans for the factory addition and the houses were drawn by Cecil Burgess, architect, Ottawa.

That would seem to show that some branches of the woollen industry are in a prosperous condition. I visited Arnprior last summer and I was surprised at being told that not a single pound of Canadian wool is used in that plant. The superintendent told me that every pound of wool used in that plant comes from Australia or New Zealand. That would go to show how hard it is to apply duties in order to satisfy everyone. That plant is absolutely prosperous and is increasing its manufacturing capacity.

Mr. EVANS: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BRADETTE: Certainly.

Mr. EVANS: Why do not our manufacturers buy Canadian wool?

Mr. BRADETTE: Not being an expert in that line, it is impossible for me to give an authorative answer to the hon. gentleman. I understand, however, that that company do not utilize one pound of Canadian wool because they cannot get in Canada the quality required for the manufacture of their goods. If the hon. gentleman asking for more protection for the woollen industry desire to see an industry which is so prosperous that it is forced to increase its capacity, they should go to Arnprior and see the Kenwood mills.

This tariff must be considered in the same way as we would consider a forest. It may be possible to find one tree in the forest which is defective, but the forest as a whole is good. The same with the budget; one item may not give satisfaction but it should be considered as a whole.

I do not think anyone can quarrel with the Minister of Finance in the concluding paragraph of his budget speech. The opposition accuse the government of insincerity, but I believe that the worst enemies of members of parliament are the members themselves. They hurl accusations at one another and in time begin to believe that there is no sincerity. The political history of Canada shows that in both Liberal and Conservative administrations there has been plenty of honesty and sincerity. Here are the closing words of the hon. Minister of Finance:

These tariff favours to those who favour our products are not the result of any bargain with any other country but of an attitude in international relations which we believe to be mutually beneficial and are an expression of the spirit in which Canada will approach the Imperial economic conference in a few months time. In other words we do not intend to meet the other countries of the British commonwealth of nations in a spirit of petty bargaining but rather in the broad spirit of willingness to become in ever increasing measure good customers to those who treat us in like manner. This is the spirit in which we desire to meet all nations, but we believe that within the British community of nations lies the greatest measure of opportunity for mutual development of trade because of our common heritage, kindred institutions and a common patriotism.

What have our Conservative friends to offer to the imperial conference? Surely not only that negative amendment presented by the leader of the opposition, because there is nothing constructive in it. There is nothing in it which the British commonwealth of nations could consider or discuss.

The Canadian people are fully aware of the present situation and I am positive that they will be overwhelmingly in favour of the present Liberal administration. I am convinced that the Canadian people will return this Liberal government to power because of its past records. It has inspired general confidence because of its ability to solve the almost insurmountable problems which it has had to face. It has the confidence to-day of the labourers, the farmers, the industrialists and the financiers; in a word, the confidence of every section of the population. Using the words of the Prime Minister uttered at Winnipeg, it has legislated not for one class but for all classes; not for a favoured few, but for the greatest good to the greatest number. Whatever the United States or any other country may do in tariff matters, we believe that our country has reached a stage in its development where it will be able to look after itself. Canada will make its own tariff and find its own markets. An editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of July 25, 1928, is proof that the Prime Minister is worthy of being the representative of Canada at the next imperial conference. The editorial is as follows:

The Prime Minister for Geneva

Announcement that Mr. Mackenzie King will go to Geneva personally to represent Canada upon the council of the League of Nations on the occasion of its meeting in August, ought to be received with hearty commendation by all Canadians irrespective of party. For Mr. King will not, we are sure, journey to Geneva and speak and act there as the leader of a party. He will go, we think, as the Prime Minister of Canada, with a consciousness of the dignity and the responsibility of that office, and he will speak, we believe, not as a Liberal partisan, but as the representative of the whole Canadian people.

The Journal is not ashamed nor afraid to say that, in its judgment, Mr. King is in every respect well equipped to represent Canada with high honor and ability. This newspaper, in common with hundreds of thousands of other Canadians, has frequently and vigorously and honestly disagreed with Mr. King upon a multiplicity of things, and it has not infrequently said things about him in the heat of partisan conflict which were perhaps more vehement than just.

That, however, does not prohibit our saying now that, in many fields and in most respects, Mr. King, like all of his predecessors, has shown himself mostly well equipped for the demands of his office. In the field of imperial and foreign affairs, in particular, Mr. King has revealed an informed interest and an outlook that challenge respect. Some among us may think that in some respects he is too greatly influenced by a narrow nationalism that is antagonistic to the ideal, cherished by most Canadians, of earnest and sustained and proud cooperation with the rest of the British Empire. That, however, is but a matter of opinion, and it must be confessed that, in most regards Mr. King, subject to the exigencies of politics, has shown himself to be a good Canadian and a good Imperialist, one who believes with Sir Wilfrid Laurier that Canada answers to a higher destiny than a mere mythical independence or a narrow nationalism.

To Geneva, at all events, he will go with the best wishes and the support of the majority of his countrymen. In has been this country's good fortune to have been represented abroad, both at London and elsewhere, by men who reflected credit upon the Canadian name. It was so, in the old days, when Sir Wilfrid captured the hearts and the imagination of the British people with his compelling personality and charm. It was so when Sir Robert Borden wrote Imperial history by his contributions in the war cabinet, and later on at Versailles. And it was so when Mr. Meighen, fighting almost single-handed, but with his conspicuous courage and ability, helped abrogate the Anglo-Japanese alliance and paved the way for the Washington disarmament conference.

Mr. King, we feel sure, will worthily uphold this tradition. In the field of Imperial and foreign affairs, Canada, as far as is possible, should try to speak with a united voice. That has been the policy and the strength of Britain for more than two hundred years—the policy of Britain whether a Conservative or a Liberal or a Labourite was at 10 Downing street—and it ought to be the policy of this Dominion. Let all of us, therefore, dispense with partisan considerations in our attitude toward Mr. King so long as he is abroad as the spokesman of this country. The Journal, for its part, sincerely wishes for him a pleasant journey and everything of usefulness and opportunity in the mission which he has undertaken.

That article was rather well written and I believe it was making not only a declaration as to certain activities of the Prime Minister in 1928, but also a kind of prophecy that he would go to the economic conference in 1930 as the representative of Canada.

Under his direction, even during the years affected by war depression, the country knows that he was worthy of the confidence placed in him. And now that our young nation has its face turned towards the future and is basking in the light of peace, prosperity and contentment, nowhere will the sun be shining on a more contented people or on a happier land.

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I propose for a few minutes to deal with the statements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in regard to the financial condition of the country. We are well aware that in connection with dealing with any financial statements, two classes of liabilities must be taken into consideration: first, our direct liabilities, and, second, our indirect liabilities. The Minister of Finance in dealing with the financial affairs of the country dealt only with our direct financial responsibilities. I wish to put upon record our indirect responsibilities or the amount of money for which we are responsible so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned. I take the following figures from the financial report of the Canadian National Railways:

| Long-term debt | $823,099,056 | $1,122,559,492 | $299,460,436 |
| Current liabilities | 40,859,665 | 92,701,349 | 51,841,684 |
| Unadjusted credits | 20,835,114 | 27,000,614 | 6,165,500 |
| Total increase | | | $357,467,620 |

On the other hand we had the following decreases:

|---|---|---|---|
| Liability to the Dominion of Canada, eliminating the interest which is due on outstanding borrowings | $1,026,620,838 | $1,018,596,222 | $ 8,024,616 |
| Deferred liabilities | 11,205,429 | 4,800,661 | 6,404,768 |
| Corporate surplus | 5,147,861 | 4,351,342 | 796,519 |
| Total decrease | | | $15,225,903 |

If we subtract the decreases from the increases, this leaves a net increase in the liabilities of the Canadian National Railways for which we are responsible, and every single dollar of which we have guaranteed, of $342,241,717.

Mr. BOTHWELL: What is the capital expenditure in that same length of time on the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. FRASER: That includes the capital expenditure and everything else. I am talking about the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways as presented by the company in the report we have before us.

Mr. BOTHWELL: The hon. member has not the figures to show what the capital expenditure was in the period covered by his figures?

Mr. FRASER: I am sorry I have not. I did not take account of capital expenditure. Let us hope they were all capital expenditures and they all increase the standing of the Canadian National Railways in that regard. I am only pointing out the increase in the liabilities of this country so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned. In addition to that I wish to give the following figures:

Accumulated interest due the Dominion of Canada by the Canadian National Railways on moneys advanced to them

Adding those two amounts together, we find that the increase of debt was $342,241,717, and the increase of interest, $128,226,937, or a total increase in the liabilities to the Canadian National, so far as the Dominion is concerned, of $470,468,654.

The total amount which has been claimed by the Minister of Finance as a reduction in debt is $257,800,000 in the past five years, which is the same period for which I am giving the figures in regard to the Canadian National Railways. That means, analyzing these reports in any intelligent way at all, that so far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned her total actual liabilities, direct and indirect, during the last five years have not been reduced by $257,800,000, but have been increased by $213,500,000, roughly speaking.

So that instead of this government reducing the debt of this country, they have increased it by the amount of $213,500,000.

Now I turn my attention for a few minutes to a brief review of some balances of trade for which this government must hold itself responsible. For a favourable balance of trade, the government must be given credit; if it is not favourable, the government and its policies must to some extent be held responsible for the balance being on the wrong side of the ledger.

Analyzing the reasons for this great change in our trade, I find that our total imports in 1929 amounted to $1,265,639,000. In 1930 our total imports amounted to $1,248,239,000, a decrease, it will be noted, of $17,400,000, or 1.4 per cent. Let me point out also that all this decrease occurred during the three months of the present calendar year, or during the last three months of the fiscal year just closed, because at the end of December, 1929, our imports had increased by $76,675,330, or 6.3 per cent, over those of the calendar year 1928.

Turning to our exports, in 1929 we exported goods to the amount of $1,388,798,233, and in 1930, $1,144,938,070, a decrease of $243,860,163, or 17.5 per cent. That is, our imports decreased by 1.4 per cent while our exports in the same period decreased by 17.5 per cent.

Still dealing with the decrease in our export trade, I turn to one particular item of the nine for which our exports and imports are classified, and I wish to make this same comparison as to exports and imports of animals and animal products, which I think is one of the most interesting of our national imports and exports, because after all I am sure that all will agree that this country must be regarded as excellent for the raising of live stock. There is no reason why our production and exports of live stock and all kindred products should not be increasing from year to year. When we do not find that condition, there must be something wrong and there must be some remedy that should be applied.

In 1926 our imports of animals and animal products amounted to $49,185,000. In 1929 they amounted to $71,662,000, an increase in those three years of $22,477,000. or 4·6 per cent. In a country like this Dominion, which is so well adapted to the raising of live stock and animal products of all kinds, that condition of affairs should not exist. We should from year to year be continually decreasing our imports and increasing our exports of animals and animal products. So far as our imports of animals and animal products are concerned, they have increased by 4·6 per cent. Turning to our exports, I find that we exported in 1925, animals and animal products to the value of $190,975,000, and in 1929, $158,757,000 worth, an actual decrease in that period of $32,218,000, or 16·8 per cent. Let me emphasize that: during the period to which I am drawing your attention, Mr. Speaker, we increased our imports of animals and animal products by 4·6 per cent while our exports decreased by 16·8 per cent. Neither one of those conditions, I submit, is in the best interests of the Dominion of Canada.

I wish for a moment to draw attention to the agricultural wealth of the Dominion of Canada and relate thereto the revenue derived from the production of animals and animal products. I find from the Canada Year Book that the agricultural wealth of Canada in 1928 was $8,027,301,000. Live stock and animal products and poultry accounted for $919,615,000 of this amount, or 11 per cent. That is, live stock and animal products and poultry, so far as the agricultural wealth of Canada is concerned, accounted for 11 per cent. The agricultural revenue of Canada on the other hand was $1,730,304,000. These are the figures for 1928. Out of that agricultural revenue received by the people of the Dominion, live stock and animal products accounted for $559,-633,000, or 32 per cent. That is, while we had invested 11 per cent of our total agricultural wealth in live stock and animal products and poultry, we were deriving from that investment 32 per cent of the total revenue of the Dominion.

Now, I pointed out a few minutes ago that the imports and exports were both going in the wrong direction so far as animals and animal products were concerned. Let me give some particular reasons why this is occurring. In the Dominion in 1927 we had 9,172,230 head of cattle of all kinds; in 1928 this number had decreased to 8,793,270, or a decrease of 378,-966 head. That decrease works out to 4·13 per cent. Let me turn to swine. I find that in 1927 we had 4,694,789 head of swine; in 1928, 4,497,367, or a decrease of 197,422 head, or a decrease of 4·2 per cent.

It is interesting to note the relative decreases in those two kinds of animals. We have a decrease of 4·13 per cent in cattle and of 4·2 per cent in swine. We have heard it repeatedly said in this house that on account of conditions which exist in our dairy industry, that is, because our dairymen had been discouraged rather than encouraged by the government, our swine population was also declining. I want the house to notice that there are exactly the same relative decreases in the cases of those two items, the number of swine and the number milking cattle.

In 1927 we had 3,262,760 head of sheep; and in 1928, 3,415,788 or an increase of 153,082, or an increase in 1928 over 1927 of 4·2 per cent. Now, in 1871 we had 3,155,509 head of sheep. I would direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that between 1871 and 1928 the total increase in the number of our sheep has been but 8·2 per cent. That increase I do not think is at all in accordance with the possibilities in this important line of agriculture.

Turning to the trade of Canada as set forth in the monthly reports for the month ending March, 1930, I find that our imports of animals and animal products in 1929 amounted in round figures to $71,661,000, and in 1930 to $69,853,000 or a decrease of $1,808,000 or 2·5 per cent. The exports of our animals and animal products for 1929 amounted in round figures to $159,757,000, and in 1930 to $133,009,000 or a decrease of nearly $26,000,000, or 16·2 per cent. Now, Mr. Speaker, it may satisfy our friendly Minister of Agriculture to say that all is well so long as we are providing for our home consumption, but for many years in the future Canada must be an exporting country of all kinds of agricultural products, and I think it is not to our credit that we are falling down in these exports where there is so much opportunity for development and expansion in this business.

For a moment or two I might give the house some of the reasons why our export trade is declining and our import trade increasing. I find, for instance, that in 1929 our export trade in animals and animal products decreased by $22,629,000. Our imports of butter—of which we have heard a great deal—increased by $6,777,000; our imports of meats increased by over $2,000,000; our exports of cheese decreased by very nearly $7,000,000; our exports of living animals decreased by $1,039,000; our exports of meats decreased by $4,471,000; our exports of raw hides decreased by $3,562,000; our exports of leather, unmanufactured, decreased by $3,615,000. You will note, sir, that at the outset of my remarks I pointed out the alteration in our balance of trade, that the year before we had a credit balance, but that this year we have a debit balance, so far as our export and import trade is concerned, of $226,450,000. Of this adverse balance of trade, our animal and animal products accounted for $54,695,000.

I would point out that this condition prevails all through the live stock industry of the Dominion. I find in the live stock market report for 1929, at page 91, it is stated that the supplies of cattle at the nine public stockyards in 1928 were 875,428 head; in 1929 at the same nine public stockyards the supplies offered were 799,435, or a decrease of about 76,000 head during that year. I find that is less by 159,000 head than were offered at these same stockyards in 1927. We have had a continuous decrease in the offerings of cattle in those nine public stockyards ever since 1926.

Mr. BENNETT: Ever since the New Zealand treaty went into effect.

Mr. FRASER: Ever since the New Zealand treaty went into effect, as my leader reminds me. I think that is one of the factors in regard to this very unsatisfactory condition of affairs. Our total exports of cattle in 1929 were 162,632 head; this is the smallest number we have exported in the last six years and represents practically the life of the New Zealand and Australian treaties. Our exports of cattle to the United States were 160,103 head, which is 6,000 head less than the year 1928 and 44,000 less than 1927. We had no exports of cattle to the British market at all during the last year, although that represented a good outlet for our surplus cattle in the years 1925 and 1926. However, when we come to the years 1928 and 1929 we have nothing to offer to the British market. In addition to that our exports of beef are almost entirely to the United States. The total export was 31,000,000 pounds, or 16,000,000 pounds less than in 1928. On the other hand, let us see what has happened to the British market. Our exports in 1929 to that market were 6,100 pounds, although in 1925 we had exported 9,000,000 pounds and in 1926, 8,000,000 pounds. It is quite obvious that so far as the British market is concerned we are not in the market at all. In addition to that I wish to call the attention of the house to the fact that our imports of beef during 1929 to supply our own demands amounted to 5,235,412 pounds. That represents twice the quantity which we had to import in 1927 or 1928, and fourteen times as much as we had to import in 1926. If that can be considered a satisfactory condition of affairs I must say that I fail to understand the significance of figures of this kind.

I wish to outline the figures in connection with the cattle sales in all stockyards of the Dominion of Canada. On the Toronto market the sales were 12,300 head less, in 1929 than in 1928. On the two Montreal markets the figures show that the sales were 11,000 head less than in 1928, and that condition prevails on all markets in the Dominion of Canada.

I have before me a rather significant statement which appears in the tenth annual report of the Live Stock Market and Meat Trade Review of 1929. I would like hon. members of this house to pay particular attention to this statement in regard to the home market. It is made by a department of this government in a report issued reviewing the trade for 1929, and refers particularly to the Montreal market:

> Shipments of dressed meats from other domestic markets, consignments of pork products and canned meats from the United States of America, imports of frozen beef and mutton from Australia and New Zealand for consumption in Montreal amounted to more than total offerings of live animals on the two local markets.

Surely nothing else is necessary to prove conclusively that there is possible a large expansion of the live stock industry in the Dominion of Canada. Government officials have pointed out that in connection with the live stock trade of this country the Montreal market has supplied only one half of the local requirements.

Let us turn to the British market and see what is offering there. In 1929 the British market imported 11,715,746 hundredweight of fresh, chilled and frozen beef. Of that quantity the Argentine supplied 80 per cent, or 9,060,324 hundredweight. Canada supplied none, although in 1927 we supplied 8,000,000 pounds and in 1926 9,000,000 pounds. There is a prospective market which is surely well worth cultivating so that the live stock industry of Canada might be extended. Let us consider the imports of bacon to the British market. In 1920 Great Britain imported bacon to the extent of 5,611,634 hundredweight and in 1929, 8,281,594 hundredweight. In 1920 Canada supplied 26 per cent of the British imports, or 1,493,008 hundredweight, and in 1929 we supplied to the British market 2.5 per cent or 119,446 hundredweight. Hon. members will take notice that in 1920 we supplied 26 per cent whereas in 1929 we supplied only 2.5 per cent, despite the fact that the British market had increased its imports from 5,611,634 hundredweight to 8,281,594 hundredweight.

In 1925 our exports of bacon and ham were 132,522,900 pounds, and in 1929 they had been reduced to 28,772,700 pounds. The amount exported in 1929 represents only 25 per cent of the amount exported in 1925. Our pork exports were 17,286,000 pounds in 1925 whereas in 1929 they were 10,184,700 pounds. On the other hand our imports of bacon and ham had increased from 1,190,626 pounds in 1925 to 6,855,217 pounds in 1929, or nearly six times as much. Our pork imports decreased from 15,443,276 pounds in 1925 to 13,945,241 pounds in 1929. I would call the attention of hon. members to the fact that in 1929 we imported 20,000,000 pounds of pork products, although in the Dominion of Canada we should be producing for export very large quantities of pork products. After reviewing very carefully the market conditions so far as they obtained in 1929 I make the statement that Canada could have marketed 1,000,000 hogs more than she did in that year without affecting the market price. One million hogs at $25 per hog amounts to $25,000,000; that amount of money could have been brought into this country if particular attention had been directed to this class of business.

I shall now turn to the British imports of mutton and lamb. In 1929 the British imports of these two commodities were 5,653,979 hundredweight. Of that quantity New Zealand supplied 50 per cent. Is there any reason why Canada should not supply to the British market as much mutton as New Zealand supplies? Natural conditions, such as proximity to the market, are more favourable to the Dominion than they are to New Zealand. Of the total quantity of mutton and lamb supplied in 1929 the Argentine supplied 27 per cent and Australia 10 per cent. Canada imported 4,000,000 pounds of mutton, and our imports in this regard are growing continually to supply the demand of our local markets.

I wish to place on Hansard a record of exports and imports as they were given in a return to this house asked for by the late member for Frontenac-Addington, Mr. Edwards, during the session of 1928. To the figures given in this return I have added the imports as they are recorded in the trade returns for the calendar year 1929. The table which follows gives the quantities of pork, bacon and hams, lard, cheese, butter, milk and cream and milk, condensed or evaporated or as milk powder, exported from Canada during the fiscal year 1925-26 as compared with the quantities exported during the last fiscal year:

|---|---|---|
| Pork.. .. .. .. ..lbs. | 14,989,100 | 10,184,700 |
| Bacon and hams..lbs. | 125,376,000 | 28,772,700 |
| Lard.. .. .. .. ..lbs. | 8,394,700 | 1,775,500 |
| Cheese.. .. .. ..lbs. | 148,333,500 | 92,946,100 |
| Butter.. .. .. ..lbs. | 23,303,900 | 1,400,400 |
| Milk and cream..gals. | 8,718,380 | 5,627,523 |
| Milk, condensed or evaporated or as milk podwer.. ..lbs. | 45,622,600 | 31,982,300 |

When we consider the imports into Canada of these commodities we find increases in almost every instance, as follows:

|---|---|---|
| Pork.. .. .. .. ..lbs. | 15,443,276 | 14,651,053 |
| Bacon and hams..lbs. | 1,190,626 | 6,855,217 |
| Lard.. .. .. .. ..lbs. | 4,321,387 | 976,145 |
| Cheese.. .. .. ..lbs. | 6,678,487 | 2,103,724 |
| Butter.. .. .. ..lbs. | 7,029,084 | 35,928,249 |
| Milk and cream..gals. | ..... | 20,035 |
| Milk, condensed or evaporated or as milk powder.. ..lbs. | 129,355 | 178,968 |

I have been attempting to show that we should encourage the production of animal products because there is a potential market for these commodities in practically unlimited quantities, and we have not supplied that market to anything like the extent which is possible. Our goods are in demand but we are not maintaining the necessary supply; indeed, to a considerable extent we are becoming importers instead of exporters. We are not supplying the British market in beef, pork, mutton, butter, eggs, bacon and ham, cheese or poultry to the extent that is possible or for which there is an insistent demand.

On the other hand, in grains, and particularly in wheat, the condition is exactly the reverse; we are making feverish efforts to increase our production of wheat and other grains beyond the consumptive demand. Contrast the situation in the meat trade to-day with the situation in the grain trade. Our elevators are bulging with an unsold crop which, by the way, was one of the smallest crops we have harvested for a number of years. Our transportation systems remain idle while the grain lies in the elevators awaiting a buyer, and our trade returns show unfavourable balances on account of our unsold grain. The commercial situation is depressed, and indeed almost stagnant; severe unemployment exists because the grain has not moved out and the money rolled in. Foreign countries, which formerly bought large supplies of our grains, have increased their tariff barriers, encouraged home production and left our growers with the grain on their hands. British Empire markets apparently are supplied from other sources, possibly because of the price but more likely because in the complex system of barter and exchange the shrewd British buyer finds in other countries willing customers for the manufactured goods he wishes to sell them in exchange.

Just here I might quote from the Financial Post of April 17, where I find some reasons why our wheat does not meet with the favour in the European market that it did at one time:

> Too much has been made of the statistical position of wheat and too little to the effect of tariff walls being raised higher and higher by European governments against foreign grain and flour. Britain, Norway, Denmark and the Netherlands now stand alone in permitting free entry to wheat and flour. The others appear to be willing to get along with cheaper products of inferior quality in order to increase greater use of the domestic grown and milled wheat.

The following figures show how potent this factor has become, especially when it is considered that all these countries are large potential buyers of Canadian wheat and flour. For instance, Germany imposes a tariff of 61.76 cents per bushel on our wheat, and I believe that tariff has been raised to 78 cents per bushel since this article was written. In France the duty is 53.60 cents per bushel, in Switzerland it is 105.49 cents and in Italy 73.20 cents.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CHARLES E. FERLAND (Joliette) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, on May 1, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), committed to our political annals one of the finest pages of the liberal party's history, in connection with the development of this country, perhaps young but already great. By a popular and national budget "clear as crystal" to use the words uttered a few moments ago by the hon. member for Temiscamingue North (Mr. Bradette), by a budget considered "the most important since Confederation," so acknowledged by the conservative press, the hon. Minister of Finance created an atmosphere of enthusiasm and revival of hope in the destinies "of the great century" of Canada. Therefore, the people of the beautiful county of Joliette welcomed with great joy this budget destined to further develop agriculture while sufficiently protecting the other industries.

My constituents, sir, also learned with much satisfaction, of the recent appointment to the bench of the Court of Appeals, Province of Quebec, of the Hon. Antonin Galipeault, ex-minister of Public Works and Labour in the Quebec Legislature. By the appointment to the highest court of Quebec of this great friend of Joliette, the government has crowned a very fruitful career and honoured an eminent barrister of the Quebec bar, who in his new duties will continue to fulfil with much dignity the traditions of honour, ability, probity and devotion to duty which, at all times, have made the strength and greatness of the Canadian bar. The government has also honoured in this distinguished barrister a man who has played an important part in the administration of affairs in his province, and —what is more personal—one of the most brilliant scholars of my "Alma Mater" the Joliette seminary, where the hon. Mr. Galipeault completed his classical studies. Needless to say that the old seminary of Joliette is one of the most important institutions of higher studies in the province of Quebec. Instances of this are of daily occurrence. Only a few months ago, the Canadian press announced, with joy and national pride, that the young Roch Pinard, a student of the seminary of Joliette, had just carried off first honours in eloquence in an international competition, at Washington. Always remembering with joy the happy days which I spent in that admirable institution, which has given to religious and civil life numerous and distinguished men, I cannot resist the pleasure of mentioning that I have the privilege of sitting in this house with four worthy and distinguished students of the seminary of Joliette. They are the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père), for Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Gervais), for Champlain (Mr. Desaulniers), and for Saint-Denis (Mr. Denis).

Mr. Speaker, the unpresuming city of Joliette, whose charter of incorporation dates back to 1863, in pre-confederation days, and which had but a population of 4,200 at the census of 1901, has become the rich city of Joliette, prosperous in all its commercial and industrial activities. Its present population of 10,800 is noted for its broad mindedness, courtesy, good manners, high education and excellent character. This provincial town is preeminently a place of bonne entente and intermingling of various nationalities. The English protestant minorities peacefully enjoy in our midst their separate schools and churches while benefiting of all the advantages of Joliette life. I should very much like to see this town, where tolerance, peace and harmony exist among all races, serve as an example to all Canadians, especially at this period preceding an election in which our English protestant opponents belonging to the Tory party will, perhaps, as their press foreshadows, ask the people, as usual to vote against the Liberal party, and against French domination! I should like to see as much tolerance throughout the country as there is in the good old town of Joliette which I have the honour to represent in the house.

In this perfect social organization, there is, however, needed a special service, and it behooved the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) to fill this need, by granting us, to our great satisfaction, a mail carriers service within the limits of the city of Joliette. I, therefore, wish to again express my gratitude to the Postmaster General on his kind decision to establish this service.

There is a local question, Sir, which is directly connected with the budget we are considering: the management of the National Railways in regard to its repair shops at Joliette.

In 1925, the C.N.R. shops, at Joliette, were destroyed by fire and have not yet been rebuilt. The management of the Canadian National Railways have nevertheless maintained more than 60 men to repair cars. Ever since the fire the citizens of Joliette have unceasingly asked for the construction of these shops. Their request has not yet been granted. The high officials of the C.N.R. maintain that the question is still under consideration, but the people of Joliette have serious doubts with regard to the fate of these shops to which our city owes at least one-third of its expansion.

I understand, sir, that the management of the National Railways has to deal, in all parts of the country, with numerous problems of the same nature as those relating to Joliette.

Indeed, eight years ago, when the Liberal party handed over the management of the National Railways to this well known expert, Sir Henry Thornton—for a long time familiar with transportation problems—the entire system of our railways, known to-day as the State Railways, showed yearly deficits of $75,000,000 and more. It was a very heavy burden for the country, we even heard a member, one day, suggest to turn over the entire business for $1 to whomsoever wished to purchase it, and a large number of ratepayers confronted with the ever increasing deficits, were wondering if there were not more truth than irony in the whim of this member. Events have, however, clearly shown that the present management, which changed old deficits to surpluses, was right. To-day, the work accomplished by Sir Henry Thornton gives us an admirable instance of what can be done by a competent and energetic man, when those he serves loyally support his efforts.

A few days ago the President of the National Railways presented us his yearly statement.

What gives us a clear proof of the difficulties met in the management of such a vast undertaking, always depending on the fluctuations of business, is that this statement shows a drop in the gross revenue of $16,752,948 and in the net revenue of $13,381,497 compared with 1928, a decrease attributed to the inferiority of the western crop in 1929, and more especially to the sale of wheat at a lower price. The fall in revenue from the shipment of wheat alone represents a loss of $15,500,000 compared with the previous year. It is also known that the discontinuing of western harvest excursions has brought on a loss of over $1,000,000 to the Canadian National Railways.

It is evident that the various workshops of the National Railways depend on traffic fluctuations and many uncontrollable circumstances. For the reason given, the present management felt justified in closing a number of local workshops, to the detriment of many towns, in order to reduce expenditures to a minimum.

Yet the town of Joliette which clamours for the rebuilding of the National Railways workshops, can base its claims on especially strong grounds. In fact, it requests the rebuilding of those workshops under the terms of a contract, old it is true, which required the Canadian National Railways to build and maintain permanently workshops for repairs of all cars to be used over a large section, from Hawkesbury, in Ontario, as far as Quebec and also at various other points. Moreover, has not the town of Joliette some acquired rights, by the fact that it owes one-third of its commercial and industrial expansion to the old workshops which greatly contributed to its development and to the welfare of its citizens? If I have drawn the attention of the house to this question of vital imporatnce to my district, it was to create a feeling of sympathy in favour of my town and in order that the C.N.R. officials may realize that they may at times make sacrifices for the benefit of certain provincial towns, so as not to hinder too greatly their progress. In expressing my gratitude to the present management of the National Railways who have kindly heard my just claims and in a certain measure have granted them, might I most respectfully suggest to them that they should still do more for the town of Joliette by rebuilding their workshops without any further delay, thereby giving shelter to our good workers of Joliette who are now exposed to the varying weather of the seasons. In a word, reconsider that important contract and give it a more favourable interpretation, not only conforming to the letter but to the spirit of each clause.

I wish, sir, to avail myself of the excellent financial situation of Canada as announced in the present budget to once more remind the house and also the government, which presides over our destinies with such perspicuity, ability, benevolence and zeal, of the question relating to the construction of a railway which would link Montreal to the Transcontinental, passing through Joliette, and which it was agreed to call the Joliette Parent branch via St. Michel-des-Saints.

For over a quarter of a century the counties of Joliette and Berthier have been clamouring for this railway.

I never conceived the idea of a Transcontinental without a branch line which would link it to the Canadian metropolis, stated, in 1908, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who had subsidies, at the time, voted for the construction of 200 miles of railway intended to link Montreal with the Transcontinental.

Ever since that time, many efforts have been made by the Chamber of Commerce and Municipal Council of Joliette. Many resolutions, endorsing this request, have been adopted by imported public bodies of Montreal, by its French and English Boards of Trade, by the Business Men's Association, by the League of property owners of Montreal.

In February, 1929, an important delegation of the Chamber of Commerce of Joliette, accompanied by a number of federal and provincial members, among whom were the hon. member for Joliette in the Quebec Legislature (Mr. Lucien Dugas), and the hon. members for Berthier Maskinongé (Mr. Gervais), for L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Séguin), for St. Denis (Mr. Denis), for Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père), for St. Henri (Mr. Mercier), for Maisonneuve (Mr. Robitaille), etc., went to meet the executive committee of the city of Montreal in order to ask them to officially endorse, on behalf of the Canadian Metropolis, the request of the citizens of Joliette and elsewhere. A few months later, just before the end of the 1929 session, I had the honour of forwarding to the government a resolution of the Council of the city of Montreal earnestly recommending to them the construction of this railway which would link up the metropolis with the Transcontinental, pursuant to the resolution of the Municipal Council and Chamber of Commerce of Joliette.

It was the first time that the city of Montreal expressed itself publicly, by means of a resolution through its municipal council. Now that the city of Montreal has spoken officially, the objection can no more be made to us that one often heard: "But you request a railway to help the city of Montreal which, itself does not ask for." We now know that the municipal authorities of Montreal have made the request as well as a great number of public bodies. The resolutions are too numerous, and time is too short, to read them to the house, however, I shall specially mention the highly favourable resolution sent to us by the league of property owners of Montreal, on April 17, 1929, and which reads as follows:

"Resolved, that the league of property owners of Montreal earnestly pray the Dominion government to construct a branch line which will link Montreal to the Transcontinental by the shortest and most direct route; and that copy of the present resolution be forwarded to the Prime Minister of Canada, the Minister of Railways, the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the city of Montreal, the leader of the council of the city of Montreal and to all the federal members of the counties interested."

Is it necessary to add, sir, that it is recognized to-day that the shortest line which will link Montreal to the Transcontinental is the one which would pass through Joliette and St.-Michel-des-Saints, in the county of Berthier?

It is not my intention to review all the arguments in favour of this important national scheme. Let me but refer to the masterly statement on this question by the hon. senator Casgrain, in the Senate last year, which can be found in the proceedings of that body February, 1929; also to the speeches delivered in this House by my predecessor, Mr. Justice Denis, during the last decade.

I shall, however, add that this projected railway will have the effect of opening up to the tourists one of the most beautiful centres of the province of Quebec. It is estimated that this new tourist industry brings into this country more than $300,000,000 per year. It is therefore important to draw to this country the greatest number possible of tourists, by making easy the access to the most sought country resorts. And I do not know of any more beautiful spot than that part of the Laurentian hills which crosses the north of the county of Joliette, and skirts, in the Berthier county, the magnificent perspective of the Seven Falls, extending as far as St-Michel-des-Saints, always in a marvellous scenery, in the midst of beautiful romantic landscapes, surrounded by numerous lakes that the great poet Lamartine himself would not have disdained to describe. Numerous tourists have the habit of visiting, during the summer season, these hunting and fishing grounds located in the north of the counties of Joliette and Berthier, and, each year, in increasing numbers, they return to them in their motor cars.

While on the subject of tourists, may I make a humble suggestion, express a thought which might be of a nature to germinate in many minds and take root later on? Might I suggest that it would be in the interest of the whole nation to add to the Interior Department, for instance, which already has an admirable and perfect system to advertise our national resources, a department of tourists, under the direction of a special commissioner, as in France, to which might be added other commissioners who could reside in some of the principle centres in the United States, a country very sympathetic to Canada, and the best recruiting grounds for tourists. I think that if we had such a tourist department, we could advertise those beautiful regions visited each year by thousands of tourists, who might be directed where life is pleasant in the summer months, from the sunny coast of Gaspé, so beautifully described by you Mr. Speaker, in an admirable sketch that was recently published, on the occasion of the anniversary of the fourth century of civilization in America, as far back as the sublime Laurentian hills which make us dream of heaven.

I stated at the outset of my remarks that the present budget favours the farming class. The other day an hon. member drew the attention of the government to the fact that a car load of vegetables, coming from the United States and shipped to the Canadian west, had been subjected to a duty three times higher than previous to the budget.

A number of members, prone, no doubt, to criticize the budget, will perhaps tell the working classes that with the new protective tariff, certain vegetables or fruits will sell a few cents dearer. The preferential tariff provides, first, for restocking the market, under most favourable conditions, from Bermuda and the West Indies.

The new customs duties levied on fruits and vegetables imported from the United States, will be criticized. However, the working classes will benefit by the fruits and vegetables imported from Bermuda and the West Indies, under a reduced tariff. As to the protective tariff against the products of the United States, it will benefit the farming class and in the long run the working classes themselves. Have not the latter an interest in protecting themselves against the exodus of the rural population towards urban and industrial centres. The best means of preventing this exodus of our farmers towards the towns, is to provide the agricultural class with the means of a livelihood from the tillage of the soil. If we must protect them to reach this result, let us protect them. It is a sound policy.

The help we extend to the agricultural class leads definitely to the improvement of the city workers' conditions.

Consideration was recently given in the House to the unemployment situation, but would not unemployment increase by the fact that a great number of farmers' sons, finding no more work on the land, would seek the towns to earn their living. From such a migration there could be no other result than overcrowding, I would add, sir, a dangerous overcrowding.

The government fortunately have done a great deal for the farmer. By their measure in connection with the maple sugar industry, enacted this year, they will considerably improve the lot of those who are in the maple sugar industry, in the province of Quebec, and I wish to congratulate all the Quebec members who have taken an active part in getting this measure adopted.

The government has also given proof of a high standard of patriotism by adopting the Farm Loans Act. When this act was passed, in the interest of all the provinces of the Dominion, the government was aware that in the western provinces those who borrowed were in the habit of paying high rates of interest. Unfortunately, owing to present conditions in the province of Quebec, and with a knowledge that our products are not selling as they should, I consider that the rates of interest asked on loans effected by virtue of the Farm Loans Act, 6½ per cent is too high to bring a real remedy to the situation of farmers who are really in need and who must look to the central and local governments for help in order to balance their budget by negotiating a loan which they could with difficulty obtain under better conditions in their own district. I, therefore, endorse with great pleasure the request of all the members of the province of Quebec, who earnestly pray the government to remedy this situation, at the present session if possible, by reducing the present rate of interest of 6½ per cent to 5½ per cent.

In many ways, we could help the farming class. The Bankruptcy Act of 1919 has been for us, from the province of Quebec, a complete upsetting of our former act of assignment of property and of our code of civil procedure. I have no hesitation in saying that this Bankruptcy Act, by allowing, for the first time in the history of this country, farmers to make a voluntary assignment and to place their assets often in the hands of adventurers who take up bankruptcy only as a side line, has caused more harm to the farmers of the province of Quebec than could possibly have done a plague of grasshoppers. I even wonder if this Bankruptcy Act is truly "intra vires" and might not be unconstitutional. Indeed, at the time of the confederation pact, the constitution maintained in force our law on assignment of property. And pursuant to this law, traders alone had the right to make a voluntary assignment of their property. Farmers had not that right. What happened under the regime of the Bankruptcy Act which has inaugurated an absolutely new system? A certain number of farmers having met difficulties in balancing their budget became discouraged, and solicited by certain assignees, thought of bettering their lot by passing over their property to an assignee who would handle their assets. In a great number of cases these liquidations did not bring a sufficient amount to pay for mortgages and the price realized on the whole implements of the farm was hardly enough to defray the costs.

The hon. member for l'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Séguin), at the outset of this session reported the case of a creditor in his riding who had a mortgage of $1,500 on a farm valued, at the time of the loan, at $5,000, and who received through the bankruptcy proceedings from his debtor $800 only. He lost the difference because the bankruptcy costs were so large.

There is nothing astonishing that there are abuses committed under this act, because the creditors are often unable to protect themselves. There are farmers who have forsaken, in favour of their creditors, property worth from twenty to thirty thousand dollars and the costs of liquidation amounted to four or five thousand dollars. Personally, I know of two in the county of l'Assomption-Montcalm.

This Bankruptcy Act has caused great and irreparable harm to farmers. They have lost their credit. The local money lenders lost confidence in them and when they realized that they were exposed to lose their money, because of the administration of the Bankruptcy Act, they preferred to invest their money in the cities. Even there, they often met adventurers who induced them to make loans on doubtful security, and these money lenders lost a considerable amount of their savings. It is not astonishing, under such circumstances, that our farmers have to suffer, because their income is small.

The are numerous omissions in the Bankruptcy Act which would need to be rectified. I would suggest to the government that they appoint a commission to inquire into this act, and its working, at least in the province of Quebec, and to report on changes which would be appropriate.

I would also like to see the government establish in rural districts a greater number of demonstration farms to further assist the farmers.

I again state, sir that the most important problem to solve in this house is that of maintaining our farming industry on a sound basis. Let us not follow in the footsteps of England which has established its trade and industries on the ruins of agriculture. Our country is not similarly situated. Let us first protect the farmer and the city worker, we shall thus ensure the happiness of the whole nation.

On motion of Mr. Manion the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe the house adjourned at 10.58 p.m.

Tuesday, May 13, 1930.

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski), presented the first report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Sir EUGENE FISET moved that the first report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TARIFF REDUCTIONS AND WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. THOMPSON (East Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Secretary of State to a question passed as an order for return on April 9. This question covered three points, while the return made on April 28 dealt with only one. I would like to have information regarding the other two points.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): I will look into this matter and give my hon. friend a reply tomorrow.

RADIO BROADCASTING

PROPOSED CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BROADCASTING STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on May 9 the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) gave what was supposed to be an answer to a question which I had asked regarding the application of the Canadian Pacific Railway for a broadcasting licence. In his answer the minister did not make clear the position of the government in this matter, and I would like to ask the government if it is their intention to grant this company the broadcasting licence applied for.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I shall have to ask my hon. friend to allow the minister to answer this question. I will direct his attention to it.

FREIGHT RATE APPEALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, I received this morning a telegram from Mr. J. E. Armishaw, president of the United Farmers of British Columbia, inquiring if it is the intention of the government to give a favourable decision in the freight rate appeals made by the farmers of that province.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am unable to state whether that decision will be favourable or unfavourable. I wish I could state definitely when the decision will be given but there is a lot of evidence to be considered and I cannot at the moment make a definite statement.

CIVIL SERVICE COUNCILS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) has not been in his seat for some days, I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) whether the order in council recently passed with regard to the establishment of civil service councils means that these councils will be set up in the near future.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister); I believe the order in council makes provision for the meeting together of different civil service organizations with the representatives of the government in order to draft a constitution. Until a constitution is drafted and approved it is impossible to say what will be the official form of the council.

FOREST FIRES IN NOVA SCOTIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the government regarding relief to be granted to the sufferers in Nova Scotia, particularly in the county of Queens, from the series of forest fires which have occurred there. As I stated yesterday, in the county of Queens alone over 150 people have been rendered homeless. The provincial government has made a substantial grant and contributions have been solicited, and I was wondering if the government would be prepared to make a donation. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) promised to bring this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Upon inquiry I find that two day ago the Department of National Defence took steps to see that assistance would be given in the form of supplies and men. At the present time the government is making inquiries as to the nature and extent of the losses. I cannot say more than this at the present time.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Monday, May 12, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett, and the amendment to the amendment thereto of Mr. Fansher (Last Mountain).

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, in the forty minutes at my disposal I do not intend to offer any useless compliments to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in regard to his budget, but I will say this, that in bringing down this budget he has done a service to the Canadian people, because by it he has rung down the curtain on the last act of the farce which the present government has been presenting before the people of Canada for the past nine years. A farce is usually funny, but in this case it has been somewhat of a tragedy for the Dominion and it is well that the end is near. In the minds of most thinking people everything is over for the government but the election. For nine years the government by its un-Canadian policy has to a serious extent been doing damage to all our industries, the cattle industry, the dairy industry, the fruit and vegetable industry and the manufacturing industry, and by damaging those industries it has driven our workers and wage earners to the United States instead of providing work and wages for the people of Canada.

To prove that fact, all one has to do is to quote the figures of importations from the United States since the present government came into power. If hon. members will look them up they will find that the first year the government was in power we imported from the United States $516,000,000 worth of goods and last year we imported $869,000,000 worth, or almost double the former figure, an increase of nearly $400,000,000, 60 or 70 per cent of which could have been produced in this country had we had a proper Canadian policy. Our attitude throughout those nine years has been that we should have such a policy. This attitude we have put on record by resolutions moved in the house, by amendments moved to the budget, and by our leader in speeches that he has delivered before the Canadian people. Our attitude in short is one of "Canada first," one by which we shall produce in this country all those commodities which we can economically produce, utilizing in the process our own raw materials and bringing them to the finished product here instead of elsewhere, at the same time giving work and wages to the Canadian people instead of to people in foreign countries.

The reply of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) last year was the final summing up of the attitude of the present government when he assumed the position that we must "do nothing to provoke Washington." That was merely the final summing up, because for some years the government had been taking the same attitude. In the last three elections hon. members will find, if they look up the preelection proclamations of the government, that they have been proclaiming a free trade or low tariff policy. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), who spoke yesterday, made that great proclamation of the "deathknell of protection." The Prime Minister not once but dozens of times in his speeches has emphasized the fact that the tariff is a tax on the people and therefore should be reduced. He has said in many speeches that a tariff fosters trusts, combines and mergers. He has bewailed what he called our "brick for brick" tariff policy. He has declared that the Tories try to shut out imports and in his Edmonton speech he said that imports do no harm. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Crerar), the late Minister of Immigration, Mr. Forke, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) are all out-and-out free trade supporters. But no later than this session when we introduced our amendment dealing with the New Zealand order in council, the government repeated its attitude, and its followers, notably the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) and the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn), took the position that the order in council should stand, that it would do no good to change it. The government finally moved a want of confidence motion in themselves and carried it, making this want of confidence in the government almost unanimous throughout Canada.

The Minister of Finance at Regina as late as February 6 last, or about three months ago, emphasized the fact that he was "a low tariff man." He said:

> I stand for a tariff as low as possible having regard to the interests of consumers, producers and industry generally.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MANION: Some hon. members say "hear, hear." As everybody belongs to one of those three groups and nearly everybody belongs to all three, this means merely having regard to the interests of everybody, but having regard particularly to the interests of the government. That was the real object of the speech.

In 1929 things became bad and a climax was reached by conditions brought upon us by the government. Industry became so depressed and unemployment so rampant that demands came to the government for assistance. Deputations waited upon the Prime Minister and the members of the government asking for relief. The only answer, however, that they got was a petulant statement by the Prime Minister that they were exaggerating conditions, and some hocus-pocus about unemployment insurance which he recanted as soon as he came into the house. When the session began with business depressed and unemployment rampant, there was an opportunity for the government to show some of that great statesmanship which they so modestly admit they possess, but everything that came up in the house was negatived by them.

The hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Kellner) introduced a resolution in regard to highways, but the government voted it down. Then the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) introduced a motion in regard to technical education, and while it did not come to a vote the government turned it down. The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) introduced a motion relating to unemployment insurance, but in the classical words of the Prime Minister, not one five-cent piece would be given. The opportunities were great, but the government was small. It was as useless and helpless as a ship without a rudder or an engine or a pilot or a captain. The members of the cabinet were not those statesmen that they boasted they were. They were merely effigies of statesmen. They claimed prosperity, prosperity, when no prosperity existed in the country. They seem to think if they cried it loud, often and long enough, the hungry would think their stomachs were full and the idle would think their hands were busy. They showed no leadership, no policy, no courage and no Canadianism.

The people began to get tired of the fact that Canada was being treated largely as a hinterland of the United States and of a government which on all policies dealing with the United States, acted like an offshoot of the Washington government. They began to realize what a miserable failure the government had been. In other words, the government had been found out, and the people were getting ready to turn them out, the government themselves and many of their followers admitting defeat in private conversation. They decided they had to do something radical, startling, spectacular, or they would not have a chance at the next election. So they put their heads together and concocted this budget scheme, or budget hoax, caring nothing for past principles which they had espoused in the years gone by, caring nothing for the rather awkward and somewhat humiliating attitude of standing on their heads so far as their tariff policy was concerned, and caring nothing for the indecent recantation of policies for which they had stood in other days.

Mr. HEPBURN: What did the hon. member stand for in 1911?

Mr. MANION: I was under thirty years of age in 1911 and I have gained a little sense since then, but I do not think my hon. friend has.

So they worked up this budget scheme; they took a few of our proposals which they had previously opposed and ridiculed strenuously and hilariously in the house; they took a few countervailing duties to please the agricultural section; they put some protection on iron and steel and then, fearing, apparently, that these three changes might help Canada, they introduced, or at least so they claimed, an extension of the British preference as a sop to the low tariff men of the west. Then making a complex rearrangement of all the items so that nobody could understand the budget anyway, they added a lot of humbug and hurrah and they offered that as a policy for Canada. There is in medicine an unscientific type of practitioner who when he does not know how to diagnose a case takes ten or a dozen drugs, jumbles them together in a prescription and offers it to the patient, hoping that if one therapeutic bullet does not hit the disease, another may. That is what is sarcastically called a "gunshot" prescription. This budget is a "gunshot" budget, the government hoping that if one political bullet does not bring down what I may call the prey, another bullet may do so.

They lack the intelligence to work out a scientific Canadian tariff, and they lack the honesty to admit that they lack the intelligence. So they have brought in this budget, and they hope to keep the people from choking and gagging as they swallow it by giving them free tea with which to wash it down.

There are three outstanding features of this budget with which I intend to deal very briefly in the short time at my disposal, those being the iron and steel duties, the British preferential duties, and the countervailing duties. In regard to the iron and steel tariff, we imported last year, largely from the United States, about $340,000,000 of iron and steel products, sixty or seventy per cent of which could be manufactured in Canada under a proper tariff. I am giving the figures of the Minister of Finance himself, who unfortunately is not in his seat. He said with respect to these iron and steel items that he had increased the rates under the general tariff on forty items and reduced the rates on sixty-six items; that under the intermediate tariff he had increased the rates on twenty-four items and reduced them on eighty-six items, and that under the British preferential tariff he had increased the rates in eight cases and decreased them in one hundred and fifty-two cases. Adding them together, he has increased the duties on seventy-two items and decreased the duties on three hundred and four items, or more than four times the number of increases. So if you take it mathematically, and that is about the only way one can take it, you do not find much encouragement in this budget to the iron and steel industry as a whole in this country. How much less iron and steel shall we import from the United States under these new rates, and how much more shall we import from Great Britain? What will be the general effect of these changes? Nobody in the world knows what the general effect will be, and least of all the Minister of Finance himself. In the last forty-eight hours, an outstanding business man, the president of a big business in Canada, stated within the precincts of this building that his company had built a $1,500,000 plant in this country which had not yet been opened, and due to the increases in the British preference made in this budget that plant would never turn a wheel. In this budget, tariffs have been raised and lowered in such a way that nobody can tell for a year or two at least what the general effect will be. That is probably one of the reasons why the Minister of Finance did not make an estimate of his income for the coming year, and a second reason was probably that any accurate estimate would have to show a deficit.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Why talk of something you know nothing about?

Mr. MANION: I have as much right to speak on what I know nothing about as this government has to legislate on what it knows nothing about.

Let me examine these sixteen items a little more closely. Our imports of these items last year amounted to between nine and fifteen million dollars. I have heard various estimates. I estimate it myself between twelve and thirteen million. But I will take the highest figure that I have heard and assume that we imported fifteen million dollars of goods under these items last year. That is a mere bagatelle compared with our imports last year from various countries. Suppose that this budget keeps out $10,000,000 of those imports, which is very unlikely by the way, and that the increase in the iron and steel duties against the United States will keep out another $40,000,000 worth of iron and steel products, which is still more unlikely, because most people estimate that they will not keep out five per cent of the present importation, which would be only half $40,000,000. Adding those together, we get $50,000,000. Suppose, on the other hand, that the increase in the British preferential duties on agricultural products and iron and steel lets in $40,000,000 worth of those goods from the British Empire. That is only an estimate, but one guess is as good as another, and you can only guess in regard to this budget. That would leave a credit balance of $10,000,000. Suppose you double or treble that amount and say $20,000,000 or $30,000,000. Compare that with the $900,000,000 worth of imports that we got from the United States last year, or with the $1,270,000,000 that we got from the whole world. Where is the work and wages for the Canadian people in that budget? Where is the increased prosperity for this country in that small change? What the government has done is to give with one hand and take away with the other, and what the effect will be nobody in this world knows. They have attempted to mix in the same budget free trade and protection, which are just as mixable as oil and water. A business friend of mine, after reading this budget, said to me, "I have carried on under protection in Canada, and I might be able to carry on under free trade, but I cannot carry on under both free trade and protection at the same time." Why did not the government take the courageous Canadian attitude and adopt a made-in-Ottawa policy, placing Canada first under all circumstances, instead of bringing down this weak, puerile imitation of a tariff which, even if it were conscientiously carried out, has little or nothing in it for the workers of this country? With the exception of a few items which this government has taken from us and incorporated as their own, after ridiculing and opposing them in this house, there is no resemblance in this budget to a real Canadian policy such as has always been advocated by us.

Mr. MILLAR: How did the government come to get a Conservative budget from Washington?

Mr. MANION: I did not say that they have a Conservative budget. I do not consider that they have. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that at the next election these western free trade members, such as my hon. friend, will find it more difficult to get votes than the government will find it difficult to get anything from Washington.

Let me show how differently the United States government has dealt with its tariff since this government came into power in 1921. According to the Commercial Intelligence Journal of April 26 last, a publication of the government here at Ottawa, the United States imported from Canada in the six months of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1921, agricultural products or products manufactured from agricultural commodities to the value of $130,000,000. Then the United States put up the Fordney tariff and other tariffs. They did not impose countervailing duties. They were not worrying about what we were going to do. They put on straight duties of their own, with the result that for the six months ending March 31 last they imported from us, not $130,000,000 worth of these goods, but $24,000,000 worth, or $106,000,000 less in the short period of six months. They are now increasing their tariffs against us to keep out another $70,000,000 or $75,000,000 worth of agricultural products. That is the American method of legislating for themselves. Let us be Canadians, just as they are Americans, and let us treat them in the same businesslike way that they treat us.

I wish for a few moments to deal with the British preference. I would not like to pass that up, for in this budget which consists of a great deal of make-believe there is more fakery, sham, and eye-wash in the British preference section than in any other part. What kind of mentality must the Minister of Finance and the government have when they give a long list of 589 free items which they boast of as furthering British preference when, not dozens or scores, but hundreds of these items will not make one bit of difference in the imports that we receive from the rest of the British Empire. To make the whole thing still more obscure the Minister of Finance has rearranged the whole classification in a complex way, changing ad valorem duties to specific and specific to ad valorem, and taking percentage rates and making them dollar rates, and vice versa, to prevent, I suppose, the unravelling of this strange patchwork of economic humbug. What will be the result? No one knows, least of all the Minister of Finance. I can assure this house and our western friends particularly that the results will be far from what the Minister of Finance claims so far as the British preference part of the budget is concerned. There will be little resemblance to the pretense. These British preference reductions were put in for the purpose of appeasing the west and humbugging them into getting their votes. That was the whole purpose, and it is an insult to their intelligence.

What must one think of a government which adds scores, yes hundreds of items to the free list, useless free items, and pretends to western Canada that that is free trade, and then puts a tariff of 42 per cent on furniture, which one of its own cabinet ministers manufactures. To avoid being told that I am mistaken, I hold in my hand the order by which the tariff was raised from 30 to 42 per cent. It was tabled at my request the other day by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler). It is signed by R. W. Breadner, Commissioner of Customs, and was issued no doubt upon the order of the minister. This is the order:

Ottawa, April 28, 1930.

Subject; Importations of Furniture

Sir,

All importations of furniture from North Carolina, Virginia and other southern states are to be appraised at an advance of not less than 40 per cent on the invoice value, without dumping duty, pending investigation and further instructions from the department.

Yours truly,

In other words, they raised the valuation of the furniture 40 per cent, which makes the duty 42 per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: By order in council?

Mr. MANION: Not even by order in council, but by a circular issued by the Commissioner of Customs on instructions from the Minister of National Revenue.

An hon. MEMBER: For the benefit of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MANION: I do not say it was for the benefit of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but it has a rather strange appearance I must confess.

Mr. EULER: Does the hon. gentleman say that the rate on furniture has been increased?

Mr. MANION: I say the valuation has been increased 40 per cent, which absolutely increases the duty to 42 per cent.

Mr. EULER: Surely my hon. friend does not pretend that the rate should not apply on the proper value. That is all we are trying to establish.

Mr. MANION: I do not know what the minister is trying to establish; but the fact is obvious that the duty on furniture at this moment is 42 per cent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not question that there is something good in this budget; it would be a strange budget that did not contain some good items. The good items in this budget are the proposals which we have made for years past and which the government ridiculed as worthless. What is good in this budget I support. What fosters empire trade I support, so long as it does not damage Canadian industry of any kind; but, sir, when it does damage Canadian industry I shall just as strenuously oppose it. The Canadian working man who loses his job to a British or a West Indian working man is not any happier for having so lost it than he would be had he lost it to a working man in the United States or some other foreign country. Canada is just as much a portion of the British Empire as is Britain or the West Indies—and charity begins at home. Just as a chain is no stronger than its component links; so this empire is only as strong as its component parts. Canada being one of the outstanding parts of this empire, the best way for us to build up the empire is to build up Canada into a prosperous Dominion. When I am forced, as I am in this budget, to choose between my land and its people and some other land and its people, I unhesitatingly align myself with my own country and my own countrymen.

But, sir, to deal with the general question of preference, this Liberal party has been claiming for years that they were the only simon-pure advocates of the British preference. They have been boasting throughout the country that they were the ones who were giving the preference to Great Britain as against all the rest of the world including of course the United States. We on this side have learned never to accept any statements by this government without proper investigation, because they are the greatest bunch of boasters and braggarts that ever got into power in any country.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I ask the hon. gentleman, who is a very able parliamentarian, not to use the word "bunch" in speaking of any party. I heard it employed yesterday.

Mr. MANION: If I used the word I made a mistake, Mr. Speaker, and I substitute for it the word "group." I say, sir, that they have been claiming since the 1890's that they were the only simon-pure advocates of the British preference. But I made it my business to look into this and I find that their claim is not in accordance with the facts. For example, I find that on the total imports for the year 1928-1929, both free and dutiable, the average duty on United States goods was 14.1 per cent as against 20.6 per cent on United Kingdom goods, or a difference in favour of the United States of almost 50 per cent of the duty on American goods. Where is the preference in that, I should like to ask, for Great Britain? In case some hon. gentlemen may say that the United States imports into Canada include iron, cotton, oil, coal and a lot of other free goods, which is true, I also took the average on dutiable goods only, and I find that on our importations from the United States the average duty was 23.4 per cent, as against 25.9 per cent on dutiable goods from the United Kingdom, or more than 10 per cent higher against the United Kingdom than against the United States. The more you investigate, Mr. Speaker, the worse it becomes for I find also that between 1911 and 1921, when the Conservatives were in power, there was not one year in that decade when the average rate of duty on goods coming from the United Kingdom was so high as during the last two years under this government. I find that the rates during those ten years averaged from 15.3 to 19.6 per cent, except in 1915 when they touched 20 per cent. Comparing those percentages with the average percentage during the last two years of 20.6, I should like to ask this government and its followers, where is the great British preference over the United States in that form of treatment? What has brought this about? I do not know, nor do I know whether it was done consciously or unconsciously, but I do know that on practically every occasion when this government deals with the United States the Prime Minister seems to have a slant favourable to that country and he drags his followers along behind him. To ensure the accuracy of my figures I checked them up with the report of the Department of Statistics for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929, and it absolutely bears out the facts that I have brought to the attention of the house.

We cannot trust the statements of this government with regard to past preferences to the United Kingdom. Therefore it is very difficult to trust their statements with regard to future British preferences. I would warn my low tariff friends in the west whose opinions have been so flagrantly flouted by this government, in spite of their having kept it in power, that they had better look out or they will be handed another gold brick by this government which for the last nine years has bamboozled not only the west but the whole Dominion. I am sorry that I have not much more time to investigate the budget, because the more it is investigated the more sham, deceit, and humbug you find it contains. This budget is a queer mixture of free trade and protection, of British preference and American preference, of tariff stability and tariff imbecility, and it is offered to the people of this country by the Minister of Finance. He is smiling at it. I do not blame him.

Mr. DUNNING: I am smiling at you.

Mr. MANION: It is offered to the people of this country by the Minister of Finance as a cure-all for the different ills that this government has brought upon the people of Canada. This budget is offered to the country by a group whose whole tariff history is a record of deception, trickery and vote-chasing; by a group whose endeavour at this moment is not to help the people of Canada, but to catch their votes; by a group who next year would just as unhesitatingly throw over the free trade or the protectionist side of this budget, as they have in this session thrown over all the principles and policies which they espoused in the past; offered by a group, sir, whose lack of Canadian policy has put Canada in a position from which she will take years to recover.

Now, I might be asked, what is the object of a budget salad of free trade and protection such as this? The object, of course, is political. It is a political shield with two distinct sides, the protectionist side for the east and the free trade side for the west, with no doubt a strong recommendation whispered to the government supporters not to show the two sides in any one part of Canada during the election. In other words, the object of this budget is to get the votes of both the protectionist and the free trader by deceiving the one and betraying the other. It is no wonder the Minister of Justice the other day at Woodstock made a speech in which he said:

> This is not an eastern budget, nor a western budget, nor a farmer's budget, nor a manufacturer's budget, nor a workingman's budget.

Of course it is not, it is a political budget; that is what it is.

The people of Canada are tired, sir, of a government which has shown no leadership or initiative, no consistent policy or principle, no frankness or courage, and no real Canadianism. They are tired of a government which has shown by this budget that it is nothing more or less than an "organized hypocrisy." They are tired of a government which after nine years of power has placed this country in a worse condition than it has been in at any time previous to this year. The sooner we are rid of a government which by its policies has taken away the work and wages of the fathers, sons, brothers and husbands of this country, and thinks that it can gain the support of the women voters by a pound of tea, the better for Canada. The sooner we see the end of a government which by this feeble gesture has endeavoured to keep out twenty-five or thirty million dollars' worth of imports from the United States, yet allows the other nearly nine hundred million dollars' worth to pour in, the better for the workers and wage earners of Canada. The sooner the low tariff people in the west who have kept this government in power realize that they have been betrayed, victimized and used as cheap pawns on the chessboard of power, the better for western Canada. What Canada needs, sir, is not a crazy-quilt policy, as outlined in the budget, but a consistent, courageous, Canada-first policy which will build up on the northern half of this continent not only a great, prosperous and progressive Canadian nation, but a worthy portion of the British Empire.

Mr. E.-C. ST-PERE (Hochelaga) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Solomon Buckley Harris, a journalist on the staff of the Springfield Republican, remarks in his memoirs that "the art of politics is to obtain results". The history of our own country is proof that, notwithstanding the many changes effected in our political outlook, we have arrived at positive results. In keeping with the times, our governments are aware that they must have recourse to up-to-date methods, adopt a new "modus operandi" to keep up with the needs of the day, and this with the aim of governing the country for the greatest welfare of the majority.

An arbitrary deed committed years ago, threw nations into disastrous conflicts. Two plenipotentiaries thrown out of a window was the cause of the thirty years war, and England unsheated the sword against Spain because some Iberians took a fancy to cut off the ears of the captain of a sea trading vessel. Things have changed since then. Countries, to-day, are more sensitive to the attacks launched against their foreign trade than to the affronts which caused great conflicts in the past. Turning to more contemporary times, let us note that one of the causes of the Great War was the promulgation of a tariff on hogs. And what is happening now? Are not the South American republics and Europe leagued together in unanmous protest against the new tariff of the United States.

It is useless, sir to suppose for an instant the withdrawal of Canada from the economic world. It would be idle works to maintain that we could escape from the changes which have taken place everywhere. It would be but vain boasting, to say that our country could prosper, without adapting our economic life to those conditions forced upon us by an almost general confusion of international affairs.

By its resolution of September, 24, 1925, the Council of the League of Nations asserted its conviction "that economic peace will greatly contribute to maintaining the security of nations". The desire of all good Canadians is that this peace may come as soon as possible to promote the healthy state of the economic world and the conditions which would help the expansion of civilization. Any national policy which is narrow in its outlook is detrimental, not only to the nations which endorse it, but also to the others as a whole. The economic conference has further noted, that the after-war experience prove that the prohibition of imports and exports, arbitrary regimes, disguised discriminations which result, sudden changes in customs duties and the high tariffs prevailing in many countries have fatal results on production and trade.

The United States are, at present, passing through a crisis of upward revision of their customs duties. Certain countries have been fretful of this recourse to autarchy by the United States in order to make sure of their economic independence. It is the Argentine Republic, the country of the teachings of Garvo and Calvo, that voices the most serious threats of tariff retaliation and boycotting of United States products. The New York World on February 24, 1930, published the following articles..

Antagonizing a Neighbour

Offhand it may seem a small matter to most American protectionists that Argentina is seriously disturbed and offended by the impending upward revision of our tariff. The newspaper La Razon is interviewing eminent citizens; many of them are declaring for retaliatory measures; the Rural Society representing 4,000 ranch owners, is calling for a boycott on American goods and the purchase of British imports; and a majority of the Agrarian Federation, composed of small farmers, favours increased duties on our farm machinery, automobiles and household appliances. But what of it? Argentina is a remote, thinly populated and imperfectly developed country, isn't it? The population is still under eleven millions, isn't it? It is all very well to talk of the great markets offered by it and by Canada, another country so seriously disturbed by our tariff plans that the Conservatives are talking of a party campaign for high counter duties. But cannot the 120,000,000 American people shape their own economic policy without bothering to consult these minor nations?

This article shows without further comments, that high protection tariff does not receive unanimous approval in the neighbouring republic.

The United States, contend the partisans of its high tariff, must have recourse to this upward revision of customs duties for the following reasons: the dumping of goods coming from countries having a depreciated currency, the desire to maintain old or recently created industries to a certain level. If such a stand was not taken they could not survive, or protect invested capital. They are masters in their own country, and we have nothing to say against this attitude of our neighbouring legislators.

Canada must conclude, sir, that it is indispensable to its security to develop in an ever increasing way the means to support itself. Without going into the respective merits of the theories of free trade and protection, without going back to ponder over the contentions of Gladstone, Blaine, Mills, Cartwright, Carnegie, Lloyd George, Balfour, Chamberlain, Beaverbrook, Baldwin, Scullin, and all the economists whose works embellish the shelves of the library of parliament, may I state that the budget introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) is a conception of our times and for our epoch. It contains no threats and its subject matter answers to our present wants.

Two items please the public especially, viz., the British preference and the countervailing duties.

"Hands across the sea," such was the appeal of Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he granted the British people preference. He did this because England was the only country where Canadian products were admitted free of duty. The Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King made the following statement at the 1926 Imperial conference:

The same satisfactory position as to total inter-empire trade is indicated by an analysis of trends in Canada. In the past four years, our imports from the British Isles have increased approximately from 117,000,000 dollars to 163,000,000 dollars, and from 15.7 per cent of our total imports to 17.6 per cent. We would wish that British imports formed a larger proportion of our purchases, but in view of increasing competition from other countries, and particularly the advantage which the United States exports derive from close proximity and knowledge of Canadian requirements, it is striking to find the share of British exports on the increase. I think it will be agreed that but for Canada's extension of preference to Great Britain in 1897, the starting point of the present intricate inter-imperial preferential system, and further developments such as the grant in our budget of 1923 of one-tenth additional tariff preference to British goods entering by Canadian ports, the position would be far from as satisfactory as it is to-day. It may further be of interest to note the very high percentage of manufactured goods in these imports from the British Isles, 87 per cent in the last fiscal year, or more than half as great again as in the case of imports from the United States, from which we derive a good deal of our raw materials. In the same four years the rate of duty levied on dutiable imports from Britain declined from 24.8 to 22.1 per cent.

Great Britain was last year our best customer; it has alternated in this position of late years with the United States. Four years ago we exported to Great Britain 300,000,000 dollars' worth of Canadian products; last year, over 500,000,000 dollars. Yet the percentage of our exports taken by Great Britain fell during these years from 40.4 to 39 per cent, a fact which reflects the growing diversity of our export trade and the increasing amounts taken by Continental Europe and Asia.

During the past four years our trade with the other members of the British Commonwealth has shown marked expansion in totals, and a slighter increase in percentage of our whole export and import trade.

This took place in 1926. In 1930, Canada increases this preference on many items. Our country in no way desires to have the artisans of England; it wishes to see them find at home the prosperity and happiness they enjoyed when the vessels of Albion carried the products of the United Kingdom across the seven seas of the world. Sir R. Giffen, once stated that preference was a measure of safeguard for certain products of the empire. The right hon. Mr. Snowden is not without knowing that our wheat needs an outlet, that the next crop is growing and that, for the Western farmers as well as for the manufacturers, to restrict production always entails smaller revenues. The United States have forged ahead in trade exports, since 1914, but England certainly can regain the lost ground, if she generally responds to the offers which come from various parts of the empire. Without going back to the Corn laws the United Kingdom cannot be satisfied with extending her thanks for the advantages that Canada procures to her exports.

The budget brought down by the hon. Minister of Finance does not go beyond the limits, as a number of manufacturers of our country have entirely approved of it; that is, the items enjoying British preference will help to increase production, to create new wealth, more stable employment and better remuneration for a great number of unemployed that modern machinery has temporarily thrown out of work. Canada wants economic peace. Her representatives at Geneva proclaimed it to the world. Our Finince minister by putting the countervailing duties in the budget, will first have recourse to this economic expedient as means of negotiation, reserving later their application against those countries which, dealing with us, refuse to abolish certain tariff regulations harmful to our exports. The fundamental notion of this countervailing tariff will not vitiate in any way the normal course of competition by putting in danger the essential supplies of certain nations as well as the outlets no less indispensable of others. It is to attain the re-establishment and future development of the world activities, to succeed in improving the respective positions during trade negotiations, in eliminating that desire of retaliation against foreign tariff measures which are very injurious, etc., that this countervailing duty was proclaimed. It holds no threats: still less do they imply retaliation measures synonymous to high protection. It is properly speaking, a simple measure of an economic order creating no special privilege.

The Liberal party realizes that disorganization would result from the abolition of a tariff wall. It refuses to believe, like those who complain of "the theft of their exaggerated protection", that it is always more advantageous to decrease the imports than to increase the exports. We must note that if exportation increases, production, the wages of workers and the national revenue increase proportionately; if importation decreases, owing to too high customs duties, the level of the articles increased lowers not only the possibility of exportation but also the consuming capacity of the country. It is to the conquest of new markets that we must turn. We have already done so with success; we must reach higher. Canada is an exporting country. Let us produce rationally and let our industries never be in such a position as to create temporary unemployment, because of our production which must compete with that of the United States on other markets.

A tariff for the people, enacted by a government which realizes that the state is for the people and not the people for the state, such is the policy that the King government proclaims in its budget of 1930.

It is a difficult thing to fashion a tariff capable of satisfying a whole population. The Conservatives demand a tariff which would protect national industries by establishing equilibrium between the cost of production of imports and the products of our domestic industries. The Liberals are in favour of a tariff for revenue by establishing fair competition between domestic productions and imports. If we were to judge by their programs in economic matters, the two parties would seem to have the same object in view, but it is in the practice that the chasm appears. The Conservative tariffs are always higher than those of the Liberals.

For years, there was a question of withdrawing the control of the tariff from the political arena, so as to make it a national question instead of having it decided by local interests. Tariff being so to speak the expression of a fiscal policy, how can it be withdrawn from political control? On the other hand it could never become a science by remaining in the field of politics.

In order to obviate to all this, it was considered best to create a tariff commission, which has already justified its existence. After having heard the requests and objections of a number of industries, farmers and consumers, it sent to the Minister of Finance its report which embodied what Mr. Thomas Walter Page, Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission from 1920 to 1922, qualified as "the only method capable of bringing about certain reforms in the tariff systems."

The farmer is not, thank Heaven, this ferocious man described by LaBruyère: "black, livid, sun-tanned individual held down to the soil which he digs and turns up with an invincible stubbornness." If he no more leads that extraordinary hard existence that Massillon, Saint-Simon and Arthur Young have described under the most gloomy colours, we must admit that he had a right to have his grievances adjusted. Although not favouring him with exceptional advantages at the expense of the consumers, the King government gives him the opportunity of getting more from his land and retaining those who too often forsake it to seek in the mirage of our large cities that happiness to which they aspire but which deserts them most of the time.

The merchant and manufacturer buy in the course of business certain commodities with a view to disposing of them under a more or less modified form. They know pretty well what the cost of production has been and are thus enabled to set a sale price which will ensure a certain margin of profit. Competition among them is regulated by professional skill, technical ability and resources in manufacturing; the vastness or moderation of their desire for riches. Should the profits anticipated fail to materialize, they have as a rule the alternative of storing their products until a better opportunity offers of selling them. When they sell at a sacrifice, it is for considerations well known to them: the desirability of retaining their help or their customers or of paying off a debt. Besides, they are in a position to limit their losses, or to make up for them by increasing their gains in some other lines of their business. In a word they have the upper hand at every turn.

The farmer is in a totally different position, he has no control either over the cost of production or over the sale price. His raw material is a manufactured product in the acquisition of which he is bound to submit to the demands of his purveyors. As regards his implements, he is in the same position, while, as regards labour he is met with exigencies as great as those with which the manufacturer or merchant is confronted. Besides he must put up with atmospheric conditions: a late frost, a sudden storm may imperil the fruits of the labours of the year; the sunny days which hasten the ripening of his crops, may also blight his hopes. When he starts work and goes into expenditure which rapidly increases as time goes on, in order to secure a far off result, he is unable to foresee what will be the outcome; he is at a loss to tell what profit he will derive from an uncertain venture. And the extent of his risk is gauged by the despair of that farmer in the "departement de Gers" who having obtained for his cow one-half only of the price expected, hanged himself on reaching home.

It will not be seriously contended that farmers are responsible for the high cost of living. It is a worldwide phenomenon, the causes of which are too evident and well known to dwell upon.

The Count of Paris believed in the formula: "Institutions have corrupted men," but is it not proper to admit some truth in the reverse formula: "Men have corrupted institutions?" Indeed, it was the day after the putting into force of the new seasonal tariff, that jobbers and profiteers thought it wise to increase the price of commodities still under the duties "ad valorem," contending that this new tariff system was responsible for it. Lies, added to mercantilism which deserve the contempt of all honest people. "Coveant consules!" Let those who govern, watch!

The economic tendency of Canada, for the last five years, has tended upwards. Thanks to abundant crops in the Canadian west, the purchasing power of the farming community has greatly increased, and that period of the seven fat cows has given us a series of favourable trade balances which helped us to liquidate successfully the current obligations of Canada abroad. Trade, industry and finance reached new heights in 1929. The volume of industrial production exceeded by more than 14 per cent that of the previous period, during the first nine months of 1929; the volume, as a whole, of business, expressed in dollars and cents, as well as the general level of investment have greatly exceeded the figures mentioned in the schedules submitted by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

As we must admit that events cast their shadows before them, two noxious features intervened during the autumn. The wheat crop showed in 1929 a falling off of 300,000,000 bushels, and the competition of the wheat trusts on the markets of Europe brought on a reaction which was generally felt in all fields of activity and contributed greatly to unemployment. The reaction of the crash on the exchange market equally created an economic uneasiness from which Canada will shortly recover. Our favourable trade balance suffered from the falling off in our exports since last June, following the slowing down of the grain shipments, especially wheat.

It would take too long to give the details of all our statistics, but let us be optimists when realizing that the visible wealth of Canada is $27,000,000,000 and that the total sum of all our economic activities represents $5,500,000,000.

Since the war the outstanding feature in the situation has been the considerable importation of capital from the United States; in 1913 United States capital investments were probably around 650 millions; to-day they approach 3½ billions. British investments in Canada have in the meantime slightly declined.

In spite of the large importation of capital from abroad, Canadian capital probably controls at least 60 per cent of the securities of all enterprises located on Canadian soil. Foreign capital investments as a whole are not greatly in excess of 20 per cent of the national wealth.

It must be pointed out in addition that Canadians have large amounts of capital invested abroad. The Bureau of Statistics estimate of this amount in 1928 was $1,579,074,000 divided as follows:—In Great Britain $131,915,000; in the United States $874,626,000; and in other countries $572,533,000.

A young nation like ours cannot dispense with outside help, and if England in return for the preference that we grant her, wishes to show herself practical and grateful, let her invest with us some of her capital to create industries, as she did during the period extending between 1900 and 1912. Our untouched natural resources await a response to this appeal. The industrial development of Canada first rests with the work of her sons, and secondly, England's help.

Our total trade exceeded $2,000,000,000, in 1929. Canada draws its supplies from everywhere and its trade relations extend to all countries. We must bear in mind, that our industries import a large quantity of raw material, a sign of prosperity. Enough as regards to statistics. The forty minutes allotted to me do not allow me to give any more.

The King government will soon be asking the Canadian people for a renewal of its mandate. Its history, since 1921, is that of a return to prosperity, the reduction in the national debt, a considerable expansion in industries and exports, the reduction and even the wiping out of many taxes, the enacting of many social measures, aiming at the prosperity and welfare of all classes and provinces in the Dominion.

A government which has so well managed the affairs of Canada since 1921 cannot possibly lose the confidence of the public; and the wisdom of which it gives proof by not increasing the British preference on textiles will certainly assure it the gratitude of thousands of workmen depending on this industry, in my riding, as well as in many other localities of the province of Quebec. Let the manufacturers respond to this generous act by increasing the wages of those who contribute to the prosperity of those industries. It would be a proof of well placed altruism.

The Liberal party is rational and not swayed by traditions in its undertakings. It avoids mere routine when it is more or less out of touch with the requirements of the time; it puts logic above sentiment, fairness towards the people above the holding of power, and it prefers experimenting to plodding in the narrow ruts of the past. Liberty, justice, equality, local autonomy and uprightness are ideals from which the Liberal party must never depart. A great American poet wrote that:

"Freedom, from her mountain height, Unfurled her standard to the air."

Let our Canadians never forget that freedom united to progress must ever be found on lofty heights.

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Mr. Speaker, there is a feature in regard to the proposals of the government concerning the schedules on fruits and vegetables in which they appear to be departing from the principles they have been supposed to follow all these years; apparently they have grasped at protection and gone crazy. In a great many instances it will be found that they are proposing further protection than that for which the fruit and vegetable growers have asked, and if the Liberal doctrine be true that of necessity an extra duty means a higher price to the consumer, then the consumer will have to pay more for his fruit and vegetables in the future. Certainly he must be careful not to put the blame for that increase on the producer; he must not say to the producer, "This is what you have been clamouring for all these years. We knew what would happen; the price has risen to us, and you are to blame."

I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that an examination of these schedules will show that the proposals of the government in a considerable number of instances go further than the producer asked to have them go. For years past, in his divisional organizations, the fruit and vegetable grower has been discussing the amounts of duty to which, in his opinion, the specific rates should be raised in order to give him that protection he considers to be his due. These discussions have been carried on in his provincial organizations; they have been taken up by the national organization and presented to the Advisory Board on Tariff and Taxation ever since its inception, through the medium of the Canadian Horticultural Council. The basis of the producer's plea always has been that we can produce the quality and we are convinced that we can produce a much greater quantity, displacing some of the importations of those commodities from other countries, if we are given reasonable facilities for so doing, but the producer always has had in the back of his mind the position occupied by the consumer. It has not been the wish of the producer to initiate such high rates of duty as of necessity will perturb the consumer, for if the consumer is too severely handled in this matter he will buy less and we shall have a smaller distribution. In the working out of the problems which confront us, both fruit and vegetable growers look for a greater and more perfect distribution through the markets of Canada than we have attained as yet.

In connection with certain highly perishable commodities such as peaches and strawberries the proposition put forward by the producer has been that the specific tariff should be increased. That tariff should be applicable during the period of our production, but before and after certain dates which may be set by the minister the tariff is no intimate concern of the producer. However, examination of these proposed schedules will indicate that in a great number of cases the producer has been given the amount of specific duty for which he asked not only during the time of his production but during the whole year, and in addition he has been given something more for which he did not ask. In many cases the specific rate of duty has been raised to the amount asked for by the producer, although not in all cases; this is to be kept on the year round, so that when Canadian production has ceased and there are no Canadian fruits and vegetables on our markets which would tend to stabilize prices, the tariff will increase, the price will rise and the enhanced price very probably will be passed on by the trade to the consumer. Over and above that, however, the producer has been given something further for which he did not ask. The present proposal of the government is that in addition to these specific duties there shall be an ad valorem duty which shall be alternative to the specific rate, and whichever is the higher shall be collected. The ad valorem rate on vegetables is 30 per cent; the rate on fruits is 25 per cent, and the duty which is higher, as between the ad valorem and the specific, will be collected. I think the way that would work out would be as follows: when Canadian production is moving on to the markets in full volume, the price would tend to be low and the specific duty would be higher; when Canadian production is over the price would tend to rise, and it would then come under the ad valorem duty. I am persuaded that the higher price will be passed on to the consumer. The revenue of Canada will benefit, but the consumer will pay more for his necessities and it is hard to understand how the grower will benefit thereby.

My main objection to the government's proposal is the fact that once more it has turned a deaf ear to the growers' request for something in the nature of an emergency tariff. Foreign countries with surplus production of certain fruits and vegetables endeavour to keep that production off their own markets because the price, there, would be broken. They look around for some unprotected spot to which they can send their perishable commodities, and in this particular instance Canada is next to such a neighbour. The surplus production of the United States is tipped into our markets at various times. When the glut is coming into the Canadian market the price is so low that the ad valorem rate is not the higher, and the specific rate is insufficient. So far as I know, the grower has never asked that the specific rate shall be raised to such a height as would make the price such as to prohibit the foreigner marketing his products in Canada.

Two winters ago the producers of British Columbia sent a delegation through the western provinces in an endeavour to meet the opposition which they were prone to believe existed in that part of the country. That delegation met associations of farmers; it met representatives of labour; it met the press; it met the cooperative societies; it met responsible individuals, and it was careful to explain that its mission was not to discuss a general rise in the tariff—that part of the case had already been submitted in detail to the tariff advisory board—it was there to meet supposed opponents and make sure that the view of the producer was correctly explained. The members of the delegation returned home to British Columbia with renewed hope because of the kindly feelings which had been expressed toward their view.

As I said before, the government has once more refrained from doing anything which will be of the slightest assistance to the producer in taking care of the glut in importations. At the present time nothing stands between the producers and these importations except what one might call the toy clause of the Liberal government. That clause was inserted in the Customs Act in 1922 and requires the passing of an order in council to make it operative, which order in council this government has never passed. An order in council was passed in 1926, which this government proceeded to use when they returned to power. Subsequent orders in council were passed which provided some effective protection, but when the fanatical free trade supporters of the government blew up all those orders in council were rescinded. We are now in the position in which we were before. It seems to me to be quite unreasonable that we should be expected to rely on that impotent clause of the Liberal government, precious to them because it replaces one which they repealed and which had been put into effect by their predecessors. That previous clause took some cognizance of the costs of production. However, the Liberal government said: to consider the costs of production is unworkable, and they ignored the fact that that clause had been in operation with satisfactory results. The Liberal government has not in the past shown any desire to pass the necessary orders in council, and it seems to think that recantations at this late date will appeal to the fruit growers.

One of the reasons for repealing the orders in council in 1928, was a letter written by the Department of Justice. This letter stated as an opinion, but not as a ruling, that it was improper to use the dumping clause on articles carrying a specific tariff. A few days ago a despatch from Ottawa appeared on the front page of the Vancouver Daily Province which stated that now that the government had imposed an ad valorem duty on fruit it would be possible to use the dumping clause in the future for the assistance of the apple grower. I cannot imagine the apple grower believing that this government would pass an order in council to help him in view of the way it has flouted him all these past years. When the glut importation of apples is entering Canada, the price is low and the ad valorem duty is not the higher. The specific duty is insufficient, but it is not to apply because of the letter from the Department of Justice saying that it is improper to impose the dumping clause in relation to articles carrying a specific tariff.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): That is not what it said.

Mr. STIRLING: Does the government really think that the fruit and vegetable grower is such an arrant ass as to believe in these late protestations of assistance? The thought passing through the mind of the fruit and vegetable grower is quite different; it is similar to that couplet written many years ago:

> The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be,
> The devil was well, the devil a monk was he.

These gluts to which I have been referring do not occur every year, nor in succeeding years do they occur in regard to the same fruit or vegetable nor even in the same variety of any fruit or vegetable. Last year, so far as I am aware, there was no glut trouble with regard to apples, but there certainly was with regard to prunes. Let me read two or three short extracts from our own inspectors in some of the markets in Canada. This is from Edmonton:

Very few British Columbia prunes have come into the city of Edmonton, although considerable quantities have been handled in country cars. The city and the adjacent towns were supplied with Washington prunes that were bought at 30 cents or 35 cents and were laid in here at from 4 cents to 10 cents per package less than British Columbia stuff could be. In the single week from September 9 to 14 there were 13 cars of the Washington prunes sold in Edmonton; and the total for the season must be over 30 cars. The British Columbia prunes moved in country cars partly because the rates direct to country points made the delivered cost lower than on American prunes reshipped from the warehouses here and partly because they were needed in the country cars to make weight and provide a reasonable assortment.

J. M. Cassels.

This is another one from Regina:

The British Columbia Italian prunes were subject to the same competition as in the past years, namely the early importations of Washington prunes. The Washington prune deal this year started off at very low prices and the market declined to even lower levels before the deal was over. The same conditions existed in respect to Washington prunes that have been noted in past seasons. The fruit was packed very immature and on arrival at destination did not have the proper sugar content to give it a good flavour, or to make it desirable fruit for canning purposes that the Italian prune is when properly matured. The consumers purchased the Washington prunes in large quantities on account of the very cheap price. I did all that I could to discourage the imported prune deal, stating that this would not be satisfactory on account of the fruit being immature, but cannot say that I had any measure of success.

J. W. Dilworth.

This is from Vancouver:

We have not received a single car of prunes this season; up to date we have received around 20 cars of Yakima prunes which has killed the sale of plums. Some retail stores selling as low as 60 cents a box.

N. F. Peters.

So prunes were entering Canada from the United States at, say thirty-three cents for a twenty-two pound box. The duty that was being levied was nine cents. Nine added to thirty-three makes forty-two and prunes cannot be produced at forty-two cents a box. The present proposals would raise the duty by seven and a half cents. Seven and a half added to forty-two is forty-nine and a half. Prunes cannot be produced, packed and shipped at forty-nine and a half cents a box. In 1926, when the minister had the right to set fair market values, the figure which he set was sixty-six cents a box, and I think the opinion of the producer, the trade and perhaps the consumer, would confirm the fact that sixty-six cents a box was by no means too high a figure.

What the grower has asked for has been a measure of assistance which shall be there on the shelf, ready for use, when an emergency occurs, and which will at least tend to raise that very low price to the figure which he considers is a fair market price in Canada. Prunes we grow in abundance. We certainly could grow a sufficiency to take care of the fresh prune requirements of Canada and we could go a long way towards producing sufficient prunes to take care of the dried prunes needed in Canada. Only the other day I received some dried prunes, processed by the Dominion government at Summerland. They were excellent; I have never eaten a better imported prune. What is the use of one department of government carrying on these experiments helpful to the fruit grower, if another department of government by its inaction makes it well nigh impossible for the fruit grower to continue to exist?

On apples the grower has not asked for any increased duty. He has asked for assistance in times of glut. The specific rate proposed by the government leaves that amount as it was before, namely, thirty cents a box, and merely clarifies the wording. Alternate to that is an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent on the value of the importation. When Canadian production is over or all but over, the price certainly tends to rise. The ad valorem duty will come into effect. It is extremely probable that the trade will pass the extra duty on to the consumer. The consumer will pay more for his apples and for the life of me I cannot see in that case just how the producer is going to benefit. In times of glut neither of these two methods of handling the duty on apples will be of assistance. In times of glut, apples may come into Canada at sixty cents a box and the ad valorem rate will then certainly not be the higher. The specific rate of thirty cents a box will be insufficient so far as the producer is concerned.

I cannot go through every item in these schedules, because that would be wearisome and the time would not be sufficient, but I desire to refer to one or two, taking them more or less at random. Let us look at the case of grapes. Production of grapes in the Niagara peninsula produced the wineries. British Columiba is producing more and more grapes for table use and also for the supply of wineries. Of recent weeks, perhaps running into months, California has increasingly been importing into Canada crushed grapes, grapejuice, and more deadly from our point of view still, concentrated grapejuice. The grape grower considered that with that competition it would indeed be difficult for him to survive. He therefore came to the tariff board and put forward his proposals. He asked that crushed grapes might be included in the item "grapes," but he did not ask for any increased tariff on that item. He asked further that grapejuice might come under a tariff of twenty-five cents a gallon and that the density of that juice might be subjected to the Boehm test. The government has not acceded to any of his requests.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend say that the latter request was made before the tariff board?

Mr. STIRLING: That is my information. This concentrated grapejuice comes in at a four to one strength. A given gallon at an increased price, will, when water is added, produce four gallons of grapejuice.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend say that this was developed before the tariff board?

Mr. STIRLING: That is my understanding. I am subject to correction. All that the government has done with regard to that tariff is that grapes are to be allowed to come in free in future under the British preference; the intermediate tariff has been reduced; the general tariff remains where it was, and the duty on crushed grapes and grapejuice has not been altered so that they will continue to come in under the old item. The minister shakes his head. As I understand it, after giving the matter some thought, that is the situation.

Canada also produces peaches. Peaches are grown in Ontario and British Columbia. A good many go to the canneries. The peach grower, realizing that the old tariff of one cent a pound was quite insufficient for his purpose, considered the matter first in his district organizations, then in his national organization, and coming with a united front before the Tariff Advisory Board, suggested that that one cent be raised to 1½ cents a pound. He suggested that figure because in his opinion it was the minimum amount of duty under which he could survive, and that 1½ cent a pound duty which he suggested was to apply during the ten weeks of his production. The proposal of the government is that the one cent a pound duty shall be raised to 1¼ cents and that it shall apply all the year round, and that alternate to it there shall be a 25 per cent ad valorem duty; so that when Canadian production is drooping and there is no Canadian produce to temper the price, the price tends to rise, with the result that I have indicated previously.

In July of last year there entered Canada from the United States all but 1,500,000 pounds of peaches. Many of the peaches find their way to the canneries, and even there they find sorrow because the Canadian canneries are chock-a-block with canned peaches largely brought about by an immense increase in the importations of canned peaches from Australia. That is a fact which undoubtedly will be taken into consideration by the canners when they come to make up their figures both as to price and pack for the canned peaches of 1930.

Let me put on record the importations of canned peaches from Australia in the last few fiscal years. Canned peaches, which enter Canada under a tariff of half a cent a pound came into this country in 1926 from Australia to the amount of 166 pounds, a mere nothing. In 1927, the importation was rather over half a million pounds; in 1928, a little over 200,000 pounds; in 1929, over 1,000,000 pounds, and in 1930, over 2,500,000 pounds. That amount of peaches entered Canada under a tariff of half a cent a pound under the Australian trade agreement—one instance which I remember we on this side of the house pointed out to the government in the debate in 1925 on the Australian trade agreement, when the gov ernment were so certain that the items contained in that treaty would not bear heavily on the farmer and when we pointed out to them, and we have been proved correct, that every benefit that Canada receives under the trade agreement is paid for by the Canadian agriculturist.

Onions may be cited as yet another case. The old tariff on onions was 30 per cent ad valorem, or half a cent a pound with the price at $35 a ton. The grower came to the tariff board and asked for a specific rate of three-quarters of a cent a pound to apply during the period of his production and the subsequent period during which economic storage is feasible. The government has put forward the proposition of three-quarters of a cent a pound all the year round, and as an alternative 30 per cent ad valorem, and whichever is the higher will be collected.

It is interesting to note that the United States tariff against our onions is 2 cents a pound, and now they propose to raise it to 2½ cents a pound. Our tariff against their onions, as I have just stated, is three-quarters of a cent a pound. The grower is being continually advised by officials in the department and by the government to do more in the way of storing his produce rather than rush it on to an unready market in its glut—to be in the position to feed the market as the market requires the goods. In the city of New Westminster recently there was built a cold storage plant, probably the last word in cold storage plants. It was largely assisted by a Dominion government grant and you may be sure, Mr. Speaker, that in their relations with the producer the government has lost no opportunity of instancing this as one more evidence of its intense desire to do everything it can for the producer—not of course in their unregenerate days by doing anything with the tariff, but rather by cold storage. In December last the associated growers of British Columbia placed twenty-seven carloads of Okanagan onions in that cold storage building, onions excellent in quality, in prime condition to serve the spring market. They had incurred storage costs, which are by no means light. They were held for the very reasonable figure of $40 a ton f.o.b. Around the first of April there was unloaded at the coast 130 tons of New Zealand onions, which entered Canada free under that order in council which the government flipped across the ocean to New Zealand five days after the Woodstock speech, receiving nothing in exchange therefor. What is the good of advising us to store our onions if we are to be met by unfair competition, as we think it, even from the dominions? Following that 130 tons, at a later date came another 50 tons, and we have to market our onions, which have incurred cold storage costs, in competition with onions entering this country free. Australia has a tariff against our onions of $40 a ton. New Zealand's tariff is considerably less than that. But our doors are open, and the government now, with a magnificent gesture, opens the door to onions from the British possessions, which in future may come in free.

In passing, let us notice cauliflower and celery. Cauliflower is not a commodity which lends itself readily to storage. Celery can be stored, and is stored to a certain extent. The grower asked for a specific duty of 2 cents a pound on these two vegetables. That is the amount which he has been given. But he asked for it during the time of his production and during the time of economic storage. The duty is to be there all the year round, and it is to be subject to an alternate ad valorem duty of 30 per cent, and both these vegetables, so far as they can, may come in from British possessions free.

Lettuce arrives in boxes. If it arrives in prime condition those boxes contain ice in between the layers of heads. The producer asked for a specific duty of 2 cents a pound for a certain period. He has been given it all the year round with an alternate 30 per cent ad valorem duty, but the producer never for a moment imagined that the ten or twenty pounds of ice contained in that box would also be subject to 2 cents a pound duty. The minister again shakes his head. My evidence is pretty strong on that point, and if the minister will examine it he will find that that is what has been happening since the second of May.

Mr. DUNNING: My advice is to the contrary, but if my hon. friend is correct I can assure him that that will have to be fixed.

Mr. BENNETT: Good. The fixing process has begun.

Mr. STIRLING: Now, will the minister go one step further and fix the emergency tariff? There is another item with regard to strawberries. The grower asked that the rate on strawberries be raised from 2 cents to 3 cents a pound during the eight weeks of his production. The rate has been raised to 3 cents a pound; it is to be in effect all the year round with an alternative 25 per cent ad valorem. The grower fully expected that, as in the past, the thin baskets, the immediate container of the strawberries within the box, would be included in weight for duty. So they are. But he never imagined that the wooden box outside the baskets should also be subject to 3 cents a pound. Those boxes weigh 11 pounds. The trade having to pay 33 cents per box on strawberries for the pleasure of passing that rate on to the consumer, the consumer, when he realizes these little jokers in the budget, must in fairness to the producer not lay the blame on him.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This was to be an "orderly" tariff.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps some of the lumbermen over there will have something to say about it.

Mr. BENNETT: The lumber comes from the United States.

Mr. STIRLING: These illustrations I use to make my point that the government in its latter day has set aside its free trade principles and in accepting protection has gone crazy. When these results are known and are resented, the consumer, the press and the public of Canada must not in fairness to the producer attempt to put the blame on him.

When a bricklayer's labourer lays to his hand a trowel and starts to build a wall, he slobbers the mortar over himself, over the wall and over the passers-by. His job has not been to use a trowel, but to fetch and carry bricks. Sometimes he drops a brick, just as this government does. The Prime Minister dropped a brick when he made his "five-cent" speech.

Mr. MANION: It lit on his head.

Mr. STIRLING: He dropped another brick just two years ago when in addressing a tense and anxious collection of farmers who crowded into the railway committee room he based his argument in reply on what was an absolute misstatement of fact. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not asserting that the right hon. gentleman rose to his feet with the deliberate intention to say what was not true. Rather do I believe that that galloping tongue of his ran away with him. Although his attention was drawn to the fact in the subsequent debate which ensued in this house, so far as my knowledge goes he has not corrected it, he has not withdrawn it, he has not substantiated it, and I am quite sure he has not apologized for having made it. But he based his case on it. Those who listened to the Prime Minister's reply to the grievances which the farmers laid before the government were but the ears of a far greater multitude scattered throughout Canada, and that incident, I can assure this house, has neither been forgotten nor forgiven. Like the bricklayer's labourer, this government has in its latter end taken into its hand a new tool—a tool which in the past it has condemned as useless, pernicious, provocative, a tool that it is unaccustomed to use, and the first piece of work that it has turned out with it is this amateur budget, this piebald suggestion. Throughout Canada during the campaign and on election day the people will be turning over a thought in their minds, "Can we trust this government?"

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. STIRLING: So far as the fruit and vegetable grower is concerned, he has already answered that question, "No, I cannot." For years past the government and their supporters have been vaunting their principles and deriding ours; they have been misconstruing our words and taunting us and disbelieving what we said in relation to this matter; they have put forward their own principle as something which is just and upright and on which a great Canada can be built; they have derided ours as a snare and a delusion. Now, when their tide is ebbing, when power is slipping from them they have grasped at this elusive protection, they have attempted to make use of it, and they have produced a fiscal jumble which will yet be their undoing; and if they blow up in this house without passing the budget, they will go into the campaign with the horrid thing tied to their tail; but if with their disconcerted majority they put it through they will have to push it before them in every riding throughout the Dominion. I have a strong impression, Mr. Speaker, that were a tense silence at this moment attainable, one's ears could catch a sort of gentle rushing sound as of a multitude in motion—a sound of the swing of the pendulum.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the criticisms we have heard this afternoon of the budget brought down by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), the favourable impression made by him on the first day of this month has not been dissipated during the days that have passed. In fact, the impression that it is a good budget has been confirmed from day to day. We have heard this budget analyzed by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) and by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion). The country has had an opportunity of reading the analyses made by the two first-named hon. gentlemen, and still we find that the papers throughout Canada are endorsing the budget.

After the budget speech was made by the Minister of Finance, that good old, outspoken, Tory paper of the city of Toronto, the mouthpiece of the Conservative party throughout the Dominion. The Mail and Empire, had this to say:

> The Dunning budget does not vary from the type with which the King government has made the country familiar. It is centred, as were its predecessors of Mr. Fielding's and Mr. Robb's framing, on the avowed object of cheapening production.

Another item from the same editorial:

> Though the government is worrying about its future it shows little sign of repentance. It still leans to the free trade principle for which, almost in its purity, Mr. King and his party declared in the convention of August, 1919.

That same paper does not applaud the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance, but those are statements which were contained in the editorial. A large portion of the press of Canada has been favourable to us and the Minister of Finance has been congratulated from one end of Canada to the other on the step he has taken in the development of the British preference and in the furtherance of unity among the different parts of the empire. When General Smuts visited Canada in the early part of this year he referred to the fact that the past ten years have been spent in elaborating the status of the individual parts of the empire, in developing the freedom of the dominions through their respective constitutions, and in bringing about their recognition as equals in the empire and in the world. His appeal was for unity in imperial relations and he expressed the hope that the next decade might be devoted to giving reality to that unity. He referred to the fact that Canada had taken the lead in the development of dominion status and appealed to Canada once more to take the lead in the new program. Canada has now taken the lead. She began to do so in 1897, and she has taken a further step at this time with the intention of further moulding the empire.

Hon. members on the opposite side of the house have frequently said during the progress of this debate that there are many items in the budget brought down which will not benefit Canada, and that there will be given in reality no additional preference to British products. That is quite true and the Minister of Finance, when delivering his budget address, referred to them in these words:

> There have existed in our tariff, for years, many items carrying rates of duty in the British preferential column, but relating to commodities in which none of the various British countries has been an effective trader.

Hon. members of the opposition seem to take great delight in referring to the item of hay. In listening to the addresses of those hon. gentlemen I have been reminded of the fact that a drowning man grasps at a straw; apparently that is what hon. members are doing in this particular case when they refer to the items of hay and straw in the tariff schedule. I wonder if it is more absurd to have hay and straw come in free of duty from England than it is to have those commodities set out in our tariff as bearing a duty of 75 cents a ton.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the point.

Mr. BOTHWELL: It is quite true that we never expect to import hay and straw from Great Britain or any other part of the British Empire, and there is no reason for having a tariff of 75 cents a ton.

In connection with the budget and the tariff schedules in particular, I think the minister is to be congratulated on the fact that the changes made by him have been made after an exhaustive study by the Tariff Advisory Board. The Financial Post in its issue of May 8 takes the opportunity to congratulate the minister, in the following words:

> Possibly the most significant feature of the tariff changes is the indication it gives that Mr. Dunning will rely more largely than his predecessor upon the advice of the Tariff Advisory Board.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. BOTHWELL:

> Mr. Robb appointed the tariff board but paid little attention to it, leaving the impression that it existed chiefly as a buffer between himself and claimants for tariff changes.

I might mention that the tariff board was only in existence a short time, and many of the items which came before it for investigation were never disposed of during the lifetime of our late lamented minister.

> But the Tariff Advisory Board is no pigeonhole for Mr. Dunning. From the changes announced one can see that many cases brought before the board have received careful consideration. The importance of this to Canadian business cannot be exaggerated.

No one who followed the sittings of the Tariff Advisory Board will deny the fact that there has been exhaustive investigation by that board. Any person who was interested in the work of the board and who had an interest in any application before the board was entitled to appear there and to be heard, and the board gave consideration to representations made before it. No person will deny that the Tariff Advisory Board has been a great addition to the departmental features of our government. Many hon. members opposite have for the past few years been concerned very much with the operations of the Tariff Advisory Board and particularly with the work of the Consumers League. Questions have been asked in this house and they have been answered; yet it does not appear from the questions which are asked that hon. members opposite have taken the opportunity to find out what the Consumers' League stands for. When the Tariff Advisory Board was first formed it was the belief of many people throughout Canada that there was the possibility of highly organized associations, such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, appearing before that board and presenting only their side of the case. The facts in connection with various applications which might be made by such associations would be peculiarly within the knowledge only of the firms represented. The idea behind the formation of the Consumers' League was to have someone present to cross-examine the witnesses who were applying for increases in tariff, and possibly to cross-examine those who were applying for decreases. The Consumers' League was not formed as a free trade organization; nothing in its articles of incorporation would indicate that. For the benefit of members of this house I wish to place on Hansard the objects for which it was formed:

1. To consider and discuss all applications made to the board on tariff, taxation and other related matters, otherwise known as the Tariff Advisory Board, and to oppose and resist any applications which may seem calculated to so change the tariff laws that the public generally will be detrimentally affected.
2. To procure information concerning tariffs and the effect of same on industries concerned, and the public generally, and for such purpose, and in order to lay such information before the Tariff Advisory Board, to maintain representation before such board at all its sittings.
3. To consider, originate and submit applications to the said Tariff Advisory Board for changes and adjustments in the tariff laws, where such changes or adjustments are deemed to be in the public interest.

Representatives before the Tariff Advisory Board appearing in behalf of the Consumers' League have admitted that there should be increases in tariff in some particular cases, because it was necessary to grant such increases in order to equalize the items with the other tariff schedules. When the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) took occasion to analyse the budget he referred to articles written by R. J. Deachman, the representative of the Consumers' League before the tariff board. He took delight in referring to the Liberal government as walking up to the penitent bench, but there are certain words in the same article which he did not stress. They are:

Minor upward changes may take place. In trying to adjust a tariff downward it would be remarkable if there should not happen to be odd items which called for the reverse process. The general trend of the budget, however, will be downward, not upward.

And again:

There may be items in a Liberal budget to the cold eye of the observer which may have a Tory shade. Possibly the reverse might happen in a Conservative budget.

The article goes on to say:

The Conservatives accept the idea of increased preference to Great Britain. They would apply it exactly as Australia has applied it. That is, they would raise the tariff against the United States, against Europe and even against Great Britain. The idea would be to make a wall over which Great Britain could not climb, and then erect one over which the rest of the world could not see. All this, remember, in a spirit of devotion to the manufacturers of Canada.

Behind that wall our manufacturers, in a large measure controlled by American capital, would exploit the Canadian. The extent of this exploitation would be limited only by the capacity to bear.

I want to say at this time, Mr. Speaker, that the articles written either on behalf of the Consumers' League or by Mr. Deachman personally are not the main object of the organization, which is to bring out facts upon which a reasonable and sensible kind of tariff can be imposed. We realize that it is very difficult for the tariff board to get at all the facts, and we know the same difficulties exist in other parts of the empire.

The opposition in this house seem to have only one panacea for all ills; that is, increased tariffs. Australia tried that policy and the result has been that Australia is not prosperous; debts are increasing and trade has declined. To-day Australia is in the worst financial position of any member of the British commonwealth of Nations. The government of Australia, realizing where they were drifting, in 1927 appointed a commission of economists to report on the tariff situation there, and that report is well worth reading. One of their conclusions is:

The interests of the government itself are apt to tempt its members and supporters to acquiesce in some dubious extensions of protection because of the revenues gained incidentally . . . . Each industry should be required to show cause from time to time for the protection it enjoys, and should establish beyond question the fact that it is not receiving a greater subsidy than it needs. Every other means of promoting new industries should be exhausted before recourse is made to the tariff. The present costs of protection are dangerously high.

They say further:

The tariff has increased the proportion of customs to total taxation beyond the limits economically desirable. As the tariff grows, its costs overtake its benefits. It has stimulated the demand—never latent in Australia—for government assistance of all kinds. Further increase may threaten the standard of living. Therefore, no extension of the tariff should be made without the most rigorous scrutiny of the industries concerned and the costs involved.

With regard to wages and protection it points out that high labour costs may be due to bad organization as much as to high rates, but the only standard of living that a tariff can protect is one which the resources of the country can provide. Again and again the report urges that full information of costs and profits should be available to the board.

Our situation in Canada is much the same as that in Australia. As I said a moment ago, it is difficult to get all the facts before the tariff board. If manufacturers in Canada, who are now enjoying protection at the expense of the rest of the people, were compelled to carry out the recommendations of that Australian commission, we might have a different story to tell; that is, each industry should be required from time to time to show cause for the protection it enjoys and to establish beyond question the fact that it is not receiving a greater subsidy than it needs.

Coming again to some features of the budget and particularly with regard to the extension of the British preference. As I said a moment ago this feature of the budget has apparently been appreciated throughout Canada from coast to coast. The history of the Liberal party in Canada has been one of continued advance in the exchange of trade with other parts of the empire, and it only took the situation in connection with our grain crop last year to bring home to us the fact that we need to find markets other than those of Canada, and that we need to cooperate with our best customers and to deal with other parts of the empire. The president of the wheat pool applauded the budget in these words:

The Saskatchewan wheat pool organization has been on record for some time as being in favour of any steps which would result in a larger interchange of products between the United Kingdom and Canada, and, naturally, the increase in the British preference would appear to be the most effective means of giving promise of development in that direction. The United Kingdom is the biggest single market we have for our western wheat, and if the increase in the British preference will result in a larger amount of buying of British goods it should be in the interests of both countries.

We also have the following words of Mr. M. J. Coldwell, a member of the Saskatchewan Farmers' Political Association:

From a cursory glance at the budget, the downward revision of the tariff rates is a move in the right direction.

Then we have also the Ottawa Journal, apparently the official organ of the party in the Capital:

While the budget in the main must be necessarily controversial, one feature of it, the Journal believes, will receive pretty general commendation. It is that feature which removes the duties from fruits and vegetables imported from the British West Indies. This is not merely something of promise for the Canadian consumer. It is a step, a very substantial one, in the direction of something that has been supported in past years by all parties, namely, the encouragement of mutual trade between Canadians and the people of the West Indies.

And again:

What is now done, we believe, will tend greatly to further increase trade between the two countries, and, incidentally, heighten the chances of success for the recently inaugurated steamship service of the Canadian National Railways.

We also find these significant words in the Ottawa Journal of this afternoon:

Trade of U.S. Hit Hard Blow by New Tariff
American Official in Ottawa Send Report on Budget
Will Cut Trade About $225,000,000

Canada's new tariff will affect American trade with the Dominion "adversely in most instances" to the amount of $225,000,000, it is estimated in an analysis of the Dunning budget from the United States point of view, which has been forwarded to Washington by Lynn W. Meekins, commercial attache, and A. H. Thiemann, assistant trade commissioner of the United States in Ottawa.

In connection with the fruit and vegetable schedules, dealt with at some length by the hon. member for Yale, I want to correct some misstatements which have been made in the press during the last few days. A despatch appearing in the Toronto Star of May 9, 1930, has this to say:

Raise In Vegetable Prices Has Come with New Tariff.

The article continues to quote the prices of different commodities as of May 1 and as of May 9, as follows:

| Commodity | Retail Price May 1 | Retail Price May 9 |
|---|---|---|
| Carrots | 3 bunches 25 cents | 10 cents bunch |
| Head Lettuce | 10 cents head | 15 cents head |
| Bananas | 25 cents dozen | 30 cents dozen |
| Grapefruit | 10 cents each | 15 cents each |
| Tomatoes | 20 cents pound | 30 cents pound |
| Cauliflower | 25 cents head | 30 cents head |
| String beans | 15 cents—20 cents quart | 25 cents—30 cents quart |
| Celery | 15 cents bunch | 20-25 cents bunch |
| Beets | 3 bunches 25 cents | 10 cents bunch |
| Asparagus | 3 bunches 25 cents | 10 cents bunch |
| Spanish oranges | 25 cents dozen | 30 cents dozen |

In looking over these items and comparing them with the tariff schedules we find that the rates on bananas, grapefruit, string beans and Spanish oranges have not been changed in any way, but apparently someone took advantage of the fact that there was a new budget in order to raise the prices to the consumer. In connection with cabbages, on which there is a specific duty of one cent per pound, the increase in price would amount to about two-fifths of a cent a bunch or roughly two cents on three bunches, but the price has been raised five cents. On cauliflower it would mean an increase of a little less than 3 cents and they have raised it 10 cents; on celery it would mean an increase of $\frac{2}{3}$ of a cent per bunch, and they have raised it 5 to 10 cents; on tomatoes the same ad valorem duty is in effect, and there is absolutely no change; on spinach there is an increase of $\frac{1}{3}$ of a cent per pound, and on that particular date, May 10, the price of spinach was 50 cents, whereas on the day before it was $1.25; on head lettuce it meant an increase of $\frac{4}{5}$ of a cent per head, and they increased the price 5 cents, and on asparagus the price was increased from 3 bunches for 25 cents to 10 cents a bunch. The latter is approximate because I was not able to obtain an exact quotation on asparagus.

Mr. SPENCE: What is the hon. gentleman quoting from; what newspaper did he get that information from?

An hon. MEMBER: None of your business.

Mr. SPENCE: There is not a word of truth in the whole thing.

Mr. BOTHWELL: This is obtained from the Toronto Daily Star.

Mr. SPENCE: I just thought of the Star.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Good night!

Mr. SPENCE: There is not a word of truth in the whole thing.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Those are the facts. There is other evidence in addition to that offered by the Toronto Star. The hon. member will have an opportunity of hearing witnesses at any time he desires, because they are here in the house. Those witnesses have made inquiries as to the increased prices asked, and have also figured out the difference in prices.

Mr. SPENCE: There is not a word of truth in the whole statement.

Mr. BOTHWELL: In figuring out the changes, we have taken into consideration the changes made in the tariff. Besides the quotation I have used, there are other facts which can be presented to show that these increases were suggested by the trade.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there was no change in the tariff schedule on tomatoes?

Mr. BOTHWELL: No, I said there was no change on the 10th of this month. On that day tomatoes were quoted under the ad valorem rate, and there has been no change made in that rate.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The tariff provides that the rate shall not be less than 2 cents a pound; that is a large increase over the old tariff.

Mr. BOTHWELL: On the 10th day of this month the specific duty on tomatoes was 2 cents per pound, and the shipping value of a case of tomatoes is $3. A case weighs 40 pounds, and the specific duty would be 80 cents while the ad valorem duty would be 90 cents. The ad valorem rate is 10 cents higher than the specific rate.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Does that rate include crates?

Mr. BOTHWELL: That rate includes crates. The specific rate may be too high in some instances, but I have no doubt that we will have an opportunity of discussing that matter when the resolutions are brought before the house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). I am quite sure that if the necessary facts are presented to show that these specific duties are too high, changes will be made.

In discussing the countervailing duties, I intend to deal with only one item. I was very much surprised to find that last year the province of Ontario imported from the United States 1,430,413 bushels of wheat, and 3,396,248 bushels of oats. There is a considerable surplus of wheat in western Canada and no difficulty would be encountered in supplying the markets of Ontario, but apparently some time during the past year they were able to purchase American wheat plus the duty at a favourable price over the cost of western wheat. I do not know why they were purchasing in the United States.

Mr. BOURASSA: Because they were loyal.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Possibly too loyal, but the fact remains that they purchased about 1,500,000 bushels of wheat and about 3,500,000 bushels of oats. With the countervailing duties in force, those grains will now come from western Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is protection for you.

An hon. MEMBER: It is doing some good, anyway.

Mr. BOTHWELL: The budget has not only reduced the tariff, as was referred to in the article appearing in the Mail and Empire, which I read previously, but it has done many other things. I have dealt already with the increases in the British preference. It has exempted cooperative marketing organizations from the payment of income tax; a 50 per cent reduction has been made in the sales tax, and a further reduction of some $44,000,000 is shown in our national debt with the consequent reduction in interest commitments. Why would not a budget of that sort appeal to the people of Canada? I was rather amused in reading in the Ottawa Citizen this morning a report of a statement made by the hon. leader of the opposition at a convention in Guelph. This statement is as follows:

> Was Canada, he demanded, likely to trust "novices" with their newly adopted policy? The judgment of the Canadian people could be trusted. "Whenever you have any convert doing something he has not been brought up to do he will always make a mess of it."

The hon. leader of the opposition seemed to be afraid that this government would not administer the tariff on fruits and vegetables or any other tariff which might be imposed. He must have known that during all the years this government has been in power it has made a more successful use of the facilities at hand than had any other party. During the past five years this government has put Canada in the position of being able to reduce the capital debt by some $257,000,000, which debt was largely imposed by the hon. gentlemen on the other side when they were in power. The statement of the leader of the opposition is more amazing when one considers the time and place at which it was made. If I remember rightly, and I think I do, the convention was being held for the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr Guthrie) who is a rather recent convert to his side of the house. In listening to-day to the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) I was reminded of the fact that he is another convert of recent years.

Mr. VENIOT: They cannot be trusted.

Mr. BOTHWELL: That wonderful peroration which was delivered this afternoon and which seemed somewhat volatile—I thought it would disappear in thin air—made me think that perhaps his leader had better watch out or this convert would out-Herod Herod.

With the changes which have been brought into effect by the budget; with the changes which have taken place in the tariff, applauded as they are from one end to the other of Canada; even the Conservative press of Ottawa and the Financial Post—never too favourable to this government—applauding certain features of the budget, and the Ottawa Journal stating it will divert some $225,000,000 worth of trade to other parts of the British empire rather than to the United States; with the reductions that I have spoken of in the national debt and with a reduction in the sales tax, I feel satisfied that the people of Canada will insist on retaining in power a government that has been able to make the showing that the present one has during the last five years.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, I will not take any time to deal with the remarks of the last speaker, because I want to do something unique, and that is to give my conclusions in regard to the budget at the beginning of my speech rather than to fail to give them at the end for lack of time. So far as I have been able to study the budget, my conclusion is that it has been born in ignorance, as I think I shall be able to prove later. It is a budget disturbing to trade and merchandising. There are already in it too many specialized items which are causing our merchants and others a great deal of trouble. A man in business to-day who buys sprayers must secure from everyone to whom he sells them certificates that they are to be used for agricultural purposes. In the same way in regard to some of those small items of iron and steel, people who are doing business to-day will find that their burdens are only beginning.

In the third place this budget will meet with many amendments before it is put into full operation and I believe the number will be very considerable before the minister will dare submit the budget to the country at large. In the next place it is a budget that gives an impracticable British preference, throwing open lines of trade which will never be taken advantage of and leaving out lines in which Britain could be given exclusive advantage. Next, it is a budget the effect of which will be to give employment to other than the white races in different parts of the British Empire in preference to the white farmer and the white farmer's assistant in Canada. Whether this trade is in the West Indies or in the United States, the Canadian agriculturist suffers if vegetables are bought in the West Indies; others from fireworks, firecrackers and eggs brought from Hong Kong. The whole budget is a window dressing, a renumbering of houses which have already been renumbered in previous budgets. It is a consummation of things that have been done in the past, now brought before the Canadian public with the intention of misleading them into thinking that this is being done for the first time. The protective features of the budget, in regard to butter and coal, have been squeezed from the government by the opposition benches; they have not been granted voluntarily. The government have had practically to be throttled before they could be made to grant these advantages in the case of the duties on butter and coal. It is a budget foretelling a bad financial position which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) is afraid to show. It admits nine years of misrule. It is a climax of flimflamming government.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the meaning of "flimflam"?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is a budget consisting of flimflam and more flimflam. It is an admisison that for nine years the government has been destroying industries in the Dominion, thereby causing the migration of thousands of our Canadians, and now they pretend to wash their hands with a little British preference and protection. I am reminded of the words of Macbeth:

> Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
> Clean from my hand?

I have said that this is a budget born in ignorance. The truth of that statement could not have been more amply demonstrated than it was yesterday by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), when he tried to point out that many of these articles, which he named in his speech, were, as he believed, new, being given for the first time to the people of Canada. Yet in different budgets prior to this all these articles have been named. In the budget of 1929 all the printing apparatus mentioned by the Minister of the Interior is named, being admitted free. Many of the things to which he has referred have been dealt with in former years, and so I say that the budget is nothing more than a window-dressing, a renumbering of houses, a taking down of old signs and putting up above the shop the name of Dunning. At the same time we were shown the great interest taken by another member of the government when the Minister of the Interior was speaking. We saw the Minister of Railways (Mr. Crerar) sprawled all over his desk, sound asleep; he was not able to be disturbed.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I take exception to that. I often see members in the house putting their heads down who are not asleep and the Minister of Railways was certainly not asleep.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It was a very peculiar attitude for a minister of the crown to assume in the house. It might be good enough for some of the rest of us, but in the house and on a serious matter it was not a dignified position for a minister of the crown.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is pretty small politics.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In budget speeches the Minister of Finance always refers to and bases the features of the budget on his interpretation of the general condition of the country. For years past we have listened tc explanations of the prosperity of the Dominion. This was claimed to be due to a benign Providence smiling upon his favourites sitting on the government benches, but the absence of this will be noted in the present budget. I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the lack of the spiritual effect of the budget. Is it possible that a benign Providence has lost confidence in the government and is no longer smiling upon it? This seems to be the case even if we have no other evidence than the circular which has been issued by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), through his deputy minister, drawing attention to the fact that Canada is no longer an exporter of agricultural products and trying to waken up the agriculturists because they have lost their interest and because the industry has been injured by the government in different ways and is suffering.

We have now started on a new year with what looks like a deficit, so much so that the Minister of Finance has refused to complete the budget, but such figures as he gave show a deficit of at least $14,000,000 for the coming year. I shall not attempt to refer further to matters of debt and so on, because they have been thoroughly dealt with from this side of the house.

I should like to call the attention of the house to a strange spectacle that occurred on May 1, when a Liberal Minister of Finance rose and delivered a budget containing features of a character inconsistent with the former pledges, policies, speeches, prayers and denunciations of each and every member on the government side. We noticed with what eagerness the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) rose and shook hands with the finance minister on that occasion, and I can imagine that the words he uttered were, "Thank you for not touching boots and shoes." Next came the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) to congratulate the finance minister, and I can imagine him saying, "Thank you for not touching furniture. Touch anything else, but please leave furniture alone." Surely, Mr Speaker, Laurier, Cartwright, Paterson and other outstanding policy makers of the great Liberal party now beyond the vale must have felt a great roll given to their bodies when they found the Liberal party had in a small measure come to the policy of protection. The members of that party who on May 1st last listened to the budget speech of the Minister of Finance and applauded must have hurried to destroy past Hansards containing the record of the speeches which they have been delivering in this house during the last nine years, but they can never be wiped out. The record will always stand.

There are three features of this budget with which I should like to deal. First is the change in the complexion of the government's policy and the introduction of a small measure of protection in the budget. Many across the way have so often made declarations that they were low tariff men or men who believed in no tariff at all. Again and again the hustings have resounded with such declarations from the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar), the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bancroft), the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ward), the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen), and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien). Now they fold their arms and bow their heads. Perhaps they may be doing the same as the Minister of Railways and Canals. It does look to us as if they were praying for light or mercy and for something to blot out their past record as they look on that great increase in the duty on cast iron pipe and on vegetables brought about by this budget. When there was a likelihood of tariff increases in past years, how vehemently they opposed and ridiculed the idea. Listen to what the Minister of Railways and Canals said in 1922, when he was the head of a group of sixty-five members on this side of the house:

> There are those who have said that if the United States raises the tariff against our wheat and against our live stock, we should raise our tariff against them by way of retaliation. What an absurd policy!

What is being done to-day? That very thing, except that the word "retaliation" is hidden behind the less commonly used term, "countervailing duties." He went on to say:

> I am convinced that the principle of protection is not suited as a fiscal policy for this country, and this country will never develop as long as protection is embedded as the guiding principle of our fiscal policy.

What does this budget do? The Minister of Railways and Canals, as one of the guiding spirits, has led the great exodus across the floor of this house and there they sit on the government benches quite happy no matter what their past declarations may have been. Will anyone with a knowledge of parliamentary history and practice explain how an honest man can lend himself to such abject humiliation without one word of explanation or apology? And yet the Minister of Railways and Canals, with that large group behind him in 1922, used the words which I have just quoted. Can a Prime Minister steeped in knowledge of constitutional history and legislation demand such incomparable abasement of his ministry? Can a man who has been head of one of the greatest organizations in this country be so indifferent to public opinion as to stultify himself in this way for the sake of office?

Mr. CANTLEY: Bring him in so we can see him.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What an absurd policy, said the Minister of Railways in 1922. If it was absurd in 1922, is it not absurd in 1930? If it is absurd on one side of the house, is it not absurd on the other?

Mr. HANSON: Bring him in. Let him face the music.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the Minister of Railways is not aware of what is expected of public men, I would like to refer him to the words of the Hon. George Brown, the great leader of the Liberal party, who expressed himself in this beautiful language; which may bring back the Minister of Railways to a realization of public opinion. The Hon. George Brown said:

> If, sir, a public man avows certain principles, agitates these principles, and seeks to overthrow the government of the day and establishes those principles, and if when he attains power, he laughs at his principles and casts his professions to the wind, he is aiming a blow at public morality.

There are other statements that I should like to quote. We have the words of the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Bouchard) which will be found at page 1302 of Hansard, 1929:

> High protection is a menace to our farming class, and even to our national unity.

And yet there are duties in this budget higher than anyone ever anticipated. I would also call attention to this beautiful sentiment expressed by the hon. member for Lisgar:

> If farmers accept protection of three or four cents a pound on butter, these protectionists would howl for joy, and there would be no occasion for farmers then to send representatives to parliament to express views similar to mine.

Are those words prophetic? Step by step the Prime Minister has made use of these members, and now that their usefulness is terminated there only remains for them to swallow the hemlock, like Socrates, and die. Where are they now? Have they, like Achilles, all gone to their tents to sulk?

The hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette) stated that a long list of congratulatory telegrams had been received from all parts of this country congratulating the government and the Minister of Finance on the budget. How many came from the west? I am certain that voices from the west are coming down through the gloom to the ears of the government, asking: Are the words that you spoke in 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928 and 1929 all bunk? Or is the budget speech of to-day all bunk? You cannot be right in 1922 and right in 1930.

May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is still a quarter to six.

Mr. STEVENS: No courtesies.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Call in Crerar. Bring in your minister.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is only twelve short months since an amendment was introduced pleading for an increase in the British preference. Every one on this side of the house supported that amendment, but there was a great deal of opposition to it from the other side. They simply said: We have been considering the question. To-day we have the introduction of the British preference as the second feature in this budget. Like many others, I thought the budget contained some meat, that there was something really worth while in its gesture to Great Britain of the extension of the British preference, until I began to analyze the items. I am now going to give to the house a list of the articles set out in the budget, from which it will be apparent to every hon. member how eager this government has been to extend the British preference by their selection of the articles to be so treated.

In his speech yesterday, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) mentioned certain articles on which the extension of the British preference would confer a benefit to the housewife, to the farmer and to all other Canadians. Among those articles he mentioned milking machines. Now, let us take the trade returns and find what has happened in respect to milking machines. In 1925 Great Britain sent us $3,300 worth; in 1926, $327 worth; in 1927, $653 worth; in 1928, $345 worth; in 1929, $401 worth. As against these small importations from Great Britain, we imported from the United States $21,041 worth in 1925; $19,682 in 1926; $40,470 in 1927; $47,147 in 1928; and $61,464 in 1929.

Mr. MALCOLM: If there was no business to transfer there would be no purpose in extending the preference.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce will listen a little longer he will get my point. The Minister of the Interior also mentioned pasteurizers. In 1929 Great Britain sent us one of a value of $338, while the United States sent us 144 representing a value of $110,391. Then let me take ploughs: Great Britain sent us $153 worth in 1925; $170 worth in 1926; $708 worth in 1927; $163 worth in 1928; and only $93 worth in 1929; while the United States sent us ploughs to the value of $613,756 worth in 1925; $1,123,324 worth in 1926; $1,648,462 worth in 1927; $1,731,330 worth in 1928; and $2,151,498 in 1929. Let me take fanning mills: Great Britain sent us 2 in 1925, 1 in 1926, none since; but the United States sent us 1,891 last year in spite of a 10 per cent duty. Now, rollers—and I should like hon. members to note this: in 1925 Great Britain sent us $408 worth and in 1929 $715 worth with a 5 per cent duty against her; but the United States, despite a duty of 10 per cent, sent us in 1925 $884 worth and in 1929 $10,177 worth. Next I take spraying machines: in 1929 Great Britain sent us $3,646 worth; but the United States sent us $331,233 worth. Nuts and bolts: Great Britain sent us $836 worth; but the United States sent us $155,376 in that year. And the same disparity is apparent in containers for fuel, skates, safes, bath tubs, cream separators, rakes, childrens' carriages and sleds, wheelbarrows and buggies.

Now, let us take the second class of items where the duty has been reduced. The first item is typewriters: in 1929 Great Britain sent us 19, valued at $1,171; the United States sent us 20,832 valued at $1,112,228. Calculating machines: Great Britain sent us 3 in 1929 valued at $104; but the United States sent us 9,895 valued at $1,268,644. Electric fixtures—and here is one of the greatest inconsistencies of this budget. If the Minister of National Revenue can tell us what electrical parts are made in Canada and what are not, then he has a knowledge of this budget that a great many other people lack. But the point I want to make in regard to these figures is that the government for nine long years have been building up a trade with the United States amounting to millions of dollars, and now they say that by just a piece of paper, or a gesture, they can divert that trade to Great Britain. But to carry out their purpose they have chosen articles which Great Britain does not send us, or at best sends us in small volume, and I shall refer to them again before I sit down. I am now going to deal with articles on which, had they chosen, the government could have given Great Britain a substantial preference. Why did not they check up the schedules and find out the articles which Great Britain was exporting to Canada and then given her a preference on those articles as against the United States? Instead of doing that, as a mere gesture, as an attempt to do something that they spoke against and voted against last year, they now come forward and say, "Here is what we are going to do for Great Britain; here is our extension of the British preference on articles that we can never bring into this country from Great Britain." Why did they choose a number of articles—and there are over a dozen; I will specify them later—on which to give a preference to Great Britain and thus increase her trade with us?

I shall refer to the item of countervailing duties. The word "countervailing" signifies a retaliation or protection, and to my mind it is unfortunate that the minister has picked out a name for this particular kind of duty which so many people do not understand and about which they have to consult the dictionary. At this point I am forced to refer again to the Minister of Railways because he was the leader of the party which has kept the present government in power. I shall make special reference to his words as they appear in Hansard of 1922:

> I venture to predict that within a few years the United States will have its face set definitely against the principle of a protective tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: Page Mr. Crerar.

An hon. MEMBER: It is six o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Speaker will no doubt remember the time when he sat down here and he will appreciate how the minister is qualified for his position. To continue with the words of the minister:

> We, of the Progressive party, stand unalterably opposed to the principle of protection—

I wish to make that as clear as I can make it.

Mr. BENNETT: Page Mr. Crerar.

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): At a later time he asks:

> What use is protection to the Canadian dairymen who are producing far away and beyond what can possibly be consumed in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: Not now, though.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): And at a later time he states:

> I have said that the budget is protectionist. I want to point out to the house that in 1919 I left the government of the day because it brought down a budget that was very little different from the one that is submitted now. Under these circumstances, sir, I cannot support the budget proposals of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

And yet cast iron pipe is 100 per cent higher than it was proposed to be made at the time he left the government.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CALGARY AND FERNIE RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 136, respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company—Mr. Young (Toronto)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Former limitations repealed.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I do not seem to have the reprinted bill, but I should like to ask the sponsor if there is to be any money expended on construction this year?

Mr. YOUNG (Toronto): I think I can assure the hon. member that very material progress will be made and that a great deal of money will be spent along the line of railway by allied companies in the development of coal areas. The provisions which are repealed would be nugatory if they operated, because more money has been spent in the last two years than is required under those provisions. The intention is to go right ahead.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. YOUNG (Toronto) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There is one other question I should like to ask the hon. member. Is there anything in the bill in connection with the fair wage clause? I do not see it here.

Mr. YOUNG (Toronto): When this bill comes before the Senate committee to-morrow the principals of the company will be there and I think they will give my hon. friend ample assurance that the fair wage clause will be observed.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

RIGHT OF MARRIED WOMEN TO ESTABLISH DOMICILE

Mr. W. J. WARD (Dauphin), moved the third reading of Bill No. 31, respecting jurisdiction in proceedings for divorce.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on the second reading of this bill I gave my views in connection with it and my objections to it. As I stated then, this bill is a departure from the well-known principle of British and international law which provides that the test of jurisdiction in matters of divorce is the domicile of the parties, which is the domicile of the husband so long as the marriage bond exists. I do not desire to repeat what I then said, but once more I wish to register my objection to this bill.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Ward), which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

The house resumed from Friday, April 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Guerin for the second reading of Bill No. 39, respecting government contracts.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) desires to be here while this bill is being discussed. Would it inconvenience my hon. friend to have it stand over?

Mr. GUERIN: I am very anxious that this bill should pass, as it will have considerable effect upon labour, especially in so far as Montreal is concerned. It will affect the contracts which have been given in connection with the building of the new Canadian National railway terminal. Demolition now is going on and the rule still prevails that young men only are to obtain work. I wish either to see the bill go through, or to have some guarantee given that action will be taken which will ensure people obtaining employment independent of their age. The system prevailing at the present time is very bad, and unless something is done the session will close without action being taken.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on industrial and international relations.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett, and the amendment to the amendment thereto of Mr. Fansher (Last Mountain).

Mr. ROSS (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I was dealing with what I considered to be the third feature in this budget—countervailing duties. The word "countervailing" frequently is used instead of the word "retaliation" or "protection." I was referring to some remarks made by some of the members who led that great exodus from this side of the house to support a government which they believed to be a low tariff government. I was reminding some of those members of the statements which they had made in the house in former days, and I have one more to which I would like to refer. The following statement, made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) will be found on page 1012 of Hansard of 1929. In dealing with the matter of retaliation, he said:

> In closing I wish to say something on the doctrine of retaliation as preached by the Conservatives. I heard with dismay the other night the astounding proposal of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner), that the government be given authority to make immediate tariff changes to meet any fiscal changes that may take place in the United States. I can hardly imagine that any responsible member on the Conservative benches would support or even countenance a proposal so preposterous. Let me say to the hon. member that I cannot understand how under any conceivable circumstances any western member would delegate to any government such an exclusive parliamentary privilege in connection with so contentious a subject as the tariff.

[Mr. Guerin.]

I would like to ask the hon. member for Marquette how he can be so inconsistent as to delegate to the government by means of his vote that same kind of privilege.

The next point I would like to discuss is in connection with the figures I quoted this afternoon and which showed that the government had followed for nine years a policy of trade which they now intend to destroy on the assumption that that trade would be turned over to Great Britain. I pointed out the fact that in many of these articles there was no possibility of the trade being turned over to Great Britain. I might be asked the question: Well, what would you do? And I would reply that in these schedules there are certain articles which might be taken up and on which the duties might be so arranged that Great Britain might have the exclusive trade in them. For instance, I find that Great Britain is at present supplying nearly all the anchors required in Canada, but this article is on the free list. Why not make it free for Great Britain with a tariff against any other country that might compete? Another article is fish-hooks, which were made free by the government a year or two ago. I find that Great Britain is supplying $20,000 worth and Norway $19,000 worth of these articles. This is another commodity which might very well be handed over exclusively to Great Britain, because evidently fish-hooks are not made in this country and we are not trading in them with the United States.

According to the trade returns, table knives, forks and spoons are articles that Great Britain wishes to trade in with us and arrangements might very well be made to give her the preference in that regard. As for pins, $58,000 worth come from Great Britain and only $36,000 worth from the United States. Why not give Great Britain a preference on this commodity, and the same with needles, $146,000 worth of which come from Great Britain and $193,000 worth from the United States? These exemplify certain articles mentioned in these schedules which the government could reasonably take in hand and by arrangement give the trade to Great Britain, but as regards many of those I have mentioned this afternoon there is no possibility of their coming from Great Britain.

But that is not our policy. Our policy is this, that all these articles should be made in Canada. Let me point out certain other articles that are mentioned, and ask the house if there is any reason why they should not be made in Canada? These are the articles:

| Articles— | Importations |
|---|---|
| Piano parts | $ 185,000 |
| Trunks | 314,000 |
| Toys | 2,250,000 |
| Soaps | 1,160,000 |
| Picture and photo frames | 194,000 |
| Tube pipe union fittings | 3,268,000 |
| Ship repairs | 221,000 |
| Spectacles, knife frames, eye-glass frames | 182,000 |
| Lead pencils | 933,000 |

Just think of it: these lead pencils can be made in Canada, and yet every lead pencil supplied to the members of the house comes from outside of this country. I shall not take up any more time in dealing with the list, but it can be enlarged three or four times. If the government were alive to the situation all these articles could be made in Canada, thus providing work and preventing for all time unemployment in the Dominion.

The statement has been made this afternoon that Canada for the first time has been giving a lead in strengthening the ties that bind the British Empire. Whoever made that statement has misread the history of this country of nearly 160 years. Canada has never failed the empire; Canada has led the way; Canada has spent millions of dollars to encourage trade within the empire. She has done this by the construction of the Canadian Pacific steamship lines and the Canadian National steamship lines. She led the way in the great war, when the name of Canada was put on the map. Canada has led the way in providing millions of dollars for steamship lines to the West Indies. Surely in doing that we might be excused from taking the vegetable trade away from the white farmers of this country and sending it down to the West Indies.

This afternoon we had the apology of the consumers' league or at least, a statement from the president of that league. But will anyone say that these few members have provided all the financial assistance to enable Mr. Deachman to present these cases before the tariff board? No, I am afraid a good deal of that has come from the party across the floor. They advocated the same policy for years, and they provided the means in this indirect manner, as they did not want to do so openly, to bring these cases before the tariff board. Just twenty-four or forty-eight hours before the great betrayal of the consumers' league, Mr. Deachman was addressing a women's Liberal meeting in the neighbouring village of Westboro, and only twenty-four or forty-eight hours later he learned of the great betrayal; that all his years of work and teaching before the tariff board had been destroyed, had passed away and had been thrown into the scrap heap by the party opposite.

We have heard from the consumers' league. There is however, silence from the Minister of Railways, who moved this amendment in 1922:

> That the Liberal party having been returned to power, the budget proposals of the finance minister now brought down, based as they are, mainly on the principle of protection in respect to the tariff, are wholly inadequate to implement such pledges by legislation.
> That while recognizing that changes in fiscal policy should be made in such a way as to give industries affected a reasonable opportunity for readjustment, this house is of opinion that the principle of protection as a basis for fiscal policy in Canada is unsound and not in the best interests of the Dominion.

How can the Minister of Railways come here now in 1930 without giving some explanation of what he meant in 1922 and what he means in 1930?

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, the few remarks that I intend to make should really not be dignified by the name of address or speech, but I felt that one could not vote for or against the budget without saying something about it. As a matter of fact, one vote on this budget is no good; one would need half a dozen votes in any case. It is impossible with one vote to say whether one is in favour of or against a budget that ranges all the way from A to Z, from black to white or white to black, whichever way you wish to take it

The budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on the first of May is quite clearly designed to catch votes; I would call it a vote-getting budget. If it does not get the votes, it will certainly disappoint its parents. It is a budget that can be easily picked to pieces. Some parts of it look very attractive to certain sections of Canada. For instance, one can imagine supporters of the government waxing eloquent in the east on the iron and steel protection; in the west they could make a very good speech on the British preference, both what is real and a larger portion of it that is only apparent. The protection on vegetables and fruit will go well in British Columbia in spite of the speeches that we had this afternoon, though it may be that they would like best to have the Conservatives bring down the protectionist policy. In the Niagara district the same protection on fruits and vegetables will, I suppose, sound well to the ears of those who want it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It will not get the Liberal party any votes.

Miss MACPHAIL: I do not know about that. We shall learn that after the election. As regards the bean growers, someone who represents a bean-growing constituency and is a government supporter can make a splendid speech about what care the government is taking of that particular industry. The dairy farmers throughout Canada are to be pleased by the abrogation of the New Zealand treaty and the women are to be made happy by cheap tea and dishes. What I want to ask the Liberal party is this: Do they think that public confidence is won by a budget like that after all the talk that we have heard about the Liberals being a low tariff party and all the pleadings that we have heard on the hustings in the years gone by to come into the Liberal camp and not divide the low tariff forces? The thing that I have been asking myself since this debate began on the 1st of May is, where are the low tariff Liberals?

Mr. THORSON: Where are the low tariff Progressives?

Miss MACPHAIL: I am not a Progressive. I am a United Farmer, and I am low tariff. Has the severity of party discipline silenced every one of the low tariff Liberals? I can just imagine some of the sage old Liberals in the country—there are still a few of them in my county and in others—asking themselves, where is the Liberal party going? I had difficulty enough to tell one of the major parties from the other before the 1st of May, but now I find it quite impossible. They are just two groups of friends divided by the green carpet, one sitting to the right of the Speaker and the other to the left. If the great betrayal of Liberalism was begun in 1896, I would say that it was completed in 1930.

I am a member of an economic group. I was elected as a United Farmer and I did not change my name after I was elected—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Miss MACPHAIL: My political name, and I am willing—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am willing as a member of an economic group to change my position on the tariff at any time if I believe that changing my position will make things better for the people whom I represent. I think that that is a sound position. It is the one that I have always taken; I have not changed. But I do not believe that protection will benefit agriculture, and I shall deal with that more fully in a moment.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Agriculture is in a bad way this year. It is in my county, and I suppose it is throughout Canada. If we could protect agriculture so that it would get back some of the money it has to pay out for the protection of other industries I would be ever so willing to do it, but I do not see how it is to be done. Take, for instance, the farmer in my riding of South-east Grey. By the time he has paid for the protection on iron and steel, on fruits and vegetables, beans, to speak only of the protection afforded by this budget, suppose he gets protection on his butter and eggs, and suppose that that protection works in the direction of raising the prices of his butter and eggs, how high would those prices have to be raised in order to reimburse him for the amount that he has to pay out for the protection of other people? The prices of butter and eggs would have to be raised very high indeed before the farmers in my constituency would be benefited by the budget of this year. After all I represent them, and for that reason I am not enamoured of the budget. I would say that the eggs coming from British Columbia have more to do with the breaking of the price of eggs in Ontario than eggs coming from any place outside of Canada, so if the government is going to do something for Ontario in regard to eggs, it will have to get this magic tariff to work inside Canada and keep British Columbia eggs at home.

The New Zealand trade agreement is to be abrogated in October of this year. Some years ago when the Australian treaty was before the house I voted against it. The provisions of that treaty were extended by order in council to New Zealand. I voted against the Australian treaty because I felt that the effect of the treaty on agriculture was not really considered. The object was to get a market for automobiles, and pulpwood, and the interests of the farmer were not considered either one way or the other. The effect of the Australian treaty and of the New Zealand trade agreement on the farmers of this country has been bad, but it has been bad psychologically rather than materially. I doubt very much if the farmer has suffered so much from the treaty as he thinks he has and as the Conservative party has helped him to believe he has, but he has got it firmly placed in his mind that he has been very badly used. No doubt farmers everywhere in this country think that. The creameries in every province have been sending word to their patrons with every cheque that the Australian treaty and the New Zealand trade agreement have lowered the price of butter and that it is a very bad thing for the farmer, and so the farmer has had that idea firmly placed in his mind, and the only way to make him happy is to abrogate the treaty. I congratulate the government for doing that, though the reason they do it and the reason why I want it done are not quite the same. Still, I am glad that they are taking that action. Suppose that after the treaty is abrogated the price of butter does increase. The production of butter will also increase, because I have noticed that farmers always speed up production when it pays them to speed it up. So if the price goes up they will produce more butter, and when production gets to the point where we become exporters of butter, we must meet the world price for butter, and down the price goes. So I would say to the farmers of Canada, if I may presume to do so, that they want to be very careful not to sell themselves into the protectionist camp for something which they think will be of real benefit to them but which really will not be, because they will have to pay out so much more than they get that they will be paying too much for their protectionist whistle.

Possibly the best proof that protection does not make the farmer prosperous is the condition of the American farmer. The proof that the tariff is not the fundamental thing in the economics of agriculture that we once thought it was is found in the fact that the farmer of the United States, where they have very high protection, the farmer in Great Britain, where they have free trade, and the farmer of Canada, where we have high protection, low tariff and free trade all in the one budget, are all in a very bad way.

The government is bringing in countervailing duties. While it may sound better to call them that, I agree with the Conservatives that it is really a brick for brick policy, so far as the bricks go; at least, it works out that way. But if we are going to have countervailing duties between Canada and the United States, why not include in the list of commodities to which the countervailing duties are going to apply, not only agricultural products, but industrial products? Why not apply the countervailing duties all along the line, apply them to everything that we trade in with the United States? Then if we really are low tariff in our sentiments, let us take off the specific duty, so that when you get the countervailing duty coming down it goes down all the way, just as well as when it countervails up it goes all the way up.

I do think Canada has very much to gain by the extension of the British preference. And may I pause here to say that I have been exceedingly amused and almost edified by the change of the respective flags that each party waves. It used to be that the Liberals —well, we may start with the Conservatives, since they had more of the flag than their traditional opponents—the Conservatives waved the Union Jack, and sometimes you could not tell whether there was a Conservative in its fold or not, but usually there was. The Union Jack was certainly their flag. As to the Liberals, if they had a distinctive party flag it might be said to be the Canadian ensign. But if I am to believe what I have heard, in the days since the first of May the two parties have swapped flags, and now the Conservatives have appropriated the Canadian ensign, while the Liberals have taken over the Union Jack.

I do think, however, that it is clear to all of us that Great Britain buys from us very much more than we buy from her, and that we buy from the United States very much more than they buy from us. For instance, in 1927 our exports to Great Britain of agricultural and vegetable products amounted in value to $330,000,000; during the same year we exported these products to the United States to the value of only $60,000,000. In the same year we exported to Great Britain animal and animal products to the value of $68,000,000, and to the United States $75,000,000 worth. In 1928 we exported to Great Britain agricultural and vegetable products to the value of $310,000,000, and to the United States only $56,000,000 worth. In the same year we exported to Great Britain animal and animal products to the value of $49,000,000, and to the United States to the value of $92,000,000. Therefore so far as agricultural and vegetable products are concerned—made up, I dare say, largely of wheat, but still Canadian farm products—we exported to Great Britain a great deal more than we exported to the United States—not only a great deal more, but many times as much; and we can scarcely expect Great Britain to want to continue to absorb our products unless we are willing to take the goods she has to sell. The Western Producer in its editorial of May 8 in dealing with this point said:

> The prolonged crisis in the grain market has forced the western wheat grower to give some attention to European conditions. He has discovered, if he did not know it already, that Britain is the heaviest purchaser of his wheat. He has discovered also that Canada does not import nearly so much British produce as she might.

So when we are dealing with the British preference it would be very wise indeed to put on the list for preferential treatment those things that we are likely to buy from Great Britain. While I know it makes a very imposing list to include a large number of things that we do not buy, or are not likely to buy, or buy very little of from Great Britain, such a list, although imposing, is not of very much use when one is trying to arrange an exchange of products. If Great Britain does buy our agricultural and vegetable products to the value that I have named, then we in return must buy large quantities of her goods. Consequently I cannot understand why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) if he was honest in his endeavour to extend the British preference, to build up trade between us and Britain, did not give preferential treatment to British textiles and British boots and shoes, commodities that we are likely to buy from Great Britain. Because while I realize that there is an extension of the British preference—I have not gone through the schedules myself, but I have talked with those who have—I believe time will go to show that this extension of the British preference is at least as much apparent as it is real, and maybe it is more apparent than real. And if all that this extension of the preference to Great Britain amounts to is vain show, it can serve no good purpose in increasing the exchange of trade between ourselves and the motherland. But for the degree of British preference effected by this budget I am glad, and if I could divide the budget into half a dozen bits I would vote for that piece of it.

There is one other angle from which I wish to discuss the tariff just for a moment or two; that is, its bearing on international relations. Last year in the course of the budget debate we had a very excellent speech from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) who when he is discussing international relations always makes most excellent speeches. He dealt quite fully with the work of the economic conference of the League of Nations. This conference met in Geneva in 1927 from early in May until the 23rd. It consisted of 194 delegates and 226 experts representing fifty states, so I think it will be generally agreed that it was a most important gathering. This conference placed itself on record in these words, and I am now quoting from the speech by the Minister of Justice as to be found on page 1335 of Hansard of last year:

> In view of the fact that harmful effects upon production and trade result from the high and constantly changing tariffs which are applied in many countries;
> And since substantial improvement in the economic conditions can be obtained by increased facilities for international trade and commerce;
> And in view of the fact that tariffs, though within the sovereign jurisdiction of the separate states, are not a matter of purely domestic interest but greatly influence the trade of the world;
> And in view of the fact that some of the causes which have resulted in the increase of tariffs and in other trade barriers since the war have largely disappeared and others are diminishing;
> The conference declares that the time has come to put an end to the increase in tariffs and to move in the opposite direction.

This was the decision of experts. They were not there to cater to any element in their respective countries, they were there to express their considered views. This year the tenth assembly of the League of Nations realized that this economic conference was serious in its recommendations, and so the Right Hon. Mr. Graham of the British board of trade moved a resolution, seconded, I think, by the French representative, which read as follows:

> States should agree not to increase their protective tariff above the present level for a period of from two to three years or to impose new protective duties or create new impediments to trade. It is understood that this undertaking should not lead to any relaxation in the efforts which states are making to reduce their tariff to the greatest possible extent by autonomous or bilateral action in conformity with the recommendations of the World Economic Conference.

All of us know that the world is becoming a smaller and smaller place, that is, that we are becoming more and more interdependent, and that what used to be a national policy is now coming to be international policy, inasmuch as the policy of one country affects so greatly the action of another country. For instance, if we are to credit the reports in the newspapers, the introduction of this budget had a great deal to do with the result of a recent by-election in Great Britain. That is a small example, but after all it is an example of the effect that the fiscal policy of one country has on the fiscal policy of another. I think all hon. members will agree with me—though all will not admit it—that high tariffs do not lead to good will, that they are one of the obstacles that stand in the way of permanent world peace, and that if we are really serious in desiring permanent world peace we must be serious in striving to remove the economic causes of war, in which high tariffs are an important factor.

I have come to the conclusion, first, that in the main agriculture in Canada will not be benefited by the tariff; and, second, because it is not conducive to the peace of the world, I am opposed to the protective principles as brought down in the budget. I think the Liberals themselves, if they were free to admit it, would say that the budget is more protectionist than otherwise. To my mind it is a very peculiar budget. If we in this section of the house vote one way or the other we could not be blamed because no person in his right mind could agree to all the items contained in the present budget.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Miss MACPHAIL: Nor could hon. members conscientiously disagree with all the items contained therein. I believe that in Southeast Grey it would be easier to explain why I voted against the budget than why I voted for it.

Mr. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): In rising to address the house at this stage of the debate I wish to say to the representative of Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail), who has just taken her seat, that I entirely agree with many of her statements; in fact I have never found myself quite as much in agreement with the hon. member as I find myself to-night. In connection with the subjects upon which we disagree I have no doubt that a little friendly discussion would bring us closer together.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am willing to try. The hon. member represents a rural constituency; so do I. While the hon. member takes one view of the effect upon her constituency of the Australian treaty, I take another. I agree with the hon. member that some damage has been done by the operation of this treaty and that to some extent it is psychological. There has been the material damage and there has been the other damage. I suggest to the hon. member, however, that you cannot in one year put on the Canadian market 35,000,000 pounds of imported butter, three pounds for each man, woman and child in the Dominion of Canada, without materially affecting and injuring the market for Canadian butter within the Dominion.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does my hon. friend include in that the amount of New Zealand butter imported into Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, I have not stated the exact amount that has been imported and sold in Canada, but I think it would go as high as 40,000,000 or 42,000,000 pounds.

The budget has always constituted an interesting feature in each session. It should be a complete and comprehensive statement and review of all our affairs. My hon. leader (Mr. Bennett) has pointed out that in some respects this budget is lacking and that it does not go the whole way in placing before this house and before the people of Canada the expected results of such a budget. I suggest to the minister that in future it might be well to have in the budget a more comprehensive and complete statement of the affairs of the Canadian National Railways The people of Canada own these railways; we are interested in them and we are financing them for capital expenditures and to some extent in other ways. We are very proud of the measure of success which they have attained. I do think however that it would be in the public interest if a detailed statement of the finances of that corporation were included in the budget.

When I read the budget I am reminded of a certain act which I have witnessed at the circus. A juggler would come on the stage and he would attempt to keep three balls of different colours and sizes in the air at the same time. Sometimes he would succeed but if he continued his performance long enough it generally ended in failure. In this budget I see an effort to put before the Canadian people at the same time measures of free trade and protection, and an effort to improve the failing fortunes of the government. I do not think those three things can be done. If the government had only to put the present budget through this house, they might succeed. However, if they succeed in getting it through the house they still have to place it before the people of Canada, whereupon it will be thoroughly dissected and analyzed, appreciated and understood. A considerable length of time will be required for the performance of the task which they have undertaken.

Proceeding to the statements in the budget respecting trade, hon. members will notice a decline in our exports to the extent of $244,000,000, in round figures. Hon. members will also notice an adverse trade balance of $103,000,000, and that our estimated revenue for the year 1929-30 is $447,000,000 as compared with $462,000,000 for the previous year. The latter figures would indicate a decrease of approximately $15,000,000. Perhaps if the effect of this budget were analyzed and its expected operation in the coming year made public we would come to the conclusion that our revenues will not show a surplus; the fear is that they will show a deficit. The ordinary expenditures for the current year 1929-30 were $360,000,000, whereas in the prior year they were $351,000,000. Hon. members will notice that while our revenues are falling our expenditures are increasing.

This government has a peculiar record in regard to taxation. After the change of government in 1921 the then finance minister took advantage of the opportunity that presented itself to increase substantially the taxes imposed upon the Canadian people. The sales tax was increased; the stamp taxes were put on; our excise taxes were increased, and it was perfectly clear that in putting on these taxes he had in mind the production of substantial surpluses for which he could claim credit. For a number of years that program succeeded and the government now claims that it has been reducing taxation for several years. It may be that there have been reductions of rates here and there; there have been changes and adjustments, but I contend that as long as this government takes from the Canadian people as a whole a larger sum of money year by year it cannot successfully contend that it is reducing taxation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The population of Canada has remained at about the same figure during the term of office of the present government, and if we take year by year a larger sum from the same number of people I submit it is perfectly clear that taxation is not being reduced. I asked the Bureau of Statistics to furnish certain information along this line covering the years 1925 to 1929, and I find that the total amounts collected by this government in customs duties during those years were:

|---|---|
| 1925 | $108,146,871 |
| 1926 | 127,355,144 |
| 1927 | 141,968,678 |
| 1928 | 156,985,818 |
| 1929 | 187,206,332 |

So you see, Mr. Speaker, that during all these years the amount of money taken from the Canadian people in customs duties has increased year by year, notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has contended that the tariff is a tax. We have the same record in connection with excise taxes, which amounted to the following:

|---|---|
| 1925 | $38,603,489 |
| 1926 | 42,923,549 |
| 1927 | 48,513,160 |
| 1928 | 57,400,898 |
| 1929 | 63,684,954 |

The income tax amounted to:

|---|---|
| 1925 | $56,248,043 |
| 1926 | 55,571,962 |
| 1927 | 47,386,309 |
| 1928 | 56,571,047 |
| 1929 | 59,422,323 |

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

The amounts collected in other war taxes were as follows:

|---|---|
| 1925 | $ 90,916,115 |
| 1926 | 101,724,358 |
| 1927 | 108,781,125 |
| 1928 | 93,748,040 |
| 1929 | 85,607,419 |

The total amounts collected in taxation were as follows:

|---|---|
| 1925 | $293,914,518 |
| 1926 | 327,575,013 |
| 1927 | 346,649,272 |
| 1928 | 364,705,803 |
| 1929 | 395,921,028 |

Then there were other special revenues, making the total amounts during those years as follows:

|---|---|
| 1925 | $351,515,392 |
| 1926 | 382,893,009 |
| 1927 | 400,453,480 |
| 1928 | 429,642,577 |
| 1929 | 460,151,481 |

Then, Mr. Speaker, we have been told about the expenditures, and we find that during these years the total ordinary expenditures were:

|---|---|
| 1925 | $318,891,901 |
| 1926 | 320,660,479 |
| 1927 | 319,548,173 |
| 1928 | 336,167,961 |
| 1929 | 350,952,924 |

So you see the record of this government is upward in the matter of total taxation and upward also in total expenditures. During his speech my leader referred to the increases in the sales tax, and if hon. members turn to page 1815 of Hansard they will find there have been increases in that tax during all those years. So, Mr. Speaker, when we analyse the contention that taxation has been reduced we find that the record of the government does not support that claim.

There was one reference in the budget speech which to me was rather surprising; I refer to the remarks of the minister concerning the tourist trade. The government would appear to suggest that it is entitled to some credit in respect of the great advantage accruing to Canada through the vast amount of money spent in this country by the tourists. What has this government done to encourage the tourist trade throughout this country? It has two opportunities to extend some aid in the construction of highways, and everyone knows that highways are the first requisite, the first attraction and the most important element in the development of tourist traffic. On two occasions this government emphatically rejected the opportunity to assist the tourist trade in this way. Undoubtedly the provinces are aware of the advantage of this trade and are looking after it, but they are doing so at their own expense, on their own account and without any assistance or encouragement from this government.

The sales tax is now reduced. If the government had accepted the resolution presented from this side of the house the sales tax would have been wiped out entirely. It is just as much trouble and expense to business to collect the amount of tax now imposed as it was to collect the larger amount, and it seems to me the government would have been well advised to do away with this tax completely. It is more or less a nuisance tax; it is an encumbrance, an obstruction to business, and the effect of wiping it out would have been borne equally and fairly by all the people of Canada. When the government took off the tax on luxuries, sleeping car tickets and the like, they were doing something for a particular class of people, but had they taken off the sales tax entirely they would have done somthing for every class throughout Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to the customs tariff, and it is here that the government seems to have gotten into difficulty and become inconsistent. There are both increases and decreases in duty, and the minister says the increases under the general tariff are small and that the material reductions in the British preferential rates are larges. It would be difficult at this time, and without further analysis, to say just exactly what will be the effect of these changes. The minister himself was not very definite or specific in that respect. These tariff items have been scrambled; they have been mixed up and re-arranged, and it will require some considerable time and the work of an expert to find out exactly what has happened. It is extremely difficult to unscramble eggs, and I think this government will have great difficult in unscrambling some of these complications which they have brought about. Some of the increases are very marked and some of the reductions are rather trifling.

I am particularly interested in the budget as it relates to agricultural products. We have had the case for the fruit and vegetable growers presented very fairly and completely by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), and I do not propose to go over the ground which he covered so well. It does appear, however, that the government has missed an opportunity to do something for this industry and has given it something which will not really help it. What these people really desired was a seasonal tariff or a rigid application of the dumping duty, and this does not appear to have been given them. However, I wish to deal very briefly with the Australian and New Zealand treaties, which materially affect the constituency which I represent, in which the dairy industry plays a very important part.

I am glad to recall that when this Australian treaty was discussed in this house I voted against it. I voted against it because it was clearly pointed out by my leader that its effects would be detrimental to agriculture, that while there would be some advantages to the manufacturing industry, agriculture would be called upon to pay for those advantages. The warnings then given, however, were disregarded, and it was not very long before the treaty was extended to New Zealand by order in council. That extension was made with disastrous results to the dairying industry of Canada. The operation of this treaty has destroyed the confidence, and the initiative of this industry; the industry is discouraged and downhearted. Every reason which exists at this late date for the termination of this treaty has existed and must have been well known to the government for many years. Why this delay and this tardy action? The action taken cannot give any benefit to the dairying industry for at least six months. After an industry has been damaged for six years, it cannot be rebuilt in six months; it will take years to bring it back to where it was at the time this government embarked upon the policy which wrought such havoc and which has brought such disaster to this industry. The government seeks now to take that action which it has been repeatedly requested to take.

The countervailing duties are a comparatively new feature in the customs tariff. Heretofore Canada has had the courage and the initiative to make her own tariffs, and parliament in making those tariffs has done so in the best interests of the Canadian people, without in any way playing second fiddle or waiting for the action of any other country. The adoption of this principle will result in confusion and uncertainty. The United States have a tariff law under which the president may on the recommendation of the tariff commission increase or decrease the rates of duty. This is called the flexible provision, and we shall have to follow that country up and down the whole scale from day to day if we are to put into force the countervailing duties referred to in the budget. Not only will there be changing rates from time to time with respect to the United States, but it will apply to other countries as well. The member for Southeast Grey points out that this countervailing feature applies only to sixteen items; and I wonder why it was not extended to a much larger number of items. During the past seven years the flexible provision in the tariff of the United States has been extremely detrimental to Canada. Canada has felt the effect of an increase of from 30 to 42 cents per bushel on wheat; from 75 cents to $1.04 per 100 pounds on flour; from 8 cents to 12 cents per pound on butter; from 1 cent to 1½ cents per pound on onions; from 2½ cents to 3¾ cents per gallon on fresh milk; from 20 cents to 30 cents per gallon on cream, and increases on many other commodities. Every reason which has existed for the raising of the duty on these items has been in existence for the last eight years, ever since the Fordney-McCumber tariff was introduced in the United States in the year 1922. In spite of that, this government has slept and has allowed these changes to work to the detriment of Canada. At this late date, on the eve of an election, it comes forward with this feeble and futile effort in the hope that it can satisfy the agricultural industry and the people on the farms of Canada. I suggest that it is long too late and that the government will be disappointed in the results obtained. What is required in Canada is a protective tariff of agriculture and industry generally determined by the Canadian people and in the interests of agriculture, industry and labour. In its tariff provisions the budget makes an attempt to travel in two opposite directions at the same time. That has been tried in the past by statemen and politicians, but it has always met with failure and I predict that failure will be the result in the present instance.

From the information I have been able to obtain, I have come to the conclusion that the number of items to be included in the British preference has been exaggerated, with a desire to make it appear that larger reductions are being made. Why was it necessary at this late stage to deal with this matter? We are to have an economic conference this fall, and would it not have been well for Canada to enter that conference with free hands, with this whole subject open for discussion and for negotiation? Then we could hope to obtain preference for preference; we could hope to receive some advantage—countervailing advantage if you like—for the reductions which we offered. The foundation of trade and commerce is mutual advantage, but that seems to have been disregarded in this instance. The object of this gesture is to give the government a little flag to wave in the coming campaign. It is not a big flag and it is not going to be large enough to carry the government through, because side by side with it has to be carried the stars and stripes.

I was very much interested in the speech delivered by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) at Woodstock. The hon. minister always makes a good speech, and with much of that speech, as reported in the Toronto Globe, I agree. He said that the Dunning budget was not a western budget—I agree with him in that statement. He said it was not an eastern budget—I am inclined to agree with him there. He said it was not a manufacturers' budget—I concur in that statement. He said it was not a farmers' budget—he is right. It was not a workingman's budget—he is absolutely right there. He said that it was a national budget with the great policy of British preference as its foundation—with that sentence I disagree, for the reasons I have already stated. It is not a national budget because it fails to give proper consideration to national interests. It is not determined entirely by the Canadian people; it is uncertain and variable in its action; it is, I suggest, a King government budget by the King government and for the King government and its whole object is to put the government out of the bog of despair and difficulty of its own making, in which it has landed itself and for which it has been heading for the last six or seven years.

Generally in matters of this kind we have uniformity, unanimity of opinion among the different members of the cabinet. We have sitting in that cabinet the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Crerar), and I have sat in the house and heard him session after session denounce protection as unsound, vicious and injurious to all classes of the Canadian people. How can that man remain a member of a cabinet or government that repudiates, that denies the truth of all the statements which he has ever made when he was in the house with respect to the Canadian tariff? We have the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) who has taken a similar position. How can he vote for the budget? He has not explained the reasons or whether he has any reasons why he has changed his opinion. The Minister of Finance himself has scarcely given us any good reason for his remarkably sudden conversion in this matter. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) ridiculed a brick-for-brick tariff, ridiculed the contention that the Australian and New Zealand treaties were doing any injury to the agricultural industry of this country and said that it would be folly to raise duties. How can he vote for the budget? The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) not long ago in discussing this matter in the house announced that the effect of raising the duty on butter would leave the farmer in a worse condition than at present. How does he justify the duties that are imposed and the countervailing duties that apply in this respect?

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has always said that the tariff was a tax and he has frequently proclaimed in the most vehement terms that the policy of his government was a downward and still downward revision of the tariff. He has taken the opportunity in other budget debates to show the progress that has been made along that line and he fervently pledged himself and his government to continue along those lines. But to-night we find that he has reversed that position and he is now proposing to the house an increased measure of protection. With further reference to the statement of the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) with regard to what occurred at the peace conference as to the reduction of duties, may I read from Hansard of 1928 the statement of the Prime Minister in the budget debate:

May I say just one further word in regard to the method by which the government has proceeded in the matter of tariff revision. I doubt if the government's method could be better described than as set forth in the resolution which was passed at the inter-parliamentary conference held in Paris on August 25, last year. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) referred to a resolution adopted by the League of Nations. That resolution laid stress on the importance of nations reducing rather than raising their customs tariff. We are proud of the fact that Canada stands out as the one country in the world that has pursued the course which was there advocated by all of them. In connection with the inter-parliamentary conference—which I understand is an inter-parliamentary conference of all the nations in the world—the following resolution was passed:

The twenty-fourth inter-parliamentary conference regrets to note a general tendency among the states to raise their customs tariffs. It recommends that the national groups shall endeavour to arrest and to reverse that tendency.

Another of the Paris recommendations completes this one by expressing the wish "that methods of abolishing, or at least progressively and gradually reducing customs duties, be made an object of study in all countries. . . . ."

The report goes on to say that such annual reduction could be sufficiently slight not to cause a crisis and to permit the different national industries to adapt themselves to the new conditions.

That was the position of the Prime Minister a year ago. He was commending a reduction of tariff. To-day by his budget he must approve the raising of the tariff. That, however, is perhaps not difficult for him and he must justify his own position.

My time is almost up and I propose to give some reasons why I am going to vote against the budget. I will vote against the budget:

1. Because a vote for it is an endorsement of hypocrisy and deception in political policies, and hypocrisy and deception are no more excusable in matters political than in others.

2. Because it does not accurately and fully disclose the national finances or the prospective revenues for the current fiscal year.

3. Because the extension of the British preference on the eve of an economic conference of the empire is premature, inopportune and possibly detrimental to the promotion of inter-imperial trade on the sound basis of mutual preference.

4. Because the adoption of countervailing duties introduces uncertainty and instability into the tariff and will result in frequent changes, complications and inconsistencies in our tariff schedules.

5. Because the record of this government on fiscal matters is so unstable and inconsistent that it cannot be relied upon to carry out in full measure the features of the budget which may appear to be commendable.

6. Because it is really a deathbed repentance and repudiation of its former pledges and policies.

7. Because it does not afford sufficient protection for the textile industries.

8. Because the measure of protection afforded to the branches of agriculture and dairying is belated and inadequate.

9. Because it does not contain provisions for promoting the manufacture in Canada of a larger amount of our own natural resources.

10. Because it does not contain ample provisions to afford relief for unemployment.

Then we have the amendment which was moved by my leader and which will be found on Hansard at page 1834. It reads:

That while this house welcomes and approves of every measure that will afford to Canadian agriculture, industry, and labour an equal opportunity and fair competition in the development of the rich and varied natural resources of the Dominion, and provide for the extension of inter-empire trade by mutually advantageous preferences and agreements, with due regard in either case, to the interests of consumers, it is of opinion that the proposals which were submitted by the Minister of Finance on May 1st, are in several important respects so completely at variance with the policies of this government, as heretofore declared by its official leaders in parliament and elsewhere, that this administration having lost the confidence of the country, cannot safely be entrusted with the direction of the fiscal policy of Canada nor the carrying into effect of proposals to which it has heretofore been opposed and which constitute a breach of its solemn pledges to the electorate, and which are deceptive, fail to estimate the financial results of their operations and which create distrust of and contempt for representative institutions.

With every sentence and every sentiment there expressed I wholly agree, and I will vote for it because it exposes the defects and weakness and inconsistency of this government on its own record and its failure to discharge its whole duty to the people of Canada.

Mr. W. G. BOCK (Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I feel that I would be somewhat remiss if I did not contribute a few remarks to this budget debate. I wish in the first place to tender my hearty congratulations to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) both on his presentation of the budget and on the manner in which he has grappled with our tariff problems at a time when a man in his position might well have hesitated to take such courageous steps.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) in his address the other evening mentioned having presided at a meeting which the present Minister of Finance attended a good many years ago, where the hon. member for Mackenzie claimed to have prophesied at that time that Mr. Dunning had a great future ahead of him. His remarks recalled to my mind many occasions in the early days of the grain growers' association in Saskatchewan when we as delegates attended our annual convention of the organization, which was usually held at Regina, Moose Jaw or Saskatoon. The present Minister of Finance was always on hand at those meetings, first as a delegate, and later as a director and vice-president of the organization. Often when the subject under discussion seemed to be going round in circles, with amendments aud subamendments and so on, and when it seemed to be heading up a blind alley with everything in a mess, as Amos and Andy would say, the chairman or one of the delegates would suggest that Charlie Dunning come in and unscramble the situation and put the assembly on their feet again. He was always able to clear the air, and the debate would be once more off to a good start. This was back in 1910 to 1914, when the present Minister of Finance was on the board of directors of that organization. Later he organized and had much to do with the direction of the destinies of the Saskatchewan Cooperative Elevator Company. This was an outstanding organization, and at the time of its purchase by the pool it had become the greatest grain handling firm on the continent. The hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Finance was always able to take care of any situation in which he was placed. It was sometimes said that he seemed to be a pinch hitter who was sent to bat whenever a tough situation cropped up. Later, when he became a member of the Saskatchewan legislature, he acted at different times as Minister of Railways, Provincial Treasurer, Minister of Telephones, Minister of Agriculture, and finally as Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan, and made good in every capacity. In 1926, when the federal department of railways was in need of reorganization, the Prime Minister sent him to bat when there were two down and the bases full. He got a three-bagger that time, for he had studied the Nelson terminal proposition. He switched the terminal from Nelson to Churchill, completed the line, and last year for the first time in the history of our government-owned roads, made the system pay. Now, once again we find him going to bat on the eve of an election, as Minister of Finance, in the second half of the last innings with the bases full and the score tied, and what does he do? Does he fall down? No! He knocks the Hawley-Smoot pill, with its fancy tariff curves clear into the gulf of Mexico with a British preference bat, and I fancy I can see the fans sitting on the corral fences out west, reaching for their bull durham and saying, "Yes, Dunning made another home run."

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion), referred to the budget this afternoon as spectacular. I think it was in order to term it spectacular as it was introduced by a very spectacular Minister of Finance. We westerners, of course, naturally feel proud of our Minster of Finance for we "saw him first", before he went into the big league, and I am confident that the western farmers who through the old grain growers' association helped him to acquire his economic education are still pulling for him as strong as ever, and when the Dominion championship series opens—it won't be long now—and the electors go to bat, they will judge the two great parties by their box score records of runs, hits and errors in the past, and there will be no doubt in their minds that they may safely trust the destinies of Canada to the party which has had the courage to face situations as they arise and readjust our tariff structures as changing world conditions may warrant, in spite of the howls of the opposition about losing their policy.

It is reassuring to note in this budget that there is a surplus of $44,500,000 and that about $80,000,000 is wiped from our national debt. This sets a new record and cuts the interest charges by over $4,000,000, and this in the face of increased expenditures of approximately $25,000,000 on capital account for taking care of such projects as the new Welland ship canal, the Hudson Bay railway, the St. Lawrence channel, harbour work at the lake heads, and public buildings in the city of Ottawa. So apparently there is nothing seriously wrong with this government.

One feature of our trade balance which was criticized by hon. gentlemen opposite was that Canada as a nation, like many of our citizens in the west as well as in the east, bought more goods than she sold this year, by about $103,000,000; and as our grain exports to the United Kingdom declined by $138,000,000 and our exports to Europe declined by $81,000,000, it only emphasizes the importance of our grain exports in maintaining favourable trade balances, and the urgent necessity of securing and holding the good will of all wheat importing countries of the world. We should then so arrange our tariffs as to make for freer interchange of goods for our grain and flour, and in my humble opinion, Mr. Speaker, the sweeping tariff reduction contained in this budget in the ratio of four decreases to one increase, particularly as they affect the British Empire, should go a long way towards restoring the good will of our best customer for Canadian grain.

The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) the other evening in his speech referred to the Minister of Finance as a Santa Claus unloading his bag of parcels which were not to be opened until after Christmas, or after the election. I may say that when the minister was enumerating the many items made free under the British preference, I also saw a picture of a Santa Claus with a pack as big as a load of hay; but I did not get the drift of the hon. member's remark "not to be opened until after the election," for with the tariff schedules and the trade statistics before him the hon. member could at least have opened some of them on the spot. Some of the parcels I think had their wrappers off when they arrived, and certainly there was one that was wide open. I refer to the tea package, because the very next day after the budget was brought down I saw in two Ottawa newspapers advertisements in big black letters that the price of tea had dropped 15 cents per pound.

The opposition members accused us of being bullied by the United States. They also talked about adopting red-blooded tactics. I think either the hon. member for Fort William or the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), or perhaps both of them, last session wanted us to remain here until the United States had come through with their tariff revision program in order that we might enact retaliatory measures. To-day in one breath they tell us we are inconsistent in introducing countervailing duties, and in the next breath they tell us we have not gone far enough in that direction. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) said we ought to apply these countervailing duties to the tariff as a whole, that there were only a few items to which they were applied and these were not nearly enough. In fact, he referred to the limited number of items covered by the countervailing duties as the gesture of a school boy. I am sure if the genial member for Fort William prescribed a tablespoonful of castor oil to his colleague from Vancouver Centre, that gentleman would not insist on taking a whole quart of the medicine until he had found out how the first dose affected him.

Some of the Progressives appear to think that we have gone too far; the Tories think we have not gone far enough; but it appears to me as if we had sort of struck the happy medium, because when both hostile parties are dissatisfied in that way, from one extreme to the other, I think the Minister of Finance is not very far out in his proposals. As world conditions change it is necessary for governments to make alterations in their policies from time to time, to meet emergencies as they arise, that is, if we are going to make progress. It is said that if a man were to follow a beaten path continuously he would soon get into a rut. Well, there is only one difference between a rut and a grave —the rut has no ends to it.

There is a strong possibility, Mr. Speaker, that the United States government, after they have studied the effects of these countervailing duties on their own producers and consumers, may not hesitate very long to make some reductions in their tariff structure. In fact I think they have already made reductions in duties on shingles, lumber and potatoes, following the budget announcement. Press reports state that President Hoover is being deluged with requests to veto the tariff bill now before the congressional committee. So we may be pleasantly surprised by the effect that our countervailing duties may have on the tariff policies of our neighbours.

Taking the different factors into consideration, then, we have on the one hand Uncle Sam's attitude of closing his doors to many of our products by the proposals contained in the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill; and on the other hand we have a good market in Great Britain for our commodities, but she is reluctant to purchase them unless we take in exchange those articles which we have been purchasing in the United States. When the Hudson Bay railway is in operation, which will be in the near future, it will have the effect of lowering our freight rates, thereby reducing our cost of production, which is one thing we should not lose sight of; and the trade diverted from the United States to Great Britain should help to provide cargoes for the wheat carriers returning to Fort Churchill. So it seems to me that this budget is piecing those problems together like the parts of a jigsaw puzzle. The Minister of Finance has been a good solver of puzzles in the past, by the time he gets through with this puzzle there will be no pieces left over for my hon. friends opposite to play with.

Fundamentally I have always been just as much a free trader as my friend from Rosetown (Mr. Evans), but there are times when certain things cannot all be done at once owing to extraordinary conditions. If our natural north and south channels of trade are obstructed, we can blame Uncle Sam and his tariff measures. If he thinks it good business to lose a few hundred million dollars worth of Canadian trade annually it is his own affair. And if his prohibitory tariff machine backfires too much on him, he will probably take it to the garage to have it overhauled; apparently he has changed the timing on his potatoes, lumber and shingles. I believe in the feasibility of the Hudson Bay railway as a grain shipping route, and I think our present difficulties will be removed with the opening of that route; and with the progress made by this budget towards free trade within the empire, it should only be a few years before the last barrier to imperial free trade has been removed.

I am convinced that the record of the present administration, together with the budget now under discussion, which appears so effectively to meet the peculiar trade conditions to-day, should return this government to power with an increased majority at the coming elections. The opposition apparently have no policy to offer that would deal effectively with the situation. They criticize every action of the government, but after listening to their speeches it is pretty hard to arrive at what the majority of them really favour. Some of them are of the opinion that the increased British preference would put our manufacturers out of business; some of them claim it has not gone far enough; in the opinion of others it should have come sooner. The same diversity of view exists with regard to the countervailing duties. In a word, the opposition have no clear-cut, definite policy to offer to the country. They may make an issue of having their shirt stolen, for they always have a slogan, something easy for the people to remember. I recall in 1911 they had the slogan "No annexation, no truck or trade with the Yankees;" in 1921 the slogan was "blue ruin" in 1925 they had another "blue ruin" slogan; in 1926 they had some more "blue ruin" together with the customs scandal. But this time they will not be waving the flag so effectively as they did in 1911. In Saskatchewan they are apparently raising a religious issue. It seems a pity that an election cannot be fought cleanly on a national policy without introducing questions of race, language or religion, for these appeal mostly to those who are little concerned with the real welfare of Canada. In this connection, sir, I should like to read an extract from a verbatim report of a speech made by the editor of the Regina Daily Star, which appears in the issue of his paper of May 2. The meeting was held in the town of Shaunavon which is in the Maple Creek constituency that I have the honour to represent. On that occasion a Conservative candidate was elected to contest the coming election, and the Hon. Mr. Bennett was chosen honorary president and Hon. Mr. Anderson honorary vice-president of the local association. I shall not attempt to quote the speech in full for it is rather lengthy, but it contains some passages which I feel it my duty to bring to the attention of hon. members. Among other statements made on that occasion by Mr. Cowper, the editor of the Regina Daily Star, are the following:

> Canada to-day is facing a conflict between the two races. Only folly would blind one's eyes to it, and cowardice seal one's lips. The Quebec movement thriving on the liberty accorded to the Quebec people by the act of 1774 and generous concessions since extended to it by Canadian leaders has now reached a point where it seeks to effect the mental conquest of all Canada. In has put six ministers into the King government; it has utilized its solid bloc to control the Liberal caucus and party, so that to-day its minority in the house is in control of Canada. It has abused its power thus obtained to flout the constitution and is now actively using the departments of government and the federal civil service in a campaign to overthrow the British conceptions of democracy and freedom in Canada, to block the work of those who wish to weld all the peoples of Canada into a homogeneous Canadian nationhood. It is using its control of the post office, the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and other departments of the Ottawa government to force the French language on the peoples of the British provinces.

This is not an issue of this man or that; it is not a fight between the ins and the outs. The Quebec French movement by its control of the present government of Canada has thrown down the challenge to the people of the western provinces. The future destiny of Canada, the character of its democracy, the treasures of mental and spiritual liberty, are bound up in the issue. They constitute a clarion call to all lovers of mental liberty and national freedom to unite and defeat the King government, and keep the Quebec movement from riding roughshod over the heritage of our dearly loved British liberties.

That would seem to outline the main issue in the coming campaign in the section of Saskatchewan from which I come. This represents the opening gun which was fired at the nomination meeting of the Conservative candidate in the constituency of Maple Creek. As the hon. leader of the opposition has been named honorary president of this Conservative organization, I am sorry he is not in his seat, but I wonder if he agrees with the report which I have just read. I wonder if he endorses the statements that were made at that meeting; I doubt very much if he does. I do not believe that the hon. leader of the opposition is the type of man that will endorse the sentiments contained in this article. It is rumoured in Saskatchewan that the leader of the opposition has either directly or indirectly some financial interest in the Regina Star, from which newspaper I have just read. I do not know whether that is a correct statement or not, but at some future time I would like to have an answer from the hon. member. Judging from reports which I have seen in newspapers as to the stand taken by the hon. leader of the opposition in connection with stirring up religious strife, I believe he is too big a man to countenance that sort of thing. I would like to read an article which appeared in the Western Producer in its issue of July 5, 1928. The newspaper heading is as follows:

Hon. R. B. Bennett speaks of policies of Tory party to French Canadians.

This address was delivered at Magog, in the province of Quebec, and in part is as follows:

He who makes appeal to prejudice, racial or religious, is a foe to Canada. Let by-gones be by-gones; study matters for yourselves, and when you go to the polls do not go as men and women driven by passion or prejudice, but strike a blow for the preservation of your country and its institutions, and an opportunity for development.

In dealing with the manner in which the hon. gentleman was received, the report is as follows:

"You receive me like a son just returned home," laughingly remarked Mr. Bennett in reply to the applause which greeted him when he rose to speak. He went on to talk of the necessity of not thinking only in terms of one province, but of all Canada, and preached his doctrines of peace and unity. As to appeals which have been made in Quebec against the Conservative party, he said the party would prefer defeat rather than deny the rights of minorities. "This party will go into ignominous defeat and cease to exist before it will tolerate doing away with any of your rights," he declared.

On June 24, 1928, at Laprairie, Quebec, Mr. Bennett paid tribute to the work of French Canadians in building up Canada and regretted he could not deliver his speech in the beautiful French tongue. On that occasion his speech was reported as follows by the Canadian Press:

"We must respect the rights of the minority whether in this province, Prince Edward Island or any other province," Mr. Bennett declared in recalling that the Conservative party under Sir John A. Macdonald had suffered defeat in protecting the rights of the minority.

"This Canada of ours must go forward without any dividing line of race, creed or religion, and in this course lies our salvation," he declared. The British North America Act which protected the right of the French minority could not be lightly set aside, he asserted.

These two articles do not very well coincide; they would seem to correspond about as well as the triangle and the circle, if I might be permitted to use that example. I hope that if the leader of the opposition has any control over the Conservative organizations in Saskatchewan he will put the brakes on that particular brand of politics.

I was pleased to note the remarks of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) as they appear in Hansard on April 29. On that occasion he took exception to newspaper editorials and clippings from the Regina Daily Star containing attacks on the Roman Catholic church, and apparently he was very much concerned with these newspaper articles. I am heartily in accord with him in his condemnation of that disrupting and un-Canadian style of politics. At this time I would like to read a few remarks of the hon. gentleman on that occasion. He said:

I have a considerable number of constituents, probably one-half, who are of the Roman Catholic faith, and a considerable number of those are of the French Canadian race. I find circulated amongst those people newspaper editorials, small excerpts reprinted from the Regina Star and other papers containing attacks upon the Roman Catholic faith that I, from my training, breeding and education, could certainly never endorse. I find those being circulated in my constituency among my electors, as providing a reason why I should not be returned to parliament from that constituency, simply because I am alleged to be in some sort of a conspiracy with the Saskatchewan government, of whose very composition I am ignorant, to wipe out the Catholic church and to make the Ku Klux Klan supreme in that province. I say to the right hon. gentleman and to those of his supporters who manipulate such propaganda, that if that is continued I am prepared to go throughout the length and breadth of the province of Quebec and tell the people, as I am telling him to-day, that the restricted rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority in those prairie provinces are in a large measure due to the terms of the constitutional acts of 1905 which were amended in committee by the government of which Sir Wilfrid was leader, in order to gain for his government an increased support in the English speaking provinces in which the Protestants had a majority. I now say to my hon. friend that if we are to avoid these discussions in my constituency and in the surrounding constituencies, they must at least avoid attributing to me any persistent hostility to the Roman Catholic faith—

An hon. MEMBER: What about the British preference?

Mr. BOCK: To get back to the question of the British preference, I must say that I listened with considerable interest to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion). I noticed that he seemed to take very keen delight in abusing and ridiculing everything in connection with this budget and the Liberal party generally. I was much impressed by the vigorous manner in which this hon. gentleman unloaded his logic. Probably I should use the word language rather than logic. While I had previously held the opinion that the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) was entitled to the belt for rapid-fire oratorical efforts, I am afraid that hon. gentlemen had better look to his laurels because in my opinion the hon. member for Fort William almost eclipsed the record of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest. It would be interesting to have an endurance contest staged between these two hon. gentlemen. I would suggest that Mr. Speaker might donate an oratorical challenge cup to be competed for in open competition. I would venture to say that if my hon. friend the leader of the opposition did not win it himself it would be captured by either the hon. member for Fort William or the hon. member for Toronto Northwest. In the opening remarks of the hon. member for Fort William he stated that he could not understand anything contained in the budget, yet he followed that remark by a criticism which was more extensive in character than the criticisms of any other half dozen members combined. His remarks reminded me of a character in Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn." Huckleberry Finn's father was said to have been the champion cusser of the entire neighbourhood, and his devoted son "Huckleberry" being very proud of his old dad, boasted that his parent could cuss faster and more effectively thant any other man in the community. He elaborated upon his father's ability by saying the the elder Finn could begin by cussing his closest neighbour, and from that point would include all the residents of the village, cussing them individually and collectively in a most efficient manner. Then he would widen the compass of his maledictions to include the adjoining neighhood, and he would cuss in particular any person of outstanding importance. After he had completed that category he would take in the senators, judges, congressmen and everyone in authority, always winding up with the president of the United States. He would give the president a thorough cussing and then, for fear he might have overlooked someone, would start with the president once more and go backwards, cussing them all over again. If Huckleberry Finn's father was the champion cusser of the United States I think the hon. member for Fort William might qualify as the champion vituperator, if I might use the word, of the House of Commons, for apparently he took a leaf out of Mr. Finn's Book and retraced his steps to make sure that no member of the government had been neglected.

However, from what I could gather from the occasional drift of reason which could be discerned through his barrage of ridicule I could catch no glimpse of the policy the hon. gentleman would suggest as a substitute for the policy he was criticizing so severely. He did, however, live up to a prediction made by his leader the other day in speaking in Guelph at the nomination meeting of the hon. member for South Wellington, when he said that all converts could be relied upon to make a mess of things. After listening to the speech of the hon. gentleman—of course, he may not be a 100 per cent convert; he may be only a backslider—I was reminded of an occasion during the campaign of 1926, in my own constituency. During that year the Tories fought their campaign with practically no ammunition except the customs scandal and blue ruin; at least that was the case in the west whatever it might have been in the east. They talked customs scandal and blue ruin exclusively in my part of the country.

The leader of the opposition honoured the town of Shaunavon with a visit, during which he addressed a large audience in the local theatre on behalf of the candidate for the Maple Creek constituency. This was the same candidate who was nominated just a couple of weeks ago, at the meeting during which the editor of the Regina newspaper made his startling oration. The leader of the opposition was the main speaker at that meeting, of course, and he had a good audience; the hall was filled. He was in good shape that night; and did not have any trouble at all in speaking and was not embarrassed by any means. This was the first time I had ever seen the leader of the opposition, and I had driven many miles to see him. Of course I did not meet the hon. gentleman, but I was amazed at the way he unloaded conversation. He lambasted the Liberal party wonderfully that night. He took the customs department all apart, tore the officials into shreds, and busted the government wide open. He took a couple of kicks at George Spence, the sitting member for the constituency; put Moses Aziz in gaol and threw away the key, and then took us all for a ride on some boat called the Maggie, or the Margaret. He showed us a wonderful time, and all admitted he was a great speaker. He had language to burn and he burned plenty of it.

After the leader of the opposition had burned up the government pretty successfully, he mentioned that the Tory party was going to safeguard everybody, although he did not say much about protection. He said a vote for the Tory candidate was going to pave highways to happiness, as I remember it, and with little talk of tariff or any other policy he had us just about convinced that if his party was elected it would turn us from bankruptcy to prosperity over night, and that this would happen if only we would get aboard his political band wagon. After he had mopped his perspiring brow and the dust had settled down a bit, he informed the electors that if they wanted another spasm he could turn on some more, but intimated that he would prefer to answer a few questions if any person cared to put them to him. No one volunteered for a moment to ask questions, because the audience were still more or less spellbound, finally a tall, rather tired looking fellow sitting down about the middle of the hall, who from his riding boots and general appearance looked as though he might have come in from some ranch, got to his feet and in a mild tone of voice asked the chairman if the speaker would tell him something about the policy of the Tory party. A solemn hush fell upon that meeting; you could almost hear the chairman gulp as he nearly swallowed his Adam's apple. The man sitting next to the rancher edged away from him as though embarrassed at being even close to a man who would ask a question, which was considered rather impertinent. However, the leader of the opposition rose to the occasion; he stepped to the front of the platform, fixed the questioner with his eagle eye, pointed an accusing finger at him and, in a voice filled with scorn, repeated those well known words which I am sure many of us have heard him use. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." About that time the audience caught their breath and heaved a sigh of relief. Apparently they had expected to see the inquisitive rancher wither right up in his boots, but to their amazement he never batted an eye; he replied to the leader of the opposition that he had come to the meeting to hear something about the policy of the Conservative party, but so far he had heard nothing but a tirade of abuse and ridicule directed against everything connected with the Liberal government. He said he had only asked that question because he was interested in learning what the opposition had to offer by way of a policy. Mr. Bennett then rather amplified his previous explanation by stating that in his opinion he had been explaining the Conservative doctrine for more than an hour, and once more he said to that man: "He that hath ears to hear, and hear not; he that hath eyes to see and see not, it were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he were cast into the sea."

After he had so successfully disposed of this seeker for information the meeting broke up in the usual way, but there were many murmurs heard throughout the crowd because that inquisitive rancher appeared to have started a new train of thought in the minds of the audience and when the campagn was over the candidate on whose behalf the leader of the opposition had spoken was defeated by Hon. George Spence by between 2,000 and 3,000 of a majority. So it appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that something more than ridicule and abuse will be necessary during this coming election. They will require something more definite in the way of a national policy than they have yet revealed, if they expect to attain even a percentage of that success which the most optimistic among them are predicting.

All of us who listened to the pronouncement of the Minister of Finance on May 1 have been wondering just what has come over the spirit of the Liberal party. I have been a member of this house for nearly nine sessions, and it has been instilled into my brain that the policy of the party now in powe was just the reverse of the underlying intent of the budget presented this year. Throughout the whole history of the Liberal party, especially when elections were in the offing, there have been sudden conversions, and there have been at least two or three similar budgets presented during the nine years I have been a member of this house. When the government's ear was to the ground, and when the electors were making known their disapproval of government policy, the Liberal party always has run true to form and has not hesitated to depart from its traditional principles on the eve of the vote taking. The Minister of Finance must have been placed in an ironical position in delivering this budget, having regard to his previous political commitments both in and out of this house, and especially in view of the statements made upon his first platform appearance in the city of Regina. I regret that due to domestic illness the hon. minister has been prevented from being present during the whole of this debate. In that regard I am sure he has the sympathy of every member of this house. But while there may be ample excuse for the absence of the Minister of Finance, there is absolutely no excuse for the absence from this chamber during this debate of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Crerar). In the name of the people of this country I say to the Minister of Railways that it will not do for him to shirk attendance at this debate; he must rise to his feet during the course of this discussion and justify if he can his present political position, having regard to his previous history. The country, and especially the province of Manitoba will be satisfied with nothing less than an explanation either of his conversion or of his recantation.

There is considerable in this budget which warrants careful study and analysis, as I do not believe that any hon. member in listening to the announcements in the budget speech was able to grasp the full importance of the various sections and provisions. It would be strange indeed if any announcement of policy did not contain some good points. There are some points in this budget worthy of the careful consideration of the people of this country and of the members of this house, but those points which do not meet the fiscal conditions at present obtaining in this country are worthy only of the condemnation of the people of Canada. I venture to assert that most of the first-blush verdicts which have been made in respect to this budget will be reversed after a final analysis has been made. Especially is that true with respect to those parts of the budget which are protectionist or which have to do with the application of the British preference.

I have not the time at my disposal to go into a detailed analysis of the provisions of the iron and steel schedule of the budget. I must confess that this is a technical matter and only those well versed in the technicalities of the steel industry are able to pronounce judgment upon it. It would be presumptuous on my part to attempt to make a detailed analysis or to express any final judgment or conclusion. However, I feel sure that we will not obtain the full measure of benefits which I have no doubt the Minister of Finance and the ministry generally sincerely desired should accrue as a result of the changed schedules. The underlying intent in the revision of the steel and iron schedule and of the British preference was to transfer in a degree—just how much we have not been told—a portion of the import business in iron and steel either to this country or to the old country If that is the honest intent of the ministry, I have no quarrel to make because ever since this party came into power in 1921 the business of this country has degenerated to a large degree into the hands of our neighbours to the south. Any reasonable measure which will transfer business from the United States to Canada, or failing to Canada then to the old country, per se merits our very sincere support. Whether or not this budget will have that effect upon the iron and steel business of this country I do not feel competent to say; I can only express the opinions of others who I believe know what the conditions are. The well considered judgment of gentlemen who should be in a position to judge of this matter is that with respect to certain of the heavier iron and steel commodities there will be a substantial reversal of the present trade conditions, but with respect to other features of the iron and steel trade there will be substantially no difference. In so far as the government has not gone far enough to effect the desired result, the government is to blame.

The budget, as has been said this afternoon, naturally divides itself into three major aspects: the question of the revision of the tariff schedules, the question of the extension of the British preference, and the adoption of the system of countervailing duties, which is, I understand, not exactly a new departure, but which has been put into effect at least by the Liberal party for the first time. I shall not attempt to deal further with the affirmative features of the first aspect of the budget, but before I resume my seat I desire to say a word or two from the opposite standpoint and I suppose I might do so at this point as well as later on. I want to confess to great disappointment that on the eve of a general election the government has not done something more for Canadian industry and labour. That is a very general statement and I should, I suppose, particularize.

I have in mind two industries in my own immediate community. One is a branch of the cotton industry and the other is related to the boot and shoe industry. I must at once take issue with the remark of the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) that there should have been any extension of the British preference with reference to boots and shoes or cottons. I would say to her: "Have a heart," and I would take her gently by the hand, lead her down to my community, and show her, because there is an old adage that seeing is believing. I would take her to a beautiful little town situated three miles from my own city where away back in 1882 one of the great pioneers of the Dominion established with his own money, with the foresight which was characteristic of him, a great industry in order that the people of that community and country might live at home and not have to go abroad to earn their living. It is true that the industry which he established was not, in the language of some of our free trade friends, indigenous to the country; but at all events he was a man of vision, and there he built of brick, mortar and machinery what was at that time the largest cotton mill in the Dominion of Canada, and which stands to-day as practically the only monument to his memory. That industry has been going on under one ownership or another until the present day. But let me tell the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) who, I believe, is very solicitous for his friends in the boot and shoe trade, that never before in the history of the cotton industry has there been such depression, yes, despair, as there is to-day. I would show the hon. member for Southeast Grey a beautiful little community with a single industry employing in normal times 800 well paid, happy contented artisans, maintaining a happy population of more than 2,000 souls who, in turn, buy the entire produce of the surrounding country. To-day, would you believe it, as a result of the changes that have been made, not this year but in previous years, by the present government, those people have been reduced so that within the last few months they have been working just three days a week. That has meant all the difference between a happy, contented community and one that is just on the border line of poverty. One of the complaints I have against the budget is that no relief has been afforded for the textile industry. I believe I could duplicate in Quebec, the province of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, the picture which I am endeavouring to paint in the house to-night, and I can duplicate and more than duplicate it in other sections of my own province.

Mr. CAHAN: It can be increased one hundredfold in the province of Quebec.

Mr. HANSON: I could take the hon. member for Southeast Grey down to the city of St. John where years ago two cotton mills were built by one family and where to-day we have the announcement that one of those mills is to be closed permanently, to the loss of the industrial life of the whole community and to the especial loss of the people engaged in that industry. I am not particularly concerned with the stockholders of Canadian Cottons Limited. The friends of the Minister of Justice situated in the city of Montreal, and especially his friend in the Senate, no doubt have had something to say about that from the standpoint of the shareholders of the company. But let me say this on their behalf: I believe it is a very well managed institution, but for the first time in many years they have just passed their common dividend and I understand only from to-day's paper that the statement of last year is so bad that the dividend on the preferred shares, that is the outstanding shares of that company preferred as to dividends, upon which shares they rely very largely for their borrowed capital, is in danger of being passed and I have no doubt will be passed. I make a special plea on behalf, not of the shareholders of this corporation or of any other manufacturing corporation, but of the thousands of men and women of this country who have been deprived of a decent livelihood by virtue of the policy of attrition adopted by the government in the last nine years in respect to the textile industry.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): The same thing obtains in the United States.

Mr. HANSON: The same thing does not obtain in the United States, and the hon. member does not know what he is talking about.

I am glad to know that the boot and shoe industry has a noble champion in the person of the hon. member for Quebec East, the present Minister of Justice, but I want to put it to him that it is not fair to increase the British preference on boots and shoes to the detriment of our own industry. I yield to no one in my loyalty to the empire; that loyalty has been paid for in blood, but I say to him that in the exercise of the power of extension of the British preference every care should be taken by the government not to injure a presently existing Canadian industry. The boot and shoe industry in this country, especially in the higher class grades of men's boots, is just shivering on the brink of disaster and any further extension of the British preference with respect to boots and shoes will mean the closing up of all the high class factories in the Dominion. I am sure that if the Minister of Justice will investigate the matter he will find from his own friends that that statement is not far astray.

Unconsciously, Mr. Speaker, I have drifted from the first aspect of this budget to the second. I do not intend to labour further on the question of the British preference, because I believe that we can illustrate the dangers of the extension of the principle of the British preference by concrete examples better than in any other way.

Just one word more with respect to the boot and shoe industry. Boots and shoes made in my home city and in the cities of the province of Quebec are to-day selling in the retail stores throughout Canada in competition with boots and shoes made in Northampton, England. On the surface I have no quarrel with that, nor would I have if the two industries, the one located in this country and the other in the old land, were on an exact parity. But they are not, and unless the standards of living and all labour conditions in the old land change, they never will be on an exact parity. In other words, the standard of living of the boot and shoe operators in our Canadian cities is away above and beyond the standard of living of similar operators in Northampton, England. Now unless we are going to adopt the position that we ought not to have this industry at all in this country, or the alternative position that we want the standard of living of our boot and shoemakers in this country lowered to the standard of living in the old land, and working conditions here comparable with the conditions obtaining in Northampton, England, our boot and shoe industry, unless something is done, has got to go down, and I appeal to the Minister of Justice to stand pat on this question of the extension of the British preference with relation to boots and shoes. He has not seen fit to do it in this budget, and I fear very much for the future if the Minister of Justice should be translated elsewhere. I doubt very much, especially in view of the increasing ascendency of the free trade element in the Liberal party save and except as exemplified by this budget, whether the boot and shoe makers of this country would have on the other side of the house any champion if the Minister of Justice should go. So one of the chief faults that I have to find with this budget is what it does not contain.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Would the hon. member be good enough to tell the house what change he would make in the tariff with regard to the boot and shoe industry?

Mr. HANSON: Let me preface my answer by saying that I want to make it quite plain that I am expressing my own view. I would adopt such a policy as would stabilize the Canadian industry first, and before I went to any economic conference or considered the further extension of the principle of reducing the British preference I would make a thorough survey of the whole situation, and where I did not think the tariff high enough to start with, I would jack it up first and consider an extension of the preference afterwards. I would jack it up to such a point as to make it plain that I would allow no Canadian industry to suffer in unequal competition with British industry. That is my answer, and I would not be open to the charge of disloyalty either, because the Britisher is a man who plays fair and I think he would say that I was doing just what was right.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Is that the policy of the Conservative party on this same item?

Mr. HANSON: That opens up a very wide question. I took very great care to tell my hon. friend from Saskatoon (Mr. Young), who is a friend of mine, I think, that I was speaking for myself. My leader is quite capable of speaking for himself on this or any other question. Further, let me say that if I have read aright the debates of this parliament in previous years I am simply reiterating in different form the doctrine of the late lamented Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

I want to address a few remarks to the question of countervailing duties. I am satisfied that the countervailing duties proposed in this budget are just a feeble gesture on the part of this government in answer to the attitude of the United States. It is nothing but a feeble gesture, and I have no doubt that it wall fall short of the intent of the minds which devised the suggestion. Every thoughtful Canadian—I do not think that this feeling is confined by any means to members of my own party, although I make bold to say that we first seized on the point and recognized it from the very beginning—has felt the danger of the gradual absorption of our trade by the United States. There has been in my own mind a lurking fear of the economic conquest of this country. The development of our trade with the United States, especially in manufactured goods, coupled with the attitude, not of the people of the United States but of the government of the United States, during the last eight years ever since the Fordney-McCumber tariff came into operation, has been fraught with great danger to the economic life of this country. For eight years I have heard gentlemen representing the point of view which I support on this side of the house beg and plead with the present leader of this government (Mr. Mackenzie King) to take notice and some action with regard to that economic situation. Last session especially some of us on this side of the house begged the Prime Minister to take official notice of the action and attitude of the congress of the United States, but until the very eve of an election our pleadings have fallen on deaf ears. But now the great voice of the people willy-nilly has got across to this government, and I believe that there is nothing that the party opposite fears so much to-day as the attitude of shilly-shallying—I can find no better expression—on this great national problem which has characterized the Liberal party during the past eight years. I believe that the Prime Minister is alive to the danger, and he seeks to meet it by this countervailing effort of his. In my humble judgment that effort will fall far short of its intent. In the first place the number of items to which the countervailing duties apply is far too low. I am not going to speak of the question of a brick for brick tariff. I am going to leave that to the Minister of Agriculture to chew over and reflect upon, especially in view of the way in which I have heard him pour ridicule year after year on my late leader. I want to say to the Minister of Agriculture that he along with his colleague the Minister of Railways will have to do some heart-searching. I shall leave that to him. I want to treat this question, if I can, from a business-like standpoint.

This policy of countervailing duties will not in my humble judgment divert the trade that it is sought to divert; neither will the extension of the British preference nor the imposition of certain duties in the iron and steel schedules. If I understand present economic conditions, there is only one way to divert trade from the United States into the hands of our own producers or of our kinsmen across the sea, and that is to raise the duties on manufactured goods, or on other goods that we want to shut out, so high that our foreign competitors cannot send them here. Only in that way will you effectively divert trade from the United States to the British Empire in such commodities as we cannot manufacture here.

I am not at the moment seeking to do that. What I prefer is that we should firmly establish a fiscal policy that will build up this country first. That is the policy my leader has been preaching in season and out of season ever since appointment to his present high office, and that is the policy that the mass of the thinking people of Canada, the artisans and workers, desire. I know that the people in my own community are not so much concerned about the cost of certain articles as they are about having the money in their pockets to buy those articles. I should like that truth to sink into the hearts and souls of some of my free trade friends opposite, because I do not question their sincerity; I question their judgment. In this connection, sir, I believe that when the electorate have an opportunity to declare their views, they will speak in no uncertain tone.

On motion of Mr. Deslauriers the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Wednesday, May 14, 1930.

The house met at three o'clock.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Second report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.—Mr. Kay.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 139, to incorporate the Hamilton Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Bell (Hamilton).

PETITION

PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. E. A. McPHERSON (Portage la Prairie) moved:

That the petition of E. H. Muir and others, praying for an act of incorporation in the name of the Portage la Prairie Mutual Insurance Company, presented this day be referred to the select standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing orders 92 and 95 in reference thereto.

Motion agreed to.

NAVAL TREATY

TEXT OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT FOR THE LIMITATION AND REDUCTION OF NAVAL ARMAMENT, TABLED

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to lay on the table copy in English and French of the international treaty for the limitation and reduction of Naval Armament, London, April 22, 1930, signed in respect of the Dominion of Canada by the plenipotentiary named therein.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 138, to amend the criminal code.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This bill proposes a certain number of amendments to the criminal code. I will merely indicate a few of them. First there are amendments suggested by the interprovincial conference that took place two or three months ago between the attorneys general of the various provinces in connection with stock market operations.

There is an amendment repealing certain sections of the criminal code concerning sedition. This is the same as that which has passed the house on various occasions but which did not get through the other chamber.

There are certain sections which embody a particular bill which has passed the Senate on two occasions in regard to the prevention of the importation and sale of certain weapons, firearms, for instance, except under special conditions. I think this bill which has passed the Senate on two occasions was considered and recommended by a special committee of the house, but the session ended before it could be submitted to the house.

There is a provision prohibiting certain advertisements or the giving of tips in regard to horse races and other games. That provision is similar to one that has been passed by this house on two or three occasions but has failed of being adopted in the other house.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is the other house safe now?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know. There are also certain amendments suggested by the attorneys general of Ontario and the other provinces concerning culpable negligence especially in connection with motor car accidents. Certain other sections have been urged by representatives of the Humane Society in various parts of the country concerning cruelty to animals. Finally, there are certain amendments in the matter of procedure which have been suggested and recommended by the attorneys general and other persons entrusted with the administration of criminal justice in the province.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

In cases where it is not convenient to supply rations in kind, a ration allowance of 60 cents per diem is granted.

Married N.C.O's and constables receive the same pay as those who are unmarried but a double ration is granted in the former case.

(2) No.

(3) The pay of non-commissioned officers and constables was increased in 1919, in accordance with the increased cost of living, and is now considered adequate and in proportion to the pay of other organizations.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS

WORK AT FIRST NARROWS, VANCOUVER

Mr. STEVENS:

For a copy of the report of the resident engineer and/or of the Deputy Minister of Marine in regard to the work being done under contract in the First Narrows, Vancouver, British Columbia.

RUSSIAN ANTHRACITE COAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to ask the government if they are yet in a position to make a report on the Russian anthracite importations.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): No, Mr. Speaker. We are still gathering information in connection with this question.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May we expect a report before the end of the session?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall do my very best to expedite a report.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. SHORT (Digby-Annapolis): An order of the house was issued on April 28th last for a return of correspondence in connection with steam trawlers and draggers. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) when I may expect the correspondence.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I shall make inquiries and try to expedite the bringing down of the return

CIVIL SERVICE

MINIMUM SALARY OF ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS A MONTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): I would ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) a question based on a telegram that I received this morning from Regina, from the secretary of the amalgamated civil servants, whether it is the intention of the government to deal with their request for a minimum salary of $100 per month.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I assume that the telegram which my hon. friend has received is similar to several dozens that I have received and all of which are worded in exactly the same way. I had better read one of these telegrams to the house because it is desirable that hon. members should have the contents before them. This wire is one, as I have said, of very many that are similarly worded:

> Dominion civil servants emphatically protest against any further delay in establishment of one hundred dollar minimum. After many years patient waiting can parliament assure us that legislation based on our request for adequate salaries will be introduced and passed before dissolution?

The house will observe that the request is of parliament to state what it is going to do in respect of a minimum salary for civil servants. Whoever was responsible for drafting and circulating that particular telegram has not to my mind been particularly helpful to the cause of the civil servants, because I do not believe that parliament as such could be expected to reply to a communication so worded.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Not by five cents.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as the government is concerned, I may say that we are giving very careful attention to the whole question of what is to be done with regard to the salaries of members of the public service. A general election has been announced, and I assume that any pronouncement which the government may make with respect to salaries of the civil servants would be viewed by the country and possibly by members of the house as having been made in the light of that announcement. May I say that that is one aspect of the question to which the government at the moment is giving very careful consideration? There is a desire, I believe, on the part of members of the public service to have the position of those in the lower grades investigated in accordance with one of the recommendations of the Beatty report before action is taken on the Beatty report itself. It is just possible that the government may think it advisable to follow that course, but for the present I do not wish to make any announcement as to what will be done beyond saying that I do think, a general election having been announced, it is in the public interest that great caution should be taken by the administration and by parliament as respects any rivalry between the different parties in this house as to who is to have the last word in the matter of either increases or decreases.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government at this session to make provision for placing the staff of the Soldier Settlement Board on a permanent basis as a part of the civil service?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am sorry that I cannot answer my hon. friend at the moment.

TARIFF REDUCTIONS AND WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Thompson) inquired as to when he might expect further information than that contained in the return brought down on April 28, concerning certain tariff reductions. I should like to draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that this supplementary return has been tabled this day.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF THE DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 13, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the amendment thereto to Mr. Bennett, and the amendment to the amendment thereto of Mr. Fansher (Last Mountain).

Mr. HERMAS DESLAURIERS (St. Mary) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the budget of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) has heretofore afforded to our opponents the opportunity of making unwarranted criticisms which really have no weight whatsoever. In 1921, the people of Canada worried in many ways by the government of that day, desired ardently an era of peace. It was then that the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mackenzie King) put in his program as an outstanding feature, a promise of an era of peace, should the citizens of Canada entrust him with their confidence. No one, to-day, can state that the Prime Minister failed to carry out his promise and that his efforts did not tend to ensure peace to this country. Because our neighbours, through their legislation, seem to express a desire of ceasing all trade with us, the Prime Minister, without any fuss directed the efforts of his government in negotiating with better disposed countries. On the other hand our opponents, if we are to believe them, would have preferred to see the government take part in a series of provocative tariff wranglings, forgetting that imported page of history, when England in 1775, on a simple tariff question, lost her wealthiest colony, the United States, and might also have lost Canada, had it not been for the bullet of a valiant French-Canadian which laid low the brave General Montgomery, saved the situation and preserved the colony to the British Empire. These tariff changes may perhaps afford the opportunity to a few trade profiteers to squeeze for a time the people of this country, but their little sport will be of short duration since our relations with the West Indies and Bermuda, helped by our merchant marine equipped for the transport of fruits and vegetables will enable the government to improve conditions without much delay. The people must continue to trust the present government, if it wishes to enjoy peace in this country, and they can rest assured that if, one day, Canada is annexed to the United States the Liberal party's policy will not be to blame but the fault will be with the provoking methods of the Tory policy.

One question of which the present budget makes no mention, but which is very much alive, is that of the canalization of the St. Lawrence river. For some years it has been before the universities, the newspapers, the parliaments—as much American as Canadian—and in commercial circles under the title of "The Great Lakes Waterway," contemplating the canalization of the St. Lawrence to the head of the Great Lakes. In certain quarters this scheme is considered possible and practical. The Federation of Shippers, an association regarded as an authority in navigation, declares that the project is a serious error from the standpoint of navigation; the Chamber of Commerce of Montreal, a body composed of business men, opposes it from the economic viewpoint. But Ontario sees Toronto becoming an ocean port and Montreal a secondary harbour; the farmers of the west allow themselves to believe that the cost of shipping their grain will be made practically negligible; while others still more enthusiastic go to the length of hailing lake Superior as "the Mediterranean of the North!"

Numerous engineers come forward to present claims and opinions which are contradictory, and depend upon the party to which they belong.

However, from what we can deduce from official reports at our disposal, it seems to be agreed that the enterprise is practicable. I consider the question in the light of two factors, the time and the money. These reports and the supporters of the scheme tell us that navigation would be the principal objective and that the development of hydro-electric power would be secondary. However, setting to one side all these diverse opinions, interested or not, carefully studied, or not, I will consider this from the point of view of business and logic.

Starting from this point of view, I contend that the enterprise is not inspired by the actual needs of navigation, that the future holds out no promise of a time in which the project could be called necessary, and, moreover, that it cannot have navigation as its principal objective. Finally I say that the question of electrical power cannot be held a factor at present, since we have to deal with American financiers interested in the eastern part of the United States and who are at present engaged in figuring how they can lay a heavy hand upon our water-power resources for the benefit of their country.

Moreover, the completion of the project would not deal a death blow to the port of Montreal, nor abet the ambitions of Toronto, nor would it reduce in any degree the transportation costs of the western farmer. Thus, as it is a question involving an expenditure of probably a billion dollars, the greatest caution should be adopted before taking any decision, whether upon a joint enterprise or otherwise. It is the duty of the taxpayer, responsible already for two and one-half billion dollars of national debt, to study seriously what is proposed before committing himself.

Any person who knows anything, however little, of the history of his own country will admit that in the early days of colonization the St. Lawrence river was the only commercial artery, and that it rendered substantial service to the district through which it flowed. In later times it has continued to serve, but not alone, since it has shared the commerce with the railways. The progress, not alone of Canada, but of every country in the world, has imposed upon trade generally the necessity of rapid transportation, which has resulted in the development of the railways as carriers, a system of transportation more rapid, less dear to insure, less exposed to weather hazards, going everywhere and at all times, so that transportation by water, especially in the canals, is very slow and does not possess any of the advantages of which the railways boast.

From these considerations we see, not only in Canada, but also in all other countries, a shrinkage in the volume of goods shipped by canal, while we see, on the other hand, the shipments by rail increase substantially, except in a few exceptional cases.

To emphasize this point—knowing that our canal systems are actually utilized only to 66 per cent of their capacity, considering that Fort Churchill in the future will divert a considerable volume of the grain of the West from the St. Lawrence, that the development and steadily increasing accommodation of the harbours of Vancouver and Victoria will absorb more and more, notwithstanding the methodical reorganization of agriculture in Russia, the serious competition of Tchecoslovakia, the southern republics and the Scandinavian countries—all these things are surely sufficient to show that the existing canals are more than adequate. They force us to admit that we may look for a gradual diminution in the annual tonnage passing through our canals, since we know that half of our western grain production goes through the United States by rail via Buffalo, even New York, at a greater cost of transportation, and that this condition will continue into the future. It surely is not possible for us, therefore, to give the need for wider transportation facilities on the St. Lawrence as the premier object of this enterpise, neither for the present nor for the future.

The need for water power cannot be urged on behalf of the project since Quebec and Ontario are exporting electrical energy by the hundreds of thousands of horse power to the United States, under yearly contracts which are susceptible of being cancelled from year to year if the provinces so desire.

Such is not the case with the Eastern states, the real ones behind the scheme and the only ones to derive any benefit from it, more particularly if they could get this power at half price after having inveigled us into paying half the cost of the undertaking.

The taxpayers always foot the bill and they should, in their own interests, learn and retain just what it costs to build these so-called seaway shipping canals; the methods and the results of these undertakings are, to my mind, always the same in all countries.

When the Panama Canal was first broached it was understood that the cost would be in the neighbourhood of $100,000,000; but when the work was done people realized that it had cost $430,000,000. The Chicago canal, which according to the first estimates, could be completed for $16,000,000, cost all told $92,000,000. The Manchester canal cost 110 per cent more than the estimate, as did the Suez canal; the Welland canal, supposed to cost only $55,000,000, will have cost $115,000,000 or $120,000,000 before its completion.

This scheme, according to the engineers' first estimates, was to cost $252,000,000 (report of June 24, 1925). Later on this was revised to $650,000,000. Other engineers that I have consulted have told me that this undertaking might well cost one billion dollars or more. So we are perfectly justified in leaving a considerable margin in all these calculations, since these engineers' estimates have always been wide of the mark and the final cost has been two, three, even four times the original figure, despite the fact that the engineers responsible have been men with a well deserved reputation for science and workmanship.

Therefore the people of the country have fair warning that they are confronted with an undertaking of a kind that is always deceptive and decidedly expensive; that they should think well before going into an enterprise of that nature.

Let us say that our part of the cost will be $325,000,000 or one-half of $650,000,000; the yearly fixed charges will be a heavy burden for the public to bear. The annual interest at 4½ per cent will be $14,625,000; maintenance and operation of a 25-foot canal will cost about $2,000,000 more; roughly a yearly total of $17,000,000 which in all likelihood will be near $20,000,000. While two economic factors which remain unchanged, time and transportation insurance, cause half of our Canadian wheat to be sent by rail through Buffalo via New York, it is nevertheless a fact that the quantity of wheat shipped to Montreal through our canals averages less than 100,000,000 bushels a year. But, speaking in a broad way, let us suppose that in 1935 we carry 400,000,000 bushels; it will require 4½ cents per bushel to meet the annual fixed charges of $17,000,000.

If, instead of building this canal for $650,000,000, with a yearly fixed charge of $17,000,000 for the transportation of 400,000,000 bushels of wheat, the government helped the farmers of the west with a bonus of two cents a bushel, at a total cost of $8,000,000, which implies that our present canal system would be utilized to only 50 per cent of its capacity, the one and only object of those who are behind this scheme, namely a reduction of two cents a bushel in the cost of our western wheat to the seaboard would be attained and the government would save the balance of the $17,000,000 or $9,000,000. It is quite evident that the government cannot accept this policy of a bonus which, would be class legislation of the worst kind; but the promoters have not yet succeeded in showing us that their scheme would bring about a reduction of two cents a bushel in the freight rates. On the contrary, it is more than likely that there will be no reduction whatever. That is what a business man, looking after his own interests, would do in like circumstances. Why should the public authorities not have recourse to the same solution, or else why should they have anything to do with such a scheme? We may readily conclude that the prime object of the enterprise is not navigation, which is more than amply provided for; we know that the proposed innovation would not result in lowering the freight rates; for corroboration we have only to look to the engineers' schedule of expenses where they allow 5-6 of the $650,000,000 for water-power development, which means 5-6 for the main object of the scheme power.

Of the total cost of $650,000,000 there is set aside the sum of $120,155,000 for digging a 25-foot canal. The Thousand Islands section is to cost $1,100,000; the international waterfalls $33,481,000; lake St. Francis, $980,000; Soulanges $31,594,000, which represents the first group, Soulanges and Lachine forming the second.

Lachine would cost $53,000,000. According to the estimates the first group would yield 2,700,000 h.p., the second group 5 million h.p.

One could not choose a more inopportune time for such an undertaking; we have a population of barely nine millions, we are saddled with 22,000 miles of railway and our national debt is over two billions of dollars. At a time when our war taxes are still a heavy burden foreign speculators come here and try to talk us into accepting this white elephant which will cost at the very least $500,000,000, while it is evident that our navigation system can well get along without it and that we have no need of additional water-powers. We are justified in making an appeal to common sense; for if we go into this thing without due reflection we are bound to pay the consequences.

We must necessarily take into account the opening a new seaport at Churchill with an objective exactly similar to that of the St. Lawrence which, at the start will be another burden on the Canadian taxpayer anl later will attract a considerable share of the St. Lawrence canal's business; also the C.N.R. and C.P.R. will lose a goodly part of their profitable traffic between Georgian bay and Montreal; after all, our western grain can be shipped only once. The first part of the haul is by rail; and since the railroads will have had their receipts lessened for the benefit of the canal system they will eventually have to increase their freight rates on grain; so what the farmer gains on the one hand he sacrifices on the other, and in the end he'll be no better off.

Our canal system as it stands to-day, and it is used to only 50 per cent of its capacity, cost this country $250,000,000. When it was decided to build a canal 14 feet deep from Montreal to lake Superior those responsible foresaw a tremendous increase in traffic. Were their hopes justified? The reports of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics inform us that for a period of 19 years, from 1908—when we began to keep separate statistics for the traffic in American and in Canadian grain—up to 1926 inclusive, there has been a decrease in traffic. The reasons are not far to seek: they always are and always will be the same: quicker delivery and lower insurance rates. In other words the necessity of shipping the goods the quickest possible way and avoid high rates of insurance. Such is the business policy adopted throughout the entire world; and all the engineers' estimates will not change it one iota.

The federal statistics report shows clearly that during this period while water borne traffic decreased there was an increase in railway transport.

In 1913, 11,130,865 tons passed through our canals; in 1925, 9,750,311 tons; and in 1918, 3,369,474.

The difference in the volume of traffic is quite apparent. If we take an average for the five-year period from 1916 to 1921 it gives us 4,559,149 tons.

Let us divide that 19-year period into two parts, the first from 1908 to 1917 inclusively; the second from 1918 to 1926. We find that for the first part 78,197,080 tons passed through our canal, or an average of 7,819,708 tons per year.

During the second part, our canal traffic was 59,065,570 tons, an average of 6,451,752 tons, or a decrease of 4.7 per cent, as contrasted with the first part of the given period.

It cannot be claimed this was due to a general decrease in traffic because during the same period railway traffic increased tremendously. For the first 10 years from 1908 to 1917, our railroads carried 900,691,796 tons or an average per year of 90,069,179 tons for the latter part of this period that is, the nine years from 1917 to 1926, the total traffic reached 1,037,903,947 tons, a yearly average of 114,211,550 tons. So while our canal system suffered a decrease in traffic of 4.7 per cent, our railroads were carrying 25 per cent more freight. This state of affairs was not characteristic of Canada but prevailed throughout the entire world with the one exception of the Panama Canal, which unites two oceans; this justified Prof. Milverton of Chicago in claiming that canals were a commercial error.

At any rate, this furnishes a powerful argument against those who would have us believe that the deepening of the St Lawrence to 25 feet is an urgent necessity. Following along the same line of reasoning we have the case of the Erie canal which serves quite aptly for purposes of comparison to the St. Lawrence project, as it runs through a highly industrialized region, and within the reach of the west, having a certain depth and capable of being further deepened. It would serve the same purpose that the promoters of the St. Lawrence canal have in mind, and perhaps with better chances of success. The aim which the New York state had in view was a canal of 25 feet in depth with prospects of controlling the output of the same territories included in the St. Lawrence scheme. The Senate and Congress unanimously voted $112,000,000 to put into execution this scheme; however, Symmons, an engineer of high repute, having the confidence of the authorities of his country refused to carry it out, qualifying it as a dream, he however deepened it by 5 to 12 feet and this cost double the amount voted. Events proved that he was right, he saved his country a considerable amount of money. Indeed, in the five or six years which followed the deepening of the canal to 12 feet, they did not transport one-fifth of the freight they carried when the canal was but 5 feet deep, and, in 1926, they were losing 80 per cent of the volume of freight, notwithstanding the improvement to the canal; this so astonished the Governor of New York, that he advised the closing of the canal or renting to private companies. This is an example to us showing that we should be careful, if the U.S. did not succeed, how can Canada do better.

The public must give their serious attention to our canal traffic. In 1926, 9,656,190 tons passed through our canal, of this total 3,340,000 tons were grain, 663,000 tons pulp, 351,000 tons sand, manufactured products 723,917 tons, and merchandise 251,066 tons. Machinery being considered as a negligible amount. It is easily seen that the traffic was not very diversified and that the main portion was grain.

It cannot be denied that the geographical position, and bulk transportation over a long distance react to the advantage of the western farmer if he can make use of our canal system. Navigation is a profitable means of transport only when the goods shipped are forwarded to a distributing centre within easy access of a seaport or shipped from one point to be distributed at a similar point, when there is not too much trans-shipment which would increase the rates of transport and would be a disadvantage to the system. Moreover our canals are used only seven months of the year and for certain definite points of destination, which affects only two or three per cent of our total production; on the other hand, our railroads go everywhere throughout the entire year and carry 98 per cent of our products.

Surely it is not reasonable after all we have seen to ask us to undertake such a heavy expenditure at so great a risk. Everyone will admit that any reduction in freight rates through our canals will be of benefit to the western farmers; but it is impossible to admit that our present canal system is inadequate while as a matter of fact we do not use it beyond 50 per cent of its capacity. Neither can we admit that the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway will bring about reduction in freight rates from Fort William. That is, what nobody has succeeded in demonstrating, even in theory. Grain reaches us through one point, that is the Sault St. Marie canal. We have there a lock with a depth of 19.6 feet, hardly used during the season of navigation since it will only accommodate 2 per cent of the grain which reaches us; the remaining 98 per cent pass through the United States locks, which are large and equally allow free passage, the latter have a depth of 24 feet. Although wheat production has considerably increased in the west, we must bear in mind that the capacity of a canal or of any transportation facilities, is determined by the total amount of traffic, and not by part of that traffic, even though important as it may be. The depth of the Canadian lock at Sault St. Marie is 19.6 feet, while that of the American locks are 24 feet, allowing the larger vessels of the Great Lakes to pass through. Lower down we have the new Welland canal which, when completed, will permit vessels to reach places like Prescott, from these the cargoes will be transhipped by barges or other vessels to Montreal, this is more rapid, less dangerous, less costly as regards to insurances and cheaper than by larger vessels.

Every business man who has to do with transporting our western grain must remember that the trip to Fort William has to be made with empty vessels which means double distance and double expense. Whether this canal is built or not, things will be just the same, and those concerned must remember furthermore that these boats will be in dry-dock for five months or more every year. It is really too fantastic to imagine that ocean going liners can penetrate as far inland as lake Superior. In the opinion of shipowners, ignorance alone can inspire such contentions. Every undertaking must be based on economic factors and income must bear a favourable ratio to the cost of investment and upkeep; well, a big ship will cost more than a little one, and will also cost more to operate and maintain.

In the present instance, the cost of transportation and distance would be doubled, consequently its rates could not be lower. The passage through the locks would be slow and the loss of time proportionate to the difficulties and risks of this kind of travel which the insurance companies take advantage of; finally this vessel could make but one trip in the season and thereby remain inactive during five months of the year. These ocean vessels will have to be specially built to travel on the lakes, thereby being more costly and necessitating higher fixed charges. Those were the reasons which induced Colonel Symmons to warn the New York State not to undertake such a scheme, knowing that such vessels would not meet their expenses. Was he not right? When their experience with a system of barges turned out badly, what could they expect from ocean vessels, if not disaster, yet this is what is proposed to us.

The scheme of deepening the St. Lawrence is very similar to that of the Erie Canal. It was inspired by the same motives and sentiments. The geographical and climate conditions are the same; it crosses a similar zone; it would carry the same kind of cargoes. Fortunately for us, the experience of New York in this matter is a precious lesson to us, and Colonel Symmons, who condemned the original scheme, has not been contradicted to date. Moreover, we have challenged any expert in navigation to say that it would be possible to obtain a reduction in the rates of shipping on vessels travelling on the great lakes without a cargo and ballast, exposed to the stormy autumn winds—for its slow propulsion exposes it to the winds—and perhaps forced to anchor during many days as it is the case for small tonnage vessels.

We are therefore justified in concluding that from the point of view of navigation our present canal system is fully equal to our demands for some time to come, that the costly type of vessel demanded by the promoters of the present scheme operating over twice the required route with a consequent doubling of operating expenses paying high insurance rates, crawling along and laid up during five months in the year, is expensive and will never succeed in paying its upkeep, not mentioning that we would also have to grant special rates to the western farmers.

It is our duty to refuse money for such undertakings promoted by speculators whose sole object is to develop power sites for their own private gain. For all these reasons we must come to the inevitable conclusion that from both a business and logical standpoint the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterways is deceptive, costly, and even ruinous for the people of this country, that Canada must not lightly assume any such responsibility; that United States have even less need than Canada of any addition to the existing canal system; that only those who know nothing of the project can expect this seaway to bring about a reduction in freight rates. The main object of this scheme is power, and Canada at the present time has no further need of power development, since we are exporters of power. Quebec exports annually 60,722 h.p. and Ontario 188,175 h.p., which export may cease at our discretion, since it can only be carried on by annual permit.

This is not the case in the neighbouring republic where power is needed for the eastern states. The St. Lawrence waterway is an American scheme promoted by American capitalists organized for the purpose of exploiting our power resources for their own gain; finally, we have every reason to believe that when politics, self-interest, and rivalry come into play, serious misunderstandings might arise, and peace and friendship are worth far more than any such scheme.

We must be considerate of other people's views on various questions, however, on such an important question, I think, that it does not behoove a serious man to contend that there is urgency in putting this scheme into execution in the interest of navigation, when 50 per cent only of our canal capacity is utilized with a yearly decrease in traffic in favour of railways; when everywhere we are witnessing transport facilities developing with the sole aim of sharing our present canal traffic; when we have under our eyes the Erie canal fiasco. We must not lose our head by spreading the rumour that the United States, if we do not make haste, will give birth to such a scheme, no more than we should worry over the election speeches of President Hoover in connection with water powers in the international zone. All what the United States can do is to develop their own powers without interfering with navigation.

It is to say the least, unwise, to pretend that we can play at being equals with one who is stronger than ourselves; this is a lesson we have learned on more than one occasion particularly in the case of the Chicago drainage canal where we became acquainted with our neighbour's appetite. We must not lose sight of the fact that although one state may not be Congress all the states are controlled by the republic, and that when one shares expenses one acquires other rights than that of benevolence.

It is patently dishonest to claim that last year 140,000,000 bushels of our wheat went by way of American ports, because of the depth of our canals. In the first place a certain volume of traffic is forwarded to New York via the Erie canal which has a depth of only 12 feet, while our own are 14 feet deep; but the greater part of this freight is carried by rail at a rate three cents a bushel higher than by way of Montreal. The chief inducement is speed of delivery to Liverpool or other European ports.

At all events, each year, half of our wheat crop finds its way to American ports, while a large volume of American grain passes through Canadian canals, even during years when our canals have but 50 or 75 million bushels to handle. It is therefore not a question of the depth of our canals or elevator congestion.

It is also poor business sense to expect this canal to furnish a market for Maritime coal, when our existing carriers could easily take advantage of such a stage of things, but refuse to do so.

Business is business; such things are settled by the law of supply and demand, and not by any consideration of a sentimental nature. Coal dealers will purchase their coal where prices are lowest. In the scheme of a deep waterway, where the U.S. would have an equal right to navigate, if it was advantageous to the Maritime provinces, it would equally be so to the U.S. Is one serious in putting forth such an argument, when it is well known that the sole aim is the development of 7,500,000 electrical h.p. to be distributed both to Canadians and Americans, thus replacing coal as a motor power. If these promoters were acting in good faith they would cease trying to hide their power development scheme behind a barrage of so-called benefits to navigation; they would talk less about the employment to be given our Canadian workmen since they know full well that a great part of this work vill be done by machinery, that it will only last a limited time, and that once the thing is completed, since Canada has no need of it, and its advantages will accrue more to the U.S. than to Canada, that new industries will spring up on the other side of the border, and our working population will have less and less employment in Canada.

There is no need of counting on the increase in our population. The project is fallacious, on the face of it.

Competition on the grain markets cannot be adduced as an incentive to the realization of this canal project which will only increase our already-heavy annual burden of fixed charges as I have shown in the course of my remarks; it is an error to believe that an increase in the number of seaports necessarily indicates an increase in the volume of trade.

According to Mr. Thomas Robb, the deepening of the St. Lawrence would lower its level, consequently vessels would have to carry less grain; this is one side of the problem that the promoters have not touched.

At all events, if Canada had any capital to risk for the development of navigation, and of waterpowers, the opinion of Mr. Arthur Surveyer, hydrographic engineer, and the opinion of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce should prevail. Why should not this capital be applied to the development of the Georgian Bay scheme? I fail to see any reason.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has exhausted the time at his disposal.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, it was my unhappy lot to be unable to follow the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Deslauriers) who has just taken his seat. No doubt there was much in his speech to merit attention and I would have been glad to follow and to attempt to answer his arguments.

May I refer to some words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) which he used during his presentation of the budget:

> All governments make expenditures on capital account and frequently such undertakings are carried out by the use of borrowed capital. With that practice I find no fault, but may I emphasize the fact that in the past seven fiscal years it has been possible to carry out all capital expenditures of the Dominion without borrowing.

The statement of the minister is quite true, but it would have been fairer for the minister to have added that in the first year of this government's operations, eight years ago, it was obliged to borrow a very considerable sum of money, and in so doing added to the funded debt of the country. I do not for one moment criticize the action of the government in that regard, since it was necessary to do so just as it was necessary for the preceding government to take a similar course on account of large expenditures caused by war and demobilization, and reorganization and consolidation of the Canadian National Railways. It is equally true that during the term of the preceding government, with the exception of the fiscal year 1920, in which ordinary capital expenditures were abnormal to the extent of $55,000,000 on account of extraordinary conditions caused through an unusual amount of money being required for the government railways and for government shipbuilding program, the same state of affairs obtained as that about which the finance minister now boasts. In those years the surpluses in consolidated fund compared more than favourably with those acquired by the government now in power. In each of the six years of the Union government the average surplus was $67,000,000 as compared with an average of $65,000,000 during the first six years in which this government has held office. It is true that surpluses of the last two years have changed the average somewhat in favour of the present government. An analysis however of surpluses during the whole eight years of their term will show that they averaged the amount of $67,000,000 annually, which is similar to the figure shown for the Union government. In addition we must remember that the present government has had a very substantial advantage because of the fact that special receipts to the amount of $45,436,000 have been placed in the treasury as compared with $2,224,800 during the term of the preceding government. The figure which obtained during the regime of the Union government was $2,224,800, while during the regime of the present government the special receipts have totalled $45,436,000.

Some credit has been taken by the government for the fact that $80,000,000 was retired last year; it was inferred by members opposite that that amount of money had been retired from the current surplus of the government. Of course that statement is not true. Part of it was retired from that source but the great bulk of it was retired from the money in the hands of the government at the commencement of this year. Members of the government, and particularly the Prime Minister, are fond of commenting on the great additions to the net debt incurred by the government which preceded the present one claiming that this was caused by the method of financing of that government. They make this claim in order to show that when they assumed office they were faced with financial difficulties. Such a statement has always appeared to me to be grossly unfair. Additions to the net debt during the six years of the preceding government were caused purely and simply by the necessity of providing money for purposes of war and demobilization and for the development of the national railways throughout the period of acquisition and consolidation. Under these headings the expenditures were:

|---|---|---|
| War demobilization. | $1,461,999,000 | $ 7,711,000 |
| Advances to railways.. .. .. .. | 209,672,000 | 131,509,000 |

In addition to that, in 1920 the preceding government took the bold step of including in the net debt of this country some $284,000,000 which was transferred to non-active assets and thereby increased the national debt. These non-active assets, previously being active assets, had formerly operated in the reduction of the net debt. Advances to government railways, of course, always had been carried as non-active assets. It will be seen, therefore, that the preceding government incurred capital expenditures which ordinarily might have been added to the debt of this country, to the following extent:

|---|---|
| War demobilization.. .. .. .. | $1,461,999,804 |
| Railways.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 209,671,940 |
| Advances to railways transferred to non-active assets.. | 284,015,005 |

As against that vast amount of money, the net debt of the country increased by only $1,806,979,630. Thus there was a difference of $148,707,119 by which in effect the preceding government reduced out of current revenue the debt, which otherwise might have been added to the debt of the country.

In the present budget the Minister of Finance takes credit for the fact that this government has carried through all capital expenditures and railway advances out of the ordinary revenue of the government. The fact upon which I want to lay emphasis—and it is a fact—is that this government in that regard has not done so well as the preceding Union government, despite all the disadvantages under which that government laboured. When we consider that in addition to ordinary revenue the present government has had the advantage of some $43,000,000 in special receipts more than the preceding government had, it will be readily seen that the Union government was able to achieve more towards the reduction of the net debt of the country during its six years of office than the present government has been able to do in the eight years it has been in power.

The only refuge left to the Prime Minister in this matter is the statement that the railway expenditures of the preceding government should not be credited, and his reason for making this statement is that these were advances to a railway which was not a going concern and was not paying its way. His statement is that advances which have been made by this government have been advances to a going concern which is paying its way. This is not a fair answer, because it is well known that advances such as those made during the process of reorganization are strictly capital account. The position is somewhat analogous to that occupied by a firm constructing a building; interest on the moneys expended on construction properly take their place in capital account. Moreover, in spite of what the Prime Minister has said, the present government has followed exactly the same course, for in 1923 it charged $77,863,938.23 and in 1924 $23,710,616.70 as advances to the Canadian National Railways, which advances were not made to a railway which was a going concern and paying its way, because in those two years the Canadian National Railways were not doing anything of the kind. In addition, whatever may be the merits or demerits of the system of accounting in force in this country, this government has guaranteed the payment of vast sums which have been borrowed by the Canadian National Railways. These may not be a direct liability, but certainly they are a secondary liability, and these latter amounts must be considered as something of an addition to the debt of the country.

My object in putting these figures on Hansard, Mr. Speaker, is to show that the claims of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are absolutely unfounded in this regard and that the financial record of this government not only is not better than the financial record of the government which preceded it, but is worse by many millions of dollars in the net result.

A surplus always has been a matter of importance to the present government; it has loomed large in its calculations and has been used invariably as an asset in its appeal to the country. For many years there has been a surplus, that is, an amount of money which is available for the reduction of the debt of the country. In connection with one article alone, tea, this government in the last five or six years has taken probably $15,000,000 in taxes directly from the pockets of people of all classes in this country.

That amount of money never has been required to form a surplus or to make ends meet. The tax was put on first as a war measure, not as a protective measure in any sense of the word, and it was only because of the desire of the government to show a handsome surplus at the end of its fiscal year that it did not long ago remove that tax. I say that during the past five years at least the government, with no justification whatever, has taken from the pockets of the people, through a tax perhaps more evenly distributed than any other, this large amount of money which it might very well have foresworn years ago. If anything were required to indicate that this budget is purely for election purposes it is the fact that on the eve of an election the government has seen fit at last to remedy that injustice and to remit to the people that tax which long ago they should have been forgiven.

Speaking generally of the budget, it is quite plain that it is not founded on conviction or principle, but that the basis of the whole concoction is simply this: "How can we so build up this budget as to attract votes in the impending election?" The presentation of the budget was deferred until much later in the session than usually is the case, and it did not take final form until an election had been decided upon. It is quite obvious, of course, that the government must have known that it is in growing disfavour with the people of this country, because of its futility and its indecision in tariff matters, and also because there has been spreading a very well defined feeling and conviction on the part of the people that the government has been far too sensitive to the moods and views of the people of the United States. On the whole, things were going very badly for the government, and it was decided to make of the budget if possible such a gesture as would disarm the criticism which had arisen in many quarters. Further delay undoubtedly was caused by the efforts which were necessary to overcome the reluctance of certain members of the government to stultify themselves and their followers as needs they must in supporting such a budget. However, he that will use all winds must shift his sail, and in the end the thing was accomplished.

Now I fear that the government finds that it has been just a little too clever and has overreached itself, and that the people of this country, whom it hoped to hoodwink, continue to see. They have examined the budget; they have examined the proposals and the claims made in regard to them and they have become fully aware of the weaknesses of the structure. They recognize the inconsistency of those who propose these measures and, in the words of the amendment, have lost confidence in the government and recognize from its past course and its present action that it is not to be entrusted with the direction of the fiscal policy of this country. The people of Canada want straight dealings and definite policies; they do not approve of mere smartness and supposedly clever political manoeuvres in the conduct of their business. The very best day the government had in regard to this budget was the day it was printed in the newspapers. Since then, every day and in every way the budget has continued to lose favour with the people. For instance, it was thought by the framers of the budget that the headlines which would naturally follow the declaration that 270 items had been added to the free list under the British preference would be of some advantage in a campaign. On the day of publication it may have had some effect, but from day to day it lost its appeal. It could not stand the test of examination; for instance it was found that of those 270 items the majority affect commodities in which there either never has been any trade with England, and is not at present any trade, or in which no one expects that there will be any trade. The prospects of increased trade are so vague and flimsy that no one in his senses will expect any benefits to be derived therefrom. It may be considered quite proper to put in the British preference such articles as hay and natural gas, but it is idiotic of the government to think that the people of this country are so unintelligent as to be deceived by claptrap of that kind.

As was stated by the Minister of Finance, protection is being given to the iron and steel industry because it is necessary to maintain an efficient and self-contained iron and steel industry in the Dominion of Canada; in the view of the government that could be done only by the imposition of a protective tariff. I would ask members of the government to consider what they have said in days gone by, to consider how they controverted this idea from beginning to end, to remember how they derided it; attempted to tear it to tatters, made fun of it and abused it in every possible way. It is not so long since we heard the boast made by a member of the government that the Liberal budget was ringing out the death knell of protection. If I read this budget rightly, it would seem to be ringing out a peal of welcome. The government conversion has been thorough and sudden and compared to it I should say that the incident of Saul of Tarsus was of the slow motion variety. If there is a national necessity to maintain a self-contained and efficient iron and steel industry in this country, is there not equally a national necessity to maintain a proper, efficient and self-contained textile industry?

Mr. CHAPLIN: And a furniture industry.

Mr. GEARY: Is there not a national necessity to maintain a self-contained copper industry, as well as to maintain many other kinds of industry? Does it not follow that in the view of the government the only way in which these industries can be maintained in an efficient and self-contained manner is by the application of the doctrine of protection? Why does not the government follow this new faith to the logical conclusion? We have heard the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Edwards), give us a very able exposition of the state of the textile industry in this country showing the need for protection. We have heard the excellent speech delivered by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher). With much of that speech I am unable to agree, but the hon. member gave many reasons for the support of the proposition that the government had in a back-handed way done that which it was afraid openly to do—increased the protection to the cotton industry. All this shows the inconsistency of the course of the government in dealing with matters of tariff.

When the question is asked: Why does not the government follow its new faith to the logical conclusion, there is only one answer, an obvious one: the government has no principle or conviction in the matter; its whole course is decided by the desire to obtain votes. The government asked itself the question: How can we frame a budget which will bring us votes?

It has been said both by one of the hon. members for Winnipeg and by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), that this is a budget which will appeal to different sections of the country. I always understood that this administration was following the plan of saying something special and different in each part of the country, and an hon. member opposite is reported in Hansard as saying that it has sought to inquire into the needs of the various sections of Canada and to meet those needs by the proper remedies. How on earth are we going to meet the needs of the western provinces by the application of duties which will affect an industry in Nova Scotia? We are all agreed that the application of a tariff does not affect only the industry which receives the benefit therefrom, but it affects everyone either directly or indirectly.

The government has heretofore fought the claims of the producers of fruit and vegetables. For some time it acceded to the demands made by my hon. friends opposite, who wanted every semblance of protection to be taken away from fruit and vegetables. At their behest the government abolished or cancelled the order in council which gave seasonal protection to the growers of fruits and vegetables. That was a glorious victory for my hon. friend whom I see smiling across the way. On that day the sun shone bright in Weyburn, soft, balmy airs caressed the fevered brow of the worthy representative of that district (Mr. Young). All was lovely. Then from the blue sky came the thunderbolt of duties, a tariff was put on fruit and vegetables. Luck was not with my hon. friend that day.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They have four tariffs now instead of three.

Mr. SPENCE: He will swallow that.

Mr. GEARY: The hon. member found that not only had the government done a right about face on the proposition, but it had gone mad or crazy in its application. It had clamped on a duty which was unnecessary from the standpoint of the producer, and the prices of vegetables rose over night. The government did not restrict the entry of vegetables which might compete with the producers of British Columbia or of other sections of the country, but it restricted the import of fresh fruits and vegetables during that portion of the year in which we do not produce.

Mr. SHORT: Still the hon. member will vote for the budget.

Mr. GEARY: I am not so sure about that. Listen to what the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) said last year, as reported on page 943 of Hansard:

> I submit it would be a crime to compel him —the farmer—to pay more than he now does for the fruit he wishes to purchase for the benefit of his family.

Hear the pearls of wisdom which fell from the lips of the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), as reported on page 1208 of Hansard of last year.

> All this talk about the importation of fruit and vegetables breaking the home market and ruining our own producers is arrant nonsense.

He also declared in effect that it was infamous to put duties on these particular articles, and still he sits there smiling.

Mr. SHORT: And he is satisfied with this budget.

Mr. GEARY: Perhaps he is not so comfortable, because I do not think he has finally dissuaded himself from the course he followed. He is undecided if he will pursue the course which his conscience tells him to.

An hon. MEMBER: Let his conscience be his guide.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I do not intend to take any guidance from the other side of the house.

Mr. GEARY: Hear also what the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn) said of a kindred matter:

> —but if we place a tariff on this butter, one of two things will happen: we shall have to divert milk from those high priced markets to other sources or the people of Canada will have to go back to conditions which prevailed when our Conservative friends were in power, when they had to eat oleomargarine, a mixture of intestinal fats and southern oils imported largely from the United States.

And now my hon. friend will be forced to say that the blow came from his own friends. A duty is placed on New Zealand butter and properly too.

Taking the two groups alone: iron and steel, fruit and vegetables, I would ask: Does the action of the government commend itself to my friends from the prairie provinces? What think ye of it, ye men of the golden west? Have you any longer confidence in the professions, declarations or promises of a government which has shown itself so susceptible to the exigencies of political profit? If the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) were in his seat, I would ask him: Has the great apostasy been accomplished and has he in turn become an apostle of the new faith? It will be interesting to watch these hon. gentlemen vote. I should like to know where are the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), the Minister of Railways (Mr. Crerar), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart). These were the four horsemen of the free trade apocalypse. They were found in the van of the struggle and rallying to their flag were such men as the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Bock). Where are they to-day? They have relegated themselves to that inconspicuous and ignoble position in the rear which is generally occupied by those known as camp followers.

With Liberalism betrayed, are the Liberals now to accept as the price of their adherence to the present government the hopes and expectations to be gathered from a wholly illusory increase in the British preference? Those proposals have, I think, been sufficiently analyzed and I do not know that I can take them up any further with advantage to the house. I did go through at some pains to myself, for I am not good at that sort of thing, the first two pages of the new tariff and in practically every case I found Great Britain was unable to compete to any extent with importations from other countries. Great Britain had, for instance, a 7½ per cent differential on ploughs or drills, I do not remember which it was, and they could ship to Canada only $267 worth as opposed to $1,000,000 worth shipped to us by the United States. In another case, pumps, with a differential of 10 per cent they could not make any headway at all, obtaining trade to the extent of $247 out of a total of $1,783,497. That differential has been increased in some cases, but does anyone suppose, when with a 7½ per cent or 10 per cent differential they could do no business, they could do any large trade with increases in the differential which are here proposed?

Let me refer to an article of table use like crockery and china. The object of the budget, as I understood the claims made, is to divert trade from what my friends across the floor insist upon calling the natural course of north and south, although I entirely disagree with them in that contention, and to make it flow east and west. The government found that the former avenue of trade was blocked by the actions of the United States and it decided to take certain trade away from the United States and give it to Great Britain. The only article in the lot where there seems to me to be any definite preponderance of trade with the mother country is that of crockery and chinaware. We have no industry worth speaking of, so I am informed, manufacturing these articles, and we export nothing. We import something like $2,500,000 worth from Great Britain; we import $91,000 worth from the United States and still, apparently, by this budget we are trying to take trade away from the United States and give it to Great Britain. If any trade is diverted, it will be from countries like Czechoslovakia and France with which we have by treaty solemnly agreed to trade.

It would not, as I say, be of any advantage to go again into a discussion of these items, but may I say just one other word following my examination of the first two or three pages, that the only article in which British preference countries have any trade at all—and it was a very considerable trade—is butter. On the first three pages that is the only article on which they have not increased the British preference to give Great Britain more trade, but they have raised the duty and lessened the preference in order to shut off the trade in this article from the British dominions. The policy of the government was supposed to be to encourage trade with the British dominions, but they certainly did not believe in increasing this particular duty the night before they presented this budget. These illusory hopes and expectations of increased British import trade are what the western provinces have been given for the betrayal of their interests and as the price of their adherence to the government. These hopes and expectations are "such stuff as dreams are made on," and I have not the slightest doubt they will come to nothing. To adopt in part the same quotation, these hopes, expectations and promises of a future benefit, like the baseless fabric of this vision, shall dissolve and leave not a rack behind.

The Minister of Finance himself thinks very little of the British preference. By very plain inference and implication he says so when he warns the British people in his budget speech, lest he be trapped later by the discovery of how little it means; that they cannot do any trade with us even under these increased preferences unless they revise their methods of marketing and selling. For a small amount of trade that is potential or even for the larger amount that these visionaries think will eventuate, the British merchant has to remodel his whole selling system; he has to make a long study covering a period of years of the markets of this country, revise his whole packaging, shipping and selling system and all for what nobody by the closest and most optimistic scrutiny of the budget can declare in dollars to be of any substantial advantage.

It is not so long ago since we heard hon. members opposite talking of what a heinous offence it would be for this country to retaliate against the United States. I suppose a rose by any other name will smell as sweet, and perhaps retaliation will, when you call it countervailing, Countervailing is nothing but setting up against, and if setting up against is not retaliation, I do not know what retaliation is. Very properly, from their point of view, hon. members opposite inveighed against this principle during last session and this sesion. We have heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) refer to it. As reported on page 1338 of Hansard, 1929, he said:

> Talk of red blood! Is it a manifestation of red blood to shape our tariff policies on the policies of foreign countries by imitation or in any other manner?

Yet the Minister of Justice sat in conclave with the other members of the government when they foreswore their convictions and principles in this regard and made up a vote-catching budget that reflected nothing whatever of sincerity in its makeup. The question is: Have we or have we not confidence in the methods and practice of policy of the government? Unhesitatingly I say the answer of the country to that will be: No, we have not confidence. How can the house, how can the country, profess confidence in a government whose whole history has been a denial of consistency, whose course in fiscal policy has been one of devious ways, whose lack of conviction and of principle is painfully apparent, who stand ready at all times to sink their faith, if any they have, in the sea of expediency.

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion with some hesitation to speak on the budget and the two amendments that are before the house. It would be quite impossible for me, in view of what has happened during the past ten days, to say that I have any very definite opinion upon the details of the budget. I must confess some admiration for those people throughout the length and breadth of Canada and some in the old land who were able to tell us within twenty-four hours of the presentation of the budget just what it meant. However, I have come to some conclusions with regard to the budget, and these I shall present to the house in the time at my disposal.

Before proceeding to comment on the budget itself, I wish to make a few comments on another question which is really of greater importance than the budget itself, judging by the effect which it has had on the house, and that is as to the conditions under which the government asks us to pass judgment on the budget and the rest of the business that we have to do this session. I refer, of course, to the announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that there is to be an election, and his invitation to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) to meet him to ascertain if it would not be possible to speed up and hastily get rid of the rest of the business that is before the house. The date of the Imperial economic conference was set some time last autumn, according to the speech from the throne, from which I quote:

> In the summer of last year, an invitation was extended by His Majesty's government in Canada to all His Majesty's other governments to participate in an imperial economic conference in Canada at the earliest possible date. It was found that the convenience of the majority of the governments could best be met by an arrangement to hold the Imperial economic conference along with the Imperial conference in London in the early autumn of the present year. This has accordingly been arranged.

I maintain that in view of the fact that it was known last autumn that the Imperial economic conference was to be held this autumn it was utterly ridiculous to delay calling this house to meet until the 20th of February, to sit until the 11th of April and then adjourn until the 28th of April, present the budget, a very contentious budget, of course, containing a number of changes, meaningful or meaningless, on the 1st of May, and then to say six days after: It is time to have an election, and we had better arrange to get through the business of the session in an orderly, but in any case a hasty, manner. I do not know what the other members of this house think, but I am just giving it as my opinion that no member has any right to accept his $4,000 indemnity if he agrees to the suggestion as it was made by the Prime Minister, as I understand it. It seems to me that ordinary commonsense would have dictated to the Prime Minister, if there was even a suspicion in his mind that it was necessary to go to the country this year, that the opening of the session should not have been delayed beyond the first or second week in January at the latest. If a farmer anywhere in Canada conducted his business with as little regard for times, events and seasons he would be in the sheriff's hands inside of twelve months. The management or mismanagement of this matter must rest with the Prime Minister, and to me it looks at present like a very bad case of mismanagement. In Hansard of May 6, 1930, the Prime Minister is reported as follows at page 1835:

> Under the circumstances, I would suggest to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that he and I meet together as soon as may be convenient to him to see if we cannot come to some agreement whereby the business of this present session can be brought to an orderly and speedy conclusion. It would be my wish to meet as well with my friend the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) and discuss with him the matters which he would wish to have considered for the group which he leads and for those who sit about him.

Then he goes on to tell of the business of parliament. What is the situation? I do not think that we have voted one-third or even one-quarter of the estimates. I think we have gone into only two departments, and I do not believe the estimates of one department have been entirely voted yet. Then we have the budget before us. According to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), it makes very extensive changes which surely merit careful analysis. Here we have the statement of the finance minister regarding the iron and steel schedules:

> The iron and steel schedule is now an entity, compact and orderly, consisting of a single group of three hundred and twenty-five items. I have not attempted to refer in detail to all individual commodities affected, but only those of greatest interest. Details of each item will, of course, be dealt with in committee of ways and means.
> Summarizing numerically I may say that under the iron and steel schedule general tariff rates have been reduced on sixty-six items and increased on forty.
> Under the intermediate tariff, the reductions number eighty-six, and the increases twenty-four.
> Under the British preferential tariff, the rates have been increased in eight cases and reduced, or made free, in one hundred and fifty-two.

They number something like 350 changes. In the budget of 1928, about 124 tariff items were struck out and 170 inserted; 4 new drawback items were added. In the budget of 1929, 17 items were struck out, 33 new items inserted, 12 drawback items struck out and 2 new ones inserted, and the sessions of 1928 and 1929 ran from four to five months. Here is a contentious budget, much more contentious I think than the budgets of 1928 or 1929, and after sitting less than three months we are asked apparently to get through with the whole thing in a hurry in order that we may have an election. Whether or not there should be an election this year is a matter that the government has decided, but I submit that in view of the fact that the session of 1929 closed some time in June, and the government having a mandate until November, 1931, it was an absolutely ridiculous proposition for the Prime Minister, after letting six weeks of the new year go by without calling the house after agreeing to two weeks' adjournment at Easter, after we had been sitting for less than three months to come to the house and say: Let us get through with this budget and the rest of the legislation before parliament, including the large volume of estimates that have not yet been touched, in as short a time as possible so that we can go to the country and hold an election before the economic conference. That is, having regard to the time the last session ended, and having proper regard to the work of the Imperial economic conference, here is seven months' business that we have utterly failed properly to arrange time for. The Prime Minister calls for orderly consideration of the business before us after making an announcement that is just about as conducive to orderly conduct of the business of the house as a nest of hornets would be to a man driving a string of mules.

Mr. RYCKMAN: That is what he is driving.

Mr. KENNEDY: I did not mean it in that way.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is very appropriate anyway.

Mr. KENNEDY: Then, of course, we have the question of the staff of the House of Commons. A large number of the staff engaged around the House of Commons are paid by the day, and it is utterly unfair to them to close the session so abruptly. We have heard a great deal about the government being a model employer of labour. I do not think there is anything to indicate that the salaries of the temporary staff around the House of Commons are at all out of line with what they might be earning if they were engaged the year round. Here is another case where the announcement of the Prime Minister apparently has overlooked their interests and considered the one thing only, political expediency. During the last two or three years we have heard a good deal about an increase in the sessional indemnity; it has been discussed quietly around the house and in the country. I believe if the farmer members of the house could get home every year for seeding—and it would not be an impossibility—they would be better off with a decreased indemnity than with the present indemnity and sessions ending in June. But this year, if we have an indecisive election on top of this hurried session, it will be necessary to hold a session between the election and the Imperial conference, and so far as the western farmer members are concerned, regardless of what group they belong to, they will be subject to the very great inconvenience of coming to Ottawa during the harvest season; and certainly, if you take a farmer member away from his farm in seed time and harvest, his sessional indemnity is far from being adequate. But the whole trouble is due to the utter mismanagement by the Prime Minister and the government with regard to the date of calling parliament together and the introduction of the budget so late in the session. This system under which one man at the head of a party can spring an election on the country at any time it suits him is altogether wrong and out of date.

Another matter I wish to comment on, Mr. Speaker, is the practice of going to the country every four years. The statute provides that there must be an election every five years. But that statutory provision is of absolutely no value, either to parliament or to the government, so far as I can see; it only provides opportunity for the sort of juggling that we have had during the past few months. If the practice of going to the country every four years is continued, why not so provide in the statute? If the present practice is not to be continued, why not observe the statutory provision and go to the country every five years? At least once we had the matter on a definite basis the government would not be able to excuse themselves for such a mess as we are in at the present time with regard to the business of the session. I was very glad to hear the leader of the opposition although he appealed on two occasions for an election, state on the floor of this house that so far as the budget was concerned he would not agree to passing it without making a careful scrutiny and without being supplied with full information in regard to all the items. As members of parliament I do not think we have any right to hurry through the business of the country on account of the pending Imperial conference or any other matter. In this regard I think we might say that things should be done decently and in order, especially when there was ample opportunity to make proper arrangements ahead of time. It seems to me that the Prime Minister with his various veiled announcements regarding the possibility of an election is mainly responsible for the feeling of uncertainty respecting an election which, last week, he said existed throughout the country. In the course of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne we had his announcement that there might be an election. Then of course everybody began to speculate. But even at that time if the government had had a definite policy regarding an appeal to the country, and had stated their intention, I think no one would have complained much against them in taking that position, and I think they would have been justified in doing so. But it seems to me that party exigency has been the ruling motive, and that the welfare of the country has been sacrificed for the sake of the Liberal party. I do not know whether this course of action is going to do the party any good; I think it will be the reverse.

Now, coming directly to the budget itself, I suppose it is correct to say that it is a protectionist budget. I think anyone who has followed the discussions before the tariff board must come to the conclusion that the steel interests appealed to the board for such a tariff as would effectively protect them from United States competition. In the course of his budget speech, at page 1625 of Hansard, the minister said:

The labours of the Tariff Advisory Board could not have been successful, however, had it not received the active cooperation of all branches of the industry itself. Scores of manufacturers have given ungrudgingly their personal time and services of their technical officers; importers and jobbers have placed at the disposal of the board their staffs, warehouses and books; laboratory and research experts have been detailed to assist the board's own investigators; and no fewer than two hundred different firms, associations and interests participated actively in the weeks of open hearings at which information was being placed on record for parliament and the public.

Various government departments—notably those of National Revenue, Mines and the Bureau of Statistics—rendered valuable assistance.

No mention at all of the consumers' league! But undoubtedly that was the reason why the steel industry appeared before the tariff board—to get protection. It seems to me that in this budget we have a direct effort to protect the iron and steel industry. I noticed that one of the statements made before the Tariff Advisory Board during the presentation of the steel case by the late Mr. Norman Guthrie was to the effect that notwithstanding that at that time there was a high duty on steel rails coming into Canada the price here was not any higher than in the United States. Now, if the duties on iron and steel as applied in this budget will result in protecting the home market for the industry without increasing the price of cutting the quality, I do not think there will be any objection. But, frankly, the Liberals have adopted a protectionist policy towards the iron and steel industry, and they have done the same thing with regard to agriculture.

When we were discussing the Australian treaty some members in this corner of the house were accused of being "apostates" because they asked for the repeal of that treaty. I do not know whether the member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) applied the word in all its original meaning, but some people believe that the repeal of the Australian treaty would be a reversion to free trade on some things, while others think that it would mean protection for the dairy interests. We hear a great deal about the "western farmer." I do not know who he is, but I know a number of western farmers, and some of them are straight protectionists, especially when it comes to the dairy business. They have asked for protection and they have received it in this budget.

Having regard to the revision of the iron and steel schedule, I do not believe that the tariff on agricultural products has any real significance, as I hope to show when I analyse some of the figures later on. But now that we have the two major parties in the house supporting protection, I have not any objection to their giving the farmer a little protection—in fact all they can give him. But I think there is another way the farmer can be helped to better advantage, and if I have the time I propose to tell the house how that may be done.

The budget seems an effort on the part of the government to be all things to all men, but, as I understand it, it is mainly protectionist. I may say that I do not share the horror expressed by some eastern and western members with regard to helping the farmer by protection, so long as we realize to what extent it does help him. It has been said that if the farmers accepted the meagre assistance given to them by this method it would be equivalent to their throwing away the only weapon they have against high tariffs. But if in days gone by the farmers had a weapon of this kind, so far as they are concerned this budget means complete disarmament. It does not look hopeful for low tariff in these days, unless it is the case of the darkest hour being just before the dawn. In view of the present position of the Liberal party, which has said so much about lower tariff, I do not think there is any great objection to giving the farmer the temporary assistance he might receive by increasing the tariff on butter to 4 cents. If the member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) and the member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) have any objection to the farmer getting a little assistance when two parties in this house apply the policy generally, I cannot quite understand the position of those hon. gentlemen. I am reminded of the passage in the scriptures which says:

Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.

Having made that statement I wish to examine in some detail the question as to the value to the iron and steel industry of these increases in protection. I have before me the iron and steel statistics of Canada for the year 1928. It is somewhat difficult to get the final figures for 1929 in items relating to both steel and agriculture, so I shall confine my figures to those given for the years 1927 and 1928. I find that the imports of iron and steel products into Canada during 1928 were valued at $322,959,144 as compared with $248,151,554 in 1927. Over 91 per cent, or $295,114,281 worth, of the imports in this class came from the United States, and about 5 per cent, or $17,762,561 worth, came from the United Kingdom. I fear that the position of the Minister of Finance when he seemed to imply that the reduction in the British preference would offset the increases of duties against the United States, cannot be taken at its face value. It may be that business can be developed with Great Britain, but as to that fact I am doubtful. The total output of 1,159 iron and steel plants in Canada in 1928 was $609,632,999. But the annually created wealth resulting from those activities, deducting the cost of the raw materials from the selling value of all iron and steel products at the works, amounted to more than $300,000,000; that is, the net result of the iron and steel industry in Canada for the year was just about the same amount as the total value of imports of iron and steel products. Protection on a basis of that character is worth a great deal.

There is not however the same value to agriculture in the budget proposals. Nor is there in the countervailing brick for brick tariffs as we have for the steel industry in the new steel schedules. In Canada the estimated gross annual agricultural revenue in 1928 for farm animals was $197,880,000. The imports into Canada of animals living was $3,165,941, or a total of about $3,000,000 against about $200,000,000. Approximately 90 per cent of the total amount imported was from the United States. The exports to the United States were valued at $17,000,000 as against $3,000,000 of imports. To the United States the exports were $16,648,945. So that we have exports totalling about $14,000,000 more than the imports from the United States. A tariff to help agriculture, therefore, with regard to the price of living animals cannot be of much value to the Canadian farmer. It is hardly the same story in regard to chilled or frozen meats, but it is about the same. My claim is that although there is an attempt made in this budget to show Canadian farmers that they are getting protection just the same as the iron and steel industry, the cases are not at all parallel. Agriculture in any case cannot take advantage of a tariff the same as the iron and steel industry can, because it is not so well organized. There was only one case on record where the Canadian farmer had a chance to exploit the Canadian consumer and that was when the wheat board was instituted. By order in council the wheat board was specifically prevented from taking advantage of the Canadian consumer. They had to sell to the consumers of Canada on the same basis as the price at which they were selling abroad, less freight rates and less the cost of putting the produce on the markets of the world. My submission is that under this budget whatever may be said the farmer is not getting anything except a mere taste of protection. There is nothing in the budget which will ultimately result in a definite contribution to the building up of agriculture in the Dominion of Canada. That is the result of my analysis of the situation.

I have figures before me to show the relation between agriculture and the manufacturing industries of Canada. The manufacturing industries have definitely flourished under the policy of protection. The estimated gross annual agricultural revenue of Canada for 1923 was $1,397,085,000; in 1924, $1,494,771,000; in 1925, $1,666,100,000; in 1926, $1,683,526,000 and in 1927, $1,783,160,000. The capital invested runs from $6,023,325,000 in 1923 up to $6,227,021,000 in 1927. In 1927 it took $3.49 of capital to produce $1 of agricultural revenue; in 1926, $3.63; in 1925, $3.67; in 1924, $4.05 and in 1923, $4.31. I do not know that I shall be able to produce the figures in this regard in connection with manufacturing; I think it takes about half as much capital to earn a dollar.

We come now to wages and salaries in connection with manufacturing and agriculture. I have before me the information that in 1927 the wages and board for male farm help throughout Canada was $685 a year; for female help it was $467. In connection with manufacturing I have some figures before me, and I find that the wages for 1927 were just about what they had been previously for a number of years throughout the whole of Canada. Alberta and British Columbia stood at the top of the list, those two provinces being higher than the other provinces. In 1923 the average of salaries and wages in manufacturing plants was $1,087; in 1924, $1,101; in 1925, $1,095; in 1926, $1,124, and in 1927, $1,121. I put these figures on Hansard, Mr. Speaker, to show that manufacturing has been flourishing under this policy but that agriculture has not been doing well, and there is nothing in this budget which will adequately meet the situation through protection and make agriculture the equal of other industries in Canada. I submit that we must find some other way of dealing with agriculture in Canada in order to put it on a par with other industries, because the farmers throughout this country are not willing to accept a lower standard of living than others. Unless some method can be found of dealing with that question more adequately than any tariff can deal with it, we will find just as great a protest in years to come as we have experienced in years gone by against protection, even to the manufacturers.

I may say, as far as the Conservative position is concerned, that if they will protect the consumers by preventing the exploitation of the Canadian people through increased prices, while protecting the market for the manufacturers, it will be the best compromise that has been before the Canadian people for years, so far as either of the two parties is concerned, and is much ahead of anything proposed in this budget. I submit, however, that agriculture cannot be dealt with properly by a protective tariff, because if you make the dairy industry prosperous you will get a tremendous change in western Canada from wheat growing to dairying, and you will slump the markets in eastern Canada in dairy products, poultry or any of the other side lines, as the case may be.

What can we do? Only one method has been found, so far as I know, for putting agriculture on a stable basis, and that is the method of cooperation. I had intended to read some extracts from a volume entitled Agricultural Cooperation in Denmark, as well as some extracts from this volume dealing with farm relief in the United States, but I have not time. It may be said that as between Denmark and Canada conditions are not comparable, since here we are developing a new country which lends itself to individualism and which makes it hard to apply cooperation; but we are following the cooperative principle now with regard to wheat, and in the not far distant future, with some help from this federal government, we hope to do it with regard to live stock products. However, conditions are absolutely comparable as between Great Britain and Denmark, and we know that whereas agricultural conditions in Great Britain are as acute practically all the time as we have had them in Canada during the years 1922-23-24, just across the sea in Denmark the rural population have passed from extreme poverty and practical ruin to a position of independence. They dominate the British market with regard to bacon, and they cater to the demand in Great Britain for other farm products. If the government of the Dominion of Canada is to do anything for agriculture at all comparable to what has been done for industry generally in my judgment the only way to proceed is to get behind cooperation and try to put agriculture in this country on as efficient and comprehensive a cooperation basis as the farmers have been placed in Denmark. It is a difficult problem; possibly it is a different problem from that which faced the farmers of that country, but it is the most hopeful suggestion we have so far as agriculture in this Domiinon is concerned.

I do not know that at the moment I am prepared to say definitely just what the government should do as the first step, or what any government could do. In the United States they are experimenting with the national farm board and trying also to do something in the line of controlling production in relation to the available market. I do not know whether or not we will have to do these things in Canada, but I do say that cooperation is the only possible hope for the farmers of this country, and our experience in Canada has been such that I think we should be greatly encouraged. A great many people are complaining because of the action of the wheat pool and blaming present conditions on that organization. Most of these people do not know what they are talking about, but I do say that if we should have the same slump in grain prices due tc world conditions that we have had during the last year, without the pool you would not find the same confidence or the same contentment among the western farmers that you will find now. They own the cooperative organization which is marketing 50 per cent of the grain grown in western Canada, and they have confidence that their organization is doing the best it can with world conditions as they are to-day. That is one reason why conditions in this coùntry are not very much worse than they are, and that is why we have not heard expressions of discontent in this house much greater than have been heard since we have had a Dominion parliament.

So I offer that as a suggestion to this or any government which may be in power. If we can control prices and control the Canadian market for our manufacturers, at the same time getting behind agriculture and putting it on a sound cooperative basis, we will be following a definite constructive program which will work for the benefit of this whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I wish to devote my attention more particularly to the subamendment now before the house. I agree with that part of the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) which states that it is to be regretted that more effective consideration has not been given to the position of agriculture and labour, but I cannot agree with the latter part of the subamendment which states that the best interests of Canada would be served by a substantial increase in the British preference, particularly with reference to textiles.

You may examine these tariff proposals with a microscope, but I suggest that it will be impossible to find therein any provision whatever which will give one day's additional employment to any workman in the province of Quebec or which will promote the prosperity of that province to the extent of a single dollar, if you will except the provision with respect to the repeal in October next of the order in council giving free entry to New Zealand butter, which step has been so long demanded by the Conservative party. I will show later, if I have time, that the proposed countervailing duties against vegetables and fruits from the United States should have been a seasonal tariff. Under this new tariff the difficulties which have been faced for years by the thousands of market gardeners on the island of Montreal through competition with the United States will be increased a hundredfold by the free admission of fruits and vegetables from the West Indies. There fruits and vegetables are produced by native labourers who live in houses which require no coal for their heating; whose clothing consists of leather or canvas sandals and cotton garments which cost no more than ordinary overalls, and who live largely on the native products of the country. These native labourers receive about one-fourth the wage of the ordinary agricultural labourer on the island of Montreal, and the products of that labour, which will be admitted free in quantities of hundreds of tons as soon as they discover that this market is free to them for the future, can be laid down in the city of Montreal at prices with which the Canadian producer cannot possibly compete. They have the cheapest freight rates on the Atlantic from those islands, and the ships which will carry their products will be subsidized to the extent of $1,750,000 from the treasury of Canada for the purpose of giving them access to an open market in this country in competition with our own growers of vegetables and fruits.

I should like to deal at greater length with this question if I had time, but I wish to discuss particularly the suggestion that the best interests of Canada would be served by a substantial increase in the British preference, particularly with regard to textiles. To-day the textile industry is a large factor in providing employment in the cities of Montreal, Verdun, Sherbrooke, Drummondville, Three Rivers and Shawinigan Falls, and is the chief source of employment in Valleyfield, Magog and Montmorency, all in the province of Quebec. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) last evening referred to similar factories in the province of New Brunswick at St. John, Marysville and Milltown. There are also similar factories at Cornwall, Ontario, and elsewhere, but I am now particularly concerned with the province of Quebec, one of whose constituencies I represent in this house.

The manufacture of cotton is essentially a Quebec industry. The latest report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows that in the calendar year 1927, out of 39 establishments engaged in cotton cloth and yarn manufacturing in Canada, 17 were located in Quebec. Those factories employed 14,221 workers out of a total of 21,383 employed in the industry generally. They paid $11,197,832 in salaries and wages out of a total of $17,146,927 paid by the cotton cloth and yarn mills of Canada during that year.

In the revision of the Canadian cotton tariff schedule in 1928, the duty on imports of print cottons from the United States was reduced 5 per cent. The duty was left 2½ per cent lower than the duty on coloured cotton, although the manufacturing expense in printing cotton is considerably higher than in ordinary dyeing. This constitutes one of the most unreasonable tariff revisions ever attempted in the tariff history of this country. The tariff board took no evidence in support of this revision, and the reduction was not justified. It has reduced employment in the mills of the province of Quebec and has brought great loss and impending disaster to the cotton and woollen mills of Canada. Canadian cotton mills which are now operating at less than 60 per cent of their capacity, as well as on a non-profit basis, could easily and profitably maintain the present basis of prices for cotton goods to the Canadian consumer if the imports were restricted and their operations and employment were permitted to be carried on at or nearly at a capacity basis. Such a policy would immediately add several thousands to the list of those employed in Canada and would correspondingly increase the weekly payroll and thus materially assist in improving the current business situation throughout Canada.

Cotton mills in the province of Quebec are operating with reduced staffs for only three or four days a week, while some 1,500 or more cotton mill workers are at present unemployed. Sales volumes are down considerably and a great deal of the business at present taken by the mills to maintain even limited operations is being taken at a loss. The cotton industry is now operating at the lowest ebb of production and profits that has obtained for many years.

I wish the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) was in her seat, because I think the following facts should receive her consideration. The provincial laws of Quebec very properly prescribe certain hours of labour; they preclude the employment of children and limit employment of women at night to two nights per week until nine o'clock, the aggregate not to exceed thirty nights in the whole year. Some of the Texas mills, whose products compete in the Canadian market with the Quebec mills, operate both night and day shifts of 55 hours each per week, as compared with a maximum of 50 hours per week in the Canadian mills. The night shift in a Texas mill generally consists of at least 75 per cent of female workers, and in many of the mills in the southern states children are employed for long hours. The minimum wage paid in the southern mills is about two-thirds of the minimum wage paid in Canada.

There is a still more striking contrast between the wages paid in Lancashire, England, and those paid in the cotton mills of the province of Quebec. This comparison shows the wages received for similar work performed on similar machinery in the same working hours:

| | Lancashire | Canada |
|---|---|---|
| Slubber tender.. .. .. | $9 44 | $21 00 |
| Intermediate tender.. | 9 24 | 20 00 |
| Roving tender.. .. .. | 8 32 | 18 00 |
| Ring spinner.. .. .. | 9 19 | 15 50 |
| Apprentices.. .. .. | 4 50 | 9 00 |

The prices given for Canadian labour are those paid in the factories in the province of Quebec. It is in favour of such cheap labour that we give the Lancashire mills a preference in the Canadian market.

It is estimated by reliable authorities that importations account for over 40 per cent of the cotton manufactures and over 70 per cent of the woollen cloth manufactures consumed in Canada annually. During the past ten years, when these industries have been passing through a process of drastic competition and readjustment, not only have the Canadian mills been forced to meet the competition of excess stocks of British and foreign mills which were thrown on to the export markets at non-profit prices, but successive downward revisions of the British preferential, special treaty rates, the intermediate and general tariff rates in 1922, 1923 and 1928, have intensified, increased and widened this competition until the Canadian mills are now on the verge of disaster. The past year was one of the most competitive in the history of these industries, and the result has been that Canadian mills have operated at less than two-thirds of capacity, while the woollen cloth mills have fared even worse in the very limited market at their disposal, operating only three and four days a week and with reduced staffs. The worsted cloth weaving industry, which was presumed to have benefited by reason of the duty-free yarns revision of the tariff in 1928, has reached the stage of over-productive capacity and non-profit margins. The cotton industry of the United Kingdom, which is developed to the basis of one spindle to each one of the population, and organized to export 85 per cent of its production, has lost 50 per cent of its export business due to the expansion and development of the cotton industry in India, China, Japan and other countries which were formerly large importers of cotton goods. The production of 20,000,000 spindles in the United Kingdom has thereby been thrown on the world markets. Reorganization is proceeding. The greatest combination of cotton mills in history, the Lancashire Cotton Corporation, is in process of formation. Bankrupt mills are being purchased at slaughter values. Hundreds of cotton mills in Lancashire have been closed. And now the Lancashire cotton industry, on the basis of reduced wages, reduced capital expenses and non-profit margins, is striving to gain command of the Canadian market.

Here in Canada, the cotton industry is developed on the basis of one spindle to every eight of population. While in Canada, the British preferential rate on grey cottons is 12½ per cent and on white cottons 15 per cent, in India, once Lancashire's greatest export market, the tariff on imports of cottons from the United Kingdom is 15 per cent and this in spite of the fact that wages in Canada are double those paid in Lancashire mills, whereas wages in the Indian mills are only about one-third those paid in Lancashire. Some 80 per cent of the Indian mills are said to be owned or controlled by English capital; yet there is no agitation throughout India in favour of creating a customs preference in favour of British cotton products.

In the United States the cotton manufacturing industry has an over-productive capacity and is seeking a slaughter market in Canada. There the industry is developed on the basis of one spindle to every two and a half of population, without facilities for increasing its export trade except on a slaughter basis.

The development of cotton manufacturing in the southern states, where labour laws permit night operations and the employment of women and children in night work, where wages are very considerably below the wages paid in New England and far below those paid in the Quebec cotton mills, and where mills are operating on mass production on standardized lines, the record of the past few years, and particularly at the present time, is one of non-margin profits. Cotton goods for export are sacrificed and sold to Canadian importers below the cost of production in order to relieve the domestic markets in the United States. Much of this $17,000,000 worth of cotton goods which were imported into Canada from the United States last year came from southern mills and were manufactured and sold under the conditions which I have stated and which would not be tolerated in the province of Quebec or in any other province.

Mr. LAPIERRE: May I ask a question?

Mr. CAHAN: I will talk to the hon. gentleman when we come to discuss these items in committee, but as I have only a few minutes at my disposal I should like to proceed without answering questions.

In fact, the competition of imports into Canada of cotton manufactures from the United States is even more of a menace to the cotton industry of this country, and of the province of Quebec in particular, than the competition from Lancashire. Whereas the Canadian tariff rates which are now in force on imports of cotton goods from the United States are only 22½ per cent on grey goods, 25 per cent on white goods, 27 per cent on prints and 30 per cent on coloured goods, the new United States tariff on imports of cotton goods, with a duty of seven cents per pound on raw cotton, will be as follows:

Grey goods: not exceeding No. 90's in quality, 10 per cent ad valorem, and, in addition thereto, for each number, 25/100ths of one per cent ad valorem; exceeding No. 90, 41½ per cent ad valorem. That is, the duty on 20's quality cloth will be 17 per cent and on 40's quality, 24 per cent ad valorem.

White goods: 13 per cent and 35/100ths up to 90's, and exceeding 90's, 44½ per cent ad valorem. That is, the duty on 20's will be 20 per cent and on 40's quality, 27 per cent.

Print and coloured goods: 16 per cent and 35/100ths up to 90's, and exceeding 90's, 47½ per cent ad valorem. That is, the duty on 30's will be 26½ per cent, on 40's, 30 per cent, and on 60's, 37 per cent. These are the United States duties which are about to be imposed by their new tariff schedule.

Here is an oportunity staring the Minister of Finance in the face for the imposition of countervailing duties on products on which there are really substantial importations from the United States and which are proving a serious menace to Canadian production and to the employment of Canadian labour. If the government approves the policy of enacting countervailing duties in Canada against increases in the customs duties of the United States, what reasonable grounds can be advanced for their complete failure to protect Canadian cotton mills and their employees against the disastrous competition of the mills of the southern states? Why should a long established Canadian industry such as the textile industry be sacrificed, throwing thousands of Canadians out of employment and destroying millions of invested capital as they are being destroyed throughout Canada?

The Minister of Finance has turned a blind eye and a deaf ear towards all imports from the United States where countervailing Canadian duties would largely increase remunerative employment in Canada and conserve Canadian capital. Moreover, the drawback provisions of the existing cotton schedules in Canada reduce the real protection of the Canadian cotton mills to a mere shadow of what it purports to be. While the United States converter must place his order for a minimum of 7,500 yards of any particular pattern and pay for the expensive copper rolls, a Canadian converter can place his order with the same United States print works for as little as 2,500 yards of a pattern and, as the copper rolls have already been paid for, this cost is deleted from the price for export to Canada, so that the goods are actually sold in Canada at a less price than that at which they can be purchased by converters in the United States. Canadian mills owing to our situation have to demand a minimum yardage of 3,600 yards and absorb therein the cost of the rolls, although the number of patterns necessarily required to be made by the Canadian print works is very much larger than is made by the average print works in the United States. Obviously the competition of United States prints in this market has become excessively keen and of the most menacing and destructive character.

For export to Canada the American manufacturer makes especially low prices for special lots. He sacrifices in the Canadian market his surplus stocks and substandards of seconds. These goods are offered for export to large Canadian buyers at ridiculously low prices, often below the current American prices of the cotton yarns from which the goods are made, without adding the cost of manufacture and profit. There might be some economic advantage, it will be said, in the importation from the United States of these goods at low prices if the savings thus made were passed on to the Canadian consumer. But such is never the case. The goods are purchased by jobbers in Canada and sold through them to the consumers in this country on the basis of the competitive values of Canadian-made goods, and the actual consumer reaps no advantage whatsoever, while Canadian employees are put out of their employment.

No Canadian industry has recorded a more convincing case for upward tariff revision than the woollen and worsted cloth manufacturers have done in their several hearings before the tariff board. This was virtually admitted by the government in 1928 when the tariff on imports of wool yarns for weaving purposes from the United Kingdom was removed. The duty of 12½ per cent on wool yarns was removed, and this permitted worsted cloth manufacturers to buy their yarns in England on the same basis as English manufacturers, and at the same time the duty of 24¾ per cent on imports of cloth was retained, and thus indirectly their net protection was increased. But this was done at the expense of the worsted yarn spinners in this country. Old established and completely equipped mills with wool preparing, carding, combing, drawing and spinning equipment were sacrificed ruthlessly. The wool growing industry in Canada received a set-back, and this government's new tariff policy in 1928 permitted the importation of wool and worsted yarns duty free to displace Canadian-grown wools in the manufacture of cloth from such yarns.

The woollen cloth industry has not benefited because of the technical difficulties connected with the importation of woollen yarns, and because of the fact that all the Canadian woollen mills are completely equipped for the handling and manufacture of wool from the raw state to the finished product, as is the case the world over. Yet, the whole tendency of this government's policy is to lessen the domestic consumption of Canadian-grown wools and to discourage wool production in Canada, a branch of the farming industry for which all admit there are great possibilities in every province in the Dominion, and particularly in the provinces of Quebec and Alberta, where some of the finest clothing and worsted combing wools in the world are now being grown. Wool production on Quebec farms and wool manufacturing in the home and in the factory has been peculiarly a French Canadian industry, but where once there were many flourishing manufacturing plants in the province of Quebec, there are now only three or four cloth mills struggling for existence. The industry has been sacrificed by the existing British preference, and the province of Quebec has been one of the principal losers.

On the other hand, the Canadian market is now being flooded with the very cheapest and lowest quality of woollens that can be manufactured in English, Italian and Czechoslovakian mills. Much of this cloth is entirely unsuited for Canadian climatic conditions. It is made from old rags and muck gathered from the four corners of the globe, and its production was intended originally for the low-paid, pauperized populations of Russia, middle Europe, and Asia. It is cheap, mungo and shoddy material without warmth or wearing quality, but it is showy and it is foisted by the thousands of yards upon the Canadian market to supply Canadian women and children and workingmen as a substitute for the good-wearing, high quality woollens made in Canadian mills or formerly imported from England. Of course, some good high quality woollens are still imported from English and Scottish mills, but the large proportion of importations of woollen cloth into Canada at the present time is this low grade shoddy material, worthless for wear under the climatic conditions which prevail in this country.

Special treaties with these European countries have been responsible in large measure for the regrettable conditions in which our mills is placed. To-day Canadian woollen cloth mills, the few that still remain, are operating only 3 to 4 days a week, with greatly reduced staffs.

Although wages in English mills are less than 60 per cent of the wages paid in Canadian woollen mills in the province of Quebec, wages in France, Italy and other European countries are 25 to 50 per cent lower than in Lancashire, England. English woollen and worsted manufacturers have made repeated requests to the British board of trade for a tariff of 33⅓ per cent on imports of wool fabrics into the United Kingdom. This increase was reported upon favourably by the board of trade committee, but it has not yet been acted upon, owing to the change in the British government shortly after the report was brought down. Yet Canada gives to these shoddy products preferential treatment in our own market over the Canadian product under special treaties which we have negotiated with such countries as France, Italy and Czechoslovakia.

The destruction of the woollen manufacturing industry in Canada has been a blot on the political administration of this country. To-day, the industry is operating far below the economic minimum. If it is wiped out entirely, or indeed if immediate tariff action is not taken to resuscitate it, British and foreign mills will shortly control this market for woollen goods absolutely. To-day the cost of production in Canada is the price basis, but once production in Canada is removed, this market will be at the mercy of foreign manufacturers, a situation that is, or should be, inconceivable in a country such as Canada, where wool clothing is such an absolute necessity and the development of manufacturing industry an economic necessity.

Development of the silk manufacturing industry in Canada has also been a feature of our industrial expansion during the past few years. The relatively high value of the raw material and the increase in popular demand for silk have been responsible. The high value yields a relatively higher tariff protection on labour cost than is the case with cotton or wool. Moreover, goods containing silk are something of a luxury or are in the luxury class. Development of the silk industry in the province of Quebec has been an outstanding feature of industrial expansion in that province during the past few years.

Now, the government has taken a slap at the silk industry by excluding the excise tax in force in Japan from being reckoned in the cost for duty purposes on silk goods imported into Canada from Japan. When a few years ago Japan imposed the excise tax of 10 per cent on silk manufactures, the Canadian dumping act was enforced and an additional duty of 10 per cent has since been levied on imports of silk goods from Japan. But now this excise tax will be exempted for duty purposes on imports from Japan.

This exemption seriously affects the silk mills of this country. The development of the industry in Quebec has been due in no small measure to the decrease in Japanese competition induced by this additional 10 per cent duty. It has resulted in several million yards increase in Canadian production of silk fabrics. The exclusion of this excise tax from the cost on which the duty is to be reckoned is now causing silk manufacturers considerable alarm.

The whole basis of consideration of the textile tariffs by the present government has been wrongly conceived. The incidence of the textile tariffs on the consumer's dollar has been misinterpreted and misunderstood. It is relatively insignificant. Only about 50 per cent of the domestic market for textile fabrics and materials is supplied by Canadian mills. Given a larger share of this market, under an adequate and scientific tariff adjustment, production costs in Canada can be decreased, thousands more of Canadian workers can be given employment, and millions of dollars more can be paid out annually in wages. The cost of production of textiles in Canada is the basis of prices for textiles in this market, so that an increased production will inevitably bring about a lowering of prices to the Canadian consumer.

I am not advocating—I have never advocated—that Canadian consumers should pay dividends upon watered stock. The capitalization of existing cotton and woollen mills is not in excess of the value of their assets. If there is such an excess, it can readily be ascertained by the government, who should apply the remedy. I am not advocating—I have never advocated—that customs duties should be invoked to sustain a business which is not thoroughly equipped and efficiently managed. The mills of Canada are well equipped and their management is as competent and as efficient as in the United States or in England. Nor should dividends be declared upon a capitalization which is excessive for the real requirement of the business. I am advocating an honest, efficient administration of the mills; but I am advocating also that the government and parliament of this country should protect our labourers against the cheap labour of Italy, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, and even France, not to speak of Lancashire and the southern states.

But we of the province of Quebec—I have not a dollar in this industry; I am speaking of public opinion—do resent pernicious propaganda, based on misinformation and misunderstanding, which has a tendency to destroy one of the great industries of the eastern provinces of Canada, an industry which we are as competent to administer and maintain as the cotton and woollen manufacturers of the United States or of Great Britain, of Belgium, Italy or Czechoslovakia.

Of course, there are highly specialized products—luxury products—of cotton, silk, and wool, for which there is not sufficient demand in Canada at present to justify the equipment of our mills for their manufacture. These we must continue to import from abroad, and in respect of this branch of the trade we would willingly give the United Kingdom a preference over the United States producers. But it is an economic crime to give to the producers of cottons and woollens in the United States, or even to the producers of Great Britain, a preference over our own workmen, in the markets of our own country.

Some of these industries are now being maintained on the verge of bankruptcy by reason of the preferences which prevail in Canada in favour of Great Britain, and also in favour of certain continental countries of Europe, which have hitherto been granted special privileges under existing trade treaties.

Complaint is made that we do not offer constructive policies. I should like to suggest that the duties prevailing on cotton goods prior to February 1928, should be restored forthwith, and this, although it would increase the tariff protection by two and one half per cent, would give employment to several thousands of workmen throughout Canada, including some few thousand workmen and workwomen in the province of Quebec, and would stop the sacrifice and destruction of capital to the extent of a million dollars a year which is now taking place in the cotton and woollen mills of eastern Canada.

I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I shall have to take advantage of some other opportunity during this discussion to present a few more suggestions which I should like to make to the house and to the government.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. G. W. McPHEE (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) is unique in that it proposes no amendment to the budget, but states in effect that the present government has lost the confidence of the people of this country. I have followed very closely the addresses delivered by my hon. friends of the Conservative party and I have not discovered any case wherein they have proved that this government has lost the confidence of the people of Canada. On the contrary, hon. gentlemen opposite have resorted to wailing because they have not been able to obtain sufficient public confidence to place them in power.

If the issue is to be whether the government of Canada has lost the confidence of the people we will have to inquire wherein it has lost that confidence. Will the leader of the opposition say that the government of the day has lost the confidence of Canadians with regard to the restoration of the Crowsnest pass rates on grain and flour in western Canada? Will the hon. gentleman say that the government of this country has lost the confidence of the Canadian people in regard to the reduction in the duty on agricultural implements? The electorate of Canada decided in 1926 that it had sufficient confidence in the Liberal party once more to entrust that party with the reins of power. In 1926 the Liberal party said that if it was returned to power it would pass legislation granting old age pensions in this country; that legislation has been put into effect. Will the leader of the opposition say that the present government has lost the confidence of the people of Canada in that respect?

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister has said so.

Mr. VENIOT: No, he has not.

Mr. McPHEE: The Liberal party said it would put into effect the revaluation of soldiers' lands in this country; since the election of 1926 that legislation has been passed. Will my hon. friend say that in that respect the government of Canada has lost the confidence of Canadians? Will the hon. gentleman say that the present government has lost the confidence of the people in regard to its record of reduced taxation and reduction in the national debt?

An hon. MEMBER: That is a joke.

Mr. McPHEE: Every member of this house will recall four years ago what was prophesied would happen to this country if the present government persisted in the reduction of duties on automobiles.

One other matter which was most vital to the people of western Canada was the pledge by the Liberal party to construct and complete the Hudson Bay railway. Will my hon. friend say that the completion of the Hudson Bay railway would place the present government in the position of not having the confidence of the people of Canada? Hon. members will recall the discussion which took place in this house in regard to the completion of that railway, and they will remember that the Conservative party was opposed to its completion.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, the statement of the hon. gentleman is not correct.

Mr. McPHEE: I have in my hand Hansard of 1926.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. McPHEE: And in that volume I turn to a speech delivered by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in the matter of a grant of $3,000,000 for the completion of the Hudson Bay railway. At page 4293 of Hansard, 1926, my hon. friend's words are reported as follows:

> I do not regard the vote now before the house as in any sense committing me to the construction of a single foot of railway in addition to what has already been laid.

And further on he says:

> I am not opposed to that being done, but lest it should be thought that by acceding to this grant I am agreeing in principle to the completion of the line to Hudson bay, I desire to make a few observations.

Later on in the same speech the hon. gentleman said:

But from the information I have I could not under any circumstances vote to extend the railway a single foot beyond the present end of steel. I could not vote to send the railway to Nelson.

And further on in the same speech in connection with the same matter he said:

These points are apparent: first, that since the opening of the Panama canal and the movement of wheat from as far east as Maple Creek, and perhaps a little further, to the Pacific slope, there is no longer that urgent demand for the movement of grain west of that point to the Hudson bay or Fort William. Rather the desire is to move it to Vancouver. In the second place it must be remembered that the population of the country is not expanding as we should like, and that any movement that takes place of grain toward Hudson bay must necessarily involve a corresponding diminution in traffic on the two roads that now operate.

Mr. BENNETT: Will you read the context, please.

Mr. McPHEE: I would ask the hon. gentleman to let me finish. Further on my hon. friend said:

I think the minister and the government would be well advised to afford us an opportunity to have firsthand information derived from competent sources as to the availability of this harbour and of this bay for navigation for the purposes we all have in mind, namely, to afford us the cheapest possible route for the transportation of the commodities of western Canada to the markets of the world. If I believed that were possible I would support the proposal regardless of governments or parties. Because I have no such evidence as I would require if I had to consider it as a judge in an impartial way, I believe the whole matter is impracticable.

That was the speech delivered by my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, and the Minister of Railways acted upon that advice and changed the location.

Mr. McPHEE: To show my hon. friend that his own lieutenants agreed with my contention, I might read the speech delivered by Mr. Bury, the then member for East Edmonton, immediately following the speech of the leader of the opposition. He said:

I would not now have risen to speak but for the fact that the member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh)—with the best intentions in the world I have no doubt, and being himself assured of the truth of what he said—told the committee that the whole of the west was solidly behind this proposition, and he specifically mentioned the province of Alberta. Now, I cannot let that statement go unchallenged, because there is at least one member—and indeed the house has heard another in the person of the member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett)—who does not believe in the project of the Hudson Bay route as a grain route.

Those are statements made by my hon. friend and one of his lieutenants in the house.

Mr. BENNETT: I would not say that was evidence against me any more than some of my hon. friend's opinions are evidence against him.

Mr. McPHEE: My hon. friend was in his seat at the time and did not refute the statement.

Mr. BENNETT: What about the Minister of Railways? How did he vote the year before?

Mr. McPHEE: Will my hon. friend now say that in the completion of the Hudson Bay railway, over the opposition of my hon. friends, the government of this country has lost the confidence of the people of Canada? Just in that connection it might be of interest to the house to read an interview with Mr. Clarence Graham, honorary president of the "On-to-the-Bay" Association, which appeared in the press just a few days ago. The interview is as follows:

Mr. Graham estimated that within ten years of the opening of the Hudson Bay route in 1931 there will be at least fifteen million people between the Great lakes and the Pacific ocean.

The British preference, put in a nutshell, simply meant favoured treatment for Britain. In the past there had been a great deal of talk of what had been called "the American penetration of Canada." British preference would be practically a subsidy on goods coming from Britain. Pointing to the advantage in distance of the new route, Mr. Graham stated that Churchill was slightly nearer to Liverpool than New York city, being 2,926 miles compared with slightly more than 3,000 to the latter place. He intimated that opening of the Hudson bay in conjunction with British preference would create such a condition of prosperity on the prairies as would excite a desire south of the border to participate on a par with those living this side of the line.

Is it, then, with regard to our increased trade that the government has lost the confidence of the people of this country? Consult the public statements of every provincial premier throughout Canada, of every bank president, of the presidents of large mercantile concerns. They all testify to the general prosperity of Canada. Just a few days ago I happened to pick up a blotter which has been broadcast throughout Canada by one of the large mercantile concerns of the west. On the back of the blotter appears some interesting data, as follows:

Canada's Great Export Growth

The story of Canada as a trading nation in the years since the war is an amazing record of achievement not yet fully recognized by Canadians themselves. Her external trade is now running over three billion dollars a year, compared with two billions only ten years ago.

Most amazing of all has been the growth and variety of Canadian exports. At the beginning of the century, the Dominion was a small country best known for its exports of good wheat. Industrially she was unimportant; a poor crop year made Canada sink into insignificance among the trading nations of the world. All that has been changed. On a per capita basis Canada now stands second among the exporting countries of the world. In 1913, she stood only seventh. But Canadian exports to-day are not all wheat, though wheat remains the backbone of her trading strength. In manufactures alone, Canada still stands second in the world on a per capita basis, exceeded only by Great Britain. Since 1922, Canada has increased its industrial production from $2,500,000,000 to $4,000,000,000. No country in the world has exceeded this rate of growth. . . The record is one which reflects the Dominion's prosperity, and Canadians have a right to feel proud of it.

Is it in the matter of the leadership of the Liberal party that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition says we have lost the confidence of the people of this country? I will let one of the principal Tory papers of Canada answer that question. The Winnipeg Tribune, in its issue of November 1 last, had this to say with reference to the leader of the present government:

Either by good fortune or good management —his opponents say one, his supporters the other—the country at present is both tranquil and prosperous. Really acute political issues are lacking, and such issues as do exist are discussed in calmness and moderation. This fact alone in no slight tribute to the qualities Mr. King brings to his task of leadership.

How, then, do our hon. friends opposite claim that this government has lost the confidence of the people? Some of them refer to the tariff; others say that the Liberal party has stolen the clothes of the Conservative party, and in that contention they are supported to a certain extent by their allies in the southeast corner. When did the British preference ever become a part of the Tory program, in this country? It was first inaugurated by Laurier and Fielding in 1897. If one wants to know the Tory reaction to the inauguration of the British preference in 1897 he only has to read in Hansard of that year the speeches delivered by the Conservative stalwarts of that time. It will be sufficient for me to quote the words of Sir Charles Tupper, who at that time was the leader of the Conservative party. Speaking in the house on April 26, 1897, with regard to the British preference inaugurated by the Fielding tariff of that year, Sir Charles Tupper said:

Now, what is the result? The result is that this tariff goes into operation, and the hon. gentleman knows that the industries of this country are already paralyzed in consequence. While hon. members gloat, vindictively gloat, over the destruction of Canadian industries, I was reading the wail, the sorrowful wail, of those industries in the Montreal Gazette, where one manufacturer after another declared that their industries were ruined, that their mills must close, and that they saw staring them in the face a return to the deplorable state of things that existed when the hon. gentleman who last addressed the house was in charge of the fiscal policy of this country. I say that a deeper wrong was never inflicted upon Canada.

Does that look as though the British preference was ever a part of the Tory program? Continuing, Sir Charles Tupper said:

I deplore from the bottom of my heart the ruin that is going to be inflicted upon the best interests of Canada, and upon its great industries. Still, I unhesitatingly say that from a party point of view the hon. gentlemen are doing our work; they are showing the people of this country that no reliance can be placed upon the most solemn declarations that they make, either in the house or out of it; they are showing the people of this country that, having obtained power, which was all they wished for, they are now prepared to abuse that power at the cost of the sacrifice of the industries of Canada.

How similar that seems to be to the language used by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. SPOTTON: Loud applause.

An hon. MEMBER: Applesauce.

Mr. McPHEE: If my hon. friend would wait a few minutes he might not be so vocal. Much has been said of the inconsistency of the Liberal tariff policy, but in many instances that is purely election talk. What is that policy? What was the policy enunciated by the revered leader of the Liberal party, the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in regard to this matter of tariff?

An hon. MEMBER: He has been dead a long time.

Mr. McPHEE: There will be many hon. members opposite who will be dead politically within a few months.

An hon. MEMBER: You will be deader.

Mr. McPHEE: Speaking in the House of Commons on April 23, 1914, the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier enunciated what I believe is accepted by good Liberals as being the proper tariff policy to be followed by the Liberal party. He said:

We on this side of the house are not revolutionists; we are reformers; but we tell

hon. gentlemen opposite that the tariff exists for the people and not the people for the tariff. The tariff is not immutable like the laws of the Medes and Persians. The tariff has to be readjusted from time to time to bring it into harmony with changed conditions. It has to be readjusted periodically because after the lapse of a certain period we know that changes in conditions have taken place, and the tariff has to be readjusted in order to correct errors and to remove evil where evil exists.

That is the policy of the Liberal party as enunciated by the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier and which has been repeated throughout Canada over and over again by Liberals of to-day. Yet our hon. friends opposite half-heartedly make the statement that in the present budget we have stolen their thunder. Ask any housewife in Canada to-day who is permitted to buy her tea at from 10 to 15 cents per pound cheaper than she had to pay before, if this budget is in any sense a Tory budget.

An hon. MEMBER: That is Salada slops.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. McPHEE: Ask any housewife who can purchase her tableware cheaper as a result of this budget; ask any consumer in Canada who is able to buy his goods at a reduced price as a result of this budget, whether or not it is a Tory budget. Possibly my hon. friends would like to hear from one of their own newspapers.

Mr. VENIOT: They could not stand it.

Mr. McPHEE: Perhaps they would like to hear what has been said in reference to the matter of British preference. The Toronto Saturday Night, which cannot be said to have been friendly hitherto to the Liberal party—

An hon. MEMBER: Nor to the Tory party.

Mr. McPHEE: I am sorry the hon. leader of the opposition is not in his seat so that he could hear this. I read this in order partly to refute the statement made this afternoon by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary), who stated that it was only for the first day after the delivery of the budget that the papers of Canada spoke highly of it, that as time went on they began to find flaws. The Toronto Saturday Night, in their issue of May 10, ten days after the budget was delivered, has this to say in reference to the British preference:

> With regard to the extensions in the British preference which embrace enormous detail, there will be those, no doubt, who will complain that a bargain with the motherland should have preceded action.

That was the very statement made the other night by the hon. leader of the opposition, that we should have made a bargain with Great Britain. The article continues:

> Such individuals are fortunately few; and the very sentiment created among Britishers by Canada's voluntary action will undoubtedly strengthen the hands of those abroad who wish to see trade prosperity in Great Britain restored through the only channel that seems to be open, increased empire trade based on mutual interest.

My hon. friends opposite, assisted by some of their allies to their left, have made the statement that there is very little difference between the Liberal and Conservative parties in regard to the matter of tariff. However, an editorial which appeared in the Manitoba Free Press only a few days ago clears the atmosphere and defines the issue as between the two parties. This editorial, which I think should be on record, reads as follows:

> The Issue of the Tariff
> Mr. Bennett's attack upon the Liberal tariff was in the true Conservative tradition. Since the Fielding tariff of 1897 Conservatives in attack have never allowed any undue regard for consistency to cramp their style. They have exercised the right to denounce Liberal-made tariffs as a hypocritical betrayal of the supporters of the Liberal government responsible because of the presence in it of provisions patently protectionist. They have also consistently and systematically attacked these tariffs on the ground that they do not supply "adequate protection." In parts of Canada where there is well-defined low-tariff sentiment they have said that there is no tariff issue because both parties are equally protectionist, with sometime the variation that the Conservatives are in reality the true low tariff party. This last line of argument is, however, usually left to confederates, who operate behind a screen—like Milton N. Campbell, the supposedly Progressive M.P. for Mackenzie, who has been busying himself lately in trying to make the people of Saskatchewan believe that their hope for tariff reduction lies in the return to power of Mr. Bennett.

The editorial continues:

> But we do not think that now, or at any time in the last thirty years, it has been in the least difficult for an intelligent person to come to an informed opinion as to what the Liberal tariff policy is. It does not favour free trade; it is not primarily concerned with revenue; it does believe in permitting importations under competitive tariff conditions. We should say that it would be a fair definition to state that the Liberals support a competitive tariff policy, while the Conservatives favour a protective tariff looking towards prohibitive rates. The resultant Liberal tariff can only be regarded as low in comparison with protectionist tariffs: it is, in fact, pretty high. But it is now, and has been for 30 years, much lower than any possible alternative Conservative tariff; and there never was a time when the divergence in policy was more marked than it is right now.
> The issue in the coming election is the tariff. The choice is between a moderate tariff which permits us to take pay for our exports in the form of imports, and a high tariff intended to prohibit imports and hamper that foreign trade which is the very life-blood of western Canada. The electors of western Canada will have to line up on this issue, for or against a policy of tariff exclusion.

Mr. SPOTTON: They will.

Mr. McPHEE: Yes, they will.

An hon. MEMBER: Perhaps.

Mr. McPHEE: Our Tory friends are always very vocal on the eve of an election. Let us look back over the history of the Conservative party for the past thirty-eight years.

An hon. MEMBER: Make it forty.

Mr. McPHEE: No, make it thirty-eight.

Mr. SPOTTON: Oh, get back farther.

Mr. McPHEE: Let us consider its history for the past thirty-eight years, since the last election they won under the old national policy, and see what reason they have had for any exuberance of spirit prior to an election. In the past thirty-eight years the Tory party in Canada has had nine leaders. Since the last election they won under the national policy of 1892—

Mr. SPOTTON: 1891.

Mr. McPHEE: Make it 1891. They have had Sir John Macdonald, Sir John Abbott, Sir John Thompson, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Robert Borden, the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), and now they have the present leader of the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McPHEE: In reply to the applause from my hon. friends opposite I may remark that after the next election we shall be able to say of him as Mr. Fielding said of Sir Charles Tupper in 1897 when he compared Sir Charles Tupper with Moses and said that like Moses he had failed to lead his chosen few into the promised land, but had left that task to be performed by some Joshua still unknown and perhaps unborn. In those thirty-eight or thirty-nine years, with their nine leaders—and if we include the leader of the shadow government, that would make ten—they won one election, that of 1911.

Mr. QUINN: How?

Mr. McPHEE: Some other time I will answer my hon. friend.

Mr. SPENCE: What about 1917?

[Mr. McPhee.]

Mr. McPHEE: My hon. friend had better not mention 1917. In the same period of time the Liberal party had two leaders, our late revered leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King).

An hon. MEMBER: What about D. D. McKenzie?

Mr. McPHEE: In the same period of time we won the elections of 1896, 1900, 1904, 1908, 1921, 1925,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. McPHEE: —1926, and I am satisfied that when the forthcoming appeal is made, whether it comes soon or late, the electors of Canada will assure to themselves another four years of reduced debt, reduced taxation, increased trade and general prosperity under a Liberal government.

Mr. J. F. WHITE (London): Mr. Speaker, it has been customary for the present government during its regime which has existed almost continuously from the beginning of 1922 to the present, to enlarge in the speech from the throne and also in the budget speech on the prosperity which Canada, it claims, is enjoying under its leadership. This year has been no exception to the rule. The government has both in the speech from the throne and in the budget speech claimed prosperity. I propose to consider some of these claims, not year by year, but rather in the light of experience of the years during which the government has been in office.

Agriculture has always been regarded as one of the basic industries of the country. Early in the session several discussions took place on the various phases of agriculture and it was demonstrated in the debates that that basic industry was in a condition not at all in keeping with the claims made in the budget. Conclusive evidence of this is found in a circular letter sent out under the signature of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. This letter, which is in part, as follows, refers to only a few branches of the agricultural industry:

You are, I understand, interested in live stock of some kind, and are therefore, I have no doubt, interested in Canada's holding her place, and even doing a little better than that on the world's markets for various live stock products. Now, as a matter of fact, Canada seems unfortunately to be losing ground in this connection. For instance, we no longer export any eggs or butter; we send abroad very little dressed poultry or lamb; our exports of beef cattle are dwindling; our shipments of beef are decreasing; our shipments of bacon, which a few years ago were very large, have almost disappeared, and our shipments of cheese are rapidly falling off. . . . . Such trade is essential we believe if our farmers are to hope to do more than eke out a bare living on the land.

That is a most damaging confession, and now that the government have been eight years in office it would be interesting to have the replies that are sent to their query. We can, however, give the departmental officials credit for being alive to the danger and for trying to find a remedy.

In former days we used to market a great deal of our farm produce in the United States. If we look back over the records of trade we shall find there have been some very serious changes and also the reasons for the drop in trade so far as that country is concerned. The Commercial Intelligence Journal periodically prints a record of the exports, from Canada to the United States, of the principal commodities produced on Canadian farms or manufactured directly from such farm products. In the issue showing the report of the last six months ending March, 1930, we find a startling record as to the result of our business with our neighbours to the south, and also the reasons therefor. We find that in the six months ended March, 1921, we had supplied the United States market with farm product to the value of $130,517,000 and that during the six months ended March, 1930, our exports of farm products to the United States had dropped to $24,645,000. The reason for that is to be found in the records of the United States tariff rates. Their rates in 1921 and to-day are as follows:

|---|---|---|
| Cattle | Free | 1½ to 2 cts. per pound |
| Sheep | Free | $2 per head |
| Oats | Free | 10 cts. per 100 pounds |
| Wheat | Free | 42 cts. per bushel |
| Wheat flour | Free | $1.04 per 100 pounds |
| Beef fresh, chilled or frozen | Free | 3 cts. per pound |
| Butter | 2½ cts. per pound | 12 cts. per pound |
| Potatoes | Free | 50 cts. per 100 pounds |

That is only a partial list, including some forty-odd items which bear the rates of duty which have been in force since 1922. It does not take into consideration any change in duties which are in contemplation by the United States government, and is, of course, only a record of the duties now in force. Those duties have had the result of causing a depreciation in our trade in the American market of eighty per cent.

What did this government do when the Fordney-McCumber tariff of September, 1922, came into force? For one thing, they evolved the Petersen contract. For a second thing, they looked for wider markets. Third, they tried to reduce the cost of implements of production. Fourth, they lowered tariffs. Now, after eight years in office, when the government is faced with a further increase in American duties, it brings down countervailing duties. If countervailing duties is the right policy now, it was the right policy in 1922, when the Fordney-McCumber tariff became law. But in spite of the urging of the opposition, the government accepted the situation in 1922 without a protest, and the consequence is that our trade in the American market suffered a reduction of eighty per cent. Now, when the balance of our trade in that market is threatened, the government are moving to save the remaining twenty per cent by countervailing duties. The time to apply remedial measures was when the greatest damage was being done in 1923.

We all know what happened to the Petersen contract, the government's first reply to the Fordney-McCumber tariff. It is not necessary to enlarge upon that, or upon the object of the Petersen contract or upon what happened to it when it was considered by a committee of this house.

The search for wider markets resulted in many treaties being made, one of which was the French treaty, the dire results of which have been explained to this house on more than one occasion. Then there was the trade agreement with New Zealand. This was under discussion in the house very recently, when the government defended the New Zealand trade agreement in spite of the large importations of New Zealand butter, mutton and other products that are coming into Canada from that country. In the month of March of this year the government defended it as being a splendid agreement, and then in the month of April they gave notice of its termination, driven to it, no doubt, by the activities of the Conservative opposition. In the meantime the government have been bombarded by requests and complaints from the fruit growers, the vegetable growers, the tobacco growers, the sheep raisers and the producers of dairy products, and the results of the government's efforts on their behalf we find in the present budget.

| 6-ft. binder | $219 00 | $225 50 | $ 6 50 |
| 8-ft. binder, with bundle carrier and T. truck | 251 00 | 263 50 | 12 50 |
| 6-ft. mower | 95 50 | 96 50 | 1 00 |
| Hay loader, with steel windrow and forecarriage | 112 00 | 122 00 | 10 00 |

*Decrease.

Thus it is that the government decreases the cost of the implements of production. As I said, the prices I have quoted were taken from the published price lists of the implement companies, and they prove conclusively that the consumer pays more for his implements to-day than he did when this government assumed office in 1922. In spite of that, the importations of agricultural implements have largely increased.

I wish to pass to a consideration of the effect of the volume of this manufacturing business so far as Canada is concerned. The Bureau of Statistics has issued a bulletin covering the agricultural implement industry in Canada in 1928, and it contains the statement that during 1928 more money was spent in Canada on agricultural implements and machinery than in the preceding year. It goes on to state that this increase in demand for farm implements was largely supplied by imported goods, as lower levels of production were reported for Canadian-made products. Production values dropped in 1928, while imports advanced in the same year. According to the figures given in this bulletin, the apparent consumption of agricultural implements in Canada rose to $66,000,000 in 1928 as compared with $52,000,000 in 1927.

The percentage of Canadian-made implements bought by the Canadian consumer is of great interest. I find from the Bureau of Statistics that in 1923, the year before the great reduction in the duties on agricultural implements, Canada produced 70 per cent of her requirements and purchased 30 per cent. These figures have been practically reversed. In 1925, one year after the reduction in duty, Canada produced 67 per cent and bought 33 per cent; in 1926 she produced 55 per cent and bought, largely from the United States, 45 per cent; in 1927 the figures stand 50-50; in 1928, the last year for which figures are complete, Canada produced only 40 per cent and purchased 60 per cent, almost entirely from the United States. This is a damaging statement so far as the agricultural implement industry of Canada is concerned.

A few days ago the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) delivered an address in Woodstock, and on the platform supporting him were the representatives of the federal ridings of North Oxford (Mr. Allan) and South Oxford (Mr. Cayley). They lauded the Minister of Finance and his budget. I wonder if the Minister of Justice knew that within shouting distance of the platform on which he was making his speech there existed a wagon factory which had been closed within the last three months? That factory did a good business for twenty-five years, it increased its operations, and it not only made farm wagons, but also freight wagons and sleighs and children's wagons. The firm ceased operations three months ago and is now bankrupt. There is no doubt in my mind that the failure has been brought about by the reduction of the duties on agricultural implements made in 1924, because the duty on wagons at that time was reduced from seventeen and a half, general tariff, to ten per cent. What message of cheer did the Minister of Justice bring to the shareholders in that defunct institution? What message of encouragement did he bring to the workmen who had lost their jobs in that factory? He said, in effect, as he extolled the present government: We know you are out of a job, but farm wagons, on which the British preferential duty has been five per cent, we will admit free; freight wagons, on which the British preferential duty has been seventeen and a half per cent, we will also admit free; as to children's wagons, we will reduce the general rate from thirty-five to thirty per cent, the intermediate from thirty to twenty-five per cent, and we will make the British preference ten per cent instead of twenty-two and a half per cent. That, sir, is comparable in its heartlessness with the statement of the Prime Minister only a short time ago in which he dealt with the unemployment situation in the provinces under Conservative government. What recourse has the wagon company? None. All it can do is console itself with the ancient promise of the Prime Minister that "no legitimate company making a legitimate profit need fear any action on the part of the Liberal government." The futility of it all is that our manufacturing establishments are being put out of business and the price of wagons is no lower.

I am of the opinion, and this opinion is based on forty years' experience in manufacturing in the metal industry, that with the market we have in Canada assured to our manufacturers of implements by a reasonable tariff, they could on account of mass production make and sell implements at a much lower price than obtains to-day. It may be urged that prices will soar. They did not in 1922. Now we have a tariff board with a staff of men claimed to be experts. They have visited the plants where these implements are manufactured, and they should know the cost of production. If they do not, how can they arrive at the proper customs duty to apply to each of these items? If they know the cost of production they ought to know if prices are exorbitant, and if this is the case they should apply the remedy without any difficulty.

It has been said that since the duties on agricultural implements have been lowered more men are being employed in the industry than formerly. That statement may be true, but the percentage of implements made in Canada has fallen from seventy per cent in 1923 to forty per cent in 1928. If we had the seventy per cent production which we enjoyed in 1923, instead of having ten or eleven thousand men employed in the industry to-day we might be employing twenty thousand, and they would be getting steady work instead of looking for jobs.

When this so-called reduction in the cost of the implements of production was attempted by a reduction in the customs tariff it was accompanied by a reduction in duty on the raw materials which are used in the manufacture of these implements. Pig iron was placed on the free list, and in 1928 we imported 8,392 tons; castings were placed on the free list, and we imported in that year $345,000 worth; rolled iron and steel were also placed on the free list, and we imported in that year sixty-seven thousand tons; on another item under the heading of "other iron and steel products" which includes nuts, bolts, and other articles entering into the manufacture of these implements, the duty was reduced to six per cent, and in 1928 we imported these articles from the United States to the value of $4,321,000. The net result to the primary operations in iron and steel is that we have been producing less than we did in 1913, the year before the war.

I have under my hand Iron and Steel and Their Products in Canada in 1927, a publication issued under the authority of the hon. James Malcolm, Minister of Trade and Commerce. It deals with the production of pig iron, and on page 62 will be found a report of Canada's production in the years since 1913 up to the present time. In 1913 we produced over 1,000,000 tons of pig iron; from 1922 to 1927, the years when this government was in power, we produced an average of 649,000 tons annually, or only sixty-four per cent of what we produced in 1913. On page 63 the capacity of the blast furnaces in Canada is given. Their capacity is stated to be from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 tons a year; in 1927 we produced only 649,000 tons. That will give the house some idea how these establishments are running on short time or are closed for a large portion of the year.

The manufacturers of iron and steel, of course, have been dissatisfied with this condition of affairs, and ever since 1926 the Minister of Finance has been importuned by many of them to reclassify the iron and steel schedules, and at last we have such a reclassification in this budget. Although the primary producers were sacrificed in 1924, six years later the Minister of Finance tells this house that the object of his budget is to help the primary producers of iron and steel. He is supported in that statement by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), who spoke a few days ago along the same lines. In this budget there have been many changes in the duties, notably in the British preference, the object being "to trade with those who are willing to trade with us."

It is difficult to estimate the effects of the budget, but we do know that Canadian manufacturers are now being undersold in many lines by United States producers, and we do know that if Britain expands her trade she will have at least to equal, if not underbid the United States prices. It is a question whether equal prices will turn our trade to England, because geographical position has to be considered; there is the matter of the suitability of American goods as compared to English goods. Then there is the matter of the ease with which differences between buyer and seller can be adjusted. All these matters will militate against the importation of British goods, and if British goods do come in they will come in at the expense of Canadian labour. It must be remembered that every ton of goods imported, no matter where from, means that one ton less is made in Canadian factories by Canadian workmen. The government has had a change of heart in the matter of applying duties. It evidently now believes in the brick for brick policy which was condemned by them on almost every political platform in this country during the 1926 election campaign. They have adopted that policy, if we may judge from the budget,and they now say it is a good policy for the grain growers; I wonder if the government believes that it is a good policy for the manufacturers. If so, they have not practised it.

There are some anomalies in the present iron and steel schedule. The first item in that schedule is the one regarding scrap iron and steel. Formerly those products carried a duty of 50 cents per ton, but now they are free. I wonder if the tariff board or the Minister of Finance have made any inquiry as to the position as far as scrap iron is concerned. If they had made an inquiry they would have found that the material mentioned in section (a) of item 373, which is wrought scrap and is now on the free list, was imported into Canada in the last five years to the extent of 40,000 tons; it was exported however to the extent of 378,000 tons. There is no record during the last five years in which the exports do not exceed the imports. Under those conditions the item of wrought scrap iron on the free list will have very little effect. It is considered to be good practice in the operation of open hearth furnaces to use a considerable quantity of scrap; this use of wrought scrap does not interfere with the production of pig iron. The scrap is used in almost equal quantities with the pig iron in the interests of economy and good furnace performance.

The next item under the same heading is cast iron scrap. This is one type of scrap which interferes with the production of pig iron. The duty on pig iron is now $2.50 whereas cast iron scrap is free. The importation of this scrap cast iron means just so much less pig iron to be supplied from Canadian furnaces; the free entry will probably increase the importation of this particular item. In the year 1928 we imported 9,900 tons.

Another item in the scrap schedules is that of railway rails. The articles referred to are used rails brought into the country for re-rolling and to be made into other forms of rolled bars, such as concrete reinforcement. The item of railway rails is one which comes into direct competition with the production of pig iron and the primary production of steel. In the last five years we have imported 366,000 tons. The government has raised the duty on billets by $2, and it encourages the importation of old rails to compete with the billets from which bars are made.

Take the items of blooms, cogged ingots, slabs and billets. In 1928 we imported 44,000 tons of this material. In the same year Canada produced 778,000 tons of billets, or 95 per cent of her total requirements. It will be apparent to hon. members that 44,000 tons represents only 5 per cent of our requirements. In the same year there were imported 127,600 tons of old rails to compete with Canadian billets, and these billets are used to make almost the same quality of bars as the old rails. It will be apparent to hon. members that the importation of old rails has a direct bearing on the reduction in the quantity of steel produced, although the government seem to be under the impression that the addition of $2 per ton on billets will make a difference.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is replaced with material of a poorer quality.

Mr. WHITE (London): As the hon. member for Pictou has said—and he has spent a lifetime in the business—it is replaced with material of a poorer quality. In connection with the hot rolled bars and rods there is a worse situation; the duty remains the same. In 1927 Canadian mills sold 190,000 tons of this particular material. In the same year we imported 118,000 tons; last year the amount was 173,000 tons. In other words, Canada imported 40 per cent of her consumption in rolled iron and steel while her rolling mill equipment has not been fully operative. To my mind such action is not aiding a primary industry. To raise the duty on ingots in order to protect 5 per cent of our requirements and to neglect the duty on bars when 40 per cent are being imported is not the way to help a primary industry.

I regret that I have not time to go into further detail in connection with the iron and steel schedule. All I can say is that there are some items which appear to encourage the manufacture of steel in Canada. The extra duty on alloy steels is one of them. The matter of heavy structural steel is dependent on an order in council, and it strikes me that any maunfacturing concern which will spend a million dollars or a million and a half for the construction of a heavy structural mill is taking great chances and is "putting its trust in princes" when it relies for its returns on an order in council which will impose a certain duty. On medium structural steel the duty has been doubled. The duty on plates has been increased, and this increase will probably result in further manufacturing in Canada. There will not be much change in regard to sheets. American producers do not seem to worry about the situation. The Canadian Steel Corporation, Limited, at Ojibway, has refused to be hurried as far as construction is concerned. While its plant has been under construction for several years there seems to be no probability of its entering the market immediately, so far as the production of primary steel is concerned.

Taking the whole history of the government we find that there has been damage to agriculture. An attempt to reduce the cost of the implements of production has failed. There has been damage to the iron and steel and textile industries. Any prosperity which Canada enjoys in regard to industries is not by reason of any help which the government has given, but rather in spite of it. This proposed revision of the tariff is a mere patchwork; it puts up a little here and takes off a little there; it helps someone at this end of the country and hinders someone at the other end. To my mind what Canada needs is proper consideration of her primary industries and the adoption of tariff schedules which will foster the preliminary stages of our basic industries. After that is done consideration may be given to the secondary processes and so on until all industry has an equal opportunity to develop and to give employment to our people. The present budget does not measure up to that need, and I propose to vote against it.

Mr. ARTHUR DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I must first offer my congratulations to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the government for having chosen the Hon. Mr. Dunning as Minister of Finance. I do not think that a better choice could have been made.

A few days ago, the hon. Minister of Finance brought down in the house his first budget and submitted to us the financial, economic and trade situation of this country. Notwithstanding that the hon. minister did not comply with the definition of the dictionary, as he was reproached for, he nevertheless told us that our country, under the present administration, continued its ascending march towards progress and prosperity. Our national debt which, under the Conservative rule, increased by leaps and bounds, was reduced by $80,000,000 during this fiscal year, and by $257,800,000, within the last five years. Our trade with other countries was not as prosperous this year as during the preceding years; we registered an unfavourable balance of $103,000,000. This is due to the fact that the wheat pool in the west, either rightly or wrongly, refused to sell their wheat at the price fixed by the dealers in London. This slight disappointment can only be momentary. Already, since the opening of navigation we have noticed that our wheat shipments have been larger than at this period, last year. In regard to the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1930, the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance shows a surplus of more than $44,000,000, this has helped to reduce our national debt. The receipts amounted to $447,322,000, showing a slight reduction of $14,325,000 as compared with that of the preceding year. This decrease must not astonish us, considering the reductions in taxation effected last year, and which were estimated at more than $25,000,000. The same thing may happen this year owing to the decrease of the sales tax, from 2 to 1 per cent, which it is estimated will amount to $22,000,000. I do not think that there is any one in this house who will reproach this government for having reduced the sales tax, a reduction which was to the advantage of the most numerous and the least wealthy class, the consumers, the majority being workmen. If the manufacturers insist on not paying their employees wages proportionate to their profits and the protection they are given by this government, they will have to settle the matter with that same government. Do you wish another proof of the sympathy of the government towards the workmen? At this present session the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), got this house to adopt a measure obliging all contractors obtaining contracts from the government to observe the eight hour day and pay their employees fair and equitable wages. The government desired by this act that the workman, who is the most important factor in all industries, and without whom nothing could be done, should divide in a fair proportion the profits realized. The workman, like all other citizens, must live and it is but fair that the fruit of his wages should give him sufficient purchasing powers to buy what he needs for his existence and that of his family. Of what use would it be to the manufacturer to produce, if the workmen had not the necessary money to purchase his products? Inevitably these industries and their owners would face complete failure. The object which this present government has in mind through its tariff policy, is to grant to all and every one the protection to which he has a right without being detrimental to others. No one has a right to get rich at the expense of others. Before the law, we are all equal.

There is another duty incumbent on the government of any country, which owing to its population, industrial and trade development cannot suffice to itself, if it is to keep up most friendly trade relations with other countries. That is why the government has made certain changes to its tariff schedule. It took no accounts of the theories of protectionist or free traders, but rather of the needs of the people and advantages that they might obtain from these tariff changes. Our farmers complained that there existed an unfair competition in butter by New Zealand; the Government asked the tariff commission to make an inquiry, and as a result the tariff was changed so as to do them justice, by establishing a preferential tariff of 4 cents per pound. Our truck gardeners also complained of the competition carried on by the United States against their vegetables. Immediately an inquiry was started, and they are glad to hear to-day that the government by its budget has established a tariff which allows them to compete advantageously with the United States products. But we, city representatives, have no desire to see, by this tariff change, our workmen obliged to pay dearer for their commodities. This question was carefully considered by the government and the solution arrived at, I am convinced, will satisfy all concerned.

It is unfortunate, however, that Conservative importers, with the sole aim of deceiving public opinion, for election purposes, thought fit to raise the price of their goods, and this without any reason, making their clients believe that the tariff was the cause. It is some of the Tory party's propaganda and falsehoods: the Canadian people are wise to their tricks and will not allow themselves to be deceived when the time comes to give their verdict, at the next general election. Before resuming my seat, allow me, sir, to draw the attention of the goverment to the request of the postal employees for an increase in salary. I think that this request should be given further consideration. If it were thought proper to appoint a commission with reference to the increases to be granted to a certain class of employees, I think that the postal workers generally, also deserve that we take an interest in their lot and help them by complying with their request.

There is another question, sir, that I should like to submit to the government. There has been an attempt to introduce in this House a measure tending to make the Canadian people believe that a subsidy for the construction of a national highway would have greatly helped to relieve the unemployment that existed last winter. As representative of the province of Quebec, I have been and I am still opposed to a subsidy for the construction of a highway, so called national. The province of Quebec has always led in the movement to build up good roads. We did not depend on the Dominion government to construct these national highways and I think that the other provinces should have as much pride as the province of Quebec and build their highways without coming to Ottawa to seek the help of the Dominion government. If unemployment, sir, exists, it is not the Dominion government's fault. On the contrary, our government, through the Minister of Labour, did all it could to induce public companies and private firms which had work to be done, to begin as soon as possible, so as to employ those who were in need of work to provide for their families.

After these few comments, I am pleased to state in the house that, as representative of a Montreal riding, the St. Denis constituency, I am proud of the budget presented this year by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) and I feel certain that it will be given at the next general election the entire approval of the Canadian people.

Mr. M. J. MALONEY (South Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, I very greatly regret that my lack of knowledge of the beautiful language which has just flowed from the lips of my eloquent friend does not permit me to address the house in the same way. No doubt that is my loss; it is the loss of many people in this country, which some day we shall see remedied.

It has been my privilege on four or five occasions to say a word in connection with the budgets which have been delivered in this house and, Mr. Speaker, I recall with sorrow that the man whom I have been accustomed to hear deliver the budget speech during the last five years has passed away. The late Minister of Finance, even though we did not on all occasions agree with him politically, was a man whom we trusted absolutely, a man who I believe had the confidence of ninety per cent of our people. To me it is a matter of very great regret indeed that he has passed away and left us forever. His successor is an outstanding citizen who, we were glad to see, was sufficiently strong in health to deliver a budget of a character unusual in the history of our country.

Speaking as an individual member of the opposition, and for myself only, I should like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that under the laws of this country there are several kinds of robbery. There is the ordinary, every day robbery; there is highway robbery, and there is robbery with violence. When we come to consider this budget we find that all three kinds of robbery have been combined, and we can only say that the present Minister of Finance and those associated with him have committed at once all three varieties of this offence. As a matter of fact the only difference between certain hon. gentlemen in Canada and Jesse James is the fact that Jesse James had a horse. Surely when hon. gentlemen opposite endeavour to impress upon the country the attitude they are now taking, they cannot be serious. I will say this to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King): If he can put this budget across, the day after the election he can start out and commit murder whenever he wishes, and he will be surely acquitted.

However, the people of Canada cannot be fooled all the time. Almost every item in the budget presented by the Minister of Finance is something for which we have been fighting for many years. It is a very fine tribute indeed to the great party on this side of the house. I think I am letting you in on no profound secret, Mr. Speaker, when I say that when the people of Canada have a chance to pronounce their views, which I hope will be within the next sixty or sixty-five days, they will give to the party which has been endeavouring to propound these policies the opportunity to put them into effect.

The budget will not be the only matter discussed before the people of this country during the next sixty or seventy days. We will discuss the record of this government for the past nine years. Now, on their death bed, they are repenting and endeavouring to adopt the cures which we have been propounding for that length of time, but they will have to answer for their record during that period. To-day, when almost every industry in this country has been, practically ruined, with the farmers almost in penury, the government adopt the policies we have been advocating for the past nine years.

We must also consider the record of this government in many matters in addition to the fiscal policy; we must consider matters of taxation and of expenditure. Here is a party which stood for low taxation and economy. What have they been practising in the last few years? Even to-day what is their platform on economy? They are spending $22,000,000 more this year than was spent last year, and yet they say they are trying to save the money of the people of Canada. How are they spending that money? This is what the people will want to know. Are they spending it in the interests of the people of Canada as a whole? Let us consider for a few moments what is happening right here in the city of Ottawa. This is a matter which I have mentioned before and which will be mentioned again; it is of great importance to the whole Dominion of Canada. I refer to the amount of money which this government is prepared to spend in order to destroy perfectly good property in the city of Ottawa. Is that being done in the interests of the hard working farmer and the hard working labourer of this country? This government is prepared to do that, but how could that money have been spent? The proposal was made to the government that instead of destroying perfectly good property it should do something constructive; it should build a highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It should spend millions of dollars upon that work rather than to tear down good property in this city. If that was done it would mean the employment of many thousands of men throughout Canada and would afford relief to a situation which is inimical to our welfare. This government has known of the unemployment in this country, but it has done absolutely nothing. An opportunity was presented to link the east with the west and at the same time give employment to thousands of our citizens. But the government has taken no action in this respect, and that is an issue which will come before the electors of Canada during the next two or three months.

In addition, there is the expenditure which is being made upon foreign legations. What are those legations doing for Canada? What benefit have they been to the people as a whole? What has our friend Mr. Marler done in Tokyo for the benefit of Canada? How much has he cost the people of this country? What has our friend the Hon. Vincent Massey, in the meantime in Washington cost the people of this country, and of what benefit has he been to Canada? Our idea is to take the money being spent in Washington and Tokyo and spend it in aid of technical education. As you know, Mr. Speaker, our system of education is not one which brings the best out of a boy or a girl. From the time of entering until the time of leaving the common school, our system of education guides the scholar along one certain line, a line leading to the universities. We have not forgotten that ninety per cent of our boys and girls never reach the university? When the young people leave the primary or secondary school, after matriculation, they have a knowledge of algebra, a knowledge of English, an imperfect knowledge of French and Latin, and a smattering of other subjects, but what position in life are they able to occupy? They cannot go into a store and keep a set of books; they cannot go on the farm and work the land—they are too highly educated for that. They cannot take up a trade because they have not received the necessary training. Technical education would mean that boys and girls at the tender age of twelve, fourteen or fifteen would have installed into their minds the idea of taking up some profession or calling worth while. But the government says: No, we would rather spend three million dollars on Messrs. Vincent Massey and Herbert Marler than spend one million dollars on the boys and girls of Canada. This is another matter which will come before the electors of Canada, in addition to the notorious highway robbery which I have already mentioned.

Has this government been a friend of the farmer? Consider the condition of agriculture to-day as compared with that of nine years ago. At that time the farmers of Canada were fairly prosperous; they were able to pay their debts and continue to carry on. From end to end of Canada to-day you will find in section after section, farm after farm abandoned. That applies even in the most highly developed portions of our agricultural districts. In the county of Oxford, which is perhaps the garden spot of Canada, there is to-day a smaller agricultural population than there was at the time of confederation. Why should that be? Simply because of the fact that this government during the last nine years has allowed every foreign competitor to dump his farm products into Canada in competition with our own farmers. In the county of Renfrew for the last eight or ten months we have been eating beef and mutton, produced where? Not in Renfrew county, not in Ontario, not in Canada, but in a country seven thousand miles away—that beef and mutton came all the way from New Zealand, and was dumped here in competition with Canadian farmers. How has this happened? This government passed an order in council without the consent of this parliament, without the consent of the people of Canada, which allows these products to enter Canada in unfair competition with our own products. Not only is beef and mutton allowed to enter under these conditions, but millions and millions of pounds of butter are being dumped here in competition with the products of our own farms. Then, the farmer having been ruined, and the dairying industry killed, in order to procure a few votes the government becomes penitent and says: We will adopt the policy which our opponents have been advocating.

However, there is one other product which has been forgotten—wool and wool products. Twenty years ago we had in the district from which I come ten or twelve woollen mills, all of which were running full blast day and night. What are the present conditions? Out of those ten or twelve mills, only two are left, and one is making a struggle for existence. The others are closed and locked up tight. Why? Because this government has allowed woollen goods and certain grades of wool to enter free of duty, and we are unable to compete with the outside world. Possibly next year, if by any unfortunate chance the present government should be returned, after this industry is dead and gone it will accept the advice we have been trying to give it, and a tariff reform will be brought into force which will protect the woollen mills of Canada. However, that is carrying the question too far.

will have an opportunity to form a government, and then indeed Canada will enter an era of prosperity

Mr. THEODULE RHEAUME (Jacques Cartier) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the speech of the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Maloney). At the outset of his remarks, he charged the King government with three kinds of thievery as defined by the Criminal Code. Evidently the hon. member meant to say that the Dunning budget has completely unclothed our friends of the opposition and they feel somewhat in the awkward position that our ancestor Adam was, immediately after his fall. We are but human and charitable we would like to help them, however, it is impossible to offer them, in their distress, anything but our sympathy to cover their nudity.

I first wish to congratulate the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), on his first political achievement which brings to the country smiling hopes and to the government itself a certainty of victory in the great conflict of to-morrow.

I shall now take up a few minutes of the last hours of the session to place before the house the question, ever so long discussed of a Dominion government grant to construct two tunnels under the Lachine canal, in Montreal, one at Wellington street, the other at Church street, Côte St. Paul. The necessity and urgency of these public improvements insisted on for over 20 years, cannot be gainsaid. On the south side of the Lachine canal, covering a distance of three miles, there is a progressive population which will soon attain the figure of 200,000.

Mr. DUSSAULT (Translation): Are they Liberals?

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Yes, in part, and we hope to convert the others.

These people are in daily contact with that part of Montreal situated on the north side of the canal. Large, important and numerous industries are located along the canal. The two principal bridges that connect the entire traffic are those of Wellington and Côte St. Paul. There went through the Lachine canal, last year, more than 10,000 vessels, carrying 129,750,737 bushels of wheat and more than 50,000,000 bushels of other grains, without mentioning other merchandise. Owing to this enormous traffic through the canal last year, the Wellington bridge was closed to traffic at various times—I shall give the exact figures—during 32,812 minutes, not one minute more or less—representing about 30 days; the Côte St. Paul bridge was closed during 17,851 minutes—not one minute more or less—that is for about 20 days.

The above facts are corroborated by the letter and statement which were addressed to the member for Jacques Cartier on January 17, 1929, by the Montreal Tramway Commission. I shall read a few extracts of this letter:

The Commissioner of Tramways of Montreal

Montreal, Jan. 17, 1929.

Mr. Theodule Rhéaume, K.C.,
Member for the County of Jacques-Cartier, Dominion Government of Canada.

Sir:—

At your request, Mr. J. F. Saint Cyr, the Chairman of the Commission of Tramways of Montreal, has directed me to prepare a detailed statement of the delays which the tramway traffic had to contend with—and thereby all other vehicles—at the two swing bridges located on the Lachine canal at Wellington and Côte St. Paul streets, in the course of the navigation season of 1928.

You will note, first, that for a season of hardly more than seven months duration, the total of delays amount to 30 days and six hours at the Wellington bridge, that is of almost one day for every seven days, and of 20 days at the Côte St. Paul bridge.

The summary of the statement on delays which you will find attached is as follows:

| 1928— | Côte St. Paul st. bridgeMinutes | Wellington st. bridgeMinutes |
|---|---|---|
| April | 64 | 260 |
| May | 2,062 | 3,953 |
| June | 2,436 | 4,311 |
| July | 2,400 | 4,293 |
| August | 2,659 | 4,886 |
| September | 2,653 | 4,683 |
| October | 2,810 | 5,267 |
| November | 2,480 | 4,701 |
| December | 187 | 458 |
| Total | 17,851 | 32,812 |

I also enclose, at the end of the statement the detail of a typical day, that is October 10, 1928, where I have indicated by asterisks the delays encountered during traffic hours. It occurs often and it is the working population which suffers the most.

You will therefore, find, attached to this report, the detail of all the daily delays of tramways at both bridges, from April 22 to December 10, 1928.

Trusting that these schedules will furnish you with all necessary information, I remain, sir,

Yours, truly,

Gustave Comte,
Secretary of the Tramway Commission.

As confirmed by the letter that I have just read and the statement to which it refers, congestion is intolerable in the morning and evening, when the workmen go and come from their work.

If we add to the ordinary traffic of a city which is growing every day as that of Montreal, the traffic of tourists who each year invade the metropolis of Canada, and two-thirds of whom pass over the Wellington bridge or that of Cote St. Paul, the house will have a fair idea of the necessity and urgency of the tunnels requested.

On what grounds would the Dominion government be called upon to contribute to the construction of these tunnels? First, the Dominion government is obliged to help traffic where its canals and railways are operating. When bridges become insufficient, it must provide other means to meet the needs of traffic. In the case under consideration it is proved that only tunnels could remedy the evil of which people complain.

Moreover, navigation will benefit greatly by the construction of those tunnels. Indeed, the vessels which carry our good will gain an appreciable time; the accidents which have occurred at the Lachine canal bridge and interfered with navigation for a few days, would then be a thing of the past.

With the competition that Canada meets over its wheat in the world markets, these advantages to navigation which I have just enumerated, will certainly be appreciated by the members of this house.

Now these improvements, like elections, require something more than prayers. What will be the cost of those tunnels? The engineers who have studied these two schemes have fixed the approximate cost of the tunnel at Wellington street, at $2,500,000, and that of Cote St. Paul, at $2,130,000. The cost seems high, but I shall show that the government will make a good bargain by contributing to them. The plans already prepared include the necessary space for two tramway tracks two vehicular roads, and a sidewalk six feet wide for pedestrians.

Now, sir, how will the cost of construction be distributed? Montreal, which will maintain on its own responsibility, and become the owners of, these tunnels will pay one-third of the work. The Montreal Tramway Company undertakes to pay another third There would only remain for the Dominion government to pay the balance, that is one-third of the cost.

I shall now show that this contribution of the Dominion government would be an advantageous one financially. It will cost the government very little to help in the construction of these tunnels; indeed, the Wellington street bridge was completed in 1898; it is therefore 32 years old. Thirty-two years in power for a good government like the present one is not much, but for an iron bridge, it is practically the limit of its usefulness. The Côte St. Paul bridge is about as old, perhaps a few years less. It will be necessary to rebuild those two bridges in the near future. What will it cost the country? An amount not less than $400,000 for each bridge. Add to the cost of construction, the operating and maintenance costs which amounts to about $20,000 per year for each bridge; now, the capitalized value of this yearly expenditure, $20,000 at 5 per cent, amounts to $400,000. The construction, therefore, of the government in the proportion of one-third would represent about the same amount which would be necessary to construct, operate and maintain the two new bridges.

I shall add nothing further, as the end of the session is near. I think, sir, that I have proved my case, as we say in court, and I feel confident that the supplementary estimates will help to solve a problem which interests greatly the city of Montreal and the whole country as well.

Mr. C. DUMAINE (Bagot) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, a celebrated English parliamentarian stated that a new member should speak in the house only after having listened attentively during two sessions; that at the third session, he should speak but for ten minutes. I wish to conform, in a large measure to this advice, and I shall restrict myself as much as possible to the time limit indicated.

Before proceeding further, sir, allow me to recall to the hon. members the memory of the late Mr. G. D. Morin, my predecessor. Mr. Morin was highly thought of by his colleagues, friends and all his constituents. He was a hard worker and very devoted to his duties. The country lost a great man; his family, a good father and the county a distinguished member. Mr. Morin was the worthy successor of Mr. J. E. Edmond Marcile, who represented the county of Bagot during twenty-eight years, and his constituents reposed all their confidence in him up to the very last, since they elected him, in 1925, hardly a month before his death. I trust that the example of my predecessors may be a guide to me in my public life.

I took a great interest in the debates of the present session, and I studied as much as it was possible for me to do, the legislation enacted. Allow me, sir, to congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mackenzie King) for the wise way in which he leads the Liberal party and directs the destinies of Canada. The right hon. Prime Minister is a great statesman, and has a wide-world reputation. All legislation which he has passed is sound, human and loyal. I would not be doing my duty and would be unfair to our hon. ministers if I did not give them credit for the good and sound administration of their respective departments. And you, Mr. Speaker, you have my entire admiration and full confidence for the wise way with which you preside over proceedings of this house.

As I wish to be brief, allow me, sir, to say a few words on questions of a general interest to the country and of immediate need to my constituents.

On May 1, the hon. minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) submitted to us the budget for the current year. The reduction of the national debt, as well as that on the income tax and sales tax were highly appreciated by all citizens of this country, Conservatives as well as Liberals, and this is vouched by all the newspapers which were published the day following this great event.

This year again, more than any other, the government seemed to take a greater interest in the farming class which I have the honour of representing in the house. The prohibition of United States farm products on our markets is a great help to Canadian farmers. The Americans used to dump the surplus of their products on our markets at ridiculous prices, and they prohibited our products on their own markets. I congratulate the government on the stand they have taken. One must not forget that the farmers belong to the class which is the least organized in this country, and we must protect them.

The farming industry differs from other industries; there are a number of factors which makes its management difficult. The crop is either good or bad, depending upon the weather, and even if the market is favourable, if a farmer has no crop he cannot sell anything; and vice versa, should the crop be excellent and the market poor, the farmer is often obliged to sell at ridiculous prices even sometimes at 50 per cent of cost price. Yet the owner of a farm is always obliged to pay, each year, his taxes and meet various other payments, and, furthermore, interests at rates often too high.

One of our devoted colleagues, the hon. member for St. John Iberville (Mr. Benoit) introduced a resolution in this house to reduce the rate of interest on farm loans from 6½ per cent to 5½ per cent. All the members of Quebec and a great number of members from other provinces supported this resolution and signed a request asking the hon. Minister of Finance to reduce by one per cent the rate of interest at present in force. I trust that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) will grant our request, because I think it just and well founded. If we turn to the other countries which are favoured with a farm loans act, we find that the rate of interest is lower than the one at present in force in this country. I state again that this reduction is necessary and that we should be granted our request.

I should like to see this farm loans act administered by a federal commission, and paid from the public treasury; that each province which benefits by it should look after the local administration, and that the borrower should pay but the cost and fees of the examination of titles, acts and registration.

Another essential point to attain the real end for which the Canadian farm loans was established, is that the valuation of properties be made on the actual value of the properties and that the amount of the loan be not less than the ⅔ of the estimated value of the property. I am confident, sir, that if we thus assisted the farmers, without too much cost to the country, the farming classes would feel happier and more prosperous.

As the hon. member for Jolette (Mr. Ferland) stated in his last speech, the Bankruptcy Act of 1919, caused considerable harm to farmers by allowing them to assign their property. This act, drawn up in terms sufficiently vague as to be interpreted in any way, makes it possible for certain speculators to roam about the country-side and incite the farmers to assign their property. The latter lose their farms and remain with more debts than they had previously. Money lenders in good faith also lost their loans owing to the fact of having made such advances during the three months preceding the bankruptcy. This act has been very harmful to the credit of farmers, and to-day, it is a problem for the owner of a farm valued at about $10,000 to borrow $4,000 or $5,000. These are the reasons why I insist so much that the Canadian farm loans act should become a real help to the farming class.

I would further draw the attention of the government to the estimates for the Department of Agriculture. These estimates are not sufficiently large compared to others of less immediate importance, aviation for instance. Every year the Department is forced to ask for supplementary estimates, and while this is going on, our people are waiting for their money. Within the last few years, the government has wisely taken the initiative of reviving the dairy industry, and, with that object in view it has established restricted areas. I believe that this Act will be of great help to the farming class, providing that it is well administered. Inspection has already started in my county, and I think that it will be further continued in the autumn. I trust that the government will vote the necessary money to indemnify, as soon as possible, the farmers who may have sustained losses. By indemnifying them within 30 days, the loss sustained will be less felt, and the farmer will be able to renew his herd and get immediate results.

I am pleased—although I expected it—that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) has levied a duty on butter coming from New Zealand. I hope that the farmers will benefit by it and that the consumer will not complain too much. Butter is, at present, too cheap; we have proof that for about one month past it has been selling below the cost price. The abrogation of the old treaty and the making of new trade arrangements with New Zealand will be highly appreciated by the citizens of this country. I congratulate the government on its attitude regarding this matter. This increase of duty on butter was based on the report submitted by the dairy industry of this country to the tariff commission, in January last. And if the present tariff is not high enough, my opinion is that it should be made higher. Butter is not a greater commodity to the consumer than other products and I know that the consumer will understand the requirements of the producer which are but just and well founded. I congratulate this government for its solicitude towards the farming class. The Liberal party has always been the champion of the farmer and workman; it has always made war on trusts which are a plague on the economic life of this country.

The Conservative policy has always been fatal to the small capitalists; it only endorses the farmers cause during election time, and if we examine the past, we will see that the Conservatives have never done anything to protect those for whom they are claiming so much to-day. Their new attitude is but an election manœuvre; and I hope the people of this country will understand it and that the Liberal party will be returned to power in the next parliament, with a greater majority than the one we have to-day.

Mr. A. E. BOURGEOIS (Kent, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, I should be remiss in my duty to the constituency I have the honour to represent did I not commend the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) upon the splendid budget that he has presented to this house and to the country. I do not recall a time when a budget has met with such widespread expressions of approval. It would be strange indeed were it otherwise; for in summing up its salient features one cannot but conclude that the many changes effected in the tariff schedules will be beneficial to all classes and sections of our country and tend to remove the many discrepancies in our tariff rates against the countries with which we deal.

From the viewpoint of the Canadian home, it must also be conceded by every unbiased citizen that in truth this is a real householder's budget. The budget is replete with happy surprises and anticipations. In view of the abolition last year of many of the so-called nuisance taxes, the reduction of the sales tax, the decrease in revenue from import customs duties, the sum total of which is in the vicinity of $28,435,000, the large increase of expenditures necessitated by the ever-increasing demands made upon the government year by year by the people of Canada through their representatives, the payment out of current revenue of maturing bonds to the extent of $80,000,000, one would not have expected that the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding those circumstances, would be able to submit to parliament the large surplus of $44,500,000, which, coupled with the consecutive surpluses during the last five years, has brought about a total reduction in the national debt of $257,800,000.

This, Mr. Speaker, is very heartening to the people of Canada. It makes it abundantly clear and if the present government is retained in office for a reasonable period of years—and in view of the circumstances we have no reason to doubt that such will be the case—the national debt will in the natural course of events be to the people of Canada a matter of small concern. In view of these indisputable facts, it must be admitted that the results achieved could have been brought about only by a wise, economic and business-like administration of the affairs of Canada such as has been accomplished by this government.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that conditions during the last three months of the fiscal year have not been, particularly throughout western Canada, as satisfactory as could have been desired, but that was not due to any fault of the government, as some of our hon. friends opposite would have the people believe. It was due, as has already been stated in this house, to a combination of circumstances, the principal of which was the withholding of the export of wheat by that formidable western organization known as the wheat pool. The pool was perfectly within its rights in acting as it did in an endeavour to realize a higher price for the farmers. Nevertheless this one factor alone undoubtedly reflected in large measure the depression that prevailed throughout the western provinces. It also very materially lessened the earnings of our two great railway systems. I am not condemning or condoning the wheat pool in this regard, but I must say that a corporation is indeed a formidable one that by its manipulations can affect to some extent at least, if not disorganize, the whole commercial fabric of a nation of ten million people.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the hon. gentleman not aware that the wheat pool offered wheat for sale continuously throughout the year and did not deliberately withhold wheat from the market?

Mr. BOURGEOIS: My hon. friend is in a better position to speak as to that than I am.

With respect to the tariff changes made in this budget so far as the province of New Brunswick is concerned, I have no doubt that far-reaching beneficial results will follow. Living as we do beside a country of one hundred and twenty million people, with whom we have a large export trade in potatoes, lumber, pulpwood and fish, we desire the mutual good business relations between the two countries to continue. There is no sentiment throughout the maritime provinces, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, in favour of a brick for brick tariff warfare. On the contrary, there is a sane common sense assumption that if the United States government has seen fit to adjust its tariff and make increases in its duties, it has been done in the spirit of serving the best interests of the people of that country, and therefore no one can find fault if we, actuated by the same motive of serving the best interests of our people, adopt a policy of countervailing duties, which means that countries that both buy from and sell to us have it in their power by reciprocal action on their part to enable us to reduce our duties.

The pulpwood industry in the province of New Brunswick has within recent years developed into one of great importance. We have at the present time two large pulp and paper mills, one situated at Bathurst, and another newsprint mill recently constructed in the town of Dalhousie, which is the largest of its kind in the maritime provinces, giving employment to a large number of men and affording a very substantial home market for pulpwood. It would appear, however, and I am credibly informed, that there are a few large corporations throughout Canada that are desirous of having an embargo or export duty placed on pulpwood going to the United States. I want to say here and now, Mr. Speaker, that I am unalterably opposed to any movement in that direction. It would be most injurious to the farmers of New Brunswick and to others who have reserves of pulpwood. In other words, it would be placing a monopoly of purchase in the hands of a few large corporations to whom they would be obliged to sell. We desire that the farmers as well as all other exporters or dealers in pulpwood be given the opportunity of disposing of this forest product to whomsoever they desire and in the market where they can obtain the highest price.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the difference between having goods go out freely and having goods come in freely?

Mr. BOURGEOIS: That means free trade. Representing a constituency in which the basic industry is agriculture, I may say that the New Zealand trade agreement, up until the present time, has not been of much concern to the farmers and dairymen of New Brunswick, because of the fact that they have not as yet been able to meet home market requirements, but they will, I hope, in the course of a short time. However, there has recently arisen a growing sentiment in opposition to the New Zealand trade agreement in regard to butter. This opposition was expressed by resolutions passed at the annual meeting of the New Brunswick Farmers' and Dairymen's Association which met at Moncton in January last, requesting an increase of duty on butter coming from New Zealand. Nevertheless it is a fact that the New Zealand trade agreement has been of great benefit to the agricultural implement manufacturers and to the manufacturers of automobiles and other Canadian products, and also to our exporters of pulpwood. However, I am pleased that the government, in order to safeguard the best interests of the farmers, has advised the New Zealand government of its desire to terminate the agreement on the 12th of October, and that thereafter the duty on New Zealand butter entering Canada will be four cents a pound.

With respect to the increase in the British preference, no more opportune time could have been chosen in an endeavour to stimulate trade with the United Kingdom, which during the year has materially declined. Again, Mr. Speaker, has the Liberal party by action given proof of its desire to encourage inter-empire trade. Not only is this desirable from the viewpoint of profit, but also as a matter of sentiment.

No better proof of the wisdom of the government in pursuance of a strong preferential trade policy could be given than is exemplified in the preferential trade agreement with the West Indies. In substantiation of this fact we have the statement of Dr. J. A. Ruddick, Dominion Dairy Commissioner, who, having returned a few days ago after a six months' visit to the West Indies, is reported in the Montreal Gazette as saying that Canadian trade is increasing tremendously, that we are now getting 90 per cent of the business in flour and more than 90 per cent of the business in dairy products, particularly cheese, butter and powdered milk, the latter trade having risen from 30 to 90 per cent within the last three years, due largely to the new preferential trade agreement between the two countries. We may now anticipate a still greater increase, particularly in fruit and vegetables, due to free entry under the preferential tariff as announced by the finance minister in his presentation of the budget. Therefore as a result the Canadian people may now expect cheaper fruit and vegetables, particularly the people of the maritime provinces who are so geographically situated that they will benefit to a larger degree.

Coming now, Mr. Speaker, to the trend of events in the maritimes, I may say that optimism has been the keynote of expression during the last three years. It is not long since that our commercial prosperity was impeded by exorbitant freight rates and other economic burdens which confederation had imposed; but since the advent of the present government greater confidence in the future has been strikingly manifest. The claims of the maritime provinces were favourably considered by the government in the implementing of every recommendation contained in the Duncan report. The findings of the Duncan commission dealt effectively with the situation by placing the maritimes in their proper position of equality among the other provinces of the Dominion.

I desire to congratulate the government on the creation of a separate Department of Fisheries, the sole function of which will be the advancement of the fishing industry in all its various branches. In view of this fact, I would suggest that the new Minister of Fisheries instruct his department to investigate conditions in the St. Louis river in Kent county, New Brunswick, with a view of bringing back to its former productivity its once famous oyster beds.

We are grateful for what the government has done for Kent county, particularly in the matter of public works. But there are still some much needed improvements, particularly the construction at as early a date as possible of breakwaters at Dixon's point and Moillet's gully, which are the two missing links necessary to the protection of the lives and property of our fishermen along the Northumberland strait coast of Kent county. There is also urgent need of dredging in the Buctouche and the Richibucto harbours in order to facilitate shipping. This work, I hope, will very soon be given favourable consideration by the present government, which we may expect will again be returned to office; for during the last nine years by its honest endeavours, it has succeeded in welding Canada into one happy, united and harmonious whole.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada received with great satisfaction, the budget so ably prepared by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). It answers to the needs of our country and includes all the fields of human activity. Not only does it proclaim that the financial situation of our country is in excellent shape, but its balance sheet shows a surplus of $44,507,000. The obligations contracted by the past administration, previous to December 6, 1921, have been met when they matured, without further borrowing by the King government and that, since it directs the affairs of this country, viz., close on ten years.

To fully appreciate the budget, we must consider the situation as it exists after the war, when all nations have, from the material standpoint, and more particularly from the economic standpoint, been reduced to a state of disorganization.

If we look and examine closely the present map of Europe, we note that it has almost been transformed. The various treaties while establishing peace have nevertheless created a diversity of trade interests, not only in Europe, but on the American continent. The European countries, enclosed in their new frontiers, endeavour to reestablish themselves on new trade bases. Each nation fights for its own interests, to sell its own products abroad, at the highest price obtainable, yet trying on the other hand to exclude other nations from exporting in its territory the products which might compete with its own.

Our neighbours, the United States, have sought for the last few years, to monopolize the world market and in return make the smallest trade concessions, not only to European countries, but to Canada, especially as regards farm products.

If in the budget, the government of this country has found it necessary to answer by countervailing rates the duties the United States put on our products, the people of the neighbouring republic cannot compiain of our new tariff, because they drew it upon themselves by too much selfishness and trade exigencies on their part.

In support of this contention, not only as regards Canada but also France and certain other countries of Europe, it is only necessary to read this passage from a study on the subject, entitled: "The Tariff controversy with France" written by a distinguished economist, Mr. F. W. Taussig, in the Review of Foreign Affairs, edition of January 1928, from which I shall read the following extract:

What, then, will the United States finally do? The people of this country are recurrently called on to consider just how far they propose to carry their protectionist policy, and just how intolerant they propose to be in the way of keeping out every scrap of imported goods that might interfere with any clamorous domestic producer. Should we not consider these larger aspects of the tariff question in connection with the pending negotiations? We have proclaimed singlemindedness in tariff policy; and therein, as I have said, we are proceeding not unwisely. But does this necessarily mean complete disregard of other people? Even those who say most about holding aloof from European complications, say much also about the maintenance of friendly relations with all and the promotion of mutual good feeling. Now that we turn to a systematic policy of most-favoured-nation treatment, why not put into it some element of real favour and of genuine friendliness? It needs no acumen to discern that France does not stand alone in her feelings about our tariff rates. Other countries may make no moves such as she has made, but none the less they shrug their shoulders at the contrast between our courteous gestures and our stern realties. We are eager to export, and above all to export manufactured goods. Our Department of Commerce bends its energy to the utmost toward promoting their sales. But when others wish to send goods to us, we bend our energies to erecting barriers as high as we can devise. It would be no bad outcome of the pending negotiations and debates if we were led to do something toward promoting beneficial trade and good relations not with France only, but with all the world?

We find in the concluding part of the speech of the Minister of Finance a true ideal of a tariff policy and trade relations of Canada with the countries of the world. From the budget there emanates a spirit of justice towards all classes of our country; it displays a spirit of fairness towards those who have invested with us considerable capital, from which the working classes may derive more benefit and better wages.

The farming classes must feel happy over the provisions of the budget, for they certainly were taken care of; the Liberal party has always recognized that they should be protected, and at all times our policy has been: "for new and better markets."

Within the last few months, Conservative speakers have travelled across our province without success, criticizing our trade conventions with Australia and New Zealand. To please the farming class of this country, these conventions will end on October 12, 1930, when in due course, another convention will be negotiated between Canada and New Zealand. I trust that in this new treaty, provisions as advantageous as those of to-day will be included in so far as the automobiles, paper and pulpwood, are concerned.

We felt greatly satisfied, when, in the course of the present session, the various bills transferring to the Western provinces their natural resources, were adopted by the House. British Columbia also had its share in the transfer of lands, and the latter must now have more faith in the present administration of Canada which has been so generous towards it.

It was under the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then Prime Minister of Canada, that were created the western provinces, in 1905. This political Act, essentially liberal, gave them their autonomy, with the exception, however, of their lands and the administration of their natural resources.

In the year 1930, during the present session, the last of this 16th Parliament, we have witnessed with pleasure the transferring of these natural resources to the three western provinces with, besides, a readjustment of their indemnities. This generous act is to the credit of the present Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. Mackenzie King, who has completed the work begun by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Laurier created those provinces, King liberated them completely. Their status is, to-day, that of the Eastern provinces, and it seems to me that Confederation has grown and enjoys more glory since the enactment of the various measures returning to the Western provinces their natural resources.

To foresee, sir, the end of all the economic conflicts which may at certain moments cast shadows over our destinies, is an impossibility. Surely, in the course of one's life, we must shun pessimism as much as optimism; and it is thus that necessity always succeds in equalizing things. The world is revolving and will unceasingly revolve. The world carries on without troubling about, not even listening to our speeches and, little by little, we adapt ourselves to the whims and variations of our social and political surroundings. The difficulty, however, is to reach that stage without too many clashes, and especially, without giving way to the notions and visionary schemes of idealists and dreamers. These people are always powerless in reorganizing our society and often have upset it on more than one occasion. Even practical measures are always harmful when, despising facts, their sponsors insist on foolishly changing the course of events. Nobody can experiment on society as on the material of a laboratory. History teaches us too well the confusion resulting from the social errors of certain European nations.

Canada is not given to new ideas and we are pleased to acknowledge that the Liberal party walks, to-day, in the footsteps of the sound traditions which it has always endorsed and which are a legacy of the political will of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. It is not always wise for a member to go back to the deluge when he rises in the house to deliver a speech, but it is sometimes necessary to examine the political past of a party as that of the Liberal party to inspire oneself by the deeds of that period which brought abundance to the country, and to note with pleasure that they are always the source of prosperity and a guide for the present time, even in 1930, by applying the same principles.

If we glance over the political history of our country, we find that at the general election of 1878, the Liberal government under Mackenzie was defeated, and, during eighteen years, the Liberal party, always courageous and chivalrous, followed the barren path of the loyal opposition of Her Majesty; but at sunrise one bright morning of June, 1896, Canada again welcomed the advent to power of the Liberal party, having as its leader Sir Wilfrid Laurier. On July 13, 1896, he was sworn in as Prime Minister and took charge, with his ministers, of the destinies of Canada.

The old members of this house no doubt recall the crisis Canada experienced in 1896. Unrest was general, industries were threatened, smoke-stacks appeared like giants but lifeless, agriculture without markets, prices varied like passing clouds, the financial situation uncertain, bankruptcies, sales by sheriff numerous; all citizens faced a gloomy future. It was urgent for the Laurier government to get down immediately to work so as to stimulate business, inspire confidence in all hearts and bring back a new era of prosperity. All had to be done over again, exactly as when the King government assumed power on December 6, 1921. Laurier realized then that the situation was a difficult one, but as he had secured the people's confidence through the program he had submitted to them, he endeavoured to carry it out, notably in the west, of which he knew the needs. The western provinces, known as the Prairies, have become since a few years, a centre of attraction; a subject of talk both in the private and political life of this country.

The birth of the Progressive politcal party, in 1921, was a matter of discussion in Canada as well as abroad. This Progressive party, which time, that great reformer, has remodelled and drawn nearer to the Liberal party in most of its ideals, always remains opposed to the Conservative party's policy.

That part of Canada, therefore, interests at present all the citizens of the Dominion. In a word, to speak of the western provinces and their numerous problems, is, as we see it, to live in the present.

The vast territory that we generally designate as the Canadian west, extends from the province of Ontario to the Pacific ocean. Its total area covers 1,114,672 square miles. Its vastness is such that, even on the geographical map of the Dominion, one cannot truly realize its size and the numerous resources it contains.

We note with pleasure that the western provinces contribute as much as Quebec, Ontario and the Maritime provinces, to make of our Canada, a great and prosperous country, enjoying the most complete social harmony, drawing the admiration of the whole of Europe and being the pride of the British Empire. But, sir, you may say, the Canadian west had a beginning, it was not always what it is to-day: prosperous and forecasting a greater future. It must have grown through the impulse of a wise administration, that government no doubt gave it its start, favoured it by its measures and legislation, finally, became aware that the west would, one day, be the granary of the empire.

You are quite right, sir, the west was opened up to colonization, farming and industry, like all other regions. The great benefactor of the west, was Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the late leader, the soul still living of the Liberal party, whose legislative acts, prudence and sincerity are still the best guide of his worthy successor, the present Prime Minister, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, our leader.

The political administration of that great statesman, was the foundation stone of the development of the west. The first factor which brought progress to the west was the adoption of the preferential tariff between England and Canada, and the trip overseas of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The latter spoke so admirably and with such frankness of his country, with such eloquence of all the advantages that it offered to the immigrants, the capitalist and manufacturer, that Canada appeared more beautiful to the eyes of nations and especially to the English people. A brilliant future awaited those who would come to settle on the western plains. Then followed a sound immigration policy.

During the fifteen years which followed 1896, nearly 10,000 miles of railway were constructed, that is an average of two miles per day. Two transcontinentals were built, numerous branch lines were added, terminal stations were built and other branch lines in connection with shipping. Following this expansion, our country grew, and took an important place in the world. That was the doings of the Liberal party and its policy and history now repeats itself, in 1930, after more than 8 years of wise administration by the King government.

We judge of the administrative success of a country by the same standard as that of a business firm, its balance-sheet and its surplus. After two years of sound administration our government entered into a new period of surpluses. Let us quote a few figures.

For the fiscal year 1924-25, a surplus of $300,000.

For the fiscal year 1925-26, a surplus of 28,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1926-27, a surplus of $42,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1927-28, a surplus of $54,000,000.

But from this total $16,000,000 must be deducted for soldiers' lands and seeds, leaving a surplus of $38,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1928-29, a surplus of $69,782,000.

For the present fiscal year of 1929-30, a surplus of $44,507,000.

We have also reduced taxes. First, in connection with the Income tax, an innovation of the Borden government.

In 1922.—Exemption for each child, from $200 to $300.

In 1924.—Additional exemption for each child, from $300 to $500;

In 1926.—Exemption limit of the Income tax, from $2,000 to $3,000 in the case of married persons or with dependents and from $1,000 to $1,500 in other cases; moreover the tax payers whose income is $5,000 or less have but 2 per cent instead of 4 per cent to pay on taxable incomes. The income tax of large companies is reduced from 10 per cent to 9 per cent;

In 1927.—The rates of the income tax of 1926 are reduced by 10 per cent;

In 1928.—Another reduction of 10 per cent;

In 1929.—A new reduction on income tax in favour of certain companies and exemption to the amount of $500 for those who have families to support.

The customs tariff has been changed as follows, and allow me, Sir, to quote but the most important changes:

In 1922.—Decrease of duties on sugar, farming implements, cloth, boots and shoes and certain other articles;

In 1923.—The duties on imported goods under the British preferential tariff schedule are reduced by 10 per cent each time that the regular rates of duty exceed 15 per cent and that the goods are imported directly to a Canadian port.

Decrease of duties on sugar;

In 1924.—Decrease of duties on instruments of production utilized in farming, mining, forest and fish industries;

In 1925.—Decrease of duties on well boring machinery and on motors for fishing vessels;

In 1926.—Decrease of duties on sugar, automobiles, tin, etc.

In 1928.—Numerous tariff changes inscribed at ch. 17 of the 1928 statutes;

In 1929.—Abrogation of the regulation which taxed cablegrams and other telegraph messages.

Abrogations also of the regulation which taxed railway tickets and other tickets of the same nature.

As to postage rates, the Liberals reestablished the postal rate of 2 cents, from July 1, 1926; in 1929, the same rate was established for all parts of the British Empire.

Stamp tax on cheques.

In 1922.—Tax of 2 cents levied on all cheques to the amount of $50 and a maximum tax of $2 on cheques of $5000 or over.

In 1923.—Reduction of this tax to $1.

In 1925.—Suppression of the tax on cheques to an amount not exceeding $5.

In 1927.—Decrease of the tax to a uniform rate of 2 cents on cheques over $10.

Tax on receipts.

In 1926.—Established in 1922, abolished in 1926.

It is therefore well proven that the King government never ceased from year to year to decrease the taxes. This did not hinder it from lowering considerably the national debt, as shown in the budget of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning).

Canada has made great strides, under the administration as regards to diplomatic relations with Europe and our neighbour the U. S. The High Commissioner at London and our legations at Paris, Washington and in Japan are the watchful sentries of Canadian interests and a formal act of good will towards the European countries and the neighbouring republic.

Our government developed the Canadian ports and has carried on extensive works to meet the needs of the country and to facilitate shipping from foreign countries which export goods to us.

The ports of Montreal, Quebec, Chicoutimi, Sorel, Halifax, St. John (N.B.), and Vancouver are proofs of the money expended by the government of the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, in the greatest interest of Canada.

We equally note with pleasure that by the act 19-20 George V Ch. 12, sanctioned June 14, 1929, a sum of $51,409,000 was voted to the Canadian National Railways of Canada, for certain terminal stations with grade seperation at crossings and other works in the city of Montreal and its surroundings.

In the schedule of this act at paragraphs (d) and (e) it is sought and desired that grade separation by means of elevated or depressed or under ground tracks, or streets, as may be determined on the existing railway between Bonaventure and Turcot and connection to the viaduct referred to in paragraph (b); and grade separation by means of elevated or depressed or under ground tracks, or streets as may be determined between St. Henri and Point St. Charles.

We hope that if it is possible to do away with these level crossings, by means of underground passages, the government will notify accordingly the National Railway Company, moreover, if the executive council of the city of Montreal make reasonable and just suggestions to alter these plans, they should be given the highest consideration and be accepted in the interest of the city of Montreal, and especially the muncipal wards of St. Henri, Sainte-Cunegonde, St. Joseph, St. Gabriel and Ste. Anne.

I feel confident, as representative of the riding of St. Henri, that no pains will be spared to carry out the work at this terminal station, so as to satisfy the just claims of the metropolis of Canada.

In closing my remarks, sir, allow me to note with pleasure, that during the war, that is from 1914 to 1918, and since, Canadian paper money was not redeemable in gold; but since July 1, 1926, it has become so, and that is the strongest proof of Canada's excellent standing in the eyes of its citizens and of the whole world.

On motion of Mr. Ryckman the debate was adjourned.

[Mr. Mercier.]

ST. JOHN HARBOUR RAILWAY BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin). I have had a communication from St. John expressing apprehension that a bill for the construction of a railway bridge in the harbour of St. John may not be brought down this session. As the matter is of great public importance and is causing much anxiety, would the minister kindly make a statement as to the government's intention in regard to it?

Hon. PIERRE J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I am not in a position to give a definite answer to my hon. friend on this important subject. I can only say that it is still under consideration.

Mr. MacLAREN: I think that was the answer I got last year.

BRITISH AIRSHIP R-100

APPOINTMENT OF BILINGUAL ANNOUNCER AT ST. HUBERT BROADCASTING STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put this question to the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston). Is it within the knowledge of the department that Mr. J. A. Wilson, comptroller of civil aviation in Canada, refused to appoint a bilingual announcer at the St. Hubert broadcasting station regarding the arrival of the airship R-100 from England? If so, is it the intention of the department to appoint such a bilingual announcer?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): The answer to my hon. friend's first question is no. As to the second question, it is not really a matter of whether or not a bilingual announcer should be appointed, but whether or not bilingual statements can better be given from the tower or be distributed from the various stations. This is a matter which involves a great deal of technical investigation. It is two weeks before the R-100 is expected here, and I can assure my hon. friend that I am personally going into the question to see which is the better way of broadcasting information having regard to the technical considerations involved. I would refer my hon. friend to the statement which appears in the morning's papers with regard to the whole subject.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I am satisfied.

IMPORTATION OF LUMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): May I ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) to give me an answer to the question that I asked last week?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): I am sorry to say that I do not recall exactly just what the question was. If it related to lumber, I think I told my hon. friend at the time that the matter was under investigation. I am afraid I have to give him the same answer to-day.

Mr. McGIBBON: How long is it going to take to complete the investigation?

Mr. EULER: Not very long.

BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. E. KAISER (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) whether the huge slaughter of cattle for bovine tuberculosis is intended by the government as an economic measure or as a measure of public health?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): It is the best method known to us of dealing with bovine tuberculosis, both from the economic and the health standpoints.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

LOUISVILLE, QUEBEC, POST OFFICE CARETAKER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. E. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Might I ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret), Mr. Speaker, when I may expect the order for a return passed on March 17, with reference to the Louisville, Quebec, post office caretaker?

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): My hon. friend was kind enough to send me a note of his question. I may tell him that the return was tabled on April 26 and that he may secure it from the office downstairs.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, on April 9, an order was passed for a return showing the treaty, or arrangement, between Japan and Canada regulating Japanese immigration and some other particulars, but up to date the return has not been laid on the table. It would not take very long to prepare and as the end of the session is approaching I should like to ask the government that it be tabled without delay.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I will endeavour to see that the return is expedited.

UNEMPLOYED WORKMEN AT THE PAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, I have reliable information that a large number of workmen are stranded at The Pas and are in a serious condition. These men were lured there by prospects of work on the Hudson Bay railway and at Fort Churchill. Can the government do anything either to find these men work or give them free transportation to their homes?

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Railways and Canals): In reply to my hon. friend I may say that arrangements are now being made to secure the personnel of the working force for the construction work at Churchill during the coming season. About 80 per cent of the men who were there last year have expressed their willingness to go back, and they will be given the preference. At the present time a representative of the department is in western Canada endeavouring to secure the balance of the men, and in the course of a few days he will be at The Pas. Unfortunately, it appears that a large number of men went to The Pas in the expectation that they might find employment in the north country.

I may add for the information of the house that in the near future the Canadian National Railways will be resuming the work they have to do on the line to Fort Churchill and several hundred men will be required for that work. As to what else can be done in that matter, I am at the moment not able to say.

RELIEF TO SWEDISH IMMIGRANTS

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked the acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart) a question in relation to a press despatch stating that several hundred Scandinavians were in Winnipeg, destitute, and were applying to both the provincal and the federal governments for help. Has our government done anything in the matter?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration): In reply to my hon. friend's question, we have made inquiries and find that there were in the neighbourhood of one hundred, or one hundred and thirteen men, nationals of Sweden, who were out of employment at that time, but who expected to be employed on the Hudson Bay railway and the construction work at Fort Churchill. I was informed that they would be given an opportunity to go to that part of the country. With respect to their application to the Swedish government, I have no knowledge.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I should like to ask the acting Minister of Immigration if those persons now stranded at Winnipeg are to be given the preference over those at The Pas?

Mr STEWART (Edmonton): My understanding is that those men have been in the country for some time. I have no knowledge of their having sent any messages to their home government, and my information was that in a short time most of those who were willing to take employment would be given the opportunity.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF THE DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Wednesday, May 14, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett, and the amendment to the amendment thereto of Mr. Fansher (Last Mountain).

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): There is nothing in parliamentary life which can transcend the importance of the budget, and there is nothing which better reveals in a temporary fashion the mentality of hon. members in the house than the budget debate. There is nothing in our deliberations which has such great effect upon the life of the country as the budget, and the one presented this year is certainly no exception to the rule. It has been introduced by a new Minister of Finance, young in years but who has had a varied and wide experience, and I think it is not an exaggeration to say that the country waited with intense curiosity to learn the proposals which would be contained in his first budget. He most certainly has provoked thought and discussion. He has not pleased all his friends; on the contrary he has unleashed the political enmity of all his Tory friends. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) has run true to form in that he has at least supplied the storm centre of political controversy and I am sure his position is not an unhappy one.

There are two ways, among others, in which the budget can be discussed and appraised. The first is the proposals as contained in the budget itself, and the second is the attitude of the opposition towards those proposals as revealed by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I propose for a few moments to discuss the latter aspect of the situation. At the outset I must say that I cannot reconcile the words of the leader of the opposition when he spoke at the close of the address by the Minister of Finance. I take the view, and I think the country will do likewise, that in the exasperation of the moment he revealed his true deep-seated antagonism to the proposals contained in the budget, and he could only resort to denunciation of anything contained therein. In one breath he deplored the fact that the Minister of Finance had not realized that the word "countervailing" was just a poor substitute for the word "retaliation." In the next sentence he stated that the finance minister had enunciated a tariff policy made in Washington for operation in Canada, and asked whether the Minister of Finance realized that this was nothing more than a retaliatory policy. It is beyond belief that a tariff policy could be framed in Washington as a retaliatory policy for Canada against the United States. Surely the United States are not so blind to their own interests that they will deliberately evolve a tariff against us for the purpose of providing us with a retaliatory weapon. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition omitted to state that we have a section in our customs tariff at the present time which provides for countervailing duties. I shall take the liberty of reading it:

If the president of the United States under authority of the United States Tariff Act of 1922 determines to reduce the duties imposed by such act on the following articles, that is to say, cattle, wheat, wheat flour, oats, barley, potatoes, onions, turnips, hay, fish as enumerated in paragraphs 717, 718, 719 and 720 of the Tariff Act of 1892.

The governor in council may by order in council make such reductions of duties on such articles imported into Canada from the United States as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for such reductions on Canadian products imported into the United States.

[Mr. Glen.]

I think the leader of the opposition must have omitted that from his address. If I have correctly interpreted the address given by that hon. gentleman and the address delivered by his red-blooded colleague the member for Fort William (Mr. Manion), I think I am justified in having assumed that the Tory party are wedded and entirely committed to a policy of reprisals against the United States. Their aim and purpose, as they have declared, is not to turn the other cheek to the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: May I interrupt my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman will recall that last year I distinctly said just the opposite. I said that I was not concerned with legislation against anyone but that I proposed legislation for Canada.

Mr. GLEN: My hon. friend may turn as he will. He is in favour of tariffs for Canada against whom? There was only one country with which we were dealing in the discussion which took place last year and that country was the United States. The only reprisals which could have been made against a country at that time would have been against the United States. As a matter of fact hon. members will remember that the leader of the opposition asked that this house should sit until the United States framed their tariff in order that we would be in a position to meet it. If that be so, then on their own submission, these countervailing duties being retaliatory, are exactly what they desired should be done and for that reason would not be framed in Washington. It was rather striking to find—and I give this statement of fact to the house, leaving hon. members to draw their own conclusions—that on the 2nd day of May, the day after the budget was introduced, there was a discussion in the House of Representatives on the proposed duties on certain kinds of timber, lumber and shingles which were restored to the free list. In the course of the debate Representative Crisp is reported on page 8501 of the Congressional Record as follows:

I called attention yesterday to the protests being made by the foreign nations, and in the press to-day you will read where the government of Canada in its budget yesterday raised its tariff rates and raised them to be retaliatory equal to the rates in the present bill, with the statement that if this goes into effect they will be raised to be on a parity with this law.

Canada is our best customer. One of the things we do get from Canada is lumber, and when you stop buying anything from Canada, you are going to lose one of your best customers. You can not blame them for the action they have taken, because that is human nature. Under their budget they are to give preferential tariff rates to other nations that give them preferential rates. Consequently commerce will go from those other nations to Canada, and America will lose one of her very best customers.

Gentlemen, you are carrying the tariff to a fanatical state. You have got to think. Are we now having great Republican prosperity? If you would listen to the members of this house talk about the unemployment in their districts you would not think we had much of the boasted Republican prosperity in this country.

Gentlemen, I fear this: If you stop all foreign markets for your surplus goods, whether agricultural or manufactured goods, you are going to have more men out of employment in this country, because the factories are going to shut down.

It is somewhat noteworthy to find such sentiments expressed in that house and I think I have heard like expressions in this house. I cannot and I will not say that a tariff war is in the best interests of Canada. Last year I spoke during the budget debate and I deplored the fact that a tariff war could exist between this country and any other country. To my mind a tariff war is equally as ofensive as an armed crusade. Armaments can be curtailed but I think it is more difficult under our system of government to curtail the activities of vested interests, as they are called, in a tariff economic war. People are so ready to believe that when you take away from someone something which he already has you take away a vested interest and therefore it is much more difficult to discontinue a tariff war. I was very much impressed by one fact in connection with the United States tariff. There was a memorial presented by a thousand economists of the highest standing in the United States, protesting against the recently proposed tariff increases. This memorial points out especially that tariffs have not helped agriculture. On May 12 last an Associated Press despatch from Geneva states that the British Labour government is ready for further negotiations looking to a tariff truce. Thirty states which met under the auspices of the League of Nations were unable to agree to a tariff truce, but they adopted a convention under which in principle they recognized the interdependence of their own tariff policies and those of other countries, and undertook to consider the interests of other countries before introducing tariff increases, "except in cases where the urgent and vital interests of national economy render this impossible."

I believe that the next great international question will be the reduction of tariffs, and the question of disarmament necessarily must be linked up with the question of tariff reduction. Both questions concern wars which vitally affect civilization and the burden of which ultimately must fall upon the shoulders of the people. For that reason I would view with alarm the suggestion that at the next Imperial conference this country should be represented by a protectionist party. They would go to that conference with preconceived notions with regard to tariffs which I profoundly believe are inimical and harmful to the best interests of Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask whether that same principle should not apply on this continent as well, instead of building a tariff wall between Canada and the United States?

Mr. GLEN: I have already explained that I am entirely in agreement with that view, and I deplore any tariff wall between Canada and any other country. The leader of the opposition dealt at length with the British preference. He had unlimited time at his disposal, but since my time is rather limited I must deal with this question more generally than I should have liked.

Would it be an exaggeration to say that the leader of the opposition is opposed to the British preference, or would it be more delicate to say that he views it with disfavour? His party always has assumed the ultra-British attitude, which being translated into action finds his party, because of party policy only, opposed to the British preference. It is difficult to conceive the Conservative party adopting any other attitude. Their whole policy is protection, and surely it cannot be gainsaid that any measure of free trade with Great Britain or any other country is the absolute negation of their tariff policy as we know it to-day.

An hon. MEMBER: What is your policy?

Mr. GLEN: I will come to my policy presently. Despite the lip loyalty frequently expressed by the Conservative party they dare any other parties to seek approval of the British preference. I have no doubt the leader of the opposition realizes that our intangible bonds of love and affection with the mother country can be expressed in the more tangible bonds of trade and commerce, and we can make it clear through the British preference that we mean to cement those bonds. Personally I must approve of the provisions of the budget which are expected to result in greater trade with Great Britain. There are absurdities in the present tariff which the Minister of Finance proposes to adjust, and I think it somewhat unfair of opposition speakers to criticize the deletion of some of these items from the customs schedule.

The budget speech of the Minister of Finance is not only a challenge to other countries; certainly it is a challenge to Great Britain as well. Here we have probably the most far-reaching proposal for reciprocal trade between Canada and the British Isles that ever has been made. Canada now offers to free trade Great Britain a large measure of free trade proposals. It is eminently fitting that this offer should come from the present administration, and I make that statement sincerely. We are perhaps too near the events of the last four years to estimate correctly the tremendous and far-reaching consequences of the change in our relationship with the rest of the empire, but I am confident that the present administration, and particularly the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, will be remembered in the future history of Canada as the proponents and supporters of the new era of empire relationship which was inaugurated at the Imperial conference of 1926, with the consent and the concurrence of the whole British Empire, among whose delegates were the most distinguished statesmen of Great Britain. Now, just before another Imperial conference, Canada has flung out its challenge to Great Britain and the empire to consolidate that forward step by doing away with many of the obstacles in the way of empire trade and commerce. I do think that the present Prime Minister and Minister of Justice are the proper persons to represent Canada at that conference and to complete the work which they began.

In conjunction with this it is a happy augury that the Hudson Bay railway is so near completion and that very soon we will be able to use that route in marketing our grain and other products. In this connection I might add that the people of the west will indignantly resent any efforts which may be made to hinder the full development of the facilities of that railway. For forty years they have been fighting to obtain it and, having obtained it, they hope now that the dice will not be loaded against the Hudson Bay railway as was the case in the past. They look for the full development of the facilities of that route, with the fullest cooperation of government and railway officials.

If these and the other subjects to which I have referred were all that the budget contained I would be in a happy state of mind; I would cheerfully acquiesce in and support the general principles contained in the budget. I realize, however, in common with nearly every other member who has spoken in this debate, that the tremendous number of changes in the tariff dealing with the iron and steel schedules, among others, must be explained in committee. It is not possible for one who is not an expert, with life long experience, to understand the ramifications of this involved industry. In committee we will have an opportunity to discuss these changes more intelligently, and all that can be done in the meantime is to discuss the general principle. I have received calculations showing the number of items in which the consumers are concerned which are affected by this budget. The figure is very large, and I certainly hope it can be proved. If the Minister of Finance can demonstrate to the house that the figures are even approximately correct it will go far to substantiate his arguments contained in the budget speech.

There are two items, however, which I must discuss as fully as time will permit; I refer to the items dealing with butter and fruits and vegetables, with which I might join the item of eggs. I know my hon. friend the leader of the opposition will be waiting with some interest to learn just what I have to say on this particular subject, in view of my position in the past. I will not keep him long in suspense; I will tell him that my conceptions of what I believe to be sound economic principles are absolutely unchanged, but I am sorry to say that a number of hon. gentlemen—and I hope a small number—have seen fit to change their opinions in this regard. When the Australian treaty, with its extension to New Zealand, was discussed in this house recently I was frankly amazed at the trend of opinion expressed by hon. members. Having that in mind, I was not so greatly surprised on my visit home during the Easter recess to learn that this opinion was shared in part by some of the farmers of the west. I find it necessary to express my views in this regard; I would be remiss in my duty and false to myself if I did not do so.

I believe that the duty which has been placed on Australian and New Zealand butter represents a shortsighted policy, as far as the interests of western Canada are concerned. If the trade returns from 1923 to 1929 are any criterion, not only do those who favour this duty deprive themselves of the right to protest against tariff duties affecting other industries, but there will be no corresponding benefit to the producers of butter. The following table shows the average monthly price for No. 1 cream which obtained in Toronto during the years 1923 to 1929 inclusive. The prices are given at cents per pound of butter fat, and are as follows:

|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| January. | 41 | 44 | 37 | 43 | 43 | 40 | 44 |
| February | 41 | 45 | 33 | 43 | 44 | 42 | 44 |
| March. | 48 | 44 | 33 | 45 | 45 | 43 | 46 |
| April. | 43 | 35 | 33 | 45 | 47 | 43 | 46 |
| May. | 31 | 31 | 35 | 35 | 43 | 40 | 40 |
| June. | 32 | 32 | 34 | 35 | 35 | 37 | 37 |
| July. | 31 | 34 | 35 | 34 | 35 | 36 | 38 |
| August. | 32 | 34 | 36 | 35 | 35 | 37 | 40 |
| September | 36 | 36 | 37 | 34 | 38 | 40 | 41 |
| October. | 37 | 37 | 40 | 34 | 40 | 41 | 42 |
| November | 38 | 37 | 42 | 35 | 40 | 41 | 42 |
| December. | 42 | 39 | 43 | 39 | 40 | 44 | 43 |

The imports of butter for the years 1923 to 1929 were as follows:

| Year | Pounds |
|---|---|
| 1923 | 1,588,000 |
| 1924 | 903,000 |
| 1925 | 95,000 |
| 1926 | 5,812,000 |
| 1927 | 11,206,000 |
| 1928 | 16,797,000 |
| 1929 | 35,928,000 |

Mr. GOTT: Will the hon. member permit me to insert the figures for the last fiscal year?

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member can do that himself.

Mr. GOTT: They are government figures, not my own.

Mr. GLEN: In 1928, when the imports amounted to 16,797,000 pounds, the monthly prices, with the exception of November, were greater than the corresponding prices for the months of 1925, when only 95,000 pounds were imported. During 1929, when the importations amounted to 35,928,000 pounds as against importations of 16,797,000 pounds in 1928, one would have imagined that the prices would have been lower. But what do we find? With the exception of December, 1928, when the price was 44 cents per pound, and December, 1929, when it was 43 cents per pound—the months of May and June in 1928 and 1929 were the same—all the other months in 1929 were higher than the corresponding months in 1928.

Mr. SENN: Are the prices quoted by the hon. member based on the price of cream as obtaining in Toronto, or upon the price of butter itself?

Mr. GLEN: They are based upon the average monthly Toronto price of No. 1 cream, given in cents per pound for butter fat.

When the time comes that we are exporting butter, then it will be true that the export market price will become the domestic market price. The point is that you will not make cream shippers richer by shutting out imports, because just so long as our exports of dairy products exceed our imports then the price received by producers for cream or anything else will depend upon the prices ruling on the markets of the world. It is natural for a producer to accept the statements made to him by interested parties and to believe that were it not for the importation of certain quantities of butter he would receive a better price for his commodity. In this particular instance, I think that belief is answered, and I do not believe the producer will derive a cent of benefit.

For many years there has been a persistent agitation waged by the fruit and vegetable growers. They, like the producers of butter, thought that a little protection would benefit their industry, and so far they have been successful. Now, in return, that policy has had an effect more far-reaching than they ever dreamed and with consequences so hazardous that they begin now to tremble. As I have said before, you must be prepared for strange sequels once you begin to wallow in the protectionist trough. One often hears the statement made that the imposition of a tariff does not increase the price to the consumer. In this present instance we have an illuminating and striking example of the actions of those who seek and invoke tariff protection. It has been reported that the fruit jobbers have increased the price of oranges by ten cents per dozen. An outcry was raised immediately, yet the plain truth is that oranges are not included in the budget proposal: they are in the same position as they were prior to its introduction. I have been informed that there is a scarcity of oranges, but I wish the consumer in western Canada could be convinced of that. Does western Canada realize what will ensue if they begin to flirt with tariff protection? I believe that the effect of the tariff on fruits and vegetables undoubtedly will qualify and reconsolidate low tariff opinion in the west.

The Conservatives cannot complain; it is their doctrine. If they were in power they would unhesitatingly increase the tariffs in every direction. So far as we in the west are concerned, we hope that the lesson derived from this temporary tariff expedient will demonstrate the folly of the principle of protection. So far as I am concerned personally, I must oppose the principle involved in these items. I cannot ask for protection on butter in one breath, and in the next seek free trade in fruits and vegetables. The policy hitherto obtaining in the west is the only policy suitable to that section of the country—instead of an increasing there shall be a lessening of the burden of the farmers. The grain situation has impaired the revenues of the government, a deficiency in purchasing power has been caused by extraordinary world conditions, and instead of burdening the farmers, relief should be offered to them if they are to live and prosper, and that prosperity cannot be achieved by protection.

This budget contains a variety of items so complex in their character, so diversified in their application that it is impossible to say yea or nay to the budget as a whole. I can support many of the items, but there are others of which I cannot foretell the effect. I doubt if there is a single hon. member in this house who can truthfully say that he knows what will be the effect of all these items. He cannot know that until they have been thoroughly explained. I venture to say that no budget at any time, and certainly not this one, could be answered by yea or nay, and yet we are faced with that necessity. The thought has been expressed in this house many times that there is a better way of dealing with this matter, to have all the items discussed and then a vote taken. In that way we could give a yea or nay, but at the present time all that we know is that we are faced with a proposition which is bound to have far-reaching effects upon the economic life of this country, and in particular upon the economic life of western Canada. I would hate to turn down anything which might be of benefit, but I am faced with the necessity of making a decision on certain principles, the effect of which we do not know. The budget should be put before the house in such a way as to permit intelligent discussion.

I am not satisfied with all the provisions of the budget, but I am convinced that there are many things in it which will be of incalculable benefit to the country. What does that reservation mean? It means that I must support the budget.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. GLEN: Wait a minute. I said that it meant I must support the budget. In the past, at times the attitude toward the general principle of the budget has been indicated by the vote given upon it. Let me unhesitatingly say that there can be no acceptance of a general principle in a budget of this character because of its far-reaching and complex effect. I have said what I will do and I propose to do it.

[Mr. Glen.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. GLEN: I do not think the Conservatives have any reason to complain because they have stated they must have an opportunity of discussing all the items comprised in the budget. I have not heard any members on the Conservative benches state that they understood all the budget and that they could say yea or nay. I know from information gleaned in the lobbies, many members on the Tory side are just as concerned about the budget proposals as any member on this side. I know many members of the Tory party who, if they had an opportunity, and if they consulted their own interests, would vote against their party, but like the rest of us they have to wait until the house goes into committee to ascertain just exactly what the proposals mean. For that reason I am explicitly stating that I do not accept the general principle as contained in the budget as we know it. I shall therefore oppose the subamendment; I shall certainly oppose the amendment and I shall vote for the house to go into committee on the budget proposals.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much pleasure, as I always do, to the remarks of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen). I feel a good deal as he does, but I have reached a somewhat different conclusion from his. In order to make myself clear I shall state at once how I propose to vote. I propose to vote against the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) because it contains a principle and a policy which I have always opposed. I am going to vote against the oratorical sentence which is supposed to express the policy of the Conservative party because it leads nowhere and is a mere election phrase. I propose to abstain from voting upon the main motion—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. BOURASSA: —largely for the reasons that have been advanced by the hon. member for Marquette. There are in the budget some features that I approve; there are some that I cannot approve; and the budget as a whole is so involved that I have been unable so far to work out the proportion between good and bad. Therefore I shall do as most of the people in the country will have to do—wait for a month or so of study and discussion before I make up my mind.

The only two features upon which I desire to express my opinion are the proposals styled the countervailing duties, and the increase in the British preference. Both are protectionist measures. One is a measure of Canadian protection and the other is a measure of English or Imperial protection. I have never been a free trader in principle and therefore I do not feel pangs of conscience as some of my hon. friends on this side of the house do in either supporting or opposing this dual protectionist budget.

As regards the countervailing duties I say, perhaps somewhat cynically, that I think they commend themselves to the attention of the house and ought not to be opposed, mainly because they are demanded, not in all parts of the country, but generally by the country; and under our system of government I believe it is the duty of the government to listen to the voice of the people unless that voice demands something absolutely contrary to public interest. Like the hon. member for Marquette I do not believe the imposition of these countervailing duties will relieve the situation of the farmers to the extent that some of them seem to expect. I would rather be inclined to think the suggestion propounded on many occasions by the late member for Laprairie, Mr. Lanctot, namely, the imposition of a seasonal tariff, taking into account differences in climate and therefore differences in production, importation and consumption, would have been a sounder basis for such a policy. Words have been exchanged between both sides of the house as to the principle and the effect of this new policy. Hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavoured to contrast it with the policy once suggested by their former leader, Mr. Meighen. I think they have made a mistake. This policy is precisely Mr. Meighen's policy; it is undoubtedly a brick for brick policy, under a new name. It is like the endeavour in England to conceal the measure of protection that was adopted under the term "safeguarding of industry." It is like the gymnastics into which the various delegates of the Conservative party entered at their Winnipeg convention in order to secure an approval of their fiscal policy without mentioning the word "protection." Of course it is a policy of retaliation. The question is whether it is legitimate or not. The fact that members on that side or this side approved or disapproved of that policy five, ten or twenty-five years ago, has nothing to do with the matter. The question is whether it is the proper policy to adopt now in the interests of the people of Canada. I am not quite sure as to that; but I know that a large and growing number of people in Canada, east and west, in British Columbia, Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces, are asking for it. Frankly I would rather have it in this way than in the form of a general increase in the tariff upon those products. In a sense, it is an open avowal of the futility of our efforts in the past to secure fair treatment from the United States government; but at the same time it leaves the door open to better terms. It has been stated that this is a made-in-Washington tariff. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) especially made a very effective use, so far as what I will call skin feeling is concerned, of that expression. Of course that is childish. The brick-for-brick policy of Mr. Meighen was equally a tariff made in Washington.

Mr. SPENCE: No.

Mr. BOURASSA: Yes. it meant that Mr. Meighen and his party were prepared to raise our tariff brick for brick as the people of the United States raised theirs. Call it brick for brick, retaliation, countervailing duties, or what you will, the moment that this parliament, which is always master of its acts, decides to change its tariff policy according to changes made by another country, call your policy whatever name you like, baptize it in whatever creed you belong to, the principle is that you change your tariff according to the position taken by another country. And it is not altogether wrong; that is, if you do not make a religion of free trade. I have one religion which I hope is sufficient for the salvation of my soul, provided I make use of it, and I have never tried to make of any economic or political creed a religion. I admit that I am an opportunist in these matters and that I am prepared to change economic policies according to the economic changes that take place in this country and the rest of the world. Therefore, so far as that part of the budget is concerned, I would have no objection in supporting the policy of the government.

Whether it will create a great effect in the United States or not I do not know, and it is no surprise that an ignorant individual like myself should hesitate at pronouncing an opinion upon that point when I find these two contradictory expressions of opinion in the gospel book of the great Tory party. I quote from the first leading editorial on page 12 of the Montreal Gazette of the 12th of May, this short sentence:

> United States opinion is that Canada's countervailing duties will do no harm to American trade.

In other words, according to the opinion expressed by the editors of the Montreal Gazette, or imposed upon the editors of the Montreal Gazette by the leader of their party or by the leaders of finance in Montreal, countervailing duties will have no effect upon the exportation of American goods to Canada. But in the same issue of the same paper, on page 13, just the opposite page, I find this message, not a press message, but a message from a special correspondent of the Gazette in Washington:

> An analysis of the new Canadian tariff law revised to foster empire trade, which would adversely affect American trade with Canada probably to the amount of $225,000,000, was made public to-night by the Department of Commerce of the United States. The analysis is based on telegraphic despatches from Commercial Attaché Lynn W. Meekins, and Assistant Trade Commissioner A. H. Thiemann, at Ottawa.

So here you have in the same issue the opinion that these duties will not affect the trade of the United States, and on the other hand the opinion based on the reports of representatives of the United States in Canada that they will adversely affect American trade to the amount of $225,000,000. Quite a contradiction. The future will demonstrate which of the opinions is right. Nevertheless, I repeat, I think the government did right in this matter, to lend itself to the incessant demand of the fruit producers as well as a large number of farmers, especially those engaged in the dairy industry.

As to the other part of the budget dealing with the British preference, the reason why I shall vote against the subamendment of the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) is the reason why I cannot support this part of the budget. It has been stated by one of our good friends from the west (Mr. McPhee), to whose speech last night I listened with much pleasure, that this is a prolongation of the policy adopted by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding. Well, let us understand which policy, because there were two decisive phases in the adoption and pursuance of that British preference policy. I was in parliament when we passed from one phase to the other and therefore I know a little of what I am talking about.

In 1897, Mr. Fielding brought down in his budget the first preferential tariff ever introduced in this country. Under its provisions, favoured treatment was granted to goods imported from Great Britain and from any other country, British or foreign, offering to Canada special trade advantages. That was, I thought, a good basis for increasing our international trade. Although the British people and the British government granted us no special favours, although they treated our products in the same manner as they treated their imports from all other countries on earth, so long as Great Britain constituted our best market for our exports I thought that that was a good policy and I supported it.

But in 1900, three years later, in the midst of our first fits of imperial frenzy, at the suggestion of Mr. Russell, then the member for Halifax and now Judge Russell, a dear friend of mine, but a staunch and exalted imperialist, the government changed the basis of their policy. They adopted a three-cornered tariff, so to speak; one tariff applying to Great Britain and other British countries, on grounds of sentiment; another, the intermediate tariff, applying to countries which offered us equal advantages in trade, which was a businesslike principle; and a third tariff applied against all other countries. I could not see why sentiment should be introduced into a policy of that kind, and I voted against it, to the great scandal of my Liberal friends and to the great annoyance of the Tories who did not want to have anything to do with such a heretic as I was. Then and ever since, I stated that as a Canadian I think that the people in the world with whom we have the most interest in dealing are the British people, that they are the finest traders in the world; but also, that the worst manner in which we Canadians or any people on earth can meet the British in matters of trade is to introduce that form of mugwash sentiment which we introduced in 1900, and which has never been reciprocated by the British. Thank heaven, they continue to give us lessons in common sense and in the right spirit of business; and I think that the best way in which we can prove our loyalty to British institutions and British traditions is to trade with the British on the same basis on which they are prepared to trade with us or anybody else. A couple of years afterwards our own people began to open their eyes.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Does the hon. gentleman suggest that we should have free trade with Great Britain?

Mr. BOURASSA: Oh, no.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is what was implied.

Mr. BOURASSA: Just wait a second. Two years later the first fever of love was somewhat abated, the more so because it was not reciprocated. I do not know who it was that said that the most inflamed passion cannot continue to exist unless it is sustained by two parties at least, unless it is reciprocated. At the Imperial conference in 1902, Mr. Fielding, in London, gave warning to Great Britain that unless she treated Canada and her producers in a somewhat different manner from that in which she treated all her other customers, Canada would retrace her steps. But we never retraced our steps. We went on keeping as the basis of our fiscal policy the policy of protection as against most nations, the policy of intermediate tariffs as against nations that offered us trade advantages, and a policy of unreciprocated preferences with regard to Great Britain, whether or not Great Britain gave preferences to the Dominion.

Now, the member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) in introducing his amendment advocated—and the amendment carries out that idea—the granting of still more advantages to British trade, mainly the abrogating of the measure which was introduced last year by this government requiring that so-called British products should contain at least 50 per cent British labour and material. The idea I derived from reading the speech of the hon. gentleman is that if we go still further in that direction, if, for example, we enable the cotton spinners of Lancashire to drown our markets, to ruin our own cotton factories, the good people of the west will have a greater advantage in selling their products in the British market.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Were these cotton industries ruined before February 1st, 1929?

Mr. BOURASSA: No.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): That is when the regulation came into effect.

Mr. BOURASSA: The hon. gentleman asks us to do away with the requirement that British products should contain at least 50 per cent British labour and material. I want to point out the dire illusion under which our western friends labour if they imagine that by doing some further favour to the cotton spinners of Lancashire they will get better treatment from the wheat buyers and millers of England and Scotland.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Let me assure the hon. gentleman we have no illusions in that regard.

Mr. BOURASSA: Then what is the reason for the amendment, and why does the government increase the British preference, when there is no apparent sign whatever that the British government is prepared at the present time to grant us any more favourable treatment than it grants to the Germans, to the Italians, to the French, to the Japanese or to the Chinese? In this respect I would ask our western friends, and my Liberal friends generally to ponder over these paragraphs which were reproduced from the Toronto Star in the Free Press Evening Bulletin of Winnipeg of March 15th last. They appear in a very able review of the wheat situation by a gentleman of the name of Frederick Griffin.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the hon. gentleman permit just one question?

Mr. BOURASSA: If my hon. friend will excuse me: Under the forty minute rule, and having to express views which do not coincide with those of any other group, I am somewhat handicapped.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But the hon. gentleman leaves a wrong impression.

Mr. BOURASSA: There will be an opportunity to correct it. I am reading now these paragraphs:

> There has been much talk of the British miller—and in Winnipeg someone remarked that there is no one on earth as hard-headed as the Scottish cooperative miller who figures in this wheat picture. British millers have been blamed for screwing the wheat pool, for being out to smash cooperative selling on the part of the great mass of Canadian farmers.
> Perhaps they have been. If they have proven unsentimental, if they have failed to let the alleged imperial tie interfere with the chance to win dividends even to the extent of giving the British consumer at the old price an inferior loaf made from lower grade wheat without the old proportion of Canadian mixing, it must be said that they are merely giving an imitation of Greek meeting Greek. The wheat pool cannot be accused of sentimentality. The Canadian wheat producers have not been worrying much about the imperial effect when trying to extract the last possible cent per bushel from British and European consumers.
> This is said without sarcasm. It simply illustrates what the most emotional imperialist knows; that money talks a language that is not so much diplomatic as direct and that no amount of flag-waving can loosen up a pocketbook—at least in peace times.
> Great Britain—rather the British millers—simply took advantage of the European situation to turn the tables on Canada. For a number of years they have had to meet Canadian prices, and like it. Now they found the chance to make Canada meet theirs, and like it. All is fair in peace and trade, even between imperial brethren.

Now, this is the exact situation which presented itself at every conference at which those matters were discussed. A giant in mental and political strength compared with the lordly pigmy of to-day—who, thanks to his happy operations in cement-merging in Canada, is endeavouring to resurrect the old idea of Imperial economic unity—the late Joseph Chamberlain devoted the last years of his life in endeavouring to enthuse the British people over what he called an imperially minded policy. He did not succeed. During the war the Tories of England endeavoured to take advantage of the situation to advance in a more modest manner the idea of imperial economic unity. They failed. And to-day Lord Beaverbrook, with all his genius for cementing and cement, is dragging behind him, but only apparently and only to a certain degree, Mr. Stanley Baldwin. Mr. Baldwin is a shrewd Englishman of the old type, and I believe he will find ways of getting rid of Lord Beaverbrook, just as Mr. Lloyd George found means of getting rid of Lord Northcliffe in due time.

But taking the situation as it presents itself to-day, whether this increase in the British preference—not only without an assurance but without any indication on the part of the British government that they are prepared to do something reciprocally—will gather votes in Canada, I do not know. Apparently it has gathered some votes in West Fulham in favour of the candidate of the new Tory-Imperialist party. But what about the next imperial economic conference, when representatives of this country will go and meet the representatives of Great Britain and the other Dominions or sister nations? I am not quite sure that the Prime Minister of Canada will be any stronger in his dealings with Mr. Ramsay MacDonald by pluming himself on the compliments which he has received from Lord Beaverbrook. As far as I am concerned, disconnected from all parties as I am, there remains enough in me of the old Liberal to believe that the Liberal party and the Liberal government in Canada have something else to do than to strengthen the hands of the most Tory-Imperialist wing of the Tory party of England.

That is from the political point of view But from the economic point of view I was surprised to hear a sensible man like the Minister of Finance—one of the members of this house for whom I have the most respect and esteem—sensible Englishman as he is, speaking in that lofty—and childish—fashion of granting gratuitous favours to the poor, down trodden English nation, in no "spirit of petty bargaining." If the British communities to-day stand foremost on the five continents of the world it is not because of their deeds of conquest, it is not because of their political genius or their mental superiority. In all these matters they have had and still have their qualities and their deficiencies. They have committed their crimes and they have done their great deeds. If there is one thing which has made and sustained the greatness of the British nation for the last two centuries it is its bargaining spirit. Lord Rosebery once said in effect: "We quite foolishly took to heart for a number of years Napoleon's saying that 'England is a nation of shopkeepers.' Why did we not realize before that our source of greatness is our shopping spirit? The trouble is that so many people have learned our lessons and are becoming shopkeepers that to-day we have to drive the best bargains we can with the nations of the world." This, of course, is not a verbatim quotation.

Likewise, I think the best manner in which Canada can prove herself a true scion of old John Bull, a true chip of the old block, is to meet the British not in a "spirit of petty bargaining" but on a solid ground of fair play and good bargaining. It seems to me that if we wanted to offer some advantages in matters of trade to the British government and to the British people, we should have done as we have done with the Americans: put it on a conditional basis, not on a basis of "petty bargaining" but on a solid basis of fair play and sound bargaining. What reason have we to believe that if we lower all these duties, the British millers, who have for some years struggled with the wheat pool of Canada and have at last obtained the upper hand, are going to cease their purchasing of cheaper wheat in the Argentine and elsewhere, thereby lowering their own profits, just to enable the Lancashire weavers to ship a few more tons of their products to Canada? The British nation as a whole stands first for itself and fair play for others after it has served itself; likewise every branch of British trade and industry stands first for itself. Canada will not meet the English miller by bestowing favours upon the Lancashire cotton maker; Canada will not meet a trader in wheat which purchases in the cheapest market and sells for a profit to the highest bidder, by saying that she has granted favours to the makers of crockery in this or that English town.

It has been said that in order to minimise the emigration of unemployed from Great Britain to our shores we must increase the trade of Great Britain to such an extent that she will be able to keep her people at home. Well, surely nobody has seriously thought of that. The great crisis in Great Britain to-day is because of the fact that she is threatened—I do not say that she is fatally threatened, but I do say that Great Britain is threatened in her position as the trade centre of the world. Great Britain lived, prospered and grew, perhaps abnormally, because of her free trade policy, because of her shipping trade, because of her genius as a trading and travelling nation; she had succeeded in finding out and tapping all the markets of the five continents from which she could draw the raw material necessary to maintain her industries, and to which she sent back her manufactured goods. That is the source of the trouble in India today, and it is the main source of the present Chinese difficulties; it is also one of the sources of the trouble in Russia. England's power is threatened because markets containing over a billion of human beings have cut off her trade; and some people here imagine that because we are going to buy a few more bales of cotton from Great Britain and threaten the existence of a few Canadian manufacturers, we are going to settle the affairs of Great Britain and take the place of all the Indians, Chinese, Russians, Bulgarians, Serbians, Turks, and all those clients of England upon whose trade England has thrived for fifty years, and the bulk of whose trade is now lost to England, or at least greatly handicapped? It is preposterous.

I sympathise with the English; I think the world would be worse if England disappeared, the world would suffer if English power were too greatly weakened. However, it is ridiculous, it is the thought of a parvenu or of a child who has not measured his strength, to imagine that we can settle the affairs of England. Let us rather come back to the thought which has been frequently expressed by the leader of this government and by the Minister of Justice (Mr Lapointe): Let us frame our policy first to suit ourselves, but frame it with an open eye, so that we may deal preferentially with people who are prepared to deal with us. I wish to state that there is no people on earth with whom I would rather deal, or with whom I would rather commune mentally or politically, than the British people: I refer of course to the true, broad British people, the British people with the world view. At the same time it is ridiculous to imagine that Britons are going to change their policies in order to suit us and to purchase our wheat. Therefore I think we should make our own conditions to suit ourselves, and approach the situation as we have approached the one affecting the United States. We should approach the English situation in a proper spirit.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Have the English people any duty against our wheat?

Mr. BOURASSA: No, it is not a question of duty.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Oh yes, it is.

Mr. BOURASSA: No, that was the mistake made by the old Tory-Imperialist group. It is the mistake of the present Tory group, the allies of this government, Lord Beaverbrook and his friends. The English people will not stand the imposition of a duty on food articles, at least for years to come. It is a question of trade; and I think we should approach the British government next fall with fair trade proposals instead of giving in advance a certain favour to this fabric and a certain favour to that. We should approach the English government by saying that in Canada we are prepared to foster the importation of British goods generally, provided we know what they are prepared to do for us. In that way we might obtain favourable trade arrangements and have Great Britain buy our wheat instead of that of the Argentine and other countries. We should not approach this matter "in a petty bargaining spirit," as the finance minister has chosen to call it, but rather on the basis of fair dealing between two countries who respect each other and who respect themselves first.

Mr. LENNOX: That is a sound business proposition.

Mr. BOURASSA: I think it is, but I admit I am not a business man. I know it is useless to express my view, but I would suggest that next fall we should send two sets of representatives to the Imperal conference. To go on with the magnificent work of political emancipation which has not been too much eulogized on this side of the house, we should send the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice; and we should send the member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) to deal with matters of business. It might be asked why the leader of the opposition should not be sent.

Mr. LENNOX: Oh, he is going.

Mr. BOURASSA: I would not do that if I were you, because he might remain there; they might keep him to be an ornament to the House of Lords, if he is prepared to pay the price. I do not know whether prices have gone up since the Liberal government went out of office—

Mr. LENNOX: It would be a great thing for the British government.

Mr. BOURASSA: That is a matter of opinion. I simply say that the leader of the opposition moved me as he moved the house --I saw some of the ministers applauding him —when he made his bold statement of Canada first. Of course, I applauded him, because that reminded me of old days, when both Liberals and Conservatives stood for Canada first. Then came the day when there was a rivalry between the two parties as to which would sacrifice Canada for the empire more than the other; and then came the day when a future leader of the Conservative party boasted, and his boast was advertised from the Pacific to the Atlantic, that he was prepared to bankrupt Canada to save the empire.

Those were days of imperial drunkenness. Everyone gets drunk once in a while, even people who drink only cold water. I give this warning to my dear friends to my left: Let them not allow their opponents to resurrect and monopolize the old "Canada first" policy; because in spite of all the changes of government and policy, they may rest assured of one thing: In the breasts of all true Canadians, whether they are of English, Scottish, Irish, French, Polish or any other origin, there is one sentiment which in the long run will prevail over all others, in politics as well as in economics. That sentiment is "Canada first and the empire afterwards."

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): Mr. Speaker, I may begin what I have to say this afternoon by expressing my envy of the two previous speakers. I wish I could approach this subject as they did. I am heartily in accord with the idea advanced by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen); I think it will commend itself to the judgment of this house, and this budget brings the matter right to a head. As the hon. member has said, this budget contains a number of proposals with which members on both sides do not agree. If we could discuss these items among ourselves before being obliged to swallow the budget as a whole I think many of us in this house would be more comfortable this afternoon. For my part, under ordinary circumstances I would hesitate to take up the time of the house at all, but the circumstances surrounding this budget are so peculiar that I feel that I really must make a statement to the house as to the position I intend to take.

I may say in beginning that I think the budget presented this year is without a parallel in Canadian political history, although I understand that there have been two or three occasions in British history when the government of the day simply took the policy which had been advocated by the opposition, made it their own and appealed to the people. This is an exceedingly difficult position; it is a regular paradox to find the government of the day appealing to the people to support them because they are now adopting policies to which they have been opposed for some years. It must be confusing to the man on the street, in whose mind the two parties have been associated with particular policies; now he finds that the party with which he associated one set of policies has taken an about face and is appealing for his support on the policies which have been advocated by the opposition. I think the man on the street will be largely influenced by his own judgment, because after all the general level of intelligence in Canada is fairly high. If these policies now being submitted by the government commend themselves to the people, I think the people will see to it that the party which promulgated these policies in the first instance will be the party entrusted with their administration.

Now I want to refer to a statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister on February 24 of this year, which will be found at page 47 of Hansard. He was referring then to the record of his government during the last nine years, and he referred to what he had done for the relief of the maritime provinces. This is what he said:

> Reference is made to the maritime provinces. When we came into office we found a condition of unrest in the maritimes. It was the most serious situation with which the country was then faced. We appointed a commission to look into conditions there, and we acted on the report of that commission in very considerable detail. A very little still remains to be done, and I hope that before we are through hon. gentlemen may find that the report has been implemented in all particulars.

The right hon. gentleman overlooked some very salient facts in that connection. This government did come into power in 1921, with a solid contingent of Liberals from the province of Nova Scotia. There was not a Conservative elected from that province, and from 1921 to 1925 the Prime Minister sat in this house with a solid Nova Scotia representation behind him, but not one peep ever came from any member representing that province with regard to the grievances of the maritimes. The Prime Minister was right in saying that there was unrest in the maritimes in 1921, very grievous unrest, which grew until it culminated in the provincial and federal elections of 1925. The provincial Liberal government, which had been in power in Nova Scotia for forty years, was swept into the discard; when it went to the country there were forty Liberals in the house with only three Conservatives, but the figures were reversed after the election.

Then what happened? During the first session of the legislature a resolution was adopted dealing with matters as they then stood in that province, which resolution is to be found at page 51 of the brief prepared by the province. It is as follows:

Whereas Nova Scotia in entering confederation made possible the unification and consolidation of a British Dominion on this continent;

And whereas at that time certain pledges were given that such measures would be undertaken and such policies pursued as would ensure for the future a satisfactory economic position for this province;

And whereas the pledges given have been disregarded, as a result of which Nova Scotia has not shared in equal measure the prosperity enjoyed by the Dominion as a whole;

And whereas the government is now engaged in preparing a memorandum setting forth in detail the claims of the province with the object in view of seeking such adequate redress as will ensure a return of contentment and prosperity to our people;

Therefore be it resolved that this house approves of the action now being taken by the government;

And be it further resolved that such memorandum be presented by the government to the federal government, with the assurance that the people of this province believe that adequate remedies exist and must be applied.

That resolution was passed on March 12, 1926. In the speech from the throne delivered in 1926, the government of that day, headed by the present Prime Minister, declared its intention to appoint a commission. That was not our idea of the manner in which to approach this question. The government of Nova Scotia at great cost had prepared an elaborate brief and it was their desire to present that brief to the government. However, there was a difference of opinion; the maritime members insisted that this matter should be presented to the government, and the government and its followers insisted upon the matter being referred to a commission. That commission was appointed some months afterwards, on April 17, 1926, a month or so after this resolution was passed in the provincial house. That commission sat and made its report in September of 1926, and from that day to this the maritime members have been insisting that the recommendations contained in that report should be implemented by this government. Whatever benefits have accrued to the maritime provinces as a result of the Duncan commission are due entirely to the insistent and persistent efforts made by the Conservative members from 1926 onward, and we find one more recommendation being implemented in the present budget. Do not let it be thought that all the recommendations contained in the Duncan report have been implemented; they have not. Some have, and for those I suppose we should be duly grateful, but the adoption of a national fuel policy whereby this country could be made independent of any other country in the matter of fuel has not been decided upon by this government.

I think we were all, and I know I was, rather favourably impressed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in his presentation of the budget on May 1. At that time I thought that the minister had succeeded in putting over a very tricky budget. However, as he delivered his speech and when I saw the demonstrations which followed, I changed my opinion. There were certain provisions in the budget which appealed to members on both sides of the house. There were others which caused considerable surprise, but when I looked at the faces of the hon. gentlemen opposite during the presentation of that budget, if they expressed joyful surprise then I do not know the meaning of the word "consternation." That first favourable impression has been largely discounted. A practice has grown up in recent years amongst certain literary men, known as debunking. Certain gentlemen are pulling down idols which have existed for some time, and destroying traditions which have been handed down for many years. They endeavour to show that the idols have feet of clay, and the traditions have no foundation in fact. The same thing has happened with regard to this budget. A debunking process has been going on ever since it was presented, and it is now found that the whole thing was an illusion.

I was particularly interested in the provisions dealing with the iron and steel industry, but there is not a man living, as far as I can learn, who can give an intelligent interpretation as to the meaning of those provisions. I spent half a day going over the items, but I had to give it up in despair. I got in touch with some of the leading steel executives of this country, but they told me quite frankly that they did not know what they meant and that it would take a year or two to find the real effects. I am in receipt of telegrams which claim that the proposed item 380, which permits fabricated steel to enter this country under the British preferential tariff on payment of 10 per cent duty will put the steel fabricators of Sydney out of business. Other steel executives state that on the whole they are satisfied.

There is one provision in the budget which commends itself to me, that with regard to the payment of a bonus on coal used in iron and steel production. That provision is contained in the last paragraph of the budget speech, which reads:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of forty-nine and one-half cents per ton on bituminous coal mined in Canada and converted into coke in Canada and used in the smelting of iron from ore, or in the production of steel.

The very first thing to be noted with regard to that is that it is not in the terms of the Duncan report. Just whether the matter is important or not I do not pretend to say, but there is a strong impression in many places that there is a great difference between the Duncan report recommendations and the reference in the budget speech. The Duncan report states at page 38:

> Having regard to the bounty system previously applied, and to this aspect of the application of the drawback, we recommend that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

As I have said, so far as I am concerned that is the important feature in this budget. What I am going to say now is directed principally to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan). I am sorry he is not in his seat, because what I am going to say is intended to afford him an opportunity, the opportunity of his life, to do something for the labouring men employed in the steel industry of Cape Breton. I want to point out first the ground upon which this bounty is given, the basis for its recommendation. This will be found on page 37 of the Duncan report as follows:

> We were asked to recommend that a bounty should be again made available. In this connection we have thought it right to give consideration to a point which was emphasized in the course of the evidence, viz.:—that a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty is given when imported coal is used for metallurgical purposes, and that this is tantamount to giving a bonus of that amount, since it means that the Dominion is yielding up money which otherwise under its general policy in regard to bituminous coal would accrue to it.

The basis of that recommendation is that the Cape Breton steel industry should be put on the same footing as the other Canadian industries. What I want to call the attention of the Minister of Labour to is this, that some of these other Canadian industries are now adopting the eight hour day and if the Cape Breton steel industry is to be put on an even footing with the other Canadian concerns, there should be some provision for the adoption of the eight hour day.

There is another consideration that I desire to offer to the Minister of Labour. During the last three years the steel company at Sydney has been in the hands of a receiver. According to the reports made for that receiver, that concern has been earning more than $2,000,000 a year over its operating expenses. Of course the receiver does not have to pay any interest on bonds or dividends to stockholders or anything of that sort. That situation is all right for the company, but how about the men employed there, men employed for two or three days a week, men deprived of employment altogether, 500 men thrown out of employment within the last few months, with repeated applications made to the city council of Sydney for relief and to start city work in order to give those people enough to eat. I have in my hand a letter from the president of the Trades and Labour Council who was employed there. He has been working only three days a week and his total pay, January 1 to April 24, has been $144. That man's case is typical; with a family of five he has been working for over three months at less than $40 a month.

The point I want to bring home to the government is this: we have a saying down in our part of the country that there is no necessity for greasing a fat pig. That company is now making money; it has the money in its treasury. Let us see that that money is used for two purposes: first, to increase the wages of the men, and, second, to shorten their hours of labour. There is no excuse in this case of getting behind the constitutional question and saying that the constitution prevents this being done. The government has the money and it can tie it up with whatever strings it wants to when it gives it to the company. This is the opportunity of a lifetime for the Minister of Labour and the government to do something. I represent in this house the workers in that steel industry and I say to the government without reserve: Let them give me the assurance now that they will devote this money to increasing wages and I will vote for the budget. We have not a minister present who is able to reply. During the whole course of this debate the front benches have been occupied by only one or two ministers, sometimes awake and sometimes asleep. There is no getting away from this challenge. I am not taking anybody by surprise, because to-day I informed the Prime Minister that I would ask him this question across the floor of the house. Let them give me the assurance that they will devote this money or a portion of it to affording these people a living wage and I will vote for the budget; otherwise I will not. This is a serious matter for me. For the first time in twenty-five years my chief and I have had a difference of opinion. He knows and I know how serious that is, but I have to tell him to-day that such will be my course if the government will give me that assurance, and there is no minister present to give it.

With regard to the amendment I subscribe to every paragraph of the amendment moved by my leader. I have no confidence in the government, but I am prepared to give them my support on the budget if they will give me that assurance. Either they are going to help the men employed in that concern or they are going to help a concern that does not need it. I am in this position. I am pledged to these men. I have given them my assurance that anything that comes down for their assistance, either steel or coal, will have my support in this house no matter whether it comes from the Grits or the Tories, and that pledge I am going to keep. I know that this party is entitled to whatever credit comes from the implementing of the Duncan report, and I know that when this party comes into power after the next election, as come it will, this portion of the report will be implemented in full, and we will go even further and carry out the recommendations that we all want with regard to a fuel policy. Just now I feel that I want to support this particular clause in the budget, but I connot do so unless I support the whole budget. That is the same point that was raised by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen). I want to support this particular clause, but to do so I have to swallow the whole budget, and I am prepared to do that if the government will give me the assurance that I have asked for. Will they do it?

I rather envy the position taken by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who has just preceded me. He is going to vote one way on one amendment, one way on another amendment, and then take to the woods on the main motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Hon. members may laugh, but I must confess that that is a proceeding that strongly appeals to me. I am not going to vote for the amendment to the amendment, but if any assurance such as I have asked for is given to me, I will vote for the budget. I must have that assurance because I want this money for the men; I do not want it for the company.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, before addressing myself to the subject that is at present before the house, the budget statement which has been submitted by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), I wish to discuss a subject which I consider to be of prime importance, and I wish to discuss it by way of addressing a few questions to the hon. leader of the opposition.

A few days ago the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Bock) who, in spite of the sneers of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), delivered a speech that had in it more humour and common sense combined than is usually the case with speeches in this house, drew the attention of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) to the fact that certain tactics were being pursued by the Conservative party in the province of Saskatchewan, and he asked the leader of the opposition if he endorsed those tactics. The hon. leader of the opposition has not given an answer to that question. I would say this, at least, that he cannot repudiate what is being done by his followers in Saskatchewan simply by going down somewhere in the province of Quebec and making a speech that would seem to be on entirely different lines. The answer must be given in the place where the offence is committed.

I have another question to ask the leader of the opposition. On two or three occasions it has been in my mind to bring this matter to the attention of the house, but I have hitherto refrained from doing so. Those occasions were when the leader of the opposition was declaiming against the sins of his opponents in regard to questions of political patronage. We have already had one illustration that would seem to show, at least, that the leader of the opposition has two standards of political morality, one for his friends and one for his opponents.

Mr. COTNAM: How many standards have you?

Mr. BROWN: What I want to know is, has the leader of the opposition two standards on this question of patronage, one for his friends and one for his opponents?

Mr. COTNAM: You are a good judge.

Mr. BROWN: Yes, I am a judge and I have formed my conclusions too, and I am going to express them.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman wish an answer to the question he asked? I will answer him now. I hold in my hand volume 1, No. 2, of L'Action Liberale, which contains on its front page a picture of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), under the heading, "A Great French-Canadian Politician."

Mr. BROWN: I am not going to have the hon. gentleman—

Mr. BENNETT: You asked for an answer and you are going to get it.

Mr. BROWN: I will get it a little later.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot speak on it later. Inside is circulated a cartoon of a burning school with Premier Anderson beside it, and under the cartoon are the words:

Anderson. Conservative premier of Saskatchewan. Abominable fanatic supported by Orange Lodges and Ku Klux Klan. Furious iconoclast, he revives Julian The Apostate's action against the Christ. But, like him, he will be vanquished. This crab, political canker, wants to stir up against the Catholic minority and the teaching of French the most cruel and impious persecution of our history. He has expelled the nuns from schools kept up by our western brothers. And the Conservative party had not the courage to protest against it.

There is the minister's picture, there is the cartoon, and there is the paper circulated in Quebec by my hon. friend's friends.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have given no money to that paper.

Mr. BROWN: Is it any wonder that it was circulated in Quebec in view of what is being done in Saskatchewan? The question I want to discuss at the moment, Mr. Speaker, is the question of political patronage. I am asking the leader of the opposition if he has two standards in this matter, one for his friends and one for his opponents. I am moved to discuss this matter because of a letter that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen this week, headed, "Mr. Dickie's Comment:"

To the Editor:—I have always been treated so fairly by your good self that I feel sure you will have corrected a slight inadvertency that crept into an excerpt of a report on my few remarks at Esquimalt Conservative picnic. I said in part: "When our party gets in power, if I am your member, I will at once consult with the various executives of this large constituency; will obtain and assemble their views, and bring my best judgment to bear on them; for most certainly the views of those who have borne the burden and heat of the day when we were out of power should be accorded every consideration. In this way a perfect machine could be built up, and it might be found necessary, as with a ship in distress, to jettison otherwise valuable cargo.

C. H. Dickie.

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 10, 1929.

I did not notice until to-day that it was dated August 10, 1929. I presume the editor of the Citizen had some purpose in reprinting the letter this week. But what I want to say is this, that although that letter is clothed in very euphemistic language, nevertheless it expressed one of the most vicious principles of political patronage. When I was a boy I found in my father's library a book on the Study of Words, by Archbishop Trench. For a good many years I did not bother to look into it, thinking it was one of those dry-as-dust books that would be of no interest to me. However, when little more than a boy I took occasion one day to read it and I found it an intensely interesting book. There was one chapter on history in words, and I remember there was another chapter on morality in words. I regret that when I went to the library I was not able to find the book, and not having seen it for forty years, perhaps I may be excused if I do not give exact quotations. But that chapter on morality in words has had an influence on my thinking during my whole life. The thought of that great writer on using smooth words to cover up an evil thing was expressed something like this:

How much better is it under all circumstances to use an ugly name for an ugly thing than to use a name that plays fast and loose with the fundamental principles of morality. Better call a thing by its real name than to use a term that glosses it over and makes it appear to be a good thing when it is really evil.

Now, let us examine this letter of the hon. gentleman:

—for most certainly the views of those who have borne the burden and heat of the day when we were out of power should be accorded every consideration. In this way a perfect machine could be built up and it might be found necessary, as with a ship in distress, to jettison otherwise valuable cargo.

If that means anything it means that if the Conservative machine is in distress, then valuable public servants shall be cast aside.

Mr. DICKIE: Might I interrupt the hon. gentleman just a moment?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. DICKIE: He has referred to me.

Mr. BROWN: This letter bears the hon. member's signature. I say again that if those words mean anything they mean that whenever the Conservative machine happens to be in distress every valuable public servant shall be cast aside.

Mr. DICKIE: Perhaps I may be considered to have been a little indiscreet in some of the language I used at that picnic, but I expresed my own views, views that I hold at the present time, and I was speaking at a picnic among hundreds of men who had applied without success for jobs in the dockyard. They had to produce red tickets from the Liberal party to get jobs. So I felt I knew to whom I was speaking.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Privilege.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DICKIE: I am speaking on a question of privilege, sir.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DICKIE: I am speaking on a question of privilege, sir.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the hon. member is speaking on a question of privilege he is in order.

Mr. BROWN: Then I beg Your Honour to look at the clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DICKIE: I should like to explain to my hon. friend, who has taken such trouble in putting my views before the house, that that hon. gentleman, who has faced three or four different ways since I have known him in this house—

Mr. BROWN: This is not a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman may state his question of privilege, but not enter into a discussion.

An hon. MEMBER: He is just coming to it.

Mr. DICKIE: I wish to say to my hon. friend, who has faced so many ways, that perhaps I have made a mistake or two from a party viewpoint, but I can tell him that the provocation was very, very great indeed in the district in which I was speaking.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is not a question of privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the hon. gentleman has stated his question of privilege.

An hon. MEMBER: No, he is just coming to it.

Mr. DICKIE: Just one moment, Your Honour. I think my people will bear me out in saying that in regard to applying for work I never asked any man what his political views were.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Privilege.

Mr. DICKIE: I have seen scores of returned soldiers with families to support refused work at the dockyard because they did not have a red ticket from the Liberal party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Speaker, I have made my point, I have secured from the hon. member for Nanaimo an admission of indiscretion. That he was extremely indiscreet I am prepared to admit. In view of this indiscretion, what does the hon. leader of the opposition intend to do in the matter? I would say that what he should do would be to take the hon. member for Nanaimo aside and give him a lesson in political morality.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BROWN: Undoubtedly what he will do is take him aside and give him a curtain lecture.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Not at all.

Mr. BROWN: He will probably say to him: Don't write when you can talk; and don't talk when you can keep silent. He will probably add for the hon. gentleman's benefit that while speech is silver, silence is golden. He will probably tell him—

An hon. MEMBER: Tell us about the budget.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BROWN: He will probably tell him that while a man's words may be capable of different interpretations, there is an advantage in silence because you can give your silence any interpretation you wish according to the exigencies of the moment. And the hon. leader of the opposition will probably point to his own illustrious example and say: Look at what I did; I was silent for four years on one question, and for three years on another question.

An hon. MEMBER: New Zealand butter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BROWN: Finally, the hon. leader of the opposition probably will say to the hon. member for Nanaimo, that since he is so lacking in discretion he had better not speak at picnics or write letters to the press. I think, Mr. Speaker, the house has a right to know whether the principles advocated by the hon. member for Nanaimo are endorsed by the leader of the opposition and his followers. Those who have heard me speak before in this house and who have paid any attention to what I have said will quite readily understand that there are some things in this budget and some principles expressed therein which in the past have not met with my approval.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BROWN: The announced purpose of the budget—

An hon. MEMBER: Right about face.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BROWN: I heartily agree with the purpose announced in the budget of extending trade within the British Empire. Whether it will accomplish the purpose intended is of course a matter regarding which there are differences of opinion. There are those who contend that it will and there are others who contend that it will not.

An hon. MEMBER: What do you say about it?

Mr. BROWN: A year ago the then Minister of Finance, the late Mr. Robb, made the statement of policy that in view of the attitude of the people of the United States it would be our policy to seek trade with those who would trade with us. In spite of the fact that I have always opposed the raising of tariffs I recognized at that time that if trade were to be diverted from one channel to another it would probably be necessary in some cases to raise the general tariff rates.

An hon. MEMBER: One hundred per cent.

Mr. BROWN: The possibilities of diverting trade through the use of tariffs have been brought to my notice on two occasions during this session. A short time ago when I spoke on the Australian treaty, which had for its purpose the diverting to Australia of trade in raisins and currents, I pointed out that in the case of currants, by putting on a duty of 3 cents a pound we had diverted from Greece to Australia practically the whole trade in currants. Whether or not the diversion of that trade was a wise policy is not at the moment a matter of importance. There are some considerations which might be urged to the effect that it would be wise for us to continue our trade relations with Greece. However, that is not the point we are discussing at the present time.

An hon. MEMBER: It is in the budget.

Mr. BROWN: When the West Indies treaty was passed a few years ago it contained a provision whereby we put a duty of 50 cents a bunch on bananas, and allowed them to come in free if they came by way of the maritime ports. I was not particularly enthusiastic about the treaty at the time, and I felt doubtful whether we in the west were not likely to bear an additional burden. I was doubtful whether bananas would move to the west by way of the maritime ports. There are indications however that bananas coming from the West Indies to the maritime ports are being carried well across Canada. There would seem to be an indication that the American companies shipping bananas through the Mississippi valley to the prairies were absorbing that duty of 50 cents a bunch. I now recognize that there is the possibility of a tariff being used without burdening the Canadian people, if it is used to divert trade from one channel to another.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: In fairness, the hon. gentleman will be entitled to speak longer than his allotted time if the interruptions are continued.

An hon. MEMBER: Give him two hours.

Mr. BROWN: I agree entirely with the finance minister when he speaks of the spirit in which these preferences are offered. I do not wish to approach the British people in a bargaining spirit. In the past we have offered them certain preferences in our market and I believe that we can do that to-day. I would point out that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and some of his lieutenants have practically said that we will give no preference to the British people unless we can get a quid pro quo. They say in one breath that we do not wish to dictate to the people of Great Britain, and in the next that if Great Britain will not give us some preference in her markets she cannot expect to receive preference in ours. As between the attitude expressed by the Minister of Finance and that expressed by several hon. members of the opposition, I have no hesitation in making my choice. I do not wish to be represented at the imperial economic conference by those who have expressed the sentiments which have come from across the house.

Mr. STEVENS: That would be a mutual agreement.

Mr. BROWN: The statements made by the hon. gentlemen opposite are by no means consistent; there are inconsistencies in their speeches. The leader of the opposition quoted a statement, which he said was the statement of a noted Conservative statesman, to the effect that a woollen mill in Canada is as good as a woollen mill in Yorkshire.

An hon. MEMBER: For the empire.

Mr. BROWN: I can agree with that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BROWN: Will hon. members opposite reciprocate?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Certainly.

Mr. BROWN: Will hon. members opposite say that a woollen mill in Yorkshire is as good for the empire as a woollen mill in Canada? Certainly they will not reciprocate, and their hesitancy shows the hollowness of the claim they make when they say that they are anxious to maintain trade with the British Empire. I want to call the attention of the house to what I regard as misleading statements and arguments that have been used in the course of this debate. At first I had intended to refer to statements made by the leader of the opposition, and statements which have been repeated in this house for years back. It has been stated on numerous occasions that taxation has been increased.

An hon. MEMBER: Has the hon. member any conscience?

Mr. BROWN: They point to the fact that the total volume of revenue has increased. To my mind the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton) most effectively answered that contention. He answered it, even if it is beyond the intelligence of hon. members of the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BROWN: All any government can do is to fix the rates of taxation.

An hon. MEMBER: They have fixed them, and they are going to change them.

Mr. BROWN: They may fix the rates of taxation, and as the years go by they may find that that taxation produces a greater volume of revenue than is required. They may then seek to reduce the rates, but in the very act of doing so they may increase the volume of revenue. I was brought up to believe, and I still hold to the belief in regard to custom duties, that in many cases it is possible to reduce the duties and yet increase the revenue. In one breath the leader of the opposition charged the government with having increased taxation, pointing to the volume of revenue, whereas in the next breath he criticized the government for not getting enough out of the income tax.

Mr. McGREGOR: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Does he believe this government intends to put these rates into effect?

Mr. BROWN: I did not catch the question, and I will not take time to answer. I was simply pointing out that in one breath the leader of the opposition condemned the government for increasing taxation, pointing to the greater volume of revenue, and in the next breath condemned them because there were not enough people paying income tax, and consequently there was not enough revenue being raised from that source. These are inconsistencies we cannot help but notice.

There was another fallacious argument advanced by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) and the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher), during the course of the speech in which he moved the subamendment, fell into the same error. That is the claim made in some quarters that the only true index of tariff trend is the average duty collected. I simply say that is not true. That statement is based on a fallacy, because it fails to take into account the large number of unknown factors which of necessity enter into the problem.

Mr. KENNEDY: Would the hon. member suggest a truer basis for making a comparison?

Mr. BROWN: I say that fact should be clear—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BROWN: I cannot be led away from my speech to answer questions of that kind. I will say this, however: If you want to consider the question whether Great Britain is granted real preferences, you must consider those preferences as they apply to definite, specific articles. You cannot form a conclusion by dealing in averages, and that is the point I make. I say the fact that this conclusion is invalid is clear from the further fact that averages vary from year to year without changes being made in the tariff. When we are importing goods of various classes in varying quantities, some free and some dutiable; some at a high rate of duty and some at a low rate; some under ad valorem and some under specific duties, it is simply impossible to make any valid statement based upon these averages. The hon. member for Fort William practically admitted the truth of this statement when he pointed out that some people would want to exclude from this calculation the vast amount of free goods coming in from the United States. The hon. member was quite logical in excluding those goods, but he did not go far enough. He should also have taken into account the large amounts of goods which we, in our own interests, bring in from the United States under low tariffs.

Now let me point out that our imports from Great Britain include a large volume of alcoholic liquors, which volume increased from about $4,000,000 in 1918 to over $40,000,000 in 1929. The duty on the $40,000,000 worth of alcoholic liquor imported from Great Britain during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929, was almost $19,000,000, or at the rate of approximately 45 per cent. Surely everyone must recognize that because of that particular class of goods, with such a high percentage of duty, the average must be very materially affected. The fact of the matter is that if we exclude alcoholic liquors we will find that the average rate of duty on goods imported from Great Britain is less than the average rate on goods imported from the United States. I am not saying that this is particularly a matter for congratulation or otherwise, but that is the fact as nearly as I can arrive at it.

How would hon. members opposite correct that situation? Will any one of them say that we should correct it by reducing the duty on alcoholic liquors? I am certain the hon. member for Last Mountain will not say so. I know his attitude toward the liquor traffic and I know that his sentiments are very closely allied to my own. While we do not believe in high duties in general I know he does not want to correct what he thinks is an anomaly by lowering the duty on alcoholic liquors. Will any hon. gentleman opposite advocate that this should be done? Surely not.

Then there may be another way to correct it; we might increase the duties on goods coming from the United States. I know that method would appeal to hon. gentlemen immediately opposite, but would it appeal to the hon. member for Last Mountain? I think not. Of course he is aware that large quantities of agricultural implements enter Canada from the United States at very low rates of duty, and these rates are low because we deem it in our best interests that they should be low. Certainly the hon. member for Last Mountain would not wish to correct the situation to which he referred by raising the duty on agricultural implements or on any of those articles which come from the United States at low rates of duty.

I want to place on Hansard some figures bearing upon the subject which I have been discussing, so that hon. members who have endeavoured to follow the trend of my argument may read the figures for themselves and find out whether or not my argument is sound. I believe that the argument I have made to the house is valid in every respect. In 1908 we imported from Great Britain alcoholic liquors to the amount of $4,350,000; in 1915 the importations had grown to $15,770,805, and in 1929 the volume had increased to $40,314,856. The fact that there is a very high rate of duty imposed on this commodity must, of necessity, have considerable bearing upon the average rate of duty. No valid statement can be made based upon average duties.

I do not propose to detain the house much longer, but I must state that there are some features of the budget which do not appeal to me. As I have said again and again in this house and in the country, protection on agricultural products does not mean anything to the farmer. I have always objected to the imposition of such duties, not because the farmer has not a right to protection—there is no one who has more right—but because he will receive no benefits.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not give it to them?

Mr. BROWN: I do not object to the duties because they are high—they are not. The duties on dairy products are certainly not high when judged by the standard of protective tariffs. In the long run the farmer has nothing to gain from a system of protection, and while he has as much right to protection as anyone, it is unwise for him to link himself up with a system which will ultimately return nothing to him. This is shown by the experience of the farmers of the United States. That is the position which I have always taken and I have not changed my mind.

The government has to some extent yielded in its decision to give some protection on certain agricultural products. Time will show whether it has acted wisely or unwisely. For my part, I have not changed my opinion as to the expediency of those duties as considered from the farmer's standpoint. When I go before the electors, as possibly I may, I will say to them that my ideal of trade is that trade which is the freest possible exchange of goods among the nations of the world.

An hon. MEMBER: Including New Zealand butter.

Mr. BROWN: In the interests of Canada, in the interests of the British Empire, and in the interests of humanity, there should be the freest possible exchange of goods. That is an ideal which may not be realized for some time. Next to that, I would say that I believe in creating a sentiment among the people of the British Empire that it would be well for us to seek trade with each other. To my mind the British Empire is the greatest experiment in all history; it is an empire based not upon force—in the past empires which were based upon force have always fallen—and its strength will be in proportion to the elasticity of the bonds which bind us.

Mutual good will should be established between the different parts of the empire which would be beneficial to the empire as well as to mankind. I am heartily in accord with anything which will tend to promote those relations.

I will tell the farmers, as I have told them before, that I think a great mistake is being made when they seek relief through tariff protection. I will tell them that in so doing they are simply tying their hands or muzzling themselves. Perhaps Your Honour is familiar with that old English saying, that there are other ways of killing a dog than by choking it with butter.

An hon. MEMBER: That was a cat.

Mr. BROWN: It may seem absurd to talk about choking a dog with butter.

An hon. MEMBER: It was a cat.

Mr. BROWN: But figuratively, if not literally, the farmers can choke themselves with butter. They may so tie their hands—to change the figure—or muzzle themselves that they will not be in a position to protest against higher duties when they are imposed upon articles which are of prime necessity to them in carrying on their business.

Mr. BOYS: Does the hon. member propose to help them by his vote?

Mr. BROWN: Those are the sentiments which I will express to the people in my constituency, and it must rest with them to say whether I shall carry on in this house or out of the house.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Fansher, Last Mountain)—

That all the words after "it is of opinion that" in the amendment in the 6th line thereof, be struck out and the following substituted therefor:—

"the government having definitely adopted the principle of increased protection, modified only by certain extensions of the British preference, it is to be regretted that more effective consideration has not been given to the position of agriculture and labour, but that, on the contrary, the changes made in the iron and steel schedules will result in an increased cost in respect of all structural work and the machinery of production, and further, that the best interests of Canada would be served by a more substantial increase in the British preference, particularly as affecting textiles and other articles of a similar character, together with a modification or abandonment of the regulations requiring a 50 per cent empire content which have largely nullified the effect of any preference given;

"That a much larger proportion of our revenues should be provided for through direct taxation, more especially through the income tax;

"We further wish to state our conviction that these and other changes in our fiscal policies are not of themselves a solution of our modern economic problems but that effective encouragement should be given to the development of cooperative principles, having regard to production, distribution and the utilization and control of credit."

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Bennett)—

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:—

"while this house welcomes and approves of every measure that will afford to Canadian agriculture, industry and labour an equal opportunity and fair competition in the development of the rich and varied natural resources of the Dominion, and provide for the extension of inter-empire trade by mutually advantageous preferences and agreements, with due regard, in either case, to the interests of consumers, it is of opinion that the proposals which were submitted by the Minister of Finance on May 1, are in several important respects so completely at variance with the policies of this government, as heretofore declared by its official leaders in parliament and elsewhere, that this administration having lost the confidence of the country, cannot safely be entrusted with the direction of the fiscal policy of Canada nor the carrying into effect of proposals to which it has heretofore been opposed and which constitute a breach of its solemn pledges to the electorate, and which are deceptive, fail to estimate the financial results of their operations and which create distrust of and contempt for representative institutions."

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. T. E. SIMPSON (West Algoma): Mr Speaker, having supported the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), thereby declaring my lack of confidence in the present government, I desire to make a very brief statement with respect to the main motion.

For several years past we on this side of the house have endeavoured to impress upon the government the necessity of extending some protection to the primary steel industry of this country which would at least provide for the industry an equal opportunity in our home markets in competition with the mass production of the highly specialized steel industries of the United States.

We have asked that assistance be given towards the development of the large deposits of low grade iron ore that are known to exist in this country which would enable the primary steel industries to obtain their supplies of raw material in Canada, providing employment for Canadian labour, rather than depending upon a supply from outside Canada, as they do to-day. We have asked for a revision of the steel schedule in the customs tariff; that an adjustment of tariff be made which would afford more adequate protection for some grades and shapes of primary steel now manufactured in this country.

[Mr. Johnstone.]

But nothing has been done, and during this time the imports of iron and steel and their products from the United States have enormously increased; the primary steel industries in Canada have been able to operate only part time, and many of our workers have been forced either to go to the United States to seek employment or to be content with working about three days a week. This can best be illustrated by a quotation from the brief submitted before the tariff board by the Algoma Steel Corporation in 1928, which in part reads as follows:

> During the seven years (1921 to 1928) our steel-making capacity has been employed only to the extent of 39 per cent of rated capacity, and in only one year did we exceed 50 per cent, viz.: the fiscal year ended June last. The increase in that year was due entirely to the increased demand for standard rails and fastenings.
> The salaries and wages paid during this period (1921 to 1928) amounted to $22,501,555.65, or an average of $3,214,507.95 per annum. Assuming full employment for our steel-making capacity, the additional wages paid within our own plant would amount to upwards of $2,000,000 per annum.

This would indicate that had we been given a proper fiscal policy during the past nine years, in my city alone an additional amount of $2,000,000 a year in wages might have been distributed among the workmen there, providing them with more steady employment and comforts for their families which many have not been able to enjoy.

The government now bring down a budget which contains several provisions to which I do not subscribe, but it does provide a certain measure of relief for the steel industry. It contains some things that we have been asking for, but they are several years too late. I am inclined to believe that the provisions contained in this budget have been adopted by the government as a matter of political expediency, and not from conviction, and I have no confidence in this government giving effect to this budget in a way that would be to the best advantage of the people of Canada. However, as the budget provides for certain changes in the customs tariff which will be of advantage to the steel industry in Canada, and on account of a promise which I have made to my constituents that I would support any legislation which would be beneficial to the industry, I, unlike the government in this regard, intend to keep faith with my people, and as a matter of personal honour will support the budget.

Mr. L. W. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton North-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I represent a Cape Breton constituency. With that island

I have been connected for three generations. I was elected as a supporter of the Conservative party. I have just voted for the amendment of that party declaring that, while certain of the proposals submitted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) are acceptable, others represent a betrayal of the confidence of the Canadian people in the previously declared fiscal policy of the government. During my election I promised the men and women amongst whom I live and practise my profession that I would support any government that would give a bounty to coal used as coke in the production of iron and steel as recommended by the Duncan report. That recommendation reads as follows:

> It was pointed out to us that, at its inception, the Nova Scotia steel industry enjoyed national aid in the form of a bounty. This system of bounties prevailed for many years. We were asked to recommend that a bounty should be again made available. In this connection we have thought it right to give consideration to a point which was emphasized in the course of the evidence, viz.:—that a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty is given when imported coal is used for metallurgical purposes, and that this is tantamount to giving a bonus of that amount, since it means that the Dominion is yelding up money which otherwise under its general policy in regard to bituminous coal would accrue to it. While there are, no doubt, other angles from which this concession can be regarded, it does in its operation have the effect of a bonus, and it is difficult to see how the same bonus can be denied to native coal.
> Having regard to the bounty system previously applied, and to this aspect of the application of the drawback, we recommend that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

That recommendation was made three years ago last September. I protest against the long delay in giving effect to it. Such delay has caused untold injury to my constituents and their families. But favouring as I do the payment of a bonus as recommended by the Duncan report, as a matter of personal honour I propose to vote for the motion and thereby keep my promise.

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I was not in my seat when the divisions on the subamendment and the amendment were taken, as I did not expect when I left the house at a few minutes to six that any division would be taken until the house resumed at eight o'clock. I merely rise to express my opinion on the main motion and on the amendment and the subamendment. Had I voted I would have voted against the Conservative amendment and for the subamendment.

As regards the budget, I may say that I was first elected to this house on the principles of low tariff and free trade. I was painfully surprised during my first session to hear the member for, I think it was, Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lavigueur) state that he and his colleagues from Quebec were protectionist. At the time I made perhaps the rather crude remark that at last I knew why Sir Wilfrid Laurier was defeated in 1911; the protectionists in his ranks foreswore their low tariff principles and thus crucified Sir Wilfrid on a cross of protection. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) took exception to that remark of mine and said that it was not reciprocity but another issue which had turned some of the French-Canadians against their chieftain. May I say in regard to Sir Wilfrid Laurier that in 1905 I received a letter from him with respect to free trade, and in my opinion at no time in his long and distinguished career did he show to better advantage than in his defeat in 1911, for on that occasion he went down to defeat because he preferred to stick to his principles rather than continue in power by deserting those principles. In fact the leaven of protection seems to have been permeating the Liberal party ever since 1911. Pope has well said that:

> Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
> As, to be hated, needs but to be seen;
> Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

My hon. friends opposite at one time hated the name of protection, they despised it as something which should not be espoused by their party, but after seeing it for a while they began to endure, then pity, and now we find them embracing it—much to the amusement of my friends to my right.

I am rather sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot support the budget. There are many things in it that I like; but it contains a good many things that I do not like from the standpoint of low tariff or free trade. It looks to me that what Canada needs at the present time is leadership; the leadership of men who have some principles at heart, who believe in those principles, and who carry them out in spite of whatever may happen. Goldsmith, in describing the character of the village preacher, a man whom he admired very much, said that:

> He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
> Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.

I am afraid that at the present time the policies of this government, far from leading the way, have degenerated into an attitude of putting its ear to the ground to see what can best be done to win the next election. I would have been more pleased to see my Liberal friends on the opposite side stick to the principles which they once professed and which Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Richard Cartwright, Alexander Mackenzie and others in this land of ours laid down as Liberal principles—principles which do not change with the changing times. The square on the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle is equal to the sum of the squares described on the other two sides. No amount of sophistry can ever alter that truth. If the principles upon which the platform of the Liberal party is based are sound, they do not change with the changing times. They do not look for leaders who will fashion their doctrines to the varying hour.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will my hon. friend permit a question? He referred to the vote on the reciprocity question in the province of Quebec. May I tell him that the vote in Quebec showed a large majority in favour of reciprocity when his own county voted against it.

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, if hon. gentlemen opposite are expecting from me a declaration to the effect that I am going to support the budget, I may say that some of them, and those in particular who come from the west, should remember the copybook maxim that honesty is the best policy.

The budget has been debated at great length in respect to the main principles which it involves. There are however a few observations that I would like to make. It has been rightly stated that it will not be found palatable to the Canadian people, and I can think of no better illustration of the truth of this statement than to remind hon. members of the difficulty which that master swallower, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) had in swallowing the budget this afternoon. That hon. gentleman is a past master in the art of swallowing everything—even himself. When that hon. gentleman has had such difficulty I wonder how the Canadian people in the main will stomach it at all.

The budget contains many features which lead me to wonder how the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Crerar), who has obtained the portfolio of Minister of Railways in the present cabinet, will justify the vote he will cast in a few minutes in favour of this budget. I cannot understand his position, especially in view of the observations he made in the city of Winnipeg after he became Minister of Railways.

An hon. MEMBER: It was before.

Mr. ERNST: No, since he became Minister of Railways. I have in my hand a copy of the Winnipeg Tribune dated January 22, 1930, and the hon. minister—

An hon. MEMBER: Is that the Tribune you have in your hand?

Mr. ERNST: Yes, it is a section of it. The hon. minister in addressing the Liberal club of the city of Winnipeg expressed himself in these terms:

> Condemning protective tariffs, Mr. Crerar said protection was a fiscal policy which could work out in no other way than by conferring benefits on certain sections of the community at the expense of the others. The principle of protection was not suited to a new country.

Here is a portion which corresponds very ill with the speech at Woodstock of the Minister of Justice on national unity:

> We can't build up eastern cities at the expense of western cities without developing jealousies, suspicions and strife.

In view of some of the provisions in this budget the house has been waiting for many days to hear a declaration from the Minister of Railways as to how he can justify his vote for protection. I cannot help but feel that that hon. gentleman and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) must have got their heads together and decided that there must be some way out.

At this time I wish to deal with two or three features of the budget which affect my own province. As a very last item in the budget there is tacked on a paragraph dealing with a bounty on coal used in the production of coke for the manufacture of steel. When the Minister of Finance moves that this house go into committee of ways and means, the traditional usage, as I understand it and as I have no doubt the house understands it, is that that committee should provide ways and means for raising supply for His Majesty. Expenditure has no proper place in the budget, it is put in for one purpose only. I was going to say that it is put in for trickery, but it may be that the word "trickery" is unparliamentary; I shall temper my remarks by saying that the bounty resolution is put in for the purpose of diverting the attention of the people of Nova Scotia and causing them to think that their representatives in this house have voted against something for which that province has asked, whereas in reality they have merely voted against a budget which as a whole they cannot possibly swallow.

My hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) made some allusions this afternoon to the fact that there was no protection for labour. May I make some further reference to the coal and steel industries. The Duncan report recommended that the tariff board be asked to make an investigation into the duty on coal. Has that been done? My hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) pledged himself when he won the by-election in that constituency that he would resign his seat if the Duncan report were not implemented in full at the end of the first session after his election.

Mr. DUFF: That is an absolute falsehood.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Speaker, the hon gentleman has a reputation for somersaulting, but the statement, or what purported to be his statement certainly appeared in the Halifax Herald. I have to accept the hon. member's word, but I will leave to his constituents the question whether in the final analysis it is true.

Mr. DUFF: I say it is an absolute falsehood.

An hon. MEMBER: Take it back; withdraw your statement.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the hon. gentleman withdraw the statement he has made.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, of course not.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has accepted the denial made by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough.

Mr. DUFF: No, he has not; I will not agree to that. He has not withdrawn it.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Speaker, I said that I accepted the word of the hon. gentleman. I repeat, however, that the Halifax Herald carried the statement in its pages three years ago, and I would add that I might have been pardoned for quoting it because for three years the statement has not been denied. I have no doubt whatever that the hon. gentleman will go home as the champion of maritime rights, although I have a recollection of seeing the statement made in Montreal that it is only Tory propaganda. I have no doubt that the Minister of National Defence will do likewise. This afternoon my hon. friend from South Cape Breton gave a resume of the fight we have had since 1923 when that grand old veteran the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) was elected to parliament. That is when the fight started. That was the fight which broke the solid sixteen, and never at any time until the Duncan commission made its report did any hon. gentleman opposite make a speech for what were known as maritime rights. I hold in my hand extracts from the speeches they made during the campaigns of 1925 and 1926. Take, for instance, the running mate of the Minister of National Defence, who was defeated in Halifax in the election of 1926. I refer to Mr. John Murphy, now a member of the harbour commission, who, speaking before the royal commission and giving evidence, gave this as his conception of maritime rights.

> Freedom to negotiate our own trade treaties and to buy and sell in whatever markets we can to the best advantage is the only permanent solution of Nova Scotia's problems.

Mr. A. S. MacMillan, a rather noted gentleman in the province of Nova Scotia—

Mr. DUFF: You ran away from the investigation last year.

Mr. ERNST: I have only this to say in that connection, Mr. Speaker: Probably it was lucky for Mr. MacMillan that the evidence was never summed up in this house. Dealing with maritime rights, Mr. MacMillan touched on local conditions and the government's presentation of the case before the royal commission. I am quoting from the Halifax Chronicle of August 26, 1926, in which appears a report of Mr. MacMillan's remarks at Truro. Dealing with maritime rights he said:

> "It is not maritime rights, but maritime wrongs from which we suffer," said the speaker. "First, confederation; second, national policy and third, the rejection of the reciprocity treaty of 1911."

Those were the hon. gentleman's conceptions of maritime rights. Then there was Mr. Ernest Robinson, former member for King's county, who spoke at Kentville on September 14, 1925, and whose remarks are reported in the Morning Chronicle. Speaking of the proposed reduction in freight rates which had been advocated by hon. members on this side of the house, which would enable our products to reach central Canada, he said:

> "What have we now in the maritime provinces which we would be likely to send to central Canada? Nothing except coal and fish. It would be all right to put a lower rate on them, but as for butter, eggs, potatoes and apples, they have more than we." Mr. Robinson said he did not believe in taxing one part of Canada in order to pay another.

Then there was Mr. H. J. Logan, at that time the member for Cumberland and now a senator, who spoke in Kentville and whose remarks are reported in the Morning Chronicle of September 14, 1925. Speaking of maritime rights and Mr. Meighen's promise he said:

What will he give us? Chapter freight rates? Well, he has intimated that, but has not said so yet. The provinces do not want doles, but simply justice.

Now we have Mr. Robert E. Finn, of recent fame in the by-election in Halifax city, formerly a member of this house, who is reported as follows in the Chronicle of August 9, 1925:

Maritime rights would never have been heard of had not Sir Charles Tupper and his associates in the Conservative party of 1867 been successful in dragging Nova Scotia into confederation. Tupper had sold this province for eighty cents a head and lived to boast of his accomplishment. The work of the Liberal party has been to undo that great wrong.

Those, Mr. Speaker, were the views of these gentlemen during the elections of 1925 and 1926, but now I have no doubt they will climb on the band wagon along with the minister of National Defence and sing "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here." But, sir, the people of Nova Scotia will not forget who fought their fight; they will not forget that every major recommendation in that report which relates to the province of Nova Scotia was based on the case prepared by the Rhodes government. Did any hon. gentleman opposite contribute anything to that inquiry? Did any hon. gentleman opposite give evidence before that commission, and if he did what finding was based upon that evidence? Did the Minister of National Defence contribute anything to that inquiry, or the hon. member for Hants-Kings, or the hon. member for Lunenburg, as he was then?

Mr. DUFF: I paid for what you did.

Mr. ERNST: I did not have anything whatever to do with it; I was in the same position as the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, the people of that province never can be deluded by trick budgets into forgetting who fought for them at that time.

Now, sir, there are two other matters in the budget which relate particularly to my own province and to which I wish to refer. Provision is made for countervailing duties on sixteen articles, practically all farm products. I want to ask the Minister of National Defence where he was in the cabinet council when these countervailing duties were being prepared, that he forgot to include fish. He represents one of the great fishing constituencies of this country. I do not believe in countervailing duties, but if the farmers of Canada are worthy of protection surely the fishermen are equally worthy of it. Where was the Minister of National Defence; what explanation can he give?

[Mr. Ernst.]

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that while the gentleman has the floor order should be maintained so that he may devote all his time to his remarks.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax)): On behalf of the hon. gentleman who has the floor I ask that he be heard with some respect and that order be maintained while he is speaking.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask for order on all sides of the house.

Mr. ERNST: I may just say that the senior member for Halifax should not be worried by the disrespect of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough; it does not worry me at all.

Mr. DUFF: You might worry about it before the election is over.

Mr. ERNST: I am ready to submit myself to the judgment of my electors at any time.

Mr. DUFF: What about those twelve telegrams you sent out yesterday?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, please.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Speaker, I was about to give the figures of the importations of fish into this country from the United States. Last year we imported fish to the value of $1,122,698.

An hon. MEMBER: What kind of fish?

Mr. ERNST: Various kinds, but fish which can be produced in this country. The duty on fish entering the United States varies according to the kind and the degree of preparation. Ordinarily, for fresh or frozen halibut, mackerel, salmon and swordfish, the duty is two cents per pound. For all other fish, with the exception of three minor varieties which are not imported, the duty is one cent per pound. The duty on dried fish is 1¼ cents per pound; on smoked herring 2½ cents per pound; on smoked fillets 25 cents ad valorem, and on all others 2½ cents per pound. The duty on fish coming into this country from the United States is exactly one cent per pound. Now, sir, I ask again where was the Minister of National Defence, who represents a fishing constituency, when these countervailing duties were prepared, that he did not protect the interests of his own fishermen?

The budget also contains an allusion to a treaty which is to be negotiated with Newfoundland. Our trade figures with Newfoundland are rather staggering; from that country we import goods to the value of only a little over $2,000,000 a year, while our exports to Newfoundland amount to over $11,000,000 a year. The chief articles which that country has to export to us are fish, the products of the forest, and ores. Our exports are practically all manufactured goods. Last year fish made up one-third of the total importations into this country from Newfoundland. If a treaty is to be negotiated, the fishermen of Nova Scotia will look with concern upon any negotiations carried on by a government which acted as it did regarding the importation of butter from New Zealand. Are we not just as likely to have our fishing interests sacrificed? That is a matter which the Minister of National Defence will have to explain to his constituents, especially in view of his telegram of last year in which he said he was willing to sacrifice a million dollars' worth of the salt fish business in order to please his friends in the city of Halifax.

Mr. DUFF: Is the hon. member in favour of the placing of a duty on fish coming into Canada from Newfoundland?

Mr. ERNST: I will deal with that question as soon as it arises in this house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ERNST: I have said already that I will deal with that question when it arises.

An hon. MEMBER: Answer it now.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DUFF: Is the hon. member in favour of the placing of a duty on fish coming into Canada from Newfoundland?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. SPEAKER: We must have order.

Mr. ERNST: These are some of the reasons why I, in justice to my constituents—

Mr. DUFF: I would like an answer to my question.

An hon. MEMBER: Nova Scotia will give you an answer when you go back.

Mr. SPEAKER: The debate should be conducted with all fairness to the hon. member who is speaking.

Mr. ERNST: I have given a few reasons why I cannot, as a Nova Scotian, support this budget; I would not be true to my own province if I did so.

Mr. DUFF: What about free trade in engines? What does the hon. member say to that?

Mr. ERNST: If the hon. gentleman cannot raise his mind above matters of local concern, I shall be glad to debate them with him in my own constituency.

Mr. DUFF: I will have that honour, too.

Mr. ERNST: I have said already that it is a difficult thing for anyone to swallow this budget and not get political indigestion. It is not a Canadian budget, as has been said repeatedly; it is an election budget. In looking back over the last few years, it is no wonder that this government has found it necessary to bring in an election budget. Look at the heritage we possess in this country. We have everything; we have water powers, minerals, forests, farm lands, fisheries, and we have a fine people. In spite of all these blessings of Providence we have the sorry spectacle of hundreds of thousands of our own people leaving the country and the trickle of immigration having ceased. Thousands of unemployed walk our streets, and I do not see how this government, with an election budget or any other kind of budget, can hope to win back the confidence of the people of Canada. There is only one way in which this country can be put back on its feet, and that is a policy of Canada for the Canadians.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, it is the first time that I have ever heard a corpse scream. The Tory party has proved to-night that it has breathed its last breath. If the position of Deputy Minister of Finance is still vacant, I would recommend the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) for that position, because he is such an expert in figures. I was very much surprised to hear this government not being given credit for the Duncan report.

Mr. QUINN: Oh, no, we shook it out of you.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. members for West Algoma (Mr. Simpson) and Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. Johnstone) have proven to the house that they are possessed of greater wisdom in their little fingers than that shown by my hon. friend in all his utterances. For several sessions we have been hearing about maritime rights, but who brought forth the Duncan report?

An hon. MEMBER: The Tories.

Mr. POULIOT: I never thought that the Tory party included a member so ignorant as that. I knew there were prejudiced people in the Tory ranks, but I never thought that there was so much ignorance. This government has played fair with every part of this country. The people in the maritime provinces were suffering, they had troubles, and this government said to them: "What are your troubles? Tell them to us and we will give you fair play and justice." That is what this government has done. To-day anyone can go to the maritime provinces and see that the people are prosperous, thanks to this government, thanks to the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) and to the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), both native sons of those provinces. This condition has been brought about despite the screaming which comes from the other side. The people of Nova Scotia, and even the Tories who sit in the provincial house, are very glad to have received increased subsidies from this government. Otherwise there would have been a deficit in the provincial revenue.

This government has acted fairly towards the maritime provinces as it has towards the other provinces. This government has returned to the western provinces their natural resources, something which the right hon. Arthur Meighen said no one was able to do. Although some members speak critically of it, I have nothing but admiration for the government for accomplishing that fact. We have the old age pensions. The government tries to help the poor people; and I also congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) upon his declaration of yesterday with regard to minimum wages for people employed in the Dominion government service.

Mr. QUINN: Has Taschereau an old age pension?

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend repeats an old joke, and it is like meat that has been cooked several times—it has lost its flavour.

Mr. QUINN: There is no joke like the hon. member.

Mr. POULIOT: Never before, at the end of a parliament, have we heard of so many members who intend to retire. One of them, a member whom I respect and esteem, is the former whip of the Conservative party. Everyone in the house likes him. He is leaving to resume his private practice. Several others are in the same position. To-day we have seen members of the Conservative party who are honest, who are disgusted with their own party and who approve the policies of the government, not because they are Conservatives but because they are sound headed. In spite of the money that is spent for Tory advertising and propaganda throughout the country, in spite of the lies that are spread with regard to the recorded policies of the Conservatives —notwithstanding all that propaganda I say that there is still as much harmony in the Tory ranks as there was when the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) called his predecessor in office, then a full minister, a musical instrument.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Taschereau?

Mr. POULIOT: There is no marrow within that joke; it is only the bone. It is a worn-out joke. At Keith's theatre you would not get five cents for it. I wonder whether the first name of the hon. member who made that interjection is Amos or Andy.

There is a great difference between federal and provincial politics. I have no time to-night to repeat what I have already said in the house; the people know it, and those who do not wish to listen and who have eyes to see, can read it in Hansard. We shall face an election within a short time. My hon. friends opposite do not show much pleasure about it because they know very well that in every part of the country the people of Canada are satisfied with the policy of the government. It is a Canadian policy for Canadians, the making of which is a feat that has never been accomplished by the Tory party, which has been the party of class and privilege. There is a great difference between Liberalsm and Toryism. The slogan of Liberalism is "Live and let live." The slogan of Toryism is "We, Us and Company," and another one is: "Believe or die."

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Hurry up and die.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, die; because people who have changed their colours, dye. The house is well posted on the whole matter; everyone knows about the budget; we are ready to vote, but before the vote is taken I wish to say to my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax and the big one over there—

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not parliamentary for the hon. member to refer to another hon. member in that manner.

Mr. POULIOT: The young member who comes from a county where there is a wild goose pond; we will meet them on the hustings with the record and the policy of the government and a few drops of Fly-tox and Flit, and then we shall never see them again in the house.

The house divided on the main motion (Mr. Dunning)—

That Mr Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, by repealing subsections (c), (d), (e), (i), (l) of section two thereof and by substituting the following therefor:—

(c) "hoop, band and strip" when applied to metals mean flat forms not more than fourteen inches in width and less than .1875 inch in thickness;

(d) "in diameter" when applied to pipes and tubes means the actual inside diameter;

(i) "plate" when applied to metals means a rectangle, circle or sketch as cut in a plate mill, more than fourteen inches in width and .1875 inch or more in thickness, with variations from such thickness not exceeding .015 inch;

(l) "sheet" when applied to metals means a rectangle more than fourteen inches in width and less than a plate in thickness;

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. DUNNING: This resolution merely deals with definitions in the iron and steel industry which are brought into line with modern practice. The method of measurement is also changed in order to conform with modern practice, the measurements now being expressed in decimals instead of in the old form of sixteenths.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am sorry I cannot agree with the minister. I do not know why he has departed from the old custom of defining measurement by reference to B.W.G.—Birmingham wire gauge. The term B.W.G. has been understood in the trade for a hundred years and more. Everybody on both continents knows exactly what it means. How are the buyers, dealers or users of hoops and sheets to determine the decimal fractions that this resolution provides for in regard to thickness? There are no gauges in general use to-day, so far as I know, that will do it. Going further back than my lifetime, at all events, the measure of thickness of sheets and hoops of iron and steel has been the wire gauge, and such has been recognized universally.

Mr. DUNNING: As I think I stated in the budget address, the wordings in connection with the iron and steel schedule to which these definitions refer were widely published among those, who like my hon. friend, have knowledge of the business and of its technique. They were asked to criticize and suggest wordings and definitions, and at the public hearings of the tariff board the matter of definition of measurement to which my hon. friend has just referred was fully discussed. I am advised, and in fact the records of the hearings of the board, will, I am sure, bear it out, that all of those engaged in this business desired the decimal method of measurement to be used as being the most up to date and the most generally in use to-day and the most generally in use also in other countries. The request was unanimous that the decimal method should be adopted. I questioned the change myself when the matter was brought to my attention and assured myself on that point. My hon. friend is in disagreement in this respect not only with the majority but practically with all those engaged in the industry itself.

Mr. CANTLEY: I should like to know, Mr. Chairman, who the authorities are who make recommendations of that kind. They are authorities unknown in this country so far as I am aware. Now, I will make a suggestion to the minister. Why not adopt the alternative method and say: B.W.G. or certain decimals. B.W.G. is known throughout the whole world and has been practised by practically all nations for at least three generations. It is understood everywhere. Birmingham wire gauges are in the hands of every wholesale hardware house in this country, and of every metal manufacturing wholesale and retail metal dealing concern in the old country or on the continent with whom we have been dealing, and both they and we know exactly what that means. So far as I am aware there are no gauges generally available in the country to-day by which to determine the decimal thicknesses that are called for by this resolution. Now, if the minister insists on retaining his decimal determinations, I ask him to put in also the equivalent B.W.G. If he does not, I can tell him that chaos will follow; there is no doubt about that. I am confident that if he does not do this he will run into a whole lot of trouble and will be maligned and sworn at by people throughout this country from one end to the other.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course I am guided in this matter as my hon. friend can understand, by the expressions of opinion of those engaged in the industry. I have again made inquiry as to the unanimity of those representations, and I am again confirmed in the statement I made a little while ago.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the Pittsburgh schedule?

Mr. DUNNING: Oh no, it is the decimal system simply. It overcomes the difficulty of the American system on the one hand and the B.W.G. on the other by stating in definite decimal terms of measurement in thousandths of an inch what is actually involved. It does not adopt any of the arbitrary standards known by particlular names, but does give the actual decimal thickness involved. The difficulty my hon. friend has in his mind can, I am sure, be overcome by the customs department publishing a comparative chart of all the equivalents in the different styles of measurement which are in use in other countries; not only the B.W.G., which is the English standard, but also the American gauge. I may tell him that the fact that he has raised the point will ensure this being done without amending the law.

Mr. CANTLEY: There is another gauge almost as well recognized, Stubb's gauge, used particularly in regard to wire. Both those gauges are universally recognized and universally used, particularly the B.W.G., throughout all British countries. This is a British country, may I remind the minister, not an American dependency, and I think it would be fitting for this government at least to recognize and use the old accepted standards that we were brought up with and have dealt in for generations. I see no good reason, no practical advantage, to be gained by departing from it; but if he must do so, I again suggest he put in brackets after the decimal measurement its equivalent, or its nearest equivalent, in the B.W.G.

Resolution agreed to.

2. Resolved, that the Customs Tariff, being chapter forty-four of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, be amended by repealing subsection two of section six thereof and by substituting the following therefor:—

(2) Excise duties or excise taxes shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purposes of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff, intermediate tariff or any more favourable tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister might in this regard give the committee a clear explanation of what countries' importations will be affected, what rates of duty are charged by those countries, and what the effect will be upon the revenues of this country. It will be observed that the excise duties are to be disregarded in estimating the market value. Market value determines the basis on which the tariff duties are computed. This, I understand, will affect importations from Japan, as Japan enjoys our intermediate tariff. I am given that information as it has been communicated to me.

Mr. DUNNING: The situation has been developing in recent years due to the increased use in many countries of the excise form of taxation, which produces this result in practice: the goods are sold to the home consumers in the country of origin at a higher figure than they are sold for export, for the reason that the excise duty is not chargeable when the goods are exported. That fact automatically brings the goods in question under the dumping section of the Canadian law, and it has the result, so I am advised, of greatly hampering legitimate import business. My hon. friend asks me about the countries. In reply I can tell him offhand that in Japan it applies with reference to silk. In Germany, Czechoslovakia—I am not sure of France—

Mr. BENNETT: France is covered by the treaty.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. My hon. friend however will notice that for the purposes of special duty the amendment seeks to disregard excise in respect of goods entitled to entry under the British preferential or intermediate tariffs, or under any more favourable tariff. The present situation is that excise is exempt only when the goods come from Great Britain, and the amendment seeks to extend that to intermediate countries.

Another point in connection with the matter has recently been drawn to my attention by the chairman of the Ontario liquor commission, Sir Henry Drayton. As the result of his communication I desire to make an addition to the resolution to meet the point raised which, to my mind, is one of some moment. For centuries it has been the custom for Portuguese wines to be imported in wood, by the barrel, into England, and there bottled in bond for export. A year or so ago, through some complaints, it became apparent to the Department of National Revenue that the practice of bottling in bond in England, involving as it did selling by Great Britain to Canada at prices lower than the wines were selling at in England, brought the Portuguese wines bottled in England under the Canadian dumping law. The chairman of the Ontario liquor commission recently asked me to give consideration to the matter, as in his opinion it was quite unfair to impose a dumping duty in connection with a transaction of that kind. I think there is merit in the contention. In his letter to me Sir Henry Drayton states:

> The wines are sent to Great Britain for bottling purposes only, so that the more expert work of the British labourer can be taken advantage of. To give a case in point: A case of port, sold to us at 40 shillings, in bond, f.o.b. London, nevertheless has to be valued for the purpose of your customs department at 56 shillings, the 16 shillings representing the customs duties of Great Britain on that port, assuming it to have been taken out of bond and released for domestic consumption in Great Britain.

I may say that similar representations in reference to the matter were made by the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom, Sir William Clark. The point is that we charge duty on customs duties levied by Great Britain, although the customs duties are not levied on the particular wine which is exported from Portugal, bottled in bond in London and bought by the various liquor commissions in Canada. I therefore propose to add this section to resolution No. 2:

> 2a. Customs duties of the United Kingdom shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purposes of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the intermediate tariff or any more favourable tariff and are bottled in bond in the United Kingdom and imported direct therefrom.

I think this measure will commend itself to hon. members of the committee as being a very fair one.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In respect to port, I do not find any particular objection to the proposal of the minister. However, I wish to call the minister's attention to another matter bearing upon this resolution. In the matter of silk from Japan the same excuse does not hold. As to goods made in Japan, we have always based our duties upon the fair market value of any article imported, and we have defined the fair market value as the price of the article in the country of production plus the tax that the local government has placed upon it. For years we have adopted that policy, and I understand that the minister now intends to make a change, so that the value for duty of goods imported will not now represent the fair market value of the articles in question.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution as amended carry?

Mr. BENNETT: No. We are to have a statement from the minister as to what value of goods would be affected by it.

Mr. DUNNING: It is quite impossible to state that.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, it is quite impossible.

Mr. BENNETT: My meaning is this: We will let the price be $2, and let the excise be $1; in that case the duty is computed on $3. You are wiping out $1 and computing the duty on $2 only. What would the effect of this resolution be upon importations? I agree with what my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has said in connection with silk from Japan. I have been advised that it will have a most serious effect upon an industry which is equipped as well as any silk industry of the United States and is in a position to produce material as cheaply. The industry is subjected to very keen competition in our market not only from the United States but from Japan. In any store you will observe enormous quantities of goods that have come in under the old tariff rate. The effect of this proposal is to lessen the sum upon which duty is computed, and consequently to lessen the revenue. Has any estimate been made as to the increased volume of goods which by reason of this provision will be imported and thus affect the Canadian silk industry?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister has just told us that he could not furnish us with the information. I will undertake to furnish him with the information as to how it affects the silk industry in my district.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend did not allow me to reply, and he should not accuse me of not being willing to give the information.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I thought you said a minute ago that you could not give the information.

Mr. DUNNING: Nobody could give exact information, but I can tell my hon. friend that on April 15, 1919, the then Commissioner of Customs issued a regulation that the special or dumping duty was not to apply in respect to foreign excise taxes or excise duties. That regulation, in the opinion of the law officers, was in effect without really having the force of law, I may advise my hon friend, until June of 1928 when it was cancelled with respect to goods purchased after that date and imported after August 1, 1928. Such experience as has been gained naturally has come since August 1, 1928 with respect to this matter, and my endeavours to get exact information as to the application of the change have been without avail.

Mr. BENNETT: What I said applies equally to rayon silk as to natural silk.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not aware of the effect of excise duties in foreign countries on artificial silk.

Mr. BENNETT: Rayon is subject to an excise duty in Japan.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but I am advised that the export of rayon from Japan to Canada is negligible. The other factor is important. I am advised by the silk manufacturers that approximately $3,000,000 worth of silk is affected annually.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the minister state that the manufacturers of silk in Canada have been advised with respect to this change and have been given an opportunity to present their objections to him?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: And no objections have been received?

Mr. DUNNING: I would not say that.

Mr. CAHAN: My attention has been directed to this matter by several of the concerns more deeply interested, and they look upon this change with the greatest possible apprehension as to its effects upon their industry. This item should not pass until we have full particulars as to its effect upon Canadian industry and especially upon those Quebec industries which have been recently established.

Mr. BENNETT: Before the minister speaks in reply I might say that I visited one of these factories. I saw the silk imported from Japan; I saw the price paid for it; I learned the amount that had been paid for wages in its production and I saw also quantities of silk being brought from abroad to be dyed in that factory. I saw the amount which they had learned, from actual inquiry, had been paid the workmen, and I say that if we are to remove that excise tax, under the present rates of customs duty, unless conditions have changed certainly you will make it impossible to develop that industry in Canada. That cannot be gainsaid. I could satisfy the minister on that point in a moment. All I was seeking to ascertain was whether or not there were such safeguards as would ensure against such a result. I am giving it to the minister just as I saw it myself. I saw the skeins of natural silk, and certainly the minister knows that artificial silk made from wood pulp, as well as celanese silk, which is made by the utilization of cotton waste through a chemical process, involve an entirely different condition from that which we have hitherto dealt in connection with the industry. I had hoped that we could be able to have the minister say with certainly that he had satisfied himself as to what would be the effect of the introduction of these commodities, produced certainly under conditions so vastly different from those prevailing in Canada in point of wages and hours of labour that we cannot possibly compete on even terms.

Mr. DUNNING: I may say to my hon. friend that I listened to representations made to me personally by the silk people. Of course it is known to those who are interested in this question that the tariff at the present time on ordinary silk is 22½ per cent under the intermediate tariff and 30 per cent on rayon. There is that much tariff in any case. Frankly, I was impressed with the idea that the factories concerned in Canada did carry on for a very long period until, in fact, the month of August, 1928, without having the dumping duty imposed because of the excise. I could not see, and no attempt was made to convince me, that conditions have so changed since August 1, 1928, as to make the difference which my hon. friend fears. I looked at it as closely as I could, and I felt that no injury was being done by establishing this general principle that under the intermediate and any more favourable tariffs, because people tax themselves in their own country, we should not add that tax to the value and also impose the dump on top of that when Canadians desire to import these goods. Frankly the consideration mainly present in my own mind was the fact that our Canadian factories had demonstrated over a considerable period of years their ability to deal with the situation without the excise duty having been taken into consideration in the imposition of a dumping duty.

Mr. CAHAN: But the stress and strain of the last two years have been exceptional, and the competition has been very much keener than ever before. I should like to ask the minister who suggested this change with regard to silks. Has the Japanese government made representations with respect to it? Is the minister making a concession to Japan on that account, without regard to the interests of the Canadian manufacturers? I regard this as a hostile move against a very important Canadian industry, and we should have the strongest possible reasons for making the change in view of the disaster to Canadian industry which is impending if this change is made.

Mr. DUNNING: This point did not arise specifically in respect to silks; it arose following the rescinding of the regulation to which I referred a few moments ago. Since August 1, 1928, importers of all lines of goods affected have been making continuous complaints, in some cases as to the impossibility of importing goods under the conditions set up by the rescinding of the former regulation which had been in force for some ten years. A general investigation of the whole subject was undertaken, by which we became convinced that this is an unfair imposition by way of taxation on the people of Canada and further that its removal will not jeopardize Canadian industry. The silk factories to which my hon. friend refers, as I think I stated a few moments ago, have a 22½ per cent duty in any case, under the intermediate tariff, and 35 per cent under the general tariff, while artificial silk pays a duty of 30 per cent under the intermediate tariff and 35 per cent under the general tariff. To impose on top of that a further 10 per cent excise levied in the country of origin and then to apply the dumping provision of our act certainly has made it very difficult to do business and has imposed a very serious tax upon the Canadian consumer.

Mr. CAHAN: All I can say to the Minister of Finance is that if he will take into consideration the difference between wages paid in Japan and those paid in the province of Quebec he will find that his 22½ per cent or 30 per cent will not offset the difference.

Mr. McGIBBON: Could the minister tell us if this matter has been considered by the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I am advised by the tariff board with reference to the matter.

Mr. McGIBBON: Was this their recommendation?

Mr. DUNNING: Recommendation is scarcely the correct word. I have used as advisers the tariff board and all its works. It is a matter of consultation rather than of recommendation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister tell us if this excise provision will affect the sales tax imposed by France, for instance?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, the sales tax is an excise tax.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are going to reduce it in the same way with Japan, as far as any of their exports to Canada are concerned?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The minister states that the importations of the articles he has mentioned have not been very large, but with this change in the tariff are we not going to have an increase in the importation of these artificial silks?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think so.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Why not?

Mr. DUNNING: If I read the items, my hon. friend would get my point. The first item reads as follows:

Woven fabrics wholly or in chief part by weight of silk in the gum, not degummed or bleached, not less than twenty inches in width, imported for the purpose of being degummed, dyed and finished in Canada.

I am advised by the silk people that that is the chief item of import. The next item is:

Woven fabrics, composed in part of silk, n.o.p., knitted fabrics wholly or in part of silk, not to contain wool.

The latter item carries a higher rate of duty than the former, and I do not think we need anticipate any great change in the importations.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What is the object then of making a change?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is speaking of silk?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Artificial silk, which is really of more importance than silk. The minister claims that we have not imported very much of this article, but it may be that with this change larger quantities will be brought into the country.

Mr. DUNNING: The duty on artificial silk under the intermediate tariff is 30 per cent.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: But what is the difference between the cost of production, the difference between wages paid in Japan and here in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot answer that.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That is something which should be considered.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am informed by the manufacturers in my district that during the past two years the minister could have obtained an accurate idea of the difference in imports of these lines of goods. The manufacturers state quite definitely and positively that during the time this excise provision has been in operation the importation of flat goods has decreased quite considerably, which decrease has been to their advantage.

Mr. DUNNING: I have the figures here.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Let us have the figures.

Mr. DUNNING: The figures given are for the fiscal years, and in that connection it must be recalled that the regulation was changed on August 1, 1928, about half way through the fiscal year. In the fiscal year 1928 the importations were valued at $3,088,000, and in 1929 they were valued at $2,910,000. In 1928 the new regulation would be operative only from August 1 until the succeeding March 31, but it would be operative for the whole of the fiscal year 1929. My hon. friends will notice that the decrease is very small as between the two fiscal years.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I did not expect that these items would be under consideration tonight, and if given the opportunity I believe I can furnish the minister with more accurate information than he seems to have. I have seen the figures of the importations for a period after August 15, given by months, and they disclose a decrease of something like 200,000 yards per month. The minister should not be in a desperate hurry with regard to this particular item, and I would ask that it be allowed to stand over until I can secure the information which is in my office. I take strong exception to the decreased duties on importations from France. We have a treaty with that country which gave us a minimum tariff, and that has been changed three or four times on almost every article we export to that country. At this late date we are making further concessions and I do not think they are deserving of them.

Mr. LADNER: Is there any trade arrangement or treaty with Mexico which would bring items imported from that country under the intermediate tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. LADNER: I would like to know if gasoline would be affected under this item of excise tax. At the present time the tax is added to the price, and the question arises whether or not it will become dutiable.

Mr. DUNNING: To my knowledge gasoline does not come to Canada from any country which would be affected by this amendment.

Mr. LADNER: Except possibly Mexico.

Mr. DUNNING: We have no treaty with Mexico.

Mr. LADNER: I thought there was some kind of trade arrangement.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think this matter could be allowed to stand over. I am interested in the enterprise, in that it has been established in my city and it is a branch of one of the best English concerns. I have been told that the wages paid at St. Catharines are twice as much as those paid in the old country, and four times as much as those paid in Japan.

Mr. CAHAN: I have been informed that the duty will not cover the difference in the wage scales of the two countries.

Mr. DUNNING: It must be borne in mind that the companies affected bring in some of the items for further manufacture, such as silk from Japan. I have further figures which illustrate the effect of the change which was made on August 1, 1928. The total imports of silk of all kinds during the fiscal year 1928 amounted to $8,250,471. During 1929, when the present arrangement was in effect for the whole fiscal year—

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: You mean the proposed arrangement?

Mr. DUNNING: The arrangement which is now being rescinded—in 1929 the imports amounted to $8,145,000. The reduction as between the two years amounted to only $105,000 in a total trade of over $8,125,000. That is one of the reasons why I find it very difficult to follow the argument of my hon friend. The major item of imports is the one which is complained about by the silk people and the difference between the two years I gave in that connection a few moments ago. During half of one of the years the old arrangement was in force, under which arrangement excise was not taken into account; during the other half the arrangement was in force that the excise was taken into account and during the whole of the succeeding year it was taken into account. The difference made was only $100,000 in $8,250,000 worth of trade.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I will undertake to show the minister some information I have that in respect to the goods complained of the difference is far greater than what he would lead us to believe it is. I have seen the reports as presented by the manufacturers and on this special line of goods for six months after the change was made the difference is $1,500,000 or $2,000,000.

Mr. CAHAN: There is the further consideration that in this business the domestic consumption has been increasing; silk wear is becoming fashionable, but what this extra duty did was to prevent the Japanese producer from obtaining a larger control of the Canadian market. It was a restraining condition which enabled the Canadian producer temporarily to hold his own in spite of the fact that the wage scale in Japan is very much lower than that in Canada.

Mr. McGIBBON: Can the minister tell us whether the duty is equal to the difference in the cost of production?

Mr. DUNNING: It is quite impossible for me to state that.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. PECK: This resolution is in very general terms. Are there any other imports than silk and silk products which would be affected by it?

Mr. DUNNING: There are a number of minor commodities. Wines, in connection with France, would be affected, because we have a trade agreement with France, hence that country would come under the intermediate tariff. Germany at the present time is under the general tariff so that importations from that country would not be affected by the change. I may as well admit to the committee that a great deal of complaint has come from those who import from Germany, but after giving the matter consideration we are inclined to think this concession is one which should apply only to those countries with which we have definite arrangements.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That would include Switzerland also. Switzerland comes under the French treaty.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but not to a great degree.

Mr. PECK: I think we should have a little more consideration given to this so that we may know how far-reaching it may be. It may extend to many other goods that may not have been considered by the department or the tariff board.

Mr. DUNNING: I might give a little further information with respect to our trade generally with Japan, because that trade has, I know, some significance to those who think in terms of Canadian trade. Our total imports from Japan for the last fiscal year were $12,900,000 and our total exports to that country were $42,000,000 so that the matter is of some importance from the general trade point of view. There is always the problem of adjusting Canada's general interest with the particular interest of an industry which is entitled to consideration. That is the point one has to weigh in considering all these matters. I have given it the best study of which I am capable and I think the arrangement is a fair one, especially as it is the identical arrangement under which these people operated prior to August 1, 1928. Then they got a species of windfall by reason of an interpretation.

Mr. CAHAN: They got a windfall which saved them from disaster.

Mr. DUNNING: But which had the effect of reducing the imports from Japan by only $100,000 worth in these lines of goods.

Mr. CAHAN: The Minister of Finance is not making a fair deduction from that. He admitted a few moments ago he had not the knowledge to determine that issue.

Mr. DUNNING: What issue?

Mr. CAHAN: The issue as to how large the restriction has been.

Mr. DUNNING: I give such figures as are available.

Mr. CAHAN: But they are not relevant to the issue. The real issue is that this difference prevented Japan from getting control and command of the Canadian market, and we wish now to maintain the Canadian producer, in view of the peculiar conditions affecting this trade, in as favourable a position as he has been for the last two years.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister quite rightly calls our attention to the fact that Japan is a good customer of ours, but there is one feature he must not overlook, and it is this: Japan is the largest and one might say, the only large producer of raw silk. She produces 85 per cent of the word's supply of raw silk, and we are already, through this manufacture in Canada, a customer of hers in raw silk. Now she wants to supply us with not only the raw silk but the manufactured article also. We cannot buy both. If she supplies the manufactured article, she cannot supply the raw silk too. I should like the minister to lay the matter over until we get a little more information. I want to present the figures I have from the manufacturers in reference to this matter.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I think the minister had better accede to that request. I understand our object in discussing these details in committee is for the purpose of getting all the information we can as to the effect of the changes. The minister himself says he does not know exactly what articles will come under the proposed clause. The department ought to provide a list of the articles that will be affected.

Mr. DUNNING: From all countries?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: From all countries, and the different kinds of articles, so that we may see how many there are. The minister makes a change in the tariff in general terms and he does not know exactly how it will work out. If we had before us a list of importations from all the different countries which would be affected by the proposed change in the method of computing the duties, we could see for ourselves what difference this was going to make, what articles would be affected, and to what extent. The object of this discussion in committee is to enable us to become better informed than we are now as to what the effect of this change will be on the revenue and on the manufacture of similar articles in this country. I should think the minister himself would want to have the artificial silk manufactured in Canada, provided that the people who make it did not exploit the public and obtain too large a profit out of it. Surely we can make artificial silk in this Dominion as well as any other country in the world. Then why should we facilitate the importation of it as the minister says we are doing under this particular clause? The minister has not told us yet at whose suggestion this change was made. What interests have asked for it?

Mr. DUNNING: Very many importers from all countries in connection with importations which in their aggregate value are small as compared with the whole trade of Canada. But as to finding out just what commodities from all countries are affected, my hon. friend can understand that was a natural question for me to ask a moment or two ago. And the answer is, when one thinks it out: This would involve a search of the customs and excise laws of all countries, some of which laws change very rapidly in these days, and then an endeavour to trace the extent to which the particular change in the particular country has been applicable to imports into this country since August 1, 1928. Perhaps it will help my hon. friend if I give the details making up the figure which I gave a moment ago. The impression appears to be abroad that we are importing more manufactured silk. I know that my hon. friend from Lincoln has in mind specific cases along that line. As to the aggregate difference between the two years during one of which the old regulation was in force, we are really seeking to restore what was the practice from 1919 to 1928.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That will naturally have the effect of restoring the business to where it was before.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will bear with me, between the two years in question we have an exact comparison as to what happens when the regulation in force prior to the 1st of May is operative and when it is not. Take raw silk. We imported more raw silk in 1929 than in 1928; $1,200,000 in 1928, and $2,000,000 in 1929. Silk woven in the gum, which I am advised by the people to whom my hon. friend refers is the important item, came in to the amount of $3,088,000 in 1928, and $2,910,000 in 1929, or a difference of only $100,000 or thereabouts. Of silk fabrics we imported in 1928, $3,500,000, and in 1929, $2,700,000; silk clothing, $158,000 in 1928, and $261,000 in 1929.

Mr. CAHAN: The fabrics show a very great reduction in 1929 below 1928.

Mr. DUNNING: Then take silk manufactures. There were only small importations; $87,000 in 1928, and $76,000 in 1929; other silk goods, $160,000 in 1928, $155,000 in 1929 Those are all the silk imports from Japan, making up the aggregate totals that I gave before of $8,250,000 in 1928, and $8,145,000 in 1929. I give that just by way of information, hoping that it is the information my hon. friend wants.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I had that information myself out of the returns. The information I have gives the monthly imports in the lines in which these people are interested, and shows positively that during the six months after the regulations were put into force there was a decided decrease in the importation of these flat goods in which we are interested. But I will admit that in respect to the whole year the amount given by the minister is right.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the important thing. My hon. friend knows that it is seasonal importation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Seasonal importation? I will show the minister what happened in one month of one year and in the following month of another year, and so on for the six months, and I will prove my contention to him. All I ask is an opportunity to do so.

Mr. PECK: The language used in this resolution is very general. When you speak of exicse taxes on goods imported into this country, that might have a very wide meaning. What about Scotch whiskey, for instance, or Guinness' stout? Is an excise tax not collected on these articles before they are exported from Scotland or England, and would they not be affected by this resolution?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend forgets that under the present law, which we are now amending, goods from the United Kingdom such as Scotch whiskey are already exempt from excise in the computation of their value under paragraph (b) of section 6 of the customs tariff. Goods of a class subject to excise duty in Canada are now exempt.

My hon. friend spoke of a devious way of doing this. If I had desired to do it in a devious way, all I had to do was to put an excise tax, however small, on silk in Canada, and then under the provisions of that subsection the same object would have been accomplished, but I preferred to deal with the matter as a matter of principle. Also the complaint is made to me by importers that as far as possible the Canadian customs tariff should tell people what duty they have to pay on the goods they import. I think there is a great deal of merit in that contention, in so far as we can accomplish that objective.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are not doing that in connection with the countervailing duties.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, we are.

Mr. CAHAN: From the explanation made by the minister, it seems that this is a change made for the jobbers.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CAHAN: For those who are bringing in job lots.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me, the largest importers in the country made representations, people like Eaton's and Simpson's.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, but what are Eaton's but the largest jobbers in the country? They are not manufacturers. They have no interest in production in this country. They have no interest in the large employment of labour in this country. They are people who simply fatten upon the cheap wages of foreign countries, and then supply the Canadian consumer with the cheap goods from foreign countries with which the producers of Canada, who pay a legitimate wage and have reasonable hours of labour, cannot possibly compete.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Apparently the hon. gentleman never buys anything from Eaton's. I do not find them selling that kind of cheap goods.

Mr. CAHAN: Ah, don't you? Of course they do not sell them cheap; they make a profit. If the consumer profited by the jobber's control, I would have something to say in favour of this change; but the jobber makes a profit and the consumer never recives the advantage of a single one per cent, and Canadian industry suffers and is finally destroyed. This seems to me to be the most haphazard suggestion that could possibly be made. The minister admits that he does not know the extent of its application; he does not know to what countries it applies; he does not know to what imported commodities it will apply. Certainly in a matter of this kind which affects the vital interest of one great industry in Canada we should have more complete information, and the minister might well hold this over for a day, at least until my hon. friend (Mr. Chaplin) has had an opportunity to obtain his statistics. If the minister insists on going on; we can easily talk it out for ten minutes; but we do not wish to do that.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not intend in any way to compel my hon. friends to talk out the item. I want to be as courteous as I can if they want the item deferred. I am sure my hon. friends want to cooperate with me in this rather heavy task.

Mr. CAHAN: We do, but this is a vital industry in the province of Quebec.

Mr. DUNNING: It would, however, be rather confusing, where there are such a large number of items, if we adopted the practice of leaving some of them over. I am anxious that there should not be errors in the final conclusion of our work, but in this matter I shall try to meet my hon. friends.

My hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George has said that the minister does not know what will be the effect, and so forth. May I repeat that Canada established definitely, by regulation of the Customs department in 1919, the policy which I am now seeking to have embodied in the law. It was discovered only in August of 1928 that what I now contend should be law was not the law, after ten years' experience. So far as I know, no one asked for a ruling bringing into effect the condition which should have obtained since August of 1928 until to-day. The test of experience of the degree of complaint during that ten year period is surely evident that on the matter of principles we are on sound ground. It is, as my hon. friend states, virtually impossible to search the excise laws of all countries just to find out what commodities, if they did come into Canada, would be affected by this provision. I can only say that by this provision Canada goes back to exactly the position she occupied prior to August 1, 1928, and during all those years no one, as far as I know, in this house or outside of it ever made any complaint as to the manner in which the provision was administered. There is just a legal technicality upon which the change was made. I will let the resolution stand, Mr. Chairman, and pass along to the next one.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Might I suggest that the minister endeavour to get as much information as he can as to what articles will be affected by this change?

Mr. DUNNING: Between now and to-morrow afternoon I will get as much information as is available. I cannot undertake that it will be complete, because to search through the excise laws of all countries would involve a very great deal of work.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Might I suggest that the resolution stand until Monday if my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) is to be here when it is further discussed.

Mr. DUNNING: When there are so many items to be dealt with it is hardly fair to ask that they stand over while hon. members are absent. However, we will let the item stand now, and I will try to meet my hon. friend's convenience to the fullest extent.

Mr. ARTHURS: I would suggest to the minister that to-morrow he come prepared to give the house this information: What class of importers made the request for this change? Are they confined entirely to the silk industry, or do they include others? What countries will be affected and the amount of trade involved?

The CHAIRMAN: Number 2 stands.

3. Resolved, That Schedule A to the Customs Tarif, being chapter forty-four of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter seventeen of the acts of 1928 and chapter thirty-nine of the acts of 1929, be further amended by striking thereout tariff items, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 14, 15, 16, 18, 28a, 36, 37, 38, 47, 49, 50, 52, 53, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 60a, 61, 61a, 63a, 67, 69, 83, 83a, 84, 85, 86, 87, 87a, 87b, 88, 89, 90, 90a, 90b, 90c, 90d, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 97a, 98, 99, 99a, 100, 101a, 101aa, 101b, 102, 105, 105a, 106, 109, 141, 148, 149, 167, 168, 183, 200, 202, 207, 235, 235a, 236a, 237, 262, 283, 287, 289, 293, 296, 302, 306, 311, 313, 315a, 344, 344a, 345, 345a, 365, 366, 369, 373, 374, 375, 375a, 375b, 376, 377, 378, 378a, 379, 379a, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 384a, 384b, 384c, 385, 386, 387, 387a, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 393a, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398a, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 403a, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 410a, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 433a, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 438e, 439, 440, 441, 441a, 442, 443, 444, 445, 445a, 445b, 446, 446a, 446b, 446c, 447, 447a, 447b, 448, 448b, 449, 450, 450a, 451, 451a, 452, 453, 453a, 453b, 453c, 453d, 453e, 453f, 453g, 453h, 453i, 453j, 454, 454a, 455, 456, 456a, 457, 458, 459, 460, 460a, 460b, 460c, 460d, 460e, 460f, 461, 461a, 462, 462a, 463, 464, 465, 466, 466a, 467a, 468, 468a, 469, 469a, 469b, 470, 471, 471a, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 476a, 477, 478, 478a, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 486, 486a, 487, 491, 492, 494, 494a, 498, 502b, 502d, 506a, 513, 516, 517, 535a, 577, 584a, 588a, 589, 590, 590a, 590b, 590c, 591, 591a, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 605, 611b, 636, 637 649, 650, 650a, 657, 657b, 658, 660, 661, 665, 665a, 670, 670a, 671, 671a, 672, 672a, 676, 677, 688, 689, 689a, 689b, 698a, 706, 716, 719, 722, 725, 726, 729, 730, 736, 737, 745, 746, 748, 749, 751, 767, 770, 775, 780, the several enumerations of goods respectively, and the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite each of said items, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of duty in schedule A:

Mr. DUNNING: I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the numbers have been carefully checked, and there are two typographical errors. After the figure 109 in the fourth line of figures insert the figure 139; this was dropped by the printer. Also, over the page, after the figure 502b insert the figure 502c; this again was dropped by the printer.

Mr. LADNER: Will all the items referred to in these different tariff numbers be covered in the new schedule?

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, yes.

Mr. LADNER: In other words, does the new schedule omit some of the tariff items which originally stood under the headings of these particular tariff items?

Mr. DUNNING: No, everything is covered. Certain items are before the committee of ways and means because of the fact that it was necessary to change the numbers, and the simplest way to get it before the committee was to wipe out the old numbers and start with the new schedules; but I can assure my hon. friend that everything covered in the items to be wiped out is being dealt with in the new proposals.

Mr. KAISER: If, for instance, any particular article were imported under No. 10, how are we going to find out under what number in the new schedule that article is being imported?

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will look at the manner in which the tariff changes this year are set out in the booklet,—which I think he holds in his hand—he will find two sets of three columns each, the first three columns being the present tariff proposals, and the second three the old tariff items. The old tariff item numbers are there given and the rates. So he will be able to get any information as to any item by referring to the list. This year I arranged to have the list incorporated in Hansard so that there would be easily available to every hon. member a comparison between the old and the new.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Do I understand that every item stricken out will be found in some place?

Mr. DUNNING: Every commodity in the previous items is dealt with, yes.

Mr. QUINN: I have before me a letter from a music publishing firm in Toronto—a copy of which was sent to the minister—asking that item 475 be extended to the music printing industry, because at the present time only a very small part of the music used in Canada is printed here. This would encourage the printing of music in this country.

Mr. DUNNING: I may say that I have the letter before me, but it would help a lot if the discussion could be on the item itself.

Mr. QUINN: Yes.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. DUNNING: Carried.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, this resolution covers pages and pages of items. If we say the resolution is carried, that will include all the schedule. I presume we shall take the resolution item by item.

Mr. DUNNING: When I said "carried" I referred merely to that part of the resolution which rescinds the various tariff items there enumerated.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: All these schedules are part of resolution 3.

Mr. DUNNING: So all we have done is to carry the first part, the deleting part of the resolution.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Quite so. Now we start with the schedules.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. I think the usual practice is to carry each article separately and finally the complete resolution. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. CAHAN: Before the committee rises, may I ask the minister if there is any objection to laying on the table representations made by Canadian silk factories in reference to this change proposed in the second resolution? Are those representations confidential, or may they not be published?

Mr. DUNNING: Some are, but I know of no reason why such representations as we have should not be tabled; although I may tell my hon. friend there are reams and reams of correspondence about these various tariff items.

Mr. CAHAN: I am dealing simply with resolution No. 2 as to excise duties or excise taxes.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend desires the correspondence I will try to see that he gets it, so far as it is not confidential.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 16, 1930.

The house met at three o'clock.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE COAL SUPPLY

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): Some time ago my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Ross) asked me a question in regard to a return concerning the Royal Military College coal supply. I have had the papers in my desk for some time, but the hon. member has not been in the house. On inquiry I find that the papers to which he refers have to do with the fulfilling of the contract. I understand the order asked for papers with regard to the tenders, and I wish to inform the hon. gentleman that the papers for which he has asked are way bills. There are about fifteen hundred of them and they are lodged with the Auditor General. If an order of the house were issued we could have delivery of anything the hon. gentleman wished, but I would ask him if it will serve his purpose if I arrange for him to have access to the original documents which are in the hands of the Auditor General.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think my return asked for communications connected with tenders.

Mr. RALSTON: I am instructed that the return was in regard to tenders and communications.

[Mr. W. F. Garland.]

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I shall have to ask the hon. gentleman to allow me to look over my order again.

Mr. RALSTON: All right.

FAMOUS PLAYERS CANADIAN CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I would like to bring a certain matter to the attention of the government. Recently there has been reported the absorption of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation by the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation of America, and I find that there has been a great deal of discussion about it. I have in my hand the Canadian Moving Picture Digest which contains very extensive editorials and comments of one kind and another in regard to this absorption. I shall read one or two extracts. One of them refers to the Canadian company as being the dominant theatre chain in the Dominion; it states that the Famous Players Canadian Corporation is distinctly a Canadian concern and financed by Canadian shareholders. In part, the editorial is as follows:

> The Famous Players Canadian Corporation if sold to an American company, gives that company a film monopoly in Canada which is worth at least $100,000,000.

I wish to make another observation which represents my right to ask the question. In view of the prospectus issued to the public in March of 1929 wherein it was stated that voting trust certificates were listed on the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges, and wherein Canadian control of the company was assured to Canadian shareholders, I wish to ask if the government has been apprised of the circumstances connected with the sale of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation to the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation and if any action has been taken in connection therewith, or whether any action has been proposed.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I cannot answer on behalf of the government as a whole. If my hon. friend will allow the matter to stand as a notice, I will give the necessary answer at a later time.

Mr. STEVENS: Very well.

AIR MAIL SERVICE TO VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): I would like to inquire from the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) if arrangements have been completed for an air mail service to Vancouver, and when it is likely that such service will be installed.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Over the mountains?

Mr. LADNER: Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: The survey is about completed and we contemplate starting service this summer.

Mr. LADNER: At what time?

Mr. VENIOT: Daily service.

Mr. LADNER: When?

Mr. VENIOT: I am awaiting the passage of the estimates through the house so that the matter may be put in motion.

FASCIST FILMS SHOWN IN OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) based on an editorial which appeared in this morning's Citizen.

Fascist films were shown in Ottawa last Sunday. It is quite within the law to carry on Fascist propaganda, but some residents of Ottawa, of Italian origin, are rather disturbed about it. They have become Canadian citizens. They dislike the carrying on of a recruiting campaign which has the appearance of preparation for another war.

Apparently this sort of thing has been going on for some time in the United States, and the method used in that country was outlined in a widely discussed article which appeared in Harpers Magazine of November last. I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether it is legally possible to hold recruiting campaigns in this open fashion, and if so whether steps will be taken to make representations to the Italian government in regard to the matter.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I shall look into the question as Hansard records it, and if I can give the information required by the hon. gentleman I shall be pleased to do so.

CIVIL SERVICE

SUPPLEMENTARY COMMISSION TO BEATTY COMMISSION EXTENDING INQUIRY TO SERVICE GENERALLY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I seek as much as possible to avoid raising questions of privilege. However, at least once in every parliament it seems necessary to make a statement about some article which appears in the Ottawa Journal. This morning the following appears on the editorial page: It is entitled "A Promise, and a Performance":

On September 13, 1926, Mr. Mackenzie King stood in the Ottawa auditorium and addressing an audience composed largely of Ottawa civil servants, made this statement:

Then follows the statement in quotations:

"Last year, I recall we passed an order in council referring to the Civil Service Commission, the whole question of the revision of civil servants' salaries. We referred it to that body because, under a law which was passed prior to our coming into office, the Civil Service Commission was the body which had to do with the regulating of the salaries of civil servants. We made certain requests in the order in council as to the basis on which a revision should be made. When we got the report of the commission it was not satisfactory, either to the government or the civil service. Having had representations from the service in regard to it we referred it back again to the commission."

The quotation continues with the following sentence in italics:

"Now I wish to say that if we are returned to power I intend to use what influence I can to see that the salaries are revised in accordance with the instructions given in the order in council."

The editorial continues:

That was three days before the last general election; Ottawa civil servants took Mr. King to mean what he said, helped return him to power.

On Wednesday, exactly four years after the foregoing pledge, Mr. King arose in the House of Commons and said this:

"So far as the government is concerned I may say we are giving very careful attention to the whole question of what is to be done with regard to the salaries of members of the public service."

The comment of the newspaper on that statement follows in the editorial and is as follows:

No need exists to comment upon what is revealed by these two statements made four years apart. They can be left to the intelligence of Ottawa civil servants themselves.

Mr. Speaker, any person reading that article would be led to believe that I had made a promise on the eve of an election with respect to the salaries of civil servants, that in the interval nothing had been done, and that four years later in speaking again of the salaries of civil servants I had been making reference to the same matter. As a matter of fact, when parliament met after the general election at the very first session this government asked parliament for an increase for civil servants to implement the promise made at that time, and to carry out exactly what was stated in my remarks at the Auditorium as quoted. If hon. members wish the record they will find it in Hansard of April 14, 1927. At the very first session which was the earliest opportunity, the government in the estimates as tabled placed an amount of $2,700,000 "to provide for flat increases to the civil service, both inside and outside." The hon. the Secretary of State was dealing with this estimate on the 14th of April and made a statement with reference to this flat increase. I shall not read all that he said, but to make clear exactly how the increase related to the service I might quote from Hansard his words in part. They will be found at page 2506:

When this item was called last night I proceeded to give an explanation of the proposed salary revision but I acceded to the request of one hon. member opposite that I defer until to-day any statement that I wished to make, in order that it might be presented to a full house.

Then the Secretary of State went on to say:

The proposal now before the committee is based on the principle of a flat increase to the different classes of the service in receipt of salaries up to $5,100.

Then a little further on:

The proposal is of a dual nature. First it raises the minimum and maximum in every class of the service by the sum of $120 except in the case of the lowest minimum, that is, the entrant class. That has not been touched. Our reason for not increasing the lowest minimum was that entrants to the service are not affected and we thought we should not touch that minimum. This increase is not only for the present year but it is a permanent addition; so that every civil servant not only receives immediate consideration but has an increased maximum at which he may hope to arrive in the future. I might add there have been other increases as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those are the facts, and in the light of them if there is any inference to be drawn from my remarks of Wednesday last I submit that it is that when this government makes a promise to the civil servants or to any other body in this country, they may rely on that promise being carried out.

I went on to say on Wednesday that we were considering further the question of salaries of civil servants, and that we were considering the advisability of having the Beatty commission, which investigated the salaries of professional and technical members of the service, consider the service generally in accordance with a recommendation made by the commission in its report to the government. To-day we have asked His Excellency to give his assent, and it has been given to an order in council which will enable that step to be taken. The powers of the commission will be extended to include an examination into the question of the salaries of civil servants generally in accordance with the recommendation to which I have referred. We have also thought it desirable to have referred to that commission for consideration and report the advisability of fixing a minimum salary for employees of the civil service. I have in my hand the order in council which contains these two directions to the commission and I shall table it forthwith.

Mr. HEAPS: Before the Prime Minister sits down may I ask whether on this commission he will have a representative of labour?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will have the same commission which already has gone so largely into the question of the salaries of the civil servants and which is familiar with so many phases of that question. We have thought it would be to the advantage of all concerned to give authority to that body.

Mr. HEAPS: I should like to point out, if I may, that there was no representative of labour at all on that commission and that the chairman is a large employer of labour. I think it would be only fair to labour if they had a representative of labour on that commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend will agree that the commission performed its work very thoroughly and in a manner which appears to have been fairly satisfactory to the part of the service whose positions and salaries were inquired into. The chairman is not the only member of the commission, though he is a member whose name is very much respected in this country, and whose judgment in these matters would be regarded as being generous as well as sound.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it not the professed policy of this government that labour shall be represented on all boards and commissions? Mr. Beatty is a large employer of labour, but the Canadian Pacific does not always pay very high wages to its employees

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All the organizations of the civil service will have an opportunity to appear before the commission.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Might I suggest that this order in council be printed in full in Hansard as though it had been read by the Prime Minister?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must thank my hon. friend for the suggestion. I was regretting that I had not asked permission of the house to have it printed in Hansard, and I should like to have it added to my remarks. It is as follows:

P.C. 1053

Certified to be a true copy of a minute of a meeting of the committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the 16th May, 1930.

The committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 15th May, 1930, from the Secretary of State, submitting:

1. That by order in council P.C. 664, dated 15th April, 1929, a Royal commission composed of: Edward W. Beatty, Esq., president of the Canadian Pacific Railway; Sir George Garneau, Quebec, and Dr. Walter C. Murray, LL.D., Saskatoon, was appointed to inquire into rates of salaries, pensions, etc., of technical and professional officials of the Civil Service of Canada.

2. That by order in council P.C. 1195, dated 2nd July, 1929, the said royal commission was authorized to include within the scope of its enquiry the salaries of civil service commissioners, board of pension commissioners, railway commissioners and all officers having the rank of deputy ministers and also all such employees of the government whether subject to the Civil Service Act or not.

3. That the said royal commissioners have submitted their report containing certain recommendations and suggestions among which is the following:

"27. Suggested further investigation of the civil service generally.

During the course of our inquiry, we were impressed with the fact that those engaged in technical, scientific and professional work for the government, though they formed a very important branch of the civil service, were still in numbers only a moderate proportion of the total engaged in government service. The cost of government, measured by salaries or wages alone, is substantial, and the number of employees very great. Having in mind the obvious desire of the government, as indicated by the reference to us, to improve the status of its technical officers with a view to increasing the efficiency of that branch of the service, it has occurred to us that an investigation of the civil service generally, i.e., as to numbers, nature of work and rates of pay, might conceivably result in some economy and greater efficiency. We are sensible of the fact that such a work is of considerable magnitude and would involve careful scrutiny of the personnel in each department, and that it would take a considerable time, but we believe the results would more than justify the expense of such an investigation. We appreciate, of course, that this is not a subject which has been referred to us, and that our observations are not strictly pertinent under the terms of the order in council, but the information adduced during the course of the inquiry has pointed so strongly to the possibility of an effective and valuable work being done in this way, in a further effort to improve the personnel and increase the efficiency in government service, that we felt we might, without impropriety, suggest for the consideration of the government that at the appropriate time it might profitably be undertaken."

The minister further submits that in his opinion it is advisable that such investigation should be undertaken without delay; also that the advisability of fixing a minimum salary for employees in the civil service should be considered.

The committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State, advise that a supplementary commission be issued to the said commissioners extending the scope of the inquiry to include such investigation, and also the advisability of fixing a minimum salary for employees in the civil service.

E. J. Lemaire,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

FIRE AT STE. FLORENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. DIONNE (Matane): Before the orders of the day are called I should like to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that on the 14th instant a very serious fire occurred in a small village in my constituency named Ste. Florence, which destroyed some fifteen or twenty dwellings and their contents at an estimated loss of about $100,000. I should like to have this case thoroughly investigated and every possible assistance given to the parties concerned.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The request my hon. friend has made is very similar to one which was made from the other side of the house a few days ago and in this case we will follow the same procedure.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND STEAMSHIPS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $6,638,030.23, being the amount to be voted by Vote No. 321 for loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and Vote No. 322 for amounts required under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, as set forth in further supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1930, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1930.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, the object of going into supply is to deal with the report of the special committee which had to do with Canadian National railways and shipping. It was thought that the business of the house would be facilitated by dealing with this matter now.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, I notice that the chairman of the special committee is in his seat. I am not sure whether the report has been presented.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, it was presented yesterday.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The second report was presented yesterday, but the final report has not been presented as yet.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not rise to present any objection to this resolution. It was pointed out to the special committee by the management of the national railways that it was desirable to pass at least a portion of these estimates as soon as possible in order that work which can be carried on only in the summer months may be proceeded with, and it has been the practice of the house and of members on this side to assist the Canadian National Railways in every way possible in this particular. It was thought, however, that if the committee had completed its work the whole of the estimates might just as well have been passed. As a matter of fact the final report should have been presented and accepted by the house before these estimates were considered. I am not going to raise any particular objection but I wish to put that point on record as a matter of procedure, and to suggest that the report might be tabled at a later stage in the sitting and dealt with to-day, so that at least we should have the acceptance of the report by the house on the same day that we are passing these estimates.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I should like to remind my hon. friend that the second report of the committee contains the two bills which were considered by it as well as the estimates, and that report was presented to the house yesterday. The final report has not been presented as yet, because we could not get a quorum this morning.

Mr. STEVENS: Quite so. I am not desirous of obstructing the passage of this bill, but the final report was completed yesterday and I understood the committee had completed its work. The committee has completed its work and its report should have been at hand before we proceeded with the voting of supply. However, we are not going to object to the passing of these estimates, but I think the procedure I have suggested should be followed in the future.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DUNNING moved:

That a sum not exceeding $61,070,000, being the amount to be voted by Vote No. 323 for loans to the Canadian National Railway Company; Vote No. 324 for a loan to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited; Vote No. 325 for a loan to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited; and Votes Nos. 326 and 327 for amounts required under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, as set forth in supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1931, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1931.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second times and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING moved:

That towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1931, the sum of $61,070,000 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DUNNING moved:

That towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1930, the sum of $6,638,030.23 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second times and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 140, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st March, 1930, and the 31st March, 1931.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. CAHAN: Has this bill been distributed?

Mr. DUNNING: This bill is in the same position as any other supply bill. The resolution has just been passed and the bill could not be distributed prior to that. There would be no objection to having the bill stand over pending distribution, but it is being treated in the same manner as supply bills usually are.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2, 3 and 4 agreed to.

Schedules A and B agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose last evening it was considering resolution No. 3, but resolution No. 2 had been allowed to stand. No. 2 reads as follows:

2. Resolved, that the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, be amended by repealing subsection two of section six thereof and by substituting the following therefor:—

(2) Excise duties or excise taxes shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purpose of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff, intermediate tariff or any more favourable tariff.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): That resolution was amended.

The CHAIRMAN: This resolution was amended by adding thereto the following as section 2a:

2a. Customs duties of the United Kingdom shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purposes of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the intermediate tariff or any more favourable tariff and are bottled in bond in the United Kingdom and imported direct therefrom.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yesterday evening, when we were discussing this item, I asked the Minister of Finance to let the matter stand until I was able to get some papers, because I did not expect that the matter would come up before Monday. I have not yet all the information that I desire to get, but I have been to the department where I have taken the trouble to go through the customs returns and I should like to lay before the minister this aspect of the matter. Taking two months from the time that he speaks of, the 15th August—

Mr. DUNNING: The 1st August.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Well, the 1st August, and taking September which will not be affected entirely by the change, I find the importations of this gummed silk, woven, which we manufacture in Canada, are, in round figures, as follows:

| Month | Yards | Value |
|---|---|---|
| September | 508,000 | $258,000 |
| October | 389,000 | 196,000 |
| November | 410,000 | 231,000 |
| December | 412,000 | 225,000 |
| January | 640,000 | 350,000 |

Now let us take the same months in the following year and see what has happened.

Mr. DUNNING: This is for 1929 now?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes. I am not going through the entire year; I am taking the same five months of the following year when the arrangement was fully understood; as compared with those of 1928:

| | Yards | |
|---|---|---|
| Month | 1928 | 1929 |
| September | 508,000 | 287,000 |
| October | 389,000 | 311,000 |
| November | 410,000 | 148,000 |
| December | 412,000 | 245,000 |
| January (1929) | 640,000 | (1930) 305,000 |

The minister gives us the figures for a full year. I am showing how the manufacturer, who is making his living in this industry, views the matter. The decreases in the importations are as follows:

| Month | Yards |
|---|---|
| September | 220,000 |
| October | 75,000 |
| November | 262,000 |
| December | 167,000 |

Mr. DONNELLY: Can the hon. member compare the importations of 1927 and 1928?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No. I have the other figures on a memorandum which I have at home. I have the matter worked out for several years and I have further information, but I went back to the source from which I got this information and got only the figures for these months so as to show the minister what I had in view.

Mr. DONNELLY: I only wanted to compare the two cases, one where the excise was on and the other where it was off.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have the information and it tells quite a story. This is a very important matter; this whole resolution is not going to get through to-day, and I think the minister can very well afford to let it stand over until Monday when we can get the whole story.

Mr. DUNNING: The matter is one of important principle in a broad, general way, not merely as relating to silk. The question really is this: Shall goods which are subject to excise duty in the country of origin, become automatically liable to dumping duty on entering Canada, no matter what the goods are? No other nation treats the goods of another nation in the manner that for one year we treated goods of that character. The question is not one of an ordinary duty. From the point of view of international trade a very important question of principle is involved.

Mr. STEVENS: Have the minister and his officers considered this phase of the matter? In Canada we are building up an industry of this character. I am referring now particularly to silk. This is a situation that we certainly ought to bear in mind. In Canada by provincial laws minimum wages are imposed, whereas in countries such as Japan, Germany, the central European countries and so forth, wages are not at all comparable with Canadian standards of wages. Inasmuch as by statute we impose upon Canadian manufacturers the obligation of paying a minimum wage which is far in excess of that paid in these other countries, has the minister considered the effect upon Canadian industry of the removal of the present measure, bearing in mind just that one phase of the question, the difference in wages? Unless the minister can show that no handicap is placed upon the Canadian manufacturer by virtue of the minimum wage statutes of the provinces, I think we are entitled to have this remain as it is or, as a compensation for it, an increase in the duty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Last night the minister presented practically the same argument. My contention is that when Japan imposes an excise duty upon an article, that adds so much to the market value of it; that is the price and the fair market value in that country after that duty is imposed. I may be repeating some of the arguments I advanced last night, but this is the situation: Japan is to-day supplying 85 per cent of the world's raw silk product and our manufacturers pay the government of Japan that 10 per cent excise duty. Does the minister realize that? We are doing the paying. That 10 per cent is in the value of the goods. Our manufacturers in Canada are paying that duty. Why should we not add it to the fair market value of the goods?

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend is wrongly informed.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not. How else could it be done? If that tax is imposed in the way of a consumption tax in Japan, who pays it?

Mr. DUNNING: The people of Japan pay it. It is not charged with respect to a commodity when it is exported.

Mr. DONNELLY: What protection have silk and artificial silk?

Mr. DUNNING: The duties are as follows:

| Commodity | Intermediate tariff | General tariff |
|---|---|---|
| Silk | 22½ per cent | 30 per cent |
| Artificial silk | 30 per cent | 35 per cent |

Mr. DONNELLY: I think the duties should be lowered.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister has answered the question there. Is that not the case? Does Japan not come under the French treaty?

Mr. DUNNING: My figure was right. The rate of duty applicable to Japan is 22½ per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is there any deduction for that under the special terms of the French treaty?

Mr. DUNNING: Not that I am aware of, but I will have that checked.

Mr. CAHAN: I would ask the minister if he has laid on the table to-day the correspondence from the producers of these silks in Canada? I am interested particularly in the province of Quebec. I would like to have access to those documents before this discussion is concluded.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no written representations from the silk manufacturers opposed to this measure. I saw them at the request of my hon. friend from Lincoln, and their representations were made orally. There were no written representations.

Mr. CAHAN: I understood that some representations were made in writing, either to the department of the minister or to the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. DUNNING: I have none.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the representations, if made in writing, come to the Department of Finance?

Mr. DUNNING: Unquestionably, I would say.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In respect to the minister's answer given to me in regard to the French treaty, I notice that in schedule D French products are receiving fixed rates of duty, and that silk fabrics over 26 inches in width are rated at 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend asked me a question regarding Japan, as I understood it, and I gave the rates under the intermediate tariff.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I asked the question, does not Japan come under the French treaty? Most decidedly it does. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is not unreasonable to ask that this resolution stand because I have some other information that I want to put before the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: I want this information on record accurately, and I believe my hon. friend does. The item to which he referred he himself said was the item under which there was the big importation. That item is not affected by the French treaty at all. My figures were correct. The duty against Japan is the intermediate tariff of 22½ per cent, and the general tariff rate on the same article is 35 per cent, for woven fabrics in the gum, to which my hon. friend refers.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Will the minister give us some information as to the number of articles that will be affected by this change, and the countries they come from? Last night it was arranged that this resolution be left over until Monday in order that my hon. friend from Lincoln might get his papers. It is true that he is here to-day, but he has not got his papers; they are in St. Catharines. I think the minister should inform us as to the amount of goods that will come in under this clause, what they will consist of, and from what countries they will come in. If he is going to make a change in the tariff as regards the excise duty levied upon silk in Japan, he might have said so; but last night, as I understood it, he himself did not understand how far he was going or how many articles or countries would be affected. This is a broad and important item in the tariff which will require careful consideration, and if there is any information that we have on this side of the house which might be useful to the minister, I think the resolution might be left over until Monday, so that we may present our information and see just what this item means.

Mr. DONNELLY: I understand that most of the silk goods come from Japan, that it is Japan that is in the market against us. What is the excise tax in Japan? Then we can figure out what difference it makes.

Mr. DUNNING: The excise tax in Japan is 10 per cent. In reply to my hon. friend from Argenteuil, I have heard from the gentlemen who were introduced by the hon. member for Lincoln most of the information, I think, which the hon. member for Lincoln desires to present. I do not want to press unduly to get items through, but at the same time I do want to get along a little if possible. With regard to information, my hon. friend from Argenteuil will understand how utterly impossible it is to get the precise bearing of a matter of principle of this kind. As I said a moment ago, it is a question of whether or not the imposition of an excise duty by any country on any class of goods shall automatically render those goods subject to dumping duty when entering this country. That is the whole point. To make any calculation as to what would be involved in that is an impossibility. I can give some information regarding the taxes in other countries.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Might I say to the minister that it is a theoretical idea which he has put forward, whether the excise duty should be included for duty valuation purposes. But what about the practical side of the thing?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend misunderstands me. I did not say that it was a question whether or not the excise tax should be included in calculating for duty purposes. I said, should it be regarded as automatically rendering the goods subject to dumping duty? That is a very different thing. The only change that is made is to get away from the situation which has existed since August 1, 1928, by which such goods, in addition to paying the duty, are automatically subject to dumping duty by reason of the existence of an excise tax in the country in which they are manufactured. In France, for instance, there is a sales or turn-over tax of 2 per cent; in Belgium, 1 per cent. In Belgium there is also a 6 per cent luxury tax which is limited in its application to certain articles. In Japan, 10 per cent on fixed values is the excise tax on silk. In Italy, there is a sales or turn-over tax of one-quarter of one per cent on raw materials and one-half of one per cent on manufactured products. Czechoslovakia has a 2 per cent sales or turnover tax and a 12 per cent luxury tax, limited in the range of articles to which it applies. In Spain there is a stamp tax on wines, the precise incidence of which has not been worked out since August, 1928, when the change that we are now attempting to rectify came into effect. In Portugal the situation is very difficult on account of the sales or turnover tax being combined with the business profits tax. It is a matter of great difficulty to our customs people to know whether or not the dumping duty should apply to goods from Portugal because of the nature of their sales or turnover tax. Those are a few of the instances that I have been able to gather this morning, showing the complexity of the situation. There is no difficulty in connection with the levying of a straight duty. The difficulty is only in connection with adopting the principle that automatically goods are dumped because in the country of origin there is an excise tax.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I understand the minister's point now. He says he does not think it is fair that this excise tax should be considered when the dumping duty is applied. But the question in my mind is, what is the practical effect of this new clause so far as our own industries are concerned? As far as wines from Portugal are concerned, that is simple enough, because nobody in this country suffers, although the revenue may suffer a little; but with regard to silk, and artificial silk particularly, that ought to be made in Canada entirely so long as our manufacturers who make it do not exploit the public. We can make it as well as any country in the world, and as I understand this change, it is going to make it easier to import that article into this country. Is that so or is it not?

Mr. DUNNING: I pointed out last night that the regulation I am now seeking to have enforced was brought into effect in 1919 and was operative until August, 1928. Canadian industries continued during that time, and there was apparently no complaint of it. Certainly, I can find no evidence of any complaint.

Mr. CAHAN: Were not complaints made to the minister? Does he mean to say that?

Mr. DUNNING: I am speaking of the period when the condition was just what we are now seeking to make it.

Mr. CAHAN: It never was before in the history of the trade in the same condition as it is now.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is misunderstanding me again.

Mr. CAHAN: I fully appreciate how the hon. minister is splitting hairs over it.

Mr. DUNNING: I leave it to the committee as to who is splitting hairs. What I am discussing, Mr. Chairman, is the position which obtained in Canada with respect to this matter of excise tax in the country of origin being counted for the imposition of the dumping duty, in reply to my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Sir George Perley), who asked me what will be the likely effect on the industry. In order to answer the question I am pointing out that from 1919 to 1928 the industry of Canada was under precisely the regulation that I am now proposing. My hon. friend says I am splitting hairs.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, because that has no reference to the present condition, as I am perfectly prepared to show the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DONNELLY: As I see this, Mr. Chairman, it means that if we take off the excise duty in considering the value of the article in the country of origin, the dumping clause goes into effect sooner than it did before.

Mr. STEVENS: That is miles off.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Finance says that this is a matter of principle, and he seeks to deal with it as a matter of principle. The fact is that during the past two years the Canadian factories producing this class of silk fabric have had a certain protective duty in their favour, partly made up of the ordinary duties and partly by an increase under this dumping clause. The passing of this resolution takes away at once one tenth of the protection under the Customs Act which these factories have had. We took away about one tenth of the protection accorded to certain classes of cotton goods in 1928. The two and a half per cent reduction then made meant a loss in one year of over a quarter of a million dollars to one of several companies, and I think I could count upon my fingers losses of at least a million dollars a year by that reduction of their net revenues. Now the practical effect which I understand the hon. member for Argenteuil seeks to acertain is this. If you pass this item reducing the customs duty, by way of wiping out the dumpage, these producers will have to face about one tenth reduction in their present protection. That one tenth reduction means the difference between disaster and success. Even the duties as levied now will not compensate for the low wages paid in Japan as compared with the rate of wages necessarily paid in the province of Quebec under provincial statute.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And in Ontario too.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend from Lincoln says, "In Ontario too." Now, that is a fair consideration to induce the Minister of Finance to retain this particular rate of duty. If the wiping of it out means disaster to these industries, as I believe it does, that is not a matter of principle. What faces the hon. Minister of Finance is a practical question. These duties have been in force during the past two years, nearly. Under these duties these factories have been able to carry on their operations. Now, it is a question of practical policy as to whether you should wipe out these safeguards and put these industries in danger. Will the hon. minister tell us—he must have the information there—what are the number of factories in Canada producing this class of fabric at the present time?

Mr. DUNNING: They themselves inform us there are three factories that will be affected by this change.

Mr. CAHAN: Only three?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, only three.

Mr. CAHAN: And which are those factories?

Mr. DUNNING: One is at St. Catharines—referred to by my hon. friend from Lincoln—and there is one in the province of Quebec. We are not certain of its exact location.

Mr. CAHAN: Are there not at least two in the province of Quebec?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: That is what I understand. Therefore it bears particularly harshly on employment and the investment of capital in the province of Quebec. I am not interested in the excise duty on some petty articles. but this manufacture has developed under present conditions, and, during the past two years, while there has been depression throughout the world in the manufacture of silk fabrics, this duty has been a protection to Canadian industry. It is not a question of principle. It is a question as to whether you will now put in force this reduction without notice, reducing the protection about two and a half per cent, and wipe out these silk industries, just as you have done under the 1928 tariff schedule with regard to cotton, as a result of which we have to-day on the streets something like two thousand employees in the province of Quebec who have been put out of employment on that account. Owing to this foreign fabric being brought in at depressed prices and slaughtered on our markets, Canadian companies who have been carrying on the textile industry for years have been placed on the verge of bankruptcy. And when I say that I am selecting my words in order to assert the absolute truth.

Mr. McMILLAN: Mr. Chairman, I think it is time that the members of this house were considering the interests of the people of this country.

An hon. MEMBER: That is what we are doing.

Mr. McMILLAN: I have listened since this discussion began last night, and never once have the interests of the consumer been considered by hon. gentlemen on the front benches opposite. I thought this was a protectionist budget. During the whole course of the budget debate we heard nothing else from the opposition benches but that this government had stolen the clothes of the Conservative party; and yet, sir, since we have been dealing with these budget resolutions the whole argument is that the duty is being reduced on these goods which will mean a reduction in price to the consumers of this country. I think it is time the consumers were considered.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I suppose the hon. gentleman does not mind a lot of Canadian workmen being put out of work, does he?

Mr. McMILLAN: The history of protection throughout the world will prove, if the hon. gentleman will only study it, that it has never been the means either of paying higher wages or giving greater employment, but rather the reverse.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I tried last night in the brief statement I then made to put the case of the consumer before the house. If the hon. gentleman understood the course at the present time of the trade in fabrics of this class, and of cotton and wool, he would know that the consumer in Canada does not receive one cent advantage from these large importations from the United States, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, France and other countries. The course of the trade, as I understand it, is that certain jobbers in this country buy large quantities which are sold abroad at slaughter prices, simply to relieve the local and domestic trade in those foreign countries. They bring them in under a rate of duty levied upon the invoiced value. Sometimes these jobbers manufacture clothing and sell it in job lots throughout this country. However, the price at which they sell is a price fixed by the cost of production in this country. The result is that we are making wealthy a large number of jobbers in this country by the sale of those job lots at high prices, and the consumer has not received the advantage of even 1 per cent in the reduction of duty.

Mr. McMILLAN: You do not think a higher percentage of duty means an increase of cost to the consumer?

Mr. CAHAN: Taking the question of production of fabrics of this class, such as silks, and importations, which we have been making and are now making of cottons from the southern states, woollens from Italy, Czechoslovakia and even from England, do not reduce the cost to the consumer in this country one iota. Hon. members have to make a choice, that is all. Representing the consumers, my hon. friend must make a choice between allowing those kinds of goods to be produced in this country and giving employment here, or allowing the profit which would come to the consumer under the theoretical course of trade, to be made by the jobbers, who do not give employment to Canadian labour, with the exception of a few clerks and some others who are engaged in distribution.

An hon. MEMBER: Would the hon. gentleman say that if these reductions were made it would not lower the price of these articles in this country?

Mr. CAHAN: To the consumer it would be less than 1 per cent. This is a tariff reduction of over 2 per cent which is now being proposed.

Mr. DUNNING: The silk manufacturers claim that it means from 5 to 7 cents a yard.

Mr. CAHAN: This 5 to 7 cents a yard represents a fortune if a sufficient number of yards are sold. However, I am not going into more detail. I have followed the arguments of my western friends as to the protection of the consumer, and I wish to say, with regard to these cheaply produced fabrics, such as cotton, wool and silk produced in foreign countries, brought in here and sold by jobbers in competition with our domestic production, that the consumer does not benefit thereby. The difference is made by way of profit by the large jobbers.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The hon. gentleman from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has introduced a new point. He stated that the jobbers were in the habit of purchasing large quantities of goods in other countries at small prices, bringing them here, selling them and displacing Canadian goods. I admit at once that I know very little about the particular department of business under discussion. I must say however that the question of purchasing at slaughter prices is not affected by this question of 10 per cent excise duty. If purchases were made at slaughter prices, which are not fair prices, the dumping duty would be applied, apart from this question of 10 per cent excise. Purchases in the country of origin might be made upon a proper and fair market value and still might not be subject to 10 per cent excise. There is a great distinction between purchasing a mass of goods at slaughter prices which could of itself bring in the dumping act and attempting, or continuing, to use a 10 per cent excise duty in the other country as part of the cost of the product. I think the contention of the minister is perfectly correct, although I agree with the member for St. Lawrence-St. George that if goods were actually purchased at slaughter prices such a condition might well be looked after. I do not think however that a practice which to my mind is wrong and unsound should be continued. I support the contention of the minister that an excise duty in any country placed upon goods should not be considered as part of the price of production in that country.

Mr. EVANS: I would like to ask if when valuation is made for customs purposes trade discount is taken into account.

[Mr Cahan.]

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid my hon. friend may have to address that question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler); it is the Department of National Revenue which administers the law in connection with these matters. I do not wish to speak with any degree of certainty, but my impression is that trade discounts are taken into account. I would ask my hon. friend however to get that information from the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. EVANS: Is the status of the importer taken into account?

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid I cannot answer that question.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I would like to say to the minister—

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend wishes this matter to stand I shall again meet him halfway.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I might explain to the minister that neither the hon. member for Lincoln nor the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has his papers. Hon. gentlemen of this side of the house consider this an important matter, and the question is as to how many articles it applies. We have been discussing silk and artificial silk, but I understand the minister is not sure as to how many other articles might be affected.

Mr. DUNNING: I mentioned wine.

Sir GERGE PERLEY: That would not be of much consequence. We are particularly interested in how it affects the industry of this country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister lay the matter over?

Mr. DUNNING: I shall, if my hon. friend desires it. May I ask however to have a little reciprocity in these matters as we go along?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am sure the minister will not find us as antagonistic as he thinks. To my mind the matter before us is a very important one. At the commencement of this discussion last night I explained that I was short some papers. I have the information from figures which I have found in the papers of the department and which cannot be denied. The manufacturers know what is taking place as to importations; it is their business to know. I may state for the information of the minister that this company was not established in 1919.

Mr. DUNNING: But it was established before 1928.

Mr. CHAPLIN: True enough.

Mr. DUNNING: It would be under the condition which we are seeking to create.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know that they have been fighting for years to have that provision put into effect. At last they succeeded in convincing the Minister of National Revenue and it has been in effect for two years.

Mr. CAHAN: And now it is being wiped out without a day's notice.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have heard some hon. gentlemen say that it is only a matter of small importance. The government is taking 5 cents a yard from these manufacturers, and the profit is so small that that 5 cents makes all the difference in the world to them. The Japanese get 85 per cent of the word's silk trade; what they are trying to do is to get both the manufactured and unmanufactured trade in their hands. In this country we pay four times the amount that Japan pays for labour. I have in mind an English concern which has come into my community within the last two or three years, and I may say to my hon. friend that they are paying twice the amount for labour that they would have to pay in England, and four times the amount which is paid in Japan.

Mr. DUNNING: To close the discussion may I say to my hon. friend that they must have known what the Canadian tariff was when they established their factory at St. Catharines. They knew perfectly well at the time they established their business that what has since happened in respect to the application of the dumping duty was not then in operation. It was merely a legal quirk, a legal twist, which brought it into operation. This parliament made no change.

Mr. CAHAN: The government did, by order in council.

Mr. DUNNING: Legally it was discovered that the dump did apply and that the imposition of excise duties in any country automatically rendered the goods exported to this country liable to the dump. This was not an action by this parliament, and I wish to draw a clear distinction there. If hon. gentlemen opposite are right when they say the tariff on silk is not high enough, then the proper way to proceed to deal with it is not by this roundabout method of having a dump automatically apply, because there is an excise duty in the country of origin. They should go before the tariff board and have a hearing; let the public come in and see what are the facts. I have every respect for my two hon. friends opposite, but I would prefer to have both sides presented in a manner which would enable the people of Canada to judge between them, and then this parliament would be in a position to decide as to whether the rates of duty should be increased or lowered. I do not think it is the desire of parliament to continue the operation of something of this kind which is unquestionably wrong in principle. I am prepared to accede to the request of my hon. friend from Lincoln to allow the matter to stand over until Monday.

Mr. CAHAN: Just one word in reply to the minister. The Minister of Finance says that the rate of duty should be a matter considered by the tariff board, and that if the present rate of duty upon silk fabrics is not sufficient it should be raised in order to compensate for the difference between the wage rate in Japan and that in Canada. Why should not my hon. friend proceed now to place this question before the tariff board before wiping out the protection which these companies now enjoy? Let the whole question be placed before the tariff board as to whether this dumping provision should apply, and at the same time the board could consider whether or not the ordinary rate of duty should be raised. When we have several large factories in one province maintaining a certain standard of business and giving employment to hundreds of men and women, why change one provision which gives them protection for the time being without giving them at the same time an opportunity to be heard by the tariff board as to whether or not the regular rate of duty is sufficient to protect them against lower rates of wages in other countries, which in Japan are one-fourth the wages in Quebec, and which in Great Britain are about one-half the Quebec rate.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I just want to direct the attention of the minister to another aspect of the case. These firms started business only a few years ago, and the minister wants to know how it is they continue to do business from 1919 on. I will tell him. When these people started business the prices of Japanese cloth were very different from the prices of to-day. As time went on those prices gradually became lower, until these people were forced to come to the department for redress. That is the situation. However, I do not want to continue the argument; I am quite satisfied to have the matter laid over, and I am obliged to the minister for doing so.

Mr. KELLNER: Can the minister tell us whether any imports of tobacco are affected by this provision?

Mr. DUNNING: No, we know of none. Such tobacco as comes from England is exempt under the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN: Resolution No. 2 stands.

Resolution stands.

5. Animals, living n.o.p. British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent. Provided that, if any country imposes upon such animals produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such animals entering Canada from such country.

The CHAIRMAN: This item was before the committee last evening.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: As this is the first item which provides for countervailing duties I would like the minister to give us a little explanation as to how he thinks this will work out in practice. For instance, supposing someone in Canada wished to import into this country an animal from Czechoslovakia or Poland or some other country where the dtuies are higher than they are in Canada, would that person be able to get that information from the department immediately without any difficulty, before purchasing the animal and ordering it sent here?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: They have all that information?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: In all the various customs offices throughout the country?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, the foreign tariff division has that information.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: A man in Calgary, for instance, who wished to import an animal could get information there as to the duty he would have to pay?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What would you do in the case of the French tariff, which changes over night?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The same condition applies to the United States; their duties are liable to be changed very quickly. I am not quite sure how long it takes to change their tariff at the present time.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Mr. CAHAN: Sometimes a presidential decree can be put through in forty-eight hours.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The president can change the tariff after consulting the commission. That would mean that our duties would change from week to week, exactly as their duties change?

Mr. DUNNING: Against identical goods coming from that country.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That is, if an importer in this country wished to bring in an animal from the United States first he would have to find out the duty on the same animal going into the United States before he would know what he would have to pay here?

Mr. DUNNING: The tariff changes are not so frequent as to cause difficulty in that connection.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Quite so, but we have known times when they have occurred quite frequently. At any rate, an importer bringing animals into this country would have to inquire as to the duty on animals of the same kind going into the United States before he would know what he would have to pay in order to bring those animals into Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: He could get that information at any Canadian customs port.

Mr. LADNER: What were the imports under this item from the United Kingdom in 1929?

Mr. DUNNING: Nearly $37,000.

Mr. LADNER: According to the trade returns there were no imports. There were importations of animals to improve stock, but not otherwise.

Mr. ROWE: In what way does the minister hope to make an improvement either in British or Canadian trade by removing the 15 per cent duty on live animals?

Mr. DUNNING: I have just pointed out that our imports of all animals from the United Kingdom amounted to nearly $37,000 during the last fiscal year.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: Under this item, and from the United States during the same period they amounted to $281,000. In considering the matter it seemed to me that it was rather absurd to have a tariff of 15 per cent against Great Britain on live animals, judging from the relative smallness of the trade. Of course, there are some special types of animals, not particularly farm animals, which reasonably might come from that country, but many of those come in under the other heading for the improvement of stock, and enter at a very low rate.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do those figures include animals brought in for the improvement of stock?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The figures you gave are the figures for dutiable imports?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister gave us the figures for imports from the United States. Would he let me know how much of that total represents the importation of horses?

Mr. DUNNING: $219,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Horses were the largest single item?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And what was the value of those horses?

Mr. DUNNING: $219,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And I believe that represented some three thousand horses. In other words, these horses were worth $70 each. What were they used for? As I understand the minister's object in changing that duty, it is to change the trade from the United States to Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not say that at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then what is the object of making this change and putting this item on the free list? Is it to allow more English horses to come in to compete with the American horses? The only English horses which are dutiable are those valued at around $500 each, and those are not used for the improvement of stock. They are used as hunters or as sporting horses. The purchasers of such horses are able to pay the duty into the revenue of this country, and now it is proposed to allow such animals to come in free.

Mr. DUNNING: In one breath my hon. friend talks about imports from the United Kingdom, and in the next of imports from the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I can breathe twice, and there is no harm in talking about both classes of imports.

Mr. DUNNING: I must object to my hon. friend mixing them up.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am far from being mixed.

Mr. DUNNING: Last year $219,000 worth of horses came in from the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And I told you there were three thousand.

Mr. DUNNING: And then my hon. friend went on to state that it was the wealthy man's horse which was imported from the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I never said anything of the kind. I said that the horses coming from England were hunters and valued at about $500 each, and it was now proposed to allow that class of animal to come in free. I say that that is not right, either from a business or an economic point of view. The people who bring in that class of horse should pay a duty.

Mr. DUNNING: Thirty-six thousand dollars worth of horses came in from England last year.

An hon. MEMBER: Sixty-nine horses.

Mr. DUNNING: Sixty-nine horses. We farmers are very much worried about that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We farmers?

Mr. ROWE: When the hon. minister mentions "we farmers," I think he must realize that many of us are trying to breed that type of horse. In what way does it assist Canadian trade to take from the treasury approximately $4,000 on that single item? The price is reduced by $75 on high-jumpers, Irish hunters, and animals of that class which the minister or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) would wish to ride. Such a reduction is in direct competition with those of us who are endeavouring to produce that type of horse. I cannot see any reason for this change unless it is to camouflage the exact meaning of British preference. This reduction from 15 per cent to the free list on this item offers competition to the Canadian farmer. Horses brought in for breeding purposes are allowed in free of duty, and last year about seventy-five horses of that class were brought in, valued at $1,000 each.

Mr. DUNNING: Breeding stock.

Mr. ROWE: Yes, breeding stock.

Mr. DUNNING: And they were allowed in free.

Mr. ROWE: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: And they are allowed in free at the present time.

Mr. ROWE: Yes. This is all unpedigreed stock. The same applies to the sheep and cattle, and all down the line. The pedigreed sheep brought in numbered about 210, valued at about $94 each. The unpedigreed stock imported numbered about 15 sheep valued at $12 each. A reduction of 15 per cent is being made to help British sales. The same thing applies to cattle. The importations amounted to 388 head of pedigreed stock worth about $400 each, allowed in free for the purpose of improving stock in this country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They were allowed in free before.

Mr. ROWE: Yes, that is quite true. In order to show a great preference to British trade, it is proposed to reduce the duty from 15 per cent to the free list on four head of cattle worth $125 each, which does not equal the price we would be receiving for our dairy cows if we had reasonable protection. The same situation applies to the items all down the line; in some cases the duty is reduced by 15 to 20 per cent. This seems to me to be evidence of the effort to camouflage the real meaning of British preference, in putting on the free list items which would not account for very much trade.

The reduction on the duty on horses will amount to about $75 per head, and, as the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) has said, it gives a benefit to a certain class of purchaser. Those horses are brought in to show how high they can jump at the Royal Winter fair and the Canadian National exhibition, because I venture to say that out of the 56 horses of unpedigreed stock worth about $500 each, every one would be found to possess some qualification in jumping or hunting. An unpedigreed horse worth $500 must possess other qualifications. That is the sporting type of horse, the show horse, the high-jumper or the race horse, and it is proposed to give a reduction of $75 per animal to the purchasers of that type of horse. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) knows that the farmers of Canada are making an effort to breed this type of horse. His department has made grants to special committees to help in the development of the high class type of hunter. Rapid advancement has been made in the breeding of this type of horse, and I believe the Minister of Agriculture realizes that this preference will offer direct competition to those whom his department is endeavouring to assist.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CAHAN: For the purposes of this discussion, would the Minister of Finance state succinctly just what countries are covered by the British preferential tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: They are as follows:

The United Kingdom;
The British colony of Bermuda;
The British colonies commonly called the British West Indies, including the following,—
The Bahamas;
Jamaica;
Turks and Caicos islands;
The Leeward islands (Antigua, St. Christopher-Nevis, Dominica, Montserrat, and the Virgin islands);
The Windward islands (Grenada, St. Vincent and St. Lucia); Barbados;
Trinidad and Tobago;
British Guiana;
British India;
Ceylon;
Straits Settlements;
New Zealand;
Union of South Africa;
Southern Rhodesia;
any other British colony or possession admitted to the benefits of the British preferential tariff in Canada, in the manner hereinafter provided;

By an order in council passed since that time the benefits of the British preferential tariff have been extended to the following countries:

Swaziland;
Basutoland;
Bechuanaland protectorate;
Northern Rhodesia;
Nyasaland protectorate;
Uganda protectorate;
East Africa protectorate;
Protectorate of Northern Nigeria;
Colony and protectorate of Southern Nigeria;
Gold Coast;
Sierra Leone;
Gambia;
Somaliland protectorate;
Federated Malay States;
British North Borneo;
Sarawak;
Brunei;
Mauritius and dependencies thereof;
Seychelles;
St. Helena;
Ascension;
Friendly or Tonga islands;
Fiji;
Falkland islands;
British Honduras.

Later on the preference was extended to the Irish Free State, the territory of Western Samoa and to Newfoundland.

Mr. CAHAN: Does not the minister think that in dealing with so many different and diverse countries it is rather absurd to insert the following provision:

Provided that, if any country imposes upon such animals—

As it is in this case, or commodities, we will say.

—produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such animals (or commodities) entering Canada from such country.

Is that not an entirely wrong policy? I am for the moment leaving out of consideration the fact that is alleged that this enables some other country by its own arbitrary action to determine what shall be the customs duties on importations into Canada from that country, but does not such a provsion introduce into the Canadian tariff such complexities as shall be for all time a source of widely extended and increasing embarrassment? I submit to the Prime Minister that the policy in a country such as Canada, as agreed upon by the representative opinions of both parties, in certain cases at least is that the tariff of Canada should be enacted in view of the special conditions which prevail in this country and not in view of the special conditions which prevail in any other country.

Mr. DUNNING: That is what we are doing.

Mr. CAHAN: I have looked through various tariff discussions which have occurred and that pronouncement or one to that effect has been frequently made by leaders of the Liberal party.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is sound. That is what we are doing in this budget.

Mr. CAHAN: I knew the Prime Minister would regard that as sound. I have not any quotations at hand, but I could produce from some of my right hon. friend's own addresses quotations along that line. Conditions prevailing in Canada are different from those prevailing in New Zealand or Australia or South Africa or the African states, and very different from those prevailing in the tropics, such as the Windward islands, the Leeward islands and all the rest of them of which I have a clear vision, because I have visited them more times than I can now remember. Therefore it seems to me that the essential principle should be to determine what rate of duty on any particular commodity is reasonably necessary to meet the conditions surrounding the production of that commodity in our own land. We may advocate protection or free trade in the extreme, but as practical policies they do not now exist in this country. The governments of the past have adopted as a practical policy that those productive activities of this country which afford remunerative employment to our people and which tend to develop our natural resources and to utilize them in the processes of refining and manufacture, are entitled to favourable consideration, especially if they have been long established. I think I remember one address delivered by the Prime Minister in my native province of Nova Scotia some years ago, where he laid down the policy that industries that had been long established in Canada should receive favourable consideration from the government. He did not say exclusively by customs tariff, for he did suggest that even outside of the customs tariff there were many ways whereby such productive activities could be encouraged in this country. What the Minister of Finance is doing now is this: he is neglecting to give any consideration to the special conditions which prevail in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CAHAN: He is neglecting, overlooking and turning his blind eye to all the industrial activities which properly and justifiably, in the opinion of both sides of the house, may be carried on in this Dominion.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CAHAN: He is saying that the tariff will not be determined by the necessities of domestic production.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, he is saying that. He is saying at least that such shall not be the primary and potent consideration in the mind of the government and parliament in imposing these duties. He is saying that some foolish and feeble attempt will be made to retaliate by countervailing duties against another country if it imposes on its imports of certain commodities from Canada a higher duty than we in Canada impose upon such commodities coming from that other country. I do not want to use an extreme word, but that seems to me to be a foolish and feeble foundation for any economic or fiscal policy which should be adopted in a country such as this. I can picture many countries between here and Patagonia, if you will, many of those countries of Central and South America, and I am simply indulging in an idea that I may not live to see carried out but that I believe another generation will, namely, that extensive markets for the products of Canada will some time be found south of the Rio Grande in Central America and in the South American republics. Another generation will appreciate that fact. This generation does not. Why, then, should we impose upon Brazil in regard to any special commodity a higher rate of duty than is essential for the proper development of that industry in Canada, simply because Brazil, in dealing with the wide world, finds that to protect—I shall use the word in its proper sense—its own industrial activities, it has to impose a higher duty than we do against the world. It seems to me that we are proceeding on a wrong basis; that the primary aim and object should be, by common censent of both parties, to impose a customs tariff solely with a view to its beneficial effects upon the productive activities of our own country, without special regard to those different conditions which may prevail in other countries in Europe and the Americas. With that in view I should like to say that with regard to all the provisions in the list similar to those I have just quoted, they seem to me to be futile, ineffective, and I would almost use a stronger word if it were parliamentary.

Mr. DUNNING: I am quite sure my hon. friend would. Let us look at this item from a practical point of view and see what it really does. It says to nations of the British commonwealth that Canada is willing to trade with them in live animals on a reciprocally free basis. To the countries under treaty we say with respect to animals: The tariff that we consider fair is 22½ per cent. We will welcome reciprocity with you on the basis of 22½ per cent. We say to the United States and to all those countries under the general tariff: Our tariff is 25 per cent, and we do not go below that except under the special provisions of section 11 of our customs tariff, which have been there for a number of years so far as the United States is concerned. We say to them: We are satisfied with a 25 per cent tariff, and we would like to meet you reciprocally on that basis. If you come down to 25 per cent, our tariff comes down to 25 per cent in connection with animals. That is what we say. My hon. friend regards that as impracticable and foolish. I am inclined to think that it is a common sense policy which will appeal to our people.

Mr. ROWE: I wish to ask a question for information with respect to that 25 per cent duty. Has any arrangement been made to change the valuation? For instance, the United States have always had a higher valuation on our animals going in there than our valuation on their animals coming in here. Last year several carloads of cheap horses came into this country from Montana and some were sold in the city of Toronto at a valuation of $30 apiece, while our horses enter the United States valued at approximately $100 apiece.

Mr. DUNNING: That would be a matter of customs administration as to the value.

Mr. ROWE: But would the countervailing duty principle enable our customs officers to raise their valuation?

Mr. DUNNING: It would make no difference whatever to the powers of the customs officers in that regard.

Mr. ROWE: The minimum valuation on our horses going into the United States is $100, while our valuation is much lower. That makes quite a difference so far as the cheaper class of horses is concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: There is at present in our tariff an item with respect to horses. There is at present a specific rate of duty, which is not touched by this revision, on horses valued at $50 or less per head. The rates are $10 $12.50 and $12.50 per head.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That depends on the age of the animal?

Mr. DUNNING: No, on horses valued at $50 or less per head. That item has been in the tariff for many years, presumably to deal with that class of horses.

Mr. ROWE: A duty of $10 or $12.50 per head would mean that the United States could send in here carloads of horses from Montana and elsewhere, a cheap type of horse. We have had too many of them during the past few years coming in here from different parts of the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend know how large the importation really was under that item, how many horses came in?

Mr. ROWE: I cannot say how many.

Mr. DUNNING: Only $6,000 worth during the whole year.

Mr. ROWE: With a higher valuation against our horses by the United States, it would mean that the duty would not countervail at all.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no countervailing duty on horses under $50 per head. We are discussing living animals, which includes all horses save those valued at less than $50 per head.

Mr. ROWE: I have seen many come in here at a valuation of $30 a head, and our horses of the same type would be valued when they went into the United States at $100 or $150 a head.

Mr. KENNEDY: This is an interesting item, but I do not know that it means a very great deal. It applies to animals living, n.o.p. I have no special objection to the provision, but I do not think it means a very great deal. I have here the Trade of Canada for the calendar year 1929, and I find that cattle from Great Britain, n.o.p., were imported in 1928 to the number of four head, valued at $525; in 1929, five head, valued at $1,351. Our imports of hogs n.o.p. were nothing in 1928 and nothing in 1929.

Mr. DUNNING: Hogs are not included in the item under discussion. They are a separate item.

Mr. KENNEDY: There is a little confusion in the items. Item No. 5 is animals, living, n.o.p., and item No. 6 deals with live hogs. In the Trade of Canada I find an item, hogs, under animals for improvement of stock, and then another item of hogs, n.o.p., under animals living. We have hogs, n.o.p. Apparently the other hogs were free, hogs for improvement of stock and exhibition purposes. I am dealing with the n.o.p. article. In the Trade of Canada, for the calendar year 1929, I find that we imported of horses, n.o.p., 71 head in 1928, valued at $38,013, and 44 head in 1929, valued at $24,439; sheep, n.o.p., 19 head, valued at $226, in 1928, and 7 head valued at $105, in 1929. There is an item further down on page 42, all other animals, living, n.o.p. under which our imports from the United Kingdom amounted to $12,754 in 1928, and $11,073 in 1929. So that as far as the British preference is concerned, it may be possible to develop some business as a result of this change in the tariff, but I do not think it means a great deal.

When we come to the other side, to the exports and imports between the United States and Canada, I find that the total value of all living animals brought into Canada in the year 1928, which includes all animals for exhibition purposes and improvement of live stock, was $3,165,941; from Great Britain, $303,010, and from the United States, $2,852,531. I am not going to weary the house by giving the 1929 figures, but they are in about the same proportion. When we come to our exports, we exported total animals, living, to the value of $17,492,491 in 1928; to the United Kingdom, $90,985, and to the United States, $16,648,945. In 1929, we exported total animals, living, to the value of $16,453,235; to the United Kingdom, $61,966, and to the United States, $15,163,226.

My point is this. A countervailing tariff, or brick for brick tariff, if you like to call it that, does not amount to very much when we exported to the United States 16 million dollars in 1928 and $15,000,000 in 1929, and imported from the United States about $2,800,000. I am afraid that a small amount of duty on that little surplus being exported from the United States to Canada does not mean a great deal to the Canadian farmer. So that a brick for brick policy or countervailing tariff on a certain specified item does not necessarily mean a great deal. It all depends on which way the goods flow.

Mr. DUNNING: If it should possibly have the effect of attracting consideration in the United States to the height of their duties against our cattle, for instance, which is a very important consideration so far as the western farmer is concerned, would that not have some real value?

Mr. KENNEDY: It might.

Mr. COOTE: How are you going to determine which value is higher when our tariff on certain items is on an ad valorem basis and the United States tariff is a specific rate of so much per pound?

Mr. DUNNING: Just whichever is greater on the particular consignment in question; that is all.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me that there might be in one consignment some animals on which 25 per cent would be higher and others where two and a half or two cents a pound might be higher. Apparently it is going to necessitate the customs officers looking over the consignment and figuring the duty both ways and applying whichever one is higher.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, it may involve that difficulty in some cases.

Mr. KENNEDY: I should like to make a suggestion to the minister. Would it be possible to have printed and filed a statement in connection with each of these items showing the imports from and exports to the various countries? I think such information would save a lot of questioning.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to help, but I can tell my hon. friend the information is very voluminous. This year I have gone further than ever has been done previously in providing exact comparative information for members with respect to the various items.

I had not previously had any demand for what might be called the wholesale printing of information. My own information comprises five books like the one before me. The information he suggests would be voluminous, and even then one cannot guarantee just the precise information which some individual member may require. I do not think it would be practicable, although for a future occasion I shall be glad to bear in mind the possibility of incorporating something further than has been done this year.

Mr. FRASER: Might I direct the attention of the minister to the punctuation in the second line. I am under the impression that the last comma there is in the wrong place. The proviso reads:

Provided that, if any country imposes upon such animals produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item,—

Now, that goes through every item in the schedules. I think it should be changed.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The comma should come after "Canada."

Mr. DUNNING: I think we can save argument if I promise my hon. friend that I will bring it to the attention of the legal draftsmen who are responsible for putting commas in the proper places. It strikes me on the face of it that my hon. friend's criticism is sound, but I will not venture to dispute with the legal draftsmen on the point.

Mr. FRASER: Is there anyone in the minister's department who will argue that that comma is in the right place?

Mr. DUNNING: I will not take sides in the dispute.

Mr. SENN: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it would not be asking too much of the minister to show in respect of each of the sixteen or eighteen articles on which countervailing duties are to be levied just what the present duty is so far as these goods coming in from the United States are concerned, as well as the volume.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I gave figures a little while ago as to the values of the imports. As to the duties relating to the United States, I have here the present duties and those which, so far as we know, are proposed in the new United States legislation. When I say "so far as we know," my hon. friend will appreciate the difficulty, as those rates are being moved backwards and forwards, at least in prospect, sometimes from day to day. So I cannot vouch for the detailed accuracy of the proposed rates. On cattle entering the United States from Canada the present rates are one and a half and two cents a pound based on weight; the proposed rates are two and a half and three cents a pound. On sheep the present rate is $2 per head; the proposed rate is $3 per head. On horses valued at $150 or less, the present duty is $30 per head and the proposed duty is the same; on horses valued over $150 the present duty is 20 per cent and the proposed duty is the same.

Mr. ROWE: Does the wording of this item mean that if, for instance, an animal or any product produced in Canada is not exported to the United States no countervailing protection will apply?

Mr. DUNNING: This is not a question of protection. It is a question of determining the rate of duty, which can only be determined when the commodity is exported to the other country. The intention is plain, and was conveyed to the legal draftsmen, that if another country imposes upon such animal produced in and imported from Canada a rate which is higher than the rate here set out, then that rate shall apply on their goods coming this way.

Mr. ROWE: Even though we have none to export?

Mr. DUNNING: That does not make any difference.

Mr. ROWE: Suppose we bring in from the United States live animals, finish them here, and then export them to the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: Do we do that?

Mr. ROWE: Yes, both in Quebec and Ontario we do it with horses.

Mr. DUNNING: The term "produced in" has general application in connection with customs administration. There would not be any difficulty.

Mr. ROWE: They would not necessarily have to be produced in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—6. Live hogs: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents per pound; general tariff, 1½ cents per pound.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon live hogs produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such hogs entering Canada from such country.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What were the importations from Great Britain last year?

Mr. DUNNING: There were no traceable imports from Great Britain. From the United States altogether $23,000 worth came in. My information is that so far as live hogs are concerned, early this spring they did enter to a large degree than ever before at Toronto and some other markets. The figures of last year's imports do not reveal that condition.

Mr. CHAPLIN: From where?

Mr. DUNNING: From the United States.

Mr. GEARY: I would not advise the Minister of Finance to rely on lawyers too much as to where to place commas; I think it would be better for him to consult a grammarian. But it seems to me that this section contains a graver fault than the mere error in punctuation. It provides that:

—if any country imposes upon live hogs produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such hogs—

Which means hogs raised in Canada.

—entering Canada from such country.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Putting this item on the free list under the British preferential tariff will not produce any trade within the empire?

Mr. DUNNING: No. This is one of the items, about fifty in number, in connection with which, as I stated in the budget address, it seemed to me absurd to maintain a duty against the other countries of the British empire.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You do not expect to get a revenue from the item, anyway.

Mr. DUNNING: In connection with live hogs?

Mr. CHAPLIN: If you had had a duty you would not have had a revenue.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You could not have any importation.

Mr. DUNNING: If we may judge from past experience we are unlikely to have any importation of live hogs.

Mr. COOTE: What is the rate imposed in the case of live hogs?

Mr. DUNNING: The present rate is ½ cent a pound and the proposed rate is 2 cents a pound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—7. Meats, fresh, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, 2 cents; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 3½ cents.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon such goods produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such goods entering Canada from such country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What were the imports from Great Britain under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports in 1929 were valued at $998,000, of which $667,000 came from Australia and New Zealand, and $316,000 from the United States. We are not proposing any change in the specific rates. The present United States rate on beef and veal is 3 cents, and, as proposed by the Senate tariff bill, 6 cents. On mutton the present rate is 2½ cents and the proposed rate 5 cents. On lamb the present rate is 4 cents and the proposed rate 7 cents. On pork the present rate is ¾ of a cent and the proposed rate 2½ cents. On all other meats the present United States rates are 20 per cent, with a specific rate of 6 cents a pound.

Mr. KENNEDY: In a previous debate the minister said something about negotiating a new treaty with New Zealand. His statement is referred to in the budget. The matter I have in mind possibly should be discussed under the agriculture estimates, but I think it has sufficient bearing on the present item to have a place in this discussion. We are importing large quantities of lamb and mutton from New Zealand and Australia, but we have no statistics to show the respective amounts of mutton and lamb which are imported. As far as I can find out what is happening is that the Department of Agriculture is spending a large sum of money to encourage Canadian farmers to raise lamb. The wholesale price of lamb in Toronto during the year 1929, showed an average of 24.97 cents per pound. In 1929, we imported some of these meats from the United States at an average price of 34.3 cents. We are importing large quantities of mutton from New Zealand and Australia, and in 1929 the average price for Australian mutton was 11.75 cents and for the New Zealand mutton 14.53 cents. From these figures I am sure that New Zealand and Australian mutton are being sold as lamb over Canadian counters. To my mind there is great need for a rigid grading system, to eliminate unfair competition. I am quite satisfied that there have been importations of Australian and New Zealand muton into Ottawa. I do not believe we have been getting Canadian, United States, Australian or New Zealand lamb during the last few months. When the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture are negotiating a treaty I would like them to bear these facts in mind.

Mr. DUNNING: Thank you.

Mr. GEARY: The question is: When does mutton cease to be lamb?

Mr. EVANS: A countervailing duty is undoubtedly a dealer's measure. It protects only the dealer, and it operates every time at the expense of the consumer. We will say, for instance, that when there is a glut on the American market they will at once raise their duty on foodstuffs. That might apply to meats. In conformity with the terms of the countervailing duty Canada's tariff rate must go up in order to meet that of the United States. That does not prevent the passage of meats across the border from one country to another because prices to the consumer go up in each country. However, it does give the dealer in each country a chance to fleece the consumer, and to my mind that is the effect that the countervailing duty will have upon the Canadian consumer.

Mr. DUNNING: Speaking of this specific item, I cannot agree with my hon. friend when he describes the effect it will have upon the consumer in this country. Canada produces vast quantities of meats, and she exports those meats in competition with the world. As we develop—as I hope and believe we will—a greater cooperative effort for the disposal of those meats, the countervailing duties in connection with fresh meats certainly will not have the effect of raising the price to the consumer.

Mr. EVANS: There has been practically no relationship between the price paid to the farmer and the price the consumer has had to pay the retail stores. That is very largely due to the control of prices by the packers of this country, and this measure will give them greater opportunity to fix their own prices. A countervailing duty cannot be effective in the interests of any country or the interests of the general public unless it comes down to freer trade. It is entirely a dealer's measure, and advantage will be taken by those controlling the supply. We have not taken advantage of countervailing duties when we have been offered free trade. For many years the United States has been offering us free trade in coal. We have never taken advantage of the offer but have chosen to put a duty on our coal, which the consumer has had to pay. Countervailing duties on meats, eggs and any other commodities will always operate against the interests of the consumer. I wish to say that my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) was quite right, despite his party blindness; it would seem that at times he talks in the interests of the general public. There is no doubt that these countervailing duties will raise the cost of living in this country, especially in view of the fact that the packers will have control of prices. Duties will go up in both countries when the supply is in the hands of those packers. Where the local market can be controlled by local supplies the prices may be more regular, but once the supply becomes greater than the local market can handle the price will go up because it is controlled by the packers.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to say a word regarding the remarks of my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), as to the importation of Australian mutton and lamb. During the past two weeks I have had the unfortunate experience of buying what was supposed to be lamb. I am sure however that it must have been part of an old ewe. That kind of thing is hurting the market for good lamb, and I am inclined to believe that the mutton, or so-called lamb, came from Australia. I would like some information from the minister as to the imports of beef from Australia for the last calendar year, or for the first three months of this year if the figures are available, and while he is giving me those figures he might give me the tariffs on beef and mutton in New Zealand and Australia.

Mr. DUNNING: The Australian duty on meats, frozen or smoked, under the British preference is 2 pence per pound or approximately four cents in our money, and under the general tariff 2½ pence or approximately five cents. I have not before me at the moment the separated figures with respect to the different kinds of meat. The total importations from Australia and New Zealand last year amounted to $667,000.

Mr. COOTE: Have you the quantity in pounds as well as the value?

Mr. DUNNING: Apparently there was no beef imported from Australia in 1929, during which period we imported from New Zealand about $140,000 worth of beef. From Australia we imported mutton and lamb, fresh, chilled or frozen, to the extent of $377,000 and from New Zealand to the extent of $50,000. From New Zealand we imported 487,000 pounds of mutton and lamb and from Australia 2,900,000 pounds.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister tell the committee if there were any importations of meat from the Argentine?

Mr. DUNNING: We imported no fresh meat at all from the Argentine.

Mr. LUCAS: It comes in under the head of canned meats, I presume?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and we will come to that item presently.

Mr. BRADY: Under this item I should like to direct the attention of the minister to what I consider to be a grave omission from the list of items under the countervailing duties. I refer to fish, which I think should be included under this heading. If any hon. member questions me I can quote from the Bible, from Murray's classical dictionary and from Webster's new international dictionary to prove that fish is meat, and consequently should be included under this item. The fishing industry on the Pacific coast is very important, and I am quite sure that if a few facts are laid before the government they will realize the importanace of including fish under the countervailing tariff.

Here is the situation. At the present moment on the Pacific coast over 315 American vessels are engaged in the halibut trade, and they use Canadian ports without paying any dues at all. There are no harbour dues; they have the full freedom of those ports and they pay only $1 for a fishing licence. They have the full benefit of our railways in order to send their products to the American market, and they are able to get for their fresh fish 2 cents per pound more than the Canadian fisherman gets.

Mr. HEAPS: Why?

Mr. BRADY: There is a duty of 2 cents per pound imposed on Canadian fish entering the United States. The result is that the Canadian fisherman is penalized to the extent of 2 cents a pound on his fish. If, on a stormy day, a Canadian fisherman should be unable to reach the port of Prince Rupert and should turn into the port of Ketchikan, which is seventy miles north in United States territory, he has to pay port dues, entrance and clearing charges, and other things which cost a considerable sum, varying in respect of the size of the vessel. The point I should like to bring strongly to the attention of the minister is this: Why should not the Canadian fishermen be protected in accordance with the principle laid down by the countervailing duty which the government is applying to other commodities? Is he not entitled at least to have that protection which has been afforded other industries such as agriculture? I have under my hand correspondence from many quarters; from the senator representing Alaska; from the report of the United States tariff commission; from the Seattle Fishermen's Association and from the Canadian Halibut Union, and all are agreed that a reasonable solution is possible. Until now we could not get the government to believe that when we advocated something for the relief of the Canadian Pacific fishermen we were not urging retaliation against the United States. That myth is dead; there is no more heard of it now, only I trust that the government will see to it that this very important industry is given relief. It is only what is coming to it and is in accord with the principle which has been laid down under the item now under discussion. Without saying anything further, I hope this matter will receive the immediate attention of the Minister of Finance and that he will add this one item to the present list.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course I shall be very glad to consider anything advanced by my hon. friend, but I would respectfully refer him to the wholesale condemnation of the countervailing idea as expressed by his colleague from St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. BRADY: But could you not do something in the way of some landing tax which would give relief to our Canadian fishermen?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): When these ships come in loaded with their fish is it not an advantage to your ports? Do they not buy the packages in which the fish are shipped, and the ice which is put up by your own workmen? Do not the Canadian railroads carry those fish from your ports to the United States? Do not your ports get vast advantages out of that situation?

Mr. BRADY: That is conceded; they buy their ice there, and no doubt the railways receive substantial profits from that traffic. We desire to have them receive those profits, and we welcome the American fishermen to our port. But the American fisherman who enters our ports is not permitted by his government to have any repairs done, nor can he except in a limited degree purchase any supplies at that port; he must do that in United States territory. In other words, he sells his fish on the exchange in competition with Canadian fishermen at a price 2 cents per pound above that received by the Canadian fisherman, and gets the full benefits of the port. I think it will be agreed that some right lies on the side of Canadian fishermen.

because he is asking only for a fair and equitable agreement.

Prince Rupert is the only harbour on the Pacific coast which meets the requirements of the large American fishing fleet. Ketchikan has no railway connection to the United States market. Last year there were landed in Prince Rupert 30,500,000 pounds of halibut, of which the Canadians sold about 3,750,000 pounds to the United States. If the American fishermen were not permitted to enter Prince Rupert harbour, they would be forced to travel often nearly 1,200 miles to Seattle, and that would be a difficult and dangerous voyage in bad weather even for the larger boats. The Canadian fisherman asks that the provision which is to be applied to other industries should be applied to the third greatest industry in Canada; he asks that this industry be given a fair chance.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The explanation given by the hon. member might apply to certain conditions prevailing in British Columbia, but I would like to hear from some of the hon. members from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BRADY: What are the Americans doing on the Atlantic seaboard? A Canadian fishing vessel on the Atlantic seaboard cannot enter an American port in order to sell its fish; it must return to a Canadian port and transfer the fish into carriers for disposal in United States markets. What is being done in Prince Rupert? American vessels to the number of over 300 enter the port without paying anything, the fish is sold on the exchange in competition with Canadian fish, put into bond and given quick transit into the United States. This question has never been brought by the government before the United States in the right manner, and I do honestly believe that the United States government will assist in a correct settlement of this problem, one which would give to the Canadian halibut fisherman that which he is entitled to. The port of Prince Rupert and the Canadian fishermen should be treated on an equitable basis, especially when one considers that the United States is considering the raising of the duty on frozen halibut to 5 cents per pound.

We have been hearing of Japan in connection with silk, but let us consider that country from a fishing standpoint. Last year the Japanese landed in the city of Seattle 400,000 pounds of very excellent frozen halibut, which was sold at 9 cents per pound, which price included the 2 cents per pound duty. Let us suppose that the rate suggested by the United States tariff board goes into effect—what might happen? Japan would immediately turn her attention to Canada and it would not be very long before a serious situation might exist here. The Japanese can catch the fish, bring them across the Pacific to Seattle, and sell them for 9 cents per pound. Would the Canadian fisherman, operating a five-man boat, be able to compete with the Japanese?

Mr. DUNNING: Will the hon. member explain why Japanese fish are not brought to Canada instead of to the United States? My information is that no Japanese halibut comes to Canada, even though we have a lower rate of duty than has the United States.

Mr. BRADY: They have larger markets in Seattle.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What is the Japanese rate of duty on halibut?

Mr. BRADY: I do not know, but I know that the American rate is 2 cents per pound. Last year the United States was able to send 1,125,000 pounds of halibut into Canada on a payment of one cent per pound duty.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): You cannot shut out Japanese halibut by a countervailing duty.

Mr. BRADY: Do not try to misinterpret my meaning. My hon. friend will not get me to say something which I do not mean. I made that illustration to show that the Canadian fisherman is entitled to consideration because of the present duty of 2 cents and the threat made by the United States to raise the rate on frozen halibut to 5 cents per pound. It is the little things which swing the pivot or change the flow of commerce. I think I have placed squarely before the finance minister and the government the desire of the Canadian fishermen, namely, to get justice in their fair demands.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister tell the committee the situation in Nova Scotia?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Perhaps the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) could tell us.

Mr. SHORT: The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) has said that he would like to hear from someone from the Atlantic coast. I want to say that I am quite in accord with the statements made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) with reference to a countervailing duty on fish. The Americans are threatening to increase the duty on frozen halibut, and I think we should have a countervailing duty instead of the present rate of one cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friends have been condemning those countervailing duties; they said that that would be a made-in Washington policy.

Mr. BRADY: Put a straight duty on then, or a port tax.

Mr. SHORT: That is the only thing you offer us, so how can we go after you for anything else? The hon. member for Skeena is quite right in the position he takes. The fishing industry in this country would be in a much better position had we a department of fisheries capable of handling the affairs of the industry. If laws were enacted governing the landing of fish in British Columbia, we would soon find the American fishermen offering us some concessions on the Atlantic. The American fishing vessels are allowed to use our ports without any restrictions; they can enter the port, land their cargoes and transport to the United States, but our vessels cannot enter an American port, even upon the payment of the duty of 2 cents per pound. If we want to send fish to the United States they must be landed at a Canadian port and transhipped into a regular carrier.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do American boats call at Nova Scotia ports?

Mr. SHORT: They do, but under certain restrictions.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Those restrictions do not exist on the Pacific coast?

Mr. SHORT: They do not exist on the Pacific coast at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is what I wanted to find out from the minister.

Mr. SHORT: A United States boat cannot come into one of our Atlantic ports and purchase bait and other supplies, but United States vessels can do this on the Pacific coast. That is where we have a lever. If we had a business administration handling the affairs of the Fisheries department, they would have looked into the matter long ago and used that lever with the United States. Then the United States would have been willing to give us concessions in regard to our markets for Atlantic fish. That is the answer to that. I am quite in accord with what the hon. member for Skeena has said with reference to the fishing industry on the Pacific coast. If we would look after our own interests on the Pacific coast, we would have our United States friends offering us entirely different terms with reference to our Atlantic fish.

Mr. STEVENS: The question which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Skeena is really worthy of every consideration. I do not want to rebuke the minister, but I think he treated in a rather light manner what was a very fair and courteous presentation, and I notice that some of his supporters rather laughed at the proposal. Let us look at the matter frankly for a moment and let me supplement what the hon. member for Skeena has most ably and courteously put forward. In the Pacific ocean there is a great fishing area inside and outside of territorial waters. The United States fishermen come north from Seattle and fish outside the territorial waters in international waters. They have in the United States no place where they can properly handle that fish. We extend to them without any interference whatever all the courtesies that are extended to a Canadian fishing boat. They bring their fish into Prince Rupert and by virtue of that privilege, a strictly Canadian privilege, which is extended to them, they are enabled to ship about 27,000,000 pounds of halibut a year, chiefly to the New England market, as against 3,000,000 pounds that Canadian fishermen are able to fish into that market. Why cannot the Canadian fishermen ship as much as the United States fishermen? For the very simple reason that the United States impose a duty of two cents a pound on the fish which they handle and can handle only through Canadian facilities. That has been going on year after year. The point is this: the hon. member for Moose Jaw a moment ago asked a question —and I have no criticism to make of the form of it—did not Prince Rupert, a Canadian city, benefit from United States vessels coming in there? Certainly it did to a meagre extent; Prince Rupert under necessity endures that condition, but it would very much rather have Canadian fleets coming in and have the full supplying of those vessels. The United States vessels do not buy their supplies in Prince Rupert. They may buy ice; they may buy some supplies that are absolutely necessary, but they slip along the coast to Ketchikan, which has developed into quite a city through supplying these very boats. But Ketchikan is so situated geographically that it cannot serve in other ways the fishermen whom it supplies. Therefore Prince Rupert is left, to use a slang phrase, holding the sack. In other words, out of this vast fishing industry—and it is vast, because 30,000,000 pounds of one class of fish, namely, halibut, is a considerable quantity—Prince Rupert is taking perhaps one-fifth of what it ought to be getting, or less than that.

Mr. BRADY: A tenth.

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly a very meagre portion of what it is entitled to. For years our United States friends have imposed this rather onerous duty, because two cents a pound on large quantities of fresh fish is, as my hon. friends will realize, a somewhat stiff tariff. I agree with the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis that our United States friends would be very much perturbed if they thought we were going to deny them these privileges which we have so freely extended to them. What we are doing is this, and I will just illustrate the point: the government puts live hogs under the countervailing duty. This does not amount to anything. We get and can get no live hogs from Great Britain. Therefore this does not help Great Britain and it does not amount to much. But fish is a commodity that might be treated in this manner with some advantage to Canada, and that is what my hon. friend is suggesting. He, like the rest of us, would prefer that we talk very plainly to the people of the United States in this regard and put a straight duty on fish. I am not saying that that alone would correct the situation. We should do that and also notify them that we are not going to give them the facilities at one of our ports if they are going to treat the very product handled through that facility in a manner that keeps our people out of the market. I think the proposition was very fairly and well advanced by the hon. member for Skeena and it is a subject that merits the closest scrutiny by parliament and the government.

Mr. BOTHWELL: What is the reason for the difference between the treatment of United States vesels on the west coast and that on the east coast?

Mr. STEVENS: The history of the matter is long and intricate and I am not in a position offhand to answer the question, but from memory I would say this: for many years there has been a modus vivendi on the Atlantic coast. This has been in existence for thirty, forty years, and adjusted from time to time. But the situation on the Pacific coast has grown up more or less gradually. I brought the matter to the attention of parliament some years ago, and if I recall rightly, I think it was before my hon. friend lived in Skeena but it was a good many years ago, anyway, when we took some steps to curtail this practice in British Columbia. For instance, before Prince Rupert was established, these United States vessels, which were quite large, used to bring their halibut down to Vancouver and ship it from that point.

[Mr. Brady.]

Mr. DUNNING: Why would they go to Vancouver rather than to Seattle, the cities being not far apart?

Mr. STEVENS: The question is a little, shall I say, stale in my memory.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They are quite a number of miles apart.

Mr. DUNNING: I asked the question just for information; it is not important.

Mr. STEVENS: Seattle is of course about 150 or 160 miles further.

Mr. DUNNING: A night's run.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, but they preferred to bring the fish to Vancouver, and I think at that time, which was twenty or twenty-five years ago, they had probably better railway connection over the Canadian Pacific for transportation to the Atlantic coast. I was going to answer my hon. friend (Mr. Bothwell) by saying that on the Atlantic there has been a long standing agreement, quite an old historic arrangement, between the two countries, but on the Pacific coast conditions are different; they are not identical and we have never come to a suitable understanding with the United States. The question of bait and various other matters pertaining to this subject have from time to time been discussed and adjusted, but the matter brought up by the hon. member for Skeena is undoubtedly worthy of consideration.

Mr. BROWN: I understand, however, hon. members opposite do not contend that a duty, either countervailing or otherwise, would in iteslf remedy the disabilities under which the Canadian fishermen suffer.

Mr. STEVENS: Before I answer that question, let me say this: we are trying to discuss this matter without referring to differences of opinion in regard to duties or otherwise. We do not purchase so much fish from the United States that a countervailing duty or a two cent duty would correct the situation to which we have referred, but we do say this: that there should be a duty, and a notification to the United States that these extraordinary privileges which we now accord them will be moderated or changed unless they give us some consideration in their market.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to come back to the question of beef, n.o.p. I asked the minister before what quantities of beef were imported from Australia, and I understood him to say that there was none imported last year.

Mr. DUNNING: I read from the trade summary for the fiscal year 1928-29, but my attention has since been called to the fact that some small quantities below a certain amount in poundage are not there quoted. So there might have been a little imported.

Mr. COOTE: Since I asked the question, I have secured a copy of the Trade of Canada for the calendar year 1929, and the figures are so large that I want to put them on Hansard so that there will not be any misunderstanding. At page 53 I find that for the calendar year 1928 there was imported beef, fresh, chilled or frozen, 282,909 pounds from Australia, valued at $25,298; in 1929, 1,840,675 pounds, valued at $159,250. So far as New Zealand is concerned, we imported 1,756,948 pounds, valued at $125,592 in 1928, and 2,273,-118 pounds, valued at $178,883, in 1929.

Mr. DUNNING: Is my friend sure that he is quoting the product dealt with in the item under discussion, fresh beef?

Mr. COOTE: Yes, the item is beef, fresh, chilled or frozen.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister will find the figures for the year 1929 at page 53 of the Trade of Canada, quarterly report, covering October, November and December, 1929, and nine months ending December, 1928 and 1929. Our imports from Australia in 1929 were 964,-250 pounds, valued at $86,653, and from New Zealand, 1,985,735 pounds, valued at $152,974. That is beef, fresh, chilled or frozen.

Mr. DUNNING: I have the Trade of Canada in my hand. This is for the fiscal year, and at page 51, I find no imports from Australia of meats, fresh, chilled or frozen. The New Zealand figure, as I pointed out before, is 1,875,000 pounds, but none is shown as coming from Australia. We will have to trace that up between now and eight o'clock.

Progress reported.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Third and final report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping—Sir Eugene Fiset.

Seventh report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Geary (for Mr. Hay).

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 61, for the relief of Herbert Chick. —Mr. Black (Yukon).

Bill No. 62, for the relief of Albert Edward Saunders.—Mr. Young (Toronto Northeast).

Bill No. 63, for the relief of Marjorie Gladys Picken.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 65, for the relief of Raymond Garbutt Little.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 67, for the relief of Florence Isabel Naughton.—Mr. Stinson.

Bill No. 68, for the relief of Lucy Beryl Marshall.—Mr. Black (Yukon).

Bill No. 76, for the relief of Kathleen Mary Davies.—Mr. Thorson.

Bill No. 78, for the relief of Louis Battaino. —Mr. Lang.

Bill No. 79, for the relief of Edith May Smith.—Mr. Lennox.

Bill No. 94, for the relief of Eva Verona McColeman.—Mr. Gray.

Bill No. 98, for the relief of Henry Cutler. —Mr. Gray.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the house rose at six o'clock we were considering item No. 7:

Meats, fresh, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, 2 cents; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 3½ cents.

Mr. COOTE: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was about to place on Hansard figures showing the importations from Australia of beef, fresh, chilled or frozen, in the calender years 1928 and 1929. In 1928 there were 282,000 pounds of beef imported from Australia at a value of $25,000; in 1929 the importations grew to 1,840,000 pounds valued at $159,000. In the year 1928 there were imported from New Zealand 1,756,000 pounds valued at $125,000; in 1929 the importation increased to 2,273,000 pounds at a valuation of $178,000. I would like to point out that the value of the beef imported from Australia in 1929 averaged less than 9 cents a pound. I cannot imagine how Australia can sell beef at that price; it makes one wonder whether beef is being dumped in Canada or whether it is of a very low quality. If it is a low quality product and if it is not properly stamped so that the consumer will know what he is buying, the result will certainly be to hurt the beef trade in Canada, and diminish the demand for beef of any kind. The beef imported from New Zealand in 1929 came in at an average price of less than 8 cents a pound. It would seem that the packers in Australia and New Zealand must have got the animals for nothing to be able to produce dressed beef at that price. This matter should be very carefully investigated by either the Department of Finance or the Department of National Revenue to see that a proper valuation is being placed upon this imported beef. The Department of Agriculture should also investigate to see whether a very low quality of beef is being brought into Canada and offered for sale in our stores. It may be that in the years to come there will be just as much feeling against the importation of this beef from Australia and New Zealand as there has been in the past year over the question of butter. I wish to draw these matters to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. JELLIFF: I would like to make a further statement in connection with the subject dealt with by my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote). At this time I shall quote some figures from a bulletin recently issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. It shows that on the 1st of February, 1930, we had in storage 7,100,107 pounds of frozen mutton and lamb. On the same date we had in storage 594,525 pounds of mutton and lamb, not frozen. The frozen mutton and lamb in storage as of February 1 was 7,100,-107 pounds as compared with a five year average of 4,827,251 pounds, showing an increase in the storage stock of 47.08 per cent. The mutton and lamb in storage, not frozen, was 594,525 pounds on February 1, 1930 as compared with a five-year average of 280,003 pounds, showing an increase of 112.33 per cent. In both frozen and fresh meats there was an increase shown of 50.66 per cent. Some hon. members may say that 7,000,000 pounds of frozen and fresh mutton would make very little difference to the price of lamb and mutton received by the Canadian producer, and that it would represent only one pound per capita. My contention, however, and the contention of the sheep raisers in the portion of the country which I represent, is that this tremendous quantity of frozen and fresh mutton in storage effects a constant decrease in the price of mutton and lamb which the Canadian producer places upon the market. Let me illustrate by giving the figures relating to a shipment which came to Halifax in one boat on March 6 last. I am informed by the live stock branch of the Department of Agriculture that in that boat there were 31,650 carcasses of lamb weighing 1,266,000 pounds. In addition there were 4,000 carcasses of beef from Australia weighing 2,400,000 pounds, and on that same ship there were 270 bales of wool weighing 81,000 pounds. This indicates very clearly the competition which the sheep growers of western Canada have to face from Australia and New Zealand. I am very glad indeed that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has seen fit to apply these countervailing duties; while they do not have very much effect with regard to frozen meat coming from New Zealand and Australia, they will affect importations from the United States. During the past few weeks I have had scores of telegrams from the sheep growers of southern Alberta complaining that sheep and lambs were about to be exported from the states of Washington, Oregon, and even California into the Vancouver market.

Mr. DUNNING: Live animals?

Mr. JELLIFF: Yes, live animals. I laid this matter fully before the Minister of Finance before the Easter recess, and I think that these countervailing duties, as they apply to live animals, are in part the result of my representations. I am sure this action will be greatly appreciated by the sheep men of western Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is protection, is it not?

Mr. JELLIFF: I am willing to accept it. We have been a great many years building up that sheep industry which, as my hon. friend knows, is of immense value to agriculture throughout the west.

Mr. SPENCE: I am glad to see my hon. friend becoming converted.

Mr. JELLIFF: I noticed that some members of the opposition who voted against the budget last night were crying for the countervailing duties. However, there is another matter in this connection which was brought forward this afternoon by the hon. member for Peace River. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat. I had this matter of the competition of frozen mutton from Australia and New Zealand with our fresh mutton before the minister on several occasions last year, urging that if nothing further could be done, at least changes might be made in the Live Stock Products Act compelling the inspection, grading and marking of frozen mutton coming into this country. Two purposes would be served by this change; we would restrict the amount of these importations and we would also assure our people that they would get a good quality of mutton. The Minister of Agriculture intimated that he would introduce an amendment to the Live Stock Products Act during this session to carry that idea into effect, and I am very sure that such an amendment has been prepared by his live stock products branch. In the absence of the minister I want to urge upon the government to-night that they prevail upon him to introduce and carry through that amendment this session, as I believe this house would fully approve of that action and I know it will meet in part the situation in the west.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It must be quite evident that there is a difference of opinion in this corner of the house in regard to this matter. The Minister of Finance has graciously listened to the importunities of my hon. friend from Lethbridge with regard to the sheep growers. I should like him to take into consideration also those who have to buy this mutton and lamb. My working people like a little bit of mutton occasionally, and at the present time they have to pay about 35 cents a pound for lamb chops. I want to know if the minister desires to make them pay any more by putting a further duty on the importation of mutton and lamb so that the sheep growers in Canada may get a little richer at the expense of those who consume the mutton.

Mr. KENNEDY: When your friends order lamb, would you like them to get frozen Australian mutton instead of what they ordered?

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have never asked that particular question; I do not know whether or not they get Australian mutton, but they get good lamb chops. I do not suppose they would have any objection to buying Canadian mutton, but they would object to paying a higher price for it.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—8. Canned meats, poultry or game; extracts of meat and fluid beef, not medicated: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I should like to inquire from the minister why he decided to take off 2½ per cent? What was his reason for reducing this item from 17½ per cent to 15 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: The facts in regard to this item for the year 1929 are as follows: The total importations amounted to $802,000, of which $564,000 came from the Argentine and $99,000 from the United Kingdom. Imports of extracts of meat and fluid beef, not medicated, amounted to $144,000, of which $103,000 came from the United Kingdom.

Mr. CAHAN: Was that produced in the United Kingdom or did it come to us from the Argentine via the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: It qualified for the British preference, in any event.

Mr. LUCAS: Could the minister give the Argentine rate of duty on these products?

Mr. DUNNING: No, I could not, but there is no countervailing duty proposed on this item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Our duty against the Argentine now is 27½ per cent, and the minister has reduced the British preference to 15 per cent. I should like to know the object in taking off only 2½ per cent. Does the minister think the reduction of 2½ per cent will increase our imports from Great Britain? Did the minister hear what was said with regard to beef from New Zealand and Australia, that it was being entered through the customs at 8 and 9 cents a pound? I heard a gentleman say just now that mutton was being sold at 35 cents a pound, and I would like to know what that beef sold for that was brought in at 8 and 9 cents a pound. I never heard anything of it; I never heard of anyone buying beef at any such figure as 8 and 9 cents a pound plus an ordinary profit. What has become of it? Who makes the profit on it? Where does it go? That beats any manufacturing business of which I ever heard. I think it would be a good thing for the minister to try to find out where this beef goes. Certainly none of our people get it, unless it has been canned or embalmed. I know none of the workers in my district ever get any of it at those prices.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—10. Meats, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1¾ cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Provided that the weight of a barrel of pork for duty purposes shall not be less than 200 pounds; provided, also, that if any country imposes upon such goods produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of higher duty than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such goods entering Canada from such country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Wait a minute. Apparently some hon. gentlemen do not know anything about these items and do not want to know anything about them.

An hon. MEMBER: We know more than you do.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There was no trade with Great Britain in pork or smoke meats; there was 64 pounds of sausage imported from Great Britain.

An hon. MEMBER: Hot dogs.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Does the minister expect any imports under this item from Great Britain? I am interested in knowing what business the minister expects to receive from Great Britain under these various items.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be glad to give that information on every item, even though it is not asked for. It is utterly absurd to have a tariff against Great Britain on many of these items, and our trade information regarding this particular item emphasizes that fact.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is the minister's opinion, but I do not agree with it.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will only wait I will give him the reasons for my opinion; will he kindly possess his soul in patience? He asks me for information and before I can give it he jumps down my throat.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are wasting a lot of time now.

An hon. MEMBER: What about you?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports of this item for the fiscal year 1929 were valued at $1,965,000, of which $1,960,000 came from the United States in the form of cured bacon, barrelled pork and barrelled beef and sausages. In the same year we exported goods to the value of $9,615,000 of which over $7,000,000 went to the United Kingdom and $1,961,000 to the United States. It is rather absurd to have a duty of 1½ cents per pound on importations from Great Britain on an article like this which we do not import at all but which we export to the extent of $7,000,000 per year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You do not expect to have any imports of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: We do not expect to import any considerable quantity of these articles from Great Britain. It will be noticed that there is a considerable two-way trade as between the United States and this country. Our imports from the United States were $1,960,000 and our exports amounted to $1,961,000. In this particular case it is proposed to apply the countervailing duty. Our proposal is that the rates shall be 1¾ cents per pound under the intermediate, and 2 cents per pound under the general tariff. The present United States duty on cured bacon is 2 cents per pound, and by the bill at present before the senate it is proposed to raise that to 3¼ cents per pound. The present duty on pork in brine is 2 cents per pound, and the senate bill proposes to raise that to 3¼ cents per pound. The present duty on salted pork is 2 cents per pound, and it is proposed to raise that to 3¼ cents per pound. The present duty on salted meats is 20 per cent ad valorem, and a specific duty of 6 cents per pound is proposed. Beef, dried and smoked meats and sausages bear a 20 per cent ad valorem rate, and the proposal is to increase that to a specific rate of 6 cents per pound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—14. Tallow: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What were the importations from Great Britain of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The total importations from all countries amounted to only $1,528.

Mr. CAHAN: Why should we allow tallow from Australia and New Zealand to come in free in competition with our local producers?

Mr. DUNNING: Australia is not receiving the benefits of the British preference.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Other countries are.

Mr. CAHAN: What are the importations from the countries which come under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: We imported only about $1,500 worth from all the world.

Mr. CAHAN: The previous rate was 15 per cent and it is now proposed to make it free?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: Sufficient tallow for domestic demands is produced in this country; why should not our farmers be encouraged to produce cattle with all the incidentals? I cannot understand why this reduction is being made.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister states that we imported only $1,500 worth, while the figures show that 100,000 pounds came in from the United States during the year 1929.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is into the next year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am speaking of the fiscal year 1929.

Mr. GEARY: I think it is $20,000.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know the price of tallow, but the value of the imports was $1,528; I do not know whether or not that would purchase 100,000 pounds, but I rather doubt it.

Mr. GEARY: I have the figure of $20,000.

Mr. CAHAN: Has the minister the figures for 1928 and 1929?

Mr. DUNNING: In 1928 our imports from the United States were valued at $11,000, or 145,000 pounds. During the fiscal year 1929 we imported 19,000 pounds valued at $1,528.

Mr. MALONEY: The government has killed the coat of the sheep; why not give the inside a chance and let us save the tallow at least?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—15. Beeswax: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What are the imports from British countries on this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports for the fiscal year 1929 were valued at $80,000, of which $50,000 came from France. There were only small importations under the British preference, amounting to $683. There is a possible chance of enlarging the British trade on this item.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What duty applied to importations from France?

Mr. DUNNING: The intermediate rate is 7½ per cent.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: There is no special rate under the French treaty?

Mr. DUNNING: No, no special rate.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The previous rate on importations from Great Britain was 5 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And on importations from France the rate was 7½ per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And from outside, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There was a differential, then, and France sent us thousands of pounds and Britain sent us practically nothing.

Mr. DUNNING: Very little.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister had better give a bonus to Britain to get it from there, or else raise the other tariff, or the situation will not be changed.

Mr. CAHAN: What is the purpose of these changes? Who is asking for them? Have they been discussed before the tariff board or any other board? Did the minister suggest them out of some wild flight of imagination? Or is the object to make it appear that we are giving Great Britain a preference when we are really not doing so; as we are giving a preference in respect of comodities in which she does not trade with us?

Mr. DUNNING: I will try to answer that again. I stated in the budget that out of the hundreds of items being dealt with, there were some fifty which were non-effective so far as imports from Great Britain were concerned; that in many such cases it was patently absurd to impose a tariff against Great Britain. I stated also that some of those fifty items, by reason of their being made free, represented trade possibilities with Great Britain. This I regard as one of the changes which may result in a growth of trade. It is only a minor item; it does not amount to a great deal, but trade is made up of small things, and with the advantage in favour of Great Britain by making the item free and without imposing any heavier burden upon those in Canada who have to buy beeswax, it is quite conceivable and even probable this trade with Great Britain will grow to a certain extent. We brought in a small amount last year.

Mr. CAHAN: We produce in Quebec enough beeswax to supply the local demand. Why, then, should we encourage importations from any other country in the world? In Canada we can raise bees and produce honey of a quality and quantity sufficient for all our needs.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: You will have a lot of monopolies if you do not have freedom of trade.

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to give the producers in this country the very best position possible in their own market.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend know of beeswax being produced commercially in Canada?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I can answer that question. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Where?

Mr. CHAPLIN: In Ontario we use beeswax in our business.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Where does it grow?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Poor fellow! And a man representing a farming district! All through the Niagara district one can buy beeswax; almost every farmer there will sell it. If the hon. member goes to Beeton, which is named because of the very fact that bees are raised in that locality, he can get all the beeswax he wants. My hon. friend needs some.

Mr. HEAPS: Is anybody objecting to these changes?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—16. Eggs in the shell, per dozen: British preferential tariff, 2 cents; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon eggs in the shell, produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed upon such commodities entering Canada from such country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I should like to get an explanation from the minister about this item. This is just a counterpart of the last tariff. Let me call the attention of the committee to this: there are three items on eggs. The first one, the minister has not changed. They have had enough eggs from Great Britain, so they do not change it. Britain last year sold us $3,000 worth of eggs. On the other two items: "eggs, whole, egg-yolks or egg albumen, frozen, and so forth, the items that we buy largely from China and of which Britain in 1929 sold us 722,000 pounds at a value of $120,000, they raised the duty 100 per cent. That shows how scared they are of eggs. They raise that tariff 100 per cent on the item in which Britain has largely dealt with us, but in respect to the two items in which Britain has not dealt very much with us, in the one case they leave the duty as it is at present, and in the other they lower it. In other words, in order to encourage business with Great Britain they increase the duty 100 per cent on the item that Britain has largely dealt in with us and they lower the duty on the item in which she deals with us only to a very small extent.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend does not intend to be fair.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not think the minister should say that. I am making a statement of the facts.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is not discussing the item under consideration. He is lumping together three items and is making certain statements about them. All I ask is that we discuss the item now before the committee. I will attempt to give information in connection with it in the proper order, and when we come to the next item I will endeavour to do the best I can with respect to it. I think I can satisfy the members of the committee by proceeding in an orderly manner without making a political speech which I could just as easily make as my hon. friend. My hon. friend thinks it is the proper thing to make a political speech on every item. I am trying to be patient and to give the information required, but I do not want him to think because he is making a political speech on every item, that another hon. member could not do the same thing.

Mr. MALONEY: About three months ago the farmers in this section of Canada were getting about fifty cents a dozen for eggs. Overnight the price dropped to twenty-two cents. Why? Because of the fact that the United States dumped millions of dozens of eggs into this country and they are doing the same thing to-day. Our countervailing duties will not prevent their doing the same thing again because, as we all know, in the United States they have a tariff commission which can raise or lower the duty at will. What is to prevent the egg producers in the United States from going to their tariff commission and saying: Here, drop your duty. Automatically ours goes down and then millions and millions of dozens of eggs will flow into this country as they have done before. There is in this budget a great defect which I feel the farmers should take cognizance of, because after all the poultry industry is really one that is of great value to Canada.

Mr. MILNE: I have been consistently opposing any increase in the tariff on eggs. I do this for various reasons. The first is that I do not believe a tariff on eggs will be of any benefit to the men who are producing eggs. During the past few years eggs have been bringing a fairly good price, and as a result of that Canada has now reached a point where she is producing practically as many eggs as she consumes. According to the figures given in the hearing before the tariff board, our exports of eggs for 1929 amounted to about 1,147,000 dozens and our imports amounted to about 713,000 dozens. Those figures show conclusively that we are reaching the point where we produce practically as many eggs as we consume. I am going to make a statement which I believe, and I think most of us believe is correct, namely, that when any product is on an export basis the tariff will not materially affect the price to the producer. Tariffs increase the price of manufactured goods because the production of manufactured products can be controlled and the production of farm products cannot be controlled. Therefore tariffs do not generally increase prices to the producer. I am not going to labour that point because it has been made clear in the house several times already.

Mr. COOTE: Does the hon. member mean agricultural products?

Mr. MILNE: Yes, agricultural products or any products over the production of which you have no control. The United States endeavoured to increase the price of eggs, I suppose, in that country by raising the duty. I have here a clipping, one of several, showing the price of eggs in various markets. It is dated March 10, 1930, and shows that the price of extras in Toronto was 29 to 30 cents a dozen; Montreal, extras, 34 cents a dozen; New York, extras, 28 to 28½ cents a dozen. I think this shows conclusively that the high tariff of the United States is not having the effect of keeping the price of their eggs above the world's market price.

I have another reason for believing that a tariff on eggs is not in the best interests of the farmer. Unlike some other members of the house, I have a little sympathy for the consumer. We have been getting a fairly satisfactory price for our eggs as a general rule, and what the farmers are more interested in than a tariff on eggs is to get more commodities in exchange for the eggs they have to dispose of. I listened with a great deal of interest this afternoon to my hon. friend from Lincoln, with others, pleading that a 35 per cent tariff against the material that enters into the manufacture of artificial silk products was not sufficient to keep that industry alive in Canada. He apparently had received many communications from the manufacturers—

Mr. CHAPLIN: If my hon. friend will allow me to interrupt him, I never spoke of artificial silk either last night or to-day—not one word.

Mr. MILNE: Apparently the hon. member is not accountable for all he says. I gathered from the discussion this afternoon that the duty on artificial silk was 35 per cent, and my hon. friends were complaining that the changes under discussion were going to mean less profit for the manufacturers. I would like to know how many requests the hon. member for Lincoln has had from the employees in these factories who are wearing artificial silk, artificial silk stockings and other such goods. What the farmer is interested in to-day is to get more for his dozen eggs when he trades them for other commodities than he has been getting in the past. We trade eggs for commodities largely, and what we want is more boots, more clothing or other products for the eggs we have to sell. I maintain that the tariff will not help the farmer. That is my stand.

This question was discussed before the tariff board, and I have read very carefully the evidence presented there. I am convinced that there was no case made out to warrant an increase in the tariff on eggs. I wish to quote a short extract from a letter written by the gentleman who presented this case before the tariff board. It is dated May 9, 1929, and says:

> The poultry producers of western Canada are not requesting protection for the purpose of inflating the price of eggs to the consumer.

That sounds familiar.

> They desire protection because they believe that the best interests of the producer and the consumer can only be protected by a stabilized market.

That sounds familiar too.

> They wish to protect the distributors who purchase large quantities during the period of over-production, and who place them in store in order to protect the consumer from over-inflation during the period of low production.

I have not a great deal of sympathy for the man who is gambling in eggs, who stores them up at one season of the year and unloads them at another. It is such concerns, apparently, that the writer of this letter refers to and is trying to protect. The consumer in the city is paying from 55 to 60 cents a dozen for the eggs for which the producer in the country receives 30 to 40 cents a dozen, and I know of cases where the consumer is paying almost double what the producer within a hundred miles of the city receives.

Mr. SPENCE: At the same time of the year?

Mr. MILNE: Yes, on the very same day. I maintain that that is one of the big difficulties so far as the producer is concerned. We are endeavouring to rectify that as fast as we can. Without detaining the house any further, or labouring the question, I am firmly convinced that that is where the great trouble lies, and I do not believe that increasing the tariff is going to be of any value to the producer of eggs in western Canada.

Mr. GEARY: Would the hon. gentleman mind giving me his view, for my own information, as to whether we should have such institutions as storage plants for carrying eggs over from the season of high production to the season of low production?

Mr. MILNE: Most certainly.

Mr. GEARY: It costs money to do that, of course.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I do not like to be making the same objection to every item, but I am extremely glad to find that there is somebody in this house who is raising his voice on behalf of the ultimate consumer.

Mr. CAHAN: We are all consumers.

Mr. SPENCE: We all eat, don't we?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Eggs were selling last year in Calgary at from 60 to 65 cents a dozen. Surely that is high enough without raising the price higher by means of a protective tariff, if that is the object. Certainly that is hoped to be the result of every tariff increase. My hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre in his address on the budget said that the United States had gone tariff mad. It seems to me that we are following in their footsteps, and if they have gone tariff mad, we too seem to be going tariff mad. I should like to ask the minister if, under this item, when the price of eggs comes down in the United States, the countervailing duty will come down also; because I can name a few articles on which our tariff is higher than that of the United States. If you believe in countervailing duties, why not make the two equal in all respects, and, where their tariff is lower than ours, reduce ours to the same level? I raise these objections as to the cost of living for the benefit of consumers generally.

Mr. DUNNING: There was, as members of the committee know, a hearing of the Tariff Advisory Board with respect to this matter, and I think I should say that the application for an increase came from the Saskatchewan Cooperative Poultry Producers, otherwise known as the egg and poultry pool, and also from the Canadian Poultry Pool, Limited. In their reference they state that the organization comprises within its membership provincial poultry organizations of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and through them represents a membership of approximately 40,000 producers.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Would the minister read what Mr. Landreth said as to the number of dealers represented?

[Mr. Geary.]

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. He said:

I would like to add here that through the 2,000 merchant members we serve in the neighbourhood of another 200,000 poultry producers in the prairie provinces, that is regarding the merchants, large and small, as having 100 customers each, because under our merchants' contracts the merchants who belong to the pool agree to deliver all their eggs to the association. In that way we serve the producers of that area, although not contracted directly to the pool.

I was not discussing the nature of the constitution of the pool, I am not familiar with that detail. I was simply indicating that evidently a substantial number of those engaged in the poultry business were behind this application coming from the province of my hon. friend who has just spoken, Manitoba. I just wanted to give that information by way of showing that this matter was not handled in the dark at all, but that all the arguments were published; and while I know there is a difference of opinion between groups of farmers with respect to the matter, nevertheless these organizations are largely farmers' marketing organizations. I think no one can dispute that fact. They may have arrangements with the merchants that may modify their position as pool farmers, so to speak, but I know no reason to believe that they do not represent accurately the desires of their producer-members. I have had many representations from the producers' organizations, in fact they have come to see me upon the matter.

Mr. IRVINE: Did the minister get any representations from the Canadian Council of Agriculture or from the body of consumers?

Mr. DUNNING: I had no representations personally from the Canadian Council of Agriculture that I can recollect; but in this record of the tariff board hearings on the matter appears the opposition of the Canadian Council of Agriculture; that is, apparently they are opposed to the request of the egg pools of the various provinces. It is all on record in connection with the hearing.

Mr. GLEN: Will the minister give us information as to the quantity of eggs imported in comparison with the number produced in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. There is a great variation in the imports in the various years. I will give the figures for the last five years:

| Year | Value |
|---|---|
| 1925 | $ 945,000 |
| 1926 | 977,000 |
| 1927 | 1,317,000 |
| 1928 | 476,000 |
| 1929 | 395,000 |

These are our imports, chiefly from the United States, of eggs in the shell.

Mr. GLEN: With regard to the application made before the tariff board, while it is perfectly true that it came from the organization of which the minister speaks, yet as a matter of fact the applicant was a Mr. Landreth, the general manager of one of these associations. I think I speak the absolute truth when I say that that man made the application without the consent and concurrence of the majority of the members of his organization, and I have had it repeated to me by those who attended the meetings when this matter was discussed and Mr. Landreth, in spite of what had been done, made the application. It came before the tariff board, and objection was then taken to it by the Consumers' League. The case was adjourned, and at the next hearing he did not appear; it was again adjourned, and he did not appear when it was called a third time, and again it was adjourned. I think on the fourth occasion he appeared, but there was no opportunity for the representative of the Canadian Council of Agriculture to appear because he was sick in bed. I am prepared to say that that application does not represent the opinion of the producers of eggs in western Canada. I am prepared also to say that it represents the opinions only of a very small minority, chiefly officials.

I do not think, as has already been pointed out by the member for Neepawa (Mr. Milne), that this tariff on eggs is likely to be of any benefit to the producers of eggs in western Canada. It is rather remarkable to find from the figures given by the minister that there has been a tremendous reduction in the importation of eggs during the past couple of years compared with what we imported in 1925. As a matter of fact, if my figures are correct as I got them from the minister, last year our importations were about a third of those of 1925.

Yesterday I said I would protest against the tariff on butter, eggs, fruit and vegetables, because I am absolutely convinced that the imposition of a tariff on these commodities is of no benefit to us in western Canada as producers, and certainly it will militate against any future activity of our farmer organizations to relieve themselves of the burdens that they have to bear by reason of the tariff. Therefore I am protesting against the imposition of this tariff on eggs.

Mr. MALONEY: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask if the minister is aware of the fact that during the months of February and March there came into the city of Montreal from the United States one carload of eggs each week. Is he aware that during the early part of February when our farmers were getting 50 cents a dozen for their eggs, these importations over night caused the price to be cut in two? We in this country must realize that agriculture comes before all things.

Mr. GLEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MALONEY: We must realize that the farmer is the backbone of our country.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Why do you want to put such a heavy load on him?

Mr. MALONEY: Because we want to carry him on. We are anxious to put the farmer in the same position as some of our other producers have been in for many years. Let me tell you that the poultry raiser in Canada is entirely opposed to anything that will militate against the products of his poultry.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the minister the export figures for the same years?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. Canada exported whole eggs to a value of $319,000 of which $264,000 went to the United Kingdom and $45,000 to Newfoundland.

Mr. HEAPS: What year was that?

Mr. DUNNING: For the fiscal year 1929.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the minister the figures for the two or three previous years?

Mr. DUNNING: Not at the moment, but I can find them.

Mr. NEILL: I think the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) takes a somewhat limited view of the expression "western Canada." Surely he will confine that term to his own province or to that and the one immediately beside it. I think I am entitled to have some say on the statement that the whole of western Canada has no desire for legislation of this character.

Mr. GLEN: I will exclude British Columbia.

Mr. NEILL: But he cannot do that; we are in Canada, although we are too often neglected when the interests of the west are concerned. Some people seem to think that the west begins in Winnipeg and ends in the Rocky mountains, but geographically and politically that is not so. It has been suggested that Mr. Landreth, appearing before the tariff board on behalf of the Canadian egg pool, exceeded his authority. But the egg pool is the biggest organization of egg producers in the Dominion, and it would surely be a very anomalous position to find the recently appointed head of it arrogating to himself authority to decide what sort of fiscal policy his constituents want against their wishes. I would point out that the application was before the tariff board for a year or more, as the hon. gentleman behind me said, so there was ample time for the egg producers to express themselves if they were not in agreement with the application. Further than that, this application did not originate with Mr. Landreth, but originated with an organization in Ontario. It was later on concentrated in the application by the egg pool. In British Columbia at any rate I know that I can safely say every egg producer is solidly behind this legislation. Not only are they behind it individually, but I am familiar with the local organizations in my district; I have had telegrams from the president of the local cooperative pool in British Columbia and from a great many other officials not only recently but for years, asking that this same legislation be passed. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie) is well aware of that fact.

Mr. HEAPS: What is the purpose of asking for an increase in the tariff on eggs?

Mr. NEILL: Primarily to keep out at certain periods a flood of American eggs. The legislation would not necessarily raise the price of eggs, but to use the well known expression, it would stabilize the market.

Mr. HEAPS: In what way?

Mr. NEILL: To prevent egg producers being put out of business by a sudden influx of American eggs at the glut period of the year. It has been suggested that the Canadian Council of Agriculture are opposed to this measure and it has been said that they should have been consulted. They had the opportunity to express themselves, and if they did not—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They did express themselves.

Mr. BROWN: Be fair on that point.

Mr. NEILL: Did they put their views forward?

Mr. BROWN: Yes, they did.

Mr. NEILL: Well, that was unknown to me. However, supposing they did; we have Mr. Landreth, the newly elected president of the Dominion egg pool on the one hand and we have the Canadian Council of Agriculture on the opposite side of the fence. It seems to me I have heard some of my hon. friends to my left, unless I am again mixing things up, object to the amount which we give to the Canadian council, saying that it is more or less a personal and autocratic body, and that they have grown aloof—

Mr. McMILLAN: No, not the Canadian Council of Agriculture.

Mr. NEILL: Is it not the Council of Agriculture?

Mr. McMILLAN: No, the Canadian Council of Agriculture maintains itself; it does not get a grant.

Mr. NEILL: Did I not hear the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) object last year?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): No; the Canadian Horticultural Council does.

Mr. NEILL: I will take back that feature of it; there is another aspect of the matter with which I wish to deal. The question was asked as to what the importation of eggs had been from the United States. In reply the minister cited the importations for a series of years, and it seemed that they were becoming less rather than greater; the statement of the minister was no doubt correct. The point is that these eggs do not come in in a year; they come in in a month. In the months of January, February and March, when spring eggs are on the market, they not only come in in such large quantities that they ruin the market, but it is the possibility of bringing them in that shakes the market. It does not matter whether there are twelve or fifty carloads brought in in February, the point is that they are there in unlimited quantities, and the mere fact that they exist and are accessible breaks the price. Consequently the price of our eggs is appreciably lowered. Dealers know that the American price is quoted at say 25 cents, and we know that we cannot produce eggs at that price. If one carload does not break the price they will bring in fifty or one hundred carloads. There is no doubt a necessity to put some kind of check on the importation to reduce the seasonal glut. The purpose might have been achieved by instituting a seasonal tariff such as was suggested at one time, but it appears that it cannot be done. I must protest at the suggestion that there is not a widespread demand for this legislation, and I make the statement that if business along these lines is continued, and if cheap eggs are imported, the poultry people of British Columbia will be put out of the egg business. We are harrassed with the enormous price we have to pay for wheat. Some years ago

hon. members from the prairies with the support of some of the members from British Columbia had the Crowsnest rates readjusted so that they would get a good rate on their wheat.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): We are not asking for duty on wheat.

Mr. NEILL: Did they reciprocate and help us to get a lighter freight rate on the feed for our chickens? No. They got what they wanted and we were put into the discard. The result is that to-day we pay more freight on No. 6 wheat, the inferior rubbish that we have to feed our chickens, to bring it from the prairies to Vancouver than they in the prairies pay on No. 1 wheat, worth three times as much.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I must say that the hon. gentleman, contrary to his custom, is quite unfair to-night. The United Farmers of Alberta in convention assembled by unanimous vote supported the application of the British Columbia farmers for reduced rates on wheat shipped to the coast.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, a few months ago. Did they come to the assistance of British Columbia when that province wanted to make it part of the Crowsnest deal a few years ago? In my opinion that was the time to support it. It is all very well to come along now and express an academic sympathy; I must say we are grateful, but what we wanted was action at that time. There is a Scotch saying that "giff gaff makes guid freends." That is, when you get a favour, give a little in return. We are asking for a return, and we will continue to use their inferior wheat at high prices if we are only allowed a living chance to make something. The farmers in my district are not making fortunes; few of them buy cars; none of them are coming to parliament; they could not put up the $200 deposit. I will say that I am only demanding a fair deal for the egg producers of the west.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I wish to correct a wrong impression created by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill)—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Only one?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): —in regard to the Canadian Council of Agriculture not appearing before the tariff board to present the case against the application of the poultry pool. As has been stated, the application was made by Mr. Landreth. A date was set for the hearing, and although Mr. Darby of the Canadian Council of Agriculture appeared, Mr. Landreth did not. A second date was set, and on that occasion Mr. Darby again appeared, and Mr. Landreth did not but sent a request for a further adjournment. On the third occasion Mr. Darby travelled all the way from Winnipeg to attend the meeting and again Mr. Landreth did not appear on the scene, but again sent a message asking for a further adjournment. When a date for the hearing was finally set Mr. Darby could not be present. As for the representative of the Consumers' League of Canada, I must say that I happened to be with him on the morning of the hearing. He did not know anything about it until the hearing was about to start, at which time he received a message intimating that his presence was requested.

Mr. EVANS: I wish to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. There was no application from the province of British Columbia when the Crowsnest pass agreement was passed in this house in 1923. For that matter I do not remember that the hon. gentleman himself was very active in the matter. I wish to say that these countervailing duties constitute a vicious feature which has been introduced into the tariff at this time. Bad as the tariff system is, these countervailing duties make it much worse, and they never were asked for by the consumer. The profit derived from them is confined to the dealer exclusively and he is the only person who can possibly benefit. Such a measure is bound to increase the cost of living. I have maintained for a long time that by one stroke of the pen the government can lower the cost of living and improve production both on the farms and in the industries of the country. The policy of the government as shown by these countervailing duties is to make bargains with the dealers and manufacturers, and the cost of living is going up year by year. It is a mistake to expect that any consumer can benefit by a countervailing duty; it only gives the dealers a chance to charge the home consumer a price that will give him a profit and which will enable him, when the markets are glutted, to ship his goods to any country in the world, at the same time keeping up the price at home high enough to give him a profit for his entire output. I particularly protest against these countervailing duties.

A great many of these items come on foodstuffs alone. Surely if the efficiency of a nation can be measured by anything it is by the extent to which the cost of living is kept down in line with world prices. During the last two or three years our government has done nothing but increase the cost of living to the worker. This does not even help the manufacturer, for the simple reason that wages must go up; but wages never go up as a countervailing measure against the high cost of the articles on which our manufacturers get a price fixing power. Wages are always behind; they are never high enough to meet the high cost of living in this protective country. Countervailing duties are bound to raise our cost of living another notch this year, and surely it has been high enough in all reason during the years gone by.

I should like to know from the Minister of Finance who asked for these countervailing duties in general. Did the Consumers' League, who has backed him up all these years, ask for them? Only the dealers asked for them, I believe, and it seems to me that only those with whom this government can make a bargain get the advantage in the tariff schedules.

Mr. DUNNING: With relation to the last remark of my hon. friend I may say that to my certain knowledge neither the dealers nor anyone else of that class asked for countervailing duties, and I repudiate entirely the insinuation contained in his last remarks.

Mr. POULIOT: I am one of those who asked for that duty, on behalf of the farmers of my constituency.

Mr. HEAPS: I have been trying to find out the purpose of this increase in the tariff, but as yet I have not succeeded. The first reason the hon. member for Comox-Alberni gave was that he hoped the increase in tariff would keep out—

Mr. NEILL: I never used the words "increase in tariff."

Mr. HEAPS: Well, the countervailing duties, then; it is practically the same thing. If the duties were lowered I am sure the hon. member for Comox-Alberni would not want that. He was trying to protect the egg industry of his own province. I tried to find out why he wanted this increased duty and he said it was for the purpose of stabilizing the industry. No tariff as yet has been able to stabilize an industry either in this or in any other country with a high tariff. On the other hand the hon. member expressed the opinion that the tariff would keep out eggs from other countries.

Mr. NEILL: Would tend to keep them out.

Mr. HEAPS: Well, I will say that even an increase in duty will not tend to keep out eggs from other countries. That has not been the effect of other increases in past years, in this country or in other countries. I think as a rule these increases have the opposite effect and only bring about further difficulties. If this duty was increased for the purpose of preventing the market from being glutted during a certain period of the year, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni suggested, it should only be a seasonal tariff and not one that is in effect all year. As I understand it, this tariff will be in effect twelve months in the year and not during a certain period only, as I understood the hon. member to say he desired. Consequently I do not see that this duty will have any effect; if it does not increase the tariff it is not going to benefit the egg producers in Canada. On the other hand, if the increased tariff is not going to have the effect of keeping out eggs from other countries I do not see what advantage it will be. Personally I would prefer to see the duty remain as it was previously.

Mr. NEILL: If in your opinion it is not going to do any good at least it will not do any harm, so why not try it out? It will make us happy and will not hurt you.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think my hon. friend from North Winnipeg need worry about the possibility of eggs costing more, because the Canadian hen apparently is a very industrious individual. During the last year for which I have a complete record it produced 272,000,000 dozen eggs, and our total imports during the same period were only 1,000,000 dozen. I am not going to argue the general merits of this proposal, but I do believe that it will be effective in connection with the point which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni made some time ago with reference to the spring production of eggs in Canada. As a farmer who principally grows wheat I have only an incidental interest in eggs, and a great many hon. members here are in the same position. However, I do not think we should entirely forget that there are farmers, just as much entitled to consideration as such, whose principal source of income is eggs or poultry, and there is no doubt in my mind that the Saskatchewan poultry producers, whose application is here on record, would have repudiated their official publicly if he had been acting in opposition to their wishes in the matter. As a matter of fact the Saskatchewan poultry pool, so-called, made representations to me in this connection, and they do believe rightly or wrongly that during that particular period of the year when everyone is striving for winter egg production a measure such as this will be beneficial to them in preventing their prices from being knocked down to summer levels while they are still on a winter cost basis of production. That really is their argument, and I paid some attention to it from that point of view.

Mr. HEAPS: If the Canadian hen is such a wonderful producer why does she need any protection against other hens?

Mr. DUNNING: The Canadian hen operates according to the course of nature; she does not lay as freely in the cold weather as she does in the warmth of spring. Nature has something to do with all these operations. In the winter she requires more assistance from her owner; she requires more shelter, more careful feeding and a great many other things. If my hon. friend would just go into the poultry business he would learn a lot about it in a very short time.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni with respect to the freight rate on wheat seems to me deserving of some little consideration. When I hear hon. members for British Columbia ask for an increase in the duty on eggs I wonder if what they really want is not a reduction in the freight rate on the wheat which they feed their hens. As a matter of fact to-day the export rate on wheat to Vancouver is only-half the domestic rate. You take a given point in the prairies, with two cars of wheat on the siding. Both these cars are set out at Vancouver; one is used domestically and the wheat is sold to the poultry producers of British Columbia. They pay a rate of 45 cents per 100 pounds, while another car, handled from the same point in the same train, billed for export and sale to Chinamen—probably producing eggs to ship into Canada—bears a rate of 22½ cents per 100 pounds, exactly one half. That seems to me to be a very important point. I do not raise any more objection to the duty on eggs than other goods, as I think they are just as much entitled to protection as anything else. However, I do insist that the producer of British Columbia is hampered by the freight rates which he is forced to pay. The Chinaman is able to buy our prairie wheat to feed to his hens, which is delivered at a lower rate, thus putting him in a preferred position to ship his eggs back to Canada. As to opposition being offered by the farmers of the prairie, I can assure my hon. friend that there never was or never will be any opposition to any adjustment of freight rates; he is entirely wrong in that statement.

Mr. NEILL: Not opposition, but just a sort of lukewarmness.

Mr. CAMPBELL: My hon. friend could not expect us to ask for something in his interest; I think the lukewarmness is entirely on the part of the egg producers of British Columbia.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They have not started anything.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If my hon. friend were just as energetic in trying to secure a reduction in the freight rates as he has been to secure an increase in the duty on eggs, I think we would get somewhere. Let him start something and I can assure him that we will all be behind him.

Mr. GLEN: Did I understand the hon. member to say that he thought he was entitled to protection on his products?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was not raising that question, but I said that if there were any merit in protection—

Mr. GLEN: Did the hon. member not say that he was entitled to it if anyone was?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes.

Mr. GLEN: I take it that he is in favour of protection on agricultural products.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am not arguing the point.

Mr. GLEN: Are you or are you not?

Mr. CAMPBELL: My hon. friend supported the budget so he must have been in favour of a duty on eggs.

Mr. GLEN: No, he was not.

Mr. CAMPBELL: He voted his judgment.

Mr. GLEN: Are you in favour of protection on agricultural products?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Are you?

Mr. GLEN: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Judging by his vote, my hon. friend seemed to be very much in favour of that.

Mr. GLEN: Are you?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Generally speaking, I am in favour of the elimination of all tariffs. If there is any merit in protection, the farmer is entitled to equal treatment.

Mr. GLEN: Are you in favour?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—16a. Eggs, whole, egg yolks or egg albumen, frozen or otherwise prepared, n.o.p., whether or not sugar or other material be added: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. ROWE: Why should the duty be raised on this item? The British preferential has been reduced on items in which there is very little business, but as soon as we come to an item which involves $120,000 annually the rate is jumped up.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend please demonstrate where the $120,000 comes in?

Mr. ROWE: There are hundreds of thousands of pounds—

Mr. DUNNING: Under which item of the old tariff does that come in?

Mr. ROWE: The British preferential was 5 per cent and it is being raised to 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend claim that that value of importations came in under the old item 207?

Mr. ROWE: We have to inquire of the finance minister or one of his legal advisers, because the way it is printed here it is impossible to tell.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend misunderstands completely. This item 16a includes those commodities which formerly came in under two tariff items, one being 207 and the other 711. Mr. hon. friend is endeavouring to prove that we have increased the British preferential rates on a certain value of goods. If we have increased the British preference it can only be with reference to item 207, and I would like to know upon what he bases his information with reference to the value of imports.

Mr. CAHAN: That is item 207.

Mr. ROWE: Probably the hon. minister can give us that information.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friends rise and make statements and then ask for information. Item 207 covered blood albumen, egg albumen and egg yolks. It has been deemed desirable to put all egg products together, and the egg albumen and egg yolk have been taken out of item 207.

Mr. MALONEY: What does the hon. minister mean by blood albumen?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know; I know it is not an egg product.

[Mr. Glen.]

Mr. ROWE: We agree on that particular item.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is endeavouring to demonstrate that we are increasing the British rates on these particular commodities. I ask him to be reasonable with me and tell me what value of eggs came in under the old low British preferential rate of 5 per cent, as covered by item 207.

Mr. CAHAN: We have no way of ascertaining that; the distribution of the figures is not given in your report.

Mr. DUNNING: It is so infinitesimal that it does not appear in any of the trade reports.

Mr. CAHAN: Why ask us for the information?

Mr. DUNNING: Because my hon. friend opposite, and the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) speaking on the same matter a few moments ago, stated that the tariff against Great Britain has been increased by 100 per cent. I ask for the information because to make such a statement the hon. gentlemen presumably have information which I have been unable to secure. Tariff item 207 is mentioned, not because there is any volume of business under that item, but because it is an old item which is being eliminated on account of its inclusion with the new one. All egg commodities are being put in the one item. The great bulk of importations was made up of commodities under item 711, which imposed a duty of 15 per cent against Great Britain. That duty is being reduced to 10 per cent.

Mr. BARBER: What were the quantities?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports of frozen eggs, frozen yolks and albumen are not recorded separately, but the total is valued at $651,000. Those importations were chiefly from China, the United States and the United Kingdom.

Mr. BARBER: The amounts are not given separately for China and Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: The importations from China for the fiscal year 1929 were valued at $416,000, and the importations from the United Kingdom were valued at $120,000.

Mr. ROWE: I feel much more at home on the situation as the Minister of Finance apparently does not know the exact classification. He concludes by showing that my figure of $120,000 was correct for the importations from the United Kingdom.

Mr. DUNNING: Those importations came in at 15 per cent, not at 5 per cent. We are not increasing the duty on the commodities included in that $120,000; we are reducing it from 15 per cent to 10 per cent.

Mr. ROWE: I submit that if you reduce that from 15 to 10 per cent and reclassify it with one of 5 per cent, you have practically struck a happy equilibrium and have not extended the British preference at all.. One was 5 and one was 15. The minister has reclassified them into one item and called it 10 per cent British preference.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. ROWE: In this item in which a trade of $120,000 was done in this country under the British preference there has been no change, and in other items along the whole line the thing is simply a camouflage, because in some items which have been reduced from 17½ per cent to nothing, the business done under the British preference has been practically nil. For instance, in the item passed just before I came into the chamber the imports in the last five years amounted to only 200 pounds. The minister has reduced the duty under that item by 17½ per cent, whereas in an item where the trade under the British preference amounts to more than $100,000 we find a reclassification which makes practically no difference in the British preference.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not intend to allow my hon. friend to get away with an utterly wrong statement. He is repeating and continuing to insist on what is entirely wrong. He must surely understand my statement. The $120,000 worth of business to which he refers came in last year at 15 per cent; it will enter in future at 10 per cent. As regards the business to which he refers as coming in at 5 per cent, there is nothing traceable at all. My hon. friend knows that; I have told him that three or four times. Yet he continues describing this as striking a happy medium and so forth. The happy medium is one of rate only. In fact, it is a reduction from 15 per cent to 10 per cent in the tariff against Great Britain on the effective item itself, the $120,000 worth of business to which my hon. friend refers. That is the truth of the matter.

Mr. BROWN: This is an illustration of what I tried to point out last night, namely, the danger of thinking only of averages without taking into consideration the amount of trade brought in under any particular duty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Can the minister tell us what the old duty was on eggs from China, under this item, frozen eggs.

Mr. DUNNING: On blood albumen, egg albumen and egg yolk, it would be 10 per cent from China, and on eggs, n.o.p., which would include all the others about which my hon. friend is asking, it would be 17½ per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister has raised the duty on eggs from China from 10 to 30 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: No, the really effective increase is from 17½ per cent to 30 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The increase is on these broken eggs from China, of which 1,700,000 pounds were imported?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The duty on these has been raised to 30 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MALONEY: Where are these Chinese eggs consumed principally in this country?

Mr. STEVENS: In the restaurants.

Mr. MALONEY: Are they really palatable?

Mr. DUNNING: There is a difference of opinion in regard to that.

Mr. MALONEY: According to the statement of the minister we have had about 50,000,000 of these eggs dumped in Canada within the last year.

Mr. DUNNING: Fifty million dozen?

Mr. MALONEY: No, 50,000,000 eggs. If they were shut out, quite a few chickens would be kept busy in Canada. In order to give the poultry raiser in this country a chance, we should consider the cost to the farmer to produce eggs. We must remember that a chicken costs at least a shilling. To bring the chicken to maturity until she is able to lay will cost a few dollars. To build a house and home and feed that chicken for the two years during which she is most useful will cost another $4 or $5. Then you have to allow for the wear and tear of the hen, and I really think the minister should raise the duty on eggs entering Canada.

Mr. LADNER: As regards the $416,000 worth of eggs coming from China, this does not mean from Hongkong, does it?

Mr. DUNNING: No, Hongkong is separately stated. A small amount comes from Hongkong.

Mr. LADNER: The duty under the present tariff, not under the budget proposals, on that $416,000 worth, is 17½ per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. LADNER: Under the budget proposals that will be raised to 30 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. LADNER: That consists practically all of frozen and powdered eggs, does it not?

Mr. DUNNING: Frozen and powdered. It includes egg yolk and egg albumen.

Mr. LADNER: How much came from Hongkong last year?

Mr. DUNNING: Thirteen dollars' worth.

Mr. FRASER: Does the trade from Hongkong come in under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: No. Hongkong does not have the British preference, and so far as I know it never has enjoyed it with Canada. It does not at the present time at any rate. Its whole business is as an entry port of China and it would be quite impractical to accord the British preference to Hongkong.

Mr. FRASER: Hongkong enjoys the British preference because it is a British colony.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is wrong. I say again that Hongkong does not enjoy the British preference with Canada.

Mr. FRASER: How is it eliminated from the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: It never was eliminated because it never was included. This afternoon I read the statement. The original British preference was extended in 1907 to certain Briitsh countries and provision was made for its further extension by order in council. No order in council has ever been issued by any government according to Kongkong the British preference on goods entering this country from that port.

Mr. COOTE: If it would not take too long, would the minister indicate the dominions?

Mr. DUNNING: I placed it all on Hansard this afternoon.

Mr. COOTE: I happened to be out of the chamber at the time.

Mr. CAHAN: I think it is obvious that Hongkong is not a producing country; it is only a trading country. It does not raise sufficient poultry for its own use. It does not produce sufficient eggs to keep its own breakfast table going. Therefore I do not think there should be a British preference in favour of a country that produces nothing for export.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: There is no British preference extended to Kongkong on any commodity. As my hon. friend states, Hongkong is really a trading port for China. I think what my hon. friends from British Columbia were afraid of was that Chinese eggs would get into Canada via Hongkong under the British preference. I can assure them that the British preference will not help Chinese eggs to enter Canada from Hongkong.

Mr. FRASER: Under what arrangement would our countervailing tariffs countervail if our tariff schedule is on a percentage basis and that of another country is specific.

Mr. DUNNING: The customs department would have to take the values at the time and compare them with the specific in connection with the particular entry.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—16b. Eggs, egg yolk or egg albumen, dried, evaporated, desiccated, or powdered, whether or not sugar or other material be added: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. LADNER: According to the trade reports, we imported from the United Kingdom $3,939 worth of goods under this item. The duties under the intermediate and general tariffs fortunately have been increased, but the British preference has been decreased. I wanted to inquire what was the purpose of decreasing the British preference in view of the trade existing.

Mr. DUNNING: In order to increase the trade.

Mr. LADNER: What were the total imports under this item last year?

Mr. DUNNING: From all countries? Of course, it is part of the old n.o.p. item, which includes some commodities which now fall within the item that we have just recently disposed of. The imports were $651,500; that includes somes commodities which are in this item and some which are in the previous item. From Japan, we imported $416,000. A little came from England. It is rather difficult to trade these various n.o.p. items which were put into the tariff many years ago, and under which trade has developed. We are separating them in the manner in which they are separated here in order that in the future we may be able to get the very information which my hon. friend is now asking for, so that when questions are asked in the future with respect to the trade the information will be automatically available. It is very difficult to make a correct comparison when the item is in one of what I call the basket items.

Mr. LADNER: Under 16b, there is now classified the old item 231, baking powder. I do not know how that comes in under eggs.

Mr. DUNNING: The item 16b does not include all of the old baking powder item, but it does include preparations which had to do with eggs and were extracted from eggs —egg powders, Eggo, and that sort of thing, which the customs ruled previously were baking powder. Under the new classification these powders will come where they belong, under the egg powders, and not under the baking powders.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I notice that the duties under 16a and 16b are identical in all three tariffs, but there is a countervailing duty for 16a items, and not for 16b items. I suppose that is why they are kept separate. Why are there countervailing items for 16a, and not for 16b

Mr. DUNNING: Countervailing duties can only be effective in the case of goods which are produced in Canada. We do not make any powdered eggs under 16b, so there is nothing on which to base countervailing duties.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Do we make any frozen eggs under 16a?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. LADNER: Do we not produce egg yolk and egg albumen in Canada? They certainly do in the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: Not eggs dried, evaporated, desiccated, or powdered, which is the classification in 16b.

Item agreed to.

Item 18 agreed to.

Customs tariff—28a. Tea imported direct from the country of growth and production, and tea purchased in the United Kingdom, when in wrappings, cartons or other packages of not less than five pounds weight each.

Provided that tea shall be entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff upon evidence satisfactory to the minister that such tea has been produced wholly in the British Dominions, colonies and possessions, and not otherwise: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 9 cents per pound; general tariff, 10 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a slight error which I wish to correct before the tea discussion starts. I move that in line 4 the words "not less" be struck out an the word "more" be substituted therefor. The point in connection with that is that the present language leaves an actual package of five pounds weight in two different tariff items, and it is necessary to make this change in order to make sure that it falls into either one or the other item. The item will then read:

Tea imported direct from the country of growth and production, and tea purchased in the United Kingdom, when in wrappings, cartons or other packages of more than five pounds weight,

And so on.

Mr. GLEN: We cannot hear what is being said at this end of the chamber, Mr. Chairman. I understand that you have called item 18 carried, and I wanted to say something on that.

Mr. DUNNING: In fairness to those who may be in the unfortunate position of not being able to hear what goes on, while I do not wish to reopen the discussion of items that we have passed, I have no objection to reverting to item 18.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: The hon. gentleman was on his feet, Mr. Chairman, when you called the item carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no objection to reverting to the item.

Customs tariff—18. Butter, per pound: British preferential tariff, 4 cents; intermediate tariff, 6 cents; general tariff, 7 cents.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon butter produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed upon butter entering Canada from such country.

Mr. GLEN: I would just like to repeat what I said yesterday. There is a good deal of talk with regard to alleviating the troubles of the farmers. Every member of the house who has spoken has expressed the view that agriculture is the basic industry of the country and should be assisted as far as possible, but when we come to translating that sentiment into concrete action, I find that agriculture is left entirely alone, especially by hon. gentlemen opposite. They say that they wish to protect agriculture as far as possible. I am here, representing a farming constituency and with some knowledge of what I speak, to say that this particular item of butter is not going to help the farmers. I have said before that it will not help them, that it will prove utterly detrimental to the best interests of the farmers in western Canada. I am not including British Columbia now; I am speaking of the three prairie provinces of which I know something. I am sorry the minister has gone; nevertheless he will read what I have to say in Hansard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He will be here in a moment.

Mr. GLEN: I said yesterday, and I repeat, that the imposition of a tariff on butter will not affect the producer of butter in western Canada over a period. I showed yesterday that even with the tremendous importation of New Zealand and Australian butter in 1928, there was only one month of the year of 1929 when the importations were less than in 1928. Two months were the same, and the imports in the other months of 1929 were greater. If you take that in conjunction with the importation of 95,000 pounds of butter in 1925, the price of 1929 was greater than the price of 1925. I wish to point out to the house that in western Canada to-day there are tremendous troubles affecting all the farmers, and the result is that the farmers are likely to leave the land. I know of men to-day who have been in the country from twenty to thirty years, and who five or ten years ago were wealthy, with money in the bank and in investments, many of whom have had to take mortgages within the last three or four years on their original homesteads; and they were competent farmers, none better on the face of the earth. Yet conditions have placed them in that position.

I wish also to direct attention to this fact. In all the legislation that we are putting through to-day, there is nothing that directly benefits agriculture. We are not giving to agriculture the recognition that we should give and which the house expects. There is little room for doubt in my mind that we will have again the same agitation for farmers' rights unless this house is prepared to do something for them. I am quite sure that the low tariff sentiment will be revived in the west in the absence of some remedial measures. That sentiment unfortunately has gone into abeyance for the time being and protection has entered into their viewpoint. They saw something more or less tangible immediately before their eyes, and taking the shortsighted view that men sometimes will take, they have grasped at that straw. I say that this tariff on butter is likely to prove most detrimental, for it will destroy absolutely the feeling of the men on the farm which hitherto has been their strength. I care not for the opinions of anyone to the contrary, protection cannot benefit the farmers of western Canada. While we are on an export basis our prices are ruled by world markets, and we cannot possibly benefit by any system of protection. Yet despite that self-evident fact we see the thin edge of protection being imposed to destroy the efficiency and morale of the farmers. I protest most strenuously against the imposition of this tariff. I give my opinion to the government as sincerely as a man can give it that I think they are making a great mistake. It seems to me that the Minister of Finance should state the reason why these tariffs are being imposed, and he should also state if it is the intention of the government to carry the policy further into effect.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not propose to take the hon. gentleman seriously, Mr. Chairman. He is simply making campaign excuses for his opposition to the subamendment and his support of the budget.

Mr. MILNE: Mr. Chairman, this item is on the same basis as the protection of eggs. The dairy industry of the prairie provinces has made substantial increase in the production of butter. Last year we increased our production something over 20 per cent, in spite of the fact that perhaps we had the driest year and the greatest scarcity of pasture that I ever remember. If we continue to develop at this rate, I presume we will soon be exporting large quantities of butter, which means that we will be compelled to take world prices for our product. Therefore I am still of the opinion that this item will not benefit the farmer. If we could get some relief in other lines that would reduce our cost of production it would be of real assistance to us. In this connection I desire to read a short paragraph from the report of the annual meeting of the National Dairy Council of Canada held in Toronto, October 18 and 19, 1929. The president Mr. J. A. Caulder said:

> A year or two ago when Mr. Stephen and myself were struggling along trying to find some money to buy posters and literature, we went to the other side and we discovered that we could buy posters for about one-quarter to one-half what we could have them made for in this country.

It is a strange condition that we in this country, where we produce more paper and pulp than any other country in the world, cannot furnish posters for advertising purposes as cheaply as they are produced in the United States. I merely quote that as an instance—I might cite others—where a reduction would be appreciated by the farmers of the prairie provinces.

Mr. ROWE: Mr. Chairman, this is indeed a strange spectacle. Here we have hon. members who probably have done more to urge the government to grant low tariffs and reduced rates on the very commodity to which they are referring than any of their colleagues and thus have helped to bring about such a critical situation in the dairy industry that the government itself has been compelled to turn a complete political somersault. Now we have the same members rising in their places to apologize to the indignant farmers who are dissatisfied, but in so doing they are only aggravating the situation. Never in any decade of our history have the agriculturists of this country received such scant recognition and such unfavourable treatment as we have received during the past ten years from this government. There is not a farmer from one end of Canada to the other but realizes that nothing has struck the basic industry of this country so hard as this government's treatment of the very item under discussion.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Nonsense.

Mr. ROWE: I am not an authority on medicine, but I think I know as much about dairy farming as the hon. member for Saskatoon. All he has to do to realize the critical condition of our dairy industry is to look at our butter importations during the last couple of years. Every farmer in the province of Ontario who receives a cheque for his cream knows that four weeks ago it represented only 60 per cent of what he was getting in the corresponding period last year.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): A lot of Tory propaganda.

Mr. ROWE: Not at all; I am simply stating facts. The reason for this decline is simply the huge importations of New Zealand butter. We have ceased to be an exporting country so far as butter is concerned. When this government came into power we exported millions of pounds of butter to the United States and Great Britain. And what has happened to the cheese market? The Minister of Agriculture and his deputy have sent letters all over the Dominion asking our farmers for some solution of the present agricultural depression. Why? Because we have lost our cheese trade in England to a great extent; we are not exporting half the quantity that we were before the war. Our meat exports to Great Britain have felt the same pinch, having been more or less affected by the decline in the dairy industry. In fact where we used to export $78,000,000 worth to Great Britain, last year we exported only $7,500,000 worth. As to the butter situation, we have simply changed from an exporting country of twenty-five to thirty million pounds to an importing country of over thirty-four million pounds. At the rate of our present importations we shall probably import fifty million pounds this year. Surely those who have experienced this disastrous condition of affairs should hesitate to-night to rise and condemn this small measure of protection, which, I submit, Mr. Chairman, is not half enough. The request of the dairy council is altogether too modest. A small percentage of our dairymen belong to that organization, simply because the dairy industry has become so demoralized that Ontario farmers who were milking ten, twelve and twenty cows a few years ago, to-day are milking only a sufficient number to provide for their own requirements. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the situation is critical to-day. Our farms in Ontario are not worth more than 60 per cent of the price they fetched when this government came into power. The people in New Zealand have taken advantage of the free trade doctrines of this government, and their farms have risen in value from $200 or $300 to $500 or $600 an acre.

Mr. DUNNING: What country?

Mr. ROWE: New Zealand. I submit you can go on down the line and you will find that because of the action of this government in the past it has had to-day to make a rightabout face. Those members who prompted the United States government to take the action they did take are rising to-night and offering the panacea of low tariff. Mr. Chairman, the greatest criticism which we could offer in connection with this item is that the tariff is not half high enough, because the industry is almost entirely ruined; it will take reestablishment and protection to bring it back to normal.

Mr. WARD: Before the hon. gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him a question. Does he believe that the Canadian dairyman would receive more for his dairy products if he were on an export basis?

Mr. ROWE: When we were on an export basis we did receive more.

Mr. DUNNING: No, that is absolutely wrong.

Mr. ROWE: I am right.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is wrong; surely he knows better than that.

Mr. ROWE: If my hon. friend will consult the records as to the price of cream three or four weeks ago and compare that price with that which obtained in 1920 he will find that I am correct.

Mr. DUNNING: The export price for butter has been consistently below the Canadian price for butter.

Mr. ROWE: That may apply to recent times.

Mr. DUNNING: When we have not butter to export the Canadian price is higher than the world price.

Mr. SENN: Will the minister say that up to last year the price of butter in United States cities has been less than it has been in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: I am speaking of the world market to which Canadian farmers have to ship their butter when they have any to sell.

Mr. CAHAN: Where is that market?

Mr. DUNNING: In Europe.

Mr. CAHAN: Where in Europe is the world market for butter? There is no such thing as a world market for butter, and there never was.

Mr. DUNNING: I have sold some there, and I think I know as much about it as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. EVANS: I wish to point out what would seem to be inconsistencies regarding butter and some other things. Before the Australian treaty went into effect the duty on butter never did the farmer any good. When the Australian treaty was consummated, however, the duty was practically taken off butter from Australia and placed on raisins from other countries. Now we have a duty on butter and the duty on raisins and the result is that the cost of living has been increased. In regard to tea, the duty has been taken off under the British preference, and that no doubt will be welcomed all over the country. If the tariff is a measure used for the purpose of getting revenue it should have been levied on tea and taken off raisins, and the result would have been somewhat easier on the farmer. The duty on butter is not going to benefit the farmer, it will benefit only the merger that is being formed. The farmers' shares in the cooperative company which has been formed throughout the country are being bought by the groups which are trying to form a merger for the distribution of dairy products and the control of the price of the farmer's cream. This will not benefit even the cream producer; it will be a hardship on the consumer, and the price of living will be raised all round.

[Mr. Rowe.]

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) seems to think that the government has done nothing for the farmer, but I must say he is not in line with the thought expressed in the Montreal Gazette of May 10, 1930. I wish to read an extract from that paper:

> Perhaps the Fansher group will inform the house, and the people of the Dominion, what they mean by more effective consideration for agriculture. The prevailing impression has been that in cheapening the so-called instruments of production, in reducing rail rates, and in divers other ways, the King government has shown far more consideration for agriculture and the agriculturist than for any other industry or any other class; and now there is to be a measure of protection for the farmer against foreign competition. There is something wrong with the Fansher reasoning.

I would remind my hon. friend that the excerpt I have read is from an editorial in the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. EVANS: Does the hon. gentleman contend that the Montreal Gazette is an expert in agricultural matters?

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): My hon. friend has condemned the government by saying that it has done nothing for agriculture. I have read from a Conservative newspaper and it clearly admits that the King government has done more for agriculture than it has done for any other industry.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They have done nothing for any other industry.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): Hon. members on this side of the house can see that members of the opposition are pressing for increased protection for the manufacturing industries. The farmers of the country can see that, also. I thought it was wise however to put this editorial on record, because it is an admission by an outstanding Canadian paper that the King government has done more for agriculture than has any previous government.

Mr. MALONEY: It is amusing to hear these old free traders trying to square themselves with their constituents, after voting for the budget. I am forced to suggest to the Minister of Finance that we should leave the budget and allow the people of Canada to decide its fate. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite are not going to endeavour to force this budget through the house and not give the people of Canada a chance to decide what they want.

Mr. McPHEE: Speak for yourself.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: A statement was made to-night by the Minister of Finance and contradicted on this side of the house, as to the comparative prices of butter in this country and in the markets of the world. When I speak of the world market I refer to the London market. For some years I have studied these prices, and as a matter of fact I have statistics on the subject. I have compiled figures for eight years past showing the comparative prices, week by week, in this country and in London. As a result I must say that in that instance I confirm in every respect the statement of the Minister of Finance that week by week, month by month and year by year for eight years the London price was consistently lower than the Canadian price.

Mr. DUNNING: And it is to-day.

Mr. SENN: We have witnessed a remarkable spectacle in this house to-night. The gentlemen on the other side who have just spoken have consistently opposed any increase in the tariff on butter. They spoke against the abrogation of the New Zealand agreement, and last night when they voted on the budget they voted in favour of the abrogation of that agreement. They voted in favour of higher duties on butter and again to-night they are talking against schedules in the tariff which they supported last night. It seems to me that their constituents will wonder what position these hon. gentlemen are taking. I wonder what will happen if this government is returned to power; I wonder what will happen to these schedules, in the light of what has been said across the floor to-night. What are the people of the Dominion of Canada who believe that there should be a duty on butter to think of what we have witnessed this evening. Surely they are going to say that we cannot put any confidence in these men and that very likely, if they should be returned to power, these schedules will be interfered with again very quickly.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): Why did my hon. friend vote against the budget?

Mr. SENN: I will tell my hon. friend why I voted against it; there were several reasons. The first reason is because I have no confidence in this government or in any government supported by men who vote one way one day and talk the other way the next day. The next reason is because although the dairy council only asked for 4 cents under the British preference I believe that if they thought they had any chance of getting more they would have asked for it. I believe as well that since channels of trade have been established between Canada and New Zealand it is going to take more than 4 cents a pound duty to keep that butter out of this country.

Now I want to say a word in regard to what the Minister of Finance said as to prices in London and those in Canada. I think what the hon. member to my left said is very largely true, that prices in London have been lower, but we must remember that London is a free trade market. On the other hand, up to this year prices have been higher in United States cities for a great number of years past than they have been either in London or in Canada, and that is a protected market. I think that is a sufficient answer to the arguments which have been advanced by the Minister of Finance and by the gentleman to my left.

Customs tariff—28a. Tea imported direct from the country of growth and production, and tea purchased in the United Kingdom, when in wrappings, cartons or other packages of not less than five pounds weight each, per pound.

Provided that tea shall be entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff upon evidence satisfactory to the minister that such tea has been produced wholly in the British dominions, colonies and possessions, and not otherwise: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 9 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Mr. MacLAREN: I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of Finance to the effect which the proposed tariff on tea will have on the tea dealers. However acceptable free tea may be to the general run of people it does seem unjust to penalize the tea dealers of Canada in order to bring about that condition. I should like to see the Minister of National Revenue here during the discussion of this item, because both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue are concerned in this question, and I would ask the Minister of Finance to take up this matter some other time with the Minister of National Revenue.

I believe a great injustice is threatened to the tea dealers of Canada. In 1918 a duty of 10 per cent was placed on tea under the war Revenue Act in order to meet the exceptional expenditures during and after the war. That was quite understandable, but an unusual and exceptional course was followed after the adoption of that tariff. Authority was given the excise department at the same time to follow the tea that already had been cleared through customs and stored in the tea warehouses and collect upon it that same duty of 10 per cent. I know of no other instance of an article being followed up in this way and an excise tax collected amounting to the duty on the article. It may be that this has occurred before, but I know of no similar instance.

In any event it was a very unusual and exceptional condition. Then on the 1st of May of this year the Minister of Finance announced that he proposed to make tea free. What was the result? It left the tea dealers in the lurch. As usual, their warehouses were stored with tea on which duty had been paid, and if the minister pursues the course which he has indicated, but which I hope he will reconsider, the tea dealers again will be heavy losers. It does seem unjust that both coming and going the tea dealers should be so unfortunate as to receive this treatment from the government. The tea dealers say that not only was the tax that was placed on tea in 1918 followed up by excise to the warehouses, but that to-day they will lose the duty they have already paid on tea in their warehouses. They contend that it is only fair and just that now, when the minister proposed to abolish the tariff, they should be refunded the amount of duty on the tea which is stored in their warehouses. The government should not have that duty under all circumstances, when they are putting it on and again when they are taking it off.

I know it is said that when the duty is taken off an article it is the custom that the dealers who are affected must suffer the loss, but I desire to point out to the minister that the special War Revenue Act was a special measure, that the seeking out of the tea warehouses was an exceptional measure and that therefore it is only fair and reasonable that now the tea dealers should be treated in an exceptional way, if necessary. It is true that the war tax was an unusual measure, but surely that is not a reason for penalizing those who are concerned now. On the contrary, we should endeavour so to meet the situation that the tea dealers concerned should not suffer in this instance. I submit that in this case the tea dealers should not bear the consequences of the government's action; exceptional conditions warrant exceptional treatment.

If the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue ask for a precedent, then I would say that in 1927 a precedent was established for this practice. The minister must not look doubtful, as I rather think he is.

Mr. DUNNING: I will try to look more pleasant.

Mr. MacLAREN: I would rather you tried to look as though you were following my argument a little more closely.

Mr. DUNNING: I will try to look as though I were convinced.

Mr. MacLAREN: As though you were becoming convinced. In 1927 or 1928, a refund was made to the motor car dealers which applied to the cars which had been in stock the year before. I do not know whether this particular refund would be made by the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Finance—

Mr. ODETTE: There was no rebate of the duty paid on motor cars; a rebate was made in 1926 of the excise tax. If the dealers had paid the duty they received no rebate.

Mr. MacLAREN: It was the refund made under the Special War Revenue Act of 1915.

Mr. ODETTE: That is a refund of excise tax and had nothing to do with the duty.

Mr. MacLAREN: Action was taken in July, 1927, whereby a refund was made of the excise tax. I am not at all concerned with how the refund is made, whether it comes under the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Finance, but I am concerned with the remedying of an injustice. The tea dealers are undergoing considerable hardship and I think it would have been better had the minister made this operative within a certain number of months.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend suggest that seriously?

Mr. MacLAREN: I am absolutely serious in making that suggestion; not only that but I am emphatically serious about it. I think my suggestion will be fortified by other opinions, and I trust it will appeal to the minister.

These dealers suffered considerably some years ago when this tax was introduced, and a refund should be made for the stock which they held on May 1. Failing that refund, the application of the rates should not become operative for a certain number of months. The minister may reply that that is not a usual course to take, but I think this case requires special treatment. The sales tax was reduced gradually from 3 per cent to 2 per cent to 1 per cent. The former Minister of Finance stated that that was done so as not to disturb business and so that it would not involve any considerable loss.

Mr. DUNNING: That the loss would not be too great for the businesses concerned to bear.

Mr. MacLAREN: Why could not that course have been adopted in this instance; instead of making this commodity free, the duty could have been reduced gradually.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MacLAREN: No, not just now; I want to finish and I want to keep my eye on the Minister of Finance.

Mr. DUNNING: You are afraid I will escape.

Mr. MacLAREN: The Minister of Finance heard his distinguished predecessor give that reason for the gradual reduction in the sales tax. As an alternative remedy, this rate of duty could be treated in the same manner. I would have liked very much had the Prime Minister been present because I think he would have appreciated the argument I am offering.

Mr. CAHAN: He was here and he was listening.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was at the back of the room and I heard most of the remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. MacLAREN: That is very satisfactory. Had the Minister of National Revenue been present as well, it would have made a very satisfactory trio. This matter is one which demands attention and which calls for amelioration. When the tariff was raised on this article the exceptional course was pursued of following the tea to the warehouses and although it had been cleared already by the customs 10 cents per pound was exacted. Now, without warning of any kind, this article is made free of duty and these dealers are undergoing a very serious loss. It is all very well to give the ordinary run of persons the benefit of free tea, but why penalize the tea dealers? The argument against the payment of a refund may be that it would be difficult to accomplish, but that is not sufficient reason for refusing to remedy an injustice. The alternative is to bring this change in tariff into force a certain number of months hence, or if the minister is what I would consider obdurate and is not prepared to be convinced, he could gradually reduce it and make the cut this year one-third or one-half.

Mr. LUCAS: The hon. gentleman has been stating that the tea dealers have suffered from the cut of seven cents a pound in the duty on tea. Will he explain why the tea dealers have voluntarily reduced the price of tea by fifteen cents a pound, when the cut in the duty has been only seven cents a pound?

Mr. MacLAREN: I am not in the tea trade. I do not say this in a frivolous way, but that is their own business. If they consider that good business; if they consider they are going to appeal to their customers on that ground, that is their own affair. But I say that beyond doubt the tea dealers of this country will suffer heavy loss unless action is taken in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Motherwell moves that the item be amended by striking out the words "not less' in the fourth line, and substituting the word "more".

Mr. DUNNING: I explained the amendment some time ago. It is to make sure that the five-pound package falls into one item or the other. The item as amended will read:

> Tea imported direct from the country of growth and production, and tea purchased in the United Kingdom, when in wrappings, cartons or other packages of more than five pounds weight.

The other tea item would correspond, so that the package which was exactly five pounds would be in one item or the other.

In reference to what the hon. member for St. John-Albert has had to say regarding the reduction in duty and consequent hardship upon tea dealers, it is always a difficulty in connection with reductions in tariffs that some people may have on hand stocks of the articles concerned which, as a result of the reduction, must be disposed of at lower prices than prevailed before the reduction took place. That is a well known difficulty, I think it is correct to say, in all British countries in relation to the budget. In all British countries the budget items become operative immediately upon the delivery of the budget and business becomes accustomed to that condition. With regard to the previous situation in 1918, when a duty was imposed upon tea by the parliament of that day, my hon. friend says that the dealers then suffered an injustice because the then government decided to impose that tax upon tea which was in stock at the time but which had been cleared from customs. I can hardly follow that argument for the reason that immediately the price of tea is raised, and I have no doubt the stocks of tea upon which that extra duty was paid by the wholesale tea dealers were passed along to the consumer just the same as all that subsequently was dealt with. I do not think they suffered any loss on that occasion and that should not be urged as a reason why special consideration should be extended now. They had every opportunity of passing on to the ultimate consumer whatever they themselves paid.

With reference to the present case, I may say that the government has had representations from tea dealers throughout the whole country regarding this question. On the matter of principle, of course my hon. friend is quite right when he states that it is not usual to make refunds with respect to tariff reductions and I contend the principle is sound. If we started the practice of recognizing appeals for refunds consequent upon tariff changes in the budget, I do not know where we would stop. The government is, however, gathering all the information it can about this particular case. I do not want to hold out any hope to my hon. friend that the usual procedure will be departed from, but we are gathering the information. May I point out to him one difficulty? He thinks in terms of the large dealer. He speaks of his warehouse. What about the little grocer that had tea on his shelves on the 1st of May, and every little grocer throughout the country had tea on his shelves at that time. Doubtless some of the wholesale dealers—perhaps all of them; I do not know—would take care of the little grocer and make the necessary adjustment with him. But if the principle of making adjustments is once recognized by the government, my hon. friend would be the first to agree—I know he is a fairminded man—that the adjustment should be made all along the line; that whoever suffered by reason of such a condition, should receive equal relief. I know he would say that.

Mr. MacLAREN: I would not say anything of the kind. In order to save the minister the trouble of elaborating or meeting an arugment that I am not advancing, I said that this was an unusual condition. I said that it was unusual for the government to follow the tea into the warehouse after it had been released.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish my hon. friend would let me finish my statement. I listened patiently to him for nearly half an hour.

Mr. MacLAREN: Then let him not put forward an argument I am not making.

Mr. DUNNING: When my hon. friend interrupted me, I was not putting forward any argument at all as to the past. I was merely pointing out to him that on the 1st of May there was tea on the shelves of every grocery store from one end of Canada to the other, as well as in the warehouses of the wholesale dealers of whom my hon. friend was speaking, and I was saying that he would be the first man to recognize that any relief that was given should be given to all who were similarly situated, whether wholesalers or retailers. I was pointing out that would be one of the difficulties in operation in connection with any refunds which might be made. I am sure he will agree with that. What I intended to conclude by saying, if possible before eleven o'clock, was that while at the moment I do not hold out any great hope that any such arrangement can be made, the government, in consequence of represenations which have been made by tea dealers all across Canada, is now through the Minister of National Revenue gathering the necessary information in order to be able to decide whether or not anything can or should be done with regard to the matter. I cannot, if I talk all evening, say anything more definite than that, but it is a certainty that we could not make an arrangement which would affect only the wholesale tea dealers, and the ramifications of an arrangement which would ensure that every grocery store was taken care of, offers difficulties which I am sure my hon. friend appreciates. In the meantime the information is being secured and the decision will be made by the government as soon as possible.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister be good enough to bring down certain information on this item? I should like to have information to this effect: the importations for each month, January, February, March and April; the amount released from bond in each of those months, and the amount in bond at the end of each month. I think that is easily available for the leading ports in Canada and for the whole of Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the information in my department, but I think we can secure it from either the Department of National Revenue or the Department of Trade and Commerce, I am not sure which.

Mr. STEVENS: From the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend want the item to stand until that information has been furnished?

Mr. STEVENS: I am not asking that the item stand, but will the minister just say that the information will be brought down?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: I think the item should stand, because there is a great deal of discussion throughout the country as to the release of tea from bond after this duty went into force.

Mr. DUNNING: Discussion about what?

Mr. CAHAN: There is a great deal of discussion throughout the country with respect to the quantity of tea in bond on the date of delivery of this budget when this item came into force, and the alleged larger quantities thereafter released for the market.

Mr. DUNNING: Released after the budget?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, I think the hon. gentleman can see the point that I am suggesting. I think before we are precluded from discussing this tea item we should have that information.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend would not leave me on a Friday night with an insinuation like that in the air.

Mr. CAHAN: I am making no insinuation at all.

Mr. DUNNING: My honour as Minister of Finance is at stake in anything like that. My hon. friend had better speak plainly.

Mr. CAHAN: The information should therefore be brought down.

Mr. DUNNING: I would like my hon. friend to speak plainly.

Mr. CAHAN: I am speaking plainly.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not get for a moment the full force of what my hon. friend was intimating.

Mr. CAHAN: I am speaking plainly.

Mr. DUNNING: What does my hon. friend mean?

Mr. CAHAN: I simply mean that there is a good deal of discussion going on with respect to the quantity of tea in bond prior to the date of the delivery of the budget speech and the quantity which was released from bond thereafter. I think we should have that information.

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly my hon. friend will get the information. What he means to convey is the insinuation that by some means someone knew what was going to be done in the budget.

Mr. CAHAN: I am making no insinuation whatever.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is saying what he is saying quite publicly. He knows that it will go to the four corners of Canada, and that it reflects upon me if it reflects upon anyone. It is decidedly unfair. He knows that I could not have the information brought down to-night whatever it may be. I do not know what the information may reveal. He knows that the matter will have to stand over until Monday, and in the meantime that imputation will go abroad from one end of Canada to the other.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman need not get excited at all. No imputation at all is made on his honour.

Mr. DUNNING: I know.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not in the habit of making imputations.

Mr. DUNNING: You have made one successfully.

Mr. CAHAN: I have lived this life so long that I have courage to make any insinuations which I desire to make. If the minister does not know that there are discussions of that kind going on in the market places, he ought to thank me for telling him. Such a discussion is going on. I have not the slightest doubt as to the minister's integrity. I have not the slightest suspicion that one word went out from him to the public. I am not making any imputation, but I say that that information should be before this house before this item passes and further discussion is precluded. I have just as much confidence in the integrity of the minister as I have in my own or in the integrity of the Prime Minister or of the leader of the opposition or any other hon. member of this house. I would be the last one to make an imputation of that kind against the minister. Certainly I believe in his honour. But that matter should be settled.

Mr. DUNNING: I can assure my hon. friend that it will be settled. It is not a question of whether this item carries or not. So far as I am concerned, the information certainly will be secured. I have no knowledge whatever of what it may be.

Mr. CAHAN: I have not either.

Mr. DUNNING: Many of the tea dealers in Canada have made representations as to the duties on tea to former finance ministers year after year, and I would be very much surprised indeed, if when a budget was coming along—any budget in any year, this year, last year, the year before, five years ago, any year—they did not seek to be in as safe a position as they could in relation to their own business by the time the budget came down. That applies not only with respect to dealers in tea but with respect to dealers in other commodities which might be considered as possibly to be affected by any budget changes. The same thing, of course, occurs, as my hon. friend knows, in England every year. Any business which might conceivably be affected by a budget to be brought down watches very closely its own position with regard to stocks and so forth before the budget comes down, and tries to remain in as safe and sound a position as possible. I can assure my hon. friend that the information will be brought down whether or not the item passes. It has nothing to do with the item. I was perhaps misled by the manner in which my hon. friend first expressed himself. I gather now that he was not intending any such reflection upon me, and I am very glad to have him make that statement.

Mr. CAHAN: I have no doubt about you in the world.

Mr. DUNNING: This being my first budget I was most careful, so careful that I locked up every document every time I went out of the office. It is a very delicate matter. The information will be brought down. I understand my hon. friend wants the amount released from bond for each month, and so forth.

Mr. STEVENS: The importations, the amount released, and the amount remaining in bond at the end of the month.

Mr. DUNNING: I would be very much surprised if the whole trade or a large part of it did not remain in a careful position.

Mr. CAHAN: We will see to what extent they guessed right.

Amendment (Mr. Motherwell) agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: Has the minister any definite information as to the amount of tea stocks on hand in warehouse throughout Canada on which duty has been paid?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the slightest idea. I made no inquiries about that whatever. My hon. friend can imagine why I did not want to make any such inquiries.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS—EMPLOYEES

Mr. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton North Victoria):

1. Is it the policy of the government to employ only Canadians on the Canadian National steamships?
2. How many, or in what proportion, are the Canadian employees on the said steamships?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. In accordance with the policy of the government in such matters, preference is, as far as practicable, given to Canadians in the employment of crews by the Canadian National Steamships management.

2. The proportion of Canadians employed on the steamships is 85 per cent of the total of the crews carried. This figure does not take into account waiters and stewards carried on Canadian National West Indies steamers where, owing to climatic conditions, it is necessary to employ West Indians.

RADIUM TREATMENT

Mr. ROSS (Kingston):

1. Did the government at any time pass an order in council refusing radium in treatment of ex-service men?

2. If so, what is the number of the said order in council, the date, and the contents thereof?

Mr. KING (KOOTENAY):

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

COMPARATIVE TARIFF RATES

Mr. ADSHEAD:

The Winnipeg Tribune of May 5 gives the following table which purports to show the different rates of duties as under the old tariff and the tariff just enacted:—

| Carload— | Old duty | New duties |
|---|---|---|
| Celery | $189 00 | $450 00 |
| Tomatoes | 236 25 | 504 00 |
| Quart box berries | 250 88 | 430 00 |
| Pint box berries | 245 76 | 366 64 |
| Cabbages | 120 00 | 440 00 |
| Onions | 165 00 | 231 00 |

1. Is the above statement correct?

2. If so, how is the duty computed?

Mr. EULER:

1: No.

2. Duties are being computed in accordance with the resolutions submitted to parliament on the 1st of May, 1930.

Motion agreed to.

FAMOUS PLAYERS CANADIAN, CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) whether he is in a position to answer the question raised on Friday last by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) regarding an alleged moving picture monopoly in Canada, the difficulties which have been experienced by the minority shareholders in the assertion of their position, and whether or not the government contemplates taking any action in the matter.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret), anticipating that reference would be made to this matter, left with me a memorandum in connection with it. I do not know whether or not it is the wish of my hon. friend that that memorandum should be read to the house or laid on the table.

Mr. BENNETT: If the right hon. gentleman would read it, it would be available on Hansard. A great many people are interested in this matter, and I have received many communications in connection therewith.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The memorandum prepared for the Secretary of State and signed by the Under-Secretary of State, reads as follows:

Ottawa, May 19, 1930.

Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, was incorporated on the 23rd of January, 1920, under the provisions of The Companies Act.

The capital structure has since been modified, and according to the last annual return, made under section 137 of The Companies Act, dated 12th May, 1930, the authorized capital is given as 600,000 shares without nominal or par value. Of these 378,395 have been taken up.

There is outstanding an issue of $3,000,000 debentures and $6,000,000 of bonds.

The names and addresses of the directors are:

Adolph Zukor, president, address: Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, New York City.

Sir William Wiseman, address: Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, New York City.

S. R. Kent, address: Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, New York City.

I. W. Killam, address: Royal Securities Corporation, Montreal.

W. J. Sheppard, address: Waubaushene, Ont.

J. B. Tudhope, address: Orillia, Ont.

J. P. Bickell, vice-president, address: Standard Bank Building, Toronto.

Arthur Cohen, address: 1200 Royal Bank Building, Toronto.

The prospectus issued to the public in March, 1929, referred to in Mr. Stevens' statement, is not on file in the department.

So far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned, the government has not been apprized of any circumstances connected with the sale of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, to the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation.

It is difficult to understand why any reference to the government on this subject should be made. The Companies Act does not confer upon the Department of the Secretary of State or any other department of the government any authority to intervene in any action which may be taken by the shareholders in accordance with the provisions of the act. If the provisions of the act have not been completely complied with any relief upon the subject would be afforded by the courts.

Mr. BENNETT: Rather than unnecessarily take up time in moving the adjournment of the house in order to discuss this matter, I shall simply point out to the Prime Minister that there are three questions which it seems to me might be considered by this parliament and settled by governmental action. The first is in connection with the amendment of the Companies Act so as to provide for the control of a medium, not only of amusement but of education of this type. Considerable discussion has taken place as to whether companies carrying on this business should not be under the control of Canadian directors.

The second question which I have been asked to submit to the house is as to whether or not the present condition is not a violation of the Combines Act, and the third question is as to the rights of minority shareholders.

The question raised by the parties interested must be settled by the courts, as we have nothing to do with that. The only question to be considered is the policy to be pursued in a matter of such national importance, in view of the fact that it is alleged that production, distribution and exhibition of films are controlled by a company controlled and managed in a foreign country. This might create a condition which would necessitate governmental action, and this house should consider whether or not, before prorogation, governmental action should be taken so as to safeguard an interprovincial and a national business. This matter concerns the provinces from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island. It is not only with the films themselves we are concerned, but there is involved in the question the buildings in which such films are exhibited. I suppose the right hon. gentleman has seen the press report of the meeting which took place in Toronto a few days ago, at which meeting a very large number of Canadian shareholders expressed grave concern, not with respect to their investment but with respect to the national aspect of the question. I quite agree with the statement of the Under-Secretary of State that the rights of individual and minority shareholders in matters of this kind do not concern this parliament. That is a matter for the courts, but we should consider the national aspect of the question. The government might well consider the broad question of amendments which might be made to the Companies and other acts to meet the situation.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I had no information that this question would be asked to-day. My hon. friend must realize that it is hardly right to discuss matters which are to be investigated under the Combines Investigation Act, but for his information I would state that this company is now being investigated.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand it is being investigated in the United States.

OWNERSHIP OF LANDS BY ORIENTALS

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT OF QUESTION OF LEGISLATIVE POWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, might I be permitted to direct the Prime Minister's attention to a resolution standing in my name, being number 8 on page 18 of the orders of the day, suggesting a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada on certain matters affecting orientals in Canada. May I ask if the right hon. the Prime Minister will afford facilities for the discussion of that resolution before the close of the session? He no doubt realizes that there are matters involved in this resolution which are more or less uncertain, and I understand that the right hon. Prime Minister has written some letters regarding this matter. There seems to be some uncertainty as to the respective powers of the provinces and the Dominion. I do not think that this resolution would involve much discussion, because it is not controversial in character, but if it is impossible to bring it up for discussion, I would like to know if the government would take steps, without the passage of this resolution, to have such a reference submitted to the supreme court. The Prime Minister is quite familiar with the questions involved and I have no doubt that he appreciates the necessity for the reference.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, had my hon. friend given me any intimation of his intention to ask this question I would have been in a better position to reply to him. However, my experience is that at the end of every session several hon. members ask for some special privilege regarding resolutions which they have on the order paper, but which have not been taken up. In the past it has not been possible to grant such a privilege to one hon. member and refuse it to another, and I am afraid if the door is opened by setting aside a time for the discussion of matters which do not come up in the regular order, we will be putting ourselves under obligations which it may be difficult to meet. I would not like to say more than this at the present time, but I will think the matter over.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would the government consider submitting this reference without the necessity of discussing the resolution itself?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) could take that under consideration.

FASCIST FILMS SHOWN IN OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I asked a question on Friday of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) regarding the reported activities of the Fascists in Canada, to which I have not as yet received an answer.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have asked for information regarding this question, but as yet I have not received a report.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PENSION OF LUDGER CARRIER

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I was not in the house when the notice of motion for production of papers which stands in my name was called. For the information of the hon. minister, I would state that this notice of motion refers to a pension to be paid by the Canadian National Railways and not by the Pensions department.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Sir Eugene Fiset in the chair.

2. Resolved, that the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, be amended by repealing subsection two of section six thereof and by substituting the following therefor:—

(2) Excise duties or excise taxes shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purpose of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff, intermediate tariff or any more favourable tariff.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): This resolution was amended by adding thereto the following as section 2a:

2a. Customs duties of the United Kingdom shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purposes of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the intermediate tariff or any more favourable tariff and are bottled in bond in the United Kingdom and imported direct therefrom.

Mr. CAHAN: When the committee were discussing this item on Thursday and Friday of last week, I called attention to the fact that in the province of Quebec a number of factories were deeply interested in the matter under consideration and the hon. member for Lincoln also directed attention to the fact that in his own constituency and elsewhere in the province of Ontario a number of silk factories were also concerned. In order that I may present my views more clearly before the committee, I wish to state generally that this item affects particularly the broad silk industry of this country and importations from Japan of silk of that class and description. The broad silk industry was started in Canada by the incorporation of the Bruck Silk mills at Cowansville, Quebec, in December, 1921. That was the first really substantial effort made with respect to the production of silk cloths in this country. According to returns which are published in the financial journals, that company now has $800,000 invested. It began to market its production in Canada in 1923, and this initial enterprise was followed by the incorporation in 1923 of two other companies which commenced operations in 1924.

From this small beginning there are to-day eight silk plants in Quebec and six silk plants in Ontario in actual operation, and another plant of very considerable size is projected and I understand is now under way for the production of broad silk alone at Valleyfield, Quebec. The total looms installed number about 1,200, and when the proposed plant at Valleyfield is in operation, 200 looms will be added, making about 1,400 looms in all. In addition to this there are certain Canadian celanese factories, some of them in Quebec, with approximately 500 looms. These factories make a product that is being and has been used in recent months to take the place of Japanese importations. This would make a total productive capacity of about 1,700 looms actually installed, with 200 more about to be installed, or a total of 1,900 looms which will give employment to approximately 1,200 people as wage earners. The proposal under discussion affects all of these people of whom no less than 1,400 are resident in Quebec.

I have gathered from the technical returns published a statement regarding a number of these factories in both Quebec and Ontario. This is an industry which is located largely in towns of comparatively small population where the employment given is of great advantage to the people living in those smaller communities. At Cowansville in Missisquoi county, which is represented by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, there is the Bruck Silk Mills, Limited, which has a capital investment of $800,000. This was the company which was incorporated in 1921 and to which I made reference. According to the latest returns which I could find, it has 240 broad looms suitable for and actually engaged in the manufacture of broad silk cloths. It has 5,600 spindles et cetera. This is a most important industry in Cowansville which, according to recent returns, has a population of less than 1,200.

At Drummondville in the constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska, which is represented by one of my hon. friends opposite, there is a silk company known as Roessel, Louis, and Company, Limited. It manufactures broad silks and has about 1,800 spindles and 100 looms for the manufacture of this special silk cloth.

There is at St. Hyacinthe the Consolidated Silk Mills, Limited. St. Hyacinthe is a manufacturing town of some considerable importance. It has a population, however, under 12,000 people. The Consolidated Silk Mills, Limited, manufactures at St. Hyacinthe broad silks, and they have, I understand, about fifty looms in operation although the company was only recently established. In Actonvale, in the constituency of Bagot there is now operating the Silk Mills of Canada, Limited. It manufactures broad silks, and I have here a list of the classes of broad silks which the company manufactures. They have one hundred looms engaged in these operations. At Cap de la Madeleine, in Champlain county, represented also by one of my hon. friends opposite, there is the Canadian T.S.R. of Lyons, Limited, which has one hundred broad silk looms in operation at the present time. In addition, there is the British American Silk Mills, Limited, of Montreal, which manufactures broad silks, with about forty looms in operation. Then there is at Louiseville, in Maskinonge county, in the constituency of Berthier-Maskinonge, represented by my hon. friend opposite, Mr. Gervais, the Associated Textiles of Canada, Limited, which has one hundred looms in operation.

I looked into the returns from the province of Ontario as well, and I found that at Brantford in the county of Brant, Ontario, there was the Dover Silks, Limited, operating forty looms; the Niagara Silks, Limited, also operating at Brantford, with seventy-six broad silk looms and five hundred and forty silk spindles, and so on. At Brantford also Slingsby Silks, Limited, manufacture broad silks. At Galt, in Waterloo county, Ontario, Newlands and Company, Limited, manufacture broad silks, having twenty-four broad silk looms and seven thousand spindles in operation. Also at Galt there is the firm of Stauffer-Dobbie, Limited, which has twenty-five broad silk looms. There is also at Galt the Riverside Silk Mills, manufacturing broad silks; I have not the specifications with regard to their plant installations. At Port Dover, in the constituency of Norfolk-Elgin, there is the Dover Silks, Limited, which was established in 1928, and has at present in operation twenty-four looms. At St. Catharines, in the constituency represented by my hon. friend the member for Lincoln there is Grout's, Limited, which also manufactures broad silks and is reported by the trade to be one of the largest and most efficient mills in the province of Ontario if not in Canada. At Toronto, I find the E. and J. Silk Company, Limited, which first began operations in 1923 manufacturing broad silks, and which has at present in operation some forty-two broad silk looms and thirty ribbon looms. Then there is the Otto Jaegge and Sons, Limited, at Toronto, also manufacturing broad silks. So this is an industry of very considerable importance to a number of towns in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance was somewhat mistaken, I think the other night with regard to the circumstances under which the present dumping duty against Japan was first levied. I suggested at the time that he was splitting hairs in the discussion, and as he left it to the committee to decide who was splitting hairs I wish to draw particular attention to the law governing the case. Under the customs tariff, chapter 44 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, section 6 was enacted with respect to the special or dumping duty. This clause was enacted so far as I can ascertain in 1907, where it appeared in the statutes of 1907, chapter 11, as section 6. I quote:

> In the case of articles exported to Canada of a class or kind made or produced in Canada, if the export or actual selling price to an importer in Canada is less than the fair market value of the same article when sold for home consumption in the usual and ordinary course in the country whence exported to Canada at the time of its exportation to Canada, there shall, in addition to the duties otherwise established, be levied, collected and paid on such article, on its importation into Canada, a special or dumping duty, equal to the difference between the said selling price of the article for export and the said fair market value thereof for home consumption; and such special or dumping duty shall be levied, collected and paid on such article, although it is not otherwise dutiable.

Then follow some few lines which do not apply to the present case, and then comes subsection 2, which is all-important. I quote:

> 6 (2). Excise duties shall be disregarded in estimating the market value of goods for the purposes of special duty when the goods are entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff.

There was there a clear enactment, I suggest, to the effect that a special exemption would be made in favour of exports from those countries which come under the British preferential tariff; but there was a clear and emphatic provision in the statute to the effect that, excepting those exports which come from countries entitled to the British preferential tariff, the foreign excise duties should not be disregarded. Now the amendment proposed by the Minister of Finance to that section which I have just read simply retains the express words of the section as it previously existed and adds the words "or intermediate tariff or any more favourable tariff." So that the clear intention of this amendment is to exempt not only the countries which are entitled to the British preferential tariff, but those other countries which enjoy the intermediate or any more favourable tariff. My hon. friend is proposing now a specific enactment which will have this dual effect. First, it will take from the British exporters of silk goods a certain preference which they now have over foreign countries in the markets of Canada; that is, it will limit the British preference. In the second place, it gives to the manufacturers of Japan and other foreign countries, which do not come under the British preferential tariff, a much more favourable entry for their exports of silk into the Canadian markets, where they come into competition with the products of our own mills.

My hon. friend made an elaborate comparison between the imports into Canada from Japan for the years 1928 and 1929, and from his statement he seemed to be under an entire misapprehension as to when this provision came into effect with respect to Japanese exports. For instance, the present Japanese trade arrangements with Canada came into force in 1913. At the time Japan was well aware of the existence of the tariff act of 1907, the terms of which have continued to be in force down to May 1st this year, when the budget was announced. Japan, I am instructed, some time after the great earthquake first imposed an excise tax upon silk products.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend know the year?

Mr. CAHAN: I said it was after the great earthquake that some special taxes were brought into force in Japan. That earthquake happened in the summer of 1923, but as a matter of fact the dumping duty was not brought into effect as against Japan for several years after the earthquake. The exact date that the excise duty was imposed in Japan I do not know and I have not been able to ascertain. But according to file No. 145080, by circular of May 6, 1929, purchasers' bulletin No. 3569, purchasers of Japanese silk goods in Canada were notified that:

> According to Japanese government authorities there is levied in Japan a consumption tax of 10 per cent of the value of the textiles of domestic manufacture as sold to purchasers for home consumption.

That was the first notice, I am instructed, that the trade had of the bringing into force of this extra duty against Japanese silk. This circular was issued on May 6, 1929. Therefore the excise tax could not have been considered by the department of customs prior to that date in imposing the extra dumpage tax on importations of silk fabrics.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid my hon friend is wrong, because the old regulation under which the department of customs had been operating from 1919 onwards was cancelled on June 28, 1928, effective August 1, 1928.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so. Nevertheless I am instructed by those dealers that although the department issued on June 28, 1928, a circular providing that the dumping clause should not apply to goods purchased before that date and imported before August, 1928, it apparently was not brought to the notice of the department that a consumption tax had been imposed in Japan, and I am instructed that as a matter of fact the department did not take notice of the imposition of that consumption tax before it issued its circular to the trade of May 6, 1929. Furthermore, that is borne out to a large extent by the returns showing imports into this country of raw silks since that date, because the importations of raw silks have largely increased; and on the other hand the importations of silk fabrics from Japan have very considerably decreased in the months since May 6, 1929. So that if the date, as I am instructed it is, is correct, it applies only to the trade returns after May 6, 1929, and therefore it applies only to the eleven months of the fiscal year 1929-30.

Now, my hon. friend made some criticism of the manufacture of silks in Canada. I quote from page 2171 of the Hansard of Friday, May 16:

> Mr. Dunning: To close the discussion, may I say to my hon. friend that they must have known what the Canadian tariff was when they established their factory at St. Catharines.

He is dealing there with the establishment of the silk factory at St. Catharines in the county of Lincoln to which I referred.

Mr. DUNNING: That is no criticism.

Mr. CAHAN: We will not split hairs over words of that kind, if you please. It was a suggestion, then, that when they started their factory away back in 1923, or whatever the year was, they should have called the attention of the department to the fact that a change was needed by them, if such a change would be in their interest. But I quote:

> —they knew perfectly well at the time they established their business that what has since happened in respect to the application of the dumping duty was not then in operation. It was merely a legal quirk, a legal twist, which brought it into operation. This parliament made no change.
> Mr. Cahan: The government did, by order in council.
> Mr. Dunning: Legally it was discovered that the dump did apply and that the imposition of excise duties in any country automatically rendered the goods exported to this country liable to the dump. This was not an action by this parliament, and I wish to draw a clear distinction there.

I suggest that the hon. minister was splitting hairs, because when, in 1907, the parliament of Canada deliberately enacted section 6, paragraph 2, in the form in which it appears at the present time, it deliberately declared that the paragraph was operative except in respect of those countries entitled to the British preferential tariff. Excise taxes and duties would be regarded in estimating the market value, and when parliament had declared its deliberate intention to that effect the promoters of these factories, the companies which initiated this new and flourishing business in Canada, knew, from the statutes of Canada, that parliament had deliberately declared that if the Japanese government should impose thereafter a consumption tax it would be taken into consideration in estimating the dumping duty against Japanese products entering the Canadian market.

On the other hand, in 1913 when the Japanese government made its new trade arrangement with Canada, which was in the same year, incorporated into an act of this parliament, the Japanese government knew full well that if they imposed a consumption tax in Japan, such tax would correspondingly raise the minimum of duty imposed in Canada on importations of silk fabrics from Japan into Canada. There is therefore no ground under the Japanese trade arrangements for making this change in favour of the Japanese factories. It seems to me that in making the change proposed in the budget of May 1 there is an attempt to take away the preference in the Canadian market held by the factories of Great Britain over the factories of Japan. When I asked the hon. gentleman on whose initiative these changes were made which place the Canadian silk factories in jeopardy I was informed that certain importers had asked for the changes, and the names of Eaton's and Simpson's were mentioned. In Hansard at page 2156 I find the following:

> Mr. Dunning: If my hon. friend will permit me, the largest importers in the country made representations, people like Eaton's and Simpson's.

I am glad to learn from the answer of the minister that His Excellency the Minister Plenipotentiary from Canada to Japan, Hon. H. M. Marler, did not initiate a change which is likely to prove so disastrous to many of the industries now established in his own province. This request is made by the importers I have mentioned, however. In the course of trade importers such as those mentioned can buy job lots of silk fabrics from Japan—

Mr. DUNNING: In fairness to the firms mentioned I should make a correction. I was in error when I mentioned Simpson's, and in fairness to the other people I should say that there were no representations as to silk. Their representations were general in character and applied to all countries.

Mr. CAHAN: I have no doubt their statement would be general because in the ordinary course of their business where they can buy in a slaughter market abroad and bring in fabrics to sell cheaply in this market in which the standard price in this country is established by the cost price of production, they can make much larger profits as jobbers and distributors than it would be possible for them to make if they bought Canadian goods supplied to all the dealers throughout the country. It is a very serious question, however, when this government through its Minister of Finance declares that jobbers of that class are to be preferred over manufacturers established in this country—

Mr. DUNNING: I said no such thing.

Mr. CAHAN: —who are supplying the same class of goods.

Mr. DUNNING: I said no such thing.

Mr. CAHAN: There is no other inference which could be drawn reasonably and equitably in view of the statement on Friday last of the hon. gentleman. The proposed amendment to subsection 2, section 6, chapter 44 of the revised statutes, the Customs Tariff Act, so far as silk importations are concerned, applies chiefly to silk products from Japan which enter under items 560 and 560a. Item 560 is as follows:

> Woven fabrics, wholly or in chief part by weight of silk in the gum, not degummed or bleached, not less than 20 inches in width, imported for the purpose of being degummed, dyed and finished in Canada.

Item 560a is:

> Woven fabrics, wholly of silk, exceeding 26 inches in width.

Under these two items the larger quantities are imported from Japan into Canada. I find, however, that there are importations under section 560b and 560c. I have before me a comparison showing the results upon the importations of silk fabrics into Canada from Japan, comparing the five months from November, 1928, to March, 1929, and the five months from November, 1929, to March, 1930. These figures show that under the dumping duty as then applied the yardage from Japan was very largely decreased. Comparing November, 1928, with November, 1929, there was a decrease from 410,825 yards to 148,024 yards.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is under item 560.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, item 560 only. Making a similar comparison under item 560, the importation of 412,743 yards in December, 1928, decreased to 245,240 yards in 1929. Under the same item 560, comparing January, 1929, with January, 1930, there was a reduction in imports from 640,487 yards to 305,662 yards. Comparing February, 1929, with February, 1930, there was a reduction of imports from Japan under this one item from 508,720 yards to 312,719 yards, and comparing March, 1929 with March, 1930, there was still a reduction, though not so great, from 555,338 yards to 409,430 yards. Comparing the five months of one term with the five months of the other to which I have referred, there was a reduction in our imports from Japan under item 560 from 2,528,113 yards to 1,421,075 yards, showing that the Canadian factories were able to utilize and supply the Canadian market.

Now let us consider item 560a, and make the same comparison for the same months. In November, 1928, there was an importation from Japan of 352,312 yards which in November of 1929 was reduced to 88,228 yards; in December, 1928, there was an importation under this item of 416,110 yards, which in December, 1929, was reduced to 210,449 yards.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugène Fiset): The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CAHAN: My friend the Minister of Finance may take notice that he can enforce the rules, but we are going to discuss this item thoroughly.

Mr. DUNNING: My friend is very unfair; the Minister of Finance never said a word about the rules. The Chairman called attention to the fact that my hon. friend's time had expired.

Mr. CAHAN: I think my hon. friend directed the attention of the Chairman to the fact.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend only has to sit down and then get up again; we are in committee.

Mr. CAHAN: That should be quite unnecessary, but I will get up again later.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, the other day when the minister was discussing the trade of Japan, he evidently overlooked the fact that under this very item there came from the United States to Canada something over $4,000,000 worth of raw silk.

Mr. DUNNING: In what year?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The imports of silk and its products shown in the trade returns as coming from Japan do not give a true picture of the total Canadian consumption of Japanese silk, since a large amount of Japanese raw silk is imported through the United States and appears in our trade returns not as an importation from Japan but as an importation from the United States. In this item is included, during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929, raw silk to the value of $4,528,205 which, when added to the imports of silk and its products received directly from Japan for the same period, brings the total up to $12,673,000. That is just in one article, raw silk and its products.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is sure that silk came from Japan?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, but since 85 per cent of all the natural silk in the world comes from Japan it is quite natural and reasonable to suppose that the great bulk of this silk came from that country. That is the position I take in respect to that matter.

In respect to the importations under item 560, which refers to woven fabrics, which were just placed in Hansard by my hon. friend who spoke before me, I want to fill out the importations under item 560 in the yardage from Japan during the five months term of November to March. The other day, when I was discussing the matter, the minister said the two years were so much alike that he could not see where the manufacturers of Canada were being injured. I pointed out to him that within two months from the time this order went into effect with respect to this dumping law the trade with Japan was affected.

Mr. DUNNING: What two months? I hope my hon. friend will not be offended because I have asked him this question; my reason for asking it is because his colleague from St. Lawrence-St. George mentioned what I had not previously known, if it turns out to be correct, that the silk trade was not aware of the rescission of the order of August 1, 1928, until the following May.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It did not come into effect until August 15.

Mr. DUNNING: August 1, 1928.

Mr. CAHAN: No, it did not come into effect until May of 1929, in actual practice, or at least I am so informed by those who are in the trade and should know. They have shown me the circulars they received from the department.

Mr. DUNNING: The actual date of the coming into force of the order was August 1, 1928, and apparently my hon. friend from Lincoln is going on the same information I have.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understand that the order was to come into effect on August 1, and consequently—

Mr. CAHAN: But it was not applied to the trade in silks until May, 1929.

Mr. DUNNING: If that is the case, how could it affect the trade?

Mr. CAHAN: Well, it did not come into effect until then.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am afraid I am going to prove that it did have some effect. At any rate, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it from the manager of the mill from which I get my information, the order did not come into effect until August.

Mr. DUNNING: August of 1928?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes. He naturally assumed that it would be some time before any change would begin to show. Orders were on the way; no doubt some were on the water, and consequently he takes his figures, as far as his returns are concerned in order to prove his case, from November of 1928, and I am placing on Hansard now in respect to item 560, the customs returns showing the importations from Japan. For November of 1928, the returns show 410,825 yards imported, as against 148,024 yards imported in November of 1929.

Mr. DUNNING: I have the figures in dollars.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have them as well in dollars. The value in dollars for that month is $231,537 as against $101,307. For December, 1928, the yardage is 412,743 as against 245,240 for 1928. The dollar value for 1928 is $225,408 as against $130,518 for 1929.

Mr. DUNNING: There seems to be some difference in our figures.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This covers item 560, woven fabrics wholly or in chief part by weight of silk in the gum, not degummed or bleached.

Mr. DUNNING: There must be something wrong with my hon. friend's figures, as the figures given to me by the customs department do not correspond with his.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The statistical department gave me some figures over the telephone which corresponded with those I read the other day.

Mr. DUNNING: I have the figures for 1930 as well.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have the figures down to March, 1930.

Mr. DUNNING: What figures has my hon. friend for March, 1930, so that we may check up?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: The figure for Japan for March, 1929, is $298,318 and for 1930, $213,619.

Mr. DUNNING: Our figures seem to be completely out; my figures for March, 1929, are $362,000 and March, 1930, $283,000 giving the round figures. That is for woven silk cloth in the gum.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Item 560a, which is woven fabrics wholly of silk, exceeding twenty-six inches in width—

Mr. DUNNING: That is not in the gum, that is woven silk fabrics?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, but exceeding twenty-six inches in width. The figures for that item for November, 1928 are 352,311 yards as against 88,000 yards for 1929. The value is $120,982 for 1928, as against $29,590 for 1929. Has the minister those figures?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not those comparative figures.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I will put them on record, as I understand they came from the department. They are as follows:

| | Yardage | Value |
|---|---|---|
| December, 1928. . . | 416,110 | $133,794 |
| December, 1929. . . | 210,449 | 66,468 |
| January, 1929. . . . | 743,413 | 236,463 |
| January, 1930. . . . | 539,794 | 157,492 |
| February, 1929. . . . | 652,931 | 209,383 |
| February, 1930. . . . | 395,024 | 110,303 |
| March, 1929. . . . . | 1,101,256 | 353,854 |
| March, 1930. . . . . | 588,292 | 164,597 |

The totals for the five months period of 1928-29 as compared with the same period in 1929-30, are as follows:

| | Yardage | Value |
|---|---|---|
| 1928-29.. .. .. .. .. | 3,266,021 | $1,054,476 |
| 1929-30.. .. .. .. .. | 1,821,787 | 528,450 |

These figures show a very considerable reduction in both yardage and value, applying not only to item 560 but to item 560a.

I would like to supplement my remarks of the other day with respect to wages. I have in my hand a comparative wage scale prepared by the United States tariff commission which gives the rate of wages for the United States, Switzerland, Germany, France, Italy, China and Japan. The highest wages paid in silk manufacture are those paid in the United States. The weekly wage paid to weavers in the different countries is as follows:

| | Weekly wage |
|---|---|
| United States.. .. .. .. .. .. | $34 27 |
| Switzerland.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 10 18 |
| France.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 31 |
| Japan.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 2 54 |

Apparently they are in need of the unionization of labour in Japan in order to increase their rates of wages.

Mr. DUNNING: Was that last figure for France?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, for Japan. That rate of wage seems to be astounding, but there is a note with reference to that wage to the effect that some allowance is made for meals. While I was at home I received a statement from the manager of the factory at St. Catharines to the effect that weavers are paid an average of $29 per week.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Could the hon. member give us the figures as to the wage cost in the production of silks; I mean, how much of the total wages goes into the making of a yard of silk? I would like to have that figure for the United States as well as the other countries.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If you figure all the labour cost in Japan in producing a yard of silk, it will not amount to very much. If you take $2.54 a week and allow another 50 per cent on top of that for the food that may be given, it will mean around $4. That, however, is two and one-half times less than they are paying in Switzerland, and the rate in Switzerland is one-third of what they are paying in the United States and Canada.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The hon. member cannot give us the relative figures?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No. I have a great deal of information. I would be very glad to get it for my hon. friend, because he is anxious at times for information. I have taken considerable trouble to secure the statistics I have, but unfortunately I cannot manufacture information. Wages of female weavers amount to $16 to $19 per week, the average, so I am told, in this particular factory being $17.70. There are in the mills mechanics who look after these big weaving machines and who earn a higher wage than I have mentioned, but there are not many of them and $37.50 per week given as their scale of wages. It seems to me ridiculous and next door to brutal to cause a factory of this kind, one of the most efficient looking factories that a person ever saw, employing highclass people and paying a high standard of wages, to run the risk of being put out of business because we allow the product of labour at $2.50 to $4 to enter into competition.

Mr. WARD: How many employees are there in that factory?

Mr. CHAPLIN: There are 200 looms in the one plant. I do not know what that means. I suppose it means around 200 employees. Besides that, there is in the city a dyeing plant that employs sixty people. The dyeing of this product is done, not in the plant itself, but outside in a silk weaving mill. We should hesitate about strafing another industry. There are in my locality mills of other types that are not running half time. This is a plant which has been established within the last five or six years; it did not get going until 1924 or 1925, and now in 1930 we begin to take its protection away from it. What does a 22½ per cent tariff figure against labour at the rate of even $4 or $5 a week? It looks like giving something for nothing. Even if you had double the duty you could hardly take care of a situation of that kind.

Furthermore, I am instructed that the importations which were made from Japan by jobbers and sold in the Canadian market, were sold at only very slightly under the Canadian cost; that the profit was made by the jobbers and distributors and that the Canadian consumer, so-called, received no advantage whatever by reason of those large importations from Japan. In fact, I am advised by experts that the factories in Canada are as well equipped and as efficiently managed as any similar factory now existing in the United States, and that the product of the Canadian silk mills is never sold in Canada at as high a price as prevails in the United States markets for the product of their own mills. This is due to the very slightly decreased cost of labour in Canada as compared with that in some of the mills in northern United States. I am also instructed that the Canadian mills are far more efficiently managed than the Japanese mills, because this is a recent production in Japan, and that Japan is no better equipped for it by installations of machinery than we in Quebec are equipped for the manufacture of the same class of fabrics. The sole advantage Japan has is in her low labour cost and I submit again that there should be for the Canadian factory a compensating duty to cover the difference between the wage rate that prevails in any foreign country and that which exists in Canada, that is, a wage rate comparison based on equal hours of labour. It is absurd to suggest that our provincial governments shall introduce and enact legislation controlling hours of labour, precluding the employment of women at night, precluding the employment of children at any time, and then have the parliament of Canada dictate that those factories, where those humane conditions prevail shall be compelled to sell their manufactured products in their own markets in competition with the slaughtering in our markets of the surplus of those foreign countries where such low standards of living exist. That is the gist of the issue which is before this house. Furthermore, I am not entering upon a general discussion, but time and again I have impressed upon this house the absolute necessity of encouraging the establishment of small industries in our country towns and villages. The future welfare of this country to a large extent depends upon encouraging such manufacture in our smaller towns and villages in order to give employment there to a class who, to secure employment otherwise, are compelled to go to the United States and enter the factory life of that country. There is no reason in the world why the commodities covered by some hundreds at least of items in this customs tariff should not be manufactured in Canada, in Canadian factories established in the towns and villages from one end of this country to the other. At the present time, according to estimates of the United States census, there are at least 1,500,000 people Canadian-born living in the United States and engaged in industry and trade in the United States. That result is due to the fact that, according to the statements for the last calendar year, we are importing nearly $1,000,000,000 worth in round numbers of the commodities produced by the United States for consumption in this country. The United States to-day, despite the tariff that we have, dominates and controls Canadian industry by reason of the fact that we are not protected against their production. The reaction to that fact is that we have 1,500,000 people born in Canada who are to-day engaged in industry and trade in the United States, obtaining employment there by producing in that country goods and commodities which are imported into Canada for consumption. It is a large issue. It is the most important issue that can come before this house and before this country, and therefore I think that we are justified in emphasizing the importance of this silk manufacture in Canada which has developed in recent years, and which does give employment in the province of Quebec at the present time to 1,400 people engaged on the looms alone, outside of the dyeing and outside of the operating of the engines and other accessory equipment. It is an industry which has brought encouragement and happiness to many people in many of the smaller towns, and they regard with very great apprehension the change proposed in the tariff at the present time.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure that I can add anything of interest to what has been said. My hon. friends opposite, quite properly from their point of view, have debated this question from the standpoint of protection to silk manufacturing in Canada, and they have cited examples of low wages and that kind of thing which gives the Japanese and other foreigners a great advantage over the Canadian manufacturer who is paying higher wages. I am entirely in agreement, and I have said so before in this house, with those on the other side or on this side who think that the low cost of production in foreign countries might very well be taken into consideration when we fix our own tariff. I still think that.

In connection with this excise duty on silk, I am not sure whether the committee has all the facts. They are very simple. In Japan, on the sale of silk at home, at 10 per cent excise tax is added. That adds to the home consumption value. If the silk is sold for $1, for instance, with the tax it would sell for $1.10. That would be the price that would have to be taken into consideration when it is imported into Canada, and it might involve the dump. When the goods are sold to Canada or any other country outside of Japan that excise tax is not paid. But so far as the purpose of establishing the dump is concerned, you must take the value at which the goods are sold in Japan, the country of origin.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is the fair market value.

Mr. EULER: That would be the fair market value in Japan. Perhaps my hon. friends would also agree with me in this, that when we come to the establishing of a dump, this factor should be borne in mind, namely, the cost of production in the country of origin, plus a reasonable profit. If they are selling below the home market price, of course a dump is established. But the benefit to the manufacturer or exporter in the country of origin should be taken into consideration. As a matter of fact, in regard to this excise tax, when the manufacturer exports to Canada or when he sells those goods at home, he gets absolutely no benefit as such from the application of the excise tax, because that goes to the Japanese government.

The point I got up to make is this, and it has been made before by the Minister of Finance. Our friends opposite have argued this question from the point of view of protection. They may be quite right in that; but if it is a matter of protecting the Canadian manufacturer of silk, it does seem to me that this is not the proper method of doing it. This excise tax which involves the application of the dump, and which may serve as additional protection for the Canadian manufacturer, might disappear to-morrow by the action of the Japanese government, over which we have no control whatever—a circumstance which my hon. friends will admit does not provide a very safe way of protecting any industry, if we want to talk protection. For instance, the Japanese government might put on an excise tax of 50 per cent to-morrow or the next day, or it might wipe out the excise tax altogether. The point I make is this, that it is an entirely fortuitous circumstance which essentially has nothing to do with the matter of tariffs or protection. If my hon. friends argue that because of lower costs in Japan, because labour is cheaper, there should be a higher protection or safeguarding, as my hon. friends might say, of the Canadian silk industry, I should think that is a proper subject of consideration for a higher tariff. But this matter of excise tax is entirely outside our control and should not be regarded as a safe factor in the matter of providing protection, if you wish to call it such, for the Canadian manufacturer. That would be my argument. It does seem to me that it should not enter into the question so far as the dump is concerned. My hon. friends should not forget that the adding of an excise tax to the home price does not preclude our charging customs tax on the value, including the excise tax in the country of origin. It involves only the question of the dump.

Something was suggested about the cost of labour in Japan. I have no doubt that that cost is a great deal lower in Japan than in this country. But I am also told, and I think it is pertinent to the discussion, that whereas there is now the 22½ per cent tariff against Japanese silk, the cost of the labour that enters into the manufacture of silk in Canadian mills is only something like 26 per cent. So the disparity is not as great perhaps as my hon. friends thought. But if it is a matter of providing greater protection, if you like, to the Canadian manufacturer, this does not seem to me the proper method of doing it, because it cannot be depended upon. It may be wiped out at a moment's notice by the Japanese government. I suppose my hon. friend is ready with the words—

Mr. CHAPLIN: Perhaps you will say them for me.

Mr. EULER: No. I know what my hon. friend is thinking of—countervailing duties. These have no application for the simple reason—I am getting away from the subject, Mr. Chairman, because I am getting at what is in my hon. friend's mind—that after all, we have a fixed tariff below which our tariff will not go. Therefore this case is not at all parallel with the other. I have no objection to arguing as to the possible necessity of doing something more for the Canadian manufacturers of silk fabrics, but in that case I think the proper course to take is to raise the tariff, if you like, and that should be done only after the whole matter has been considered by the tariff board.

Mr. CAHAN: Is it not a fact that in 1907—I am not certain of the year, but at any rate it was when the Hon. W. S. Fielding was finance minister—this principle was introduced by him and established after a thorough discussion by parliament, that is, as to how the fact of dumping should be ascertained and when the clause should be applied. Why abrogate that principle now without giving some notice? If in the same tariff you had provided for an increase in these tariff items, 560, 560a, 560b and 560c, so as to give a corresponding increase in the regular duty, then there might have been some ground for the argument that the dumpage duty should be wiped out. But my hon. friend is suggesting that we should destroy some six factories in the province of Quebec and seven or eight in the province of Ontario by this change, place their working people on the streets, and then after they are down and out we should come in and ask for increased duties on these particular items. That is a perfectly ridiculous contention it seems to me. Why not allow the principle, which the late Hon. W. S. Fielding, established, with the support of the Liberal party in this house with regard to dumpage, to prevail, until you make some corresponding compensation to these people whose protection you are wiping out to a very considerable extent?

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to continue the debate, but I should like to make one observation. I would be very sorry if what my hon. friend appears to fear should happen, that is, the destruction of certain silk factories in this country. But does not my hon. friend know that under a government which, I think, he supported a regulation was passed—not an order in council—exempting these excise taxes from being taken into consideration for the purpose of establishing the dump.

Mr. CAHAN: When was that?

Mr. EULER: In 1919.

Mr. CAHAN: That was before a single silk factory of this class was established in Canada.

Mr. EULER: But my hon. friend will admit that that action was absolutely illegal.

Mr. CAHAN: It certainly was illegal under the statute.

Mr. EULER: No Minister of Customs or of National Revenue has any power by regulation to avoid the law which is definitely laid down there. That is why it was restored in 1928.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not see the force of my hon. friend asking me if I was in favour of an illegal procedure which I knew nothing about. But if it was illegal, why not adhere to the act which the Liberal party passed, and which was in force until May 1?

Mr. EULER: My point is that if I find something done illegally I will try to make it legal, and then if it is wrong, I will try to make it right by legal means.

Mr. CAHAN: That would be splitting hairs with greater precision than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) is capable of—

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. CAHAN: —because under section 6 of this act the imposition of the dumping duty is legal, is it not?

Mr. EULER: Quite so; but it was illegally withheld from 1918.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not going back to 1918 when I was not a member of this house. I do not hold myself responsible for all the peccadilloes of the Liberal party, the Conservative party, the Unionist party or any other party. I say this dumpage is legal under chapter 44, section 6, of the revised statutes of 1927. It has been regarded as legal during the past two years. It was never enforced against Japan because it was not brought to the notice of the customs department prior to a certain date, which I trust will be fixed by a specific announcement from the minister. But prior to a certain date it was not brought into force against Japan's exports of silk to this country because it was not known here, or if it was known it was overlooked by the customs department, that the 10 per cent consumption tax had been imposed by Japan. Therefore do not ask me to support this proposal because of some illegality which prevailed under an administration years ago. Let us deal with the conditions as they prevail to-day. Up to the first of May legally the tax was in effect in this country. Under that condition our silk factories were able to supply to a large extent the home market, they had gained the upper hand in dealing with Japanese competition. Now you are wiping out 10 per cent of their tariff protection, and you are not giving them any corresponding increase in the regular duties. If the dumpage is to be wiped out, at the same time a corresponding tariff increase should be given. That is my contention.

Mr. EULER: Is it not true that these silk factories were almost all established at the time when they had not this additional 10 per cent protection on account of the excise tax?

Mr. CAHAN: They were established at that time, but Japan was not sending into this country these classes of fabrics, because the development of their manufacture in Japan is a very recent development, a development whereby Japan is brought into competition with the equally recent development of the silk industry in this country.

Mr. EULER: I agree with my hon. friend that it might be necessary to do something more, but my submission is that what is proposed is not the proper way in which to do it. I think my hon. friend will agree with me if he thinks logically—as he always does—that the proper method, if something should be done, is by a change in the tariff itself.

Mr. CAHAN: I advocated in the house last Thursday or Friday evening that the more logical way would be to increase the duty on these specific items; but on the other hand we have been dealing with it under the statute which I have quoted, which was passed in 1907 under the Laurier administration, when the late Hon. W. S. Fielding was Minister of Finance. That statute is clear and specific in its terms, and every Canadian manufacturer of silk when he entered upon this new enterprise was aware that the statute then prevailing would in certain exigencies and under certain conditions give him protection in the Canadian market to that extent.

Mr. EULER: But which might disappear at any moment at the behest of a foreign nation—something over which we had no control at all.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so. In view of certain provisions in this tariff, my hon. friend should not mention tariffs which come into force at the behest of a foreign nation. It is a provision however which should be considered in dealing with the quantity of protection which should be received by Canadian factories. The fact is that, in this country, we have a tax upon productive energy amounting to nearly 25 per cent of the entire output of the productive activities of Canada, and that tax goes into the municipal, provincial and federal treasuries. We have a business tax upon corporate enterprises, and this tax enters into the cost of commodities. Every tax imposed by this government in the way of direct taxation enters into and increases the cost of production. So that in Japan when they impose a consumption tax it enters no more directly into the real cost or prevailing market price to the consumer in Japan than does the imposition of business, sales and other taxes which are imposed as additional burdens upon our people. Therefore, so long as that statute remains in its present form and so long as the customs tariffs on the articles contained in items 560a, 560b, 560c and 560d remain as they are, I protest against the amendment here suggested.

Mr. EULER: Surely my hon. friend knows that so long as the law remains in its present form it will have to be carried out in the same manner as we have been carrying it out since 1928. The Minister of Finance proposes to change the law because he believes that the principle is unsound.

Mr. CAHAN: I protest against the change of the law.

Mr. EULER: Oh, that is your reason.

Mr. CAHAN: I assumed that my hon. friend understood that I was protesting against the change in the law.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We have a peculiar situation before us; we have a minister of the crown changing an excise law, and we have another minister saying it is wrong in principle, but if the hon. gentleman wishes to save the manufacturers who are leaning to a certain extent upon that excise law the tariff should be increased.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no excise law affected.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister knows that it is a change of the excise.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I do not know that at all. It is an amendment to the Customs Tariff Act and it has nothing to do with Canadian excise.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is just another case of splitting hairs.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is a case of fact.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is strange that certain things are found to be wrong in principle at a certain time when such principles have been maintained in this house for twenty years. In the words of the Prime Minister, they are vicious principles. The minister adopts the principle and hangs on to it as long as he can, but when it begins to burn his fingers he calls it a wrong principle. The fact that this trade was receiving a certain amount of protection, and in order to cut off that protection it is discovered that the principle is wrong. Then the other minister comes along and states that the tariff should be raised if anything is to be obtained from it. Who has the running of the thing? These people knew nothing about this change, nor did they know how it was going to affect them. They were not invited to attend before the tariff board. How could they ask for a change in the tariff? I suppose the minister found out that no examination into the matter was made by the tariff board. The other minister knows very well that nothing can be done and that the reference will not be made to the tariff board. If this is a matter which should come before the tariff board, why not take the whole matter before that board? The matter we have in hand is of as much interest to those people as if it were in the tariff. It has been there for the best part of two years. The minister shakes his head, but I would remind him that it was August 15, 1928.

Mr. DUNNING: Your colleague stated that it was the following March.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know my colleague stated that, but it is possible that he has not the facts as clearly as I have them. I ask the minister if he denies that it is two years; of course he will not. They have had the benefit of this tariff and it is now proposed to take it away without notice to them at all and without any corresponding increase in the tariff. The other minister, the Minister of Customs, states that he is a protectionist and that the proper way to approach the matter is to go before the tariff board. The result will be that no relief will be given. Improper action is being taken; this matter has not been taken before the tariff board in respect of either the duty, the wages or anything else. As a matter of fact, this country knows nothing about the conditions existing in the trade, and it is my opinion that we have no right to make a change of this kind without having first made proper inquiry.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not wish to follow my hon. friend's acrimonious method of discussion—

Mr. CHAPLIN: It may be due to my unfortunate manner.

Mr. EULER: The hon. gentleman did not mean it that way.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not wish to be acrimonious at all. I am, however, trying to be forceful, I have too much at stake to assume that attitude.

Mr. DUNNING: I should again point out to the committee that my hon. friends' statements in regard to the existing law before the amendment are undoubtedly correct. On the other hand, it is also correct that notwithstanding the law in 1919 the government of the day issued a regulation stating that foreign excise taxes were not to be taken into account when arriving at the dump duty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was that done by order in council?

Mr. DUNNING: It was done by regulation of the department, authorized by order in council. From that day in 1919 until August 1, 1928, foreign excise taxes were not taken into account, in spite of the fact that the law said they should be. This government did not inaugurate that condition; it existed from 1919 to 1928. These silk factories came into existence during the period when the excise tax of foreign countries was not taken into account. My hon. friends will point out immediately that in the case of Japan the excise tax did not come into existence until 1922 or 1923. Still, five years elapsed before any action was taken to consider the foreign excise taxes in levying the dump duty. Then in August, 1928, in some manner it was discovered that the law in this respect was not being complied with; the regulation of 1919 was rescinded and the matter reverted to the condition in which it was prior to May 1, when this budget was brought down.

I am pleased to say that according to my information my hon. friends' apprehensions as to the ruination of the silk industry are entirely unfounded. My hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George and my hon. friend from Lincoln know that the figures which they quoted embrace the whole silk industry, and embrace far more than the portions of it which could possibly be affected by the various excise taxes in Japan being considered with respect to the dumping duty on entering this country.

Mr. CAHAN: That is not so with respect to the figures which I gave; they apply to the particular items which I gave in the tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend stated them very cleverly; he used the figures affecting the whole industry. He repeatedly referred to broadcloth looms, whether or not the broadcloth loom end of that mill was an important end of the mill business or a minor end and he included those amongst his figures for the whole industry. I do not blame him—

Mr. CAHAN: I gave the number of broad looms as far as I could do so, in order that the minister might see clearly the extent of the industry which would be affected, and which I say is imperiled by this change.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, in his other figures my hon. friend included many figures which did relate to the whole industry, and which went beyond the broadcloth loom industry.

Mr. CAHAN: I defy the hon. gentleman, as a matter of privilege, to mention a single figure of the class he has mentioned.

Mr. DUNNING: I wonder if I could not have the floor, just as a matter of courtesy. My hon. friend spoke for over two hours on this matter.

Mr. CAHAN: Do not make erroneous assertions, then; stick to the facts.

Mr. DUNNING: As to the adequacy of the tariff rates actually in effect I am not in a position to say, further than to state that the tariff rates are the same to-day as they have been for a great number of years past; they are exactly the same as they were during that long period from 1919 to 1928, when this position which we are now trying to rectify did not exist. They are exactly in the same position they were in when the industry was first established; they are 22½ per cent under the intermediate tariff and 30 per cent under the general tariff. With respect to the question of how wages affect the matter, my hon. friends have referred to the low wages of Japan and have given some information from the United States in order to show the wages paid in that country. I do not know how authentic that information may be; perhaps we might secure information more directly in regard to that matter rather than just take the evidence of some individual before the United States tariff commission.

However that may be, we have information as to the salaries and wages paid in Canada, and remember this is not wages alone but salaries and wages paid in the silk industry in Canada in 1929. These amounted to $3,820,000, and the total value of the product of the industry is given at $14,476,000, so that salaries and wages all told amounted to approximately 25 per cent of the total products sold. I have not figured it out exactly, but that is approximately correct. That being so I submit that my hon. friends have not a very good case when they represent that this industry is going to be ruined because of the return to-day to the exact position in relation to that tariff which they occupied up to August 1, 1928, as stated by my hon. friend from Lincoln, or March, 1929, as stated by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George. For the moment I do not care which date is correct, but I say that it is too much to ask us to believe that this industry is going to be ruined by being returned to the condition under which it was established and under which it operated during all the years from 1919 to 1928. It is too much to ask us to believe that it is going to be ruined, especially when its payroll, salaries and wages, amount to about 25 per cent or 26 per cent of the total value of the commodity. These people know perfectly well that if they think their tariff is not high enough and if they can demonstrate that fact publicly, they can apply for a reference to the tariff board, and I would be delighted to give them that reference. However, in my view that is no justification for maintaining a condition which is manifestly unsound in principle.

My hon. friends discussed this question as though silk were the only commodity which would be affected. As a matter of fact this matter affects the whole of Canada's tariff relationships with the world. No other country of which I have knowledge has a provision whereby a dumping duty is created because an exporting country has an excise tax upon a particular commodity. That condition does not exist anywhere else. My hon. friends confined their discussion entirely to silk, but we do not know what day an excise regulation in some other country may bring about a similar condition with respect to other commodities. Frankly, if I thought this change would have the effect of ruining the industry and throwing people out of work I would not propose it for a moment, but I have become so accustomed to hon. gentlemen opposite making that statement with respect to anything proposed that I require a little more evidence than their mere say-so before I am prepared to believe that ruin will result.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Evidently the minister intends to have a trial and see how far it can go in that direction.

Mr. DUNNING: No, that is not fair either.

Mr. LADNER: I desire to say a few words under this item, because there is involved in this discussion a principle of far-reaching effect upon the working people and the industries of Canada, particularly the working people. British Columbia is the third province in the Dominion in the value of manufactured products, and Vancouver ranks fourth among the cities. In 1927 the gross value of our manufactured products was $246,000,000, and to-day it could be properly estimated at about $280,000,000 or $290,000,000. In 1927 there were 47,740 employees with a payroll of $56,000,000; to-day on the basis of the statistics furnished by the Dominion government, probably there would be about 60,000. In 1927 there were 1,509 plants with a capital investment of $325,000,000.

A few days ago we had presented to parliament and passed a measure known as the Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930, the principles of which I heartily support. The words of one section of that bill are significant as embodying the need in this country for some protection to labour and the industry of Canada from the unfair competition of the oriental countries such as China and Japan. The section to which I refer is in these words and has reference to contracts with the government of Canada:

> All persons in the employ of the contractor, subcontractor, or of any other person doing or contracting to do the whole or any part of the work contemplated by the contract shall be paid such wages as are generally accepted as current from time to time for competent workmen in the district in which the work is being performed for the character or class of work in which they are respectively engaged; provided that wages shall in all cases be such as are fair and reasonable. . . . .

The point I wish to make in that regard, Mr. Chairman, is one which very vitally concerns the people of British Columbia and particularly the workers in the industrial life of that province. My hon. friend from Lincoln produced an authoritative statement of comparative wages in connection with the silk manufacturing business in Canada, the United States and other countries; the statement shows that for the forty-eight hour week, male weavers in the silk industry in the United States received $34.27. In Canada they receive $29; in Japan they receive a wage of $2.54, which with food allowance, amounts to about $4 and in China male skilled workers receive $1.80 per week. What I desire to bring to the attention of the government is this: We in Canada, and particularly those interested in these matters in British Columbia, realize the need of a reasonable protective tariff which will protect not only industries but the labour that goes into our industrial life from the competition of those workers in the orient who receive such low wages. It is utterly useless to put low tariffs upon goods coming into this country; to make regulations and laws respecting fair wages and the eight hour day and at the same time allow products to come in from Japan and China where weekly wages of $4 and $1.80 respectively are paid as compared with $29 in Canada for the same class of work. I desire to place that principle before the house and bring it to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Reductions have been made in a great number of these items, which will unnecessarily and adversely affect the working people and industrial life of this country. My submission is that when the government entered the waters of protection, instead of putting one foot in they should have gone in and had a swim for the good economic health of Canada. Had they done that a great number of industries in Canada would have been beneficially affected and the working population of this country would have been much better off. However, that was not done and we in the west are faced with competition from countries where labour is so cheap and where the standards of living are not comparable with those obtaining in this country. The arguments presented by my hon. friends should receive the favourable commendation of the minister and consideration should be extended to the adverse effects and possibilities of competition from oriental countries. No policy is sound or statesmanlike which is not founded in the welfare and happiness of the masses of our people.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister tell us the American duty on broad silk in the gum?

Mr. DUNNING: I will look that up for my hon. friend.

Mr. KAISER: I understood the Minister of Finance to say that he is willing to submit this question to the tariff board, but I would like to know which end of that board he is going to select to consider this question. This board is composed of one or two defeated Liberal candidates, and about sixteen employees whose home address is given as Ottawa. That particular state of affairs does not require any particular explanation, but I notice there is one gentleman whose first name is Thomas—I wonder if he is named after me—and whose surname is King, whose home address is given as Washington, District of Columbia, United States of America. I do not know what that gentleman's duties are, unless they are to turn on the electric fan to waken up Mr. Deachman after he reads these budget proposals, but it would seem to me that a Canadian could be found to look after this work without having to go to Washington. There are plenty of men around here looking for positions, and perhaps the minister can tell us why this man from the United States happens to be employed by the tariff board.

Mr. DUNNING: He is a Canadian.

Mr. HOCKEN: How long has he been in the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say that.

Mr. HOCKEN: He has been living there for about ten years.

Mr. DUNNING: He is there yet.

Mr. CANNON: He was in the press gallery two years ago.

Mr. DUNNING: I understand that he is the press correspondent in Washington for a number of Canadian papers; his whole connection is Canadian.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The American duty on similar material coming into that country from Japan is 55 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Do you want them to make our duties for us?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I thought that when I mentioned that the hon. member would jump immediately at it and say: That will be a good duty for us to use. That is what you have been doing in reference to other commodities, only in those cases you did not know what the duty was. I did not expect the hon. gentleman to bite so quickly, but he must remember that he voted for the budget. The Minister of Finance appears to be a little busy just now.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot look up information for my hon. friend and listen to him at the same time.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I did not want to repeat myself; I wanted to speak to the minister himself and not to some of my hon. friends over there, as that would be useless.

Mr. EULER: The hon. member is not acrimonious?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I hope not.

Mr. DUNNING: I am ready to listen to my hon. friend now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Minister of Finance placed some weight upon the fact that the wages paid bore a very small relation to the cost, but the minister did not mention that we were dealing with an article higher in cost than any other article used, except the precious metals. We are dealing with an article which costs $2.25 per pound going into the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend appreciates that they obtain their raw material free.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understand that, but I am speaking of the duty. They may have the raw material free, but they do not get it for nothing.

Mr. DUNNING: That is, free of duty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I thought the hon. minister meant that they were getting it for nothing.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not quite so ignorant as that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister claims that the relation of labour to the cost of the material is approximately only 25 per cent; what has that to do with it?

Mr. DUNNING: And salaries.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What has that to do with it? Suppose we were dealing with an article which cost considerably more than this, would that have any bearing on the case?

Mr. DUNNING: I think it would, yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In what respect? I would like the minister to explain that.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The duty is high enough to pay the wages; that ought to be clear enough.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Wages are paid for the amount of work done, and not on the value of the original article. The wages paid enhance the value.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend says that labour enhances the value of the article, while I claim that labour enhances not only the value but the cost of the article.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The value is the cost.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, the value is the cost. Does not a 22½ per cent tariff increase the cost of the article being imported?

Mr. CANTLEY: Not always.

Item as amended agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: The next will be item 28a of the third resolution, which reads as follows:

Customs tariff—28a. Tea imported direct from the country of growth and production, and tea purchased in the United Kingdom, when in wrappings, cartons or other packages of not less than five pounds weight each.

Provided that tea shall be entitled to entry under the British preferential tariff upon evidence satisfactory to the minister that such tea has been produced wholly in the British dominions, colonies and possessions, and not otherwise: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 9 cents per pound; general tariff, 10 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: An amendment was agreed to whereby the word "more" was to be substituted for the words "not less" in the last line of the item.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item as amended carry?

Mr. MANION: Would the minister explain what that means?

Mr. DUNNING: This item was held up in order to permit me to obtain some information with respect to the amount of tea cleared for consumption in the months prior to the budget, as compared with similar months in previous years. This information was asked for by the hon. members for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) and St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). I have the whole table, but the month of April is, of course, the pertinent month, if I may judge from the question. I am leaving off the odd hundreds. The clearances under the preferential tariff were as follows:

| | Pounds |
|---|---|
| April, 1928 | 2,002,000 |
| April, 1929 | 2,243,000 |
| April, 1930 | 2,260,000 |

That means pounds of tea that were cleared from customs for consumption in Canada in the month of April in each of the past three years. It will be seen that more tea was cleared and duty paid on it in April of this year than in April of either of the two preceding years. That, I think, answers everything that was asked with regard to tea. If the figures are required as to tea which came in under the general tariff, it is only a small amount, but it can be given. It is as follows:

| | Pounds |
|---|---|
| April, 1928.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 303,000 |
| April, 1929.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 345,000 |
| April, 1930.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 193,000 |

But of course the general tariff is not changed with respect to tea.

Mr. MANION: Is the figure which the minister gives as the number of pounds cleared, the same as that of the number of pounds entered under the tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: Entered for consumption is what I mean.

Mr. MANION: Imported?

Mr. DUNNING: No; tea may be held in bond. I am speaking of tea on which duty was paid. That is the important point. In April, duty was paid which, had the stocks remained in bond until May, would not have been chargeable, so I assume what my hon. friend wanted was information respecting the quantity of tea which was cleared while the duty was in effect and on which duty was paid. The figures as I have given them demonstrate that more tea paid duty in April, 1930, the month immediately preceding the budget on May 1, than was cleared and paid duty in April, 1929, or in April, 1928.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the questions that were asked. I submit that he has not answered the questions asked by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre the other night. I will read the question for the minister's information. This is what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre said:

> Mr. Stevens: Will the minister be good enough to bring down certain information on this item? I should like to have information to this effect: the importations for each month, January, February, March and April; the amount released from bond in each of those months, and the amount in bond at the end of each month. I think that is easily available for the leading ports in Canada and for the whole of Canada.

As I understand the matter, the minister gave only the amounts that were released in one month.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, in each of the three years, but I have under my hand and shall be glad to table the whole statement, which deals with every month of each of those three years giving the clearances on payment of duty which is the main point. I do not want to get mixed up with this matter which touches me very closely. My hon. friend knows very well the important matter was the amount of duty paid, because if there is anything in the story to which the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George referred, it would be shown in the payment of less duty in the month prior to the budget, would it not, the holding of tea in bond deliberately, not paying the duty on it, in anticipation of a reduction in duty so that less duty would be paid after the first of May than would have to be paid if the tea was cleared prior to the first of May? I think I have straightened that out by giving the figures for the month immediately preceding the budget. I can table the figures showing the amount of duty paid with respect to every month in each of the three preceding years; that is, this year, 1929, and 1928. My hon. friend's question referred to imports. May I point out to him that I do not propose to confuse the issue as between imports of tea and tea which is released from bond by a payment of duty. I know nothing of the volume of imports, but from the point of view of the budget what is important is what tea paid duty; because no matter how much tea comes into the country, until it pays duty it is not liable for duty; it may be held in bond. My point is that the quantity of tea imported is not pertinent to the question at issue. It makes no difference whether the tea is in the country or not. I have not the information for the reason that the Customs department write me to this effect with regard to the amount of imports—and I think my hon. friends want to be fair with me; they do not want to confuse imports with the amount of tea released from bond. They know perfectly well the point is the payment of the duty and I want to stick to that. I asked for the other figures; in fact, I forwarded the exact nature of the question asked and requested that it be answered. This is the reply that I received:

> In accordance with your request I am enclosing statement of the monthly imports of tea entered for consumption in Canada from April, 1926, to April, 1930, with separate imports entered under each tariff item as shown for each month from April, 1928, but for the months of the two preceding years, total imports under all tariffs are shown as separate figures are not available covering the monthly imports under general and preferential tariffs under this period.

I pointed out that the intermediate and general tariffs have no bearing both because of smallness of volume and on account of there being no change in the tariff.

> Returns from the different ports showing imports remaining in bonded warehouses are forwarded to the department only at the close of each fiscal year and these returns cover the complete fiscal period. All of these returns have not yet been submitted for the fiscal year ended March, 1930, so that I am not able to quote the figures of the tea remaining in bonded warehouses at the end of March, but these will be supplied as soon as they are available.

The whole point is the amount of tea released from bond by the payment of duty, and as I have mentioned, more tea was released by the payment of duty during the month of April, 1930, than in the same month of each of the preceding years. So far as the figures for the other months are concerned, I shall be glad to put them on Hansard.

Mr. FRASER: My only point was to indicate to the minister that he was not answering the question as it had been put to him. My reason for doing that was that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was not in the house and I wanted to avoid putting the minister to the trouble of again taking up the question when the hon. member for Vancouver Centre should come in and find that his question had not been answered according to the way he had put it to the minister. I do not think the minister has yet put on Hansard the information for which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has asked.

Mr. DUNNING: Not all of it, I quite admit, and I am prepared to do what is very difficult to do. My hon. friend understands that our customs records are based upon duties paid. The payment of duty is what counts in the customs records. In the customs department there is no record of goods held in bond at every port throughout the country. They become part of the general customs record when they are released from bond by the payment of duty. In order to get figures respecting the total quantity of any commodity which is held in the customs ports it would be necessary to communicate with each of the ports and ask for the quantity of that commodity held in bond on a particular date. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, elaborating the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, explained why the information was desired. What I bring down in that connection absolutely removes the point so far as the reason for the question is concerned, but I can assure my hon. friend and his colleague from Vancouver Centre that if the further information, which is entirely irrelevant, is required, it will be obtained by my colleague the Minister of National Revenue from the various customs ports throughout the Dominion, because that is the only way in which it can be secured.

Mr. FRASER: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre pointed out that it might be necessary to go to the Minister of National Revenue to secure that information.

Mr. DUNNING: It could not be got anywhere else. The information that I have given came from the Miinster of National Revenue.

Mr. MANION: The government puts out every month a report—I get it myself—showing the imports of all these different commodities, so that there would be no great trouble in getting the figures asked for.

Mr. DUNNING: They are not imports until they pay the duty.

Mr. MANION: They are not called imports until they are taken out of bond?

Mr. DUNNING: They are not officially in the country until they pay the duty.

Mr. EULER: They are not entered until they actually pay the duty.

Mr. MANION: And so the figures that we get do not contain anything that has not been taken out of bond?

Mr. EULER: Exactly.

Mr. MANION: Then this part of the question cannot be answered.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh yes, it can. The information can be obtained, but it will take time to secure it.

Mr. EULER: It would be a terrible job.

Mr. DUNNING: But it can be got. I do not intend to leave any loop hole for my hon. friends to say that the information cannot be given. It can be given, but it will take time to get it. It will serve no purpose, but we shall be glad to try to get the amount of tea held in bond at any period my hon. friends want. I submit, however, that I do not intend to have the real issue as put forward by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George beclouded. The only way in which a man who knew in advance the contents of this budget could profit by his knowledge was by holding back, and the figures show that so far from there being any tea held back, a greater amount of duty was paid in the month of April preceding this budget than had been paid in the corresponding month of the three previous years. I am quite satisfied to leave it at that. But I will ask my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue to get the information regarding the stocks in bond—

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre still wants it.

Mr. DUNNING: If he still wants it.

Mr. FRASER: I was not concerned at all in what had been said by the hon. member for St. Lawrence- St. George or in the inferences that the Minister of Finance drew from his statement. I was simply concerned in seeing that the answer given to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was full and complete.

Mr. LUCAS: When this question was under discussion on Friday evening last, the hon. member for St. John-Albert raised a question in regard to a rebate being paid on the stocks of tea in dealers' hands. I have a letter this morning from a wholesale house in my constituency calling my attention to that very thing, and stating that when the tax on tea was imposed in 1918, the stocks on hand were inventoried and the tax collected, and my correspondent asks if the government should not now in fairness give a rebate of the duty paid on the tea in the dealers' hands when this budget came into force. As the dealers in 1918 were followed up and made to pay the tax, it would seem only fair, since they were penalized then, that they should be given the benefit this time. I would like to have a statement from the Minister of Finance upon the point.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend was in the house the other evening. I am quite sure he does not think that the dealers themselves paid the tax when it was instituted. They had an opportunity of passing it along to the consumers of tea, and I would be very much surprised if they did not do it. It would be good business and quite proper for them to do it. The other evening in response to my hon. friend from St. John-Albert I indicated that while there was not much hope, the government was gathering all the facts with respect to the matter. I do not want to hold out any hope that we can establish the principle of refund of duty with respect to budget changes, but the Minister of National Revenue is gathering information now as to what is involved. My hon. friend will easily see the difficulty that I pointed out the other night. There is not only the large dealers involved, but every grocery store in this country would have some tea on its shelves on which duty had been paid, and if it is correct in principle to refund the duty to anyone, it is sound to refund it to everyone. That would be a procedure attended with some difficulty, not only from the point of view of fairness, but from the point of view of complexity. However, the matter will be looked into.

Mr. KAISER: I have some figures here which I might be allowed to put on Hansard without reading. There are a few instructive points which they bring out. They show the quantity of tea imported into Canada, the value, and the duty collected for the twenty years from 1910 to 1930. The first point worthy of note is the marvelous increase in the consumption of tea in this country from 1916 to 1918. I do not know whether that was due to the inauguration of prohibition in Canada or what, but the consumption jumped from 40,000,000 pounds in 1916 and 37,000,000 pounds in 1917 to 58,000,000 pounds in 1918. Then the consumption got down to normal, and in 1930 it was 38,102,295 pounds. The value, of course, corresponds with the importation. In the matter of the duties collected, for the ten years up to 1920 previous to the coming into power of this government, the total duty paid on tea was $2,907,082. In the ten years during which this government was in charge of the affairs of this country the duty collected was $26,882,981, or an increase over the ten previous years of ten times, or 1,000 per cent. So it is nearly time something was done to take the duty off tea. The average consumption of tea per head in Canada per annum is four pounds. The consumers saved, by this reduction of seven cents per pound, 28 cents per head per year. That is the total saving to each inhabitant of Canada per year under the present proposal.

Mr. POULIOT: That is not a question; it is a statement.

Mr. KAISER: I do not wonder at that remark from someone who is incapable of multiplying four by seven.

Mr. POULIOT: Will my hon. friend, as a doctor, tell us if tea is injurious to health?

Mr. CHAPLIN: What have you to say about it as a lawyer?

Mr. KAISER: When we come to discuss public health I shall be glad to inform my hon. friend whether tea is more injurious to health than something else.

Mr. POULIOT: Would my hon. friend tell me whether there is more caffein in tea than in coffee?

Mr. KAISER: You drink tea for one year, then whiskey for one year, and then coffee, and tell us which you feel better on.

Mr. POULIOT: As far as I can see, my hon. friend is not on the water wagon.

Mr. KAISER: To continue with my statement, the saving to each individual in Canada is one cent every thirteen days.

Mr. DUNNING: That includes all the babies who do not drink tea.

Mr. KAISER: May I put these figures on Hansard without reading them?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. KAISER: Perhaps the Minister of Finance will consent to my putting it on Hansard.

Mr. POULIOT: I object. It is most interesting information and we shall all be glad to hear it.

Mr. KAISER: These are the figures:

Canada's Imports Of Tea And Duty Collected Thereon

(Years ended March 31, 1910 to 1930)

| Years ended March 31st | Quantity | Value | Duty collected |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1910..lbs. | 33,178,366 | $ 5,347,854 | $ 7,032 |

| 1930..lbs. | 38,102,295 | 10,694,379 | 2,596,693 |

If the hon. member for Temiscouata would like to have further details, I advise him to go to the Bureau of Statistics.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, Mr. Chairman. The minister was good enough to put on Hansard certain statistics with regard to the quantities of tea for the month of April. Will he also give the figures for the months of January, February and March for the last three years?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I have the information here.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should like to have the information for those months. One month does not amount to much.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be very glad to give the exact figures.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would suggest to the minister that the sheet be published in Hansard. The information will be appreciated.

Mr. DUNNING: Have I the consent of the house to put it on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Certainly.

Mr. DUNNING: Then I will give the statement to Hansard.

The statement follows:

Statement showing the Total Monthly Imports of Tea entered for consumption in Canada under different tariffs from April 1928 to April 1930

"X". Trade statistics are compiled only for complete monthly periods, so that figures for May, 1930, are not yet available

I would point out that of necessity the figures for April, 1930, stand out alone because the tabulated information is for comparable periods in each year. However, I think the statement will be quite plain to hon. members.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

---

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering item 28a, as amended.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—36. Compressed yeast, in bulk or mass of not less than fifty pounds, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister tell us the importations in regard to that particular item.

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports were valued at $352,000, of which $351,000 came from the United States, and a small amount from Great Britain.

Mr. FRASER: One thousand dollars' worth.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—37. Compressed yeast, in packages weighing less than 50 pounds, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 6 cents.

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister give us the same information in connection with that item?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports were valued at $4,997, of which $4,600 worth came from the United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—38. Yeast cakes, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 6 cents.

Mr. DUNNING: There were very small importations in connection with this item—only $305 worth from the United States.

Mr. FRASER: I wish to quote from the budget speech of the Minister of Finance as it appears at page 1631 of Hansard. Speaking in reference to the British preference, he said:

The importance of this enlargement of the preference is indicated by the fact that Canada imported last year over two hundred million dollars' worth of the commodities on which we are now increasing the British preference.

In connection with the items with which we have just dealt I find that of a total importation valued at approximately $360,000 about $1,700 worth came from Great Britain. In making the calculation of $200,000,000 I would ask the minister if the $360,000 or the $1,700 items were taken into consideration. In other words, did he take into account the total amount of commodities imported when he said that $200,000,000 worth would be affected by the British preference, or did he consider only the $1,700?

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend had read another part of the address from which he quoted he would have noticed that I said there were some fifty items of a class concerning which there had been no great quantities of imports from Great Britain, but that in connection with some a certain amount of trade might be developed. I said that it seemed absurd to maintain a tariff in the British preferential column with respect to such items. In arriving at the total imports to which he referred none of these fifty items were taken into account because of the fact I have just mentioned.

Mr. MANION: I do not think the question has been clearly answered. In connection with the $200,000,000 worth of imports referred to by the minister, concerning which I think he said these preferences would apply, were they imports from the British Empire or from the world in general?

Mr. DUNNING: They represented $200,000,000 worth of imports from anywhere. In arriving at the total I did not use any of these fifty items, which would be relatively non-effective as far as Great Britain is concerned.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The wording used by the minister was probably not as clear as it might have been. Although he might just as well have done so, the minister did not say that the $200,000,000 worth of imports would come in from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course I did not.

Mr. CHAPLIN: But the minister was very careful to give us a long list of so many dozen or so many hundred items with new British preferential rates. I suppose the minister did not count in that number the fifty items referred to.

Mr. DUNNING: Which number?

Mr. CHAPLIN: In the number of items now imported free from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course I included them.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would like to know how much of this $200,000,000 worth is likely to come from Great Britain.

Mr. BENNETT: Or from the British Empire.

Mr. DUNNING: That will probably develop as we proceed to deal with the various items. My hon. friend knows very well that no one can gauge the tendency of traders to take advantage of any given situation. Others outside of this house have attempted to assess what are the possibilities along that line, and certainly the people in Great Britain and the United States who go into these matters appear to be of the belief that a substantial volume of trade is affected. I am quite sure that a very substantial volume of trade will be affected, dependent very largely of course in some instances upon the enterprise of the British industrialist and to some degree upon the extent to which he is willing and able, as I indicated in the budget address, to meet the service given by his effective competitor to-day. As we go through the various items I shall be glad to give such detailed information as we have in regard to each of them.

Mr. McGIBBON: Has not the minister's staff made any attempt to do this work?

Mr. DUNNING: I gave the result of that estimate in the budget speech. No one can give even an intelligent guess as to the extent to which the preference in each particular case may be taken advantage of. From what I have heard since the budget became public I have great reason to believe that it will be taken advantage of to a very marked degree in connection with many of the commodities touched.

Mr. McGIBBON: I meant the total; has the minister no idea at all in that regard?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the very statement of the minister that $200,000,000 of trade was affected had an important bearing on what the people in the old country thought of the tariff, before they knew anything of the items at all; it gave the impression that these markets were being thrown open to them to that extent. That is what happened. How could even the best of business men say what was going to happen in the case of certain things without knowing what were the items in the budget? They could not tell anything about it. They do not even know yet, let alone knowing at that time.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, Mr. Chairman, in that regard I can only say that the leading items in the budget, at the request of old country authorities, were cabled over there immediately, and certainly the detailed information was available to the people of the United States before that exhaustive analysis which has been published throughout the United States was made. I shall leave it at that.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely, Mr. Chairman, the minister is not firing a blank cartridge, so to speak.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sure it is not blank.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely this budget is predicated on some intelligent conception of the business which might be transferred, and that is what we want to know. Is the budget based on a survey of business conditions, or is it simply a kind of guess at things? Surely the department has made some estimate.

Mr. DUNNING: I gave that estimate in the budget address.

Mr. FRASER: The minister must have had some basis for making that statement with regard to $200,000,000. Could he give the house any idea of how he arrived at that amount?

Mr. DUNNING: We calculated Canada's trade with respect to all the items dealt with in the budget with the exception of fifty which I stated in the budget address were of a relatively unimportant character as far as Great Britain was concerned. The estimate was based on an absolute calculation, and a conservative calculation, of Canada's trade in that connection.

Mr. BENNETT: As I understand it—and I am sure we are all under obligation to the minister for his explanation—the $200,000,000 represented the sum total of the imports into this country from all sources of goods touched by these tariff changes?

Mr. DUNNING: Except the fifty items.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, they were practically negligible.

Mr. DUNNING: Not negligible except so far as Great Britain is concerned. The fifty were negligible only as far as Great Britain was concerned—

Mr. BENNETT: Naturally, as the minister said the other day—

Mr. DUNNING:—not as far as our total imports are concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: They would be relatively unimportant in that regard also. There were the items of hay, straw, and natural gas.

The $200,000,000 represents the sum total or the aggregate of the import trade of this country from all sources, other than the fifty items to which the minister has referred.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: The American tariff has not been touched with respect to something like 391 items; it remains just where it was, so that the only possible chance of increased trade is not by reason of an increase against the United States with respect to nearly 400 items but by reason of a reduction of the tariff as against the British Empire. In other words, the incentive to British Empire trade, and the only incentive there is to it, is the extent to which, with respect to nearly 400 items, there has been a reduction in the preferential tariff. It cannot be otherwise, in view of what the minister has said; so that all these changes mean that we have 500 or more items in the tariff, in respect of which in some instances the slightest possible changes have been made. We add them together, and they make $200,000,000, excepting the fifty items referred to. Then we say "this tariff touches $200,000,000 in the aggregate", but it indicates nothing as to how the transference of that trade from one source to another will take place, and the minister says that is left in the cloudland of doubt and conjecture.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I said that with respect to each item I would give such information as I had.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but now I am dealing with the aggregate. I do submit to the minister that he must realize how misleading that is. How far would you get in connection with a private business if you said that the sum total of all the goods you bought amounted to $1,000,000 and then said, "We have concluded that we will make no change in the basis of trade with our principal customers, but we will make it a little easier for somebody else three thousand miles away to trade with us", and then say that the sum total affected is $1,000,000. I submit that is doing what is intended should be done, namely, leaving an erroneous impression upon the public mind. In the analysis, stripped of everything, it gets down to this, that of a tariff containing nearly 600 items, with respect to the United States nearly 400 items have not been touched, but with respect to Great Britain there have been increases in some cases and decreases in others. We know that the effect will be of increasing trade in the one case and diminishing it in the other, but the minister is going to give us the imports and the exports under each item and then leave us to guess, as well as himself, as to what the result may be.

I commend to him Mr. Snowden's observations, thanking business men, as he did in his budget, for the information supplied to him by which he was able to predicate almost what revenue he would receive by reason of the changes he made, not with absolute certainty but within a million pounds or so. The value of the Chancellor of the Exchequer in Great Britain is determined not by his guesses but by the accuracy of his estimates. Anyone can guess; anyone can sit down, add up all these imports and then simply say that we have touched $200,000,000 worth of trade; but how we touched it the minister does not know.

Mr. DUNNING: We have touched it very definitely by widening the British preference with respect to the commodities covered by the items.

Mr. BENNETT: How many of them?

Mr. DUNNING: How many cases?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: That is quite apparent from the figures I gave in the budget address. I have not them at hand but they can be found quite easily. With regard to taking the advice of business men, nearly every one of the items we are now discussing has been before the Tariff Advisory Board in public hearings at which business men were present. I should like to pay my tribute to the business men of this country for their cooperation in that regard. I indicated it in the budget itself, but no one of these business men could possibly indicate the extent to which a particular line of goods would be affected by the widening of the British preference; no one could tell to what extent in one or two years that trade would be diverted say from the United States to Great Britain. It is not possible to do that; my hon. friend knows it is not possible for anyone to gauge all the factors which enter into a transaction of that kind. From the evidence available it would appear that the British people are sufficiently alive to the opportunity of obtaining trade which formerly went to the United States as to warrant the hope for a substantial increase this year in these commodities.

Mr. BENNETT: Could the minister tell me if yeast cakes and compressed yeast are manufactured in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: There has been no change made in the American tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The British tariff has been taken off entirely, and that will probably mean the displacing of Canadian goods with British goods. These goods are manufactured in Canada and heretofore there has been a duty against them on importations from the British Empire and from the United States. Does the hon. minister propose to displace Canadian-made goods with British-made goods?

Mr. DUNNING: The answer is no.

Mr. BENNETT: Why the change, if we are not going to obtain more trade under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: We are importing $360,000 worth per year from the United States, which will carry in the future the same tariff as it has carried in the past.

Mr. BENNETT: How much did we get from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: Very little.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand it was $1,400.

Mr. DUNNING: It was $1,700.

Mr. BENNETT: Fleischman's yeast has been purchased in large quantities. This product is dependent upon its freshness, and Canadian factories have been supplying requirements. The American parent company has shipped a substantial quantity into this country, and they have had to compete against that tariff for the last three years. We have received only $1,700 worth from Great Britain, and that quantity probably has been used for malting purposes.

Mr. DUNNING: It was not on the free list until now.

Mr. BENNETT: Previously the rates were 3 cents from the United States as against 2 cents from Great Britain for compressed yeast in bulk; 6 cents from the United States as against 4 cents from Great Britain for compressed yeast in packages, and 6 cents from the United States as against 4 cents from Great Britain for yeast cakes. The intention is to take off the British rate and leave the other rates as they are at present. That will do one of two things; it will either diminish the quantity coming in from the United States, or cause Canadian products to be displaced by British products. Which is it to be? If the American product is to be displaced, well and good, but if the Canadian product is to be displaced, I submit that that is all to the bad. The minister says it is being put on the free list and all we have to do is to sit down and see if a Canadian industry is to be ruined, or if importations of $360,000 are to be replaced by Canadian products. That is the real issue in this case, as with many other items in the list. With the enormous market for these products which exists in the United States and in Canada, it is idle to think that the American product will be displaced; the result will be that competition will be made that much harder for the Canadian industry.

Mr. MANION: In delivering his budget speech the minister gave a summary of the reductions and increases, which appears on page 1631 of Hansard. On the previous page, there appears a summary in connection with iron and steel, and I would like to know if the general summary included that given for iron and steel.

Mr. DUNNING: It included everything.

Mr. MANION: The summary which appears on page 1631 includes the previous summary?

Mr. DUNNING: The final summary is complete.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—47. Beans, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What amount was imported during 1929, and what amount of duty was collected thereon?

Mr. DUNNING: In 1929 we imported 327,000 bushels, valued at $1,128,000.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): And the duty collected?

Mr. DUNNING: I shall have to calculate that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is the total importation?

Mr. DUNNING: I can only approximate that information, because the imports are not divided according to the intermediate and general tariffs. Assuming that the whole quantity came in under the general tariff, the duty collected would be about $82,000.

Mr. MANION: Did most of it come in under the general tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: We received 120,000 bushels from Belgium, 83,000 bushels from Japan, 73,000 bushels from the United States and 18,000 bushels from Great Britain.

Mr. BENNETT: Those would be transhipped from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: They qualified for the British preference, which would mean that they would be grown somewhere in the empire.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What were the exports for the same period?

Mr. DUNNING: The exports were so small as not to be included in my notes. I could have that looked up, but apparently they were very small.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Are those figures for the calendar year?

Mr. DUNNING: For the fiscal year 1929.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Ending March 31, 1929.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Could the minister give us the same figures for the succeeding fiscal year ending March 31, 1930?

Mr. DUNNING: Those figures are not available except in a very fragmentary and unchecked form.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): The minister will observe that these figures have a very important bearing.

Mr. DUNNING: During the fiscal year of 1929 we exported 45,000 bushels.

Mr. LADNER: Under the old classification the rates were 15 cents, 22½ cents, and 25 cents per bushel, while the new rates are given in pounds. What difference per pound would that make?

Mr. DUNNING: There are 60 pounds to ths bushel.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Under the general tariff the old rate was 25 cents per bushel, while under the new tariff it is 2 cents per pound, which would mean $1.20 per bushel as against 25 cents. Am I correct in making that statement?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Beans are used very freely in the west and an increase of 480 per cent is almost unthinkable. I cannot understand how a Liberal government on an article of diet like this would increase the duty by 480 per cent. I do not think it is good business. I would ask the minister to consider returning to the old rate, except for the provision making beans free under the British preferential tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: The bean growers applied for a hearing before the tariff board and my hon. friend, in common with everyone else, has access to the evidence which was given with respect to the matter. With regard to the question of percentages, that observation as to an increase of 480 per cent reminds me of an old story that I have probably told in my hon. friend's hearing before, but it will not hurt to repeat it because it illustrates how illusory the use of percentages can sometimes be in relation to practical facts.

Mr. BENNETT: It depends on how they are used.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. I am very chary of using percentage illustrations, because of the traps into which they may lead one. There was a number of years ago a very famous member of the British parliament named Sir Wilfrid Lawson. My hon. friend may have heard of him. He was not a prohibitionist, but a great temperance advocate. He was a member of the British house and he was fond of asking questions designed to elicit information which would be of service to him advancing the cause he had at heart. On one occasion during the Ashanti war he asked a question as to the proportion of casualties among total abstainers in the Ashanti expeditionary force and he was staggered when he got the information that 50 per cent were killed and 50 per cent died. That looked terrible, but being a persistent old gentleman he made further inquiry and found that there were only two total abstainers in the Ashanti expeditionary force, one of them having been killed and one having died. That illustrates that the percentage method of approach does not always reveal the facts of the situation. The bean growers to my mind made out a case for their request before the tariff board; hence I am proposing now to grant it.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Leaving the percentage alone, I say it is four times as much. If that will not suit the Minister of Finance, I do not know what will. I know of no other country that has increased its tariff four times as much as before. I would move:

That item 47 be free under the British preference and the same as it was previously, namely, 22½ cents under the intermediate tariff and 25 cents a bushel under the general tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: May I remind the minister that he has not yet told us what the bean growers asked for. What did they ask for? They did not ask for this award.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot be quite sure. I think it was 2½ cents. My hon. friend knows and he might tell me.

Mr. BENNETT: I am asking because the evidence is in my room. I looked at it last week, but I do not want to trust to memory.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The minister intimated that he had some figures for the calendar year. Would he give us by months the importations since March 31, 1929?

Mr. DUNNING: I will try to find them. The Trade of Canada for the calendar year does not give the information month by month, as my hon. friend requests, but it gives the information for the whole year. The total imports for the calendar year 1929 were 229,000 bushels.

Mr. SENN: May I ask the minister whether the bean growers, when they submitted their brief, suggested that beans should enter free under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: They did not.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): When I asked for the exports of beans, I did not suppose any account was taken of the number of Canadian canned beans that were exported.

Mr. DUNNING: In the information I gave I was dealing only with the item before us. We shall come to canned beans which, of course, constitute an entirely separate item.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): But the minister can readily see it has a bearing on our exports of this product, because a certain quantity might be canned in this country and exported. If possible I should like to know the number of bushels of Canadian beans that were exported as canned beans.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot distinguish in the canning between Canadian beans which were canned and imported beans which were canned. The only information I can give is our exports of canned beans. The origin of the particular bean is not traceable. The figures I am now giving include the weight of the can and the weight of the liquid. My hon. friend will understand that they do not bear an exact relationship to the dried beans. We exported 13,700,000 pounds of beans in tin cans. I suppose that would include a little pork.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the invoice price per bushel of beans last year according to the trade returns?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will note these figures and then he can follow me in my calculations. In 1929, leaving out the odd hundreds, the amount was 327,000 bushels at a value of $1,128,000. That would be $3 and a fraction per bushel.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. BENNETT: A friend of mine who was in one of these large canning factories not long since—told me that he saw there a large quantity of Japanese and Belgian beans and some beans from the United States, and I understood that the proprietors had said that the Japanese and Belgian beans had cost much less than that. I suppose this figure lumps them all, and that it is impossible to tell from it just what the cost is. I understood that it was in the vicinity of $2.50, but that may or may not be accurate.

Mr. DUNNING: The Canadian price, which is somewhat of a guide, of course, because the prices must be competitive, was $3.30 for that year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The trade returns for 1929 show that 82,000 bushels of Japanese beans came in, valued at $298,000.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a little more than $3 per bushel.

Mr. KENNEDY: To how many countries from which we imported beans n.o.p. in 1928 or 1929 will this British preference reduction apply? The countries from which we imported beans were the United Kingdom, United States, Belgium, France, Hungary, Japan, the Netherlands and Roumania. I suppose the United Kingdom would be the only one to which this reduction would apply.

Mr. DUNNING: The product of other parts of the British Empire would enter under the British preference through Britain normally in connection with a commodity such as beans. Britain is the great market in Europe for this class of commodity. I do not know of any direct trade in beans between Canada and any other part of the British Empire. We got 18,000 bushels from Great Britain in the fiscal year 1929. That might have been produced in any part of the British Empire which is eligible for the British preference.

Mr. KENNEDY: What countries would be entitled to the treaty rate of one and a half cents?

Mr. DUNNING: All the countries that now supply us with any considerable supplies, chiefly Japan and Belgium.

Mr. KAISER: Do I understand that the old tariff was 25 cents a bushel?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. KAISER: And the proposed duty is $1.20 a bushel?

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What were our imports of canned beans for 1929?

Mr. DUNNING: We brought in $95,000 worth of canned beans in the calendar year 1929.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be observed that of the beans that came into Canada last year the greater part came from treaty countries, Japan and Belgium chiefly, our imports from those two countries approximating 170,000 bushels, as against 110,000 bushels from the United States and the small quantity of 18,000 bushels from the British Empire. I take it, therefore, that it is perfectly clear that the imposition of the tariff at the present rate is to encourage the production of beans at home and to protect Canadian agriculture. That is what it must be for; it could not be for British trade. The minister will observe that the rate for treaty countries is now 90 cents per bushel, and that last year the duty was 22½ cents with respect to the two treaty countries principally affected. Do I understand it to be the minister's view that an increase of 400 per cent protection is exactly what is required to develop the bean industry in Canada? I do not want there to be any misapprehension about it.

Mr. DUNNING: The protection is not 400 per cent. My hon. friend knows better than that.

Mr. BENNETT: The increase in the tariff is from 22½ cents a bushel to 90 cents a bushel for treaty countries, from which last year we bought the major part of our bean requirements. That is the intermediate tariff. That is an increase in the tariff of 400 per cent. Do I understand it to be the government's position that it was necessary to increase the bean duty 400 per cent to supply adequate protection to the Canadian bean grower?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not going to talk in percentages.

Mr. BENNETT: But this is a clear case.

Mr. DUNNING: In my judgment the bean growers made out a case with respect to the production of beans in Canada, and with respect to oriental competition particularly, and continental competition, but not to the same degree. Beans can be grown in Canada. It is a commodity which we should be producing in many different parts of this country. That is the position.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the minister is perfectly frank. This increased duty is imposed for the benefit of the Canadian farmer and the producer of beans in Canada. What the percentage increase is, of course, is a matter of no great moment to my friend from Weyburn as long as the protection is adequate and sufficient. So far as we are concerned, we desire to see the bean industry fostered and safeguarded and benefited. We are not assuming any responsibility as to the extent to which the hon. gentleman may think it desirable to impose taxation for that purpose, but how my hon. friend from Lisgar would have made the welkin ring in days gone by at 400 per cent increase in the tariff.

Mr. BROWN: It is not 400 per cent, but 300 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Four times 22½ is 90.

Mr. McINTOSH: The increase is 300 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Well then, 300 per cent. I am glad that the hon. member for North Battleford is satisfied that 300 per cent of an increase in the tariff is reasonable and adequate protection, but he objects to 400 per cent as a little too much. How the welkin has rung in days gone by at an increase of 10 or 20 per cent! How any increase at all has been denounced by some hon. gentlemen! How the cry has gone forth that the farmer never could benefit from protection! Where is the consumers' league now? Page Mr. Deachman.

Mr. BROWN: It never should benefit the farmer, did the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. BENNETT: Never could; I am quoting the hon. gentleman and the consumer's league.

Mr. BROWN: Never could ultimately.

Mr. BENNETT: Now we have it; I suppose we have reached the ultimate. I think if my hon. friend will study Archbishop Trench's book on words he will find that the ultimate has now been reached. How the hon. gentleman in days gone by used to launch those fierce tirades against protection and indicate how little advantage it could possibly be to the farmer! How my hon. friend from Weyburn used to denounce the Conservative party as the party of high protection! Will he or the hon. member for Saskatoon point to a 300 per cent increase in any Conservative tariff?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Perhaps the hon. gentleman would appreciate the situation a little better if he said that the duty was one-third of a cent and is now one cent and a half.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh no, the former duty was a little over half a cent a pound.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): About a third, and the proposed rate is one and a half. These figures are probably less confusing than those large percentages.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. But how delightful they were in days gone by to hon. gentlemen opposite! How they used to revel in them and roll them under their tongue!

Mr. BROWN: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. For my part I never have used those percentages, I recognize what folly it is to talk in percentages only, as I pointed out the other day.

Mr. BENNETT: I am so glad the hon. gentleman never used those figures. Of course, he never could have used them, because the Conservatives never made such increases. Look at the happiness with which they accept this three hundred per cent increase! What a happy crew!

An hon. MEMBER: Are you happy?

Mr. BENNETT: I should say so. Any man is happy when he sees his doctrines put into practice. But he realizes that novices in the application of them often make mistakes.

Mr. EULER: They make a mess of it.

Mr. BENNETT: They often do, they make a great mess of it—as the hon. minister will discover shortly when he gets up to Waterloo. Let us have no misunderstanding. The tariff has been increased on beans three hundred per cent against treaty countries from which we obtained the major importations of our beans last year, as necessary for the protection of the Canadian farmer. And the Liberal party that yesterday denounced it now accepts it. Those delightful free trade gentlemen, with whom I have passed many pleasant hours, are now the custodians of the faith in protection that formerly they abused in terms so loud. My friend from Lisgar says he is not the custodian of the faith; but I observed by his vote the other day that he swallowed this tariff. Surely that must be so.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Adshead) moves in amendment that item 47 be free under the British preference and be the same as it was previously, namely, 22½ cents per bushel under the intermediate tariff, and 25 cents per bushel under the general tariff.

I find at page 164 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms the following quotation from the 13th edition of May, page 544. dealing with standing order No. 60:

> Proposals for the variation or modification of taxation can therefore be made in the committee; but these proposals must be grafted upon the financial scheme submitted by the government, and must not affect the balance of ways and means voted for the service of the year. Amendments, therefore, can be proposed to substitute another tax, of equivalent amount,—

The amendment in my opinion conflicts with that authority in two particulars: First, it would affect the balance of ways and means voted for the service of the year; secondly, it is not an equivalent amount. Therefore I rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. ADSHEAD: On the point of order, may I refer you, Mr. Chairman, to paragraph 556 at page 165 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, where it is distinctly stated:

> The house can make amendments which diminish the amount of reduction of taxation, or postpone the day when the reduction takes place, although the amendments may increase to that extent the charges proposed to be levied upon the people.
> So long as an existing tax is not increased, any modification of the proposed reduction may be introduced in the committee—

I am introducing it in the committee; I am not increasing the tax at all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: I am afraid the hon. gentleman does not appreciate the fact that the house may do certain things that the committee may not do. We are in committee of ways and means at the present time.

Mr. ADSHEAD: May I repeat my citation again:

> So long as an existing tax is not increased, any modification of the proposed reduction may be introduced in the committee on the bill,—

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do you rule, Mr. Chairman, that a member of the committee cannot move to reduce a tax?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, that is my ruling.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then I think you had better revise it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DUNNING: Is it not rather a question, Mr. Chairman, as to the stage of the proceedings at which action of this kind may be taken? I am not familiar with the rule, but as I understand it action may be taken at a certain stage in the proceedings.

Mr. ARTHURS: I have repeatedly heard the Minister of Finance reduce or increase taxation in committee of ways and means.

The CHAIRMAN: A minister of the crown may move to reduce or increase taxation, but not a private member.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, I think you will find that that is wrong. A minister of the crown can move to increase, but any member can move to decrease taxation.

Mr. McGIBBON: It has been done in this house many times.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, will you explain what is meant in paragraph 556 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms where the author cites May as authority for the statement:

> The house can make amendments which diminish the amount of reduction of taxation,—

Does it mean that only a minister of the crown can make such an amendment?

Mr. DUNNING: As I understand, Mr. Chairman—I am not arguing for or against the point of order—the house is competent to reduce taxation, but it is a question as to the stage of the proceedings at which such action is in order. The section that my hon. friend quoted refers, I believe, to the stage of a bill. We have not yet reached that stage; there is no bill before the house; this is a committee of ways and means. By and by what this committee does takes the form of a bill; that bill then goes to the committee of the whole, and there I believe it is competent for a private member to move such an amendment as that now moved by my hon. friend from East Calgary. I am not clear whether or not it is competent for a private member to do it at this stage. You, Mr. Chairman, will have to decide that.

Mr. HEAPS: May I ask if at this stage it is in order to move that the duties shall come into effect one year or two years from this date?

The CHAIRMAN: I think such a motion would be in direct conflict with the authority that I have just cited.

Mr. HEAPS: Paragraph 556 states that the members of the house have certain rights.

Mr. ERNST: Read it.

Mr. HEAPS: I will read it. This will be found at page 165 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

> The house can make amendments which diminish the amount of reduction of taxation, or postpone the day when the reduction takes place, although the amendments may increase to that extent the charges proposed to be levied upon the people.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will notice the expression "the house"; not, "the committee of ways and means."

Mr. HEAPS: Allow me to complete the citation:

> So long as an existing tax is not increased, any modification of the proposed reduction may be introduced in the committee on the bill, and is regarded as a question, not for increasing the charge upon the people but for determining to what extent such charge shall be reduced.

Mr. CAHILL: We have not reached the bill yet.

Mr. DUNNING: The citation explains the position as I stated it a few moments ago. Any proposed reduction may be introduced in the committee on the bill.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I may move my amendment in committee on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes. Shall the item carry?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, Mr. Chairman. I notice that some 10,000 bushels of beans came from the United Kingdom and paid duty under the general tariff. The total of British importation amounted to 18,000 bushels. The general tariff at that time was 25 cents a bushel; it is now $1.20 instead of 25 cents a bushel.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: So that my leader was not very far astray when he referred to the increase in percentage. The increase is made from 25 cents a bushel to $1.20 a bushel, or almost 400 per cent.

Mr. KAISER: It is 480 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is almost a 400 per cent increase. So that there is an increase of 300 per cent on the intermediate tariff and 400 per cent on the general tariff. I am a pretty good protectionist, and I could not ask for better than that. I may tell my hon. friends that I will not oppose it.

Mr. MANION: I would like to ask the minister why in this case only he changed the measure from bushels to pounds. The bushel measurement is applied to buckwheat and barley; cornmeal is measured by the barrel and oats by the bushel. The original rating last year was per bushel, but it is changed this year without notice to a poundage basis. There is no note to show that the old rate was figured by the bushel. I would most respectfully ask the minister if the change was made for the purpose of leaving the impression with hon. members on this side of the house that it effected a reduction rather than an increase.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. MANION: It is rather peculiar that the other commodities are measured in terms of bushels or barrels, whereas in this case, where there is such an immense increase over the rate applicable last year, there is a change. In order to make it more readable it should have been left at the bushel rating, and if that unit of measurement had been continued the new rates instead of being free, 1½ cents and 2 cents respectively would have been free, 90 cents and $1.20. The publication of these latter figures would have shown a more frank attitude on the part of the minister, and I would ask him why the change has been made from bushels to pounds.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend would read the evidence which was adduced before the tariff board he would note several reasons. I am sure he will give me credit for believing that he has more intelligence than to be deceived in the presentation of a matter of this kind. I cannot hope to deceive him.

Mr. MANION: Some of the public may be more easily deceived.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I would not say that. As a matter of fact, there are two reasons. The bean growers themselves represented that their product was dealt with on a poundage basis during different processes of manufacture; and in addition to that there is the fact that the various countries of the world do not use the same standards of measurement. A pound is a pound, and it is very easy to calculate by that system.

Mr. MANION: To complete my argument I submit that this commodity should have been entered at the bushel rating.

Mr. McGIBBON: This might be a convenient place, after the attention the minister has given to the bean growers, to give us some reason for the government discarding its past policy and accepting the present one. The country would be very much interested in an explanation of the action of the government in this respect.

Mr. FRASER: How many beans came from Great Britain under the British preference during the year ending March 31, 1929?

Mr. DUNNING: There were 18,000 bushels from Great Britain, of which I believe 8,000 bushels were entitled to preference.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, the minister is correct in that statement.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the information before me in the form necessary to supply an exact answer for my hon. friend. The hon. member for Lincoln confirms my statement that 10,000 bushels came in under the general tariff.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, the exact amount is 7,714 bushels.

Mr. KENNEDY: What is going to happen to the plank in the Liberal platform which calls for free trade in foodstuffs?

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. DUNNING: We are going to put it along with a number of planks in my hon. friend's platform.

Mr. CHAPLIN: May I ask the Minister of Finance why it is that in one year he has changed his mind? I have a vivid recollection of his saying one year ago, in reference to beans: Increase the duty on beans for 300 growers?—Nothing doing.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. gentleman cannot quote that; his contention is not correct, and he knows it.

Mr. FRASER: I think the minister gave me an incorrect answer to my question. Only 547 bushels came in under the British preferential tariff; that is my interpretation of the information at my disposal.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not look at the figures. My hon. friend from Lincoln was kind enough to supply them, and I accepted them.

Mr. FRASER: I would like to have the figures cited correctly. I say that there were only 547 bushels.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have before me the 1929 returns, and they show that under the treaty 7,714 bushels came in from the United Kingdom.

Mr. FRASER: That is correct.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Valued at $26,277.

Mr. FRASER: And to make the record complete, under the British preference there were 547 bushels valued at $1,491.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That statement also is correct.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): In making the increase did the Minister of Finance have in view the raising of additional revenue, or simply increasing the protection of the bean growers?

Mr. DUNNING: As I have stated on numerous occasions, any industry in Canada, whether it be the bean growers, the piano manufacturers, or any other, can appear publicly before the Tariff Advisory Board. Application can be made for either an upward or a downward revision in the tariff, and I am prepared to examine the facts brought out at that public hearing. I ask hon. members to examine those facts, and if they do not think the facts brought out justify the result now before the house, let them vote upon it.

Mr. LADNER: Would the minister accept the recommendations or findings of such a board? Can the public feel that if they go to the expense of presenting a case, the minister will accept the recommendation?

Mr. DUNNING: No government of Canada will ever delegate its primary responsibility, or place it in the hands of an appointed board; the decision must rest with the government, which must exercise its judgment upon the facts. In this case, rightly or wrongly, we have exercised our judgment in respect to the information received and the facts brought out at the public hearings, which are of public record.

Mr. LADNER: Are the tariff adjustments contained in these proposals the findings of the tariff board, or are they instances in which the government, exercising the reservations which have just been referred to, has made alterations differing from the findings of the tariff board? In other words, do the budget proposals express the findings of the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: The tariff board is part of the Department of Finance. The officers of the tariff board are officials of the Department of Finance, and the procedure is not and never has been by way of recommendation. The procedure is and always has been a consultation between the minister and his officers with respect to the facts brought out at the public hearings.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think the remarks of the minister justify a little more questioning on our part. To my mind this brings out a very essential fact which overshadows all others. It is this: If either party in this house appeals to the country on a definite policy, are the people entitled or are they not entitled to consider that party seriously? Are these policies to be discarded on their return to office, simply through political expediency? That is the main issue on this budget, whether the government can discard with impunity its professions of the past. That is the question the people of this country are asking to-day.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Then the minister thinks that this measure will be of material advantage to the bean growers? Has he come to that conclusion on the advice of the tariff board? Is that why this change has been made.

Mr. DUNNING: A number of years ago the government announced as its policy the setting up of a tariff advisory board to hear public representations on tariff matters, whether those representations were for upward or downward revision. As a low tariff man I cannot take the ground that all changes in the tariff must be downward, if I have accepted the provision that there shall be an inquiry and if I have taken the position that I am prepared to consider the facts whatever those facts may be. That is the position which this government has taken and which it takes to-day.

So far as the future fortunes of the bean growers are concerned, they are like all other agriculturists. My hon. friend will remember the raisin pool in California. I had occasion to examine it on three different occasions in the hope that it would give some information as to the proper course to follow in respect to other products of the soil. I found this, which has been true with respect to other commodities: The pool definitely raised the price of raisins in California; there is no doubt about that. The effect of raising the price of raisins, in the course of a few years, was to increase materially the acreage of land in California devoted to growing raisins, and when more people got to growing raisins there were more raisins and as a consequence the prices did not remain up. That is an actual fact; we know it to be true. If an industry dependent on the cultivation of the soil is prosperous, more people go into that industry.

Mr. MANION: Is that not true of industry generally?

Mr. DUNNING: It is not so much true of other industries as it is of the agricultural industry.

Mr. COTNAM: When did you become a convert?

Mr. MANION: It suits the minister to talk from the standpoint of the agricultural industry. That applies just as much to any other industry as it does to agriculture. That is the protectionist argument.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I take it, then from the remarks of the minister, that perhaps this measure may work a temporary benefit, but in the long run he is of the conviction that, as happened with the raisin pool, it will work to the detriment of the producer?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not prepared to say that.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Am I to infer that from the remarks of the minister?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not prepared to say that definitely. Somebody over here said that I was a recent convert to this idea. I may tell him that away back in 1924 at the British Empire Cooperative Conference, when the cooperative consumer societies of Great Britain were urging that the course we were following in Canada as grain growers would have the effect of raising the price of bread in England, my answer was that it is easy to increase the production of breadstuffs; the extension of wheat acreage in a year, given profitable wheat raising, will ensure the production of a sufficient quantity to take it out of our power as growers to force the prices up to unreasonable levels. I have been preaching this doctrine for years with respect to agriculture.

Mr. COTNAM: I was not referring to that as far as the minister was concerned; I was referring to his recent conversion to protection.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, I am not a protectionist.

Mr. COTNAM: Then what are you?

Mr. KAISER: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he can tell us exactly to what we are restricted at this stage of the discussion?

Mr. DUNNING: You will have to ask the chairman.

Mr. KAISER: We cannot move to increase or to decrease the rate of duty at this stage. Are we confined under all these items simply to a discussion and nothing else?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend from East Lambton is getting up again, but before he does so I should like him to answer one question. I understand that beans are grown to some extent in his part of Ontario. Has he any bean growers in his own riding?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Yes, I have.

Mr. DUNNING: Many?

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if the tariff on this item has been raised on the representations of the bean growers themselves?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. ARTHURS: In view of the remarks of the minister with respect to an hon. member to my left, in which he implied that the hon. member had very few if any bean growers in his riding, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he has been converted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In a recent speech in this house the Minister of Trade and Commerce used almost exactly the same arguments as those which have been proffered by the Minister of Finance. In that connection I should like to ask the minister how many furniture builders he has in his own constituency?

Mr. KENNEDY: The minister said something about the facts being brought out by the tariff board, and I think he also stated that this revision is in the interests of the bean growers. Would he mind telling me what outstanding fact it was that led him to concludue that the increase would be in the interests of the bean growers?

Mr. DUNNING: I listen with some care to representations of farmers in connection with their own industry, and in my judgment the case of the bean growers was well prepared and well presented. I would listen to wheat growers just as well; I have done so many times and expect to do so again.

Mr. MANION: May I just ask the minister one question before he leaves the subject? In view of the fact that the minister has changed his mind in regard to the need of protection, or the amount of protection under this item, is there any reason, just supposing by some accident he got into this same position next year, why he might not change back again?

Mr. DUNNING: I can tell my hon. friend that in the light of the facts put before the tariff board I am content with this decision. I am not going to pretend that five or ten years hence further facts may not be developed at a hearing before the tariff board on the same subject by the same people, which might even convince me that conditions have changed, but I see no immediate likelihood of that happening.

Mr. MANION: Why not say four years hence? There will be another election then.

Mr. DUNNING: I had no reference to that.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—49. Buckwheat, per bushel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ cents; general tariff, 15 cents.

Mr. FRASER: What were the imports under that item?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports were $16,125, all from the United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—50. Buckwheat meal or flour, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 45 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What were the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: $4,039.

Mr. CHAPLIN: None from the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You do not expect to get any?

Mr. DUNNING: That is possible, but I included this in the fifty items which I specified. It is possible there may be some importations under this item.

Mr. FRASER: Where do the imports come from?

Mr. DUNNING: From the United States.

Mr. FRASER: All the imports?

Mr. DUNNING: Out of a total of $4,000, we received from the United States $3,900 worth.

Mr. FRASER: What other country?

Mr. DUNNING: The amount was so small that it does not appear here.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—52. Barley, n.o.p., per bushel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ cents; general tariff, 25 cents.

Mr. FRASER: This is another one of the fifty items?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, so far as Great Britain is concerned.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—53. Cornmeal, per barrel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ cents; general tariff, 25 cents.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This item would be in the same category, you do not expect to have large importations from the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: As a result of this change, it is possible that considerable importations may come from South Africa. The commodity is called maize in that country, and it must be considered that we imported $234,000 worth from the United States. The proposed change will give a spread of 25 cents per barrel, and although this item may be included in the fifty non-effective items of which I spoke, I am not without hope that some business will develop.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When the duty was 25 cents per barrel, no cornmeal came in from any country other than the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will notice that the old spread was only 5 cents per barrel as between Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I cannot find out that any cornmeal ever came in from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Not apart from the United States, that is right.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—56. Oats, per bushel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 9 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon oats produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed upon oats entering Canada from such country.

Mr. MANION: What are the imports of this item, and where from?

Mr. DUNNING: In 1929 we imported 3,036,000 bushels of oats valued at a little over $1,500,000, practically all of which came from the United States.

Mr. KENNEDY: What were the exports?

Mr. DUNNING: The total exports were valued at $10,240,000, of which $4,000,000 went to the United Kingdom, $2,170,000 to the Netherlands, and $1,900,000 to Belgium.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I suppose you are not looking for any increased business with the old country in this item; it is one of the fifty items?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. SENN: What will be the duty under the countervailing clause?

Mr. DUNNING: The United States congress is still discussing the new tariff. The present tariff is 15 cents per bushel—my hon. friend will notice the countervailing clause applies to this item—and the proposed tariff is 16 cents per bushel.

Mr. KELLNER: Did the farmers ask for this change?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

An hon. MEMBER: Who did?

Mr. DUNNING: This is a matter of policy.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Was this matter considered by the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—57. Oatmeal and rolled oats, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 50 cents; general tariff, 60 cents.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon oatmeal or rolled oats produced in Canada, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed upon oatmeal or rolled oats entering Canada from such country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the position in connection with this item? What were the imports from the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: Out of total importations valued at $46,000, $45,000 worth came from the United States. While this item is in the fifty non-effective items, I am told that there is some hope of importing oatmeal, particularly of the old Scotch variety.

An hon. MEMBER: Haggis.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You would not expect a Scotchman to pay more for it?

Mr. DUNNING: He would get it in free from Scotland; that should be attractive.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Probably they would send it over for nothing.

Mr. LADNER: What are the exports from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: Of a total of $46,000 of imports, $45,000 worth came from the United States.

Mr. LADNER: My information is that the imports from Great Britain amounted to $438.

Mr. DUNNING: That might be. I am not looking for any great trade in this item, but many mickles make a muckle..

Mr. CHAPLIN: What were the exports of oatmeal to the old country?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not those figures for last year.

Mr. MANION: Does the hon. minister know the proposed American duty?

Mr. DUNNING: I understand it is 80 cents per 100 pounds.

Mr. MANION: No change in that.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. MANION: If the American rate remains at 80, our rate will go up to that figure?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—58. Rye, per bushel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 9 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon rye produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed upon rye entering Canada from such country.

Mr. MANION: I suggest to the minister that he would save considerable time if he would give us in connection with each item the imports and their source.

Mr. DUNNING: That was my intention, but there seems to be such a keenness of interest in these matters; someone always gets up to ask a question before I can offer the information.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We were afraid that the Chairman would call out "carried."

Mr. DUNNING: I think you will find he will be fair. The importations of this item amounted to 155,000 bushels valued at $167,000, practically all of which came from the United States. The exports were valued at $10,809,000, of which about $5,000,000 went to the United Kingdom, $2,173,000 to Germany, $1,569,000 to the Netherlands and $1,158,000 to Norway.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is another item in which you do not expect any trade from the old country?

Mr. DUNNING: Not at all.

Mr. LADNER: According to my examination of the records, the amount imported from the old country was valued at $106.

Mr. DUNNING: It is absurd to retain a duty against rye coming into this country from Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—59. Rye flour, per barrel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 45 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Mr. MANION: What are the imports of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports were valued at $24,000, all of which came from the United States.

Mr. LADNER: None from the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: It will be noted that the old spread between Great Britain and the United States was quite small, amounting to only 17 cents per barrel. Under the new tariff there will be a spread of 50 cents per barrel in favour of Great Britain.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): What about the countervailing duties?

Mr. DUNNING: They do not apply to this item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—60. Wheat, per bushel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12 cents; general tariff, 12 cents.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon wheat produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed upon wheat entering Canada from such country.

Mr. LADNER: Could we have the imports of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: It may seem absurd, but we imported last year from the United States wheat to the value of $729,000.

Mr. LADNER: And $12 worth from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: It is absurd to have a tariff of 8 cents per bushel against wheat coming in from Great Britain, and that is the reason it is being put on the free list. The proposed United States tariff is 42 cents per bushel, and the countervailing provision will apply in this instance.

Mr. WHITE (London): Is not some of this wheat ground in bond and exported?

Mr. DUNNING: This item does not cover wheat flour; it is wheat which is subject to duty.

Mr. WHITE (London): It might have been ground in Canada and then exported and the duty refunded.

Mr. DUNNING: Had it been treated in that fashion it would not appear as wheat which had paid duty.

Mr. BROWN: Did any wheat come in which paid duty?

Mr. DUNNING: The importations last year were valued at $729,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Under the old tariff this commodity was covered by two separate items. Under the one item, number 60, it came in free.

Mr. DUNNING: There was in the old wheat item a countervailing provision. One would think, to hear some of the speeches on the budget, I had invented countervailing duties. The old item was:

Wheat flour and semolina when imported from a country which imposes a customs duty on wheat flour or semolina, manufactured in Canada, per barrel: 30 cents; 50 cents; 50 cents.

That was the tariff brought into effect, by the way, on June 6, 1919. That was a countervailing tariff.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is a fixed duty. There is nothing countervailing about it. The duty is absolutely fixed; it does not increase or decrease with the duties of other countries.

Mr. DUNNING: To my mind it is a restricted countervailing tariff, for the reason that if another country does not impose a duty on a like article coming from Canada, this item does not apply.

Mr. ERNST: They cannot raise our duty. It is not a countervailing duty.

Mr. DUNNING: It is so regarded. Under the old item we imposed a duty of only fifty cents no matter how high the other country's duty went. Under the countervailing proposals now before the committee on various items, our tariff is fixed at what we consider proper, but in addition to that our tariff goes up or down as the case may be.

Mr. LUCAS: Is the minister not quoting from No. 61?

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry; I should explain to my hon. friend I quoted the wrong item, but the same principle applies. Wheat is free under the old tariff, but when imported from a country which imposes a customs duty on wheat grown in Canada, the rate is eight cents, twelve cents and twelve cents. That is the existing countervailing provision on wheat.

Mr. ERNST: That is not countervailing; it is a fixed tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a tariff which says that we are willing to lower our duty if the other country does the same.

Mr. LADNER: But not increase it.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, because we state that wheat from the United States is free unless they impose a duty against our wheat. If they do so, then our duty will be eight cents, twelve cents and twelve cents, no matter what duty they impose on our wheat.

Mr. MANION: But the United States tariff at the present moment is forty-two cents, and if these are countervailing duties our tariff would be forty-two cents as well.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend can find another for it. I know our tariff is termed in the trade and between the two countries a countervailing tariff.

Mr. ERNST: A fixed provisional tariff.

Mr. LADNER: I have before me tariff schedules 60a and 61a. They are maximum rates which come into force for entry into this country in the vent of the other country placing a tariff on those commodities, but it does not permit our rates increasing beyond those maximum rates in the event of the other country increasing their tariff. In other words we have a high tariff but they have higher and higher tariffs.

Mr. ERNST: Now it is a brick-for-brick tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: We are willing to co-operate with the United States in pulling down the wall.

Mr. ERNST: To a certain fixed minimum.

Mr. DUNNING: Under section 11 of the customs tariff, we also have a provision whereby we can reduce the tariff below our rate.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The old item, I suppose, was not considered by the board?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): This is a matter of government policy.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): What is that policy? Retaliation or what?

Mr. DUNNING: The policy with respect to wheat is to say more effectively what section 11 of the customs tariff has said for a number of years. For a number of years section 11 has made what is virtually a standing offer with regard to certain commodities.

Mr. ERNST: Will the minister read the section?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not sure if it is with respect to wheat.

Mr. ERNST: I do not think it is; I think it is a general gesture of good will.

Mr. DUNNING: Section 11 reads:

If the President of the United States, under authority of the United States Tariff Act of 1922, determines to reduce the duties imposed by such act on the following articles, that is to say:—cattle; wheat; wheat flour; oats; barley; potatoes; onions; turnips; hay; fish as enumerated in paragraphs—

And then it gives the paragraphs.

—the governor in council may by order in council make such reductions of duties on such articles imported into Canada from the United States as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for such reductions on Canadian products imported into the United States.

That provision, which existed in our law since 1923, remains, but in addition we say in the tariff that while our rate of duty on wheat with respect to the United States remains at twelve cents, there shall be a countervailing provision upward and we have in addition the provision to enable us to meet them in any reductions.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Have we not heard it in the house time and again that it is impossible to protect the western wheat grower?

Mr. DUNNING: It is.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then why this duty? Is this not a contradiction of the doctrine we have heard enunciated for years?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What is it? Is it retaliation? Is it a countervailing duty? It seems to me to be absurd to give people protection when they do not want it. When they have said in the house that they do not need it; that it is impossible to help them, why insert this provision in the tariff?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—61. Wheat flour and semolina, per barrel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 50 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon wheat flour or semolina produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed upon wheat flour or semolina entering Canada from such country.

Mr. MANION: Will the minister give the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: In 1929 Canada imported wheat flour valued at $540,000, of which $539,000 worth came from the United States.

Mr. LADNER: How much from the United Kingdom—$14?

Mr. DUNNING: Practically nothing. This is not an article we are likely to get from Great Britain. It is really absurd to have a tariff on it from Great Britain.

Mr. MANION: I notice that the duty on wheat flour under this item is fifty cents a barrel, but the duty going into the United States is at the present time $2.04 a barrel.

Mr. DUNNING: No. The present rate per 100 pounds going into the United States is seventy-eight cents, and their proposed rate is $1.04.

Mr. MANION: So that this tariff will go up to $1.04 automatically?

Mr. DUNNING: Unless the United States change their tariff?

Mr. KENNEDY: Has the minister a statement regarding exports of flour to the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: The figures are as follows:

| Year | Flour of Wheat Barrels | Value |
|---|---|---|
| 1929.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 1,980 | $12,600 |
| 1928.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 5,921 | 36,186 |

Mr. WHITE (London): Would the minister give the figures for 1919 and 1920?

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry I have not those figures here.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—63a. Rice bran: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tafiff, 17½ per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why is this item here?

Mr. DUNNING: That is a question that I asked myself, because there are no imports at all under this item, but I am advised that it is a commercial commodity and ought to have a place in the tariff because there is no other description which could be applicable to it.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is it used for?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know that either.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—67. Macaroni and vermicelli, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $1; general tariff, $1.25.

Mr. LADNER: What are the imports?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports were $265,000, of which $246,000 came from the United States.

Mr. LADNER: How much from the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: Hardly any.

Mr. LADNER: Only $71.

Mr. DUNNING: It must be borne in mind that under the new rates, instead of a spread of 50 cents between the United Kingdom and the United States there will be a spread of $1.25 by making imports from Great Britain free.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What I do not understand about the matter is this. We have factories in this country making macaroni. In the district from which I come there are at least three firms making macaroni of a good quality, an article that is well liked. These firms employ quite a few hands. Why should we make this article free to any country?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): People might like another brand.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, anything to put a few more people out of a job. That is the kind of brand you want. I cannot see any reason at all for making it free. There was no demand for the import of macaroni that I ever heard of, and there was none of any moment coming in.

Mr. DUNNING: There was an import of over $265,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is not that enough without making it possible for larger quantities to come in free? There is enough coming in now without reducing the duty in another direction and opening up another channel through which importations can come in.

Mr. FRASER: Has the minister any figures as to the production of macaroni and vermicelli in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: I have none available here. There has been no complaint.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was this matter discussed by the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It never was, and yet a minute ago the minister said that a certain matter had come before the tariff board and we must take notice of the board's recommendation. Here is a matter that has not come before the tariff board. The people engaged in the business have no chance for their life at all—no chance to make an explanation of their position.

Mr. DUNNING: They have made no complaint yet.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How do they know about it?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend would no doubt tell them.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is one reason why I want to have the minister make an explanation as to why this tariff change was made.

Mr. COTNAM: If this item did not come before the tariff board, are we to infer that this change represents the government's policy?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think we should have a little more information. I have a factory in my riding. Why should they be subjected to unnecessary competition? What principle is the minister going on? Has the price been too high in this country? Why does he want to restrict the amount of business which this firm can do?

Mr. DUNNING: The producers have waited upon the officers of the department since this item became public, and have made no complaint about it. They suggested, however, that they would like a countervailing duty against the United States.

Mr. McGIBBON: Did the minister promise to give it to them?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. McGIBBON: Why not?

Mr. FRASER: Would the minister take it into consideration now?

Mr. DUNNING: Not now.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—69. Hay and straw, per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $1.75; general tariff, $2.

Mr. MANION: What are the imports?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports amounted to $83,910, all from the United States. I never expect to see hay or straw brought in from Great Britain. It is an absurdity to have a tariff of $1.65 against hay coming from Great Britain, because it never comes in. This change is to wipe out an absurdity.

Mr. LADNER: If it never comes in, what is the difference?

Mr. DUNNING: No difference at all.

Mr. LADNER: Is it not simply to make a gesture before the public that there is a reduction in the British preference, when actually the reduction is a farce?

Mr. DUNNING: No. I deliberately stated in the budget speech exactly what was in my mind and kept clear of the suspicion which my hon. friend imagines in his own mind. I made the matter very clear in my budget speech.

Mr. SIMPSON: What is the United States tariff against Canadian hay?

Mr. DUNNING: The present tariff on hay going into the United States is $4, and one of their tariff proposals is to increase the duty to $5.

Mr. SIMPSON: Has there been any request for an increase in the Canadian tariff on hay?

Mr. DUNNING: I know of none.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. FRASER: Is this a countervailing duty?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. FRASER: Why not?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friends are getting quite an affection for countervailing duties as we go along.

Mr. BROWN: The finance minister did not take into consideration the suggestion that we have heard in the last three or four years that this duty should be raised.

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend from Macleod is the only one who has made any suggestion of that kind to me recently.

Mr. MANION: Is this one of the items which the minister mentions in his budget speech as being one of 589 free items under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: In the total, yes, but I qualified that statement, as my hon. friend knows, by stating that there were some fifty items of a non-effective character.

Mr. MANION: Some place in his speech the minister may have done so, but let me read this pragraph, from page 1631 of Hansard, where the Minister of Finance says:

When this revision is completed the Canadian customs tariff will consist of 1,188 items of which 589 will be free under the British preference.

Hay is one of them. He goes on:

The changes proposed have the effect of greatly increasing the British preference in the Canadian market.

That is the complete paragraph that I have read. The minister may protest all he wishes, but without a doubt he meant the people of this country to think that there were 589 free items under the British preference every one of which would be of some benefit to Canada. He makes no reference at all in that paragraph to certain items that would not affect our trade, but some place in his speech—

Mr. DUNNING: Right close by.

Mr. MANION: I do not see it. It certainly is not in the paragraph that I have read.

Mr. DUNNING: I will read it to my hon. friend. I said:

There have existed in our tariff, for years—

Mr. MANION: What page is that?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not quoting from Hansard, but from a printed copy of the budget speech.

Mr. ERNST: How many pages is that from the other page?

Mr. DUNNING: In the printed copy I have it is on the same page. I said:

There have existed in our tariff, for years, many items carrying rates of duty in the British preferential column, but relating to commodities in which none of the various British countries has been an effective trader. Some of these items represent materials or articles in which, for the present at least, British countries may continue to be more or less ineffective factors; others are clearly of a nature in which a wider preference may be of real value in promoting inter-empire trade. We have decided, therefore, to make free under the British preferential tariff a further group of fifty items of this class.

That is in the paragraph immediately preceding those headed "countervailing duties," and following those paragraphs is the summary which my hon. friend has just read.

Mr. MANION: It is on the preceding page, it is a full page removed from the paragraph I read. When he quotes the 589 items which he gives as free under the British preferential tariff, he adds:

The changes proposed have the effect of greatly increasing the British preference in the Canadian market.

The object is obvious and unless my hon. friends are extreme in their views—and of course they are—it is very plain what they meant.

An hon. MEMBER: Save it up for the campaign.

Mr. MANION: We are pointing it out to let the public know about the humbug.

Mr. DUNNING: I want to say a word on "humbug." We have just listened to some of it.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend can speak as an authority on it. Go ahead.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend read this, but he was very careful not to read what immediately followed it; he read this:

When this revision is completed the Canadian customs tariff will consist of 1,188 items of which 589 will be free under the British preference. The changes proposed have the effect of greatly increasing the British preference in the Canadian market.

The importance of this enlargement of the preference is indicated by the fact that Canada imported last year over two hundred million dollars' worth of the commodities on which we are now increasing the British preference.

Mr. MANION: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has just shown us the type of humbug he is putting over. He admits here to-night that the $200,000,000 worth referred to was not British preferential goods at all, but represented the total imports, including the items on which the tariff was changed.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no.

Mr. MANION: He did admit it, not once but half a dozen times. The minister was asked what the $200,000,000 referred to. He said it referred to the goods from all the world that were affected by these changes in the tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: Positively not.

Mr. MANION: What does it refer to then?

Mr. DUNNING: What I say to-night is what I said in the budget speech. Canada last year imported over $200,000,000 worth of the commodities on which we now are increasing the British preference; that is, the commodities on which the British preference is by this tariff revision increased, of those commodities—not all the commodities touched in the tariff, but the commodities on which there is a definite increase in the British preference—Canada imported last year, $200,000,000. I stated it moderately; it is more than $200,000,000 worth by far.

Mr. MANION: I accept the statement now made, Mr. Chairman, but the minister said that we imported $200,000,000 worth from all the world, not from the British countries.

Mr. DUNNING: I never said in the budget speech that the $200,000,000 worth was imported from the British countries.

Mr. MANION: But the minister implied that—

Mr. DUNNING: Not at all.

Mr. MANION: —and we are going to increase the British preference on such items as wheat, barley, buckwheat, hay, cut flowers, and other lines of goods that we do not import and never will import.

Mr. DUNNING: I have listened to hon. gentlemen opposite squawking on various items we have dealt with, because there is a possibility, forsooth, that some day they may get in here. Before we get through with this revision I have no doubt those hon. gentlemen will be complaining in a sense exactly opposite to my hon. friend's objection. They will be complaining because goods may come in from Great Britain under some of the items we are considering. If goods are to be admitted, that is wrong; if they are not to be admitted, that is wrong too. I might repeat once more my words—and the Canadian people understood them correctly, if my hon. friends opposite did not:

> The importance of this enlargement of the preference is indicated by the fact that Canada imported last year over two hundred million dollars' worth of the commodities on which we are now increasing the British preference.

Surely that is plain enough.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Did you not say in the budget speech that we imported that amount from all countries?

Mr. DUNNING: Never. The speech is on record in Hansard. My hon. friend is attaching to it the meaning he wants to attach to it instead of the meaning of the plain English of the words.

Mr. MANION: And, Mr. Chairman, the meaning that the minister expected us to attach to the words. The minister says we will be complaining both ways. Let me tell him that this is what we are complaining of. We do complain of importations from Great Britain or from any other country in the world that will interfere with Canadian production and Canadian work and Canadian wages. On the other hand, we do object to the minister or anybody else putting out a list of 589 articles to which he is extending the British preference as if this would mean a great benefit to the British Empire, when as a matter of fact half of those commodities we will never import from Great Britain or any other part of the empire and never have.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend says we will never import half. I have admitted fifty in the budget speech. I have wiped out fifty absurdities. Now my hon. friend will kindly watch as we go along as to the rest of that "half."

Mr. MANION: It will be pretty near a half. We have checked the list up and those articles do not mean anything.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister admits that fifty of these articles will have no immediate effect on the imports from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: May not have. Perhaps I had better read that part of my budget speech again to my hon. friend.

Mr. ARTHURS: We will take it as read. What number of those items were included in this $200,000,000 worth?

Mr. DUNNING: Not one of them. I have stated it here half a dozen times.

Mr. ARTHURS: Hold on.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: I have stated here a half a dozen times that in calculating the $200,000,000 worth of business which is affected by the widening of the British preference I left out of account United Kingdom importations in addition to the fifty items which I admit are not effective. I repeat, I have stated that a half a dozen times. Perhaps my hon. friend will remember it.

Mr. KENNEDY: With regard to this $200,000,000 worth of imports, has the minister the figures for 1929, either the calendar or the fiscal year, showing the percentage of the $200,000,000 worth brought in under the British preference, the intermediate tariff and the general tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not deal in percentages. I deal in actual facts.

Mr. KENNEDY: All right, let us have the actual facts.

Mr. DUNNING: As to the actual facts, I shall give them and make them a matter of record for my hon. friend with respect to each item as it arises.

Mr. KENNEDY: You cannot give the totals?

Mr. DUNNING: The totals are made by a count of the items. I have not the aggregate,

Mr. KENNEDY: You had the totals when you said $200,000,000 worth.

Mr. DUNNING: It was made up on an adding machine, of course.

Mr. KENNEDY: It would not be hard to give those figures.

Mr. DUNNING: The figures are more than $200,000,000.

Mr. KENNEDY: What is the proportion of the $200,000,000 of imports in 1929 coming in under the British preference, the intermediate tariff and the general tariff? Have you those figures for the last year of which there is any record?

Mr. DUNNING: We have not the figures divided by the various columns of the tariff. We have not them made up. But may I tell my hon. friend that the object is to endeavour to divert trade which now comes to Canada from the United States so that it may come from Great Britain or the British Empire.

Mr. KENNEDY: I agree with that, that is all right; but if we had the amount of each item coming from Great Britain under the British preference, and from the United States or any other country under the general tariff, it would be very useful information. It is a very easy matter to total up the various items with an adding machine and give us the amounts that came in under the British preference, the intermediate tariff, and the general tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the information in that form.

Mr. KENNEDY: Can you get it?

Mr. DUNNING: It probably is possible to get it; I cannot say offhand. In fact the total figures I am giving under each item would probably bring us to that result, particularly when we come to the larger items. But I will see what can be done along that line. I may tell my hon. friend, however, that when he gets the information in bulk that way he will be in no better position to determine how much of that trade can be switched to Great Britain. There will come before this committee many items of which we are importing little or nothing from Great Britain. We were assured by the British Federation of Industries and by others who appeared before the tariff board at its various hearings that Great Britain can trade with us if we will give her the chance; we are trying to give her the chance. My hon. friends are always looking for some general maxim to apply to all commodities. No such maxim exists. Different types of the same commodity follow different channels of trade. One type of a particular commodity could be switched from the United States to Great Britain whereas another type of the very same commodity, for technical reasons connected with its manufacture, very frequently could not be switched. The supply of raw material or any one of a dozen other things must be considered. My hon. friend has asked me to generalize; I shall endeavour to get that general information for him, but I hope members of the committee will bear in mind that my staff is busy with these matters and it is possible to ask for information which takes more time than we have at our disposal, having regard to the immediate necessities.

Mr. CHAPLIN: For my part, I am quite satisfied to have the minister particularise; I do not want the information in a general way. In his address on the budget he was pleased to speak in general terms and at the present time I would ask him for particulars. Up to the present I do not know of one item in connection with which the minister has come out flat-footed and said that he expects to get a certain amount of British trade.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I have said that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have gone over these items carefully and I cannot find one in which the minister has so committed himself. I want to be informed as we go along; I had and still have some grave doubts about yeast. I certainly do not agree with the minister's conclusions as to that item.

Mr. McGIBBON: This evening I have asked the minister on two occasions if his department has estimated the amount of business which would be switched. Probably he did not understand my question, but in reply he said that he had made a statement in the budget speech. I wish to ask him at what place in his speech he made such a statement.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Regarding the $200,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: I think the hon. gentleman is expecting a little too much detail.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want to know the amount that will be switched from the United States to Great Britain, and I think the minister should give me an answer.

Mr. DUNNING: I have answered that question at least half a dozen times. We have enlarged the British trade with respect to $200,000,000 worth of imports.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. gentleman apparently does not grasp my point. He told me that he had given the information, and I asked him on what particular page of Hansard it is to be found.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not hear the remark of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister told me twice that he had estimated the amount of business which would be switched from the United States to Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I did not say that.

Mr. McGIBBON: I beg to differ with the hon. gentleman; he told me that on two occasions.

Mr. DUNNING: I have refused entirely to estimate what will be switched. One can only state the opportunities which exist. If my hon. friends can tell me what degree of initiative and what degree of service the British industrialists will be willing to devote to it, if they will tell me what sacrifices the United States industrialists are willing to make, an estimate might be attempted. To attempt to say that so many million dollars' worth of trade will definitely be diverted from the United States to Great Britain would not be an estimate but would be an intelligent guess. We have earnestly tried to create trade opportunities, and in the opinion of the department that is all that can be done.

Mr. ARTHURS: I understood the hon. minister to say that his department had had the advice of members of British boards of trade and British manufacturers who had appeared before the tariff commission in Canada. In how many instances did British manufacturers appear before the Canadian board?

Mr. DUNNING: Directly or indirectly, there were representations made on ten or twelve occasions.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister said they appeared before the board.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, they did; I cannot however give the exact number of occasions.

Mr. ARTHURS: Would it be one or two occasions?

Mr. DUNNING: More than that. In a number of cases representations were made, and those representations are on record.

Mr. ARTHURS: They might have come from the United States or from Honolulu.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—79b. Flowers, natural, cut, whether in designs or bouquets, or not: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that, if any country imposes on such goods produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such goods entering Canada from such country.

Mr. DUNNING: In 1929 the imports were valued at $254,000, almost all of which came from the United States. In the same year Canada exported $206,000 worth, and most of it went to the United States.

Mr. LADNER: The trade returns show that imports from the United States in 1925 were valued at $135,000. That would indicate that there has been an increase from $135,000 to $254,000. The imports from the United Kingdom in 1929 were valued at $93.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. LADNER: I suppose this is another item which is not affected. It would seem that the tariff has been increased from 17½ to 25 per cent. I am not objecting to it, but I ask the reason for the increase.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: Hearings before the tariff board prompted the increase, and quite recently there has developed the probability of Bermuda entering the trade under the free section. She would be in a position to supply Canada with cut flowers during the off season. With modern transportation facilities the flowers could easily be imported. In fact, there is not much reason why they should not be transported across the Atlantic, except that it is not sound economically. From the West Indies, and Bermuda in particular, it will be possible to get cut flowers into Canada.

Mr. LADNER: Does the minister think it is fair to allow these flowers to come in duty free in competition with our own production, whereas in some of the other items, such as beans, there has been a protective increase to the extent of 400 per cent? I am asking for nothing but a fair, common sense adjustment.

Mr. DUNNING: The people in Canada who are familiar with this business are very well satisfied.

Mr. LADNER: They have expressed their approval?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MANION: In other words, the Canadian people in this business do not expect much competition from the British Empire. That would seem to contradict the minister's statement regarding the West Indies.

Mr. DUNNING: They are prepared to meet the competition.

Mr. MANION: I venture to predict that there will be very few flowers shipped from the West Indies to Canada. By the time they reached Halifax they would be two or three days old and they would not be of much value, nor would they offer very keen competition to the native growers. Is this one of the fifty items?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MANION: The minister places it in the category of those items in connection with which he expects no change.

Mr. DUNNING: In connection with the fifty items I have said that a small trade may develop. I did not count it, that is all. In explanation—

Mr. MANION: I think you were right the first time.

Mr. DUNNING: In explanation may I say that there is a possibility of developing trade.

I think there are possibilities for a limited trade, and because I think that, I have said so.

Mr. CHAPLIN: May I inquire if the minister has looked into the matter of the punctuation of the clause relating to countervailing duties?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not settled that point with the department, but we shall look into it. We have plenty of time between now and the time the bill is presented.

Mr. FRASER: May I ask the minister the United States rate of duty on this item?

Mr. DUNNING: It is 40 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—83. Potatoes, including sweet potatoes:
(a) In their natural state: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
(b) Dried, desiccated or dehydrated: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
Provided that, if any country imposes a duty on potatoes grown or processed in, and imported from Canada, an equal duty shall be imposed on potatoes coming into Canada from such country.

Mr. MANION: I would ask the minister for details.

Mr. DUNNING: Imports of potatoes into Canada in 1929 included: Potatoes, dutiable and free, $134,000; potatoes n.o.p., dutiable and free, $540,000; potatoes, dried, desiccated, or otherwise prepared, dutiable and free, $4,000. In the same year exports were valued at $3,083,000, of which $1,140,000 went to the United States, $1,506,000 to Cuba and $145,000 to Newfoundland. There is also a slight change in the wording. Under the present tariff item there is another of these modified countervailing provisions; that is to say, potatoes entering Canada are now free, provided the other country does not have a duty against us. If the other country has a duty then our duty goes to 20 cents under the preferential, 35 cents under the intermediate and 35 cents under the general tariff. That applies to countries that impose a customs duty on potatoes grown in Canada.

Mr. MANION: The minister did not say where the imports were from.

Mr. DUNNING: Almost entirely from the United States. I have not in my notes any imports from Great Britain; they are not of sufficient importance to be noted as coming from anywhere else.

Mr. RYERSON: I should like to ask the minister to what he refers when he mentions dutiable and free sweet potatoes. He gave the figures as being on dutiable and free imports. What does he refer to? I do not understand that there are any sweet potatoes coming in free.

Mr. DUNNING: I will explain to my hon. friend as I read the item. Item 83 in the old tariff is for potatoes, n.o.p., and potatoes dried, desiccated or otherwise prepared, n.o.p., They are free from any place, under that item. Under item 83a, if they are imported from a country which imposes a customs duty on potatoes grown in Canada, the duty is 20 cents under the British preference and 35 cents under the intermediate and general tariffs. Then we have item 84, which includes potatoes dried, desiccated or otherwise prepared when imported from a country which imposes a customs duty on Canadian potatoes, so my hon. friend will see that in each case there is a free item and what I call a countervailing item in connection with the same thing, so that some of these articles come in free and some are dutiable.

Mr. FRASER: Now you have put them all on the free list?

Mr. DUNNING: In the same manner as they were before, with a countervailing duty.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Previously we had a duty of 35 cents per hundred pounds against potatoes coming from the United States. Under this tariff they are now free.

Mr. DUNNING: No; under the old tariff potatoes from the United States were free provided that the United States let in our potatoes free also, but if the United States imposed any tariff—which they did—then our duty against them became 35 cents. The only difference between the present proposal and the existing tariff is that instead of levying a limit of 35 cents on potatoes coming into Canada, when another country imposes a duty against Canada the duty goes up in accordance with the duty levied against our product.

Mr. PECK: May I ask what the duty is against our potatoes going into the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: The present duty is 50 cents per hundred pounds, and in the bill of the United States Senate the proposal is to make it 75 cents. Then on dried potatoes, which also are included under this item, the duty is 2¾ cents per pound, and apparently it is not proposed to change that in the Senate bill.

Mr. RYERSON: Could the minister tell me what the duty is on sweet potatoes entering the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no distinction.

Mr. RYERSON: Then sweet potatoes coming in here now will carry that same duty?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—84. Onions, in their natural state, including onions grown with tops, shallots, and onion sets, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than three-quarters of a cent per pound.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would the minister tell us why the package is included in the weight for duty? Are you going to charge three-quarters of a cent per pound, or 30 per cent, on wood?

Mr. BENNETT: Of course; this is a low tariff government.

Mr. DUNNING: Uniformity of practice, either the one way or the other, should be followed. Formerly some of these vegetable items included the weight of the package and some did not, and it was thought wise to make the practice uniform. However, before going on with this item I want to say that I have had one or two conferences and my officers have had several conferences with the growers in an endeavour to meet what was expressed by a number of members of the house on both sides, the desirability of limiting the minimum specific rate in these vegetable items to a season, if agreement possibly could be secured—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: —if agreement possibly could be secured among the growers as to the seasons which would be applicable reasonably across Canada, having regard to the difficulties which developed in this connection when the hearing was held before the tariff board. As we come to the items concerned I shall offer amendments which I will ask my colleague the Minister of Agriculture to move, stating a period of the year during which the exact specific minimum mentioned in the schedule will be operative. The first of these items will be No. 87, I think.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. We have not come to that yet.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: No, we have not come to it yet, but I am making the general statement with respect to vegetables. I do not think anyone can say with certainty, even yet, that these seasons will suit everybody. The growers have been very desirous of obtaining these increases; as far as they were concerned, of course they were quite satisfied as growers to have the season extend over the whole year in all cases, but they did not desire, from the point of view of their own business, that it should do so, and they have cooperated wholeheartedly in an endeavour to reach agreement among themselves as to what, having regard to the information they now have about the various seasons, the proper length of time should be. As we proceed, I shall arrange for the moving of the necessary amendments.

Mr. McGIBBON: Probably the minister could explain something to me. I quote now from his speech in this house two years ago, when he said:

Why, we had a plea for the onion growers. There are three hundred of them in Canada, and my hon. friends opposite want to tax all the people of the Dominion for the benefit of those three hundred onion growers.

Would the minister be good enough to explain what light he got on the subject?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I am quite prepared to say what I have said before this evening, that I am prepared to consider an individual situation in the light of the facts developed before the tariff board.

Mr. BENNETT: The facts have not changed.

Mr. DUNNING: No, these facts have not changed. I am unlike my hon. friend; I am not infallible.

Mr. BENNETT: Why does the hon. minister state something which is so obvious?

Mr. DUNNING: That works both ways.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think anything could be quite so obvious as the hon. gentleman's attitude in this case. No one can accuse him of being infallible in regard to tariff matters. No one who has read his speeches on the budget and at Regina can say that he is unlike Galileo, who, after he recanted, said: "The earth does move, though." I think the hon. minister is in the same position. In the meantime, what about onions?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not recanted.

Mr. BENNETT: Then this is a farce, the hon. minister is only putting it on to get past an election and then he will change. Apparently there is no reality in it after all.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The minister has not given an answer to my question as to why he includes the weight of the package in the duty.

Mr. DUNNING: That is a matter of administration. Perhaps the Minister of National Revenue could tell my hon. friend, but I do not see how it could be administered in any other way.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would it not be possible to find the tare of a package?

Mr. HEAPS: When the minister was good enough to state to the house he was going to change the tariff on vegetables and—

Mr. DUNNING: I did not say I was going to change the tariff at all.

Mr. HEAPS: The hon. minister stated that he was going to change it from an annual tariff—

Mr. DUNNING: To make it apply during certain months.

Mr. HEAPS: Referring to the question asked by the hon. member for East Calgary, I would direct the attention of the minister to the fact that in many cases the packages weigh more than the vegetables themselves. Take for example a case of lettuce packed in ice; the weight of the package and the ice would be more than that of the lettuce.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): When was a duty ever charged on ice?

Mr. SPENCE: This year.

Mr. HEAPS: The present schedule calls for a duty on the package and the ice.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Did the hon. member pay it?

Mr. HEAPS: I would like to know if the minister could not arrange to have this duty collected on the vegetables alone, and not on the packages in which they are shipped.

Mr. MANION: What were the imports of onions?—they are rather hard on the eyes.

Mr. DUNNING: I must confess I am just a little tired.

Mr. BENNETT: Onions always did bring tears.

Mr. DUNNING: The imports of dutiable onions were valued at $697,000, and imports to the value of $62,000 came in free from Australia and New Zealand. We exported to New Zealand $28,000 worth and the importations from that country were of the same value.

Mr. BENNETT: Those were covered by the treaty.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: The minister has not answered the question I put to him. I want to know if it would not be possible to devise some way to separate the weight of the vegetables from the container.

Mr. EULER: It would be extremely difficult to administer the act; in fact I think it would be absolutely unworkable. I dare say it would be physically possible to estimate or actually arrive at the weight of the package or container, but even the containers vary in weight. If the weight of the package were not included in the duty, then the rate would have to be raised.

Mr. BENNETT: The protection would not be ample.

Mr. SPENCE: The hon. minister should know that duty has never been paid on the weight of the package, it was an ad valorem duty. What is the use of talking like that? The minister does not seem to know his job.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend knows very well that it was ad valorem or specific; now we have both.

Mr. SPENCE: Yes, that is right.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When the hon. minister brought down this tariff he complimented his clerks and the chairman of the board by saying: We have an orderly tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I did not say that; perhaps I had better quote what I did say.

Mr. BENNETT: The word was "orderly."

Mr. CHAPLIN: I mentioned it at the time because it put me in mind of the marketing which was being done in the northwest. I am very glad that the minister has changed his mind, because we certainly have not an orderly tariff on vegetables and fruits. We thought that three duties were sufficient, but the minister has added another one. He has the British preferential, the intermediate and the general tariff, and then he puts on a specific tariff—four tariffs instead of three. It may be all right, but I submit that the word "orderly" cannot be used in reference to this tariff.

Mr. GLEN: During the course of the hearing before the tariff board of the application of the horticultural council, Mr. Burrows, the secretary, made the statement that the proposition submitted to the board would not increase the cost to the consumer.

Mr. BENNETT: What about the present tariff?

Mr. GLEN: From what has taken place since the budget came into effect, it is evident that that statement made by that gentleman is absolutely incorrect. Throughout the whole of Canada to-day, fruits and vegetables imported into this country bear such a rate of duty that the cost to the consumer is necessarily increased. I do not propose to enter into any detailed statement regarding all the items in the tariff, because I think they can be embraced in one general statement. I do not know the fruit and vegetable trade as do my hon. friends across the way, but I can obtain information from someone who does. Mr. Savage, of Messrs. Plunkett & Savage, wholesale fruit merchants in Calgary, addresses an article to the consumers of Canada which I think is very illuminating so far as these particular tariffs are concerned. As I said during the course of the budget debate, I am wholly opposed even to a seasonal tariff, and I do not think that type of tariff gets away from the principle which is invoked in this budget. Any advantage which the producers hope to obtain is purely fictitious, and the day will soon come when they will realize that a tariff protecting their particular industry offers no protection at all. Many of those who asked for this protecitve tariff on fruits and vegetables are now satisfied that they have raised something which they would rather not have seen raised at this particular juncture. They may find that to-day the Canadian producers are somewhat averse to this particular tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: And the coon came down.

Mr. GLEN: I am not worrying about the coon. I am not talking about that just now. Mr. Savage is, I understand, a well known merchant and I am sure he is well known to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BENNETT: He is one of my supporters.

Mr. GLEN: This is from Mr. Savage:

Consumer:

Have you given any thought to the proposed tariff changes brought down in the budget by the government of Canada, May 1, 1930? Are you prepared to accept the tremendous increased duty proposal? These increases were prompted by the specialized growers of fruit and vegetables of Canada which constitute approximately 2 per cent of our population in as far as importations against them are concerned. The facts are, if the budget is passed, that all the people of Canada must pay the bill.

I do not think there is any doubt about that at all.

Mr. DUNNING: What is my hon. friend quoting from?

Mr. GLEN: I am quoting from a letter that was written by Mr. S. S. Savage, a wholesale fruit merchant of Calgary. He says:

A casual examination reveals startling information. All cars of fruits and vegetables clearing customs since May 1 at all ports in Canada, the duties in my opinion will be more than double that previously charged. The importance of some of these duty charges I submit the following:—

The government in their tariff proposal is not content increasing duty on the commodity itself, but are charging a duty on packages—

That is directly contrary to the statement made a minute or two ago.

—and where a specific duty is levied, which is in 90 per cent of the cases, in addition to the weight of the commodity the weight of the package is included in the weight for duty. Even ice that is inside of containers to assure the safe arrival of perishable goods, is assessed.

Then he gives a number of instances of the duty that will be paid. I do not know that I need trouble the committee with them, but they are very large.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Put them on Hansard.

Mr. GLEN: He continues:

As an example, in the instance of cabbage the duty will be equivalent to $25 per ton.
Onions, $15 per ton.
Carrots in bulk, $20 per ton.
Cauliflower will be approximately, $50 per ton.
Rhubarb, $25 per ton.
Spinach, $25 per ton.
Lettuce, including ice in the crate and the weight of the package will be around, $50 per ton.
Potatoes, $10 per ton.
Tomatoes, $45 per ton.
Celery, $50 per ton.
Cucumbers, $25 per ton.
Asparagus, $70 per ton.
Apricots, $25 per ton.
Cherries, $25 per ton.
Grapes, $45 per ton.
Cranberries, $60 per ton.
Peaches, $30 per ton.
Pears, $20 per ton.
Plums and prunes, $20 per ton.
Strawberries and raspberries, $70 per ton.
Apples ⅜ of 1 cent per pound including the weight of the package.

Bear in mind all the above is the minimum duty. There can be a higher duty assessed, namely taking advantage of the ad valorem tariff, or whichever is the higher, you pay your money and the government take their choice.

I wish to point out that 75 per cent of the fruit and vegetable business—

In this connection what the minister proposes will meet it.

—that is competitive with the United States that the season in which they are received covers the producing season in Canada of from thirty to ninety days. In the instance of tomatoes these are imported the year around into Canada and produced in Canada for a period of not more than three months, hothouse production excepted. Therefore the consumer is paying the same tariff the year around to protect the grower for a commodity that he can only supply for from thirty to ninety days.

The proposed increase will undoubtedly mean increases in the price of the Canadian produced article as well as the imported article, and this will reflect in higher cost of living to our people of Canada, which will reflect itself in the necessity for higher wages, which will not permit our manufacturers and producers to be able to compete with other countries, especially so when we are producing to supply world markets, which is a substantial policy of the Canadian government at the present time.

He goes on further to say this, and I think this is a very striking part of his letter:

The government and growers of Canada before allowing the present proposal to pass, should study the question in relation to the commercial condition in all of Canada. Surely it is not the intention of the government to adopt a policy that will tend to injure industry and agriculture itself. The Canadian consumer is and has been a very tolerant people, patriotic in fact, but in my opinion when they find a certain industry receiving a monopoly and trying to force an intelligent people to pay according to their views I feel certain they will be in a losing fight if the tariff as presented in the budget is passed. The people of Canada will undoubtedly tell the government when they go to the polls, that they are not believers in giving protection to the extent of what can be called a monopoly. I feel sure however, that inasmuch as our whole fiscal policy for the last sixty years has been built around a moderate tariff, that the consumer is still inclined to see a fair and reasonable duty levied for the purpose of revenue. I wish here to point out that the great producing areas of Canada are amply protected on all imports of fruit and vegetables when you consider the extra freight rates that have to be paid on like commodities as those produced in Canada. In the instance of importing to this market from British Columbia there is a rate on apples of seventy-one cents which is undoubtedly an excessive freight charge; a freight rate of forty-two cents on vegetables as against California of $2.10 per hundredweight and on vegetables from $1.65 to $1.85. In addition the icing charges are double and sometimes treble on all cars of fruit and vegetables as compared with British Columbia. In the case of Washington and Oregon the rates are a little lower than from California. It therefore does seem to me that the position of our western Canadian grower in particular is a most favourable one as compared with the growers across the line from Canada who have to compete against the production of fruit and vegetables that come into their territory from all parts of the United States duty free. I therefore challenge the growers of Canada to prove through any bench of judges or an independent commission, that their position is worse than border states of the United States. It just simply cannot be proved.

The Canadian producers that are clamouring and hollering for these prohibitive duties should concern themselves in production, producing more to the acre and varieties and qualities of fruit and vegetables that are demanded by our Canadian markets.

Then the writer says:

An excellent way of killing a home market is to raise prices. It is much more readily slain in that way than by prohibiting foreign imports. Moderate prices should lead to increased consumption. The fruit growers should be extremely grateful to the opposition developing to their demands. If they have their own way it is quite possible they will kill their own market by driving the people to the use of foreign fruits which compete indirectly with their own production. You cannot force up the price of apples, pears, peaches, grapes, plums, and cherries, without leading to an increased demand for oranges, bananas, and pineapples, always providing of course that the price of tropical fruits is not increased by the artificial restriction of tariffs. The present position of the fruit grower in Canada is far from doleful, despite tales of woe from the weeping rooms raised for the purpose of drawing sympathy from the thoughtless and uninformed citizens. I know of no other instance where by protection a people are guaranteed a profit. Success can only come when they learn to rely on their own resources instead of asking government pap and make the already overtaxed consumer pay for it.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend, for the purpose of accurate record, say whether that is a letter published in the press, or what it is?

Mr. GLEN: I understand it was published in the press by Mr. Savage.

Mr. DUNNING: A circular?

Mr. GLEN: It was given to me as a letter that was published.

Mr. STIRLING: What is the date of it?

Mr. GLEN: I have not the date. There is no date to it. Whatever may be the truth of the remarks as contained in the statement made by Mr. Savage, at all events I know that he is a wholesale fruit merchant in Calgary. In that letter certain things are stated far better than I could put them. I refer particularly to the remark he makes that this must certainly cause increased prices to the consumer.

Mr.. BENNETT: It has.

Mr.. GLEN: Of course it has. The main argument I have addressed on this question bears out the contention in Mr. Savage's letter that any tariff imposed on these articles must certainly be paid by the consumer by way of increased price. We have had the exemplification of that since the introduction of the budget. We know that the price to the consumer is greater, and those of us who live in the west know that he is not in a position to pay it. I think that these schedules ought not to be in this budget at all. It is the fault of our budget system that there may be a great many things in the budget with which you can agree and some things to which you are strongly opposed, but you have to vote either for or against the budget as a whole. You will find things that you know are detrimental not only to Canada but particularly to the people you represent. That is the case with this budget, more perhaps than with any other. The protective principle on agricultural products has been introduced, against which I must strongly protest and which I repudiate. I have never stood for it and I do not intend to stand for it. These fruit and vegetable schedules are detrimental to the best interests of Canada, and they should be reconsidered. We cannot move amendments, but in view of the expressions of opinion coming from western Canada, where we shall suffer more than people in any other part of this country because of our long hauls, I strongly urge the Minister of Finance to reconsider these fruit and vegetable schedules in their entirety and come back with some method of alleviation.

Mr. LADNER: Has the hon. gentleman courage to move an amendment himself?

Mr. GLEN: It is not a question of courage. If you want to move an amendment, move it yourself.

Mr. BENNETT: It is very strange, after this wholesale condemnation of the fruit and vegetable schedules by the hon. member for Marquette to find among the names of those who voted for the budget the name of Glen (Marquette). Surely the voice I have just heard is still the voice of that same gentleman, and the observations to which we have just listened were made by the same hon. gentleman who voted for the budget the other evening. Why this protestation now and the vote the other evening? Why support the government when it fears for its life, and oppose it when opposition is of no consequence? What is the reason?

Miss MACPHAIL: Politics.

[Mr. Glen.]

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend from Southeast Grey says "politics," and she usually is right. The hon. gentleman cannot be ignorant of the fact that during the last twenty-four months from one end of this country to the other, alike upon the prairies, in British Columbia, in Ontario and in eastern Canada, I have pointed out that all that was required for the purpose of enabling the Canadian fruit and vegetable grower to have an equal opportunity with his competitors was that at particular seasons of the year tariffs be made available that would prevent the dumping of foreign surplus products upon the Canadian market, thus destroying the home market of our own producers. Surely the hon. gentleman must recall that. Certainly in the Okanagan country, in as strong terms as possible, I referred to it. Then, lest it might be said that these observations were made where fruit and vegetables were grown, and not for the benefit of the consumer, I made the same observations in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. I made the same observations in Winnipeg and Saskatoon and in eastern Canada. Why? Because in 1922, after a close analysis of the situation, it was realized by all parties in the house, except my friends to the extreme left, that it was desirable that the Canadian fruit and vegetable grower should have a chance to sell his product at a decent price as against competition that came to him by reason of the surplus products from other markets being pressed upon the Canadian market at a particular time of the year. Last year, for instance, just as our fruits were maturing in British Columbia, I happened to be at Yahk junction, where seven carloads of American fruit had come in destined for the prairies. They represented the tail end of the American crop. The supplies necessary to meet the demand of the American people in Oregon and Washington had been provided, and the surplus was being sent forward at a price that enabled them to undersell the British Columbia producer. Some of these producers—there were gentlemen on the other side of the house, one at least, who passed through there a short time afterwards—actually showed me the results of their operations which spelt for them financial ruin, complete. They have been endeavouring to build up an industry in that particular area. I said to our friends on the prairies: Which do you prefer? To destroy industry in its entirety in the Okanagan and in British Columbia, or to enable it to live? Do you want in this country a foreign monopoly of fruit whereby any price desired could be charged by the foreigner? That was the question. I never saw any difficulty at any time upon the part of fair-minded Canadian consumers in opposing such a possibility.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What about the monopoly in British Columbia?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot answer that question; for I am not sufficiently familiar with the situation to answer it. But this I will say, that in the section which I visited last year there was no evidence of a monopoly.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Was there not a committee controlling the price?

Mr. BENNETT: Not in southern British Columbia where I was. They showed me exactly what they were doing, the competition they had to meet, and the efforts they were making to meet it. They did explain to me that they had a cooperative marketing board.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): And a committee of direction, which would haul any man to court who dared sell under their directions as to price.

Mr. BENNETT: They have a statute in British Columbia, if that is what my hon. friend refers to. Of course it would have no validity so far as its operation outside the province of British Columbia is concerned.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The committee controls the price of our supplies on the prairies.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not at all familiar with its operations in that sense beyond what the hon. member now tells me. The statute to which I referred is a provincial statute—

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The committee are asking that American fruit be shut out except subject to their dictation.

Mr. BENNETT: I trust that my hon. friend may be able to induce his Minister of Finance to see the error of his way, rather than seek to get one who sits on the opposition side of the house to reform his methods. The hon. gentleman will remember that in 1922 we passed a statute whereby the minister was empowered to make recommendations as to the valuations upon which prices were based for duty purposes at given seasons of the year. That is, it did not limit the time within which it might be invoked. It has already been explained to the house that that statute was put in operation during the all too short life of the administration of Mr. Meighen, and it was found that its operation afforded the relief sought without increasing the price to the consumer. That is the main thing—without increasing the price to the consumer. The result was that it gave the Canadian market to the Canadian producer at a given time of the year.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Does the hon. gentleman say that that order in council did not increase the price to the consumer?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Never?

Mr. BENNETT: No. What was more, it was clearly indicated in Winnipeg, Calgary and elsewhere that the prices of the commodities referred to in the order in council had not been increased thereby over the fair market prices that prevailed even in other countries. That was the effect of it. Now what has happened? This government has placed upon the statute book a tariff on fruit and vegetables which applies all the year round. It is divided into two parts, an ad valorem tariff and a specific tariff, and whichever is the higher prevails. Its application in the city of Winnipeg and in Calgary is pointed out in the letter which my hon. friend from Marquette has just read. It was also pointed out in the Winnipeg Tribune, in the Winnipeg Free Press, and in other western papers. They were dealing not with theories but with actual carloads of fruit and vegetables that came in from the United States at a time when they did not compete with the Canadian-grown fruits and vegetables; for we were not marketing them then, so that they did not in any sense interfere with the operations of the Canadian producer. I took the trouble since the budget was introduced to look at one of the markets in the city of Toronto, to see exactly where the vegetables that were being sold on that market came from. I observed that some of them came from Texas, some from the far Pacific slope, some from other parts of the United States. Now, at this season of the year, we are not growing cabbages, we are not growing strawberries, and we are not growing other fruits and vegetables that come in from the United States. So there is no reason why the consumer should have to pay an enhanced price by reason of the fact. The tariff that was in force before the government messed it up, as they did the other day, gave adequate protection to the producer at a time when he did not desire to interfere with his fellow-Canadians getting imported fresh vegetables and fruits that he was not growing. The act as it stood in actual operation provided a solution that was satisfactory to the people. My hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young) put upon the order paper a resolution demanding that the order in council should be rescinded. In due course his notice of motion disappeared and the order in council was rescinded. Then there was a great gathering downstairs in the railway committee room. I do not propose to go into the details of that gathering—they were so admirably dealt with by my friend from Yale (Mr. Stirling) the other evening—beyond saying that in the discussion it became apparent that the vegetable and fruit producers themselves were satisfied with the operation of the order in council under the statute passed in 1922.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Well, they might be.

Mr. BENNETT: Will my friend object to that? Now this government came in. Look at what they have done. At a time when protection is not required the maximum duty is applied; at a time when the maximum duty is required the minimum is applied. Instead of improving the position of our vegetable and fruit producers—as in the case of beans—they make it worse. Mark this, the government must follow some line of policy. They have made an increase of 400 per cent in the case of beans. Why do they not follow this policy in regard to fruits and vegetables? They have not done what the producers asked for before the tariff board. On the contrary they have adopted a principle of their own, which principle, as I have indicated is the application of a specific or an ad valorem tariff, whichever is the higher, with the result that the higher tariff will prevail at a time when it is not necessary, and the lower at a time when the higher tariff is required; and it is all the year round. What happened? The government of the day—shall I say?—compelled its supporters from the prairies to support that proposal.

An hon. MEMBER: Nothing of the kind.

Mr. BENNETT: Did the government give a promise to those gentlemen that in committee they would reduce it? If so, a vote was given by a number of the members of this house without information on all the facts. That is the point. We have a right to know whether the government gave assurances to members from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta that they would reduce this tariff. Did they or did they not induce them by those promises to vote as they did?

Mr. GLEN: Do you wish an answer?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. GLEN: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has answered for himself. Then why did he vote for the budget in view of what he said tonight?

Mr. GLEN: If you will give me five minutes I will answer.

Mr. BENNETT: When I am through the hon. member can do so if it will take that long. Why did he do that? Will other hon. gentlemen say the same thing?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sure.

Mr. BENNETT: Will they say that at the very time they were getting ready for the vote they were not having meetings with the horticultural council and the minister? Will they say that?

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I should say here that I never met the horticultural council in conjunction with anyone else.

Mr. BENNETT: Then we will say the minister met them alone, and the hon. gentlemen met the horticultural council without the minister, so there will be no misunderstanding.

Mr. DUNNING: I may tell my hon. friend that a number of his supporters met the horticultural council.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, in an effort to protect the consumers of this country by a just and fair tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: It was quite proper for any hon. members to meet them.

Mr. BENNETT: On the first day of May this tariff came into force. This is now the 19th of May. In nineteen days thousands of dollars have been taken under this tariff more than will be taken under the proposals that the minister mentioned.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): And it shows up the high protective policy too.

Mr. BENNETT: Whose high protective policy?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Yours.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh no. Ours was a seasonal tariff. Why did the hon. gentleman vote for it?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I voted for the motion to go into committee of ways and means, and we are here now and will deal with the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, how amusing, Mr. Chairman, is the sophistry of the hon. gentleman from Saskatoon! He says: "I voted for committee of ways and means and we are now in it." That is his answer. That is the budget for him. That is the national policy now: "I voted for commitee of ways and means and we are now in it." Go and tell the citizens of the prairies that. Tell them: "I voted for committee of ways and means and we are now in it. That is my conception of my duty to the Canadian people."

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I did not say that.

Mr. BENNETT: "That is my view of the rights of the consumers and producers; I voted for committee of ways and means and we are now in it."

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): No, you are distorting my words.

Mr. BENNETT: There is the story of the hon. gentleman. Why, he looks his part. He voted for committee of ways and means and he is now in it, Mr. Chairman, and being in it the Minister of Finance proposes to get him out of it. He is suggesting that the way to get him out of it is to amend this item by reducing it. I ask again; why did you vote for it? Why do the Liberal organs in other parts of Canada say that those who voted against the budget voted against relief of the farmers? Why do they say any member from Nova Scotia who voted against the budget voted against the Duncan report? The sophistry works both ways. The hon. gentleman from Saskatoon voted for committee of ways and means, all the time reserving in his mind the right to express himself in committee of ways and means.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 20, 1930

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Sixth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Glen.

PRIVATE BILLS—PROCEDURE

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette) moved:

That all private bills reported upon to-day in the sixth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills be placed upon the order paper of the house for consideration this day in committee of the whole and for third reading.

Mr. A. N. SMITH (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the evidence in connection with these various bills is not even before the members of the house. Yesterday some sixty bills to which some members had objection went through the committee stage and were given third reading here, and later the evidence was handed to us. The same thing occurs again to-day; the standing committee has considered these bills without having the evidence before them, and I cannot see how that committee possibly could know what they were doing.

Mr. IRVINE: We considered them as we always have considered them.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): At least we always have had the printed evidence before us.

Motion agreed to on division.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the government to reports emanating from the province of Alberta which indicate that there is still a grave condition of unemployment in the principal cities of that province, and particularly in Calgary. In the town of Drumheller, in the mining area in my constituency, I find that 80 per cent of the miners are out of work, and it is estimated that there are approximately 1,000 men who are either out of work entirely or who are working only two shifts a week. I wish to ask the government if there is any hope that their hearts may be softened in this matter and that they may extend some relief to meet this situation.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I might say to my hon. friend that the heart of the government always has been soft in these matters. At present an investigation is being made with respect to the conditions to which he has referred.

GENERALS DIE IN BED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, I have received numerous communications from soldier associations in the Toronto district inquiring if the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) proposes to take any action regarding the publication of a book entitled Generals Die in Bed by Charles Yale Harris. This book contains many libellous statements with reference to the Canadian troops, and I would like to know if the minister proposes to prohibit its publication and sale in Canada.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): This matter has not been brought to my attention; I have not read the book, but I will make inquiries.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Pension Act, to carry into effect the recommendations of the special committee on pensions and returned soldiers' problems submitted to the house on 14th May instant; and to provide for the salaries to be paid to the chairman and members of the pension tribunal, the president and members of the pension appeal court, and for pension to be granted to any member of the said bodies, or of the commission, on retirement; and for the salaries of the other proposed officials, and travelling and living expenses as prescribed; and for the constitution of a branch of the department to be known as the veterans' bureau.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. King (Kootenay) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 265, to amend the Pension Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The bill is being printed but will be available for second reading this evening, if that is agreeable to the house.

Mr. BENNETT: That will be agreeable.

RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That the time for receiving applications for insurance under the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act be extended for three years from the 31st August, 1930.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

[M. Church.]

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 264, to amend the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the minister explain the actuarial situation?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not those details before me, but the bill constitutes acceptance of the recommendations of the special committee which has been dealing with returned soldiers' problems. The time has now expired for the acceptance of applications for insurance, and the recommendation has been made that this time be extended for a further period of three years.

Mr. DUNNING moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. McGIBBON: Could the minister give us any information as to the cost of carrying this insurance?

Mr. DUNNING: I did not think that we would reach this stage of the bill to-day and I did not bring the figures with me. This matter was gone into thoroughly by the special committee, but I would be willing to leave the bill in committee.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What interpretation is to be put upon the phrase "reasonable expectation of life?" I know of one case where the man is able to participate in hockey games and other sports, although there is no question that he is suffering from a disability. He has been refused insurance but I should think that when a man can participate in sports he has a reasonable expectation of life. My understanding was that the interpretation of this phrase would be very wide, and that a man unable to obtain insurance from other companies would be able to avail himself of the provisions of this act. Could the minister give me any information in this regard?

Mr. DUNNING: My department is concerned only with the actuarial administration of the act; the feature of the act to which the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) refers would be administered by the Department of Pensions. The minister, I know, is getting the information now and he will be here in a few moments. My understanding of the matter is that in practice a most liberal interpretation is placed upon the phrase to which my hon. friend calls attention. One can understand how difficult it must be to administer such a section correctly. A reasonable expectation of life of course would not or should not include a man who is very evidently dying. That, at least, is my personal view. On the other hand my hon. friend directs attention to a case in which he says there was a reasonable expectation of life, but apparently, if we are to judge from his information, the insurance was not granted. I think this would be a matter of taking up the specific case with the pension department in order to get the facts. I have not the information personally.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The case is looked into by a medical officer under instructions of the pension commission. He goes through the file and if he wishes to make further examination the matter is referred to the unit. The individual is then examined and his case is reported upon.

Mr. McGIBBON: What I am concerned about is whether the spirit of the act has been carried out or been abused.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It has been carried out.

Mr. McGIBBON: The spirit of the act was in favour of taking care of such cases. Granted that a man has returned from the war and cannot get insurance owing to being a war casualty or suffering from some disability attributable to war service, it seems to me it is going a long way under the terms of the act to shut the man out from the benefit of the insurance, because all we tried to do was to place him in the same position as he was prior to the war.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I understand the cases are being looked into very carefully and dealt with liberally. The rejections are fairly few and the cases are thoroughly investigated.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This is the case of a returned man who for years believed in the possibility of obtaining a pension. He is turned down. He is still continuing at his work and in addition to that he is able to take part in hockey matches of a league nature and so on. Yet we are told he has not a reasonable expectation of life.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I should like to have the name or number of that individual, so that I may look into the matter. It does not seem to me right, because in many cases men who would not be considered fit for insurance are being taken care of under this legislation.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): My understanding of the measure is that it is a sub-standardized case that would be covered and I think it is unfair to shut out such a case as this.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to look into it.

Bill reported.

Mr. DUNNING moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. McGIBBON: As the minister is now in his place, could he give us the information for which I asked a few minutes ago, as to the loss, if any, in carrying this insurance?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The net insurance in force is $72,508,725.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the amount of risk?

Mr. McGIBBON: I want to know the loss, if any, to date in carrying the insurance.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think there is considered to be any loss.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is, the insurance is carrying itself?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose last night we were considering item No. 84:

Customs tariff—84. Onions, in their natural state, including onions grown with tops, shallots, and onion sets, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than three-quarters of a cent per pound.

Mr. McMILLAN: Just before the item carries, I have before me a few gems of expression which are said to have fallen from the lips of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in London last Friday and which I should like to place upon Hansard. This is number one:

You have all heard Thomas McMillan talk about the iniquities of high protection, but I saw him in the House of Commons last night vote for higher duties on fruits and vegetables than had ever been proposed before.

Surely the hon. gentleman as the leader of a great political party ought to be big enough to be fair, and big enough not to strike anyone below the belt when his face is turned. When he told that audience that I had voted for higher duties than ever had been proposed before, why did he not tell them that at the same moment I had voted for duty free fruits and vegetables from all the rest of the British Empire? But even with such a qualification that expression was whopper number one. When I read that expression I was reminded of an incident during Sir Wilfrid Laurier's first visit across Canada to the Pacific coast with big D. C. Fraser, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, in his party. After leaving Victoria they sailed up the Fraser river to Ladner's Landing, where a banquet was served. A Cornish man, William Ladner, was host, and a right royal host was old Bill Ladner. I knew him well. In his address of welcome to the distinguished party, he naturally extolled the grandeur and fertility of the Fraser river valley and its delta, and after numerous lavish expressions, "Why," he said, "talk of fertile valleys, all you need to do is just step outside and you will be able to walk on soil that will produce sixteen tons of hay per acre." Then Fraser called out "My God, I knew we had some awful liars in Nova Scotia who went west, but I never knew that one of them had settled here."

We have heard the statement, Mr. Chairman, that I supported higher duties on fruits and vegetables than were ever imposed before. Yet there sit on the opposite benches no less than ten members of the shadow cabinet gathered about their leader, and who were sworn to office on the 13th of July, 1926. They scarcely allowed the ink on their signatures to dry before passing order in council No. 1088, under which they were enabled to place high valuations on certain fruits and vegetables with this effect: They raised the duty on tomatoes all the way from 30 to 76 per cent, or an increase of 255 per cent. They raised the duties on peaches from 30 to 80 per cent, or an increase of 266 per cent. On one carload of onions, the item we are now discussing, they actually raised the duties by high valuations, all the way from 30 to 83 per cent, or an increase of 276 per cent.

Now what about the duties on these vegetables that are mentioned in the present Dunning tariff? I find that in this tariff the duty on onions is three-quarters of a cent a pound, whereas under the order in council of the shadow government the duty was one and a half cents a pound. The duties on other vegetables compare as follows:

| | 1930 budget cents per lb. | Duty under the shadow cabinet cents per lb. |
|---|---|---|
| Asparagus | 3 | 10 |
| Cabbage | 1 | 1½ |
| Carrots | 1 | 1½ |
| Cauliflower | 2 | 2½ |
| Celery | 2 | 2 |
| Cucumbers | 1 | 3 |
| Lettuce | 1½ | 3 |
| Spinach | 1 | 3 |
| Tomatoes | 2 | 5 |

If you take those ten articles you will find that the duty has been raised by this budget 14¾ cents, or an average of 1·4¾ cents per pound. The duties on those ten articles were raised under the shadow cabinet 33 cents, or an average increase of 223·75 per cent. And yet, sir, the hon. leader of the opposition will stand before an audience in the city of London, an audience from western Ontario, and tell them that I have voted for higher duties than were ever proposed before. What do you think, Mr. Chairman? Do you think that any man will ever become Prime Minister of Canada if he goes around telling the people of Canada the like of that? Is it any wonder that our friend the Minister of Justice at Woodstock said that the Moses who was found on the beach at Winnipeg would never reach the promised land?

Number two. "Sir John Macdonald and others believed that the principles which made the American republic a great nation would do the same for Canada, and so the national policy was born." That, sir, is another whopper not even a half truth. The principles which have made the United States a great nation were not the principles of high and higher duties upon import trade. No, sir. It is because the United States has, within the bounds of her own territory the greatest free trade area in the world, and contains the greatest diversity of climate and production to be found on the whole face of the globe. That, along with her inherent wealth of great natural resources, have made the United States a great nation.

Number three. "Laurier, the leader of the Liberal party, he said, adhered to that policy till 1911, but then by his manifesto rejecting that policy and sponsoring reciprocity he was swept from power." Mr. Chairman, I am always ready and willing to stand or fall by the doctrine enunciated by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

What was that doctrine?

When Laurier was first chosen as the leader of the Liberal party in Canada, he refused to accept that leadership, on the ground that he neither belonged to the race, nor did he profess the creed of the majority of his countrymen; and it was only after he was appealed to again and again, by his Liberal friends, Protestants themselves, and told that Liberal principles knew neither race nor creed, and the only reason they wished him as their choice, was because they believed he was their ablest man, that he at length consented to accept that great responsibility.

And Mr. Chairman, can we ever forget a notable occasion on the floor of the House of Commons when Laurier arose in his place, and announced to the Canadian people, that he stood there as the acknowledged leader of a great political party, and as such, he represented neither the principles of Protestantism, nor the principles of Roman Catholicism, but that he hoped he would always be able to represent the true principles which should actuate a great Canadian people, and when he approached any great question of state he would seek to approach it, not from the standpoint of Protestantism or from the standpoint of Roman Catholicism, but from that point of view which would appeal to the hearts and consciences of men, irrespective either of their religious or political proclivities. That, sir, was the spirit in which Laurier announced the doctrine of Liberalism in Canada. Those words will continue to manifest the spirit and doctrine of true Liberalism until the end of time; and I, sir, as the representative of my people in this house, am willing to stand or fall by that doctrine.

Number 3:

Laurier adhered to that policy till 1911.

That, sir, is another of the hon. gentleman's whoppers.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McMILLAN: If the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) will search Canadian history, he will find that not only Laurier but all the leaders of political thought in Canada had long maintained that the natural avenues of trade on this continent were north and south. They held to this common sense view, despite the opinion of high protectionist forces.

The experience of the old reciprocity treaty of 1842 to 1854 demonstrated the wisdom of that freer trade with the United States. Liberals went down to defeat on three successive occasions fighting for a renewal of those conditions: first, in 1886 under the leadership of Hon. Edward Blake; second, in 1891 under the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier; and a third time on the Fielding reciprocity agreement of 1911, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was defeated after fifteen years of the most prosperous rule in the history of Canada. The brightest page in the history of that splendid Liberal record is the page which records the fact that Laurier was asked to step down and out, fighting for the finest freer trade agreement ever offered to the people of Canada and without the slightest breath of scandal attaching to his name.

That fact, sir, is the conscious pride of every Liberal as it was the crowning satisfaction of our noble leader. It was that record which made Sir Wilfrid Laurier the pride of the Canadian people in opposition, as he was the statesman in office,—

Mr. SPENCE: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. McMILLAN: —and when that agreement was offered to the Canadian people, there was really no difference as to its benefits on the part of any party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McMILLAN: The only mistake was that Laurier—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. SPENCE: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask if the hon member is discussing the duty on onions?

Mr. McMILLAN: Yes, sir, certainly.

An hon. MEMBER: What are you reading from?

Mr. McMILLAN: I am reading from my speech, the way you did the other day, word for word.

Mr. SPENCE: Mr. Chairman, I should like your ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand the hon. gentleman is developing his argument with respect to the item under discussion.

Mr. McMILLAN: The only mistake was that Laurier did not put the measure through at once, but rather gave the Tory party the time and opportunity to trump up the false cry of "Let well enough alone" and the more effective although hollow slogan of "No truck or trade with the Yankees." Notwithstanding the nature of that cry during the campaign, one of the first international acts of the Borden government was to send their representatives to Washington, hat in hand, to beg of the American government to relieve the grain situation of western Canada by allowing western Canada grain to be shipped to and stored in American elevators, which of course was agreed to at once.

While the Canadian farmers failed to secure free access to the United States markets for their beef, cattle, wheat, potatoes, and other agricultural products in 1911, yet, sir, by gracious enactment of the American government under President Wilson in 1915, we did secure that boon for four successive years; and if the Tory Canadian government of that day had had the common sense to reciprocate we might have had those arrangements permanently confirmed.

However, in Mr. Fielding's first budget as finance minister in the Mackenzie King government, he invited the United States to consider such a reciprocal trade agreement. Mr. Robb placed a standing offer on the statute books for the same purpose, and it remains till this day. Liberals still feel that with such a reciprocal trade agreement with the United States, we could successfully meet any high protectionist opposition anywhere in Canada, and obtain a decided boon to Canadian agriculture. The natural course of trade proves that we would be proceeding along reasonable lines.

Consider the present trade situation between Canada and the United States. The entire foreign trade of Canada with all the world during the fiscal year just closed (1929-30) was $2,394,361,045, while with the United States it amounted to $1,411,538,383. The trade of Canada with all the rest of the world was $982,822,662; or Canada does with the United States $428,715,721 worth more trade annually than she does with all the rest of the world; and that, in spite of all the obstruction caused by two adverse tariff walls which the respective governments have built up between these two countries.

Is that not at once a tribute to the power of natural trade laws and an indication of the only rational trade policy? It points at once to the wisdom of a full degree of freer trade in natural products between these two countries, which would injure no one and would be just as certain to benefit both countries as has been the internal development of each country, unhampered by any tariff restriction between individual states or individual provinces. If this tariff restriction now carried to such a degree between the several countries of the world is beneficial, why not carry it to its logical conclusion? Why not build up high tariff walls between every state, every province or every county in each province, and then we would dearly realize how ridiculous such impositions are. Canada is now the best customer of the United States. For every dollar's worth of goods we sell to the United States we buy practically $1.60 in return. The United States sold to Canada last year nearly twice as much as she sold to all of South America, twice as much as she sold to Germany, and over three times as much as she sold to France. Surely such a good customer as Canada is worth keeping. More than that, Canada's good will towards the United States has been amply demonstrated on many occasions, and on no occasion has it been demonstrated to a greater extent than in passing during the present session the act to prohibit liquor clearances. While it is true that this parliament passed the measure abolishing liquor clearances, as a measure of self respect, and to make our Canadian government and its customs officials entirely free from the possibility of being accused of trafficking with a gang of rumrunners, lawbreakers and crooks of the lowest kind, it nevertheless had the effect of expressing good will towards the United States. However, the high protection forces in that country seem to have obtained possession of power to such a degree that they have no intention of allowing trade to develop normally, and flow freely back and forth between these two countries as it should, and as it would if it were freely permitted.

In lieu of the limited revisions of farm duties for which President Hoover asked, congress has increased its present tariff bill in some two thousand particulars. For the American farmers, it is now only a poorly disguised swindle; and to American consumers generally it is a bill of abomination. That tariff bill, if passed, will do Canada a serious economic injury, and I want to say to my fellow citizens whose servant I am that before leaving Ottawa a year ago at the close of the session I left a communication addressed to the Prime Minister, to the effect that if the United States congress continued to manifest the spirit towards Canada indicated by the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, it was the duty of the Canadian government to show in some tangible way that it was a treatment resented by the people of Canada. The tariff bill is being bitterly assailed even by many of the brightest minds in the American republic. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and of Columbia university, has assailed the tariff bill and has said that it is certain to do more harm to America's prosperity, trade and international relations than any previous tariff enactment of the American nation. Not since the most prominent economists of Europe issued their famous anti-tariff manifesto in 1926 has such an impressive document come to notice as the manifesto addressed to President Hoover on Monday, May 5, 1930, endorsed by 1,028 economic experts from 46 states and 179 colleges, urging him to veto the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has been speaking for half an hour, and he has read every word of his speech. I ask for a ruling.

Mr. McMILLAN: It may be that I am reading my speech, but I have the subject matter in my mind and it is of importance to hon. members in this house and to the citizens of Canada as a whole. I want to have it on Hansard in the best possible form.

An hon. MEMBER: Hand it in.

The CHAIRMAN: I have been following the remarks of the hon. gentleman as carefully as possible and it is my opinion that he has drifted far afield from the item now before the committee. I would ask him to direct his remarks towards item 44, which has to do with onions.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I draw your attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that you have not ruled on the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman. Is the hon. member opposite going to be allowed to read his speech; what is your decision?

Mr. IRVINE: I move that the hon. gentleman be allowed to put his speech on Hansard.

Mr. McMILLAN: If that motion were passed I would be pleased to put it on Hansard. I will not be much longer, however.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. gentleman have leave to place his speech on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

The CHAIRMAN: The rule as to the reading of speeches has been disregarded in this house for many years. For this reason I cannot rule the hon. gentleman out of order at this time.

Mr. McMILLAN: The manifesto says:

> We cannot increase employment or raise wages by raising tariff walls and restricting trade. All nations must recognize this fact sooner or later. It will not only inspire fear, but it will injure investors in industry in other lands; it will beggar farmers, labouring men, miners, and construction, transportation and public utility employees. Countries cannot permanently buy from us unless they are permitted to sell to us. There are few more ironical spectacles in history than that of the American government as it seeks on the one hand to promote exports and on the other to increase tariffs. In this way it makes exporting even more difficult. Finally we urge our government to consider the bitterness which a policy of higher tariffs will inevitably inject into our international relations.

Mr. HEAPS: I rise to a point of order. It is my opinion that this farce has continued long enough, and I think it is time that it was stopped.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the point is well taken by the hon. gentleman. I must ask the hon. gentleman who is delivering his address to bring his remarks to bear on the matter before the committee.

Mr. McMILLAN: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I shall do so. Since Canada is the best customer of the United States—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McMILLAN: —and the foremost export nation of the world, per capita—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McMILLAN: —the American manufacturers are now taking notice. Canada's action is the climax of protests from thirty-three countries—

Mr. HEAPS: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. McMILLAN: —and the first serious counteraction of them all.

Mr. HEAPS: I insist that the hon. gentleman must observe the rules of the house. I would also ask the Chairman to assert his authority.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think hon. gentlemen should allow the hon. member to conclude his speech.

Mr. McMILLAN: I want to say that while there are features in this budget of which I do not approve and which in the course of the consideration of these items I shall try to remove, yet, in the present national situation I am heart and soul in sympathy with the spirit of this budget. Hon. members opposite have talked about desertion of principle and also about apostasy. Notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. the leader of the opposition, I hope to show before I conclude my remarks that the apostates sit opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McMILLAN: Canada, after eight years of capable administration—

Mr. HEAPS: I wish to know whether the hon. gentleman is going to observe the rules of proper procedure in this house, and I wish to know if the chairman will so rule.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. McMILLAN: If the hon. gentleman will give me a chance—

Mr. HEAPS: I wish to know if the hon. gentleman is to observe the rules of proper parliamentary procedure.

The CHAIRMAN: I ask the hon. gentleman to bring his remarks to bear on the item before the committee; I insist that he do so.

Mr. McMILLAN: Certainly, Mr. Chairman. I shall now direct my remarks to fruits and vegetables.

An hon. MEMBER: We have not reached that item.

Mr. McMILLAN: I have shown conclusively that notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition the party opposite have increased the duties two and one-half times more than has this government. There is no doubt that the Prime Minister and his cabinet in introducing the present budget have taken the steps they should have taken in order to represent the feeling of the great majority of Canadian electors.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the step they should have taken nine years ago.

Mr. McMILLAN: It is the first duty of any government to correctly interpret the enlightened sentiment of the Canadian people. There is no question of doubt but that he has represented the sentiment of the Canadian people, and the best proof that this budget is good is the manner in which it has been received throughout the country and the whine which it has occasioned from the opposition. It seems to me that no budget would be right if it did not bring out that whining disposition of hon. gentlemen of the opposition. Therefore, in conclusion let me say that I thank them for having presented their part of the budget.

Mr. GOTT: I have the honour to represent in this house the best onion growers in the Dominion of Canada, and I doubt if there is an acre of onions grown in the riding represented by the hon. member for South Huron. With regard to the reference which the hon. gentleman made to the mammoth Conservative meeting in western Ontario on Friday last, I want to tell him that it spells ruin for every Liberal member in western Ontario.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GOTT: The Minister of Finance laughs at that. I do not think he is any too safe in his own riding. I think a wave of indignation—

[Mr. Heaps.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GOTT: This is the first time I have occupied the time of the house this session.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could agree on our procedure here. The hon. member for South Huron wandered pretty far afield and made a sort of budget speech, and I gather that my hon. friend from South Essex is travelling in the same direction. I wonder if we could not agree, as a sporting proposition, that the hon. member for South Essex be allowed to do so, and that following his remarks the members of the committee endeavour to get down to the item under discussion. I make this suggestion merely as a matter of fairness in view of what has happened. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for South Huron; he made a very interesting speech, but from the point of view of procedure in committee I just suggest that following the hon. member who now has the floor we might try to do as we did yesterday and deal with the item under discussion.

Mr. GOTT: All I desire to do is to make a protest on behalf of the people whom I have the honour to represent here. I protest against onions from Bermuda and the West Indies coming into Canada free. They have three crops a year in the West Indies, all grown under cheap labour, which is going to place the onion growers of Essex county under the most severe competition which they have ever known. We have striven for a number of years against strong competition from different quarters; we are up against competition from Mississippi on tomatoes; we have competition with Virginia on cabbages; we are up against competition from Louisiana on cucumbers and competition from Michigan on potatoes. Now we are going—

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Can you not stand any competition at all?

Mr. GOTT: Perhaps the hon. member might keep quiet. I do not think he is coming back to the next parliament. I think there is a wave of indignation sweeping across this country to-day against the present government, cutting such a wide swath and gaining such a momentum as it goes on that fifty budget speeches such as the Minister of Finance brought down will not save the government, and a million speeches such as the hon. member for South Huron just delivered will not save him or any of the Liberal members in western Ontario.

I want to protest against these onions from the West Indies being allowed into Canada free. They come here under a cheap ocean rate, at any time of the year with their three crops, and the onion growers in Essex county will be up against the most serious competition they have ever experienced. I could not let this item pass without putting in my protest on behalf of the people whom I have the honour to represent.

Mr. HEAPS: Last night I raised a question as to whether the packages should be made to pay duty on entering Canada. I think last night the minister said it would be very difficult for the Department of National Revenue to differentiate between the contents of the package and the package itself. I think until the present budget was put into effect there was no duty collected on the cases in which vegetables and fruits were packed when they entered Canada, and as a result of this new method of calculating duty we have had a tremendous increase in the cost of these vegetables and fruits. I understand that in the case of lettuce the increase is from 45 cents to $1.28 per case.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HEAPS: Here are the figures as we have them from people who have actually paid the duties, and I think those are the people who really should know. I am very anxious indeed that the minister should do away with the collection of duty on cases or ice in which these vegetables may be packed. I do not see any difficulty about it; I think the duty could be collected on the invoice value of the vegetables, and then there would be no need to pay a duty on that extra weight represented by the package in which the vegetables come. This is not a concession in the true sense of the word; we are simply asking for a little common sense in the administration of the new duties. You can take a case of lettuce as a very striking example. I believe the contents of that case would not weight much more than about half the total weight of the container, the ice, and the lettuce itself, yet we are asked to pay duty on the ice and on the crating which contains the lettuce. For the last time I ask the Minister of Finance to see if he cannot bring in some amendment whereby duty will not be collected on the packages in which the vegetables and fruits come to Canada, as is the case at the present time.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman, for some years past doctors, dieticians, nurses and medical magazines have been telling the people that they should eat more raw vegetables and fruits, until the vegetables which are covered by these items which we are discussing to-day have become of the utmost importance. The doctors all point out to-day how important it is to eat lettuce, tomatoes, celery and other vegetables of that kind, and people have taken them at their word, and you find that even in the little country villages, during the winter time these fruits and vegetables are available to the people who desire them. Now, just when the people have acquired this taste and are taking the advice of the doctors, we come along with these almost prohibitive duties and penalize these people for doing what is most necessary in the interests of their health and the health of their children.

May I point out that I can hardly believe that this is in the best interests of the growers themselves. Supposing we allow these prohibitive duties to continue on these vegetables throughout the season; it would simply mean that up to the time they were produced in abundance in Canada people would hardly use them at all. If people get out of the habit of using them during about eight months of the year, they will not use them in any great quantities during the other four months. It would seem to me that at least outside of the period during which they are produced in abundance in Canada, we ought to give the people every chance in the world to use these vegetables, and it seems to me that by educating the people and keeping that taste alive during the winter and the off season, people will be much more liable to use the native products during the time when they are on the market. As a matter of fact, I find that the growers themselves have not asked for this duty.

Now I should like to quote some figures I received from a fruit and vegetable dealer in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend said the growers had not asked for these rates?

Mr. CAMPBELL: They have not asked for the duty throughout the whole season.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend probably was not in the house last night when I indicated that I proposed to move amendments which would have the effect of restricting the application of the specific duty to seasons which the growers state are satisfactory, which would not affect the winter consumption.

Mr. GOTT: That would be what the growers have asked for.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I congratulate the minister on correcting the mistake he made at the start, at least to that extent. Now I should like to place these figures on Hansard, which have been given me by a fruit and vegetable dealer in the city of Ottawa. On lettuce, which had a value of $1.50 f.o.b. point of shipment, the old duty was 45 cents while the new is $1.28; on strawberries the old duty was 2½ cents per quart, while the new duty is 5 cents per quart; on cabbage, the old duty was 60 cents per case of 112 pounds, while the new duty is $1.12.

Mr. DUNNING: Those figures cannot be correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL: They were given to me by a reputable dealer whose name I cannot announce publicly. On carrots, worth $2 per case, f.o.b. California, the old duty was 50 cents while the new is 85 cents; on cauliflower, valued at $1 per case, f.o.b. California, the old duty was 30 cents while the new duty is 90 cents; on onions, valued at $1 per case f.o.b. Texas, the old duty was 30 cents while the new duty is 40 cents.

An hon. MEMBER: Name your authority.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am under an obligation not to give this name publicly.

An hon. MEMBER: Why read it?

Mr. CAMPBELL: On spinach at 40 cents per bushel, the old duty was 12 cents per bushel, while the new duty is 22 cents per bushel; on celery, valued at $3 per case f.o.b. California, the old duty was 90 cents per case while the new duty is $3; on Mexican tomatoes, the old duty was 38 cents while the new duty is 90 cents.

This dealer assures me that just as soon as the home grown vegetables come on the market in sufficient quantities, the American shipments are shut off. I have a circular letter issued by a Montreal wholesale fruit house.

Mr. DUNNING: The dealers again.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The dealers again. This was sent to the particular dealer to whom I have referred, and reads as follows:

The proposed Canadian tariff on fruit and vegetables (in effect since May 2) is working a decided hardship on the receivers and distributors of fruit and vegetables in Canada.

(1) Because it will increase the duty on imports to the consumer about 150 per cent.

(2) Because the receivers and distributors of fruit and vegetables are obliged to reduce their turnover and increase the cash outlay.

(3) Because the growers only requested a seasonable duty on a few articles but no general increase for the full twelve months.

(4) Because the fruit receivers of Canada, especially of eastern Canada are 100 per cent behind the movement of "trade within the empire," especially with Bermuda and the West Indies. Unfortunately the receipts from this source are totally insufficient (and for many years to come) to meet the demands of Canada for fruit and vegetables.

(5) The duty on the first twenty carlots of fruit and vegetables we passed since the new tariff was in effect on May 2,

|---|---|
| amounted to.. .. .. .. .. .. | $7,383 13 |
| under old tariff.. .. .. .. .. | 3,381 73 |
| | $4,001 40 |

an increase of about 118 per cent, which automatically must be passed on to the consumer.

Mr. DUNNING: That is on twenty carloads.

Mr. CAMPBELL: On the first twenty carloads. I notice that the Regina Leader, in an editorial, refers to the question of ice, and points out, apparently in a vein of sarcasm, that ice being a native product which ought to be protected, a duty on this commodity is logical. The following editorial from the Regina Leader-Post of May 7, should prove very interesting:

Here are some concrete examples the fruit men have found. A carload of lettuce arrived in Regina Tuesday. The receiving firm was called upon to pay $481.92 in duty alone. Under the old schedule the duty cost would have been $156.34. A car of strawberries also arrived in Regina Tuesday and to-day are being consumed in various homes in the city. The receiving firm paid $529.92 in duty. Under the old rate the same charge would have been $250.24. Practically the same proportion runs through a whole list of articles that Reginans use every day, cabbage, tomatoes, cauliflower and all the popular fruits that have to be imported in the off-Canadian season.

The editorial continues:

Shippers declare they are now paying duty on ice in which head lettuce and similar commodities are packed. One dealer said that he received Tuesday a shipment of green peas. Each crate contained a piece of ice. The peas in a crate weighed forty pounds. The ice and crate weighed thirty pounds. He paid duty on all three.

I have a list prepared by the Winnipeg Evening Tribune, which I do not intend to read but which shows an average increase of 118 per cent in the rates of duty paid on different vegetables. I congratulate the minister on meeting this situation as he has, but I would ask him to consider that the harder it is for people to secure these necessary articles, the less they are going to use during the season in which they are on the market. To that extent the home grower will be injured.

Mr. SPENCE: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should deliver my speech in Irish so that I could go down in history as having been in competition with the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). However, I will not inflict an Irish speech upon the house. The hon. member for Huron seemed to be worried about the high protective policy of a low tariff party, as he referred to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), stating that he had applied the dumping duty. Let me say to my hon. friend that that was in the month of June or July, when Canadian products were on the market and at that time it had very little effect upon the prices paid. I do not know what proposals the government intend to substitute for the present ones, but I would like to express my views regarding protection for the fruit and vegetable growers.

I do not believe that they have too much protection, but I am opposed to both specific and ad valorem duties. A high tariff is not always the best protection to any industry as there are other means of helping along such an industry as the fruit and vegetable industry. There should be means of assisting this industry other than those which will take money out of the pockets of the people. I am not criticizing the government for their lack of knowledge of how to apply a tariff policy, because they have never applied a policy of any kind.

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) made the statement that he hoped the time would soon come when the fruit and vegetable growers would have no protection whatever. Should that day ever come, there will be no fruit or vegetable growers in the country. To-day many of them are out of business because of the insufficient protection they have received since this government came into power, and before that as well.

I intend to speak from the marketing point of view, and may I say that I do not intend to speak in my own interests. I have been associated with the fruit and vegetable growers of this country for the last thirty-seven years. I know many of them throughout the province of Ontario, and I know the difficulties with which they have to contend. Their success or failure may not have depended entirely upon the tariff, as there were other conditions which they had to meet. Before I came to this house in 1922, and since that time I have advocated protection for the fruit and vegetable growers. Climatic conditions in the United States are more favourable to the growers in that country. They are enabled to produce two or three crops per year much more easily and cheaply than one crop can be produced in Canada. How can we meet that competition without protection? I have always advocated specific duties on fruit and vegetables as a means of blocking the unscrupulous dealers. These men have been defrauding the government and putting out of business those legitimate wholesale men who have paid the full duty. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) has stopped that to some extent, but we know that five-ton trucks are leaving Toronto, Hamilton and St. Catharines to go to Buffalo where they load up with grapefruit and pile oranges all around the outside and pay the duty upon faked invoices. Specific duties afford one means of protecting the fruit and vegetable growers of this country.

The next thing I have done is that I have advocated an embargo to prevent a glut when we have in Canada a greater supply than we can consume. That happens nearly every season in connection with the different commodities as they come along. One might, however, as well talk to the town pump as to the present government. In my early days in the house I gave quite a bit of advice along this line, but it was of no avail because nobody ever listened to me. No duty of any kind could have prevented a glut on the Toronto market or other Canadian markets during the week between the 3rd and the 10th May.

Mr. GOTT: Nothing but an embargo.

Mr. SPENCE: Nothing but an embargo could have prevented a glut in asparagus. On the 3rd May, when I was in Toronto, asparagus was being sold at $3 a basket of two dozen, some a little higher and some a little lower. On that date there was a good deal of United States asparagus in the market and more coming in. I tried to impress upon my colleagues that we should cut out importations of asparagus, but they said to me: "If you do not buy it, they will ship it to you on commission, and you cannot refuse it." I said: "On that account I think it should be cut out." The result was that the following Saturday asparagus had dropped to $1.50 and many hundreds of baskets were left over that could not be sold at all.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member will not agree then with the statement made by the hon. member for Mackenzie with respect to the price of asparagus being increased to the consumer following the budget?

Mr. SPENCE: It dropped from $3 to $1.50 from the 3rd to the 10th May, but I say that nothing short of an embargo will give the Canadian growers the protection they want.

The same thing is true of strawberries. A duty of three cents a pound on strawberries seems very high protection, but if the United States growers have a surplus, they will dump it on to the Canadian market in Toronto or Montreal at any price. They will send the berries in on commission and kill our own markets. Therefore I say: Let them keep their own stuff.

In Canada between Burlington and Hamilton we have developed a great district for growing melons and in that particular district we grow the best melons in the country. They grow a good quality in Leamington, but in Toronto we get more from the district between Burlington and Hamilton. Last year, in the season when our melons were at their prime and everybody wanted Canadian melons, the floors of the Toronto market were glutted with foreign melons, some of which were not fit to eat at all and some of which should not have been allowed into the country. There were such melons as honeydews, honey balls and casabas from California. I have no complaint about the Arizona or Mexican melons, but whenever we have in our markets more Canadian melons than our people can consume, the proper thing to do is to impose an embargo upon the foreign product and shut it out. It is that kind of protection alone that will safeguard our own growers.

Two years ago we had an enormous crop of carrots in Canada, but just after we had harvested our own crop in November, from, say the 15th to the 20th of December, along came Texas carrots. We had thousands upon thousands of bags of Canadian carrots on our floors and everywhere else, and we were trying to dispose of them, but as is well known, the people buy the new stuff with the result that the foreign carrots were a big detriment to the native grown. In a case of that kind let me advise the government—and if my own party were in power I should say the same thing—that those carrots should be kept out of Canada until the greater part of our own crop is consumed. Then let the foreign product in and give a fair deal to the consuming public. The price of carrots at that time was very low. In the spring they were dumped by the hundreds of bags and they could not be sold for a quarter because the market was flooded from the month of December when these Texas carrots should not have been permitted to enter at all. They should at least have been kept out until the 15th of February, if the government do not favour a complete embargo, because the people ought to be encouraged to eat our own products instead of the foreign stuff that is very expensive. For instance, the market that year for our carrots was seventy-five cents for a seventy-five pound bag. The Texas stuff was sold at $3.50 a hamper and because they were fresh vegetables with nice tops on them, they were being bought freely by everybody, probably by many who really couldn't afford to buy them. But it would take three hampers of carrots worth $3.50 apiece to fill a seventy-five pound bag after you had cut the tops off. Is it an economical way for the people of Canada to live to buy carrots at that price? I say it is not, and the government should step in and take care of the situation in some way. The growers of fruits and vegetables have been asking for a seasonal tariff, but that will not be sufficient.

[Mr. Spence.]

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What season would the hon. member suggest for carrots?

Mr. SPENCE: I might suggest a season, but it would be impossible for a government to apply a measure of that kind without having somebody who was properly qualified to give them advice along that line. Some years you might apply a tariff from the first of April; other years the season might be later and you might apply the tariff from the first of May.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The hon. member said a few minutes ago he wanted carrots shut out in January.

Mr. SPENCE: I did not say anything of the kind. I said that if these carrots were kept out until the major part of the large production we have in this country was consumed, that would be better for Canada and I still say so.

I am going to give the committee some figures that I have prepared myself and that I know are correct to a cent. It has been said in the house that the growers resent the idea that they want to increase the price of their products to the consuming public. All they ask for is a fair duty and that I am prepared to give them. The horticultural council made their presentation and everyone knows who compose that body. They seem to have had a great deal of influence with the Liberal party in the last few days in getting the government to change their attitude and perhaps it is a good thing.

My belief is that a countervailing tariff should have been introduced in this country when the Fordney-McCumber tariff was put into effect. At that time many people in Canada were making money out of shipping stuff to the United States, but the Fordney-McCumber tariff cut off 60 to 75 per cent of our exports. That was the time to introduce countervailing tariffs and not to-day. My idea is that an embargo is the only thing that will be of any use.

Mr. MILLAR: Does the hon. member approve of countervailing duties to-day?

Mr. SPENCE: I am not giving it much consideration just at present.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Would the hon. member put an embargo on peaches?

Mr. SPENCE: I would put an embargo on everything of which we produce in this country a sufficient crop to supply the demand.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Would the hon. member put it on peaches?

Mr. SPENCE: Anything at all.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): On pears?

Mr. SPENCE: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): And yet we cannot produce enough to supply the local market.

Mr. SPENCE: We can at certain seasons of the year. I am not advocating the imposition of an embargo except at seasons of the year when we can supply the demand. My hon. friend will not lose a cent by it, so he need not worry about his free trade philosophy. We have a secretary belonging to our association and during the first week this new tariff was put into effect we engaged him to go around the different warehouses and find out the amount of duty that was paid. During the first week the amount was $25,643.96, whereas under the old tariff the amount would have been $13,059.84, so that there was an increase of $12,584.12. Yet the government tells us that it wants to reduce taxation. Is that reducing taxation? It is taking money out of the pockets of the people who can least afford to pay it.

Mr. DUNNING: How many cars were involved?

Mr. SPENCE: He took, not the number of cars, but the amount of stuff that came in and the duty that was paid. That applies only to jobbers who belong to the association. You can add 50 per cent for the people who do not belong to the association, who are working independently. To my mind, both an ad valorem and a specific duty should not be applied.

Let me give the cost to a cent of some actual cases that came in in several cars of stuff on the 3rd of May.

Cauliflower runs about one dozen head to the crate, sometimes thirteen to fifteen. The figures are as follows:

Cauliflower, Dozen Size

| Under old duty | | Under new duty | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cost in United States | $1 00 | Cost in United States | $1 00 |
| Duty | 0 30 | Duty | 0 84 |
| Freight | 0 97 | Freight | 0 97 |
| | $2 27 | | $2 81 |
| Increased cost per case | 0 54 | | |

An hon. member said that the price of cauliflower had been raised by the budget 3 cents per head, but the figures I have just given work out to a good deal more than 3 cents per head.

Celery

| Under old duty | | Under new duty | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cost in United States | $3 75 | Cost in United States | $3 75 |
| Duty | 1 13 | Duty | 2 60 |
| Freight | 2 93 | Freight | 2 93 |
| | $7 81 | | $9 28 |
| Increased cost | $1 47 | | |

The middlemen are always accused of robbing the public, but can you see, Mr. Chairman, how the middleman can make money on a case costing $9.28. Every time the price goes up, the less you sell, and the less profit there is.

Mr. DUNNING: How much celery is there in a case?

Mr. SPENCE: From four and a half to six dozen. At this time of the year they are very large heads. The unfair thing about it is this: We are paying for the weight of the boxes. We pay 2 cents a pound on the weight of the case that the celery comes in, and the same with regard to the cauliflower.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me, the secretary of the horticultural council tells me that the tariff made a difference on May 10 of 42 cents on sixty bunches of celery.

Mr. SPENCE: I am figuring by the case.

Mr. DUNNING: I was trying to get down to the actual increase, and it worked out at two-thirds of a cent on a bunch of celery on May 10.

Mr. SPENCE: I think it works out over two cents a bunch increase.

California Carrots

| Under old duty | | Under new duty | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cost in United States | $1 75 | Cost in United States | $1 75 |
| Icing, freight and refrigeration | 1 49 | Icing, freight and refrigeration | 1 49 |
| Duty | 0 53 | Duty | 1 74 |
| | $3 77 | | $4 98 |
| Increased cost, per case | $1 21 | | |

Mr. DUNNING: The secretary of the horticultural council says that the difference is 38 cents per sixty bunches.

Mr. SPENCE: I am talking about cases. I am giving the absolute cold facts as to shipments that have come in, and I can swear to them.

Cabbages a few months ago were very high, and an ad valorem duty was applied. When cabbages were $5 a case in Texas, an ad valorem duty of 30 per cent was applied. But since the cost of cabbage has come down, the consuming public can afford to get a cheap bite. The figures are as follows:

Cabbage

| Under old duty | | Under new duty | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cost in United States | $2 00 | Cost in United States | $2 00 |
| Freight and icing | 1 73 | Freight and icing | 1 73 |
| Duty | 0 60 | Duty, including crate | 1 20 |
| | $4 33 | | $4 93 |
| Increased cost | 0 60 | | |

What I do not like about that is that the crate containing the cabbage weighs from 18 to 22 pounds, and we have to pay a cent a pound on that, which adds one-quarter of a cent to the cabbage in the crate. Here are some figures on Texas carrots.

Texas Carrots (in 100 pound bags)

| Under old duty | | Under new duty | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cost in United States | $1 00 | Cost in United States | $1 00 |
| Freight and refrigeration | 1 55 | Freight and refrigeration | 1 55 |
| Duty | 0 30 | Duty | 1 00 |
| | $2 85 | | $3 55 |
| Increased cost, per case | 0 70 | | |

That makes a difference of 70 cents in duty alone on one bag of carrots, or an increase of over 250 per cent. I am not accusing the government of doing something wrong because I do not think they knew just what they were doing. Here are some figures on lettuce:

Lettuce

| Under old duty | | Under new duty | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cost in United States | $2 00 | Cost in United States | $2 00 |
| Icing and freight | 1 62 | Icing and freight | 1 62 |
| Duty | 0 60 | Duty | 1 14 |
| | $4 22 | | $4 76 |
| Increased cost, per case | 0 54 | | |

As all hon. members know, lettuce is packed in layers with a layer of ice in between, and the ice in a crate will weigh 20 to 25 pounds at the shipping point. The ice melts in transit and the water soaks into the wood as it melts. Now we are charged for the ice and the water that has melted and soaked into the wood; and we are charged for the wood too. It comes to a good deal more than 1½ cents a pound; it will be 2 cents a pound. The wood in a case of lettuce will contain a certain amount of moisture and weigh more on that account. In the old days we paid an ad valorem duty of so much on the case, and the only people interested in the weight of the crate were the railway people, and they always succeeded in making it a little more than it was. The middlemen are criticized by everybody and are called robbers, but if we were able to get money out of the pockets of the people as the government does, and at the same time make people believe that taxation is being reduced, we should have a happier time than we do have now.

Mr. EVANS: To come back to the item under consideration, on this car of onions that came into Winnipeg I find that the old duty would have been $165, and the new duty is $231, or an increase of 40 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Who says so?

Mr. EVANS: It is furnished here.

Mr. DUNNING: By whom?

Mr. EVANS: By the Winnipeg Tribune. Is that not true? Is it the intention of the government that onions should be raised in duty 40 per cent? Does the minister understand that the new tariff will work out that way, or what?

Mr. DUNNING: In a normal season the tariff will be exactly what it has been.

Mr. GLEN: We are dealing somewhat at large with several items. The discussion has wandered from onions to fruits and vegetables, and I think it is well at this juncture that I should say something in reply to the leader of the opposition who addressed some remarks to me last night.

He asked why I supported the budget. In the first place, I think the hon. leader of the opposition had better clean his own doorstep before accusing anyone else because, as I remember the vote on the budget, there were three members of the Conservative party who were of a similar mind to myself in that they could vote for the budget because of certain things contained in it—

Mr. BENNETT: Because of personal promises they had given.

Mr. GLEN: Personal promises have nothing to do with public records.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what we thought.

Mr. GLEN: They saw in the budget certain provisions which they considered of value to their constituents. No one, and least of all the leader of the opposition, would have any right to discipline his followers. Are they to be bound by all the provisions of the budget, or will you say to them: Yes, you can support the budget because of these items which we can favour, and you can protest against those that we do not favour. That must necessarily be the conclusion. But let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the leader of the opposition by his words has indicated to his followers just what attitude they should adopt. It was apparent when he spoke that several of his followers were kicking over the traces, and when they were making their statements his face was a study in black and white. At page 1822 of Hansard of May 6, the leader of the opposition in dealing with the iron and steel schedules, which are the largest items we have in the budget, said:

> With relation to the iron and steel industry in all its complicated schedules, I have only this further to say. In committee we will have the fullest opportunity to hear explanations with respect to every item, the relation of one item to another, and the revenues that may be expected from the application of the tariff in the particular way indicated. It would be a waste of the time of this house for me to endeavour to go over these items in detail.

There we see that when he gets full information with regard to the items in the tariff he will be in a position to approve or disapprove of them. Now, if the hon. leader of the opposition intended to approve of any of those items he had no licence to vote against the budget; if he intended to disapprove of all he should certainly have voted against the budget. But he did not know what he would do. In my judgment his proper course was to let the budget go to committee of ways and means, where he could register his approval or dissent as he thought fit and could do so more intelligently. But, no, he votes against the budget on the amendment which he moved and which will be found at page 1834 of Hansard. Let me quote it:

> That all the words after the word "That" be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:—
> "while this house welcomes and approves of every measure that will afford to Canadian agriculture, industry and labour an equal opportunity and fair competition in the development of the rich and varied natural resources of the Dominion, and provide for the extension of inter-empire trade by mutually advantageous preferences and agreements, with due regard, in either case, to the interests, of consumers, it is of opinion that the proposals which were submitted by the Minister of Finance on May 1, are in several important respects so completely at variance with the policies of this government, as heretofore declared by its official leaders in parliament and elsewhere, that this administration having lost the confidence of the country, cannot safely be entrusted with the direction of the fiscal policy of Canada nor the carrying into effect of proposals to which it has heretofore been opposed and which constitute a breach of its solemn pledges to the electorate, and which are deceptive, fail to estimate the financial results of their operations and which create distrust of and contempt for representative institutions."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like you to note the words:

—are in several important respects as completely at variance with the policies of this government,—

The only assumption is that there are included in the budget, proposals which do not come within the four corners of the amendment, but which the leader of the opposition approves. Yet he endeavours to convey the impression that when one votes for the budget he thereby approves of all its provisions.

Mr. BENNETT: And against the amendment.

Mr. GLEN: No. The hon. gentleman's words imply that there were several proposals in the budget with which he is in favour, but he voted against them.

Mr. BENNETT: I voted for the amendment.

Mr. GLEN: But surely the converse must be true also, that when one votes against the budget he therefore disapproves of all its provisions. Now, I think the hon. leader of the opposition is too shrewd to permit himself to get into that difficulty. He knows that when he votes against the budget, according to his reasoning in the first instance, he must therefore disapprove of all its provisions. What after all is the meaning of his amendment? Simply this, that the administration has lost the confidence of the country. It is not an amendment to the budget. It simply asks for a vote of no confidence in the government. No doubt it was framed to catch the votes of certain hon. gentlemen opposite, and it was so far successful in that only three escaped.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are provisions in the budget which I favour, and without any doubt in my judgment the most important of those provisions is the British preference. Like the hon. leader of the opposition, I must leave it to the committee of ways and means stage to deal with them in detail. I realize, as all members do, that what advantage will be taken of these provisions only the future can determine. But what does the hon. gentleman say? In one breath, at page 1923, he says:

As an earnest of our affection and goodwill, as an expression of the hope we all have that some day a closer economic alliance of empire states may find being, I commend the measures for British preference which the minister proposes.

And yet further on the hon. leader of the opposition qualifies that by these words:

To grant trade preferences to another state or empire without founding those preferences on a mutually helpful treaty is unsound business, profitless and filled with ill will and misunderstanding.

Now, I should just like to suggest to the hon. leader of the opposition—

Mr. GOTT: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GLEN: I am replying—

Mr. GOTT: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. A few minutes ago the Finance minister asked us to curtail our remarks. I did so, at his solicitation. The hon. gentleman has not yet referred to the subject before the committee.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): I think the point of order is well taken. The discussion has wandered all over the budget for the last two hours. The item under discussion is onions.

Mr. GLEN: Mr. Chairman, I am dealing with the free importation of onions from the British isles, and I am following on the lines that were adopted by the hon. gentleman's leader in answering his remarks. If the hon. leader of the opposition was in order then, I am absolutely in order now in replying to his remarks. I was going to suggest that the Right Hon. Ramsay MacDonald—

Mr. McGIBBON: Are we to understand, Mr. Chairman, that your ruling is ignored?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): Again I declare the item under discussion is onions. When the hon. leader of the opposition made his speech we were not in committee.

Mr. GLEN: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we were in committee, and the hon. leader of the opposition said that as my reply would take five minutes he had not the time to grant it. I am now replying to him, and I think it very bad tactics on the part of the opposition members to refuse me an answer to what their leader said. I am quite satisfied that he does not approve his follower's action.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will remember that last evening he spoke first and I replied to him. This is the rejoinder.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. the leader of the opposition asked several questions. I wanted to reply, but permission was not granted.

Mr. DUNNING: In the interests of the conduct of parliamentary business may I ask when this reply, rejoinder and re-rejoinder is to end. I am not criticizing one side more than the other, but may I state that we are really not dealing with onions at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The hon. minister suggested that the matter be closed at the conclusion of the remarks by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott). That hon. gentleman shortened his remarks in order to meet the views of the minister; yet the item is dragged out.

The CHAIRMAN: That is the reason I am calling the attention of the hon. member to the item under discussion.

Mr. GOTT: I could talk for a week on onions, because I know my onions.

Mr. GLEN: I purpose to speak on the British preference so far as it applies to onions. The extension of the British preference has a distinct parallel in a matter of great historical moment which has happened recently. When Mr. Ramsay MacDonald made his offer to Mr. Hoover to have the disarmament conference and when Mr. MacDonald visited the United States and unconventionally sat upon a log to discuss matters with the American president, he made what I thought was the greatest gesture towards peace. The conference has taken place. Resolutions have not been introduced to substantiate the views of either of these gentlemen; nevertheless no one will say that the conference was not of sufficient importance to bring matters before the world. There is a distinct parallel in the present instance.

Mr. GOTT: I say that the ruling of the chairman has been completely ignored.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no doubt about it that the remarks of the hon. gentleman are entirely out of order and I would ask him to direct his remarks to the item under discussion.

Mr. GLEN: The Minister of Finance has made an offer to Great Britain of a British preferential tariff, and the item under discussion is one of the items affected. I draw a parallel between the action of the disarmament conference and that of the present Minister of Finance, although they are along different lines. I hope the results derived from the British preference are as great as those anticipated by the minister. However, no matter what the results might be, and no matter what may be achieved by the minister, no one can say that the gesture of Canada towards Great Britain is not a worthy one To adhere to the point of order raised; I wish to say that I intend to support the item of onions.

Mr. GOTT: You have not said much about it so far.

Mr. GLEN: I am supporting the item of onions under the British preference for the same reason I voted for the budget, because it contained in a large measure other items which would be affected by the same preference. I must say that I do not approve of certain proposals contained in the budget; I have already made myself clear on that point. My viewpoint has been confirmed by no less an authority than the leader of the opposition. It is an unexpected pleasure to find that hon. gentleman saying that prices would be raised to the consumer.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is thinking of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm). It was the Minister of Trade and Commerce who said that duties which kept out imports brought about domestic competition and cheapened goods to the consumer.

Mr. GLEN: I never knew the leader of the opposition was a free trader, nor did I know that he would agree that a tariff placed upon goods would increase the price to the consumer. Now he places it upon record, and he also said in London that there would certainly be an increase in price to the consumer. In the Toronto Globe of May 17 he is quoted as saying that the new tariff would cost Toronto about $2,000,000. I do not know where he got the figure $2,000,000, but probably it was just an intelligent guess.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is not just an intelligent guess. It is based upon the consumption of some 800,000 people in Toronto at a time when Canada is not supplying the fruit and vegetables in question. The tariff that the government has placed upon them means that much more money to be paid by the city of Toronto.

Mr. DUNNING: Did my hon. friend take into account in his calculation the importations from the British West Indies?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. DUNNING: That would seem to have been a very important omission.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. gentleman also said in Toronto that the consumers would pay, and he asked who would receive the benefit. His answer was that it would not be the farmer. I do not want any better corroboration than that.

Mr. BENNETT: I must say that the hon. gentleman is very easily satisfied.

Mr. GOTT: If the kind of speech my hon. friend is making disconcerts his audiences when he is electioneering as much as it annoys the opposition there will not be a Liberal elected in Ontario.

Mr. GLEN: It may be that the leader of the opposition is not the man who is declaring the policies of the opposition party, because at a meeting addressed by Premier Ferguson I find that that gentleman disagreed somewhat from the policy of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. COTNAM: I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has not been directing his remarks to the item under discussion, and he has completely ignored the ruling of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: I am afraid the hon. gentleman is not the only sinner, but I must say he is coming somewhat closer to the item than he did before.

Mr. GLEN: I repeat that the leader of the opposition is apparently not the only leader of the party opposite. I find that in the city of London the premier of Ontario attempted to lay down the policy of the Conservative party. I had understood that the premier of Ontario had stood aside in order that the present leader of the opposition party could rule and control his party. I find, however—

The CHAIRMAN: I shall have to call the hon. gentleman to order. He has transgressed the rules of procedure.

Mr. GLEN: After the words of the premier of Ontario—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: The remarks of the hon. gentleman constitute contempt of the rules of the house.

Mr. GLEN: I think that the leader of the opposition has had his tariff made for him, and he will have to find some other policy upon which to go to the country.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. GOTT: Has the minister any idea how many onions will come in from the British West Indies and from Bermuda?

Mr. DUNNING: During the last calendar year 3,913 crates came in.

Mr. GOTT: How many pounds are there in a crate of onions?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know.

Mr. GOTT: If the industry were reasonably protected we could grow sufficient onions in the county of Essex to supply the whole of Canada.

Mr. HEAPS: Is it still the intention of the department to include crates and packages in compiling the duty?

Mr. DUNNING: I have consulted with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) regarding the administrative features with which he dealt with last evening. He informs me that he finds it very difficult to devise any means whereby the package could be eliminated from consideration. As a matter of fact, in setting the specific duties, my hon. friend understands that the weight of the package is only a factor when the specific rate applies; it is not a factor under the ad valorem rate. In computing the rates which ought to be charged under minimum specific rates, allowance was made in each case for the ordinary package. That is to say, from the point of view of the growers the specific rate would be higher than is stated in the proposals if the package were eliminated from consideration. The difficulty is in administration, and it will be a great deal easier to administer if the package of lettuce, onions, or whatever it may be, is simply treated as such for duty purposes when the specific rate applies. When the ad valorem rate applies the weight of the package does not apply at all. I think my hon. friend's difficulty will be largely removed when we get to the items upon which I propose to move amendments which will reduce the application of the specific minimum to certain short seasons of the year.

Mr. GOTT: I warn the minister that if this arrangement goes through it will have the same effect with regard to our onion growers as the New Zealand treaty had with regard to butter producers.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is this one of the fifty items, or is this one under which we expect to have increased business?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, with the West Indies we expect to do an increased business in the off seasons.

Mr. CHAPLIN: My understanding is that last year these articles were admitted free from the West Indies.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, my hon. friend is right; there is no change.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then you cannot expect to get any extra business owing to a change?

Mr. DUNNING: There is not any change.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I asked the minister a question and he did not answer me. I asked the question: You do not expect to have any increased business owing to the preference under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: Well, of course there is the imposition of the minimum rate under the general tariff, which has the effect of widening the British preference as far as the West Indies are concerned during the season in which the specific minimum will apply which in this case, is all the year.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—85. Mushrooms and truffles, fresh, dried or otherwise preserved, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than ten cents per pound.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I should like to get some information under this item. What were the total importations of mushrooms?

Mr. DUNNING: They are untraceable, because mushrooms formerly were in the general vegetable basket, n.o.p.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think the minister must be mistaken, because I have a return here showing an importation of 800,000 pounds.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is not speaking of fresh mushrooms; he is speaking of canned mushrooms which come in under another item entirely.

Mr. CHAPLIN: These are fresh, dried, or otherwise preserved. They are not only fresh mushrooms; the full item is 800,000 pounds.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is surely quoting the wrong item.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The word is "or," not "and."

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am speaking to the minister, who knows something about these matters, with the help of his assistants.

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend is quoting the new item rather than the old one. The new item reads "Mushrooms and truffles, dried or otherwise preserved." The old item was 87, which included vegetables, n.o.p., at 15 per cent, 27½ per cent and 30 per cent, or item 86 which included preserved vegetables generally.

Mr. CHAPLIN: At any rate, last year's importations amounted to 800,000 pounds, and we may assume that there will be a similar importation this year, which will come under this heading. Will canned mushrooms come in under this item as well?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say as to the imports, but they will come under this item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Whatever imports there are will come in under this item, then. I find that out of that importation of 800,000 pounds only 24 pounds came from the United Kingdom, and the bulk of the trade came from France. I want to find out what was the idea of the minister, whether he thought that trade would be diverted from France?

Mr. DUNNING: It is one of those absurdities of which I spoke yesterday. That is not regarded as likely.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then it is really an absurdity to make the item free.

Mr. DUNNING: No; I regard it as a greater absurdity to have a tariff against the United Kingdom on an article which we do not import from there, and which cannot come from there.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—86. Beets for the manufacture of sugar: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. FRASER: What were the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: They entered formerly under a general item. We cannot trace these beets separately because they were included in a general item before.

Mr. MANION: What else did the general item cover?

Mr. DUNNING: Vegetables, n.o.p.; it was the whole of the remainder, in the old tariff.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There could not have been any quantity of beets brought into the Canadian market for this purpose. Our importations of beets were only 45 tons.

Mr. DUNNING: We exported $245,000 worth.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): From what part of the British Empire does the minister expect these beets for the manufacture of sugar to come?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not expect them to come from anywhere.

Mr. MANION: What were the importations of beets last year?

Mr. DUNNING: They came in under the item of vegetables, n.o.p., to an untraceable extent.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the idea of this change?

Mr. DUNNING: We are giving a classification to beets now; we are trying as far as possible to get away from the so-called basket items, which have the effect of making it impossible for us to know what is imported of the different varieties of vegetables. We are separating them into their own classes for the future, so that our statistical information will be of greater value than it has been in the past.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is this one of the 50 items?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like some information as to what quantity of beets was exported to the United States from Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: We exported sugar beets to the value of $245,000.

Mr. MANION: What were the total imports under the item of vegetables, n.o.p.?

Mr. DUNNING: They amounted to $1,700,000, including all sorts of stuff.

Mr. MANION: Scattered from all over the world? Where was the large proportion from?

Mr. DUNNING: It includes a number of items we are now separating. The total imports amounted to $1,726,000 of which $1,677,000 came from the United States.

Mr. MANION: Practically all of it.

Mr. DUNNING: From the Netherlands we imported under this item articles to the value of $4,000; from Mexico, $3,000; from France, $1,400; from China, $2,000; from Hong Kong, $37,000. These are the principal amounts in the total which I have given as coming in under the item of vegetables, n.o.p. Of course that includes all sorts of strange things, as my hon. friend can understand.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—87. Vegetables, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty:

(a) Asparagus: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than three cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: This is the first of the items upon which I propose to offer an amendment. I will ask my colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) to move the following amendment:

That after the word "rate" in line three, the following words be inserted: "from April 15 to May 31 inclusive."

The item would then read:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate from April 15 to May 31 inclusive, the duty shall be not less than three cents per pound.

Mr. MANION: What are the imports of this item, and where from?

Mr. DUNNING: This is another one which is in the basket; it is included in the $1,700,000 worth of general vegetable imports.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the minister to the injury he has done during the past few weeks to the consumers of this country. The restaurants in the city of Toronto have raised their charges for vegetables by 50 per cent. These charges were raised on May 3, immediately after the budget was presented. What does the minister propose to do to protect the consumer? There is no need of the Canadian National Exhibition sending over to Japan and paying thousands for a troupe of acrobats and tumblers to perform before the grandstand when we have enough acrobats and tumblers in this government to give all the performances needed.

We have been hearing about onions, and more especially a brand known as the Glen onion. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) shed copious tears for the poor vegetable growers on the prairie after voting for the budget. This wonderful onion should be called after him and exhibited out at the experimental farm so that the people could see how one can blow hot and cold for protection and free trade at once. The restaurants of Toronto have raised their prices during the past week, as appears from a statement in the Evening Star of May 19, made by the head of a large restaurant company in Toronto, as follows:

"The duty on vegetables will be passed on to the consumer within the next few days", stated M. McCann, president of the Martin Cafeteria Company, Ltd., when asked to-day about the effect of the Dunning budget on restaurants.

"At present we charge the public 15 cents for a portion of celery, but we will have to charge them 25 cents from now on," declared Mr. McCann. "It is absolutely impossible to buy Canadian celery until the fall and the duty makes the American product prohibitive in price. We have only one course open to us, namely to pass the charges on to the consumer and that is what we will have to do.

Take strawberries, grapefruit, iceberg lettuce, spinach, green peas, beets and cabbage for instance. All of these articles are now almost prohibitive in price under the new tariff.

It means that we will have to raise prices and the consumption of these vegetables will fall off. It doesn't help the Canadian grower any. We always use Canadian vegetables in season.

We are already protesting to the government through the medium of our association, the Ontario Restaurant Association.

Some of our Toronto members are Muirheads, Hunts, Sparfield's, Stoodleigh, Ellen Bradley, and McConkey's.

When the public find the price of all their favorite vegetables up by 50 per cent they'll soon kick."

Such a row is going to be raised as the Minister of Finance never heard before. The minister brought down his budget speech on May 1, but he is now introducing a second budget speech covering one of the most important industries we have in Canada. I have in my hand a list of prices prevailing on the St. Lawrence and North Toronto markets, which show increases of from 20 to 30 per cent on some vegetables on the May 1st tariff. Toronto expects to entertain next month over 300,000 Shriners and there is going to be they say scarcity of food. The following advertisement was issued by the Loblaw Groceterias, Limited:

Prudent housekeepers are buying their staple grocery—requirements now. The experience of large American cities where the Shriners' conventions have been held was that the supplies of food products were almost depleted before the convention was over. All our busy groceterias are now well stocked with quality merchandise at the usual Loblaw low prices.

And vegetable—

Other stores are issuing the same type of advertisement on food and vegetables. The consumer is going to be made to pay. What kind of advertising will this be for Canada when these visitors come here and find that they have to pay 50 per cent increase for a half grapefruit?

What does the minister intend to do to protect the consumer who has been thus fleeced during the past two or three weeks? We cannot blame the wholesaler because he has to raise his price to the middleman, who in turn passes it on to the retailer. The latter is not to blame. The consumer has to pay it all. There are over 150,000 people in downtown Toronto who find it hard enough now to have to pay from 25 to 50 cents for a luncheon, but these prices have been raised to as high as 75 or 80 cents.

Where is this wonderful Consumers' League; where is it and what is it? Where is this great Mr. Deachman who spends so much time before the tariff board? How is the hon. member for Marquette going to protect the consumer? He came in as a free trader, but he is now a high protectionist. He voted one way for the budget and then he adopted another attitude regarding the resolution. We have quite an exhibition of hon. members across the chamber tumbling over each other and turning handsprings to get on the protectionist band wagon before the great catastrophe which will occur within a few weeks.

What is the minister going to do about the conscription of food to supply these 300,000 visitors? What is he going to do to protect the consumer? What is he going to do to protect the middleman and the retailer and regulate prices. Is the hon. minister going to put an item in the supplementary estimates to return to these poor working people the extra money they have been forced to pay the restaurant owners? This is an illustration of the kind of budget which has been presented. There have been a lot of hallelujahs, hurrahs and hosannas, but the small wage earner will be forced to pay 75 or 80 cents under the new tariff of May 1st for a meal which cost him previously from 30 to 40 cents. Young people will be forced to leave restaurants because they could not pay the prices charged. One owner told me that this tariff had raised the rates 50 per cent, and that increase had to be passed on to the consumer. These people may be forced to go without luncheon because of these increased prices. They cannot spend money like water as do some members of the Consumers League who appear before the tariff board. So I am now glad to see the change of heart which will restore the old prices. The rates charged the past two weeks were prohibitive.

Who put the gun to the minister's head and made him bring in a second budget? The minister announced in his speech that this budget was to be so-and-so, but he now offers an amendment to one of the items. Is he going to bring in an amendment to every one of the remaining 350 articles in the schedule? Are we going to have another budget speech? The British chancellor would stick to his guns and would refuse to change his budget one iota once it had been brought down. But in the house we have a wobbly kind of tariff; nobody knows what it is to be until the people get it in their tax bills directly or indirectly. Therefore there should be some protection for the 600,000 people of Toronto and for the 300,000 Shriners who are coming to Canada next month. These people are visitors and they should not be charged extortionate rates all along the line as a result of this tariff. Once these prices are raised many dealers are not going to lower them. The people of the west have been complaining for many a day in regard to the taxes imposed in the tariff and the complaint is not going to be lessened by the tariff the minister has put on this particular item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Would the chairman kindly read the amendment again?

Mr. DUNNING: As to asparagus?

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is, I understand, an amendment the minister is going to move in respect to other items also.

Mr. DUNNING: It will not be identical as to dates. The date is specific in this case.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When did the minister become converted in regard to this proposition? Yesterday he told us he might change his mind in a year, but I do not think he ever intended he would change it every week.

Mr. GOTT: And on every item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, on every item. Let me read what the minister had to say a few days ago when he delivered his budget speech. Speaking on the item of vegetables, he said:

> In revising the customs tariff on fruits and vegetables the government has given serious consideration to the representations of growers and consumers, as presented on several occasions before the Tariff Advisory Board.

Mr. LACOMBE: Hear, hear.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Somebody says: "Hear, hear." If the minister and the cabinet gave the matter such serious consideration, they must have come to a serious conclusion.

Mr. LACOMBE: This is a serious conclusion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is what I am anxious to know, because I am afraid it is not. I think this will show it is not. The minister continued:

> The irregular nature of the severe competition which Canadian producers frequently face from the earlier-maturing crops of other countries has been weighed in the light of various suggested remedies, most of which were found to have inherent defects, a fact long since recognized by the growers themselves.

This is the choice item:

> Seasonal tariffs, for instance, are not applicable to a country such as Canada, with its extremes of distance, latitude and climate.

Is it any wonder that my hon. friend opposite says we have now reached a point where we are getting somewhere; that it is serious. I think the minister should make some explanation of his change of heart within a week or so. The statement I have read is reported on page 1629 of Hansard and is taken out of the budget speech of the minister himself.

Mr. STEVENS: Distances have shortened; climates have changed; latitudes have changed also.

Mr. DUNNING: Probably neither of my hon. friends was in the house last night when I spoke of this matter.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think I was present.

Mr. DUNNING: It was quite evident on checking over the representations made by the growers—and as I said last night, I pay particular attention to those who are growing anything in this country—that to arrange any season which would be acceptable at one and the same time to the growers of British Columbia, of the middle west, of Quebec and of the maritime provinces, would be a most difficult matter on many of these items. The growers have met me since the presentation of the budget and have suggested to me seasons which they say they can themselves agree upon. I submit that they know their own business much better than I could and perhaps they know it as well as the hon. member for Lincoln. I am content to propose to the house a reduction from the original proposals which is involved in the growers' suggestion as to dates between which the specific minimum duties proposed in the budget should apply instead of in some cases all the year round. I am content to take the responsibility and whatever odium attaches to it. I think the growers will themselves believe that I have endeavoured to give fair consideration to their requests; and at the same time I had in mind views expressed by hon. gentlemen on all sides of the house with respect to the desirability of reaching, if at all possible, such a conclusion.

Mr. GOTT: Have the growers intimated that a duty of three cents a pound on asparagus from April 15 to May 31 will be sufficient to safeguard the Canadian market?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say that the growers in every case are satisfied with the specified rate, but they are satisfied with and recommend the dates between which the specific rate will apply.

Mr. STIRLING: Do I understand that the minister wishes the committee to believe he has made these alterations as a result of representations made to him by the growers since the introduction of the budget?

Mr. DUNNING: I stated that since the budget I had had conferences with the growers' representatives and that these proposals which I am making as to dates are the result of those conferences.

Mr. STIRLING: Then I think I should draw the attention of the committee to the fact that these seasonal dates which the minister now suggests are those which the growers have had before the Tariff Advisory Board for three or four years. Surely that is not why the minister has seen fit to make this alteration.

Mr. DUNNING: The dates are not the same in all cases.

Mr. STIRLING: They are very close. In an endeavour to assist so far as the growers could at this late date, they certainly have agreed to the alteration of a date here and there, but surely the minister does not wish the committee to believe this change of front on the part of the government is due to representations made to him by the growers since the introduction of the budget.

Mr. STEVENS: A change which he rejected in his budget speech.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(b). Beans, green: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(c). Brussels sprouts: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.
Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than four cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: There is an amendment here.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I move that the following be substituted for item 87 (c):

87(c). Brussels sprouts: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There will then be no fixed specific minimum in the case of Brussels sprouts and the only change from the old tariff will be a reduction from 15 per cent to free under the British preference.

Mr. GOTT: What will the rate be now per pound?

Mr. DUNNING: There will be no specific duty per pound. The duty will be an ad valorem one.

Mr. STIRLING: Thirty per cent under the general tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: Any date?

Mr. DUNNING: Any date.

Mr. GOTT: That is the year round, not seasonal?

Mr. DUNNING: The year round.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the minister kindly say whether beans, green, have been altered in any way?

Mr. DUNNING: Beans, green, are exactly as they appear in the budget items.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(d). Cabbage: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.
Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less thane one cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: I move in amendment to insert the following after the word "rate" in line 3, "from June 15 to January 31 inclusive." The item will then read: Cabbage, provided that when imported under the general tariff rate from June 15 to January 31 inclusive, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think we all must admire the ability of the minister and of the government to swallow themselves, to steal the policy of the party opposite, try to make it their own and get away with it in the country. If a farce has ever been enacted in any other legislature in the world that can equal this, I certainly have never heard of it. I think, Mr. Chairman, and I believe the country will be of the same opinion, that it is now time that the party that has written the prescriptions for the good of this country for so long should collect the fee, and we will do that after the next election.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(e). Carrots and beets, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: I move that this item be amended by inserting after the word "rate" in line 3, the words "from June 1 to February 28 inclusive." The item will then read: Carrots and beets, n.o.p., provided that when imported under the general tariff rate from June 1 to February 28 inclusive, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(f). Cauliflower and eggplant: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: I move to amend this item by adding after the word "rate" the words "from May 15 to October 31 inclusive." The item will then read: Cauliflower and eggplant, provided that when imported under the general tariff rate from May 15 to October 31 inclusive, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

Mr. COOTE: Can the minister explain on what basis these tariff rates on vegetables have been set. Asparagus comes in at a rate of three cents per pound; Brussels sprouts, 4 cents per pound; cabbage, 1 cent per pound; carrots, 1 cent per pound; cauliflower, 2 cents per pound; celery, 2 cents per pound; cucumbers, 1 cent per pound; lettuce, free; parsley, 2 cents per pound; rhubard, 1 cent per pound; spinach, 1 cent per pound; tomatoes, 2 cents per pound and watercress, 5 cents per pound. It is a little hard to understand why there is so much difference in the specific rate when the ad valorem tariff seems to be the same all the way through.

Mr. DUNNING: There are just the same differences in value in vegetables as there are in cereals. Oats, for instance, differ in value per pound from wheat, and the same is true of all these vegetables. The manner in which these figures were arrived at was by arriving first at a fair average value for the year for the particular commodity, and then endeavouring to set a specific minimum in close proximity to what the existing ad valorem rate would produce.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Customs tariff—87(g). Celery: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: I move to amend this item by inserting after the word "rate" the words "from July 1 to February 28 inclusive." The item will then read: Celery, provided that when imported under the general tariff rate from July 1 to February 28 inclusive, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

Mr. LADNER: May I inquire what the imports are under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: Last year, $584,604, of which almost all came from the United States. We have got a nice little trade starting from West Indies. In the first four months of this year, from January to May 10, 4,668 crates of celery came in from the West Indies.

Mr. LADNER: They came in free, I presume?

Mr. DUNNING: No, but anything which came in following May 1st would come in free.

Mr. LADNER: With respect to all these vegetables under item 87 from paragraph (a) to paragraph (p), I presume that none come in from the United Kingdom.

Mr. DUNNING: No, not to any appreciable extent, but there is quite a quantity coming in from the West Indies. It is evident from the figures I have obtained that now there are properly equipped steamers on that route the possibilities of developing that business are considerable. For instance, last year, 9,679 crates of carrots came in from the West Indies, 14,000 odd crates of tomatoes, and 785 crates of celery. Notice also the quick jump for the first four months of this year, from January to May 10, when celery jumped to 4,668 crates.

Mr. LADNER: Paying the duty?

Mr. DUNNING: Part of it. A considerable quantity came in just after May 1.

Mr. RYERSON: The reason for that increased importation would be largely on account of our own celery being off the market at that period.

Mr. DUNNING: I presume that our own celery is always off the market in that month. I was making a comparison between the imports of celery from the West Indies during the whole of the last calendar year with the first four months of this year, from January to May 10. The quantity imported in the four months of this year was six times more than the imports last year. That amount came in during our off season, and I think my hon. friend will agree with me that in that off season it is desirable to get celery from the West Indies if we can.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the minister state that under the natural conditions of growing celery in the West Indies, we shall receive it only in the off season?

Mr. DUNNING: I would not say that necessarily.

Mr. CAHAN: The West Indies produce celery throughout the year, crop after crop, and what I cannot understand is why the minister should open the Canadian market to all these vegetables from the West Indies. Certainly some consideration should be given during certain seasons of the year at least to those who grow celery on the island of Montreal, for instance, for the supply of that great city. I doubt if for the present celery, tomatoes, peas, beans and cucumbers from the West Indies will find a market in the western prairies until some more suitable method of preserving them in transit is found. Why in the world you should allow all these vegetables, produced by labour at less than one-quarter the cost of labour in Montreal, to come freely into competition there with the produce of hundreds of small farmers in and about that city, I cannot possibly conceive.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Does this off season tariff apply to all countries including the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: Only the countries under the general tariff.

Mr. HEAPS: Are these new rates immediately effective?

Mr. DUNNING: No. Arrangements will have to be made pending the disposition of these items for the National Revenue department to advise immediately as to the results. The rates will be made effective as speedily as possible, but they are not yet through this committee.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There may be some more changes.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Will there be any rebate made on importations since the first of the month?

Mr. DUNNING: That is quite impossible.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister has intimated with something of a shudder that he has accepted the seasonal tariff principle. Could he have another shudder and give us the seasonal tariff assistance on celery from the West Indies? He has intimated that so far as he understands the majority of the importations of celery from the West Indies will come in at a period when Canadian production will not be hurt. But supposing he should be wrong—

Mr. CAHAN: He is certainly wrong; you may start with that assumption; and he will have several shudders before this is acceptable to many farmers, in the province of Quebec, particularly the farmers on the island of Montreal.

Mr. STIRLING: I will put it my own way. Will he consider the possibility of extending the seasonal principle to the West Indies as well? Perhaps he believes with me that if the celery grower in, say, the Okanagan valley is to be hurt by importations from another country, it scarcely hurts him less if that celery is a Bermudan stick.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not had the first shudder yet, so I am quite unlikely to have the second. That is the only answer I can make my hon. friend.

Mr. CAHAN: Has the minister made no examination of the possibilities of the production of these vegetables in the British West Indies, as to the conditions under which they are produced there, the seasons when they are produced, and the quantities which will be available in the Canadian market Or is this simply done as a sort of gratuitous gesture to the West Indies since my right hon. friend the Prime Minister paid his recent visit to the nothern fringe of the islands?

Mr. DUNNING: In conferences with growers they made it quite clear that they were not disposed to be critical at all of the provision to admit celery free from the West Indies.

Mr. CAHAN: In conference with whom?

Mr. DUNNING: The Canadian celery growers' representatives.

Mr. CAHAN: I venture to say the hon. gentleman has not even come in contact, directly or indirectly, with the growers of celery in the province of Quebec, and especially with those in and about the island of Montreal.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend must know more about my movements and the people I meet than I know myself. I assure him that I have met representatives of the celery growers of Canada,—

Mr. CAHAN: I do not doubt that, but I am suggesting—

Mr. DUNNING: —and Quebec was represented.

Mr. CAHAN: And Quebec was represented among those?

Mr. DUNNING: I did not meet particular representatives; I met a small committee of the whole.

Mr. CAHAN: That is what I assume. But I suggest the hon. minister did not meet those who represent the small farmers in and about the Montreal district.

Mr. DUNNING: Undoubtedly I did.

Mr. CAHAN: Then I am bound to accept the hon. minister's statement to that effect. But from my knowledge of conditions they did not represent farming opinion in that district.

Mr. LACOMBE: Is the hon. member against a seasonal tariff?

Mr. CAHAN: Oh no, I have advocated a seasonal tariff time and time again. But what I object to is the destruction of the vital principle of the seasonal tariff by allowing these islands, which can produce these vegetables by the ton, to send them in free of duty at all seasons of the year.

Mr. LACOMBE: Does my hon. friend believe that a seasonal tariff is in the interests of the consumers as well as of the producers?

Mr. CAHAN: I am not discussing that. I am prepared at any time to do so.

Mr. LACOMBE: This is the place.

Mr. CAHAN: I have urged that there should be a seasonal tariff. But why destroy the vital principle of it? Why destroy every advantage that accrues from it to farmers in the eastern provinces of Canada, as you are doing by opening up to the native labour of the West Indies the entire control and command of the vegetable markets of eastern Canada?

Mr. GOTT: Mr. Chairman, I venture to assert that no representations were made to the government from the onion growers of western Ontario. At any rate, if they were, they were not listened to.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member for East Essex should be here guarding the interests of the onion growers of his riding. Why does he not do so in this house? He has been loud enough in the press.

Mr. ODETTE: I introduced a deputation from the Western Ontario Onion Growers' Association. Mr. James, the secretary, met the finance minister and make known the views and wishes of the onion growers of western Ontario.

Mr. GOTT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DUNNING: On a point of order, Mr Chairman, I submit that we have passed the onion item. Each of these gentlemen have had their say and are completely out of order. May we stay with celery for a little time?

Mr. GOTT: I would merely ask one question of the member for East Essex. Were those represenations made before or after the bringing down of the budget?

Mr. ODETTE: Two weeks before the bringing down of the budget.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): On what principle does the minister withhold a seasonal tariff on celery and apply it on other vegetables?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend, I am sure, may be excused in the confusion. I moved an amendment that the tariff on this item should apply from July 1 to February 28, inclusive.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not hear the minister move that.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not blame my hon. friend.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(h). Cucumbers: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment is to make the tariff operative from June 1 to October 31, inclusive. The item will then read:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from June 1 to October 31, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(i). Lettuce: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than one and one-half cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: This is to be amended, Mr. Chairman, to read:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from April 1 to October 31, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than one and one-half cents per pound.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(j). Parsley: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Euler moves:

That the following be substituted for item 87(j):

Parsley: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

This involves the same general and intermediate rates which now apply, and free entry under the British preference, but with no seasonal minimum.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(k). Peas, green: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Mr. STIRLING: No seasonal tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Customs tariff—87(l). Rhubarb: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. GOTT: Seasonal?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. The item will be amended to read:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from March 1, to May 31, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. HEAPS: When is it expected that the new rates will be effective?

Mr. DUNNING: We will have to consult the officers of the department, but the rates will be made effective just as soon as possible. I think we can probably say to-morrow.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(m). Spinach: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: This item will be amended to read:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from May 1, to October 31, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(n). Tomatoes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: This item will be amended to read:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from June 1, to October 31, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the minister give me some reasonable explanation as to why from June 1 to October 31, tomatoes should be allowed to come in free from the West Indies? It is incomprehensible to me that the minister would strike at local industry in that way.

Mr. DUNNING: The growers of Canada have raised no objection to free importation the year round.

Mr. CAHAN: They must certainly be in complete ignorance of the conditions under which these vegetables are produced in the West Indies. They cannot know of the seasons during which they can be produced and the possibility of increased production. Or it may be that the representatives who met the minister and were informed of these proposed changes did not represent farming sentiment east of the Ottawa river.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member for East Essex has stated that two weeks prior to bringing down the budget representations were made to the government through a delegation, and those representations were absolutely disregarded. Bermuda onions will come in by the carload, yet the representations made by that hon. gentleman will carry no weight with the government.

Mr. DUNNING: They came in free before.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87(o). Watercress and whitloof or endive: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than 5 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: There is an amendment to subsection (o) eliminating the minimum specific. The Minister of National Revenue will move that the following be substituted for 87 (o):

Watercress and whitloof or endive: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

In this case the change is made to eliminate the specific minimum.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—87 (p). N.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no change in this item.

Customs tariff—88. Seedlings for replanting:
(a) Cabbage: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
(b) Cauliflower: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
(c) Onion: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: The proposal in this case is to make the importation of these seedlings free, and is intended to foster our home industries.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 50, respecting a certain patent application of Thomas Bernard Bourke and George Percival Setter—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 51, respecting a certain patent application of Harry Barrington Bonney—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 244, respecting a certain patent of The R. M. Hollingshead Company—Mr. Black (Yukon).

MARY ADA ST. GEORGE

The house in committee on Bill No. 202, for the relief of Mary Ada St. George—Mr. Garland (Carleton)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

The CHAIRMAN: With regard to certain unopposed divorce bills which were reported from the select standing committee on private bills this day, a motion was moved by the hon. member for Marquette and seconded by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie that said bills be placed on the order paper for consideration this day in committee of the whole and third reading, and that motion was adopted. We are now on the first of these bills.

Mr. BOURASSA: This is not on the order paper.

The CHAIRMAN: This is a special motion which was made to-day, and which I read a moment ago. The motion was adopted this afternoon.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): Has the evidence been printed in these cases? I understand that the evidence has not been printed, but in spite of that the private bills committee was able thoroughly to understand the bills. To-night we are asked to pass them, but we have not even the names of the cases to see whether or not we are interested in them. I think this is a shameful proceeding.

Mr. IRVINE: There is no difference between the consideration we are giving the bills now before us and the consideration which has been given other bills this session. If we wait until to-morrow for the printed evidence my hon. friend will not even look at it, nor will anyone else. We might as well let these bills go through; this is the way we have done it all the time.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): As far as I have observed we have never dealt with a case in which we have not had the evidence available. These bills are being put through without the evidence being printed. I know there were some cases yesterday in which I had not heard all the evidence, and I was waiting for the printed evidence to see whether or not I had any real objection to them. Yesterday we passed about 60 bills in some two minutes and sixteen seconds. I think it only reasonable that these bills should stand over until we have the evidence.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. gentleman should have advanced this argument some weeks ago when we were considering the bill for a divorce court for Ontario.

The CHAIRMAN: The chairman of the private bills committee, the hon. member for Marquette, is now in the house and if he cares to do so he might explain why he made the motion.

Mr. GLEN: Mr. Chairman, as has been already stated, these bills passed through the committee in the ordinary way. We had the list of cases before us and the bills were put through in the usual way. So far as I know there was no evidence before the special committee.

The CHAIRMAN: It is for the committee to decide whether or not we will proceed. We are now on bill 202.

Mr. BOURASSA: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman; do not be so over-zealous. It is a strange thing that in connection with divorce bills all the rules of the house should not apply. No attempt has been made unduly to hold up any of these bills, but on the other hand the apostles of divorce should not try to get rid of all the rules which have been established, whether rightly or wrongly, to govern legislation in this parliament. As far as I am concerned this is the first news I have had of this procedure. I was informed that yesterday a number of bills were put through in a few minutes, and to-day it is even worse. I understand that a motion was made this afternoon to further the passage of these bills without even giving notice of them. I was under the impression that there was nothing before the committee to-night but two private bills concerning patent applications. We seem to be granting divorce by secret methods, but surely at least we should proceed regularly in these cases as in any other legislation which comes before this house.

Mr. GLEN: The other day the hon. member said I had converted him, but I do not think I shall be able to convert him to-night. I do not wish any injustice to be done to anyone sponsoring any of these bills, and I would ask that the motion be allowed to stand.

The CHAIRMAN: It is for the committee to decide whether or not we will proceed with these bills.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Mr. Chairman, the session is now nearing the end, and as one of the members of the House of Commons appointed to the Senate committee on divorce, I would like to assure the hon. members that I have been very diligent in that duty. I have observed the great care taken by the divorce committee in considering these cases, and even if we had the evidence before us to-night I do not believe that hon. gentlemen would take the trouble of reading it. Where an hon. member has objection to an individual case I do not think the committee should oppose that attitude without having the evidence, but as these bills have been given careful consideration by the divorce committee of the Senate, I think hon. members should allow them to pass.

Mr. BOURASSA: There is no evidence before us that the session is nearing its close.

An hon. MEMBER: We hope so.

Mr. BOURASSA: We are hopeful, but we do not know. The whole of yesterday afternoon was taken up in the discussion of one item, and if we continue at that rate we will be here until August. I do not see why all the rules of procedure should be set aside for these divorce bills. In other matters of public interest it has been pointed out that the rules were inconvenient, but the rules are made and maintained for the protection of all, and should apply to all. As far as I am concerned, it is not a question of having the evidence, although I am surprised to hear that the private bills committee of this house passes these bills without having the evidence before it.

Mr. GLEN: Not all of them, but a good many.

Mr. BOURASSA: These private bills may cover the granting of divorces, or the incorporation of companies, and there is a rule of this house which governs the introduction of private bills and their passage through the various stages. If prorogation were announced for say the day after to-morrow, there would be some reason for adopting this procedure; but as prorogation may not take place until two or three weeks have passed, there would be no harm in allowing these bills to stand to appear to-morrow on the order paper and to be taken up at the next available time for private bills.

Mr. JACOBS: It is possible that the invitations are out for the weddings of these people, and by holding up the proceedings we would deny them the happiness to which they are entitled.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the hon. member expect to be a wedding guest?

HARRY HUTCHERSON DAVIS

The house in committee on Bill No. 247, for the relief of Harry Hutcherson Davis—Mr. Sanderson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. BOURASSA: I notice, Mr. Chairman, that with this bill we reach the list which appears on the votes and proceedings of yesterday. According to the votes and proceedings, these bills were introduced only yesterday, so that within the short space of twenty-four hours or thereabouts these bills will have been introduced, read a second time, passed through that conscientious committee which examines all these cases without evidence, will have come back here, and under an abnormal decision of the house or of those members who were in the house this afternoon will, all rules being supended, have passed through the committee of the whole house; and then I suppose it will be asked that they be given their third reading—all within twenty-four hours. I hope when all this has been done, the respectable and devotional House of Commons will vote itself a certificate that it is able to do much better as a judge of these cases than the worst divorce tribunals of the United States.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I just want to add my word of protest in support of what has been said by the hon. member for Labelle. This morning I looked over the order paper to see what business was coming before the house. I think we have a right to know what business is to be taken up, because we cannot all be present every hour that the house is sitting. I come down here and find that a number of bills have been passed. There were one or two bills that I was particularly interested in, and I have no opportunity of knowing what stage they have reached. As a member of this house I have a perfect right to have some knowledge of when a bill is likely to be called. That is the reason for our having an order paper. There is one bill in particular in which I am interested, and I have not the faintest idea what stage it has reached, whether it has been given a first or second reading. Although we have passed the bill to create a divorce court in Ontario, and although I have no desire in any way to hinder the quick passage of a number of these bills under the circumstances, there are certain limits beyond which we ought not to go, and even for this session we ought to know what bills are before the house. I protest against this way of railroading things through.

Mr. IRVINE: I might inform the hon. gentleman that the bill to which he refers did not pass the committee this afternoon, but stands for an examination of the evidence at the committee's next meeting.

Mr. SPEAKER: Private and public bills being disposed of, the house will now revert to committee of ways and means.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, pursuant to an arrangement made this afternoon in order to permit of the pension bill being proceeded with, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 265, to amend the Pension Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Chairman, briefly in explanation of this bill I may say that it is the result of the findings of a special committee of this house appointed to investigate soldiers' problems. They took evidence from various soldier organizations throughout Canada, and after considering that evidence they drafted the bill which is now before the committee. I am pleased to report that the special committee are unanimous in their findings, and I think parliament as a whole and the people of this country will greatly appreciate their work. It has been done with the utmost care, and questions that have been agitating our soldier bodies over a period of years, as well as the great masses of the people, have been dealt with fairly and justly.

The major amendments to the act are: First, the revising of the machinery for dealing with the appeal of the soldier from the decision of the pension board. The federal appeal board will disappear and in its place there will be established what is known as a pension tribunal. This tribunal will be composed of nine members, one of whom will be the chairman, and he will direct the place of residence of the other members and the territory to be served by them. It is suggested that two members shall act in each locality under the direction of the chairman. A change has been made in regard to the soldiers' advisers. It is proposed under the bill that a veterans' bureau shall be established with salaried officials, and it will be their duty to prepare the case of the soldier for presentation to the tribunals and other courts. In addition to these tribunals and the veterans' bureau, there is to be a central appeal court composed of three officials, one of whom will be known as the president.

Mr. BENNETT: Three officials.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. In addition to that there have been important amendments made in regard to widows. This is a question which has been before the pensions committee on various occasions. Previous committees and the committee which sat this session have reported regarding pensions to widows. They have also dealt with those returned men who commuted their pensions, and there is a section in the bill which will restore the pension to the former pensioner. This is generally accepted as a proper procedure. In addition to that there has been an amendment discussed in this house and before various special committees as to the benefit of the doubt; that question also was discussed before the committee which sat this session. This section in particular is well drawn; it is liberal in its scope and I believe if accepted by parliament will prove advantageous to the soldiery, and will do much to ease the situation which has existed in this regard.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to join with the hon. the Minister of Pensions in congratulating the committee on the service it has rendered to the ex-service men. It has brought to bear upon the problem submitted to it patient consideration and a wealth of learning, a portion of which at least arises from experience and expert knowledge derived not only from experience but from observation. The committee has therefore been able to deal with this very complex problem in a manner which enables the house to offer its most sincere congratulation to every member who sat on the committee. We thank the members of that committee for the untiring zeal and devotion which they have shown. I am sure we on this side of the house most heartily join with the minister in making that observation. I have always felt that we on this side have been particularly fortunate in the personnel of our membership on the pensions committee.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We on this side feel the same way.

Mr. BENNETT: They have been service men with wide experience; some of them have had very considerable administrative experience, and they knew at first hand not only the problems of the service men but also something of the psychology of the situation, which, to the inexperienced, is not easy to appreciate. In the main the same may be said with regard to those who represented the government on the committee. The chairman, in particular, has been indefatigable in his efforts and his endeavours have not been limited in any sense by political consideration but his zeal had been prompted by an earnest desire to advance the interests of those who are so fairly entitled to this measure of consideration. One might refer in equally laudatory terms to the membership of the committee chosen from those who sit to my left.

My observation has taught me to believe that there is no difference of opinion amongst the Canadian people when it comes to dealing with problems of this nature. There is a frank recognition of the difficulties in attaining administrative perfection. It is not easy to set up machinery which will accomplish what all the people would like to accomplish, namely, a measure of generous consideration for all those who have risked their lives for this country as well as the widows and dependents of those who are no more. I think that statement can be made with certainty That being so, the problem is a simple one. From the standpoint of administration the problem is merely to set up the machinery which will enable the end to be attained; the complexity of the problem arises, however, in providing the details for the working of the machinery. The problem would seem to be how we can best attain the objective, and how in detail we can manage to deal with every set of conditions which may arise. We must decide how we can best meet the many difficulties that arise in connection with determining the cause of disability.

No doubt this bill will bring satisfaction to those whom it is intended to assist. As far as I have been able to learn from reading, from listening to the minister and from what I have been told, the measure deals with all those cases which experience has taught have not been adequately dealt with under existing legislation. Where the existing legislation has been unsatisfactory it has been repealed and satisfactory provisions have been substituted. So far as the general principle of giving the applicant for pension the benefit of the doubt is concerned, it will be observed that the section clears up the difficulty, so far as the matter lends itself to reasonable legislative enactment. The benefit of the doubt is, of course, a difficult term to define; it has never been defined easily. In cases which have engaged the attention of civil courts the judges in charging juries have pointed out the circumstances of particular cases, and they have laid down the principle that if there be doubt upon the evidence such doubt must be resolved according to certain rules dictated by the judges. In this particular instance the circumstances, evidence and medical opinions are to be considered by the tribunal set up by the bill. Where there is reasonable certainty in the minds of the tribunal, where they can point to certain definite circumstances, and to medical opinions and the other evidence presented before them, they may be in a position to state clearly that there is no doubt as to the cause of the disability or of the right of the applicant to pension. On the other hand, where there is wavering uncertainty as to whether or not the evidence to which I have alluded warrants a definite conclusion, then there is difficulty. To my mind that is the most distinctive section of the measure before us and I think it will meet with universal approval; the psychological value of it is not less than the monetary advantage that may result. Psychologically it will tend to bring a state of satisfaction which to the minds of applicants has heretofore been lacking; it will convince those applicants that after all the country is behind them solidly and that the only difficulty has been the setting up of machinery to enable the people of Canada to express themselves in concrete terms through the medium of a statute. It will prove to those returned men that Canada is prepared to bring relief to those who, through their service, are no longer able to cope with the difficulties of life and carry on as they had done before they engaged in the conflict.

On behalf of those associated with me in this house I am happy to think that a measure of this character has not received partisan consideration; it has not been a party matter in any sense but on the contrary it represents the labour of a committee which has worked upon the problem with the one purpose in mind of securing a result which would bring happiness and contentment and such a measure of compensation as the circumstances warrant to those who by reason of their service have found themselves no longer physically able to carry on as before. I again desire to associate myself with the minister in congratulating the members of the pensions committee upon the wholly impartial, honest and honourable manner in which free from party bias or prejudice they approached the consideration of and found a solution for a great problem, which will without doubt give satisfaction to every man and woman in the country.

Sections 1 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On section 8—Compassionate pension.

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I draw your attention to the fact that apparently these bills are not properly printed?

Mr. POWER: These are all amendments to section 10.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 6 will be found on page 4 of the bill.

Section agreed to.

Sections 9 and 10 agreed to.

On section 11—Widow of pensioner.

Mr. LADNER: I wanted to ask the minister a question with respect to this section. This section provides, in short, that the widows of pensioners who draw pension during a period not exceeding ten years shall receive pension, but if the period is longer than ten years the widow does not receive a pension. This affects about 174 blind people and the more seriously disabled cases drawing 80 per cent pension and over.

Mr. THORSON: How?

Mr. LADNER: Because that is the class under this section. I understand—and I have this information also from parties in different parts of the country—that the soldiers' representative body, the Canadian Legion, desired to have that principle extended to a period longer than ten years, and it seems to me that once the principle is established—as it properly should be established—of granting a pension to the widows, it should not be cut off at the period of ten years. There is no good reason that I can see why, if a man lives and draws his 80 per cent pension for nine years and nine months, his widow should get a pension, while if he lives for ten years and one month his widow does not get a pension. I am going to suggest to the minister and to the committee that the principle should be extended for a longer period, and

I do that in the same spirit that has characterized this whole question and raised it above the level of party politics.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If my hon. friend does not object I should like to have the chairman of the special committee discuss this point. He is familiar with the discussion which took place when the matter came before the committee and I should like to have him give the views expressed in the committee on this question.

Mr. POWER: The suggestion made by my hon. friend was placed before the committee and throughly discussed. At the present time under section 32 (2) of the act, the widow of a pensioner who has died and who at the date of his death was in receipt of a pension in any of the classes 1 to 5 mentioned in schedule A, that is, in receipt of a pension of from 80 per cent to 100 per cent, or who, except for the provisions of subsection one of section 29 of the act, would have been in receipt of a pension in one of the said classes, shall be entitled to a pension as if he had died on service whether his death was attributable to his service or not, provided that the death occurs within ten years after the date of retirement or discharge or the date of commencement of pension.

This section was introduced quite a number of years ago largely to cover the cases of amputations. It was felt at that time, shortly after the war, that men who as a result of their war disabilities had to suffer amputation were under a certain handicap in the ordinary affairs of civilian life. That is, they were more apt to meet with an accident such as being run over by a motor car or a street car, or that kind of thing, than the ordinary pensioner. The soldier organizations at that time made a strong plea to the committee, and this section was inserted in the act. Since that time it has been felt that these men have been able now to find their feet, so to speak, and to get about better than they could earlier in their civilian experience, and it has not been thought necessary to extend the provisions.

However, under this present legislation we have gone this far: We date the ten years during which limitation does not lie from the time this pension of 80 per cent or more has been granted. Perhaps I might explain that a little further. A case arose in which a man had obtained a pension on a basis of, we will say, 15 per cent for an injured foot. Much later on he obtained a pension of 80 per cent or 90 per cent on account of some other disability or disease. He died, and when his widow came to claim pension, the board—wrongly and improperly I think—dated the beginning of his pension from the 15 per cent pension, and ruled that his widow was not entitled to any pension at all. It is in order to make that point clear that we have proposed the amendment now being discussed, but we have not touched the provision which existed in section 25, subsection 2, up to the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: Although there would be very few who would come under that now?

Mr. POWER: Not many.

Section agreed to.

On section 12—Pension to widow.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to make a comment, not upon this particlular section but in order to express a suggestion which might well be drawn to the attention of the government. This section reads as follows:

> Subsection one of section thirty-two of the said act, as enacted by section twenty-four of chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1928, is amended by striking out paragraphs (i) and (ii) and by substituting therefor the following as section 32a:

I have no objection to that particular amendment or to any of the amendments; this is a good bill, but this is what I should like to point out: It is highly desirable that these amendments, these new rights which are given to the soldiers, should be communicated to them as soon as possible. When we go home in a few days or a week or two, the men naturally will come to us wanting to know what has been done, and if we give them this bill how can they understand what are their rights? They will have to look up the revised statutes of 1927; then they will have to follow the sections into the amendments of 1928 and then piece them out with the aid of these amendments we are passing to-night. I only want to suggest that we cannot carry around the revised statutes; the men do not have those statutes, and I would suggest that although it is too late now to have the bill entirely reprinted, I think the department might, at the very earliest possible date, print what is called a consolidated office copy and distribute it as soon as possible not only to soldier organizations but also to the members; because it will greatly facilitate the men getting to know what are their rights, which is all-important.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that is an excellent suggestion, and it will be acted upon.

Section agreed to.

Sections 13 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

On section 17—Coming into force.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps it might be well to give some explanation of this section, which reads:

This act shall come into force on the first day of October, 1930, provided that any appointment required or authorized to be made thereunder may be made at any time after the first day of September, 1930, and any salary or other payment to which any person so appointed may be entitled shall be payable from the date of his appointment.

I think the reason for this is fairly obvious. If it should happen that perchance there be a change in the status of the Dominion—

Mr. BENNETT: Not status; oh, no.

Mr. STEVENS: Administration.

Mr. POWER: Some of us think that the status of the Dominion would be seriously affected.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be greatly enhanced.

Mr. POWER: Should there be a change in the political situation, the members of the committee thought that the new government, from whichever political party it might be chosen, should have the opportunity of bringing this legislation into force. I have an amendment to offer, to be called section 18, but before presenting it perhaps a little explanation would be in order. The act provides for access to be given to the files of the department and of the pension board, and it has been pointed out in the past by the departmental officers that it would be well to protect to some degree the medical officers or others against whom a suit might be brought by those who might feel themselves injured by such reports.

Mr. BENNETT: They probably are protected in any event.

Mr. POWER: I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: There are decisions to that effect.

Mr. POWER: The committee counsel was also inclined to agree, but the officers of the department seemed to think that the medical men would not feel so secure unless it were specifically stated in the act that their position could not be assailed on account of any report which they might make in the course of their duty.

Mr. BENNETT: It is very desirable.

Mr. McGIBBON: All of which is a very bad principle.

Mr. POWER: The committee adopted this new section, which reads:

No action shall lie against any person by reason of anything contained in any report of any examination made for the purpose of this act or of part 1 of the Department of Pensions and National Health Act by any officer of or by any other person at the request of the commission, pension tribunal or the department.

I move, seconded by the Minister of Pensions and National Health, that this clause be added as section 18 of the bill.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have no objection to that except that I think it is a bad and vicious principle that will lead to inefficiency.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. POWER: On behalf of the members of the committee, and on my own behalf, I should like to thank the minister and the leader of the opposition for their kind cooperation and particularly for their remarks of this evening. May I add to what the leader of the opposition has said, that all the members of the committee, coming as they did from every political party, cooperated to the fullest extent possible. There were disagreements and differences of opinion in the committee, but there were none based on party allegiance; they were differences brought about by the interpretation of the act and based upon a desire to obtain by different methods the same result, namely the good of the soldier and the good of the country generally. I wish to thank the house for the assistance given in the passing of this legislation. The report of the committee was unanimous, and although we do not claim that the last word has been said in the matter of pension legislation, we hope that a step has been taken which will do away with many of the difficulties which have hitherto confronted us.

Mr. IRVINE: May I be permitted to express the hope that the splendid cooperation practiced in that committee will be extended in the new parliament to all matters of legislation.

Mr. MANION: On behalf of those on this side of the house who were members of the special committee, I would like to associate myself with the chairman of the committee in my expression of satisfaction at the manner in which all the members of the committee acted in this regard. During the last few years I have been on many committees, and I must confess that I have never attended any other committee where a greater desire was expressed to bring about satisfaction to the soldier and justice to the country.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Customs tariff—89. Vegetables, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the containers to be included in the weight for duty: (a) Beans, baked or otherwise prepared, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1¼ cents; general tariff, 1½ cents.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the minister not think in connection with the amendments to all these items, that they should be printed and not finally passed until we have an opportunity of seeing them in print?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no amendment in this case.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but I refer to the matter the minister mentioned this afternoon. He is amending the tariff on fruits and vegetables.

Mr. DUNNING: The vegetable items have all been passed.

Mr. BENNETT: They are passed as amended.

Mr. DUNNING: We shall come in a short time to the fruit items and then we can consider the matter.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—89(b). Corn and potatoes, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1¼ cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—89(c). Peas, per pound: British preferential tariff, 1 cent; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Irvine.]

Customs tariff—89(d). N.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—90. Vegetables, prepared or preserved:

(a) Dried, desiccated or dehydrated, including vegetable flour, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(b) Pickled or preserved in salt, brine, oil or in any other manner, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

(c) Vegetable extracts or juices, liquid mustards, soy and vegetable sauces of all kinds: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

(d) Pastes, hash and all similar products, composed wholly of vegetables or of vegetables and meats or fish or both, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—91. Soups, soup rolls, tablets, cubes or other soup preparations, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon such goods produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such goods entering Canada from such country.

Mr. BENNETT: The only change in this item is a reduction of 2½ per cent under the British preference.

Mr. DUNNING: And the countervailing provision.

Mr. BENNETT: So far as the countervailing provision is concerned, it is obvious the minister is not in a position to say anything about what the rate may be. That depends upon what other countries may do.

Mr. DUNNING: The present United States tariff is 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—92. Fruits, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty:

(a) Apricots: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that when imported under general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: This is the first of the fruit items, and I will ask the Minister of Agriculture to move this amendment for me:

That the following be substituted for tariff item 92(a):

92(a). Apricots: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate from June 15 to August 15, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. COOTE: What justification is there for including the weight of the package in the weight for duty? Surely there cannot be any reason for that.

Mr. DUNNING: As I explained this afternoon in connection with vegetables, the matter of the minimum specific rate per pound was considered in relation to the administrative difficulty of dealing with the packages. Undoubtedly, if the packages were eliminated, administrative difficulty in operation would arise; and in addition, one would have to consider the effect upon the minimum specific rate. My hon. friend, of course, appreciates the fact that the weight of the package is not considered when the goods are entering under the ad valorem rate. It becomes a factor only in that short period from June 15 to August 15 inclusive when the minimum specific rates apply.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But when the ad valorem rate does not reach the specific rate, the specific rate counts?

Mr. DUNNING: Only during that period from June 15 to August 15 inclusive, in accordance with the amendment that has just been moved.

Mr. COOTE: It is only in those months one would ever import apricots, and I am sure there are some seasons when there are not enough apricots shipped from British Columbia to begin to supply the prairies. While we are on this item, I may say that it is because of what I consider an unwarranted increase in the duty on fruits and vegetables so far as they affect the prairie people that I was prompted to oppose the budget. I could not see any justification for some of the proposed increases. I wish to protest emphatically against the inclusion of the weight of the package in the weight for duty purposes on many of these fruits. It seems to me unreasonable.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Can the minister tell us what was the value of fruits, if any, imported under item 92 under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: They all came from the United States last year, $122,000 worth.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Nothing at all imported under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: Not last year.

Mr. LUCAS: Under the old item the rates are thirty-five cents, forty-five cents and fifty cents. I presume that was per crate.

Mr. DUNNING: Per hundredweight.

Mr. LUCAS: What would be the increase or decrease in duty under the new provision?

Mr. DUNNING: Under the minimum specific rate obtaining from June 15 to August 15 inclusive, there will be an increase in the rate of duty of one-half cent per pound.

Mr. BENNETT: Do I understand the minister is now introducing what is called a seasonal tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: In connection with apricots, on the same principle as I indicated in connection with vegetables.

Mr. BENNETT: May I point out that the minister in his budget speech took a rather different view of the matter?

Mr. DUNNING: I said so this afternoon.

Mr. BENNETT: May I point out that under British parliamentary practice no chancellor of the exchequer would for a minute be permitted in committee of ways and means to change his tariffs? Thas is one thing upon which the British House of Commons is exceedingly insistent, the reason being obvious, that when a policy has been announced touching the whole scheme of taxation, the chancellor cannot change it because, as for instance in this case, taxes for twenty days have been paid under the budget scheme. Now we are to substitute another one for it. A refund of taxation, if there be any, cannot benefit the consumers and in any event, the new provisions becoming effective to-night, the result is that a large number of consumers in Canada have been made to pay something which the government now says they should never have paid. That is the reason why, in England, under our parliamentary system, no chancellor would be permitted and no chancellor would dare to suggest such changes in his tariff proposals. He might change the language of an item; he might change the terms in which it is expressed; but he does not change the whole system and scheme of taxation. Under our budget system the moment the budget is announced it becomes operative. That has been the British parliamentary practice, and it has grown up here. I was amused this morning at receiving a letter from the United States complaining that goods in transit had been struck by this tariff. The hon. minister has received many such complaints, no doubt.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend means United States goods in transit to Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, which had been hit by this tariff, and which they say operates retroactively. The permanent official sitting beside the minister has probably seen more of those communications than any other man in this chamber. The minister must see the effect of what was done this afternoon with regard to the fruit and vegetable schedules, and the effect with respect to this schedule. All I can do, having regard to the present state of public opinion, which is certainly the result of the conditions under which government has been carried on in this country for the last nine years, and is very lethargic, with a general tendency to endeavour to maintain a government in power by appealing to this group and that group and getting them across the floor to sit behind the government, with all the difficulties which the Prime Minister had in forming a government, which he has pointed out so frequently that his explanation is almost a classic, the assistance and support given to the government depending upon what the government will do for its supporters—under these circumstances the minister can see that all I can do is to protest against this violation of the general principles of British practice. Some day there will be a public opinion with respect to this matter. It may not be in my time, but there will certainly be a public opinion that will not permit a budget speech to be delivered containing a scheme and system of taxation which becomes operative when the budget is announced, and for the minister then to come into the house and change the system after twenty-seven men have been sitting in a room with the representatives of a particular industry, and the minister saying to them: Arrange this yourselves, and I will do it.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the effect. The minister is no more responsible for what he is doing now than some of his permanent officials. He has had a conference between certain gentlemen over there and others—

Mr. MORRISSY: Not over here.

Mr. BENNETT: I quite agree that the hon. gentleman was not present, and he resents it deeply. He should have been there. I say that such a practice is not consistent with the maintenance of the institutions that have grown up during these years, and if it is persisted in, as it will not be, some day it will bring about very disastrous results. We have already paid a rebate in connection with automobiles. Now we have a claim in connection with tea because we imposed an excise tax once on tea. Now we have the fruit and vegetable consuming population of Canada, who have been compelled to pay very large sums of money under a tariff that came into effect at midnight on the 1st of May, being told on the 20th of May that we are now to have a new scheme of taxation. In the meantime, how are you going to justify having taken that money from them for twenty days? What is your excuse going to be? What are you going to say to them for having put your hands in their pockets and taken that money ? That is the question. You are going to say: We tried to do something, and we were wrong, and having been wrong, we have now changed our minds; but we will make no restitution to those from whom we wrongfully took that which we took.

Mr. DUNNING: Like my hon. friend, I have a very great reverence and indeed almost an affection for British parliamentary procedure. But it must be recognized—I am sure it is recognized by my hon. friend and by all members of the committee—that of necessity Canadian parliamentary practice has developed in certain directions along lines slightly divergent from those followed in the old land. The reason is obvious to all. In England they have no general tariff system. Only a very few items in Great Britain are under a customs tariff. Our necessities in Canada for means of discussion and means of amendment developed a great many years ago. Although my hon. friend would imply that I am the first minister of finance in this country to come to the committee of ways and means with amendments to various schedules, due to developments in the interval since the bringing down of the budget, I think that if he will look back he will find that for many years back there has not been a single Canadian minister of finance who has not on occasion done the same thing.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh no, not changing the whole system.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend wants a specific instance, my mind goes back to the time when Sir Henry Drayton was Minister of Finance in this country in 1919 and 1920, when changes had to be made in committee of ways and means.

Mr. BENNETT: What were the changes, though?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not regard as anything out of the way the fact that we have created our own procedure, because our taxation system differs from that of the old land. A procedure must be created in order to enable a parliamentary body to deal with its own particular conditions, and there must necessarily arise from time to time, in connection particularly with revisions of a tariff structure, a tariff structure which does not exist in the old parliament at Westminster to anything like the same degree—

Mr. BENNETT: The budget of Mr. Churchill two years ago was a tariff budget.

Mr. DUNNING: In connection with a very few items indeed.

Mr. BENNETT: A very large number. There were silks, for instance.

Mr. DUNNING: A very small number in comparison with our budget.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not try to multiply.

Mr. DUNNING: The fact that a minister of finance suggests amendments in committee of ways and means is by no means new in the Canadian parliament. The changes suggested have so far commended themselves to the judgment of the committee, and I hope the few that remain to be attended to will also commend themselves to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister put together in Hansard the two new schedules that he has proposed, so that they can be seen together?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. As I read it, it will appear in Hansard—

Mr. STEVENS: But that is scattered through page after page.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend wants them all together?

Mr. STEVENS: Surely, in one statement.

Mr. DUNNING: I think that can be done.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. SHORT: The minister had all this information before him before he brought down his budget. Why did he not make his changes then? A strong delegation came here last year from the fruit and vegetable growers. A delegation of three hundred put their case up to the minister, and he knew every particle of it. He had all the information then that he has now. Why not have brought down these changes in the budget itself?

Mr. DUNNING: I have explained that several times.

Mr. SHORT: But not to the satisfaction of the house.

Mr. EVANS: I see items in this budget that are put on the free list when coming from the British Empire. That British preference is all right for some parts of Canada, but there is still one area of the Dominion that is discriminated against by these latest restrictions placed on the British preference, because all these goods carrying the preferential rate have to come in through a Canadian port. This entails a long haul from the maritime ports for a good part of the year to central Canada, which more than offsets any benefit under the British preferential rate. The prairies never get any benefit from lower tariff rates. Again, from the prairies to Vancouver there is a discriminatory freight rate, and I suppose it is the same from Vancouver back to the prairies. The fact is that for the three prairie provinces to get any benefit from the British preference, these restrictions should be taken off the entry of goods under that preference. In the west we have to buy practically all our fresh fruits, and this portion of the Dominion has been, and still is, discriminated against in almost every measure put through this house.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend please tell me how it would be of advantage to the west for fruits coming from other parts of the empire to enter through American ports rather than Canadian ports? I myself cannot see it.

Mr. EVANS: I think from the West Indies they could come through American ports to central Canada without entailing the long haul from the maritime ports to Ontario.

Mr. DUNNING: They can do that now.

Mr. EVANS: No, they must come in direct through a Canadian port.

Mr. DUNNING: Is there any American port that offers better or closer facilities? If so I should like to know.

Mr. EVANS: I think perhaps the terminus of the Canadian National Railways at Portland would be a much shorter haul. Then, as I say, if they come in through the western port of Vancouver there is the discriminatory freight rates before they are landed on the prairies.

Mr. DUNNING: Would there be any improvement if they came in through Seattle rather than Vancouver? I think if my hon. friend studies the question he will find the provision that goods to enjoy the British preference must come in through Canadian ports makes no difference whatever to western Canada.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, I understand that we are discussing item 91.

Mr. DUNNING: Item 92 (a).

Mr. CHAPLIN: When did we pass 91?

Mr. DUNNING: Some time ago.

AS AMENDED IN COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS, MAY 19 AND 20, 1930—Con.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have been in the house right along and I never heard "soups, soup rolls, tablets, cubes or other soup preparations" discussed.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugène Fiset): Item 91 was passed without discussion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I want to ask a question or two on that Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me to revert to it?

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugène Fiset): Certainly.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Another item that I did not hear discussed was 90 (d), pastes, hash and all similar products. At recess we were at vegetables, and had discussed 90 (a), (b) and (c), but had not touched 90 (d), or 91, soups and so on, as far as I know. Does the minister expect any more business to come under the British preference on these items?

Mr. DUNNING: What items is my hon friend referring to?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Item 90 (d) and item 91.

Mr. DUNNING: It is pretty hard on me, Mr. Chairman, to keep pace with the information required by hon. members when I have to revert to items already passed. If that were general it would mean an end of orderly discussion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have heard the word "orderly" before, and I am willing to wait for the minister. I am just as much interested in these items as the minister is, and I have been just as much in attendance as he has been. The minister promised from the beginning that he would give us information as to the imports and exports of these different items. Evidently this one was slid over in a hurry—at any rate I never noticed it.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will move to revert to item so and so, I shall not oppose the motion. But I do want to point out that it makes my task very much more difficult to have a discussion start on one item and run over into other items. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition spoke on this item, I moved an amendment and my hon. friend from Rosetown (Mr. Evans) spoke on it. I am merely asking for such cooperation as can reasonably be extended to me. At best this task is not particularly easy. If my hon. friend will move to revert to a specific item I shall not oppose his motion.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugène Fiset): Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Item 92 (a) as amended agreed to.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I move, Mr. Chairman, to revert to item 91.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DUNNING: Now it is agreed that we are on item 91. We have passed (a) as amended in item 92.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are our exports to the United Kingdom under item 91?

Mr. DUNNING: They were $343,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are our imports from the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: A very small amount, less than $3,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are the imports from the United States under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: They are $1,847,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: From these returns it is apparent that there is very little chance of any increased business under the British preference.

Mr. DUNNING: I would not agree with my hon. friend on that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not know how you could disagree. You have changed the duty by two and a half per cent. Great Britain shipped us $1,500 worth and we shipped them $343,000 worth.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend has overlooked the countervailing provision.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Well, the countervailing provision will have the effect, I hope, of this country making and exporting more soups. We sent Great Britain $343,000 worth, they sent us only $1,500 worth. If that is the basis on which the minister hopes to help Great Britain, I am satisfied it is on a pretty lame leg.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the American tariff against these articles?

Mr. DUNNING: It is thirty-five per cent.

Customs tariff—92(b). Cherries: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: In conformity with the amendment I moved in connection with apricots, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to move for me:

That the following be substituted for 92(b). Cherries:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than two cents per pound.

That, I may say, in the case of cherries is the old general rate. Also:

That the British preferential rate shall be free, the intermediate tariff, 15 per cent, and the general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I understood the Fordney-McCumber tariff was half a cent a pound on cherries entering the United States. Do the countervailing duties bring ours down to that amount?

Mr. DUNNING: The countervailing duties do not apply in connection with cherries or fruits generally.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: I want to discuss the duty on fruits. I do not wish to confine myself to the item under discussion at the present time. I would rather discuss generally the schedule in regard to fruits. Since the introduction of the budget I have been particularly concerned with the increases in the tariff on fruits.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I rise to a point of order. This afternoon we had an understanding that there would be no further reversion to general tariff or budget discussions. I think that understanding should be enforced, if we are going to do business.

Mr. LACOMBE: We are considering the budget.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order is well taken. It was the desire of the minister that we should discuss each item as called.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. gentleman who has just risen to address the committee has not imposed upon our time to any great extent. Judging from his opening remarks I think he will be able to speak on one of the fruit items to illustrate the point he has in mind.

Mr. MANION: How does the minister know what is in the mind of the hon. gentleman? He has not yet stated the particular item in which he is interested.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: I wish to meet the wishes of the committee. As the minister has said, I have not taken up the time of the committee in the discussion of these items. I am interested because my constituents are interested, but if the committee prefers I shall confine my remarks to the item of strawberries and raspberries which appears later on the sheet.

Mr. DUNNING: That would be better.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: I am quite willing to wait until that item is reached; I shall then make my statement to the committee.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—92(c). Cranberries: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment in this case is:

Cranberries:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate the duty shall be not less than 2½ cents per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. MANION: I may have been out of the chamber when the minister explained why he made the changes. What is the purpose of these changes?

Mr. DUNNING: I did explain the changes, but my hon. friend is always very courteous and I shall be pleased to explain them again. The same principle applies as applied in the case of vegetables with which we dealt this afternoon. After much difficulty the growers have agreed upon the seasons which they think will be suitable, and instead of making the specific minimum to apply the year round I now propose that it apply for a short season. Also, instead of the ad valorem rates being as they were originally—free, 20 per cent and 25 per cent, I now propose that they be: free, 15 per cent and 20 per cent.

Mr. MANION: I asked why the change was made to 15 per cent and 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a matter of bringing the two into conformity with each other, on account of the other change.

Mr. RYERSON: I did not clearly understand the minister as to the effect of the change produced by the amendment. Before he answers I would like to point out that cranberries are not produced to any extent in this country.

Mr. DUNNING: Are they not produced in this country?

Mr. RYERSON: Not in marketable quantities.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, I think so.

Mr. RYERSON: There are a few grown in the maritime provinces and probably a few in the north country, but 99 per cent of the cranberries used in this country are of the imported variety. As it stands at the present time the tariff will work a considerable hardship on the consumer.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment which I have proposed effects a reduction.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—92(d). Peaches: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment in this case is:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from July 20 to October 1, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than 1¼ cents per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. SPENCER: Why is the tariff put on the percentage basis this year as compared with a poundage basis last year?

Mr. DUNNING: There is a wide range in the values of these articles which come into the country in one season of the year virtually as luxuries and at another season of the year as articles of common consumption by all the people. The old specific duties of so much per hundredweight levied a much lower duty on the articles termed luxuries than the articles used for common consumption. The provision for an ad valorem rate ensures that there will be some reasonable parity on the basis of ad valorem, particularly when the article is consumed as a luxury at some period in the year.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—92(e). Pears: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than ¾ cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment in this case is:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from August 1 to December 31, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than ¾ cent per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—92(f). Plums or prunes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less thna ¾ cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment in this case is:

Plums or prunes:

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from July 15 to October 31, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than ¾ cent per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—92(g). Strawberries, raspberries and loganberries: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than 3 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment in this case is:

Strawberries, raspberries and loganberries: Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from June 1 to July 31, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than 3 cents per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. CANTLEY: Would the Minister of Finance tell me the quantity of strawberries exported from Canada to the United States last year?

Mr. DUNNING: There was exported $37,000 worth.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is the rate of duty when entering the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: It is 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. CANTLEY: I would like to point out that during the last two or three years a considerable quantity of strawberries has gone into Boston and the cities in Massachusetts adjacent to the province of Nova Scotia. I was wondering what effect the minister's proposal would have on that trade.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I am pleased with the changes the minister is now making in these schedules. Certainly I was very much disturbed when the budget was brought down to note the increases in the tariff particularly on fruits. While I have a great sympathy for the producer of fruits and I know that in many cases he does not get the cost of production for his product, on the other hand I must remember the cost of fruit to the people whom I represent in Manitoba particularly, and I just want to bring to the attention of the committee the prices we pay for fruits such as these, particularly berries and apples.

Last year, while travelling between Brandon and Calgary, I was fortunate enough to encounter the present premier of British Columbia on his way home, after having been in Ottawa. Discussing this matter of fruit and fruit prices on the prairies, I told him what we had to pay for raspberries and strawberries, and he was horrified. I asked him what the producer in British Columbia usually got for his strawberries per quart, and he said that if he got six or seven cents he thought he was doing very well. I said, "Well, what do you think we pay for them in Manitoba?" He said he did not know; he thought possibly we paid sixteen or seventeen cents a quart. My wife had paid in the early part of the summer thirty-three cents a quart, or $8 for a case of twenty-four quart boxes of strawberries. Before I left Ottawa, when I visited the markets here I discovered that the people were bringing in strawberries at the end of the season in pails and baskets, and could not sell them for the cost of picking. When I got home I found that my people had been paying $8 a case for strawberries, which worked out at about 33 cents for a small quart box.

If it is true, as the premier of British Columbia told me—and I have no reason to believe it is not true; as a matter of fact I know it to be the truth—that the growers out there get only seven cents a box, suppose we add seven cents a box, which would give the jobber 100 per cent on his money; that would bring the price up to 14 cents. Then suppose we give the retail merchant 100 per cent on his money, which would bring the price up to 28 cents per box, leaving 5 cents a box to pay for freight, and I am sure it does not cost that much from British Columbia to Manitoba. That is the situation with regard to fruit, particularly raspberries and strawberries, on the prairies. We have paid as high as $9 and $9.25 a case for raspberries and from $8 to $8.25 per case for strawberries. That is the usual price, from year to year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is it any wonder that we become alarmed when there is a suggestion that the duty on these articles should be raised? What is the trouble? Again in discussing the question with the gentleman to whom I referred, he made the statement that he would institute an inquiry into the matter and find out where the difficulty was, realizing that the growers of fruit in British Columbia and other parts of Canada were not getting the cost of production while we were being charged prices which we could not afford to pay. Let me point out to the committee the $8 a case for strawberries means the price of 10 bushels of wheat to buy one case of strawberries. How many people on the farms of Manitoba ever get a strawberry? Not 50 per cent of those people ever see one berry; they could not afford to buy them.

Mr. WARD: Not 15 per cent.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: Not 15 per cent, that is right, and the remainder get only a few berries occasionally. That is the situation as it prevails in Manitoba, and I have no doubt throughout the prairie sections of Canada to-day. I would like to suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or since he is not here to the Minister of Agriculture, while I agree that it is perfectly proper to establish trade relationships with other countries and appoint trade commissioners there, here is a place where we could use internal trade commissioners to find out what is the matter between the growers of fruit and we who consume it. I do not know that apples are in a different position from the berries, as far as we are concerned, and perhaps if I may be pardoned I might refer to apples while I am on my feet because I do not wish to come back to this question. A few years ago we used to buy apples by the barrel, and we used to get them at from $3.25 to $3.75 per barrel. The consequence was that we had all the apples we wanted. Now we get them mostly by the box.

Mr. STIRLING: Are those Ontario apples?

Mr. STEEDSMAN: Yes.

Mr. GOULET: You can buy them by the barrel yet.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: Yes, but we pay $10 to $11, and I have paid as high as $12 for them. We pay from $2.75 to $3 a box, and there are three and a fraction boxes in a barrel, which brings it up to somewhere between $9 and $12 a barrel. The result is that the people in the part of country from which I come are buying a box of apples instead of a barrel; they are not getting the amount of fruit they need or desire, simply because they cannot afford to buy it. If there is any man here who thinks the people of the prairies, especially the agriculturists, can afford to exchange the price of 10 bushels of wheat for one little case of strawberries, I should like to know how it can be done.

I want to enter my protest, Mr. Chairman, against the system, not particularly against these duties, because we must realize that a cent a box on strawberries is not going to make much difference when we already pay $8 a case, or 33 cents a box for them.

Mr. MALONEY: In regard to the statement that it takes 10 bushels of wheat to buy one small case of strawberries, I should like to remind the hon. gentleman of the fact that if he is anxious to see this country developed and built up he must support our own fruit industry as well as everything else. To-day in Ontario and the eastern section of Canada we are prepared to buy western wheat in preference to any other, even if it costs $10 a bushel. I should also like to remind hon. members opposite that while they are growing wheat in the west, at the same time they could grow strawberries. They grow vegetables and other articles which have been discussed here to-night, and there is no reason why they should not grow berries as well. Let me say also that a properly canned strawberry is infinitely superior to some of the poor stuff we get from outside this country during our off season. In order to maintain our home market for strawberries and all these other delicacies we are ready to use the preserved articles rather than bring in from the outside something that will interfere with the market of the farmers in this country. We are told that the west is suffering; why not develop the British Columbia fruit market? There is no better fruit in the world than that produced in British Columbia; we buy it down here together with Nova Scotia fruit, and we grow our own as well. Let the west get together with the east and British Columbia and the maritime provinces, and then indeed this country will be prosperous.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—92(h). Berries, edible, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.
Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than 2 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment in this case is just to change the rates to free under the British preferential tariff; 15 per cent under the intermediate tariff, and 20 per cent under the general tariff.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—92(i). Quinces and nectarines: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.
Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than one cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment makes no change in the body of the item, but changes the rates to free under the British preferential tariff; 15 per cent under the intermediate tariff, and 20 per cent under the general tariff.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—93. Apples, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.
Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than three-fifths of a cent per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment proposed is simply in connection with the ad valorem rates, to make them free under the British preferential tariff; 15 per cent under the intermediate tariff, and 20 per cent under the general tariff.

Mr. WHITE (London): What difference is there between the old rate of 90 cents and the new rate of 25 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: The minimum of three-fifths of a cent per pound is based upon the old 90 cent rate.

Mr. STIRLING: Is the minister going to have some remarks to make later on regarding an emergency tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. SHORT: How many apples were imported into this country last year from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports in 1929 were valued at $944,000, of which $917,000 worth came from the United States and $25,800 worth from New Zealand. In the same year Canada exported apples to the value of $4,867,000, of which $3,844,000 worth went to the United Kingdom. I believe those would be Nova Scotia apples.

Mr. SHORT: How many apples were exported to the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: I am coming to that. The exports to the United States were valued at $252,000; to Belgium, $311,000, and to Newfoundland, $100,000.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—94. Grapes, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no amendment in this instance.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is there any provision made for crushed grapes?

Mr. DUNNING: They would come under the item covering fruit pulp; this item covers grapes in their natural state.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understand that last year a considerable importation of grapes was made under the classification of fruit pulp. It is quite obvious that grapes could not be classified as fruit pulp, because it would necessitate including the skins, stalks and stones. In order to beat the customs department, someone had an order passed by the department to the effect that crushed grapes were to be classified as fruit pulp, and in that way they saved themselves the small item of $30 per ton on many thousands of tons of grapes.

Mr. DUNNING: By having them classified as fruit pulp?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes. The farmers in my county are interested in the growing of grapes, and it has been found that certain people have been allowed to—I would like to have the minister's attention for a moment.

An hon. MEMBER: Go ahead and talk.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I will go ahead just when it suits me. This is a matter of interest, not only to the people of Canada but to the minister. There are in the province of Ontario over fifty wine manufacturers. Some operate in the grape growing districts, while others are outside of those districts and have the grapes shipped to the factory. Several of these manufacturers were able to obtain special privileges —I do not mean that they were tipped off, but the whole trade was not notified of the regulation passed by the department, and everyone was not put upon an equal basis—whereby they were enabled to import several thousand tons of grapes upon the payment of a duty of $10 per ton, while others had to pay $40 per ton. The result was that the farmers in my district got the worst of it.

Mr. DUNNING: This happened last year?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Last year particularly, but to some extent the year before. They crossed the Niagara river with a tractor, or some other means of providing power, and set a crusher up through which they passed the grapes. They did not require a building to operate in, they simply crossed the river and set up their machinery in the open field. Let me tell the minister of one instance: The machinery did not work, but they filled the barrels with grapes and had a boy tramp a few down, and were able to cross the border and have those grapes classified as fruit pulp.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot quite follow my hon. friend, and perhaps he can clear up the point for me. Item 105, which we have not yet reached, covers fruit pulp, but this item is a new one, except with regard to fruit pulp coming in from Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Fruit pulp was covered before by the tariff.

Mr. STIRLING: You mean under 96?

Mr. CHAPLIN: It was under that classification that this stuff was brought in.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no desire to contradict my hon. friend, but as far as we can discover, instead of coming in as fruit pulp under the item just referred to which relates to Australia and New Zealand, it must have come in as fruit, n.o.p., at 25 per cent, which would produce the result he spoke of.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not certain as to the item under which it was brought in.

Mr. DUNNING: That is important in this discussion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It was brought in as crushed fruit. It came in under a different item.

Mr. DUNNING: It would.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It did not come in as grapes, as it ought to have done. It came in on the basis of $10 a ton.

Mr. DUNNING: That would be 25 per cent. That would be about right would it not?

Mr. STIRLING: It came in under item 96 of the old tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: That is fruit, n.o.p.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is why I asked the minister whether there had been any change to take care of crushed grapes. Grapes could not be crushed with other fruit to make fruit pulp, because, as I explained before, you would have to separate the skins, stalks and stones to make it so that it could be mixed up, otherwise the rest of the fruit would be spoiled. I think it would be well, therefore, for the minister to take care of that item right alongside the grape item by inserting an item "crushed grapes," so that there would be no misunderstanding. Under item 105, fruit pulp, the duty has been changed more than sufficiently to take care of the price situation.

Mr. DUNNING: "Fruit pulp" is certainly intended to include crushed grapes. When grapes are crushed they are a pulp, and as a matter of ruling they would undoubtedly come in as fruit pulp. I can assure my hon. friend that was the intention.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Item 105 reads, "fruit pulp, with sugar or not." If sugar were put with the grapes, the whole thing would be fermented before it arived.

Mr. DUNNING: But the item reads: "with sugar or not." Whether the pulp has sugar in it or not, it comes in under that item. That is the intention.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What objection can there be to putting grapes by themselves? They are not changed because they have been crushed. They are not fruit pulp in the same sense as other fruit pulp. They cannot be mixed with anything else and be called fruit pulp. You can take the pulp of certain fruits and mix them all together and they are imported in that form. Some are being brought in at present in that form.

Mr. DUNNING: When we have a fruit pulp item, what difference does it make whether the pulp consists of one fruit or two or three fruits mixed? I am sure I cannot get my hon. friend's point that crushed grapes are not covered under the item "fruit pulp." If one kind of fruit is pulped, it is just as much fruit pulp as if two or three kinds of fruit are put together and pulped. From the point of view of customs administration, if it is a fruit that is pulped or crushed, as my hon. friend describes the condition of the grapes, it cannot be anything other than fruit pulp. The fruit pulp item being incorporated in the tariff now takes the crushed grapes out of the item into which it was formerly ruled, namely, fruit n.o.p. If fruit pulp is present as an item in the tariff, nobody is going to put crushed grapes into "fruit, n.o.p." when there is such a close description as fruit pulp. Therefore I think we have crushed grapes covered.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We have had one experience of what will be done by somebody and it was a pretty costly one. If the minister wants to get an orderly tariff, why should crushed grapes not be put alongside of grapes, or why not have one item, "grapes or crushed grapes"?

Mr. DUNNING: We then would have to consider the possibility of difficulty arising as between crushed grapes as a separate item and fruit pulp as a separate item. If the people of whom my hon. friend has been speaking are capable of the acts to which he refers, they would be capable of some little juggling in order to get whatever advantage might accrue at any time as between the two items. If my hon. friend gives consideration to the matter, I think he will see that crushed grapes are fruit pulp. There is in the tariff no other item that can describe them. In the old tariff there is no fruit pulp item save in connection with Australia and New Zealand. Consequently, when these grapes were crushed, as my hon. friend points out, they were dealt with under "fruit, n.o.p." and they came in at 25 per cent, instead of under the specific tariff which is provided in the grape item, thus bringing about the result which he indicated. From the time the budget came down, the crushed grapes become definitely fruit pulp, because there is in the tariff an item which will apply to them. I want to meet my hon. friend as far as I can, but I think his suggestion would tend to involve further confusion as between crushed grapes on the one hand and fruit pulp on the other. It is clearly understood that crushed grapes go into the fruit pulp item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It may be clearly understood now, but it was not before.

Mr. DUNNING: Because there was no fruit pulp item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: For twenty years there has been a duty of so much a pound on grapes, and suddenly, in one year, grapes are brought in crushed at a duty of one-half cent per pound as against two cents per pound. How does the minister account for that?

Mr. DUNNING: Because there was no provision in the tariff for it. I am making provision for it now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There was for grapes. It is suspicious to me that all at once millions of pounds of this commodity should be brought in.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows that I have nothing to do with the administration of the law.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I quite understand that. That is why I am taking the trouble to call the minister's attention to the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: When a difficulty arose which was called to my attention by importers and fruit growers, I cast around for the best way in which to deal with it and the best way appeared to be to have a fruit pulp item which would apply to all kinds of fruit.

Mr. MALONEY: What is meant by fruit pulp?

Mr. DUNNING: Any kind of fresh fruit which is crushed and pulped, and imported in that state.

Mr. MALONEY: Does that not exclude the skins?

Mr. DUNNING: Technically, no.

Mr. MALONEY: Then there is more than pulp in it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Along with these items there comes another one which I do not notice in the tariff, but which relates to the same commodity. I refer to grape juice.

Mr. DUNNING: I think there is a grape-juice item further down the list, if my hon. friend will wait until we reach it.

Mr. STIRLING: I have not found it. Hitherto grape juice, I believe, has come in under number 152.

Mr. DUNNING: I am in error. If my hon. friend from Lincoln wants to discuss grape juice, perhaps this would be the place to do so, in view of the absence of an item dealing with it in the schedule.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: Under what category is grape juice going to come in and at what rate?

Mr. DUNNING: Under the existing tariff.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister does not intend to make any change in that item?

Mr. DUNNING: Not at present.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Grape juice is on the basis of 25 cents a gallon, is it not?

Mr. DUNNING: The general tariff is 22½ per cent at present.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Does the minister know what 22½ per cent represents on a ton of grapes?

Mr. DUNNING: This is grape juice.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understand, but does the minister know how many pounds of grapes it takes to make a gallon of grape juice?

Mr. DUNNING: I am advised that a ton will produce 160 gallons. The equivalent would be about 25 cents a gallon.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Twenty-five cents a gallon is the value, and 22½ per cent on 25 cents is a duty of about 5½ cents a gallon. A duty of 5½ cents a gallon represents less than the duty collected last year on crushed grapes. In other words, the wine manufacturers who use crushed grapes, in my opinion illicitly, took out of the treasury of this country on the amount of grapes they brought in last fall, in my opinion illicitly, the sum of $100,000; and now the minister is letting them do the same thing with respect to grape juice. The amount of duty on grape juice is just about equal to the duty that they would have to pay on the crushed grapes. In other words, the farmers in my district think they have a duty of 2 cents a pound on grapes, and the minister is allowing the wineries to bring in grapes from the United States on the basis of one half a cent a pound. That is what it means. This matter was before the tariff board. The board, as I understand it, had practically promised a certain tariff; the item was in there, and then it was nipped out.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend must know that the tariff board has no authority to promise a tariff to anybody, and I am quite sure that he is in error in stating that the tariff board ever promised it. There was no public hearing on the question of grape juice. A great many representations have been made to me; my hon. friend himself introduced a deputation on the subject, but I am not satisfied that all the information on this matter has been publicly developed, and I would like to see it publicly developed. I am prepared to facilitate its development, but I am not prepared to jump at anything on grape juice just now. Crushed grapes I have attempted to deal with because that case was clearly discussed before the tariff board. When my hon. friend goes further and suggests that at this time we are in a position, from the point of view of information from all those interested, to deal with grape juice, I am sorry that I cannot meet him.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister might take his information from this side of the house on that matter as well as on other parts of his budget.

Mr. CHAPLIN: One part of the day the minister seems to be anxious to take information from the tariff board. I can tell him that the matter of grapes and crushed grapes was decided upon.

Mr. DUNNING: I must contradict that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That grapes and crushed grapes were not decided upon?

Mr. DUNNING: Grapes and crushed grapes? The decision on that is right here in the tariff, yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The farmers' representatives who came here went home fully satisfied that everything was all right, including grape juice.

Mr. DUNNING: From a public hearing of the tariff board?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: Then I have no more to say.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They were notified two or three days before the budget came down that things were not all right, and they came down here again, and a few days afterwards I spoke to the minister about it.

Mr. DUNNING: As to concentrated grape juice—

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not speaking of concentrated grape juice.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows very well that that is the factor which has recently come into the situation. It is a new factor, and was brought to my attention by Sir Henry Drayton only a short time before the budget came down. As represented by the growers to me since, it is the most important factor in the situation from their point of view—that is a new and more concentrated form of grape juice. I want to know where we are going before we move. I do not intend to be rushed in these matters on the basis of fragmentary information.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The information I have given the minister about crushed grapes is not fragmentary.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend jumps from crushed grapes to grape juice, and back again.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Are they not all in the same category?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is no serious now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Not serious? The trouble is that the minister has made so many changes that he does not want to make another. As I said before, the grape juice matter was fixed, and then somebody comes along and it is changed again.

Mr. DUNNING: I must contradict my hon. friend. Grape juice was never included in the budget.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I never said that. I said that it was considered by the tariff board, and that the farmers went home from the hearing feeling that everything was all right. Then they were called back. It may be, as the minister says, that in view of the concentrated grape juice factor he wants to examine the whole question again. If that is so, I have no more to say.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the position. I think my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know it now.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knew the difficulties in connection with the matter when he brought the delegation to see me, because they were then discussed. He also knows the new difficulty which arose only a very few days before the budget was delivered. Information came to us regarding the concentrated grape juice factor, or rather a concentrate of grape juice. He knows himself how recent that is.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is so recent that there has been none imported. That is how recent it is.

Mr. DUNNING: That is how recent it is.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In other words, there has been no difficulty in connection with it. That is more of an academic difficulty than anything else.

Mr. DUNNING: The delegation that my hon. friend brought to see me did not represent it as academic.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They knew nothing about it from experience.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I wish to take issue with the minister, and I have the dictionary to support me. Crushed grapes could in no sense be considered to be fruit pulp, because if my hon. friend will look at the definition of pulp, it is the soft succulent part of fruit. That would certainly not include the skins and stones. If the minister really wishes to take care of the situation in regard to which an hon. member of this house says that he thinks this country has been bled of $100,000 in revenue, he can very easily put in the term "crushed grapes." That is all that is necessary. Suppose that instead of $100,000 the country has lost only a quarter of that; the insertion of just a word there will clear the matter up. Crushed grapes, with the dictionary behind me, I submit are not fruit pulp.

Mr. DUNNING: Undoubtedly the intention was to include it in fruit pulp, and I believe the customs department indicated that if there was a fruit pulp item, which would be the item previously in the tariff, crushed grapes and everything of that kind would be ruled as coming within it. I am inclined to try, if possible, to please my hon. friend from Lincoln. I know it is rather a difficult task. It is pointed out to me, as I stated before, that by including crushed with the fresh grapes we have the possibility of crushed grapes being included in fruit pulp or in this item at the discretion of the customs board. While I should like to please my hon. friend from Lincoln and those whom he represents in the matter, I desire to avoid any possibility of difficulty.

Mr. STEVENS: If the item is specifically mentioned it would not go into another item that is general in its terms.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend would desire crushed grapes to be in the fresh grapes item?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I certainly would. I think it is the only sensible way of doing it. It leaves it beyond peradventure.

Mr. DUNNING: In order to get a little advice from the national revenue department in regard to the matter, would it be satisfactory to let item 94 stand?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Certainly. I would very much prefer to see it there, but if there is good reason why it should be put somewhere else I do not think it will make a great deal of difference.

Item 94 stands.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Customs tariff—95. Cantaloups and muskmelons, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, the duty shall be not less than one and one-half cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: I desire to amend this item by substituting the following:

Cantaloups and muskmelons, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Provided that when imported under the general tariff rate, from July 20 to October 31, inclusive, the duty shall be not less than one and one-half cents per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—95(a). Melons, n.o.p., each: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—96. Fruits, fresh, in their natural state, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There will be the following changes in the rates to conform with the other changes:

British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. MANION: What have been the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: About $1,700,000.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—97. Plantains, pineapples, pomegranates, guavas and mangoes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—98. Bananas, when imported from the place of growth by ship, direct to a Canadian port, per stem or bunch: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 50 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Mr. MANION: Through what ports do we get our bananas at the present time?

Mr. DUNNING: The only change here is to provide for the re-numbering. Following the inauguration of the direct steamship service with the West Indies at the beginning of the fiscal year 1929-30, the old item 90b was cancelled on May 2, 1929, after which date bananas entered Canada under two items, 90c and 90d. Imports under the old item 90b during the fiscal year 1928-29 were valued at $5,246,000, of which $5,207,000 came from the United States, and $39,000 from Jamaica. That was before the new arrangement went into effect. It has not been possible to obtain an advance publication of statistics of imports during the year just closed. I know we have brought in a tremendous quantity from the West Indies.

Mr. MANION: Through Canadian ports?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. RYERSON: I think we should have figures of the quantity imported under the new arrangement.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Speaking from memory, I think Sir Henry Thornton said that about a million bunches came by Halifax.

Mr. MANION: What were the proportions by Canadian ports and from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: The information is not available. In a general way I can say the arrangement is developing very fast indeed via our own Canadian National steamship service.

Mr. STEVENS: According to Sir Henry Thornton, about a million bunches came in by St. John and a million bunches by Halifax.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think it will be found that practically all the bananas coming into Canada to-day enter through Canadian ports. The United Fruit Company formerly brought in bananas through Boston. With the change of duty last year they brought in the great bulk through St. John. The West Indies steamers brought them in through both Halifax and St. John, and in the summer months through Montreal. So practically all our bananas now come in through Canadian ports.

Mr. RYERSON: I beg to disagree with that statement. Very few bananas from Jamaica go west of Port Arthur; those reaching points further west come the other way from the Pacific coast.

Mr. DUNNING: I have some proof sheets of figures from the statistical department, which I have every reason to believe are correct. The total imports from the United States for the fiscal year 1930 were, 1,188,000 bunches, and from Jamaica 2,729,000 bunches. The trade completely turned over in the fiscal year 1930 as compared with the previous year.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—98a. Bananas, n.o.p., per stem or bunch: British preferential tariff, 50 cents; intermediate tariff, 50 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—99. Bananas, dried or evaporated, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ½ cent; general tariff, ½ cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—99a. Dates and figs, dried; plums and prunes, dried, unpitted; per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ⅜ cent; general tariff, ⅜ cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—99b. Fruits, dried, desiccated, evaporated or dehydrated, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—100. Grapefruit, when imported from the place of growth by ship, direct to a Canadian port, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ½ cent; general tariff, 1 cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—100a. Grapefruit, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, ½ cent; intermediate tariff, 1 cent; general tariff, 1 cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—102. Limes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—105. Fruit pulp, with sugar or not, n.o.p., and fruits, frozen, per pound: British preferential tariff, 1½ cents; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

Mr. DUNNING: In view of the fact that we are allowing the item of grapes to stand I think it would be just as well to let stand the item concerning fruit pulp until we have made the necessary inquiries in regard to crushed grapes.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—105a. Lemon and orange rinds and citron in brine: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—105b. Olives and cherries in brine, not bottled: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. SPENCE: I would like to ask the amount of imports of cherries from France and Italy.

Mr. DUNNING: This extends the former item No. 89. The new item will include cherries, whereas the old item did not. It seemed to the department that cherries in brine should be placed with olives in brine. Previously cherries were not included. Olives were imported to the value of $75,000, of which $43,000 worth came from the United States and $26,000 worth came from Greece. The new wording will also include olives in bulk for the manufacture of pickles, which in 1929 entered to the value of $269,000, of which total sum $224,000 worth came from Spain and $34,000 worth came from the United States. As far as cherries in brine are concerned they were formerly included as pickles under item 88, but the value was not traceable. We cannot tell how much came in because they were mixed with pickles in general.

Mr. SPENCE: This is a very important fact, and represents one of the worst features with which the fruit trade of this country has had to contend since the French treaty was passed. At the present time there is no demand whatever for cherries in Canada. The extract people and the people who used them are importing their cherries from Italy and France by the barrel and by the carload while Canadian cherries are not used. It was found that the Richmond cherry was not satisfactory, and the growers developed the Montmorency cherry which was satisfactory for the Canadian trade. When the French treaty was signed the extract people, who are the chief importers, brought cherries from France and Italy, and the result is that there is no sale for Canadian cherries no matter how good they may be. Sweet cherries are sold in considerable quantities, however. A few years ago the growers planted thousands of trees to accommodate the trade, and as a result of the transfer of trade they have had to tear them out. The French treaty was agreed to in 1923 and from that date forward the sale of cherries has dwindled. You now propose a further reduction of about 10 per cent in the duty. In my opinion, instead of reducing the tariff 10 per cent it should be increased a like amount. The cherry interests which at one time represented one of the greatest fruit industries are now almost completely wiped out. There must have been hundreds of thousands of tons imported.

Mr. DUNNING: Cherries in brine came in as pickles, and under the French treaty they would have been carrying a duty of 32½ per cent.

[Mr. Spence.]

Mr. SPENCE: It is wonderful how this government has succeeded in killing the cherry industry in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—105c. Fruits and nuts, pickled or preserved in salt, brine, oil or any other matter, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—105d. Jellies, jams, marmalades, preserves, fruit pastes, fruit butters and condensed mince meats, per pound: British preferential tariff, 2¾ cents; intermediate tariff, 3¾ cents; general tariff, 3¾ cents.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What relation have jams, jellies and marmalades to condensed mince meats? Why should the condensed mince meats be included in this item?

Mr. DUNNING: There are certain common characteristics, one of which is the sugar element. I do not know where condensed mince meats could be placed if they were not included along with jams, jellies and preserves. They have always been included in this item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I had noticed that they were in the item, and I intended to inquire the reason.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend suggest where mince meats could be placed if they were not included in this item?

Mr. MANION: I suggest that they be included in a good pie.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—105(e). Fruits and peels, crystallized, glace, candied or drained; cherries and other fruits of creme de menthe, maraschino or other flavour: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—106. Fruits, prepared, in air-tight cans or other air-tight containers, the weight of the container to be included in the weight for duty:

(a) Apricots, peaches and pears, per pound: British preferential tariff, 1¾ cents; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 2¾ cents.

(b) Pineapples, per pound: British preferential tariff, ½ cent; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 2¾ cents.

(c) N.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, 1¾ cents; intermediate tariff, 2½ cents; general tariff, 2¾ cents.

Mr. MANION: What are the total imports under item 106?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports of peaches, under section (a) are valued at $787,000.

Mr. MANION: The total figures will be sufficient.

Mr. DUNNING: Of that total $712,000 worth came from the United States and $75,000 worth came from Australia. Of canned pears, of a total value of $108,000, $100,000 worth came from the United States and $8,000 worth from Australia. In the same year we exported, principally to the United Kingdom, canned pears to the value of $283,000.

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette) presented the seventh report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. GLEN moved:

That the recommendation contained in the seventh report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, respecting a refund of the fee and charges, less the cost of printing and translation, in connection with Bill No. 34, an Act to incorporate the Canadian Bible Society Auxiliary to the British and Foreign Bible Society, be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: I regret to say that this motion is not in order. The moment that fees are paid to the Clerk of Petitions of the House of Commons for the introduction of a bill or of any other measure, that money goes to the Receiver General, and a special vote in the estimates is required in order to return such fees or charges. The ruling was made last year after being considered by the Department of Finance that any money deposited in the House of Commons cannot be returned even though a bill is either withdrawn or passed. I declare this motion to be out of order.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure) moved that the second report of the joint committee of both houses on the printing of parliament, presented to the house on May 16, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PENSION OF LUDGER CARRIER

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, petitions and other documents, concerning the application for a pension for Ludger Carrier, formerly an employee of the Canadian National Railways at Riviere du Loup.

MABOU HARBOUR DREDGING

Mr. MACDOUGALL:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, petitions or other correspondence relating to dredging at Mabou harbour, Inverness county, Nova Scotia, during the years 1927, 1928, 1929, and 1930.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond West-Cape Breton):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams or other correspondence between the federal government and that of province of Quebec regarding unemployment.

AMERICAN FURNITURE COMPANY

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie) moved:

For a copy of all reports, correspondence, and other documents in connection with the recent inspection of the books of the American Furniture Company, by officers of the Department of National Revenue, in connection with the increase in valuation of furniture imports from the United States.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): I understand that the report with regard to this firm has not yet been received by the department, but I would say that in any case it is quite contrary to the practice of the department to disclose the business of any individual firm.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall I say "Carried"?

Mr. EULER: No; I would object to the passing of the order.

Motion negatived.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY

PETITION OF FIRST AND SECOND PREFERENCE STOCKHOLDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. S. WHITE (Mount Royal): I desire to ask the Minister of Railways whether he has yet had time to consider the petition of the preference shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada for compensation for the taking over of their property by the Dominion government?

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Railways and Canals): No further consideration has been given to the matter than had previously been given.

ANONYMOUS PAMPHLET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I direct the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) to anonymous correspondence which the members have received to-day? I shall send him the envelope in which mine came. It came from Toronto and was mailed May 20, 1930. In that envelope I found a pamphlet entitled "Beckles Willson and Mackenzie King—The Modern Damon and Pythias." I will read a short extract:

In a cable dispatch from Paris, dated March 24, 1930, Mr. William H. Ingram reports an interview that he had with Willson in the French capital and he mentions casually that—

"A chance remark gave one to understand that Colonel Beckles Willson had been in friendly correspondence with the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King."

Note the word "friendly." That makes it clear that nothing had occurred to disturb the relations between Mackenzie King and Beckles Willson up to March 24, 1930. That was nearly two weeks after the "frame-up" in parliament.

That quotation has been falsified. I have under my hand the article by Mr. Ingram that was published in the Ottawa Journal on April 5. It reads:

A chance remark gave one to understand that Colonel Beckles Willson had been in friendly correspondence, not only—

The words "not only" are omitted in the quotation in the pamphlet.

—with the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, but also with the Hon. R. B. Bennett.

I should like to know whether this correspondence with Mr. Bennett had something to do with the dedication of the book to the Prime Minister.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I believe the rules of the house permit hon. gentlemen to ask questions of other members. If my hon. friend will put his question on the order paper, I assure him he will receive an answer.

RUSSIAN ANTHRACITE COAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): May I direct the attention of the government to information I have received to the effect that Russian anthracite coal has now penetrated into the cities of western Ontario and is there displacing United States coal? I would ask the government whether they have any information regarding the matter and whether they are prepared to make a report in connection with an investigation which they have stated they have undertaken or are about to undertake?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): We have an official investigating the whole question of importation of Russian anthracite coal, but it will be some days before we will have a complete report. As soon as that is in our hands, we shall make it public.

Mr. BENNETT: We would like to have it before parliament prorogues.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I doubt whether that is possible. Inquiries are being made.

OWNERSHIP OF LANDS BY ORIENTALS

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT OF QUESTION OF LEGISLATIVE POWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): On the 19th instant, as reported on page 2216 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) a question in regard to a resolution standing in my name respecting orientals. In reply to the last part of my question he said that the Minister of Justice would take the matter into consideration. Would the Minister of Justice say whether he has reached any decision?

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): The matter referred to in the resolution of my hon. friend was also submitted to the department by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) some time ago. The trouble is the resolution seems to ask that certain questions which are of rather an academic character should be referred for decision to the Supreme Court of Canada, and our experience is that the court usually declines to answer such questions. There is no doubt that matters which for all purposes relate to aliens come under the exclusive jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. The difficulty is that with respect to certain questions it is not always easy to ascertain whether the essence of the question comes within the meaning of the word "alien" under the British North America Act. If my hon. friend has in mind any special statute or regulation the validity of which he would like to be submitted to the supreme court, I shall be very pleased to have the Department of Justice look into the matter; but again, I repeat, questions of a general character I would not like to submit to the supreme court.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): According to press reports, the mayor of Calgary, with the mayors of other cities in Alberta, has approached the premier and provincial government in connection with a severe unemployment situation existing in Alberta. I would like to know if this government has received any communication from that conference; and secondly, is the government prepared to assume responsibility for the immigrants who are now being kept, and have been for some time, awaiting deportation.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Miinster): I am afraid I cannot answer my hon. friend's question until I have had an opportunity of conferring with the other members of the government, but I will try to give him an answer to-morrow.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) last night raised a question relating to item 94 and item 105, which were left standing. I intimated that in the meantime I would look into the question he raised. I now desire to suggest, in order that there may be no doubt either as to definitions or otherwise, that item 105 be amended by inserting the words "crushed or" immediately before the word "frozen." The item would then read: Fruit pulp, with sugar or not, n.o.p., and fruits crushed or frozen, per pound. That leaves no doubt as to the inclusion of crushed fruits in that item. Is that satisfactory to my hon. friend?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The change as far as I am concerned is satisfactory, but I want to say this to the minister. When you have an article like grapes bearing only a two cents a pound duty, and you put the other item of crushed grapes in at three cents a pound, you are giving more protection than the growers ask for. It makes the thing look more or less ridiculous. That is one feature of it. A duty of three cents a pound on fruit pulp may be reasonable, but on crushed grapes it is not reasonable. That is the difference.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no desire to include it in an item which carries a higher rate of duty, but there has been consulation, from the point of view of administration, with the customs department, and they say that it ought to be administered under this fruit pulp item. I shall not enter into a debate on the matter. I prefer very much to have it in the other item, but for administration purposes they say that this is the place.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I shall have to abide by the advice of the administrators, but it seems to me that the minister himself is responsible, and not the officials who are administering the tariff. The most that the growers of this article ask for is two cents a pound. They do not want any more. To give a higher duty makes it look ridiculous. It is not needed However, if the minister has made up his mind, I am prepared to let the matter go. I want, however, to discuss the matter of grape juice, which is far more important to me, because as I pointed out yesterday the duty on the crushed grapes is two cents a pound. On that same basis there should be a higher duty on grape juice; otherwise, you might as well cut out the other duty. This morning I received a dozen telegrams from growers in different parts of my county. I will read one. It is from the Niagara Packers, Limited:

Respecting tariff amendments, we respectfully beg to request that a duty of twenty-five cents a gallon be placed on the importation of grape juice tested not over ten degrees Baume test, and a further two and one-half cents a gallon on each additional degree.

That is for the concentrated grape juice. In my remarks yesterday with respect to this matter, I pointed out to the minister that the tariff board had considered this article, and the minister was rather annoyed and said that the matter had not been discussed by the tariff board. Now, on page 33 of the fruits and vegetables report the tariff board set out a schedule. They do not promise any change of duties, they simply publish last year's duties. But here is the schedule, which confirms my contention:

Proposed item:

(a) Grapes in their natural state or crushed when imported from a country which imposes a customs duty on fruit produced in Canada, weight of package to be included in weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, 1½ cents; intermediate tariff, 1¾ cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

(b) Grapes in their natural state or crushed, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1¾ cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

(c) Grape juice, per gallon wine measure, 25 cents.

The matter was thoroughly discussed by the fruit growers. I admit that afterwards it was learned that concentrated grape juice could be brought in, and they proposed that that should be taken care of in the way I have mentioned. If grape juice comes in concentrated, and if, for instance, five gallons can be concentrated into one, then that one gallon of concentrated juice should carry the same duty as the original five gallons would have carried. I have half a dozen telegrams from the grape growers of my constituency. Here is one from Vineland which is in the western part:

The members of our association representing a very large percentage of the grape growing industry are very much disturbed by reported omission of grape juice and grape juice concentrates. The lack of protection on this item for even the year nineteen thirty would by reason of the nature of this product prove disastrous to the grape growing industry.

That is signed by C. W. Bauer, president. Here is another from one of the largest wineries in Canada. They make fifty-five per cent of all the wine made in Ontario. This telegram comes from the adjoining riding:

The agent for the California Grape Growers Association here Monday soliciting orders for concentrated grape juice. Advised they expect to ship one million gallons concentrate to Canada this year which would produce more wine than made from Canadian grapes in one year. California surplus grapes in former years produced an over supply of raisins and Sherman Act did not allow fruit being destroyed so this year the California grape growers assisted by the federal farm board are making plans to take care of surplus grapes by using them for concentrated juice which will be sold for anything to get rid of it. The federal farm board have already advanced thirty million dollars to the Cooperative Grape Growers Association to save the grape growing industry in the United States. Surely the Canadian growers will receive some protection against this.

These people know what the importation of this concentrated grape juice would mean. The grape growers, those who produce the grapes, represent the primary industry. I do not care a snap of the fingers for the wineries themselves. I want to look after the people who produce the grapes; I am interested in them. Some of these wineries wanted less duty imposed. They are friends of mine, but I had nerve enough to tell them that they were wrong, that they should not ask such a thing, that they would be killing an industry of the country, something that is rooted in the soil.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Mr. Chairman, I also have received a number of telegrams with regard to this matter. If the minister had said, "I am in possession of all this information, I have decided upon a definite course, and that course I am going to take;" I would have had nothing further to say, because it would be futile. But this is an important industry and we should encourage it. Heretofore growing grapes has not been a very—I emphasize the "very"—large industry in our country. Now there is an opportunity for it to develop and every class in the community should encourage it. I think some of these people have a real grievance. I cannot guarantee that they have because I do not know enough about the case, but I have learned sufficient to make me desire to know more about it. I think it would be in the interests of the country generally if the minister would take a few moments to consult with his experts. Then he could tell us, "I have said all I intend to say on this matter;" or, "I do realize that the case of the grape growing industry should be further considered." I have received the following telegram from Beamsville:

Our association who have been urging for months past that full necessary protection be given their product against grapes and grape juice plain and concentrated imported from United States or elsewhere are shocked to learn that there is grave danger of the item covering grape juice being left out of the budget. The effect of this upon our industry will be calamitous even if we are without protection for this year alone. We would again emphasize our request that provision be made in present budget for duty on grape juice effective for coming season's crop.

As I understand the situation, the California grape growers cannot get rid of their fruit and are rendering it down—shall I call it?—and shipping it over here just to get rid of it at any price. It cannot be the minister's idea, and I am sure it is not the opinion of this house, that a staple industry should be subject to any such competition. Neither free trade, high protection nor low protection enters into it. So I ask pleadingly that the minister should consider this matter. Then, if he says, "I have nothing further to say about it;" I shall accept his answer. I do think further consideration ought to be given to this important industry.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated yesterday, there appeared, so far as the evidence before the tariff advisory board went, to be a new problem last year and the year before, represented by the crushed grapes to which my hon. friend from Lincoln refers. The crushed grapes are provided for in the item of fruit pulp which I proposed, and certainly they are definitely provided for by the amendment which I have to-day proposed for the purpose of clarification. Concentrated grape juice has not yet come into Canada, and it only arose as a possible factor a short time ago since the matter was inquired into. I have received, even from those interested, varying kinds of advice as to how the situation should be dealt with. Undoubtedly as the tariff now stands, concentrated grape juice is on an ad valorem basis, that is, it would bear a duty of 22½ per cent. The first request of the grape growers, before they knew of the existence of concentrated grape juice, was for a duty of 26 cents per gallon specific on grape juice instead of 22½ per cent ad valorem. Of course, since they have learned of the posibility of concentrated grape juice coming in, they realize that their request of 26 cents per gallon would be only 6 cents per gallon on the concentrated article, and they would be worse off with regard to concentrated grape juice than they were under the ad valorem tariff of 22½ per cent. My reason, quite frankly, for not proposing something of a definite character with respect to concentrated grape juice is that we have not yet got all the facts upon which we can base intelligent action. I will say to my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman), who spoke very reasonably a moment ago in connection with the matter, that grape juice is not included in the present tariff proposals. It would not affect either of the items which have been left standing, in any case. I shall endeavour to stimulate all the inquiry I can between now and the time these tariff resolutions are disposed of with a view, if possible, to proposing something which will deal with a matter which up to now has been an hypothetical situation with respect to grape juice. I do not make any definite promise, however, as to accomplishing very much.

Mr. BENNETT: What would concentrates pay if they came in now?

Mr. DUNNING: They would pay 22½ per cent ad valorem. If we leave things alone altogether they will continue to pay that amount. We have no information at all as to values. It is suggested that we might adjust the matter by using the Baume gravity test and other technical means of that nature. It is very easy to make a mistake in jumping at a matter of this sort.

Mr. BENNETT: We have already learned that.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a matter which is very technical in character and it only arose a very few weeks ago. I am not in a position to say more at the moment.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—94. Grapes, fresh, in their natural state, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1½ cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Mr. DUNNING: That is standing, and is carried by reason of this amendment.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—109. Nuts of all kinds, n.o.p., including shelled peanuts, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, 1 cent; intermediate tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 2 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: Is item 106 passed?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. There is no change in item 109.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—109(a). Peanuts, green, in the shell or not further processed than shelled: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 1 cent; general tariff, 1 cent.

Mr. FRASER: How much of our peanut importation is affected by the change which has been made?

Mr. DUNNING: I will give the reason for the reduction in duty. It will be noticed that whereas formerly all nuts came in under item 109 at 1 cent, 2 cents and 2 cents respectively, it is now proposed to add an item for green peanuts in the shell or not further processed than shelled. The rates applying to this section are, under the British preferential tariff, free; under the intermediate tariff, 1 cent; and under the general tariff, 1 cent. The reason is that the people concerned have appeared before the tariff board on several occasions. This year the duty on raw shelled peanuts amounts to over 50 per cent ad valorem on the cost of freight value at Vancouver. That is the way the duty works out at the present time on shelled peanuts. In answer to the question of my hon. friend I say the net result is a reduction of all duties on green peanuts in the shell and raw shelled peanuts. The imports in 1929 were valued at $481,000, of which sum $309,000 worth came from China. The imports of raw shelled peanuts are included in the gross total of shelled peanuts which entered the country to a value of $1,174,000 of which $738,000 worth came from the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: They will now come in at 100 per cent less duty from the United States.

Mr. EULER: No, 100 per cent less duty would wipe it out altogether.

Mr. BENNETT: I meant to say that they would come in at half the duty.

Mr. DUNNING: The peanuts which are being allowed in cheaper are peanuts which are used generally in the manufacture of foods of various kinds and which are mixed with foods and cakes and things of that nature. In that connection it was represented to the tariff board that 50 per cent duty on goods of that kind which were being used largely for food purposes was entirely too high.

Mr. FRASER: What proportion of our imports is affected? What proportion will come in free, or what amount?

Mr. BENNETT: There would seem to be very little. The figures given would indicate that practically nothing would come in from the British Empire.

Mr. DUNNING: We have nothing of any consequence from the British Empire at the present time; it is a Chinese and United States product.

Mr. FRASER: I understood that.

Mr. DUNNING: It runs in my mind that there was some discussion about an African treaty, but I am not certain about it. Peanuts may be one of the commodities which are not produced within the British Empire; I would not like to speak with any degree of certainty in connection with that.

Mr. BENNETT: I think they are produced.

Mr. FRASER: I learn from what the minister has stated that the amount of duty paid on the importation of peanuts would not be materially affected. May I take that meaning?

Mr. DUNNING: I would not say that.

Mr. FRASER: I gathered that peanuts would come in at the present time practically the same as they had come in before, and the fact of putting them on the free list would not affect the duty which would have to be paid on the peanuts.

Mr. DUNNING: No. My hon. friend forgets that green peanuts in the shell or not further processed than shelled, which are the classes of peanuts used in the food industries throughout Canada, will be reduced under the general tariff from 2 cents to 1 cent per pound.

Mr. BENNETT: This is really a peanut policy.

Mr. DUNNING: They have been applying for it for years.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—135 (a). Invert sugar and all solutions of sugar or invert sugar and water which cannot be completely tested by the polariscope, not including syrups in receptacles not greater than 60 pounds in gross weight:

When exceeding 56 per centum but not exceeding 65 per centum total sugars, per 100 pounds: British preferential tariff, 68 cents; intermediate tariff, $1.23; general tariff, $1.23.

When exceeding 65 per centum but not exceeding 70 per centum total sugars, per 100 pounds: British preferential tariff, 74 cents; intermediate tariff, $1.33; general tariff, $1.33.

When exceeding 70 per centum total sugars, per 100 pounds: British preferential tariff, 83 cents; intermediate tariff, $1.50; general tariff, $1.50.

Mr. DUNNING: In connection with this item two points were raised during the budget debate. There was a feeling that this involved an increase in the duty on sugar and that it involved an increase in the duty on table syrup. I wish to say to members of the committee that it does neither. It is merely a means of overcoming what is now recognized to be an evasion of the duties on sugar. The proposal here is merely to make sure that this invert sugar, which is really sugar in liquid form, will be taxable at the same rate as sugar. The item will not affect table syrups, nor will it affect sugar; it has nothing to do with either of those items. The government chemists made some suggestions with regard to the technical terms and I propose that we should amend the item, so far as the technical terms are concerned, in accordance with the draft which you have before you. It is merely a matter of including terms which are nominally correct for analytical purposes.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: How will it read?

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment will be as follows:

Invert sugar and syrups, a product of the sugar cane or beet, and all imitations thereof or substitutes therefor, not including molasses and not including syrups in receptacles of such size that the gross weight of receptacle and contents does not exceed 60 pounds:

When the total of reducing sugars after inversion is equivalent to more than 56 per cent, but not more than 65 per cent of invert sugars, per 100 pounds: British preferential tariff, 68 cents; intermediate tariff, $1.23; general tariff, $1.23.

When the total of reducing sugars after inversion is equivalent to more than 65 per cent but not more than 70 per cent of invert sugar, per 100 pounds: British preferential tariff, 74 cents; intermediate tariff, $1.33; general tariff, $1.33.

When the total of reducing sugars after inversion is equivalent to more than 70 per cent of invert sugar, per 100 pounds: British preferential tariff, 83 cents; intermediate tariff, $1.50; general tariff, $1.50.

My hon. friend will see that it is just a matter of technical terms.

Mr. BENNETT: Except you have added "not including molasses."

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, to make sure that nothing of that character is included.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the duty on raw sugar at the present time?

Mr. BENNETT: It depends on certain technical tests.

Mr. DUNNING: It corresponds to these, technically. The present sugar duties take up two pages of the customs tariff, and they are based upon the degrees of polarization per hundred pounds. My hon. friend does not want me to read two whole pages, I am sure, but he can find them on pages 27 and 28 of schedule A of the customs tariff.

Mr. MANION: What industries use this invert sugar?

Mr. DUNNING: Canning, to some extent; confectionery, to some extent; jam making, to some extent; any industry which can use liquid sugar. It is rather technical, because there are some industries which require the sugar in actual syrup form, to whom invert sugar properly so described would not be of use.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the minister the amount of this invert sugar which was imported into this country last year?

Mr. DUNNING: The import of it in this form, as distinct from the syrups which of course come in legitimately at a low duty, started not more than a couple of years ago. Last year the evidence before the tariff board indicated that some three hundred railway tank cars, came in.

Mr. COOTE: Will the minister say if there is any difficulty in distinguishing between syrup and invert sugar?

Mr. DUNNING: None at all, by the technical test which is here imposed It has been submitted to the chemist for that purpose.

Mr. MANION: Is there anything in this item which will be of assistance to plants making starch and corn syrup? Is there anything in this item which will assist them in any way?

Mr. DUNNING: That is difficult to say; the two things really are not interchangeable. In order to make absolutely sure that there would be no difference in the syrup aspect of this, we made clear that not only we excepted molasses but that we did not include syrup of any kind in receptacles of less than sixty pounds in weight.

Mr. MANION: The reason I am asking is that there are a number of plants, or one at least, in Canada which are idle but which did make starch and corn syrup. I was wondering if this would assist them in opening; I was hoping it would.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a possibility that by conversion to a limited degree the making of invert sugar might be carried on in such plants which are established on the basis of corn syrup production. My hon. friend can understand how highly technical the whole matter is, and I do not want to be too positive. I can say, however, that under the investigation by the tariff board it was well recognized by everyone that so far as the invert sugar was concerned, the new method of dealing with it by importing it in tank cars represented an evasion of the statutes with respect to the duties on sugar.

Mr. KAISER: The old duty on this was 50 cents; now it is raised to $1.23 and the minister says that makes no difference.

Mr. DUNNING: No, not in syrup. My hon. friend will understand that by inverting the sugar, by liquefying the sugar, it qualified under the old syrup item instead of coming in as sugar. That is why the figures shown opposite the tariff item are the syrup figures. It evaded the sugar duty and came in under the lower rate.

Mr. BENNETT: And you are now putting it on the sugar basis?

Mr. DUNNING: We are now putting it on the sugar basis.

Mr. KAISER: Then the 50 cent basis does not apply to invert sugar?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There is nothing in this item which would increase the trade with the British Empire?

Mr. DUNNING: Well, there is a possibility, of course, to the extent that our own refiners get their sugar from the West Indies, principally. This invert sugar comes in of course from the United States, as my hon. friend understands, and in that case it is principally Cuban or Porto Rican sugar, which displaces Canadian sugar.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister tell us whether there was any invert sugar made in Canada last year?

Mr. DUNNING: In consequence of this importation last year it was made experimentally for the first time. It is likely to be made commercially in the not distant future to deal with this class of trade which really needs liquid sugar as such.

Mr. COOTE: On the face of it this looks like an increase in protection afforded to anyone who wants to make invert sugar. Of course, I understand the minister's statement to be exactly to the contrary, but that is how it looks by reading the tariff item. If the minister will positively assure the house that there is no difference in the amount of duty to be charged, based on whatever test he is using here, there could be no objection to it.

Mr. DUNNING: I can illustrate it very simply to my hon. friend by telling him that these importations last year went as high as 70 per cent of solid sugar, and yet they were coming in as table syrup. He will understand that is manifestly a complete subversion of the use of our tariff. If we have a duty on sugar we must apply the duty to sugar, but by the process of inversion it was possible to get by technically as syrup, which really it is not at all.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It is really a thick syrup?

Mr. DUNNING: It was really sugar held in solution; that would be a more accurate description.

Mr. BENNETT: No, sugar held in suspension, and it settled and the sugar was available as such.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. COOTE: It would help us to understand the item if the minister could tell us what the percentage of sugar may be in a heavy sugar syrup. I have not the faintest idea what it may be, but it is possible that it might be 50 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot answer that offhand, but my hon. friend will notice that I have protected it in the item—at least I have not protected it—I have carefully avoided the possibility of genuine syrup being affected by including in the item the provision that it shall not include molasses or syrups in receptacles of such size that the gross weight of the receptacle and the contents does not exceed 60 pounds. That is to say, if they want to bring in invert sugar as syrup in receptacles of less than 60 pounds, even yet they can get away with that, but as a matter of fact it is known that it would be uneconomical to handle it in that fashion. It is a tank car proposition.

Mr. BENNETT: Should not they be able to bring in syrup in tank cars, glass lined?

Mr. DUNNING: We are advised that there is no demand anywhere for that method of transporting syrup. My hon. friend will understand that invert sugars are easier to handle than syrup.

Mr. COOTE: We did not have the minister's amendment before us; we only heard it read, and it was rather lengthy and we could not grasp everything that was in it.

Mr. DUNNING: If it is desired I will gladly read it again, but I can assure my hon. friend that it is a chemist's description of the test to be applied and is exactly the same in its practical effect as the original wording. There is no difference otherwise at all, and I am sure the technical terms used would mean no more to my hon. friend than they do to me, in actual fact.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—141. Sugar candy and confectionery, n.o.p., including sweetened gums, candied pop-corn, candied nuts, flavouring powders, custard powders, jelly powders, sweetmeats, sweetened breads, cakes, pies, puddings and all other confections containing sugar, the weight of the wrappings and cartons to be included in the weight for duty, per pound: British preferential tariff, one-half cent and 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, one-half cent and 35 per cent; general tariff, one-half cent and 35 per cent.

[Mr. Adshead.]

Mr. COOTE: The minister might tell us if there is any difference, and why this is put in here. There is no change in the rates, apparently.

Mr. DUNNING: I have an amendment to item 139 of the existing tariff, which item is not included in the list before hon. members. This is rendered necessary by the item we have just discussed, the invert sugar item. Because we have mentioned syrups in the invert sugar item it is necessary to add the letters "n.o.p." to item 139 of the existing tariff, which is as follows:

Glucose or grape sugar, glucose syrup and corn syrup, or any syrups containing an admixture thereof. . . . .

We are adding the term "n.o.p." because for the first time syrups are mentioned in another item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That item does not appear on this sheet.

Mr. DUNNING: It is just the addition of the words "n.o.p." to an existing item.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister considered giving Great Britain some preference on these items?

Mr. DUNNING: This item appears in the amending schedule because candied peel has been taken out of the item and put in its proper place along with fruit. There has been no attempt to interfere with the item.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—148. Cider, not clarified or refined, per gallon: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 cents; general tariff, 5 cents.

Mr. BENNETT: The apple growers of British Columbia and of Nova Scotia have been endeavouring to produce a cider of a quality comparable to British cider. The little protection which they had permitted a foundation to be laid for this industry, but that small measure of protection is being removed. The hon. gentleman knows that a great effort has been made in recent years to extend the sale in Canada of British cider and since prohibition has been in force, this drink has had a very considerable vogue.

Mr. DUNNING: All cider would not qualify for prohibition uses; I am thinking of the old Somerset cider.

Mr. BENNETT: I was thinking of the cider sold by Bulmer's and other manufacturers. I was informed last year that a very considerable sum of money had been expended in taking care of the industry in British Columbia, where considerable quantities of apples have decayed because there was no market for them. The same situation exists in Ontario. The effect of this item will be to deprive this industry of the little protection it had in the past. Cider from Great Britain will be on the free list, whereas previously it paid a duty of 10 cents per gallon for the clarified, and 5 cents a gallon for the unrefined. I think this matter is worthy of serious consideration. The loss of apples due to conditions which have been referred to already is tremendous, and it is very essential that this industry should be stimulated. I had no idea of the magnitude of this industry in England until I had occasion to investigate it because of an endeavour being made by some friends to establish themselves in British Columbia, Nova Scotia and Ontario. The dining cars now sell a brand of cider known as Evangeline, which is made from Nova Scotia apples. This is a cider mixed with soda, and considerable trade has been developed. Tremendous efforts have been made to extend the cider business of Great Britain into the overseas countries, and I feel quite certain that the passage of this item will be very injurious to the endeavours being made to establish such an industry in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: I appreciate the manner in which my hon. friend has approached this question. In investigating this particular commodity, I was somewhat surprised to find that there were no imports from Great Britain of both items, and the total imports from other countries of the first item were valued at only $7, and of the second item, at $240, of which $118 worth came from Switzerland. I cannot comprehend why there were imports from Switzerland.

Mr. BENNETT: I think I can help the minister out on that; I believe those importations were for the purpose of experimentation in connection with the establishment of the industry. I happen to know what has been going on in that direction, and there are some gentlemen who are very earnestly endeavouring to establish this business in British Columbia. The fact is that the existing duty has been prohibitive so far as cider is concerned—perhaps not prohibitive, but it has been sufficient.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is quite right, it was prohibitive.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend probably knows of the advertisements which appear quite frequently in Punch with respect to a very well known brand of British cider, known practically the world over. Up to the present time, that cider has not entered the Canadian market, but I think the elimination of the protection at present in force will destroy any possibility of our developing the industry in this country.

Mr. SHORT: In view of the fact that the importation of cider has been almost nil, why has the tariff been changed? Does the minister want to kill the industry we have built up in this country? A considerable business has been built up in my constituency, particularly in the Evangeline cider referred to by my hon. leader. Now the minister is going to open it up, and make cider free from all countries.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. SHORT: If there have been no importations, why has this item been touched? Is it just to increase the list of free items from British countries?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend has made two incorrect statements. He said that it is proposed to make cider free from all countries; that is the first error. My hon. friend stated that this item has been included merely to increase the list with regard to—

Mr. SHORT: I meant from all British countries.

Mr. DUNNING: My observation has been that cider is not a drink commonly in use in Canada.

Mr. SHORT: There is a great deal of it used.

Mr. DUNNING: I believe the production of cider is confined at the present time to the Evangeline plant. My information is that the degree of protection has nothing to do with this commodity, the situation is rather one of economy in production and up to the present time Canada has not been able to develop that economy. I thought that if a reasonable opportunity were given to Canadian people to drink British cider—

Mr. BENNETT: What about allowing them to drink Canadian cider?

Mr. DUNNING: —that would not injure the Canadian cider industry. From the information I have received, I do not think that cider can be produced in Canada from Canadian apples as cheaply as it can be produced in Somersetshire or any of the other apple growing counties in England. This industry has been carried on in the old country for hundreds of years, it is part of their daily farm life. In spite of the degree of protection afforded this industry, it has never attained any considerable proportions in Canada. I can conceive of the Canadian cider industry being helped by the cultivation of an appetite for cider on the part of the Canadian people. The Canadian industry has not succeeded in bringing that about, but it is conceivable that the British cider people could do it with their wider advertising facilities. I am quite sure that the Canadian cider industry will not suffer as a result of this amendment, and it is quite possible that Canadians may become a little more partial to cider as a result of being able to obtain that article from Great Britain.

Mr. SHORT: That is a very lame excuse.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Especially if it is hard cider.

Mr. SHORT: British cider is to be allowed to come in free in order to help the Canadian industry; that is about the argument the minister is making. I wonder, if he used that argument in regard to all the other articles, where we would arrive. The apple industry in our district during the last few years has been labouring under a great depression. It has been difficult to find a market for other than No. 1 grade and a great deal of the other grades has gone into cider. The minister, by allowing British cider to come in free, is now trying to kill that little industry which we have been spending years in endeavouring to work up. We did have a protection of five to ten cents a gallon against British cider. The argument the minister advances is, to my mind, a very lame one and I wonder whether he would use it in regard to other articles as well.

Mr. KAISER: What is the value of imports of cider from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: Last year we imported $3 worth from the United States.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How much was exported from Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no export business from Canada.

Mr. COOTE: Does the minister know how much cider is produced in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the production figures. I might say for the information of my hon. friend, who, I am sure, wants to be fair—

Mr. SHORT: Certainly.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: —that cider which contains more than 2½ per cent of proof spirits would come in at duty of $2.50 per gallon from the old country.

Mr. SHORT: That is not new cider.

Mr. DUNNING: Many people think it is better than the ordinary variety.

Mr. SHORT: They keep that for home consumption.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister said that we had no exportations of cider.

Mr. DUNNING: None, so far as I have any record.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I should like to correct that. My record shows that in 1929 we exported 6,327 gallons and in other years as much as 100,000 gallons.

Mr. DUNNING: I thank my hon. friend for the information.

Mr. BENOIT: Where to?

Mr. CHAPLIN: If my hon. friend will take the trouble to look up the records, he can find that out.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—149. Cider, clarified or refined, per gallon: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—167. Malt, whole, crushed or ground, and malt flour, n.o.p., upon entry for warehouse subject to excise regulations, per pound: British preferential tariff, ⅛ cent; intermediate tariff, ¼ cent; general tariff, ¾ cent.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister say whether there is any real change in this item? Are the rates approximately the same, or what change is there?

Mr. DUNNING: There is an increase. A considerable amount of evidence regarding this matter was placed before the tariff board. It linked itself up with the production of barley in Canada for malting purposes, the production of malt from that barley, the importation of malting barley from the United States for malting purposes and, finally, the importation of malt as such from the United States. I was astonished to find, for instance, that in 1929, in spite of the ability of this country to produce barley, we imported 41,000,000 pounds of malt from the United States.

Mr. COOTE: At what value?

Mr. DUNNING: $1,300,000. It will be noticed from what was done in committee yesterday that the rates of duty on barley were increased. This increase in the rate on malt follows that proportionately. I have no doubt that the production of malting barley in Canada will be stimulated by the change and that nobody will be hurt thereby.

Mr. MANION: What do the former rates, which are all forty-five cents, refer to?

Mr. DUNNING: They are per 100 pounds. My hon. friend will notice that the change involves a reduction in rate under the British preference, a slight increase under the intermediate and it will be seventy-five cents per 100 pounds under the general as compared with forty-five cents previously. The rates have been carefully worked out and I believe they will prove beneficial to the industry generally.

Mr. MANION: I am sure of that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will that tend to increase British imports?

Mr. DUNNING: With respect to malt crushed or ground, and malt flour, yes. With respect to malt generally, I do not expect it will.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—168. Malt flour containing less than 50 per centum in weight of malt; malt syrup or malt syrup powder; extracts of malt, fluid or not; grain molasses—all articles in this item upon valuation without British or foreign or excise duties, under regulations prescribed by the minister, per pound: British preferential tariff, 3 cents and 25 per cent; intermediate tariff, 3 cents and 30 per cent; general tariff, 3 cents and 35 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: I suppose this whole item of malt was investigated by the tariff advisory board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—183. Newspapers, or supplemental editions or parts thereof, partly printed and intended to be completed and published in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: No change in that except the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: That is all.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—200. Pulp of wood, of straw or of any other vegetable fibre: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: Are there any imports from Great Britain under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course not.

Mr. MANION: I understand this item was discussed before the Tariff Advisory Board. Was any objection made before that board by the pulp and paper people in regard to this item being made free from the British empire? I believe the other duties are the same. As regards the British preferential tariff which might involve the bringing in of pulp of the sugar cane, was any objection made by the pulp and paper people?

Mr. DUNNING: Not as relating to this item. This is purely a rewording for administrative purposes. For instance, pulp is made of other materials than those named in the former item. The materials formerly named were only wood and straw. The item is widened to include, for instance, pulp made from rags which is used in the manufacture of certain fine grades of paper. This is merely a widening of definition to ensure that all forms of pulp are covered. There is no objection so far as I know from any quarter in regard to the point raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. MANION: I was informed unofficially that there was objection because of the possibilities of pulp of straw, for example, interfering with some of the by-products of the pulp and paper industry of this country. I cannot say whether that is the case or not, but if it were it would be regrettable, because one of our great industries, perhaps the third greatest is the pulp and paper business.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What was the former duty on pulp made of rags?

Mr. DUNNING: That came under the general provision for unclassified materials.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How much was it?

Mr. DUNNING: It would vary from 17½ to 25 per cent.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is it increased under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: I would not say so. It simply does not come in. We want to make provision for it.

Mr. FRASER: Would pulp of sugar cane be admitted free to this country? It is an article used in making an insulating material.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course, if it came under this item, it would carry a duty of 25 per cent under the general tariff and 22½ per cent under the intermediate tariff. It is rather difficult for me to say whether that refuse material the hon. member for Fort William spoke of and referred to again by my hon. friend, is correctly described as pulp. I am not sure whether it is pulp. It was not considered as coming under this item which was merely redrafted to ensure the inclusion of all pulp. There is always the matter of definition which the board of customs has to deal with. I cannot personally undertake to differentiate between what may be pulp, and what may be refuse pulp but not technically of a pulp character.

Mr. BENNETT: Pulp has to be converted by grinding or by chemical process.

Mr. DUNNING: That sounds a reasonable explanation.

Mr. FRASER: My question was directed to the minister for this purpose. We have an insulating material made in this country out of refuse straw and wood pulp. The pulp material coming into this country carries a low rate of duty. On the American side they make this insulating material out of the refuse of the sugar cane, and what I was interested in was whether it would not be possible to have a duty on the finished article and still allow the manufacturers of insulating material in Canada to get their pulp in under this item.

Mr. DUNNING: That is a matter of customs ruling, but I would point out to my hon. friend that even if the material he refers to were pulp it would still have to pay 25 per cent to come into this country.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): If it was not the intention to include the pulp of sugar cane in this item, could not the the difficulty be cleared up by adding the words "of a class or kind produced in Canada."

Mr. MANION: The very fact that the minister is rather hazy on the question and admits it, and the rest of the house being just about as hazy, only emphasizes the danger of inserting an item as to which we do not know the whole facts. My hon. friend from Cariboo spoke of insulating material being made in Canada. There are in Canada at least one or two plants, and perhaps more, making insulating material. One of them that I know makes insulite. It is not made from wood pulp, but from the refuse, the bark, I take it, and other refuse from pulpwood. It is a very fine line of manufacture and is a by-product of the pulp and paper industry. By a coincidence, I happened to receive a letter this morning from a very good friend of mine who is to-day in Finland. He is an American engineer who has been sent over there by one of the big American pulp and paper manufacturing companies to build an insulite plant. The pulp and paper production is quite important in Finland, and for market reasons or otherwise they desire to have a plant built for the manufacture of insulite out of the by-products of the pulp and paper industry. I happen to know that this same company is seriously considering building one of these plants in Canada. I just mention that in passing. I do not know positively whether this item would interfere with the establishment of such a plant in this country, but it is just possible it might have that effect because the by-products of the sugar cane, the sugar cane itself being brought in as pulp, might be used in the manufacture of insulating material.

Mr. DUNNING: If it came in under this item, it would bear 25 per cent duty.

Mr. MANION: Not if it came from the British West Indies.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, I see.

Mr. MANION: It might come in from the southern states, but would be more likely to come in from the British West Indies. I just mention that in passing as illustrative of the difficulty of settling these items intelligently in the house.

Mr. DUNNING: In view of the discussion and of the fact that I simply wished to clarify the item for administrative purposes not relating to the matter now under discussion at all, the wiser plan would be to drop the item, and then we would not be interfering with any existing situation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I move that this item be dropped.

Motion agreed to.

Item dropped.

Customs tariff—202. Boot and shoe patterns manufactured of paper: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—207. Blood albumen: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No one can tell me what blood albumen is, but the officials request that it be left in the tariff. There is no change. Formerly this item was in under eggs. We have put eggs where they belong.

Mr. BENNETT: You are making two items out of this instead of one?

Mr. DUNNING: It is really making five items out of four.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208g. Calcium molybdate when imported by manufacturers of steel for use exclusively in the manufacture of steel, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: How much do we import in a year under this item, and where do the imports come from?

Mr. DUNNING: The present importations are untraceable at present. It is one of the unenumerated items of the tariff. The rates at present on calcium molybdate, under item 711, are 15, 17½ and 17½ per cent. It is one of the materials used in the making of steel. It has been represented to the tariff board that calcium molybdate, being a ferro-alloy substitute, should bear the same rate as ferro-molybdenum, and to this end this new item is worded. It brings it into line with other ferro-alloys.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—232a. Gelatin capsules, empty, when imported for use exclusively in the manufacture of medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the wording make it clear that the druggist who is importing will get the benefit of this reduction?

Mr. DUNNING: There is a point there as to the extent to which the druggist is using gelatin capsules in the manufacture of pharmaceutical preparations. The whole point in connection with it is this: Under the old rates the duty on the unfilled capsules was higher than on the completed article, and it was felt desirable to give this relief.

Mr. FRASER: What are the importations?

Mr. DUNNING: It is an untraceable item. It came in under the general item of "not otherwise provided for."

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for St. Boniface, who is a medical man, will be able to say whether or not the item as it now reads is wide enough to cover the druggist who uses these capsules in his business, and who might not be said to be in the manufacture of pharmaceutical preparations. As the item reads, it applies only to the manufacturer. The druggist is in a sense a manufacturer when he fills the capsules on the prescription of the doctor, but in the other sense he is not a manufacturer. Whether this item as it is worded would enable the druggist to take advantage of it I cannot say.

Mr. HOWDEN: The druggist imports all these capsules empty. He manufactures none at all.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I say, and I am afraid that the item as it is worded would not enable him to benefit because he is not a manufacturer; he is a user.

Mr. DUNNING: It is intended to apply to all who use these capsules by filling them.

Mr. BENNETT: But one is a manufacturer, like a large firm, and the other is the country druggist.

Mr. DUNNING: I suppose the process would be the same with the manufacturer and with the country druggist. The manufacture would consist of filling the capsules with some material.

Mr. BENNETT: It is done by machinery in the one case, in a factory, and in the other case by the druggist on a doctor's prescription.

Mr. HOWDEN: The druggist fills the capsules on the prescription of a doctor.

Mr. COOTE: If this is intended to be of any advantage to the druggist, it is not well worded, because the druggist will often fill the capsules with something that has already been manufactured. He is simply filling the capsules, not manufacturing. The way the item is worded has the effect of making a donation to the man who is putting up a proprietary medicine.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are these manufactured in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is the minister sure?

Mr. DUNNING: The evidence before the tariff board was to that effect. I can only rely on that.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is one of the little things so very difficult to the business man. He has to give a certificate that these capsules are being used solely in the manufacture of medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations. This causes him the same trouble as I mentioned in regard to another article the other day. Every time the business man is required to get a certificate he is put to extra trouble. This is the complaint of every business man.

Mr. BENNETT: "Exclusively" is the difficult word.

Mr. MANION: Yes, the wording is that these gelatine capsules are for use "exclusively in the manufacture of medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations." As my hon. friend from St. Boniface (Mr. Howden) says, drugs are put up in these capsules. No doubt thousands of these capsules are used in Canada every day. They are very simple little containers. I do not know if the minister is familiar with them.

Mr. DUNNING: I have had to swallow some.

Mr. MANION: They are so simple that it ought to be the easiest thing in the world to manufacture them here. I should hate to see something done that would prevent their manufacture in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: The evidence given by the gelatin manufacturers was that none of them were making these capsules.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understood one person representing a gelatin works stated they had been figuring on making these capsules.

Mr. DUNNING: And afterwards he wrote and said he was not interested. With regard to the important point raised first, I think, by the leader of the opposition, probably there might be some merit in inserting a word which at least would make it clear that the ordinary druggist who is filling these capsules would have the same right in connection with the matter as a large manufacturer.

Mr. HOWDEN: Insert the words "or compounding."

Mr. DUNNING: "In the manufacture or compounding" would cover everything, would it not?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: The Minister of National Health (Mr. King) moves that the words "or compounding" be inserted after the word "manufacture." The item will then read:

Gelatin capsules, empty, when imported for use exclusively in the manufacture or compounding of medicinal or pharmaceutical preparation.

Mr. COOTE: Why not strike out all those words and say "gelatin capsules?" Are they used for any other purpose?

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Mr. DUNNING: At the present time, no; but in these days of advancing science the matter may develop. We had instances of this in invert sugar and crushed grapes.

Mr. BENNETT: This budget is another.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will be better satisfied with it by and by. We desire to do this with respect to the particular use to which gelatin capsules are put. Let us stick to that use instead of going into the unknown.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—235. Liquorice paste, not sweetened: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 17½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—235a. Liquorice in rolls and sticks, not sweetened: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 22½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—236a. Paper refills for sputum cups; paper pocket sputum cups: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why is this put on the free list? Have we not enough paper manufacturers to make this article?

Mr. DUNNING: We are doing so.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are making it free because we are manufacturing the article?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is just baiting me. There were $4,490 imports from the United States only; none came in from Great Britain. It is obviously one of those items in which a tariff against Great Britain is an absurdity. The item is put on the free list to remove that absurdity.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not increase the duty against the American item?

Mr. BENNETT: He does not expect business from Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—237. Celluloid moulded for handles or knives and forkes, not bored or otherwise manufactured; moulded celluloid balls and cylinders, coated with tin foil or not, but not finished or further manufactured, and celluloid blanks for lamp shades and for combs: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. FRASER: Is that a similar item?

Mr. DUNNING: No. The principal imports came from the United Kingdom. They are semi-finished forms for processing in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—238a. Manufactures of celluloid, viz: hair pins, braid pins, barettes, barette blanks, shoe horns, knitting needles, crochet sets, golf tees; lamp shades, stencilled or painted: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There is an item on which the duty has been raised 100 per cent against the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: No. My hon. friend had better read all the articles embraced in this item before passing judgment.

Mr. BENNETT: The general tariff rate of 17½ per cent has been raised to 35 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the general item of the tariff in which all items which cannot be placed anywhere else are placed. Very little came in under that one item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are the importations from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: They amounted to $856,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What were the importations from the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: Nothing substantial.

Mr. BENNETT: Some golf tees came in.

Mr. FRASER: Are there any manufactures of it in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, they are all made in Canada.

Mr. FRASER: And you said that we imported $856,000 worth?

Mr. BENNETT: That is the reason for giving the additional protection to Canadian industry. We use $856,000 worth of these articles secured from other countries, and our manufacturers are given by way of additional protection a minimum of 5 and a maximum of 17½ per cent. The rate is doubled in one case. The British Empire tariff is taken off altogether.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is 15 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: Are there any importations from the United Kingdom at the present time?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the principle underlying these items in regard to the British preferential tariff? Take item 237, free, and item 238 (a), 15 per cent. Why are those two treated so differently?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot follow my hon. friend's numbers. He is not quoting the item under discussion.

Mr. LUCAS: We are discussing 238a at the present time, and we have just passed 237.

Mr. BOIVIN: I have two manufacturers in my constituency manufacturing these goods. Some of the articles were not classified at all in any of the schedules. We want to separate this classification from the other items. These items are mostly luxuries which suffer competition from the United States. We are getting over $800,000 worth from the United States and we are trying to produce the goods in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT And we are getting additional protection.

Mr. BOIVIN: These several items are luxuries and articles affected by questions of style. I want to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that there has been a request made as to the size of sliding buckles to be added to the item. They are at the present time specified in celluloid, generally, and I may say to hon. members that $22,000 worth of this material came from Great Britain last year. There will be a materially widened preference to Great Britain against the large importation of this material from the United States.

Mr. COOTE: We are not very clear in regard to these two items. I do not know whether or not the minister knows the amount that came in from Great Britain under item 238(a).

Mr. DUNNING: About $22,000 worth.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me that there is too much protection in this case. The manufacturer is getting his moulds free, and then he has 15 per cent on the finished article.

Mr. DUNNING: The previous item does not relate to this item at all. My hon. friend is comparing two items which are not related.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me they are very closely related.

Mr. DUNNING: Blanks for lampshades and combs might apply.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister has told us that something like $1,000,000 worth came in under this item in 1929 from the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: The amount that came in was $856,000 worth.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is for the year 1929. On this item the amount that is shown in the trade statistics for Canada is $788,000. However, those two figures are too close to worry about. What was the duty collected on that item?

Mr. DUNNING: I find—

Mr. CHAPLIN: What was the percentage of duty?

Mr. DUNNING: It varies; some came in at 17½ per cent as unenumerated; some came in at 30 per cent; there was some at 30 per cent under another item, and under another item at 17½ per cent, and another item at 17½ per cent. The point is that we wish to put similar articles together which carry a uniform rate of duty. We wish to have articles which are reasonably uniform in character placed together.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The record I have before me shows that the amount imported was valued at $788,000, and the amount of duty collected thereon was $138,000, in connection with this particular item.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the United States importation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes, the United States item; that would seem to be equal to about 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Your information must be wrong, because the rates of duty in every case are above that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am taking my figures from governmental records, and I have the records before me. I have quoted the figures given under the manufactures of celluloid. Importations are given from the United Kingdom and from a list of other countries. The total amount recorded under the general tariff is $788,000 worth, and the duty collected thereon was $138,000.

Mr. BOIVIN: What tariff item is that?

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is the item of manufactures of celluloid.

Mr. BOIVIN: But there are several items under that heading.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know there are. I refer to the manufactures of celluloid. Some of the items to which you referred are free. The ones to which I refer are dutiable items not otherwise provided for. The fact of the case is that the duty from the United States on the large items amounts to around 15 or 16 per cent, as far as I can figure out.

Mr. DUNNING: It could not possibly be less than 17½ per cent, because there is not an item included in this list which carries less than that percentage.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How do you figure that the importations from Great Britain will increase if the tariff item remains the same as it was, so far as Great Britain is concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: But it does not remain the same as it was.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is shown here at 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: The three items which are grouped under this heading came in from Great Britain at 20 per cent. The items are: Nos. 624, 419 and 435. They came in at 20 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They must be very small, because the big item is here.

Mr. DUNNING: Probably so.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They must be very small. From this item do you expect that the manufactures from the old country will increase?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I expect an increase.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Based upon a reduction of about 2½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Partly upon that, and partly upon the increased spread as between British preference and the United States tariff. I may assure my hon. friend that I did not make a definite estimate, but nevertheless I do expect that there will be a development of business.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is that the basis upon which you have raised the general tariff to 35 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why did you not do it in the other cases? I am not finding fault with this; I think it is a proper thing to do, but I am surprised that the minister did not adopt a similar course in other lines if he wished to increase business.

Mr. COOTE: We would like to find out upon what principle the reduction is made.

In item 237 the tariff against Great Britain is reduced from 5 per cent to free. Under item 238 (a) there is no reduction at all; the rate is just the same.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, there is a reduction. It is quite apparent that my hon. friend is not reading all the items which are now grouped under 238 (a). If he makes a careful study he will find that there are three items in the present tariff which carried the 20 per cent duty under the British preference, and under the new item they will come in at 15 per cent along with the other items which come in at 15 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: There is a reduction in some, but not in the others.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and there is no increase in any.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister any information in regard to item 237 whereby celluloid moulded for handles of knives and forks comes in free? What rate of duty would be paid on those handles?

Mr. DUNNING: Handles for knives and forks would bear the same rate as cutlery.

Mr. COOTE: If that is done we would have a rate of protection against all manufactures. If manufactures are going to be protected 20 per cent or 30 per cent, it is hard to understand why moulded handles should come in free.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will keep this item before him we will deal with it when we reach the item of cutlery, and the matter will then be cleared up.

Mr. KAISER: Did this item come before the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—262. Olive oil, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. GEARY: Do goods imported from Palestine come in under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: No, not yet.

Mr. GEARY: Nothing of this nature is imported from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Last year under the British preferential tariff there were imports to the value of $2,155.

Mr. HOWDEN: What is the ratio of the importations of olive oil from the British Empire as compared with importations from places outside the British Empire? The reason I ask is that olive oil has a very great food and medicinal value. It is a very valuable commodity, and it is one which should be at the disposal of citizens in this country. It is my opinion that the duty on olive oil should be as low as possible.

Mr. COOTE: It should be as low as the duty on tea.

Mr. HOWDEN: Yes, as low as the duty on tea.

Mr. DUNNING: At present the situation is that imports under the British preference amounted to $2,155, while total imports were $615,000, of which $384,000 came from Italy. In making it free under the British preference we had in mind the fact that at present olives are not largely cultivated, so far as I know, in any part of the British Empire. Palestine is not yet under our British preference, but there is a hope in that direction.

Mr. HOWDEN: That is why the duty is retained?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—263. Compounds of tetraethyl lead, in which tetraethyl lead is the preponderant constituent by weight: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. FRASER: What is the idea of reducing the tariff all around on this item?

Mr. DUNNING: This enters to an untraceable extent, under item 711, which is the basket item of the whole tariff. The common name for this article is ethyl fluid, and it is a preparation the method of manufacture and the use of which in gasoline is covered by patents the world over. Up to the present the Canadian supply has come entirely from the United States, and has been imported by oil refiners in Canada who added the fluid to their gasoline products to produce a gasoline of low knock quality, the grade of which is continent wide and definitely set. Ethyl fluid can be added to any gasoline but ordinarily it is applied to the better refined gasolines. It has not been enumerated up to the present time in the tariff; that is, there has been no place for it at all, and it has been ruled dutiable under item 711. Application was made to the tariff board for specific inclusion in the schedules, and for a reduction in rates. In this application the Canadian refiners joined, but did not ask that the low rate item be restricted to use by refiners. At the date of the hearing ethyl fluid was quoted at $19.93 per wine gallon, f.o.b. Wilmington, Delaware, and one applicant company had imported it in the previous year to the value of $290,000. This value represented only one carload. It will be seen that it is a product of very high value, $290,000 for one carload.

Mr. BENNETT: Making it free from Great Britain, of course, is but an idle gesture, because they are only permitted to use it by buying the patents, and they cannot export it since their patent rights are confined to the British Isles in the same way that the use in Canada is confined to this country.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not sure as to the use of the patent right. I know it is patented all over the world. There may be arrangements made whereby rights covering groups of countries may be issued. I am not aware of that; possibly my hon. friend knows.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I do not know.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—264a. Menthol, natural or synthetic: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—264b. Camphor, natural or synthetic, whether refined or not: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—276b. Cotton seed and crude cotton seed oil, when imported by manufacturers of cotton seed meal and refined cotton seed oil, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such commodities, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What was the reason for putting in this item? It stands exactly as it did before.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is overlooking the importation under former item 71a at 5 per cent, 10 per cent and 10 per cent. The cotton seed and cotton seed meal are added to the old item, which brings cotton seed and cotton seed meal in free in future.

Mr. HARRIS: What do these words mean, "in the manufacture of such commodities"?

Mr. DUNNING: Cotton seed meal and refined cotton seed oil.

Mr. HARRIS: Could the minister give us some details as to the by-products of the manufacture of cotton seed meal and cotton seed oil, as to what effect this will have on those by-products?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: I think I get my hon. friend's point. One of the plants, at the hearing before the tariff board, stated that its output was divided as follows: To dairying, stock raising and milling and cereal companies, 70 per cent of the total; to soap factories, packing plants and so on, 15 per cent; to mattress and paper companies, 6 per cent; to fertilizer companies, 5 per cent and there was a 4 per cent waste. That is the disposition of the by-products of one refinery.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—283. Drain tiles, not glazed: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. FRASER: What were the importations under that item?

Mr. DUNNING: They amounted to $1,452.

Mr. FRASER: Nothing from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: No, all from the United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—287. Tableware of china, porcelain, white granite or iron-stone: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I desire to bring to the attention of the minister a matter to which I think the government will be well advised to give its most serious consideration. I had hoped the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw) would be in his place for the discussion of this item. With very great effort there has been established near that city an industry, an earthenware industry, employing at times 110 hands. It has assets to the value of something more than $500,000 and has sold $320,000 worth of 6½ per cent, twenty year bonds to investors throughout the province of Alberta. I fancy some of those bonds have been sold also in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. In other words, an effort has been made by the utilization of the resources of the country to establish a local industry.

That local industry has manufactured earthenware goods in very considerable quantities. Amongst other articles it has manufactured stone bottles in which Gurd's ginger beer is sold; and it has shown some signs of prosperity and at least has made progress. I need hardly say that with the limited local population the sales have not been very large; the entire sales of the concern last year did not reach $200,000. The little protection that it received enabled it not only to meet local requirements for jugs and earthenware of that kind, but to go further afield. I fancy there may be members of this house who have seen the products of this factory at western exhibitions, because the newspapers and public men and others throughout the west have been urging people to buy goods manufactured in Saskatchewan, manufactured in Alberta and manufactured in Manitoba, and while that campaign has been carried on the products of this plant have been shown at many of the small fairs and exhibitions throughout western Canada. Of course, to exist at all they have to do something more than merely local business, so they have pushed their trade east to meet the requirements of companies who use stone bottles, jugs and other similar articles. That has enabled them to maintain their plant, shall I say, to fair capacity and to give employment fairly regularly to about 110 people.

The competition of Glasgow manufacturers of just such commodities as are produced at this plant has been overcome by a duty of 15 per cent, which has just enabled them to keep the Canadian market along the lines I have indicated as against the competition from Great Britain. Now they are thoroughly alarmed. The gentlemen who placed the venture before the public are convinced that the result of this change will be ruinous to them. As far as they are concerned, while their loss will be insignificant, the injury to the small investor who has put up $500 or $1,000 in these 6½ per cent, twenty-year bonds, will be very, very great.

The margin between success and failure is so small and the difficulties so enormous in the development of western industries that every help should be given to their development. Hon. gentlemen who remember the early days of commodities like Kitchener, will know of the struggle for existence which some industries had to experience before they reached a measure of strength which enabled them to compete with more powerful interests. In western Canada our struggles have been tremendous and the difficulties we have had to overcome have been very great. I have been in Calgary for thirty years, and I have seen the small manufacturing plants become important industries. Before this discussion ends, I intend to speak regarding another industry which employs 125 hands and which is placed in a very difficult position by one of the items in this tariff. The industry to which I am now referring is one which utilizes one of the natural resources of Canada—clay. They manufacture jugs, stone bottles and earthenware such as are mentioned here, and I still believe that it is better for 110 Canadians in Alberta to find employment in the manufacture of earthenware, than it is for 110 men in Great Britain to find employment in the same industry. Such a condition is better for the British Empire, it is better for the Dominion of Canada, and certainly it is better for the province of Alberta. I urge the hon. minister as strongly as I can not to do anything which would jeopardize the interests of this little industry. Capital has been invested by men and women, in some cases from real desire to help their country. Those of you who have passed by Medicine Hat on the train have seen this little industry which is located I think both on the right and left side of the railway tracks. I have no personal interest in this matter, and so far as I can ascertain no immediate friends of mine are connected with it, but those who have made investments in these 6½ per cent twenty year bonds desire to see these clay beds utilized in the making of jugs and other products. When I attended a made-in-Alberta exhibition not long ago, I was surprised to see what they had been able to manufacture. I viewed with pardonable pride such a development in the industrial life of the west. It is true that at the present time it is only on a small scale, but they have been able to come down to Montreal and obtain business with the small protection they have at present. That protection enables them to compete successfully with the manufacturers in Scotland and Great Britain, but that protection is to be taken away.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I am only taking the item as it appears; the British preferential tariff is now free, as against the previous rate of 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is usually better informed, but perhaps he will permit me to explain.

Mr. BENNETT: I am reading the item as I see it.

Mr. DUNNING: I will deal with it when my hon. friend has finished.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be delighted if the hon. gentleman can assure me that the fears of those interested are unfounded. They have indicated to me that the slight protection of 15 per cent has enabled them to carry on. I would like to be assured that their apprehension is groundless.

Mr. DUNNING: I am quite sure that that apprehension is without foundation with respect to the products of the organizations to which my hon. friend has referred. Item 286 of the custom tariff reads:

Earthenware and stoneware, viz.: demijohns. churns or crocks.

That item has not been interfered with, and it covers the products of the Medalta Potteries, to which my hon. friend has referred. Under that item the British preferential rate is 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not touched by these proposals?

Mr. DUNNING: That is not touched by the item under discussion. Item 288 reads:

Earthenware and stoneware, brown or coloured and Rockinghamware; "C.C." or cream-coloured ware, decorated, printed or sponged; and all earthenware, n.o.p.

That item is not touched, and will still carry a British preferential rate of 20 per cent. The item we are dealing with covers tableware of china, porcelain, white granite or ironstone, and it is being made free under the British preferential tariff as against a former rate of 15 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: And drain tiles?

Mr. DUNNING: Drain tiles are covered by another item.

Mr. BENNETT: The item just above that, 283?

Mr. DUNNING: My information is that tableware and china, porcelain, white granite or ironstone is not made by this concern. I am advised that they have hopes of evolving the technique and the raw material which will enable them to manufacture the rougher forms of chinaware, but at the present time their operations are confined to earthenware. At the present time there is a clear distinction in the tariff between earthenware and tableware of china, porcelain, white granite or ironstone.

Mr. BENNETT: Hollow tiles are made by this company.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but no difficulty is anticipated in that regard. There is one possible source of competition, the extent to which a British china teapot might be said to come into competition wtih an Alberta earthenware teapot, but my hon. friend knows as a family man that the two articles are not at all comparable. Anyone who wants a china teapot is not going to accept an earthenware one, and I do not believe there is any ground for apprehension by these people because they are not making the commodities with which this tariff item deals.

An hon. MEMBER: How about Teapot Dome?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps my hon. friend is better acquainted with Teapot Dome. Paragraph 4 of the statement I have received reads:

The devolopment of artware, such as hand-painted teapots, jugs, vases, etcetera, has been undertaken during last year to retail at low prices in competition with Czechoslovakian and Japanese imports. The reception of this line has been extraordinarily good, although we are not making money on it, yet the reception so far given makes profit probable in the near future.

We secured orders for stone ginger beer bottles in eastern Canada of approximately 350,000 in competition with English production.

Mr. DUNNING: None of these items is being affected by this amendment to the tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: As regards tableware, what they apprehended was this: they are now manufacturing some kind of tableware called by them "art ware." Their competitors were not only from Great Britain, but also from Czechoslovakia and Japan under the general tariff items. It will be observed that those items are now 27½ per cent for the intermediate, the same as before, and increased to 30 per cent under the general tariff. But the general tariff has not affected the main competition, because these are treaty countries as I mentioned to the hon. gentleman some time ago. I am bound to say, on my first looking at the item, I thought it meant tableware of china, porcelain, white granite or ironstone, but tableware is an enormously broad classification and they felt that this last effort of theirs, which has not yet been productive of profitable business, might be and would be—

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will pardon me just for a moment, art ware is specially dealt with, it seems to me, under the earthenware item which refers to cream-coloured ware, decorated, printed or sponged.

Mr. BENNETT: I heard the hon. gentleman read that.

Mr. DUNNING: The point is that it is all earthenware as distinct from china.

Mr. BENNETT: One of the real difficulties that men starting small enterprises have to contend with is in regard to the customs classifications. The hon. gentleman has made it abundantly clear that in his opinion the matters to which I refer would not be covered by these classifications. For instance, recently an arbitrary change of classification was, I am advised, made by a government department in regard to radio cases in order to effect a certain purpose. In connection with this item generally, if the hon. gentleman will be good enough to pick up chinaware in almost any place, whether it be our hotel systems here or elsewhere or on the dining cars, and look at the bottoms of the cups, saucers, and plates, he will find, unfortunately, they are not made within the British Empire.

Mr. DUNNING: I am trying to correct that.

Mr. BENNETT: No; that is just what I am pointing out. The increased British preference makes free what was formerly at a rate of 15 per cent. Other countries had a duty of 27½ per cent to overcome in order to sell their goods in Canada, whereas the British had only a duty of 15 per cent to overcome. They had an advantage of 12½ per cent and still all that business has gone to other countries.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is not quite accurate in that statement. Our total imports last year amounted to $3,966,000, of which $2,368,000 came from the United Kingdom.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; but I am talking about chinaware.

Mr. DUNNING: This is chinaware.

Mr. BENNETT: For some reason I have never been able to understand why it is—perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain it—that when I enter the dining car of any train, whether it be the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian National, and look at the bottom of the cups, saucers and plates, as I have been in the habit of doing, I find they bear stamps showing that they are made in France and not in Great Britain. If the hon. gentleman when he goes down to the hotel to-night will do the same thing, he will find that what I have said is correct. I mention that because the British had a 12½ per cent advantage over their competitors and they were not able to get the business.

Mr. DUNNING: They have got most of it, more than anybody else.

Mr. BENNETT: But they have not this business about which I am talking. If they could not get it under those conditions, I do not think there is a sufficient incentive under this item to enable them to get it.

Mr. EULER: Fifteen per cent more.

Mr. BENNETT: The difference between them is 12½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: I will give the import figures, because they are interesting.

Mr. BENNETT: I looked them up some time ago, because in travelling through the country I have the same curiosity that I presume hon. gentlemen opposite have to find out where things are made, and I have been amazed to find the conditions that prevail. When I was in New York the other day I looked at the bottom of a cup I was using, in order to see where it was made and I found it was made in the United States. I just wondered why it is, if these articles are not made in Canada, that they could not be made within the British Empire. The assurance given me by the minister as to the construction to be placed on that item of the tariff will be very gratifying and I thank him for giving it. I first received a telegram, and on looking at the item from my own point of view, I did not think they needed to be so apprehensive. Then, when I received the letter from which I have just quoted, I found they were anxious that at least a statement should be placed on Hansard to which reference could be made, because the item had a rather unsettling effect upon some people who had put into the venture what little money they had. I am sure they will be deeply grateful for the assurance the minister gives that this item will not lessen the confidence they have in the ultimate development of that industry.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no change in the wording of the various items. They have been administered since 1906 in one case and 1910 in the other, so that the matter of distinction must be established. I think it would be interesting to the committee for me to place on Hansard, in view of the remarks of the leader of the opposition regarding railways and hotels using foreign crockery—

Mr. BENNETT: Not crockery; I was talking about tableware, chinaware.

Mr. DUNNING: When I use the term "crockery", I mean chinaware.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand "crockery" refers to kitchenware.

Mr. DUNNING: The importations in 1929 were as follows:

| Country | Value |
|---|---|
| United Kingdom | $2,368,000 |
| Germany | 437,000 |
| Japan | 365,000 |
| France | 345,000 |
| Czechoslovakia | 325,000 |
| United States | 91,000 |

On looking into this matter I was interested to find that United States importations were almost entirely heavy hotel cups, saucers and dishes; that they were apparently making an effort to get into the heavy hotelware. Probably Great Britain will get that business in future.

Mr. GEARY: Out of a total of about $4,000,000 worth of importations, the United States did $91,000 worth of business. The only other non-treaty country was Germany. In this item, the minister has done what the hon. member for Lincoln advised him to do in regard to another item: with a view to diverting trade from the United States and other non-treaty countries like Germany, to Great Britain, to increase not only the British preference but the duty under the general tariff. That seems to me a sensible way of bringing about the desired result. The minister, however, has done that in very few instances. I do not recall another case in the list where in order to divert trade from the United States to Great Britain he has increased the general tariff against the United States as well as increasing the British preference.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will find there are some.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There are very few.

Mr. GEARY: This is an example where the minister has done that in the case of an importation of $91,000 out of $4,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: There is $437,000 from Germany.

Mr. GEARY: It was north and south business that my hon. friend was complaining about. I think the proposal has its merits in the way of diverting trade from the United States to Great Britain, but why not also increase the tariff against the United States?

Mr. RYCKMAN: What troubles me is where the heart of the minister really is. We have dealt with item after item under which the minister has frankly said that there is no business from the British Empire but that he hopes to encourage it. Even when there was a business of only $1,500 under one item, he hoped to develop a larger business with the British Empire. Yet he tells this house that he has had a communication from the Medalta Company, which was proposing or hoping to engage in a certain line of business in Canada. The minister gives this company no chance. He extends hope to the British manufacturer, but when a Canadian manufacturer asks for an opportunity to build up a business that might be of great advantage to Canada and a glory to the Canadian commercial world, the minister says: No, I am going to work the tariff the other way and give Great Britain the preference; the Canadian industry will have to tail on behind. I object to that.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not the case.

Mr. GEARY: Is tableware produced in this country at all?

Mr. DUNNING: Articles of the class coming under this item are not produced in Canada.

Mr. HARRIS: That applies also to porcelain tableware?

Mr. DUNNING: To the whole item under discussion, which includes tableware of china, porcelain, white granite or ironstone.

Mr. HARRIS: Of a kind not produced in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: I say there are none produced in Canada.

Mr. KAISER: Have we not industries producing white granite tableware?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. KAISER: It depends on what you call tableware. Kitchenware is made in this country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What was the rate of duty on the $91,000 worth of these goods that came in from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: They came in under the general tariff at 27½ per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And the present duty will be?

Mr. DUNNING: Thirty per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The duty on that $91,000 at 27½ per cent amounted to $25,000. Why did you not increase the American duty a little bit more so as to make sure that trade would go to Great Britain?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—289. Baths, bathtubs, basins, closets, lavatories, urinals, sinks and laundry tubs of earthenware, stone, cement, clay or other material, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. SPENCER: There is no alteration in the duties as far as I can see.

Mr. DUNNING: The explanation is simple. Bathtubs and so forth are dealt with under the iron and steel items which we shall come to later. However, it was necessary to provide an n.o.p. item to include the earthenware variety, and in view of the fact that there had been no inquiry at all into the earthenware situation I did not propose to change the rate, but merely to include the item as it now stands, in order to differentiate it from the same article made with an iron or steel base.

Mr. SPENCER: Here are certain articles that are very badly needed, particularly in the homes on the prairies.

Mr. DUNNING: Made of earthenware?

Mr. SPENCER: No, bathtubs and so forth.

Mr. DUNNING: The articles under this item are made wholly of earthenware. Later on we shall come to the item my hon. friend really has in mind.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The importations are largely from the United Kingdom, are they not?

Mr. DUNNING: From the United Kingdom we received $416,000 and from the United States, $121,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And you leave both tariffs the same?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not changing the rates, for the reason I have given.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not raise the American tariff and throw more trade to Britain?

Mr. LUCAS: Are these goods produced in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—293. Plaster of Paris, or gypsum, calcined, and prepared wall plaster, the weight of the packages to be included in the weight for duty, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 11 cents; general tariff, 12½ cents..

Mr. FRASER: What are the importations?

Mr. DUNNING: We imported $165,000 worth.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And all Britain sent was $65 out of that $165,000.

Mr. DUNNING: The article is made free from Great Britain, but the spread has been widened. Under the old tariff there was a spread of only 4½ cents between Great Britain and the United States, whereas the spread is now 12½ cents.

Mr. FRASER: I see another item dealing with plaster of paris, or gypsum, not calcined. What were the rates on that?

Mr. DUNNING: I could not say. I have information only with respect to the items that I am dealing with. My hon. friend has it before him.

Mr. FRASER: I have not the rates.

Mr. DUNNING: I will find them for my hon. friend.

Mr. FRASER: My point is this. According to the Trade of Canada for the calendar year 1929, there were substantial imports from Great Britain under the item which is not touched, and under the item which is touched and in respect to which the rate is reduced there are no imports from Great Britain. Why not reduce the item under which there are substantial imports from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: I am, of course, going outside the range of what I have before me, and my hon. friend will forgive me if I have not complete information on the point he brings up. The item to which he refers is plaster of paris, or gypsum, not calcined, and it carries duties of 10, 12½ and 15 per cent. It is produced in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—296. Flint, ground flint stone; feldspar, fluorspar; mica schist; cliff, chalk, china or Cornwall stone, ground or unground, refuse stone, not sawn, hammered or chiselled not fit for flagstone, building stone or paving: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There are one or two articles under this item to which I think the minister should give particular consideration. I refer particularly to feldspar. There are only one or two places in the world where feldspar can be produced. One is in eastern Ontario, the other is in the United States; there may be a small quantity in Austria. The United States has a tariff against our ground feldspar, and yet we permit our unground feldspar in the ore to be taken over to the United States, ground there, and readmitted free to this country. This was all right until industries were started in Canada. There are now two factories in this country, one in Kingston and one in Toronto, and there is a proposal to build another at Brockville. I think the minister might well take care of these two factories by imposing countervailing duties on feldspar, as he has done on other commodities.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend refers entirely to feldspar?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Entirely.

Mr. DUNNING: There are several other commodities included in the item.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I want to deal with feldspar. The United States admits our unground feldspar free. They take mighty good care, however, not to admit any of our ground feldspar. There is no reason why this cannot be taken care of under the countervailing duty. Give us the same protection as the United States enjoys and we will be quite satisfied. Feldspar enters into a great many industries, but the quantity involved is small, and I can assure the minister that if he will give us the protection required we will double the output of our factories.

Mr. DUNNING: As my hon. friend will notice, the first part of this item is entirely unchanged both as to wording and rates of duty. But it has become necessary to deal with magnesite, a recent production of some importance and some promise. I believe that I am correct in saying that the research council of Canada has had a great deal to do with developing this new material, magnesite, the manufacture of which promises to be of some importance. That is the only reason for touching the item. I am not familiar with the feldspar situation. It probably would be wise to look into it. But at any rate my hon. friend will see that no change is being made with respect to it. That is, the situation after the budget is precisely the same as the situation was before, so far as it relates to feldspar. Perhaps he would be willing on the matter, because ground feldspar enters into many industries, and, as we often find in practice, one man's finished product is another man's raw material. Therefore at the moment I cannot say what will be the effect of putting a duty on ground feldspar. I suggest to my hon. friend that if his case is as well founded, as I know he believes it is, it could be inquired into by the tariff board so that those who use this commodity would be able publicly to state what the effect would be of imposing a duty upon it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the tariff board already has all the facts in relation to this matter. I might also refer to mica. How do the United States treat our mica? They admit free all our mica as it is taken out of the ground, but the minute we begin to treat it up goes their tariff. Consequently mica mining to-day in eastern Ontario is practically extinct. In the case of feldspar the tariff board has the facts, there is no great quantity involved, and I can assure the minister that if he does not take care of the industry it will meet the same fate as mica mining. We produce the best feldspar, only a small quantity enters into the manufacture of our enamelware, and it does seem most unfair that when we begin to grind our crude feldspar it is shut out from the United States, although their ground feldspar is admitted here free of duty to compete with our own product.

Mr. DUNNING: I am impressed somewhat by what my hon. friend says, and perhaps he would allow this item to stand in order that I may read through the records of the hearing to which he refers and see if there is sufficient material there, particularly from the point of view of those who use the article, to justify making some change in the tariff with respect to ground feldspar. I do not think we are really in a position to take action, but I should like to have an opportunity of looking into it further.

Mr. MANION: I have no objection to the item standing, but I notice that what in the last list was one item is now four; and everyone is free, as was the old item. That is one way, I suppose, of increasing the British preference, changing one item to four.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no. My hon. friend is not serious.

Mr. MANION: I am in earnest. It seems to be one method of increasing the British preference.

Mr. DUNNING: There are very many examples the other way.

Mr. MANION: And there are very many this way.

Mr. DUNNING: I referred to one a little while ago where four items have become one. The motive in this case was to deal with magnesite. We have basket items in the tariff, and we have to deal with them as the various items in the basket become important.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have dealt with feldspar and mica. In this item is also included refuse stone. What is the idea of admitting it free?

Mr. DUNNING: It has always been free.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I know, but the minister will realize that thousands of dollars' worth of this come in. Perhaps the west may not have any refuse stone, but certainly we have enough of it here.

Mr. DUNNING: The item stands, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I just want to complete the record in reference to feldspar. Of course, the minister can get this information anyway. As a matter of fact we shipped to the United States in 1929, 28,000 tons of feldspar, valued at $227,000. After they had manufactured it we took from them, free of duty, 64,000 hundredweight valued at over $54,000.

Mr. DUNNING: What was the crude valued at?

Mr. CHAPLIN: We exported 28,000 tons valued at $227,000. They sent us back a part of it ground, to the value of $54,000. But, as the member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) says, they will not allow us to send them our manufactured product at all. It is a case of our sending out our raw material for nothing and taking—

Mr. DUNNING: I am quite sure we were paid for that raw material.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They will take the crude in free of duty; but they impose a duty on our ground feldspar although we admit theirs free of duty.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 296 stands.

Mr. DUNNING: The whole thing had better stand, Mr. Chairman, because any remodelling which might be arranged—I do not say it can be—would probably include the subitems as well as the main.

The CHAIRMAN: Items 296, 296(a), 296(b) and 296(c) stand.

Customs tariff—302. Lithographic stones, not engraved: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where is this imported from?

Mr. DUNNING: We imported $2,400 worth, all from the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do you expect to get some business from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: Possibly, but not very much.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not make it sure by raising the tariff against the United States if you want to drive the business away?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—306. Marble, sawn or sand-rubbed, not polished; granite, sawn; paving blocks of stone; flagstone and building stone, other than marble or granite, sawn on not more than two sides: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is an inconsistency created by this item which I wish to correct by item 306(a). At this time I move to add item 306(a), as follows:

Building stone, other than marble or granite, sawn on more than two sides but not sawn on more than four sides, per 100 pounds: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 cents; general tariff, 22½ cents.

That is the complete item. The (a) part of it had been dropped.

Mr. MANION: What were the imports last year of building stones of various kinds, including marble?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports under the item were valued at $428,000, of which $398,000 worth came from the United States.

Mr. MANION: Does that apply to both item 306 and item 306(a)?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MANION: Has the minister a list to show the nature of the stones which we imported? It would seem to me that we ought to be able to supply our own demand when we have about 2,000,000 square miles with considerable stone in it.

Mr. DUNNING: A large quantity of building stone comes across the lake from the United States to the city of Toronto. It is very largely, I believe, Indiana limestone. Of course this item covers any kind of building stone.

Mr. KENNEDY: I suppose it covers tombstones, too.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it does not cover tombstones.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—311. Slate pencils and school writing slates: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. MANION: What were the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports were valued at $82,000, of which $79,000 came from the United States. That was a surprise to me, because I could see no reason why Great Britain should not have that business. They produce those articles in volume and quality. I think this change will turn the business towards Great Britain.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Did you raise the United States tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is never satisfied unless the tariff has been raised.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, that is not the fact. The minister has stated on a dozen occasions that he wants to transfer business from the United States to Great Britain. The best way to do it is to raise the American tariff, and in a few cases he has done so. Here is a case where he could do it and thereby divert the business to Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend would no doubt increase the general tariff on school slates which stands at the present time at 25 per cent, but I am not prepared to do so.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You do not expect to get it from the old country.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh yes, I do.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is free from the old country.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not raise the United States tariff and make it sure?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would like to ask the minister if pencils are not made in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: Pencils?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are not slate pencils and school writing slates produced in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no record of any production.

Mr. HARRIS: Is there any continental production of slates and slate pencils?

Mr. DUNNING: We apparently have not received any from the continent, but I presume they are produced there.

Mr. HARRIS: There are no importations to Canada from the continent?

Mr. DUNNING: If so, the importations must be very small. Of a total importation valued at $82,000, $79,000 worth came from the United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—313. Plumbago, not ground or otherwise manufactured: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—315a. Carbon electrodes exceeding 35 inches in circumference or outside measurement: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: The imports under this item were valued at $73,000, and came from the United States. These articles should come from Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Customs tariff—345. Zinc dust and sheets; zinc plates for marine boilers; sal ammoniac skimmings and seamless drawn tubing of zinc: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: The word "strip" has been omitted, and it should be inserted after the words "zinc dust," to read "zinc dust, strip and sheets."

Mr. MANION: What were the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The value of the imports of zinc dust was $36,000, of which $35,000 worth came from the United States. Zinc in sheets and plates was valued at $731,000, of which $365,000 worth came from the United States and $360,000 worth came from Belgium.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Practically nothing came from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: No, nothing from the United Kingdom.

Mr. MANION: Do we produce these items in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but not all of them. We do not produce strip or sheets.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What is the change in duty? It seems to me there is no change at all.

Mr. DUNNING: The change is in including zinc plates for marine boilers. The next item will explain it.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—345a. Zinc spelter and zinc in blocks, pigs, bars or rods; zinc plates, n.o.p., per pound: British preferential tariff, ¾ cent; intermediate tariff, 1 cent; general tariff, 1 cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—350. Wire of all metals and kinds, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no change in this item. Iron and steel wire are separately dealt with, and this is to deal with wire that is left.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—351. Wire, single or several, covered with any material, including cable so covered, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: The same explanation applies to this item.

Mr. MANION: There are four items in regard to wire. Can the minister give us the information as to those items?

Mr. DUNNING: I have the information in my iron and steel book, and I shall be pleased to give the information when we reach the iron and steel wires. These are n.o.p. items.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—351a. Wire, twisted, braided or stranded, including wire rope and wire cable, coated or not, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—351b. Wire cloth, or woven wire of brass or copper: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. MANION: That refers to copper wire.

Mr. DUNNING: It refers to wire made of brass or copper.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There is no change in it?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—352b. Screws of brass, copper or other metal, n.o.p.:

(a) Wood screws: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

(b) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—354a. Nickel and aluminum kitchen or household hollowware, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: The same explanation applies in this case.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—365. Composition metal and plated metal, in bars, ingots or cores, for the manufacture of watch cases, jewellery, filled gold and silver seamless wire and for dental purposes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—366. Watch actions and movements, and parts thereof, finished or unfinished, including winding bars and sleeves: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—373. Scrap of iron or steel:

(a) Wrought, being waste or refuse, to be remelted in furnaces or cupolas: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

(b) Cast, being waste or refuse, to be resmelted in furnaces or cupolas: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

(c) Railway rails, which have been in actual use, to be remelted in furnaces or to be remanufactured in rolling mills into other products than iron or steel rails: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Provided that articles of iron or steel, damaged in transit, if broken up under customs supervision, and rendered unsaleable except as scrap, may be entered for duty as scrap.

Mr. MANION: As we are beginning the items dealing with iron and steel I would suggest that we call it six o'clock.

Mr. DUNNING: We have the item of scrap to begin with, and every minute is valuable; I do not like to waste any time.

Mr. WHITE (London): There are several items under this heading; shall we deal with the first one only?

Mr. MANION: What are the imports of scrap iron?

Mr. DUNNING: There is one item which is free at the present time. In connection with it there are imports valued at $1,405,000 of which $1,392,000 worth came from the United States. The imports under the two dutiable items which are being made free are for the old item No. 374, $61,000, and for the old item 375, $104,000. In 1929 Canada exported scrap to a value of $1,120,000, of which $911,000 went to the United States.

Mr. MANION: What is the United States duty on scrap?

Mr. DUNNING: I will have to look that up.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister just make a memo of that and tell us after eight o'clock if there is any duty in the United States?

Mr. SIMPSON: The major free item was rails, was it not, used rails?

Mr. DUNNING: Item 775, covers iron and steel scrap, including rails. That was free before, and that is the big scrap item. I will have to look up the other information, and if it is desired to discuss the item further we can proceed at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering item 373, scrap of iron or steel.

Mr. WHITE (London): I understand that section (a) was carried, but I wonder if the minister could give us any information as to the exports of scrap under these three headings.

Mr. DUNNING: I am unable to separate the items, but the total exports under the three items were valued at $1,120,000, of which $911,000 worth went to the United States.

Mr. WHITE (London): I was unable to separate the items so far as exports were concerned, but the imports are clearly shown. I have no criticism to offer so far as item (a) is concerned, although I think the records will show that we cannot expect very much change in our trade. During the last five years we imported wrought scrap to the extent of 40,000 tons, and we exported 378,000 tons. In no year do the exports fall below the total imports of this particular item. Item (b), being cast scrap, is a product which competes directly with pig iron. In 1929 we imported 9,900 tons to the value of $104,000, and it strikes me that if the minister is going to benefit the primary producers of this country he would do well to consider whether this commodity should not bear a duty. Item (c) covers railways rails, which have been in actual use, to be remelted in furnaces or to be remanufactured in rolling mills into other products than iron or steel rails. The minister is raising the duty on steel billets by $2 per ton, but he is allowing this item to remain on the free list. There is one mill in Canada which make a specialty of the use of these scrap rails, and they would have an advantage of $2 per ton as compared with mills which are forced to import billets. This item also would compete with pig iron in the production of steel. If it is the idea of the government to assist the primary industry, then these railway rails should bear a duty. Perhaps that duty should not be as high as the one imposed on steel billets, because there is some waste in the working of them, but the rate should be as high as that imposed on pig iron. I would like to know from the hon. minister if he is not disposed to consider this matter.

Mr. DUNNING: Looking at the matter from the point of view of the whole of Canada, it was thought desirable to allow this material to continue to come in free. In some parts of Canada the people who engage in this business have to rely upon scrap as a raw material, and the evidence given before the tariff board revealed the fact that the industry generally has no complaint to make about the item as it now stands.

Mr. WHITE (London): During 1929 we imported 127,000 tons of this material. The minister raises the duty on billets by $2 per ton, and allows this item to remain on the free list. The change will not help the primary producer, but will give one mill in Canada an advantage over the others.

Mr. CANTLEY: These steel rails are rolled down into smaller sections used largely for reinforcing material in concrete construction, and the result is a product which is very inferior. As the hon. member for London has pointed out, it comes into direct competition with billets and blooms, with the result that there is comparatively no protection in regard to the production of the classes of material to which I have referred.

Let us take the item of pig iron. The duty is $1.50 per ton, whereas the duty on ingots of iron and steel is the same, namely, $1.50 per ton. The fundamental principle in preparing a tariff of this character, if it is intended to be protective to the industry concerned, is that the amount of protection or duty should bear some relation, usually a direct one, to the amount of labour involved in conversion. It costs practically $4 a ton to convert pig iron into steel. Therefore steel ingots, blooms, slabs and billets should be subject to a higher rate of duty than the pig iron from which they are produced. That should have been done but is not in this case.

Let us take the item of alloy steels, on which the duty is brought down to 5 per cent. In my judgment, the greatest development in the iron and steel industry of this or any other country in the near future will be in the matter of alloy steels. An attempt has been made in various places throughout this tariff to deal with the question of these ferro-alloys, but the protection given on the item to which I have referred is certainly not conducive to the future production of steel of that class, the production of which is very important from many points of view.

Again item 377c reads:

Ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, n.o.p., of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of forgings for use exclusively in the manufacture of forgings, in their own factories.

I am not just sure what the minister has in mind in regard to that item, and I should be glad if he would be good enough to advise me.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend had better wait until we reach the item. I do not want to confuse the discussion.

Mr. WHITE (London): I presume the minister would rather deal with paragraph (b) first and get rid of it. In that case the former general tariff was $2.50 per ton. The new rate is free. Will the minister consider putting some duty on that, in view of the fact that it competes with pig iron?

Mr. DUNNING: I will look up the figures as to imports.

Mr. WHITE (London): The imports amounted to 9,900 tons in 1929.

Mr. DUNNING: This whole matter was considered at a number of hearings before the Tariff Advisory Board. Representations of the entire industry were heard, and with the varied conditions prevailing throughout the country—the value of the scrap imported last year was $104,000—I am convinced that the industry as a whole is satisfied with the placing of all these scrap items on the free list as raw material, particularly as they relate to the industry in some parts of the country where it is found difficult to secure the ordinary form of raw materials used elsewhere in Canada. In a matter of this kind we have to consider the industry from coast to coast, and I am sure the item meets generally with the approval of the industry.

Mr. CANTLEY: How can it be necessary to put this material on the free list, in view of the fact that a very large tonnage is exported? I am referring now to the item.

Scrap of iron or steel:
(a) Wrought, being waste or refuse, to be remelted in furnaces or cupolas.
(b) Cast, being waste or refuse, to be resmelted in furnaces or cupolas.

May I point out that that is a misstatement. You cannot resmelt anything.

Mr. DUNNING: That should be "remelted." It is a mistake in the printing which is being corrected.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is not corrected in the copy that I have.

Mr. DUNNING: The resolutions in the hands of the Chairman are corrected so far as typographical errors are concerned. I am glad my hon. friend drew attention to it.

Mr. WHITE (London): In regard to paragraph (c), a few minutes ago I quoted the figures of the imports for the year ending March, 1929, namely, 127,000 tons. They came in at the rate of $11 a ton. The minister says that he has considered the matter from the standpoint of the whole of Canada. A few days ago he reconsidered his decisions in connection with other items, and it seems to me this should not be sealed up tight; it should be susceptible to reasoning. Here is material at a value of $11 a ton entering into competition with steel billets, which are listed to-day in Pittsburgh at $33 a ton with a duty of $4.50 a ton besides. Not many mills in Canada have to buy billets, but those that do will have to compete with the free entry of this old rail. It is neither just nor fair.

Mr. CANTLEY: The item is just as unfair to mills that produce their own slabs, blooms and billets as it is to the smaller mills that have to buy the material in the open market. It simply means that the labour and material involved in the manufacture of these receive no adequate protection. The item is faulty from the point of view of the basic construction of the whole iron and steel schedule. Of that there can be no possible doubt.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—374. Pig iron, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $1.50; intermediate tariff, $2.50; general tariff, $2.50.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—375. Ferro-alloys:
(a) Spiegeleisen, being an alloy of iron and manganese, containing not less than 15 per centum and not more than 30 per centum, by weight, of manganese: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—375(b). Ferro-manganese and silico-manganese, being alloys of iron and manganese containing more than 30 per centum, by weight, of manganese: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—375(c). Ferro-silicon, being an alloy of iron and silicon, containing not less than 10 per centum and not more than 15 per centum, by weight, of silicon: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—375(d). Ferro-silicon, being an alloy of iron and silicon, containing more than 15 per centum, by weight, of silicon: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. WHITE (London): The duty under the general tariff has been changed from $4.50 to 10 per cent. At to-day's quoted prices, that will raise the price of ferro-silicon, provided that the duty is taken advantage of, by $1 per ton. Here is another case where the manufacturer of billets is at a disadvantage so far as his material is concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: My advice is that the values of this material under paragraph (d) range from $25 to $100 a ton, and that the only fair way to levy a duty on a product varying so widely in price is to impose it on an ad valorem basis.

Mr. WHITE (London): It is worth about $56 a ton to-day, and runs about that figure regularly.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—375(e). Ferro-phosphorous, being an alloy of iron and phosphorous, containing more than 15 per centum, by weight, of phosphorous: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There are no importations?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports cannot be separately traced.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—375(f). Ferro-alloys, crude, for remelting, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—376. Sponge iron: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—377. Ingots, of iron or steel, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $1.50; intermediate tariff, $2.50; general tariff, $3.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to protest against the position in which this is left. There is no change from the old tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. The general tariff is 50 cents a ton higher.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is the same under the British preference.

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is worried about the British preferential rate.

Mr. CANTLEY: It means that it will come in from Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—377a. Blooms, cogged ingots, slabs, billets, n.o.p., sheet bars, of iron or steel, by whatever process made, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $2.50; intermediate tariff, $4; general tariff, $4.50.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are some matters connected with the very decided increase in the duty under this item, as well as under other items, to which I should like to call attention. It has been constantly urged that the protection of these industries would mean the protection of the workmen engaged in them, but there is nothing whatever to show that such is the case. Generally speaking, a great many of the industries that are the most highly protected pay the poorest wages. Industries in Canada which for years have been receiving from this government the advantage of special privileges are yet paying their workmen very poor wages indeed. In some connections other than that of the tariffs we have adopted the principle that the granting of concessions and special privileges, shall be dependent upon the maintenance of certain standards by the companies receiving the benefit of them. During the last few years, in awarding contracts—even in the granting of the charters—for the building of bridges, for example, we have insisted upon the inclusion of certain fair wage clauses. The proposal I should like to make is, that we ought not to grant any increase in the tariff until there is an understanding with the companies that they shall treat their employees fairly. We should insist on fair treatment for the men as to hours of employment, wages, and general conditions of labour, and that should be a condition precedent to the granting of any favours. Surely that is a fair proposal. It cannot be claimed to be very radical in its nature, although I would not hesitate to make it if it were. I am following a precedent that was recently set in the Ontario legislature. On February 12 last an application was made for an increase in the bounty on iron ore mined and smelted in Ontario. Though the application was granted, a protest was made in the legislature by a Liberal member, Mr. S. C. Tweed, president of the Ontario Equitable Life and Accident Insurance Company, who called attention to the fact that at the Algoma Steel works, at the Soo conditions of labour almost approaching slavery existed. He claimed that shifts of workingmen varied from eight to twelve hours for seven days in the week. Mr. Tweed's efforts were highly applauded by some of the leading papers in Ontario. I notice that the London Advertiser said:

The people of Ontario do not want an industry built on inordinate hours of labour. It would be too dear at such a price. Mr. Tweed performed a public service in directing attention to the conditions at the Soo, and any further grant of public money should be contingent upon safeguards for the workers. The assertion of the vice-president of the Algoma Steel Corporation that a change to the three-shift six-day system is being planned would be welcomed, and he will be held to his promise.

I would commend the statement in that editorial Let me repeat one phrase:

Any further grant of public money should be contingent upon safeguards for the workers.

I should like to apply this principle to the matter before us, and insist that any further tariff concessions be made contingent upon safeguards for the workers. Commenting upon the Algoma situation, the Toronto Mail and Empire said:

These advances will cost the company an additional wage distribution of about $300,000 a year, but we believe that the change will be as profitable for the company in the long run as it should be beneficial to the employees so affected from the start. It is in harmony with the progressive spirit of the age.

It is difficult for the Algoma Steel Corporation at Sault Ste. Marie to bring about decent conditions of labour when its competitor at Sydney, the British Empire Steel Corporation, permits abominable conditions to exist. The minister speaks of implementing the report of the Duncan commission by granting extra aid to the steel industry. Let me say that there have been other commissions whose recommendations have not been implemented. I should like to refer to the commission appointed under order in council P.C. 1929, dated September 22, 1923, to inquire into conditions among the steel workers at Sydney, Nova Scotia. The report states:

To sum up: The fundamental causes of the recurring industrial unrest among the steel workers may be stated as follows:

(1) The rate of wages.
(2) The long hours of labour.
(3) Refusal by the company to recognize the union.
(4) Denial of collective bargaining.
(5) Belief that there was discrimination against members of the union.
(6) The absence of any recognized organized means, through which representatives of the men could confer with representatives of the management.
(7) Irregular employment and the fear of unemployment.
(8) The high cost of living.
(9) Agitation stirring up hostile class feeling by speakers and writers who denounced those in positions of authority, including the judiciary; called capitalists and employers by such names as "slave drivers," "labour exploiters," "common enemy," etc.; and urged workmen to seek redress for their grievances by hostile and violent action.

Labour agitators are condemned. But if after seven years there is very little or no improvement in conditions, can you very much wonder that some of the workers should lose faith in parliamentary action and begin to agitate for more direct measures? May I quote from the report where the hours of labour are being dealt with:

A great deal of testimony was received to the effect that the men considered the hours of labour too long. In the department's in which the continuous process practice obtains, such as the blast furnaces, open hearth furnaces and coke ovens, the work is carried on on the two-shift plan. That requires the day-shift men to work eleven hours and the night-shift men thirteen hours. Once a fortnight when the men change shifts they work for a twenty-four hour change-over period.

A good deal of the work in connection with the continuous processes in the steel industry is quite intermittent in character. But when anything goes wrong the case is different and the twelve-hour day becomes a physical strain. The twelve-hour day with the seven-day week and the twenty-four hour change-over once a fortnight make a very exhausting combination.

A twelve-hour day followed steadily by any group of men for a considerable number of years means a decrease of their efficiency and a reduction of their vigour. The question of hours of labour has to be considered from a social as well as a physical point of view. A twelve-hour day in the plant means about thirteen hours away from his home and family for all the working days. That leaves little if any time for family life, recreation, social enjoyments and leisure.

Mr. BENNETT: Are the hours of labour still twelve?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: At the present time?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. I will give the evidence as to that in a moment. Let me quote further from the report:

We recommend that, in the interests alike of the company and the workmen, early and earnest attention be given to the elimination of the twenty-four hour change-over period and to the abolition of the seven-day week.

One more quotation, and I give this in a little greater detail because I do not think, as is indicated by the question of the hon. leader of the opposition and as has been expressed to me by various members of the house, that many of the citizens of this country are apprised of the real conditions that exist. This is the quotation:

The commissioners are of the opinion that the hours of labour have been excessively long in some departments of the plant under the two-shift system of operation.

The commissioners recommend that in the interests alike of the company and the workmen, early and earnest attention be given to the elimination of the twenty-four hour change-over period and to the abolition of the seven-day week.

The commissioners recommend that the question of adopting the three-shift plan (eight hours per shift) in the departments of continuous processes and a maximum of a ten-hour day for other workmen be given the most careful consideration. In our opinion the change would be advantageous to the company and beneficial to the men, and should be adopted.

The commissioners are of the opinion that the iron and steel industry of Sydney can be carried on successfully and amicably in such a way as to meet the reasonable desires and requirements of the workmen and the company.

Since the steel industry is one which has been characterized by intermittent periods of prosperity and depression, the commissioners recommend that in the interests alike of the shareholders and the employees the company should discuss with representatives of the employees the question of drawing to some extent upon the surplus accumulated during fat years to tide the workmen as well as the shareholders over lean years when changes in rates of wages are in contemplation and when the prospect of regular employment is not good.

As an alternative, the commissioners recommend that in the public interest some competent authority be directed to investigate and report upon the use which is made of such surplus funds of the company.

Now, that report of the royal commission was made on September 22, 1923. So far as I know not one of those recommendations has been carried out. The men are still working the long hours; they are still working for pitiably low wages; they are still working under intolerable conditions. The history of the Besco Company is fairly well known. It has been a series of financial blunders. Notwithstanding all that, this company, together with the other steel companies in Canada, are asking for "additional protection," as they call it.

Now, the leader of the opposition asked if these conditions still prevail. Last year, I called attention to the facts in this case. A committee of the Sydney ministerial association published a report on what they termed the "intolerable conditions" prevailing in the steel plant. They say:

For the continuous operations, consisting of the coke ovens, blast furnaces and open hearth departments, involving approximately 1,000 men, the day term is eleven hours and the night thirteen throughout a seven-day week. That is, the men in these departments work an average of eighty-four hours every week—sixty-six during the week on day duty and one hundred and two for the week on night duty.

Mr. BENNETT: How does that compare with other steel plants in Canada? I ask for information.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The steel plant at Algoma is also working on the same basis as was shown by Mr. Tweed in the provincial legislature. I understand that the plants at Hamilton have adopted the eight hour day. I proceed with one other quotation from this report of the ministerial association.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend did not give us the date of that report.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was just about a year ago. Confirmation of the facts contained in this report has been given recently before a social service organization in the city of Toronto by Rev. Doctor C. W. Gordon, who has been investigating conditions at Sydney. My colleague says that this report is nearly two years old. Now let me give this quotation:

We believe that the plight—

And this is the plea that the ministers of Sydney make:

—it can scarcely be called other—of the some 1,000 men in the continuous operations is a scandal and a shame. To be on light duty, under the most favourable working conditions, from eleven to thirteen hours were trying enough, but when we know the necessarily almost intolerable conditions in which these men have to work, heavy manual labour in gas, smoke, heat, and in some cases, exposure to the elements summer and winter, the situation is nothing less than appalling, and their treatment utterly abhorrent to the dictates of humanity.

The only argument advanced by the management is the financial one. "We are not in a position to give a general increase in wages nor the eight-hour day."

This is what the ministerial association of Sydney recommend, and I believe they made similar recommendations before the tariff board:

We recommend:

(1) That this ministerial association of Sydney wait upon the responsible heads of the D.I.S. Co. at the earliest opportunity and urge the just claims of the men for a shorter working day.

(2) That representatives be sent immediately to the federal Department of Labour and to the Prime Minister of Canada urging that if and when the steel companies of Canada are allowed a protective tariff that provision be made for the men receiving the standard hours of labour adopted by the parliament of Canada, namely, the eight-hour day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad indeed that there is an expression of approval of that statement of the ministerial association of Sydney. I think there are a good many members on the Conservative side, where they are urging protection, who would like to see some protection for the working men.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would appeal to the government, which has some responsibility in the matter, that it do not let this opportunity pass without insisting at this juncture, when there is power in its hands, that no further tariff protection will be given until these standards are lived up to. I may say that the management apparently have no intention of improving the working conditions, even if they receive added tariff protection. Not very long ago I had a statement from some of the men there, and they pointed out that when they had approached Mr. Kelley with regard to this matter he had told them that although there was talk about the tariff, even if they received additional help it would be but a drop in the bucket. He referred as well to the bonus on coal used for the making of steel and this also he said had not materialized. The company were not in a position to give a general wage increase and had no intention whatever of doing so. If my correspondent rightly reports what has been said by his local manager it seems to me that we have a right at the present time to see that some pressure is brought to bear upon the company in this respect. As is shown by their statement, the company have been doing reasonably well; they have laid aside certain reserves. To go back to the statement of ministerial association, if it has been possible for them through good financing to lay aside certain reserves they ought to find it possible to make some provision for the men concerned. In the report two years ago of the ministerial association, the statement is made that $2,000,000 had been retained for depreciation, or $1,000,000 per year, the balance presumably being available for interest charges on bonds and so on—

> —while not a cent of this amount has been allowed for the better condition of the human element in the industry. It does cost money, doubtless a great deal, to replace the machinery of steel making. Unfortunately, it costs the industry little or nothing to replace men; there is nearly always a surplus of labour.

An hon. MEMBER: That is what they like.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There is the condition which we face. Of course from the standpoint of the employer it is a good thing to have a surplus of labour, but surely we have reached the stage of civilization when a group of men such as hon. gentlemen here assembled in parliament, representing the people of Canada, ought to be in a position to insist upon our working men being enabled to live up to higher standards. The treaty of Versailles insisted upon the eight hour day, but we are told again and again by the government that under our constitution it is impossible to enforce the eight hour day in the provinces. Yet here is an opportunity for this government to insist upon it, and there is no reason why they should not do so. If they would stipulate that the increase in the tariff should be contingent upon a provision on the part of the industries concerned for the eight hour day, changes would be made in a very short time. A few years ago we were told we could not get the eight hour day in Canada because it did not prevail in the United States, and that therefore our people could not compete with the people in the United States. In at least the larger steel plants of the United States they have adopted the eight hour shift, yet we have not had such a move in the larger steel plants of Canada.

As I thought of this question I recalled an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of May 3, 1929, under the heading: Too Much of Paternalism. It was criticising the report of the industrial and international relations committee of this house; the particular report referred to endorsed the principle of unemployment insurance. The editorial is as follows:

> It is perhaps fortunate for the country that neither this committee nor parliament possesses authority to give effect to the principle that is so lightly endorsed.

Further on it states:

> It is to be hoped that parliament and the government find a resting place for these recommendations in the most convenient wastebasket. And the reason is clear. It is that if Canada keeps heeding all the reports that are made by committees, and goes on doing all the things that a lot of well-intentioned but misinformed people want her to do, then this country will become so burdened with paternalism and bureaucracy that the taxpayer will be crushed into the earth.

After conceding that some sort of unemployment insurance may be necessary in Great Britain, the editorial goes on to say:

> But in Canada,sparsely settled, lacking in population, and passing through an era of tremendous development, the proposition that it is necessary to insure our people against unemployment is absurd.

The editorial concludes by deploring that we are "getting away from the old wholesome practice of individual effort." If the principles laid down by the Journal were applied to tariff privileges I wonder just what we would be doing. The steel companies and the protected industries in this country have been enjoying "paternalism" since confederation. We have been warned against the dole, but the industries have been receiving the dole with a vengeance, and in their case it has not been a small dole. If we are to insist upon individual effort on the part of workmen, why should we not insist upon the old wholesome practice of individual effort on the part of steel corporations? Why can these industries not stand on their own feet? The workers are expected to stand on their own feet, to work a twelve hour day and receive as wages mere miserable pittances. Some of the men working for these companies are receiving no more than 33 cents an hour. Yet the steel plants are permitting these very unwholesome conditions to continue. Of course it would be "paternalism" if we gave unemployment insurance; it would be "paternalism" if we prevented the men from working seven days in the week and from working eleven and thirteen hour shifts.

There is an opportunity for this government to do the just thing by a large body of workers. Within two months the elections will be at hand, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific the Liberals and Conservatives will be appealing to the factory workers to support them. The Liberals will take the ground that in some way or another this budget is protecting their interests. The Conservatives will say that if they are elected they will make it their business to protect the workman. Here is the chance for both parties. If the Conservatives are in earnest and insist upon it, I think they can force the government to give the workers the conditions they deserve. On the other hand, if the government is in earnest in its profession of a real desire to put the eight hour day in operation, and has been barred from doing so only by constitutional difficulties, this affords it an admirable opportunity for action. There are a certain number of hon. members on both sides of the house who wish well to their fellow men and it is for them to insist that this intolerable condition no longer obtains.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) upon his very eloquent address. It is always a pleasure to me to listen to him and to-night he has ably championed the case of the working men in the steel industry. This government, by the enactment of Bill No. 49, has shown its good will towards the workers. This bill has to do with the eight hour day and fair wages in government contracts or in work performed for the Dominion government. During this session I had the opportunity to point out that the provinces have full jurisdiction with regard to the eight hour day and fair wages, and I wonder that the provinces have not followed the example of British Columbia, which has adopted minimum wage laws for men and women.

Mr. BENNETT: So has Alberta.

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend will permit, there is only one wage law in the province of Alberta respecting minimum wages. That relates to women, and it contains a provision also to the effect that the wages of men shall not be lower than the wages of women, but that does not mean much, as my hon. friend knows. The hon. gentleman is a most distinguished lawyer and is very well acquainted with the fact that in his own province there is no distinct law relating to minimum wages for men and it is exactly the same in Ontario. So I believe I am fair in saying that there is only one minimum wage law for men, and that is in British Columbia. In the other provinces what has been done for the men does not amount to so much, because if the men who work in the steel plants are not paid more than young girls who work in laundries, I do not believe it is fair. At all events, except on Dominion government contracts, the wages to be paid and hours to be worked is a matter for the provincial governments to deal with. Some of the governments have already taken steps with regard to the hours of labour and the wages paid on their own provincial works, but that is not sufficient. The federal government, outside of works under its own control, has no jurisdiction to enact legislation in respect to fair wages or the eight hour day or the forty-four hour week; so I do not understand why the provinces do not take steps to give the working men a chance, by passing laws to the effect that working men should not work more than forty-four hours a week and should receive a decent salary. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this would be fair; and when I speak of the matter in this house it is because what is said here is recorded in Hansard and is read throughout the country. It is a matter of momentous importance to thousands upon thousands of people. I do not understand how a mother could bring up and look after a family on a wage of $2 or

In summing up, I do not see how the federal government could try to hold up these concerns; if they did so the companies would say that they had no chance to pay fair wages. But I believe the provincial governments which are interested in the matter should make a study of the situation and be bold enough to take a step which will be a benefit to all concerned. Merchants, doctors and every one will benefit if the working men are paid better wages; they will have more money to spend; they will live more comfortably, and the governments will then have less to spend in the way of relief and for public health. I believe this matter is entirely under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments, and they should look after it at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Mr. Chairman, I wish very strongly and emphatically to associate myself with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the very excellent case which he has made for some consideration on the part of this government for the steel workers in Sydney. It is true that the budget offers something to the British Empire Steel Corporation. I am not here to hold any brief for that corporation; I should like to see it get fair play, but I am particularly anxious that it should give fair play to those people out of whose sweat and blood the corporation's profits are made. No member of this house, if he is fair, whether he is a Liberal a Conservative, a Progressive or a Labour man, can argue that the British Empire Steel Corporation is doing what is right and fair when it compels its men to work thirteen hours a day, as they are doing in some cases, and ten hours a day as they are doing in all cases. A great many of these men do not even get one day off a week; they are compelled to work on Sunday as well.

In this budget the government has offered certain financial concessions, both by bonus and by direct protection, to the British Empire Steel Corporation. For my part I consider that the British Empire Steel Corporation is well able to take care of itself, but the men who are employed by that corporation are not able to take care of themselves, as has been shown by the unfortunate experiences these men have had in the years during which they have been employees of that corporation. Before these items pass and before these concessions are given to the British Empire Steel Corporation I believe all parties in this house, irrespective of political affiliations, should join together and say that for once in this country we are going to place human values ahead of any other values that may be considered later. For my part I would not want one single concession made to the British Empire Steel Corporation by this government unless the government first bargained with them to give their employees a fair deal in the matter of wages and working hours.

When those of us who are interested in a shorter working day and better wages for labour in this country speak in parliament, we are immediately confronted with the British North America Act. Hon. gentlemen say, "Oh, the constitution will not allow us to do this." Here is a case where a corporation is looking for your money, for the money of the taxpayers of Canada and for the money of the steel workers of Sydney. Before that money is turned over to them this government has a golden opportunity to get away from the constitutional objection and say to that corporation—which I suppose, like other corporations, will do almost anything for money—"Give your workingmen the eight-hour day and we will give you the concessions promised in our budget." Unless the workingmen of Sydney get some benefit from these concessions, I am opposed to them; for any company which compels its workmen in this civilized and Christian age to work twelve hours a day and a great many of them to work seven days a week, should not be given any concessions by a civilized government. That is the stand I take, and I do not care who likes it or who does not like it. I think the Minister of Finance should hold up these portions of his budget, get in touch with the heads of that corporation and say, "We are willing to do this for you provided you are prepared to deal fairly with the men whom you employ." An opportunity is thus offered to get away from the constitutional objection, and all parties in the house can unite to do something for those men who have been so unfairly treated for many years.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I have to agree with a great deal of what has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I think I can say that I know more about the conditions under which these men labour at the steel plant in Sydney than does any other hon. member in the house. I know something about the hours of labour and about their living conditions, and I supported this budget because it contained a clause which might be of some help to those men. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has delivered this same type of speech for many years, but those speeches always have been futile because they never had any practical object in view. I have a practical object in view, and when the resolution comes before this house I am going to move that a provision be added that the money be not paid to the steel company unless it shall find its way into the wage envelopes of the men. That is a practical suggestion worth more to these men than all the speeches which the hon. member could deliver during the next ten years.

This thing has to be considered from a common sense point of view. If the steel company at Sydney can afford to pay higher wages and operate on an eight hour day, it should be compelled to do so. If, on the other hand, it cannot afford to operate under those conditions, then no law which we pass in this house is going to compel it to do so. How are we going to find out the true state of affairs? There is a Labour department in this country whose duty it is to have found out these things long ago. If that department were properly organized and properly functioning it would have known of the financial condition of the Dominion Iron & Steel Company, and would have known whether that company was able to pay increased wages. The department has fair wage officers and experts who could have obtained this information. No assistance was given to me when I took the stand I did upon the budget. It cost me something to do that, but while I remain in this house I propose always to have some practical object in view whenever I speak either on behalf of the labouring man or upon any other subject. I do not propose to take up the time of the committee in making futile observations regarding the conditions which obtain down there. We have heard the reports of the ministerial association—we had Rev. Doctor C. W. Gordon down there last year—and everything they say is true. The conditions under which the men work are not satisfactory and are such as no honest Canadian citizen should have to put up with. If that concern can afford to pay higher wages we should see that it does so. There is only one way we can do that, and that is the course I propose to adopt. At that time we will find out just where these gentlemen stand.

[Mr. Finlay MacDonald.]

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, for several sessions the house has been discussing the question of higher wages for employees of the government, and from all parts of the house we have had expressions of opinion in favour of granting to them a higher wage. That expression of opinion was not confined to any particular party, and I hope, now that this question has come up of providing better working conditions and higher pay for those employed by the steel companies, it will reseive the same unanimous support.

For a number of years we have listened in this house to the pleas of hon. members from the maritime provinces regarding maritime rights. There is hardly a member from that part of the country who has not risen in his place and said that he was in some way or the other a maritime-righter. If ever there was a time when the members from the maritimes should be fighting for maritime rights, this is it. It is a fine thing to fight for protection for industry, it may be a fine thing to fight for protection for capital, which is really protection for industry, but it is much more important to fight for protection for the human beings who are employed in such industries. We are fighting to-night for protection for those human beings who create dividends for the share and bond holders of these various corporations, and I hope the Liberal members will not be more backward than some of the Conservative members have been. I am sure it would be a reflection upon the Liberal party if they permitted the Conservative party to stand alone in a fight for better living conditions for those who make millions of dollars for the shareholders of these corporations. We find that already the value of the shares of the steel companies has risen, no doubt as a result of the budget introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend please quote his authority for that statement?

Mr. HEAPS: I received that information from a friend of mine in whom I have every confidence. He told me that to-day the shares of some of the steel companies had gone up several points.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish my hon. friend would produce proof of that.

Mr. HEAPS: I have not the proof with me, but I accepted it as coming from a most reliable source. There is no doubt that concessions of this character are very valuable to the corporations which receive them, otherwise they would not be asking for them. It might be pointed out that this company came before the tariff board seeking the concession, and they would not have asked for it unless they expected that it would be of considerable value.

The question arises whether or not these concessions are necessary. There are some who think that this is not an opportune time to grant such concessions as these to the steel companies of Canada. I would like to quote a sentence or two from an article which appeared in the Monetary Times of March 15, 1929, written by F. A. Carman. The following is the concluding portion of the article:

> Until further progress has been made in an exploration of the facts, would it not be unwise to rush into new tariff duties which, though they might benefit certain branches of iron and steel manufacture, could not fail to impose serious handicaps on others? Do not sane considerations of national policy call for thorough investigation as the foundation of government measures for the encouragement of this basic industry?

That opinion is shared by a great many people. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre quoted from the statement of the ministerial association, and I would like to quote further from that same statement. This may be of interest to the hon. leader of the opposition, who asked about the working hours of the men engaged in the steel industry, particularly in Nova Scotia. I quote as follows:

> The ordinary working day at the Dominion Iron and Steel Company's plant is ten hours—from 7 a.m. to 5.30 p.m., with 30 minutes at noon for lunch. For night duty there is a twelve-hour term, with thirty minutes at midnight for lunch. For the continuous operations, consisting of the coke ovens, blast furnaces and open hearth departments, involving approximately 1,000 men, the day term is eleven hours and the night thirteen throughout a seven-day week. That is, the men in those departments work an average of eighty-four hours every week—sixty-six during the week on day duty and 102 for the week on night duty.

It would be a reflection on parliament if we attempted to give any form of protection to an industry that works so many of its men 102 hours per week. In 1926 we had the Duncan commission investigating conditions and I think we have been told by the Minister of Finance that the present increase in duties is carrying out the recommendations contained in the report of the Duncan commission.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. HEAPS: In the report of the Duncan commission, there were recommendations that the steel industry should be given increased protection.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is quite wrong. My reference was to a matter which is not now before the committee and cannot be until the resolution is reached, with regard to a payment on coal used in the production of steel. That was the reference to the Duncan report.

Mr. HEAPS: Possibly the minister is going a little beyond the recommendation contained in the report of the Duncan commission. In 1926 the Duncan commission reported on conditions in certain of the industries forming part of the British Empire Steel Corporation, namely, the coal industry.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): And the steel industry as well. They asked for an investigation.

Mr. HEAPS: I will quote one or two paragraphs from the report of the Duncan commission, showing some of the conditions of the men employed by this corporation to which so much protection is proposed to be given at this time. The report refers to the housing and social conditions that prevail there, and if we are going to give to this company the concessions which they themselves have sought, I think they might do something on behalf of the men, particularly in regard to the social conditions which exist in Sydney and Glace Bay. I find the following at page 19 of the report:

> Many of these houses are old—some of them having been erected by the General Mining Association more than fifty years ago. Others were built for the purpose of housing men engaged on the erection of portions of the operators' plant or in opening up new mines; the latter are little better than temporary shelters and are known and properly described as "shacks." Many families occupy houses that are much too small for their needs. The houses generally have no kitchen or cellar, and in certain districts, in default of waterworks, water is either delivered by the operators in carts or has to be carried from a distance. Where water is piped into the house, there is an almost total absence of bathrooms or water-closets, due, we were informed, to the lack of sewers. There is much complaint of the leaky condition of the roofs, of ill-fitting doors and windows, of doors that are rotted or badly worn, and of walls on which paper and plaster are in shreds and patches.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): May I ask the hon. member whether he has not made a misstatement there? That is not the Duncan report to which we referred. The same gentleman was chairman of the commission, but it was a commission that made an inquiry two or three years previously.

Mr. HEAPS: I thank the hon. gentleman. I thought I mentioned the fact that this was the first Duncan report and not the second one. In any case, it is the same company with which I am dealing.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): The first commission dealt with the Dominion Coal Company; the second commission dealt with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company.

Mr. HEAPS: They are all part of the same corporation, the British Empire Steel Corporation, and if we are to benefit the steel industry by an increased tariff our action in that respect will reflect upon the increased profits of the coal industry which is part of the British Empire Steel Corporation.

Another paragraph in the same report reads:

> Social Wellbeing and Environment
> We do not feel that such improvements as the constituted authorities can effect are enough to create speedily the environment which these mining communities need and we very strongly recommend the constitution of a fund which can be administered for purposes connected with the social well-being, recreation, and conditions of living of the workers in or about the coal mines, and with mining education and research.
> This fund should be constituted by contributions from all the operators of coal mines, to the extent of one cent per ton of coal raised, and by contributions from the province from the royalties which they receive in respect of ownership of the mines, to the extent also of one cent per ton of coal raised. If these contributions were continued for a period of five years, a fund would be constituted which would go a long way to improve very materially the surroundings in which the miners live and to afford the miners and their families reasonable opportunities for social, physical and intellectual development.

I am informed that nothing along these lines has yet been done so far as the operators or the province are concerned. In the latter part of 1928 I was through this portion of Nova Scotia; I was in the large town of Glace Bay, which has a population of 12,000, and I asked a gentleman, an old resident of Glace Bay, to show me through the miners' residential portion of the town and show me the conditions under which they lived. He took me around, and lo and behold! I saw on the front street—I do not remember the name of it—a number of houses which had recently been painted, while all the other houses away in the rear had not been touched. I said to this gentleman: "How is it that these few houses have been painted pale blue, green and other colours, while the others have not been touched?" His reply was: "Since the Duncan commission reported, they have painted the front houses, so that visitors who fly past in automobiles will think something has been done to improve all the houses in Glace Bay." After visiting that town and seeing some of the miserable conditions under which the men, women and children have to live, I could not help coming away with the feeling that any government, of whatever political conviction it might be, that did not do something to improve those conditions was not worthy of the confidence of the people of this country. What did I see? In the streets where the houses were built there were no sewers. Running down in front of the houses was a little trench where the sewage out of them came, and the young children there, barefooted and ill clad, were wallowing in the mire. Such are the conditions that exist in that portion of the Dominion of Canada and yet no government is prepared to lift a finger to remedy them.

Mr. R. L. Calder, a lawyer, who is probably well known to hon. members, speaking only recently on the question of conditions in Nova Scotia, made the statement that it was "like a suburb in hell" which the people were compelled to live in. Now we intend, by increases in the tariff amounting, I believe, to approximately 70 per cent, to give added profit or protection to an industry which I do not think deserves it. Only recently I received from the Council for Social Service of the Church of England in Canada a bulletin in which are described some of the conditions existing in the steel industry of Nova Scotia. Mr. J. J. Holmes, Junior, the gentleman who wrote the article, has this to say:

> Industrial scientists in Great Britain have stated, after very exhaustive inquiry and experiment, that the maximum efficiency of the human machine is realized on a working week of forty hours.

What have we to say with respect to conditions such as prevail in the steel mills of Nova Scotia, where men are compelled to work one hundred hours per week continuously seven days a week without any rest in between? After the pleadings which have come to the minister from the Conservative side of the house, from hon. members representing the maritime provinces, the minister would be well advised to allow this matter to stand over I do not think the minister can justify either to this house or to the people of Canada an increase in the tariff protection applicable to an industry which allows such miserable conditions to continue amongst the men employed in that industry. If protection is to be given at all to an industry, the first consideration of the house should be: What are the conditions under which the men employed in that industry are working? I do not think that as a result of any examination or inquiry it can truly be said by any hon. member that an industry such as the Besco corporation is entitled to one whit more protection than it now enjoys until it is prepared to provide on behalf of the men whom it employs such conditions with respect to labour as should prevail in this twentieth century.

Mr CHURCH: It is strange what a change has come over hon. gentlemen opposite in the last few years. One of the reasons for the unemployment that has existed in Canada during the last eight years since this government has been in power is the withering condition of the coal and iron and steel industries. In 1922, 1923 and 1924, before an hon. gentleman opposite seemed to take credit for the appointment of the Duncan commission, an hon. gentleman on this side of the house, the senior member for Halifax, had drawn attention to the conditions prevailing in the maritime provinces At that time the government was dependent on a few free trade votes in this house. It had a majority of only one or two, which might disappear over night. It was dependent upon free trade votes, and was not then thinking about protection.

When I came into this house in the session of 1922 I introduced a resolution, which I reintroduced in 1923 and in 1924, asking for bonuses and subventions and subsidies and protection along the line of Mr. Baldwin's policy in the old country for these three great industries. The coal industry, the steel industry, and the iron industry are key industries in Canada, and upon their success depends the success of agriculture and all the other industries in this country. In the session of 1922, and again in 1923 and 1924, long before the present Minister of Finance was in this house, when he was away up in Saskatchewan sitting as a member of a provincial cabinet, this government voted down the motion of a private member for a national coal supply. That motion was introduced for the purpose of seeing that every ton of coal used in this country was produced under the British flag —in England and Wales, in Alberta and the maritimes. I also asked for an embargo against the $56,000,000 which this country sends down annually to the Pennsylvania coal barons. That amount would have provided a very large sum for these key industries in the maritime provinces in the way of bonuses, subventions and subsidies. Where was the government of the day then? It was hanging on to office by a majority of one or two or three, and it voted down this resolution in 1922, 1923 and 1924.

So far as the Duncan commission is concerned, its appointment was forced upon the government by the Conservative opposition in this house. Debates took place in the house from 1922 to 1926 exposing conditions in the maritime provinces, as a result of which the government was forced to appoint the Duncan commission. That commission heard evidence, and then simply adopted the policy of the Conservative opposition as it had been moved here in amendments to the address and on other occasions. So I do not think the country will be very well pleased with the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite in this connection, because if there is one agency that has contributed to unemployment in Canada, especially in the maritimes, more than anything else it has been the withering condition of the iron and coal and steel industries. The government did nothing during all the years it was in power to better the condition of those industries. The employees in those three industries were allowed to starve to death, and the industries themselves to wither. But now the government come along and climb on the protection band wagon.

I wonder if the Minister of Finance has any amendments to make to these tariff schedules. Is there an additional budget to be brought in regarding steel and coal and iron, as there was regarding fruits and vegetables? Are we to have a sort of second budget for these industries as we had for fruits and vegetables?

I say, Mr. Chairman, that if credit is due for forcing the government to adopt the protective system, and the safeguarding of our key industries, it is due to the Conservative opposition in this house. The government did not care anything at all about these industries so long as they could grab a few free trade votes and hang on to office. The industries were allowed to wither away and the employees and their families to starve to death for want of work. Now the government comes along with a lot of hurrahs and hallelujahs and says: We are the people who are responsible for the Duncan report. I have read some of the maritime papers, and in one Liberal paper I see that the present Minister of National Defence is given credit for the Duncan report. To read some of those papers you would think that there was only one man in the maritimes. But I say, Mr. Chairman, that if credit is due to anyone, it is due to the senior member for Halifax, the dean of the maritimes, or as I would call him, the father of the maritimes, because he forced the government to deal with these industries in the way they should have been dealt with years ago, in the way they were dealt with in England and in other countries after the war when these industries were found to be withering. I repeat, if there is any credit due for forcing the present government to bring down a policy of protection to these industries, the credit belongs to the maritime members and to the Conservative opposition in this house.

Mr. SIMPSON: Mr. Chairman, with respect to what my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre had to say with regard to the working conditions in the steel industry and the necessity for improving those conditions, I agree with him in part; but the references which he made to the conditions obtaining in Sault Ste Marie were entirely erroneous. The statement that the living conditions of the workmen engaged in the steel plant at the Soo bordered on slavery is absolutely foreign to the facts, and I think the men themselves would be the first to ask me to speak on their behalf in that regard.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman will remember that I was quoting from a statement made by Mr. Tweed on the floor of the Ontario legislature.

Mr. SIMPSON: The statement which Mr. Tweed made, and which my hon. friend repeated on the floor of this house, are entirely foreign to the facts. I have lived in the city of Sault Ste Marie for thirty years and am more or less familiar with the conditions under which the men who work in that steel industry live. Those conditions are not in every respect ideal. But one of the best evidences that they have not been as bad as my hon. friend's quotation would lead us to believe is the fact that the most friendly relations have prevailed between the men and the management of the company. There have been no labour troubles for the last twenty-five years in that steel industry at Sault Ste Marie. It is true that many of the men have to work from eleven to thirteen hours a day. That is too long, and I am in entire agreement with what my hon. friend had to say in that respect. I am in favour of the eight hour day. But here were the conditions. The steel industry was able to operate only during a portion of the year owing to the fact that the large steel industries of the United States were dumping their products over here at a price with which the local industry could not compete. Had this industry several years ago been given the protection that they should have had in order to afford them a fair chance in their own market, then I am satisfied the management of the steel company at the Soo would have given the men the eight hour day long before this; and it would have been protection for the men as well as for the industry. As a matter of fact I know that the management of the Algoma Steel Corporation have been working on the scheme of an eight hour day, and just as soon as they can afford to put it into operation they will do so. The provisions contained in the budget with respect to steel will help in that regard. Whether or not they go far enough to enable the steel companies to do that has yet to be proven. I hope they will, and that as a result the men will be placed on the eight hour shift in the very near future. But there is this feature to be remembered in connection with the eight hour day. The great majority of the men who are working the longer hours are working on a tonnage basis, and the longer they work the more they earn. Some of those men—I do not think this applies to all of them—have told me that when the mills were operating only a portion of the year they were anxious to work the longer hours and make more money while they had the opportunity. But the ideal condition is to enable the steel industry to have a fair show in their own market that they may supply the steel requirements of that market, and when they get that they will be able to deal more fairly with their men in regard to working hours and working conditions than they have been able to do in the past.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Mr. Chairman, I wish to align myself with the sentiments expressed by the hon. labour members for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) respectively, the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall), and other hon. gentlemen who have contended, quite properly, that advantages given to industry through increased protection should be passed on to the worker. I am also in accord with the sentiments expressed more particularly by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with regard to the eight-hour day. It seems to me that this government since the treaty of Versailles has been trifling with this important matter and with its solemn pledges to the other nations of the world under that treaty. No effort whatever has been made to implement the solemn promises contained in that treaty. The question of unemployment insurance, the eight-hour day and other social legislation the federal government always shelves by hiding behind the British North America Act, contending that these matters are outside their jurisdiction and for the provinces to deal with. Well, the provinces had nothing to do with the treaty of Versailles, they were not signatories to it; but this parliament was, and gave its solemn pledge to other nations of the world that certain advanced social legislation would be implemented. That has not been done.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask a question?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: If there had been no British North America Act, would there have been a Duncan report?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I do not know that that question requires any answer, Mr. Chairman. I am quite unable to understand what the British North America Act had to do with the Duncan report. The Duncan report was made by a royal commission after investigating certain conditions in the maritime provinces. The British North America Act is the Magna Charta of the Dominion, and I cannot see the relevancy of the hon. gentleman's question. The federal authority ought not always to hide behind the British North America Act when important social legislation comes before it. If it is to be the government's excuse with regard to the British Empire Steel Corporation or the other steel companies affected that it cannot interfere because the matter is of a provincial character, then I say something should be done without further delay so as to amend the British North America Act that when preferential tariff treatment is given by this government to certain industries the resultant benefits shall pass on to the worker. I am a strong believer in protection to industry, but I think that protection, unless it is passed along to the worker, is repugnant to every sense of fair play.

Now, Mr. Chairman, another matter was mentioned by the member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). He stated that in 1922 and 1923 he had moved a resolution asking the government of the day to bring down a national fuel policy.

Mr. HEENAN: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: In view of the fact that the British Columbia government has passed an act providing for an eight-hour day in mines, and that the Ontario government has passed similar legislation, what is to prevent the government of Nova Scotia from taking the same course for industries?

Mr. QUINN: Why didn't you ask the government of Nova Scotia yourself?

An hon. MEMBER: They already have it.

Mr. HEENAN: Then what is the trouble?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): The hon. minister ought to acquaint himself with the facts before he asks such innocuous questions. The minister at the head of the Labour department surely ought to be better informed in regard to labour legislation. Since the hon. member for Toronto Northwest introduced some years ago his motion for a national fuel policy, nothing has been done by this government to protect that industry—one of the key industries of the Dominion. If at that time the government had acted on that resolution, I do not think that to-day we would have Russian coal being imported into Canada, brought here from almost the other end of the world. I am advised that Russian coal is selling on the Montreal market at $6 a ton. The wages paid to the Russian miners of that coal amount to 18 cents a day. I think this government has been negligent—

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I am precluded from correcting my hon. friend's statements since he is out of order in making them. We are not discussing the coal item, but steel, and the debate which has taken place as to the conditions affecting the steel workers, is, I think, quite in order. But I am not aware that anthracite coal has anything to do with steel, alloy steel, blooms, or billets. There will, of course, be opportunity to discuss coal when we come to that item. For the moment, in the interests of orderly procedure, I would ask hon. members to keep to the point.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I am not anxious to break the rules of the house, nor do I want to hold up the debate. I realize that what the hon. minister says is correct with respect to the item under consideration, but no objection was made to the previous speaker who referred to the introduction of the resolution for a national fuel policy, and I was merely referring to it and showing that this government had been lax in its duty to one of the key industries of the Dominion; and, coal is so interlocked with steel that it is almost impossible to separate the two, particularly in relation to the industries in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it not true that the coal operations have had to carry the steel operations of Besco?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Yes, and as has been said by one hon. member, coal is helping to do that to-day.

In conclusion I wish to repeat that I am in hearty accord with protection to industry.

I believe that it is essential in order to provide the worker with sufficient wages to enable him to live in a proper and fit state of civilization. Unfortunately such is not the case to-day in certain instances, as has been so well pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. KENNEDY: While listening to the debate I was reminded of a section in the Liberal platform of 1919 dealing with labour and industry.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: They have no platform now.

Mr. KENNEDY: I would like to read a section which I have before me at the present time from the official report of the National Liberal Convention held in Ottawa on August 5, 6 and 7, 1919. At page 204 I find:

First: The guiding principle that labour should not be regarded merely as a commodity or article of commerce.

Second: The right of association for all lawful purposes by the employed as well as by the employers.

Third: The payment to the employed of a wage adequate to maintain a reasonable standard of life as this is understood in their time and country.

Fourth: The adoption of an eight-hour day or a forty-eight-hour week as the standard to be aimed at where it has not already been attained.

Fifth: The adoption of a weekly rest of at least 24 hours, which should include Sunday wherever practicable.

The position so often taken in this house by the government with regard to some of these matters is that they are provincial in character, and the government has said that the problem of adopting an eight hour day rests with the provinces. After all, what does a section such as this signify in a party platform if it does not mean that where there is a weapon in the hands of a federal government to deal with the question, it will be dealt with? To my mind, unless the section can be so interpreted it is of no value. The steel companies have asked and received protection, but I am perfectly sure it would mean a great deal more for the Dominion of Canada if the working conditions and the wages of the employees in the steel industry were improved. Probably the taking of such a step would affect the profits of the shareholders of the British Empire Steel Corporation and other large steel industries but living conditions for workers ought to come before increased dividends because it would mean a betterment of the standard of living and the money paid to the men in wages would go back into general circulation. I can see no justification for the government conceding this protection when a condition exists among the steel workers such as has been described by hon. members in this house to-night. We must remember that there has been no denial by any member of the government or by the Minister of Finance that such conditions exist. Apart from any political platform I think the Liberal government, or any government charged with the administration of Dominion affairs, should consider the welfare of all the people rather than increasing the dividends to those who are already in affluent circumstances.

Mr. EVANS: I do not think that the duties on steel should have been raised at this time and I think most of us are very much disappointed in the action of the government. Any concessions to the steel companies should have been made with two features in view. First, any protection granted as part of a national policy to any industry should be guaranteed to the workers in that industry rather than to the employers, and steady employment for a certain number of men should be a condition upon which the privilege of protection is granted. In the second place, a greater consumption of agricultural products and the products of other industries should be kept in view when protection is granted. I take it that the present proposed increase in the steel duties is chiefly for the benefit of the concerns in Sydney. Those concerns, Mr. Chairman, have proved to be the sink-hole of privilege for the last forty years. When in 1911 the steel bounties legislation came into effect there was given from the federal treasury for the production of steel in Canada the sum of $17,500,000. Of this total $6,481,000 went to the Sydney companies. When so much has been spent with such meagre results, why should we again increase the cost of manufacturing and the prices of finished articles of steel which may be considered as the raw material used by the farmers? Steel has become one of the chief commodities used in agricultural production. Our farms have been increasing in acreage, and we are changing our methods of agriculture. During the next five years practically a new set of implements will be bought by every farmer throughout the three prairie provinces, and the prices of these articles are now increased because of the duties.

Mr. DUNNING: I would ask my hon. friend to point out one single instance in which that is true.

Mr. EVANS: I do not see why the duty is imposed if it is not for the sake of greater price-fixing power.

Mr. DUNNING: I would ask my hon. friend to point out one single instance where the cost of steel which enters into the production of agricultural implements has been increased by the tariff.

Mr. EVANS: Well, I take—

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will point out wherein the price of the implement itself has on that account been increased. These are matters of fact, not of theory.

Mr. EVANS: I take it that the increased duties are bound to increase the cost of manufacturing.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, my hon. friend is entirely wrong.

Mr. EVANS: What is the purpose of a duty if it is not to regulate the price fixing power?

Mr. DUNNING: Surely my hon. friend knows that the manufacturers of agricultural implements, because of the low duties which obtain with respect to their products, receive a drawback on their raw materials or get them free or at low rates of duty.

Mr. EVANS: I can see that there is no consideration in these items for the labouring man; there is no guarantee that his wages will be such as will meet the high cost of living. Conditions in our steel industries for some years have been a scandal to the whole nation and in fact a blot on the history of Canada. We have the instances to which we could point of force being used in the maritime provinces.

There is another thing I want to point out, and that is with regard to the products of steel and some other articles as well which are almost prohibited entry into this country. The duty named in the tariff schedules is hardly any indication of the amount of tariff that will be charged on any given article. I hold in my hand a statement from one who has been connected with the administration of the tariff act for many years; in fact, he has grown old in the civil service, and I find that according to his words there is a different rate of duty charged on different articles according to the status of the importer. All men do not pay the same duty on importations. For instance, the tremendous trade discounts which are allowed by manufacturers are taken into account when an appraisement is made for duty purposes. For a small dealer there is a discount of 50 per cent, plus 15 per cent, plus 5 per cent, so the value for duty becomes only $40.38 on an article worth $100. The large dealer gets a discount of 50 per cent plus 15 per cent, plus 10 per cent, and his value for duty would be $38.25. A department store is treated even better; it gets a discount of 50 per cent, plus 15 per cent, plus 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: What is my hon. friend's authority for that statement?

Mr. EVANS: I am quoting from a statement prepared by one who is in charge of the port of Saskatoon, where he has been employed for many years.

Mr. DUNNING: What is his name?

Mr. EVANS: I do not know whether I should give his name; I do not suppose he would care, but it can be given to the minister at any time. These are his words: He made out this statement for me himself. In the case of the departmental store the value for duty on $100 worth of goods is only $36.13. The jobber gets a discount of 50 per cent, plus 15 per cent, plus 20 per cent, and his value for duty is only $34.01. But now come to the consumer: There is no discount allowed to the consumer if he imports any article, so his value for duty would be $100. I submitted these figures to one who is in the customs department in Ottawa, and he worked it out this way: The consumer or private importer pays three times as much as the wholesale jobber, two and four-fifth times as much as the departmental store, two and eight-thirteenth times as much as the large dealer, and two and one-half times as much as the small dealer. So we see the discrimination every time against the consumer. It appears that section 36 of the act is interpreted so as to give power to the authorities to act in that way, because of the words "as sold in the ordinary course of trade." That is the only thing I know that would give power to interpret the act in that way. I am sorry to see that after all the years during which we have found it so futile to spend public money for the production of this steel in Sydney and other places in this Dominion, the Liberal government should at this time put that burden again on the consuming public.

Mr. STEVENS: Before this item carries, I am a little surprised that the minister and his colleagues have paid no great attention to the observations of the hon. members who have spoken during the last hour.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend has no right to say that; as a matter of privilege, I resent it. I have been paying attention right along.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend can resent it all he likes; I say it is an unusual thing for a ministry to sit in their places and listen to such indictments as have been made by hon. members of this house during the last hour.

Mr. DUNNING: I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. STEVENS: There is no question of privilege here.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend stated the ministers were paying no attention to what was being said. I say, as the minister in charge of the item under discussion, that I have paid careful attention to everything that was said.

Mr. STEVENS: There is no question of privilege here. It is about time the hon. Minister of Finance studied the rules of the house and learned what constitutes a question of privilege.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend reflected upon me by saying that as a minister I was not paying attention to what was being said.

Mr. STEVENS: I will repeat what I said in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugène Fiset): I am sorry, but I hardly think this is a matter of privilege.

Mr. STEVENS: Because an hon. member rises and makes an observation which does not suit his royal highness, the Minister of Finance rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. DUNNING: This is reflecting on me personally.

Mr. STEVENS: Reflecting nonsense; my hon. friend is getting altogether too free with this getting up in the house and posing. He says it is reflecting on him, as though my hon. friend were the custodian of all the virtue in the house. I will now repeat what I said a moment ago. I said it was an amazing thing that a ministry could sit in their places on the treasury benches without uttering a word—

Mr. DUNNING: That was not what you said.

Mr. STEVENS: Wait; I am not through. I said it was an amazing thing that they could sit and listen to the indictments that had been directed to them in various speeches made to-night during the last hour, and I repeat that it is an amazing thing.

Mr. DUNNING: That is different, though.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. STEVENS: I say it is an amazing thing, and furthermore I say that the statements made in this house by the member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for North Winnipeg, the hon. member for Inverness, the hon. member for Cumberland and two or three other hon. gentlemen regarding the conditions of labour in the steel industry are sufficient to challenge the attention of all the people of Canada. I must make a confession here which I regret to make: I did not know that men in any numbers were working thirteen hours at night work, seven days a week, in any industry in this country. There may be an odd job or two involving not very hard work where this condition may prevail, but to think that in a large industry in the Dominon of Canada in the year 1930 men are working thirteen hours a day seven days a week is sufficient to challenge the attention of this house.

What has been the stock answer of this government every time a question of this kind is brought forward? The stock answer is this: Under the constitution the provinces control property and civil rights and such matters, and therefore parliament and the federal government are helpless. This parliament and this government are not helpless in a matter of this character, which is sufficiently serious to warrant their asserting their power and influence. It may be that parliament is not empowered constitutionally to fix an eight hour day; that point may be challenged, but parliament can deal with this particular question. I take second place to no one in the Dominion of Canada in advocating the protection of the industries of this country, but when I take that stand I take it for granted that the industries are going to maintain a standard of living and pay wages commensurate with the protection they receive and the privileges they enjoy. My next argument is that there has not been devised any other way of dealing with this question except through the customs tariff; that is the method available to the minister. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) stood in his place just now and admitted that he did not know where in Canada the eight hour day is in force, and he sneered at my hon. friends for suggesting that something could be done in this way. That is the Minister of Labour of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: And then he runs around the country talking about it.

Mr. STEVENS: He goes around posing as the champion of the rights and interests of the working man. I see that three ministers are present in the house, which is an unusual number to be present while the budget is being discussed.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): There are five present.

An hon. MEMBER: And all awake.

Mr. STEVENS: I was referring to the three sitting in the front row. Not a minister has offered an explanation, not a minister has offered any sympathy or shown any interest in this matter. I am not sufficiently an expert to say that items 377a, 377b and 377c cover the ambit of this particular industry, but I imagine that they would. In connection with these items we have an opportunity of saying to this industry: "Yes, the parliament of Canada is prepared to give you protection sufficient to enable you profitably to produce these articles"—the minister could do that just as easily as sitting there lolling in his seat—"but before such tariff will apply you will satisfy the governor in council that the conditions of labour, the hours of labour and the wages paid are such as will afford a decent living". That is what the government could do; that is what parliament could do, and I say right now that that is what parliament should do before it goes a step further. I admit that possibly there are a number of other items in this schedule—a very long and complicated one—where a similar provision could apply, but I am dealing now with the basic steel industry. The time has come when Canada should give some attention to the basic steel industry. Ever since the first of May the government has been spreading propaganda throughout the country to the effect that it is looking after the basic steel industry. Where have the minister and the government been for the last eight years? The government pays no attention to this industry until just on the eve of an election, when a great conversion takes place. It is not good that a government should be so indifferent to the rights, the comforts and the welfare of the people engaged in this industry. So I say to the hon. minister, who was going to allow this to pass without making any comment, that the time has come when this government should give some consideration to the proposals made this evening.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to avoid making any reflections on my hon. friend, but I do not intend to allow to go unanswered his statement to the effect that I was paying no attention to what hon. members have been saying with regard to this matter. I have been in my seat all evening, and I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) would be the first to say that I paid very close attention to his remarks and also to the statements of his colleagues. Occasionally I asked questions, which was an indication of my interest in the matter, and I do not intend to allow my hon. friend to misrepresent me before the people of Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: I was not misrepresenting you.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member did misrepresent me in his opening remarks. However that may be, there is this to say with regard to the item under discussion—377a, which covers blooms and billets, primary products of the steel industry: in so far as the Tariff Advisory Board and the government are concerned, the fact is that the employees themselves, through their representatives, joined in the representations then made that what is now proposed should be done. A representative selected by the men of one of the steel plants appeared before the tariff board on behalf of the workingmen of that company and asked for the very thing which is here granted, on the ground that if granted it would be very helpful to the men. Regarding the great steel plant down in the maritime provinces, the men made representations last year—I believe I am correct in saying they were made this year as well—supporting the representations made by the employers with respect to what is being granted in these resolutions. The suggestion is now made for the first time that there should be attached to the tariff a proviso designed to affect the hours of labour and the working conditions of the men employed in the industry. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has put that suggestion in more concrete form than has any other hon. member. He stated that a proviso should be attached requiring that the conditions of labour in the industry should be satisfactory to the governor in council. I am quite sure that that suggestion does not satisfy my hon. friends who represent labour in this house. They want something much more definite than that. I am equally sure that it would not satisfy the men engaged in the industry itself. If that principle is to be applied to the steel industry, why should it not be applied to every single item in the tariff? If the principle is a sound one it should be universally applied, and in that universal application the working conditions which this parliament regards as being fair should be definitely set out so that it would not be open to any government to discriminate between one industry and another in that regard.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Those conditions are set out in the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. DUNNING: I have some doubt whether the treaty of Versailles covers what would be regarded as fair working conditions. It does cover the question of hours of labour, but my hon. friend is aware that many of the matters which have been mentioned to-night are not dealt with literally by that document. I have assured myself that the men engaged in the industry now under discussion desire this parliament to do what is now proposed to be done.

Mr. SIMPSON: And more.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Simpson) says "more."

Mr. BENNETT: He said "and more."

Mr. DUNNING: The representations made by the employees supported the requests of the employing companies, and I have received no intimation from the men that it is their desire that conditions such as have been suggested to-night be made part of the present proposals. Apparently the men are confident of their ability, through their organizations, to see to it that benefit shall accrue to themselves from any increased prosperity on the part of the industry. In saying that, however, I am not opposing the general idea which is advanced. What concerns me is how it is possible practically and definitely to apply it, and that feature of the matter, of course, requires consideration. I rose merely to advise the committee that the men had associated themselves unconditionally with the employers in asking for what is here granted.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I say just a word with regard to this? The minister says that the men engaged in the industry desired the government to do what the budget proposes. He also speaks about the men being organized. Let me say that the men are not organized at the Algoma mills.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Nor at Sydney.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Just a moment. The men at the Algoma mills are not organized. I happened to be with the British parliamentatry delegation that visited this country two years ago. When we were passing through the Sault in connection with the trip eastward, a deputation waited upon Mr. Tom Johnston, Mr. Tom Shaw and other Labour members of that delegation. I might say that the British delegates were absolutely appalled at the conditions revealed by the deputation that appeared. There was no organization whatever and the men were absolutely afraid to make independent representations. As regards Sydney, it is true there is a union, but it is a company's union, and the men there as well dare not express themselves freely. I know that some of them who visited us two years ago were brought here by the company, and, as they themselves confessed, were paid by the company to come here and endorse the company's project. I do not think the Minister of Finance, if he gives any thought to the matter, will contend that such representations are worth anything as really expressing the views of the men.

Further, the minister says that this is the first time that representations have been made that protection should be given only with conditions attached. I would remind him—and I think he will be able to verify this by consulting with the Tariff Advisory Board—that that proposal was made by gentlemen who appeared before that board. Such representations were then made. Apparently the case is considered to be made out so far as the company is concerned, but the case as stated by those who were interested on behalf of the men was entirely overlooked.

Mr. BENNETT: I confess that I have listened with amazement to the observations that have been made in the committee this evening. I was rather surprised that the Minister of Labour did not think it desirable to enter into the discussion.

Mr. HEENAN: There is plenty of time yet, is there not?

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes, there is plenty of time. That men should work eighty-four hours a week in Canada at any job at all is to me appalling.

Mr. HEENAN: Terrible.

Mr. BENNETT: When I remember the ranting observations made by the Minister of Labour in other parts of Canada—

Mr. HEENAN: I am agreeing with the hon. member.

Mr. BENNETT: —I think the time has come when he should say "terrible" with a more serious accent than the one he is now employing.

Mr. HEENAN: I am agreeing with the hon. member.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, "agree with thine adversary quickly" is a very good rule.

Mr. HEENAN: I am wondering why the Nova Scotia government stands for this condition so long.

Mr. BENNETT: The Nova Scotia government is not in any way responsible for the condition now existing, and it is not quite worthy of the minister to deal with the problem in that way.

Mr HEENAN: Pass the buck!

Mr. BENNETT: The minister is a past master at doing that, but in this instance he has been discovered.

Mr HEENAN: I agree that conditions in the Nova Scotia steel industry are appalling and it is a dirty shame that the government of the province of Nova Scotia should stand for them as long as it has done.

Mr QUINN: Why does the minister stand for them?

Mr. BENNETT: Inasmuch as it is the proud boast of Liberalism that it had a government in power in Nova Scotia longer than in any other part of the Dominion, this remark of the minister will be appreciated in that province.

Mr HEENAN: I agree with that also.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, "Agree with thine adversary quickly" and the hon. gentleman is certainly an adept at that. Did Canada sign the treaty of peace?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Did Canada thereby become, amongst the nations of the world, a member of the League of Nations? The answer is yes. Did the Liberal party, in solemn convention assembled, adopt the Labour articles of the treaty of peace? The answer is yes. Did the Conservative party do the same? The answer is yes. To-night the question is whether or not the parliament of the Dominion of Canada that signed the treaty of peace, with two great parties pledging themselves to its observance and the group to my left also supporting it, is helpless. It is true that property and civil rights are matters exclusively under the control of the provincial legislatures. It is equally true that this parliament may, if it so pleases, impose conditions with respect to any matter wherein it expends public money or confers a benefit or privilege upon any person or class or corporation. The legislature of Nova Scotia is not now dealing with the matter.

As I understand it, the smelting of iron ore and the manufacture of iron and steel constitute, in the very nature of things, a continuous process. My observations in the plants I have visited would make me believe, except for shutdowns for repairs, that you must, speaking broadly and generally, maintain it as a continuous process. You may do that by two shifts of twelve hours each or three shifts of eight hours each. In the great United States steel plants this was done until three years ago by two shifts of twelve hours each. Three years ago they changed it to three shifts of eight hours each. There are still in the United States plants that maintain twelve hour shifts. One of the members of the house told me to-night what his experience had been as a large employer of labour. He is not present at the moment, but he said they had a ten hour day in their mills for a long time. They changed that to an eight hour day, and he said they would never think of going back to a ten hour day. That is what experience has taught him. Here we have a continuous process in our steel mills. We are young in the industry and we are competing with those who have in the main three eight hour shifts. The United States Steel Corporation and its subsidiary companies that supply most of the steel to Canada, more than other companies, are now working under the plan of three shifts of eight hours each.

Our protection in this instance is based upon one assumption and one only, namely, that we shall afford to Canadian industry an equal opportunity for its development with the opportunity they have in that great nearby country. We are now under item 377a increasing the tariff protection on blooms, ingots, slabs and billets from $1.50 to $2.50, an increase of $1 a ton, or 66⅔ per cent under the British preference; on the treaty tariff the increase is from $2.25 to $4 per ton, which is also an increase of 66⅔ per cent; and on the general tariff item, the one affecting the United States, from $2.50 to $4.50, an increase of 80 per cent. Thus we have three increases in the tariff, the increases being, as I have said, from 66⅔ per cent up to 80 per cent. Now in my conception of protection as applied to the fiscal policy of a country, it is always understood that we shall maintain decent standards of living and reasonable hours of labour which certainly must not violate the condition under which we signed the great world-wide treaty of peace. That being so, what has been suggested in this house to-night is that inasmuch as we are increasing the measure of protection to industries to enable Canadian development to proceed upon orderly lines and upon equal terms with its competitors in other parts of the world, we should also maintain at least those reasonable standards of living and hours of labour that obtain in communities that are our competitors. The Conservative party has always advocated a measure of protection and the advocates of protection have always put forward the arguments that I am now submitting to the house.

Now we are in an exceptional condition. I do not for a moment underestimate the seriousness of it. But having signed the treaty of peace, and all parties and groups in this house having committed themselves to its maintenance, should we not instead of simply saying, "I am watching to see what the legislature of Nova Scotia does"—because the legislature of Nova Scotia is not wholly in control of that situation; for the raw material from which the iron is smelted comes from the neighbouring colony of Newfoundland, and part of the limestone comes from another community, so you have a measure of intercolonial trade—under those circumstances, is it unreasonable to say that in granting this measure of additional protection, an increase of from 66⅔ to 80 per cent, we should think of human beings who are striving and working eighty-four hours a week? I confess, Mr. Chairman, that there is only one question in my mind: Have we the power? The answer must be in the affirmative. Having the power, then should we not exercise it? I put that to my hon. friends opposite, because here we have no division of opinion; we are all committed to it.

It may be said that the employees have agreed to this tariff change. That argument is as old as every step forward in the progress of the world. There has never been a moment when men who have wives and families and are strugling for food and employment have not been willing to do thus and so because they must work to maintain life. Surely no man seriously puts that argument forward now. I thought it was exploded in England at least seventy years ago, and in America for half a century it certainly has had no validity. It does not lie in the mouth of any member of parliament who is a party to the maintenance of the League of Nations and the treaty of Versailles, the member of any party which has agreed to the maintenance of those standards of life and of comfort, and who believes that men are not slaves and that labour is not a commodity, to say that we should have in this Dominion men working eighty-four hours a week. It is not right; it is not just; it is not fair.

Here we have a chance to say that these increases shall apply only to such mills as maintain the principles of the treaty of Versailles. Is it unfair to say that that should be done? I commend the matter to the government. I think it should be done. It may mean great differences, but an amendment such as this, I think, would meet the situation:

> Provided, however, that the rates of duty set out under items 377, 377a, 377b, 377c, shall apply only when the industry producing the articles enumerated therein have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that there is maintained in the operation of such industry, hours of labour and rates of wages consistent with the provisions of the labour conference held under the treaty of Versailles.

That is an amendment that I commend now to the government, and that I think at the proper time should be moved; because after all, Mr. Chairman, if we really represent Canadian democracy, if we are sincere in the expressions of our faith in our party conventions, if we really mean what we have declared unanimously in this house with respect to the provisions of the treaty of Versailles and at the League of Nations at Geneva regarding labour, there should not be a dissenting voice in this chamber. We have the opportunity and the jurisdiction; let us leave out all this talk about the province and assert that power affirmatively, and let it be understood in this country that when we agree to principles in treaties, in compacts and conventions, we mean what we say, and that our expressions are not mere sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

Mr. HEENAN: I would ask the hon. leader of the opposition a question. There are a number of things to which the government of Canada gave adherence in the peace treaty. The freedom of association was one thing, the eight hour day another. They were to be aimed at as an objective. Does the hon. leader of the opposition now claim that no protection should be given to any industry that does not allow freedom of association and give the eight hour day to the men employed in its works?

Mr. BENNETT: I am dealing with this specific case, but if the hon. gentleman mentions other cases I shall deal with them when the time arises. At the moment I am dealing with two specific items in this tariff, in which it has been established to the satisfaction of the house that men who find employment in the industries concerned toil eighty-four hours a week.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my hon. friend if he sees any reason why the particular suggestion he now makes should apply only to these two items and not to the customs tariff generally?

Mr. BENNETT: As I said, I am dealing with this specific case in which there is an increase in duty of 66⅔ per cent and 80 per cent. It is a basic industry, and my attention has been directed to the fact that the men in that industry toil eighty-four hours a week. I suggest, therefore, that this is one item at least in which we should apply that principle.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I agree entirely with him as to the eighty-four hours a week; but with respect to his reference in that connection to the treaty of Versailles, what is applicable in one instance should be applicable to all, and if anything is to be done it would be well to have the suggestion apply to the custom tariff generally.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not know clearly whether the Prime Minister is in favour of the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition. If he is, I am prepared to make a start right now with this item.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am quite prepared to deal with the whole tariff at one shot.

Mr. HEAPS: So much the better. I am quite prepared in that case. Perhaps the minister would be good enough to allow this item to stand over to consider the suggestion of the Prime Minister, that where any industry has received protection from parliament by way of duties, it should pay to its employees wages and provide conditions of labour in accordance with the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. DUNNING: I will let the item stand.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): In view of the statement just made by the Prime Minister as to dealing with the whole tariff, and of the difficulties that might arise in that connection, I would point out that there would be no such difficulty in connection with the resolution in regard to the bonus. Will he consent to a provision in that case?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend need not try to get away from the issue as a whole. We will either pass the whole thing or nothing.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): May I point out to the Prime Minister that the bonus resolution is separate altogether from the tariff and can be dealt with promptly if the right hon. gentleman is honest in his statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have not yet reached the bonus resolution. The leader of the opposition has been speaking of the Versailles treaty. That treaty is applicable throughout the whole Dominion, and will be made applicable all along the line or not at all.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Undoubtedly, and on account of the generous promise made by the Prime Minister I thought I might bring the matter to his attention. Will you give us that promise now?

The CHAIRMAN: Item 377 stands.

Mr. DUNNING: I presume that applies to all sections of it, Mr. Chairman,—377a, 377b and 377c.

Customs tariff—378. Bars and rods, of iron or steel; billets, of iron or steel, weighing less than 60 pounds per lineal yard:

(a) Not further processed than hot rolled, per ton, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, $4.25; intermediate tariff, $6; general tariff, $7.

(b) Not further processed than hammered or pressed, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(c) Cold rolled, drawn, reeled, turned or ground, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(d) Hot rolled, valued at not less than 4 cents per pound, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—379. Bars or rods, of iron or steel, including billets weighing less than 60 pounds per lineal yard, hot rolled, as hereunder defined, under regulations prescribed by the minister:

(a) Rods, when imported by manufacturers of horseshoe nails, for use exclusively in the manufacture of horseshoe nails, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

(b) Rods, in the coil, when imported by manufacturers of chain for use exclusively in the manufacture of chain in their own factories, per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $3.50; general tariff, $3.50.

(c) Bars, when imported by manufacturers of shovels for use exclusively in the manufacture of shovels, in their own factories, per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $2.75; general tariff, $3.

(d) Rods, in the coil, not over .375 inch in diameter, when imported by manufacturers of wire for use exclusively in the manufacture of wire, in their own factories, per ton: British preferential tariff, $2.25; intermediate tariff, $4.50; general tariff, $5.

Mr. DUNNING: In 379 (d), Mr. Chairman, I wish to insert after the word "coil" the following:

or bars 1⅛ inches in diameter and over,

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—380. Plates of iron or steel, hot or cold rolled:

(a) Not more than 40 inches in width, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $2; intermediate tariff, $4; general tariff, $6.

(b) More than 40 inches in width, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $3; general tariff, $5.

(c) Flanged, dished, or curved, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. WHITE (London): Is item (d) of 379 carried?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but I do not object to my hon. friend reverting to it.

Mr. WHITE (London): This refers to rods in the coil, not over $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch in diameter. The British preference is $2.25 per ton. The British preference on billets is $2.50 per ton. Usually the items are graded according to the degree of manufacture. In this case we have iron rods, which are more highly processed than billets, at a lower rate than the latter.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In other words, this is a more highly processed bar, and the duty is less than on the billet itself out of which it is made. That is not reasonable, and cannot in any sense be justified.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, the preceding items which we have just passed are even worse than these three items which are all free. For this there is no justification whatever. Those materials under 379 (a), (b) and (c) are and have been made in this country for thirty years. There is no reason why they should be supplied to makers of those finished products absolutely free of all duty, while at the same time you give those manufacturers the highest rate of protection on any product under this tariff. If the iron and steel tariff is to be built along those lines, I want to point out to the minister that it will prove to be an absolute failure. Tariffs must be constructed on scientific lines if they are to be effective for the purposes for which they are intended. The United States for more than forty years have devoted themselves to the construction of a scientific tariff, with the result that they have built up the greatest iron and steel industry in the world; and they did not do it by putting material of this class on the free list. It cannot be done in that way.

Mr. RYCKMAN: If it means that the more highly processed goods are to bear the lowest duty, surely it is placing a premium on unemployment. What is the explanation? Will the minister state why goods in the rough should be preferred to goods processed?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: This was the result of a continuous discussion which lasted for a long time between the different classes of manufacturers. These items are all manufacturers' concessions—perpetuations in many cases of existing manufacturers' concessions. Secondary industries have been built up on the basis of the rates then existing. One of the problems, as everyone knows, in dealing with the iron and steel schedule is that you start with a primary product, and the finished product of that industry becomes the raw material of the next in line. Days and weeks of discussion, when these secondary and primary manufacturers met each other face to face and argued the matter out, resulted in these compromises —which they really must be when men face each other, each knowing that his advantage lies in one direction, whereas the other's lies in another. I must say that, as anyone who reads the record of the hearings will see, there was a manifested degree of cooperation and compromise, which was quite remarkable and a testimony to the Canadian industries concerned.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is sarcasm, pure and simple.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not had a single complaint about them.

Mr. CANTLEY: You are getting them now.

Mr. DUNNING I am from my hon. friend, but I have not had any from the industry, because these items were the result of men in the primary and secondary developments in the same industry sitting down together and frankly examining the other's position. That is the reason they are not complaining to-day about what is here.

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 381.

Mr. CANTLEY: You have not passed item 380?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, I called it and it has been passed.

Mr. CANTLEY: I did not hear it called I want now to make an emphatic protest in regard to this item. Here are plates, not more than 40 inches in width, which it is proposed under the British preference we should allow in at $2 a ton. I make the assertion that there will be no plates of that kind sold by any mill in eastern Canada while this tariff is in force. Why do I say that? Because this material will come in from Great Britain. The fact is that the important iron and steel producing districts of the old country are situated at Middlesbrough, at Glasgow, and in Wales—all on the seaboard. These plates can come out for one third the rate of freight to Montreal at which they can be brought up from Nova Scotia to that point. With a duty of $2 that market will be captured absolutely and entirely by the British people. It makes no difference to us in Nova Scotia whether we are forced to the wall by American plates or by English plates; the same result will follow. This tariff has not been framed on proper scientific lines, and I wish to assure the minister that it will fail absolutely to meet the requirements of the industry as it exists in Nova Scotia.

Customs tariff—381. Sheets of iron or steel, hot or cold rolled:
(a) .080 inch or less in thickness, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.
(b) More than .080 inch in thickness, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $4.25; intermediate tariff, $6; general tariff, $7.

Mr. CANTLEY: This item is worse than the previous one. In the province item plates over 40 inches in width are free. How is it possible for plates under items 380 and 381 to be produced in this country under conditions of absolute free trade?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no mill in Canada to-day rolling them over 40 inches in width.

Mr. CANTLEY: A mill was built in Sydney a few years ago, at a cost of a million dollars, to provide plates up to 12 feet in width, and that mill exists to-day. It would be producing plates to-day if sufficient protection were accorded to it.

Mr. DUNNING: It has not produced plates for years. It has had the opportunity of starting on narrow forms. The narrow forms to which my hon. friend refers have been imported to the extent of $1,630,000 worth, and of that total $1,580,000 worth came in from the United States. The duty is the same from Great Britain as it was under the old item, and my hon. friend now expresses the fear that Great Britain will swamp the Canadian market, although the rate is exactly the same.

Mr. BENNETT: From Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: Under item 380 (a) at $2.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman was talking about item 380 (b).

Mr. DUNNING: I am speaking of item 380 (a). The two items are related, in connection with what my hon. friend had to say. The plates under 40 inches in width now come in very largely from the United States. They can be and are being manufactured in Canada. The rate of duty against Great Britain is the same as it was before, but hon. gentlemen will notice that the rate against the United States is increased. With regard to section (b) of item 380, none of the wider plates are being rolled in Canada, and it is not expected that they will be rolled here in the near future.

Mr. CANTLEY: They certainly never will be under this tariff.

Mr. MANION: The minister has said that the duties are the same. Under the old schedule that item was divided into three items, 379a, 381 and 382. Item 382 carried a higher duty than is proposed now.

Mr. DUNNING: The items which affected imports were two items of $3 each, old item 379a and old item 381.

Mr. BENNETT: Are you referring to plates 40 inches in width?

Mr. DUNNING: Under 40 inches.

Mr. MANION: Will the minister give us the imports under that item?

Mr. DUNNING: The effective items were 379a, under which $1,630,000 worth came in; 381, also a $3 general item, under which $3,335,000 worth came in, and 382, under which $2,120,000 worth came in.

Mr. MANION: The rates were higher under the old item 382 than they are now.

Mr. DUNNING: I am trying to give an indication of what portion of that came in; It was only a small portion, I am advised. If I recite the old item it will no doubt clear the matter up. The old item 382 was:

Rolled iron or steel sheets or plates, sheared or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel, sheared or rolled in grooves, n.o.p.

Only the portion of that item which is under 40 inches in width comes in under the new item.

Mr. MANION: Item 380(b) in the new schedule is divided in the same way, and 379(a) is the same. They are all free under the British preferential tariff. So that there has been a reduction.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—382. Hoop, band or strip, of iron or steel:
(a) Hot rolled, .080 inch or less in thickness, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

(b) Hot rolled, more than .080 inch in thickness, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $4.25; intermediate tariff, $6; general tariff, $7.

(c) Cold rolled, or cold drawn, .080 inch or less in thickness, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

(d) Cold rolled or cold drawn, more than .080 inch in thickness, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. MANION: There is a reduction all along the line.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—383. Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, of iron or steel:

(a) Coated with tin, of a class or kind not made in Canada, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

(b) Coated with tin, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

(c) Coated with zinc, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

(d) Coated with metal or metals, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

(e) Coated with paint, tar, asphaltum or otherwise coated, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

(f) Coated with vitreous enamel, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

(g) Corrugated, coated or not: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Referring to section (a) I notice the words "not made in Canada". Are those words new, or were they there before?

Mr. DUNNING: They were there before.

Mr. BENNETT: Very well; I was not quite sure.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—384. Skelp, if iron or steel, hot or cold rolled, when imported by manufacturers of pipes and tubes for use exclusively in the manufacture of pipes and tubes, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister:

(a) Not more than 14 inches in width: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

(b) More than 14 inches in width: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

The governor in council may by order in council direct that there be substituted for tariff item 384 in schedule A of the Customs Tariff, 1907, and the several rates of duties of customs set opposite said item in schedule A, the following:

Skelp, if iron or steel, hot or cold rolled, when imported by manufacturers of pipes and tubes for use exclusively in the manufacture of pipes and tubes, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

(a) Not more than 14 inches in width: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

(b) More than 14 inches in width: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

From and after the publication of such order in council in the Canada Gazette, tariff item 384 as it appears in said schedule at the time of the passing of this act shall be repealed and the provisions of the said tariff item as it appears in the last preceding subsection of this section shall be substituted therefor.

The governor in council shall not direct that such provisions be substituted as aforesaid unless and until the governor in council is satisfied that skelp of iron or steel, hot or cold rolled, is manufactured in substantial quantities in Canada from iron or steel made in Canada.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is proposed here that under certain conditions the governor in council may grant or allow a duty to go into effect when skelp is ready to be produced in the country. Does the minister know that in two or three mills in this country skelp could be produced within twenty days?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Not economically.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I wonder how the hon. gentleman knows. I am not asking him, I am asking the minister, or somebody who knows something about it. If the minister does not know, someone near him may give him the information.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not any information to the effect that skelp can be produced in substantial quantities in Canada in such a short time as that mentioned by the hon. gentleman. The evidence before me does not show it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know of two steel mills in this country which could produce skelp within a month if a proper duty were imposed, but it never will be produced under the proposed order in council. It is just so much "eyewash"; nothing more, nothing less.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—385. Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, of iron or steel, hot rolled, valued at not less than five cents per pound: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386. Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, of iron or steel, as hereunder defined, under regulations prescribed by the minister:

(a) Plates, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture or repair of the pressure parts of boilers, pulp digesters, steam accumulators and vessels for the refining of oil, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

(b) Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, cold rolled, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of butts, hinges, typewriters or sewing machines, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

(c) Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, hot rolled, being mould boards, shares, plough plates, land sides or disc circles, when such rectangles, circles or sketches are cut to shape but not moulded, punched, polished or otherwise manufactured, when imported by manufacturers of agricultural implements for use exclusively in the manufacture of agricultural implements, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(d). Sheets, hoop, band or strip, coated, polished or not, when imported by manufacturers of saddlery hardware for use exclusively in the manufacture of saddlery hardware, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. CANTLEY: Before you go any further, Mr. Chairman, I want to protest against this whole list of free items. It is absolutely useless for the government to talk of protecting and building up an iron and steel industry in this country while they place a large proportion of the products of our mills and furnaces on the free list and at the same time unfairly grant the people who use this raw material, produced under conditions to which I have referred, the highest rate of protection granted under the Canadian tariff. There is nothing scientific, fair or reasonable about the tariff as reflected in the whole list of items contained on pages 16 and 17, and I protest against those items.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(e). Sheets, hoop, band or strip, hot or cold rolled, when imported by manufacturers of shovels for use exclusively in the manufacture of shovels, in their own factories, per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $2.75; general tariff, $3.

Customs tariff—386(f). Hoop, band or strip, drawn, coated or not, when imported by manufacturers of mats for use exclusively in the manufacture of mats, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Customs tariff—386(g). Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, not tempered or ground nor further manufactured than cut to shape, without indented edges, when imported by manufacturers of saws or straw cutters for use exclusively in the manufacture of saws or straw cutters, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Customs tariff—386(h). Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, hardened, tempered or ground, not further manufactured than cut to shape, without indented edges, when imported by manufacturers of saws for use exclusively in the manufacture of saws, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Customs tariff—386(i). Sheets, hoop, band or strip, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of buckle clasps, bedfasts, furniture casters, corset steels, clock springs, shoe shanks, phonograph motor springs or ball bearings, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Customs tariff—386(j). Hoop, band or strip, being tagging metal, coated or not, when imported by manufacturers of shoe and corset laces for use exclusively in the manufacture of shoe and corset laces, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Items agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(k). Sheets, hot or cold rolled, when imported by manufacturers of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, for use exclusively in the manufacture of vitreous enamelled sheets for apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: With respect to this item I propose a change in order to allow the manufacturers of apparatus designed for cooking to secure the same concession with respect to hollow ware as is here granted with respect to stoves and ranges. The amendment substitutes for the present item the following:

Sheets, hot or cold rolled, when imported by manufacturers of hollowware coated with vitreous enamel or of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, for use exclusively in the manufacture of hollowware coated with vitreous enamel or of vitreous enamelled sheets for apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, in their own factories.

Mr. BENNETT: Was this recommended by the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Why was it not put in the tariff originally?

Mr. DUNNING: The point was not clear originally as to the wording for cooking, as to the distinction between cooking utensils and enamelled hollow-ware generally. As a matter of fact the item as originally worded partly covered commodities of enamelled hollow-ware, but not completely. It was an error.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(l). Sheets, cold rolled, blue polished, when imported by manufacturers of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, for use exclusively in the manufacture of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(m). Sheets, hoop, band or strip, hot rolled, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of sheets, hoop, band or strip, coated with tin, zinc, or other metal or metals, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free; on and after January 1, 1931: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Why is this after January 1, 1931? Does that apply to all the preceding paragraphs of this item, or only to paragraph (m)?

Mr. DUNNING: It applies only to the paragraph under discussion. This is to give notice that all dippers will be on the same basis on and after January 1, 1931.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—386(n). Hoop, band or strip, hot rolled, .080 inch or less in thickness, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of cold rolled iron or steel, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Customs tariff—386(o). Hoop, band or strip, hot rolled more than .080 inch in thickness, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of cold rolled iron or steel, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—387. Railway rails, of iron or steel, of any weight or for any purpose, punched, drilled or not, per ton: British preferential tariff, $4.50; intermediate tariff, $6; general tariff, $7.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—387(a). Railway ties, fishplates, splice bars, rail joints, tie-plates, of iron or steel, per ton: British preferential tariff, $5; intermediate tariff, $7; general tariff, $8.

Mr. BENNETT: There are no changes in these items, I take it?

Mr. DUNNING: The item dealing with railway rails is changed by the insertion of the words "of any weight or for any purpose," for greater clarity.

Mr. BENNETT: No change in the rate?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—387b. Railway intersection layouts, intersections, switches, crossings, frogs, guard rails, of iron or steel: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—388. Iron or steel angles, beams, channels, columns, girders, joists, piling, tees, zees, and other shapes or sections, not punched, drilled or further manufactured than hot rolled, weighing not less than 35 pounds per lineal yard, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $1; intermediate tariff, $2.75; general tariff, $3.

The governor in council may, by order in council, direct that there be substituted for tariff item 388 in schedule A of the Customs Tariff, 1907, and the several rates of duties of customs set opposite said item in schedule A the following:

Iron or steel angles, beams, channels, columns, girders, joists, piling, tees, zees, and other shapes or sections, not punched, drilled or further manufactured than hot rolled, weighing not less than one hundred and twenty pounds per lineal yard, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $2; intermediate tariff, $2; general tariff, $3.

From and after the publication of such order in council in the Canada Gazette, tariff item 388 as it appears in said schedule at the time of passing of this act, shall be repealed and the provisions of the said tariff item as it appears in the last preceding subsection of this section shall be substituted therefor.

The governor in council shall not direct that such provisions shall be substituted as aforesaid unless and until the Governor in Council is satisfied that iron or steel angles, beams, channels, columns, girders, joists, piling, tees, zees, and other shapes or sections weighing less than one hundred and twenty pounds per lineal yard are manufactured in substantial quantities in Canada from steel made in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—388a. Iron or steel shapes or sections, as hereunder defined, not punched, drilled or further manufactured than hot rolled, weighing not less than 35 pounds per lineal yard, viz: I-beams, up to and including 6 inches in depth, but not to include H sections; channels, up to and including 7 inches in depth; angles, up to and including 6 inches by 6 inches; zees, up to and including 6 inches in depth of web, per ton: British preferential tariff, $4; intermediate tariff, $5.50; general tariff, $6.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—388b. Iron or steel angles, beams, channels, columns, girders, joists, piling, tees, zees, and other shapes or sections, not punched, drilled or further manufactured than hot rolled, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $4.25; intermediate tariff, $6; general tariff, $7.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): I know there is no use in making any objection to these items, but I am advised that this change under item 388b will ruin some of the plants engaged in fabricating iron and steel. One plant in my own city advises me that this means absolute ruin. I suppose it is of no avail to protest, but I feel it is my duty to direct the attention of the minister and of the government to this situation.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to protest once more. We have item 388 with a duty of $1 per ton, which is less than the duty on the pig iron from which these articles are produced. Is there anything more ridiculous in the tariff? The whole tariff is ridiculous and will be absolutely useless as far as protecting the iron and steel industry is concerned. I venture to say that twelve months from now the minister will be forced to agree with what I am saying.

Mr. SHORT: He will not be here.

Mr. CANTLEY: I hope he will be in the house so that I may have the satisfaction of showing him how this has worked out in one year.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend may not be here himself.

Mr. CANTLEY: Perhaps not, but in that case I can write the minister a letter.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a matter here to which I directed attention some time ago. Power is given to change the tariff by executive action, and notice is to be given in the Canada Gazette, but the new tariff is to be operative forthwith. As I have said on previous occasions in dealing with other matters, I think notice of fifteen or thirty days should be given, as the case may be. It is rather unfair to provide that a new tariff may be promulgated by executive action without affording at least some opportunity of knowledge to those who may be concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: I should point out to my hon. friend that this item is exactly the same as it has stood in the tariff since 1914. However, I will bear in mind what he has said.

Item agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SATURDAY AND MORNING SITTINGS—CONCLUSION OF SESSION IN ANTICIPATION OF ELECTION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the consent of the house to move the following motion which appears on the votes and proceedings of yesterday:

That on and after Saturday, the 24th of May, instant, and every day thereafter, except Sundays, until the end of the present session, the house shall meet at eleven o'clock, a.m. That in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock, p.m., there shall also be an intermission every day from one to three o'clock, p.m., and that the order of business and procedure shall be the same on Saturdays as on Fridays.

May I say with reference to the motion, it is perhaps advisable that hon. members should be informed of one or two considerations of which the government has to take account, not so much in regard to bringing the proceedings of parliament to a close as with reference to arranging for the date of a general election. I noticed in one of the morning papers the statement that there was some understanding between the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and myself as to the date at which the business of parliament should be brought to a close. While I have had a number of conferences with the leader of the opposition, and all of them so far as I am concerned, most congenial, there has been no definite arrangement reached between us as to the time of the closing of parliament. I would say the same with respect to the conversations I have had with the leader of the Progressive group (Mr. Gardiner). What we have agreed to is that so far as possible we would all do what we could to expedite the business of the house in the effort to bring its proceedings to a conclusion as speedily as possible. A great deal of business has been put through within the last few days and there is, I think, every indication that hon. members are disposed to proceed with matters as rapidly as circumstances will justify. I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer that under the provisions of the Dominion Elections Act, sixty days or possibly fifty-nine days must elapse between the time at which the writs are issued and the date of the election. That means roughly that if we were to conclude the session at the end of the month of May the elections could not come before the end of July.

There is another provision in the act to the effect that the elections themselves must be held on a Monday. The first Monday in August happens to be a civic holiday throughout the province of Ontario, and I imagine that for that reason there might be some exception taken to having the election on that particular day. If an election is not held on or before the 4th of August, it means that it would have to be as late as the 11th of August, or later. If hon. members feel that it is in the public interest to have the election delayed until the 11th of August or beyond, that is, of course, a matter within their own control, but my impression is that every member of the house feels that those who are present here are at this time at some disadvantage in comparison with their actual or would-be opponents, in that the field is open to the latter wherever they may happen to be, whereas we have to continue to sit here and go on with the business of parliament. That is a consideration which I suppose should not weigh in the minds of those who have to do with public business. However, it is a consideration that I think may affect to some extent the way in which the balance of the business of the house will be transacted.

May I make this quite clear? The government has no desire to rush through any legislation, estimates or anything else. The estimates have been before parliament practically from the beginning of the session. Hon. members must know from having looked over them what particular items they feel are of a character that should be very fully discussed, which, in other words, will probably be the items of controversy. If those could be indicated to the whips, I see no reason why they should not be brought forward before any others, so that it may not be thought that the government is holding back certain items to rush them through at the last moment. Most of the items in the estimates, I think, will commend themselves to the house without discussion, but there may be some on which there should be some discussion. The most contentious estimates are usually those of the Department of Public Works. With those estimates we have already made very substantial progress. What remains are not very considerable.

That is my reason, Mr. Speaker, for bringing this motion before the house at the present time. It is with the hope that it may be possible to conclude the business of parliament next week; but if that is not possible, we will just have to go on a little longer. What I would, however, point out to hon. members is this: it will, I think, be agreed that so far as the public interest is concerned it will be best served by having the elections over as soon as possible, having regard to disturbed conditions likely to exist meanwhile and to the fact that there has to be, at the least, a campaign of sixty days, and that to all intents and purposes the campaign is on at the present time outside of parliament, as well as possibly to a very limited extent inside.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with much that the right hon. gentleman has said I, of course, am wholly in accord. I desire first of all to say that since the matter of a general election was first discussed, the conversations that I have been privileged to have with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) have been of the most harmonious character and every effort I think has been made by all who have discussed the subject with him, including my friends to my left, to expedite public business and to discharge our duties as members to the best of our ability, having regard to the public interest as it may be affected first of all by the tariff changes proposed, secondly by the estimates, and thirdly by the impending election. There is a very considerable body of business yet to be disposed of. The discussions that have taken place on the budget resolutions are discussions which I think it will be agreed could not easily be shortened. We realize that the government has a majority behind it for the moment to enable it to put through its resolutions, reluctant though some hon. gentlemen opposite, including the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. Glen) may be to do so; nevertheless, the government has the power so to do, and a frank recognition of that fact may do something to shorten lengthy discussions. It would seem to be improper for us to be standing up in every instance and say that we disagree with this or that or the other thing. Rather, a general objection in principle to the measures proposed has I think correctly indicated our position.

With respect to the necessity of expediting an early appeal to the people, I have informed the Prime Minister, as he has indicated, that while we have no agreement, as he has said, I am anxious, as are those who are associated with me to the left of the Speaker, in every way possible, to see that the public business is transacted as expeditiously as possible having regard to what I say is the public interest. The suggestion that has been made as to contentious items in the estimates being communicated to the whips prior to discussion commencing in the house will I think do much to expedite business. There is a large number of items which must be passed whoever is on the treasury benches. The public service must be maintained, salaries must be paid, fixed charges must be met. All these are purely matters of routine, and we will get rid of them very quickly. There are a few rather disputatious items in the estimates that will involve discussion of, shall we say, administration—a word that I think the hon. member from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) will regard as aptly indicating the situation, although Trench may not say that that is the best word to use in the circumstances.

Mr. BROWN: Refer to the dictionary.

Mr. BENNETT: If we are to consult the dictionary, I would have to refer to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Crerar).

We shall do everything in our power to determine the items on which discussion will take place at any length. I should, however, like to make clear that we are not to be taken as agreeing to items that are passed by the house simply because we do not take up the time of the house to enter into a lengthy statement of our objections.

The supplementary estimates, I think, should be brought down at as early a date as possible. That would enable the members in the evening to give them some little study and to determine what should be the subject matter of more lengthy discussion in the house. I think I can say on behalf of my colleagues that in every way possible, consistent with what we regard to be the public interest—there will always be a difference as to that—we shall do our best to forward the transaction of public business.

I must say that I have given much consideration to the conditions imposed by the Dominion Elections Act as indicated by the Prime Minister. Having regard to the fact that the election must be held on a Monday, and to the further fact that there is a civic holiday in Ontario on the first Monday in August, I quite agree with the right hon. the Prime Minister, for my information is that it would be entirely out of the question to hold an election on that day, having regard to the conditions that exist in connection with that holiday. Therefore, we are confronted with a condition and not a theory. It is a question of whether or not we shall have an election on the Monday preceding the 4th of August or on some Monday subsequent to that day. That is what the position seems to be.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: While there has been no agreement in any sense, I think we are all in accord that if the public business can be properly disposed of, the election should be held on some date antecedent to the 4th of August. Otherwise, it is in the lap of the gods.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED

Annual report of the Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year 1929-30.—Mr. Rinfret.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER CORPORATION

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT TO DISCUSS MATTER OF PUBLIC IMPORTANCE

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask leave of the house to move the adjournment to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance in connection with the hydro-electric development of the Soulanges section of the St. Lawrence river between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis by the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited and its various subsidiary companies, including the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company.

The government has approved of the above development by passing order in council P.C. 422, March 8, 1929, and in so doing the government has not accepted the plan for this undertaking recommended by the joint board of engineers, dated November 16, 1926.

Further, apparently the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited have violated and exceeded the terms and conditions imposed on them by the said order in council, and in so doing have committed acts which justify a demand for an explanation by the government as to whether or not there is an agreement between the government and R. O. Sweezey and his associates who own and control the said company and corporation whereby the whole of the unallocated portion of this section of the St. Lawrence river will be turned over to them for exploitation.

The government should disclose to parliament the reasons for its non-acceptance of the said recommendation of the joint board of engineers, and the government should further disclose to parliament whether or not there is an agreement as above indicated between it and R. O. Sweezey and his associates, and if there is no such agreement the government should take such action as in the premises is proper and requisite.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have read the considerations which the hon. member has brought in support of his motion. I consider them of urgent public importance in view of the early close of the session. But twenty members must rise in their place.

And leave having been granted:

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, the subject matter which I desire to discuss this afternoon is of very great importance to the people of Canada. It is not only important to the eastern section, but to the whole Dominion. In the first instance, it will be my purpose to give the history of this undertaking from the beginning. Inasmuch as probably members have not had an opportunity of giving very much serious consideration to this important question, I believe that such a history would be very valuable to them in this connection. After I have done that it will be my privilege to discuss the financial terms of the various organizations comprised in the parent company to show very clearly how the capitalization of these companies has been such that it is not in the public interest in any way whatsoever.

Dealing with the history of this corporation, it might be said that at a certain date the Beauharnois project came under the ownership and control of what are known as the Robert heirs. It is not necessary for me to go back beyond that time, because we are not interested in the situation anterior to that particular date. The Robert heirs caused to be incorporated in 1902 what is known as the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. We have no information as to the capital stock of this particular company or what its total assets were at that particular time. After the incorporation of the company the Robert heirs transferred to it their rights in the Beauharnois project and retained other rights for themselves. They owned, however, all the shares of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. The Robert heirs also owned, either personally or through the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, the entire project.

The Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company had the right to divert 1,050 cubic feet of water per second. However, there developed a dispute between the company and the Dominion government over those rights, and finally it was settled in 1910 by an agreement between the company and the Dominion government, which was amplified by order in council, by which the rights of the company were definitely dealt with.

Eventually the company applied to the Dominion government to divert 40,000 cubic feet of water per second. The Dominion government secured the reports of various engineers in connection with this application, among which was the report of Henry Holgate, dated May 16, 1916. The Dominion government refused to make the grant. However, in 1927, Mr. R. O. Sweezey purchased from the Robert heirs the entire Beauharnois project for himself personally. This was established by Mr. Sweezey when he gave evidence in Montreal in connection with a lawsuit between himself and the Transportation and Power Company of Montreal. During the trial the following questions were put to Mr. Sweezey and were answered by him:

Q. Did you buy any rights from the Robert heirs within that year, that is, the year from April 28, 1927?

A. Yes. I am just trying to think of the date. It was in 1927 I bought from Robert's. It was within the twelve months from April 28, 1926.

Q. And you bought it personally?

A. Yes.

Q. That is, you were acting for somebody else, I suppose, but you bought in your own name?

A. I bought it personally.

Q. (By the court) Your answer as I understand it, is that in 1927, within a year from April, 1926, you purchased the Robert interests in this scheme?

A. Yes.

So that as a result of what I have stated to the house we have Mr. Sweezey owning the entire Beauharnois project which he purchased from the Robert heirs in the spring of 1927. The price that Mr. Sweezey paid for this is not known, but a reasonably accurate idea will be given later.

During the hearing of the case of R. O. Sweezey and the Transportation and Power Company, a letter signed by R. O. Sweezey was placed in evidence and I propose to read it. I trust hon. members will follow my reading of this letter very carefully because of the fact that there are many very important implications in it. This is the letter:

J. Alderic Raymond, Esq.,
Windsor Hotel,
Montreal.

136 St. James Street, Montreal.
14th October, 1926.

Dear Mr. Raymond,—

Further to our conversation regarding the St. Lawrence power project, in which we are both interested, I may say that though I have been familiar with this situation for some twelve years, it is only during the past twelve months that I have devoted some serious attention to the study of the economic possibilities of this one million horse-power development, near the city of Montreal, and on deep water navigation in the St. Lawrence.

Briefly stated, the power site is comprised in the natural fall of eighty-three feet, in the distance of some fourteen miles, between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis. It is proposed to divert by a canal through a clay section of level country on the south shore a minimum of 75,000 cubic feet per second on St. Lawrence water, or a possible maximum of 150,000 c.f.s. The effective working head would be seventy-five feet. In case of maximum diversion and 70 per cent load factor, a development of 1,350,000 h.p. is possible, and at a cost which competent authorities place at not over $100 per h.p.

To place ourselves in possession of all the rights essential to this undertaking, we should pursue the following course:—

1. Acquire the Robert rights which are fundamental in regard to an initial grant which he holds to divert 40,000 c.f.s. He also holds rights granted by charter to expropriate for the proposed canal route. Numerous other incidental rights are included in his holdings which he is anxious to sell, though he wishes to participate partially in the organization syndicate.

2. Acquire the control of the St. Lawrence Waterways & Power Company stock, which is available to us, and upon which we have already a substantial hold.

3. Enlist with our syndicate two or three individuals, who in addition to providing some cash as their fair share, can assist us in getting our rights extended or enlarged so as to develop the entire available flow of the St. Lawrence at this point. As the whole situation is entirely within the province of Quebec, our influence has to be exerted only in Canadian political circles—that is at Ottawa and at Quebec.

4. It will probably be advisable to enlist the participation of certain United States interests, who for their capital and initiative can be relied upon to absorb some of the power in Quebec province in connection with some power-using industry—similar to the Aluminum Company of Canada.

The promise to use a substantial block of power in Quebec province will facilitate our negotiations with Quebec authorities, and further facilitate our exporting of power to the province of Ontario.

5. The cash to be raised for the early stages of this project for the sole purpose of acquiring and enlarging rights to the extent of 150,000 h.p. diversion will approximate some six or seven hundred thousand dollars. It may take three or four years then before actual development starts.

In connection with personnel of syndicate, I have in mind the individuals we should enlist with us, and although I have been in touch with United States people showing a desire to join, I have hesitated to accept any one definitely until certain that each and every one is persona grata to all others.

I have said nothing about the vision necessary to an appreciation of such a project from an economic standpoint, nor have I touched upon the huge profits that may be expected, as these are matters that the ordinary business man can well picture for himself. I do not wish to minimize, however, the task that presents itself in rounding up and launching such a scheme. The actual raising of the money becomes easy, however, once the physical properties and rights have been gathered in.

Yours sincerely,

R. O. Sweezey.

Hon. members will note two very important points in this letter. The first one is that they expect tremendous profits by securing control of this company, and also by securing certain rights either from Quebec, from the Dominion government or from both. It is stated very definitely in this letter that while it is essential that certain persons who have some cash should be in the organization, it is abosolutely essential that there be some people in the organization with political influence.

As soon as Mr. Sweezey assumed control of the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company he advised an application to be made by the company to the legislature of the province of Quebec for the right to divert 40,000 cubic feet of water per second from lake St. Francis. This application was granted subject to the approval of the plans by the Dominion government. A lease between the province of Quebec and the Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company was entered into to give effect to the granting of the above mentioned application. Application was also made by the company to the Dominion government for the approval of those plans. The company, in depositing its application, submitted the following as a basis for an agreement with the Dominion government:

(a) When making its initial installation, the company will construct its power canal to such plans and specifications and will operate its power development in such a manner that the canal when completed will conform to the navigation standards as set out in paragraph 111 of the main report, and paragraph 13 of appendix C of the report made by the International Joint Board of Engineers 1926-27.

(b) The capital amount properly chargeable to navigation, in this connection as calculated by the International Joint Board of Engineers will be approximately sixteen million dollars ($16,000,000) and will be paid by the company. The company will also install such remedial works as may be necessary to avoid injury to existing power developments and will maintain the level of lake St. Francis at such elevation as may be required for navigation.

(c) At any time that the government may demand, and after three years' notice, the company undertakes to install in connection with its power canal, such locks and other necessary works as may be required to make the power canal available for through navigation for vessels of a size and draught as large as any vessels which will be able to use the new Welland canal upon its completion, provided:

I. That concurrently with the installation of such locks the company shall have the right to enlarge its canal and to divert through it and utilize for the development of power all the flow of the St. Lawrence river between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis with the exception of water required for floatage through the existing Soulanges canal, and with the exception of that quantity of water to the user of which existing power plants are now legally entitled.

II. That the cost of such locks and other improvements to be borne by the company shall not exceed eighteen million dollars ($18,000,000).

III. That in any event the company shall not be obliged to install such locks and other works above referred to until such time as will enable the company to complete such installation concurrently with the final completion of the remainder of the St. Lawrence deep waterway.

Very strong protests were entered against this proposal. So strong were they that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) thought it wise to hold a hearing, and the company sent in an amended application. The amended application is altogether different from the first one. We must remember, however, that it was the intention of the company in the first place to secure if possible the whole flow of the St. Lawrence river. I am going to read the amended application for the information of hon. members.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What is the date of that application?

Mr. GARDINER: January 15, 1929.

The application of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company now pending before the governor in council is purely and simply for the approval of plans for hydraulic development which will be subject to a condition that not more than 40,000 cubic feet per second shall be diverted from the river—from lake St. Francis, to be returned to lake St. Louis and used for power purposes by the company between these two points; and any condition that the government may exact, in any wording satisfactory to the government, involving that limitation, is accepted in advance by the applicant. If the engineers think that the plans should be altered to meet this declaration the company will submit to any such alteration.

Plans and specifications of the company were finally approved, and order in council P.C. 422 was passed on March 8, 1929, confirming the approval. It will be noted that approval was granted subject to not more than 40,000 cubic feet of water per second being diverted from lake St. Francis. The order in council recites other conditions, but they are too numerous to discuss at this moment.

When the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company had secured approval of its plans to develop this work, a new company was formed, namely, the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited. The solicitors who incorporated this company was Messrs. McGiverin, Haydon and Ebbs, of Ottawa. The Haydon referred to in this company is now Senator Haydon of Ottawa, and so far as the records on file in the Department of the Secretary of State show, this company was formed of the office staff of the above law firm, and thus constituted it entered into certain agreements all of which are set out in the statement in lieu of prospectus which was filed with the department on September 30, 1929. In paragraph 1 of this statement we find the following information with reference to the construction of the share capital of the company:

Five management preferred shares without nominal or par value;

1,799,995 class A common shares without nominal or par value;

3,200,000 class B non-voting common shares, without nominal or par value.

Provided, however, that the said shares without any nominal or par value may be issued for such consideration as may from time to time be fixed by resolution of the board of directors of the company, not exceeding in the aggregate the sum of $50,000,000, or such greater amount as the directors may deem expedient and as shall be authorized from time to time by the Secretary of State of Canada.

In addition to the above the company entered into an agreement to isue $30,000,000 worth of thirty year, 6 per cent collateral trust sinking fund bonds of the company. At this time it must be remembered that the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited had no assets whatsoever. The company now having been formed, they were ready to proceed to do business. In the meantime, however, from the date on which Mr. Sweezey had acquired the assets of the Robert heirs in the Beauharnois undertaking, he had manipulated affairs in such a way that when the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited wanted to purchase these assets, they were owned by what was known as the Beauharnois syndicate. The members of this syndicate are not known, but I submit that in the public interest they should be disclosed to parliament. The Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, after its incorporation and organization, then purchased from the Beauharnois syndicate the Beauharnois project which previously had been purchased by Mr. Sweezey from the Robert heirs. The details of these transactions are contained in paragraph 6 of the statement in lieu of prospectus.

In the first place the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited assumed the liabilities of the Beauharnois syndicate, and amongst these liabilities was a liability by the Beauharnois syndicate to the Robert heirs. This liability no doubt arose, through the sale by the Robert heirs of the Beauharnois project to Mr. Sweezey, who formed the Beauharnois syndicate which took over the agreement with the Robert heirs to pay the purchase price provided in the agreement. The syndicate apparently did not pay this purchase price, but in conveying their rights to the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited they provided that this purchase price should be assumed by the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited. The liability therefore assumed in respect to the Robert heirs was a liability to pay them the sum of $20,000 cash and to issue to them 21,000 fully paid up class A shares of the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited. This, then will give some idea of the real price of the Beauharnois project when Mr. Sweezey purchased it, and using this as a basis for computation we can realize how the property increased in value from the time Mr. Sweezey purchased it until it was subsequently acquired by the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited.

In addition to assuming the above liability, the Beauharnois corporation agreed to pay the Beauharnois syndicate, which was Mr. Sweezey and his friends, $4,750,000 in cash; to assume all their liabilities, and to pay them the sum of $10,000 in cash to wind up the affairs of the syndicate. On the other hand, the Beauharnois syndicate agreed to buy 1,000,000 class A common shares of the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited at $1 per share, and to pay for the same at the time the syndicate received the above mentioned sum of $4,750,000 in cash from the company. Valuing Class A common shares at the value, placed upon them by Robert Dodd and Company, investment bankers, of $60 per share, we find the Beauharnois syndicate getting class A common stock worth $60,000,000, and $3,760,000 net in cash from the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited for selling to them the Beauharnois undertaking which I have already mentioned as consisting of the rights and assets of the Robert heirs, which previously had been acquired by Mr. Sweezey.

This value of $60 per share is indicated in a comprehensive and analytical study of the values of the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited by these investment bankers in the Financial Post of Toronto, which sets forth the value of the securities of the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited. I have before me, Mr. Speaker, a copy of the Financial Post of April 3, 1930, not very long ago, which contains an analytical study of the values by Robert Dodd and Company, Incorporated, Royal Bank building, Montreal. I desire to read a few of the paragraphs of this particular study.

It will be remembered that I have already mentioned that Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited decided to issue bonds to the extent of $30,000,000, and this is a study of the prospects of this company in regard to the sale of these bonds. The first paragraph which I desire to read is as follows:

A Bond-Share-Warrant Investment

It should be appreciated by investors that to every $1,000 bond is appended five shares of A common stock free; also warrants entitling the holder to purchase twenty shares at $35 per share of B stock, which ranks equally with the A stock, though without voting rights. Neither the free shares nor the warrants may be detached from the bond certificate, until in the case of the bonus stock, October 1, 1932, and in the latter—

That is the B stock.

—from October 1, 1932, to October 1, 1937, therefore the prevailing market value of these A and B stocks is at all times a market equity on behalf of the bond itself.

Now I go down to another paragraph which is important, and which gives an analysis of the earning powers of this company:

Briefly, our analysis discusses in circumstantial detail, the expectations of this 30-year bond-share-warrant investment over a five-year period, when 1,000,000 horse-power should be in operation, and we show with that production-unit (50% of the final objective), an earning power equal to slightly over $4 a share on the A and B shares combined, after all charges.

With this $4.25 earning power per share, we believe a price of $60 a share to be quite conservative, without giving consideration to the investment momentum which will gather force when the public realize the company's industry-building characteristics in the territory adjacent to the Beauharnois operations.

We have another paragraph headed:

Unusual Increment Indicated

The following tabulation considers the market equity of the 30-year bond and its share attachments, if all securities, bond and shares, are held for permanent investment, taking the price of say $60 a share, within a period of 5 years.

|---|---|
| A $1,000 bond cost.. .. .. .. .. .. | $1,000 |
| 5 free shares valued at $60.. .. .. | 300 |
| Increment on 20 shares at $25.. .. | 500 |
| Market value of $1,000 investment. | $1,800 |

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): As well as 6 per cent interest.

Mr. GARDINER: And 6 per cent interest. Let me remind the house that these figures are quoted from the Financial Post of April 3, 1930.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the hon. member reading from an advertisement in that publication?

Mr. GARDINER: I am reading from an advertisement issued by Robert Dodd & Company, Incorporated. I would like to direct attention to the following which appeared in this advertisement:

Briefly, our analysis discusses in circumstantial detail, the expectations of this 30-year bond-share-warrant investment over a five-year period, when 1,000,000 horse-power should be in operation, and we show with that production-unit, (50 per cent of the final objective), an earning power equal to slightly over $4 a share on the A and B shares combined, after all charges.

This company has received from this government the approval of plans to carry 40,000 cubic feet of water per second. That amount of water should produce approximately 500,000 horse power, but this advertisement states that within five years 1,000,000 horse power will have been developed. Under these circumstances Your Honour will understand why we look upon this project as being inimical to the interests of the people of Canada. The advertisement states that the development of 1,000,000 horse power would be only one half of the final objective.

After negotiating this transaction, the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited entered into another agreement with Newman Sweezey & Company Limited, and the Dominion Securities Corporation, Limited, the details of which are set out in the statement in lieu of prospectus in paragraph 1. I have a copy of that statement should any hon. member desire to see it.

Under this arrangement the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited agreed to sell $30,000,000 worth of their 6 per cent bonds and 770,000 class A common shares to the above mentioned two companies for $27,000,000 cash. Of the 770,000 class A common shares thus disposed of, 150,000 thereof had to be set aside to bonus the $30,000,000 worth of bonds at the rate of 5 A shares for every thousand dollars worth of bonds. This would leave 620,000 class A common shares in the hands of Newman Sweezey & Company Limited and the Dominion Securities Corporation Limited after the bonds had been bonused. To understand what the result of this agreement is in so far as the corporation and the promoters are concerned, we will continue to calculate the value of these securities as set out in the analytical study by Robert Dodd & Company Incorporated. The 620,000 class A common shares which remain after 150,000 class A common shares have been provided for bonusing purposes, at $60 per share, would amount to $37,200,000. Thus far we have this situation. The company has $27,000,000 and Newman, Sweezey & Company Limited and Dominion Securities Corporation Limited have bonds worth $3,000,000 and 620,000 class A common shares worth $37,200,000. In addition to the above there should be added to the $3,000,000 worth of bonds kept by Newman Sweezey & Company Limited and the Dominion Securities Corporation Limited 15,000 class A common shares as a bonus, each valued at $60, making a total of $900,000. In the final analysis, therefore, Newman, Sweezey & Company Limited and the Dominion Securities Corporation Limited get $3,000,000 worth of bonds and $38,100,000 in class A common shares, and the company gets $27,000,000, an arrangement which cannot by the wildest stretch of imagination be considered in the best interests of the company or of the public. To sum up the whole situation in a few words, Mr. R. O. Sweezey and his associates receive through the Beauharnois syndicate, the Newman Sweezey & Company Limited, and the Dominion Securities Corporation Limited the following:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Syndicate.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | Cash.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 3,760,000 |
| | 1,000,000 class A common shares. | 60,000,000 |
| | | 63,760,000 |
| Newman Sweezey & Co., and Dominion Securities Corporation Limited.. .. .. .. .. .. | Bonds.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 3,000,000 |
| | 635,000 class A common shares. | 38,100,000 |
| | Total.. .. .. .. .. .. | $104,860,000 |

In addition they obtain the whole Beauharnois project paid in full by the Beauharnois Corporation Limited, which means that Sweezey and his associates have not one single dollar of their own money invested in this transaction. In other words, for promoting this transaction they receive $104,860,000, the company has some $23,300,000 and in addition has to pay any other liabilities of the Beauharnois syndicate.

Contrast to this the total cost of the entire work as set out at page 39 of Mr. Brown's report —which will be referred to later by one of my colleagues—given at $65,339,750. If we deduct the sum of $16,000,000, estimated by Mr. Brown as being the approximate amount properly chargeable to navigation and to be paid to the company by the Dominion government, we would have a total net cost to the company for power development fixed at $49,339,750, or in round figures $50,000,000.

As the matter now stands the company have some $23,000,000 in their treasury, and to get the remaining $27,000,000 they propose to issue first mortgage bonds of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company to the estimated amount of $50,000,000. This is established by reference to the prospectus issued by A. Iselin and Company and Wood Gundy and Company Incorporated. This will net them an amount more than sufficient to build the entire undertaking. There will be no need to sell the 3,200,000 class B shares which have an estimated value of $192,000,000.

If these shares were sold dividends would have to be paid and they are now being offered for sale. In other words, we have this situation:

|---|---|
| Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited | |
| 30-year bonds.. .. .. .. .. .. | $ 30,000,000 |
| Class A shares.. .. .. .. .. .. | 108,000,000 |
| Class B shares.. .. .. .. .. .. | 192,000,000 |
| Beauharnois Light Heat & Power Company | |
| First mortagage bonds.. .. | 50,000,000 |
| Share capital.. .. .. .. .. .. | unknown |
| Total.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $380,000,000 |

Securities outstanding total $380,000,000, plus the shares of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, in order to build a project which will cost some $50,000,000 and the entire transaction based and financed on assets for which the Robert heirs received in 1927 $20,000 in cash and 21,000 class A shares at $60 each, or $1,260,000, making a total of $1,280,000.

This is sufficient in itself to justify the rescinding of the order in council which enables Mr. Sweezey and his associates to perpetrate such an outstanding grab of the natural resources belonging to the people of this Dominion, and Canada should follow the precedent established by the people of the state of New York in connection with the Long Sault Development Company, and cancel the charter of the Beauharnois Power Corporation, Limited. The Dominion government has granted this charter. Sweezey and his associates have abused the privileges conferred upon them by the house, which should therefore act at once and cancel their charter.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is, I think, to be regretted that the rules of the house on this occasion prevented the hon. gentleman who introduced the subject from concluding the argument in connection therewith. Because of the forty minute rule it has fallen to my lot to build the second half of the argument on this matter. I remember right opposite me in the very seat which is at present occupied by that tribune of the common people from Saskatchewan, the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), there sat last year another tribune of the common people, this time from Quebec. When we were then discussing a subject of this kind, that man, turning to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), said: "It would be a blessing to the people of Canada if the Prime Minister would show the gate to some of the gentlemen who compose the big interests, the Beauharnois crowd and all the rest of them." A good chief bouncer, he said, was what the government needed.

Mr. MANION: Who said that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). In emphatic terms he made reference to this question last year, at the very time that the negotiations in respect of the application of the Beauharnois people were taking place. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) has placed before the house a picture of a colossal financial structure built up on one of the most valuable natural resources of the people of Canada, bult up only by virtue of rights granted the company by the Dominion government under order in council. We have in that structure an example, not only of financial brigandage in its extreme, but of the old situation of interlocking directorates to which reference has been made in past years. On looking at the board of directors of the company, I find the following names:

Hon. W. L. McDougald, M.D., president of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

I think he is a senator.

R. O. Sweezey, Esq., president of Newman, Sweezey and Company, Limited.

This company has apparently profited immensely in the financial transactions of the Beauharnois corporation to date.

A. F. White, Esq., vice-president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce.

Aimé Geoffrion, Esq., K.C., director of the Canada Life Assurance Company.

Mr. Geoffrion is one of Sir Herbert Holt's able counsellors.

J. H. Gundy, Esq., president of Wood, Gundy and Company Limited.

Where have we heard that name before, even in the house? Gundy is Holt's partner in many of his firms.

G. H. Montgomery, Esq., K. C., director of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power, Consolidated.

I will speak of him a little more later. This company is another Holt concern.

S. Godin, junior, Esq., director of British Columbia Power Corporation, Limited.

He was formerly a secretary to Sir Herbert Holt.

Miller Lash, Esq., K.C., president of the Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited.

Hon. P. J. Paradis, director of Quebec Power Company.

M. W. Wilson, Esq., general manager of the Royal Bank of Canada.

Holt, by the way, is president of the Royal Bank of Canada. Thus we observe a board of directors unquestionably "Holt" in character, and yet in it are the necessary political influences, the necessary financial influences to which Mr. Sweezey referred in his letter to the brother of Senator Raymond, Mr. Alderic Raymond, which letter was quoted by the hon. member who preceded me.

There was associated with this company in the earlier stages of its activities a gentleman named Jones. Jones, I understand, was president of the Canada Cement Company. He was a rather famous gentleman at one time and possibly still is. In the newspaper despatches last fall, the public learned that Mr. Jones had departed out of this country and had taken with him, it is alleged, the sum of $3,500,000. Search as we may, we can find nowhere any record of any service that Mr. Jones rendered the company to justify the payment of this $3,500,000. It would be immensely interesting to know to what purpose that amount of money was put. What has happened to it? Above all, what has happened to Mr. Jones? He has, so far as I am informed, not been seen in Canada since. I do not know where he has gone, but my information is that he is not in Canada at the present time and he has not been here since this transaction took place.

Thus you have the plan: first, acquisition of property as cheaply as possible; second, the creation of a gigantic capital structure for the purpose of exploiting the public, and third, the securing of the necessary political influence to bring political pressure to bear in the matter. The structure pictured by my predecessor in this debate, the obvious intention to create a gigantic public steal in connection with the matter, constitute justification for the conclusion of the hon. member for Acadia that the incorporation of this company should be cancelled. Is there a precedent for this? I find one in the case of the Long Sault Development Company, a United States concern which commenced operations and spent, it is stated, more than $1,500,000. Their charter was cancelled for reasons given subsequently by the state of New York from the government of which they had secured their charter. Amongst the grounds for the attack on the company was that it was overcapitalized. This, of course, was not the only ground upon which cancellation was granted, but it was one of them. In the proceedings in connection with the cancellation of this charter an examination of some witnesses took place. One witness, a Mr. Freeman, was examined. The examination appears in the report of the Commission of Conservation of Canada, 1913, which I have under my hand and at pages 83 to 84 the testimony of this gentleman will be found. The statement is made:

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

You cannot finance a water-power project of this kind in a locality like that without putting in various other elements and speculative elements in the way of common stock and preferred stock and brokerage and percentages to the underwriting syndicate.

Then follows the examination:

Mr. Littlefield: Do you mean to say that you do not think you could handle this proposition without the familiar process of overcapitalization, and watering of stock?

Mr. Freeman: I do not know that it is overcapitalization.

Mr. Littlefield: Some people think it is! The issuing of stock without anything but the expectation or the hope of successful speculation. Is that right?

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Mr. Littlefield: Instead of its being watering of stock, it is issuing stock on the hope of a successful speculation?

Mr. Freeman: Capitalized hope?

Speculation by corporations upon the hopes and desires of the unwary and deliberately deceived public is not an unfamiliar practice in modern financial and commercial business.

It is interesting to learn that this new corporation, getting great rights from the Dominion government, is carrying out true to form this now time-honoured principle of exploitation. The question for us to decide is this: Is parliament going to sanction a speculative enterprise of this gigantic form of financial brigandage? "Capitalized hope"? What a tragic mockery! Here you have the Beauharnois Power Company with 500,000 horse-power, and with the expectation that they are going to get the balance, or 2,000,000 horse-power in all; and capitalizing the expectation of getting the 2,000,000 horse-power, they are selling to the innocent public of Canada stocks and bonds based upon their intention to acquire that 2,000,000 horse-power. There again is one further reason for the cancellation of the charter of incorporation of this company.

I now come to a new stage in this discussion—to the plan to acquire the whole flow of the St. Lawrence river. The members of the house must have been staggered by the financial picture which has been placed before them by the hon. member for Acadia, and they can now hardly be in a position to receive without absolutely falling over mentally the suggestion that it is the deliberate intention of the corporation to secure the entire flow of the St. Lawrence river at this section and to put that flow through an artificial river. Do the members of the house want the proof? I have the proof for them. I turn to the report of the engineers, Mr. Frederick W. Brown, asisted by Mr. W. S. Lee and T. H. Hogg. Their first report was made in 1927, and from that I shall make just a few quotations. I have pages of extracts from it, every single extract supporting the contention that the intention of the corporation in 1927 was to get the whole flow of the river. On page 1 of the engineers' report we find this:

The initial installation is designed for the use of a daily average flow of 40,000 cubic feet per second, and the designs provide for the ultimate extension of the power development and navigation provisions, so that finally the whole flow of the St. Lawrence river could be used through the proposed power canal (or, rather, at that stage, the artificial river).

On page 7 of the same report we find this:

Later when the proposed waterway is enlarged, from time to time as required, additional remedial works could be placed in the river and the existing interests compensated, and finally the whole flow of the river could be diverted through the new artificial channel.

At page 8 we find:

The new waterway should therefore be designed for an ultimate peak flow in excess of 200,000 cubic feet per second.

A flow of 200,000 cubic feet per second takes approximately the whole flow of the St. Lawrence at that section of the river. I have pages and pages of quotations from the report of 1927 substantiating that contention, but there is no need to weary the house with them.

Now I come to a further report made by Mr. Brown, the engineer, in 1928. He not only confirms the statements made in the 1927 report, but in a letter introducing the report I find the following:

Briefly I conclude that the project as outlined in my previous report can be extended so that finally the whole flow of the St. Lawrence river could be used through the proposed power canal, and, if lake Ontario be regulated as proposed, the ultimate installation might be about 2,000,000 horse-power for commercial use including spare equipment.

The report itself contains paragraphs on pages 1, 2, 3, 5 and 7, all confirming that statement. On page 13 there is a summary of the conclusions of Mr. Brown, in the course of which he says:

If the whole flow of the St. Lawrence were used there the proposed waterway—

Indicating the intention to do it. Then in paragraph 2 I find:

Additions can be made to the proposed initial use of water by enlarging the waterway and power plant.

In paragraph 3—but there is no need to weary the house further. So much up to the year 1928.

Now I come to the year 1929, the fatal year, the year in which these valuable resources were alienated definitely from the people of Canada. In the year 1929 these interests appeared before the government of this country and applied for certain rights. In their original application they used these words:

That concurrently with the installation of such locks the company shall have the right to enlarge its canal and to divert through it and utilize for the development of power all the flow of the St. Lawrence river between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis with the exception of water required for flotage through the existing Soulanges canal, and with the exception of that quantity of water to the user of which existing power plants are now legally entitled.

In their first application to the government they ask for all of the river, but owing to the pressure of various interests, international as well as national in character, owing to the magnificent case made out by many others, this tremendous steal was for the moment stopped. The applicants had to amend their application, and the order in council which was finally agreed to reads as follows:

The application of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company now pending before the governor in Council is purely and simply for the approval of plans for hydraulic development which will be subject to a condition that not more than 40,000 cubic feet per second shall be diverted from the river.

That is a clear indication that the interests, and there were many of them—municipalities all over the province of Ontario, interests in the United States of America, navigation and marine associations, our own people in Canada—all were opposed to this Beauharnois scheme and they registered their opposition to it. In fact, almost everybody that I can think of made a protest. Then what happened? The application is reduced to 40,000 cubic feet per second. That is all that the government granted, a flow of 40,000 cubic feet per second.

By the way, there appeared before the private bills committee of the Quebec legislature a gentleman named Montgomery, to whom I have already made reference. At that time this gentleman represented some interests in Montreal who were definitely opposed to this scheme, and in the course of his statement on February 29, 1928, before the private bills committee of the legislative assembly of the province of Quebec, Mr. Montgomery, K.C., said:

Last year when we came down here there was not even a plan before the house; the idea was to grab the rights.

I submit that the promoters of the scheme have only modified to some slight degree their plans in order to meet the opposition, and they have succeeded in grabbing everything that they require. My evidence in support of that is contained first in the statement to which my hon. friend from Acadia has referred. I have in my hand an analytical study of the Beauharnois Power Company prepared by Robert Dodd and Company, the first paragraph of which reads:

In a review of the hydro-electric power situation in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec upon which we have been engaged for the last six months, the data secured has warranted our implicit belief in the inherent possibilities of great market increment being assured for the securities of the Beauharnois Power Corporation, with its prospective 2,000,000 horse-power development on the St. Lawrence river.

They can only develop 2,000,000 horse power if they get the whole flow. If they get those rights, whether from this government or the Quebec government matters not, if they get the rights to move that water through the canal, they get the entire flow of the river.

As I said earlier, I find that in making their offerings of securities to the public they are deliberately and maliciously deceiving the public unless another contingency, to which I will refer later, arises. They say:

It will be observed that our analysis discusses in circumstantial detail the expectations of this 30-year bond- share-warrant investment over a five-year period, when 1,000,000 horse-power should be in operation; and we show with that production unit, which is 50 per cent of the final objective, an earning power equal to slightly over $4 a share on the combined common stock outstanding.

I find in that same analytical study other clauses concerning additional capital reductions, another reference in column 2, and a third on the second last page, all of them confirming the foregoing. My time is limited and so I cannot quote them all. I find confirmation of these statements in the statement in the Financial Post. I pass that over. I find it in an excellent editorial on St. Lawrence power costs which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of Tuesday, January 14, 1930. The editorial was evidently inspired by the presence of Mr. Sweezey in the city or by a speech which he made. This is the first paragraph:

An interesting suggestion was made by Mr. Norman Sweezey, president of the Beauharnois Power Company, in the speech he made last week. . . . .

The combined plans enable the company to develop 500,000 horse-power at reasonably low capital cost and if, at a subsequent date, the company should be authorized to use the whole flow of the river, as is likely, the capital cost per horse-power will become extraordinarily low.

I have referred so far only to an editorial and to some analytical studies, the latter, it is true, made by a responsible financial house of some standing in this country. That is not enough, and I am not satisfied to base my case on evidence of that character. Therefore I intend to go further. I take the prospectus of the Dominion Securities Corporation, Limited. It is true they are allies of this general outfit. The Dominion Securities Corporation, Limited and Newman, Sweezey & Company, Limited, are the two companies that secured this tremendous and very profitable transfer of $30,000,000 bonds and 770,000 class A stock for $27,000,000—a pretty nice deal for anybody. I have another prospectus by A. Iselin and Company, connected with the Dominion Securities Corporation and Wood, Gundy and Company. I have a third prospectus issued by Wood, Gundy and Company themselves. Mr. Gundy is a director of the concern. The Dominion Securities Corporation are directly interested in the concern. All of them put out the following statement in their respective prospectuses:

It is estimated that the unallocated balance of about 100,000 cubic feet per second, if passed through the company's canal would permit installation of approximately 1,000,000 additional horse-power. The company's proposed development, in the opinion of its engineers, is the most efficient method of utilizing the entire drop in this section of the river. In view of the above, provision is made in the plans and considerable work is now being done with a view to installing further units if additional water becomes available.

This is contained in the prospectuses. But what is it? It is a letter three foolscap pages in size, headed "Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, Montreal," and is dated December 2, 1929. Why, the ink was hardly dry on the order in council passed only a few months previously when this letter appears and becomes part of their bond-selling campaign. It is addressed to Newman, Sweezey & Company, Limited, The Dominion Securities Corporation, Limited, and Wood, Gundy & Company Limited, and it is signed by R. O. Sweezey, president of the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited. Mr. R. O. Sweezey takes responsibility for saying: first, that work is now being done—and second, that the plans have been altered with a view to putting through the canal more than the amount of water they secured the right to put through from the Dominion government and the legislative assembly of Quebec—much more. The entire flow of the river is their obvious intention.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask this question: Is it believable that these firms with their reputation built up in this country for a fair measure of truth and honesty in dealing, men whose future will depend on the integrity of their actions, the truth of their statements, and not only the truth of their statements but the truth of the implications in their statements—is it conceivable that these men would be guilty of deliberate misrepresentation amounting to fraud? To me it seems inconceivable. I can hardly credit that the Dominion Securities Corporation, A. Iselin & Company, Robert Dodd & Company and several others—I need not bother to specify them—I cannot conceive that these great financial houses would be guilty of this deliberate fraud, for it is nothing short of that if there is no truth in the expectation of securing the entire flow of the river. So I ask this question of the Prime Minister of Canada: Is there an agreement secret or otherwise? The right hon. gentleman need not answer at the moment because my time is limited.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know absolutely of none. There is none.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I ask the leader of the opposition: Is he aware of any agreement between his own party and these interests in connection with the matter?

Mr. BENNETT: I am delighted to inform the hon. gentleman that all this is largely news to me. I have no agreement, secret or otherwise, in respect to the matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Now, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. JACOBS: I think you might put the same question to the leader of the Progressive party.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Your declaration is not important, but we will assume you are honest in the matter; the obvious answer is no. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have the situation that the heads of the two political parties in Canada that are likely to have power in this house deny that any agreement exists under which, or because of which, or by reason of which these people would be justified in assuming that they will become possessed of the entire flow of the river. Then I say, Mr. Speaker, these firms are guilty of deliberate misrepresentation.

Mr. CHURCH: They should be prosecuted.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They are guilty of deliberate misrepresentation, and the Department of Justice of this Dominion should, in my opinion, take definite action immediately in regard thereto. Furthermore, if Sweezey, the president of this organization, is responsible for the statements contained in these prospectuses, then I say the incorporation should be cancelled and the rights which the Dominion have granted to him should be withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I think I heard him say that the expenditure was limited to $18,000,000 for the canal between the two lakes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I did not say that.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps it was the hon. gentleman who preceded him.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I did not make a full statement of the actual financial structure. I have now shown the intention of the Beauharnois Power Corporation to secure the whole flow of the river; Both political parties repudiate any agreement in connection with the matter; I have shown that in the absence of agreement there is deliberate misrepresentation of the situation in respect of this company. I demand definite action by the Department of Justice.

I come now to the next stage. By the way, it is interesting to note that these gentlemen have overlooked nothing. Not content with the steal they are prepared to make by misrepresentation—I must assume it is that now—not content with the steal they are preparing to make by virtue of the overcapitalization with its watered stock, they are going further, and hon. gentlemen will be astounded by the story. It will be necessary, you see, to transmit the power from the buss bar to the industrial plants in different parts of the country, and so they have organized a transmission company to take care of that—not for the purpose, I assume, of losing money. They have also organized a construction company. What for? I pressume to build the canal. How are they going to get the money for the construction of the canal? By the issue of bonds. Who is going to pay for the canal? The public. It is all very easy. The next stage is to have a land company. Why? Because real estate values in the vicinity of the canal will likely advance if they have control of the water power. They want to get industries there, and they are asking them to come there now. They will have control of the Beauharnois townsite; they will have control of this place and that place, and they expect to be able to make very considerable accretions to their real estate value. They have established a land company to handle that part of the project, and to buy more land on a speculative basis. The final subsidiary company interested in this enormous octopus is a railway company. I do not know what that railway company will do, but there you have them all. These are all based upon the parent body incorporated under Dominion charter, and it may be that bonds issued by all these concerns may become prior rights on the earnings of the bonds of the first corporation. I do not wish to deal at length with that part of the question because my time is running to its close. Let me revert however to the letter written by Mr. Sweezey. In part, he said:

In view of the above, provision is made in the plans—

Note that, that provision is made in the plans.

—for the diversion of the entire flow of the river.

But we learn from the Dominion government, through its Minister of Public Works, that only 40,000 cubic feet per second can be used, and we learn that in the lease granted by the legislative assembly of Quebec only 40,000 cubic feet can be used. Yet we find this man coming out and saying definitely in a public letter that the plans have been altered to make it possible to secure control of the whole flow. In view of this deliberate violation of the order in council, and of the spirit and letter of the order in council, I ask that it be rescinded by the prime minister, and I think I am making a fair request. That is not the only violation in respect to the plans; we are told in the same letter that considerable work is being done and money is being spent with a view to taking the whole of the river and producing 2,000,000 horse power. The fact that it is in the future makes no difference; the principle is at stake. Either the order in council must be rigidly adhered to both in letter and in spirit, or that order in council must be rescinded. On behalf of the people of this country I ask that this order in council now be definitely rescinded; and if any legal grounds can be found for cancellation of the charter of incorporation I ask that it be revoked. To my mind this is one of the most appalling steals that has ever taken place in Canada.

I have one further reason for my stand—the effect upon the whole of the St. Lawrence scheme. In 1926 a joint board of engineers issued a report which I have in my hand. The board consisted of six engineers, three of whom were appointed by the United States and three by Canada. They went into every possible detail as to the construction of a great St. Lawrence waterway, and after their deliberations they made their report. I refer particularly to the report as it affects the Soulanges section, and which is contained in pages 35 to 38. The main report is embodied in the opening chapter, and the appendices carry other detailed information and refer to other representations which have been made. I find in this report that the engineers considered a plan which is equivalent to the Beauharnois project, and they pushed it to one side; they did not favour such a plan, but they favoured the choice of two others. They favoured either the development of the Soulanges canal section or further river development. On page 36, at section 162 of the report, I find this paragraph:

162. Improvement of the river for navigation and power, Soulanges section: The board finds that it is practicable and advantageous to combine the improvement for navigation in this section with the development of power on a progressive program of construction of power plants, only the first part of the power development being undertaken in conjunction with the works required to carry navigation through the section.

163. In brief, this plan provides for a dam at the head of the Cedars rapids—

The report goes on for several sections, but I shall not worry the house by reading the detailed description of the project. That project is not the Beauharnois project, it is not the one on the south side of the river. Then at page 38 I find that three proposals were made:

(a) A lateral canal on the south side of the river—

This is similar to the Beauharnois plan. Then under section (b) there is mention of a lateral canal on the north side of the river, and in section (c) there is a proposed river improvement. Under the heading "conclusions" I find the following:

The board unites in the view that the navigation improvement combined with the progressive development of power (paragraphs 162 to 169) hereinbefore set forth better provides for the present and future development of the waterway than any scheme for navigation alone, and is therefore a desirable scheme, if arrangements are made whereby power interests bear a fair proportion of the cost of the initial expenditure required.

I might explain that paragraphs 162 to 169 inclusive refer to the plan for the north side of the river.

In section 176 we find a statement which may at some future time prove to be the chief excuse for departure from the unanimous report which I have just read. Section 176 is as follows:

If it be found impossible to arrange for such cooperation in meeting the initial cost, a majority of the Canadian section—

I would ask hon. members to note the expression "a majority of the Canadian section." That would mean two out of three. The section goes on to say:

—favour the construction of the lateral canal on the south side of the river.

Only two out of three Canadians, and two out of six engineers, which is the total number of engineers on the joint board of engineers. The evidence is that the government of this country departed from the definite unanimous recommendation of the joint board of engineers. They alienated to a group of private individuals whose story has already been related the Dominion rights in regard to this section. I can say further that the Brown engineering reports, both the one of 1927 and the one of 1928 upon which the application to the Dominion government is based, embodied within their pages many paragraphs which reflected an inability to arrive at definite conclusions in many important matters. I could quote for an hour paragraphs that would say in effect:

> While this equation and the levels to be derived from it may not be absolutely correct for the range of levels for which the first remedial works were designed, and while it is possible that beyond these levels it may not be accurate, it is moderately certain that for the present case it is as accurate as can reasonably be expected.

All through the report there is vagueness and uncertainty. On the other hand, we have the report of the joint board of engineers, which is definite and conclusive. There should never have been alienation of a single section of this river. It is a great international waterway and nothing should have been done until the plans were completed for the entire development and until they had been agreed upon by the governments and the interests concerned. I have come to that conclusion because this is not a river in the same sense as the Ottawa river or the Peace river; it is an international stream. I am not a lawyer, but I doubt very much whether the Navigable Waters Protection Act can apply with the same force and effect in reference to the St. Lawrence river. It is more than a river; it is a great international boundary line of waterways. Other countries have rights on the river; we are tied up by two treaties in this connection with the United States. I am informed that France still retains certain rights and that Great Britain has certain rights. The St. Lawrence might be called the jugular vein of Canada, stretching from the sea to the middle of the continent, and the waterway scheme is now being jeopardized by the alienation to private interests of these Dominion rights. I make this statement because the joint board of engineers recommended that power should be used in helping with construction in the canalization. The government have alienated a part of the section without providing for the other sections, and have definitely jeopardized the scheme. A second reason, as I said before, is that they have definitely departed from the plan of the joint international board.

Now it will take me just about one minute to sum up. First, I find that there has been gross over-capitalization of this company by greedy, calculating, cold-blooded promoters, who stop at nothing, not even the exercise of political influence, as stated in Sweezey's own letter to J. Alderic Raymond. I find further that he is guilty of statements to the public in a letter, which is public, that would lead us to conclude that he has violated the terms and spirit of the order in council. I find that there is deliberate misrepresentation amounting to fraud in the prospectuses issued by his associates in their different companies; by Gundy, one of the directors; by Sweezey, president of the corporation and one of the interested gentlemen in Norman Sweezey and Company, and so on. Finally, I find that this alienation jeopardizes the whole future of the St. Lawrence.

For these reasons and others, Mr. Speaker, which I could enumerate if time permitted, I ask that the government now rescind the order in council and, if legal provision can be made, cancel the incorporation of the Beauharnois corporation.
