Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the very carefully prepared addresses of my hon. friends who have already spoken on this question. May I first of all express to the leader of the Progressive group (Mr. Gardiner) my apreciation of the fact that before lunch I was handed a memorandum which gave me some idea of the arguments which he proposed to submit to the house this afternoon. For the opportunity that I had of considering the question for a few moments before the house opened I want to thank my hon. friend.

May I first of all endeavour, as briefly as possible, to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, what was the position of the company at the time the application for approval under the Navigable Waters Protection Act was presented to the department over which I have the honour to preside. First I should like to refer to one remark made by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) in which he stated that the Navigable Waters Protection Act, in his opinion, cannot have reference to a river like the St. Lawrence.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, I did not say that; I said with the same force and effect as it would have to other rivers. There is a question in my mind as to that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I just want to say to my hon. friend that if he will read the act carefully he will see that it was intended that it should apply to the St. Lawrence river with regard to everything except bridges over that river. That is made clear by section 11, which states that no approval shall be given to the site or plans of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river. I submit that this makes it perfectly clear that this is the only exception with reference to the St. Lawrence river.

Now, what was the origin of this company? I do not intend to go into the details which my hon. friends asked to be laid on the table of the house weeks ago. All the material for which they asked, giving all the information in the possession of the government and particularly of the Department of Public Works with regard to this matter, was placed before them. The Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, incorporated under a charter from the province of Quebec, made an application to the province of Quebec for a lease, which application was granted. I should like just to direct my hon. friends' attention to the terms of that lease. That was a lease of "the rights of the province of Quebec to such part of the hydraulic powers of the St. Lawrence river that could be developed between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis through a diversion canal on the right (southern) shore, having a maximum flow capacity of 40,000 cubic feet per second." The province reserved the ownership and the free disposition of the surplus. That was a lease of "the rights of the province of Quebec," not the rights of the Dominion of Canada, and since my hon. friend has studied carefully the order in council which was passed and which was tabled in this house the day it was passed, namely March 8, 1929, he will see that the order in council makes it perfectly clear that the permission to divert the water applies only to such rights to that water as are owned by the province of Quebec. That is the first point.

They come to the department with a lease from the province of Quebec of rights of the province of Quebec to divert certain water, which must belong to the province of Quebec under that lease. They propose to divert it in a certain way, and under the Navigable Waters Protection Act the duty of the department is to look at the plans under which that diversion is proposed and say whether or not they affect navigation. It is not a question of property rights but a question of navigation of the particular stream in which these waters flow. That was the position when they came to the department.

Notice of the application was advertised at length, and as it was a matter of special importance a hearing was given to which all the interested parties were invited to come and make their representations. The representations made at that hearing were, in most cases, not representations objecting to the granting of the approval of these plans, but were largely arguments from another company, which afterwards put in an application saying that if they were given approval of a somewhat similar scheme they would put in the locks as well as dig the canal. I believe the evidence taken at that application, if carefully read, will absolutely convince my hon. friends that those were the main objections made at that time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I suggest that there were also objections presented by international bodies, by marine associations, by navigators and by others. I have all the files in the matter, and I know there were many more than those two or three companies specifically interested.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend is quite right as to the number of associations which were present. The marine association and the various other associations to which he has referred directed their attention very largely to the fact that at that time they proposed eventually to get the whole flow of the river, and they could not agree to that proposition. That was the main objection, and it was made perfectly clear to the applicants on that occasion that an application for the whole flow of the river would not be granted. They presented an amended application, asking for only the 40,000 cubic feet per second as the total amount to which they should be entitled.

That is the proposition which was passed upon by the department under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Section 4 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act reads:

> No work shall be built or placed in, upon, over, under, through or across any navigable water unles the site thereof has been approved of by the governor in council, nor unless such work is built, placed and maintained in accordance with plans and regulations approved or made by the governor in council.

I appreciate the fact that no criticism has been offered as to the conditions imposed. Every precaution was taken, but we were passing only upon rights which the province of Quebec had the right to give to the applicants. The order in council and the contract based upon that order in council provide that if at any time it is found that any waters sought to be diverted by this scheme do not belong to the province of Quebec but belong to the Dominion, then the approval does not have effect. There is a right to cancel the approval and to take over any works which have been constructed thereunder.

What my hon. friend has said with reference to the finding of the joint board of engineers is not quite accurate. Section 22b of that report reads:

In the Soulanges section (second division), the board recommends a scheme for navigation correlated with a progressive development of power instead of a side canal for navigation only.

Section 176, which my hon. friend quoted, reads as follows:

If it be found impossible to arrange for such cooperation in meeting the initial cost, a majority of the Canadian section favour the construction of the lateral canal on the south side of the river (Melocheville-Hungry bay project) which is the least expensive means of providing navigation.

A lease had been granted by the province of Quebec and the lessees came to the department asking for approval of the plans under which the waters covered by that lease were to be diverted. It was considered to be a matter of urgency, and there was taken into consideration the fact that the water to be diverted was not in the right of the Dominion, but rather in the right of the province of Quebec. The charter and lease had been granted by the province of Quebec. The question was whether or not the diversion proposed might affect navigation, and the Department of Public Works were called upon to consider that question. The department said in effect: Navigation will not be prejudiced, injured or detrimentally affected by diverting 40,000 cubic feet per second of water in a canal, providing the canal is of a certain type. Those familiar with the evidence know that at that section navigation is very difficult, and the type of canal which the Department of Public Works said must be constructed in order to divert the water was declared to be a canal 27 feet deep, 800 feet wide at the top and 600 feet wide at the bottom. The department said to the applicants, "If you divert that water through a canal of that type and give to the Dominion of Canada the use for all time of that canal, then it will approve your plan and not otherwise."

I do not know that it is necessary for me to go into the financial aspect of this situation; I think that has changed entirely since approval was given on March 8, 1929. I will state quite frankly that I was not familiar with the individuals who constituted the corporation at the time application was made, nor am I familiar with the present personnel of that corporation. This matter was considered on its merit and with the greatest possible care, and we were called upon to pass upon an engineering proposition in which the best other engineers available, along with the engineers of the department, advised that not only would navigation not be prejudiced by this water being diverted in a canal of the dimensions provided for, but that we would have better navigation than was possible with the river in its natural flow, as a matter of fact we would have one of the best navigation canals in the world.

The agreement provides further:

Whenever the governor in council so declares the right of public navigation within and along the proposed canal or any portion thereof to the same extent and in manner similar to that provided in the case of the new Welland ship canal shall thereafter exist and be recognized by the company.

My hon. friend was good enough to provide me with a copy of his notice, which reads:

The government has approved of the above development by passing order in council P.C. 422, March 8, 1929, and in so doing the government has not accepted the plan for this undertaking recommended by the joint board of engineers, dated November 16, 1926.

I have already answered that by saying that the majority of the Canadian section were favourable to a scheme similar to that provided for in section 176. The notice states further:

and in so doing have committed acts which justify a demand for an explanation by the government as to whether or not there is an agreement between the government and R. O. Sweezey and his associates who own and control the said company and corporation whereby the whole of the unallocated portion of this section of the St. Lawrence river will be turned over to them for exploitation.

It is unnecessary to conduct any investigation to find out whether or not such an agreement is in existence—there is no such agreement in existence and no such agreement has been applied for by the parties connected with this matter.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any understanding?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No understanding, and it was to prevent the possibility of any misunderstanding that it was made perfectly clear at the time of the hearing. As my hon. friend has said, the first application suggested the possibility ultimately of the diversion of the whole flow of the river, but that was refused. It was made perfectly clear that the application had to be changed so as to have it understood that only 40,000 cubic feet per second was proposed to be diverted.

Mr. MANION: Had that first application for the diversion of the whole flow been accepted by the province of Quebec?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think it had ever been made to the province of Quebec. We had before us from the province of Quebec only the lease of the 40,000 cubic feet per second. It is not necessary for me to repeat. We were dealing at that time with the application for approval of plans for the quantity of water permitted to be diverted under that lease, but it was made abundantly clear that that must be limited for the purposes of the company to the 40,000 cubic feet per second. That is the answer to that portion of my hon. friend's question.

I have already given the reasons for the departure, if you can call it such, from the terms of the recommendations of the joint board of engineers. We granted approval of a policy which the majority of the Canadian section advised.

Mr. MANION: The minister says that the province of Quebec had granted the diversion of 40,000 cubic feet per second. Do I understand him to say that the company then applied to the Dominion government for the diversion of the whole flow?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Their application was worded very broadly and it contained a clause providing that the applicants would put in the locks and other works necessary in addition to digging the canal, if they were allowed to take the whole flow of the river. Of course that was definitely refused.

The findings of the joint board of engineers were submited to the Canadian national advisory committee. I think my hon. friend has before him the details of the proceedings before that committee and will know what I am stating is correct. On January 11, 1928, that committee made certain recommendations which will be found on page 19, section (4) of the report entitled "St. Lawrence Waterway Project." They recommended the development of the national section "by private agencies able and willing to finance the entire work, including the necessary canalization, in return for the right to develop the power."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the minister give us the personnel of the national advisory committee?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. W. E. Foster was the chairman. I do not know that I have before me but I would be glad to supply to my hon. friend the names of the advisory committee. Mr. Foster as chairman signed the report to the Prime Minister, that is the report to which I am referring, and in section (4) they say:

[Mr. Elliott.]

We believe that if a reasonable time were permitted in which to enable the resultant power to be economically absorbed the development of this national section would be undertaken by private agencies able and willing to finance the entire work, including the necessary canalization, in return for the right to develop the power.

I am not going to enter into the reasons which are possibly somewhat international, as to why a certain section of the Canadian portion of the joint board of engineers favoured development on the Canadian side. Two out of three of them believed that was the better course, I think in the general interest as well as in the interest of Canada in particular.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the same view which Mr. Sweezey put forward in Hamilton the other day.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am really not familiar with the view he has put forward, because I have not followed the matter in that way any more than I have followed the financial arrangements of the company.

Regarding the objections raised by my hon. friends, I think they are addressing them to the wrong tribunal. The province of Quebec claimed the right to lease this water. If the province has not that right, it does not pass under the order in council. If it does have that right, the province is the jurisdiction which has power to say whether or not the water flow should be leased. We have passed upon what came before us, exercising the jurisdiction which we were bound to exercise one way or another under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why, in view of all this, did the minister and his government not await a definite plan for the completion of the whole St. Lawrence scheme?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We were dealing in this case with waters that did not belong to the Dominion. If we felt that the interests of navigation were being prejudiced, we could, I suppose, have refused to approve these plans, but under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, what was left to us was to say whether or not the plans as submitted to us would interfere with navigation. We were bound to decide that question and after very careful consideration we came to the conclusion, on the recommendations of the engineers, that not only would they not interfere with navigation, but they would aid navigation and give us in that section of the river a canal which would be a great improvement on anything in existence at the present time, indeed, adequate canal facilities, the very best that could be provided.

I would say also that this order in council was not passed until the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, to which a reference was submitted as to the rights of the Dominion and the province, was given.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Were the findings of the supreme court definite, complete?

Mr. BENNETT: The order in council says that they were not.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They were not; of course they left somewhat unsettled the question whether or not the province of Quebec had a right to this water, and we said: This approval applies only if the province has the right.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I have followed the argument of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) and if he will allow me I shall deal more or less categorically with the different points he has introduced before making some observations I have in mind to make. My hon. friend reads the Navigable Waters Protection Act and draws from a perusal of section 11 a conclusion that that act applies throughout to the St. Lawrence river. In other words he says, because the act expresses an exception in regard to bridges, it includes, by reason of making that very exception, the right to deal with the St. Lawrence river in every other particular. I do not follow the minister there. Of course, this act as far as it is sound, as far as it is constitutional, will have effect in the St. Lawrence. No one will deny that the Dominion government in connection with a harbour, for instance, or some work on the Canadian shore would, if the matter came before the governor in council, have jurisdiction to deal with it. But my hon. friend will be good enough to remember this. In stating what he did, he has missed the whole point of the argument of my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland); that is, that in respect to the national right of navigation in a boundary water that is international, the Navigable Waters Protection Act has no application. My hon. friend may say that this is not an international boundary water inasmuch as at the very spot with which we are dealing the St. Lawrence passes entirely through Canadian territory. That, to say the least, is a moot question. It was not a lawyer, but an authority whose report has been frequently quoted and whose conclusions have been generally accepted, Mr. Holgate, who made a report in 1915, and says at page 19 of that report, after reciting the treaty with the United States and other treaties in connection with this matter:

> It is therefore quite clear that the St. Lawrence river is an international highway from the Great Lakes to the sea, and that neither country, following the spirit of the various treaties, could do anything to the detriment of the other country in so far as the navigation of the river is concerned.

That, I take it, is the point of my hon. friend from Bow River, and one cannot get away from that by interpreting, through the reading of one section excluding a certain thing, that the rest of the act does apply to the St. Lawrence river and that you may deal with it in the manner which has been under review. My hon. friends opposite have acquiesced in that position because when it came to a question of the diversion of water from the Niagara river, they did not attempt, although obstructions were placed in the stream, to say that that should be a matter under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. They very properly entered into a consideration of it through a treaty between the two countries, and therefore I say that at the least it is a moot point as to whether or not any arrangement such as was contemplated preceding the order in council or by the order in council should not have been carried through by a treaty between the United States and ourselves.

The second point I have taken is that this lease is a lease of the government of the province of Quebec. Very well. We went to the trouble in this parliament not so long ago of submitting to the Supreme Court of Canada certain questions for decision, questions which involved very definitely water powers on the navigable streams of this country and water powers arising from the construction of such works as canals upon the navigable streams of this country. That reference was quite futile. The questions were badly framed. It has always seemed to me that there should have been some foresight in the drafting of those questions, because it would be obvious to anyone reading them that there was nothing in them upon which the supreme court could give a judgment. It could in any event only take the place of the law officers of the crown with reference to them and tender advice. The judges of the supreme court said in effect that they could not make a decision in regard to any of the matters submitted to them unless a concrete case arises; that whatever they might say would be purely academic, and they did not choose to say anything of that character. But here we have a most important matter, a concrete case capable of determination before the courts—the question of the right to the water. It was held in Tetreault vs. Harbour Commissioners of Montreal that the river bed of the St. Lawrence in the province of Quebec was held by the crown in the right of the province. There has been nothing, of course, to say that the water itself, and what water provides, that is, the power possibilities of water, belong to the province any more than they do to the Dominion. We may have our views in that matter, but it was thought by the present government that on such an important matter the question should be submitted to the supreme court for decision. So I say that when we come to these two points, when we have a concrete case in which the question arises as to the rights of navigation in international waters which are navigable, and secondly the question as to who has the right to the water powers, they might very well have been submitted to the highest court of the realm for decision before the time came to pass upon this application. I think the government had that in mind and should have had the courage to press it to a conclusion. It is amply clear that the government had that in mind from a reading of the order in council, wherein the government goes out of its way to provide that should there be in some lawsuit arising in the future a decision adverse to the provinces all these rights should be cancelled. Having that in mind, would it not have been far better for the government to settle the question once for all, rather than let these people go on with their undertaking? If it was right, and was so decided, then they could go on about their business.

My hon. friend passed on to his next point, that the application was opposed by other interests. He wanted it made clear that the opposition arose not from people who objected to this company particularly, but objected only to its being granted more than a flow of 40,000 cubic feet per second. I should like my hon. friend to look at the order in council and the amendment just a little more carefully than apparently was done earlier. I am inclined to think that the applicants for this order in council were a little too adroit for those whom they had to meet, and I think that they have really made their original application over again, although they were pretending to make an amended application. The original application asked for the whole flow. You will remember that in 1928 we had a bill before the house asking for all those rights, but it did not get past its second reading. The company amended its application, and this is how it read:

[Mr. Geary.]

> The application of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company now pending before the governor in council is purely and simply for the approval of plans for hydraulic development which will be subject to a condition that not more than 40,000 cubic feet per second shall be diverted from the river. . . . . If the engineers think that the plans should be altered to meet this declaration the company will submit to any such alteration.

You will note "now pending". The company has not applied for an order in council limiting them in all matters to plans which will provide for a diversion of nothing over 40,000 cubic feet per second. They have asked for the approval of plans which will meet their purposes, plans which can be enlarged, only reserving to themselves what they think is likely to be granted, the right at some future time to come to the governor in council and say: "Look at the money we have spent in order to develop the whole flow of the river. You have passed upon and approved our plans, and we have gone ahead and constructed the works. We are now using our 40,000 cubic feet per second and selling the power developed therefrom. Is it not fair to give us the rest of the power?" I say, Mr. Speaker, that they have laid for themselves a very firm foundation for making such a request in the future. I would like the government to recognize what they have let themselves in for. I refer to Mr. Sweezey's letter, which has already been quoted. Near the top of it he says:

> The Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company has acquired under a lease from the province of Quebec extending to the year 2003 and under authorization from the governments of the Dominion of Canada and the province of Quebec water-power rights on the St. Lawrence river, twenty-five miles above Montreal.

They ars using there, without any context that limits it whatsoever, a statement which I think the government should take note of, that under authorization from this government they are proceeding to instal plants. The plans are later described as what? As looking for the installation of approximately 1,000,000 additional horsepower. This is what they say:

> Provision is made in the plans and considerable work is now being done with a view to installing further units, if additional water becomes available.

I think nobody reading that would for one moment draw any other conclusion than that the promoters are authorized to develop 1,000,000 horse-power additional to the 500,000 horse-power under the authorization of the Dominion government, which authorization was given by the approval of plans which will develop more than 500,000 horse-power and can be adapted to develop 1,500,000 horse-power.

Mr. MANION: And they have sold their stock on that basis.

Mr. GEARY: That is what the government has let itself in for. At that point I would ask the government seriously to consider whether it is not now in the position of lending itself to the schemes of these promoters. Referring for the moment to the liquor export bill, which comes to my mind, and setting aside the rather high-sounding platitudes and extraordinary expressions of fear of international trouble, there was one thing that justified that legislation—that this country should preserve its self-respect and should not be tangled up with rum runners or law breakers. That is a good principle. If that principle, then adopted by the government, was good in regard to rum runners and gentry of that sort, I submit that it is equally fitting of application to the gentlemen who are promoting this project and are taking money from the public in connection with it.

My hon. friend proceeds to state that there is no objection to the conditions. I do not now take any definite and specific objection to them, but at the time I was dissatisfied with them. However, I have not had an opportunity to examine in detail the conditions, although I think strong objection might very well be taken to some of them.

I pass now to the report of the joint commission. In the section which the minister read one thing stands out that cannot be controverted, that the spot where navigation development was to join power development should not be to the south of the river where the present Beauharnois development is. There is no question about that. The Beauharnois proposition assumes to be a combination of power and navigation development. My hon. friend can get no comfort from what he read, for the joint board is entirely against the present location. True, the majority of the Canadian members—two out of three, but they were opposed by the other Canadian member, and all the American members—did say that if you introduced a simple navigation scheme on one side and a power scheme on another, it might be a good place for the navigation scheme to be along the lines of this Beauharnois development, while the power scheme would be carried out more advantageously further to the north.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am quite satisfied my hon. friend is not intentionally losing sight of the fact that this was introduced as a power scheme, not as a joint scheme.

Mr. GEARY: Yes, it gets its sanction in the minds of the ministry from the fact that it is joined together as a power scheme and a navigation scheme and would lessen the cost for the development of the navigation end. But the joint commission reported unanimously that if you are going to bring the two together then the south shore is not the place, it should be on the north side. The commission reported further, and it seemed to me a sound conclusion, that the reason they objected to this was that navigation, with the potentialities of traffic on that river, can never be satisfactorily carried on on the site of the Beauharnois development; that is the opinion of the minority of the Canadian and of all the American representatives on the board. Confronted with that, I do suggest to the minister that the government had no right to appoint another committee, and in effect override, or at least ignore, the report of the joint board of engineers, which had been a matter of such profound study and had been accepted by another body appointed by the government known as the national advisory committee. Faced with that difficulty, Mr. Speaker, the government should not have relied upon a committee appointed on the spot to bring in a report but should have gone back to the national advisory committee, even to the joint engineering board and asked them: What have you to say about the present proposal which we are considering?

My friend said there is not in existence an agreement for granting further power rights. It has been pointed out very plainly that in the prospectus it is intimated that if there is not an agreement in existence there is at least a very fair possibility of getting the additional water from the two governments, and I think my hon. friends opposite should take note of that. It is enough to put them on inquiry as to what these promoters are doing and what sort of inducements they are offering to the public to buy their stock.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two about the capitalization of the power corporation. I do not intend to go over all the ground covered by those who have preceded me. It originated in a very small way by certain gentlemen owning this small development. Then in some way Mr. Sweezey got it into his own hands and afterwards into the hands of his syndicate. Having got in touch with the Beauharnois corporation—which was not difficult seeing that he made it—he said to them: I will hand you these rights. What did he get for them? He got $4,750,000, plus a sum sufficient to wind up his syndicate, plus a sum sufficient to pay off the original owners. Of that $4,750,000 in cash he agreed to use $1,000,000 to pay for 1,000,000 shares in the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited at $1 per share. It was a pretty tidy piece of work up to this point. He had in his pocket $3,750,000 in cash and the 1,000,000 shares for which he had paid, and there were no liabilities, the property was all paid for. But that was not sufficient. A subsequent transaction was entered into and that is where purchasers come in composed of Newman, Sweezey & Company, Limited and the Dominion Securities Corporation, Limited. These purchasers took over from the Beauharnois corporation $30,000,000 worth of bonds. Those bonds have been issued to the public at par, plus interest. But Mr. Sweezey and his friends did not pay par to the corporation for them, they paid $27,000,000 and got $30,000,000 of bonds. But that was not enough. They said: We must have a stock bonus when we offer this to the public, and we will take 770,000 shares of class A stock, in addition. So having sold $27,000,000 worth of bonds at par, and given 135,000 shares class A common as a bonus, they had $3,000,000 worth of bonds left, which were as good as cash, for there was a public demand for them; they had cash $3,750,000; they had 1,000,000 class A shares from the earlier transaction and from the latter transaction 635,000 class A shares, all fully paid for so far as we can tell. As a result they have in their pockets $3,750,000 cash, and 1,635,000 class A common shares, practically the whole issue of class A stock which their own agents and friends hold out to the public as worth $60 a share, or $98,000,000, and besides all this, $3,000,000 in bonds. They have done very well, and to this date they have got away with it. I do not know that after this there is anything in the nature of financing that cannot be accomplished in this country. Those interested at this point fell out among themselves. One group objected and got out; they are reported to have taken with them $3,500,000. It was so bad that in St. James street, that financial centre, the whole scheme, except to those who were in it for the dollars and cents, simply stank. Even big financiers who make it a business to float these propositions but who were outside of this scheme, had no hesitation in saying that it was a very bad affair.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is not the argument of my hon. friend that the rental for these waters which is being received by the province of Quebec should have been greater, assuming that the project will turn out at all as indicated in the prospectus issued by the promoters? My hon. friend will bear in mind that the rental is being received under lease granted by the province of Quebec.

[Mr. Geary.]

Mr. GEARY: I was not saying that, nor was it in my mind, but I shall try to answer the hon. gentleman. My contention is that this project is so bad on the face of it that inquiry should be made. The government has lent itself to the scheme, and the government should feel that it is incumbent upon it to take some steps for the protection of the public. If the investigations disclose that these statements are true, the government should without further delay cancel all rights, and lessen the possibility of further harm. The Prime Minister has said that there would be no difficulty in taking that course. When last year a motion was made by my hon. friend from Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) to add to the Navigable Waters Act a provision stating that these matters should not be dealt with by the governor in council, but should go before parliament, my right hon. friend did not hesitate to say that no matter what money had been gathered in and no matter how far the industry had progressed it was quite competent to parliament to annul the whole thing. Equally is it competent to council to cancel an order in council.

To deviate for one moment, this matter should never have been dealt with by order in council. At the time of the order in council the House of Commons was in session, and in my opinion its issue constitutes an abuse of authority of the sort that my hon. friends were in other days ready to condemn. It seems to me that this point is worthy of attention, because in this very act—the Navigable Waters Protection Act—it is contemplated that the order in council shall not be final; there is provision in the act for its annulment. It is quite evident that it is contemplated in the act that an order in council thereunder might be annulled by parliament, and having before them the provision in the act, and considering the magnitude of the interests involved, and the important questions arising, the government might very well have relied upon the implication contained in the act and brought the matter into the house. I agree that it is difficult for the House of Commons to discuss engineering plans, but they may be settled elsewhere. This was not, however, a question of plans; it was a question of interfering with water rights or accepting the demands or contentions of provinces as to water rights. The questions that arose were questions of principle. There was the objection, for instance, which one can read from the reports, that the building of this particular plant would interfere with the official reports and plans for the whole waterway development of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. CANNON: Would my hon. friend suggest that until this question of the respective rights of the Dominion and the provinces in respect to hydro-electric development is settled, all these developments are to be suspended and the Dominion should refuse to grant the approval of plans in Quebec and Ontario?

Mr. GEARY: Yes. I see no reason why private power developments should have the right of way over the publicly owned development of a great waterway. These should have stood until all legal questions were settled, and until the whole question of the St. Lawrence was settled. There was no need for haste; for it was in the year 1913 that Mr. Sweezey wrote a letter to Sir Max Aitken advancing this proposition. It could stand easily for another year.

Mr. CANNON: The Quebec government has a system quite different from that of the province of Ontario.

Mr. GEARY: I recognize that to the full. No doubt the province of Quebec is opposed to public ownership of public utilities and prefers private ownership. As far as that is concerned it is entitled to take whichever view it chooses. The view of the province of Quebec does not prevail in the province of Ontario and in the western provinces where the people stand by public ownership. It seems to me that owing to the important nature of this matter the government should have had in mind the opposition of these latter provinces when it was discussing the action it proposed to take. The question whether or not we in Ontario or the people of Quebec are right in regard to public ownership of this particular water power might have been settled by an appeal to the privy council.

I do not wish to go into these matters in great detail but I do say that the financial end of the project deserves scrutiny by the government, because the government has wittingly or unwittingly lent itself to the schemes. The question of waterways is one that deserves full consideration. I claim that the air should be cleared and that this order in council should be cancelled so that all these matters can be settled by the House of Commons. These matters ought to be before us for discussion and the plans should be settled upon in the ordinary administrative fashion. There are important features of this matter in connection with which the government appear to have made mistakes, and I feel sure that when the government reconsiders the matter they will find that to have been the case. I believe if they give it proper consideration they will cancel the order in council.

If I were to continue I am afraid I would only repeat myself; I think I have given my reasons for agreeing with the views presented in so admirable a fashion by my hon. friends to my left.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): The responsibility for this great contract under our system of responsible government rests upon the government of the day, under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I am surprised that the gentlemen sitting to my left have come forward in the dying hours of the session and have made the question of water-power rights in the St. Lawrence a political football. The hon. gentleman gave me no help the year before last, last year or this year, when I brought in a bill which would have cancelled this permit by transferring the powers of the minister to parliament. I could not get five Progressives to rise with me to bring about a division on the matter on March 3 last. That is the kind of lack of help I do not like, yet hon. gentlemen call themselves a public ownership party. They are not the only public ownership party; they never have shown it in this house, in Manitoba, or in Alberta, and last but not least they did not show it under Mr. Dunning in Saskatchewan.

This contract is probably the greatest outrage perpetrated in Canada since confederation. We should stop handing out the water-powers of this country to every Tom, Dick or Harry who comes along calling himself a capitalist. The waters in question pass the doors of Ontario first as I pointed out before, on the way down to the province of Quebec. During the sessions from 1920 to 1922 the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario had an application before the government to develop power at Morrisburg, just a few miles west of here. There were some legal matters involved and it probably raised an international problem, but in view of the stand of the state of New York an arrangement could have no doubt been made. That application was held up by the Liberal government and finally refused by the minister, at that time the hon. member for Kootenay. About a year later a bill was introduced in this house, the predecessor of this Beauharnois bill, known as the Great Lakes Beauharnois bill. That bill was introduced by the then hon. member for Joliette, a gentleman who now has gone to the superior court of Quebec, Judge Denis. Then the Beauharnois application came on and a file of correspondence of the department was brought down in the house, from which the hon. member for Acadia and the hon. member for Bow River have read somewhat on the engineering and power side.

It is known in every banking house in Canada and the United States that these people have permission to in the end eventually develop 2,000,000 horse-power on the St. Lawrence. Talk about responsible government; if an investigation were held into this thing it would show that this government has given Mr. Sweezey and his colleagues power to develop electricity from the full flow of the river, and the sovereign rights of the province of Ontario to the waters farther west on the river, have been destroyed. The Progressive party never said a word about that last session or on March 3 when I had the matter up. I introduced a bill, which I will read to the house, designed to cancel this permit, and if I had not fallen ill probably this debate would have taken place over a year ago. This bill proposed to repeal order in council 422, dated March 8, 1929, and all subsequent orders in council and, mark you, there have been four orders in council granted. Under the first, order in council 422, permission to develop 40,000 horse-power was granted. Under the first section of the order in council, at the expiration of one year, 100,000 horse-power was to be developed; at the expiration of the sixth year 200,000 horse-power; at the expiration of the seventh year 300,000 horse-power, and at the expiration of the tenth year 500,000 horse-power. Then some question arose as to the power of this parliament to grant the application before the minister, and he did not sit on the case himself. I would not like to say the government did not consider him strong enough, because I have great respect for his ability, but it was an extraordinary coincidence that when the hearing was brought on and the Beauharnois people were present, on the right of the Minister of Public Works was the Minister of the Interior, the gentleman who was mainly responsible for the disaster which occurred in connection with the Seven Sisters Falls. On his left was the general organizer for the province of Quebec, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a friend of the power applicants, who was all ready to prompt the Minister of Public Works in case he needed any political advice as to what should be done.

Is it a matter of surprise, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country are beginning to wonder what kind of country we are living in and what kind of parliament this is? Now in the dying days of this session members of the Progressive party bring up this motion. I look upon it as being very largely for their own political purposes so far as they are concerned. I have doubted their sincerity for many months past in connection with this problem, because when I brought up this bill to rescind this order in council and all subsequent orders in council, I received no help whatever from them. They talk about the Conservative party and want to know where we stand. The Conservative party is the only public ownership party in Canada today. This party was responsible for taking over the national railways; Sir Adam Beck and Sir James Whitney began the hydro-electric system in Ontario, and in this house last session the leader of this party encouraged me to go on with the debate when I brought in this bill to transfer power to grant such applications from the Minister of Public Works to parliament.

I am sorry for the minister; I do not think any minister should be asked to take the responsibility which the very kind hearted young minister must take in this case. However, I must say that I proposed to relieve him of this responsibility when I brought in my bill. I had deep sympathy for the young minister at the time the hearing took place, and shortly afterwards a bill was introduced in this house to transfer the power of granting such applications from the minister to parliament. The leader of this party in the house had encouraged me for a month to go on with this bill, and there was a division taken on it. The yeas numbered 72 and the nays 85, and there were several points of order taken in respect to the bill. During that debate I urged, as I urged on March 3 of this year, that this abnoxious contract should be cancelled on the grounds of public policy and that all orders in council, not only order in council 422 but order in council 1122 dated June 27, 1929; order in council 1081, dated June 22, 1929, and order in council 1244, dated July 19, 1929 as well, and all subsequent orders in council should be cancelled.

You will notice that hon. gentlemen to my left read from different financial statements, and I am sorry they did not act along this line some time ago. Hon. gentlemen will notice that so far only Canadian financial statements have been read. A lot of the bonds and securities of this country have been underwritten by the great super-power trust which flourishes at New York and Washington.

I have been reading the evidence taken in connection with this notorious American power trust at Washington during the past three years before the United States trade commission, which shows that papers were being bought up and the private bills committee was being corrupted by these people, the electricity ring in the United States, with headquarters at Washington. That ring reaches up to the 49th parallel along the Canadian border, right up to the state of Maine, and now they are in Canada and no one knows what they are doing. The evidence is contained in a book of about 300 pages, and at the hearing the most brilliant counsel in the United States were present representing both sides at Washington. It was shown that these people have corrupted the United States and have seized the water-powers from the people of that great country. Now they are crossing into Canada, as I said on March 3 of this year.

As far as this party is concerned, it took this stand last year in connection with the second reading of this bill. The leader of the opposition was most enthusiastic and encouraged me to go on with my bill, and he always has been enthusiastic with regard to the conservation of the water powers for the people of Canada. He showed it last year in connection with the Seven Sisters debate, when he gave the Progressives very good support in the house. It is all very well to say that 2,000,000 horse power has not been guaranteed, but it is somewhere among the papers brought down. Possibly I have not looked for it carefully enough but every banker knows it is true. Somewhere among these papers will be found a guarantee for 2,000,000 horse power.

We know the interest which the Financial Times and the Financial Post have in this thing; they have been corporation papers for years and no one expects any assistance from them. The American papers go much farther than do the Canadian publications. Go down to Wall street and read the American papers; go into one of the bankers' offices and you will find the prospectuses showing a contract signed, sealed and delivered by the hon. gentleman across the house has been granted for 2,000,000 horse power. Order in council 422 allows for a stepping up in the development from 100,000 to 200,000 to 300,000 to 500,000. Only last July they were given an additional handout of 160,000 horse power. There is not much farther to go, but they will continue on their way. Once they have got their hands into the treasury they are going to go ahead and get everything they can out of the St. Lawrence waterway from the present government. The papers of Ontario have been talking about a little grab which has taken place in Toronto, but this grab is so big the papers cannot understand it and I know of only three papers which have opposed it.

I am not surprised at the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite, because so long as there is responsible government in this country someone has to take responsibility. That responsibility is placed upon this government just on the eve of an election. This company is to be allowed to develop 500,000 horse power within five years. As I said last year when my bill was defeated: Goodbye to the St. Lawrence waterway forever.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Speaker, the whole canal policy of this country has been upset by this particular contract. In 1854 the people of Canada took over the canals as a public undertaking, as part of the transportation system, and several hundred millions of dollars have been expended on those canals. That policy has been in existence from 1854 to the date of the passing of this contract, when along comes the present government and by this particular contract upsets all the settled canal policy of Canada. It gives this company power to build a canal, although by the agreement, which is a most improvident one, the government has to build the locks. The canal feature of the contract is just the joker in the deal. This is a power deal, purely and simply. The navigation part is a myth. It is to hot to read the whole voluminous record, but if hon. members will read it they will see that the contract is improvident. I doubt if it would pass a village council, let alone the committee of three members of the cabinet that sat on the case.

Let us take, for instance, the Borden administration in 1911 when the Welland canal prosposition came up. What would the people of Canada have thought of the Borden administration if they had given Mackenzie and Mann power to build the Welland ship canal in exchange for the power in the said works. What would the country think of a steal like that in the Niagara district? Yet the present government has done this in Quebec with respect to the St. Lawrence. As I said last year, what this legislature needs is a chief bouncer. I see some gentlemen of this company walking through these halls to-night; these high "C" finance gentlemen are around these halls to-night. Whom can they influence, where do they get their pull, I do not know. They have changed their politics; they are all a bunch of turncoats. They are for one party to-day and for another to-morrow. They are just a lot of hungry political vultures, grabbing the water powers of the country from the people. In my humble view, no government can stand against the opposition of public opinion that, in the next election, that will be expressed in the ballot box in central Canada in regard to this particular nefarious deal once the people see the nature of it and what sacrifice of their interests now and in the future is involved, are fully appreciated by the people. It is one of the most iniquitous agreements that I have ever read.

Private capital should have been more progressive in past years in regard to the St. Lawrence. In this age of power development, little foresight is needed to realize the immense value of the water powers of the St. Lawrence. This is a grant of millions of dollars made directly by the present government, without our consent and at the expense of the people, to this monopoly. Wait till you see the rates. Generations yet unborn will suffer in their industrial, economic and domestic life. We are mortgaging the labour of future generations on the St. Lawrence for the benefit of a few power grabbers of the public domain, and this is being done over the heads of the people's representatives in parliament.

Where democracy is landing in Canada, I do not know. Where is Liberalism, and where are the principles of so-called twentieth-century Liberalism? They have been scattered to the four winds of heaven. There is more Liberalism expressed in the speeches of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) than in those of hon. gentlemen opposite. Talk about the day of the Family Compact! In 1837 the Family Compact was as nothing to this family compact of Sweezey, Gundy and all the rest of them, limited and unlimited. They say that the Gaul of Caesar's Commentaries was divided into three parts; the gall of this man Sweezey and his crowd is so great it is incapable of division. This was the gentlman who went up to Hamilton a month ago to speak on the St. Lawrence question. He shed buckets of tears for the poor people of this country when he raised the United States bogey of an alternative all-Canadian canal. They need an alternative canal as much as half a dozen parliament buildings are required at Ottawa for the House of Commons to meet in. This Mr. Sweezey raised the American bogey regarding that canal, while he is really in league with Wall street and five American millionaires to grab this water-power and make millions for himself. He is building a big baronial castle on the banks of the St. Lawrence the like of which has never been seen in the old country, and from the tower of which he can gaze over the St. Lawrence and say, "I am monarch of all I survey." That is what takes place under this government, but I say that no government can last when public opinion in the central provinces of Canada asserts itself.

While I would like to have seen my good friends to my left a little more active a little while ago, I think that they have done good work in bringing this matter to the attention of the country. It may look a little political on their part just now, but it is pretty near time that the representatives of public rights and those who want to protect the water-powers of this country got into politics and asserted themselves, or soon there will be nothing left to give away. Mr. Backus grabbed off a whole principality for himself back of the Rainy river. He could not wait. The Seven Sisters falls crowd could not wait. The Winnipeg Electric could not wait. They corrupted the electors in the province of Manitoba in that iniquitous deal. Then there was the Gatineau deal, and now this Beauharnois, the worst of the whole lot. In my humble opinion there will be a rude awakening for the government when this country to-morrow awakens and is alive to the enormity of this deal. Parliament is being made to look ridiculous. We could not get five members to stand up and call for a vote on this question a little while ago.

The Prime Minister of this country is very fond of talking of five cent policies for the unemployed in this country. He did not talk in terms of five cents to the unemployed Mr. Sweezey and Mr. Gundy and all the rest of these power barons. Oh no; he converted them into multimillionaires. Five cents for the unemployed working man, and millions for the unemployed Mr. Sweezey and all the rest of them. That kind of policy might have been all right thirty years ago. It might have been all right then to turn over our water powers to private capitalists; but that policy was repudiated in Ontario long ago. The government of this country and its Beauharnois friends, Sweezey, Gundy and Company, will have the battle of their lives in their life work to alienate the sovereign rights of the people on the St. Lawrence. The water powers of the St. Lawrence are the property of the people. That question was fought out years ago, and it was established as a fact that the water powers are the property of the people. There can be no quarter given to those who are departing from that basic principle. In the years to come this project is going to be an encumbrance and a drag on every man, woman and child in this country. A ransom will have to be paid by way of royalties on the capitalization of this company, fixed at the highest possible figure; industry and labour in this country will be crippled, as well as agriculture, and our water powers will become part of a super-power trust in the United States.

I have found that objection to my newspaper bill came in part from the electrical trust in this country from some of these people interested in the development on the St. Lawrence. We should have turned these people out of the parliament buildings years ago. We should have had a chief bouncer to turn them out five or six years ago. Some time ago I put a question on the order paper asking the names of the president and directors of the Beauharnois Company, and the answer I got was, "No information." Fancy, no information as to who the party of the first part was.

The order in council was ultra vires because it interfered with the level of the water from the great lakes to the sea. This country settled its canal policy years ago. So this, Mr. Speaker, is what is called twentieth century Liberalism! To-morrow there will be a rude awakening for this so-called twentieth century Liberalism in the central provinces of Canada.

When the application of the Beauharnois people came before the government, it was heard by three ministers. There was the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott), flanked on the right by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), and on the left by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin). Objections were made by the shipping federation of Canada as to the levels of the lakes. They said that they could not navigate the channel if this canal was built. But the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would not listen to Lally McCarthy, K.C., when he showed how this canal would affect the levels of the St. Lawrence waterway.

Section 12 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act provides:

> Parliament may, at any time, annul or vary any order of the governor in council made under this part.
> Any action of parliament in that behalf shall not be deemed an infringement of the rights of the local authority, company or person concerned.

At page 164 of the evidence the parties are set out. At page 173 Mr. Holgate, the civil engineer admits that the remedial works may fall down. A lot of weirs have been erected along this artificial canal against the advice of their own engineers. Capable engineers have said that the artificial work was not sufficient. At page 176 of the evidence, Captain Ouellette said that the creation of the dams was going to create cross currents to such an extent that it would be impossible to get in with present day boats, that the depth was not sufficient. They excavated an artificial waterway, supplementary to and apart from the present channel, whereby a new outlet would be created for passing the waters of the St. Lawrence river from lake St. Francis to lake St. Louis.

This matter was referred to the Department of Justice. The question was asked: "Is there any power in the department to authorize the diversion of 40,000 cubic feet per second?" The answer was "No". I contend, Mr. Speaker, that it was a breach of the Washington Treaty of 1871 and of the Boundary Waterways Act and that if the matter was never taken to the International Joint Commission the whole thing could be set aside, because it is a breach of the Washington treaty; it is a breach of the Boundary Waterways treaty and of many other treaties with the United States, under which the United States are guaranteed an uninterrupted flow of water from the head of the lakes to the sea. There is no authority, federal or provincial, for diverting that water if it is going to interfere with navigation. As I said, the Justice department was appealed to, and to the question, "Is there any power in the department to authorize the diversion of 40,000 cubic feet per second?" they answered, "no". They quoted article 26 of the Washington treaty of May 1871, that the river shall be free and open for navigation purposes.

What about the rights of the United States and the rights of those provinces higher up the lakes? It is not Ontario and Quebec alone that enters into this problem, but the other provinces at the head of the lakes and the United States who are entitled to a free flow. The whole agreement is an improvident one, and it is full of jokers from beginning to end. The Beauharnois company has gathered in another 160,000 horse power of the St. Lawrence total by an arrangement with the Montreal Cotton Company. Also it is freely predicted that the Holt interests at Cedar Rapids will be the next to be absorbed by Beauharnois. And all this can only mean one thing. That is that there is to be no competition between rival power companies in Quebec. The battle for St. Lawrence power at Ottawa last winter looks more and more like a sham fight. Also cheap power for Quebec looks more and more like a myth. The Quebec government with the aid of the King government sold the heritage of the people of Quebec for a mess of pottage represented by $1 per horsepower. And the millionaires of St. James street will wax fatter and fatter on the profits of electricity that should have been developed for the benefit of all the people. Two or three weeks ago the Prime Minister said he would tell us in two weeks what would become of the proposed deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway. There is no necessity for him to tell us; we know good and plenty what will become of that project. This particular government, I say, is responsible for the present unsatisfactory condition of affairs. The member for Bow River spoke in his able and forceful speech of the misleading statements in the prospectuses. Of course they are misleading, and those who prepared and published them should be proceeded against under the criminal code. Section 414 of the code provides:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who, being a promoter, director, public officer or manager of any body corporate or public company, either existing or intended to be formed, makes, circulates, or publishes, or concurs in making, circulating or publishing any prospectus, statement or account which he knows to be false in any material particular, with intent to induce persons whether ascertained or not to become shareholders or partners, or with intent to deceive or defraud the members, shareholders or creditors, or any of them, whether ascertained or not, of such body corporate or public company, or with intent to induce any person to entrust or advance any property to such body corporate or public company, or to enter into any security for the benefit thereof.

In Rex v. Gillespie, it was ruled that:

> In considering the charge against the president of an incorporated company for publishing a false statement under code, section 414, judicial notice will be taken of the statutes of another province under which the company was incorporated, requiring the president to be chosen from the directors; and a warrant of commitment against the president, as such, after proof of the manner of incorporation, need not allege that he was a director.

So both the province and the Dominion have jurisdiction in this respect over prospectuses. Whether the justice department will prosecute —well, you know who is running the government of this country. This government today is nothing but a government of big interests and appetites. When I see those gentlemen walking around arm in arm with the leading members on the other side of the house, I have very little hope that the interests of the people will receive much attention.

As to the engineering side of this project, the mover and the seconder of this motion have read from the report contained in the return which was brought down last session at my request. They have picked out a few of the good points in that report, but they in their time limit have touched only the fringe of the subject. There is going to be a rude awakening shortly for the government and for these interests. Some of these people are seeking financial aid across the border with their Wall street allies. I have the evidence taken before the federal trade commission of the United States which investigated the power trusts over there. This commission has control over power and gas utilities in that country. The evidence shows that those American power trusts have agents walking the floors of congress and of all the state legislatures. They have bought papers and spent millions. Our power magnates are just as busy in our legislatures. Is it any wonder that the people of this country are going to wake up when they see the way their water powers are being handed over for private greed and gain? This government has not five cents for the unemployed to feed their starving women and children, but to the unemployed of the Sweezey class they hand over millions of dollars. The member for Bow River estimated that Mr. Frank Jones, who was the chief mover in getting approval of the company's plans by the federal cabinet, made $2,500,000 out of his share in the project. Well, I have been reading some of the leading financial papers of the United States and of Wall street and their writers say that he made from $4,500,000 to $6,000,000 out of the sale of his permit interests. That was what the permit from the hon. Minister of Public Works and the government was worth to Mr. Jones. A new company was formed. As the hon. member for Bow River said this afternoon they amalgamated all the subsidiary companies and the prospectus says untruthfully that they secured water rights on the St. Lawrence capable of developing 2,000,000 horsepower. If there is any concern for public rights in the Department of Justice they will see that the criminal code is enforced against those responsible for issuing the false statements contained in these many prospectuses. The Minister of Justice still allows two innocent young men of Ottawa to remain in Kingston penitentiary, even after the Attorney General of this province and the local crown attorney declared they were innocent, and a mistake made, and that they have not heard a word from the Justice department. Why are those innocent men allowed to languish in prison? Why treat the poor one way and the millionaires another? To-day there is a power family compact. Talk about twentieth century Liberalism! Well, the public will soon have something to say about this "twentieth century Liberalism."

The shipping federation representing those interested in the operation of ocean steamers objected to the Beauharnois plan for the reason that the project would change the levels of the river and would interfere with the flow of water to the port of Montreal. It is pretty easy to see how the departmental engineers can change their opinions. When Sir Adam Beck applied for permission to build a dam at Morrisburg these very same engineers said that it would lower the levels and interfere with the port of Montreal so seriously as to prevent the proper operation of shipping. But when they were confronted with the Beauharnois application they turned a complete somersault and said it would not affect the port of Montreal in any way. Last session I was told by my leader that I had a free hand to introduce my bill to transfer the power of approval of such projects from the minister to parliament, but unfortunately I was ill towards the end of the session and could not proceed with that measure. We made another attempt on March last but were not able to bring the question to a vote. Last year, headed by the leader of the opposition, sixty-seven voted in favour of the second reading and seventy-two against.

This contract is so obnoxious that there has been nothing like it since confederation. To-day parliament is a mere cipher and we might as well go home. No matter how we may protest, the government can give away the whole of the St. Lawrence water powers to a few favourites and thus make them millionaires overnight. Is it any wonder that the people of this country are disgusted and that they are becoming alarmed at the way these water powers are being alienated to benefit a lot of millionaires? The question of federal and provincial jurisdiction over the St. Lawrence waterways was referred to the supreme court last year, but it was all a sham battle. Was the Beauharnois question referred to the supreme court? Of course not, the Sweezey company could not wait.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I could have wished that this subject had come up earlier in the session. However, much of the information that has been placed before the house to-day has been available only in recent weeks. I know some of us may lay ourselves open to the charge of attempting to make preelection capital out of this question, but I suppose that we shall have to run that risk, for it seems to me to be of such great importance that it cannot be ignored, even though we are within a few days of prorogation.

The member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) accused some of us in this corner of the house of not being interested in public ownership. May I remind the hon. gentleman that last year within a very few days of the opening of parliament my colleague from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) made an inquiry concerning the St. Lawrence waterway. It is recorded in Hansard of 1929, page 80, as follows:

Mr. Heaps: Will the government, before issuing permit or licence for the canalization or water-power development on the St. Lawrence river submit same for the consideration of the house?

Mr. Mackenzie King: The Navigable Waters Protection Act provides that no works may be constructed in navigable waters unless the site has been approved by the governor in council or unless such work is constructed in accordance with plans and regulations approved or made by the governor in council. In the case of any application for the construction of works in the St. Lawrence river, coming within the scope of the act in question, it is the intention of the government to follow the procedure in force hitherto, as prescribed in that act.

That procedure was not at all satisfactory to those of us who believed alike in the policy of government ownership and the control by parliament of important matters of this character. For that reason, on February 25, 1929 I introduced a motion to this effect:

That in the opinion of this house no disposition of the natural resources under the control of the federal government shall be effective until ratified by parliament.

Hon. members in the house may recall that that motion precipitated a debate which lasted for a week. I do not think it can be said that we in this corner of the house have neglected to direct the attention of the country to the situation which exists. Last year in Winnipeg we lost the Seven Sisters falls; this year we have apparently lost the St. Lawrence river, and hon. members will realize that the loss of the St. Lawrence river is a much bigger thing than the mere Beauharnois development. I take it that this development meant a surrender of Dominion rights. I am not proposing to discuss the constitutional question of jurisdiction as between the Dominion and the provinces, but I say that the St. Lawrence river is in an altogether different class from the ordinary Canadian river. It is not a provincial stream; it is not merely a Dominion stream but it is international. It is one of the important links in the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence system, and each part of the river should be treated as a part of the whole system. For example, the United States has treaty rights permitting free navigation. I submit to the house that power and navigation developments are inseparable, and it has been an exceedingly narrow reading of the British North America Act which has permitted the government to turn over to one province certain valuable power rights on the St. Lawrence. This government and other governments have not always read the British North America Act in quite such a narrow fashion. Take, for example, the Montreal harbour commission. I am told that that commission operates under the Dominion government; it maintains cold storage plants and a great variety of concerns which might conceivably be understood to be provincial in character. On Saturday the prime minister is to open formally the harbour bridge. I am only a layman and I do not pretend to understand the intricacies of the law, but if the Montreal harbour commission can build a bridge from shore to shore across the St. Lawrence river I cannot see why we should say that the development of power must of necessity be entirely provincial in character. There is very little doubt that the action taken in developing the Beauharnois system is blocking the general scheme of navigation which should involve the whole of the St. Lawrence.

Within the last few months some very interesting articles written by Mr. Harry Sifton have appeared in some of the Toronto papers. In those articles he pointed out very clearly that the power development ought to bear the cost of canalization. I do not want to argue the point, but to my mind it is obvious that his contention is correct. If we allow power to be developed in the haphazard fashion we are doing at the present time, it will be impossible later on for the Dominion government to shoulder the heavy burden of putting through the canal. The canal could be constructed at very little cost to the Dominion government.

The serious charge has been made by the members for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) and Bow River (Mr. Garland) that the government is lending itself to a colossal "grab." I do not think the expression used by the hon. gentleman is too strong. Simply by acquiescing in this kind of thing and by having passed an order in council which has been the foundation upon which these transactions have been based, the government has been lending itself to a colossal grab—unless indeed the government should now take prompt action to cancel the agreements contained in the order in council. In my opinion the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) gave a very disappointing answer, and he took an extremely narrow and purely departmental view. He did not touch at all the charges urged by hon. members in this corner but stated that the province of Quebec had the right to grant a charter. I do not know why the hon. gentleman undertook to decide a question which has been before the courts and upon which there has been no final decision. We all know that the province of Quebec claims the right to issue charters, but as the member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) very clearly stated this afternoon, we should have had a final decision from the highest judicial body and should not have allowed the matter to be settled by order in council. The minister stated that the government had adopted the policy which the majority of the joint engineering board had advocated. I do not think that the hon. gentleman was quite ingenuous because if hon. members will read the report they will find section 162 as follows:

> The board finds that it is practicable and advantageous to combine the improvement for navigation in this section with the development of power on a progressive program of construction of power plants, only the first part of the power development being undertaken in conjunction with the works required to carry navigation through the section.

It was only in case it was found impossible to carry on such cooperation that another arrangement was suggested and that the majority of the Canadian section suggested that this route would be possible for navigation purposes. I think therefore that consciously or unconsciously the minister was rather misleading when he made his statement.

I do not think we should consider this particular transaction as being of a nature distinct from other similar transactions which are taking place all over this North American continent. I have before me an issue of Labour under date of May 20, 1930. This paper is published in Washington. There is a cartoon here which shows a portly old gentleman labelled "The Power Trust" holding a sort of coffee mill labelled "The Holding Companies" and into this mill he is pouring a stream of water which flows out in a stream of gold dollars. The caption is "Turning water into gold" and the cartoon illustrates a speech made last week by Senator George W. Norris in the United States Senate. Mr. Norris said:

> Chemists in the past have been working for years and years. . . . to devise a method by which they could make gold, synthetic gold. These power trust officials have beaten the chemists to it. They have made hundreds of millions of gold out of water—nothing but water. It does not even need to be clean water; it is usually muddy, dirty water, but they are making gold out of water daily; and the consumers of light and power, the little fellow who reads his newspaper by electric light, the woman who uses electricity to wash clothes, the big manufacturer who consumes hundreds of thousands of horse-power in making things that the American people use, the miner who operates the coal mines—all of them are contributing their part to the great operation of the power trust of converting water into pure, yellow gold; and we sit idly by.

Then Senator Norris goes on to refer to conditions in Canada, he says:

Partly as a result of the wisdom of the Canadian government—

I am afraid he should have said the wisdom of the Ontario government.

Mr. BRADETTE: Not in all cases.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Possibly not.

Partly as a result of the wisdom of the Canadian government in its handling of power matters, the Canadian manufacturer gets his power at approximately one-half of what the American manufacturer on this side of the river has to pay for power.

And again:

In 1925, power in the United States, I mean industrial power, cost 11.5 mills per kilowatt hour. During that same year the manufacturers of Ontario, Canada, paid 6.1 mills. In 1928, it cost 13.4 mills in the United States, and only 6 mills in Ontario, or considerably less than half the cost in the United States.

That is in Ontario only, and under public ownership. Unfortunately, although we have begun so well, we are permitting the greatest water-powers in the eastern part of this country to pass into private ownership. There is the difficulty, and it is for this reason that I feel we cannot allow such a matter as this to pass unchallenged.

I think the hon. member for Bow River has shown very clearly that there has been essentially a violation of the order in council. That order in council states very clearly that only a small portion of water is to be diverted. Undoubtedly the company is making plans for the diversion of a much larger amount; they hope ultimately to get the whole river, as has been stated already. I want to read their prospectus again; I do not think it can be read too frequently or emphasized too strongly. In the prospectus signed by R. O. Sweezey, the following statement is made:

In view of the above provision is made in the plans and considerable work is now being done with a view to installing further units if additional water becomes available.

I may say also what I do not think has been pointed out already, that they are even now taking steps to secure supplies of water beyond their 40,000 cubic feet per second. In their prospectus, they say:

In addition to the above water-power rights the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company has entered into a contract with the Montreal Cotton Company providing for the acquisition of the latter's rights to divert water for power purposes from the St. Lawrence river at lake St. Francis.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the purchase by the company of the right of the Montreal Cotton Company to divert water is in itself a definance of the lease and of the order in council. In addition, it had already been represented and the fact is that 40,000 cubic feet will produce 500,000 horse-power. The statement that the Montreal Cotton Company's water combined with the company's water will produce 500,000 horse-power is not in accordance with the facts, and the truth of the matter is that both waters will produce a great deal more power than the above. In fact, in the Financial Post of February 27, 1930, it is stated that the company will be able to develop 112,000 horse-power with the Montreal Cotton Company's water, although the report of the joint board indicates that only 10,000 horse-power can be so developed. The company, therefore, is guilty of two offences in acquiring the Montreal Cotton Company's water and in advertising thus; first, a breach of the terms of its lease and of the terms and spirit of the order in council, and second, misrepresenting the facts with reference to the amount of power from the above sources.

We have had so many figures given to-day that I fancy the ordinary man is somewhat confused. I do not intend to add very many more, but I should like to ask what is the value of this colossal capitalization that has been built up. It has been estimated, according to figures given by Robert Dodd and Company, that altogether there is a capitalization of some $380,200,000; that is, when the company gets actually into operation, in the course of a few years, interest and dividends will have to be paid on that huge amount. That sum appears to be required in order to build a project which will cost the net sum of $50,000,000, and the total expenditures which have been made in acquiring a property whose value would amount to only $1,280,000.

Surely the government has a responsibility in a matter of this kind. If a boy steals a bottle of milk worth 10 cents from a door step, he is sent to gaol; if some small robbery takes place in connection with any of our stores, we sometimes send young offenders to gaol for one, two or three years, yet here are men making millions upon millions out of this country and apparently nothing is to be done about it. The Minister of Public Works simply folds his hands and says, "Well what can we do"? Surely, if the government of this country is worth anything it is here to protect the people against the big robbers as well as against the small robbers. If we have to pay interest and dividends on this huge capitalization; if we and our children after us are to be enslaved in this way, surely it is time the people realize the actual situation.

There are certain political aspects of this case which I confess I think require explanation. The letter from Mr. R. O. Sweezey to J. Alderic Raymond has been read already, but I should like to refer to one or two sections of this letter. The first section points out the necessity of acquiring the Robert rights, and section 4 of the letter reads as follows:

It will probably be advisable to enlist the participation of certain United States interests.

I should like to know what interests have been enlisted.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And why?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think we ought to know why, and I think we ought to know how.

Mr. IRVINE: And for how much.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are a number of questions which suggest themselves. I do not think that Mr. Sweezey, in starting a program of this kind, had any doubt as to how he was going to carry it through. The least this government could do is to make an investigation as to what United States interests are behind this concern. I am very sure that if there are no United States interests behind it at the present time, it will not be very long before that condition exists. A super-power trust exists on the other side of the line and this is extending itself in every direction. The American newspapers for the last year or so have been filled with revelations as to what is happening in regard to this matter. Before reading clause 3, I will read the preceding phrase, in order to link up. It is as follows:

To place ourselves in possession of all the rights essential to this undertaking, we should pursue the following course:

3. Enlist with our syndicate two or three individuals, who in addition to providing some cash as their fair share, can assist us in getting our rights extended or enlarged so as to develop the entire available flow of the St. Lawrence at this point. As the whole situation is entirely within the province of Quebec, our influence has to be exerted only in Canadian political circles —that is at Ottawa and at Quebec.

How has that influence been exerted at Ottawa and at Quebec? It is quite evident that powerful interests have been exerted or the corporation would not have secured these rights. It was quite evident a year ago that powerful interests were exerted in connection with the Seven Sisters falls, both at Ottawa and at Winnipeg. I think this house is entitled to know what interests are now at work at Ottawa.

The company was incorporated with a dummy board of directors.

Mr. IRVINE: Who were they?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It might be worth while taking a few minutes to show just who were the provisional directors of this corporation. They were as follows:

Osmond F. Howe, barrister-at-law, Trust building, Ottawa, Ont.
Duncan K. MacTavish, barrister-at-law, Citizen building, Ottawa, Ont.
Belle Fraser, stenographer, Ottawa Electric building, Ottawa, Ont.
Lyla Brennan, stenographer, Ottawa Electric building, Ottawa, Ont.
Edythe H. O'Malley, stenographer, 115 Sparks street, Ottawa, Ont.
Bessie Conniffe, stenographer, 115 Sparks street, Ottawa, Ont..
Lillian Dell, stenographer, Trusts building, Ottawa, Ont.
Elsie M. Burritt, stenographer, Ottawa Electric building, Ottawa, Ont.
Gwen Gunderson, stenographer, Trusts building, Ottawa, Ont.
Kathleen Havey, stenographer, Ottawa Electric building, Ottawa, Ont.
M. H. Kelly, stenographer, Ottawa Electric building, Ottawa, Ont.

Those were the provisional directors of this great corporation.

Mr. IRVINE: Did they get anything out of it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Of course it is not unusual to have a dummy board of directors, but the layman sometimes wonders why it is necessary. Why was it necessary for a lawyer of the standing of Mr. Geoffrion to come all the way from Montreal to have the company incorporated by Messrs. McGiverin, Haydon and Ebbs? These are questions which should be answered.

The personnel of the board of directors has already been given to the house, but I notice included in that board the name of G. H. Montgomery. It is rather curious that in opposing the application of the company made before the Quebec legislature, the report of the proceedings before the private bills committee at Quebec on February 29, 1923, shows Mr. Montgomery as saying:

> Last year when we came down here there was not even a plan before the house, the idea was to grab the rights that had apparently been worked out in one or two of those commissions for private interests.

And so on. Shortly after Mr. Montgomery appears as one of the directors of a corporation described by him as not being in the best interests of the companies he represented or of the province. Apparently one way of getting on the directorate of a big corporation is to attack that corporation hard enough.

An hon. MEMBER: Better be careful.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What have you got in your mind?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is not a bid for a position on the directorate. Another name appearing in that list is that of the Hon. W. L. McDougald. I think we all know the name of Senator McDougald.

Miss MACPHAIL: He is the power behind the throne.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Hon. Mr. McDougald was a member of the national advisory committee, to which the Minister of Public Works has referred. As the minister was not able to give us that information, I think it would be well to put on record the members of that committee. They were as follows:

Hon. G. P. Graham, chairman.
Thomas Ahearn, Ottawa.
Hon. W. E. Foster, St. John.
Beaudry Leman, Montreal.
Edward D. Martin, Winnipeg.
Doctor W. L. McDougald, Montreal.
Hon. Sir Clifford Sifton, K.C., Toronto.
Major-General John W. Stewart, Vancouver.
Hon. Adelard Turgeon, Quebec.

Mr. IRVINE: Does that include political influence?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. McDougald had something to say last year regarding the St. Lawrence waterway. In speaking to the Senate on April 19, 1928, as reported at page 236 of the Senate Hansard, Mr. McDougald said:

> Honourable gentlemen, I desire to make a statement on a question of privilege, and to give an absolute denial to certain newspaper implications reflecting on my honour and integrity, both as a member of this honourable body and as a private citizen.

He made reference to certain editorials which had appeared in the Toronto Globe, and continued:

> I am concerned, however, only in giving an immediate, unequivocal and absolute denial to the implication of the Globe despatch that I am connected with the Beauharnois Power Company.

He may not have been connected with the Beauharnois Power Company at that time, but to-day he is one of the directors. I notice that the following appears in the prospectus sent out by Mr. Sweezey:

> Management preferred shares (no par value), 5 shares.
> The management preferred shares above mentioned confer on the holders the exclusive rights for a period of ten years from September 17, 1929, to elect and remove the directors of the corporation and otherwise confer in respect thereof the same rights as if each management preferred share were a class A common share. The management preferred shares at the end of the ten-year period will automatically be converted into class A common shares, but, with the consent of all the holders thereof, may be so converted prior to that time. These shares have been provided to ensure continuity of direction and policy during the important initial period covering the construction and early operation of the development of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, and will be held between Hon. W. L. McDougald, M.D.; R. O. Sweezey, Esq.; and A. F. White, Esq.

We have the extraordinary spectacle of Doctor McDougald, a member of that national advisory committee, denying that he had anything to do with this corporation, and to-day he is a member of the directorate and one of three who hold these management preferred shares which give them absolute control for the next ten years.

There is just one other matter that I really should not pass by, although it may not be of great public importance, but I notice among the engineers of this new corporation, the name of Thomas H. Hogg, Esquire, of Toronto. I suppose an engineer has the right to find his work wherever he can, but a year or so ago Doctor Hogg was employed by the Manitoba government to give expert advice with regard to the desirability of handing over the Seven Sisters falls, and he then appeared as having been lent by the Hydro-electric Commission of Ontario, a public body. Now he is apparently the engineer in connection with this private concern.

I do not intend to weary the house by going into any further figures or statements in regard to this matter. I want to ask the simple question: In view of the facts that have been brought out this afternoon—and I think most of them are indisputable—what does the government propose to do? That is what we are all interested in. We are not here—at least I am not—to make definite charges, but I am here to give wider publicity to some of the facts which have been before the public now for some weeks in these prospectuses and in the statements that have been issued by these investment companies. It seems to me that now that the facts are known to the public, it is for the government to act. I do not think they can evade their responsibility by simply asserting that this is a Quebec matter. It is not a Quebec matter; it is a Dominion matter. It is a Dominion matter because the order in council, without which this company could not have been organized, was passed by the Dominion government and the government has it entirely in its own power to cancel that order in council.

Only last year when some of us were urging that these properties should not pass irrevocably out of the hands of the country without parliament being asked to make a pronouncement, the Prime Minister told us that under the Navigable Waters Protection Act the power to cancel was already in the hands of the government. That power being in the hands of the government, surely we have brought sufficient evidence before the government to warrant a revocation of that order in council. Further, I would pass on the suggestion which came from the hon. member for Bow River. In a matter of as great concern as this, we ought to have an investigation by the Department of Justice. I do not mean a narrow, departmental investigation; the Department of Justice should take the initiative in making such an investigation as would convince the general public that their interests are to be safeguarded in the future and as would prevent a corporation of this kind fastening itself upon not only this generation but generations to come.

Turning water into gold! You talk about morality; you try to impress morality upon our young people throughout the country; but how are we to have either personal or national morality if a few individuals are in this way to be permitted with impunity to make their millions out of their fellow citizens?

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (East Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I believe I am as anxious as any other hon. member to see the early prorogation of parliament and an opportunity to try our fortunes at the polls. I cannot, however, let this occasion pass. I do not think I shall traverse any ground already covered in this debate, but there are two considerations which drive me to my feet.

In the first place, I do not believe the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) made a fair presentation of the case this afternoon. I know there are within his knowledge certain facts which should have led him to say something other than he did. I took down his words, and the effect of them was that he was approached by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company with a lease of such rights as are owned by the province of Quebec. That is one statement which, after the word "lease" will appear in Hansard to-morrow. Another was that they were dealing with water power rights which the province of Quebec have the right to grant. Then he wound up by telling the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) that he was in the wrong tribunal. He did not attempt to answer the case; in fact I would say he rather admitted it. That is one reason why I am driven to my feet. I am prepared for any change of base or front on the part of the government, but I am not going to let that change take place unless I have a chance, if I believe public honour and the interest of the people are involved, of saying that what is done is contrary to what is right, contrary to what a government should do.

Listen to this: for two weeks in October, 1928, I sat in the Supreme Court of Canada, day in and day out, as many other counsel did, I with two other counsel, representing British Columbia, the government represented by more than half a dozen counsel, and every province in Canada represented. What was the occasion? It was what was known as the waterways and water powers reference. It was action on the part of this government. They asked the Supreme Court of Canada, by answering certain questions to tell them who owned the water powers, who had the right to the property in the water of the rivers and streams of this country. Shortly stated, that is what the supreme court was asked to do. The government was represented by a number of very distinguished counsel who said over and over again—and this is in the notes which I have; I have not had an opportunity to refer to them, because I did not know until this afternoon that this debate was coming up—that they were instructed by the Attorney General for Canada—they did not say the Minister of Justice—to contend that His Majesty in the right of the Dominion held the propery in and control of all the waters in all the navigable rivers and streams of this country, and further, mark you, that the Dominion of Canada owned all the power that could be developed from those waters. Therefore, all the Beauharnois Company had or could get or has now is the property of the Dominion government.

We cannot go into the legal argument, but there is in connection with it a point that is so important I know it will be appreciated by some. The chief point in this two weeks' session was: Is there or is there not a public right of navigation? Every province but one declared that there was not a public right of navigation. The contention of the counsel of this government was that if there was a public right of navigation then under the British North America Act, section 91, supplemented by section 92, it followed beyond any contradiction that the Dominion of Canada owned the water powers and had the property in the water in the rivers and streams of Canada.

The case of the provinces—I am speaking generally—was weakened by one fact. The eminent counsel for Quebec, the late Eugene Lafleur and Mr. Geoffrion, said that they could not contend that there was not a public right of navigation in the province of Quebec. Therefore, if the contention of the government's counsel was right, there was, following a public right of navigation in the province of Quebec, the ownership and control of all the water powers in the province of Quebec by the Dominion of Canada. Therefore, when the Minister of Public Works says that he was approached with a lease given by the province of Quebec, which purported to deal with these water powers, I ask him and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), when did they surrender this important ground? There was no other ground. When did they surrender this ground which took them to the supreme court asking for a decision of the court as to who was entitled to the water powers and the electrical energy developed therefrom in the Dominion of Canada? That was the whole case; there is no question about it.

As has been stated, the questions submitted to the supreme court were not answered. If the question of a public right of navigation had been admitted by all the provinces, I believe that the supreme court would have answered the questions. Those who will take the trouble to read the reasons for judgment given by the justices of the supreme court will readily see that there was much to be said on behalf of the government of the Dominion of Canada owning all the water powers that could be developed upon any navigable stream in this Dominion.

This order in council, Mr. Speaker, is a wonderful document. Remember, it was drawn up after this hearing before the supreme court. Its drafting is artistic; there is no doubt about that. On page 6 of the order in council, with the margical note "Reference to supreme court" it says:

> That in view of the combination of the two questions of power and navigation, it was deemed advisable to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada, a series of questions to the end of determining the respective rights of the Dominion and provincial governments in the development of power. The supreme court has recently submitted the result of its consideration of the various questions asked. The conclusions of the court do not furnish sufficient ground to establish a well defined line of action with respect to power but as the question of fully protecting navigation is the dominant issue so far as the Dominion government is concerned, it is found that favourable consideration may be given to the proposal of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, which, with certain modifications, may be utilized for the requirements of navigation in that stretch of the river.

There was not one counsel, Mr. Speaker, who was bold enough to get up and even murmur during all the course of that hearing that there was any claim that the navigation of navigable waters could be interfered with by any province. That is altogether aside from the question, and whoever drew up that order in council ought to have known it. But it does say, as will be noted, that there was involved the question of the ownership of power. I have forgotten just when the judgment was delivered, but the hearing was in October, 1928, and judgment was given about six weeks or two months afterwards.

What I wish to refer to next is the debate that was held in this house on February 19, 1929, when the government was asked not to pass this order in council in favour of the Beauharnois Company. One would think, after hearing that this Beauharnois power was such a valuable asset—its value was scaled up this afternoon to $308,000,000—that a government that was anxious to keep for the people of Canada all that they were entitled to would have done something to have this question of ownership settled. Beauharnois power is only one power. There are thousands in this country, all valuable. The Dominion government took care to go to the courts with counsel. A return was made as to the cost, and while I do not remember the exact figures, I am sure that the hearing cost $100,000. Add that to the $308,000,000. Remember that every province in the Dominion of Canada was represented by one or more counsel, and that two weeks were occupied in the hearing of this case. The judges could not answer the questions submitted because, they said, some of them were not properly framed. I do not suggest that they were deliberately not properly framed. It was known that this application of the Beauharnois Company was before the government. what would be the natural thing for any business man to do under those circumstances, where hundreds of millions of dollars were involved, and that is no exaggerated statement? Would not care have been taken to ascertain who owned the water-powers, and who was entitled to the money that might come from their development, who was going to enjoy such a splendid property producing such magnificent services. Would that not have been the natural thing to do? But it was not done.

I come now to the 8th day of March. We find that while this matter was still in suspense and undecided, while nothing had occurred to weaken the government's case, but rather the opposite, while the government certainly had a case that should be decided on its merits, this important order in council was passed in favour of the Beauharnois company.

The government, Mr. Speaker, has failed in its duty, and I say that that admits of no contradiction. If this Dominion of Canada in its right as against the provinces is entitled to untold millions of property, then that question should be decided. As I said, the hearing before the supreme court took place in the month of October, 1928. No further step in relation to deciding who owns this water-power has been taken by the government now in office. It should have been taken; it must be taken. Speaking wholly for myself, I say that after this next election, of my own motion I am going to ask the leader of my party to see that the question is determined whether the Dominion of Canada, which we all represent, is entitled to this property worth millions of dollars, or whether it can be given away by those who do not own it.

In conclusion, I desire to say that I think it very strange that there is no representative Tory in this Beauharnois group. Do not imagine that it is on that score that complaint comes. They were assisted in every way. The Minister of Public Works said: We had nothing to do but to accept this lease which was made by a lessor who might not have had the power to grant it. I say, Mr. Speaker, yes, the government did have something to do. At a private sitting in with these people you gave them the land for their locks and all their appurtenant works; you made it nice and easy for them. The whole thing was on the skidway in favour of these men and against the interests of this country, and the government saw that it was done.

Let me refer to the debate which took place last session. It will be found on page 786 of Hansard of March 8, 1929. The Minister of Public Works then said something different from what he says to-day.

[Mr. Ryckman.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There was no debate then; it was simply a statement by the minister.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Well, it is on page 786 of Hansard, the bottom of the second column:

> From the foregoing it will be apparent that in granting its approval under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, of the plans and site of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, the department has fully and adequately protected the public interest both with respect to conditions as at present existing and as regards all possible future development of a greater St. Lawrence shipway.

Let any hon. member review the situation. Look to what lengths the government went to have this disputed question heard by the highest court in the land. Look at what the government has done since—nothing at all except to give every benefit to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, and all those who have been able to stick their nose in the trough.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before my hon. friend sits down may I ask him if he could tell us what the contention of the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec is as to the ownership of the water powers in the St. Lawrence?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I can certainly answer that question. The contention of both provinces was that they owned the water powers. But it was not so found by the judges of the supreme court. If I read the reasons for judgment correctly the court finds much to support a claim on behalf of this Dominion —His Majesty in the right of the Dominion —that the water powers, the property in the water, belongs to or may be appropriated by the Dominion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has referred to the decision of the supreme court. Would he say that the premier of Ontario does not contend that the water powers belong to the province of Ontario and that the decision of the court entitles him so to believe? And is that not also the position taken by the premier of Quebec?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I cannot speak for the premier of Quebec, nor can I speak for the premier of Ontario. But it would be a very strange thing if the premier of Ontario did not contend in the interests of his government what you are not doing in the interests of your government. Your government contended that the property in the water powers was vested in the Dominion, and although the hearing lasted for two weeks there was nothing admitted by government counsel to discolour your claim.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this house has been listening to what by all odds is one of the most important discussions of this session. The statements made this afternoon by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) were so lucid and the national aspect so apparent that I feel every member must regard this question no longer as one purely of local concern but one that touches the whole conduct of business in this Dominion.

I do not think observations need be lengthy. There was incorporated in the province of Quebec a company known as the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. It had the right to divert 40,000 cubic feet of water per second from the St. Lawrence river. A very distinguished engineer conceived the happy thought of developing power in the river. He wrote a letter to a friend of his and pointed out that the way in which this could be done was to secure the support of capitalists, and likewise political influence. That letter was read this afternoon. He proceeded to carry into effect his purpose and he succeeded. For those who succeed in the efforts which they honestly make I think no one has a word of condemnation. The public interest becomes important only when private enterprise touches the public in the way that light, heat and power touches them; and it becomes of transcendent importance that every step that can be taken to protect the public interest should be taken.

This government, in its executive capacity, was called upon to determine, through the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott), whether or not permission should be given to divert the water from the river and lake through a canal to another lake. A hearing was arranged and permission was granted. But before the permission was finally granted, the application was amended, and the permission was given to divert only 40,000 cubic feet of water a second from the river through a canal which was to be constructed by the applicant company. The applicant company was the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, incorporated, as I have said, by the Quebec legislature, and under our law as it stood at that time it was essential that permission should be given by the government of Canada to enable the works to be constructed.

The province of Quebec claims to own the water over the bed of the river, it being in that province, and it bases its claim upon reasons which were presented in the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada and which have always been presented in that sense by the provinces, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has indicated. The Dominion of Canada, without having the question finally determined by the court of last resort, or propounding questions that in my judgment would make an answer possible, proceeded to grant the authorization. That authorization was granted upon conditions. This therefore implies that the government realized that it had the right to impose conditions upon the grant of the authorization. The conditions it did impose are set out in the order in council. That was done by the federal government acting in its executive capacity.

We thus have the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company acquired by the engineer, who commenced operations as indicated, with the assistance of capitalists and politicians whose influence he thought powerful enough to aid him in carrying forward his work. That, at least, is his statement of the matter. He did not then proceed to sell the securities of that corporation; and here is where the federal parliament becomes responsible. The Secretary of State granted letters of incorporation to the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited—not to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company Limited, that had the licence from the province of Quebec. It was not that company that sold its securities, it was the company created through the instrumentality of the Companies Act passed by this parliament. That company came into being for the purpose of acquiring the shares in the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company Limited and its subsidiary and allied organizations. That company, the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, had, of course, to comply with certain provisions of the Companies Act. Hon. gentlemen read this afternoon the statement filed in lieu of prospectus by the ten students at law and lawyers in Ottawa who had no interest in the transaction and who were acting through Ottawa solicitors headed by Senator Haydon. The principal political figure in the company at present is Senator McDougald, who is chairman of the Montreal harbour commission and one of the three managers of the Power Company, according to the prospectus, for a term of ten years.

The company came into being under circumstances to which I have referred. It therefore owes its origin to a Dominion act, and the question before us at the present time is: What safeguards have we, as a parliament, imposed on behalf of the investing and consuming public with respect to this corporation and others of the same character? I recall a question which was being discussed when I first came to this parliament. The question before us at that time had reference not to a power company but to the question of capitalization of companies. The labourer is worthy of his hire; the engineer with courage, vision and foresight who foresees great possibilities is entitled to just compensation for his efforts. When the public subscribes money to make possible the development of a great enterprise it is very often given an interest in the common shares of the corporation in order to make the proposition sufficiently attractive to induce them to advance their money so as to carry on the undertaking. The next question is: To what extent should those who promote the undertaking and foresee its possibilities be compensated for their foresight, their knowledge and their effort? That question has not yet been answered. It is now more than fifteen years since I stated my views in the House of Commons that something should be done by parliament to indicate the extent to which the free distribution of shares to promoters should take place, and thereafter become the basis upon which rates for a public necessity such as electric current are established. There can be nothing more important; it is important in Manitoba; it is important in Alberta; it is important in British Columbia, and it is important in these great central provinces. There can be no doubt as to the right of the promoter to just compensation for his efforts. But what is just compensation; what is fair compensation; what is a just recognition of the services rendered by the promoter? Mark you, the promoter renders a distinct service; he has had vision and foresight, courage and enterprise, and it has been through his persuasive powers that others have been induced to enter into the undertaking and to provide capital so that it may flourish and develop into a great and powerful undertaking. But, there must be a limit to it, and when that limit may be controlled and is not controlled I attach the responsibility to the government. When the government of this country had the opportunity to exercise control; when they granted permission to this corporation to carry on its operations—for, mark you, it could not function for one day and could not market a kilowatt of power without approval by the government of its plans to divert water from the lakes and stream above to the lakes and stream below—it should have exercised that control. In the face of the story we heard to-day the present situation constitutes an outrageous proposition. In my professional career I have had to do with a great many such enterprises, and I have an idea of what would be just compensation for men who promote, foresee and have vision. When it comes to talking in terms such as we heard this afternoon, will any member of the house say that the consuming public is getting a fair deal? Is the consuming public getting a fair chance to have the rates controlled and the prices fixed for power which is absolutely essential to the development of the country? In the light of what was stated this afternoon, will any member stand in his place and say that the promoter's compensation is just when we begin to talk about a hundred million dollars? It staggers our imagination.

I must confess I had no conception that these figures ran into the millions that they do until I heard the hon. gentlemen make statements this afternoon, and I took the trouble to investigate some of those statements. I find the situation to be simply this, that the gentleman who was the president of the enterprise at the time of the application to this government is no longer the president. He retired, and at the time of his retirement it was openly stated in the public press that he offered to buy or sell, and that he sold his interest in the company for upwards of $3,500,000. He thought that the public were being asked to pay too much to the promoters. I ask the government: What steps were taken to provide for the regulation of rates; what steps were taken to provide against the overcapitalization of this enterprise? I read and re-read the conditions imposed by this government. And what conditions did the government impose: (a) for the regulation of rates; and (b) over the capitalization of the enterprise? None. And so with unrestrained activity this corporation, with the sanction of the government through the offices of the Secretary of State, with three management shares, for a period of ten years is under the control of three men, one of whom is a member of the Montreal harbour commission, and no restrictions, restraints or conditions are imposed by the government of Canada upon the exercise of powers which touch vitally the lives of hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of people. I wonder if hon. gentlemen realise what it means when they talk about 2,000,000 horse power. Do hon. gentlemen appreciate or understand what the development of this great valley means in industrial life? It means the bulding up of great industries and the creating and promoting of Canadian life. This country can become one of the greatest countries on the face of the globe if we but utilise the vast resources we have at hand. I fancy, however, that there will not be a Canadian who when reading the story placed on Hansard this afternoon will not regard such action as described a menace to the industrial and economic development of Canada. I make that statement in all sincerity, because I have made it my business to look into the relation between electric power and development. I have studied it. I would ask hon. members to notice the United States across the line; take note of the power they have at Niagara, and compare that power and its possibilities of development with the possibilities which exist in Great Britain. Instead of the British industrialist being able to have an electric motor attached to every shaft in his factory as is the case in the United States, he has to depend upon steam for the development of power. In Great Britain the water power is very limited; there is practically no hydro-electric energy, and they have not yet solved the problem of cheap power as we understand it here. Within a radius of a few hundred miles of the city of Buffalo, 500,000 horse power is available. Go into the modern plant and see there the electric motor attached to every machine; with a twist of the wrist the machine stops, and with another twist it starts. There is no question but that there is a great loss of energy involved in the use of steam power. In this country we are able to utilise the great forces of nature to the maximum and in this way we can produce power cheaply.

But what position are we in? The power that once belonged to Canada and to all the people—and I have a very strong conviction when I use those words—has now passed irrevocably out of our hands. The price at which that power is to be sold for Canadian development is to be passed upon by three managers for the next ten years. That is what it means.

Let us look at this thing fairly. There are the names of the persons concerned; some of them are friends of mine. Does that deter me from the discharge of my public duty here? It does not. My public duty here is to point out just what I am pointing out to this country, that the power development of the great natural resources of power and energy that infuse life into factories and make them efficient instruments for the purpose of making this country great, can come about only by a realization that this development must be under terms and conditions that enable such power to be available to the Canadian people on the cheapest possible terms. These resources are held by us from Providence in trust, not for the few but for all; they are held in trust for the Canadian people and not for the few. I am the last man who would deny to the man with enterprise, initiative and courage just compensation for his efforts, but I ask any hon. gentleman sitting opposite, whether he be a capitalist or otherwise, to read the figures given this afternoon and say whether this country of ours has had a fair deal. We are the beneficiaries; the crown in the right of the Dominion has been the trustee; they and they only could grant the permission, and when they granted that permission did they impose a single restriction or condition that would secure to posterity and to this generation as well the use of that great natural power given to us by Providence, the extent and value of which is such that it should make Canada equal any nation in the world?

That is the question. When we talk as we have been talking about the necessity for protection and why it is necessary to put ourselves on terms of even and fair competition with those who are carrying on mass production in other countries we must remember that one of the most valuable factors, namely the great hydro-electric possibilities of Canada, is now passing out of our hands and cheap production is then rendered less and less possible. I say, sir, that while I sat in my place and listened, as I did this afternoon for the first time, to those speakers and remembered what I have read as to the prices at which securities upon the stock exchanges are being sold, I realized that in its possibilities this was one of the most gigantic enterprises this country has ever had to consider, and the question is well worthy of the consideration of parliament even if it were the day before dissolution.. I am only sorry that it should not have been considered before this. I have been recreant to my duty in that it has not been so considered, and after all I heard during this discussion this afternoon I realized that fact.

I do think, and I say it to the Prime Minister, that this matter should be the subject of judicial inquiry. It should be inquired into; there have been statements made which necessitate that procedure being adopted. why should $3,500,000 be spent for little or nothing? What is the reason for this vast financial scheme? Why, there are now several thousand shares apparently available for sale on the market at $15 per share which, in itself as you will observe, involves a vast sum of money. What is the reason for these things being done without our having some knowledge of just what Mr. Sweezey meant when he pointed out what had to be done in order to secure the results which he has attained? Why was the opinion of the engineers disregarded; why is it that to-day we find, when we are on the eve of great developments in this country, that the very same engineer travels up to Hamilton and makes a statement that is consistent only with the minority view adopted in this particular case?

Then there is another matter. In western Canada the ramifications of this undertaking have been felt. I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals: What about the foreign press; who controls it? I ask him that question.

Mr. CRERAR: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that I do not control it.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say the hon. member did control it. I asked him who did; I asked him why Senator McDougald travelled out there.

Mr. CRERAR: I can say to my hon. friend that I do not know who controls it.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course I accept my hon. friend's statement as to that, but apparently those near to him have seen to it that he does not know. Why the sudden change in policy in that press? Who controls it to-day? Who was sent out there by the interests in Montreal to make the transfer? Let us have that question investigated and answered also. All I can say, sir, is that while there is no opportunity here this day, in this house, to make this investigation, there will come a time when this matter will be investigated and made known to the Canadian people. That is as certain as anything in the world.

Go to the United States and watch what they are doing there. We talk about our institutions; the United States Senate lays bare everything. What are we doing in this country? We are pussyfooting about matters of this kind, because men think that your friend or my friend may be associated with this matter, and we have not the courage to stand up and talk about it. Well, sir, I value my position in public life, but I would rather be relegated to private life and be there forever than remain silent on an occasion of this kind.

That is what I have to say; let there be no misunderstanding about it. It may mean that I will be subjected to the threats of the great financial powers that are behind this venture. I snap my fingers; that is my answer, and I want the Minister of Railways to go out and investigate and answer to the people of western Canada as to who is responsible for the transfer and sale of the foreign press, so-called, in the city of Winnipeg. Let him go out there and see who is responsible for the references made in these papers now. Bring them home. We know where they stood when the Seven Sisters matter was up. Go find where they are now. There was bound to come a time in the history of this country when we would have what they call a "show down", and now the time has come.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, when I contemplate this matter and when I regard all that is involved in it, not to thousands but to millions of people who some day will fill this great valley around the St. Lawrence, which might become one of the greatest industrial centres in America—the Ruhr of Canada; when I contemplate what those figures meant this afternoon, my feeling of resentment gets the better of me. I ask hon. gentlemen if this thing is to be tolerated. It rests with us, with each of us, to say whether or not it shall be tolerated, and I believe that in the end the common sense of the Canadian people will prevail and that, great and powerful though the promoters have been, they are not sufficiently powerful to control the common sense of the people of Canada.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to adopt the tone of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett); I will discuss this matter in a very cool and, as much as possible, legal manner. One would be rather surprised, having listened to the very warm statement of the leader of the opposition as to our trusteeship in the natural resources of Canada, to recall that when the hon. gentleman had executive responsibility for a short time in 1926, one of the main things to which my hon. friend and his then associates directed their attention was to give away the Carillon power, by order in council.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman is not quite right.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANNON: What about the high moral ground taken to-night by my hon. friend?

Mr. BENNETT: That is hardly correct; that is not a correct statement, as the documents will show.

Mr. CANNON: I know whereof I speak, and I may say to the house that one of the few things the shadow government did—the shadow government of which the hon. leader of the opposition was one of the main ornaments—was to give away the Carillon power site. Evidently gentlemen on the other side have decided to play a game of bluff in connection with this matter. Well, let us call their bluff and examine the question as it should be examined. If the hon. gentleman was serious and in earnest, if he really wanted this order in council cancelled, he is enough of a lawyer to know that the proper procedure is not the one suggested this afternoon.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not suggest cancellation.

Mr. CANNON: He knows there is another procedure to be adopted.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not suggest the cancellation.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend did not suggest cancellation, then he does not agree with the other speakers who preceded him.

Mr. BENNETT: There was not a word said by me about cancellation.

Mr. CANNON: If he does not want cancellation, then what was he talking about a minute ago?

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad the hon. gentleman has mentioned this matter. I am enough of a lawyer to know that there could not be a cancellation of that agreement because third parties have acquired rights under it, and bonds have been sold. I did not suggest that, but I did suggest that an inquiry should be made.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend, having said that this was a tremendous scandal, having expressed his indignation, now says that things have to remain the way they are. That goes to show how much in earnest the hon. gentleman was.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. minister will have to do a lot better than that.

Mr. CANNON: The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) mentioned the reference made to the supreme court, and told us about what had taken place during the fifteen days. I do not intend to go into detail, but I may say that the questions put to the court in connection with this reference had been agreed to after several conferences by counsel for both the Dominion and the provinces.

Mr. RYCKMAN: That statement is not correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I have the right to correct the Solicitor General. I think he will concede that objection was taken to the questions, and those objections are on record.

Mr. CANNON: Objections were taken, but the questions were finally settled upon after several conferences, the last of which was held in my own office, presided over by myself, so I must know what I am talking about. The matter before the court was not a question as to the ownership of the bed of rivers or the ownership of the ordinary water-powers on navigable rivers within a province, but dealt mostly with the ownership of power developed as a result of navigation works undertaken by the Dominion government. That question has not been settled by the court, but my hon. friend is now contending that in so far as the water-powers of Ontario and Quebec are concerned, on the St. Lawrence or on other navigable rivers, those provinces are to be placed in a position of inferiority to the other provinces of this Dominion. Are not these two central provinces entitled to their natural resources as are Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and the western provinces?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The comparison made by the hon. Solicitor General is not a fair one; this is an international stream, not a national one.

Mr. CANNON: Can we contend that the St. Lawrence river, in so far as the Canadian section is concerned, is to be considered as international, and are we to cede our interests in it and say that we cannot deal with that section of the St. Lawrence without consulting the American government or the American people?

An hon. MEMBER: Never.

Mr. CANNON: I am not in favour of that. The Canadian section is Canadian and should be dealt with by Canadians in the interests of Canada. I will not agree with the theory advanced this afternoon by the hon. member for Toronto that because of treaties passed one hundred years ago, which gave to Americans the right of free navigation on the St. Lawrence river, we have to consult them when we want to deal with the Canadian section of our principal river.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I advanced no such theory.

Mr. CANNON: I think the people of Canada will be behind me and not behind the hon. member for Toronto in this connection.

The Beauharnois company is not the only one exploiting power in Canada—there are many others. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec claim that the water-powers within their boundaries are part of their natural resources, and the provincial governments claim the right to dispose of them. Are we as a Dominon government going into the power business to compete with the provincial governments? I think that would be a very dangerous policy to adopt. If we are going to leave to the provinces in the future as we have done in the past, the disposal of their natural resources, are we going to dictate to them whether those resources should be handled by public or by private ownership?

Mr. RYCKMAN: You went to the supreme court to have it decided that you could.

Mr. CANNON: That is another matter. Are we as a parliament going to tell the province of Ontario that the public ownership is bad and that private ownership should be adopted? Are we, on the other hand, going to turn around and tell the province of Quebec that public ownership is preferable to private ownership and that, therefore, they must change the whole basis of their hydro-electric development? The thing is absurd.

Mr. BENNETT: No one has suggested that.

Mr. CANNON: If no one has suggested that, then why talk about our common heritage having been given away?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is simple.

Mr. CANNON: The Quebec government has granted this lease, as it has granted other similar leases, and has adopted, whether rightly or wrongly, a policy of private ownership as being the proper way to develop power. Are we going to wipe out provincial autonomy? Canada is composed of nine provinces; there is a federal government and there are nine provincial governments—are those provincial governments to be recognized or are they as entities to be wiped out? If they are to be wiped out, very good, but if they are to be recognized, provincial autonomy has to be recognized in every branch and in every part of Canada, in the west, in the east and in the central portions.

Mr. IRVINE: What would have happened had the order in council not been granted?

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend has asked a very pertinent question. The rights exercised by the province of Quebec in connection with the Beauharnois company are subject to and restricted by the paramount right of Canada as to navigation. Whenever power is to be developed by a province, either through a hydro commission or through a private company, that development cannot take place unless and until the Dominion government is satisfied that the interests of navigation are protected. In the order in council which was passed conditions were laid down to protect navigation on the St. Lawrence, not only for the present but in the future. We have never done anything more than that. If we are going to change the law, very well, but so long as the law remains as it is to-day, we cannot do anything more than that.

The hon. gentleman mentioned the finances of this company and spoke of fraud and false representations. I am not here to defend that particular financial group; if they have done anything wrong, let them be punished. However, I think every hon. member of this house knows that the administration of justice in Canada is in the hands of the attorneys general of the different provinces. If these people have committed fraud, it is for the Attorney General of Ontario or the Attorney General of Quebec to prosecute. That is another well recognized principle of constitutional administration. It is very well for the hon. gentleman to talk about a gigantic swindle; to talk about unfair rights; to talk about the public being crushed. If that were so, could the leader of the opposition explain why so astute a gentleman as Mr. Ferguson, premier of Ontario, would make a deal with those people for power for his province?

Mr. BENNETT: He cannot get it anywhere else.

Mr. CANNON: If what the leader of the opposition said were true, how could Mr. Ferguson make a deal for 250,000 horsepower with this syndicate?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): To help the consumer by financing it.

Mr. CANNON: But if the rates were so high, if people were to be crushed, how could Mr. Ferguson, who has public ownership in Ontario, be able to buy from a privately owned company power at a rate which would emable him to sell that power in Ontario? The whole thing is ridiculous when you come to think of it.

This is my last word. The leader of the opposition is more familiar with the financial world than I am, unfortunately for myself, I shall admit; but when I was listening this afternoon to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) giving the names of the financial firms which were interested in this Beauharnois issue, I said to myself: Since when have these people become dishonoured? They are the leaders of our financial world. Since when have they become thieves? Since when have they done things by reason of which the Canadian people should withdraw their confidence and trust in them? They are the leading financial houses of Toronto, Montreal and all our other great centres. Will the hon. gentleman dare say those people are not honest? I know he will not.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not.

Mr. CANNON: And the hon. member would not.

Mr. JACOBS: It would be dangerous to do so.

Mr. BENNETT: Not one bit. I am not afraid of the danger.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman will remember that we gave the same trust and held the same opinion of honesty with regard to some of the other brokerage houses in the country.

Mr. CANNON: This is not a brokerage house. These are people who have been dealing with the Canadian public for years. It is easy to rise in one's place in the house and try to throw suspicion, but we must have something more serious than that before cancelling an agreement of this kind.

Mr. RYCKMAN: These honourable people, against whom I shall not say a word, state that the hon. member's government has given them 2,000,000 horsepower.

Mr. CANNON: They do not say that.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Yes, they do.

Mr. CANNON: They do not say it and they cannot say it. They say they hope they may get it, but we have to stand by what we have done and not by what people say we might do. What we did was to protect the interests of navigation; we refused to give the complete flow of the St. Lawrence when they asked for it, and what we shall do after the election, because again we shall have the executive authority, will be to protect the interests of navigation.

Mr. IRVINE: Would the hon. member explain the purpose of the joint commission that was appointed to investigate the whole power question on this river and the reason for the government's disregard of the recommendations of that commission, because the charge was made that they disregarded them?

Mr. CANNON: First of all, this being a technical question, I do not know that I can answer my hon. friend very well; but as to the other part of his question, when he speaks about disregarding recommendations, I may say that we did not disregard them; on the contrary we adopted the plan in favour of which the majority of the Canadian engineers stood.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What about the joint board?

Mr. CANNON: I am talking about Canadians dealing with Canadian affairs.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. gentleman shall have leave to withdraw his motion?

Motion (Mr. Gardiner) withdrawn.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EGG GRADING REGULATIONS

Mr. ROWE:

1. Have any charges been laid against one Wesley Hamilton of Chesterville, Ontario, for infractions of the regulations respecting the grading of eggs?
2. Did the said charges come to trial?
3. If not, on whose instructions were the said charges withdrawn?
4. Why were the said charges withdrawn?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. Yes, one—the purchasing of eggs at a flat rate in lots of fifteen dozen.
2. No.
3. Deputy minister.
4. The regulations provide that clause 10 (1), the return of the graded payment, shall not apply when producers market their eggs in less than fifteen dozen in any one day.

The charge was withdrawn because it was not deemed advisable to press the charge on a technicality (that is the buying of one egg more at a time, without grading, than the law actually permits), Mr. Hamilton advising that he misunderstood the regulations in the belief that the purchase of an even fifteen dozen was within the law.

PATROL BOAT PHALAROPE

Mr. GRIMMER:

1. Were any repairs made to fishing patrol boat, Phalarope, in the year 1929?
2. If so, who made the repairs, and what was the total cost?
3. What was the nature of the said repairs: (a) to the hull; (b) to the machinery?
4. Was a new engine or other machinery installed?
5. If so, what was the cost of installation?
6. Were tenders called for the new engine?
7. If not, why were tenders not called for?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. Yes. New engine installed.
2. Installation of engine by Saint John Dry Dock and Ship Building Company, Saint John, N.B. Cost $2,195. Engine purchased from Canadian Fairbanks Morse Company, Saint John, N.B. Cost $5,265. Total cost, $7,460.
3. Answered by No. 1.
4. Answered by No. 1.
5. Answered by No. 2.
6. Yes.
7. Answered by No. 6.

GRANDE ANSE—ARICHAT MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton):

1. How many tenders were received by the Post Office Department regarding mail contract, Grand Anse to Arichat?
2. What are the names of the respective tenderers?
3. What was the amount of each tender?
4. What are the securities of the successful tenderer?
5. Why was the old contractor, Nicholas Poirier, not given a chance to renew his contract?
6. Were the tenders closed on January 17th, and the contracts not awarded until March 20th?
7. If so, what was the reason of the delay?
8. Will the government table all correspondence, letters, telegrams, etc., in reference to the above contract?

Mr. VENIOT:

2 and 3.

| Charles Linden | $ 1,270 |
| Jeffrey H. Poirier | 1,270 |
| Nicholas T. Poirier | 1,325 |
| George Landry | 1,400 |
| Alex. Marchand | 1,500 |
| Amédée Emile Poan | 1,790 |
| Arthur Hureau | 1,900 |
| W. J. Doiron (late) | 1,565 |

4. Allen Morrison and Alfred Linden
5. Department decided to invite tenders.
6 and 7. Tenders closed on 17th January and contract awarded on 11th March, 1930.
8. Yes. These documents will be laid on the table as soon as they can be prepared.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Customs tariff—388d. Iron or steel angles, beams, channels, columns, girders, joists, piling, tees, zees, and other shapes or sections, punched, drilled or further manufactured than hot rolled or cast, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

[Mr. Grimmer.]

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose last night, we were considering item 388(d).

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I would like the Minister of Railways to move for me an amendment that the British preference rate be 15 per cent instead of 10 per cent. This is the wide n.o.p. item of finished construction steel and it includes a very extensive range of articles.

Mr. BENNETT: Was this change recommended by the Tariff Advisory Board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are the importations?

Mr. DUNNING: The importations were $165,000, of which $60,000 came from the United States.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—389. Provided: That upon any article or commodity enumerated in tariff items 377, 377a, 378a, 378b, 378c, 388a, 388b and 388c of this schedule, not being of greater value than 6½ cents per pound, there shall be levied, collected and paid, under regulations prescribed by the minister, in addition to the rates of customs duties enumerated in such said tariff items, an ad valorem surtax of five per centum when any such said article or commodity contains:

(a) Vanadium, 0.15 per centum or more, by weight.
(b) Molybdenum, 0.15 per centum or more, by weight.
(c) Nickel, 0.4 per centum or more, by weight.
(d) Chromium, 0.4 per centum or more, by weight.
(e) Tungsten, 0.4 per centum or more, by weight.
(f) Cobalt, 0.4 per centum or more, by weight.
(g) Manganese, 1.0 per centum or more, by weight.
(h) Silicon, 1.0 per centum or more, by weight.
(i) Any other element, not being iron or carbon, in excess of .5 per centum by weight.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are the importations under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: This is a provision to enable us to take into account the various alloy contents of the different kinds of steel. We are providing for a surtax based on the alloy content. The values of these alloys vary considerably, and some means was required to differentiate between them. This item is a development of the former item 385, chrome steel, which carried rates of 10, 12½ and 15 per cent. As a result of the improvements effected in the manufacture of iron and steel, chromium steel is not now much used. A great many other alloys are now being used. The old tariff did not cover the modern developments which have brought other steel alloys into use. In order to deal with the different varieties of alloys, it is proposed to impose this surtax based upon the percentage by weight of the various alloys—vanadium, molybdenum, nickel, chromium, tungsten, cobalt, manganese, and silicon. The steel industry in general and all those interested are in agreement with the proposal.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If chromium, tungsten and manganese are used in one alloy, will the same duty apply, or are there different duties?

Mr. DUNNING: The tax will be chargeable on the amount of each. If there is 0·15 per cent or more of vanadium and 0·4 of molybdenum, there will have to be a combination of the two.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How is the department to check up on a thing of that kind? Will there have to be an analysis of each piece of steel that comes in? I ask the question only for the information of the trade.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend understands that the application of the proviso is restricted to materials of the value of 6½ cents per pound or less. It will at the commencement be necessary to proceed upon the basis of declaration until there can be evolved for administrative purposes the means of determining the amount of these various materials in each alloy. So far as the industry is concerned, they have all undertaken to cooperate in the fullest possible degree in providing the necessary information to enable the department to function under this provision.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is all right enough for articles made in this country, but I am speaking of importations; how are you going to handle them?

Mr. DUNNING: Upon the basis of information supplied by the industry in this country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Surely not on the basis of information supplied by the industry in this country?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, as to the methods of ascertaining or checking the declarations made by the importer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If I import steel from Pittsburgh containing a certain percentage of manganese, chromium and tungsten, have I to be subjected to the industry in this country telling—

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What I want to know is how is the customs department going to handle it?

Mr. CANTLEY: It is absolutely impossible for the minister or any officer in the Department of Customs to put this provision into effect. It cannot be done. I would point out to the minister one thing. He referred to the old item of chrome steel. That item has been on the statute book for more than forty years. What was it? It was a mixture of chromium and steel rolled into plate for burglar proof safes and prison vault doors. It has not been used for twenty-five years. It was produced by only one concern at Brooklyn, New York, and has not been made for many years. It is impossible for the minister to put this provision into effect. Suppose I bring in an alloy steel with a certain proportion of chromium, nickel and tungsten, which is not unusual. How are you going to determine the proportion of each material entering into that alloy steel? The minister says by declaration. Will he allow me to import other materials and simply make a declaration as to their contents? Here we have something that has been produced by that blessed institution which bears the name of the tariff board.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it has been unanimously agreed to by the steel industry.

Mr. CANTLEY: That story won't go.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If I import this steel, have I got to take information from somebody at Hamilton or down in Nova Scotia or up at the Soo?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then who in the department will be able to tell anything about it?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will see that this applies to ingots, blooms, slabs and billets, hot-rolled bars and rods, heavy structural shapes and shapes less than 35 pounds—

Mr. CANTLEY: To which item is the minister referring?

Mr. DUNNING: To this item.

Mr. CANTLEY: I thought the minister was referring to item 389.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and 389 applies to the materials to which I have been referring, and the industry advised me that as to these six forms it could be definitely ascertained by the customs whether the declarations made by the importers were correct. I have to rely on technical advice in matters of alloy steels, and that is the advice I get from those who know most about it. My hon. friend says that this comes from the tariff board—yes, and was agreed to by those who understand this business and are engaged in it.

Mr. CANTLEY: There is only one way in which the minister can get information as to the amount of the various alloys the steel may contain and that is by taking drillings of each of the bars, billets or ingots as the case may be and submitting them to chemical analysis for a determination of the proportion of each.

Mr. DUNNING: That may have to be done.

Mr. CANTLEY: It cannot well be done in general practice.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend please explain to me why a provision of this kind in connection with alloy steel is included in almost every customs tariff in the world?

Mr. CANTLEY: No, I cannot, because the suggestion is not correct.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has the customs department expressed the opinion that this is practicable?

Mr. DUNNING: No difficulty has been raised by the customs in connection with it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is not an answer. Have they expressed the opinion that it is practicable?

Mr. DUNNING: They have been over all the items, this among the rest, and there has been no objection.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I happen to know something about this business, because I am importing some of these articles, and I want to know how it is going to be handled by the customs. Are you going to take the invoice and declaration of the mill at Pittsburgh? If so, that will simplify it; but if before I pass an entry I have to wait so that these things may be tested, I want to know it.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no question about it. My hon. friend has had experience with the customs in bringing articles in, and they will of course, accept his declaration. But if his declaration on examination should prove to be false—well, he knows what would happen.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Are the customs department going to establish an analysis branch?

Mr. DUNNING: They may have to. That is already being done in some countries.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is the only way in which you can do it if you are going into details of that kind.

Mr. WHITE (London): The member for Lincoln asked a question a short time ago to which I do not think he received an answer. Suppose steel is imported having three of these elements in greater proportion than those mentioned, would the surtax be 15 per cent, or only 5?

Mr. DUNNING: If it contained those elements to the extent of the minimum percentage of each here set out, then that would be the case.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is making a very high tariff. I think it is more than the steel people asked for.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is not forgetting the limitation—not being of greater value than 6½ cents per pound?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not overlooking anything. It is a matter in which I am directly interested

Mr. DUNNING: It makes a great deal of difference.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I know and the chances are it is not going to exceed 6½ cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: In your case.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, not in my case. I asked this question of the minister before, and he then did not give me the same answer that he is giving me now.

Mr. DUNNING: What question?

Mr. CHAPLIN: If three of these elements were present in the steel in the proportions here set out, would the duty be the same or would there be three duties? For example, suppose tungsten and manganese were present, would there be two duties or one? Frequently those articles contain three of these elements; then would the duty be 15 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: I see my hon. friend's point now; I did not get it clearly before. My impression is—but I want to have time to go into it a little more carefully—that 5 per cent is the maximum. But reading the item in the light of what my hon. friend says, I do not think that is clear.

Mr. BENNETT: I agree.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not sure; but as to the principle I have not any doubt.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If the minister would find out and have it specified in the tariff we will know in future just what it is.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, we will let the item stand to clear up that point.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 389 stands.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the minister will find it desirable to know what the customs department ruling will be with respect to it. I have followed this with some care because of a certain experience of a friend of mine some time ago with respect to a particular steel alloy into the composition of which certain elements entered. Certainly as it stands now the item is not at all clear. Is there any necessity of specifying the quantity of each of the elements? Why not say that alloy steel containing these elements at all should pay an extra surtax of 5 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend's mind travels along as mine did when I first saw this item; but the difficulty is in the widely varying values of these alloys.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: Some of them run as high as $30,000 to $40,000 per ton.

Mr. BENNETT: We do not import much of that.

Mr. DUNNING: I will let the item stand and look into it further.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—390. Castings, of iron, malleable, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—390a. Castings, of iron, nonmalleable, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—390b. Castings, of steel, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—391. Castings, of iron or steel:

(a) Being ingot moulds for use in the production of steel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

(b) Being moulds, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In this item you have ingot moulds in (a) and in (b) moulds not otherwise provided for.

Mr. DUNNING: That is intended to cover all moulds made of iron or steel irrespective of their intended use.

Mr. CANTLEY: What are they?

Mr. DUNNING: They are provided for in the tariff at present, and I hesitated to cut them out, not knowing what industry might be affected.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Ingot moulds have always been free. These are moulds that we know nothing about.

Mr. DUNNING: They are covered by present item 456, and came in to the value of $304,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What country did they come from?

Mr. DUNNING: The United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—392. Forgings, of iron or steel, in any degree of manufacture, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—393. Tires, of steel, in the rough, not drilled or machined in any manner, for railway vehicles, including locomotives and tenders: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—394. Axles and axle bars, n.o.p., and axle blanks, and parts thereof, of iron and steel:

(a) For railway vehicles, including locomotives and tenders: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(b) For other vehicles, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

(c) N.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—395. Sections, of iron or steel, not being ordinary square, flat or round bars, whether forged and punched or not, unfinished, when imported by manufacturers of hames for use exclusively in the manufacture of hames, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—395a. Blanks, of iron or steel, when imported by manufacturers of milling cutters for use exclusively in the manufacture of milling cutters, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—396. Pipe, cast, of iron or steel, valued at not more than five cents per pound, per ton: British preferential tariff, $5; intermediate tariff, $9; general tariff, $10.

Provided that, if any country imposes upon such goods produced in, and imported from, Canada rates of duty higher than are enumerated in this item, equivalent rates of duty shall be imposed on such goods entering Canada from such country.

Mr. WHITE (London): What were the imports of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports were $201,000, of which $90,000 came from the United States, $67,000 from France, $19,000 from Belgium, and $17,000 from the United Kingdom.

Mr. WHITE (London): Is it not the case that the proviso was inserted to prevent cast iron pipe coming from France?

Mr. DUNNING: The French duty on cast iron pipe has recently been raised to as high as $18 a ton.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—396a. Pipe, cast, of iron or steel, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why was this change made from specific to ad valorem?

Mr. DUNNING: It is a new item to cover pipe which is cast but of steel. Only within the past few weeks has cast steel pipe been drawn to the attention of the customs authorities as a commercial commodity, and as such pipe seems likely to become very commonly used, it has been deemed advisable to provide for it under this revision. A new item is necessary, as the former term "cast iron" could not accurately describe this article.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is this pipe used for; where is it produced, and is it steel or iron pipe?

Mr. DUNNING: It is cast steel pipe and has been entered in Canada for duty for the first time within the last few weeks, during the preparation of the budget. This is the first time that the customs department has heard of it.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is it used for? Does it take the place of soil pipe?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: The sample which was sent by the Department of National Revenue was of stainless steel, cast, and the analysis showed 18 per cent chromium, 8 per cent nickle and 74 per cent iron. This pipe, I understand, was valued at 50 to 60 cents per pound as compared with 2 cents per pound for cast iron pipe of the same diameter. That emphasized the necessity of making provision for it. I have no information as to what cast steel pipe is used for, but I have learned that already one Canadian firm is making cast iron pipe by a method similar to that followed in the making of cast steel pipe, by gas and oil in a dry sand mould, centrifugally rotated. Such pipe is described as "sand-spun pipe". It is a recent development.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am familiar with spun cast pipe, but the pipe in question contains a considerable proportion of chromium.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, it contains 18 per cent chromium, 8 per cent nickel and 74 per cent iron.

Mr. CANTLEY: It must be a high priced pipe.

Mr. DUNNING: It is.

Mr. CANTLEY: And it could be used only for some purpose unknown to me and in small quantities. What is it used for?

Mr. DUNNING: It was submitted to the customs for entry, and for the first time the distinction was noticed. There was a very wide difference in value between cast iron pipe and this article. Hence I ask parliament to make provision, seeing that an effort is being made to get it into the country, for a classification that will enable the customs department to charge a duty proportionate to the value of the pipe.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not finding fault, but I am seeking information because it is absolutely new to me. I am wondering for what purposes this pipe can be used, and I was hopeful that the minister might be able to give some information.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry I cannot.

Mr. CANTLEY: I suggest that the quantities imported for some time will be comparatively small.

Mr. DUNNING: I would expect so.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—397. Pipes and tubes, of wrought iron or steel, plain or coated:

(a) Welded or seamless, with plain or processed ends, not more than 10¾ inches in diameter, n.o.p: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(b) Welded or seamless, with plain or processed ends, more than 10½ inches in diameter, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

(c) Not joined, with plain ends, not more than 2½ inches in diameter, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

(d) No.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—398. Pipes and tubes, of steel, seamless, cold drawn, plain ends, valued at not less than 5 cents per pound, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—399. Pipes, tubes and flues, of wrought iron or steel, not further manufactured than in straight lengths with plain, swelled or thickened ends, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture or repair of pressure parts of boilers, pulp mill evaporators and vessels for the refining of oil, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: I have an amendment to that item. There is no change in the rate but there is a change in the description owing to a possible misunderstanding of the wording. I shall read the amendment.

Pipes, tubes and flues, of wrought iron or steel, not further manufactured than in straight lengths, with plain, swelled or thickened ends, when imported for use exclusively in the manufacture or repair of pressure parts of boilers, pulp mill digesters and vessels for the refining of oil, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

The difference is that the words "by manufacturers" are omitted in the amendment. Representations have been made to us by people who use these articles that this is a servicing proposition and that the manufacturers themselves do not import them; they could not carry the required range. These articles, however, are imported for them by the firms engaged in the business and the words of the original item would not permit the importation under the rate by anybody else but manufacturers. The organization of the business is such that they are imported by service organizations which carry a large stock for the use of manufacturers.

Mr. CANTLEY: The fact is that boiler tubes have been imported for years and years by the wholesale people who handle boiler plate and boiler tubing, and I presume they found some way to meet the situation referred to by the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: Previously they could meet it, but by the wording of the new item—

Mr. WHITE (London): I would like to refer to this matter of boiler tubes, straight lengths only. Heretofore it has been possible to bring in bent tubes under the same item. There are many Sterling boilers with bent tubes in this country which come from the United States. They have bent tubes of many different types, with many different degrees of bend, and the owners of these boilers will be under the necessity of paying 30 per cent duty or else getting them bent in Canada. The manufacturers of those boilers have the dies which are required for the bending of the tubes, and it strikes me that if bent tubes were allowed in it would be no hardship to anybody, and it would certainly be a relief to Canadian owners of bent-tube boilers.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a fairly big concession to allow them to have straight tubes free and bend them in their own plants.

Mr. WHITE (London): They have to have special machinery for that kind of work. There are many kinds of water-type boilers with bent tubes, and there are many Sterling boilers in Canada. Boiler tubes have always been admitted free of duty. The only difference is that this is restricted to straight tubes whereas heretofore the bent ones were allowed in.

Mr. DUNNING: It was discussed during the hearing before the tariff board. My hon. friend can understand that there was opposition to this item from those who were engaged in making pipes; they wanted the item removed, and they considered that their industry should have some tariff protection.

Mr. WHITE (London): So far as I know, they have not yet been made in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: True, but the pipe people contended that if they got a chance they could make them. They wanted this free item removed in order to give them a chance, and we are advised that they will make the pipe this year. It is another of those compromises between manufacturers, and I hope my hon. friend will accept it, because it would be difficult to widen it.

Mr. WHITE (London): There would be no objection to putting a duty on tubes made in Canada, but in this case they are not yet made. I am referring only to special tubes which are bent to suit certain particular types of boilers, and there are many of those boilers in use.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think the minister had better leave this item. I would suggest that it should read "thickened, with straight or bent ends". It will not make any difference if the item stands.

Mr. DUNNING: When the industry has agreed to compromise between the two classes of manufactures, I do not like to change the item which was so fully discussed between them.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am quite sure the minister misapprehends the facts of the case. I would like to see boiler tubes made in this country, and I hope they will soon be made. Of course they will not be made under an item such as this. The suggestion of the hon. member for London is worthy of consideration; if the tubes come in with thickened ends they might as well be bent to the shapes required. It refers to only the Sterling boiler; the Babcock boiler has a straight tube.

Mr. WHITE (London): The minister referred to some discussion. Did not that discussion originate on the question whether or not we should have a duty on boiler tubing, and not as to whether they should be bent or straight?

Mr. DUNNING: It arose out of that discussion, yes.

Mr. WHITE: As soon as they are made in Canada, I shall have no objection to the imposition of a duty.

Mr. DUNNING: The thickened ends are a concession by those in the business to those who use the tubes.

Mr. WHITE (London): But the thickened ends are only one part of the manufactured article. The thickened ends will be for one type; the bent ones without thickened ends are for another type.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to meet my hon. friend, but I do not think I had better break away from the arrangement that was made. As far as the government is concerned, it is not sacrificing anything; it is merely holding the balance fairly between two different industries within the same group.

Mr. WHITE (London): This matter to which I refer is only for repairs to boilers already installed. They have come in free of duty to start with, and if this matter of bent tubes is not adjusted we are up against a 30 per cent duty.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no difficulty, as my hon. friend pointed out, in bending the tubes in Canada. Why should not that work be done here?

[Mr. J. F. White.]

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, there is a difficulty, and that is just what the minister unfortunately does not apprehend. I do not blame him for that; it is rather a technical matter. Ten times as much labour is involved in thickening the end as in bending the tube, but it is essential that the tube be bent to an exact arc of a circle, and that each tube be bent to the same arc.

Mr. DUNNING: I suppose I will have to take the responsibility with the industry if I yield to my hon. friend's request. The hon. member for London puts it so reasonably that I find it hard to refuse. Can he assure me that there will not be any difficulty if this request is granted?

Mr. WHITE (London): I do not see it. Just to reassure the minister let me say that these tubes of which I am speaking are bent to a certain radius and for certain lengths and sizes of tubes. They are specialties as far as certain makes of boilers are concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: Things appear so simple when they are put up from one side; that is the difficulty.

Mr. WHITE (London): You are getting the other side now.

Mr. DUNNING: I am prepared to take a chance. If I insert the words "in straight lengths or bent" would that meet the situation?

Mr. WHITE (London): I think that would meet the need.

Mr. DUNNING: Would it not meet my hon. friend's point if the words "not further manufactured than in straight lengths" were cut out altogether? Then there would be no difficulty about it. There would be no restriction; it would then read "Pipes, tubes and flues of wrought iron or steel, with plain, swelled or thickened ends" and so on.

Mr. WHITE (London): I think that would meet the case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I move that the words "not further manufactured than in straight lengths" be deleted.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—399a. Pipes and tubes, of wrought iron or steel, brass covered, not more than 3 inches in diameter, and brass trimmings, not polished, lacquered or otherwise manufactured, when imported by manufacturers of iron or brass bedsteads for use exclusively in the manufacture of iron or brass bedsteads, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—400. Fittings, of iron or steel, of every description for iron or steel pipes and tubes: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Cutoms tariff—401. Wire, of iron or steel:
(a) Barbed fencing, coated or not: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
(b) Twisted, braided or stranded, including wire, rope or cable, coated or not, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.
(c) Drawn flat or cold rolled flat after drawing, coated or not, n.o.p., not more than .25 inch in width and les than .1875 inch in thickness: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.
(d) Coated with zinc or spelter, curved or not, in coils, .144, .104, or .092 inch in diameter, with tolerance not to exceed .004 inch, and not for use in telegraph or telephone lines: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
(e) Coated with zinc or spelter, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.
(f) Single or several, covered with any material, including cable so covered; coated, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.
(g) N.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent: intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—402. Woven or welded wire fencing, of iron or steel, from wire not more than .144 inch, and not less than .080 inch in diameter, with tolerance not to exceed .004 inch; wire fencing, of iron or steel, coated or not, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—402a. Woven or welded wire fencing, of iron or steel, coated or not, n.o.p.; wire cloth or wire netting, of iron or steel, coated or not: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—403. Wire, or steel:
(a) Spring, not less than .40 per centum, by weight, of carbon, .128, .116, .104 and .092 inch in diameter, with tolerance not to exceed .003 inch, when imported by manufacturers of mattresses, cushions or upholstery for use exclusively in the manufacture of mattresses, cushions or upholstery, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, I think the minister is well aware that representations have been made in reference to this item and in connection with another item relating to steel, item 415 (c), and I should like to ask him if careful consideration has been given to the representations contained in the brief which was submitted by an industry in which I am interested because it is located in the constituency which I represent. I should like to ask also whether, after consideration, he does not think some change ought to be made. The effect of the changes in the tariff has been to place a duty on raw material which formerly was free and to reduce the amount of duty formerly imposed on the finished article which comes in to compete with the Canadian product. As I say, this matter was submitted to the officers of the department, and I think all the information which could be given was furnished them.

It appears that it is impossible to obtain the steel in question in Canada in the quality and sizes desired, as it is not made here. The use of English steel, if it could be obtained in satisfactory condition, would increase the stock carried here, because of the distance from which it has to be procured. Some difficulty has been experienced in the past in obtaining from England steel of uniform quality and finish to meet the requirements of this business, and therefore it has been necessary to purchase the steel in the United States. It has been shown that this firm has not been taking any advantage of the small protection which it enjoys; in fact it is selling its goods at less than the selling price of the American goods. The industry is not large; but in the town of Gananoque, in which it is situated, it is of some importance and employs 35 or 40 hands. It will have difficulty in continuing if these changes go through; therefore I would ask the minister if he cannot concede something in view of the very strong representations which have been made to his officers and to the tariff board in connection with these items.

Mr. DUNNING: I have had my officers examine the representations of the corset industry with regard to the matter and I must say that I cannot see the difficutlies which they cite. The items affecting the corset industry number some 12 in the whole tariff, of which 10 are free; in fact 7 are free right across the board, and all that we are asking them to pay is 5 per cent under the general tariff on one item, 5 per cent on another and 7½ per cent on a third. The rate of duty on their finished article is 30 per cent, and so far as the industry as a whole is concerned it has 10 free items entering into a commodity which, when manufactured, has a 30 per cent tariff protection.

In regard to the point that the steel cannot be procured in Great Britain, that is a very great surprise to me, because the facts indicate that the finished product certainly can be secured there, and if the finished product can be secured there is no doubt that the steel which enters into it can be secured also, and in that case it would be free. It still remains free under the British preference. I have given sympathetic consideration to this matter but I am sorry to have to tell my hon. friend that I can see no reason for changing the item.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What is the object in putting a duty on material which formerly came in free?

Mr. DUNNING: A matter of switching business to the United Kingdom.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What were the total imports last year of this material?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports were $29,000 worth.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): All from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The hope is that the imposition of this duty will switch that business to the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): These people have assured me that they have endeavoured to obtain this steel from England, but were unable to obtain it in a condition which would suit their special requirements. I should think that their experience would be better than the theory advanced by the minister that it can be procured. However, if the hon. minister is adamant, we will have to accept his decision and suffer the injury. We will have to take it as part of the game.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—403(b). Wire, of steel, flat or woven flat, in the coil, coated or not, .064 inch in thickness or thinner, with tolerance not to exceed .002 inch, when imported by manufacturers of corset clasps, steels, wires and dress stays for use exclusively in the manufacture of corset clasps, steels, wires and dress stays, in their own factories under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CANTLEY: Just a minute, hold your horses.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister be good enough to explain the meaning of the word "single" in this item? It is a new term as applied to wire.

Mr. DUNNING: We have not reached that particular item. You told us too soon to hold our horses.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is impossible to tell what item we are on because the Chairman does not speak loudly enough for us to hear.

The CHAIRMAN: I think everyone hears.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—403(c). Wire, of steel, valued at not less than 2¾ cents per pound, when imported by manufacturers of wire rope for use exclusively in the manufacture of wire rope, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—403(d). Wire, of steel, single, not covered, in coils, for use exclusively in trolling in bona fide deep sea or inland commercial fishing operations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is the meaning of the word "single?"

Mr. DUNNING: It means a single wire.

Mr. CANTLEY: Why is it not used in regard to other wire? What is the specific meaning of the word as applied to this item?

Mr. DUNNING: It means one wire.

Mr. CANTLEY: Why is it not used for other wire except possibly barbed wire?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—404. Springs, of iron or steel:

(a) For the running and draft gear of railway vehicles, including locomotives and tenders: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(b) For the running gear of other vehicles: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent..

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—405. Springs, of iron or steel, when imported by manufacturers of surgical trusses for use exclusively in the manufacture of surgical trusses, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—405a. Springs, of iron or steel, when imported by manufacturers of clocks for use exclusively in the manufacture of clocks, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—406. Coil chain, coil chain links, including repair links, and chain shackles, of iron or steel:

(a) One and one-eighth inches in diameter and over: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

(b) Less than one and one-eighth inches in diameter: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—407. Silent chain and finished roller chain, of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, n.o.p., either chain of the type which operates over gears or sprockets with machine cut teeth: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—407a. Chains of iron or steel, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—408. Malleable sprocket chain and link belting chain, of iron or steel, when imported by manufacturers of agricultural implements for use exclusively in the manufacture of agricultural implements, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: I have an amendment to offer to this item as follows:

That the words "including roller chain of all kinds for operating on steel sprockets or gears" be inserted after the word "steel."

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—409. Cream separators and steel bowls therefor: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409a. Milking machines and attachments therefor; centrifugal machines for testing butterfat, milk or cream; pasteurizers for dairying purposes; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409b. Cultivators, harrows, seed-drills, horse-rakes, horse-shoes, scufflers, manure spreaders, garden seeders, weeders, and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409c. Ploughs; farm, field, lawn or garden rollers; soil packers; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409d. Mowing machines, harvesters, either self-binding or without binders, binding attachments, reapers, harvesters in combination with threshing machine separators including the motive power incorporated therein, and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 6 per cent; general tariff, 6 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409e. Spraying and dusting machines and attachments therefor, including hand sprayers, for farm purposes only; fruit or vegetable grading machines and attachments therefor; apparatus specially designed for sterilizing bulbs; pressure testing apparatus for determining maturity of fruit; pruning hooks; pruning shears; and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. WHITE (London): I suppose the idea in putting these items on the free list is to induce importations from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: I am advised that in some cases considerable business may develop, while in others there may not be quite so much.

Mr. WHITE (London): Many of these items are on the free list already, but I find for the year ending March 31, 1929, we exported farm implements to the United Kingdom to the value of $448,000 and imported to the value of $141,000.

Mr. DUNNING: The intent was to put all these items on the free list as far as the British preference was concerned.

Mr. WHITE (London): I notice that the hon. minister in his desire to induce business from Great Britain has not increased the duty against importations from the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: Not in this case.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Not in any case.

Mr. KENNEDY: How does the hon. minister expect to develop trade in agricultural implements from Great Britain to Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: In some of the items now being made free for the first time it is expected that business will develop.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409f. Hay loaders, hay tedders, potato planters, potato diggers, fodder or feed cutters, ensilage cutters, grain crushers and grain or hay grinders for farm purposes only, post hole diggers, snaths, stumping machines and all other agricultural implements or machinery, n.o.p., and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: I would move that the word "agricultural" be inserted before the word "machinery" in the sixth line.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—409g. Incubators for hatching eggs, brooders for rearing young fowl, and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409h. Hay presses and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I suppose when we have allowed hay to come in free, we should allow the hay presses to come in free as well.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409i. Scythes, sickles or reaping hooks, hay or straw knives, edging knives, hoes, pronged forks, rakes, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409j. Fanning mills; peaviners; corn husking machines; threshing machine separators, including wind stackers, baggers, weighers and self-feeders therefor; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409k. Windmills and complete parts thereof, not including shafting: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 17½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409l. Traction ditching machines (not being ploughs) for use in ditching for tile drains on farms, valued by retail at place of production, when new, at not more than $3,500 each, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I would like to know if any representations have been made to increase the limitation as to valuation of these machines. They are admitted free up to a valuation of $3,500, and the valuation permits the admission of the smaller makes for tile draining purposes.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON MOTION FOR PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL PEACE

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford) moved:

That the recommendations contained in the second report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, presented to the house on May 19, 1930, be concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS: Could we have an explanation so that we may know what we are dealing with?

Mr. McINTOSH: The report is concerned with the motion, the proposed resolution, of the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) as to the desirability of spending one dollar in the promotion of international peace for every one hundred dollars spent in the promotion of war. The committee subjected that resolution to a full analysis, took evidence from Doctor Skelton, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; Professor Mackenzie, of Toronto university; Dean Corbett, of McGill university; Mr. Graham Spry, secretary of the Associated Canadian Clubs; and a submission by Doctor Tory, and came to the conclusions set out in the report, first, that the evidence not being as full and complete as might be wished the resolution should be considered at another session of parliament. Secondly, with regard to the contents of the resolution, the feeling of the committee was that the Department of External Affairs, manned at the present time by the Prime Minister of Canada and Doctor Skelton, was doing splendid work in the promotion of peace at home and abroad, and that the machinery and facilities of that department in the way of international peace should be extended and increased. By so doing it was further felt that parliament might see its way clear to increase its grant to the League of Nations Society in Canada. The grant now I believe is $3,000 per annum. The committee felt that that grant should be increased if the League of Nations Society was to do its best work throughout the Dominion in the promotion of international peace in the schools of this country, primary and secondary, and also in the universities of the Dominion.

Another idea mooted before the committee was that it might be well for parliament to consider the advisability of the establishment of an international library linked up with the Department of External Affairs. If that were done the committee thought that in due time it might be possible to organize a summer school on international relations for Canada with Ottawa as the headquarters.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, those are the main points dealt with in the report, and I now leave it for the house to endorse.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING ORDERS COMMITTEE

Mr. L. S. RENE MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) moved:

That the select standing committee on standing orders be permitted to sit while the house is in session.

Motion agreed to.

NEW ZEALAND TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, might I inquire of the Prime Minister when the correspondence in connection with the proposed New Zealand treaty will be brought down? My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) was to speak to the right hon. gentleman about it, but I fancy that in the multiplicity of his duties this might have been overlooked.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The correspondence is in the nature of negotiations between two governments and is confidential. Up to the present time the negotiations are incomplete, and beyond the statement as to what is set forth in our correspondence, I do not think there is anything we would be justified in bringing down. As a matter of fact I happen to recall that a communication from the New Zealand government mentions the desirability of not making the correspondence fully public at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman will recall that in the Senate the leader of the government saw fit to put upon Hansard letters that had passed between the American representatives and our representatives in connection with the treaty regarding smuggling, even though one of the letters was dated only two days before. This house is still without that correspondence. I thought we should at least have before us in connection with the New Zealand treaty the notice that was referred to in the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) as to the rescission of the order in council being made operative as of October 12.

Mr. DUNNING: Notice was given to that effect.

Mr. BENNETT: I quite appreciate the right hon. gentleman's statement as to the confidential nature of correspondence of that delicate character. But on the other hand the notice referred to by the Minister of Finance should be laid on the table.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The fact of the notice having been given is public now. That notice is contained in the correspondence, a part of which I am afraid is confidential. I doubt if it is possible at this time to supplement the actual statement that such notice has been given.

CIVIL SERVICE

SUPPLEMENTARY REFERENCE OF SALARY QUESTION TO BEATTY COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question with respect to order in council P.C. 1053, which extends the scope of inquiry of the Beatty commission. Under the order in council will opportunity be given to the civil service organizations, particularly the professional institute of civil servants, to make representations before the Beatty commission in order to correct anomalies as to classification and salaries and the alleged omissions in the present Beatty report? That is will the functions of the existing committee still continue? If the Prime Minister will look at the order in council he will find the following:

> The committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State, advise that a supplementary commission be issued to the said commissioners extending the scope of the inquiry to include such investigation, and also the advisability of fixing a minimum salary for employees in the civil service.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think it is most desirable that the commission should hear representations from any of the organizations with respect to any anomalies or any other features which they think should be inquired into by the commission.

[Mr. Bennett.]

POSTAL TERMINAL "A" TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): May I bring to the notice of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) the fact that postal terminal "A", which is the largest postal station in Toronto closes its doors at 7 o'clock every day, except Saturday, when the closing time is at noon. Surely this is not right. I wish to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General also the question of keeping all post offices, especially the larger ones, open till midnight during the Shriners' convention. Postal terminal "A" should be kept open till 10 o'clock. It is beside the mail trains and people coming down with mail find the place closed and cannot get stamps.

The post office is a public utility and the public interest should be paramount. Toronto returns a great profit. Why not give an up-to-date service? The postal revenues of Toronto are about $6,000,000, which shows the need of a large central post office near the depot with proper accommodation for the public using this most important utility.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was kind enough to send me the notice of this question, and during the noon hour I made certain inquiries at the department. Before I read the statement which they prepared for me, may I say that when any large conventions are being organized it would be only right that the department should facilitate as much as possible the work of those conventions in the matter of communication by mail, and on such occasions special arrangements will be made to meet their convenience. Let me read the memorandum prepared by the department:

> The department has for some time been giving consideration to the arrangements for postal facilities during the Shriners' convention in June. Special offices are being opened in the government building at the exhibition grounds and in proximity to the two points where accommodation is being provided by the railway companies.
> Adequate facilities for conducting postal business will also be in operation in the Royal York hotel, where the headquarters of the convention will be located. This office, which is immediately across Front street from terminal "A," will be open at all hours of the day.
> The situation is being closely watched and is being given special study by a competent postal official of the Toronto office. In the event of there being any indication that the arrangements already made will prove inadequate, the department is prepared to take whatever additional steps are necessary to ensure a first-class service.

As regards the hour of closing of postal terminal "A," it may be stated that experience has shown that there is no demand for service at that point after 7 o'clock in the evening. The Adelaide street office, which is more conveniently situated, is open until 10 o'clock every night.

It should be pointed out, however, that while the lobby of terminal "A" is closed at 7 o'clock, the public can obtain access for the purpose of posting mail matter and purchasing stamps by entering the office on the lower level immediately under the main entrance to the lobby.

As regards the hours of closing of the other postal stations in Toronto, these have been fixed as the result of experience obtained by the officials at Toronto and it is not considered that there is sufficient public demand for later closing to justify the department in going to the extra expense which would be involved if employees had to be retained on duty to serve the wickets.

I may add that the whole situation is now being reviewed again, and if thought necessary the hours will be changed.

FILIPINO IMMIGRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart) if he has had any advices as to the influx of Filipinos into British Columbia. According to my information, these Filipinos first invaded the states of California and Oregon. They gave a good deal of trouble in the Sacramento valley. Then quite a number of them moved up to the state of Washington, and as a result there have been some race riots. I believe two hundred or so were driven off the farms between Seattle and Tacoma. Now they are drifting into the province of British Columbia and are entering the labour market. If we do not wish to have another race problem in British Columbia something should be done right away to meet the situation.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): The matter has not been brought to my attention, but I shall make inquiries.

FONTAINE AND LACASSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) to the case of two boys, Fontaine and Lacasse, who were arrested for a milk robbery on November 2, 1929, sentenced in December, the former to four years and the latter to two years. On April 1, two other boys confessed to the crime, and as a result they were convicted, sentenced and are now serving terms. I am informed that a week ago all the evidence was in the hands of the Department of Justice. It seems to me that the case of these two boys represents a gross miscarriage of justice, and I ask the minister when these boys will be released; and is there any possibility of reparation being made?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I am glad my hon. friend has mentioned this question. The officials in my office informed me this morning that this matter had two days ago been brought to the attention of the Department of Justice by the crown prosecutor of the county of Carleton. I immediately communicated with the Solicitor General who has under his control the Ticket of Leave Act, and he has signed a recommendation to the governor in council. I understand it has been passed, in order that they may be released immediately. Meanwhile counsel acting for these two boys is asking the Department of Justice to order a new trial, and I am considering whether this is the best course to take under the circumstances, or whether a pardon should be issued in order to avoid the necessity of a new trial.

RUSSIAN ANTHRACITE COAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. CANTLEY (Pictou): A few days ago the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) directed a question to the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) in regard to the movement of Soviet coal from Montreal to central and western Ontario. Is the minister prepared to give an answer to that question?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): There has been some coal carried from Montreal as far west as Cobalt. It has not been coming in under the subvention granted to the movement of Nova Scotia coal, but I am informed that only a small amount has reached Cobalt. It is not expected that the importation of Soviet or Russian coal will exceed 250,000 tons. Perhaps the total will be about 150,000 tons.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is a considerable quantity.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say to my hon. friend that as far as we can ascertain at the moment the importation of this coal has not displaced any of the British coal. There is more British coal coming in than came in formerly; it has however displaced to some extent American anthracite.

Mr. SPEAKER: Orders of the day.

Mr. CANTLEY: May I ask the Minister if the government intends to take effective action in connection with the importation of Russian coal? It is a serious matter; large quantities of this coal are being offered to-day in Montreal at about $6 per ton, and it is idle to say that it does not come into competition with Canadian coal. There can be no doubt that it does.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend must be under some misapprehension as to the price. I am informed that the price of the Russian coal is almost identical with the price of American and British coal.

Mr. CANTLEY: May I say further—

Mr. SPEAKER: Orders of the day.

Mr. CANTLEY: I wish to say—

Mr. SPEAKER: I am very sorry; I am calling orders of the day. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. CANTLEY: I submit this is a matter of very considerable importance, and I would like to say to the hon. gentleman—

Mr. SPEAKER: We cannot interrupt the business of the house; hon. members are not allowed to put a series of questions.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will have to ask the decision of the house as to whether I may discuss this question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Orders of the day.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): It will be noticed by hon. members that this item 409l:

> Traction ditching machines (not being ploughs) for use in ditching for tile drains on farms, valued by retail at place of production, when new, at not more than $3,500 each, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): It will be noticed by hon. members tat this item is free; in fact, it has been free for a number of years. There is however a limitation imposed regarding the valuation of the machine, which is set at $3,500. As hon. members know this particular machine is used for digging trenches for farm drainage purposes in which tile drains are laid. Prior to the war these machines were imported free. They are not manufactured in Canada; they were not at that time manufactured here and have not been since. The limitation imposed at that time admitted the two smaller sized machines. During the war the price of all commodities rose, as did the price of these machines. The result was that the larger of the two machines admitted was excluded because of this price limitation. The result is that in late years only the smallest machine has been admitted, and those who desired the second largest machine had to purchase a used machine or one which had been rebuilt in the United States and could be imported as a second-hand article. I am asking that the limitation imposed here may be raised from $3,500 to $5,000, which would admit the second size of machine, the same machine that was admitted when this item was first placed on the free list. I remember having this matter before the late Minister of Finance last year; I took it up with his chief tariff advisers, and it was also before the Minister of National Revenue and the commissioner of customs. There has been some difficulty in getting into the country duty free the repairs for the larger size machine; I had this matter up last year with the department in that regard. I believe the only way to remedy this discrepancy and to admit again the machine that at one time was admitted free, would be to raise the limitation from $3,500 to $5,000, and I should like to impress this upon the Minister of Finance.

Mr. McMILLAN: Mr. Chairman, I think the matter which has been referred to by the hon. member is quite necessary, and something like that ought to be done to get these machines into the country free of duty, as they were admitted for some time up to a certain valuation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This is purely a matter of revenue; as I understand it, the goods are not made in this country. Moreover, I understand that a case has arisen where one of the machines which came in free required some repairs, and owing to the advance in price the repairs for that machine could not be brought in duty free, although the machine came in free. Now they have to pay duty on the repairs, because to-day the machine is worth more than it was before. This is a case, Mr. Chairman, where we prohibit an article from being made in this country by putting it on the free list, and when the price goes up there is no redress whatever. Put the duty on, and possibly in time you would have them just as cheap here. Here is a case where free trade did not work out exactly as you wanted it to.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend from East Lambton would give his view on that point.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I think it was a Conservative administration which let these machines in free of duty. I well remember that the late Mr. McCoig had a good deal to do with placing these two smaller machines on the free list, where they remained for a good many years. They are used largely, I believe, in flat lands, the heavy clay lands of Ontario, for tile drainage purposes. I would suggest to the minister that we surely might expect him to be as low tariff as the Conservative party was at that time.

Mr. DUNNING: Apparently there would be no difficulty in administration and only a small amount of revenue would be involved, as far as I can learn. The articles came in before under the item of machinery, n.o.p., to an untraceable extent. I am prepared to accede to the request of my hon. friend from East Lambton and to raise the limit to $5,000.

Mr. EULER: I move that the figures $3,500 be struck out and the figures $5,000 substituted therefor.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I think that will be a great help to those interested in tile drainage, and I believe I am correct when I say that since the duty has been imposed on this second size of machine it has prohibited the importation altogether.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—409m. Internal combustion traction engines for farm purposes, valued at not more than fourteen hundred dollars each; traction attachments designed and imported to be combined with automobiles in Canada for use as traction engines for farm purposes; and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. WHITE (London): I should like to make a few observations on this item and to direct the attention of the house to the situation now existing, although I do not suppose it will make any particular difference. There are features about this matter that should be spoken of, I think. This item has been enlarged, if I understand it correctly, by the addition of the words "traction attachments designed and imported to be combined with automobiles."

Mr. DUNNING: No, that was always in the item.

Mr. WHITE (London): Then I am in error in that particular, but I should like to say something about farm tractors. These machines were put on the free list in 1917, during the war. As the hon. gentleman to my left said with regard to the previous item, this was done by the Conservative government, and in my city two firms were starting to manufacture these machines when that duty was removed, and immediately the manufacturing ceased. To-day there are no machines of this kind made in Canada; they are all made in the United States.

It might be of interest to know just what this has amounted to in the past. I have not been able to segregate these items for 1917 or 1918, but in the last twelve years we have imported practically all these machines from the United States to the extent of over $100,000,000 including machines and parts. That is what has happened since these machines were put on the free list, and that is the usual result when that is done. In that connection I should like to refer to a statement made by Mr. Kerwin, of the Massey Harris Company, before the tariff board. It seems that Mr. Deachman of the Consumers' League had been referring to agricultural implements, and had made the request that they practically all be put on the free list under the British preference and that the duty be reduced to 6 per cent under the other two schedules. Mr. Kerwin replied as follows:

Mr. Deachman has suggested a very radical change, which is quite unexpected as far as the Massey-Harris Company is concerned, a reduction of the 10 per cent items to 6. We just got over suffering from a reduction in May last which was quite a substantial blow, and we did not come prepared to go into this question of reduction of duties. But I would like to draw your attention to one or two facts. In 1924 a substantial reduction of duties was made. What has been the result since? Mr. Deachman says that we are doing very well, but it must not be overlooked that business was good, and a good deal of our prosperity has been out of the country, not within the country. Let me refer to the imports after 1924, eliminating 1925, which was a very flat year. In 1926 they were $13,336,650; in 1927, $18,946,288; in 1928, $29,636,449; in 1929, the last fiscal year, $40,292,889. Now, these are all wholesale prices; if you deal with the figures in terms of retail prices they would run between fifty and sixty millions of dollars. We are losing that much business by the reduction in duties, there is no question about that; if you reduce them further, more goods will come in. We protest against the suggested reduction from 10 to 6 per cent.

Then follows a remark by Mr. Deachman:

Is not the importation largely tractors for farm purposes?

Mr. Kerwin: To a certain extent, but nearly half of it is implements of other kinds.

Mr. Deachman: Are you manufacturing farm tractors?

Mr. Kerwin. No, sir, we were prevented from doing that because they were made free in 1917. If you reduce the duties as suggested in this case, the same result will follow.

The same thing has taken place in other lines. The item covering farm wagons occurs a little later in the tariff, but I may as well refer to it now. The government reports show that in 1928 we manufactured to the extent of $243,000; we imported to the value of $660,000 and exported to the value of $38,000. From these figures it would appear that the apparent needs of Canada were $864,000, which figured out means that we made only 25 per cent of our requirements and imported 75 per cent. The same thing is occurring in the case of binders. It has been said that because tractors are coming in in large numbers they are responsible for this change, but the figures show that in 1929 imports of tractors increased only 27 per cent over 1928, while the imports of harvesters and binders increased 45 per cent. I can remember that there were only a few years ago seven wagon factories in western Ontario, but since that time four have gone out of business and the remaining three are running on reduced schedules. It seems to me that this is a question to which the government should have addressed itself when preparing the schedule. Surely the business enterprise of Canada can handle this matter; surely Canadian brains are equal to those south of the line. If the government were to take hold of this situation we would hear less about unemployment and there would be no need for the issuance of proclamations as to what will or what will not be done so far as unemployment is concerned.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409n. Portable engines with boilers, in combination, for farm purposes; horse powers and traction engines for farm purposes, n.o.p.; and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409o. Equipment for generating electric power for farm purposes only, viz.: engine, gas tank, generator, storage battery, and switchboard; and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. J. F. White.]

Customs tariff—410. Carloading machines and complete parts thereof for use exclusively for loading coal into box cars: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. EVANS: I have no objection to putting elevators for loading coal on the free list, but I would like to see elevators for loading grain in the same position. It is just as hard to shovel grain as it is to shovel coal. In the newer parts of the country there are hundreds of sidings with no elevator equipment, and I think the government should consider putting grain elevators on this free list.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410a. Face loading machines, shaker trough or belt trough conveyors, air engines, flame-proof enclosed driving motors, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and integral parts of all motive power or machinery mentioned in this item, for use exclusively at the face in mining operations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410b. Machinery and apparatus for use exclusively in washing or dry cleaning coal at coal mines or coke plants; machinery and apparatus for use exclusively in producing coke and gas; machinery and apparatus for use exclusively in the distillation or recovery of products from coal tar or gas; and complete parts of all the foregoing, not to include motive power, tanks for gas, nor pipes and valves, 10½ inches or less in diameter: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410c. Machinery and apparatus and complete parts thereof for use exclusively in producing unrefined oil from shales, not to include motive power, of a class or kind not made in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410d. Well-drilling machinery and apparatus, and complete parts thereof, of a class or kind not made in Canada, seamless iron or steel tubing over four inches in diameter for use exclusively in drilling for water, natural gas and oil, and in prospecting for minerals, not to include motive power: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410e. Well-drilling machinery and apparatus and complete parts thereof, and rope twenty-one hundred feet and over in length, capable of drilling wells of two thousand feet and over in depth, of four inches and over in diameter, and of raising and lowering casing over four inches in diameter for such wells, for use exclusively in drilling for water, natural gas and oil, and in prospecting for minerals, not to include motive power: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Mr. SPENCER: What was the necessity of including this item in the schedule; there is no change.

Mr. DUNNING: Just to include complete parts thereof.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410f. Machinery and appliances of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and elevators, and machinery of floating dredges, for use exclusively in alluvial gold mining: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410g. Articles for use exclusively in the metallurgy or smelting of iron, viz: machinery and apparatus for sintering or nodulizing iron ore, concentrated or not, or flue dust; machinery and apparatus for use exclusively in the construction, equipment and repairs of blast furnaces for smelting iron ore, such machinery and apparatus to include hot blast stoves and burners, blast piping and valves connecting the blowing engines with the furnace, scale cars, charging and hoisting apparatus, blast furnace gas piping, cleaners and washers, and integral parts of all the foregoing, but not to include wrought iron pipe or valves 10½ inches and under in diameter, nor structural iron work: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410h. Equipment and integral parts thereof for distributing stone dust in mines: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410i. Miners' rescue appliances, designed for emergency use in mines, where artificial breathing is necessary in the presence of poisonous gases, including high pressure oxygen pumps for use exclusively in connection with such appliances, and automatic resuscitation apparatus for artificial breathing to aid in the saving of human life, and integral parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410j. Miners' acetylene lamps and complete parts thereof; miners' safety lamps and complete parts thereof; accessories for cleaning, filling, charging, opening and testing miners' lamps; battery renewal preparations for miners' electric safety lamps; all for use exclusively in mines: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410k. Machinery and apparatus, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use exclusively in handling ore and other materials to be charged into the blast furnace, from the dock, car or stock pile, at the smelting works: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—401l. Ore crushers, rock crushers, stamp mills, grinding mills, rock drills, percussion coal cutters, coal augers, rotary coal drills, n.o.p., and complete parts of all the foregoing for use exclusively in mining, metallurgical or quarrying operations: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410m. Diamond drills and core drills, not including motive power, and electrically operated rotary coal drills, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and integral parts of the foregoing, for use exclusively in mining operations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410n. Diamond drills and core drills, not including motive power, and electrically operated rotary coal drills, n.o.p., and integral parts of the foregoing, for use exclusively in mining operations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410o. Coal cutting machines, n.o.p., coal heading machines; electric or magnetic machines for concentrating or separating iron ores; automatic scales for use with conveyors; and integral parts of all the foregoing, for use exclusively in mining or metallurgical operations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410p. Sundry articles of metal as follows, for use exclusively in mining and metallurgical operations, viz.: furnaces for the smelting of ores; converting apparatus for metallurgical processes in metals; machinery for the extraction of precious metals by the chlorination or cyanide processes, not to include pumps, vacuum pumps or compressors; blast furnace blowing engines for the production of pig iron; and integral parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410q. Pumps and vacuum pumps and complete parts thereof, for use exclusively in the extraction of precious metals by the chlorination or cyanide processes: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410r. Power driven reciprocating pumps and complete parts thereof, designed for normal working heads of 400 feet and over, for use exclusively underground in mines: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410s. Amalgam safes; automatic ore samplers; automatic feeders; retorts; mercury pumps; pyrometers; bullion furnaces; amalgam cleaners; and integral parts of all the foregoing, for use exclusively in mining or metallurgical operations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410t. Blowers, of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use in the smelting of ores, or in reduction, separation or refining of metals, ores or minerals; rotary kilns, revolving roasters and furnaces of metal, of a class or kind not made in Canada, designed for roasting ore, mineral, rock or clay; furnace slag trucks and slag pots, of a class or kind not made in Canada; and integral parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410u. Blowers, of iron or steel, n.o.p., for use in the smelting of ores, or in reduction, separation or refining of metals, ores or minerals; rotary kilns, revolving roasters and furnaces of metals, n.o.p., for use in the roasting of ore, mineral, rock or clay; furnace slag trucks and slag pots, n.o.p.; and integral parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410v. Buddles, vanners, slime or concentrating tables and integral parts thereof, for use in mining and metallurgical operations: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410w. Machinery, n.o.p., for the concentration or separation of ores, metals or minerals, viz.: flotation machines, flotation cells, oil feeders and reagent feeders for flotation machines and flotation cells, pumps, vibrating and impact screens, jigs, magnetic separators, magnetic pulleys and filters, for use in the concentration or separation of ores, metals or minerals, and integral parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410x. Machinery, furnaces and appliances, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and integral parts thereof, for use in the refining of metals, and for the production of anodes, cathodes, blocks, slabs, pigs or ingots, in such refining processes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410y. Heavy duty mine hoists, of a size and capacity not made in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—410z. Machinery and apparatus, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof, for the recovery of solid or liquid particles from flue or other waste gases at metallurgical or industrial plants, not to include motive power, tanks for gas, nor pipes and valves 12½ inches or less in diameter: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—411. Machinery for use in sawing lumber, up to but not including the operation of planing, and complete parts thereof, not to include motive power, when for use exclusively in saw mills (for the purpose of this item motive power is defined as equipment for driving the machinery of the saw mill): British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—411a. Machinery, logging cars, cranes, blocks and tackle, wire rope, but not including wire rope to be used for guy ropes or in braking logs going down grade, and complete parts of all the foregoing, for use exclusively in the operation of logging, such operation to include the removal of the log from stump to skidway, log dump, or common or other carrier: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—411b. Cylinder stave saws, wheel type stave jointers, crozing and champhering machinery, when for use exclusively in making staves: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—412. Machinery, being newspaper printing presses, of not less value by retail than $1,500 each, of a class or kind not made in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—412a. Machinery and apparatus, n.o.p., viz: printing presses and type-making accessories therefor; electrotyping and stereotyping machines; gun and mould apparatus for making press rollers; lithographic presses; offset presses; book-binding machines; embossing machines; engraving machines; photo-engraving apparatus; machines and apparatus for transferring by photographic processes to plates or rolls for use in lithography, roto-gravure and printing; machines for graining metal plates; machines for sensitizing metal plates; machines for addressing and wrapping newspapers, magazines, periodicals, pamphlets, and catalogues; machines for bronzing, creasing, scoring, cutting, perforating, punching, gathering, gumming, pasting, joggins, numbering, patching, slitting, re-winding, ruling, sheet-piling, stitching, stripping or varnishing; all the above, including repair parts but not including saws, knives and motive power, when for use exclusively by printers, bookbinders, paper manufacturers, paper converters and by manufacturers of articles made from paper or cardboard: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This item covers a long list of printing machinery, and I would like to delete the words "paper manufacturers" which appear towards the end of the item. The reason for suggesting this amendment is to make the item apply to the printing trade only.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BRADY: May I be permitted to bring to the attention of the Minister of Finance a telegram which I received this morning. I do not know whether or not I am in order, but as the minister has mentioned paper manufacturers I think I may be permitted to direct his attention to a very important omission from the countervailing items. The telegram reads as follows:

Please use your utmost efforts have kraft and wrapping papers placed on countervailing list in budget. This automatically raises duty five per cent on paper imported from United States. Paper now being shipped to British Columbia from United States at ruinous prices and we strongly urge application countervailing principle as protection from unscrupulous competition badly needed.

Pacific Mills Limited
D. G. Stenstrom, resident manager.

This kraft and wrapping paper is really a completed article in that very large plant which employs about 2,500 men and the request here made is in accord with one desire to encourage the complete fabrication in Canada of our raw materials. The purpose of this message is to prevent the extensive importation of the very commodity which the Pacific mills is able to produce. This branch of the pulp industry has greatly aided employment and extends the scope of the policy of developing industries in Canada, a policy which I believe the Minister of Finance is just as anxious as we are to see extended in Canada, namely, that the greatest part of our raw materials should be brought to the finished state in this country. I trust the minister will take the time to examine into this very important request from the manager of the Pacific Mills Limited, Ocean Falls.

Mr. DUNNING: Curiously enough I have received some representations on both sides of that question. On going into the matter I find that the whole question of paper should really be made the subject of an inquiry before the tariff board. The items more or less run into each other and different interests have very varied views. I have accordingly come to the conclusion that to propose anything at the present time would be jumping very much in the dark. A hearing on everything to do with paper is, I believe, a necessity because of the importance of the industry and also its diversity which is much greater than I had dreamed of before I looked into it, as I did owing to the representations I had received similar to those advanced by my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—412b. Flat-fed cylinder printing presses, to print sheets of a size 25 x 38 inches or larger, and complete parts thereof; machines designed to fold or sheet-feed paper or cardboard, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—412c. Typecasting and typesetting machines and parts thereof for use in printing offices: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—413. Machinery and apparatus, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and parts thereof, specially constructed for preparing, manufacturing, testing or finishing yarns, cordage, and fabrics made from textile fibres or from paper, imported for use exclusively by manufacturers and scholastic or charitable institutions in such processes only: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is this just a reclassification?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no change except in the wording. The words "for use exclusively by manufacturers" are added, and the words "or from paper" are added in order to include all groups of materials of the same kind.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—413a. Machinery, of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada, for use in the manufacture of nets or netting for the fisheries, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the making of such nets or netting, in their own factories, but not for use in making nets or netting commonly used for sportsmen's purposes: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What change is there in this item? The duty remains the same.

Mr. DUNNING: It is the same except for the words "exclusively in the making of such nets or netting."

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—414. Typewriters and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—414a. Dictating, transcribing and cylinder-shaving machines and complete parts thereof, including cylinders and unfinished wax blanks: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—414b. Automatic teletype-writers and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—414c. Adding, book-keeping, calculating and invoicing machines and complete parts thereof, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Did we receive anything under this item or did we export anything last year?

Mr. DUNNING: Under item 414b, teletype-writers are coming from Great Britain. Under 414c, adding and calculating machines are nearly all coming from the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Did we not ship some of these machines to Great Britain last year?

Mr. DUNNING: We shipped a small quantity to Great Britain.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why did the minister reduce the duty from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no reduction.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—415. Electric vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; hand vacuum cleaners; and complete parts of all the foregoing, including suction hose, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why was the duty reduced from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: People use these machines a good deal and this is a little consideration to help the consumer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was it to help the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: It is a little consideration to the consumer.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—415a. Refrigerators, domestic or store, of all kinds, completely equipped or not: British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. RYERSON: I would like to discuss items 415a and 415b together as they both deal with manufactured articles which are now being made in Brantford factories employing Brantford workingmen, and both show decreases in the tariff, not only in the British preferential but also in the intermediate and the general tariffs. I will read the items, giving the rates of duty under the proposed measure and also under the existing schedule:

| Schedule | British Preferential Tariff | Intermediate Tariff | General Tariff |
|---|---|---|---|
| 415a. Refrigerators, domestic or store, of all kinds, completely equipped or not. | | | |
| Proposed rate | 12½% | 20% | 25% |
| Present rate, item 519 | 20% | 27½% | 30% |
| 415b. Washing machines, domestic, with or without motive power incorporated therein; complete parts of washing machines. | | | |
| Proposed rate | Free | 15% | 25% |
| Present rate, item 453 | 15% | 25% | 27½% |

It will be noted that there is a reduction in all these items in the different columns. In my opinion the reduction under the British preferential tariff will have little effect upon these industries at the present time, because, as I shall presently show, there are practically no imports from Great Britain, but the reductions under the general tariff will undoubtedly assist United States manufacturers and result in increased imports from the United States to the detriment of our own factories.

In order that the committee may understand the importance of this trade, I submit the imports for the fiscal year, 1930, which figures I have just received from the Department of Customs:

Statement showing the imports by countries of washing machines and refrigerators: entered for consumption in Canada during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1930.

| Item | Country | No. | Value |
|---|---|---|---|
| Washing machines—domestic. | Great Britain | 7 | $ 8,628 |
| | United States | 22,995 | 1,565,479 |
| | | 23,002 | $1,574,107 |
| Refrigerators. | Great Britain | 2 | 36 |
| | United States | 18,892 | 1,913,555 |
| | Totals. . . | 18,894 | $1,913,591 |

I fail to understand the policy of the finance minister, or his object in dealing, as he proposes to do, with these items and others of a similar kind, which relate to manufactured articles now being made in Canada. He has repeatedly stated in the budget speech and in the discussions that have taken place on the floor of this house, that the intent of many of these tariff changes was for the purpose of encouraging empire trade and to give the British manufacturer an opportunity to replace, in so far as possible, the heavy imports now coming from the United States. If that is so, why does he propose to reduce the tariff in the general list as well as in the British preferential? What benefit will accrue to the British manufacturer that he does not now enjoy? In what better position will he be to replace United States manufactured washing machines and refrigerators? In these changes which relate to manufactured goods, the whole policy of the finance minister seems to be to encourage and help either the British or the foreign manufacturer.

I fail to note one change that will assist or help one Brantford industry. Why has the minister failed to give some consideration or direct some thought to a policy to encourage and help our own manufacturing industries? If he is sincere in his desire to lessen the imports from the United States, this would be the logical way to accomplish that purpose.

Might I say that I have no objection to the British preference when it does not interfere with and replace the products of our own factories, and take away the jobs of Canadian workingmen. In my opinion our first duty should be to assist and build up Canadian industries, so that Canadians may have the opportunity of employment at home and not be forced to seek a living on foreign soil.

There are other industries in Brantford which are greatly concerned over the reduction in duties under the British preference. I have in mind one of our most important manufacturing industries, employing in the neighbourhood of 150 hands, the manager of which has written me and has enclosed copies of letters written to the tariff board and to the finance minister in which he has outlined the difficulties of his industry. However, I will take that matter up when we come to the item.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I would point out to the minister that a duty of 2½ or 5 per cent may mean just the difference between getting the business and not getting it. I happen to be well acquainted with the city of Brantford. I lived there for three years and know the industries that have been referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Ryerson). I offer this suggestion for the special consideration of the minister, to let the general tariff stand as it was and do what he likes with the British preference. Surely these people should not be handicapped 2½ or 5 per cent in obtaining business when they have enjoyed that privilege before. Cannot the minister have a heart to the extent of 2½ and 5 per cent and restore this item to what it previously was?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—415b. Washing machines, domestic, with or without motive power incorporated therein; complete parts of washing machines: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. GEARY: May I ask the minister if I am right in saying that we do not import into Canada washing machines from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: A few this year, but none last.

Mr. GEARY: We export to Great Britain a certain number of washing machines, and we imported from the United States $1,650,000. The Commercial Intelligence Journal for the month of April has this to say from the trade commissioner in Liverpool:

One representative of a well-known washing machine company estimates that between 500 and 600 electric machines are sold in the United Kingdom each month. Of that number he believed over a third could be credited to American manufacturers, about a third to Canadian, and less than a third to English companies. The bulk of the American sales appear to be divided between three well-known firms, with one company claiming a major share. The English business goes largely to four companies, and Canada competes with three manufacturers.

There is no object in putting these articles on the free list under the British preference because we import none. But why lower the duty against the American product in view of our large importations?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): If our manufacturers of washing machines can compete in a free market in England, is there any reason why they should not be able to compete here?

Mr. GEARY: We imported $1,650,000 of washing machines into this country. Our manufacturers cannot compete in a free market. There are different types of washing machines and some that are produced in this country may appeal to English people. But why reduce the duty against the United States in view of our large importation?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not afraid that there will be any adverse effect upon the industry in Canada. The production last year amounted to about $9,000,000. As my hon. friend says, we imported $1,650,000 from the United States. All the evidence that I have goes to show that the reduced duty ought to be quite adequate.

Mr. GEARY: There are no importations under the treaty rate?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. GEARY: That has been reduced too, I see.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—415c. Clothes wringers, domestic, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman, to add after the word "parts" the words "of metal."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. KAISER: Why should there be a duty of 10 per cent on clothes wringers and washing machines be made free?

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend's colleague sitting beside him could answer that.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Geary.]

Customs tariff—415d. Sewing machines, with or without motive power incorporated therein; complete parts of sewing machines: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—415e. Sewing machines attachments: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—416. Machinery and apparatus and complete parts thereof, including machinery and apparatus for carbonizing lignite coal, but not including motive power, when imported by manufacturers of fuel briquettes for use exclusively in the manufacture of fuel briquettes, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—417. Machinery of every kind and complete parts thereof, and structural iron and steel, when imported for use exclusively in the construction and equipment of factories for the manufacture of sugar from beet root, under regulationns prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—418. Machinery and complete parts thereof, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of fish meal, stock and poultry food and fertilizers from fish and waste thereof, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. SHORT: Will the minister give us some information with reference to this item? I notice that this article was free under the old tariff, and is now made free under the British preference, with 15 and 20 per cent respectively under the intermediate and general tariffs. How many of these machines did we import from Great Britain last year?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is under a misapprehension in the first part of his remarks. These machines were not free in reality. They were free if not made in Canada, and during the last two years on acount of these machines being made in Canada they have become dutiable under old item 453. Formerly they came in under the old item 467a, when these machines were not made in Canada. Immediately they were made in this country they came in under the old item 453, which imposed rates of 15, 25 and 27½ per cent respectively. We are proposing a reduction from those rates respectively to free, 15 and 20 per cent.

Mr. SHORT: I understand that these machines are not made in Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh yes.

Mr. SHORT: Are there any imports from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: Very small. Our imports last year were $121,000, almost entirely from the United States.

Mr. SHORT: Were there no imports from Germany? I understand that several German machines have been imported into this country; not last year perhaps, but the year before.

Mr. DUNNING: Our information is that Germany is now coming into the market with this class of machinery. This machinery, as my hon. friend will see, is for the use of manufacturers of fish meal, stock and poultry food, and so forth.

Mr. SHORT: The importations last year were all from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: Practically. There was a small importation from other countries, but my notes do not give the figures.

Mr. KENNEDY: Had the tariff board anything to say with regard to this item?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, there was a hearing on it.

Mr. KENNEDY: I wonder if the minister could tell me just why machinery under item 417 for use in the manufacture of sugar from beet root should come in free, while there is a tariff on machinery used in the manufacture of fish meal, stock and poultry food and fertilizers? Surely, when you consider how hard it is for the farming industry to get protection under present conditions, there is no more reason why it should be asked to bear a burden of this kind than the beet sugar industry. It does not seem logical.

Mr. DUNNING: In the one case the article of machinery is made in Canada, and in the other it is not.

Mr. SHORT: Is there a Canadian manufacturer of fish meal?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: Where is the factory located?

Mr. DUNNING: At Victoria, British Columbia.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—419. Machinery and complete parts thereof, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of metal keys for the opening of cans containing food products for use exclusively in the manufacture of such keys, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—420. Machinery and complete parts thereof, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of leather for use exclusively in the tanning of leather or the embossing of leather, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—421. Machinery and complete parts thereof, of a class or kind not made in Canada, viz: blungers, vibrating sifters or lawns, pugging machines, slip pumps, wet or dry pans, clay disintegrators, ball mills, clay wheels, pull-downs, batting-out machines, when imported by manufacturers of clay products for use exclusively in the manufacture of clay products, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—422. Street or road rollers and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—422a. Concrete road-paving machines, self-propelling, end loading type, with a capacity of 21 cubic feet of wet concrete or more; concrete and asphalt road finishing machines; form graders; sub-graders; cement guns; cranes, shovels, drag-lines, pull-shovels, skimmers and other excavating and material handling machines and equipment of a full-revolving type; trench and ditch excavating machines, round wheel or vertical or ladder boom, chain and bucket type, for digging vertical or sloping bank ditches; back filling machines and equipment, mounted on self-propelling wheels or crawling traction, semi, or full-revolving boom and scraper type; steam or air driven pile hammers or extractors; well-points; truck turntables; all the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Mr. WHITE (London): With regard to concrete mixers, I have had representations from a concern in my constituency manufacturing machines of this type. I presume the minister has had from them an objection to this item?

Mr. DUNNING: We have had no objection to this item that I know of.

Mr. CHAPLIN: These are reported to be of a class not made in Canada.

Mr. WHITE (London): There was a deputation here a few days ago from some machinery manufacturers, and I understand they wanted to make certain changes in regard to the description.

Mr. DUNNING: Not of this item.

Mr. WHITE (London): The manufacturer to whom I referred wants to have the same change made in regard to this item, and he gives his reason in a communication to me. The change he would like to make would read:

—of a class or kind not procurable of Canadian manufacture.

Is there any objection to putting that in?

Mr. DUNNING: It is simply not possible, I am advised, to administer such a wording. That is the advice I get from my own officers and also from the customs.

Mr. WHITE (London): Perhaps the minister would bear with me for a few minutes. In this communication the manufacturer states:

Under the wording of new paragraph 427—

Mr. DUNNING: Probably we could have the discussion better on item 427.

Mr. WHITE (London): And let this stand?

Mr. DUNNING: If you want to deal with it on this item all right. Your remarks will apply to both?

Mr. WHITE (London): Yes, I will not make a second speech. He says:

We are most interested in Canadian manufacturing industry. Prior to the time the present government came into power most Canadian manufacturers were doing well.

Mr. DUNNING: That was a good start, anyway.

Mr. WHITE (London): Yes.

From that time on very few have made money. Take, for instance, the concrete machinery industry. Two companies have failed within the last three years and not one of them have made any advancement within the last few years.

In the case of our own company, who have plenty of capital, and everything requisite for a successful business, with over $350,000 invested, we have had nothing but our salaries in the last five years. Why? Because there is not sufficient business in Canada to keep our plant working to its full capacity after the business has been raided by unfair competition.

All that the Canadian manufacturer wants is a fair opportunity to secure the business—we can produce the goods of a quality equal to any—and at a fair price to the consumer.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Then he cites certain machines he makes which are sold at lower prices in Canada than similar machines are sold at in the United States. This is what he says in regard to the re-wording:

With a low tariff on machines not now made in Canada, purchasers will take advantage of the low tariff and the Canadian manufacturer will not even have an opportunity to quote and practically all special machinery, sixty per cent of which could be made in Canada, will be purchased in foreign countries. With provision whereby the Canadian manufacturer has an opportunity to quote they stand a fair chance of getting the business.

I will give an illustration of this. Six weeks ago one of the provincial utilities of Canada required a concrete mixer, especially constructed with a loading hopper designed to be loaded with materials located fifteen feet lower than the concrete mixer. This meant a machine equipped with special elevating equipment. A machine of this type is not made as standard in Canada or elsewhere.

Tenders were called—a Canadian company secured the order in the face of the keenest American competition and made delivery in eight days after the order was taken.

—and so on. He states that the proposed change would make it incumbent upon those who are purchasing such machinery to make sure it was not manufactured and could not be procured in Canada before going elsewhere. Can the minister help us in that direction?

Mr. DUNNING: I am advised that the wording would not be possible to administer.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): Mr. Chairman, on that very point, I desire to refer to item 445j. I have had several letters inquiring what is meant by the words, "of a class or kind not made in Canada." I think this phrase needs explanation.

Mr. DUNNING: It has been in the tariff for years.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is why it ought to be changed; it is out of date.

An hon. MEMBER: Why do you want it changed?

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): We will tell you in a minute. Is it left to the discretion of the customs officers to place their interpretation on this phrase? If so, I think it is open to very serious objection. What is the minister's interpretation of "a class or kind not made in Canada"? Like the hon. member for London (Mr. White) I received a letter proposing the following amendment:

—of a class or kind not made or not procurable in Canada.

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult enough now in the department to administer the act under the phrase "made in Canada," and under the tariff changes it has become more difficult. But I think it will appeal to the reason of my hon. friend and the other members of the committee that if you substitute the phrase "procurable in Canada" you certainly put a duty upon the officers of the department that they cannot possibly carry out in a practical way.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): How does the minister interpret these words? I do not understand them.

Mr. EULER: We take the words "made in Canada" to mean exactly what they say.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): Does it mean that the whole article must be made in Canada?

Mr. EULER: The article enumerated must be made in Canada. It may be made of parts that are imported, because a good many plants in Canada are more or less assembling plants.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Last year and this, in connection with certain machines that are run by chain belts, it was brought to my attention that while the machine and complete parts thereof could be brought in free up to a certain price, these parts could not be brought in free, because a similar chain belt was made in Canada, but it was not of the same size as that used in the machine. This caused considerable difficulty. It should be cleared up.

Mr. EULER: It is merely a matter of administration, and I am sure that my hon. friend would not expect me to give an absolute definition in regard to it. Varying cases come up from time to time and each of them has to be decided on its merits. That is all the information that I can give.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—423. Electric dental engines: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—424. Fire engines and other fire extinguishing machines; hand fire extinguishers; sprinkler heads for automatic sprinkler systems for fire protection; complete parts of all the foregoing, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—425. Lawn mowers and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): How many lawn mowers came from England?

Mr. DUNNING: We imported $118,000, almost entirely from the United States.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Are there any imports at all from England?

Mr. DUNNING: If there are they are so small as not to be in my notes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Why is the American tariff reduced; what is the reason in this particular case? Was this before the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: It was part of the iron and steel inquiry; is a 30 per cent duty not sufficient?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am just asking what the motive was; was it the subject of any investigation at all?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, as part of all similar machinery.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Was machinery in general the subject of investigation before the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, for weeks.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I understood the minister to say that steel and iron were, but—

Mr. DUNNING: And everything made from steel and iron, too. These items were investigated.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): All machinery items?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: I understood the minister to say there were practically no imports of lawn mowers last year from the United Kingdom.

Mr. DUNNING: No, not last year.

Mr. LUCAS: Why is a duty of 15 per cent left on under the British preferential tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: They are made very largely in Canada.

Mr. LUCAS: I would think if there were none coming in from the United Kingdom, a reduction might encourage trade.

Mr. DUNNING: I find myself in the usual unfortunate position. When there is a reduction in the duty my hon. friends in that corner of the house keep quiet, and I get the attack from my hon. friends opposite. When there is an increase in duty my hon. friends directly opposite keep silent and the attack comes from the corner of the house.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. gentleman seems to be getting it from all directions.

Mr. DUNNING: The opposition is never from the same section of the house in relation to any particular item.

Mr. LUCAS: I was not making an attack.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): You should be pleased that there is a reduction of 5 per cent.

Mr. CAMPBELL: These free items do not mean anything.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friends would ask questions on the items which are reduced with the same industry they display in connection with other items, they would find out how much difference there is. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee reciting detail when it is not requested, but at a later time I will be able to demonstrate the value of the changes.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have the figures before me for almost every item in the schedule.

Mr. QUINN: Did the minister say that there were no importations of this item from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: Importations to the value of $118,000.

Mr. QUINN: And any from the United Kingdom?

Mr. DUNNING: A very small quantity.

Mr. QUINN: Does that not prove the fact of adequate protection; why reduce the duty?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—426. Ozone generators or airifiers and complete parts thereof, of a class or kind not made in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—427. All machinery composed wholly or in part of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. EVANS: Is it a fact that goods coming in under the British preferential tariff must be 50 per cent of British origin in raw material or work?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. EVANS: What are the conditions governing the clause "not made in Canada?" Does it refer to assembling plants, or must 50 per cent of the material be of Canadian origin?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: For what purpose? This is not a tariff on goods made in Canada; it is a tariff on goods coming into Canada.

Mr. EVANS: I would like to know how it is interpreted.

Mr. DUNNING: It can only be interpreted as applying to goods coming into the country; it has nothing to do with goods made here, as far as the levying of the rate of duty is concerned.

Mr. EVANS: When do you consider that goods are made in Canada? Must they be wholly made here, or simply assembled?

Mr. DUNNING: That is a matter of customs administration. I am sorry the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) is not present. That enters into customs administration with respect to the applications for drawback of duty on parts or materials used in the manufacture of any article.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I wish to refer to machinery not made in Canada, which was spoken of a moment ago. I would suggest that the item should be worded "not procurable in Canada," but that otherwise the tariff item should remain the same. I cannot understand how there could be any difficulty in administration under this item. I wish to draw particular attention to special iron tools which are not made in Canada at the present time. All the larger machine shops are equipped with draftsmen and pattern makers, and in some of the largest industries fully 25 per cent of their business is in the manufacture of special machinery. In this country there are about 700 branches of American industries, and about 70 branches of English industries. The men in charge of the American branches know that they can procure these special iron tools in the United States from the parent factory, and with that in mind they can bring them into this country at a duty of 20 per cent. All that the machine shops in this country are asking for is an opportunity to tender, and nothing more. They do not want a tilt in the duty, nor do they want greater protection. It seems to me that when the department is dealing with this item it should make a ruling to the effect that these shops which are equipped to make machinery should have the opportunity of tendering.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): You would have a tariff on them?

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Yes. In the manufacture of special tools it may be that only one tool is made, and then the equipment is destroyed. Such machinery could be described in the tariff item as machinery "not procurable in Canada."

Mr. CHAPLIN: I wish to confirm the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. He comes from a constituency which boasts probably the largest machinery making industries in Canada. I can illustrate his point from instances which occur in my own shop. We make special articles, and the tools that we use have to be specially manufactured. They are not procurable in the open market, and we have to have them made. In many cases we ourselves own the patterns. Under the present law the Canadian people never have a chance to make these tools because they are duty free from the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They come in at a very low rate of duty.

Mr. DUNNING: Twenty per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Some of them are free.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a 20 per cent tariff under this item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am speaking of the whole range of tools.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I think the minister can readily understand that there are tools which require special engineering, drafting and patterns. In the machine shop to which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) referred 25 per cent of the business is of a special nature. That machine shop is as well equipped as any machine shop in America. It may be however that these machines are standard in the United States, and for that reason they are willing to pay the 20 per cent duty.

Mr. DUNNING: In such case, if goods are made in Canada—

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, they are not made here; they are not standard equipment in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: They are not standard, but they are made here; my hon. friend has told me that.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): They can be made here.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): They do not get an opportunity to tender on this work; all they want is an opportunity. They are not asking for greater protection. We have been speaking of a big shop with a turnover of about $2,000,000, and nearly 25 per cent of the business of that concern is in connection with pattern work. In this country we have engineers, pattern makers and draftsmen equal to any of their kind in the world. I do not think that the department should have any difficulty in the administration of the provision referred to by the hon. member. Surely that can be done.

Mr. DUNNING: The minister in charge of administering the act has given consideration to it, and he also agrees that the words "not procurable" would not be practical to administer.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I do not know why that should be so. Surely it is more important to get work for these industries than to bother with a little administrative ruling.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): You have 20 per cent now.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Yes. We do not want any more tariff at all; it is not a question of tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: Like all things that require interpretation, all these large n.o.p. items, that is, all which remain after everything has been described as accurately as possible, this is the subject of detailed administration and customs board rulings, under section 54. I cannot conceive the customs board ruling—of course, the customs board is like a court and I cannot say in parliament how they would rule on this, that or the next case—an article as not being made in Canada when, as a matter of fact, they know that an institution such as that to which my hon. friend refers is filling such orders right along, or similar orders. I cannot conceive of such a ruling being made. On the other hand, the words "not procurable in Canada," the department says simply, would not be possible to administer.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I am trying to argue the point as strongly, strongly as possible, but it means a lot of business to these industries.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think it does.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Oh, but it does. You know it does; you had a representation here the other day from half a dozen big machine shops.

Mr. DUNNING: I never had such a representation.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I beg your pardon if I am wrong, but I have a copy of a letter addressed to the minister and signed by half a dozen different industries. I can give it to the minister if he wishes to see it.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not see the people.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I did not intend to imply that you saw these people, but this letter is signed by the John Bertram and Sons Company, Limited; the Brown-Boggs Foundry and Machine Company, Limited; Canada Machinery Corporation, Limited; Canadian Ingersoll Rand Company, Limited; Canadian Mead-Morrison Company, Limited; William Hamilton, Limited and John T. Hepburn, Limited. It seems to me it would be an easy matter for the department to inform these importers that they must notify the different shops before bringing in the goods in order to find out whether or not they can produce them. It is not a question of asking any favours at all; this is just requesting an opportunity to tender for the business.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In the case of goods coming in, I should like to ask the minister who determines as to whether or not this particular class or kind of goods is made in the country?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not familiar with the detail workings of the customs board.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Somebody must determine that.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. The machinery must have been working for years, because of the presence of that feature in many items of the customs tariff.

Mr. CANTLEY: I wonder if the minister can give a little information along this line. Supposing John Bertram and Sons wrote the department and said they were prepared to make a lathe of some particular kind, and a little later machinery of that type was entered through customs duty free under this item, what would this department do in that regard.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot answer that, any more than any minister can answer as to what the customs department ruling would be in a particular case, but I can tell my hon. friend what is common sense from my own point of view. As I explained to my hon. friend from Waterloo a moment ago, in my view the fact that the goods are being made or that similar goods are being made in Canada is sufficient.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): That is just where we differ; they are not being made.

Mr. VALLANCE: But they can be made.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is demonstrating that they are being made, the subject of special orders, right along.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): But not the same machines. Perhaps I did not make myself quite clear. There may be an inquiry for a machine of a certain type from an American branch concern. They know they can procure that machine in the United States, but that machine may never have been made in Canada although these plants are equipped to make it, and 25 per cent of their business is special work. All they want is the opportunity of tendering on these jobs. They say that they can make them. We are not asking any more protection by any means; we just want to transfer that work to Canadian workmen. I might add to that list of concerns the Waterous Engine Company of Brantford; they are in the same position, and there are a number of big plants similarly situated.

Mr. MILLAR: What change would be necessary to make that effective?

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Just the substitution of the words, "not procurable in Canada" for the words, "not made in Canada." In other words, these different machine shops want to receive the specifications and have a chance to tender on these special jobs. If the price is not good enough, all right; bring in the machine from the United States, but give them an opportunity of tendering, that is all.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will try to make this a little more clear to the minister. We have half a dozen engineering shops in Canada which are branches of American engineering firms. Supposing I want a multiple punch; the American concerns make it but the Canadian concerns do not make it. That is a machine that will punch fifteen or twenty holes at one operation, or a multiple drill, for example. The American concern makes it but the Canadian concern does not. The reason the Canadian concern does not make it is simply because they do not want to put in the plant to make a small quantity, and they prefer that such orders should be dealt with by the parent house. The result is that all such work goes to the United States. I can point out, in my own experience, numerous cases where that has taken place and where we have had to go to the United States when the machine could be made and should be made in Canada. That is the point my hon. friend is trying to bring to the attention of the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: It has been carefully studied and I do not agree with my hon. friend as to the result, from my advice.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I will say to the minister that I do not believe the matter ever came up in the department before. It may have been carefully studied, but to my knowledge that same description has been there for twenty-five years. This is an important matter. I know from my own experience of over forty years that we buy machinery from the United States which is procurable here if we want to go after it. We can probably get it more quickly from the United States, but I believe in having the law so that a man will not be encouraged to bring in machinery from the United States.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Mr. Chairman, I would like to read to the minister this little memorandum and perhaps it will put the matter more clearly than I have been able to do. It is as follows:

There is purchased annually in Canada machinery totalling many hundreds of thousands of dollars which is built to specifications. In some instances such machines may not have been built in Canada although Canadian plants are fully equipped to do so and are quite prepared to quote thereon.

In place of Item 427 we believe it would result in valuable expansion of Canadian manufacture and afford useful and reasonable opportunity to Canadian industry if the following wording which we recommend wyere substituted:

Proposed Item 427:

"All machinery composed wholly or in part of iron or steel of a class or kind not procurable of Canadian manufacture, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: free; 15 per cent; 20 per cent."

It is only a matter of administration, and I trust the minister will give perhaps a little more serious consideration to it.

Mr. DUNNING: I have.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): You have not the right slant on it, because it is not asking any favour at all; it is not asking any change. This to a number of big plants is a serious matter. This request was presented to Mr. McKinnon of the tariff board, but from what the minister says I assume it never reached him.

Mr. DUNNING: I understood my hon. friend to say that I had received a delegation.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I did say that, but it was a mistake on my part; I meant a letter.

Mr. DUNNING: I received that letter and had it investigated.

Mr. WHITE (London): The minister says that this could not be administered; what are the reasons for that statement?

Mr. DUNNING: The department says that it is entirely too vague.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Suppose you were given a definite number of industries manufacturing this class of equipment, and it be made contingent for these goods being brought into Canada that those industries should be notified; could not that be done?

Mr. DUNNING: I see no reason why that could not be done under the existing item.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): They are not made in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, yes.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): They are special tools and perhaps only one is built. I know one plant which employs fifty pattern makers and fifteen or twenty draftsmen, as well as many engineers; surely those men could be employed on this work aside from making the tool itself.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—427a. All machinery composed wholly or in part of iron or steel, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—428. Traction engines and complete parts thereof, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): What type of traction engine does this item cover?

Mr. DUNNING: The engines covered by other items are traction engines for farm purposes, valued at not more than $1,400, which are allowed in free; machinery for lumbering, which includes traction engines, at 10, 15 and 20 per cent. The item now under consideration covers all other traction engines for farm purposes.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): This item would cover farm tractors?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, not only for farming purposes but for any purpose.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): There is a cut of 12½ per cent in the general tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I am quite sure that the people of western Canada will appreciate this reduction, but there is one point I would like to draw to the attention of the minister. Our municipalities buy the large caterpillar type of tractor for road making purposes, and they have been paying a duty of 27½ per cent plus a 2 per cent sales tax. For the past two years we have been debating in this house a resolution asking that this government give a grant in aid of highway construction. The government has taken the stand that it is not its business to make grants to provinces for road building, and if I remember correctly the Prime Minister stated that that would constitute a vicious principle, one government collecting the taxes and another government spending them. In the purchase of these tractors the municipal councils pay large sums of money into the federal exchequer. If there is any asset that is greater than another it is that of good roads, and such roads should be built at as near cost as possible. I would ask the minister to consider seriously the insertion of a clause which would allow municipalities which purchase these large tractors for road building purposes to bring them in free of duty. The minister is very familiar with the conditions in Saskatchewan and the other western provinces. This is very costly machinery and is used only for a short time during the period of the year when the soil is dry enough for road building purposes. We appreciate the reduction which has been made, but if this government believes that it is a vicious principle for one government to collect taxes and the other to spend them—I think we all agree that a municipality is a government—then a municipal government should not be called upon to collect taxes on road machinery and pay them over to the federal treasury.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): If the hon. member for Last Mountain is advocating a free tariff for tractors for road building purposes, I would say that all tractors for farm purposes should be made free of duty. No tractors of this type are made in Canada to-day, and the farmers of Canada are using tractors more and more. On the farms in western Canada they are beginning to use the larger types of tractors in order to handle heavier machinery, and as no industry in Canada would be injured, I would suggest to the minister that in his next budget, which he will bring down next year, he consider allowing in free the larger type of tractors when they are used both for road building and farming purposes.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: We are not absolutely sure that the Minister of Finance will bring down a budget next year.

Mr. VALLANCE: If the other fellows do it, then you will not get it.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Sometimes things happen even although we do not wish them to, and there is nothing like doing good work at the present time. I notice that this item is free under the British preference, and I would like to know the importations from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Previously this item was dutiable at 15 per cent under the British preference.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Were there any importations from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I would like to endorse what the hon. member for Last Mountain has said in regard to giving special consideration to tractors used for road building purposes. Under the old tariff a rate of 27½ per cent was imposed, and a tractor costing around $3,000 had to pay $825 in duty. Some of these tractors cost more than $3,000 because the municipalities require tractors of 60 horsepower or greater. A payment of $825 for duty on one tractor means that the municipal council must tax the ratepayers to that extent, and it seems to me that these tractors are just as much entitled to free entry as are the small $1,400 tractors for farming purposes. It is true that a reduction of 12½ per cent is being made, but on a $3,000 tractor the payment of 15 per cent duty under the general rate would amount to $450 and the duty under the intermediate tariff at 10 per cent would amount to $300. These amounts must be paid by taxation levied upon the farmers, mostly in the prairie provinces, and I can say that they find it hard enough to get their taxes together for necessary purposes. It seems to me this is one instance where the federal government could give the benefit of complete elimination of this tax to the farmer who is struggling along and trying to make things go. As the hon. member for Last Mountain stated, this could be made to apply only to municipal corporations which buy such machinery for road building purposes. I wish to advise the minister that practically every municipality is at present in or is rapidly getting into the position where it must have its own machinery to build its own roads. I would like to urge that special consideration be given to that point.

Mr. DUNNING: There is an aspect of this matter to which my hon. friends have not, I am sure, given consideration. They are interested, as I am and as all Canada is, in selling, amongst other things, wheat. We cannot sell unless we are prepared to buy. That is the situation at least so far as Great Britain is concerned. This is a class of goods in the production of which Great Britain undoubtedly excels, and we have a very encouraging indication of interest on the part of British manufacturers in this kind of tractor, especially for road making purposes. There is no doubt that if we made this item free across the board no British trade would be developed, and I have strong hopes that such trade will be developed as the result of leaving the item as we now have it. There is a substantial reduction in the duty so far as the purchaser of this article is concerned. A number of years ago in the west two British concerns manufacturing these heavy tractors made an effort to develop business. They learned of course that our system of doing business was different from theirs; they faced the necessity of establishing warehouses for parts and that sort of thing. It so happened that at that time western Canada was suffering from a series of poor crops; there was very little demand for their product, which was a very fine one of its kind, and in consequence nothing further developed. Judging from representations which have been made I am reasonably sure that with respect to this class of tractor we shall be able to import high quality machinery from the United Kingdom, and I am anxious that as far as possible that shall be done.

Mr. CANTLEY: The preference to Great Britain is exactly the same as it was before. Under those circumstances, how does the minister expect any considerable increase in trade from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: The old item was 15 per cent, 25 per cent and 27½ per cent.

Mr. CANTLEY: The intermediate tariff before was 25 per cent. It is now 10 per cent, so that the preference to Great Britain remains the same.

Mr. DUNNING: But as my hon. friend knows, the general tariff is the one that is applicable. These goods come from the United States under the general tariff.

Mr. CANTLEY: Then the increase in the British preference is only 2½ per cent.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Was it not the case that these large caterpillar tractors were used for logging purposes and that they were assessed at only 20 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: If they were used for lumbering, the old duty was 20 per cent.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): And for road building in municipalities, the duty is 27½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: It was under the old schedule. It is now 15 per cent.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Can the minister give us reasonable assurance that there is likely to develop a trade from Great Britain in this large tractor for road building and other similar purposes?

Mr. DUNNING: I can only indicate that the degree of interest displayed by British manufacturers of these goods, both at the inquiry and since, represents a very hopeful feature. I cannot, of course, positively promise that this or that will happen. It depends on the enterprise of the individuals concerned, and also, as I have impressed upon them, their willingness to give with the implement a type of service which corresponds with the requirements of our conditions.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What was the former spread between the general tariff and the British preferential tariff?

Mr. DUNNING: Twelve and a half per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the spread now?

Mr. DUNNING: Fifteen per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister expects to get a big increase in trade on an increase of 2½ per cent in the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: I expect to do two things: I expect to reduce the cost of the article to the consumer by at least the reduction in the general tariff, and to offer to the British manufacturers a free market. They are well aware of the spread which exists under this arrangement, and they are certainly getting ready to go after the business.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I appreciate the remarks of the minister, but the point I had in mind was the one just raised, namely, that with the general tariff, 27½ per cent, and the British preference, 15 per cent, the spread was 12½ per cent, yet we received no importations from Great Britain. Under the revised tariff schedule the general tariff is 15 per cent and the British preferential tariff is free. It is true the spread is now 15 per cent, but I doubt whether the extra 2½ per cent preference is going to draw very much trade from the British Empire.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister has one idea about this and I have another.

Mr. DUNNING: I would expect that.

Mr. CANTLEY: Where is the buyer of the British machine going to get his spare parts if his machine breaks down, and how long will he have to wait for them?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): In the province from which I come the dealer has to have his supply of spare parts on hand when he sells the machine. He cannot sell his machine in that province unless provision is made for supplying spare parts.

Mr. CANTLEY: He will not have spare parts on hand.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Then he will not sell the machine.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They have never done this before, and they will not do it now.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): My hon. friend will find that a lot of trade will come in that way.

Item ageed to.

Customs tariff—428a. Automobile engines and complete parts thereof, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Mr. COOTE: In 1926 there was a reduction in the tariff on automobiles. At the same time the excise tax was removed from automobiles made in Canada. I think hon. members will recall that the minister at that time assured the house that this would not make any difference in the price of automobiles; that the manufacturers had guaranteed that they would not take any advantage of the remission of the excise tax. Later on, in 1928, I drew to the attention of the minister the fact that apparently the manufacturers were taking advantage of that remission of excise tax, and when the matter was brought to his attention the minister promised to investigate it. He wrote to the manufacturers; the replies received—were placed on file, and apparently the matter was dropped. Last year it was again taken up with the minister, and on page 2302 of Hansard of last year I find recorded a letter which the late Mr. Robb wrote to the tariff board. I will read only the last paragraph of the letter, as follows:

It is important that this inquiry be conducted without delay and be as comprehensive as possible.

The inquiry which the board was to make was to ascertain whether the manufacturers of automobiles had been taking advantage of that remission of excise tax on Canadian-made cars costing less than $1,200. The matter was investigated by the board, and I want to quote just two or three sentences from the report.

Mr. DUNNING: What report?

Mr. COOTE: The report of the hearing before the board.

Mr. DUNNING: The report of the evidence?

Mr. COOTE: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want to shut my hon. friend off, but I would respectfully call his attention to the fact that the item under consideration is automobile engines and parts. He cannot complain of others wandering afield if he takes up again a matter which has been discussed once this session and which does not relate to the item under discussion. I shall not call him to order, although I am very doubtful about his being in order.

Mr. COOTE: I have not as yet raised any point of order, I have not taken up much time, nor did I make a speech on the budget, because I knew the government was anxious to bring the session to a close. I shall not take more than two or three minutes. I would ask the minister if he has received a report from the board with regard to that particular inquiry, and if so, what was the nature of the report. I wanted to quote just one sentence from the remarks of the chairman of the tariff board after he had questioned Mr. Russell, one of the witnesses, in regard to this question whether the manufacturers were taking advantage of the remission of the excise tax. The chairman says:

It is perfectly obvious that you could not have maintained that price if the 5 per cent had not been removed from the domestic car and retained on the imported car.

The matter is I think rather an important one. We were assured by the late Minister of Finance that he would make the manufacturers live up to their promise. The matter has been under consideration by the department for at least two years—

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. COOTE: —and the budget was then brought down and no mention was made of it. I just want to take advantage of this item to ask the minister this question in regard to the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: In fairness to my predecessor I think I should correct my hon. friend's statement that this matter has been under investigation for two years.

Mr. COOTE: I said by the department, because Mr. Robb undertook to investigate it two years ago.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but he soon found the complicated nature of it and how impossible it was to get at it departmentally. My hon. friend has referred to a letter written I think less than one year ago by my predecessor or, Mr. Robb, to the chairman of the tariff board. I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that earlier in the session, in a discussion directly bearing on this subject, arising out of a resolution introduced I believe by my hon. friend himself, I indicated that I had made inquiries as to the progress of the investigation and reported to the house that the information I received was that the matter was of a very complicated character, that the investigation was proceeding, and that I could not hold out any hope of an early conclusion, especially having regard to the amount of work it was necessary for the Tariff Advisory Board to do in cooperation with myself in the preparation of the budget. The work is proceeding with the aid of outside investigators, all of whom indicate its complexity and the lack of possibility of coming to an immediate conclusion with regard to it. I can assure my hon. friend, however, that it will be pushed along.

Mr. COOTE: I think the minister is referring to the investigation of the whole matter of the tariff on automobiles. The particular matter to which I am referring is altogether apart from that.

Mr. DUNNING: I am referring to that particular matter specifically.

Mr. COOTE: The only matter we discussed in the house on my resolution was whether the tariff on motor trucks should be reduced. There was no discussion of this particular inquiry to which I am now referring, although I mentioned in passing that naturally I expected the minister would take the excise tax off imported cars this year, because from a reading of the evidence taken before the board it seemed to me that it was clearly proven that the manufacturers had been taking a price advantage of the tax. Therefore I thought we might expect some statement from the minister this year in regard to it.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say anything further.

Mr. SIMPSON: Has the minister figures before him to show the value of the imports of automobile parts that were subject to the 25 per cent drawback?

Mr. DUNNING: I have the figures here relating to this particular item of engines. Our imports last year were $11,700,000. That is the only figure I have here, because no other item is under review.

Mr. SIMPSON: And that was subject to the 25 per cent drawback?

Mr. DUNNING: To the home consumption drawback.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to ask the minister whether his statement is to the effect that the tariff board say that they are not ready to report on this particular reference to them, in regard to whether or not the manufacturers are taking advantage of the reduction of the excise tax. That is the one question I have in mind. I am referring not to the tariff on automobiles, but to the question of the excise tax.

Mr. DUNNING: My advice is that they are not ready to report on any phase of the matter, including the phase to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In the particular item we are discussing,—and it is a phrase that comes into this tariff in very many instances—there are the words, "and complete parts thereof." Will the minister say just what that means?

Mr. DUNNING: I am rather embarrassed when asked these administrative questions, especially when they relate to phraseology which has been part of the tariff for many years, and which has acquired a definite administrative meaning. My hon. friend knows that the Minister of Finance does not administer the act. I am under some difficulty in answering him. I can only say that in this case as in all others the words mean exactly what the Customs department in administering the act in the past has interpreted them to mean in relation to similar cases.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understand that, after all, the Minister of Finance is responsible for the wording of these items.

Mr. DUNNING: What is wrong with this wording?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am not saying that anything is wrong, but I want to know what these words mean, because two or three meanings can be taken from them.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend has had a very wide experience, and I am quite sure he knows much better than I do what the standard practice of the Department of National Revenue is in interpreting the expression "and complete parts thereof".

Mr. CHAPLIN: I had an experience last year and the year before with the executive in the customs department, and I am going to be a little more careful in the future, if I am here, to see that no such errors creep in again. I had experience with the way grapes were handled, and I am a little bit suspicious now.

Mr. CANTLEY: There is a redundancy here; there is no question about that. A part is a part. What is a complete part? Is it not still a part?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Is it a finished part?

Mr. CANTLEY: If it is a finished part, why not say so?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I am not saying that it is; I am asking.

Mr. DUNNING: I only know that the phrase has been used in years of customs practice. If the Minister of National Revenue were here he could probably answer, but I have not the necessary knowledge.

Mr. CANTLEY: The world does move a little.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend does not.

Mr. CANTLEY: You will find out at the election whether I do or not.

Mr. DUNNING: I beg my hon. friend's pardon.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister is stationary on this item.

Mr. COOTE: In regard to the excise tax on automobiles, would the ministry be good enough to assure the house that the board will give a report on that particular matter before the budget comes down next year?

Mr. CHAPLIN: He will not be here.

Mr. COOTE: I do not think that is asking too much. I have been stalled off in this matter for a long time. The former Minister of Finance stalled me off for a year, and then referred the matter to the tariff board. We still have no report from the board although the chairman, whose comment I have just quoted, said that it was perfectly obvious that the Canadian manufacturers could not maintain their price if the 5 per cent had not been removed from the domestic car and retained on the imported car. Will the minister therefore assure us that the board will hurry up and make a report before the next budget comes down?

Mr. DUNNING: I must express my thanks at the confidence my hon. friend displays that I shall be here to deliver the budget next year. I can assure him that I will do everything humanly possible to get the automobile matter in shape so that parliament can deal with it. More than that I cannot say. There is no object in deliberately holding up investigations of this kind; one desires them to come to a conclusion, particularly if he is in a position of administrative responsibility with regard to them. I have that desire, and I can assure my hon. friend that I shall do the best I can. I hope he will remember that I came into this department only a few months ago and a very short time before the session, and it has not been easy for me to master, even as imperfectly as I have succeeded in doing, the tasks of the department. I can only say I am doing the best I can in regard to it.

Mr. COOTE: Then I would ask the minister in the very near future while he is still in charge of the department to request the board to endeavour to have a finding made in regard to this matter.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—428b. Engines or boilers, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts thereof, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—428c. Engines or boilers and complete parts thereof, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. KENNEDY: Some days ago I asked the minister for certain figures in regard to the imports of these items under the general tariff, the intermediate and the British preferential for 1929. The minister said he was giving the figures for each item as he went along, and we could add them up and arrive at the totals. Has he made any arrangement to give us the totals?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. KENNEDY: It is simply a matter of getting somebody to operate an adding machine.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not an easy matter to promise the information immediately when the staff is very busily engaged in this work, but I will endeavour to secure the information for my hon. friend before parliament prorogues. I will do the best I can, without making any guarantee.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—429. Cutlery of iron or steel, plated or not:—

(a) Knife blades or blanks, and table forks, of iron or steel, in the rough, not handled, ground or otherwise manufactured: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

(b) Table knives and table forks: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(c) Pen knives, jack-knives and pocket-knives of all kinds: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(d) Knives, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(e) Spoons: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(f) Scissors and shears, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(g) Razors and razor blades: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Under (a) of this item what were the importations?

Mr. DUNNING: They were $10,000, chiefly from the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And none from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: There were some importations, but quite small.

Mr. McMILLAN: Here is a class of articles that we get from Great Britain of the very best quality, and if we want to encourage trade with the home land, as has been said so often by the finance minister, these articles should be placed on the free list.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Is the hon. member sure he can get those articles better in Britain than in Canada?

Mr. McMILLAN: Yes, that has been my experience. For instance, we get our best ditching spades from Great Britain. Many a time I have waited until my dealer could send to Britain for them. There is no comparison. We should encourage the importation of these goods from Great Britain.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): Would the hon. gentleman prefer to buy them there rather than in Canada?

Mr. McMILLAN: I prefer to get the best I can get.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Many of these things are brought in from Germany. I purchased some time ago razor blades made in Germany.

Mr. DUNNING: On item (b) the imports last year were $558,000, of which $402,000 came from the United Kingdom and $110,000 from the United States. Perhaps my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) is not aware of the fact that the United Kingdom imposes a 20 per cent duty against Canadian knives and forks. That is one of the items covered by the present so-called safeguarding duties of the United Kingdom. Under item (c) the imports were $315,000, of which $205,000 came from Germany and $78,000 from Great Britain. Under item (d)—that was a basket item formerly, an n.o.p. item—the total imports were $433,000, of which $204,000 came from the United Kingdom and $150,000 from the United States. We also bring spoons into the cutlery group under item (e), but I have not any information on the value of spoons imported, because they were not separately classified before. Under the scissors group we imported $178,000, of which $101,000 came from Germany and $63,000 from the United States. So far as the razor group is concerned, we imported $109,000, of which $55,000 came from Germany and $30,000 from the United States. As to (g), razors and razor blades, we imported $109,000, of which $44,000 came from Germany, $34,000 from the United States, and $22,000 from Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—430. Nuts and bolts with or without threads, washers, rivets, of iron or steel, coated or not; nut and bolt blanks, of iron or steel; per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, 50 cents; intermediate tariff, 50 cents; general tariff, 75 cents.

And, British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is the reason for reducing the duty on nuts and bolts while the next item remains practically as it was before?

Mr. DUNNING: It depends upon which comparison my hon. friend is taking in connection with the next item. Of nuts and bolts in 1929 we imported $593,000, of which $570,000 came from the United States and $22,000 from the United Kingdom. This is one of the items of which my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) would say: Of course, there is no chance of doing any business with Great Britain; the imports are relatively small. I may tell him that although in many of these items the imports from the United Kingdom are small, I fully expect that the United Kingdom will be able to take the trade from the United States. This is one of them.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No chance. Raise the American tariff and you will accomplish your purpose.

Mr. KAISER: You have both a specific and an ad valorem duty in this item.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, it is the same in that regard as formerly, but reduced.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—430a. Hinges and butts, of iron or steel, coated or not; hinge and butt blanks, of iron or steel: per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, 75 cents; intermediate tariff, 75 cents; general tariff, 75 cents.

And, British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—430b. Screws, of iron or steel, coated or not:
(I) Wood screws: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.
(II) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I find that item 352b, already passed, reads this way:

Screws of brass, copper or other metal, n.o.p.:
(a) Wood screws.
(b) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.

This item reads:

Screws, of iron or steel, coated or not:
(I) Wood screws.
(II) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.

I am interested in cap and set screws, and I wish to ask the minister if these screws come under item 352b; if they do, I am satisfied. I think they ought to be taken out of item 430b if they are included in item 352b. Frankly I must admit that I do not know which item covers these screws. If cap and set screws are allowed to remain in item 430b an important industry will be very much affected; there is however no objection to their remaining under item 352b.

Mr. DUNNING: The distinction is drawn in the material of which the screws are made. Item 352b covers what is left of the screws after the iron and steel screws dealt with in the present item are taken out. No change was made in the rate of duty under item 352b, because no inquiry had been made with respect to screws of materials other than iron and steel.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think the item of cap and set screws referred to by the hon. member comes under the heading of machine screws.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, they do.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I must admit that I am at sea. Item 352b refers to machine and other screws; item 430b refers to machine and other screws; they both refer to metal screws.

Mr. DUNNING: The two items are governed by the phrase at the beginning. In this item we have:

Screws of iron or steel, coated or not:
(I) Wood screws.
(II) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Can the minister tell me why cap and set screws would come in under item 430b but not under item 352b?

Mr. DUNNING: They would come in under item 430b if they were made of iron and steel. When made of brass, copper or any other material they come in under item 352b.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Item 352b refers to brass, copper or other metal, but does not refer to steel.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Surely that includes steel.

Mr. DUNNING: No, the item contains the expression "not otherwise provided."

Mr. RYCKMAN: Do cap and set screws come under item 430b?

Mr. DUNNING: They do if they are of iron and steel; if they are made of brass they would come under item 352b.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Item 352b says "screws of brass, copper or other metal."

Mr. DUNNING: "N.o.p."—not otherwise provided.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Item 430b refers to machine and other screws, n.o.p.

Mr. DUNNING: They are of iron and steel. My hon. friend has not read the first line. The item is:

Screws of iron or steel, coated or not:
(I) Wood screws.
(II) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.

The first line of the item covers the articles in question.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I will not ask for any further elucidation by the minister. I would ask however if representations have been made in connection with this item. I know of an important industry which will be very seriously affected if cap and set screws come in under item 430b; it will not be affected however if they come in under item 352b.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no recollection of any representations in regard to the matter; it appears to be well understood.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): What was the importation of set screws from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports of iron or steel screws are not separately traceable as distinguished from other screws. I may say however that all kinds of wood screws entered to the value of $25,000. Of that total $19,000 worth came from the United States. There was an importation of $158,000 worth of all kinds of machine screws; of that total $155,000 worth came from the United States.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): How much came from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: About $3,000 worth.

Mr. CAYLEY: I have noticed that the general rate is reduced from 35 per cent to 30 per cent. Has there been a change in the drawback on raw materials? I am particularly interested in this item because we have a flourishing factory at Ingersoll engaged in the production of these commodities.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, there is a reduction in the drawback from 99 per cent to 60 per cent. Representations have been made in connection with this item, which I am now considering. My hon. friend from East Toronto may have been referring to the fact mentioned by the hon. member for South Oxford.

Mr. RYCKMAN: No. I have in my hand a copy of a letter addressed to W. H. Moore, Chairman of the Tariff Advisory Board.

Mr. DUNNING: Under what date ?

Mr. RYCKMAN: It is a copy of a letter, and apparently it is not dated.

Mr. DUNNING: Probably it is an old one.

Mr. RYCKMAN: No. The letter is as follows:

> It is in these circumstances that we visited you on the 7th instant and to ask that cap and set screws be excepted from item 430b (II). If these could be excepted from 430b (II) and made to fall under item 352b such a change would enable us to hold this business.

Mr. CAYLEY: I have had similar correspondence regarding this item from the John Morrow Screw and Nut Company, Limited, of Ingersoll, stating that in view of the fact that they were affected both by the reduction in tariff and by the drawback, they could hardly expect to meet competition.

Mr. DUNNING: I am considering representations regarding the drawback item.

Mr. RYCKMAN: This represents another instance of tariff revision by which no good will come to this country and men will be thrown out of employment, because, as was stated by the minister a moment ago, he is unfamiliar with the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: I made no such admission.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The hon. gentleman made the earnest plea a few minutes ago that we remember he has not been very long in his present office, and that he is not as familiar with these matters as he had hoped to be.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not say that.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Hansard will show whether the hon. gentleman said it or not; I shall leave it to the judgment of the committee. On an earlier occasion, in 1922, I protested against the proposed duty on cigarettes. The then Minister of Finance said that if he found in the following year a mistake had been made, the duty would be taken off. The fact is that millions of dollars were lost to this country; the loss has been estimated at more than $20,000,000. The duty on cigarettes was responsible for smuggling and all sorts of illegal practices. In the year following my protest the former minister restored the situation to what it had previously been. I cannot sit here calmly knowing that no good is coming to the country but that on the contrary it will suffer through the inexperience of its finance minister.

Mr. DUNNING: Whatever my hon. friend may say about my inexperience he will no doubt admit that there has never been as careful an examination into tariff matters as has been made by the Tariff Advisory Board of Canada in connection with the iron and steel items. That is a fact generally admitted by the industry. The best evidence of the efficiency of that investigation is the small number of complaints I have received from the industry.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would like the minister to explain the two items before us. In the first place we have item 352b dealing with:

> Screws of brass, copper or other metal, n.o.p.:
> (a) Wood screws.

This item must refer to brass, copper or other metals.

Mr. DUNNING: Not otherwise provided.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes. Then we have:

(b) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.

Then in item 430b we find:

Screws of iron or steel, coated or not:
(I) Wood screws.
(II) Machine and other screws, n.o.p.

This item refers to screws of iron or steel. I do not know which is the main item; I do not know which deals with steel machine and cap and other screws, and I do not think either of these items shows me.

Mr. DUNNING: It is plain enough, 430b covers screws of iron or steel. The whole item is governed by the first line, which says, "screws, of iron or steel." The second part of 430b deals with machine and other screws of iron or steel, n.o.p.

Mr. CAYLEY: Was the John Morrow Company represented at the hearings?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CAYLEY: On this particular item?

Mr. DUNNING: They were present at the hearing. Offhand I cannot say to what extent they may have taken part in the discussion.

Mr. CAYLEY: When this item was being considered?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, they were present during those days.

Mr. CAYLEY: But I have the assurance that the minister will give this matter consideration?

Mr. DUNNING: I am giving consideration to the argument with respect to the drawback, not with respect to this item.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I should like to ask one more question of the minister with respect to Item 352b. What does "other metals" mean? What is the object of having those words in there?

Mr. DUNNING: Any metal other than iron or steel, which is dealt with in this item.

Mr. STEVENS: Platinum, for instance?

Mr. DUNNING: Anything.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—430c. Wiring roofing nails of all sizes and wire nails one inch or more in length, of iron or steel, coated or not, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, 40 cents; intermediate tariff, 55 cents; general tariff, 60 cents.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Chaplin.]

Customs tariff—430d. Cut nails, of iron or steel, coated or not, per one hundred pounds: British preferential tariff, 30 cents; intermediate tariff, 45 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—430e. Wire nails less than one inch in length, and nails, brads or tacks of all kinds, n.o.p., of iron or steel, coated or not: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—430f. Railway spikes, of iron or steel, coated or not: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why was this changed from a specific to an ad valorem duty?

Mr. DUNNING: It developed in the discussion as being a more satisfactory way of dealing with the matter, having regard to the nature of the commodity. All other goods of this type in the group are ad valorem.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is the duty raised or lowered?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Immediately above we have cut nails and things of that kind under a specific duty.

Mr. DUNNING: Replying to my hon. friend (Mr. Kennedy) I may say there is no change in the duty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I cannot understand why you change it from one to the other. In the two items above, 430c and 430d, you have a specific duty, and here you change to an ad valorem duty.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will look at the succeeding items he will find that spikes generally are on an ad valorem basis.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—430g. Spikes, of iron or steel, coated or not, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. CANTLEY: Why the reduction on railway spikes and no reduction on the next item?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no reduction on railway spikes.

Mr. CANTLEY: There is quite a change, then.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, from specific to ad valorem, but on the same basis.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—431. Shovels and spades, of iron or steel, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—431a. Axes: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Why is this item in the tariff? It seems there is no change whatever.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a matter of renumbering. It was a part of the agricultural implement group before, and we had to renumber the whole group and name the items.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Apparently it was under item 449, and all the items in 449 were made free with the exception of axes. Is that not so?

Mr. DUNNING: No, that is not so.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What is the difference between the duty on the other articles under present item 449 and the present provision with regard to axes?

Mr. DUNNING: Item 449 consisted of axes, scythes, sickles or reaping hooks, hay or straw knives, edging knives, hoes, rakes, n.o.p., and pronged forks.

Mr. RYCKMAN: How was it dealt with?

Mr. DUNNING: Axes are removed from the purely agricultural item and put into this item by themselves, with no change in duty. The other items are included under new item 409i in the agricultural implement group, made free under the British preference, with the other rates unchanged.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I know a little about a farm, and I think an axe is an agricultural implement found upon a farm as frequently as a hoe or a rake. Will the minister tell me why the farmer receives different treatment with regard to axes from what he receives with regard to hoes and rakes? How was the conclusion arrived at?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course an axe is a tool; it is in the tool group.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Are shovels and spades in the tool group?

Mr. KENNEDY: During the budget speech the minister said he was making free under the British preference other machinery formerly dutiable, including machines for grading roads, cranes and shovels.

Mr. DUNNING: But the shovels referred to there are concrete machinery and power shovels.

Mr. KENNEDY: Steam shovels?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, power shovels for road making.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Why are hoes and rakes free under the British preference while axes have a protection of 10 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: The tools which are specifically agricultural implement tools are grouped together, and are now free under the British preference. Axes, shovels, spades, and tools of that kind still carry a 10 per cent duty. They are not specifically agricultural implements, as scythes are. The lumberman does not use a scythe.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Of course you have been on a farm, I suppose; I know I have been on a farm, and I think the axe is as much a farmer's tool as a hoe.

Mr. DUNNING: It is equally a lumberman's tool.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There are more scythes used to-day by the railways than are used on the farm.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps that is so.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—431b. Adzes, anvils, vises, cleavers, hatchets, saws, augers, bits, drills, files, rasps, screwdrivers, planes, spokeshaves, chisels, mallets, metal wedges, wrenches, sledges, hammers, crowbars, cantdogs, and track tools, picks, mattocks and eyes or polls for the same: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—431c. Precision tools, viz.: combination squares, slide calipers, micrometers, depth thickness or screw pitch gauges, rules, and measuring tapes of metal: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate ariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—432. Hollow-ware, of iron or steel, coated or not, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): What is this item? What comes under this?

Mr. DUNNING: This covers ordinary iror hollow-ware, the ordinary black iron, painted or otherwise covered. The imports last year amounted to approximately $198,000, mostly from the United States although some came from Great Britain.

Mr. COOTE: Does this include kitchen ware?

Mr. DUNNING: No, the next item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tarif—432a. Kitchen and dairy hollow-ware of iron or steel, coated with tin, including cans for shipping milk or cream, not painted, japanned or decorated: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): How much of that comes from the old country?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports in 1929 were valued at $76,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister give us the importations under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The importations of dairy utensils were valued at about $9,000, coming from the United Kingdom. There are different classifications and it is rather difficult to extract the items.

Item agreed to.

Customs tarif—432b. Hollow-ware, of iron or steel, coated with vitreous enamel: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): What were the importations from Great Britain of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: $80,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): How much from Germany?

Mr. DUNNING: About $81,000 worth.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): And Sweden?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no detail for Sweden; it would not be much in any event.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): And from Czechoslovakia?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Is this one of the items where we might expect the development of trade from the old country?

Mr. DUNNING: The importations from the United Kingdom last year amounted to about $80,000.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): There is a 10 per cent advantage against competitors.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It was 15 per cent before.

Mr. DUNNING: The importations from Czechoslovakia amounted to $19,000.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—432c. Containers manufactured from tinplate, when imported by manufacturers of food products for use exclusively in the hermetical sealing of food products, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—432d. Manufactures of tinplate, painted, japanned, decorated or not, and manufactures of tin, n.o.p: British preferential tariff; 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—433. Baths, bathtubs, basins, closets, lavatories, urinals, sinks, and laundry tubs of iron or steel, coated or not: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—434. Locomotives, and motor cars, for railways, and chassis, tops, wheels, and bodies for the same, n.o.p.: British preferential tarif, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—435. Locomotives and motor cars for railways, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use exclusively in mining or metallurgical operations: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—436. Locomotives and railway passenger, baggage and freight cars, being the property or under the control of railway companies in the United States, running upon any line or road crossing the frontier, so long as Canadian locomotives and cars are admitted free under similar circumstances into the United States, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff —; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—437. Locomotives, cars and coaches and repair equipment, belonging to railroads, brought temporarily into Canada for the purpose of clearing obstructions, fighting fires or making emergency repairs on railway lines within Canada: British preferential tariff, —; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—438. Railway cars and parts thereof, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: What were the importations under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: Valued at $2,000,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—439. Bicycles and tricycles, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tarff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—439a. Articles, of iron or steel, wholly or in part of nickel or electroplated, when imported by manufacturers of bicycles or tricycles for use exclusively in the manufacture of bicycles or tricycles, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—439b. Cars, n.o.p., wheelbarrows, trucks, road or railway scrapers and hand carts: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent: intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—439c. Farm wagons, farm sleds, logging wagons, logging sleds, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free: intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. KENNEDY: What were the importations of this item from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: The total importations were valued at $436,000, all from the United States. I do not suppose my hon. friend would want the rate raised against Great Britain?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Raised as against the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: Is that what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) desires?

Mr. KENNEDY: I wanted to know if there was any real meaning in this item.

Mr. DUNNING: Only that it is absurd to have a duty against Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—439d. Freight wagons, drays, sleighs, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—439e. Buggies, cutters, carriages, pleasure carts and vehicles, n.o.p.; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Does the minister expect any importations from Great Britain of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: There would not appear to be any expectation of importations of buggies and cutters.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—439f. Children's carriages, sleds and other vehicles; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: I have been asked to allow this item to stand.

Mr. BOIVIN: I have received some communications from manufacturers which I would like to submit to the minister.

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I am glad to have the assistance of the hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. DUNNING: We will let the item stand until after the dinner recess.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What were the importations of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: They totalled $174,000, of which $131,000 worth came from the United States.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Where did the balance come from?

Mr. DUNNING: I will have that information after dinner.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—440. Ships and other vessels built in any foreign country, if British registered, since September 1, 1902, on application for licence to engage in the Canadian coasting trade; on the fair market value of the hull, rigging, machinery, boilers, furniture and appurtenances thereof (as provided in part XVI of the Canada Shipping Act): British preferential tariff, —; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440a. Vessels, dredges, scows, yachts, boats and other water-borne craft, built outside of Canada, of any material, destined for use or service in Canadian waters (not including registered vessels, entitled to engage in the coasting trade, nor vessels in transit between Canada and any place outside thereof), n.o.p.; on the fair market value of the hull, rigging machinery, boilers, furniture, and appurtenances thereof, on arrival in Canada: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Provided that regulations may be prescribed by the minister for exemption from further duty after the duty specified in this item is once paid.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440b. Life boats and life saving apparatus specially imported by societies to encourage the saving of human life: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440c. Racing shells when imported by a bona fide amateur rowing club in Canada for use exclusively by such club: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440d. Anchors for vessels: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440e. Wire rope for use exclusively for rigging of ships and vessels, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440f. Iron or steel masts, or parts thereof; iron or steel angles, beams, knees, plates and sheets; cable chain; all the foregoing for ships and vessels, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440g. Manufactures of iron, brass or other metal, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use exclusively in the construction or equipment of ships or vessels, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440h. Chronometers and compasses, and parts thereof, including cards therefor, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for ships or aircraft: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440i. The following articles and materials when imported by manufacturers of automatic gas buoys and automatic gas beacons, for use in the manufacture of such buoys and beacons, for the government of Canada, for marine signal purposes or for export, under regulations prescribed by the minister, viz: iron or steel tubes over sixteen inches in diameter; flanged and dished steel heads made from boiler plate, over five feet in diameter; hardened steel balls, not less than three inches in diameter; acetylene gas lanterns and parts thereof; and tobin bronze in bars or rods: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440j. Trawls, trawling spoons, fly hooks, sinkers, swivels, sportsmen's fishing bait and fishing hooks, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—440k. Engines and complete parts thereof, to be used exclusively in the propulsion of boats or in hoisting nets and lines used in such boats bona fide owned by individual fishermen for their own use in the fisheries, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440l. Aircraft and complete parts thereof, not including engines, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—440m. Engines, and complete parts thereof, when imported for use only in the equipment of aircraft: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

On and after July 1, 1930: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—441. Guns, rifles, including air guns and air rifles not being toys; muskets, cannons, pistols, revolvers, or other firearms; cartridge cases, cartridges, primers, percussion caps, wads, or other ammunition, n.o.p.; bayonets, swords, fencing foils and masks; gun or pistol covers or cases, game bags, loading tools and cartridge belts of any material: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—441a. All tools and machinery not manufactured in Canada up to the required standard necessary for any factory to be established in Canada for the manufacture of rifles for the government of Canada, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—441b. All materials or parts in the rough unfinished, and screws, nuts, bands and springs, to be used in rifles to be manufactured at any factory, to be established in Canada for the manufacture of rifles, for the government of Canada, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—441c. Steel imported by manufacturers for use in their own factories in manufacturing rough unfinished parts of rifles, when such parts are to be used in rifles to be made for the government of Canada, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—441d. Gun barrels, in single tubes, forged, rough-bored: British preferential tarif, free; intermediate tariff, free; general taraff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—442. Articles which enter into the cost of manufacture of the goods enumerated in tariff items 409a, 409b, 409c, 409d, 409e, 409f, 409g, 409j, 409o, and 439c, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture in their own factories of the goods enumerated in tariff items 409a, 409b, 409c, 409d, 409e, 409f, 409g, 409j, 409o, and 439c, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; intermediate tariff, 6 per cent; general tariff, 6 per cent.

Provided that goods which are entitled to free entry or to a lower rate of duty than is mentioned in this item shall not be entered at the rate specified in this item.

Mr. SIMPSON: Would the minister give us the importations under this and the following items?

Mr. DUNNING: This is in regard to goods when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in their own factories. There was $348,000 worth of castings imported, all from the United States, and imports of the other articles mentioned amounted to $4,321,000, of which $4,224,000 worth came from the United States. No change in the rate of duty is proposed.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister mind giving us the importations under 440l and 440m—aircraft?

Mr. DUNNING: Under 440l, aircraft of all kinds, the imports were $2,156,000, of which $1,504,000 worth came from Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—442a. Pig iron or hot rolled iron or steel, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture, in their own factories, of the goods enumerated in tariff items 409a, 409b, 409c, 409d, 409e, 409f, 490g, 490j, 409o, and 439c, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. WHITE (London): Will the minister give the imports of pig iron and hot rolled iron or steel separately?

Mr. DUNNING: Iron in pigs, $128,000, all from the United States; rolled iron and steel, $3,211,000, of which $3,198,000 worth came from the United States.

Mr. WHITE (London): And this is the way the minister is helping the primary industry!

Mr. DUNNING: Well, I have helped them, and I am trying now under this item not to hurt the others.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—442b. Materials which enter into the construction and form part of cream separators when imported by manufacturers of cream separators for use exclusively in the manufacture of cream separators, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—442c. Articles of metal when imported by manufacturers of cream separator parts for use exclusively in the manufacture of cream separator parts, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. STEVENS: Just before six, may I ask of the minister a question which has nothing to do with this item? Will the minister have this whole schedule revised with all changes, and reprinted for distribution to the members in that form when it is completed?

Mr. DUNNING: As a matter of fact it will be that form in the bill.

Mr. STEVENS: I mean with the extensions.

Mr. DUNNING: There are about thirty changes. We shall endeavour to have that done.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): I beg to move that Bill No. 263, respecting the capital stock of the Prudential Trust Company, Limited, and Bill No. 306, to incorporate the Industrial Loan and Finance Corporation, be considered in committee of the whole this day.

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the house.

Motion agreed to.

BOURKE-SETTER PATENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the senate to Bill No. 50, respecting a certain patent application of Thomas Bernard Bourke and George Percival Setter.

The CHAIRMAN: By an amendment made in the Senate the following has been added as section 2 of the bill:

2. If, during the period when the application was forfeited and before the date of publication of the notice of the petitioner's intention to apply to parliament for the passing of this act, any person has acquired any right in respect of the inventions to which that application had reference, then, in the event of the Commissioner of Patents making, as provided for by section one of this act, an order restoring and reviving that application, every such right shall be deemed to have had and to have the same force and effect as if this act had not been passed; but nothing in this section shall be deemed to derogate from the provisions contained in sections seven and eight of the Patent Act or to deprive the applicant of any benefit therefrom.

Mr. STEVENS: I presume, Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been considered by the commissioner of patents and approved by the committee.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is always done.

Mr. STEVENS: Not always.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

BONNEY PATENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 51, respecting a certain patent application of Harry Barrington Bonney.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

INDUSTRIAL LOAN AND FINANCE CORPORATION

The house in committee on Bill No. 306, to incorporate Industrial Loan and Finance Corporation—Mr. Casgrain—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Where is the bill?

Mr. CASGRAIN: The bill is U4 of the Senate. It was passed yesterday by the Senate. This afternoon it was passed by the committee on banking and commerce and reported.

Sections 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

On the order:

House in committee on Bill No. 39, respecting government contracts.—Mr. Guérin.

The CHAIRMAN: The select standing committee on industrial and international relations recommends that this bill be not further proceeded with.

Bill dropped.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Sir Eugène Fiset in the chair.

Customs tariff—443. Apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings.
(1) For coal or wood: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent;
(2) For gas: British preferential tariff, free: intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent;
(3) For electricity: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent;
(4) For oil: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent;
(5) N.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. COTNAM: Had the manufacturers of electrical heating and cooking appliances a hearing before the Tariff Advisory Board, and was the change contained in this item recommended by the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: There was a very exhaustive hearing.

Mr. COTNAM: I would like to know the amount of importations last year of appliances and equipment of this kind from the United States, England and Germany.

Mr. DUNNING: You are referring to the electrical item?

Mr. COTNAM: Yes.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I would like the minister to give the importations under items (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5).

[Mr. Adshead.]

Mr. DUNNING: Under one former electrical item the imports in 1929 were valued at $384,000, of which total sum $380,000 came from the United States. The other articles were entered under old item 362, but the total value of importations is not ascertainable; it was a general item.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Item 362 is not contained in the present item 443, if the reference numbers on the present tariff schedule are correct.

Mr. DUNNING: Coal and wood stoves entered to the value of $35,000. They represent only part of that item because the old item included stoves for wood, coal, oil, or spirits, and the total importation of $35,000 came from the United States. Gas stoves entered to the value of $268,000, and all came from the United States.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What about section No. 4, oil?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no importation traceable: previously the oil stoves came in under item 451.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What about the n.o.p item?

Mr. DUNNING: The n.o.p. item previously was contained in a general item, and the imports are not separately traceable.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is it fair to say that under item 443 there were no appreciable imports from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: I think that is correct.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Or from the British Empire?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. COTNAM: Would the minister tell me whether or not he has received protests from any of the manufacturers of these appliances?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I think I had one communication regarding these appliances.

Mr. COTNAM: I wish to enter a protest on behalf of an electrical appliances industry which is located in the constituency I have the honour to represent. At this time I shall read part of a letter from the general manager of the concern in question. It is as follows:

We are manufacturers of electrical heating and cooking appliances and electric cooking ranges. We make what is considered by many one of the most complete lines of this type of equipment on the Canadian market and our business consists exclusively of the manufacture of these goods. We understand the new budget is intended by its sponsors to help British industries market their products in Canada without retarding or decreasing the sale of Canadian made articles.

In so far as the electric heating and cooking appliance industry is concerned, this is not so. We believe that budget to be a decided detriment to our efforts (instead of a help) to increase our business. It is decidedly a "slap in the face" and it is quite possible that the irreparable damage that was done a few years ago to the Canadian woollen industry, by tariff tinkering, will be repeated—this time the electric heating and cooking appliances industry being the victim.

The following items on the budget affects our industry: Tariff item 443—Apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings (3) for electricity. These goods now enter free under the British preferential tariff. Previously there was a duty of 15 per cent. These goods now enjoy reduction of 2½ per cent when entering Canada under both the intermediate and general tariffs, from the rates previously in effect. That is, the protection to the Canadian industry on goods entering from Germany and United States is reduced 2½ per cent. Easily 75 per cent of the goods that we manufacture are affected by this classification. Now what do we get to compensate?

Tariff item 443a. A reduction of 2½ per cent on electric tumbler and rotary switches.

Tariff item 443c. Compensating thermometers a reduction of 5 per cent. These may be imported free from England, but as far as we know there are none made there suitable for our purpose.

The above benefits are more than entirely wiped out by 2½ per cent increase in the duty on strip steel, tariff item 382c, which is now 15 per cent instead of 12½ per cent. This type of steel is universally used for all nickel plated steel parts of our product and has been imported from the United States due to superior quality that can be secured. The British preferential and intermediate tariffs on this item remain as before.

No doubt tariff item 386l is intended to benefit us but it does not. This covers steel sheets, cold rolled blue polished when imported by manufacturers of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings for use in the manufacture of such appliances, and is free when imported from England. This class of steel is not used at all by us nor to any extent by any of our competitors, same being used by the manufacturers of gas, coal and wood ranges. Even if we did use it we doubt if it would be of any assistance, as the increase of uncrating, extra handling, etc., on British steel would offset the saving through the duty on United States manufactured product, as factory to factory carload shipments can be made where no crating is required. The crating of steel for a combination ocean and rail shipment is an expensive item.

I should like to read also an article from Hardware and Metal, a trade journal, under date of May 10, 1930, in which this statement is made:

We believe that the tariff changes mentioned in the recent budget will very seriously retard the Canadian electrical industry, and more particularly those manufacturers of electrical cooking and heating appliances which can now be imported absolutely free of duty under the British preferential tariff. Britain has long been recognized as a country of manufacturing specialists with centuries of experience, having the world markets well cultivated. It is therefore natural that they should enjoy huge production and low costs.

There is absolutely nothing in the budget that begins to offset the hardships that have been placed on this young Canadian industry. It is interesting to note that the manufacturers of large electrical machinery, that is generators, transformers, motors, insulators, electrical apparatus, n.o.p., are not affected except that in the latter classification the general tariff has been actually increased 2½ per cent, which is probably as it should be. We are simply mentioning this to show that there apparently is no rhyme nor reason for this budget in so far as it affects the electrical heating and cooking appliance industry. There are several small manufacturing plants in Canada specializing in this type of equipment.

The King government apparently is not satisfied with destroying practically three-quarters of the Canadian woollen manufacturing industry. This year they are attempting to crucify the electric heating and cooking appliance industry, which we believe deserves a helping hand instead of the reverse.

After the war, while Europe was still in an unsettled condition the Canadian electrical heating and cooking appliance industry, young though it is, actually succeeded in introducing their goods into several overseas markets, more particularly in other British dominions, and they have been putting up a real battle to hold a portion of that market in the face of keener and still keener European competition. To us it is impossible to find any good reason justifying the budget in so far as it affects the electric heating and cooking appliance industry.

This firm in my own constituency, of which I speak, employs about forty or fifty men, and its average payroll runs to between $45,000 and $50,000. That firm was incorporated in 1917, and after a great deal of difficulty succeeded in establishing a fair market for its products. From 1917 to 1924 it paid no dividends, yet they are being subjected under this budget to increased costs of production and increased competition from all British preferred countries, as well as increased competition from the United States and Germany through the reduction in the intermediate and general tariff of 2½ per cent. In view of that statement from men who are engaged in the industry I should like to ask the minister if he will not consider this change in the British preference rate and also in the intermediate and general tariffs.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. COTNAM: Will the minister not give my request any consideration at all? Will he not even answer?

Mr. DUNNING: I was waiting to see if there should be further remarks of a similar character by any hon. gentlemen opposite. I would point out in reference to the electrical stove business that while, as I indicated a short time ago, last year the imports were valued at $380,000, during the same period the Canadian industry exported electrical stoves to the value of $652,000. With respect to those exports they secured a drawback of 99 per cent on the articles which entered into their finished product. In addition, there are a number of concessions by way of reduction in duty which apply to the industry, some of which were referred to in the statement read by my hon. friend, but to which apparently little value is attached. Those which are valuable were not mentioned in the communication. As far as the newspaper article is concerned, it is of a generally argumentative character with respect to the budget, and I shall say nothing about it.

There are reductions, for instance, on electrical switches, rotary switches and relay switches; there are reductions in the tariff on parts for these switches. There are reductions on blue sheets for stove making; and will those people say they do not use blue sheets in the manufacture of their stoves? There are reductions on sheets for enamelling, and everyone knows that a great many electric stoves are enamelled. There are reductions on thermometers which are used on such stoves, and there are reductions on stove urns and chaplets and so on. My hon. friend is asking whether or not I will put the general tariff back to where it was, which means an increase of 2½ per cent. After all the examination that has been given to the subject I do not think his request can be considered.

Mr. COTNAM: Then are we to understand that although we have ten or twelve plants manufacturing these articles; although we have a huge hydro-electric development which requires this sort of equipment, when these industries are getting on their feet the Minister of Finance and the government step in and say, "We are prepared to knock you on the head and put you out of business, or at least we will have a try at it anyway." The Prime Minister travelled across Canada in 1925 and told the people from the Atlantic to the Pacific that no legitimate business would be hurt by any tariff tinkering on the part of his government should he be returned to power. I call upon the Prime Minister, as he sits in his place to-night, to implement the promise he made to the industries of this country.

I have this to say further: In my town we have a woollen industry which was killed by this government in 1922, and in the Ottawa valley eight or ten woollen plants were absolutely closed by the action of this government. Their buildings have been closed down, their machinery has been dismantled and they are out of business to-day due to the tariff tinkering of the present administration. The Prime Minister does not agree with the Minister of Railways (Mr. Crerar), who appears occasionally in this house, in saying that the cotton and textile industry should be crucified because it gives employment to only a couple of thousand people, and that the people of Canada should not be penalized in order to give employment to that number. I want to say to the Minister of Finance and to the Prime Minister that we are very apprehensive over this change which is being made in the tariff. We know what happened to the woollen industry, and here we have a little company trying to get on its feet. It has been operating from 1917 to 1924 without being able to pay a dividend, and it is now to be subjected to competition, not only from Great Britain but also from Germany and the United States. The minister said that I was not reading a news item, but rather a trade journal. That article was taken from a trade journal which deals with the hardware and metal trade, and if the minister will take the trouble to read that publication he will find that they commend the government for what they have done regarding many other items. However, they are absolutely opposed to the changes being made in this particular item.

I cannot protest too strongly on behalf of this industry against the blow they are receiving through the change being made in the tariff. The minister says that I did not mention the compensatory items in the tariff, such as the blue metal sheets used in the trimming of these ranges. Had the minister been listening to the article which I read, he would not have said that. I cited every one of the items which he terms compensatory, but these men claim that those items do not mean a thing to their business. It is time that a halt was called on this sort of thing. We have a political tariff board which knows absolutely nothing about business conditions in this country. They know nothing about the manufacturing of electrical equipment or the inner workings of the woollen industry, and yet after hearing a little evidence they sit down and pass judgment upon these industries. It is time that a halt was called against this tariff tinkering. The minister himself does not understand what effect this tinkering is going to have upon the industries of this country.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—443a. Electric tumbler and rotary switches and electric relay switches for automatic oven control, when imported by manufacturers of electric apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, for use exclusively in the manufacture of electric apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—443b. Parts, when imported by manufacturers of electric switches for use exclusively in the manufacture of electric tumbler and rotary switches and electric relay switches for automatic oven control, for use on electric apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 17½ per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What were the importations of this item which is now being made free under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no way of tracing the imports of this item. It is a new item, and a new industry is being established in connection with electrical switch manufacturing.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—443c. Compensating thermometers or mercury thermometers, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, for use exclusively in the manufacture of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I would like to know the meaning of the phrase "when imported by manufacturers of apparatus", as well as the phrase "under regulations prescribed by the minister." Why is it that manufacturers and no one else can get these articles in free?

Mr. DUNNING: I am sure the hon. member was listening to the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam).

Mr. ADSHEAD: Yes, I was.

Mr. DUNNING: These last few items are concessions by way of tariff reductions on certain parts entering into the manufacture of stoves, which the hon. member for North Renfrew was discussing. The thermometers mentioned in this item would be of very little use to anyone but manufacturers, because they are built into the door of the stove.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why shut them out?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not shutting them out; I am making it easier for them to get in.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What were the importations under this item, and where from?

Mr. DUNNING: This is a new item. The articles covered by it previously came in under the item in the old tariff which provided for anything not elsewhere enumerated.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no way of tracing the imports?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—443d. Stove urns of metal, and dovetails, chaplets and hinge tubes of tin, when imported by manufacturers of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, for use exclusively in the manufacture of apparatus designed for cooking or for heating buildings, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What were the importations under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: They amounted to $35,000, all from the United States. A reduction is being made in the British preferential tariff.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—444. Gas meters, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—444a. Gas, coal oil or other lighting fixtures and appliances, n.o.p., including tips, burners, collars and galleries; gas mantles and incandescent gas burners; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—444b. Lamp shades, n.o.p., and shade holders: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445. Electric light fixtures and appliances, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. RYERSON: This is the item I mentioned this afternoon, which affects a very important industry in the city of Brantford. Has the minister received any representations from the manufacturers of these articles?

Mr. DUNNING: We have received a letter from one company.

Mr. RYERSON: This industry is a very important one in the city of Brantford and employs about 150 hands. They manufacture the better grade of electric light fixtures, and their complaint is that with the decrease in the British preference their chief competitor will be the British manufacturer, who is able to obtain his material free of duty while they have to pay a duty of 30 per cent on the bulk of their raw material. I would appeal to the minister to give some consideration to this industry.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid I cannot hold out much hope.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Have courage.

Mr. DUNNING: It is expected that some business will be diverted to Great Britain. Last year the importations from the United States under this item amounted to $1,102,000; while only a very small amount came from Great Britain. It was thought that there would be an opportunity to switch some of this business to the old country without injury to Canadian industry. We heard from only one firm which seemed to be apprehensive from this point of view.

Mr. RYERSON: This company manufactures a very high class article, and at the present time their chief competitors are the English manufacturers. There is no question that this tariff change will seriously menace their business.

Mr. DUNNING: What particular article do they manufacture?

Mr. RYERSON: Electric light fixtures.

Mr. DUNNING: Shades and that sort of thing.

Mr. RYERSON: Shades, but they are under another item; they are not affected. It is the electric light fixtures that are affected. They manufacture a number of different lines. I think the minister has a letter from these people and I would appeal to him for some consideration in the matter.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445a. Electric head, side and tail lights; electric torches or flashlights: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—445b. Electric arc lamps and incandescent electric light lamps: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is an error in leaving out the letters "n.o.p.," because of a later item. I would ask that the item be amended by adding the letters "n.o.p."

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—445c. Electric telegraph or telephone apparatus and complete parts thereof: British pereferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445d. Electric wireless or radio apparatus and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445e. Electric and galvanic batteries, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445f. Electric dynamos or generators and transformers, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445g. Electric motors, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Could the minister give us some idea of the imports? I presume several of these items we have just passed are grouped, because they are under the same item in the old tariff. Could he give us the imports under items 435 and 453 of the old tariff, which seem to cover all these items?

Mr. DUNNING: I have the imports separated under each of these items. The hon. member means starting from the beginning of item 445?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes. I assumed the minister had them under the old item, and that is why I waited until we got further down the list before asking for them.

Mr. DUNNING: Under item 445a, formerly item 435, the imports—that is for the whole of item 435—were valued in 1929 at $1,644,000, of which $1,400,000 worth came from the United States.

Under item 445b, electric lamps to the value of $29,000 were imported, all from the United States; carbon lamps, to the value of $56,000, of which $40,000 came from Japan; metal lamps, to the value of $134,000, of which $69,000 came from the United States and $27,000 from Japan.

Under item 445c, electric telegraph apparatus, $493,000 worth was imported, of which $437,000 came from the United States. As regards telephone apparatus, $1,854,000 was imported of which $1,006,000 came from the United States and the balance from Great Britain.

Under item 445d, electric wireless, radio tubes, the imports were $246,000, of which $220,000 came from the United States. As regards wireless and radio apparatus, n.o.p., $5,692,000 worth was imported, of which $5,601,000 came from the United States.

Under item 445e, electric primary batteries, the imports amounted to $90,000, of which $86,000 came from the United States. As regards storage batteries, n.o.p., the imports were $631,000, of which $319,000 came from Great Britain and $312,000 from the United States.

Under item 445f, electric dynamos and generators, the imports were $1,557,000, of which $1,250,000 came from the United States. As regards transformers, the imports were $482,000, of which $447,000 came from the United States.

Under item 445g, electric motors, n.o.p., the imports were $4,306,000, of which $3,500,000 came from the United States.

Under item 445h, the imports of insulators, porcelain, amounted to $537,000, of which $435,000 came from the United States. As regards other insulators, the imports were $432,000, of which $416,000 came from the United States. I think that is the end of that group.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Why is it represented that there is a change in duty on the group of which the minister has just given the imports? They seem to be listed across the page at exactly the same rates.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no representation of a change where a change does not occur.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Then what change did occur?

Mr. DUNNING: The classification was changed by being split up so that we know under the different items what the exports and imports are.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The reduction in the British preferential seems to be very trifling. In some cases it is from 20 per cent to 15 per cent, and in others there is no change at all.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend surely heard his colleague complaining that the change would be sufficient to ruin the industry. We cannot be criticised both ways.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is another industry. I was just wondering why there was not a bigger reduction in the British preference. With the present reduction, is there any hope of transferring any of this vast volume of business to Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: We are hoping so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): On an increase of 5 per cent in the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: The minister is not decreasing the British preference in item 445c.

Mr. DUNNING: We are discussing item 445g. The rate is the same in that case.

Mr. FRASER: In the first three items: 445; 445a and 445b, the minister is decreasing the British preference.

Mr. DUNNING: No, we are decreasing the rate, and thus increasing the British preference.

Mr. FRASER: The British preference before was 20 per cent and and now it is 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the rate. The degree of the preference is the difference between the British preferential rate and the general rate. By decreasing the British preferential rate, you increase the preference.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does the minister, by that trifling reduction, hope to transfer this trade?

Mr. DUNNING: Some Canadian industries say that it will ruin them. Some United States industries are apprehensive that the British people will get the business the United States are now enjoying. The volume of trade is large and the British manufacturers are very much interested in capturing it.

Mr. ADSHEAD: If the volume of business going to the United States is so large, will it not be in line with the minister's policy to make the British preferential rate free?

Mr. DUNNING: Each case must be considered on its merits in relation to Canadian industry as a whole. That is the only answer.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There are about fourteen items, all alike.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445h. Electric insulators of all kinds, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445i. Electric sad irons and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445j. Electric apparatus, of a class or kind not made in Canada, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445k. Electric apparatus, n.o.p., and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. FRASER: This is the last of the electric apparatus items. What is the total importation of electric apparatus, and what amount came from Great Britain and what amount from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: I shall have to look that up. It will probably take some time to do so, because under the old schedule electric apparatus came in under many designations, not because it was electrical, but because when the old tariff was devised, the developments in electricity were not what they are to-day. It would be very difficult to give accurate figures, but as an illustration I can give some of the imports under the n.o.p. item.

Mr. FRASER: That would be a large percentage of the importations.

Mr. DUNNING: Of switches and switchboards we imported, in round figures, $1,600,000, of which $1,500,000 came from the United States; spark plugs, and so forth, $1,100,000, of which $1,000,000 came from the United States; self-contained lighting outfits, $92,000, of which $89,000 came from the United States; socket outlets and receptacles, $352,000, of which $348,000 come from the United States; rheostat controllers, and so forth, $756,000, of which $700,000 came from the United States; electric meters, $408,000, of which $365,000 came from the United States; electric fuses and fuse plugs, $293,000, all from the United States; electric fans $137,000, of which $135,000 came from the United States. In addition, a very great aggregation of small items of electrical apparatus, n.o.p., came in to the amount of $4,800,000, of which $4,600,000 came from the United States. We are proposing to give an advantage to Great Britain in connection with all of this apparatus which is not made in Canada, by making it free under the British preference, as against 20 per cent under the general tariff. Wherever these goods are made in Canada, the spread in favour of Great Britain is increased by an increase in the United States duty.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—446. Manufactures, articles or wares, of iron or steel or of which iron or steel or both are the component materials of chief value, of a class or kind not made in Canada, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What are the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: This is what we call the basket item for iron and steel, which means that everything that has not been specified in the schedules and cannot be named will come in under this item. All the imports cannot be traced, of course, but here are some of the principal ones: wire bale ties, $10,000, of which $7,000 came from the United States; locks of all kinds, $567,000, of which $493,000 came from the United States; builders' hardware, $805,000, of which $702,000 came from the United States; parts of bicycles, $92,000, of which $64,000 came from Great Britain; drums, cylinders, barrels, etc., $1,461,000, of which $1,185,000 came from the United States; horse shoes, mule shoes and ox shoes, $20,000, all from the United States; hatters' irons and tailors' irons, $2,000, of which $1,500 came from the United States; valves n.o.p., $920,000, of which $850,000 came from the United States. Then there is a whole range of general items amounting to $14,000,000 in round figures, of which $12,000,000 came from the United States. Iron and steel n.o.p. is a large item, and what is proposed is to make these articles free from Great Britain, with a 20 per cent general tariff against the United States; and when they are made in Canada, 15 per cent British preference and 30 per cent under the general tariff. British industry is very greatly interested in this item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—446a. Manufactures, articles or wares, of iron or steel or of which iron or steel or both are the component materials of chief value, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—447. Water pumps, hand or power, for domestic purposes only: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What are the imports?

Mr. DUNNING: We imported $572,000 of ordinary domestic pumps, of which $540,000 came from the United States. It is proposed to make this article free under the British preference.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—448. Steel balls, for use only on bearings of machinery and vehicles: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—449. Steel wool: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—450. Skates of all kinds, roller or other, and parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. RYCKMAN: What were the importations of skates from the British Empire?

Mr. DUNNING: Our imports all told were $50,000, nearly all from the United States. I have not the United Kingdom total, but it must be quite small.

Mr. QUINN: Who requested a reduction in the duty on skates of all kinds? The old duties were 22½, 32½ and 35 per cent respectively, and these have been reduced to 15, 25 and 30 per cent respectively.

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports, as I said, were $50,000. Canada exported skates to a value of $111,000, of which $95,000 went to the United States. We are exporting a much larger volume than we import. The old general tariff was 35 per cent. In view of the fact that the industry gets a drawback on its materials, it is considered that a duty of 30 per cent is certainly adequate.

Mr. SHORT: If we are building up a nice little industry like this—the minister says that we are exporting more to the United States than we import from that country—why kill it? Does the minister not want these exports?

Mr. DUNNING: The industry still has a 30 per cent duty.

Mr. SHORT: You are reducing the duties 2½, 7½ and 5 per cent respectively. If the business is doing very well under the old rates, why change them?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): The duties are high enough now. The industry should do well under the new rates.

Mr. QUINN: It is doing well, but why try to kill it? This is an industry giving employment to our people. Why not let it continue? I am not protesting for the sake of protesting. I have interrupted the minister very little since these tariff schedules have been under discussion, but there is an industry in the town of Dartmouth, the Starr Manufacturing Company, which the Minister of National Defence knows well, and I would refer the Minister of Finance to him if he were here. It is a splendid industry. The Starr Manufacturing Company makes the finest ice skates in the world.

Mr. DUNNING: And exports them to ten countries.

Mr. QUINN: Well, is not the minister proud of that?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course I am.

Mr. QUINN: Should not every member on that side of the house be proud of it?

Some hon. MEMBERS: We are.

Mr. QUINN: Then I protest against the reduction. What is the matter with the member for Saskatoon (Mr. Young)? Doesn't he like to see industry in the eastern part of Canada?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Any industry that can compete with ten countries on an even basis is doing pretty well. I know it; it is a splendid industry.

Mr. QUINN: Then why take off the protection they are enjoying? They are not paying excessive dividends; they are just getting along and employing considerable labour.

Mr. EVANS: Would the hon. member permit a question there?

Mr. QUINN: No, you are a free trader. I heard the member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) the other night asking if the fruit and vegetable products of the West Indies could not be sent by a shorter route, and suggesting that they be sent through the port of Portland in preference to our maritime ports. I consider that unpatriotic and un-Canadian. I protest against this reduction in the tariff on skates.

Mr. DUNNING: It is still 30 per cent.

Mr. EVANS: This is another case where the manufacturer is carrying on very nicely. He is exporting his goods at the expense of the Canadian consumer by charging them a price which will give him a profit on the whole of his output.

Mr. QUINN: No Canadians ever kicked about the price they paid for skates.

An hon. MEMBER: Yes, they have.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I desire to say for the benefit of members from the west, and especially for the benefit of the member for Rosetown, that skates with this protection are selling cheaper in Canada than they are in the United States.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Why do you need protection, then?

Mr. SHORT: They have built up their industry under protection. Why don't you let them alone? At whose request was this duty reduced?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know.

Mr. SHORT: Was it brought before the tariff board? Was any objection made by Mr. Deachman and his friends?

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—451. Buckles, clasps, eyelets, hooks and eyes, dome, snap, hookless or other fasteners, of iron, steel, brass or other metal, coated or not, n.o.p. (not being jewellery): British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—451a. Needles, of any material or kind, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Quinn.]

Customs tariff—451b. Pins manufactured from wire of any metal, n.o.p. British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—451c. Corset clasps, busks, blanks, steels, and covered corset wires, cut to length, tipped or untipped; reed, rattan or horn, covered: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—451d. Metal glove fasteners, papier mache shoe buttons, shoe eyelets, corset eyelets, shoe eyelet hooks, shoe lace wire fasteners: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—452. Metal tips, studs and eyes, when imported by manufacturers of corset clasps and corset wires for use exclusively in the manufacture of corset clasps and corset wires, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—453. Metal parts when imported by manufacturers of covered buttons for use exclusively in the manufacture of covered buttons, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What are the imports, and from what countries do they come?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports are $30,000, all from the United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—454. Frames not more than ten inches in width, clasps and fasteners, when imported by manufacturers of purses, chatelaine bags or reticules for use exclusively in the manufacture of purses, chatelaine bags or reticules, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This item is free under the British preference. What were the imports?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports were $147,000, of which $141,000 came from the United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—455. Ribs of brass, iron or steel, runners, rings, caps, notches, ferrules, mounts and sticks or canes in the rough, or not further manufactured than cut into lengths, suitable for umbrella, parasol, sunshade or walking sticks, when imported by manufacturers of umbrellas, parasols and sunshades for use exclusively in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What were the imports of this item?

Mr. DUNNING: We imported $203,000, of which $116,000 came from the United States. That business will probably go to Great Britain in the future.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—456. Wire of brass, zinc, iron or steel, screwed, twisted, flattened or corrugated, for use exclusively in connection with nailing machines for the manufacture of boots and shoes, in boot and shoe factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—457. Tubs of metal, coated or not; metal frames for wringers, with or without metal fittings, coated or not; nickel plated copper sheets; all when imported by manufacturers of washing machines or wringers for use exclusively in the manufacture of washing machines or wringers, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: We heard this afternoon about the washing machine people, and I want to be very careful not to impose any hardship upon them. It will be noticed that there is quite a concession here by way of a reduction on the materials which enter into washing machines. It has been represented to me that a slight change is desirable. In the amendment the words "metal frames for wringers" are deleted, as these are included in the metal parts now covered by the item itself. So far as copper sheets are concerned, one manufacturer of washing machines advises me that he does his own nickel plating; therefore he desires to have the same right to bring in plain copper sheets as the other manufacturers have to bring in the nickel plated sheets. Another washing machine manufacturer advises me that in the cheaper type of washing machines zinc sheets are used; so I desire to insert that to come in at the low rate; also ball bearings. The amendment also provides for electric motors and gasoline engines of less than one horsepower for washing machine purposes. The amendment, Mr. Chairman, will read as follows:

Tubs of metal, coated or not; copper sheets, plated or not; zinc sheets, plated; ball bearings; gasoline engines and electric motors of less than one horse-power; all the foregoing when imported by manufacturers of washing machines or wringers for use exclusively in the manufacture of washing machines or wringers, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the tariff on washing machines?

Mr. DUNNING: That was up this afternoon. There is a reduction.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What were the imports under the first item?

Mr. DUNNING: Formerly they entered according to the material under a variety of items impossible to trace. It is a new item entirely.

Mr. WHITE (London): Is not this another case where our primary manufacturers will suffer for the sake of putting washing machines on a lower schedule? Surely some of the manufacturers who make these articles will suffer.

Mr. DUNNING: There have been no objections with the single exception of that as to tubs of metal, coated or not. That is the only objection I have heard on the whole list.

Mr. WHITE (London): No attention is being paid to their objection?

Mr. DUNNING: Having regard to the situation of the industry in question, I think this concession to the washing machine people is a fair one.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—457a. Materials or articles of metal, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of washing machines or wringers for use exclusively in the manufacture of washing machines or wringers, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Has the minister had any representation made to him for a slight amendment to this item? I understand that the Canadian Iron and Steel Company of Toronto asks that after the word "wringers" the word "clothes mangles or ironing machines" be inserted.

Mr. DUNNING: I never heard of any such application.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have a copy of a letter before me dated May 23 which was addressed by a customs broker in the city to the tariff commissioner. The date must be wrong, the letter having been in my hands for the last two days.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not remember seeing anything of the kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I will send this over to the minister. It is suggested that the item should read:

Materials or articles of metal, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of washing machines, wringers, clothes mangles or ironing machines for use exclusively in the manufacture of washing machines, wringers, clothes mangles or ironing machines, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid it is rather difficult to estimate offhand the effect of such a request.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps the minister could let the item stand.

Mr. DUNNING: It must be borne in mind that these concessions to the people manufacturing washing machines and wringers are related to the rate of duty now imposed with respect to the finished article. There is a material reduction, as my hon. friend may remember, under both washing machines and wringers, and offhand I am not at all clear what the effect of the request may be. I never saw this letter before. I notice it is dated to-day.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That must be a mistake.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think, without more inquiry than time will permit, that I could undertake to make such a change. It affects an entirely different group of articles.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I quite understand that, but I would ask the minister to let the item stand until to-morrow.

Mr. DUNNING: It is pretty difficult.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It looks to me like a very minor change.

Mr. DUNNING: Many of these things that appear of minor significance have far-reaching effects, and it takes time to investigate. It is hardly fair for a person to write a letter on May 23 and expect consideration to be given immediately to a matter which requires detailed inquiry. For instance, can my hon. friend tell me what duty is carried by clothes mangles and ironing machines?

[Mr. Campbell.]

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have not the least idea. I would like however to be fair to the company, and I think the minister should let the matter stand until his officers have had a chance to investigate.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not like to refuse to let an item stand, although I have quite a few standing at the present time.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am only asking the minister to have his officers consider the matter. I think in fairness to the people concerned he should let it stand until to-morrow.

Mr. DUNNING: I think I can answer the question now. As far as I can learn, under the existing tariff the machinery in question carries a rate of 30 per cent in one case and 27½ per cent in the other. That being the case I am sure he would not want this concession to apply to such manufactures.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What were the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: It is a new item entirely. Formerly it was entered under three or four component material items. The entries cannot be separately traced.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—458. Materials, including all parts, when imported by manufacturers of traction engines for use exclusively in the manufacture of traction engines, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. SIMPSON: This item formerly was under a 99 per cent drawback. Will the minister tell us what the imports were under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: This is a new item to provide duty free materials and parts for the manufacture of traction engines. I gave the ratings on tractors some time ago. As hon. gentlemen have noticed, tractors under item 409m are free and tractors under 409n are free under the British preferential tariff, 10 per cent under the intermediate tariff and 15 per cent under the general tariff. Under item 428 they are free under the British preferential tariff, 10 per cent under the intermediate tariff, and 15 per cent under the general tariff. These are very low rates of duty. Some interest was displayed in the possibility that if materials and parts for tractor engines were made free an industry would be started in Canada. In view of that fact a 99 per cent drawback provision is at present in effect. On a large part of the material it was deemed wise to include parts which are not made in Canada in order to stimulate the commencement of an industry.

Mr. SIMPSON: Have you the value of the imports?

Mr. DUNNING: There were none; that is the point.

Mr. WHITE (London): It would appear that the minister is interested in the establishment of an assembly plant rather than the establishment of a manufacturing concern.

Mr. DUNNING: In many cases industries have been built up by first establishing assembly plants and later developing the processes of manufacture. That procedure has developed in Canada owing to the genius of some men at whom I am now looking.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—459. Materials, including all parts, when imported by manufacturers of street or road rollers for use exclusively in the manufacture of street or road rollers, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. WHITE (London): Will the minister tell me what difference it makes in the general rate? The old rate was $7 a ton, with a 30 per cent drawback.

Mr. DUNNING: The Ontario Road builders' Association, in presenting their case before the tariff board, expressed the desire to encourage the construction or road rollers in Canada. In their general application for reductions on construction machinery they asked that the road rollers item remain as it was. It is proposed to assist by giving the makers of road rollers low rate parts in lieu of their former remission under the drawback which was not used.

Mr. WHITE (London): It would appear to me that the minister is taking the same action in this item as was taken in regard to implements in the year 1924. The duties on materials are being reduced, and the reduction goes back to the maker of the primary material. I figure that we had a duty of $4.90 considering that 30 per cent drawback on $7 a ton. The general tariff is now 10 per cent, which at the price of $1.85 in Pittsburgh brings it back to a duty of $3.75 a ton, which means that the makers of steel are losing to the extent of $1.20 per ton in duty. When it comes to the British preferential tariff, the loss is about $3 a ton. It goes back, as it did before in the case of agricultural implements, to the makers of iron and steel. And the minister says he is trying to protect the primary makers of material.

Mr. SIMPSON: What did the imports under that item amount to?

Mr. DUNNING: There were none under the old drawback; nobody used it. It was not effective, and I am trying to make it effective.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—460. Materials to be used in Canada for the construction of bridges and tunnels crossing the boundary between the United States and Canada, when similar materials are admitted free under similar circumstances into the United States, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—461. Safes, doors for safes, and vaults; scales, balances, weighing beams and strength testing machines of all kinds, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—462. Philosophical, photographic, mathematical and optical instruments, n.o.p.; speedometers, cyclometers and pedometers, and tape lines of any material, n.o.p.; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—463. Magic lanterns and slides therefor: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—464. Steel dies, of a class or kind not made in Canada, valued at not less than $1,000 each, for use exclusively in stamping metal sheets or metal plates: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Provided that such dies shall be exported from Canada under customs supervision within three months from the date of import entry.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—465. Signs of any material other than paper, framed or not; letters and numerals of any material other than paper: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—466. Iron sand or globules of iron shot, and dry putty, for use in polishing glass or granite or for sawing stone: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff. free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—467. Window shade or blind rollers: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—468. Bird, squirrel and rat cages, of wire, and metal parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—469. Machine card clothing: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—470. Patterns of iron, steel, brass or other metal, not being models: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—471. Belt pulleys of all kinds, for power transmission: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent;; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—472. Plates engraved on wood, steel or other metal and transfers taken from the same, n.o.p.; engravers' plates of steel, or other metal, polished or otherwise processed, for engraving thereon: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—473. Plates for printing in two or more colours, including electrotypes, nickeltypes and all engravings on steel or other metal, for use exclusively in printing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—474. Stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids, for almanacs, calendars, illustrated pamphlets, newspaper or other advertisements, n.o.p.; and matrices or copper shells for such stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids, per square inch: British preferential tariff, 1 cent; intermediate tariff, 1¼ cents; general tariff, 1½ cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—475. Stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids of books, and bases and matrices and copper shells for the same, whether composed wholly or in part of metal or celluloid: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. QUINN: That is the item I asked the minister about at the beginning of the consideration of these items. The minister has a letter from a Toronto firm asking him to add to item 475 aluminum and zinc music plates, and electrotypes for music. At the present time no music plates are manufactured in Canada, and this is intended to encourage the printing of music.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will notice that the present item is exactly the same as under the old tariff; that is the reason it was not amended. The matter of printed material and everything connected with it is still before the tariff board. The hearings are incomplete, and printed music is included in the items to be investigated.

Mr. QUINN: I am not referring to printed music.

Mr. DUNNING: No, but when the board deals with printed music it has to deal with everything that enters into the production of it. The whole matter is still before the board, and I prefer not to take action in connection with any particular part of it.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—475a. Stereotypes, electrotypes, celluloids and bases for the same, composed wholly or in part of metal or celluloid, n.o.p., and copper shells for such stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids, per square inch: British preferential tariff, ⅛ cent; intermediate tariff, ⅛ cent; general tariff, ⅛ cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—475b. Matrices for stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids described in item 475a, per square inch: British preferential tariff, ½ cent; intermediate tariff, ½ cent; general tariff, ½ cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—476. Surgical and dental instruments of any material; surgical needles; X-ray apparatus; surgical operating tables for use in hospitals; microscopes valued at not less than $50 each by retail; and complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—476a. Glassware and other scientific apparatus for laboratory work in public hospitals; apparatus for sterilizing purposes, including bedpan washers and sterilizers but not including washing or laundry machines; all when imported in good faith for the use and by the order of any public hospital: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: A number of the medical men in the house who are interested in hospitals have pointed out to me that as this item is worded at present it would have the effect of compelling a hospital in every case to be the importer as a hospital, and I am advised that this would cause very great inconvenience. I am informed that many hospitals desire to secure these various supplies from stocks which they wish to have carried by some merchant or dealer in the city in which the hospital is located. Under the wording of the item as it is in the printed list it would be impossible for that to be done and at the same time permit the hospitals to get the benefit of the concession here given. I desire to suggest a change, and if hon. members will follow the item they will see that the change is very slight; it has the effect of correcting that disability of which the hospital association and the medical fraternity complain. The item would read as follows:

Glassware and other scientific apparatus for laboratory work in public hospitals; apparatus for sterilizing purposes, including bedpan washers and sterilizers but not including washing or laundry machines; all for the use of any public hospital, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—476b. Surgical suction apparatus including motive power; surgical catgut, chloroform, ethyl chloride, canopy or pedestal operating room lights designed to minimize shadow, not including bulbs; all the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada, and complete parts thereof, when imported in good faith for the use and by the order of any hospital: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: The same change requires to be made in this item, which will read as follows:

Surgical suction apparatus including motive power; surgical catgut; chloroform; ethyl chloride; canopy or pedestal operating room lights designed to minimize shadow, not including bulbs; all the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada, or complete parts thereof, for the use of any public hospital, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

Of course the point will be apparent to the committee.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—477. Metallic tubes, glass caps, shells, containers and capillary tubes, rubber bulbs, boxes and corks, when imported by manufacturers of vaccine points for use exclusively in the manufacture of vaccine points, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—478. Artificial limbs, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. QUINN: There is no change; what is the idea of inserting the item?

Mr. DUNNING: It is just a matter of numbering.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—479. Materials and articles, when imported by manufacturers of artificial limbs for use exclusively in the manufacture of artificial limbs, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—480. Crutches or specially constructed staffs for cripples: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—481. Specially constructed boot or appliance made to order for a person having a crippled or deformed foot or ankle: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—482. Ear telephone sets and similar appliances, including complete parts and batteries therefor, for use by deaf persons, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a new item, to provide for apparatus for the deaf.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—494. Manufactures of cork-wood or cork bark, n.o.p., including strips, shives, shells and washers of cork: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—494a. Cork slabs, boards, planks and tiles produced from cork waste or granulated or ground cork: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—498. Cane, reed or rattan, not further manufactured than split, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—502b. Bicycle rim strips of maple not further manufactured than bent to shape and jointed: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Mr. DUNNING: There should be an item 502c, which appears to have been dropped. It reads as follows:

Customs tariff—502c. Wood handles or stems for handles, not further manufactured than turned, when imported by manufacturers of goods enumerated in tariff items 409a, 409c, 409e, 409f, 409g, 409i, 409j, 409o, 431 and 431a for use exclusively in the manufacture of goods enumerated in said items: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

The only purpose of this item is to have the new numbers replace the numbers appearing now in the tariff.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—502d. Gun stocks and forends for shot guns, of walnut in the rough, not further manufactured than bored and channelled, when imported by manufacturers of shot guns for use only in the manufacture of shot guns in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—506a. Clothes pins, with springs, per gross: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 9 cents; general tariff, 10 cents.

Mr. SHORT: Would the minister give us the imports under this item?

Mr. DUNNING: They are untraceable, because they came in under the general item, n.o.p.

Mr. SHORT: Have you any exports of these?

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think they are traceable. Our production amounted to $132,000.

Mr. SHORT: This does not affect the ordinary clothes pin; this is a particular type?

Mr. DUNNING: It is the clothes pin with the metal spring.

Mr. SHORT: Are they not manufactured in this country?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: There is a considerable reduction in the intermediate and general tariff; why is that?

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is a specific duty. My hon. friend misunderstands it; this is the specific duty per gross in future.

Mr. SHORT: What is the difference?

Mr. ESLING: I should like to ask the minister what is the difference between the 10 cents per gross and the 25 per cent ad valorem?

Mr. DUNNING: They are worth in the neighbourhood of 30 to 35 cents a gross.

Mr. ESLING: In my district we have a company which was incorporated and which put in the necessary machinery some time ago for the manufacture of this article. These pins have been dumped into the country from Sweden, and the business of that concern has been very seriously injured. I brought this matter up in the house two years ago, and these pins have been coming into the country in such quantities that the plant practically had to cease operations. Now we are making it even worse, it seems to me.

Mr. DUNNING: No, the reverse is the case.

Mr. ESLING: I asked the minister what was the difference?

Mr. DUNNING: The effect is an increase. The people concerned came before the board and represented just the condition to which my hon. friend has referred and asked for a duty per gross. They said plainly that the general wood, n.o.p., item bore no relation at all to their product, which contains a steel spring and two wooden parts. As the result of the hearing I thought their representations were well founded and their request was granted.

Mr. ESLING: May I ask if there were any importations from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: As I explained, we cannot trace the importations because previously there was no item in the tariff covering this article; it came in under miscellaneous products of wood, and one cannot trace the imports.

Mr. CANTLEY: May I ask the minister why he is dealing with this article in this way? We have been exporting a comparatively large quantity of these pins to the old country, but now he has changed the whole schedule, as I understand it, and made them free from Great Britain. Are there any importations of these pins from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no means of discovering that. The change is made at the request of the manufacturers of clothes pins.

Mr. SHORT: It is an increase instead of a decrease.

Mr. CANTLEY: It does not sound reasonable for a manufacturer to ask you to give free entry to a competitor.

Mr. DUNNING: It may not sound reasonable, but there are some reasonable people in the world.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am talking about what is unreasonable.

Miss MACPHAIL: Even among manufacturers.

Mr. ESLING: Does the minister think an increase of 2 cents per gross is sufficient to protect the local industry?

Mr. DUNNING: The manufacturers are satisfied. Would my hon. friend like me to drop the item?

Mr. ESLING: No, I would like to see the minister increase the duty.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—513. Umbrella, parasol and sunshade sticks or handles, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—516. Blinds of wood, metal or other material, not textile or paper: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—535a. Grasses, seawood, mosses and vegetable fibres other than cotton, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 17½ per cent.

Mr. QUINN: Should not "seawood" read "seaweed"?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. This item bears a relationship to item 200, which was allowed to stand a few days ago and to which I think we will have to refer in order to discuss intelligently the matter involved. This item covers grasses, seaweed, mosses and vegetable fibres other than cotton, while item 200 covers pulp of wood, of straw or of any other vegetable fibre. The two items interlock and relate themselves to a wide variety of commodities in which a number of members have displayed interest and which have been discussed before the tariff board. The question revolves around a commodity known as bagasse of sugar cane, which is apparently a waste by-product of the cane and is somewhat competitive with the waste product of our lumbering and pulp industry. Considerable experimental and development work has been done in this connection during the past few years, and representations have been made by the lumbering industry and several of the provincial governments relative to this matter After reviewing the whole question, I am inclined to think that this is the item under which it might be provided for, and I propose to add to this item "bagasse of sugar cane, whether or not dried, cleaned, cut to size, ground or sifted", and leave the rates as they are. That would allow bagasse of sugar cane to come in free under the British preference, covering in this case the West Indies, and the rates would be 17½ per cent under both the intermediate and the general tariffs.

Mr. WHITE (London): Does the minister intend to allow this wastage of the sugar cane to come in free from the West Indies to compete with the wastage from our own pulp mills?

Mr. DUNNING: Apparently there is no objection to its being permitted to come in free from the West Indies.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. DUNNING: I would move that we revert to item 200.

Motion agreed to.

Customs tariff—200. Pulp of wood, of straw or of any other vegetable fibre: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—535e. Vegetable fibres other than cotton, when imported by manufacturers of brushes for use exclusively in the manufacture of brushes, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. DUNNING: This is a new item to provide low rates on fibres other than cotton for the manufacture of brushes. Prior to 1928 the manufacturers of brushes obtained their raw material under the old item 539. Apparently these fibres are collected from the trees by natives and owing to a great variety in the shading they are all dipped in a form of dye or stain to give them a uniform colouring. The present item 535 reads in part: "vegetable fibres other than cotton, not coloured." The manufacturers of brushes were not able to take advantage of free entry for their raw material and had to import under 535a, as vegetable fibres other than cotton, n.o.p. This change is made to rectify a situation which was rather unfair to the manufacturer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They were paying a higher duty because of the colouring matter used?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Some of the fibres are coloured in their natural state?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And the natives colour other fibres in order to make them all look alike?

Mr. DUNNING: That is it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why is a duty imposed against this commodity at all; is it just for revenue purposes?

Mr. DUNNING: It was an n.o.p item, and it would not be well to eliminate that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There is no n.o.p. here.

Mr. DUNNING: The other item is the n.o.p item, and that is the only one which is dutiable.

Mr. CHAPLIN: This item is dutiable.

Mr. DUNNING: It is free under the British preference.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is intended as a revenue producing tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: I have in mind the vegetable fibres coming in from different parts of the British Empire.

Mr. BELL (St. John-Albert): Are there no vegetable fibres produced in Canada? There is a brush factory in my constituency and they inform me that the cost of the fibres represents about 50 per cent of the total cost, the remainder being made up chiefly of labour and wood. They have asked me if it would not be possible to have the intermediate and general tariffs free.

Mr. DUNNING: I am quite sure that these articles can be procured within the British Empire, and we are trying to do as much business as we can with the various parts of the empire. We are selling them our own commodities, and a tropical product of this kind might very well be secured from the same countries to whom we are trying to sell.

Mr. BELL (St. John-Albert): I understand that this fibre is obtained chiefly from Brazil, West Africa, India and also Mexico. The duty on imported brushes from England is 15¾ per cent. Is that right?

Mr. DUNNING: The three rates applying on the finished product are 17½ per cent, 25 per cent and 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—553a. Stereotypers' and typecasters' blankets or blanketing and press blankets or blanketing used for printing presses, of a class or kind not made in Canada: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 5 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—577. Collars and cuffs of xylonite, xyolite or celluloid: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—584a. Asphalt, not solid: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 17½ per cent.

Mr. CANTLEY: What material is this?

Mr. DUNNING: This is an item that has been in the tariff for years. The imports last year were $52,000, of which $51,000 worth came from the United States and a very small quantity under the British preference.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How much under the British preference?

Mr. DUNNING: A very small amount, not more than $1,000 worth, but my hon. friend will not forget that this is produced in Trinidad.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We have plenty in Alberta.

Mr. DUNNING: Not of this commodity.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—588a. Gas for heating, cooking or illuminating, imported by pipeline, per 1,000 cubic feet: general tariff, 6 cents.

Mr. DUNNING: This removes a complete absurdity from the tariff.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—605. Skins for morocco leather, tanned but not further manufactured; tanners' scrap leather; leather not further finished than tanned, and skins, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—605a. Belting leather, further finished than tanned: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 22½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—618b. Tires of rubber for vehicles of all kinds, fitted or not: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—636. Featherbone, plain or covered, in coils: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—649. Shoe buttons, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—650a. Button blanks of animal shell, in the rough: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—657b. Special parts, in the rough, when imported by manufacturers of cameras, for use only in the manufacture of cameras: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—663c. Soya beans, soya bean cake and soya bean meal when imported by manufacturers of cattle foods and fertilizers for use exclusively in the manufacture of cattle foods and fertilizers, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why should this be free exclusively for manufacturers of soya food? Why should the farmer not be permitted to make the food himself, if he so chooses? It is free to the manufacturers and they can charge the farmer whatever they like, because he cannot import it himself.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps some of the farmer members will advise me whether the farmer could possibly use soya bean cake or meal alone as a feed. My impression is that it is an article which enters into the composition of feeds, but it is usable in a practicable way only as a feed.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why exclude the farmer? The minister is excluding the farmer from doing this.

Mr. DUNNING: If he is a manufacturer of cattle food, even for himself, I do not see any reason why he cannot take advantage of this provision.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What is the duty on the finished article?

Mr. DUNNING: I shall have it looked up. Practically all of the stock foods are free now.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Where do these soya beans come from?

Mr. DUNNING: From China.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—665. Torpedoes, fire-crackers and fireworks of all kinds: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the idea of making these free? Where do they come from?

Mr. DUNNING: They can come from the old country.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think outside of the United States they come mostly from China.

Mr. DUNNING: Out of $99,000 worth, $63,000 worth came from the United States.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But the minister is making the item free and these articles will all come from China via Hongkong.

Mr. DUNNING: I am making it free only under the British preference.

Mr. CANTLEY: That will apply to Hongkong.

Mr. DUNNING: They will not come from Hongkong, because Hongkong does not enjoy the British preference.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then the preference is of no use in that item, because this stuff nearly all comes from China and Japan and it will continue to come.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—665a. Fuse, not metallic: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—670. Grinding wheels, stones or blocks, manufactured by the bonding together of either natural or artificial abrasives; manufactures of emery or of artificial abrasives, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—672a. Sticks or canes cut into suitable lengths for umbrella, parasol or sunshade or walking sticks, further manufactured than in tariff item 455, but not further finished than bent, when imported by manufacturers of umbrellas, parasols, sunshades or walking sticks, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—688. Artificial teeth, not mounted: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—698a. Metal sheets for use only in making Braille printing plates, typewriters with Braille characters on the keys and writing appliances for use only by the blind: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—706. Articles for the personal or official use of representatives of foreign countries and of His Majesty governments, and for the personal use of their families, suites or servants, under regulations prescribed by the governor in council: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Provided that the governor in council may withdraw any of the privileges granted under this section in the case of any country which refuses to grant the same privileges to Canadian officials holding corresponding or equivalent posts in that country, and may also rescind any order in council withdrawing the privileges as aforesaid.

Item agreed to.

4. Resolved, that section B to the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter seventeen of the Acts of 1928, and by order in council, be amended by striking thereout tariff items 1005, 1006, 1009, 1015, 1018, 1021, 1023, 1026, 1027, 1028, 1036, 1039, 1045, 1047, 1048, 1056, 1057, 1058, 1059, 1062, 1063, 1064 the enumerations of goods and the rates of drawback of customs duties set opposite to each of the said items, and by repealing order in council, P.C. 2851, dated the thirteenth day of August, 1921, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of drawback of customs duties in said schedule B:—

Customs tariff—1005. Steel, when used in the manufacture of cutlery or stove trimmings —payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1006. Steel, when used in the manuafcture of scythes, reaping hooks, hay or straw knives, hoes, agricultural forks, hand rakes, axes or windmills—payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1009. Steel, when used in the manufacture of files, augers, auger bits, bit braces, wrenches, hammers or hatchets—payable as drawback, 60 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1015. Steel, when used in the manufacture of skates or bicycle chain—payable as drawback, 40 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1018. Seamless iron or steel tubing over four inches in diameter, when used in the transmission of natural gas under high pressure from the gas wells to points of distribution—payable as drawback, 50 per cent.

Mr. CANTLEY: All of the materials enumerated in the items from 1005 to 1015 inclusive have been made in Canada for thirty years and it is unfair that they should be admitted duty free while the manufacturers who use them as their raw material have a very fair rate of protection. There is not much use in attempting to protect the steel trade when at the same time it is practically wide open to manufacturers of almost every class of material that can be thought of.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Would the minister be good enough to explain why on items 1005 and 1006 there is a drawback of 99 per cent, whereas on item 1015 there is a drawback of only 40 per cent? Skates are manufactured pretty extensively, as the minister knows.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I might point out to the minister also that in item 1006 there is a drawback of 99 per cent. That should be 100 per cent because the articles that are being made have no duty on them at all.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is quite true, but at the same time we in Nova Scotia thirty years ago supplied my hon. friend with material for making scythes and we would do so again if we had a decent tariff which gave fair protection to everybody concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: With regard to the drawback items, the whole matter was carefully studied by the tariff board in relation to each item and in relation to the industry, as well as the rates obtaining with respect to the various products, and it was considered that 40 per cent in this case, having regard to the rates of duty on the finished product, was a sufficient drawback. My hon. friend from Pictou would say that that was too much.

Mr. CANTLEY: Of course it is.

Mr. DUNNING: Those who are interested in the secondary manufacture would say that it is not enough. It is a matter of judgment.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I object to that. I do not think the minister should say that at all. The manufacturers engaged in the manufacture of secondary products would very properly say that you should protect the primary industry, and then on top of that protect the secondary industry, and then both will live. But with what you are doing now, neither will live.

Mr. DUNNING: Are they all going to die?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The policy you are adopting is gradually killing and will gradually kill them; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend really believes that?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I absolutely do.

Mr. DUNNING: He believes that the whole steel industry in this country, primary and secondary, is going to be killed?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The way you are handling it, it could not be otherwise, because the people who have been handling this tariff are not even good business men. That is true. The man that is at the head of it has never made a success of any business he has ever been in, except the one of promoting and lobbying. That is the truth.

Mr. EVANS: There is no fear of the steel industry in this country dying. They still have the price fixing power, and still export their goods at the expense of the consumer. I do not see why they have a drawback of 99 per cent or 60 or 40 per cent. Why should the finished articles carry a duty of 20 per cent, which has to be paid by the farmer who has no price fixing power, and who has to find a market for his products against all the cheap labour of the world? Is it right that we should protect one class over and over again at the expense of the other? Is it right that discriminatory legislation should be put through this house for the purpose of allowing one class to ride on the back of the other year after year? I hope the time will soon come when I shall see my own class emancipated from these conditions.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to give the house a little information. Many years ago we made in New Glasgow hundreds of tons of skate steel, which was worked into skates in Halifax. Nobody was hurt. The Halifax people were competing with the whole world in skates, particularly with Germany. That business has been wiped out by the drawback.

Then take item 1009. A large quantity of steel was produced for the articles in this item. Take the question of agricultural implement steel, to which I have already referred in this house. There was a time when we in New Glasgow supplied 40 per cent of all the steel used in the manufacture of agricultural implements in Ontario. But a quarter of a million dollars' worth of plant has been scrapped and large numbers of men have been thrown out of employment. Who has benefited by that change? Agricultural implements are not any cheaper to-day than when the steel was made in Nova Scotia. It could be made there to-day and in Ontario, and that it is not made there to-day is due to very faulty tariff construction. A scientific tariff would begin with the basic forms of iron and steel and go on up progressively in accordance with the amount of labour involved in each manufacture. This tariff has departed entirely from that principle; it has resulted in a large wastage of capital invested in plant, and has thrown a very large number of men out of employment. Is that a desirable condition of affairs to perpetuate in this country? I leave it to the minister.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1021. Rolled round wire rods in the coil, of iron or steel, not over .375 inch in diameter, when used in the manufacture of galvanized iron or steel wire, curved or not, .144, .104, or .092 inch in diameter with tolerance not to exceed .004 inch—payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: I have an amendment to make to that item, Mr. Chairman, in order to make it agree in intent and wording with the items in the tariff which it covers. It is the intention that the drawback should apply only to rods used in the manufacture of wire covered by item 401d. I move to insert after the words ".004 inch" the words "but not when such wire is for use in telegraph or telephone lines." There is no change at all.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—1023. Hot rolled hexagon iron or steel bars, when used in the manufacture of cold drawn or cold rolled iron or steel bars—payable as drawback, 60 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1026. Materials, when used in the manufacture of containers for articles entitled to entry under tariff item 219a—payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1027. Materials, when used by manufacturers of malleable iron castings or steel shafting for use exclusively in the manufacture of goods enumerated in tariff items 409a, 409b, 409c, 409d, 409e, 409f, 409g, 409j, 409o, and 439c—payable as drawback, 80 per cent.

Mr. SIMPSON: Has the minister the total value of the imports last year to which this drawback applies?

Mr. DUNNING: The amount paid in the fiscal year 1929 was $10,800. I have a slight correction to make in this item, Mr. Chairman. In the fourth line, after the word "of", I move to insert the words "Such articles for use in the manufacture of."

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Mr. DUNNING: I have a new item to insert, Mr. Chairman. It will be item 1028, and will read as follows:

Customs tariff—1028. Steel billets, when used in the manufacture of the seamless pipes, tubes and flues enumerated in tariff items 399 and 410d.

Provided that no drawback shall be paid under this item when the pipes, tubes and flues enumerated in tariff items 399 and 410d are dutiable under the general tariff of schedule A to this act—payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

We failed to include free billets for free commodities, and this item is inserted to correct that slip.

Mr. SIMPSON: This is simply providing another drawback on the primary industry. Why not make provision for a duty on the seamless pipe when manufactured in this country, a provision similar to the one you have for skelp steel?

Mr. CHAPLIN: These drawbacks just take so much more business away from the primary industry, that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) has been speaking about.

Mr. DUNNING: Item 399 is:

Pipes, tubes and flues, of wrought iron or steel, not further manufactured than in straight lengths—

Last night we had a discussion on bent tubes. My hon. friend from London (Mr. White) wanted the bent ones free, and I yielded to his request. Now the manufacturers are in the position of having to pay duty on the materials which enter into these things which other manufacturers desire to have free. I am trying to correct that condition so far as it relates to these flues and well casings. That is, they are free items under the tariff, and the manufacturers of them certainly ought not to pay tariff on the ingots used in their production.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister is mixing up two separate items.

Mr. SIMPSON: Will it be confined to those?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and only so long as the items are free.

Mr. WHITE (London): I have no objection, but as I pointed out this afternoon, while hot rolled iron and steel comes in free, the billet duty is raised $2 a ton.

Mr. DUNNING: I will check that up.

Mr. KAISER: This drawback refers to steel sheets in connection with the manufacture of automobiles. This item merely covers steel sheets used in the manufacture of the gasoline tanks of automobiles. Hitherto the 99 per cent drawback covered all the stampings in connection with the manufacture of automobiles. If there is any desire on the part of the government to get cheaper automobiles it is no use to add additional charges to their manufacture. After the words "steel sheets" in the order in council passed in 1921 the words "cold rolled sheets" were added and it is out of these hot and cold rolled sheets that—

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend would only let me explain. The words to which he referred were dropped in typing. It is purely a typographical error and the people disturbed have all been so informed.

Mr. KAISER: Has the government informed them?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. I have the correction here.

Mr. KAISER: Why should these items come up here after being passed on by the tariff board and by the customs officers and still contain such blunders as, if passed, would put manufacturers out of business?

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I can only say that these words were dropped in typing and were not caught in time to be corrected otherwise than by moving a resolution, which I do now. Those interested were immediately advised as soon as the mistake was discovered, and they are not a bit disturbed about it now, I can assure my hon. friend.

Mr. KAISER: Are we to expect these items to come from the tariff board loaded with blunders?

Mr. DUNNING: The tariff board made no blunder; a typist did.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. KAISER: What words are added?

Mr. DUNNING: "Hot or cold rolled."

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—1045. Steel sheets, coated with lead or with lead and tin, .064 inch to .022 inch in thickness, 20 to 42 inches in width and 50 to 120 inches in length, when used in the manufacture of stampings for automobiles—payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1047. Materials, when used in the manufacture of articles enumerated in tariff item 410e—payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1048. Materials, including all parts, when used in the manufacture of goods enumerated in tariff item 440k—payable as drawback, 50 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1056. Materials, when used in the manufacture of rolled iron or rolled steel entitled to entry under tariff item 442a, when such rolled iron or rolled steel is sold to manufacturers to be used as specified in said item—payable as drawback, 99 per cent.

Mr. SIMPSON: I should like to know the amount of drawback on this item, also on 1057.

Mr. DUNNING: The drawback amounted to $2,082.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1057. Materials, when used in the manufacture of articles entitled to entry under tariff item 442, when such articles are sold to manufacturers to be used as specified in said item—payable as drawback, 80 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: The drawback was $10,900.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1058. Materials, when used in the manufacture of articles entitled to entry under tariff items 411 and 411a, not including saws, and articles entitled to entry under tariff item 410 (1), when such articles are used as specified in said items—payable as drawback, 60 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1059. Materials, when used in the manufacture of articles entitled to entry under tariff items 410b and 410z when such articles are used as specified in said items—payable as drawback, 70 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1062. Materials, including all parts, when used in the manufacture of marking gauges, levels, planes or hand tool scrapers, spoke shaves, try squares, bevels, measuring tapes of metal, rules, forged wire rope sockets, lathe dogs, tool holders, forged clamps, chain pipe wrenches.

Provided that no drawback shall be paid under this item unless at least fifty per centum of the cost of producing the finished article has been incurred in Canada; and provided further that no drawback under this item shall be payable more than once on any article—payable as drawback, 60 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: The words "of metal" should be deleted in the fifth line.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—1063. Materials, including all parts, when imported prior to July 1, 1932, when used in the manufacture of engines for use exclusively in the equipment of aircraft.

Provided that on and after July 1, 1930, no drawback shall be paid under this item unless at least 25 per centum of the cost of producing the finished engine has been incurred in Canada—payable as drawback, 60 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1064. Materials, including all parts, when imported prior to July 1, 1932, when used in the manufacture of aircraft, not including engines.

Provided that no drawback shall be paid under this item unless at least fifty per centum of the cost of producing the finished article has been incurred in Canada—payable as drawback, 60 per cent.

Item agreed to.

5. Resolved, that any enactment founded on the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force on the second day of May, one thousand nine hundred and thirty, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the foregoing resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that date and to have applied to goods previously imported for consumption for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, how does the minister propose to deal with that class of cases in which there has been a variation of the schedules since we went into committee, and which would imply payments at one rate and the tariff applied at another.

Mr. DUNNING: I have made inquiries as to the practice in the past in all similar cases. Applications for refunds are considered on their individual merits. The practice followed has been dependent very largely upon whether the person entitled to consideration for refund himself, or as a corporation, was subject to any loss in the matter. Wherever losses were definitely ascertained as being present and not passed on so that they could not be followed, I find consideration of refunds has been given by the Department of National Revenue and submitted to the treasury board. But cases have occurred in the past in which it was quite impossible to trace the ultimate result of the reduction.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. minister will realize in connection with fruit and vegetables that the large sums of money that were paid for a period of more than two weeks by those importing such goods from the United States would naturally not involve the consumers in any refunds that might be made.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I was asked to have the minister if possible make some statement as to what the policy of the government would be, because I propose as we proceed, in view of certain statements that have been made both in the press and by members of this house, to question further as to the reasons that were in the minister's mind when he introduced the measure as he did and amended it as it now stands. It was in order to be fair with him in that regard that I now put to him the question as to whether or not any refund will be made in matters of that kind.

Mr. DUNNING: In so far as the fruit and vegetable changes are concerned the matter has not been considered as one of government policy. My hon. friend will readily appreciate that I am not in a position to indicate the view of the government. Applications for refunds are always given consideration; that is, any one who thinks himself aggrieved under the provisions of the law may apply for refund. Consideration to grievances will have to be given as they arise.

Mr. BENNETT: There is one other item to which I wish to direct the attention of the minister. I refer to the item in respect to the importation of soft flour. Soft flour is made from soft wheat, and is used for the production of biscuits. Some years ago a biscuit factory was established in the city of Edmonton; it has since been sold. Recently there was established in Calgary a small biscuit factory which now employs about 125 people. As hon. members know, soda biscuits, so-called, are largely if not entirely made from flour manufactured from soft wheat. In the early days of my experience in western Canada soft wheat was grown in British Columbia and milled at a small mill near Enderby. In recent years that supply has been discontinued, and so far as western Canada or British Columbia are concerned no supply is available for the production of biscuits. The factory at Calgary, as well as the factory at Edmonton, have been depending upon the supply of flour imported from the United States, produced, as I have said, from soft wheat, not from hard wheat. In the province of Ontario the large biscuit factories have ample supplies of flour milled from soft wheat, and the supplies of this commodity going into Alberta come either from Ontario or from the western United States. The demand in Ontario for flour milled from soft wheat is practically met by the home grown article. Importations into Canada from the United States during the last few years have averaged 65,000 barrels per annum, and a duty of 50 cents per barrel has been charged. As it now reads the countervailing duty on soft wheat per barrel will be $2.03.

Mr. DUNNING: Two dollars?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, on flour milled from soft wheat.

Mr. DUNNING: Is my hon. friend sure of his figure?

Mr. BENNETT: If my hon. friend will look at the present American tariff, which does not differentiate between flours milled from hard and soft wheats, he will find my statement to be true. The effect of this will be to impose upon that small industry in Calgary a tax of $2.03 per barrel of flour. Soft wheat flour is practically the only flour which can be utilized for their purposes. I will not repeat what I said the other day as to the difficulties experienced in establishing industries in these western communities. I could cite the case of the Regal biscuit factory which lost something like $300,000 when it went out of business in western Canada. It was established in the city of Calgary. Through local capital efforts are now being made to reestablish the industry. The investment involved in the city of Calgary amounts to about $300,000, and there are approximately 125 employees on the payroll.

Notwithstanding the protection that has been afforded to Canadian industry the importation of unsweetened biscuits from the United States during the fiscal year 1924-25 amounted to 612,000 pounds; in 1925-26, 706,000 pounds; in 1926-27, 733,000 pounds; in 1927-28, 864,000 pounds, and in 1928-29, 881,000 pounds. The importations of the sweetened product from the United States increased from 347,000 pounds in 1924 to 1,105,459 pounds in 1928-29. In the intervening years the importation had reached as high as 1,280,000 pounds, and the low figure was 998,000 pounds. Under the proposed countervailing duty against all classes of flour there will be a duty of $2.03 per barrel instead of 50 cents per barrel.

Mr. DUNNING: $2.03?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I am basing my figure on 196 pounds to the barrel. I submit to the minister that the purpose he has in mind would be amply fulfilled by sub-dividing the item so as to provide for countervailing duties on hard wheat flour, and an additional clause in connection with soft wheat flour. I would suggest the addition to item 61a as follows:

Wheat flour, of soft wheat, when imported by manufacturers of biscuits for use only in their own factories in the manufacture of biscuits, per barrel: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 50 cents; general tariff, 50 cents.

Such an addition would have the effect of enabling this industry to continue, while at the same time it would not in any sense interfere with the operation of the countervailing duties in connection with the class of wheat flour covered by the tariff item.

Mr. DUNNING: Has my hon. friend investigated the freight rate situation from the point of origin of the soft wheat flour?

Mr. BENNETT: I should have said to my hon. friend that so far as freight rates are concerned there is no milling in transit rate on soft wheat flour from eastern Canada to Calgary, therefore the milling in transit rate that applies to eastbound traffic has no application. Whereas the wheat at one time was ground in small quantities in the mill at Enderby which has since been abandoned, as some of the hon. gentlemen will no doubt recall, and there being no soft wheat grown in the prairie provinces suitable for the production of biscuits, we have to have recourse to the supply in the States directly south of Alberta. I refer to the state of Washington—

Mr. DUNNING: Farther south than that.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. DUNNING: Washington?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and probably a little farther south on some occasions. Special varieties of soft wheat flour may be obtained farther south than Washington and Oregon, but in the main those states produce the flour which is used in the Calgary plant for biscuit making. So far as I can see there would be no Canadian industry or activity affected by my proposed item. If there were it is needless to say I should be very glad to have such industries protected.

Mr. DUNNING: The milling of soft wheat flour is an important Canadian industry.

Mr. BENNETT: But only where there is a constant and ever increasing demand nearby, because the freight rate makes it impossible to move the wheat west. I tell the minister frankly that so far as my investigation has gone I have stated the facts correctly. A representative of a western plant came down here to interview the minister, but I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has had an opportunity to confer with him.

Mr. DUNNING: My office was in touch with him.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course he feels that the increase in duty from 50 cents to $2.03, on a product which is not produced in his part of Canada and which under existing freight rates cannot be made available for the development of that industry, there being no milling in transit rate on westbound products, is an impossible situation.

Mr. DUNNING: I mentioned the freight rate aspect of it having in mind the present source of supply and the rate on the product to Calgary and Edmonton and I believe also to Regina, where I think there is a branch of the same institution, although I am not sure. As nearly as I could work it out without accurately and definitely getting the rates, it should be possible to ship that flour from the east to the west at a comparable rate to that which prevails from the point of origin in the United States. However, I do not expect to deal completely with the resolution to-night and perhaps I might make a note to look into this matter further; the item as such is passed, but the resolution itself will not be passed until all the component parts have been dealt with. I will look further into the matter. My hon. friend's suggestion is a qualification. Of course so far as Ontario is concerned he will appreciate the fact that the item as it stands is very acceptable.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. If it affected in that province any trade with the community to which I have referred, then of course there would be clear justification for protection of the indutsry—that is the industry of agriculture—by the application of the tariff item. But from 50 cents to $2.03 a barrel is an increase of something like 300 per cent on that item alone, and if it were pure protection the rate would not be necessary. It is more than that; it is an incidence to the application of a countervailing duty on wheat flour, which should be divided into two classes, namely that produced from soft wheat and that produced from hard wheat.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend sees the difficulty, of course, but I will give it further consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: To save time I have purposely discussed the matter now, having mentioned it to the minister, rather than when the measure based upon these items was submitted.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. DUNNING: We might revert to items 377, 377a, 377b and 377c, which were allowed to stand.

Customs tariff—377. Ingots, of iron or steel, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $1.50; intermediate tariff, $2.50; general tariff, $3.

Customs tariff—377a. Blooms, cogged ingots, slabs, billets, n.o.p., sheet bars, of iron or steel, by whatever process made, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $2.50; intermediate tariff, $4; general tariff, $4.50.

Customs tariff—377b. Ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, n.o.p., of iron or steel, valued at not less than 3 cents per pound, when imported by manufacturers of steel for use exclusively in the manufacture of steel, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Customs tariff—377c. Ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, n.o.p., of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of forgings for use exclusively in the manufacture of forgings, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister, per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $2.25; general tariff, $2.50.

Mr. DUNNING: These are the items in connection with which the leader of the opposition made a suggestion. I have looked into it and I find that it would be quite impracticable in operation, as far as I can gather from trying to follow what would be the result. It would produce in practice a chaotic condition in relation to three or four items of the customs tariff, and particularly as applied to a number of industries in different parts of Canada, some of which might be complying with the conditions while others were not, whereas the tariff itself is applicable across the whole of Canada and to all imports of that class or kind. It would be quite impossible of application.

Mr. HEAPS: Might I suggest that these items be held over until to-morrow morning? Quite a number of members would like to discuss them.

Mr. DUNNING: They have been standing now for two or three days following a very elaborate discussion, and there is half an hour yet remaining to-night. Of course my hon. friend is aware that there will be a further opportunity in the committee stage of the bill to discuss these items if that is thought desirable. There is a good deal of revision to be done on the bill which will be introduced, and there will be no barring of an opportunity to discuss any item.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I should like to ask the minister if he has reconsidered item 296.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. DUNNING: We are gathering still information on feldspar, and that item either will have to be carried as it is or will have to stand for the moment. It is very hard for my officers to get sufficient time to prepare information for me while they are compelled to be in the house.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Shall item 377 carry?

Mr. BENNETT: What the minister has said probably is true, except that perhaps those who might be affected could give some assurance that they will look into the question of improving the conditions under which labour is now employed. I fancy there will be no difficulty about that being said. I did look into the matter, as the minister suggested, and I have some doubt as to the validity of any such amendment, from the standpoint of interfering with the scheme of taxation, in view of what the chairman said the other day. That is the reason, frankly, why it was not embodied in the form of an amendment.

Mr. DUNNING: Has my hon. friend looked into the practicability of it?

Mr. BENNETT: I have not up to the moment done more than look into the other aspect of it, the one in which I was more intimately concerned, having regard to what the chairman said the other day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think this ought to carry. We tried to impress upon the committee the other day the importance of protecting the interests of the workers in the steel industry. I do not think it is necessary at this stage to review what was then said. The fact is that these companies are receiving a very considerable benefit from this country and the least we should do is to insist that their employees be given something like decent conditions under which to work.

It has been stated that the company is not at the moment in a very good position to give this assurance. That statement has been made for a good many years now. For the past six or seven years I have discussed this matter in the house, and always we are told that the companies are not in a position to do it. I have never yet heard of a reform which has not been met with some statement of that kind. It seems to me that the time has come when we have to decide frankly whether dividends or the needs of the employees are to have first consideration. It may be said in this connection that the company is not paying dividends. At least it is carrying on, and I take it that in a good many departments we already recognize that wages are a first claim. It ought to be recognized here that wages and decent working conditions are a first claim upon the industry. I quoted figures the other day to show that provision was being made for the obsolescence of machinery, for replacement, for reserves, and so on. I have no objection to the company making such provisions, but I do say that provision ought to be made for the people whom it employs, and that the provision for the employees ought to come first.

Under these circumstances I think the Prime Minister ought to accede to our request. He said that if we took the step in this case it would have to be taken in all cases, and he said also that he was willing to do it. I should like to have him make a statement on that particular point. I think he should do so, after what was said on the floor of the house the other day. I quite concede that it might be difficult to apply immediately in industry the whole of the provisions of the treaty of Versailles, and that is why I am in favour of having some of them applied in this one item. I quite concede that all industrial establishments ought to have the eight hour day, but these steel works are the only big industrial establishments I know of in this country that are working their men twelve hours a day.

An hon. MEMBER: And fourteen hours per day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They work twelve hours a day for seven days in the week, and in some cases the night men work thirteen hours a shift. During the change over from shift to shift I am told that the men work for twenty-four hours without cessation. So far as I know this is the only large industry in which men have to work under such conditions; hence there is a particular reason for the making of suitable provisions in this case. When protection is being given to this industry, provision should be made for the workers. Why put it off until another year has passed? Is the government going to put this off altogether? Why wait until such time as the companies are prepared to come through?

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement in regard to the remarks made the other night in reference to this matter. On Wednesday night the house heard a good deal of lurid speech as to living and labour conditions in Glace Bay, Cape Breton. Quotations were made from reported investigations by certain well-meaning men of God and others with what perhaps may be termed somewhat advanced views as to social service and similar matters. Some of the statements quoted and made were probably correct; others were possibly exaggerations.

I have no interest in the Besco corporation and never had beyond a small matter of holding shares to the nominal value of $100 with a present market value of less than half that amount. As to the condition of their housing properties at Glace Bay, I personally know nothing and therefore offer neither criticism nor defence.

In view of the general denouncement voiced here last Wednesday night, I consider it desirable now to say that conditions such as referred to do not now prevail nor have they at any time during the past forty-five years prevailed as regards the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company of New Glasgow, in connection with either their mainland or their Cape Breton enterprises. Neither at New Glasgow nor at Trenton did that company build or own any houses or tenements for the housing of its employees. They did, however, encourage and assist employees to build and own their houses, and many of them do own their houses in both these towns, due to assistance given by the company.

When the Scotia Company acquired in 1900 the property and mines of the General Mining Association of London, and in the following year proceeded to develop further the property by opening additional collieries and erecting coal washeries, coke ovens, blast furnaces and a modern open hearth steel plant, they found the colliery employees for the most part living in houses many of which had been occupied for many years. Some of these of brick and stone construction were in fairly good condition and comfortable. On the other hand a considerable number of the wooden houses were not in good condition. These were replaced by upwards of 350 new houses, all of which were supplied with water and sewer connection and electric lighting facilities, and the occupants were urged to and in many cases have become owners, the company selling the houses to employees at actual cost and payment being made by monthly contributions with interest at 6 per cent on the outstanding balances. Most, if indeed not all, of these houses are now owned outright and free from any liability to the company. A considerable number of houses were also built on plots of suitable land situate on the established streets, with water, sewer and electric connections, the land being given to the operatives free of cost if the employee built a house thereon, the cost being advanced at 6 per cent interest, repayable at the convenience of the employee owners.

No such conditions as described on Wednesday night exist or at any time have existed at New Glasgow, Trenton or Sydney Mines in so far as the employees of the Scotia Company were or are concerned. I make this statement without fear of successful contradiction and from first-hand knowledge gained by official connection with the corporation for more than two score years and as its general manager and director for more than twenty years.

May I add that from the formation of the Scotia Company the value of a contented, loyal body of workers was recognized and fostered by the management, and a more skilful and enthusiastic group of coal miners and steel operators than those of the Scotia's employ do not exist anywhere. Leaders have been supplied from those workers to many similar undertakings both in Canada and in the United States. The success of the ideal to which I refer is evidenced by the fact that in the case of the mainland enterprise, which has operated continuously for more than fifty years, and in the case of the Sydney Mines coal and steel operations, carried on over a period of thirty years, no strike has ever occurred. True it is that on one brief occasion during the overstrained period of the war a ticket-of-leave Australian convict agitator appeared and succeeded in stirring up some little friction. That, however, was speedily settled by mutual agreement and with no stoppage of work and no shadow of unrest or suggestion of dissatisfaction has since developed—a record, Mr. Chairman, which I claim to be creditable both to the men and to the management, a record not excelled by any corporation in this Dominion operating a like diversified industry. During the period I have referred to, other corporations in Nova Scotia, both coal mining and steel companies, have had several severe and long continued strikes. One company within a period of twenty-five years has had more than a score of strikes. Another corporation had a stoppage of its operations extending considerably over a year —indeed, approaching two full years. The experience of the Scotia Company in that connection is, I submit, most illuminating, and so far as that corporation is concerned the denunciations of the various speakers on Wednesday evening last do not apply.

I am glad to have had the opportunity of making this statement, and I think it only fair to the corporation to which I have referred and to the workers employed by it that the committee should be in possession of the actual facts.

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Which speakers are you referring to?

Mr. CANTLEY: To some of the speakers who spoke on Wednesday evening.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): What speakers?

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not going to particularize them.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to inform the committee as to the number of hours worked by the men employed at the mill at New Glasgow?

Mr. CANTLEY: I think the longest hours we have worked in recent years is a fifty-four hour week.

Mr. HEAPS: Are there night and day shifts?

Mr. CANTLEY: I think so.

Mr. HEAPS: Do any of the men in the steel mills work the same hours as they do at Sydney?

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not know what hours are worked at Sydney.

Mr. HEAPS: Does the night shift at New Glasgow work twelve hours?

Mr. CANTLEY: Not that I know of.

Mr. HEAPS: New Glasgow was not mentioned in any of the denouncements made on Wednesday evening.

Mr. CANTLEY: I agree with that.

Mr. HEAPS: We were referring particularly to conditions which are well known to exist at Glace Bay and Sydney. I do not think there is one hon. member of this house who would dispute the statements made in reference to those places, which statements have been made not only this year but in previous years. I think it is a little unfair for the previous speaker (Mr. Cantley) to throw suspicion upon the men and women of high reputation who went to the mills at Sydney and Glace Bay and investigated the conditions existing there, which conditions were condemned in the strongest possible language. Severe condemnation of these conditions was made also by the commission appointed by the government of Nova Scotia. I do not think there is a single hon. member who would dare to rise in his place and defend the conditions which exist at the steel mills of the Besco corporation. I must confess that I know very little about the conditions at New Glasgow, but neither I nor any other hon. member mentioned those particular works when this matter was under discussion.

I had hoped, when the leader of the opposition and the leader of the house were unanimous in saying that better conditions should be provided for the men engaged in the steel industry in particular, there would have been some action on the part of the government. But what do we find? To-night the Minister of Finance, without adequate reason asks us to adopt a measure of increased protection to the British Empire Steel Corporation. What was the defence of the minister Wednesday evening? It was that the employees themselves had asked for this protection. Hon. members who are familiar with the conditions that prevail in the steel industry will realize how easy it is, with the company union they have, to pay the expenses of the men to Ottawa in order that they may plead on behalf of the company.

May I point out to the minister and to the committee a more classic example than that of these men who came here and pleaded for the company? Those who have read the history of the civil war of the United States know how the slaves, who were mere chattels, fought on the side of their masters when the north was trying to emancipate them from chattel slavery. We have similar conditions to-day when an attempt is being made to free men from what might be called wage slavery. Even the men themselves object to the eight hour day, because they think for the moment it may mean a reduction in pay. I am surprised, however, that the Minister of Finance, who ought to know something of conditions in poor homes, who has risen from a humble home to the position he now occupies, should defend an increase—

Mr. DUNNING: I must object to that. I was merely giving information to the committee. If my hon. friend will read what I said, he will not find in it any cause for surprise. It is my duty to give information and I merely gave it without comment; in fact, I specifically so stated.

Mr. HEAPS: I would be the last person in the world to do an injustice to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. DUNNING: My concluding remarks were:

> What concerns me is how it is possible practically and definitely to apply it, and that feature of the matter, of course, requires consideration. I rose merely to advise the committee that the men had associated themselves unconditionally with the employers in asking for what is here granted.

Mr. HEAPS: But the Minister of Finance was trying to pilot through the house increased protection for this industry, and one of the reasons he gave to the house in support of the proposal was that the men themselves employed in the steel industry had agreed to this increased tariff protection.

Mr. DUNNING: The men stated that they desired it, and I merely conveyed that information to the house.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not know whom the men who desired it represented; they may or may not have represented all the men in the industry. But I have also had an opportunity of coming into contact with those men and I know that to-day they are complaining most bitterly of the conditions under which they are compelled to work.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no doubt of it, and properly so.

Mr. HEAPS: If they want redress, how are they to get it? They find it almost impossible to organize. Everything the company by strong organization can use against them is being so used. The only place to which they can look for redress is parliament. What is parliament doing? Instead of looking after the interests of the men it is looking after the interests of the owners of the industry, the capitalists; it is giving protection to the industry, and the men can wait until it suits the employers to give better conditions to their employees. It is common knowledge that in the past couple of days, since we had this discussion on Wednesday, there have been around these buildings some of the directors of the British Empire Steel Corporation. I have no objection to their coming here and pleading with their friends in the house; but how different would conditions be if the men had an opportunity of coming here. It is, however, difficult for them to come; they cannot afford to do so unless under the same conditions as the men came last year, their expenses being paid by the company, and pleaded for higher protection for the industry.

To-night I am making a plea for the men. At the moment I am not concerned as to the financial position of the corporation. I know there exist in the city of Sydney in the Dominion of Canada conditions which are a disgrace to this country, where men are compelled to work on night shifts thirteen hours at a stretch with an interval of only half an hour for something to eat, and where some weeks they work 102 hours. It is almost unheard-of; it is well-nigh unbelievable. To-night I was in a friend's house in Ottawa and the lady of the house said to me: "I read something in the newspaper about men working eleven and twelve hours a day. Surely they would not work eleven and twelve hours a day in the Dominion of Canada!" I had to tell her that men not only had to do that, but that on some shifts they had to work thirteen hours at a stretch.

Further, if an industry as wealthy as the British Empire Steel Corporation, with all the advantages it has at its command, cannot afford to provide for its men better conditions than those, Canada would in the long run be better off without such an industry. Can the industry afford to give those men better conditions? Rarely has there been an industry that of its own volition has given conditions to its employees. Parliament therefore takes a retrograde step if it gives protection to the shareholders who live in all parts of the world and refuses to give a little bit of protection to the men employed in the industry. We all admit that conditions under which men are compelled to work eleven, twelve and thirteen hours at a stretch, are intolerable. Our first duty therefore is not toward the shareholders but toward the man; yet we are not taking any action that would appear to afford better conditions to the men engaged in the industry. The other night hon. members representing those districts and representing the workers in Nova Scotia rose in their places and pleaded with the house that some action be taken.

Progress reported.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Seventh report of the special committee on pensions and returned soldiers' problems.—Mr. Power.

Third report of the special committee appointed to consider the Dominion Elections Act and the Corrupt Practices Act.—Mr. Power.

Mr. BENNETT: In looking over the Pension Act the other day, I saw no provision for the repeal of sections that might be inconsistent with the provisions of the new bill, and I thought it might be desirable to mention in the senate that such a section should be added, namely, that any provisions of the old act that were inconsistent with the proposed new act should stand repealed.

Mr. POWER: Colonel Biggar, counsel for the committee, informed me that that particular point was covered, but I see the point raised by my hon. friend, and I shall take it up with him.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Saturday, May 24, 1930

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PENSIONS AND SOLDIERS' PROBLEMS

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) moved concurrence in the seventh report of the special committee on pensions and returned soldiers' problems.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Mcleod): Mr. Speaker, I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Mines (Mr. Stewart) to the following telegram:

> The executive board of the Mine Workers Union of Canada urgently requests the federal government to give attention to the serious condition of unemployment and distress now prevailing throughout the mining industry of western Canada and would suggest as one means to that end that the government concede to the request made for subvention of rates as placed before the government by the representatives of the mining industry of western Canada.

It is signed by Frank Wheatley, president of the Mine Workers' Union of Canada. I know the government have had this matter under consideration, and I would ask the minister whether in view of the early closing of parliament he is yet prepared to make a statement in regard to it.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, the matter has been under consideration for some days by the government, and I expect to have full information to place before the house in order that we may deal with it to-day or Monday.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, I noticed in some of the press reports from the province of Alberta that Premier Brownlee was to report to this government the unemployment conditions there and ask for assistance. Has any information been received from him?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not so far as I know. I have not received any information, and the Prime Minister states that he has not.

PUBLIC WORKS AT BEAVERTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) if it is the intention of the government to complete the public works at Beaverton. Nothing has been done this year.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): Offhand I am not in a position to say what the present situation is, but I shall be glad to make inquiries and let my hon. friend know.

RUSSIAN ANTHRACITE COAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) possibly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) could give me an answer with regard to a question on Russian coal. I presume that Russian coal is being sent to this country to pay for Canadian goods. Can the minister give us information as to the class of Canadian goods which is being exported to Russia and the present trade balance?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I am afraid my hon. friend will have to put that question on the order paper. I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce through his department will be able to give an answer to it; I cannot offhand.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps my question may be treated as notice of motion.

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

EXPORT ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 15 to amend the Export Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Could the Prime Minister give the house some indication of the nature of the amendment?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, the amendment is purely clerical. In line 27 the word "exportation" appears; it should have read "importation."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will read the section and hon. members will see how the mistake has arisen:

It shall be unlawful to make any entry for exportation of any intoxicating liquor, destined for delivery into any country into which the exportation of such liquor is prohibited by law.

The amendment is to change the second "exportation" to "importation." It depends on which side of the line you are taking your stand, I think.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

2419—158½

NATIONAL PARKS

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 135, respecting national parks.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give an explanation?

Mr. STEWART (West Edmonton): We found that there was some conflict in connection with subsection 3 of section 6 of the National Parks Act as it applied to railways, and in order to ascertain the real standing as between our claim of ownership of right of way and the claim of the railway company we have allowed the section to be stricken out for the time being. Subsection (3) of section 6 is as follows:

No lands within a park, other than those specified in subsection (2) hereof, shall be patented or conveyed in fee.

There was a strong feeling on the part of the railways that we were taking arbitrary powers under this bill to dispossess them of rights which they thought they might have or rights which were in dispute. We do not want to put ourselves in that position; we do not want to take advantage of the railways and by an act of parliament put ourselves in any superior position. It is a matter that will have to be settled between the government and the railways.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

WAR VETERANS' ALLOWANCES

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 19, respecting war veterans' allowances.

An hon. MEMBER: Explain.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This refers to an amendment to section 7. The purpose is to delete the word "or" in the fourth line thereof, which is undoubtedly a clerical error. The section deals with deductions not to be made. The draftsman, Colonel Biggar, has set them out separately under sections (a), (b) and (c). The section is clarified and it is acceptable to the department.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

FISH INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 134, to amend the Fish Inspection Act.

An hon. MEMBER: Explain.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The amendment is apparent on reading the section. The section reads:

The governor in council may at any time order that this act or any one or more of the provisions of this act specified in such order, shall extend and apply to any other kinds of fish, whether pickled or not, to fish oils and to the containers used for packing and marketing such fish and oils;

The words "for packing and marketing such fish" are deleted as being superfluous, and in their stead are inserted the words "or to be used" so that the section will apply not only to containers that are used but to containers which are to be used.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 9, to amend the Companies Act.

An hon. MEMBER: Explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall give an explanation as to the nature of the amendment made by the Senate. They have added a new section, namely, section 43. Previously the bill contained 42 sections. This section is to enable the companies, through the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, to establish and support or aid in the establishment and support of associations, institutions, funds, trusts and conveniences intended or calculated to benefit employees or ex-employees of the corporations, either by way of pensions, allowances, by making payments towards insurance or for any object similar to the foregoing. I believe the amendment should be accepted because it is of a benevolent nature.

Mr. HANSON: I understand there is a further amendment; we have not seen it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall read the whole section:

Notwithstanding anything in sections 2 and 153 of this act, every corporate body created otherwise than by letters patent for any of the purposes or objects to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends, is hereby declared to possess, as incidental and ancillary to the powers conferred by the special act or charter creating it, power to establish and support or aid in the establishment and support of associations, institutions, funds, trusts and conveniences intended or calculated to benefit employees or ex-employees of the corporation, or of its predecessors in business, or the dependents or connections of such persons, and to grant pensions and allowances, and to make payments towards insurance, or for any object like or similar to these foregoing, and to subscribe or guarantee money for charitable or benevolent objects or for any public, general or useful object.

(2) After the coming into force of this section the amount expended or to be expended for any of the purposes mentioned in subsection (1) of this section shall be determined once for all, each financial year, by one resolution only of the board of directors or other governing or administrative body of the corporation; or if preferred and so declared in the first resolution to be passed for each year, by several resolutions of the same authority each year.

That is a mere question of procedure.

Mr. BOURASSA: That is a very broad clause. Would these activities or organizations be brought under the supervision of the Superintendent of Insurance?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think so.

Mr. BOURASSA: I think the change would be very dangerous. I am entirely in favour of the principle, but it allows all sorts of companies and all sorts of enterprises to carry on insurance operations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, just for their own employees.

Mr. HANSON: It allows them to assist.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is merely for the purpose of aiding employees.

Mr. BOURASSA: They could not, under this section, organize insurance companies, so to speak, in connection with their own enterprises?

Mr. LAPOINTE: They have power to establish and support associations, institutions, funds, trusts and conveniences intended to benefit their own employees.

Mr. BOURASSA: Quite so; it is for the protection of the employees and their families. What guarantee is there that the investment of funds gathered from premiums paid by employees will be regulated according to the principles of the Insurance Act? We know of the troubles that existed before the amendment to that act. There was difficulty experienced with the old benevolent societies, including such organizations as the Independent Order of Foresters, and we know that that institution practically went bankrupt. Finally parliament decided, quite rightly I think, after the investigation in the United States, to remodel the Insurance Act and to bring practically all benevolent institutions, or at least those governed by federal legislation, under the supervision of the Department of Insurance. Since that time, due largely to the intelligence and competence of Mr. Finlayson, these institutions have been put on a solid basis. Now, if we are to open the door to all sorts of private benevolent insurance companies connected with banks or manufacturing concerns and let them organize themselves as they wish, we run the risk of finding ourselves, five or ten years hence, in the same position as we were when these so-called mutual societies were on the verge of bankruptcy and had to be saved by special legislation of this parliament.

I am merely indicating the possible results, because I took some active interest at the time in the preparation of those amendments to the Insurance Act. I made a special inquiry in the United States; I was put in communication with the board of inquiry there which had been instituted by the government of the state of New York, and I would not like to see a similar condition occur again to the great detriment of the employees of the various companies contributing to these so-called benevolent associations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry I have no knowledge at all of this bill. It comes under the Secretary of State, but it has been accepted by his department and also by the Superintendent of Insurance, who was interested in it.

Mr. BOURASSA: Has Mr. Finlayson expressed his approval, before the committee of the Senate?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I understand this was submitted to him.

Mr. BOYS: I should like to find out at whose instance this is put in. It is very difficult to appreciate the full effect of this amendment without having the Companies Act here to assist one. Is this a power to be given the directors with the approval of the shareholders, or is it for the directors alone? Then there is one other feature which it seems to me is a little extraordinary. In the third line of subsection 2 occur the words "shall be determined once for all each financial year." How can you determine something once for all each year? Is it the intention that the board shall deal with it say at the first meeting, and that their decision shall apply for that year, and that the following year they shall deal with it again?

Mr. LAPOINTE: They will deal with it each year, but once for all for that year.

Mr. BOYS: Of course that is only a minor matter, but I would like to know at whose instance this is being done, and whether this is a power given to directors without the consent of shareholders or whether their action has to be approved by the shareholders.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will have to ask to have the bill stand, since I have no information.

Motion stands.

FAIR WAGES AND EIGHT HOUR DAY

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 49, respecting fair wages and an eight hour day for labour employed on public works of the Dominion of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. HEENAN: Hon. members will recall that on the motion for third reading of the bill the leader of the opposition offered an amendment to the last section. The old section stated that all regulations made under this act should have the same force and effect as if they had been included therein from the date of their publication in the Canada Gazette. The amendment made by the Senate is that they will have this force and effect fifteen days after they have been published.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LOAN OF $20,042,038.84 TO REFUND OBLIGATIONS OF CANADIAN NORTHERN AND MINNESOTA AND MANITOBA RAILWAY COMPANIES

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 130, respecting the Canadian National Railways, and to provide for the refunding of certain maturing financial obligations.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—short title.

Mr. CRERAR: Perhaps for the information of the house I may say that this bill was referred to the special committee on Canadian National railway estimates and considered and reported without amendment by that committee. For the information of hon. members who may not have been in the house when the bill was previously considered, I may say that it provides for the refunding of certain maturing obligations of the old Canadian Northern Railway which, of course, were inherited by the Canadian National Railways. Most of these obligations mature on June 30 of this year, with one or two maturing on October 30, and they amount to some $20,042,000. The provisions of the bill regarding the necessary financing to retire these obligations are the ordinary provisions in bills of this kind.

Mr. HANSON: Does this bill refer only to the maturing obligations of the Canadian Northern Railway?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes; they were all subsidiary companies of the Canadian Northern in Manitoba.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LOAN OF $8,609,000 TO RETIRE CENTRAL VERMONT REFUNDING MORTGAGE BONDS

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 131, respecting the Canadian National railways, and to provide for certain financing in connection with certain lines of railway located principally in the state of Vermont.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. HANSON: This bill refers to the refinancing of the Central Vermont which is a subsidiary of the Canadian National Railways. As this railway is located wholly in the United States, I think it is due to the house and to the country that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Crerar) should state the situation with relation to it and tell us how much of the public moneys of Canada is invested in it. I think the house should be given some of the informtaion presented to the special committee. Those of us who were members of that committee understand the matter, but full information should be upon Hansard regarding this matter.

Mr. CRERAR: The object of the bill was discussed by myself very fully when it was in the resolution stage, but I will be glad to give the committee the information asked for by the hon. member. The Central Vermont railway was under the control, by stock ownership, of the old Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, the majority of the stock having been secured, as my memory serves me, well over thirty years ago. That relationship continued until the Grand Trunk was taken over and incorporated in the Canadian National system. In 1920 the Grand Trunk had to provide for certain maturing obligations amounting to $12,000,000, which was done by guarantee of the Grand Trunk, given by its board of directors, as to principal and interest of the bonds of the Central Vermont. In 1920 there were disastrous floods in the state of Vermont and the Central Vermont railway, along with other railways in that state, suffered very heavy losses. Steps were taken by the Canadian National Railways, who were then operating the Central Vermont, to have it put into the hands of a receiver, and the railway remained in that condition until January of the present year when the receivership was discharged. When the road went into receivership it was necessary, under the terms of the mortgage securing the bonds which had been guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway in 1920, for the Canadian National Railways to take up those bonds, which were then outstanding to the amount of $8,609,000. This matter was provided for through temporary financing, and the object of this bill is to guarantee the bonds of the Canadian National Railways and thus clear up the matter. In January of this year the road was purchased from the receiver by the Canadian National Railways for $22,000,000, and in addition to that there were outstanding $5,000,000 of receiver's certificates. As far as my information goes, that is the story of the adventure of the old Grand Trunk in the Central Vermont railway. Bonds of the Central Vermont railway will be issued and deposited with the Minister of Finance and will remain under his control and direction.

Mr. HANSON: The explanation given by the minister is very good as far as it goes, but the point I wanted to have elucidated and placed upon record is the actual amount of money this country has in the Central Vermont railway, which amount I think runs up to about $39,000,000.

Mr. CRERAR: The total advances to the Central Vermont railway through the old Grand Trunk railway system amounted to about $38,800,000; that was the total outstanding when the road went into receivership in 1927, and included the guaranteed bonds of 1920 amounting to $12,000,000, to which I referred a moment ago. When the road was taken over from the receiver, it was taken over at a valuation of $22,000,000 plus the $5,000,000 advanced on receiver's certificates.

Mr. HANSON: In addition to the $39,000,000, there were $5,000,000 of receiver's certificates which were purchased, as I understand, by the Canadian National Railways, so that the total investment in the road would amount to something like $43,000,000. The $5,000,000 covered rehabilitation of the road due to the floods to which the minister has referred.

Mr. CRERAR: The $5,000,000 is included in the $38,800,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Has this road any connection with any other road in the United States?

Mr. CRERAR: I am not at the moment prepared to say what traffic arrangements it has with any other line in the New England states. As hon. members know, the old Grand Trunk had an interest in lines in the state of Michigan and in other western states, and this is a part of the system to carry goods from Chicago down to the New England states, those goods being carried over the Canadian National system through the province of Ontario.

Mr. McGIBBON: Are there any profits over and above the operating expenses and bonded indebtedness?

Mr. CRERAR: I cannot give that information at the moment, but as I recall, Sir Henry Thornton made the statement before the special committee that based on the showing of last year the road would be able to pay the interest on its outstanding securities and show a very fair return on the common stock held by the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. HANSON: The road has never paid anything, but there are great expectations.

Mr. CRERAR: That is quite right.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Special War Revenue Act, chapter one hundred and seventy-nine of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter fifty of the acts of 1928 and chapter fifty-seven of the acts of 1929, and to provide:—

1. That section eighty-six of the said act, as amended by section three of chapter fifty of the acts of 1928 and as amended by section five of chapter fifty-seven of the acts of 1929, be amended by providing that the rate of consumption or sales tax be reduced to one per cent.

2. That schedule III to this act be amended by changing the numbers of customs tariff items as follows:—

Tariff item 410 to read 406a.
Tariff item 410a to read 406b.
Tariff item 445 to read 409d.
Tariff item 445a to read 442.
Tariff item 445b to read 442a.
Tariff item 446 to read 409b.
Tariff item 446b to read 409c.
Tariff item 446c to read 409k.
Tariff item 447 to read 409n.
Tariff item 447b to read 409j.
Tariff item 448 to read 409a, 409c, 409e, 409f, 409g, 409j, 409o.
Tariff item 449 to read 409i, 431a.
Tariff item 450 to read 431.
Tariff item 453b to read 411, 411a, 411b.
Tariff item 453c to read 410l.
Tariff item 453d to read 464.
Tariff item 453e to read 440k.
Tariff item 456a to read 391a.
Tariff item 460 to read 410m, 410n, 410o, 410p, 410q, 410s.
Tariff item 460a to read 410q.
Tariff item 460b to read 410b, 410z.
Tariff item 460c to read 410g.
Tariff item 460d to read 410k.
Tariff item 461 to read 410f.
Tariff item 461a to read, iron or steel pipe, not butt or lap welded, and wirebound wooden pipe, not less than thirty inches in internal diameter, for use in alluvial gold mining.
Tariff item 466 to read 476.
Tariff item 466a to read 476a.
Tariff item 469 to read 410d.
Tariff item 469a to read 410e.
Tariff item 469b to read 410c.
Tariff item 506a to read 480.
Tariff item 591 to read 439c.
Tariff item 591a to read 439d, and that section eighty-eight of the said act be amended by changing the numbers of customs tariff items as follows:
Tariff item 86 to read 85, 89a, 89b, 89c, 89d, 90d.
Tariff item 105 to read 105e, 106a, 106c.
Tariff item 105a to read 106b.
Tariff item 106 to read 105, 105d.

3. That any enactment founded on paragraphs one and two of this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the second day of May, one thousand nine hundred and thirty, and to have applied to all goods imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): These sections of the resolution concerning the Special War Revenue Act relate specifically to the sales tax. They provide, as indicated in the budget, for a reduction of the sales tax to one per cent. The changing in the resolution of the item numbers is done in order to bring the numbers into conformity with the numbering which is contained in the tariff provisions. Certain items in the Special War Revenue Act under the sales tax provisions at the present time take only one-half the regular rate of sales tax and in order to carry that forward it is necessary to change the numbers to make them apply to the same items in the new tariff.

Sections 1, 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

4. That section fifty-eight, as enacted by chapter fifty-seven of the statutes of 1929, sections fifty-nine, sixty, sixty-one, sixty-two and sixty-three be repealed and provision made that there shall be imposed, levied and collected upon every change of ownership consequent upon the sale, transfer or assignment of any share of stock of any association, company or corporation, or any bond, debenture of debenture stock other than a bond, debenture or stock of the Dominion of Canada or of any province of Canada, an excise tax as follows:—

(a) Three cents for every one hundred dollars or fraction thereof, of the par value of a bond, debenture or debenture stock;

(b) Five cents for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over one hundred and fifty dollars per share;

(c) Four cents for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over seventy-five dollars per share but not more than one hundred and fifty dollars per share;

(d) Three cents for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over fifty dollars per share but not more than seventy-five dollars per share;

(e) Two cents for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over twenty-five dollars per share but not more than fifty dollars per share;

(f) One cent for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over five dollars per share but not more than twenty-five dollars per share;

(g) One-quarter of one cent for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price of one dollar to five dollars per share, but not more than five dollars per share;

(h) One-tenth of one per cent of the value of every share of stock sold or transferred at a price less than one dollar per share;

that the said tax shall be payable in excise tax stamps by the vendor, transferor or assignor;

that every person liable to collect or pay the said tax shall keep records and books of account;

and that any enactment founded on this paragraph four shall come into force on the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and thirty.

Mr. HANSON: The minister might be good enough to give the committee the reasons for the recantation in connection with this tax, just what happened as a result of the legislation of last year and the reason for the change.

Mr. DUNNING: The tax as introduced last year produced during its period of operation quite a substantial revenue, but it became apparent in operation that it bore more heavily upon low value shares than upon high value shares. Representations were made during the year by those interested, and the department made a careful investigation, having in mind that what was done last year was done in an effort to arrive at a method of levying the tax which would be practicable. It will be noticed that in order to reach the point where the low value shares are equitably taxed, it has been necessary to adopt both methods in part; that is, partly the method which was in effect prior to one year ago and partly that which is in effect until the budget becomes effective. For instance, on the small value shares it will be noticed that the percentage method is applied in these proposals in order to get the tax small enough to bear any reasonable relationship to the value of the shares which are being dealt with. That was the system which was formerly objected to as applied to the whole list, and which last year was done away with, but which, on being changed, produced the situation that the low value shares were taxed proportionately more than those of high value. The grading in this manner is contended to be far more equitable.

Mr. BOYS: Could we have opposite the various paragraphs numbered from (a) to (h) the figures showing the tax which prevailed before? For instance, in paragraph (a) the tax is now three cents. If we could have opposite that the previous tax and so on down the list, we would at once see what was being done.

Mr. FRASER: Could the minister indicate what amount of revenue was collected under this tax to the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. DUNNING: I am embarrassed at the moment because I have under my hand nothing more than what my friends have. I have sent for my material.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister then let this stand and go on to the next resolution relating to the Income War Tax Act?

Mr. DUNNING: We could do that if it suits the convenience of the committee. I am sorry I have not under my hand the material required to answer the question.

Mr. McRAE: Would the minister at the same time ascertain the approximate expense involved in checking up this tax in the various brokerage houses throughout the country, the cost of superintendence?

Mr. DUNNING: I can give that so far as the government is concerned. I think I shall have that information available when I get my material.

Section stands.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Income War Tax Act, and to provide—

1. That the corporation rate of tax be paid in respect of undistributed income when such undistributed income is received by a corporation on the sale or winding up of another corporation.

2. That the income of cooperative companies and associations be exempt from income tax.

3. (a) That an exemption of $500 be granted in respect of dependent parents, grandparents, brothers, sisters, sons and daughters, incapable of self-support on account of mental or physical infirmity, not otherwise presently provided for.

(b) That donations, to the extent of ten per centum of the net income of the taxpayer to any church, university, college, school or hospital in Canada, be allowed as a deduction.

(c) That government or other like annuities to the extent of $5,000 be exempt from income tax.

4. That corporate rate of tax be imposed on family corporations in respect of the interest therein of non-resident shareholders.

5. That directors, officers or employees of a Canadian company who reside abroad shall be taxable in respect of the dividend and interest income received from the company in which they are employed.

6. That any enactment founded on the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1929 taxation period and to be applicable thereto and to fiscal periods ending therein and to subsequent periods, except any enactment founded on resolution number one hereof, which shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1930 taxation period and to be applicable thereto and to fiscal periods ending therein and to all subsequent periods.

Mr. KAISER: In regard to section 3 (a), might I ask the minister to consider extending that exemption of $500 to at least two collateral cases? An exemption of $500 to a man who takes care of his brother, sister, father, or mother is appropriate, but is it not more worthy of recognition by the state that a man should take care of his wife's sister and his wife's mother? I suggest that this $500 exemption be extended to the sister-in-law and her mother. It is all right for hon. gentlemen to smile. I understand the meaning of the smile. Hon. gentlemen are smiling at the idea of a man doing anything for his mother-in-law. But I say that it is a very creditable action on the part of a man earning a salary to take care of an invalid sister of his wife or the invalid mother of his wife, and I would ask that the minister very carefully consider extending the exemption to cover these cases.

Mr. HANSON: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that you read the whole resolution, and then we can take it up section by section.

On section 1—That the corporation rate of tax be paid in respect of undistributed income when such undistributed income is received by a corporation on the sale or winding up of another corporation.

Mr. HANSON: I direct the attention of the minister to what after all is a technical matter, but inasmuch as we are altering the law in relation to undistributed income, I desire to call his attention to a situation that has arisen. Section 1 reads:

That the corporation rate of tax be paid in respect of undistributed income when such undistributed income is received by a corporation on the sale or winding up of another corporation.

Now if hon. gentleman will refer to section 6 they will see that it states that section 1 shall be deemed to have come into effect at the commencement of the 1930 taxation period. That is, it is dated back to the 1st day of January, 1930. As the resolution stands, the provisions of section 6 make the provision of section 1 retroactive in effect. That is my first objection. Unless care is taken in respect to the question of undistributed income in the bill, this provision will be retroactive to the beginning of time in the case of undistributed income. That is hardly fair.

I wonder if the minister, who of course is familiar with the law, knows that under the present act, section 19, it is provided that on the winding up of a company the distribution of the assets in any form shall be deemed to be the payment of a dividend to the extent that the company has on hand undistributed income. That is to say, on the winding up of a company undistributed income is taxable as such when it goes into the hands of the shareholders. Thus if a company sells its assets for cash and distributes the proceeds to the shareholders, they are taxable to the extent that the balance sheet shows them to be part of earned surplus. That is the law to-day. But the present act provides that dividends paid to an incorporated company by a company incorporated in Canada, the profits of which have been taxed under the act, are not liable to taxation. That is, where the dividends of a company the shares of which are owned by another company are paid to the shareholders of that other company. That is provided by section 4(n) of the present act. It is perfectly legal now for a company, instead of selling its physical assets, to sell its issued capital stock to another company. Accordingly, instead of buying assets, shareholders of a company which is selling out can be protected by buying their shares. They then get the total price of their assets including surplus in the form of the price of their stock just as though they had sold their stock individually on the market. The purchasers can then have a new company incorporated to which the shares of the original company are transferred. The new company can then take the assets of the original company, by distribution in winding up, and under the provisions of section 4, paragraph (n) of the present act, the new company is protected from liability to income tax on the earned surplus. It may be said that by that method the shareholders of the selling company escape payment of income tax on undistributed and earned surplus or income; but it is a perfectly legal transaction, and to make this provision that we are now dealing with retroactive is, I submit, wholly unfair.

I can say for the minister's benefit and assistance that I have taken occasion to discuss this matter with the income tax authorities, and while they admit that it bears the construction which I have indicated, they say that it was not the intention of the department to go that far, but to go back only to the 1st day of January, 1930. But unless the bill is properly worded, to provide against the contingency I have mentioned, there will be very grave injustice done.

Even to go back to the beginning of 1930 is, in my opinion, not quite fair because that too has this retroactive feature. I would suggest to the minister that instead of making this retroactive to the beginning of the 1930 taxation period, he provide in the bill that it take effect from the beginning of the next taxation period, the beginning of the 1931 period, or the end of the 1930 taxation period. In that way the government and the department will not be open to the charge of passing retroactive legislation, which on principle is always bad, and which may bear hardly in a given case.

I am not objecting to the principle of the amendment to the act, because in principle an undistributed income has as much right to pay taxation as distributed income, but it has not been made taxable in the past and it has been perfectly legal to do what I have indicated has been done; and to make this provision retroactive now would create an injustice in existing pending cases, and there are cases existing such as I have indicated where the entire issue of capital stock of one corporation is being sold to another and title being taken in a holding company. That is the objection to this legislation. The objection is chiefly to the retroactive feature. I have no desire to see shareholders escape paying taxation if it is levied in a proper way, but I submit that the department in making this provision retroactive is not proceeding in quite a proper way.

My position is plain. I am quite sure the officers of the income tax branch understand the matter very thoroughly, perhaps much more thoroughly than I do myself. I think if the minister will consult them they will agree with me that the objection is to the retroactive feature and not to the principle underlying the taxation in question. If the minister will make this effective from the beginning of the next taxation period I do not think anyone can have the slightest objection to it. Those who have transactions pending will not be injured. They have proceeded under the present law, and I do not think it is quite fair that the law should be changed and made to relate back so as to cover pending transactions.

Mr. DUNNING: The intention of this section of the resolution is to overcome the scheme of avoidance of taxation, which as my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) states, has the benefit of legality at the present time, although certainly the spirit of the law does intend that that taxation shall be paid. A legal method has been found of evading it in this case, and the amendment is designed to prevent that in the future and to ensure that taxation will be paid upon undistributed income of companies when they are absorbed by other companies. My hon. friend is afraid of the retroactive feature?

Mr. HANSON: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: I can assure him that the bill will not go back of this calendar year; but it is intended to embrace all transactions which take place within this calendar year, which is the year of taxation for all income tax payers. So far as putting its operation forward to the beginning of 1931 is concerned, that would be simply to invite those who have any intention at all of evading taxation under the present law to get their schemes matured in 1930, and I am sure my hon. friend would not want that to happen. I can see no harm whatever in making the amendment apply to the present taxation period.

Mr. HANSON: The minister admits that it would not be right to go back beyond the present taxation period, but I am sure the gentlemen who are sitting with him will agree with me that as the resolution reads it is retroactive as to past years.

Mr. DUNNING: That is a matter for the lawyers to settle in the terms of the bill. I can assure my hon. friend that it is not our policy to go back beyond the calendar year.

Mr. HANSON: The minister does not say so in so many words, but he rather suggests that there is something immoral on the part of my profession or of the accountant's profession in studying this act and devising ways and means—not to enable their clients to evade payment of taxation, but to prevent their having to pay taxation. Perhaps I am going a little too far when I say he is suggesting there is something immoral about it. I think it is quite proper. To my mind it is the duty of a lawyer to point out to his clients their rights under taxation. Undoubtedly it is quite legal to do what is being done to-day and what has been done in the past in this connection. I suggest to him that the immorality—perhaps that is a little too strong a word to use in the premises—consists in making the amendment retroactive. It may be said that there has been a loophole in the law. Well, I assume the law was designed to cover the cases the department had in mind at the time. It has not done so. Now circumstances crop up which suggest a change in the law. With the principle of that I am not finding any fault, because I like to see everybody pay his just share of taxation. But I do object to the retroactive feature, and if the minister will give further thought to the matter I think he will agree with me that it is a very bad principle. It is to be condemned in almost any class of legislation, and in taxation legislation in particular. I have always raised objection to making a tax retroactive. People have gone along, legally, honestly carrying out their business transactions on the assumption of having to pay certain existing taxes. It is a rude awakening for them to find that the legislature by an arbitrary provision—and I am not using the word "arbitrary" in any improper sense—cuts away the ground from under their feet. This amendment is perfectly all right and will receive my support if the minister omits the retroactive feature. I think the minister understands my point fully. I am pleased that the amendment will not be effective beyond this taxation period, but I think he ought to make it apply to the period beginning with 1931. I may say frankly to the minister that I have no clients interested, nor am I personally interested in the matter, but a professional friend of mine who is very much interested has drawn the matter to my attention. Hence these remarks.

Mr. DUNNING: I will not attempt to follow my hon. friend into a discussion whether finding a hole in the law is moral or immoral. The fact of the matter is, as he himself acknowledges, there was a loophole which enabled parties to escape what I believe to have been the manifest intent and spirit of the act, while not its legal intent. Now we are proposing to plug that hole. It was never intended to make the amendment retrotractive so far as past years are concerned. I am not conceding anything to my hon. friend in that particular, because, as I say, it never was the intention. Retrotractive taxation would be decidedly unwise, and I agree with him as to the unsoundness of it. As to the application of it, however, to this taxation period from the first of January 1930, I regret I cannot follow his objection. I think it is quite proper to make the amendment with respect to taxation of undistributed income apply to the whole of this taxation period, which, as hon. members know, commences from the first of January in each calendar year.

Mr. HANSON: The minister has admitted all my major premises, but he refuses to apply them. He admits that retrotractive legislation is bad, almost immoral—I do not know that he uses that word.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. HANSON: Yet he wants to apply that principle to this taxation period. The minister is not consistent.

Mr. DUNNING: I am trying to be just.

Mr. HANSON: I would not say the minister is not trying to be just, but he is not logical, he is not consistent. Of course, I may say that the minister has been open to that charge on a good many occasions in relation to this budget, and this is just one more example of his inconsistency—in fact a very minor one in my judgment. But I do suggest that if he admits the principle for which I contend, then to be logical and to be absolutely just he should have this amended provision take effect, not at the beginning of this year, but at the end.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—That the income of cooperative companies and associations be exempt from income tax.

Mr. HANSON: Does this arise out of the litigation in relation to the wheat pool?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. HANSON: There was litigation, was there not, between the department and the wheat pool over the question of payment of income tax?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: What was the decision?

Mr. DUNNING: It was decided against the department by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. HANSON: That is exactly what I thought was the case. Is the litigation ended?

Mr. DUNNING: The litigation is ended.

Mr. HANSON: If that be so, and you have the decision of the highest court of appeal in this country, why the necessity of this legislation?

An hon. MEMBER: There are other cooperatives.

Mr. HANSON: I know, but the principle is there established.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh no; it was a question of contract, and the interpretation of a contract. It did not bear specific relationship to the nature of the organization. The intention here is to exempt bona fide cooperative associations and companies from income tax. I can better discuss the details when the bill is presented, and hon. members will have the proposed sections before them. It is difficult to make a statement when the bill is not before the house, but I may say that a bona fide cooperative organization shall be exempt entirely from the provisions of the Income War Tax Act. I may read what is contained in the bill, although hon. members will understand that the bill cannot be introduced until the resolution has been adopted by the house.

Mr. HANSON: We are at a great disadvantage in not having the bill before us.

Mr. DUNNING: What I shall now read will not prevent consideration of the point at a later time. Section 4 of the said act is amended by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

(p) The income of farmers', dairymen's, live stockmen's, fruit growers', poultrymen's, fishermen's and other like cooperative companies and associations whether with or without share capital organized and operated on a cooperative basis, which organizations—

(a) market the products of the members or shareholders of such cooperative organizations under an obligation to pay to them the proceeds from the sales on the basis of quantity and quality less necessary expenses and reserves·

(b) purchase supplies and equipment for the use of such members under an obligation to turn such supplies and equipment over to them at cost, plus necessary expenses and reserves.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Such companies and associations may market the produce of, or purchase supplies and equipment for non-members of the company or association provided the value thereof does not exceed 20 per centum of the value of produce supplies or equipment marketed or purchased for the members or shareholders.

The question arises as to how we shall decide as to the qualifications, because to a limited degree some of these organizations do business with other than their own members. We could not say that it would cease to qualify because it sold or bought from one person who was not a member, and it was decided that 20 per cent of the value would represent a fair dividing line. Any organization which does 80 per cent of its business with its own members under the plan of returning to its members the whole proceeds less expenses and reserves will qualify for exemption from income tax. Any organization which does more than 20 per cent of its business with those other than its own members will not qualify.

Mr. HANSON: I do not object to the principle of exemption as applied to the purely cooperative associations. I think it would be as fair to exempt such associations as it is to exempt provincial commissions such as the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario. There is a very strong feeling in certain sections of the country that this commission should not be exempted, especially where it operates in competition with privately owned corporations. I have no doubt that to a lesser degree there is the same feeling with respect to cooperative companies. I do not think however that the same principle is applicable where they are trading outside of their own immediate constituencies. I would be curious to know why the arbitrary figure of 20 per cent was taken; it seems to me that as these cooperative companies grow they spread out and make money; they become trading corporations and in principle they cease to be cooperative associations. Where they become purely merchandizing companies and the cooperative principle is disregarded, they ought to pay income tax.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. HANSON: Why were the arbitrary figures of 20 per cent and 80 per cent taken; after all, they are only arbitrary figures?

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to ask the minister if this clause in the bill would apply to cooperative stores operating on the same basis as the Rochdale plan in the old country.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. I think we could have a more intelligent discussion if hon. members had the bill before them.

Mr. GARDINER: If the minister answers my question at a later time I shall be satisfied.

Mr. DUNNING: The only qualification is that they must do 80 per cent of their business with their own members, and return to those members a certain amount on a commodity basis, less expenses and reasonable reserves. I must say that it was difficult to arrive at the figure of 20 per cent. I was interviewed by representatives of cooperatives from coast to coast. The cooperative movement operates in a variety of ways; there are different bases of operation. For instance, the dairy men of the Fraser valley have a very prominent cooperative organization, and it differs entirely from those of the wheat pools or cattle pools of the prairies. As a matter of fact, the cattle pools differ from the wheat pools. For this reason it was necessary to find some common ground upon which all of those essentially bona fide cooperative organizations could be dealt with without at the same time paving the way for the incorporation of what might be called bogus cooperatives created for the purpose of evading the income tax. I do not think there is any danger in the 20 per cent leeway, because no bogus organization could possibly gain anything. It would have to do 80 per cent of its business with its own members or shareholders, and it would have to return to them the whole of the commodity value less operating expenses and reserves. In that arrangement there would be no temptation to create bogus cooperatives to evade the tax. I have given considerable personal study to this matter, and I am satisfied that the provision I have stated will meet the requirements of the case. There was only one exception, and that was the difficulty which arose in connection with certain cooperative banks in the province of Quebec which undoubtedly are of a truly cooperative nature, and are causa populi. The bill will provide for the exemption of such institutions. I doubt very much whether they would have to pay an income tax in any case under the present law, because they do not have profits. Being purely cooperative institutions they should come within the scope of the exemptions.

Mr. FRASER: Does the minister anticipate any difficulty in arriving at the figure of 20 per cent with regard to each of the cooperatives? How will he determine that 20 per cent or how will he compel companies to keep books so that an intelligent abstract may be made from the records to ensure that there is 80 per cent being sold to their own members?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows, of course, that every cooperative company must keep actual records of its dealings with its own members, for the purpose of distribution of its commodity payments.

Mr. FRASER: It should, but does it?

Mr. DUNNING: If it does not then it cannot be a truly cooperative company; it must do so in order to qualify and the volume of that business deducted from the total volume of business done will immediately determine whether or not more than 20 per cent of the total volume was done with nonmembers. I do not anticipate any difficulty, and I may tell my hon. friend that this British Columbia institution, because of the peculiar nature of its foundation and organization, gave me more difficulty in devising this plan than any other single institution. I do not think he need have any fear about it.

Mr. FRASER: I have not any doubt at all about the institution to which the minister refers; I am satisfied that it will absolutely meet the requirements of the proposal. What I am thinking about are the small cooperative stores, merchandising stores calling themselves cooperative, of which I know a dozen in different places, which actually compete in these small towns with the independent or corporate stores. How are you going to get these people to determine the exact relationship of that 80 per cent and 20 per cent? I anticipate difficulty, whether or not the minister does; I can see a great deal of difficulty ahead.

Mr. DUNNING: As a matter of fact they will have to prove that they are entitled to exemption. That is the position. Any bona fide cooperative will have no difficulty at all in proving itself to be a cooperative. It is only the person who is not bona fide who will have any difficulty, and I am not very much worried about him.

Mr. HANSON: If your legislation is framed properly you will put the full onus on these applicants.

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly.

Mr. FRASER: You might go a little further in all this legislation and compel better records to be kept throughout the whole of the Dominion of Canada. If you would compel more accurate records to be kept in the accounting of 50 per cent of these outside stores you would probably collect a great deal more revenue than you get at present.

Section agreed to.

On section 3, subsection (a):

That an exemption of $500 be granted in respect of dependent parents, grandparents, brothers, sisters, sons and daughters, incapable of self-support on account of mental or physical infirmity, not otherwise presently provided for.

Mr. HANSON: What is the minister going to do for the mother-in-law?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HANSON: We may laugh about this, but it is an important principle. Since the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser) brought it up, several cases have occurred to me where this extension might be properly made. As a matter of fact I think the benefit of the exemption should be extended to all actual dependents, but I would put the onus on the taxpayer to show that they were actual dependents, and I would not limit them to particular classes of relations. The minister must know cases, as I think we all know them, of dependents where there was no blood relationship, and it does occur to me that statutory exemption should be given in the case of all bona fide dependents. I would urge that consideration on the minister now.

Mr. COOTE: Under this section I would like to direct the attention of the minister to a little anomaly in regard to these exemptions, and I want to do it on these resolutions because it is possible that he might decide to fix it up in the bill. On the front page of the income tax return I find the following statement:

If the statutory exemption of $3,000 is claimed by an unmarried person, widow or widower, state whether claim is made by reason of (a) being a householder as defined by paragraph (f), section 2 of the Income War Tax Act, or (b) being the support of dependent relatives as provided by subsection 1 (c), section 5 of the act.

[Mr. Dunning.]

The definition of a householder is given further down, as follows:

A householder within the meaning of section 2, of the Income War Tax Act, is an individual who at his own and sole expense maintains a self-contained domestic establishment (i.e., a dwelling house, apartment, or similar place of residence containing at least two bed rooms, in which residence amongst other things the taxpayer as a general rule sleeps and has his meals prepared and served) employing therein on full time a housekeeper or servant. . . . .

I wish to direct the attention of the minister particularly to those last words, "employing therein on full time a housekeeper or servant." I had a case last year which I took up with the inspector of taxation at Calgary, the case of a widow who was maintaining her place of residence as set out here, but who could not afford to engage a full time servant. There are other widows getting the exemption of $3,000 because they can afford to have a servant employed full time. There are many widows left with a certain type of house to keep up, and if the act is being administered as it reads here many of these widows who should have the exemption of $3,000 the same as the widow across the street who can afford to keep a full time servant, do not receive it. I think this was an oversight in drafting the act. Reference is made in this section to widowers, and perhaps the case of the widow was not fully considered. I think some slight change should be made so that the widow who cannot afford to have a full time servant but who otherwise complies with this definition of a householder should not be put in a different position from the wealthy widow who does keep that full time servant. I think if the minister would give that point consideration he might bring in the necessary amendment in the bill in order to correct that situation. Surely it is not right to discriminate in that way in favour of the wealthier widow.

Mr. DUNNING: All points of that kind can be considered when the bill comes in, but of course I have nothing to do with the administration of the act. I am concerned only with the taxation features of it, and I hope the Minister of National Revenue will be present when we are discussing the bill, when administrative details may be gone into more fully. However, I may say to my hon. friend that there was some abuse prior to the institution of that regulation to which he has just directed my attention, due to the fact that in apartment houses a number of individuals taxable as single persons, by cooperating together and hiring one servant for the whole outfit, became householders and thereby acquired the benefits of married persons as far as exemptions were concerned. I cannot promise that it can be changed. Always in changing an act of this kind to meet some individual and special case of hardship, you open the way to these ingenious people who are looking for a way to avoid taxation, and very frequently you do more harm than good.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister briefly tell us the present exemptions in order that we may see the proposed changes?

Mr. DUNNING: The present exemptions given single persons, in addition to the statutory exemption of $1,500 which they get in any case, are as follows: For a dependent parent or grandparent, daughter or sister, son or brother under twenty-one years of age, or incapable of self-support, exemption is granted. A single person gets that now, a single person or a widower.

Mr. FRASER: A single person gets exemption for his daughter?

Mr. DUNNING: There may be some debate as to whether or not a widower is single; I imagine most of them are quite sure they are single, but at the same time they may have daughters or sons. Of course in that case the qualification is that they must be under twenty-one years of age or incapable of self support. That is one of the reasons for the amendment we are now proposing in this connection, for as things are now a single person supporting his parent or any of the other relatives stated can get an additional exemption, but a married person doing the same thing, under the law as it was prior to the budget, cannot get exemption for that support.

Mr. SPENCER: How much is allowed for each dependent?

Mr. DUNNING: Five hundred dollars. A widower with a son or daughter is allowed $500 for each child under twenty-one years of age, or if over twenty-one years of age, when incapable of self support on account of physical or mental infirmity. If a single person, including a widow or widower, he or she is allowed a further $500 for each child actually supported whether of his or her parentage, when under twenty-one years of age, or if over twenty-one years of age when physically incapable of self support, then the allowance is made to the parent only. Under the old law, a child under twenty-one years of age was considered as an infant, while a child over twenty-one years of age was not considered in that sense.

By this bill, a single person, not a widow or widower, who is supporting two or more dependents of the following classes, parent, grandparent, brother or sister, would be exempted an additional $500 for each such person, with one exception the one in respect of whom he is already receiving an exemption of $1,500. Those are the present exemptions.

The present marital exemption—I do not like that phrase, but that is the one used—is $3,000 or $1,500 if the husband and wife are in receipt of an inome of $1,500. The present allowance of $500 is given in respect of the following dependent persons; each child actually supported, whether or not of his or her parentage, under twenty-one years of age, and each son or daughter over twenty-one years of age dependent on the taxpayer because of physical or mental infirmity. By this bill a married person will receive an additional allowance of $500 for each parent, grandparent, brother or sister dependent upon the taxpayer because of physical or mental infirmity.

Mr. HANSON: The extension is as to the collateral brother or sister?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Would it be possible for the minister to make a statement regarding income tax returns to be made by farmers? I have received letters from farmers all over the country, many of whom are not in receipt of a taxable income but who are required to make a return. They want to comply with the law but many of them are afraid to make out the return themselves and they find it necessary to employ a lawyer or notary. This additional expense is put on the farmer in order to make a return which is absolutely unnecessary and which must only clutter up the files of the department. Would it not be possible for the minister to make a statement of some kind in order to clear up this matter in the minds of the people?

Mr. DUNNING: As I stated a moment ago, I am not in charge of the administration of the act, but I feel reasonably sure that it would be possible to secure from the department a statement setting out clearly the conditions in this regard. Every effort is made to avoid the harassing of people who have no taxable income, and improvements in administration along that line have taken place during the past year. I would suggest an interview with the departmental officials as being the best way of clearing up this difficulty.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Would it not be possible to get the minister in charge of this act to make such a statement in the house so that it would go out to the country?

Mr. DUNNING: I can suggest that to him.

Mr. VALLANCE: Would it not be possible to make an affidavit that the individual has no taxable income?

Mr. HANSON: That would be making the taxpayer the judge.

Mr. FRASER: He is the judge now.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid an affidavit would hardly meet the case.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is there any form in existence to-day which would meet the situation?

Mr. DUNNING: The officers of the National Revenue department advise me that there are forms at present in existence which would meet the situation, but I think careful inquiry should be made of the department itself.

Mr. KAISER: Will the minister consider the extension of these exemptions to cover a man's wife's relations as well as his own?

Mr. DUNNING: Before answering that, I would like to have had experience in operating this act. Every time any concession is made the question always arises of granting further concessions, but I would prefer not to go any farther at this time.

Mr. COOTE: Because of the answer which the minister gave me, I do not believe he quite got my point. There is a principle in the act which I think should be removed, entailed in the definition of householder. A widow who is able to afford a full-time housekeeper receives an exemption of $3,000, but the widow who cannot afford to employ a full-time housekeeper receives an exemption of only $1,500. I do not think that the answer which the minister gave me is entirely applicable to this case, and I would suggest that this matter should be given consideration before the bill is introduced. I think the point could be covered easily by a small amendment.

Mr. DUNNING: Can my hon. friend suggest an amendment which would have the effect of meeting his point in connection with a wiodw so situated and which would not at the same time lead to wide abuse? I am quite frank in saying that I do not think it can be done.

Mr. HANSON: There is another matter to which I think consideration should be given, that of a child over the statutory age who is still being educated by his parents. We know of the sacrifices which are often made in order to send children to colleges or institutions of higher education, and I think this is a case which deserves special consideration in the matter of exemptions. I would like to have the department consider this matter in addition to the others which have been mentioned.

Reverting to the question raised by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser), I think there is more to this matter than the minister is willing to admit at the moment.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not say that there is not a lot in it.

Mr. HANSON: There are many cases where the relations of the wife are an absolute burden on the taxpayer, and he should be entitled to exemption in those cases as he is to exemption for his own parents or grandparents.

Mr. COOTE: In reply to the minister, I am sure that with the legal talent which they have in the department, they could easily find the proper words and definition to cover my point.

Mr. DUNNING: The solicitor of the income tax branch of the Department of National Revenue will be very pleased to discuss that point with my hon. friend in order to see if a solution cannot be found.

Section agreed to.

On section 3 (b):

(b) That donations, to the extent of ten per centum of the net income of the taxpayer to any church, university, college, school or hospital in Canada, be allowed as a deduction.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have representations from leading citizens of Winnipeg with regard to this paragraph and they would like to have the exemption extended to cover a type of organization which has developed in my city and which, I think, exists in some other cities throughout the country. I refer to the community fund which is a trust administered in the interests of various charities in the city and which is entirely for the benefit of the necessitous people of the community. In many ways it is, in my judgment, a much better type of organization than a church or any sectional charity; in fact, it covers the whole community. Apparently, however, no provision is made for a community fund of this character. A little while ago the minister asked for some sort of amendment that would cover the case. I am not quite sure whether this would cover it, but it has been suggested in this instance. In chapter 57, 1927 Manitoba statutes, dealing with exemption of donations to charity from succession duties, there is this definition:

Charitable institutions or organizations having for their object, the care, protection or relief of necessitous men, women or children.

If the law officers at the disposal of the minister cannot devise a suitable amendment, we might follow this phrase from the Manitoba statute.

Mr. DUNNING: That would be wide enough for my hon. friend's purposes, but it would not be wide enough in any sense to meet the representations that have come to me.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It might cover this particular community fund and I would urge that such a fund as I have mentioned is just as deserving of consideration as any church or school fund.

Mr. HANSON: I think the hon. member is absolutely right. If the minister is going to open the door, this list is altogether too narrow. I have in mind other institutions such as the Victorian Order of Nurses, the King's Daughters, which in my city maintains a home for the indigent aged people who are taken care of in most cases by gifts from wealthy friends and relatives which make it possible for these people to enter such homes. If the minister is going to grant this exemption, he should cover the whole field. I am not opposed to the exemption; indeed, it was urged upon the government by this party many years ago in the house, and I suggest to the minister that if he is adopting the principle, the exemption list is not wide enough because the church is not the only avenue through which charitably disposed citizens use their funds. There are nowadays so many of these bodies that they are almost numberless and if the minister is going to depart from the principle that has heretofore obtained, the list should be extended. The whole question should be reviewed by the minister having regard to what representations have been made to him, because I have no doubt representations have been made to the department by almost every institution in Canada.

Mr. BOYS: What does the term "donation" mean? Does it mean a contribution as well as a distinct gift?

Mr. DUNNING: Any free offering which is receipted for.

Mr. BOYS: To make my question quite clear, I imagine it means what I think it does, and probably when we have the legislation before us we shall know better. One can understand a donation generally might mean a gift of $100 or $500, apart and distinct from an ordinary contribution from Sunday to Sunday. Is it intended to cover such contributions or only straight gifts?

Mr. DUNNING: Anything which is receipted for. In many churches the organized method of giving is by the envelope system which involves machinery whereby the necessary proof of the gift can be adduced, but I am afraid it would not cover the quarter or whatever it is that is placed on the collection plate, because there would be no means of demonstrating that such an amount was given.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): I agree entirely with what the hon. member has just said regarding donations of this character. This is a new paragraph covering donations to churches, universities, colleges, schools or hospitals. We might as well take into account the fact that the institutions that are mentioned are going to exist no matter whether donations are made to them or not. If this paragraph is being introduced for the purpose of exempting donations, there is every reason why charitable and social agencies should be included, especially such institutions as exist in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, London and other large cities in Canada. I am going to ask the minister to consider this matter very seriously, because he has only one answer to make to the fact that such exemptions are not granted of donations to these social agencies, and that is that under the act it is impracticable to check up such donations. The reply to that is that in the United States Income Tax Act provision is made for such exemptions as we are trying to urge upon the minister. I would point out that in Montreal lay organizations look after much of our Protestant charity work. I would ask therefore to add them to the list. It has been stated to me that in Montreal the Roman Catholic Church itself looks after about 95 per cent of its charitable work. Everybody knows and realizes that donations to churches whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, are always necessary and important and undoubtedly strong recommendations have been made to the minister that these charitable and social agencies should also be included in the list of exemptions for donations. If he wants to go into the matter I have a memorandum prepared, but I should like to hear from him just why he cannot see his way clear to include these social agencies. As the hon. member for York-Sunbury has explained, if the paragraph is left as it is, the tendency will be for donations to be made to churches and other institutions such as the Victorian Order of Nurses, Boys' Welfare, Montreal Hygiene Committee, which does social settlement work for boys and girls, the Social Hygiene Council and the Anti-Tuberculosis Association are all going to suffer. It is going to be harder to secure donations for those institutions which are banded together for the purpose of economy and which comprise in Montreal some thirty agencies or more. Some reasonable exemption should be given to those very necessary institutions. Last year in Montreal three-quarters of a million dollars were raised by the most prominent citizens of that city who gave their time for a couple of weeks, going out on a drive simply for the purpose of relieving their fellow men and carrying on the necessary charitable work throughout the year. Surely, instead of discriminating against these institutions, they should be encouraged and donations to them should be exempt.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member for St. Antoine has said just what I was about to say. I do not think that the minister has gone far enough, although I quite agree with him in the proposals he has made. After all, it is the rich people who benefit mostly from the universities, and it is these institutions which receive the greatest amount of government support. Those of us who come from the rural parts know how great the demands for charity are in the more or less poor districts, and if we have to go out and solicit funds for any charitable object whatsoever under the handicap which this bill places upon us, the cause is going to suffer. If the minister cannot go the whole way, I think he should reverse his process and allow the universities, colleges and these other institutions, which after all are largely endowed or are receiving government support, and which find it easier to collect money from the public, to stay as they were, and exempt these other institutions which are more for the poor and are more or less dependent upon the public, because those behind these institutions have the greatest difficulty in getting support. I think the minister should be commended for going as far as he has, but I do feel that he has left out the most deserving class in the community; and if he cannot include them, I would suggest that he subsitute them for the institutions he has on his list.

Mr. DUNNING: There is much merit in the suggestions that have been put forward. The difficulty, of course, is that we have no experience as to how a thing of this kind will work out. I must say that I have been astonished at the extremely wide range of activities which have been presented to me for consideration. In fact, any ideas that I had upon the desirability and practicability of immediately extending this provision have been dissipated by the very wide range of activities which have been brought to my attention as being properly qualified to be included. One of the pleasant features has been some communications that I have received indicating that as a result of this, scholarships for poor boys will be established in certain of our universities. People already are thinking in those terms.

Mr. McGIBBON: How could it be done?

Mr. DUNNING: The donation may be for the specific purpose of establishing a scholarship for poor boys. Nevertheless it would be entitled to exemption under this clause.

Mr. McGIBBON: How would you define a poor boy in the law?

Mr. DUNNING: It would be anybody. I was simply stating that I have been advised of that development.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is that consistent? If we can establish a scholarship for anybody and the money devoted to that purpose is to be exempted, should you not exempt the amount that may go directly to feed the starving?

Mr. DUNNING: So far as hospital activities are concerned, representations have been made regarding the Red Cross. Many of us are familiar with the work that the Red Cross is doing in connection with their hospitals. Donations made to the Red Cross for their hospital work will be entitled to exemption. Take the institutions which exist in many places for crippled children and for those who are unfortunate in one way or another. They may be either schools or hospitals, treating either the body physically or ministering to the mind in some sort of school.

Mr. BOYS: What about children's shelters? Would they come within the categories mentioned by the minister?

Mr. DUNNING: Undoubtedly, for this purpose.

Mr. BOYS: Would they be schools or hospitals?

Mr. DUNNING: Hospitals. I have all sympathy with the ideas that have been expressed by my hon. friend, but I wish they would allow us to get a little experience in operating this first with a view to widening it in the future in a manner which will be safe and proper.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at one o'clock we were considering subsection (b) of section 3 of the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): The minister was kind enough to say that he would leave the door open in considering suggestions made with reference to this subsection. May I put on record a somewhat similar provision in the United States income tax legislation dealing with this subject. It exempts contributions or gifts made within the taxable year to or for the use of:

> any corporation or trust, or community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

It will be seen that that exemption from income tax of contributions or gifts is much wider in its scope than in this subsection. I think I have made it perfectly clear that I have no objection to the exemption from income tax of donations to churches and other religious institutions. All I am asking the minister to do is to extend the provision to cover donations to charities and social agencies, which apparently have been excluded, for administrative reasons. The Federated Charities of Montreal is an outstanding example of an organization such as I have in mind. It collects about three quarters of a million dollars annually for some thirty charitable institutions in the city. It is very efficiently managed and is doing very valuable work. I should think it would be no more difficult for the income tax authorities to administer the act with regard to donations to this and similar institutions than it would be with respect to donations to churches, colleges, universities, hospitals and the other institutions covered by the subsection under discussion. Unless the scope of this amendment is extended as suggested I fear it will discourage contributions to charitable and social organizations, to the detriment of the very necessary work that they carry on in our large cities. This would very adversely affect such splendid institutions as the Victorian Order of Nurses, the Child Welfare Association, the Mental Hygiene Committee, the Children's Aid Society, the Family Welfare Association, the social settlement of boys' and girls' clubs, the Social Hygiene and Anti-Tuberculosis Association, the Red Cross Society, and so on. As most of these organizations are operating under a federal or a provincial charter, I do not think there would be any difficulty of administration involved if they were brought within the scope of this subsection. I would point out to the minister that the province of Quebec has recently amended its inheritance tax legislation to exempt from taxation legacies to certain associations, amongst which are the charitable institutions I have enumerated.

Mr. MacLAREN: Mr. Chairman, I recognize that this subsection includes universities, but could it be interpreted as embracing such institutions as are essentially educational in their nature—for example a museum? It is conceivable that by a narrow interpretation of the words "university, college, school," such museums might be excluded from the benefits of the provision. I have a specific case in point—a provincial museum. I think the purpose of the subsection is admirable, but I should like to know if it will be interpreted in a liberal sense to cover museums, they being in their character essentially educational institutions. If not, I would suggest that the subsection be amended to effect this purpose.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think I can say to my hon. friend that contributions to a museum would fall within the scope of the present suggested amendment. Of course, if a university was building a museum, and somebody contributed to the university, that would be a contribution to a university; the same would be true in the case of a college or a school. The suggestion made to include the various worthy objects mentioned by hon. members illustrates the type of problem with which I have had to deal in widening the scope of the exemptions even to this extent. I think the house might well let us operate under this section for a year, and so get experience of how it works in its various ramifications; then with that experience behind us we might consider extending the scope of the section as time passes. Might I reinforce the suggestion made by an hon. member before the lunch adjournment, that probably we would make faster progress and the committee would have much more information before it if I were allowed to pass the resolution and then introduce the bill founded on it. It will be found to contain answers to many of the questions that I am now trying to answer. I think we would expedite business, it would be more convenient for the committee generally and would in no way restrict discussion.

Mr. BOYS: I approve of the suggestion made by the minister. We will be in a position to discuss the details when we have the bill before us, and as he has stated, some of the questions which at this stage present difficulties would be cleared up if we had the bill at our disposal.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I appreciate the difficulty under which the minister is working, because exemptions to the income tax present many ramifications and are becoming so numerous that they constitute almost the major part of the act. They will no doubt contribute to the difficulties encountered in the administration of the act. Three years ago in speaking on the budget I advocated that there should be exemptions in favour of educational institutions and hospitals. On that occasion I pointed out that the United States had made exemptions to the extent of about 15 per cent in favour of income payable to such institutions. The present suggestion recommends exemptions to the extent of 10 per cent. In spite of the fact that there will be difficulty in administration, I think the minister should give special consideration to the federated charities for community service which are operating in the larger cities. It is in the large cities that we find the greatest poverty, and because of that poverty relief is necessary. Unless exemptions are made and assistance rendered to the federated charities many poor people will find themselves in destitute circumstances. On that account and on account of the non-sectarian character of these funds, I think this point should be considered by the minister. In addition to that, if there is any difficulty on account of lack of uniformity in the collection and disposition of the federation funds, those difficulties might easily be overcome. There are not many federated funds; they are mainly in the larger cities, and I think at the request of the minister the collection and distribution of all these funds could be made uniform in the various cities.

Mr. McGIBBON: Before the noon adjournment the minister referred to donations to the Red Cross hospitals. Would any donations to the Red Cross be exempt, because they operate only about 27 or 28 hospitals, while they have many outposts which do a great deal of relief work?

Mr. DUNNING: The Red Cross outposts, as I understand them, are in effect small hospitals.

Mr. McGIBBON: Some of them are not

Mr. DUNNING: Any contributions for that phase of Red Cross work undoubtedly would be exempted.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Would the reference to churches include the Salvation Army?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): The minister made special reference to the Red Cross. Several of these institutions, such as the Red Cross are included in the federation of charities. I presume that where donations are made definitely to that institution, even although it may form one of the societies in the federated charities, exemptions will be granted.

Mr. DUNNING: Any taxpayer who can produce a receipt from an institution the description of which falls within the four corners of this amendment will be entitled to exemption with respect to such receipt. Donations which are made for the support of Red Cross hospitals or outposts are manifestly donations for hospital purposes and would entitle the donor to exemption.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In the city of Montreal, in the Catholic community, charity is largely under the control of the Roman Catholic churches. It is possible for people to contribute through the church for the needs of the community. On the other hand, in the Protestant community, charity is very largely organized through social service agencies, and there is a federation in that city which is trying to provide for the Protestant section. That is the method adopted by the Protestant community. The Roman Catholic church is one united church; the Protestant church is divided into a number of sects, and for the purpose of social welfare they have evolved this particular form of organization for the giving of relief. I do not think it is right that we should exempt the charities which come under the Roman Catholic church and refuse to exempt the charities which are trying to minister to the needs of the Protestant section in the city of Montreal. Such an arrangement does not seem fair to me. I have nothing against the Roman Catholic church, nor have I anything against the way they administer their affairs, but I urge that the Protestants and other non-Catholic elements who wish to carry out social service activities have a perfect right to organize in the way they think best. It does not seem fair then that they should be discriminated against in this way. No doubt this is a newer type of organization and covers a wider field, but there is just as much reason why we should give to the needy man or the hungry child as there is to give to the sick man or child. At the present time there is a clear case of discrimination in favour of certain established institutions and against those newer types of social service which are being evolved and which to my mind are more efficient than the older ones.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think my hon. friend is absolutely wrong in his understanding of the practices in the Catholic church in respect to charities. My hon. friend evidently has more information on the subject than I have, because I know of nothing such as he has described. There are associations which correspond to the social service agencies about which my hon. friend has spoken. In the cities where there are those of the Roman Catholic faith we find the St. Vincent de Paul Society, and contributions are made to it more particularly by members of the Catholic church. It is however quite independent of the church and it is not under the control of the church. There is no such thing as the Catholic church distributing charities in the manner suggested by my hon. friend; I have never heard of it and I think I know as much about the Catholic church as does my hon. friend.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What about the collections for the poor which are observed by the Roman Catholic church? I do not pretend to be an authority in matters connected with the Roman Catholic church—

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is just another case of those discriminations about which some people dream.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am so informed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh yes, I know you are.

Mr. DUNNING: I am particularly sorry that any question of religious discrimination could have been injected into this discussion. I can assure my hon. friends that nothing was farther from my mind.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, but nevertheless it might work out in the way I have described.

Mr. DUNNING: I have made careful inquiry and my information is that there is no discrimination so far as Protestant charitable societies are concerned. They are on exactly the same footing, as far as this measure is concerned, as any society under the aegis of the Roman Catholic church. That is to say contributions to neither one nor the other would be exempt under the terms of this act, but only contributions to the churches themselves would be exempt. I would rather withdraw this amendment than have it the occasion for any controversy as to religious discrimination. Were I of opinion that my hon. friend's statement as to discrimination was correct, I assure him I would withdraw it now.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then I think the matter ought to be investigated before this is passed, because there is a serious question here. Anyone who knows anything of the charity work in the city of Montreal—and some years ago I had occasion to look into it very carefully—will know very well that there is a good deal of feeling in that city with regard to such matters, and I know there is a conviction that such organizations should be free to work out their own schemes. I do not want to take this occasion to go into the reports that have been given to me, reports of discrimination within the province of Quebec, and similar charges of which we often hear; we have nothing to do with that in this house, but I do not want this practice carried into the federal house. It does seem to me that it is quite possible that any donor may give to the Catholic church or to any individual Protestant church a sum of money, and receive exemption for that sum, and that the church may then use that money for whatever purpose it may wish. The church may use it for charitable purposes, for missionary activities, for the upkeep of the local church or for anything else. In the case of the Protestant communities, let me repeat that they carry on charity to a very limited extent through the local church. In recent years there has been developed this newer type of organization through which a good deal of the social work among Protestant people is done.

Now this simply means that whereas in the Roman Catholic community donors can give to the church and the church can pass it on as it pleases—

Mr. LAPOINTE: But it is not done.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is also done to a limited extent in the individual Protestant churches; I know that.

Mr. CANNON: I do not know where my hon. friend got his information. I have belonged to that church for quite a number of years and what he is talking about now does not exist.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps the Minister of Justice will credit me with knowing what is done in the Protestant churches.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But you are talking about the Catholic church.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I say to a limited extent charity is carried on by the individual local Protestant churches, but never to more than a limited extent. To a very large extent the Protestant churches have turned over a considerable amount of that type of work to bodies which do not directly come under the church. In my own city I have no quarrel with the way things are organized, for under this community fund the beneficiaries may be organizations such as the minister mentioned, the St. Vincent de Paul Society, as well as other non-denominational organizations. I would urge that if a man does not choose to belong to a particular denomination, or to any denomination, he should still be able to contribute to the needs of his fellow men without being discriminated against. The churches have a prominent place in this country, but they have no monopoly in work of this kind. I am not speaking against the churches nor am I speaking against the hospitals; they both do excellent work. Undoubtedly the hospitals should be given this exemption, but I am pleading for another type of work which has come into prominence in more recent years and which is doing just as good work as any of these other institutions, and hence should be recognized.

Mr. McQUARRIE: There are two orders which are undenominational, so far as I know; I refer to the Red Cross and the Victorian Order of Nurses. They are not covered by this amendment; that seems to be clear, from what the minister has said.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister says they are covered.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I did not say that. What I said was that in so far as contributions are made to either of these societies for hospital or school purposes, those contributions would be exempt.

Mr. McGIBBON: I submit that was not the answer given to my question.

Mr. DUNNING: That was my intention.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. McQUARRIE: This amendment seems to be quite clear. It states that donations to the extent of 10 per cent of the net income of the taxpayers to any church, university, college, school or hospital in Canada will be allowed as a deduction. Contribution to either of these two other bodies would not come under any of these headings.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; the Red Cross runs hospitals. If my hon. friend wants to contribute to a Red Cross hospital he can get exemption for his contribution under this section.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But isn't that drawing it very fine?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: It seems to me it is, because if you contribute to the Red Cross or to the Victorian Order of Nurses you do not say to them how that money is to be spent. They are performing very valuable service all over the country without regard to race, creed, religion or anything of that kind. They are doing splendid work, carrying on nursing services, educational work, public health and all that sort of thing. We have them all over Canada, and the funds with which they carry on are obtained by donation. I do not think that is the right system at all. I think the government should be contributing enough to allow these organizations to carry on their splendid work, but as it is the government only makes very paltry contributions to these organizations. Now, surely donations made to these orders should be exempt when they are doing purely charitable work. These men and women who are carrying on both these orders have themselves to provide and collect the funds and I think it would be a very little thing indeed to add these two orders to the classes set out in paragraph (b).

Mr. DUNNING: I have had enough suggestions as to the widening of this paragraph from the committee, particularly from new relays of members as they came in, to illustrate the nature of the problem which I outlined this morning at the commencement. This exemption is experimental; it is new in the law. It is now fairly wide in its application, and I ask that the committee give us a chance to operate it and get experience under it. Then we can consider widening it. I am quite sure from the variety of suggestions which have been received that it is very apparent that to meet them all would be going very far indeed. I suggested a few moments ago that we could more easily discuss these resolutions on the bill, when hon. members had it before them. I think it would be very much easier when we get the bill introduced.

Mr. McGIBBON: I just want to clear up this matter, and perhaps the minister will forgive me if I am persistent. With reference to the Red Cross, to my mind there is no such thing as a donation to a Red Cross hospital.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, there is.

Mr. McGIBBON: No, I beg your pardon; I happen to know something about that. The hospitals are bought and equipped by the local municipalities, and all the Red Cross does is to run them. The donations are solicited for the general funds, which may go to running a Red Cross hospital, which may finance outpost nursing services or other things in that category. I think the minister has been misinformed, because if you give a donation to a Red Cross hospital it does not go to the Red Cross at all; it goes to the local municipality which for the time being is erecting and fitting that hospital. All the Red Cross does is to operate it and pay the deficit or take the profit as the case may be. I would like the minister just to give us a ruling as to whether or not this would apply.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course I cannot give a departmental ruling; that is impossible, but I can say that personally I have contributed to specific objects. I appreciate what my hon. friend says; I believe it is generally true regarding the Red Cross. I submit that there is nothing to prevent the Red Cross or any organization which operates hospitals or schools as part of its regular work, from asking for specific contributions for those purposes, and giving receipts therefore, in which case the givers would qualify for exemption.

Mr. McGIBBON: The Red Cross do nothing towards acquiring or equipping hospitals; all they do is to run them, take the fees from the patients, accept government grants and pay any deficits or take any surplus, as the case may be.

Mr. DUNNING: They operate outposts in our province.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is not the case in the province of Ontario. I can assure the minister that I have had a good deal to do with that organization. All donations go into a general fund.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Chairman, before this clause is passed I would like to go on record in saying that I rely fully upon the declaration of the hon. Minister of Finance, that this clause is being introduced as an experiment, and I am confident that if there are any criticisms offered they will receive the attention of the minister.

Subsection 3 (b) agreed to.

On section 3, subsection (c):

That government or other like annuities to the extent of $5,000 be exempt from income tax.

Subsection (c) agreed to.

On section 4:

That corporate rates of tax be imposed on family corporations in respect of the interest therein of non-resident shareholders.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5:

That directors, officers or employees of a Canadian company who reside abroad shall be taxable in respect of the dividend and interest income received from the company in which they are employed.

Mr. SMOKE: Mr. Chairman, I do not see how the government of the Dominion of Canada will be able to impose a tax upon a non-resident. It may be that the statute may provide that the company who pays the dividend or other remuneration to foreign directors, officers or employees will have to deduct the amount of the tax from such payment. Otherwise, how is the government to reach people residing outside of Canada for the purpose of imposing taxation?

Mr. DUNNING: I wish my hon. friend would wait until he has the bill before him.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

That any enactment founded on the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1929 taxation period and to be applicable thereto and to fiscal periods ending therein and to subsequent periods, except any enactment founded on resolution number one hereof, which shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1930 taxation period and to be applicable thereto and to fiscal periods ending therein and to all subsequent periods.

Section 6 agreed to.

Resolution reported.

BOUNTY ON COAL FOR COKING AND SMELTING

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of forty-nine and one-half cents per ton on bituminous coal mined in Canada and converted into coke in Canada and used in the smelting of iron from ore, or in the production of steel.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, as I intimated in my remarks during the budget debate, I intend to move an amendment to this resolution to provide that the money paid out under this resolution shall find its way into the wage envelopes of the workers. I may say that I am very much interested in the success of this enterprise; all my interests and the interests of those I represent are bound up intimately with its success or failure. The slightest interference with the operations of this enterprise is felt in every store, in every office and in every home of Sydney. It is quite clear that if this company is not earning enough money to pay decent wages, then decent wages cannot be paid. I am sure that if the workers were convinced that this company was unable to pay them fair rates of wages, they possess the intelligence and fairmindedness not to ask for them. However, the report of the receiver of that institution is to the effect that during the last three years the company's earnings over expenditures have been over $2,000,000 per year. The wages paid to these workers are not high enough to enable them to maintain a decent standard of living. As has been pointed out, they work unseemly hours; during one week they work thirteen hours per day, and the next eleven hours per day. These men are not unionized and are not permitted to organize. An employee who takes part in any attempt at organization soon finds his occupation gone.

In his remarks last evening the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) seemed to resent the observations which had been made in this house on previous occasions, and I might say that I believe every statement he made was absolutely correct. The hon. member was president and director of the Nova Scotia Steel Company for twenty years, and during all those years there never was the slightest labour trouble in any of the operations which that company carried on at New Glasgow and Sydney Mines. However, Besco came in and purchased the plant occupied by the Nova Scotia Steel Company and since that time we have had numerous labour troubles. Why was there not trouble before that time? Because the hon. member for Pictou and others like him worked shoulder to shoulder with the men; they knew the men personally. When they passed off the scene, operations were carried on from Montreal, 1,000 miles away, by a body of men sitting around a table. They would have before them statements showing the operations of the institution and the sight of red ink on those statements they hated worse than they hated his satanic majesty. This resolution provides that the steel company is to get a bonus of fifty cents a ton on every ton of coal that enters into the manufacture of steel. I am holding up both hands for it; it is a recommendation which was made by the Duncan commission and which we have urged and fought for in the house during the past three or four years. We give the government every credit for this action and I want to thank the minister responsible for introducing this resolution. I appreciate what has been done, but this is velvet; it is clear profit that is being handed to that company.

Where should this bonus go? Should it go into the pockets of the shareholders or into the wage envelopes of the men? In view of the modern conception of how corporations of this kind should be managed, there can be no two opinions on that point. I appreciate the difficulties surrounding any attempt to interfere with the tariff, but there is no difficulty in connection with this bonus system. This is a gratuity given by the government to that company.

Mr. HANSON: No; from the country to the company.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Well, from the country to the company through the agency of the government. I am not disposed to take any credit away from the government; I want to give them credit for what they have done, but I should like them to come with me a little further and say that this amount is going, not into the hands of the shareholders or the executive of the company, but into the wage envelopes of the men who are helping to make the industry a success.

I am glad to see the Minister of Labour in his seat. He had a fair wage officer in that district and he is able to tell the committee to-day whether the men are working there under decent conditions, whether this thirteen-hour and eleven-hour day should be permitted to exist. He is able to assure the committee on that point. Will he not join with me in seeing that this degree of justice is done to those men? I have confidence enough in him to believe that he will. We have reached in the history of the country the stage where governments must recognize their responsibilities, and such a case as this where the men are unable to organize to protect themselves, the representatives of the people must step in and see, so far as lies within our power, that justice is done. I therefore move that the following words be added to the resolution:

And to provide that the money so paid or a portion thereof shall be devoted to the improvement of the position of the men employed in such plants either by way of increased wages or shorter hours or both.

Mr. DUNNING: Since my hon. friend started to speak, it has been represented to me by various members across the floor that there was some understanding that this matter should not be proceeded with to-day and I would not like to be in the position of even inferentially violating any understanding of that kind. I am quite prepared to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): I did not know of any such arrangement.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: To what understanding does the minister refer? If the leader of the opposition did not want to have this matter discussed until he was present, that is quite satisfactory.

Mr. DUNNING: It was represented to me that last night the leader of the opposition suggested that this bill be not proceeded with to-day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does that mean that the steel schedules will not be proceeded with to-day?

Mr. DUNNING: I am prepared to hold them over. I am ready to proceed with any business, but if there was any understanding on the part of any of the leaders who are not present to-day that something should not be gone on with, I do not want to violate it.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is quite all right.

Resolution (coal bounty) stands.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 310, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second times.

Mr. DUNNING moved that the house go into committee on the bill.

Mr. BOYS: I think we ought to have the bill in our hands before we are asked to consider it in committee.

Mr. DUNNING: The bill is ready for distribution.

Mr. BOYS: But that does not give us the slightest opportunity of familiarizing ourselves with its provisions. The minister is familiar with them, but we are not.

Motion stands.

WAYS AND MEANS

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

The house again in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: This resolution was before the committee this morning. We are now considering section 4.

On section 4:

4. That section fifty-eight, as enacted by chapter fifty-seven of the statutes of 1929, sections fifty-nine, sixty, sixty-one, sixty-two and sixty-three be repealed and provision made that there shall be imposed, levied and collected upon every change of ownership consequent upon the sale, transfer or assignment of any share of stock of any association, company or corporation, or any bond, debenture or debenture stock other than a bond, debenture or stock of the Dominion of Canada or of any province of Canada, an excise tax as follows:

(a) Three cents for every one hundred dollars or fraction thereof, of the par value of a bond, debenture or debenture stock;

(b) Five cents for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over one hundred and fifty dollars per share;

(c) Four cents for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over seventy-five dollars per share but not more than one hundred and fifty dollars per share;

(d) Three cents for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over fifty dollars per share but not more than seventy-five dollars per share;

(e) Two cents for every share of stock sold or transfered at a price over twenty-five dollars per share but not more than fifty dollars per share;

(f) One cent for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price over five dollars per share but not more than twenty-five dollars per share;

(g) One-quarter of one cent for every share of stock sold or transferred at a price of one dollar to five dollars per share, but not more than five dollars per share;

(h) One-tenth of one per cent of the value of every share of stock sold or transferred at a price less than one dollar per share;

that the said tax shall be payable in excise tax stamps by the vendor, transferor or assignor;

that every person liable to collect or pay the said tax shall keep records and books of account;

and that any enactment founded on this paragraph four shall come into force on the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and thirty.

Mr. BOYS: This forenoon I asked the minister whether he could not, opposite paragraphs (a) to (h) inclusive, give the prevailing rates under the former legislation.

Mr. DUNNING: The present rates are—

Mr. BOYS: It would be a great convenience if the minister would give us the old rates and the existing rates side by side.

Mr. DUNNING: The old rates were one-tenth of one cent on shares of 50 cents and under; one-quarter of one cent on shares between 50 cents and $1. The new rate on all shares less than $1 will be one-tenth of one per cent, calculated on the money total of the transaction, instead of the fixed rate of one-tenth of one per cent on the share value. That will cut the tax down very materially indeed. On shares from $1 to $3 the old rate was one cent; the new rate is one-quarter of one cent per share from $1 to $5. The old rate on shares between $3 and $20 was two cents per share; the new rate is one cent per share on shares from $5 to $25. The old rate was three cents per share on shares between $20 and $100; the new rate is two cents per share on shares from $25 to $50, three cents on shares from $50 to $75, and four cents on shares from $75 to $150. On shares over $100 the new rate is four cents, and on shares over $150, five cents.

Mr. McRAE: I might add to the minister's statement by giving some instances of the reductions as applied to certain companies. I have here a schedule which has been worked out for me by a reliable accountant, and I submit it as being approximately correct. The schedule covers thirty companies and shows a reduction from the old tax of 33 per cent on the shares of such companies as Noranda and International Nickel, increasing in the case of the penny stocks up to as high as 98 per cent reduction of the old tax. For instance, in Thomson-Cadillac the old tax has been reduced 96 per cent. The so-called penny stocks are reduced from 64 to 99 per cent. The average reduction might be said to be 75 per cent. In the higher priced stocks the reduction is from 33 per cent up to 50 per cent. The tax on Hollinger, for instance, selling at the present market price of $6.55, is reduced by one-half, while on Teck-Hughes selling at about the same price, $6.75, there is a similar reduction. I think that is a fair statement of the general application of this new schedule.

There is another matter that I would bring to the attention of the committee. It has to do with the question of the share tax in Canada as compared with the share tax in the United States. In that connection, exclusive of provincial tax I find that a stock such as Hollinger, selling at a price of $6.55 per share, carries a tax on a sale of one thousand shares in New York of $2, while the tax in Canada under this new schedule is $10.

Mr. DUNNING: Does that $2 include the state tax in New York as well as the federal?

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. McRAE: I understand so. It does not include the provincial tax in this country. The $2 is the tax if the deal was made on the New York stock exchange. The other figure is exclusive of the provincial tax in this country. If my figures are correct, it would appear that the tax on a purchase of Hollinger in New York would be less than 25 per cent of the tax which would be charged on the purchase of the same number of shares in Montreal or Toronto. The point I want to put before the minister is whether by this tax we are not driving certain business to the New York stock exchange to the disadvantage of our own Canadian exchanges. I know that in my own city those connected with the stock exchange business feel that the taxes have already driven a great deal of business to Seattle. I can quite appreciate that this amendment to the schedule will result in recovering some of the penny stock business for our Canadian changes, but when it comes to the higher priced stocks such as Noranda and International Nickel, I think the government should consider carefully whether the present schedule is not driving that business to New York.

As I am not clear on the point myself I would like to ask the minister this question: When an agency of a New York house in this country sends a transaction to the New York stock exchange to be executed there, does Canada get any revenue from that transaction or not?

Mr. DUNNING: I have a great deal of interest myself in the answer to that question for quite frankly I have been trying to find means in the interest of revenue of taxing under the existing law transactions of that kind. I cannot say that, up to the present, within the short period the new machinery has been at work, that is being done. My hon. friend knows the machinery which has been operative through the Canadian exchanges. There is a very grave question as to whether we can do it, but the matter is being gone into at the present time.

Mr. McRAE: I appreciate what the minister says, and that brings home the point that I want to get before the house. It is this, that by this higher share tax in Canada we are driving our business to the American exchanges because a man trading in large blocks of Canadian stocks will make a very material saving in the tax alone by having the transaction executed in New York. I do not believe it is in the interests of Canada, and certainly it is not in the interests of those who are engaged in that business in this country, to have to operate at such a disadvantage. You have the results. If you deal in New York, it takes money out of the country, takes the profit on the transaction out of the country, and the government as well loses the revenue. It seems to me that some method should be found of dealing with the situation. Whether a man buys shares through Canadian exchanges or through the New York exchange, in either case he uses exactly the same credit and should pay the same tax. I hope the hon. minister will find some way of dealing with the matter, otherwise I have reason to believe that a great deal of the business, particularly the large transactions, those which can get credit in New York, will drift to that exchange.

Mr. DUNNING: Thank you.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 311, to amend the Special War Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second times.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

The house in committee of supply, Mr Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Vote 121, page 32 of the estimates. When this resolution was last before the committee we were considering the item:

Quebec Citadel—Governor General's quarters —improvements, maintenance, etc., $17,000.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, at the last sitting of the committee my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) asked for information with regard to the expenses in connection with Rideau Hall, and I have had it prepared for several years back. I will send over to him a copy of the statement; also a statement relating to the railway department, which they tell me is all the information they have.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think, Mr. Chairman, the house and the country would be interested in the information as well as the member for York-Sunbury.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am quite sure of that, and I should like to lay on the table a copy of the statement. My hon. friend suggested that there had been an increase in the last few years over any other previous period, and I want to call his attention to that phase of it.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, I have just had a chance merely to glance over this statement. It is confined entirely to Rideau Hall. My request referred to the whole institution. This does not cover one cent for work done on the Quebec citadel; therefore to that extent it is entirely misleading.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend will recall that on the last occasion when we were discussing the matter I gave a statement regarding the Quebec citadel expenditures. I want to be absolutely clear that I am giving him the information he asked for as reported in Hansard at the time. He then stated that the further information he wanted referred to Rideau Hall. At that time I gave him all the information we had with regard to the citadel. It is quite an expensive statement. Perhaps my hon. friend would prefer to have a little time to look it over. If so, we will let the item stand for the present and proceed with other items.

May I direct my hon. friend's attention to the fact that for the three years ending March 31, 1915, the expenditure was $453,743.20; for the three years ending March 31, 1930, $337,-264.38—a difference of $116,478.82. That is, there was that much more expended on Rideau Hall for the three years ending March, 1915, than for the similar period ending March, 1930. I think it is only fair to my hon. friend to say that the recent expenditures extend over four or perhaps five years. So I have looked into what the expenditure was for the four years ending March 31, 1916, and I find that it amounted to $527,864.17, while for the four years ending March 31, 1930, it was $463,911.92—or for the previous four years ending 31st March, 1916, an excess of $63,-952.35 over the last four years. For the five year period ending on March 31, 1917, the expenditure was $608,384.47; for the five years ending March 31, 1930, the expenditure was $558,984.24—or for the five years ending March 31, 1917, an excess over the five years ending March 31, 1930, of $49,400.23.

Mr. McGIBBON: How much of that from 1913 on was due to remodelling Rideau Hall?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The remodelling started, I think, in 1914. But I find that in 1911 an extra $60,000 was voted for a cloak room and for some additions including a garage. Late in that year an additional $50,000 was voted for furnishings and things of that kind. The other reconstruction to which my hon. friend refers was started about 1914.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want to get the amount for reconstruction and the amount for repairs.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is a matter of detail.

Mr. McGIBBON: A very important detail.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the statement I have furnished it shows the total expenditure on the hall for each of those years, part as refurnishing and part as additions and reconstructions from year to year.

Mr. McGIBBON: I submit the country will not be satisfied with that explanation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I can give my hon. friend some information, although I cannot give it in detail; I have nothing more than what appears on the statement before me. The amount spent for maintenance and repairs in 1912-13 was $67,089.44; there is no amount recorded for expenditures on alterations and improvements. In the year 1913-14, $285,977.11 was spent for maintenance and repairs, and there is nothing shown for alterations and improvements.

Mr. McGIBBON: How much was spent for repairs?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is not separated.

Mr. McGIBBON: I submit that the house is entitled to have it separated.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will give my hon. friend complete details, but it will take some time to segregate the amounts spent on buildings, furnishings, grounds, and various items of maintenance. I suggest that we would be in a better position to discuss the matter after hon. gentlemen have had an opportunity to peruse the statement which I have furnished in regard to Rideau Hall.

Mr. BOYS: Would it be too much trouble to have prepared a statement in connection with the Quebec citadel along the lines of the one prepared in connection with Rideau Hall? Then they could both be put in Hansard.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It would take some time to prepare such a statement, because it dates back to 1871, at the time it was taken over by the federal government.

Mr. BOYS: 1891, not 1871.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it was in 1871 that the citadel was transferred.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. HANSON: We do not want to go back that far.

Mr. BOYS: The statement I have in my hand goes back as far as 1890 and 1891.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; that statement deals with Rideau Hall.

Mr. BOYS: Oh, yes, that is correct.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I should be pleased to get further information for my hon. friends, but on a former occasion when we were in committee I gave to my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) details covering a number of years. I understood that he was satisfied, as far as the citadel is concerned.

Mr. HANSON: We have the details of the citadel for the last few years. I had in mind the cost in recent years of the whole institution. There is the question of Rideau Hall, the question of the citadel, the question of the private car and all that sort of thing. If you have the information concerning those matters tabulated and the whole thing carried into a gross total I would like to see the figures; the country also would like to have them.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Some of my officials have interviewed officials of the Department of Railways and Canals and we were informed that all the information they had was contained in the return which was asked for and tabled, and a copy of which I sent to my hon. friend this afternoon.

Mr. HANSON: I have not got it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The return is contained in sessional paper No. 196.

Mr. McGIBBON: We are much obliged to the minister for the meagre information he has given. However I would like to have the total costs of this institution for the years ranging from 1913 to 1930. I would like to have also the capital expenditure separated from upkeep and running expenditures. I hope the minister will be in a position to supply this information before prorogation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend will look at the statement before him he will see that it supplies the information under the three usual headings, alterations and improvements, maintenance and repairs, and fuel and light. In the three columns are shown the appropriations each year. That is all the information I can give, unless it is the wish of hon. members that I set some one at the task of picking out the expenditures for furniture, repairs to buildings, repairs to grounds, and so on. My hon. friends will readily understand that such a procedure would necessitate a great deal of detailed search.

Mr. McGIBBON: I suggest to the minister that he should set some one at the task. It is not the duty of hon. members in this house to act as a clerical staff, not even for the Minister of Public Works. The country is very much interested in this matter, and I think we should have information in connection with it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I should be pleased to supply the information, but my hon. friend must understand that the officials in the department are very busy and will continue to be so for the next few days. As a matter of fact the information he desires is contained in the Auditor General's report, to which he has access. I repeat however that if it is the desire of the hon. gentleman, I shall as far as is humanly possible attempt to provide the information. There is no doubt that this is a matter concerning which there has been recently considerable discussion, and it is important that the public should have the information to show what the exact position is.

Mr. McGIBBON: A few moments ago the minister told me he could not differentiate between the expenses for improvements and the charges for running expenses.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I say that I cannot give the information my hon. friend desires from the statement in its present condition. However by going through the vouchers it will be possible to learn what each payment is for.

Mr. McGIBBON: Surely the minister does not seriously expect members of the House of Commons to convert themselves into a staff to do that sort of thing. We are asking the minister for the information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have pointed out to my hon. friend that the Auditor General's report gives the desired details in connection with each item, and my hon. friend has access to that report.

Mr. HANSON: The report of the Auditor General does not give that information. It gives the items and the amounts, but it does not give the details. If the hon. gentleman wishes to have a concrete example, turn to the item concerning the Federal District Commission as contained in the Auditor General's report, and he will find that there is very little detail concerning expenditure of millions of dollars.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is under a misapprehension. The details quoted the other night by my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) have been quoted time and again in regard to Rideau Hall, and those details are set forth in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Some days ago when this matter was under discussion I expressed my disapproval of the ever increasing expenditures. It is not necessary to repeat at this time what I said on a former occasion, but I do wish to place on Hansard the total costs from 1916 to the present time. I shall give the details in connection with the year 1916, and for other years I shall give the total amounts only. In 1916 the cost of the Governor General's office was $147,416.65. The cost for Rideau Hall was $74,120.97; for telephone, $1,542.44; for the citadel, $4,168.26, and for cars, $11,500, making a total of $238,748.32. The totals for 1917 and succeeding years were as follows:

|---|---|
| 1917 | $ 229,914 |
| 1918 | 237,987 |
| 1919 | 222,823 |
| 1920 | 234,053 |
| 1921 | 249,402 |
| 1922 | 260,000 |
| 1923 | 260,247 |
| 1924 | 295,319 |
| 1925 | 263,941 |
| 1926 | 235,710 |
| 1927 | 292,381 |
| 1928 | 576,496 |
| 1929 | 441,093 |

Mr. HANSON: That is the kind of information we want.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of course my hon. friend can get it by applying to the same source from which my hon. friend from Mackenzie obtained it.

Mr. HANSON: I do not think that is the kind of answer we should get from the minister. I do not know in the first place where to look for this information; I cannot spend my days and nights going through the Auditor General's report. It is the duty of the administration to give the information asked for in committee of supply. For instance, I never thought of looking for the expenses under the heading Governor General's office, which amounts to $147,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend will pardon me—

Mr. HANSON: I do not know why I should spend my days and nights digging out this information, and I am satisfied that when it is dug out it will startle the country.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am sure my hon. friend from Mackenzie, who has obtained the information, will be pleased to point out to my hon. friend the source from which he obtained it.

Mr. HANSON: Thanks for the information.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is the kind of information we get from the minister. I say without hesitation that it is an insult to this committee for any minister of the crown to refer members on this side to any member of another group when we ask for information.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I spent two whole days of good hard work in going through the public accounts in order to secure this information, and I am not sure that I have it all as yet. The more one examines into the public accounts the more one finds little items spread all through which one would not find in the first place. Office expenditures are split up into one or two votes; in some cases the expenditures on Rideau Hall are divided into two portions, one under capital expenditure and one under fixtures. Then there is the telephone account; you will find that in two or three different places in the book. There is the item of water, and other similar small items spread all over, so I say I am not sure these figures are complete.

Item agreed to.

Ste. Anne de Bellevue—public building, $34,000.

Mr. SHORT: Is this a new building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, this is a new building.

Item agreed to.

St. Joseph d'Alma—public building, $28,000.

Mr. SHORT: Is this another new building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: This is in the lake St. John area, where the new work is going on.

Item agreed to.

Ste. Marie de Beauce—public building, $25,000.

Mr. SHORT: Where is that?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is in the county of Beauce. It is a new building.

Item agreed to.

Ste. Martine (Chateauguay county)—public building, $15,000.

Mr. HANSON: How many new public buildings are there for the province of Quebec this year?

[Mr. Hanson.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend will look at the estimates he will see that these are nearly all items for which there was a vote a year ago. There are very few really new items.

Mr. HANSON: How many are new?

Mr. SHORT: They are all new buildings, are they not?

Mr. HANSON: How many are votes for new buildings in Quebec this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I can count them and give my hon. friend the information.

Mr. HANSON: Surely the deputy minister knows.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will count them and give the information to my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Public Works, Ontario—Brockville public building—installation of fittings, $4,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: Perhaps now when the minister has his deputy before him, and in view of his statement that many of the items for Quebec were for works started last year, he can tell me whether he is going on with the wharf at Beaverton, for which an item was included previously.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, I shall be glad to give my hon. friend the information which I have obtained since he asked the question this morning on the orders of the day. I find that in 1928-29 and 1929-30, the Patterson Construction Company of Brantford reconstructed a length of 151 feet 9 inches on the north side of the wharf. Extra work was done in providing a landing for small boats. The final estimate for this work was paid in August, 1929, and amounted to $4,243.72. A revetment wall on the south side for a length of 142 feet has been examined and reported on. The section is in a condition somewhat similar to the portion that has already been repaired. The town of Beaverton is developing this part of the harbour area for park purposes and the recommendation of the engineer is that this revetment wall eventually should be reconstructed. There is no amount in the estimates for it.

Mr. McGIBBON: Would the minister promise that it will be in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I could not make any such promise, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. SHORT: When the public buildings for Nova Scotia were being considered, I understand some of our members were away, and I believe there was one item left over in connection with which I should like to say a few words.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I think they were all finished up, but I should be very glad to hear any remarks my hon. friend cares to make.

Mr. SHORT: I notice in looking over the items for public buildings in Nova Scotia that you have not included a public building at Bridgetown, which I have spoken about in this house ever since I have been here. The minister promised last year that he would give the matter his very serious consideration. He has constructed a new building in the adjoining constituency which is represented by the hon. member for Hants-Kings; that building has been constructed in the town of Hantsport, where the postal revenue is some $2,500 as against a revenue of over $9,000 in the town of Bridgetown. The need of a building at Bridgetown was considered so important in 1925, that the predecessor of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King, Kootenay), visited that town and found the state of affairs in the public building so deplorable that he gave instructions to purchase a lot upon which to construct a new building. A very desirable lot was purchased in the centre of the town, but since that time nothing has been done. However, when one sees a town in the adjoining riding only about half the size and with about one-third the revenue receiving, as it did last year, a grant of $15,000 and this year a grant of $11,000, it is hard to understand why there should be such a difference. The supplementary estimates have not been brought down and the minister has an opportunity to put a sufficient amount in those estimates for the construction of a public building at Bridgetown.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know it is unnecessary for me to say to my hon. friend that all the representations which he has made during the past years have received the careful consideration of the department, and I only hope that he will be as happy when the supplementary estimates come down as he has been during the presentation of these present estimates.

Mr. SHORT: That is encouraging.

Mr. BOYS: I almost hesitate to take up any of the time of the committee, but as the minister has mentioned the supplementary estimates, I take this opportunity of mentioning two wharves at Barrie which are in a very bad state of repair. When I wrote to the district engineer about this matter, he informed me that there was no appropriation to take care of it. These wharves are absolutely dangerous and I fear that an accident will take place. I think an item should be provided in the supplementary estimates to cover the resheathing of these wharves, although I do not see why it could not be taken care of by the general appropriation. I would imagine that from $400 to $600 would be sufficient to make these wharves safe, and that is all I am asking for.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If the amount required is not larger than that stated by my hon. friend, I should think it would be possible to do that work out of the general vote. In order to avoid the necessity of further discussion as to what may be in the supplementary estimates, perhaps it might be well to mention that they are now at such a stage that there would be little probability of any change being made.

Mr. BOYS: I imagine that two inch planking would be sufficient to do this job, and I do not think the cost would be more than I have stated. I am not criticizing the district engineer, but he replied to me that he could not get the money to do the work. I hope the minister will see that it is provided.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will endeavour to see that the matter is attended to. From the statement of my hon. friend, I imagine that it can be taken care of out of the general vote.

Item agreed to.

Exeter—public building, $10,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: I feel obliged to direct the attention of the minister to the necessity of a public building at the village of Cannington. I trust the minister will give this matter his sympathetic consideration.

Item agreed to.

London customs house—renewal of clock, $1,500.

Mr. COOTE: That seems to be a pretty high price for a clock.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the cost of a clock of that type. The old clock has been in service for over thirty-five years, if my information is correct—of course, my memory would not carry me back that far—and it has been found impossible to use it any longer.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—towards purchase of Daly building, $106,000.

Mr. COOTE: Are there any further payments to be made on the Daly building, or does this vote conclude them?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the final vote.

Mr. COOTE: While we are on this item, would the minister give the committee the cost of the Confederation block?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The contract price was $2,497,000, which was below our estimate.

Item agreed to.

Penetanguishene—public building, $12,000.

Mr. HANSON: What is intended to be done with this vote; is it both to purchase a site and to complete a building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: For the purchase of a site.

Mr. THOMPSON: For the site alone?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not expected that the site will cost that much, but this vote is to cover the purchase of the site and the preparation of plans, so that we will be in position to let a contract.

Mr. THOMPSON: The site has not been chosen as yet?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Item agreed to.

Toronto—customs house, $1,500,000.

Mr. COOTE: What will be the total cost of the customs house at Toronto, and when is it expected to be completed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The contract price was $2,057,000, and although good progress is being made it is not expected that the building will be completed before the end of the fiscal year.

Item agreed to.

Windsor—public building, $100,000.

Mr. ROBINSON: Would the minister give an explanation of what this covers?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The architects of the Department of Public Works, in conjunction with architects of the Canadian National Railways, the Departments of National Revenue, Immigration, Post Office and others which will need to be housed in that building, are working on a plan which it is hoped will result in their agreeing upon a scheme for having under one roof the various government services required for the town of Windsor.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Public building—Saskatchewan—Arcola—public building, $12,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to ask the minister whether he has under his hand a report from an architect sent to Wynyard some time ago to inquire into the cost of erecting a post office at that point.

Mr. ELLIOTT: As my hon. friend will readily understand, the details that I have relate to the rather large number of items that are included in the estimates under consideration. I have no details with regard to any others.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Has the minister given any consideration to the construction of a building at that point? The recommendations have been before him for at least four or five years. What consideration are they likely to receive?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They have been receiving consideration along with all the various other applications that have come into the department from different sources. I cannot say anything more than that.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It seems to me that the town of Wynyard is not receiving the consideration it deserves. I have from the minister under date of March 3 last a letter which reads in part:

> The situation is that there are numerous requests from all over the Dominion for the erection of public buildings and as the government has been endeavouring to reduce the national debt from year to year, it is not in a position to provide for as large a construction program as it would like.

I have a good deal of sympathy with that statement. I am not going to ask the government to spend more money than it feels is necessary, but on looking over the expenditures on post offices for the province of Saskatchewan, it appears to me that the town of Wynyard has not been given the consideration it deserves in comparison with other points. I have in my hand a return laid on the table on March 12, 1930, showing the revenues of various post offices in Saskatchewan and also the expenditures on public buildings in that province during the last three years. The average revenues for the last three years, that is, 1927, 1928 and 1929, for certain post offices are as follows:

| Post Office | Average Revenue |
|---|---|
| Battleford | $ 7,929 |
| Canora | 6,334 |
| Maple Creek | 9,409 |
| Rosthern | 6,756 |
| Tisdale | 8,035 |
| Wilkie | 7,214 |

The post office at Wynyard shows an average revenue for the three years of $6,438. While nothing has been spent on the building at Wynyard considerable amounts are now being or have been spent on those other points, as follows:

| Post Office | Expenditure |
|---|---|
| Battleford | $ 43,588 |
| Canora | 29,500 |
| Maple Creek | 30,727 |
| Rosthern | 37,518 |
| Wilkie | 55,000 |

It seems to me that if these points are considered on their merits, Wynyard is deserving of some consideration on the basis of revenue. There are other points that are not showing the revenue that Wynyard exhibits and yet large amounts of money are being spent on them. The minister knows the need for a public building at Wynyard and I certainly think that town should receive more consideration than it has done in the past.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is one of the places that have been receiving consideration. Various hon. members have pointed out the need for a public building there. The points that have to be considered are the facilities available and at a number of the places mentioned by my hon. friend we were unable to secure buildings that were at all suitable or even nearly as suitable as that in which the business is being carried on at Wynyard at the present time. At Lloydminster, as my hon. friend knows, we had to erect a building because the old one was burned down. All the circumstances of each particular case have to be considered and we have not been able to get an appropriation for a public building at Wynyard.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The building at Wynyard is certainly not suitable for the accommodation required. The part of the building occupied by the post office and the only part they can get for post office use is very small and utterly inadequate to serve the needs of the people.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—Alberta—Camrose—public building, $53,000.

Mr. LUCAS: What progress is being made with the Camrose public building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think the foundations are being proceeded with, and the last report was that the work was going along very satisfactorily.

Mr. LUCAS: I understood some time ago that there was a cessation of the work. Does the minister know about that, and what the cause of it was, and whether work is again proceeding?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot give the details of the dispute, but it was some difference between the contractors and one of the subcontractors which caused delay for a time. I understand that the work is now proceeding.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is this public building for a customs house or for both post office and customs house purposes, and what is the revenue from these two departments at Camrose?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The postal revenue for 1928-29 was $16,652, and the customs revenue $77,332.

Item agreed to.

Vegreville—public building, $37,000.

Mr. COOTE: Before the resolution for Alberta is reported, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the Minister of Public Works that his department has owned some lots in the town of High River for some twenty years, and there was a vote passed for the erection of a public building in High River in 1914. The need for a public building there is sufficiently great, I am sure, for the minister to see that it is taken care of in the supplementary estimates. The present building is totally inadequate, and I do not think there is any other building in the town which could be secured at any price to house the post office.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—British Columbia—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $45,000.

Mr. FRASER: How much of that $45,000 that was appropriated last year has been spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The expenditure was $36,364.

Mr. FRASER: What is the extra amount required for this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend will understand that as the number of buildings throughout the country increases, the amount required for improvements, repairs and maintenance also increases.

Mr. FRASER: While that may be very true, I would point out that the minister is not increasing the number of public buildings in British Columbia in proportion to the number being erected in other provinces.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend will be fair enough to say that the province of British Columbia has fared pretty well, if not in public buildings in other ways, in recent years.

Item agreed to.

Kimberley—public building, $18,000.

Mr. ESLING: Is the building to be erected on the original site selected for that purpose? I am sorry the Minister of Health is not in his seat because I wanted to ask him a question in connection with this matter. He should be in his seat now.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is not the original site. The town closed a road allowance or street, and an exchange was made with the town of Kimberley of the original site for the present site, which was thought to be advantageous.

Mr. ESLING: Why was the exchange made after the original site had been purchased?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My recollection is that the town offered to exchange a site which it owned but which was not available as a site for our purposes until a certain street or streets were closed. Negotiations were entered into with the town looking to the exchange of the original site for the site which the town owned, provided that the town of Kimberley would close this road or street, or whatever it was, so as to give access to the site that was being obtained. This exchange was recommended.

Mr. ESLING: I am glad that the Minister of Health is now in his seat. As a matter of fact, this is just one of the instances in which the Vancouver Sun, which hon. members know is a pronounced Liberal organ, charges the Minister of Health—he was the sole survivor of the last political wreck there—with the distribution of patronage in order that he might retain his seat. I think the transaction before us affords very fair substantiation of that charge. The facts are—the present Minister of Public Works, of course, does not know them—that the Minister of Health had a political friend who wanted to make a little ready money, and the Minister of Health, who goes on the public platform in British Columbia, tells the people that nothing can be done in or for British Columbia without his recommendation. Therefore we must take it for granted that he recommended the purchase of the property.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): When did the minister ever make such a statement?

Mr. ESLING: In the city of Nelson. I sat in the audience.

[Mr. Fraser.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay)): Never; no such statement was made.

Mr. ESLING: He received great applause when he made that statement.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did you cheer?

Mr. ESLING: I cheered, yes. The facts are just about like this, and I leave it to the house to judge the case. The minister had a political friend in Cranbrook, and that friend wanted to unload something on the government and so he sold them three lots for $5,500 on the recommendation of the Minister of Health, who had an order in council put through. Next year a vote for the construction of a building was put in the estimates. When it was known that the building was to be erected on the site purchased, the people of Kimberley, independent of party, Liberal and Conservative alike, all wired in protest to Ottawa against the construction of a public building on this site for the reason that the location was unsuitable, objectionable and away from the centre of the town. Now, $5,500 was spent for a site which was recommended by the minister, a site which was unsuitable and objectionable. It must be taken for granted, in view of that fact, that the minister's judgment of real estate is just about as poor as his political judgment. But the fact is that this property for which he paid $5,500 at the time of the purchase was actually assessed for $850. Let me emphasize that—$850 was the assessed value of the property that the minister recommended should be purchased by the government at $5,500. The people of the town objected, and it was only because there happened to be the end of a blind street available that the minister was able to make an exchange with the then provincial government, which was of the same political complexion as his own. That, in my opinion, bears out the charges in the Vancouver Sun that the Minister of Health merely uses his position for the distribution of patronage in British Columbia in order that he may retain his seat. I extend to the minister from British Columbia the very timely and courteous suggestion that if he has a chance to slip into the Senate by the grace of the Prime Minister he had better take advantage of it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take up much of the time of the committee in reply to my hon. friend's statements. Two or three lots in Kimberley were offered to the department. Following the usual procedure, an official of the department went to Kimberley, and it was on his recommendation—not on the recommendation of the minister—that the property was bought.

Mr. ESLING: Will you just say—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Order. You have had your say; sit down.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend need not worry about the possibility of the minister being returned to this parliament. He will have sufficient to do to look after his own interests.

Mr. ESLING: I always have.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): So have I. But I want to put him straight because he has been going around the country making these statements, and they are not in accordance with the facts. The property was bought on the recommendation of the proper official of the department. As to its value, this was one of the cheaper properties offered for sale. The property was within a block of the centre of the city. It is true that the citizens desired the post office in the centre; but the property offered in that location or near it was not offered for $5,500 but for $16,000. This was considered to be too great a price to pay. However, as the citizens were very much interested in the proposed public building and desired to have it in a central location, it was found possible to exchange the site with the provincial government for a street end, and this brought the post office into a very good location. I was very glad to concur in the suggestion, and when my hon. friend goes to Kimberley, as I hope he will this year, he will see there the fine little post office building which stands to the credit of this government and of the minister.

Mr. ESLING: The post office building, we admit, is a very creditable building, but it has nothing to do with this site. Notwithstanding what the minister says, he must admit that the citizens of Kimberley wired and wrote here protests against the purchase of that site as being unsuitable and objectionable. The minister cannot deny that he stood on the platform at Nelson and said that nothing could be done in or for the province of British Columbia without his recommendation, and I say that the purchase of these lots was not made without his recommendation. Why, does the minister think for one moment that the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) is going to do anything in British Columbia without consulting him? It stands to reason that he would act only on the recommendation of his colleague. Having said that nothing can be done without his recommendation, he must accept responsibility for having paid $5,500 for a useless site purchased from a political friend of his, and, as I have said, that site was assessed at $850 at the time of purchase. He cannot deny that. I have the records.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have denied it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: May I say to my hon. friend that I am the one who must accept responsibility for the purchase of this site. I appreciate very greatly the advice and assistance of my colleague the Minister of Health in regard to any matter in the province of British Columbia or elsewhere throughout the Dominion. He was my predecessor in this office and I have the greatest respect for his judgment in regard to anything pertaining to this or any other department. But this site was obtained after the most careful inquiry and investigation, the same as any other site that is purchased for a public building, and I do not believe my hon. friend from West Kootenay will say for a moment that sites have been obtained for public buildings without the greatest possible care being exercised as to their selection and price.

Item agreed to.

Vancouver public building—to meet one year's interest at 5 per cent on mortgage of $400,000, $20,000.

Mr. FRASER: How many more payments are due on this building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not a question of annual payments on the building; it is for interest on the mortgage against the property.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings generally—flags for Dominion public buildings, $5,000.

Mr. COOTE: I am just wondering if this is to purchase Canadian flags?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is my hon. friend really wondering?

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms—replacements, repairs, improvements, etc., $100,000.

Mr. ESLING: Does the minister know anything about the purchase or sale of land in connection with the experimental farm at Windermere, and whether that also was recommended by the Minister of Health?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend will have to inquire from my colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) with regard to that.

Mr. ESLING: Does the minister say I must make inquiry of the Minister of Agriculture with regard to an item in one of his votes?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; my information is that there was no purchase made by this department at the point mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. ESLING: I have received a communication concerning the purchase of a parcel of land in connection with the experimental farm at Windermere, in the district represented by the Minister of Pensions and National health. The correspondent has not a very high regard for the land in question. In his communication he says that it is nothing but rock and roots, and that as a matter of fact the purchase of this land created some amusement among the residents of that community. The purchase was made a short time prior to the visit of the Minister of Agriculture, and the charge is made that in order to make the land presentable to the eyes of the minister the employees were given crowbars with which they dug holes along the roadway leading to the farm; then they were given instructions to cut fir trees and plant them in the holes, so that the minister might have the impression that what met his view was the natural landscape. I do not know whether that procedure was recommended by the Minister of National Health but I am informed that this tree-planting was done.

Sir EUGENE FISET: That is a new method of reforestation.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I can see no appropriation in the estimates for an addition to the New Westminster post office. That matter has been discussed before in this house, and the addition is badly required. The business done in the office warrants the expenditure. When the Postmaster General visited New Westminster he promised that we would get the addition; he said that it was absolutely necessary, and as a result, I believe on the ground of urgent necessity he recommended the expenditure. He made that statement in this house last session. The Minister of Public Works came along with his broadaxe and slashed it off. I now ask the hon. gentleman why he took that action. The Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General have no doubt received communications from the Board of Trade, the city council and other organizations in New Westminster urging the absolute necessity for the construction of this addition. I know as a matter of fact that the business of the post office is seriously embarrassed at the present time, and in the busy seasons the present facilities are entirely inadequate. It is not necessary to buy a new site. The site is there; it is simply a case of erecting an addition which would not entail the expenditure of very much money. I remember of course that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was in British Columbia he told the people that their difficulty arose from the fact that they did not elect enough Liberals.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That seems to be the policy under which the Minister of Public Works is proceeding.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Why?

Mr. McQUARRIE: I wish to tell those hon. gentlemen that the people in New Westminster, irrespective of their politics, are interested in this matter. They are not particularly anxious to spend the money, but they recommend the expenditure because they feel it is an absolute necessity. I would like to hear an explanation from the Minister of Public Works as to why he lopped off the amount which was recommended by the Postmaster General.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would like to say that if my hon. friend has not been able to find in these estimates the item to which he refers, I am afraid it is not there; that is the best explanation I can give as to why he has not been able to find it. Representations have been made to the department in regard to the needs in New Westminster, as they have been made in regard to many other places throughout the Dominion.

Mr. McQUARRIE: By the Postmaster General?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Many recommendations have been made by the Postmaster General which we have not been able to meet. When my hon. friend referred to the fact that the Minister of Public Works wielded a big axe he gave evidence of the fact that he does not know the Minister of Public Works as well as the Minister of Public Works might wish. For the information of the hon. gentleman I would like to say that the big axe is wielded by four men on the treasury board, and sixteen other men in the council. The result has been that many buildings which the Minister of Public Works considered necessary have not been erected, so that expenditures may be available for dredging and various other public works. I am sure that even the residents of New Westminister would agree that some of these expenditures there have been even more necessary than that which would be required for the erection of a new building at New Westminster.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The Minister of Public Works seems to be in a humorous mood this afternoon, and his followers seem to think that he has been very clever.

Some hon. MEMBERS: He has.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I do not have to prove it; he admits it. He may be very clever, and it may be all right for this government to preach economy, but I want to tell the hon. gentleman that the people out at the coast know what is happening in other parts of Canada. When they know that money is thrown away for parks, in the city of Ottawa, and that they cannot get sufficient money in New Westminster to carry on, they have good and sufficient reasons for dissatisfaction. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will not feel so happy after the elections; I do not believe he will.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh, I hope to feel much better.

Mr. McQUARRIE: And I do not think his backers will feel so happy. He may tell us of expenditures which have been recommended by the Postmaster General and which have been disallowed by the treasury board, but I think if recommendation were made by the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works, New Westminster would soon have an addition to its post office. The minister may play his game of politics, but I do not think the people out there will appreciate his little joke.

Item agreed to.

Rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc.—Ottawa public buildings and grounds—departments generally—char service, including $150 to E. Snowden for firing the noon gun, $400,000.

Mr. COOTE: What pay is given to charwomen who do service in the Ottawa public buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are paid $1.25 for two and a half hours' work.

Mr. COOTE: Per day?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Repairs, improvements, additions and maintenance, $700,000.

Mr. BOYS: Is any portion of this item required for the pulling down of additional buildings in the city of Ottawa? If not, is there any provision in any of the items for such work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The clearing which is being done around the Confederation building will probably be completed this year. It is not however included in the present vote; it comes under a special vote.

Mr. BOYS: I had in mind the buildings in the vicinity of the old Russell hotel. I am instructed that there are more buildings to be taken down and further roadways and improvements to be completed. If this is a convenient time to answer my question, I would like to know what particular buildings are being destroyed. For instance, is the Ottawa post office to be removed under the present program?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. BOYS: Are the buildings close to the Roxborough apartments to be removed, and what about the church north of that?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think all the things to which my hon. friend has referred to are matters for the city, that is, with the exception of the post office. There is nothing in contemplation with regard to the post office coming down this year.

Mr. BOYS: There is no doubt, I think, that there is further work in contemplation. Perhaps it is not yet decided upon, but there is other work, is there not?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Nothing further provided for by this department at the present time.

Mr. BOYS: It is in connection with the Federal District Commission, is it not?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. BOYS: Take the buildings that were pulled down between the Aylmer apartments and the canal; was not that work done by the Department of Public Works?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That was under the jurisdiction of the Federal District Commission, and the Department of Public Works did not have anything to do with it.

Mr. BOYS: You provided the money for it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I should like to ask the minister if he thinks the treasury board would pass a little item for the cleaning and restoring of some of the statues on the grounds of this building. Some of them are getting into a very disgraceful condition, notably the statues of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir John A. Macdonald. Something should be done to take care of them properly. Last session I drew the attention of the minister to the corner stone of the building, and he had the inscription renewed, which made a great improvement. Perhaps the proper official responsible has overlooked attending to the statues on the grounds.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What my hon. friend refers to is very largely the oxidization from the sulphur fumes which come from across the river, and there is no way of preventing that.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Surely they can be cleaned up and looked after.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it is the same as the action on the roofs of the buildings.

Mr. McQUARRIE: But you can get at them without much trouble. Do you say nothing can be done? They are in a disgraceful condition; surely something should be done to restore them.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—Ottawa—new departmental building, $1,200,000.

Mr. FRASER: What building is this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the Confederation building.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—National Research Council laboratories and equipment, $1,500,000.

Mr. FRASER: Where are these laboratories?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are on Sussex street

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—Addition to central heating plant, $130,000.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to ask the minister if it is proposed to use pulverized coal in this addition to the central heating plant.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Public Works—harbour and rivers—lower lakes terminal, $3,100,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister say if any of this grant is for the improvement of the St. Lawrence river leading to the terminal?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, this is for the lower lakes terminal, but the next item has to do with the channel.

Mr. COOTE: What is to be the storage capacity at that terminal?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It will be 5,500,000 bushels.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In 1928 when the minister made the decision in the house, he coupled with that the statement that this was being done on condition that the United States paid its share of the work in the preparation of the river. Has the minister received any assurance that the United States will do so?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The United States now has in its harbours and rivers bill an appropriation for this particular work.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): For how much?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is an amount of $180,000, if I recollect aright, with regard to certain shoals in the channel, and a total amount if I am not mistaken of something around $1,000,000 for that channel.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): When the minister made that statement in regard to this selection he knew then, and he also knew when the work began, that he had not the consent of the United States. In July, 1928, the United States absolutely refused to carry out the program and I do not know what influences have been at work to secure even the small grant of $180,000. Will the minister tell us that he is sure of that $1,000,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1928, when that statement was made, there was an appropriation in the United States harbours and rivers bill providing for this work, even to the extent of doing $65,000 worth of work in Canadian waters if the Canadian government did not feel disposed to do it. However, there were certain delays with regard to having the bill passed upon by congress, and a new bill was introduced a short time ago, just at the last session, making provision for the work in this channel.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): At what time in 1928 was that provision made in the United States?

Mr. ELLIOTT: At the time their harbours and rivers bill was presented to congress; it was prior to the time that our estimates were being considered. If I remember correctly, there was a distinct understanding—

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Why did the minister make the statement that it was on condition of the United States undertaking—

Mr. ELLIOTT: I did not make that statement.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have that statement right here.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend will find that the statement I made was that if satisfactory arrangements could be made with the United States regarding their portion of the channel, and those arrangements are being carried out.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The hon. minister stated that an amount was included in their estimates, at the time our estimates were being prepared. In July, 1928, you had received an absolute refusal, and no statement to that effect was made in the house. We asked for the papers in connection with this matter, but we were told that because they contained important matters the minister did not desire to lay them on the table. Those papers have since been laid on the table and they do not contain anything which would have prevented their being brought down at that time. Until a few weeks ago the United States had given an absolute refusal to carry on this work. The hon. minister knew that at the time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know my hon. friend desires to be absolutely fair, but I think he is under a misapprehension when he makes the statement that there was a refusal on record at the time.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would ask that this item stand over until I bring the file down.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to do that.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I will read the statement of your engineers.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If there is any objection, I shall be very glad to allow the item to stand so that my hon. friend may read the files.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have the files in my office.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No, I object to the item carrying, unless you intend to force it through.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend will agree as to the necessity of this vote being put through. I will undertake to produce all the information, but I would suggest that he first allow the vote to go through.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I do not require any information, I have it myself. That file contains communications from the engineers dated July, 1928, saying that the United States had turned down the proposition. I would not stop public works from going on, but I want to make the statement that I do not think the minister has played fair in this matter. We accepted his word that there were certain reasons why the papers could not be brought down, but since that time the papers have been secured and they contain nothing of the nature intimated by the minister. We accepted this proposition at that time on the understanding that the United States was going to do its share of the work in order to enable large boats to come down to this terminal. I submit that the minister was most unfair when he said that there were reasons which prevented these papers being submitted to the house.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have known my hon friend for many years, and I know that there is no hon. member of this house who is more desirous of being fair. However, if he looks up Hansard he will see that the statement was made that no objection would be taken to my hon. friend or any other hon. member of this house looking at the correspondence, but that I did not think it advisable at that time to have it laid on the table.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I will admit that the minister went just that far and said that if we wanted to force it we could look at the correspondence. I do not intend to prevent the progress of any great public work simply because my own constituency is concerned, but I contend that the decision was based on very unfair grounds. I do not claim that Kingston had everything in its favour, but the decision was made most unfairly. In 1928 the matter was left in abeyance because of the rush of closing, but this year the papers were brought down and they contain no valid reason for the minister's refusal to table them when requested. One of the large steamship companies has objected to going so far down the river, and has spent its own money in the building of an elevator at another point. That to me seems the strongest criticism and condemnation of the selection. With these facts before the committee, I will permit the item to go through.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think this completes the Public Works estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would it be agreeable to hon. members opposite to take up now the estimates of the Department of Labour? The Minister of Labour intends to leave town for two or three days.

Mr. BOYS: I understood that Interior and Indian Affairs were to be considered next.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Department of Agriculture was mentioned, but as the Minister of Labour is leaving the city for a day or two, it would be preferable, if my hon. friends agree, to take up his estimates next.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Labour—Annuities Act, $75,000.

Mr. BOYS: I remember some years ago this matter was under consideration and it was then hoped that the cost of annuities might be made a little less to those seeking to purchase them. The present minister may not have any record of what took place then, but at the time hopes were held out that some benefit would accrue along that line. Is there any hope that the cost of annuities to those seeking to purchase them may be reduced?

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): The information I get from the experts is that owing to the increased length of life, there is an idea that we ought to increase the cost of annuities instead of decreasing it. At the present time no company can compete with the government in regard to annuities. There is at present no thought of decreasing the price.

Mr. BOYS: I remember at that time the financial position showed that some money was being made by the government. It was then freely admitted that it was not the desire of the government to make money by the scheme, but that the government wished, if possible, to furnish annuities at cost with perhaps a reasonable reserve against unforeseen contingencies. It would be interesting to the committee to have a statement from the minister as to the annual receipts, disbursements and surpluses.

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

Mr. McGIBBON: What has been the increase in the expectancy of life in the last three or four years?

Mr. HEENAN: I have not under my hand the information with regard to the increased length of life, but I think all insurance companies claim that the length of life is increasing. I am glad to know that too.

Mr. McGIBBON: They are not increasing the premiums.

Mr. HEENAN: Did my hon. friend wish a statement showing the number of annuities that are being sold to-day as compared with previous years?

Mr. BOYS: Unfortunately I did not know that this was coming up or I might have looked up the debate of the year to which I refer. It was about six to eight years ago that this very feature was under discussion in the committee. It was then clearly shown that the department was making money and those in charge at that time were of opinion that if that situation continued there would be a possibility of reducing the cost of the annuities. We have had, I believe, no further statement in regard to the matter since then. If the minister can give reasons why there is no chance of reducing the cost but on the other hand a chance of increasing it, we would be interested in having them.

Mr. HEENAN: I shall be glad to give my hon. friend a statement on Monday. It has been represented by the head of the insurance department that in the long run we shall probably lose rather than make money by this scheme. I have not the information at hand because I had not expected that this question would come up.

Mr. BOYS: I do not want to press for something the minister cannot supply. Apparently he has before him nothing to show the receipts and disbursements and whether or not the selling of annuities is profitable. If it is not profitable, it goes without saying that the cost should be increased; if it is profitable, the cost should be reduced.

Mr. GERSHAW: Is sufficient care being taken by those who are selling annuities to acquaint the applicants with all the details? There had come to my notice a case where an annuity was sold by the department, and the applicant, after paying premiums for a number of years, found that it meant something altogether different from what he thought at first. Is this phase of the question carefully watched?

Mr. HEENAN: Of course I have no knowledge of anyone misrepresenting an annuity to anyone. If I had, I should be glad to take the matter up, but I cannot understand why anyone should make misrepresentations. There might be some cases of misunderstandings. When we advertise annuities we ask that prospective applicants apply to the department for information, and we issue pamphlets giving the fullest information possible.

Mr. HEAPS: Does this amount of $75,000 represent the cost of administering the Annuities Act?

Mr. HEENAN: It includes everything, such as advertising, commissions, except, of course, the salaries of the permanent staff.

Mr. HEAPS: What is the amount of the total premiums received per annum?

Mr. BOYS: Is the minister able to give me the information now, or does he want the item to stand? I am absolutely in favour of government annuities; I think we should do everything we can to encourage them. I am glad to see that in connection with the Income War Tax Act there is to be an exemption of $5,000 in this connection. We want to do all we can to encourage the buying of annuities, but what I am anxious to see is that they should be made a little cheaper to the public. We cannot exercise any proper judgment if the minister is unable to give us information as to the extent of the business, the receipts, the disbursements and the reserve that is necessary to take care of future liabilities, having regard to the expectation of life and so on. These items are essential to an intelligent discussion of the subject.

Mr. HEENAN: I think I can give all information required except that.

Mr. BOYS: Except what?

Mr. HEENAN: Information from the head of the insurance department representing that we are selling our annuities too cheaply; that we ought to increase the price in order to cover overhead expenses and things of that sort. I shall be glad to give that in detail on Monday. The statement is a lengthy one.

Mr. BOYS: If that be the case, the situation has absolutely changed since discussion in the house when, if I remember correctly, the Hon. James Murdock was Minister of Labour. If that be so, we ought to know it because it is rather serious. Will the item stand so far as that information is concerned?

Mr. HEENAN: If the hon. member insists, we shall have to let the item stand.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister give us the comparative cost of government annuities with those of a company like the Sun Life? I went into this matter a few years ago and I found I could do better with companies like the Sun Life than with the government. If that be the case, it disproves to a certain extent the statement the minister makes that they are losing money.

Mr. FRASER: There is some information I desire with regard to this item which the minister may not have with him at present. In volume II of the Auditor General's report, part M-5, I find the following charge:

> Amount required to recoup the Annuities branch on account of defalcations by W. J. Fleming, annuities agent at Regina (order in council P.C. 21—436, dated March 13, 1929, $1,282.05.

Can the minister give the details of that now, or does he want it to stand over?

Mr. HEENAN: I can give them now, but the question will probably be raised again. It was just a case where a man sold some annuities, collected the premiums and forgot to turn in the money, retaining it himself. We followed him until we found him, and prosecuted, with the result that he went to gaol.

Mr. BOYS: Was there no security?

Mr. HEENAN: No.

Mr. FRASER: That is just the point I want to follow up. Was this man not bonded by the department?

Mr. HEENAN: No.

Mr. FRASER: I asked the minister a question earlier in the session and in reply he told me that he had made a return as required by the act of his officials who were bonded. I have that return. I have read it, and there is not a single official of the Department of Labour named in it, notwithstanding the fact that the minister said that that information would be in the return. I want to know what explanation the minister has for making an answer of that kind. I have the return here and will send it over to the minister if he would like to see it.

Mr. HEENAN: The appointment of agents on commission is a new departure in the last few years. We found that people were applying for annuities and nobody was following up these prospects. This particular man was the first one to default. He was not bonded. But after that every agent was bonded. My answer to question No. 4 of my hon. friend was, "No information."

Mr. FRASER: But the minister is required by the act to make a return each year of the officials who are bonded. I have the return before me, and there is not a single official of the department named in it.

Mr. HEENAN: All our permanent officials are bonded.

Mr. FRASER: My question is not whether your officials are bonded. My point is that the minister is not making a return such as he is ordered to make to parliament so that the information may be available to hon. members.

Mr. HEENAN: I will let the item stand.

Mr. FRASER: The minister will be able to give me more information when it comes up again?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Item stands.

Combines Investigation Act, $30,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: In what state is the A.B.C. investigation?

Mr. HEENAN: It is in the courts now.

Mr. McGIBBON: How much money was spent on it?

Mr. HEENAN: My hon. friend is speaking of the inquiry, not the court procedure?

Mr. McGIBBON: I was not limiting my question to the courts. I asked how much money had been spent on the investigation.

Mr. HEENAN: For the investigation, $34,000.

Mr. BOYS: That is what was spent last year?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Administration, Employment Offices' Co-ordination Act, $17,000.

Mr. SIMPSON: What has the Department of Labour to do with employment offices? I thought they were largely provincial.

Mr. HEENAN: We give them a subvention to help them to carry on.

Item agreed to.

Fair wages and inspection, $15,000.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): What are the exact duties that these fair wage officers perform? We had one of them down in Sydney not long ago looking into the wages paid at the steel works. Has the minister received any report or finding from that officer?

Mr. HEENAN: Our fair wage officers have nothing to do with private industry. Their business is with public undertakings, to see that the fair wage policy is carried out, and to investigate any complaints that may be made. There are times, however, when we use these officers as conciliation officers when there is danger of a strike or something of that nature, and they keep us posted how the negotiations are proceeding. Very often they are called upon to act as conciliators in disputes.

Mr. FRASER: How many of these officers are there?

Mr. HEENAN: One in the maritimes, one in Montreal, one in Toronto, one in Winnipeg and one in Vancouver.

Mr. FRASER: What territory does the officer in Vancouver cover?

Mr. HEENAN: He covers British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): With regard to the officer in Halifax, is there some labour trouble down there among the painters? Is the officer taking any part in that dispute, and if so, has he made any report?

Mr. HEENAN: That is the only strike we have in Canada to-day, the painters' strike in Halifax, and I hope within the next day or two it will be settled.

Item agreed to.

Administration, Old Age Pensions Act, $10,000.

Mr. LUCAS: I understand that when a pensioner under the act has any property he has to make an assignment to the government.

Mr. HEENAN: No. There is a provision in the act to that effect, but the federal government has no authority to take property from anyone, and I have been advised that neither does any province administering an old age pension act take property from anyone or require him to transfer it.

Mr. LUCAS: A case of that kind was called to my attention by one of the municipal secretaries, who was worried about the taxes on the property which he said had been assigned to the government. I have the assurance of the minister, however, that that is not correct.

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Technical Education Act, $2,000.

Mr. FRASER: What is the significance of this vote of $2,000?

Mr. HEENAN: We have to carry on under the act another four years. We had a staff in connection with the $10,000,000 vote for technical education, and this $2,000 is required to enable us to carry on until the balance of the vote is exhausted.

Mr. BRADY: Does that $2,000 cover the cost for the nine provinces?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes, for travelling expenses only.

Mr. FRASER: In the Auditor General's report I find a charge for hospital medical care for Mrs. Charles Caucutt, who sustained injuries while attending the employment service council meetings. What are the circumstances justifying a payment of this kind?

Mr. HEENAN: She was one of the lady delegates at that meeting, and while here engaged on government business, broke her leg here in the building.

Item agreed to.

Labour—salaries, $269,045; contingencies, $30,000.

Mr. FRASER: How many employees has the minister in the department at present?

Mr. HEENAN: There are 136.

Mr. FRASER: The minister is asking for an increase?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes, six.

Mr. FRASER: How many were in the department when the minister took charge?

Mr. HEENAN: I cannot state the exact number, but we have a few increases owing to the extension of the work of the department, such as old age pensions, annuities, conciliation, and so on. I hope next year to be in a position to ask for a couple more fair wage officers.

Mr. FRASER: There is a departmental solicitor?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Is that a new appointment?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: To what extent are the public taking advantage of annuities?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That item is held over.

Mr. FRASER: What other important departmental officials have been appointed by the minister?

Mr. HEENAN: The minister has not appointed any; the Civil Service Commission has. It appointed the solicitor for the department, the chief conciliation officer, and the fair wage officer in Halifax.

Mr. FRASER: When the position of chief conciliation officer was created by the minister was the senior wage investigator given the position?

Mr. HEENAN: No, a new man came in.

Mr. FRASER: What was the justification for bringing in a new man when there was already an experienced officer in the department who had been carrying on the work for years?

Mr. HEENAN: It was advertised and thrown open by the Civil Service Commission. We have got probably one of the best gentlemen in the whole Dominion for the position, as results will show.

Mr. FRASER: What is his name?

Mr. HEENAN: Major S. Campbell.

Mr. FRASER: Were his qualifications superior to those of the men who had been carrying on the work before?

Mr. HEENAN: It is not altogether qualifications that count in conciliation work; temperament and experience are the essentials. This gentleman had a great deal of experience in negotiating wage agreements and acting on committees for labour men long before he came here.

Mr. FRASER: Was he appointed over the heads of the men in the department because he had a wider experience than they?

Mr. HEENAN: To my notion the present gentleman has a wider experience than any other officer.

Mr. FRASER: Was that the reason for his appointment?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: I notice the minister's private secretary is getting $4,080, and there is also an allowance of $600.

Mr. HEENAN: That is not for the private secretary; it is the secretarial allowance.

Mr. FRASER: Was there a secretary in the department when the minister took charge?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: What were the travelling and incidental expenses of the minister himself for the year ending March 31, 1930?

Mr. HEENAN: About $2,700.

Mr. FRASER: Does that include automobile expenses and all other private expenses of the minister?

Mr. HEENAN: That is the amount of the minister's own private expenses, $2,700.

Mr. FRASER: Including travelling expenses?

Mr. HEENAN: All travelling expenses.

Mr. FRASER: Chauffeur and automobile expenses?

Mr. HEENAN: No.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to have a statement including those expenses. My friend suggests aeroplane expenses as well.

Mr. HEENAN: The expenditures out of contingencies for the whole department were as follows:

|---|---|
| Salaries | $ 5,203 |
| Travelling expenses | 4,162 |
| Telephone and telegrams | 7,635 |
| Printing and stationery | 6,874 |
| Sundries | 5,101 |

Mr. FRASER: Evidently the minister has not understood my question. What was the amount the minister expended in connection with his personal expenses for the year?

Mr. HEENAN: I gave my hon. friend my own personal expenses—$2,700.

Mr. FRASER: Does that sum include the minister's travelling and automobile expenses, and all similar items?

Mr. HEENAN: No, it does not include automobiles; it includes only my personal expenses.

Mr. FRASER: Does it include the minister's travelling expenses?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: His travelling expenses were $2,700?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Does it include his automobiles, the renewal of his automobiles, repairs, sundries and gasoline?

Mr. HEENAN: No, that is additional.

Mr. FRASER: It includes all his travelling expenses?

Mr. HEENAN: Yes, in Canada.

Mr. FRASER: In or out of Canada—I want to have all the information.

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: $2,700.

Mr. HEENAN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: May we have the other item as to automobile expenses?

Mr. HEENAN: That is part of the $28,000.

Mr. FRASER: Do I understand that the expenses of the hon. gentleman in connection with the discharge of his duties as Minister of Labour amount to $28,000?

Mr. HEENAN: No, no.

Mr. FRASER: What is the cost to the Dominion of Canada of the Minister of Labour in connection with the discharge of his duties? That is what I am trying to get.

Mr. HEENAN: I can tell the hon. gentleman that there is a salary of $10,000, $4,000 indemnity and $2,700 travelling expenses. I have not the automobile expenses before me. It is all included however in the item of $28,000.

Mr. FRASER: As I understand the minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. FRASER: If hon. members insist upon interrupting, they will be here just that much longer. The longer they shout the longer it will take to pass the item. I wish to have a correct answer to my question. May I infer that the minister costs the Dominion of Canada $50,000?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not know what my hon. friend is asking. If there is any information he wishes to have we may go into all the items thoroughly. I may tell the hon. gentleman that it cost the people of Canada $2,700 last year for the travelling expenses of the Minister of Labour, and for that sum he travelled about 40,000 miles, at an average cost of seven cents a mile. He went here, there and everywhere, when any dispute arose. In addition he visited the mines and other places at the request of the miners; he visited different industries to see the conditions under which men were labouring, and in all he covered about 40,000 miles.

Mr. FRASER: I have before me an excerpt from the report of the Auditor General showing the expenditures for the year ended March 31, 1929. In that year the expenditures were as follows: Salary $10,000, indemnity, $4,000, personal expenses, $2,600, minister's automobile renewal, repairs, sundries and gasoline, $2,301, and expenses to Geneva, $6,691, making a total of $25,592. As far as I can learn from the Auditor General's report, that is the answer to the question I have addressed to the minister.

An hon. MEMBER: Then why did you ask it?

Mr. FRASER: The figures I have quoted are for the year 1929; I want information for the year 1930. Can the minister give me, either now or at some future time, a detailed statement for 1930, to correspond with the one I have given for 1929?

Mr. BANCROFT: The hon. gentleman stated that last year the cost was $50,000 Did he multiply by two the expenditures for the year 1928-29?

Mr. FRASER: No, I did not multiply anything. I added up the figures which the minister gave me across the floor of the house and the result was very close to $50,000.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Has the hon. member any objection to that sum of money being spent in the Department of Labour?

Mr. FRASER: No, not at all. I am trying to get an accurate statement of what the Minister of Labour cost this country; I am not objecting to the expenditure in any shape or form.

Mr. BANCROFT: I would ask the minister to tell us how many strikes there have been in Canada during the last year.

Mr. FRASER: I do not know what that has to do with it.

Mr. BANCROFT: I directed my question to the minister, not to the hon. gentleman across the floor.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

HALIBUT FISHERIES

CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Before the house adjourns I wish to lay on the table a copy of the convention between Canada and the United States for the preservation of the halibut fisheries of the North Pacific ocean, Behring Sea, signed at Ottawa on May 9, 1930, in respect to the Dominion of Canada, by the plenipotentiary named therein.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 6.20 p.m.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS, VANCOUVER HOTEL

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Has the government received any communication from the city of Vancouver protesting against delay in the construction of the Canadian National hotel at Vancouver?
2. Why has the work on this hotel been delayed for such a long period?
3. Who is the contractor in charge of the work, and when is it expected that it will be completed?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. The Department of Railways and Canals has no record of any communication.

2. Considering the size of the hotel, and the importance of the problems involved, the Canadian National Railway authorities feel that the work has not been delayed to any great extent. Excavation was started in December, 1928, in order to fufil the promise made by Canadian National Railways to the city of Vancouver that the work would be started before December 31st of that year. At that time, the plans were only in a preliminary stage, but, in the meantime, the Canadian National Railways were able to provide work for a considerable number of men during the winter of 1928-29. In June, 1929, it was realized by the president of the Canadian National Railways that, in view of the probable future progress of the city of Vancouver, it would be advisable to increase the size of the hotel, at the same time designing it so that additional accommodation could be provided at a later date. This necessitated a restudy of the plans, and this scheme is now being carried out. The hotel is at present designed to provide six hundred rooms, with the possibility of adding a further four hundred rooms in the future. The foundation work has been completed, and over two thousand tons of steel has already been erected.

3. The E. J. Ryan Contracting Company, Limited, of Vancouver, is in charge of the work. It is the intention to open the hotel during the month of May, 1932.

INMATES OF PENITENTIARIES

Mr. LUCHKOVICH:

1. How many persons were incarcerated in Canadian penitentiaries during the year 1929?
2. What is the racial origin of the various prisoners?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The answers to the above questions may be found on page seven of the annual report of the superintendent of penitentiaries, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1929, and are as follows:—

|---|---|
| 1. 2,769. | |
| 2. White | 2,589 |
| Coloured | 60 |
| Indian | 42 |
| Indian halfbreed | 7 |

SUBSIDIES AND GRANTS TO PROVINCES SINCE APRIL 1, 1922

Mr. SANDERSON:

What is the total amount of money paid from the federal treasury to the provinces of Canada, by provinces, since April 1, 1922, on account of subsidies, special grants to the maritime provinces pending further consideration of provincial subsidies, highway construction, agricultural instruction, technical education, amortization of the debt against certain school buildings, construction of which was commenced prior to the expiration of the Technical Education Act, employment offices, unemployment relief, eradication of venereal diseases, war pensions and old age pensions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

Payments to provinces since 1922

|---|---|
| Ontario | $ 32,558,138 76 |
| Quebec | 26,031,085 35 |
| Nova Scotia | 10,011,859 55 |
| New Brunswick | 8,945,286 92 |

| Alberta | 15,729,473 79 |
| Saskatchewan | 18,547,441 15 |
| Total | $ 140,338,499 81 |

The above amounts do not include the sum of $237,370,421.60 that has been expended on soldiers' pensions and relief to unemployed pensioners in the various provinces of Canada.

NATIONAL PARK, QUEBEC PROVINCE

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton):

1. Has the government reached any decision as to the establishment of a national park in the province of Quebec?

2. Has any representation been made to the government regarding this matter: (a) by the province; (b) by others; if so, who are they?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. It is the policy of the government to develop a national park in each province, provided the province makes available for this purpose, free of charge to the Dominion and free of encumbrance, a compact area of national parks standard. So far the provincial government of Quebec has not suggested to the department that it take over for administration as a national park any area in Quebec, and no representations in this regard seem to have been made direct to the department by other parties.

2. (a) and (b) answered by No. 1.

SUBSIDIES AND GRANTS TO PROVINCES, FISCAL YEAR 1930-31

Mr. SANDERSON:

What is the total amount of money paid or estimated to be paid from the federal treasury to the province of Canada, by provinces, during the fiscal year 1930-1931, on account of subsidies, special grants to the maritime provinces pending further consideration of provincial subsidies, highway construction, agricultural instruction, technical education, amortization of the debt against certain school buildings, construction of which was commenced prior to the expiration of the Technical Education Act, employment offices, unemployment relief, eradication of venereal diseases, war pensions and old age pensions?

| Ontario | $ 5,536,537 61 |

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

DOMINION AND MERCHANT SHIPPING LEGISLATION

APPROVAL OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF CONFERENCE HELD IN LONDON

On the order being called for government notices of motion:

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand there are one or two members who would like to speak on the resolution which is in the name of the Minister of Justice, but these hon. members will not be in the house until this afternoon. If it is agreeable we might return to this motion during the course of the afternoon.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I mentioned the matter in that sense, and it would be very acceptable if that could be arranged in that way.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, could we manage in some way to understand what is going on? At this end of the chamber we could not hear that dialogue at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that there are one or two members who I know desire to speak to this resolution which is in the name of the Minister of Justice, but they will not be in the house until this afternoon. I was asking if it would be agreeable to the house to return to this motion this afternoon, and the leader of the opposition stated that so far as he was concerned it would be agreeable. I hope it will be equally agreeable to hon. members in the far corner.

NAVAL CONFERENCE

APPROVAL OF TREATY FOR LIMITATION OF ARMAMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That it is expedient that parliament do approve of the international treaty for the limitation and reduction of naval armament, London, April 22, 1930, signed in respect of the Dominion of Canada by the plenipotentiary named therein, and that this house do approve of the same.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the house has had before it for some time the copy of the London naval treaty, 1930, which was signed at St. James Palace, London, on Tuesday, April 22, 1930, and the approval of parliament of this treaty is being asked at the moment so far as the House of Commons is concerned. May I say that the treaty is signed on behalf of Canada by the Hon. Philippe Roy, who is our minister at Paris. As the house is well aware, Canada was represented at the conference by the Hon. Mr. Ralston, our Minister of National Defence. The conference, as hon. members are aware, lasted for a month or two. In order to permit of the return of the Minister of National Defence after the Easter recess Mr. Roy was requested to be present in London for the concluding days of the conference and to sign the treaty on behalf of Canada.

It is appropriate and in the interests of all that whatever is to be said on this matter should be said by the Minister of National Defence. I shall leave it to the minister to speak on behalf of the government in asking for approval of the treaty by this house. However, before we do so, I think I may say, on behalf of hon. members of this parliament and indeed on behalf of the people of this country, that we have reason to be more than proud of the manner in which Canada was represented at the naval conference by the Minister of National Defence.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the importance of the subject perhaps would justify one in devoting more time to this question than is possible at the moment, in view of the lateness of the session. I am aware, of course, that it is not to any extent a contentious matter, but it is one in connection with which perhaps the members of the house and the country would desire some information from one who happened to be more or less closely associated with the negotiations.

Let me say at the outset that I greatly appreciate the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and I am fully sensible of the honour which was conferred upon me in giving me an opportunity to be present on that momentous occasion. I am glad that apparently what was done will approve itself to the country and to this house and I can only say that the efforts which were put forth and the work which was accomplished was due not to any one man or any group of men but to the spirit of cooperation which seem to pervade that whole assembly.

Just here may I say that the coming over of the Hon. Mr. Roy, Canadian minister to France at a time of inconvenience to himself, to take up the threads of a discussion with which he had not been at all familiar except through press reports, was a matter of great satisfaction to me and to the delegation, and on behalf of the delegation and on behalf of Canada I want to express our appreciation to Mr. Roy for having taken up that work at that late date in the progress of events, and having seen it through successfully. He grasped fully and rapidly the great many intricate points which had been the subject of discussion, and which required to be known and understood in those final days in order that definite progress might be made.

When speaking of the delegation I want to acknowledge the fine services of our advisers, Commodore Hose, Chief of Naval Staff; Mr. Pearson, First Secretary of the Department of External Affairs; and Lieut. Colonel Vanier, our representative on the committees at Geneva; and of Major Brown, the secretary of the delegation. All of these gentlemen gave efficient and unfailing cooperation in connection with Canada's part of the work of the conference, and their help and constant interest were invaluable.

It is difficult just at the moment, so close to the conference, for one to back off, as it were, and get any sort of perspective to give to this house and the people of Canada regarding the progress of these negotiations. May I just divide—and this is my own personal division for the purpose of clear thinking, and perhaps for the purpose of easier understanding—the conference into four periods. The first period was during the first three weeks in which discussions were had with regard to procedure and method. By procedure I do not mean simply the way in which the conference itself was to proceed, but I mean the system which was to be adopted for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the conference. As we all know, the objects of the conference were the limitation and if possible the reduction of naval armament, and one of the important questions which arose was the method whereby that was to be done. The first three weeks were taken up with procedure, with deciding how the affairs of the conference would be carried on and deciding the method and system whereby the objects of the conference were to be carried out. There were of course at the same time many informal discussions regarding the naval needs of the powers represented. As a result of these latter discussions it was possible in the next two weeks, from about February 9 to February 19, for the various powers to formulate and publish their statements, showing their respective naval needs and also the position which they took with regard to the objects of the conference.

The third period was one of some difficulty during which we were faced with the situation that one of the great powers, France, was not represented by any delegate directly authorized by its government. The French government had been defeated, and for the time being that country was represented by His Excellency M. Fleriault, the French ambassador and M. Massigli, one of the experts of the foreign office.

The last stage was the final four weeks when the French delegation returned newly authorized, and during which time definite decisions were arrived at as to the matters which had been the subject of discussion, and the final treaty was signed.

Concerning the method of procedure, although there were plenary sessions, the real work of the conference was largely carried on in the offices of the members of the various delegations. One or two heads of one or two different delegations would meet together for informal discussion; meetings were held in the office of the Prime Minister at the House of Commons, others at St. James palace, others at 10 Downing street, and others at the offices of the delegations at the various hotels. There could not have been a more fluid or elastic or adjustable system for a conference. It was, I believe, due to those informal discussions that the success and progress which is recorded in the instrument now before us were achieved.

I will not say anything as to the first formal meeting of the conference, but I will proceed directly to the matter of method, which required considerable attention during the early stages of the conference. The points at issue with regard to the method to be adopted were simply these; one set of powers said, "We believe that limitation should be achieved by simply allotting to certain powers a total global or world tonnage;" the other set of powers said, "That is all right, we are perfectly willing that a total world tonnage should be allotted but we want specified the classes of ships into which that tonnage is to be divided, and the maximum tonnage provided for each class." In other words, there was a contest or controversy between the advocates of the "global" and the advocates of the "category" systems. After considerable discussion the matter was referred to a committee of experts and a solution was arrived at which seemed generally satisfactory to all concerned but which, owing to certain reservations, has not been formally embodied in the treaty. That solution was embodied by the committee in a very simple sentence: "that each power represented at the present conference shall indicate, after an exchange of views with the other powers, how it will allocate its global tonnage." In other words, the principle of global tonnage was accepted, but each nation was to indicate to the others how it proposed to allocate that total into the different categories. It followed naturally that if this indication as to how the tonnage would be allocated among the different classes was inserted in the treaty then the advocates of global tonnage and the advocates of category tonnage would both be satisfied. As I have said, this proposed solution has not been embodied in the treaty but it has been forwarded by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the chairman of the conference, to the league disarmament commission and will be considered by that body.

The next question was that raised by Italy. Italy contended that the thing to be settled first was not the amount of tonnage to be held by each particular nation or the amount of tonnage in a particular class which was to be held by any particular nation, but the proportion or ratio of tonnage to be held by those nations; in other words, whether nation A would take the same amount of tonnage as nation B, or would nation A have two-thirds or some other proportion of the tonnage of nation B. That was the question which Italy contended should be settled first, and it was put on an early agenda for consideration. However, at the request of the other powers, Italy agreed finally that the discussion might go on with regard to tonnage and classification, reserving always to Italy this matter which Italy contended was a question of first principle, that of ratio.

As I have said, while these discussions were going on during the first three weeks, the matter of program in informal discussions came up. The heads and members of the various delegations were meeting and discussing the statements which would be made as to their absolute or relative naval needs. The time came, on February 7, when the nations one after another submitted their statements to the world and to the conference. If we could adopt the analogy of a court of law, one would say that at that time the nations submitted their pleadings or their statements of claims.

On the morning of February 7, the United States published its statement, and perhaps the outstanding feature in that statement was the fact that that nation was willing to abandon its claim for twenty-one 8-inch gun cruisers, and to reduce that claim to eighteen 8-inch gun cruisers, but asked the right to reduce to fifteen 8-inch gun cruisers and to make up the difference in order to maintain parity with the British commonwealth of nations by additional 6-inch gun cruisers. An hour or two could easily be consumed in analyzing these statements, but my time is limited.

The statement of the United Kingdom was published on the same day. It dealt with general principles, pointed out that there must be a transition period when naval armament must be maintained, and it particularly urged reduction in capital ships.

The French statement followed on February 13, and called for a tonnage something like 724,000 in 1936, and pointed out that this was a great reduction from France's 1913 tonnage.

The statement of Japan followed on February 17. An examination of the statement showed that it offered an opportunity for discussion and a basis for possible agreement.

Italy published her statement on February 19, in which she reiterated her position, namely, that she felt that she must claim a parity with the strongest European power; secondly, that she was willing to reduce as low as the strongest European power and, thirdly, that she was willing to consider the abolition of submarines along with the abolition of battleships.

Using the analogy of a court of law, that brought the powers "at issue."

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman stated that the United States submitted its case indicating the ships it would require to be placed on a parity with the British commonwealth of nations, and he stated also that the United Kingdom then submitted its statement. Was that a statement on behalf of the British commonwealth of nations, and if so, what was Canada's submission in that regard, as well as the submission of Australia and the other portions of the British Empire?

Mr. RALSTON: The statement submitted by the United Kingdom was one signed and submitted on behalf of the government of the United Kingdom.

Mr. BENNETT: What was Canada's submission?

Mr. RALSTON: The submission of Canada and also of the other dominions was that they would agree to a collective total being stated for all the members of British commonwealth of nations and that they would agree that their respective naval requirements would not be such as to cause that collective total to be exceeded, it being left entirely for the British commonwealth of nations amongst themselves to agree as to what proportion each of them would require in the way of naval armament.

Mr. BENNETT: Was any proportion agreed to on behalf of Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Then Canada made no offer of anything at any time at this gathering?

Mr. RALSTON: This was not a conference for the purpose of providing naval armaments. This was a conference not for agreeing to provide, but rather for the purpose of agreeing to restrict naval armaments.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister has but evaded my question. My position, however, is this: the British Empire submission was not made as an empire. The hon. gentleman says that the United Kingdom made the submission, and there is an agreement that the component communities comprising the British Empire would come to an understanding amongst themselves. I asked whether Canada had made any submission. He said no, that Canada had offered to reduce. What can Canada reduce beyond what she now has?

Mr. RALSTON: I told my hon. friend that the time had not come for the agreement as to contribution. We are at present talking about an agreement to restrict, and the agreement to restrict was that Canada's naval needs and requirements would not be such as to cause to be exceeded the collective total stated by the United Kingdom in its statement and which is now contained in the treaty as the collective total for the British commonwealth of nations. When the time comes for the members of the British commonwealth of nations to meet together and decide upon their requirements, that will be the time when my hon. friend's question may be properly answered.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is not an answer at all.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not intended to be.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What does my hon. friend want?

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the government's policy?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not want to evade the question. This was a conference for the limitation and restriction of naval armaments, and the agreement made is one made on behalf of the British commonwealth of nations, signed by the component parts limiting themselves to those total needs in the aggregate. The fact that the statement was issued by the United Kingdom loses its significance entirely when we see in the treaty signed by all parts of the British empire that the total stated was the maximum total needs of the members of the British commonwealth of nations.

Then came just at a rather unfortunate time the defeat of the French government with, as I said, the necessity of proceeding without any directly authorized representative of the French government. The discussions went on with the French ambassador and with M. Massigli, representative of the French foreign office. I cannot speak too highly of the punctiliousness and the endeavour to cooperate shown by those two gentlemen under very difficult circumstances. Considerable progress was made in discussion, although not as to decision with regard to matters which affected the French republic. At the same time discussions were proceeded with between what we may call the high seas group, that is, Japan, the United States, and the British commonwealth of nations. Those discussions continued during the three weeks when the French were not formally represented by a government representative, with the result that just about the time when the French government were able to send a newly authorized delegation, a despatch was sent to Japan, a compromise proposal, a proposal emerging from the discussions which had been held by the members of the so-called high seas group, and a proposal which is practically the one which is now embodied in the treaty regarding the naval restrictions of the forces of those three nations.

Then came the fourth period. The French delegation was back and conversations were renewed more directly between France, Italy and the United Kingdom with regard to the European situation. It would take some time to go into all the details of those conversations. The inside story of those conferences will, I suppose, never be fully known, but one can indicate what has already been made public with regard to the subjects considered at those conferences. Those subjects were two: first, there was this question with regard to parity as between France and Italy, Italy claiming she should have parity with the strongest European power, meaning France; Italy claiming that owing to her situation on the Mediterranean her position was that of an island in an inland sea, a sea which might be easily blockaded, and therefore desiring that she should have control. France pointed out that she had possessions in Africa and required freedom of the Mediterranean for the purpose of communicating with those possessions. France also reminded those with whom she had conversations that her territory had been the subject of invasion no less than three times in a century. It was realized early that the question between those countries was not one which could be settled by experts, but was one which would have to be solved through the activities and efforts of statecraft.

Coupled with that was the other question as to whether any assurance could be given to France with regard to her position in Europe. As the house knows, the discussions on that terminated finally without any decision being made. There were three phases of it. The suggestion was made that there be some sort of a consultative pact, similar to the four power Pacific pact signed at the time of the Washington conference, that the nations would consult each other at a time when there was apprehension of war. I do not know that I am stating these in the order in which they were discussed. Second, there was a suggestion of a Mediterranean Locarno, some agreement whereby one nation would be guaranteed against another, as is done in the case of the Locarno treaty. Third, there was discussion as to whether or not any arrangement could be arrived at or any settlement reached by way of making some interpretative statement concerning the meaning of Article XVI of the covenant of the League of Nations. Those discussions took some three or four weeks. Along towards the end of them a suggestion was made that the conference should adjourn for six months in order to give those representing particularly France, Italy and the United Kingdom, an opportunity of going home and consulting their people and carrying on further negotiations after those consultations had been had, retaining the chairmanship and good office of the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The decision was reached that it was not desirable to adjourn at that time particularly in view of the fact that the conference was still waiting for a reply from the Japanese government respecting the compromise proposal which had been sent some weeks before. Finally, about the first of April, the reply of the Japanese government was received. That reply, as hon. members and the country know, was generally favourable to the compromise proposal which had been suggested. After that more attention was directed to an endeavour to reach some conclusion with regard to the European group, and finally the treaty which is now on the table of the house, was signed, with this in mind and with this understanding, that the conference was not terminating its labours; that, as the Prime Minister has stated, it was only writing the first chapter of the book and that the end had not been reached, but that another chapter was to be written in the negotiations which are still being continued and regarding which newspaper reports are appearing from time to time. That in barest outline is the history of the proceedings with regard to the conference.

Just one or two outstanding features may I bring to the attention of the house? First, it seemed to me that one of the great factors in the conference was that it was opened by His Gracious Majesty the King, that he himself saw fit to go there on the first official occasion after his long illness to meet not only with his own subjects but with the representatives of other nations—he, the Commander-in-Chief of the army and the Commander-in-Chief of the navy—and to put before them reasons why there should be a continuation of the spirit of the Washington conference and a further limitation of armaments. There were millions of his subjects all over the world who joined with His Majesty and said Amen to the hope he expressed, that the > Results of this conference will lead to the immediate alleviation of the heavy burden of armaments now weighing on the peoples of the world, and also by facilitating the future work of the league preparatory commission on disarmament hasten the time when a general disarmament conference can deal with this problem in an even more comprehensive manner.

Mr. IRVINE: As the minister is dealing with the outstanding features now, would he state what was the ultimate object of the conference? I do not mean to be jocular at all; I am sincere.

Mr. RALSTON: The ultimate object which filled the mind of every man who was there was the object of limiting and, if possible, reducing naval armaments in the world.

Mr. IRVINE: But for what purpose? What was the ultimate object of that reducing?

Mr. RALSTON: As one of the means towards the end of attaining the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

The second feature, which I just mention in passing, and which relates to the question which has just been asked by my hon. friend from Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), is that those present at the conference were I believe filled with a sense of their duty to endeavour to achieve the objects for which the conference had been called. If hon. members can picture the meetings which were held, they were not meetings of those who were to be controlled by a majority vote. There must be the unanimous and willing concurrence of those who were present there. No man could be inveigled into making some decision or snap judgment which would be of any benefit to those who endeavoured to get it from him; an apparent advantage gained in that way would be short-lived. The result was that there was carried on straightforwardly and in low voice, and without heat and without rancor, discussions by men who were sincerely impressed with their responsibility and with the anxiety of those who sent them there; and I believe that that was one of the things which helped to achieve the success which I think this house will agree was achieved in the document which is before us.

Another feature is that the three greatest naval powers in the world have agreed on a matter affecting national sovereignty, have agreed to restrict the rights which they had to taking such means as seemed to them best in their own interest, and have agreed to consult others with regard to that right which is essentially theirs if they wish to exercise it; and three powers who could not reach agreement on all points have not turned their backs on one another but have agreed to keep on trying. One could not fail to acknowledge the tact and resourcefulness and patience and courage of the chairman, the Right Hon. J. Ramsay MacDonald, whose shoulders bore so largely the brunt and burden of the labours of the conference at the same time that he was carrying on the heavy responsibility of Prime Minister of Great Britain, attending not only discussions but even divisions in the House of Commons, and bringing at the same time all the resourcefulness and humanity of his nature to bear upon problems exceedingly dear to his heart and concerning which he has spent so much energy in the early stages, in his visit to America and in the conversations and negotiations that preceded that visit.

The results are, first, that nine battleships are being scrapped within eighteen months or two years. Under the Washington treaty they would not necessarily have been scrapped before 1936.

Mr. BENNETT: They are due to be scrapped in any event, as I read the Washington treaty.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, before 1936. But they will be effectively scrapped within eighteen months, and completely scrapped within two years. That means that nine of these floating fortresses will be off the seas within two years instead of by 1936.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is the age of these nine vessels?

Mr. RALSTON: In 1936 they would be getting up to the age of twenty years.

Mr. GEARY: Pretty well obsolescent.

Mr. RALSTON: At the same time we must remember that one of the objects of the conference, and one which was the subject of serious discussion, was whether battleships could not be given a longer age, thereby obviating the necessity for replacement sooner. If all the nations agree to the same age for replacement the degree of obsolescence at that age makes no difference.

Next with regard to auxiliary craft. The Washington conference provided no limit for the total tonnage of cruisers. Hon. members will remember that at Washington the total tonnage was limited of air craft carriers of over ten thousand tons and of battleships, but no limit was achieved for cruisers except the maximum unit tonnage of ten thousand tons. The Geneva conference was called for the purpose of endeavouring to do what Washington had failed to do and go a step further and bring about an agreement for a maximum total tonnage limitation for cruisers. Geneva, as we know, failed in that respect—London has succeeded. I have figured roughly, and I think I am correct, that as a result of the London conference something like 550,000 tons of auxiliary craft, cruisers, destroyers and submarines provided for in the built, building and authorized program, will be done away with by the terms of this treaty. Now 550,000 tons of auxiliary craft is a substantial amount. Somebody may say that of that 550,000 tons, 278,000 tons have yet to be built. That is so, but it had already been authorized and the money for it voted. Judging by the attitude immediately after Geneva, the great thing which has been achieved is to get a definite limitation. Without this treaty there is no limit but national resources and public opinion.

Hon. members will remember that immediately after Geneva the tendency seemed to be to launch upon vast building programs without limits, and that would have been sure to precipitate the very thing which this conference was most anxious to avoid—competitive armaments. Add to these achievements which have been made by three powers, the fact that not only three—but five powers have agreed definitely to delay the replacement of some fourteen battleships which would otherwise have been built before 1936, and a further agreement by the three powers that a small aircraft carrier shall be included in and charged to the aircraft category. Let me state here, because I think Canada was particularly interested in this, that the Washington agreement had provided that aircraft carriers of over ten thousand tons should be charged to the aircraft category. I believe that 35,000 tons was the total. There was no provision in regard to aircraft carriers smaller than that; nations might build these craft of 10,000 tons or less and treat them simply as cruisers, but these smaller craft were capable of a great deal of destructive and terrorizing effect. It was felt that this new and most destructive weapon should have more restrictions put upon it than had been achieved at Washington, and the result of the discussions was that an aircraft carrier of ten thousand tons and less has been put in the aircraft category, and any nation which builds these small craft has to take them out of the total charged to that category, instead of charging them as might otherwise be done to the cruiser category.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the minister consider Canada's aircraft a military weapon?

Mr. RALSTON: That is a matter of opinion. My hon. friend knows exactly the position. I would suggest that he permit me to answer his question when the estimates are before the house. We are talking of aircraft carriers.

Mr. BENNETT: We have not any.

Mr. RALSTON: No, we have not any. Another agreement which was arrived at between the five powers was with regard to the unit size of submarines. The unit size of submarines was a difficult question to settle. It was brought up by France particularly. France claimed the necessity for some large submarines. The United States, Great Britain, and, I think, Japan as well had one or two large submarines. An agreement was arrived at which reduced France's request for large submarines from six to three, the unit size to be not more than 2,000 tons with 5-inch guns, except that each nation was to be allowed three submarines of a unit size of not more than 2,800 tons with 6-inch guns.

Another agreement was arrived at with regard to submarines which took the place of what is known as the Root clause. Under the Root clause the Washington conference had endeavoured to provide that submarines should be subject to the same rules as surface vessels in attacking merchant ships. That treaty was not adopted by one of the nations, with the result that it never came into effect. This conference practically achieved the object of that treaty by getting an agreement between all five powers that submarines should be subject to the rules applicable to surface vessels in attacking merchant ships, and a definite declaration of international law in that respect was agreed to.

Then there was an agreement as to what would constitute vessels exempt from the treaty. It took the experts a good many weeks to prepare definitions for vessels which were to be exempted, these are adopted and appended to the treaty. The rules with regard to the scrapping of vessels were also settled.

The result was that the hopes expressed by His Gracious Majesty the King at the outset of the conference were substantially achieved and the "high mission begun at Washington" was continued with outstanding success at London.

Now, with regard to Canada's interest in the conference. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition mentioned it a few minutes ago. Canada has a very modest naval force. She makes no apology for it at all. The very fact that Canada has a modest naval force was one reason why it was considered essential that she should be present with her sister dominions to present the views of those nations who do not desire a large naval armament if they possibly can avoid it. I believe that it was for the benefit of the conference that those nations were there to present that point of view, which is the point of view of not only the dominions of the British commonwealth but of a great many of the smaller nations of the world.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the minister state what our "modest naval force" is?

Mr. RALSTON: There are two destroyers—

Mr. BENNETT: They are not built.

Mr. RALSTON: There are two destroyers, the Vancouver and the Champlain; there are two building, the Saguenay and the Skeena; and three mine sweepers.

Mr. KAISER: Do those two vessels belong to Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: Those two vessels were obtained from the British Admiralty under an agreement that Canada might use them for naval defence provided she met the somewhat substantial cost of refitting.

Mr. KAISER: We do not own them.

Mr. RALSTON: That is a legal question; I will bring down the order in council in relation to the matter if my friend desires.

I think Canada's presence at the conference was amply justified because of her interest in the relations existing between the nations of the world by which she is surrounded. She finds that an agreement has been arrived at in which she is particularly interested, between the British commonwealth of nations and the United States, whereby the impasse which existed between those nations at Geneva has now been done away with and there has emerged from the conference complete unity and complete harmony in regard to naval matters. That is also true of the great empire of Japan which is our nearest Pacific neighbour. Canada comes from that conference in the extremely fortunate position of feeling satisfied with the outcome because of the fact that the conference has resulted in this agreement between those three great nations.

Something else, I think Canada contributed to the conference. Canada's naval program is based primarily on her naval needs. Her needs in the first place consist of the necessity providing for coast defence and protection, for a reasonable distance out to sea of the trade in and out of her great ports. But in addition to that Canada might claim naval protection on the south. She has done away with the necessity for the protection by agreement. She has substituted a treaty for battleships. That treaty has worked well, and Canada, I believe, at the conference constituted a striking demonstration of a country which was able not simply to talk of disarmament, but which had been able to find a substitute for armament. Such a substitute I believe is necessary in the last analysis. I do not believe we can just simply disarm and leave it at that. International disputes are bound to arise; there are bound to be difficulties with regard to trade; there is bound to be friction because of congestion of population in some parts of the world and paucity of population in other parts; there will always have to be taken into account the passions to which men are subject. To guard against international disputes in the future we should try to find machinery to adjust differences between nations just as we have such machinery for settling disputes between individuals; that is, we must find a means of settling international disputes without resort to force. It seems to me that Canada was able to give an example of such means by pointing to our International Joint Commission. This was more than once referred to in the discussion in connection with the conference, and I believe that in this way there is great hope for advancing the future peace of the world.

My own feeling is that we in Canada should endeavour in every way possible to emphasize and show how effective is this method of what I may term preventive defence. The idea is to forestall the use of force by machinery for reason and discussion, something to which the people can instinctively turn when national clouds threaten. Public opinion is becoming increasingly interested in these matters. I think we should direct our energies not only to finding those methods, but also to bringing to the minds of our people a knowledge of just what those methods are. I believe that too much cannot be said for this point of view, that there should be brought to the minds of our men and women, our boys and girls, the idea that instead of mobilizing battleships there is some simple method to resort to when an international dispute occurs. I believe our people ought to be so educated and informed that when an international difference arises they can at once answer the question "what do we do now?" And they will be able to answer that question if our public men, our League of Nations' societies and all other agencies by spreading national information make it a matter of dominion-wide education to bring before our people the idea that there are other methods of settling international disputes than by force, and just what these methods are.

I have given, Mr. Speaker, the results of the conference in a brief and sketchy form. I believe the house will approve the treaty which has been signed. I think it marks a very definite step in advance along the road of international peace, and I believe the idea of disarmament embodied in the treaty, with the idea which I have endeavoured to express of providing substitutes for armaments, will together constitute a powerful factor in promoting the peace of the world.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to compliment the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) upon the splendid sentiments to which he gave expression in the latter part of his speech. He urged that we should have some substitute for armament; that we must find machinery for the settlement of international disputes without resorting to arms. He stressed the need for the development of "preventive defence". I feel that if this policy can now be carried out and if in any way the recent conference contributed to that end, much has been accomplished. When I heard the earlier part of the minister's speech, I wondered whether in practice that had been the actual result of the conference. I have before me a copy of the book Disarmament by Sòlvador de Madariaga, and in connection with the attendance of the minister at the conference I thought of a paragraph contained in this book.

> The military profession cannot recognize any duty above that which constitutes its very essence; the ensuring the safety of its country. A military delegation sent to discuss disarmament problems can not and should not envisage them—as it is implicitly requested to do—in a somewhat general and abstract light. It can only view them as it should only view them, with an eye on the home forces. "Which of the possible answers to the question will increase my strength or weaken that of my potential adversaries?" Such is the only possible criterion which a military delegation can and should adopt, and any one who expects military men in Geneva to think in the abstract ways of the intellectual or in the give-and-take ways of the politician misses the main point. But if that is so, it will be easily seen that a commission composed of military delegates can seldom find unanimity outside general negative propositions. To this objective limitation a subjective obstacle should be added. By temperament the soldier is not a good negotiator. His tactics are those of war: surprise, stratagem, deep laid plans, concealment and rush—while his aim and glory is complete victory.

In another place I find the following:

> Under this light, armaments appear to us as instruments of policy. They are indeed the most important instrument of policy, together with financial power—a rare thing. It is evident, therefore, that no disarmament is possible as long as no alternative instrument of policy to armaments is devised, and no reduction of armaments is possible as long as the utility of armaments as instruments of policy has not been reduced.

I was very glad indeed to hear in the latter part of the minister's statement the definitely expressed advocacy of such an alternative. I was afraid that prior to his visit to London the minister was distinctly stressing the value of armaments. In fact I am not so sure but that the minister has had some slight change of heart since his visit to the naval conference, and perhaps that has been brought about through his close association with Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, of whom he has spoken in such laudatory terms. In the London Free Press of November 30, 1929, I find the following:

> Canada must maintain a trained and adequate military defence force in peace time in order to be able "to wage neutrality."

I ask hon. members to note the words "to wage neutrality." To my mind they indicate a very great contrast to his present advocacy of some "substitute for armament." I hope that the phrase "preventive defence" which he used to-day does not embrace a military force capable of waging neutrality. To continue with the extract from the newspaper:

> Canada must maintain a trained and adequate military defence force in peace time in order to be able "to wage neutrality" should the occasion ever arise, declared Colonel the Hon. J. L. Ralston, Minister of National Defence, in an address here last night. The minister spoke in the Hotel London to a distinguished gathering representative of the military, political and civil life of western Ontario. The occasion was a dinner tendered to Colonel Ralston by the officers of military district No. 1, under the auspices of the London Garrison Officers' Association. Every one of the 24 units in military district No. 1 was represented.

In the course of his speech the minister said:

> You see before you your humble servant, who stands on the firing line in the House of Commons and tries to get money votes for the maintenance of the defence forces of Canada. And I assure you that there is no more popular indoor sport in Ottawa than trying to clip a few hundreds of thousands off the estimates of the Department of National Defence. However I want you to feel that in the last two or three years something has been done with regard to these appropriations.

My object has not been to attempt to have a large defence force in Canada, but to have efficient to a high degree what modest force we have. The militia, engineers, and stores votes have been increased within the last few years. So far as the naval arm is concerned, last year for the first time the House of Commons voted money whereby Canada can buy and build her own naval vessels and thus assume her proper position as a nation among the great powers of the world.

It seems to me a serious thing if it is the opinion of the minister that the building of a navy represents the way in which Canada can assume her proper position among the great nations of the world. Such a conclusion would be altogether out of keeping with the tone of the latter part of the speech delivered to-day by the hon. gentleman. The other day in the committee on industrial and international relations—

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend knows that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, than whom I think he will agree with me there is no greater advocate for peace, points out that there must be a transition period. There is no inconsistency in the fact that some force is required during the transition period; my hon. friend must know that Great Britain is asking for fifty cruisers.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not defending the position taken by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald. As the minister knows Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, like many other men in responsible positions, finds himself in tight places. When he was head of the former short lived Labour government, he found it next to impossible to counteract the traditional policies of Great Britain. He found himself in conflict with the Lords of the Admiralty. He found that there were men in his own cabinet and a great many men in his own party who would not go as far as he wished to go. The minister knows that there are many men in the party led by Ramsay MacDonald who feel that greater reductions should take place. At this time however I am not referring particularly to Ramsay MacDonald but rather to the minister himself. It seems to me that the speech delivered at London by the hon. gentleman is rather out of line with the exalted position indicated by the latter part of the speech to which he has just given utterance. I sincerely hope the speech delivered to-day represents more closely the present convictions of the minister than the speech delivered to the military men in the city of London. I can fancy the possibility that in an after-dinner speech of that nature he may have been carried away, if I may use that expression, by the general prevailing atmosphere.

When the minister interjected his comment I was quoting his statement that Canada should establish a navy and assume her own proper position as a nation among the great powers of the world, and I was going to add that the other day the president of the League of Nations Society in Canada appeared before our industrial and international relations committee and presented a map showing the nations of the world, indicating in a graphic way the extent to which they are armed. The same map also indicated the trade of the various nations of the world, and it was shown that the trade was in inverse proportion to the armaments, indicating that a nation's greatness as far as trade and commerce is concerned—and I think that is reflected very largely in prosperity—is in inverse proportion to armaments. I wish the Minister of National Defence would ponder carefully the statement made at that meeting of the committee, and I think we would all be proud if we could think that Canada was leading the way in this new type of national greatness.

Now I should like to make only one or two further comments. I notice, from an English source, that it has been stated that the achievement of parity with the British Empire will require the United States to build fifteen or eighteen 10,000 ton cruisers costing £3,000,000 to £4,000,000 each. I am not quite sure from our standpoint in Canada, that is a great achievement unless indeed we are going to rely upon the naval forces of the United States. Apparently the naval conference has meant that the great nation immediately to our south with which we are in the closest proximity is actually increasing the only class of ships that she possesses, and on the other hand England—and I am not going to urge this point, since I am in favour of disarmament—has decreased her warships. It is quite true that this class of ships, I understand, is not so efficient as it used to be, but England has decreased her ships of that class, and provision has been made for the United States to increase her cruisers.

I should like to read one paragraph from an article by Commander J. M. Kenworthy, M.P., with regard to the conference. He said:

The use of navies, their future part in the world organization for preserving the peace consequent on the Briand-Kellogg pact for the outlawry of war, is the one topic that has been taboo at the present conference. Instead we have discussed the strength of fleets, ratios, parities, yardsticks, tons and guns, torpedo-tubes and cruisers, and in so doing have delivered ourselves into the hands of the naval experts and their nationalist and reactionary backers. The attempt is being made now, and will be made in the future, to blame the failure on France or alternatively on Italy, or, if this fails, on Japan. But the real reason is that the delegates have all been thinking about "unthinkable wars" and trying to bluff each other and finesse each other for some slight advantage on agreed building programs.

I think anyone who has read anything about the naval conference must recognize that the great fundamental questions were not discussed and that essentially the greater part of the conference was devoted to technical questions. I should be very glad indeed to think that what the minister said in the latter part of his speech were true, that the naval conference had marked anything like a real advance.

Now, with regard to our part in naval disarmament, in looking over the treaty I note that on page 4 the following wording occurs:

> His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British dominions beyond the seas, Emperor of India; for Great Britain and Northern Ireland and all parts of the British Empire which are not separate members of the League of Nations;

There follow the signatories for Great Britain. Then later on we have these signatories "for the Dominion of Canada." This is in accordance with the phraseology adopted by the Imperial conference of 1926. Further, on page 29, we find the same phraseology in section 2:

> As soon as the ratifications of the United States of America, of His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British dominions beyond the seas, Emperor of India, in respect of each and all of the members of the British commonwealth of nations as enumerated in the preamble of the present treaty. . . . .

And so on. Here again we have equality of status recognized, as at the Imperial conference of 1926, but now I turn to page 24, and in the schedules I find this phrase:

> . . . . for the British commonwealth of nations . . . .

That is a new phrase, and in article 16, subsection 3, the same phrase occurs again, allocating so many cruisers to "the British commonwealth of nations." In this case the use of the term, "commonwealth" is somewhat ambiguous. Does it mean the empire? In 1926 the phrase seemed to mean the self-governing dominions; now it appears to be equivalent to the empire itself. This is no small matter. It is not merely a technicality in phrasing but involves the question as to how far we in Canada are responsible for imperial defense. The statement is made that we are to have a maximum of fifteen cruisers. I will read the text, which is subsection 3 of article 16:

> The maximum number of cruisers of sub-category (a) shall be as follows: For the United States, eighteen; for the British commonwealth of nations, fifteen; for Japan, twelve.

How are these to be allocated? Supposing Australia built two and in that connection it may be asked whether the Australian is to be scrapped, as has been suggested. If so, is Australia to build another cruiser? Supposing Canada should build two or four cruisers, and I believe the latter number was suggested by Mr. Borden. Does that mean that the total for the British Empire is to be only fifteen, and that this number is to be diminished by the cruisers provided by the various dominions?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That would leave only seven for the British commonwealth of nations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, my hon. friend suggests this might mean only seven for the British commonwealth of nations. Will the allotment of the British Empire be cut down by the number provided by the various dominions? From my point of view, this is the important question: is there any understanding between the Dominion and Great Britain as to how the fifteen ships are to be allocated? No indication of that is given in the report now before us, and no indication has been given by the minister himself.

Mr. RALSTON: There is no understanding.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me that this arrangement is a very loose one, and my former question still stands. I am glad that there is no understanding, but in case of Australia or Canada building any ships, does it mean that the number allotted to the British commonwealth of nations, that is fiftteen, is to be cut down by the number built by the self-governing dominions?

Mr. RALSTON: The agreement is that our naval requirements will not be such as to cause the collective total for the British commonwealth of nations to be exceeded. There is nothing loose about that, that makes it absolutely certain that there cannot be more than fifteen of these particular eight-inch gun cruisers afloat on the seas for the whole British commonwealth of nations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There is no arrangement as to the allocation as between Great Britain and—

Mr. RALSTON: None.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In the event of Australia constructing four cruisers, which is quite possible when we realize Australia's attitude towards this question, that would leave Great Britain with only eleven? Is that satisfactorily understood?

Mr. RALSTON: There will be no danger of Australia or any other nation constructing any vessels coming within this treaty without consultation with the other parts of the British commonwealth of nations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would like to ask one more question before taking my seat: We have participated in this conference and it is proposed that we participate in this naval treaty; we have agreed to this particular number of ships—does that mean that we—that is, Canada—are under obligation for imperial defence?

Mr. RALSTON: We have agreed to a certain number of ships; there is no agreement or any obligation further than the obligation we had before we went to the conference.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The very fact that we are parties to the limitation seems to me to imply a certain moral obligation to live up to that agreement. Supposing Great Britain should find herself in difficulties about providing for the fifteen ships, or faced with some other crisis; would that mean that because we have participated in the conference we would be more or less under an obligation for imperial defence?

Mr. RALSTON: The British commonwealth of nations have agreed, not that they shall have fifteen ships—they may have only five—but that their total collective strength shall not exceed fifteen ships. There is no obligation of any kind to contribute to any greater extent than the obligation which existed before we went over to the conference.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is a very satisfactory answer. Although there are many things I would like to discuss in connection with this whole question, I do not desire to detain the house any longer.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few remarks regarding the treaty now under discussion, but I want it clearly understood that the criticism which I intend to offer is not directed against the government nor against the representative whom this government had at the naval conference. I think it is only fair to say that the government of Canada deserves a great deal of credit for the attitude it has taken on all matters pertaining to world peace. The actions of this government are praiseworthy in so far as its attitude on the matters of the League of Nations, the Kellogg pact, the optional clause and naval reductions are concerned. I think it is true also that our representative has brought a great deal of credit to Canada. I do not doubt his ability nor have I the slightest doubt as to his sincerity of intention. The actions of Canada have revealed a very fine spirit in regard to the future peace of the world. My purpose is to criticize the conference itself and the method adopted in achieving the aims for which it was called. I am not so much interested in armament reduction, but I am interested in removing the cause for the use of armaments. I think that is a brief statement of the criticism which I intend to make of the conference.

Let me speak now of the conference itself, and the end which it sought to attain. As stated by the minister in reply to my question, the ultimate object was, first, to relieve the nations from some of the burden of preparation for war, and, second, to promote the ultimate peace of the world.

Mr. RALSTON: Just reverse the order.

Mr. IRVINE: That would make my criticism still more severe. There might be something said for removing a little of the burden of taxation to be brought about by a reduction in armaments, but to say that that reduction is going to make for world peace is a very doubtful assumption. We must measure the results of the conference by the achievements attained.

I do not intend to say very much about the reduction in the burden of taxation brought about by naval restrictions, because I do not know that that means very much. We are not assured that the people will be saved that amount of taxation which otherwise would have been expended in naval preparation. There is no doubt that the reductions brought about as a result of the conference will reduce the purchasing power of the people of the particular countries. It is an unfortunate fact that we have to build navies in order to be able to feed our people, but that is part of the economic absurdity which belongs to civilization. For instance, if Great Britain with her millions of unemployed were to reduce her shipbuilding program by so much, it would further increase her unemployment problem. If it could be assumed that some of the money which would have gone towards the building of battleships would go towards the building of highways or the building of homes for the people of Great Britain, then there would be a clear saving to the people.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Surely that is a fair assumption.

Mr. IRVINE: Not by any means, but if you desire we will deal with it as such. For the moment, I am not going to enlarge on that particular phase of the matter.

My main object is to deal with the other side of the matter, namely, what progress will be made towards world peace by the reduction of naval armament. As I listened to the minister reviewing the results of the conference, I must say that I felt that world peace was still further away than I had thought it to be. The results, as I gather them, were that nine battleships which were to be scrapped in 1936, are to be scrapped within two years instead of waiting until the end of 1936; that in regard to auxiliary craft there was to be a reduction in tonnage of 550,000, of which 250,000 tons have not yet been built; that fourteen proposed battleships are to have their construction delayed; that there is to be a reduction in the size of submarines; that in the next war there is to be a sort of moral law for submarines, and that finally, so far as Canada is concerned, we still hold by the principle that a treaty is better than a battleship and that our relations with the United States for the last century are proof of that. Much might be said in regard to this latter point, but I do not propose to stop to discuss its merits or demerits further than to say that there has so far been no reason why the United States should want to fight Canada. The United States have had up to the present time all the territory they desire and we have so far no trade they consider worth while fighting for. So it is not quite correct to say that a treaty has taken the place of battleships. If the day ever comes when the United States require more territory or when our trade should seriously challenge theirs, then we shall have the test whether or not a treaty is as valuable as a battleship.

Let me emphasize first of all that it would be a mistake if we over-estimated the value of the sentimental gesture such as the naval conference is. So far as I can see the conference was a competition amongst the powers concerned for an advantage in the next war. That is the first thing that is noticeable. Second, so far as reduction of armaments is concerned, the proposals are practically useless. There seemed to be a desire on the part of the conference to make war a sort of gentleman's game: if you are going to shoot me, I propose that you shoot me with a revolver of a certain calibre, and if you will agree to that, I will promise not to shoot you except with a revolver of the same calibre; if you will promise not to shoot me with a rifle that carries beyond a certain distance, I will reciprocate with a similar promise. In other words, we are trying to make war civilized, endeavouring to reduce it to a gentleman's game. Would it make any difference to me if you killed me, whether the bullet had travelled two miles or twenty feet or whether it came from a rifle of one calibre or another? That seems to be the first absurdity on the face of the whole naval conference.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend think that possibly that consideration might have something to do with the point he mentioned first, namely, the reduction in the building of naval armaments, the making of smaller calibre guns and fewer of them? Will it not at least achieve that object if it does not achieve the other one?

Mr. IRVINE: Probably there would be something to that point, provided that other economic considerations were taken into account; but as regards bringing about peace, I think H. G. Wells and George Bernard Shaw by their criticism in this regard have put the whole conference out of consideration. What does it matter to a British sailor whether he is killed by a shell that has travelled eighteen miles or twenty miles? What does it matter to a sailor of any country whether the ship that sinks under him is of the 10,000-ton class or the 50,000-ton class? That reduces the whole thing to an absurdity so far as its effect upon world peace is concerned.

But there is another point which is even more fundamental than that. There are those who speak with greater authority on naval matters than I shall ever be able to do, who suggest that in future wars, battleships, submarine and, indeed, all present kinds of seagoing war craft will be obselete. As a matter of fact, just about the time when the Prime Minister of Great Britain was closeted with the President of the United States discussing the advisability of eliminating a cruiser here and a cruiser there, a scientist was addressing a club in the city of London. It is reported in the press that this gentleman stood up, holding in his hand a teaspoon filled with a certain kind of powder, and he stated that in that teaspoon there was enough power to kill the entire population of the city of London in fifteen minutes. If there ever should be another war and Canada were to honour me by making me an admiral, I would exchange the entire fleet for that teaspoonful of powder. My point is that when the next war comes the battleships which have been to some extent eliminated by the naval conference will be as extinct as the dodo. Just imagine if you like that we have another conference next year and decide that we shall outlaw bows and arrows in future wars! The absurdity of that must be very clear. To my mind the absurdity of curtailing our building of battleships by one here and one there, the reduction of their tonnage and the making of a smaller calibre gun in the next war is equally ridiculous in view of the scientific advances that have been made.

Much might be said in this regard, but I shall not delay the house beyond the time required to make one other observation. I said at the outset that I was not so much interested in reduction of armaments as I was in the removal of the need for using them, and the naval conference has done nothing in that respect. It is regrettable that all the splendid idealism of the Prime Minister of Great Britain, for whom I have the profoundest respect, and all the fine spirit of peace developed in Canada and other countries of the world, should be dissipated through the avenues of a hopeless sentimentality and not directed toward the economic centre and causes of all wars. Why do nations seek to protect themselves by armaments? They seek security in armaments from the insecurity of economic conditions and under economic competition there will always be some nation left behind, suffering from economic insecurity. The only hope, then, is to move towards a greater internationalism than has been suggested by the naval conference. The only thing is to recognize the principle of economic cooperation among the nations of the world. That is the basis of world peace. A move in that direction would be worth much more to the future peace of the world than any naval conference, and yet not one single step has been taken by any nation of the world in that direction. I am not criticising Canada any more than any other nation for not having taken that stand. My object in saying anything at all on this matter is to point out that the people of Canada who are looking forward to peace will not rest their case on the naval conference nor on the Kellogg pact nor on the League of Nations, but they will seek to go further and tackle the question of peace in a much more fundamental way.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I have on frequent occasions indicated my views with respect to conferences of this character. After we signed the Briand-Kellogg pact by which we outlawed war, it has always seemed to me extremely difficult to determine any reason for talking in terms of armaments. I have expressed that view so frequently that I shall not do more than indicate it to-day.

The conference called by the right hon. the Prime Minister of Great Britain was for the purpose of limiting naval armaments. It was for more than that. It was also for the purpose of bringing about naval disarmament so far as that might be possible. It failed of its high purpose, but it did achieve something, and the treaty which is before the house to-day for ratification indicates the results of the conference. The hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) has indicated the part that Canada took in the discussion. I rather deprecate the idea of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) delivering a eulogy upon his colleague and then his colleague offering his sincere thanks for the eulogy which has been delivered.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend think that it was not deserved?

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the point. Cabinet solidarity is one of the prices of responsible government, and a fitting reference to the fact that the government was properly represented at the conference by the minister would, of course, be quite in keeping with the situation, but the habit of delivering fulsome eulogies on the services of colleagues is not conducive to improving the conditions of representative institutions. I say that with very great consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I was speaking simply as a Canadian and giving utterance to an opinion that I believe was universally expressed throughout the whole of the British Empire.

Mr. BENNETT: You see, even that does not in any sense deter me from making the observation. The Prime Minister was speaking as the Prime Minister of Canada, and in no other capacity does he act in this house. That is perfectly clear. I for one have no desire to withhold from the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) the warmest encomiums that may be given to him for the services that he rendered to this country. The hon. and gallant gentleman has served his country in more fields of activity than in this house, and he has served his country with distinction. When he was selected by the government to represent Canada at London, I believed that he would act in accordance with the instructions which he received from his government; and that he did so, I have no doubt.

Just what part Canada plays in a conference like the London conference sometimes seems difficult for the average person to determine. Our fleet consists of a couple of destroyers which we secured from Great Britain after the war. It is true that they are rather antiquated now. Then we have two building at the Thorneycroft yards in Southampton. Those are not yet afloat. The extent to which naval armaments or naval restrictions or limitations interest Canadians is always difficult to determine. This I do know, that our ocean-borne traffic is very heavy. We are not dependent upon the sea for our lives, as His Majesty the King said of the United Kingdom at the opening of the naval conference, because we have food within our own borders, and we do not depend for our lives upon ships carrying it across the sea to maintain us. But our shipments of wheat and our shipments of commodities of various kinds to the different countries of the world is carried on in safety because the premium on the policy of insurance is paid by the taxpayers of Great Britain. That is something which I hope Canadians will never forget, and that is one of the reasons why I have always welcomed any efforts towards disarmament and towards making possible the maintenance of peace without recourse to war.

Now, if we meant what we said two years ago when we signed the Briand-Kellogg pact and outlawed war, why should we discuss terms of armament? Why should we sit down and ask ourselves how many ships are to be built and how many ships are not to be built, and how many ships are to be scrapped, and how are we to replace them? For one of two things is true. Either that pact meant that there was to be outlawry of war as an instrument of national policy, or it did not. If it did, then war was henceforth to be known no more, and the instruments with which to carry on war would be banished. That is clear. If, on the other hand, this was but a pleasant gesture, and not a very pleasant one either, and meant nothing but mere words, then, of course, we must continue to build ships and to maintain armies and armaments. When we see our friends to the south talking about an appropriation of one billion dollars for ships and then recall the name of that pact, the Briand-Kellogg pact, it makes one wonder just what it meant. When you read what took place the other day at the London conference, as between Italy and France, in connection with the Mediterranean, and when you have the proud assertion made by one of the nations represented at that conference that she proposes to have naval armaments the equal of any European nation, and when you hear the far-off kingdom of Japan discussing problems of submarine defence and the number of ships required for offensive and defensive purposes, and when you hear the countries represented at the conference talking about the methods that are to be adopted by aircraft carriers and the kind of ships to be used, one wonders what it is all about after the pact of a year ago. What does it mean? Then we talked in beautiful words about peace. We discussed in mellifluous phrases all the talk which is as old as the centuries. We signed our names to that pact, and all these other nations did it too. We said: We will limit the cruisers to so many eight-inch guns; we will limit this country and that to certain armaments. The real value of this treaty that is now before us, in my judgment, is to be found in part IV, which lays down certain rules of international law. Those rules are to endure. It was worth while to have them adopted by the nations that were represented at the conference.

But it will be remembered that the treaty itself is to last for only five years. It expires in 1936. That gives force and point to what I have just discussed. It is almost incredible that this limitation upon the world's naval armament as represented by the great powers, Great Britain, the United States, France, Italy and Japan, ends at the end of five years. The provisions with respect to the rules of international law are of a permanent character.

Canada is not concerned, I believe, in the actual operation of this treaty beyond giving approval to the general principles that govern the future with respect to international law applying to submarines, and as a part of the British Empire concurring in the arrangements that were made for the purpose of limiting armaments. The hon. Minister of National Defence has made it perfectly clear that so far as the British Empire is concerned, it was agreed between its component parts that the limitation imposed by Great Britain is a limitation that in operation will be carried into effect by an agreement between the various communities which comprise the empire. I cannot conceive of any other way which it could be done having regard to the position which we occupy.

I do not think this parliament is in a position to pronounce upon the value of the treaty. The people of Great Britain—the taxpayers, the naval experts,—must determine that. We at least can say this, that every word it contains which makes it more difficult for the taxpayer to be called upon to contribute money for the purpose of maintaining naval armaments is welcome, and that every step forward in bringing about, not mere expressions of pious hope, but a realization of the terms and conditions of the Briand-Kellogg pact, are not only welcome, but they are the just expectations of every citizen who believed that when that treaty was signed by all the nations of the world it did represent a step forward, and that war was not thereafter to be used as an instrument of national policy. Now, if war is not to be used as an instrument of national policy, the implements with which to carry on war should not be in the hands of men or nations. But we should not forget that a police force must always be maintained. We do not the less hate riots because we maintain police, and we do not the less hate war because we realize there must be a police force. British merchant ships cannot ply the seven seas carrying cargoes to supply what is vital to England, namely, food, unless they are protected against piracy that still exists in some parts of the world, and this implies the adequate policing of those trade routes. We must take our part in that work. Whether we like it or not we cannot afford to sponge upon the big policeman all our lives. Just how we are going to help the big policeman has not been indicated, but for centuries now the big policeman has been doing his job, and I fancy he is a bit weary; at least if we understand the lessons of history aright it must be so. While we have our trade to maintain, while we send our products to the ports of the world and receive the products of other countries into our ports, we should never forget that international law and order must be maintained. We can only discharge our obligation in that respect by maintaining an adequate police force in the same way that we maintain a police force to guard the safety of the lives and property of our citizens. The adequacy of that police force depends upon its necessity. When we read of the conditions in a great city like Chicago, or when we consider the guarding of the lives and property of our people in a city like Montreal, we at once realize the urgent necessity of an adequate police force. And I am sure the Canadian people will not be so lacking in self respect that they will for a moment seek not to discharge the obligation that rests upon them to ensure against disaster our ships that ply to and from the distant ports of the world. That I think at least we can all believe to be necessary, and anything less than a police force to ensure that safety is inadequate.

So far as the treaty is concerned, I join in the expression of opinion as to the necessity of its being ratified and confirmed by this parliament. But I do so without in any sense indicating any view at all whether or not it makes for the advancement of peaceful conditions as between Great Britain and the other countries of the world; whether or not the other countries from a technical standpoint may or may not be satisfied; whether or not it will effect the ends aimed at. All I know is this: it does in some perceptible way constitute an advance and in concrete form does give expression to the pious hope of the Briand-Kellogg pact for the outlawry of war as an instrument of national policy, not only by this country but by the other nations of the world.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate informing their honours that this house has adopted a resolution approving of the international treaty for the limitation and reduction of naval armament, London, April 22, 1930, signed in respect of the Dominion of Canada by the plenipotentiary named therein; and that the clerk do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES CONVENTION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): With the permission of the house I desire to table a copy of the sockeye salmon fisheries convention between Canada and the United States for the protection, preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon fisheries in the Fraser river system, signed at Washington on the 26th day of May, 1930 by the Hon. Mr. Stimson, Secretary of State, on behalf of the United States, and by the Hon. Vincent Massey on behalf of Canada.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

DOMINION AND MERCHANT SHIPPING LEGISLATION

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved:

That this house approves the recommendations of the conference on the operation of Dominion legislation and merchant shipping legislation, held in London in 1929, and considers that steps should be taken at the forthcoming Imperial conference to ensure their being given effect at an early date.

He said:

The mutual relations of the group of self-governing communities which compose the British commonwealth of nations have been defined by the Imperial conference of 1926 in a clear, striking and unequivocal way. The report says:

> Their position and mutual relations may be readily defined; they are autonomous communities within the British Empire, equal in status and in no way subordinate one to another, in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs though united by a common allegiance to the crown, and freely associated as members of the British commonwealth of nations.

That definition was further emphasized in two sentences of the report which I shall quote:

> Every self-governing member of the empire is now the master of its destiny. In fact if not always in form it is subject to no compulsion whatever.

And then, farther on:

> Every dominion is now and must always remain the sole judge of the nature and extent of its cooperation with the other units of the British commonwealth.

These statements assert the nationhood of the dominions, and their union with Great Britain as well as between themselves through a common allegiance to a single crown, and through a free association. They more particularly adopt and accept "equality of status" as the root principle governing inter-imperial relations. They make it clear that full freedom and equality are at once the condition and the assurance of enduring association and effective strength. The principles thus and there declared have been accepted as the conventional basis of the relationship between the various members of the British commonwealth. In Great Britain there have been no dissentient voices amongst the responsible statesmen. The only mild objections which have been raised came from theorists who have not had the heart to reconcile themselves to the new facts and the new situation.

Mr. BENNETT: There was a discussion in the House of Lords.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, but everybody approved of the report.

Mr. BENNETT: No, not everybody.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Absolutely; I think even my hon. friend will approve of it.

Mr. BENNETT: That is another matter.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will refer to that point later.

Sir Cecil Hurst, who has been legal adviser in the British Foreign Office for a great many years, and who was only a few years ago appointed one of the judges of the international court of justice, and than whom no one is better qualified to speak on this subject, used the following language, when lecturing at the Harris Foundation in the United States in 1927:

> In the twentieth century Great Britain accepts, and accepts gladly, the new status of complete equality with herself to which the dominions have attained. The period of subordination has, so far as they are concerned, come to an end. Even if the position of primus inter pares is given to her by the dominions, she will enjoy it only because they give it to her and not because she has a prerogative claim to it as a right. What equality means among the autonomous communities of the empire is the absence of any form of control by one community over another, the idea which is expressed in the words "in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs" which figured on the formula adopted in the Imperial conference resolution of 1926.

The then Home Secretary who was a member of the conference of 1926, and who is now a member of the House of Lords with the new title of Viscount Brentford, speaking in the House of Commons on March 15, 1927, said:

> The dominions of the crown, the great self-governing dominions, are certainly since the last Imperial conference co-equal with the United Kingdom. They do not belong to this parliament; they are not in any sense subject to the jurisdiction of this parliament.

All the dominions have accepted the principles which I have mentioned. True, in Canada, the question was the subject of a debate during the session of 1927, and the then leader of the opposition, the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) moved a resolution reading in part as follows:

> That it is not desirable that this house should be deemed tacitly to have acquiesced in the declarations and recommendations contained in the report of the proceedings of the Imperial conference of 1926.

The resolution was voted down by this parliament, and a large majority of the house clearly signified its approval of the report. At this time I shall not commend or discuss the principles enunciated in 1926; they have been accepted. Even those who opposed, ridiculed and criticized, have been moved forward by the wave of public opinion and are now occasionally heard basing arguments on the doctrine of equality of status, however timidly and half heartedly they may propound that doctrine. I will devote myself to a brief consideration of the work and the report of the conference on Dominion legislation which I had the honour to attend as the representative of Canada.

As the house is aware, that conference was set up for the purpose of examining the legal restrictions of dominion self-government which still survive from an early period, and of suggesting the most appropriate means of bringing these legal forms and practices into harmony with the constitutional position of equality as laid down by the conference of 1926. In some instances these survivals constitute a serious restriction on the power of the dominion parliaments to enact legislation which they consider essential or desirable. In other cases their obsolescence makes them inoffensive in practice, but they afford ground for misunderstanding both at home and abroad. It is quite true that under a flexible constitution old forms do not usually keep pace with actual developments; legal definitions instead of preceding the facts generally come later to sanction them. English public law has been built up in this manner and that is what makes it such a vigorous and adaptable instrument of government. The difference between the legal position and the facts brought about by new development however, is adjusted usually by constitutional fictions and conventions, but the time inevitably comes when certain fictions and practice have to be transformed into definite rules of law.

In that regard I cannot do better than quote the words of Professor W. P. M. Kennedy, of the university of Toronto, in an address which he read before the Canadian Bar Association last year, which was published and circulated by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as president of the Canadian Bar Association. At page 14 he said:

> The divorce between constitutional law and constitutional theory—reflecting the realities of national groupings—broke up the first empire. Are there dangers of the continuance of that divorce to-day? Who can tell? Of this much I feel certain, that no sane subject of the crown ought to impose legal changes when clear-cut and unequivocal demands require them. You know the doctrine of varied aspects of the indivisable crown. For myself I do not look on the terms of "Canadian" and "British subject" as the horns of a dilemma, as two exclusive categories, rather are they two aspects of an indivisible legal fact. I believe it is not impossible to combine that fullest and most complete dominion autonomy with the deepest and most profound imperial unity; and I want neither, if I cannot have both. But there is always a danger when the laws of empire do not square with the facts of empire. To-day the sky is unclouded; but some Grenville, some North, some Townshend may lie hidden in the womb of time. And we have got to remember that no theory of law, no substansive law, can per se hold the empire together. Unity is deeper, more elusive, more subtle, than the statute book of any parliament, than the conventions or laws of any constitution; and the "if's" and "but's" of legal objection fortunately have proved to be the stones, rejected by the narrow-minded, which statesmen have built into our imperial fabric. I have stated my faith. I am no legal doctrinaire. Nothing is more irritating than speeches and editorials about limitations on our autonomy, except perhaps speeches and editorials emphasizing the legal situation at the expense of facts.

Mr. BENNETT: You might read the closing paragraph also.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The closing paragraph of what?

Mr. BENNETT: The closing paragraph of the address. I will not bother you, if you have not it at hand.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The conference of 1929 was held in order to recommend ways and means of adjusting inter-imperial relations from the legal point of view in order that the law might be brought as far as possible into harmony with the present political status of the dominions and to secure the foundation of the British commonwealth on a firm and stable basis. The conference derived its authority and mandate from the report of the Imperial conference of 1926, which after it approved of certain changes which it deemed necessary to effect in order that the doctrine of equality should be upheld, considered that in the application of principles to certain existing situations detailed examination would be required. The Imperial conference accordingly recommended that a committee should be set up, with terms of reference on the following lines:

> To inquire into, report upon, and make recommendations concerning—
> 1. Existing statutory provisions requiring reservation on Dominion legislation for the assent of His Majesty or authorizing the disallowance of such legislation.
> 2. (a) The present position as to the competence of Dominion parliaments to give their legislation extra-territorial operation.
> (b) The practicability and most convenient method of giving effect to the principle that each dominion parliament should have power to give extra-territorial operation to its legislation in all cases where such operation is ancillary to provision for the peace, order and good government of the dominion.
> 3. The principles embodied in or underlying the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, and the extent to which any provisions of that act ought to be repealed, amended or modified in the light of existing relations between the various members of the British commonwealth of nations as described in this report.

The question of merchant shipping was also considered by the Imperial conference of 1926, and it was also decided to submit this question to a special committee, the terms of reference reading as follows:

To consider and report on the principles which should govern, in the general interest, the practice and legislation relating to merchant shipping in the various parts of the empire, having regard to the change in constitutional status and general relations which has occurred since existing laws were enacted.

The members of the conference of 1929 were therefore bound by their mandate, and the nature of their work was limited by the terms of reference as expressed in the report of 1926. Our task did not consist of enunciating new principles but in applying and giving effect to the principles accepted in 1926.

Before taking in their order the various subjects mentioned in the terms of reference, may I call attention to the desirability of preserving the conventional element in our constitution. The conventions always have been an important and even a dominant factor in the constitutional system; indeed, it would not be desirable or wise to erect a legal framework of our constitutional relations so as to merge the flexible conventional elements into a single rigid and restricted legal form. The possibility of easy growth and cooperation should be preserved. The peculiar genius of the British constitutional system has been the adjustment of relations by understandings and usages. All that is required is that old formulae and antiquated legal fictions, inconsistent with and contrary to the present state of inter-imperial relations, should be modified or eliminated. As Professor Kennedy stated, the laws of empire must square with the facts of empire.

The first question submitted was that of the power of reservation of dominion legislation. This question falls into two categories, discretionary reservation and compulsory reservation. Under the British North America Act, sections 55 and 57, Canada possesses only discretionary reservation while in Australia, New Zealand and South Africa certain subjects may be compulsorily reserved. Under the old form of law in Canada the Governor General in assenting to legislation adopted by parliament may make certain reservations for the King's assent, and that legislation is reserved until that assent is signified to the Dominion by way of proclamation. There are provisions relating to compulsory reservations in the Merchant Shipping Act, which are applicable to Canada, but I will deal later with that phase of the question. The discretionary power reservation has been dealt with in a satisfactory manner by the declarations of the Imperial conference of 1926 relating to the position of the governor general. The governor general is now the representative of the crown and is not in any sense a representative of the government of the United Kingdom, and any power of reservation which he possesses is no longer inconsistent with equality of status. However, that power can be exercised only in accordance with constitutional practice, that is, upon the advice of the Canadian ministers. It was agreed that a conventional statement by the Imperial conference is all that is required, stating also that His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom will not advise His Majesty the King to give the governor general any instructions to reserve bills presented to him for assent. It was decided also that it would not be in accordance with constitutional practice for advice to be tendered to His Majesty by the government in the United Kingdom which would conflict with the views of the government concerned. It was agreed further that those dominions which possessed the power of amending their constitutions could do so, and that those dominions which required the cooperation of the parliament of the United Kingdom for such amendment would have only to take the proper steps in order to have the necessary legislation passed.

Practically the same principles apply to disallowance, the second question. Section 56 of the British North America Act, which is embodied in other dominion constitutions, is a remnant of the earlier stages of responsible government. Disallowance has not been exercised in relation to Canadian legislation since 1873, or to New Zealand legislation since 1867; it has never been exercised in Australia or South Africa. It is customary to say that the power of disallowance is as dead as Queen Anne. It was the unanimous agreement that a conventional declaration should be made in accordance with the amendment of the constitution as desired by the dominion.

A difficulty arose in connection with disallowance regarding dominion securities appearing on the British trustees list. The Colonial Stock Act of 1900 empowers His Majesty's treasury in Great Britain to make regulations governing the admission of dominion stock to the list of trustee's securities in the United Kingdom. One of the conditions prescribed by the treasury under that act is a requirement that in order to have stocks admitted to the British treasury list, a formal agreement shall be made whereby the British government shall have the right to disallow any legislation which it thinks might affect the securities adversely. This is a matter of agreement, and the right of disallowance can be exercised when the dominion government has complied with the conditions. If this principle is adhered to by the treasury, it may have the effect of preventing borrowing by the dominion in the London market. However, as a matter of fact Canada has not borrowed in that market since 1913.

I come now to the question of extraterritoriality, as to whether or not the parliaments of the dominions have the power to enact legislation which would have extraterritorial effect. This question has been discussed in this country and in the other dominions with a marked difference of opinion. There is a conflict in the views expressed by the courts and in the writings of the authorities, both as to the existence of territorial limitations and as to their extent. The decisions of the Privy Council cannot be said to have solved the issue in any definite or unequivocal way. The case of McLeod which originated in New South Wales is usually quoted as the case which established the limitations. That was a case of bigamy and the Privy Council decided that a citizen of New South Wales could not be prosecuted for bigamy when the second marriage occurred outside the territory of New South Wales because the offence had been committed outside the jurisdiction of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: Our supreme court has held substantially the same.

Mr. LAPOINTE: By a majority. As the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) says, this question has been discussed in Canada. It was referred to the supreme court and two judges expressed the view that Canada had full extraterritorial power in the matter of bigamy, but three judges decided otherwise. It was in order to meet that difficulty that the Canadian parliament enacted an amendment to the criminal code to the effect that when a person leaves Canada with the intention of going to another place for the purpose of entering into a second marriage, he may be prosecuted, the offence being supposed to have been committed prior to his leaving the country.

Mr. BENNETT: Intent being the essence of the matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In the Canadian case of Cain versus the Attorney General of Canada, a man had entered the country contrary to the provisions of the Alien Labour Act. The immigration authorities instituted proceedings to expel him from the country, but a writ of habeas corpus was taken out on his behalf and the Canadian court decided that Canada had no power to expel a man under such circumstances because an extraterritorial effect was involved in the act of deportation. The case was appealed to the Privy Council which decided the other way, and said that Canada possessed that power.

To illustrate the conflict of opinions, I might mention the mandates given by the League of Nations and the peace treaties to New Zealand over the territory of Samoa and to South Africa over the territory of German West Africa. New Zealand thought that she had no power to enact legislation over the territory of Samoa, and she obtained that authority from the Imperial government.

In South Africa General Smuts claimed that his country had extraterritorial power. His contention was upheld and the South African parliament legislated without any additional authority.

In Canada the question came to the attention of the government in 1920 in a definite manner when the chairman of the Air Board recommended that steps should be taken to secure legislation providing that any law of Canada relating to aircraft registered in Canada may have effect without as well as within the territorial limits of Canada. The house will realize how important it is that our aviators should be compelled to observe Canadian regulations even when they are temporarily outside of Canadian territory. The subject is of tremendous importance also in other spheres, namely, fisheries, taxation, shipping, criminal law, deportation and the enforcement of laws against smuggling and unlawful immigration. The house in both 1920 and 1924, approved resolutions to the effect that this uncertainty should be cleared up, and legislation passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom declaring that this constitutional limitation does not exist. As the whole question was referred by the Imperial conference of 1926 to the special committee on dominion legislation, it has been thought better to await the report of the committee so as to have uniform legislation applying to all the dominions. In this matter again there was unanimity of opinion, and it is recommended that a declaratory enactment should be adopted by the parliament of the United Kingdom with the consent of all the dominions. It was asked that this power of extraterritorial operation of air legislation should be confined to Canadian nationals, but the views of the committee finally were unanimous that dominion legislation should have the same effect and be treated exactly the same as that of any other self-governing country.

May I by way of illustration cite the instance of Canadian citizens in British Columbia—this has came to my knowledge through correspondence—being indicted before courts of the United States for supposed conspiracy against certain laws of that country. We certainly must have the same right against any citizens of the United States who may be guilty of conspiracy against the laws of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: The same thing arose in Buffalo.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. I come now to the Colonial Laws Validity Act, to the principle of the legislative supremacy of the parliament of Great Britain which it embodies, and which creates the most important of all the constitutional anomalies with which the conference had to deal. From the historic point of view, having in mind the circumstances under which British rule was carried across the seas by settlement and conquest, one can easily understand this legislative supremacy and how necessary it was. Strange as it may appear, the act at the time it was passed, was rightly regarded as an enlargement of colonial legislative power rather than a restriction of it. It was enacted to remedy a situation created by the application of the common law rule, that legislation by colonial legislatures was void if repugnant to the law of England. Many decisions had been given by the Supreme Court of South Australia, invalidating several acts of the legislature of that colony under that rule, creating a condition of difficulty and chaos.

The Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 was enacted for the purpose of conferring upon colonial legislatures the power of making their laws, even though repugnant to the English common law, but it declared that a colonial law repugnant to the provisions of an act of the parliament of the United Kingdom extending to the colonies either by expressed word or by necessary intentment, should be void to the extent of such repugnancy. The act, of course, conferred validity upon the various laws of the legislature of South Australia which had been declared void by the courts.

As I stated, the act extended the then existing power of colonial legislatures, but it was enacted two generations ago. In 1865, when the act was enacted, not a single dominion had come into existence and the colonies were small and scattered, being mere communities. The legal situation which was then appropriate, is now recognized to be wholly unsuited to the present day needs and wishes of the dominions. In important fields of legislation the restrictions upon dominion legislative powers are causing serious inconvenience by preventing the enactment of legislation adapted to particular needs. All the members of the conference agreed that the Colonial Laws Validity Act was absolutely contrary to the doctrine adopted at the Imperial conference of 1926 and that it was necessary that the legal position should be brought into conformity with the changed facts. This is provided for by, first, a recommendation that the Colonial Laws Validity Act should be repealed in so far as it applies to a dominion; second, a recommendation that there should also be a substantive enactment affirming the power of the parliament of a dominion, lest a simple repeal of the act might be held to have restored the old common law doctrine. In the third place, in view of the existence of the legal power of the Imperial parliament under the common law, it was considered that the apropriate method of reconciling the existence of this power with the constitutional position, is to have the Imperial conference adopt a statement embodying the conventional usage, and that this convention should also appear in the proposed act to be adopted by the parliament of the United Kingdom.

I now come to certain remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in a speech which he made in the house on the address in the session of 1928. As reported on page 25 of Hansard of that year my hon. friend, referring to the conference of 1926, said:

> So as long as the Colonial Laws Validity Act remains on the statute book of Great Britain we have no equality of status. We may as well face these things. Nothing could be worse for this country than to tell the young men of Canada that we have equality of status when we have not.

Then at page 26, he said:

> Therefore until such time as the Colonial Laws Validity Act is repealed—and I have no doubt that members of this house would like to know precisely what that act provides—it follows that there can be no equality. It seems to me that nothing could be more fatal, nothing more injurious than to have the younger men of this country wake up some morning and find a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada to the effect that certain legislation passed by this parliament was invalid on the ground that it was repugnant to the provisions of a statute passed by the parliament at Westminster.

Further he said:

> Until such time as the British parliament at Westminster repeals that statute to which I have been referring our inferior position must continue.

I have here the provisions of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, which I have no doubt will be of interest to some of our friends, and I will take the trouble to quote from it.

Then I asked my hon. friend this question:

Mr. Lapointe: Do I rightly infer from my hon. friend's remarks that he will join with me in asking to have the Colonial Laws Volidity Act repealed?

My hon. friend replied:

My hon. friend, confronted with the difficulty of his own situation, seeks to escape by asking someone else a question. He will find that I am too old to be caught in that way. I resort to the language of Mr. Gladstone, "I will prescribe when I am called in." I will use every endeavour in my power, so long as I occupy this position to see to it that this country shall maintain a status of partnership within the British Empire and an equality with other partners in the commonwealth.

So that my hon. friend did not answer my question as to whether he would help me in 1920. Now that this thing has been achieved and we merely desire the approval of parliament, I have no doubt that he will gladly give his approval; at least I have less doubt in that respect owing to the fact that my hon. friend has recently given expression to a sound Canadianism and has even referred to equality of status. So I trust that we shall make it unanimous. My hon. friend this year, however, in his speech on the address, owing to the fact that this obstacle has been removed, found another one. He says on page 24:

That report makes certain recommendations, but, sir, can there be any such thing as equality of status in this Dominion and any subordination of one parliament to another if this parliament is deprived of the right to frame our own constitution? That is the test, the supreme test, of equality of status.

I do not agree with my hon. friend there. We do not possess that power at present as a result of the circumstances under which confederation was formed and because our people have not wished it otherwise. But that condition exists solely by will of the Canadian people, and not by reason of the control of a superior non-Canadian authority. Indeed the British authorities would gladly relinquish the exercise of such functions, and they do not hesitate to say so owing to possible amendments to the constitution that might be asked for and objected to by some of the provinces and the serious situation in which the Imperial parliament would thereby be placed. How can this be considered to be a condition of subordination? All restrictions rest upon our own will. They are not imposed upon us, but we respect and keep them because we want to do so, and they cannot take away from us the character and the rank of a nation.

As pointed out in this report, the question of another mode of amending the constitution is a matter for future consideration by the appropriate Canadian authorities, and by nobody else. How can this be deemed to be a subordinate situation? The question of adopting another method of amending the constitution has already been discussed on various occasions. It is an important question which requires careful consideration, but I repeat, it will be for the Canadian people, through the appropriate Canadian authorities, to decide as to any changes that may be desired in that respect. The views that I have expressed are I believe the views of the statesmen of Great Britain in that regard. I shall quote the words of Mr. Amery, former Secretary of State for the Dominions, who was one of the leading members of the conference of 1926. He said:

What it does mean is that each partner in the empire is equally entitled to exercise every function of national life, and if any such function is carried on for the purpose by some other part of the empire, that is a matter of convenience or mutual arrangement, and not an evidence of subordination on the part of one partner in the matter to another.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister state who are the appropriate Canadian authorities?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Dominion parliament would certainly be one of the main appropriate Canadian authorities, and certainly the parties to the pact of confederation have also the right to be consulted and the right to discuss any new methods proposed.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): May I ask a question?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, this is rather a technical subject.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I shall be brief. In view of what the minister states, that we have equality of status, would he explain what was meant by the phrase of the late Lord Balfour that, although we had equality of status, it did not universally extend to functions. If it does not universally extend to functions, what is the good of it?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think the words of Mr. Amery which I have just quoted answer the question of my hon. friend, and I would refer him to them.

The merchant shipping legislation is a most important question, surrounded with many difficulties. It was the subject of a special reference by the Imperial conference of 1926, and was submitted to a special committee by the Imperial conference of 1929. A member of the Canadian delegation, Mr. Burchell, of Halifax, had the honour to be selected as chairman of that committee and his work as such has received the commendation of all the members of the conference. That special committee presented a unanimous report, which also was adopted unanimously by the conference. May I briefly relate what the present position is with regard to this question?

The Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, that is the imperial act, is substantially so far as its application of Canada is concerned a re-enactment of the provisions of the 1854 act, which antedates the British North America Act by thirteen years. Under section 91 of the British North America Act the exclusive legislation authority of the parliament of Canada extended to all matters coming within the class of subjects enumerated therein, including navigation and shipping. At the Imperial conference of 1897 Sir Wilfrid Laurier claimed that under the constitution of Canada our powers to legislate over shipping were plenary and absolute and subject only to the powers of this house. It was practically a reiteration of the stand taken by Sir John Thompson as to the unlimited power of Canada in dealing with the subjects mentioned in section 91 of the British North America Act. It must, however, be admitted that the decisions in the court indicate, although not with absolute certainty, that their opinion is that imperial statutes passed before and after confederation in regard to such matters as shipping and navigation over-ride the legislation of the parliament of Canada. Since 1911 the practice has been established that enactments of the parliament of the United Kingdom in relation to merchant shipping have not been applicable to the Dominion, but even there this situation gives rise to a difficulty which I will note Under the legislation enacted by the parliament at Westminster before 1911, and it is by far the most important statute concerning the empire, Canada is dealt with as if it were still a crown colony. The legislation of 1854, which was made for the British possessions of that day, is substantially the legislation which is still applicable to Canada. Under these acts, combined with the operation of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, the legal position may be summarized as follows:

(a) The parliament of Canada, under the authority contained in section 735 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894, may repeal any provision of that act other than those of the third part which relate to emigrant ships, and not to ships registered in the Dominion. The Dominion parliament is thus in a position to substitute its own laws, but the act provides that such repeal must be confirmed by His Majesty in council in the United Kingdom, and it does not take effect until approval has been proclaimed in the Dominion. Under other sections of the 1894 act, if there is any conflict of laws on certain subjects, the case is to be governed by the provisions of the 1894 act, and not by the laws of the Dominion. The parliament of a dominion has no authority to enact legislation repugnant to the legislation of the parliament of the United Kingdom relating to ships coming into the harbours or territorial waters of the dominion if such ships are registered in other parts of the British commonwealth or even are foreign ships.

The parliament of Canada under another section of the Merchants Shipping Act of 1894, that is section 736, may enact legislation to regulate the coasting trade of the Dominion. But in this case also such legislation must contain a suspending clause providing that the act shall not come into operation until His Majesty's pleasure thereon has been publicly signified in the Dominion. It is also enacted that such legislation treat all British ships in exactly the same manner as ships of such Dominion, and when His Majesty has agreed to grant rights and privileges in respect to the coasting trade to foreign states, those rights and privileges must be respected by the Dominion.

Further, the legal situation is still more confusing because of the fact, as I have already stated, that legislation of the parliament of the United Kingdom since 1911 was expressed not to extend to the dominions. The restrictions, however, imposed by the Merchants Shipping Act were not removed, and because of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, legislation passed by a Dominion parliament on the same subject may be held to be void and inoperative on the ground of repugnancy.

There have been international conventions relating to shipping. Indeed, the modern tendency is that laws and regulations concerning navigation and shipping should become as far as possible internationally uniform, and it has already been made so in various respects of maritime law. It is found, however, that if a dominion parliament desires to enact and enforce these regulations and laws, it may find it impossible to enact legislation to that effect as certain fields of jurisdiction appear to be reserved for the parliament of the United Kingdom. In Australia the situation is obviously the same, and may I quote the words of former Attorney General Latham, who was attorney general in the government of Premier Bruce—no better imperialist can be found anywhere—in a book he published entitled Australia and the British Commonwealth. At page 103, in the chapter dealing with the Merchant Shipping Act, he says:

> The position in Australia with regard to merchant shipping and navigation is confused, obscure and radically unsatisfactory.

The concluding words of the chapter, speaking of sections 735 and 736 of the act, are as follows:

> It is submitted that they belong to a past age and that their continuance serves no useful purpose.

It was unanimously agreed that the existing legal situation is no longer in accord with the constitutional status of the United Kingdom and the dominions. The recommendations which have been made are rather extensive in their character and are all described in the report which all members of the house have in their possession. I will merely state that the recommendations regarding the extra-territorial effect of dominion laws, the Colonial Laws Validity Act, reservation and disallowance, are all applicable to the constitutional position of legislation affecting merchant shipping. When these conclusions are given effect to, and the restrictions imposed by sections 735 and 736 of the Merchant Shipping Act are removed, the ground will be cleared for cooperation amongst the members of the British commonwealth in all matters which call for concerted action. The conference has indicated many subjects as to which agreement is recommended in the interests of all the various subjects relating mainly to common status, standards of safety, and uniform treatment of all British ocean going ships in the ports of the British commonwealth.

In that respect, may I call attention to the recommendation concerning the coasting trade. While it is recommended that the governments of the commonwealth might agree for a limited number of years to continue the present position under which ships of any part of the commonwealth are free to engage in the coasting trade of any other part, it is specifically stated that this will not affect the right of any part of the commonwealth to impose conditions of a general character on all ships engaged in its coasting trade, or to impose customs tariff duties on ships built in other parts of the commonwealth or outside it, or to give financial assistance as it thinks fit to its own ships.

There are also recommendations concerning internal discipline and agreements with the crew, certificates of competency and service, courts of inquiry, distressed seamen, mutual enforcement of law, forfeiture, and carriage of goods by sea. The report, I submit meets the constitutional considerations in favour of freedom of action, and the business considerations in favour of substantial uniformity.

May I say that it has received favourable consideration on the part of various shipping interests, and although there remains the question of detail of some difficulty, the whole subject will receive careful consideration by all the departments concerned and by the shipping interests before final action is taken.

Now I come to the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act. The legal situation with respect to admiralty jurisdiction is substantially the same as under the Merchant Shipping Act. At the present time admiralty courts in the dominions constituted under the provisions of the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890, and their jurisdiction is the same as that of the high court in England under that act. Rules for regulating the procedure and practice can be made by a colonial court of admiralty, but they cannot come into operation until approved by His Majesty in council. Any colonial law which affects the jurisdiction or practice in the courts, must be reserved for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure.

A complicated situation arises by reason of a recent decision of the Privy Council to the effect, that the jurisdiction of an admiralty court in the dominions, is that of the high court of England as it was when the act was passed in 1890, and that all of the important additions made to the jurisdiction of the high court since 1890, do not apply to the courts in the dominions.

The whole situation is certainly not in accord with the present constitutional status of the dominions, and the recommendations of the conference are, that each dominion shall have power to repeal the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act if it so desires, and may establish courts under its own laws. It is, however, emphasized that as far as possible, there should be uniform jurisdiction and procedure in all admiralty courts in the British commonwealth of nations. In this as in other respects, while the principle of freedom and equality is being given effect to, the desirability of cooperation is expressed and the means of achieving it indicated.

The members of the conference approached their task in the spirit which inspired the framers of the declaration of 1926, and it is the result of their work which I now submit for the approval of the house. The British Empire of to-day is an association of states, each member of which possesses an international capacity, and in which there is no longer a single central power having exclusive initiative and control. This association has its origin in an agreement among autonomous nations which propose to obtain by common action certain common objects, each of them retaining its liberty and the full exercise of self-government, domestic and external, and subject only to the restrictions inherent in the very ideals of the association. We are giving to the world a demonstration of the fact that partnership and cooperation do not mean absorption, and that in our great association each nation has its own individuality and leads its own life. We are proving in a most convincing manner that the only true union among the democratic peoples lies in the unrestricted liberty both of their institutions and of their relations with each other and with the world, and that full freedom of action united by the powerful bond of the imperial crown, which is the keystone of the alliance between the dominion and the mother country, will permit pursuing in an unfettered manner the policies which best suit their needs, and the freedom which they enjoy and which will continue to be the strongest factor in the maintenance of harmonious and useful relations. If the legal bonds may appear to have been altered or diminished the real strength of the whole structure has effectively increased, because a community of self-governing nations can work together in peace and unity only through voluntary cooperation in unrestricted freedom. The more prosperous, the more contented and the more free the dominions are, the stronger, the better organized and the more united will be the commonwealth. May I quote the words used by Lord Balfour a few months ago in the House of Lords?

> The commonwealth is held together far more effectually by broad loyalties and common feelings of interest and devotion to the great world ideals of peace and freedom than by anything else. A common interest in loyalty, in freedom, in ideals, that is the bond. If that is not enough, nothing else is enough.

At every stage of the constitutional development of the dominions there have been critics and reactionaries who have professed to see the coming dissolution of the empire; those prophets of disaster however have been consistently proved to be wrong. Self-government implies trust, confidence, reasonableness, and common sense on the part of those who enjoy it. Self-respect, self-confidence and self-control are as necessary to nations as to individuals. The recommendation I have mentioned will be submitted to the Imperial conference to be held this year in the month of September. On two or three occasions my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, has stated that the man who will represent Canada at that conference must receive a mandate from the Canadian people. With this statement I heartily agree. I believe also however that this parliament should be given the opportunity to express its views on the important report which will be submitted to that Imperial conference. Certain statements which are disquieting and startling in their lack of appreciation of the present position of our country are sometimes made by responsible and public men. May I quote one statement as an illustration? A few weeks ago my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie)—who is absent from the house, and for whose recovery from illness I express my hearty wishes—used the following words:

> Since January, 1926, we have had representations in London at a peace parley. You would almost think it was a six power instead of a five power parley. We are gradually interfering in the affairs of Europe generally. . . . We are posing as a nation when we are not a nation at all.

This parliament and indeed the Canadian people must see to it that this shall not be the spirit of those who represent Canada at this momentous convention. Shall Canada speak in terms of a nation, or shall she speak in terms of a backwoods community in need of aid and control? I submit this resolution in order that parliament may unequivocally accept the principle which has been accepted by all the statesmen in the various parts of the commonwealth, and in order that the representatives of Canada, whoever they may be, may be able to convey to the conference our full cooperation in the doctrines laid down by the conference of 1926, and our conviction that the very foundation of the empire rests on the solid rock of liberty, autonomy, and equality of citizenship and nationhood.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I think this house is to be congratulated upon the fact that at length some of the suggestions of the Imperial conference of 1926 have been presented to this parliament for its approval and confirmation. My hon. friend has referred to the mandate which he and those who represented Canada had received when they attended the meeting of the committee at London in 1929. They certainly have not sought and have not received a mandate from this House of Commons or from the Senate of Canada. Although suggestions contained in the Imperial conference resolutions of 1926 concerned not only this Dominion and its relations to the other dominions but, in most part, concerned also the intimate relations existing between this parliament and the legislatures of the several provinces, I have yet to learn that the several provinces were ever officially notified of those resolutions or were ever asked to consider them or to give legislative sanction or even an official opinion in respect thereto. That, I think, has been a very serious omission on the part of the government.

In recent discussions of the political relations of this dominion to the United Kingdom and to the other dominions, we have consistently maintained that those who desire the survival of that vast political entity, known as the British Empire, should constantly insist that all existing political machinery should be employed to develop common political ideals and to ensure the cordial cooperation of the government of the United Kingdom and the governments of the several dominions in carrying their common ideals into full practical effect.

In considering the report of the Imperial conference of 1926, I have repeatedly directed attention to the fact that the ultimate solution of the problems presented by that report will affect every phase of our political, commercial and social life. Every man and woman, who is entitled to Canadian citizenship, whether by birth or naturalization, is interested in ascertaining what will be his rights, privileges, obligations and duties, whenever he passes beyond the frontiers of Canada, after the constitutional changes, which are now proposed, are brought into full effect.

Every Canadian shipowner is concerned to know what will be the status of his ship, its officers and crew, on the high seas, or in British and foreign ports, when they are no longer subject to the Merchants Shipping Acts and to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of the United Kingdom.

Every Canadian merchant, engaged in the foreign trade of Canada, is directly interested in the ultimate preservation of the manifold rights and privileges which appertain to British subjects in their commercial intercourse with foreign countries, under the terms of existing treaties between the government of the United Kingdom and the governments of foreign states.

The people of this Dominion desire, I am convinced, not merely the barren and futile right to enter into separate relations with foreign powers, but also the assurance, especially with regard to shipping, that the whole weight of British diplomacy and of British authority should be on their side in case their vital interests are imperilled. In fact, existing imperial acts and treaties, applicable to Canada and to Canadians at home and abroad, affect our material interests in innumerable ways. If these are to be wiped out, their abrogation will involve the immense constructive work, on the part of the dominions, of devising a whole series of constitutional conventions and interimperial and international agreements and treaties which will clearly determine the relations of the dominions between themselves, as well as with foreign countries, if the empire shall hereafter remain a subsisting political entity and not merely a free association of independent sovereign states.

For myself, I am fully convinced that the complete breach of our continuous community of political relations and of political ideals would not only make for serious domestic dissensions, and perhaps induce even civil strife in Canada, but would seriously diminish the growing influence of this country upon world affairs; for no dominion is strong enough, even if it so desired, to afford the luxury of a completely independent political policy in respect of its external affairs. In discussing this subject in this house on the 29th of May, 1928, I made a statement, which I now repeat:

> I have had occasion to look into the statutes of the parliament of Great Britain which still apply to us and, the longer I pursued my investigations, the more statutes and treaties I found which directly affect us. I would suggest to the government that when they come to consider the modification of these statutes they will find their ramifications so extensive as almost to appall them. Before the next imperial conference this government should make haste slowly, and, by such expert assistance as is available, should probe these matters to the bottom. They should do this not with a view to organizing some method of taking this dominion out of the commonwealth, but to devise ways and means by agreement and concurrent legislation, and, by new conventions where legislation is not necessary, for the purpose of keeping this Dominion within the British commonwealth. Let us keep Canada in the empire as a dominion fully conscious of its rights and privileges, but also conscious that we must play our parts, man for man and government for government, with those of the other dominions of the commonwealth, in maintaining the political unity of the empire to which we now belong.

Briefly, I am persuaded that it is in the best interests of Canada that the British commonwealth of nations, which is commonly known as the British Empire, should remain a subsisting political entity, and not merely a free association of independent states.

I frankly confess that in entering upon a study of the report of the recent London conference on the operation of dominion legislation, and particularly merchant shipping legislation, my opinions are doubtless coloured by such important considerations as those I have just mentioned. The assertion of "equality of status" as between the United Kingdom and the several dominions is utterly inadequate to define the whole of the political relations which should continue to subsist between the dominions to each other and to the United Kingdom. The London committee appear to have ignored all such other considerations.

Lord Milner, in his lifetime, fully recognized the necessity of an equal partnership between the United Kingdom and the dominions, but, he added:

Undoubtedly the working of it out in practice without bringing about a severance of relations between us and the dominions will be one of the most complicated tasks which statesmanship has ever faced.

The recent addresses of General Smuts in Canada contained a strong appeal in favour of the developing by constructive efforts of the continuous community of our interimperial relations.

The report of the recent London conference on the operation of dominion legislation and merchant shipping legislation is now before us. In the words of the London Post, the conference "has produced an obscure, pedantic and tedious report," and I may add concerning this report that prolix as it is, it is almost wholly lacking in intelligently directed constructive effort or effect.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a good Tory comment.

Mr. CAHAN: That is a very intelligent comment. The report first considers the right of the crown, on the advice of the government of the United Kingdom, to disallow dominion acts, and the right of the Governor General to reserve dominion bills. The report alleges that there is no provision in our constitution, the British North America acts, "requiring" reservation. That is literally true, but there are provisions authorizing such reservation of dominion bills. The reservation by the Governor General of bills passed by the parliament of Canada is authorized by sections 55 and 57 of the British North America Act, 1867. The disallowance by the king in council, that is by the government of the United Kingdom, of statutes enacted by the parliament of Canada, within two years after copies of such statutes are received by the Secretary of State at London, is authorized by section 56 of the British North American Act, 1867.

These provisions of the British North America Act may only be amended or repealed by a new act of the parliament of the United Kingdom, and, so far as Canada is concerned, the committee, after a verbose explanation, conclude that:

We desire to place on record our opinion that it would be in accord with constitutional practice that if so requested by the dominion concerned the government of the United Kingdom should ask parliament to pass the necessary legislation.

That is, for the repeal of these sections. This conclusion is evidently regarded by the committee as an expression of profound wisdom, although it might more aptly be described as trite and commonplace, except that the committee has ignored completely the right of the provinces to be heard in respect of such amendments to the British North America Acts, to which they became parties when admitted to this Dominion as provinces.

The committee points out that under the provisions of the Colonial Stock Act, 1900, the Treasury of the United Kingdom is authorized to prescribe the conditions under which a colonial stock, that is, the bonds or debentures of any colony, may be authorized as investments for trustees under the Trustee Act of 1893 of the United Kingdom. One condition so prescribed, as pointed out so clearly by the Minister of Justice, is that the British government may disallow dominion or colonial legislation which appears to the government of the United Kingdom to alter any of the provisions affecting the stock to the injury of stockholders resident in the United Kingdom, or which would involve a departure from the original contract in regard to such stock. The committe reported:

—the right of disallowance in respect of such legislation must remain and can properly be exercised.

There is to be no complete repeal of the disallowance exercised by the Imperial government under the British North America Act of 1867. Might I suggest that the Canadian members of that committee might have considered as an alternative that perhaps the time would soon arrive when the governments of the dominions and especially the government of Canada might very properly seek an agreement with the British treasury for the amending of the existing British treasury regulations governing the admission of dominion stocks to be inscribed as trustees' securities. We may no longer desire to procure such inscriptions by conceding to a British ministry the right to veto legislation which is intra vires of a Canadian parliament, and certainly the time has now arrived when the British treasury may rely upon the good faith of the Canadian parliament in carrying out such conventions and understandings as now exist concerning such inscriptions of dominion securities, without being placed under the penalty of having their legislation vetoed by a British ministry.

The minister discussed at length the extra-territorial operations of Dominion legislation, and he referred to certain resolutions passed in recent years by the parliament of Canada, but he failed to indicate to the house how seriously the subcommittee, of which he was a member, had departed from the views expressed by a previous resolution of this parliament. A joint address of the Senate and Commons of Canada to His Majesty was passed unanimously by the House of Commons on June 24, 1920, and by the Senate on June 26, 1920, requesting an amendment to section 91 of the British North America Act to provide:

> Any enactment of the parliament of Canada otherwise within the legislative authority of the parliament shall operate and be deemed to have operated extraterritorially according to its intention in like manner and to the same extent as if enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom.

That joint address, which was passed by the unanimous vote of this house, contained as one of its essential terms the principle that the enactments of the parliament of Canada, which were to have extraterritorial operations, were to be confined to such statutes as were within the legislative jurisdiction of parliament. That was a very important reservation. Subsequently, on July 17, 1924, this house passed an amended address to His Majesty, substituting the following words:

> An enactment intra vires of the parliament of Canada, if expressed to operate extra-territorially, shall have and be deemed to have had that operation, if and in so far as it is a law for or ancillary to the peace, order and good government of Canada.

I believe that resolution was proposed to this house by the present Minister of Justice. When it was first introduced to the house the words "intra vires" were omitted, and it was only in the Senate that these words were introduced after considerable discussion and after objections had been voiced by the premiers of some of the provinces, particularly by the premier of Ontario. These two words were then introduced in the resolution by the Senate, and the resolution passed in the terms which I have just stated.

When the imperial conference met at London in 1926, the sole authority of the representatives of Canada at that imperial conference in regard to dealing with the question of extraterritorial operation of Dominion laws was the resolution of July 17, 1924, giving extraterritorial effect exclusively to enactments otherwise intra vires of the parliament of Canada. The imperial conference recommended as follows:

> That each dominion parliament should have power to give extraterritorial operation to its legislation in all cases where such operation is ancillary to the peace, order and good government of the dominion.

The Minister of Justice, behind the back of parliament and in total disregard of the previous instructions of parliament, eliminated the words "intra vires" from the proposal then made and recommended. The subcommittee of that conference has expressed the following opinion:

> The introduction of a reference to legislation ancillary to the peace, order and good government of Canada is unnecessary, would add to the existing confusion on the matter, and might diminish the scope of the powers, the existence of which it is desired to recognize.

I think the Minister of Justice should tell us what powers that committee had in view which they so desired to recognize. He has failed to elucidate the object and intent of the Canadian representatives in agreeing to that recommendation, but I think the context affords an answer. The member of this government, who sat as representative in that committee, desired to recognize the complete severance of those political ties and reciprocal duties and obligations which bind the dominions to each other and to the United Kingdom. In utter disregard of the terms of the resolution of July 24, the committee recommended an imperial enactment by which it should be declared and enacted:

> That the parliament of a dominion has full power to make laws having extraterritorial operation.

That is, they seek powers unrestricted on the one side by any interimperial obligations or relationships, or on the other, by any concern for the constitutional rights and interests of the several provinces of Canada.

Surely the proposed enactment should not confer unlimited powers, but should be restricted to such matters as are within the legislative jurisdiction of a dominion parliament. We certainly should not seek in this way by indirect means to wipe out all restrictions upon dominion legislation, particularly as each and every province is intimately, if not vitally, concerned in those existing restrictions being adhered to. I respectfully suggest that the clause should be drafted in some such form as this, before the house is asked to give complete approval of it:

It is hereby declared and enacted that the parliament of Canada, in respect of matters within its legislative jurisdiction, has full power to make laws having extraterritorial operation.

Otherwise you are infringing upon the rights and privileges of each and every province of Canada under the constitution as it at present exists, and I submit that this government, this house and parliament have no moral or constitutional right to change the constitution of Canada in vital respects without calling together the representatives of the provinces and obtaining their opinion in regard to the proposed changes.

Mr. THORSON: Surely my hon. friend appreciates the fact that the jurisdiction of the provinces is absolutely unaffected by any recommendation contained in the report.

Mr. CAHAN: I will deal with that in a moment. I do not agree with that at all. That is just where the crux of the whole matter arises in respect of extraterritorial legislation. It is true that the committee expressed the pious hope that hereafter each dominion should make provision for granting to the others the customary extraterritorial immunities with regard to internal discipline, which are usually conceded to and enjoyed by the armed forces of one government when present in the territory of another government with its consent. It is presumed that, despite the Kellogg peace pact, we may hereafter be involved in war and that military forces of this dominion may be sent abroad into some other dominion or into the United Kingdom by the dominion parliament and government. In any event, it is assumed that the relations between dominions, and between the dominions and the United Kingdom, shall hereafter be those which subsist between independent sovereign states. That is the whole gist and purport of these resolutions and of the report giving extraterritorial effect to the legislation of the parliament of Canada.

The extraterritorial legislation of a dominion is evidently intended to apply to acts committed beyond the territorial limits of the dominion, that is on the high seas or within foreign states or even within the territorial jurisdiction of the United Kingdom or of another dominion or some other colony or possession of the British Empire. But, to apply to acts committed by whom? Surely not to acts committed within the United Kingdom by Englishmen, Scotsmen or Irishmen who are domiciled in the United Kingdom. Surely not to acts committed by Australians who are domiciled within the Commonwealth of Australia. It is true that sovereign states are deemed to have extraterritorial jurisdiction, as the Minister of Justice has pointed out, over their own nationals wherever they are, and the United States have gone one step beyond that and assumed that they have jurisdiction within their own territory over nationals of other countries for acts committed outside the territorial limits of the United States. But who are to be deemed Canadian nationals under the proposal made by the subcommittee? Who are to be deemed Australian nationals? Does a British subject who is born in Canada and has been domiciled in Canada, who retains his British allegiance, remain a Canadian national when he crosses our southern border and takes up his residence in the United States? What class or classes of persons are to be subject to such extraterritorial legislation as the Dominion of Canada may hereafter enact? All British subjects now possess a common status throughout the empire and throughout the world, by virtue of the fact that they are British subjects. After this proposed legislation passes, in what respect will Canadian nationals be British subjects when outside of the territorial limits of Canada?

The preservation of our status, rights and privileges as British subjects is, I believe, the predominating political purpose of a large majority of the people of this Dominion, and any efforts made directly or indirectly to subvert and destroy that status will not receive the commendation of the Canadian people as a whole.

The London committee's report, it seems to me, does not disclose any intelligent effort to achieve that end and purpose to which I have referred. It is apparent that the committee have confined their efforts to ascertaining the practicability and most convenient method of dissolving existing political ties, but none whatever to the work, so eminently desirable, of evolving a new constitution or convention, by virtue of which the legislative and administrative autonomy of the dominions may be maintained, and by which the common status of British subjects and the common privileges of British citizenship may also be preserved for all time to all British peoples.

But the report says that the dominions are freely associated as members of the British commonwealth of nations, and upon that the Minister of Justice has to-day repeatedly rung the changes. So they are in fact freely associated as members of the League of Nations. But the British Empire is a political entity; the League of Nations is not. There are other grave differences. The British Empire is a legal person; the League of Nations is not. We enjoy throughout this empire an imperial citizenship, but there is no such thing as citizenship in the League of Nations. The writ of habeas corpus runs throughout the British Empire to its uttermost parts for the protection of the life and liberty of all who owe allegiance to the British crown. The prestige and power of the British Empire assure the liberty and safety of the British subject, in whatever dominion he may be domiciled, whenever and wherever he sails upon the high seas, and whenever and wherever he travels in foreign parts. But what definite measures are proposed in this committee's report to ensure the preservation of these liberties and privileges once the empire is disrupted into independent states? I submit that there are none whatever.

No intelligent study is made by the committee concerning the disintegrating effects of their proposals upon the unity of the empire, and the portentous and perilous results that will necessarily flow therefrom, if full effect be given to their recommendations for the repeal of existing statutes before new conventions and new agreements are devised in substitution for the unitary political system which now subsists.

My hon. friend has referred at length to the Colonial Laws Validity Act. The report approves of the enactment by the parliament of the United Kingdom of a statute in the form following:

(1) The Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, shall cease to apply to any law made by the parliament of a dominion.

(2) No law and no provision of any law hereafter made by the parliament of a dominion shall be void or inoperative on the ground that it is repugnant to the law of England or to the provisions of any existing or future act of parliament or to any order, rule or regulation made thereunder, and the powers of the parliament of a dominion shall include the power to repeal or amend any such act, order, rule or regulation in so far as the same is part of the law of the dominions.

Obviously, though not expressly stated, the reference to "the provisions of any existing or future act of parliament" refers to acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom; and it is equally obvious that the clause respecting "the powers of the parliament of a dominion" to repeal or amend any such imperial act, in express terms, authorizes the Dominion parliament to repeal or amend any present or future acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom relating to any dominion, even including those acts by which any such dominion is constituted, since there is no doubt whatever that an act of parliament of the United Kingdom which constitutes a dominion is part of the law of the dominion.

The Minister of Justice would, if he had an opportunity, doubtless retort as did my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson) that there is a subsequent provision in the proposed enactment that:

Nothing in this act shall be deemed to confer any power to repeal or alter the constitution acts of the Dominion of Canada. . . . . otherwise than in accordance with the law and constitutional usage and practice heretofore existing—

I think that if my hon. friend had wished to protect the rights of the constituent provinces of the Dominion he could have found far more definite and specific terms to employ than those which I have just quoted. There is no law or constitutional usage or practice heretofore existing by which any such amendment or repeal of the British North America Act could be enacted by the parliament of Canada. Other dominions under their different constitutions have certain powers of amendment; we have none.

Surely the intention of the draftsman could be more clearly and definitely and less clumsily expressed than by first baldly declaring that the Dominion of Canada has full power to repeal or amend its constitution, and then intimating in a final clause at the close of the report that that object can only be effected in a way which does not at present exist.

Moreover, the committee's report clearly announces that our provincial "legislation will continue to be subject to the Colonial Laws Validity Act and to the legislative supremacy of the parliament of the United Kingdom." The report adds that:

It will be a matter for the proper authorities in Canada. . . .. to consider whether and to what extent it is desired that the principles to be embodied in the new act of the parliament of the United Kingdom should be applied to. . . . provincial legislation.

One could not conceive of a proposition more half-baked, if I might use the term—

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is no word bad enough!

Mr. CAHAN: It is sometimes difficult to find appropriate parliamentary terms. If the Colonial Laws Validity Act is to have no future application to Dominion legislation, why should it have any effect upon and curb and restrict the legislative jurisdiction of the various provinces of Canada? If the Colonial Laws Validity Act is to be kept in force with respect to provincial legislation, why during the recess or why now does not the Prime Minister call together the representatives of the various provinces to ascertain what their views are, so that in dealing with this question we may not deal with it in an inadequate manner? If the Colonial Laws Validity Act is to be repealed in respect of Dominion legislation, a conference might ascertain now in what manner the repeal should be expressed so as to give to the provinces exactly the same jurisdiction in respect of matters within their legislative jurisdiction as is now to be given to the parliament of Canada?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I take it that the hon. gentleman is in favour of the repeal of the act with respect to the provinces?

Mr. CAHAN: I think I have expressed my opinion very fully.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not quite fully, I think.

Mr. CAHAN: I shall before I am through, but I wish to do it consecutively and in a manner that comports with my own views.

This raises at once the broad question whether the government of this Dominion, even with the approval of this parliament, has the constitutional right to procure the enactment of an imperial act, in the terms now suggested, without first procuring the consent or approval of the governments and legislatures of the several provinces of Canada. I, for one, have very grave doubts as to the constitutional propriety of any such action. The government of this Dominion, in my opinion, has no moral or constitutional right to procure the enactment of the proposed legislation without first obtaining the formal consent of the several provinces.

I come now to another important phase of this report, the merchant shipping legislation The keynote of this part of the report is the declaration that:

> The new position will be that each dominion will, amongst other powers, have full and complete legislative authority over all ships while within its territorial waters or engaged in coasting trade; and also over its own registered ships both intraterritorially and extraterritorially.

To attain this end the committee advocates the repeal of all restrictions or limitations upon dominion legislation which are at present contained in the merchant shipping acts of the imperial parliament. Then, they say, the ground will be thus cleared for cooperation by the dominion and the United Kingdom in respect of those shipping interests in which practical considerations call for concerted action; and they suggest that such concerted action should, as the Minister of Justice stated, take the form of agreements, for a term of years, which may hereafter be negotiated as to:

(a) Uniformity of laws throughout the British commonwealth;

(b) Reciprocal aid in the enforcement of laws in the jurisdictions of other members of the British commonwealth; and

(c) Limitations to be observed in the exercise of each dominion's legislative powers.

Although the committee recognize the difficulty of framing a complete list of subjects upon which uniformity is desirable, in respect of which, it seems to me, the whole British shipping world should be consulted, and certainly the shipping interests of Canada, before such approval is given, they enumerate several that occur in their minds.

They seek a common status, involving:

(a) Uniform . minimum qualifications for ownership to govern the registry of ships in the United Kingdom and in all the dominions, and

(b) The establishment of such a common status for all dominion shipping as will entitle dominion ships to the same recognition as is now accorded to British ships.

But they fail utterly to suggest how this common status is to be achieved. They propose a Canadian registry for Canadian ships, which whether in Canadian waters or beyond the territorial limits of Canada, will remain under the exclusive jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. The protection of such ships, the security of their trade, will then be the sole responsibility of the parliament and government of Canada. The government of the United Kingdom will then have no duty or responsibility in the premises. Their masters and owners, suffering unjust treatment in foreign jurisdictions, can only appeal to the Canadian government for relief and redress of wrongs.

When that situation arises, I confidently predict that there will remain no ships of Canadian registry engaged in foreign trade, excepting those owned by the Canadian government; for Canadian shipowners, for their own protection, will transfer the registry of their ships to London, Liverpool or some other port of the United Kingdon, and thus place their property and interests on the high seas and in foreign ports under the protection of the government and admiralty of the United Kingdom.

The committee recommend that uniform standards should be observed by all the dominions in all matters relating to the safety of dominion ships and those on board; and the general adoption of appropriate conventions to secure that end; or, at the least, that each dominion should inform the others —we are now getting back to the old principle of negotiation of treaties—of any substantial modifications proposed to be adopted, and the reasons therefor, in order that uniformity may be maintained.

Before destroying the existing imperial legislation in respect of British shipping, which ensures a common status for British ships throughout the world, and secures uniform standards of safety, both in respect of ships and seamen, is it not most desirable that the governments of the dominions should first undertake the comprehensive yet onerous task of framing, by concerted action, such necessary conventions and agreements as the committee deem essential? It takes a thousand years to develop a political system, a single hour may suffice for its complete destruction.

The committee recommend, not as precedent to but as subsequent to the repeal of the existing imperial legislation, which applies to the ships of all the dominions, that each dominion should now accept the principle that legislation with extra-territorial effect, enacted by one dominion, should not be made to apply to the ships registered in another dominion, without such other dominion's consent. Why not now seek to obtain a general agreement to that effect, before wiping out the existing legislation which secures such desirable uniformity of action.

The committee also report that continued uniformity of treatment is desirable for all ocean-going ships of each of the dominions in the ports of any other dominion. They say:

> Such uniformity of treatment is regarded as an asset of very considerable importance, especially for the negotiation with foreign governments who may seek to discriminate in favour of their own ships and against British commonwealth ships.

When we consider the vast ramifications of this subject of securing uniform treatment of dominion shipping throughout the wide world, and its paramount importance to every owner of shipping, who is domiciled in a dominion, this feeble and—I use another and more expressive word—almost infantile pronouncement of the committee appears by contrast to be utterly inadequate. No suggestion is made that the governments of the United Kingdom and the governments of the several dominions should first adopt an agreement or convention, whereby the power, authority and influence of the whole commonwealth would be utilized to protect and safeguard the shipping interests of any dominion which is discriminated against or otherwise unjustly and unfairly treated by a foreign government. The committee merely recommends that the government of the United Kingdom and the governments of the several dominions "might"—note the word "might"—not "should" agree for a limited number of years to continue to permit the ships of the one to engage in the coasting trade of the other, and that no one part should give to foreign shipping more favourable treatment than to the ships of the other parts of the British commonwealth.

The committee also recommends agreements to the effect that the law of each member of the British commonwealth, in which a ship is registered, should apply to the ship and its crew in respect of all matters of internal discipline, and to all contracts with the crew; that certificates of competency granted to officers of ships by one dominion, or one part of the British commonwealth, should be recognized as valid in all other dominions or parts of the commonwealth; that the principles governing the constitution and procedure of courts for the investigation of casualties to ships should be uniform; and that the investigation should be held in that dominion or part, in which the ship is registered, no matter when the casualty takes place, if its governmental authority so desires. The committee also recommends reciprocal arrangements for the relief of distressed seamen, for the mutual enforcement of the law of the dominion or part in which the ship is registered, in respect of offences committed on such registered ships; but it fails to suggest any definite provisions to effect those ends.

It gives as an excuse for its utter inaction that:

> The position which obtains at present is only possible because the system of law which is applied is a unitary system, and, when that system comes to an end, a solution of the difficulties which arise will have to be sought in other directions.

Why not seek them now? Why did not the committee when in London sit down and draft at least a tentative agreement between the governments of the several dominions and Great Britain whereby these common interests would be hereafter conserved, leaving to each dominion in local matters to give legislative expression to its autonomy? This puerile pronouncement naively suggests that, when the legislation, which is now proposed, is enacted by the imperial parliament, even in respect to those all important matters in which all parts of the British commonwealth have common interests, the existing unitary system will be completely destroyed, and moreover the committee confess their incompetence to suggest, at the present time, the terms of any convention or agreement whereby in the future concerted action of the United Kingdom and of the dominions may be ensured.

The committee recommend that each dominion should have power to repeal the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890, which ensures uniformity of jurisdiction and procedure in all essentials in admiralty cases, and then expresses the pious thought:

> We think it highly desirable to emphasize that so far as is possible there should be uniform jurisdiction and procedure in all admiralty courts in the British commonwealth of nations subject, of course, to such variations as may be required in matters of purely local or domestic interest.

But they make no real effort to attain that most desirable end.

The committee have suggested that a new tribunal be established for the determination of justiciable disputes and differences between members of the British commonwealth. The hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Lanctot), in seconding the reply to the Address of His Excellency the Governor General, urged that such interimperial questions might well be submitted to the permanent court of international justice. The Minister of Justice did not dissent from that view. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) urged also that such matters should not come under the jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council but rather be relegated to some international body of jurists akin to the Hague tribual.

I personally entirely concur in the recent action of this government and of the governments of the United Kingdom and of the other dominions, when giving their adhesion to the Permanent Court of International Justice, in excepting from it jurisdiction disputes arising between themselves.

The governments and legislatures of the several provinces of Canada may be said in one sense to be sovereign within their respective jurisdictions; yet I conceive it would be destructive to all sense of dominion unity, if interprovincial and interdominion disputes were relegated to the decision of an international tribunal; and I trust the day is far distant when the British dominions will enter into a convention or agreement to submit such differences as may arise between them to any court external to the empire, and thus to permit rival foreign powers to determine what hereafter shall be the political relations of these dominions to one another.

[Mr. Cahan.]

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has already arbitrated, by agreement, between two dominions in the Labrador boundary case, between two provinces of Canada in another case, between two Australian states in another, and also between the government of the United Kingdom and the government of Northern Ireland, and for the present it appears to me that the governments of the dominions might well consider the advisability of agreeing to vest in that same judicial committee, reconstructed as it may be for the proper exercise of such jurisdiction, the right to arbitrate justiciable disputes hereafter arising between the several dominions of the commonwealth.

There is a wide range of matters of paramount interest to all parts of the British Empire, and in respect of these interests, which are common to all the parts, unity of action and uniformity of legislation can be secured only by coordinated enactments of the imperial and of the dominion parliaments, or by the negotiation of new conventions or agreements between all the parts of the British commonwealth. The committee have resolved that such unity of action and uniformity of legislation shall no longer be secured by imperial enactments; but it is clear to me that the abrogation of the legislative supremacy of the parliament of the United Kingdom will be conducive to harmonious and concerted action, if at all, only when the United Kingdom and the several dominions shall have previously agreed upon certain definite coordinated enactments or upon a series of constitutional and interimperial conventions or agreements, which shall clearly determine their future political relations inter se.

And here I may interject the opinion that the repeal of the Colonial Laws Validity Act and the argument of the Minister of Justice do not necessarily involve the complete renunciation of the paramount authority of the parliament of the United Kingdom to exist as a sovereign legislature, with legislative jurisdiction in matters of common imperial concern; and that the committee are undoubtely mistaken in their assumption to the contrary.

They are undoubtedly mistaken, and from certain parts of their report it is evident that they do not assume that the paramount legislative authority of the imperial parliament or the parliament of the United Kingdom is to be completely abrogated; for, at least, the Colonial Laws Validity Act is to be kept in full force and effect with regard to the legislation of the several provinces of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a common law principle.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so. The fact that the peoples of all of the dominions are admittedly united in a common allegiance to the British throne implies that common interests undoubtedly exist, not only in relation to their external affairs with foreign countries, but also in respect to their interimperial relations; and within those two areas, however restricted they may be deemed to be, some means must be devised for preserving and facilitating their unity of legislative action.

The committee have in some respects gone far beyond and in others fallen far short of the reasonable implications of the resolutions of the Imperial conference of 1926. Am I mistaken in the suggestion that the absence of the restraining influence of the Prime Minister at this recent subconference enabled the Minister of Justice, who was present and one of its guiding spirits, to give free and full expression to certain separatist tendencies in respect of which the members of the government are not quite unanimous?

"Equality of status" among autonomous communities, in the mind of Lord Balfour, who drafted the resolutions of 1926, meant nothing more than the absence of the exercise of power or authority by one community over the other or others of them. To use Lord Balfour's felicitous phrase, they were—

> In no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs.

Or, in the words of Sir Cecil Hurst, who was one of the legal advisers of that conference, and who now sits as British representative on the Permanent Court of International Justice:

> This equality of status is not inconsistent with the continued existence of legal rights now vested in the parliament of Great Britain, or in the ministers of the crown in Great Britain, which are not vested in dominion parliaments or ministers, provided that those rights are only exercised in respect of any dominion, in accordance with the wishes of the parliament or the people or the government of the dominion concerned.

It is this recognized principle that forms the basis of our existing imperial citizenship.

The status of a British subject throughout the empire and in all foreign countries depends now upon the legislation of the parliament of the United Kingdom, and it is now a matter of understanding between the governments of the United Kingdom and of the dominions that no change shall be made in this legislation, except after a new agreement, to which they shall all be parties, to substitute new amending legislation for the existing statutes. That is the principle which should now govern proposed amendments to the Merchant Shipping Act. Uniformity in legislation affecting British shipping is of vital concern to all parts of the empire, and uniformity in the shipping laws of the empire can be preserved only by formal agreement between all autonomous parts of the empire to the effect that, before any repeal of existing legislation shall be effected, amending laws, which are to be substituted for the existing laws, shall first be devised and accepted by all of the dominions. That principle, which should be deemed imperishable if the political unity of the empire is to be preserved and maintained, is utterly disregarded in the recent report, to which the Minister of Justice is a signatory on behalf of Canada.

The report, in which the Minister of Justice concurs, advocates that power be vested in each dominion parliament to repeal in whole or in part the existing Merchant Shipping Acts. Each dominion is to act on its own initiative. The alternative, which I respectfully suggest, is that the existing merchant shipping acts should stand, until by concerted action the dominions have agreed in specific terms upon the new laws which are to be substituted therefor, so as to preserve uniformity of legislation in respect of all shipping interests which are of common concern, and so as to preclude any dominion from such premature and ill-considered action as may trench upon and destroy or prejudicially affect or discriminate against the substantial shipping interests of any other dominion.

In closing, I most insistently urge that parliamentary approval of these proposed radical and far-reaching constitutional changes should not be pressed during these closing days of this short and rather turbulent session, and if approved should not be deemed to represent the matured views of the very large shipping interests of Canada and should not be pressed as representing the considered opinions of the several provinces of Canada. The provinces should have been consulted in respect of the proposed increase of federal powers and the proposed extension of the federal legislative jurisdiction, which are embodied in this report, and in which are involved the power of this parliament to repeal imperial enactments.

Mr. ILSLEY: It does not involve power to repeal the British North America Act.

Mr. CAHAN: Possibly it does not; I have discussed that point and have given my opinion with regard to it. I think that is very much in doubt, but it does expressly vest in the dominion parliaments the right to repeal a large number of acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom which form the very basis of civil rights in each and every province of Canada, and I defy anyone successfully to contradict that statement.

Mr. THORSON: May I ask one question?

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend can reply later on; he will have plenty of time then. The provinces have a right to be heard in respect of all proposed constitutional changes which concern their relations with the British crown, their relations with the government and parliament of this Dominion, the proposed extension of federal legislative jurisdiction, and the extent to which provincial legislation should hereafter have extraterritorial effect. It is certainly inexpedient and probably futile, in my opinion, to proceed further without the express approval of the several provinces and, therefore, before this parliament authorizes these constitutional changes, in my opinion, an interprovincial conference should be convened in Canada to consider their full effect, and to procure concerted action in relation thereto.

In the matter of the merchant shipping legislation, I think that the procedure proposed in this report will inevitably involve the dominions in serious difficulties and interminable disputes. Within certain limits, there should be uniform merchant shipping legislation for the whole empire, dealing with British shipping interests in general, and the sphere of independent dominion legislative action should be strictly defined by common agreement. To destroy by one sweeping blow the existing code of marine and shipping law, without any prior constructive effort to reach an agreement as to what elements of the existing system should be conserved in the best interest of all the constituent parts of the empire, appears to me futile and foolish.

We established a precedent in 1914 by framing and adopting the British Nationality and Status of Alien Acts, the terms of which were agreed upon by the representatives of the governments of the United Kingdom and of the dominions and then confirmed by imperial enactment as well as by the several dominion legislatures. That precedent might well be followed in the reform of the Merchant Shipping Acts.

The representatives of the several governments, which meet at the Imperial conference, before the enactment of the proposed amendments to our dominion constitutions, should sit in conference and, after hearing the expert evidence and representations of all British shipping interests in the dominions and elsewhere, should reach a common agreement with respect to the provisions of the new shipping law, which should have general application throughout the empire. The tentative provisions, so agreed upon, then should be embodied in coordinated enactments of the parliaments of the United Kingdom and of the dominions, under the clear understanding, as in the case of the Naturalization Acts, that they should not hereafter be amended except by common consent.

These constructive efforts should be fully achieved, and the enactment of these new conventions and agreements should be simultaneous with the repeal of the existing statutes. To proceed otherwise is as foolish as to dig up a mighty oak tree by the roots, in order that a few of its upper limbs may be pruned of their superfluous and mouldering branches.

Mr. J. L. ILSLEY (Hants-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) upon his very able presentation this afternoon. He has given the house and the country a comprehensive and indeed an eloquent account of the proceedings of the conference on the operation of dominion legislation and merchant shipping legislation which sat in London during the closing months of 1929. I also wish to compliment the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) upon the very exhaustive criticism of the report and of the minister's speech to which we have just listened.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot agree with the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George in many of the remarks which he made and in many of the arguments which he advanced. He has denounced the draftsmanship of the report as clumsy; he has said that the language is prolix; he has termed the efforts of the conference as feeble and infantile and half-baked. I cannot agree with him in the application of those adjectives to the report of the committee. My reading of the report left me with the impression that it was expressed in very concise and very apposite language, and that it accomplished a great work which was in accordance with the findings of the Imperial conference of 1926, that conference the report of which was drafted by the very ablest statesmen of the British Empire. I could apply laudatory adjectives, I suppose, to the report, but after all it does not make very much difference whether a member of this house uses uncomplimentary or complimentary adjectives; the people of the country will decide for themselves whether they approve of the step that has been taken and will express their view as to whether they consider it to be a forward step.

My criticism of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is this: His attitude is decidedly reactionary. I do not want to be thought to be using the language of party politics when I say that his attitude is conservative, the attitude of the person who opposes change, who talks about the many hundreds of years that it takes to build up institutions and the danger of shattering those institutions at a single blow. His criticism of this report is essentially that it is new. He says that the association of nations which constitute the British commonwealth of nations is not like anything that exists; it is not like the League of Nations; it is not a legal person; it is not a state. I admit that it is different from anything else which exists. It is a new form of association of nations but I am thankful to say that there are people in this country as well as in other countries who are not afraid to try something new.

A few of the arguments advanced by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George I desire to answer very briefly, and then I should like to advance arguments of my own on the other side of the question. The hon. member pointed out that there were 115 imperial statutes which apply, either by express words or necessary intendment, to Canada. The hon. gentleman would almost lead us to believe that if we carried out this report we would be repealing the whole 115 statutes at one fell swoop. That is not the intention of the report at all; we are taking simply the power to repeal or amend those acts so far as they extend to the Dominion of Canada. However, it is one thing to take power and another thing to exercise that power. Unless we possess that power it would be idle to talk about equality of status between this country and the motherland. But it is unnecessary for us to exercise that power if the retention of those acts upon the statute books of the mother country would be of advantage to this Dominion or to the British Empire as a whole.

The hon. member stated that the extension of extraterritorial powers to the Dominion of Canada would give the Dominion the power to encroach upon the powers of the provinces. When the proposed imperial act, which would give us the power to pass legislation having extraterritorial effect, is considered it will be seen that the Dominion of Canada receives no power as far as the provinces are concerned which is not given to it by section 91 of the British North America Act. The very provisions of the proposed act itself and the whole spirit and intent of the report make it abundantly clear that the British North America Act will be in no way affected by the legislation which it is recommended should be passed in pursuance of the report. I think the hon. gentleman was compelled towards the end of his speech to admit that the British North America Act was not affected, and that the powers of the legislatures of the provinces were not being encroached upon. The hon. member stated that we should call together the provinces and find out whether they wish to have the same power given to their legislatures, that is, the power to enact legislation conflicting with imperial legislation. Possibly that is a good suggestion, but the old saying that Rome was not built in a day applies to it. This matter is not a vital one, and there will be plenty of time to take that step. If the provinces wish the repeal of the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 so far as they are concerned, so that they will be enabled to pass legislation which conflicts with the legislation passed by the imperial parliament, there will be plenty of time to work that out. This report does not propose to deal finally with everything at this moment, but it is a considerable step forward in doing what was started in 1926.

In dealing with the merchant shipping legislation, the hon. member seemed to think that we were about to wipe out—these are the words he used—the legislation upon the statute books of Great Britain. I think I have replied already to that argument. A great deal of the legislation which affects Canada undoubtedly will remain for many years to come; we simply take the power to do away with the anomalies and absurdities which are inherent in the present system of merchant shipping legislation as applied to the Dominion of Canada.

An ordinary Canadian reading the British North America Act and seeing that by section 91 the Dominion of Canada is given exclusive power to legislate on shipping and navigation, immediately would come to the conclusion that we have the power to control our own shipping, that is, ships registered in Canada, and that we have the power to control and regulate the shipping in our territorial waters of foreign countries and other parts of the British commonwealth. However, such is not the case. The Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 provides that if the legislation of any British possession is repugnant to the provisions of any imperial act which applies to that possession, either by express words or by necessary intendment, the legislation of the possession in question is invalid, inoperative and void to the extent of such repugnancy. The merchant shipping acts of Great Britain extend back over a long period of years, but for our present purposes it is sufficient to deal with the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894 and amending acts thereto. Much of our statute law affecting shipping is found in the statute books of Great Britain. We have passed the Canada Shipping Act and other acts relating to our shipping, but many of the provisions contained therein are repugnant to imperial legislation. It is true that so far as ships registered in Canada are concerned we have a limited power of repeal of imperial legislation but, as the Minister of Justice pointed out this afternoon, that repeal only can be exercised subject to the approval of His Majesty in council, and therefore is not an absolute power of repeal. We have the power to regulate our coasting trade, but there again any attempt made to legislate in connection with the regulation of our coasting trade is likely to be frustrated by the failure to obtain the approval of His Majesty in council. There are other limitations, such as the provisions that any law we pass must apply equally to ships of Canadian and other British registry. The assumption that we control our own shipping in our own territorial waters is unjustified.

The ordinary Canadian probably believes that if we do not control our own shipping, we at least control our own admiralty courts. It seems to me that we should have the right to establish our own admiralty courts, to control their jurisdiction, and to prescribe their practice and procedure. That seems to me to be a fundamental attribute of any country which possesses liberty and freedom. We appoint and pay our judges but we cannot say what powers those judges shall have. By the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890, a British possession has the right to designate a court which when designated shall have the powers conferred upon it by that act. But that court has only the admiralty jurisdiction which was possessed by the High Court of Justice in Great Britain in 1890, and the British possession, whether it be a dominion or not, cannot increase that jurisdiction. It cannot, by the express terms of the act, make rules of practice or procedure nor can the court do so, except subject to the approval of the British government. So again the assumption that might be made that we have the power to control our own admiralty courts would be entirely unwarranted.

I hear someone say: this is likely wrong in principle, but has it any ill effects in practice? Some practical person would certainly take this objection: it is all very well to talk about matters of constitutional right and principle, but has the situation as it exists to-day any bad features, any features of injustice, inconvenience or absurdity? I think the answer to that query is that in the present system there are objectionable features which may be dealt with under three heads.

The first is in relation to admiralty courts. Admiralty courts are very important courts. The remedies in those courts are speedy and effective. The complainant, the plaintiff, when he desires to proceed against a person not resident within the jurisdiction, but whose ship is within the jurisdiction, may proceed against the ship. That is called a proceeding in rem. The ship is seized and, unless bail is furnished, held until judgment is given. In those admiralty courts actions are tried for necessaries supplied to ships, for repairs to ships, for damage for collision, in respect of salvage, in respect of disputes between co-owners, for the forfeiture of ships, and so forth. The point that I desire to place before the house in reference to our admiralty courts is that the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act of 1890, a jurisdiction which we cannot increase, is not suited to the conditions of this country in two respects. The first is that, due to the fact that Canada is so much larger than Great Britain and a federated country instead of a unitary country, it should be possible for a complainant in one province to institute proceedings in rem against a ship the owner of which is domiciled in another province. That is impossible under our present system and we are powerless to change it. Probably I can put the matter most clearly before the house by reading an excerpt from an article on Canadian admiralty jurisdiction and Shipping Laws written by Mr. C. J. Burchell, K.C., of Halifax and published in the Law Quarterly Review of July, 1929. This is what he says:

> The Admiralty Court Acts of 1840 and 1861 constitute the foundation stones on which the modern jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court in England has been established. These acts were passed for a country of small area, England and Wales, but under the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act they apply to Canada by substituting "Canada" for "England and Wales" wherever used therein. New statutory jurisdiction was added to the High Court of Admiralty in England by these two acts, but such added jurisdiction does not apply in England so as to authorize an action in rem against a ship when an owner or part owner is domiciled in England and Wales. The plaintiff in such case is left to his recourse in the courts of common law. This may be satisfactory legislation for England where the king's writ in his common law courts extends throughout the realm, but it is entirely unsatisfactory for a large country like Canada, where each province has its own separate and independent courts of common law.

The existing situation in Canada is that an action in rem under the statutory jurisdiction of an admiralty court cannot be commenced therein if an owner or part owner of the ship is domiciled anywhere in Canada, even although he may be four thousand miles away, and recovery of a claim by execution against him cannot be obtained except by action in the common law courts of the province in which he resides. An action in another province is just as expensive and difficult as in a foreign country. It is submitted that Canada should have the right to enact that all such actions should be commenced in an admiralty court, except in a case where an owner or part owner is domiciled within the province or admiralty district of the court in which the action is brought. Home rule in matters of this kind is necessary and only applies to our own people, so that no outside objection would be made.

That is one respect in which the jurisdiction of our admiralty courts is unsatisfactory at the present time. The other respect is this: we have not kept pace with the times in Canada. The Minister of Justice mentioned that. He showed that in the United Kingdom the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts had been increased. In particular they are now enabled to deal with stevedoring contracts, breaches of charter party and damages for breach of contract for carriage of goods by sea. The jurisdiction has been increased by enactments of the United Kingdom, but these have not been extended to the dominions and the dominions are powerless to extend the jurisdiction of their admiralty courts. The result is that a complainant in our courts does not get the same remedy—one might almost say he does not get the same degree of justice, but I shall not say that—that he gets in the courts of the old country, and he is thereby put to considerable inconvenience.

But jurisdictional troubles are not the only objectionable features of the present system. A feature equally bad, if not worse, is that we are now wandering in a labyrinth of legislation which is either ultra vires or of doubtful validity. I said a few moments ago that the Canada Shipping Act contains a great many ultra vires sections. It contains other sections which are of doubtful validity, sections which either are or may be bad law. That results in uncertainty, confusion and, of course, great inconvenience. I might cite a few. Section 903 of the Canadian Shipping Act, dealing with limitation of liability, is ultra vires in so far as it applies to British ships and foreign ships in Canadian waters. Section 901, prescribing regulations preventing collisions, is ultra vires in so far as it applies to British and foreign ships in Canadian waters. When I use the term "British ships", I mean British ships of non-Canadian registry. Part XV is also invalid because it was reserved for the approval of His Majesty in Council and that approval was never given. The result is that we have one whole part of the Canada Shipping Act dealing with a very important matter, that of deck and load-lines simply cluttering up our statute books and of no validity because it has not been approved by His Majesty in Council.

Mr. E. R. Cameron, K.C., Registrar of the Exchequer Court of Canada, wrote an article published in the Canadian Bar Review some time ago and the opening words are these:

> Summarizing the results obtained by a comparison of the provisions of the imperial Merchant Shipping Act and the Canada Shipping Act, it is found that the Canada Shipping Act as now contained in the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, contains many sections that are void and of no effect.

He goes on to give the reasons, the reasons I have given:

> The conflict above mentioned between Canadian and Imperial legislation has mainly arisen from an attempt on the part of the former to control, to some extent, British ships of British registry and foreign ships while in Canadian waters. This conflict has not arisen through any desire on the part of Canada to encroach upon the rights reserved by the Merchant Shipping Act, but rather through a hazy conception of the right accorded her by the British North America Act, which, in the distribution of powers between the Dominion and the provinces, gave to the former jurisdiction over navigation and shipping.

There is a third class of objectionable features in our present system of shipping legislation. We find it difficult and in many cases impossible to carry out international agreements into which we may enter with other countries. Somebody has pointed out that in relation to merchant shipping at the present day, there are two distinct and marked tendencies in the world. One is a tendency towards nationalism. Each nation is trying to stimulate its own shipping, in many cases with subsidies, in other cases with tariffs, or by some kind of differentiation between the treatment it accords to its own ships and to the ships of other countries. The other tendency is towards international uniformity in safety standards, and in maritime law in relation to mortgages and liens and other matters of merchant shipping, uniformity which is arrived at by international agreements at international conferences. Several of these conferences have been held, and Canada has attended them. Then Canada's representatives have come home to secure the passage of legislation carrying out what was agreed upon at the conference; but they have found the field preempted by imperial legislation. The imperial legislation that has been passed since 1910 has exempted the dominions from its operation. The problem was well summed up in the report of the conference, and I should like to read a few sentences to the house:

> What, therefore, the parliament of such a dominion as Canada or Australia is required to do since the year 1911, is by means of its own legislation, to endeavour to work into the existing shipping legislation of the parliament of the United Kingdom, applicable to such a dominion, certain modifications and additions embodied in international conventions to which the dominion may be a party, of which may otherwise be desired. This it must do, avoiding repugnancy to any legislation of the parliament of the United Kingdom, and avoiding also the field of legislation into which the parliament of a dominion cannot enter by reason of restrictive provisions in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and in such acts as the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890. This in some cases may be impossible. For instance, the Brussels International Maritime Conference of 1826 agreed upon certain rules of law relating to maritime mortgages and liens, and other rules relating to the limitations of the liability of owners of sea-going vessels. If a dominion parliament desired to confer upon its courts jurisdiction and authority to enforce these rules of law, it might find it impossible to enact legislation fully implementing the conference agreement in respect of foreign ships or ships registered outside the dominion, as these fields of jurisdiction appear to be partially, if not wholly, reserved for the parliament of the United Kingdom. In respect of mortgages and liens there may even be difficulty for the same reason in regard to ships registered in the dominion itself.

These are some of the principal objections to the system of merchant shipping legislation as it exists at the present time. It is all very well for the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George to point out the dangers that may exist in the future if we adopt this report, but it must not be lost sight of that the situation which exists to-day is very, very bad, and it is worth taking some little risk to get rid of the present objectionable features.

What are the remedies for the evils described in the report?

(1) That the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 be repealed in so far as it applies to any dominion. This will enable Canada to pass valid shipping laws, instead of those which are invalid because they conflict with acts of the imperial parliament.

(2) That each dominion shall have the right to repeal imperial legislation extending to the dominion. This will enable us to go through the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, and amending acts, and the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act of 1890, and repeal those sections that are not suited to our conditions.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

There are many sections which for the sake of ensuring uniformity in this country and the United Kingdom we may wish to leave there, at least for the time being; but there are other provisions which we shall probably wish to repeal at once, replacing them with enactments of our own.

(3) That each dominion shall have power to make laws having extra-territorial operation. That has been dealt with.

(4) That each dominion shall have full control over its own ships both extraterritorially and intraterritorially, and also full jurisdiction over all ships British or foreign which come into its harbours or territorial waters.

(5) That each dominion shall have full control over its own admiralty courts.

If these recommendations are put into effect, most of our present troubles with shipping legislation will disappear. It will be said that the new plan has some disadvantages. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George himself pointed out, however, that equality of status is not inconsistent with differentiation in function, and it may be advisable for many years to come to permit the imperial parliament to retain on its statute books legislation which applies to all the dominions, for the sake of preserving uniformity. The important point is that in all these respects in which repeal of that legislation and the passage of new legislation by ourselves should take place, it can take place. It does not follow that the present system must be entirely scrapped. We can retain the good and discard the bad, and do this all in a manner compatible with complete political equality between this country and Great Britain.

In conclusion, I want to say a few words about the broader aspects of the situation brought about by the Imperial conference of 1926 and the conference of 1929. After the war, Great Britain and her dominions were in their constitutional development confronted with three alternatives. They might remain as they were, stand still, preserve the status quo. Or they might move towards closer organic union along the lines laid out by Sir George Parkin in the early nineties, in his book on imperial federation. Or they might do as they have in fact done, establish perfect political equality between one another, while preserving the crown as the sole or main visible connecting link between them. The more the first two alternatives are considered, the more unwise, the more impracticable they appear. No one would argue to-day that either of these alternatives should be adopted or should have been adopted at the close of the war. Had either been adopted there are many people who believe, and I agree with them, that in all probability the British commonwealth of nations would not have held together. Believing as we do in the preservation of the British commonwealth of nations, we should have regarded such an eventuality as a misfortune to ourselves and a misfortune to the world. Happily, however, statesmanship found another way, a way that has led to these recommendations and to this resolution. What, after all, is the tie which binds the empire together? It is only the common sovereignty of the king? Or is it not also, as Professor Zimmern says, a common outlook upon public affairs, a common political philosophy, a common idealistic tradition? This outlook, this philosophy and this tradition have been and are based upon a deep love of liberty. It is because the recommendations which this resolution sanctions recognize the aspirations of the various parts of the British commonwealth of nations towards liberty, and reconcile these aspirations with some degree of organic unity, that they are highly worthy of support. Indeed, the work of the Imperial conference of 1926 and of the conference of 1929 on the operation of dominion legislation and merchant shipping legislation is a striking and notable proof of the political capacity, the genius for statesmanship, of the peoples of the British commonwealth of nations, and as such merits the approval of this house.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) on his part in the preparation of this report. I have often had to differ from the hon. gentleman; therefore it gives me great pleasure to be able to commend his work in matters regarding dominion status. In a recent editorial on the pages of the Ottawa Citizen I was reproved because I had given very little credit to the Liberal government. Let me say at this time that while the Liberal government cannot boast of any great accomplishments in the matter of domestic policy, especially as regards labour, I do feel that it has done good work from the standpoint of international relations. Perhaps the viewpoint of labour should not remain unexpressed in connection with this matter, especially since there is a labour administration in Great Britain.

This subject is of a highly technical and legal nature. The report deals with many matters concerning which I frankly admit I am not competent to speak. It does however relate to a question of great public importance in regard to which everyone should entertain a more or less definite opinion. It seems to me the report is a clear-cut dominion document; in it there are no modifying phrases such as "within the empire." The member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) regrets that the restraining opinion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) had not, owing to his absence, been exercised upon the Minister of Justice. I wish only that there had been an absence of the restraining sense of provincial rights; there it seems to me is one of the weaknesses of the report.

The member for St. Lawrence-St. George emphasizes the unity of empire. I am sure when we come to consider the matter we must agree that any unity must be founded on a living spiritual union rather than on musty legal documents. If legal bonds are necessary I submit that there is the same reason for such ties among the members of the League of Nations. After all we cannot stop at the small nation stage; we must go to the larger national unity. We cannot stop at the nation, we must go to the empire; we cannot stop at the empire, we must go to the world organization. To my mind the necessities of the case must ultimately drive us to the setting up of constitutional machinery for international relations. I do not intend to go into this phase of the matter at greater length. The member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) gave us a very excellent quotation on this point from the words of Professor Zimmern. The quarrel of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is not with this report but rather with that which preceded it, the report of 1926.

There are definite points to which I might call the attention of members of the house. Provision is made for the succession to the throne, yet there is no provision whatever for the appointment of the governor general. It seems to me that when we were considering the heir to the throne we might very well have given some consideration to the appointment of the Governor General of the Dominion. If it is in perfect keeping with the spirit of the conference of 1926 that the appointment of the Governor General of the Dominion should be left to Canada; indeed, I should like to go further and suggest that the time is very soon coming when the Governor General of Canada should be a Canadian. Action along this line already has been taken by Australia, I understand, and now that we have here our own representative of the government of Great Britain, who is able to perform a very important function, I cannot see why, if the King of England is our King, we should not have a governor general who is in a peculiar sense our own representative.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask a question? Does the hon. gentleman believe that it would be proper to have the Chief Justice of Canada as governor general and that the chief justice of each province should be lieutenant-governor de facto?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me that is an admirable suggestion and I do not see why it should not be carried out. It would save a great deal of unnecessary expense, and perhaps might avoid the setting up in this country of certain class distinctions that are not in harmony with the democratic traditions of newer countries.

I regret further that no provisions is made for Canada amending her own constitution. On page 29, article 66 of the report, we have the statement put very clearly:

> Nothing in this act shall be deemed to confer any power to repeal or alter the constitution acts of the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, and the Dominion of New Zealand, otherwise than in accordance with the law and constitutional usage and practice heretofore existing.

I wish, however, that occasion had been taken to make some provision for such alteration. I can understand that the minister may say he had no mandate, and perhaps that may be a justification.

We have provision in this report that in certain matters of legislation, Canada is not to be subordinated to Great Britain. On page 25 we find the following:

> No law and no provision of any law hereafter made by the parliament of a dominion shall be void or inoperative on the ground that it is repugnant to the law of England or to the provisions of any existing or future act of parliament or to any order, rule or regulation made thereunder, and the powers of the parliament of a dominion shall include the power to repeal or amend any such act, order, rule or regulation in so far as the same is part of the law of the dominion.

But let me point out that in these types of legislation the provinces are still subject to Great Britain. At page 31, section 71, I find the following:

> In the absence of special provision, provincial and state legislation will continue to be subject to the Colonial Laws Validity Act and to the legislative supremacy of the parliament of the United Kingdom, and it will be a matter for the proper authorities in Canada and in Australia to consider whether and to what extent it is desired that the principles to be embodied in the new act of the parliament of the United Kingdom should be applied to provincial and state legislation in the future.

Whilst the Minister of Justice may take the view that here again he had no mandate from Canada or from any province of Canada, a bolder policy would have given to the provinces in this regard the same rights that have been secured for the dominion. I often wonder when Canada will be mistress in her own house and when the provinces will find greater security in their fellow Canadians than they do in certain laws which are on the statute books of Great Britain.

I note in the daily press of May 21 that when this report was discussed the other day in the South African parliament an amendment was introduced affirming the right of South Africa to secede from the commonwealth. According to their view the recommendations of this report, to use the words of the news item, "must not be taken as derogating from the right of any member of the British commonwealth to withdraw therefrom." Their amendment was passed on the ground not that South Africa wished to secede but, again to use their own phrase, "in order to put the matter beyond a doubt." It seems to me that such a resolution is not necessary; indeed, I would suggest that it indicates what some modern psychologists have termed an inferiority complex. I take it that secession is an inalienable right of a free people, a sovereign nation. Fancy Great Britain debating the question of secession. If we are indeed as free as we are told we are under the present arrangement, then we ought not to have to discuss any matter of that kind. It will be recalled that the report of the Imperial conference of 1926 declared, in relation to the United Kingdom and the dominions, that they are autonomous communities within the British Empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any respect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegiance to the crown, and freely associated as members of the British commonwealth of nations.

Then again in this report there are the words:

> These principles of freedom, equality, and cooperation have slowly emerged from the experience of the self-governing communities now constituting that most remarkable and successful experiment in cooperation between free democracies which has ever been developed, the British commonwealth of nations. . . .

I take it that if our association is indeed that of cooperation, we must admit that we are free to take our own course having regard to the best interests of our own country. That does not mean that in any sense we are false to the larger group with whom we are associated.

However, there is another matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the house. I have been troubled over since 1926 by the question as to what is our relation to the parts of the British Empire which are not separate members of the League of Nations, the various crown colonies and dependencies. I have wondered further as to our relationship to the parts of the empire which, shall I say, are not self-governing. I think of one nation that is outstanding, in a class by itself; that is India. The question of India is discussed in the report before us at page 13 and at page 50, and the whole matter is left in abeyance, left to the government of Great Britain and to the government of India. I hesitate at this time to discuss a matter so complicated as that of British administration in India; I am loath in any way to embarrass the Labour government of Great Britain. I am doubtful whether, under arrangements existing since the Imperial conference of 1926, Canada has any direct responsibilities; hence any advice from us might be regarded as gratuitous. Yet I recall that some years ago, even under our previous status, this parliament took a stand regarding the granting of a larger measure of self-government to Ireland, and I do not know why such a stand was not taken at the conference in regard to India. India is a member of the League of Nations; Canada is a member both of the assembly and of the council, and if as members of the British commonwealth of nations we have not the right to advise Great Britain as to her policies in India, then I take it that we have a right to speak in that regard because of our common relationships in the League of Nations. Article 11, of the treaty of peace provides:

> It is also declared to be the friendly right of each member of the league to bring to the attention of the assembly or of the council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.

I confess that I have a profound respect for the ideals of Mr. Ghandi, even though I cannot endorse many of his methods. In the Times Book of India, which I have in my hand, there appears a full page picture of Lord Irwin in his viceregal robes. On the opposite page is a small insert of Mr. Ghandi, an insignificant squatting dark figure clad only in a loin cloth. Lord Irwin is of my own race, yet my sympathies are with Mr. Ghandi. In the future, Mr. Ghandi, in spite of what may seem to be fanatical eccentricities, may well be regarded as one of the greatest men of his age. Perhaps Lord Irwin will be remembered as having been the Viceroy of India during the time of Mr. Ghandi. It might be well for us to remember that Pilate, the representative of imperial Rome, is known to the world only because he was the governor who crucified an obscure Galilean, regarded then as now as a teacher of impractical and subversive doctrines.

Whether or not we have the right to speak because of our membership in the commonwealth of nations or because we are common members of the League of Nations, it seems to me that there is a common humanity and justice which transcends all national boundaries. I received the other day an appeal for self-government for India from some American leaders of thought, signed first of all by Mr. John Dewey, the veteran educationalist who has inspired so many. I will read one paragraph, as follows:

> It is no adequate answer to point to the obstacles in India to the establishment of a successful national government. They will not be overcome by foreign rule resting on bayonets. India has presented her case to the world against foreign government based solely on conquest, a government alien to her spirit and her desires, which despite the individual probity of its officials has exploited the Indian people and profoundly humiliated their spirit. Were the case for independence less strong it would still be true that no believer in democracy, no opponent of imperialism, no advocate of a fellowship of free peoples can accept the right of any British government to put down by force of arms the revolt of India's millions.

It may seem to be an insult for Americans to make an appeal of this character; yet it was only a few months ago that British leaders appealed against the American action in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, and in more recent times British leaders have appealed against the religious persecution which is said to be proceeding in Russia. I am loath to embarrass the British government by even mentioning this matter at this time, yet I am not at all sure that instead of embarrassing the government, outside opinion may help to strengthen the hand of the British Prime Minister. The views on India of the British Prime Minister were stated at the last League of Nations assembly. His address at that time included the following:

> Outside of Europe there is an old world, old in civilisation, old in philosophy, old in religion, old in culture, that hitherto had been weak in those material powers that have characterized the western peoples. But that old world, wrapped in slumber as we thought, has now become awake, and is now beginning to understand that national self respect which is taught and tutored very largely by ourselves. It is bringing our own ideas home to us, borne by its hands, and is asking us to honour the effects of our own action and grant it, not by charity, but because our own hearts are enlightened by the freedom we have been nourishing and nurturing for ourselves for so many generations.

The great danger of war, then, is this—that we may be too long in performing this act of recognition; that we, by our delays, by our half-heartedness, by our lack of courage, may accumulate forces in the political life of those nations that will present to us not a request, but an ultimatum, that will make its request in such a way that if obstacles can be placed in the way of granting them, they will be placed in the way of granting them. Never ought we to put the great east into a position where it says, "Our only chance of becoming free from undertakings that are too old to be observed now is to tear them up in the faces of those with whom we made them." That is the danger of war between one side of the world and the other, and by meeting that problem in time we shall extend the realm of peaceful negotiation, resulting in the liberties of the peoples of the earth. We will make allies instead of enemies when those peoples secure their freedom.

The statements of a certain section of British thought in this matter are very clearly put in a recent article which appeared in the Spectator, as follows:

The present government gave evidence of good intention by its decision to arrange a round table conference following upon publication of the report of the statutory commission. It is obvious, however, that Indian suspicion of British policy has not been allayed. . . One of the conditions of cooperation was what Mr. Ghandi calls "a change of heart" in the British government, to be signalised, in fact, by the round table conference being called to formulate a constitution on a dominion status basis. Did not Mr. Wedgwood Benn, in the House of Commons on December 18, refer to the "free and voluntary association of a great self-respecting nation in partnership with the British commonwealth for the promotion of the good of the world"? Mr. Ghandi and his friends, remembering no doubt that at party conferences the establishment of the Indian constitution on a permanent basis was accepted as the policy of a future Labour government, expected that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's government would act up to its promises, blithely ignoring the fact that it is now a minority government. And then, Lord Irwin, in his speech at Devali, fearful of the storm at home, insisted on the "undoubted right" of the British parliament to take the ultimate decision. The moment was ill-chosen for a reinforcement of that very British mental outlook which seems to the Indians a permanent obstacle to their aspirations.

According to the Spectator, it would seem quite possible that Mr. MacDonald's hands are to some extent tied at this time.

I have not time to do more than merely refer to the unfortunate history of India. During our schooldays we used to read of the times of Clive and Warren Hastings. Hon. members will recall how Clive laid this great empire at the feet of the nation. Defending himself against general attack in the House of Commons, Clive pointed to what he had accomplished by his annexation. I quote:

"Let the house," he said, "figure to itself a country consisting of 15,000,000 inhabitants, a revenue of four millions sterling, and a trade in proportion.

By progressive steps, the company have become the sovereigns of that empire."

But Macaulay, speaking of those same times, said:

The servants of the company obtained, not for their employers, but for themselves, a monopoly of almost the whole internal trade. They forced the natives to buy dear and sell cheap. They insulted with impunity the tribunals, the police, and the fiscal authorities of the country. They covered with their protection a set of native dependents, who ranged through the provinces, spreading desolation and terror wherever they appeared. Every servant of a British factor was armed with all the power of his master, and his master was armed with all the power of the company. Enormous fortunes were thus accumulated at Calcutta, while thirty millions of human beings were reduced to the extremity of wretchedness.

That was the cost in human degradation and suffering of the establishment of that portion of the great British Empire. We have often said that British administration of India has been a great success. Again I should like to quote a few sentences from a prominent authority, Mr. J. A. Hobson. He says:

It is pretty clear that, so far as the consent of the governed in any active sense is a condition of success in government, the British Empire in India has not succeeded. We are deceived by Eastern acquiescence, and our deception may even be attended by grave catastrophe unless we understand the truth. Mr. Townsend, who has brought close thought to bear upon the conditions of our hold of India, writes thus:

"Personal liberty, religious liberty, equal justice, perfect security—these things the empire gives; but then are these so valued as to overcome the inherent and incurable dull distaste felt by the brown men to the white men who give them? I doubt it."

As we review the most unfortunate incidents in the history of India under British rule, from the great Indian mutiny to more recent events, such as those connected with General Dwyer at Amritzar in 1919, it seems as if the present situation is but a continuation of those regrettable occurrences. Only the other day, May 20, 1930, I read in the Winnipeg Free Press the following despatch from India:

More than 200 persons were injured in a massed advance on the Dharasana salt works to-day as Indian Surat police beat unarmed volunteers with lathis.

The police kicked and prodded the non-violence raiders who swarmed the depot.

I personally saw over 200 in a temporary hospital where they were carried on stretchers by volunteers.

One has not time to go into the question of the economic exploitation of India, but I should like to read from the New Leader, one of the recognized organs of the Independent Labour party of Great Britain, an interview which was secured recently with Mr. C. F. Andrews, who, by the way, addressed public meetings in this city about a year ago and whom a number of members of parliament had an opportunity then of meeting. This is what he said:

He warned me that, having just voyaged over the Atlantic, he had not followed the news for ten days, but one point he was prepared to stress was that Mahatma Gandhi, in beginning his passive resistance movement by civil disobedience with regard to the salt tax, had the "entire sympathy" of all Indian leaders, whether moderate or otherwise. They all were equally opposed to this form of taxation, which hit the extremely poor more severely than any other class.

An instance of how the British press earns the bitter derision of Indians was the smart remark of the Times correspondent the other day to the effect that, after all, the agitation was much ado about nothing, since the salt tax meant only 7d. or 8d. a year.

"It is just in this that the iniquity of the tax lies," Mr. Andrews explained. "According to the official historians—such as Sir William Hunter—there are no less than 40 millions of people in India on the verge of starvation. Their diet consists of one bare meal a day, and this is made up of rice with salt as a condiment."

This is why the government salt monopoly has long been looked upon by all thinking people, whether British or Indian, who know the conditions, as a serious blot upon the British administration.

Some years ago this salt tax was actually doubled, by the fiat of the viceroy, against the vote in the assembly of practically every Indian member of whatever party. They pointed out then that it would hit the poorest of the poor.

England made a mistake when she tried to coerce the American colonies, and we know the dire results of a tax on tea. England made a mistake, it seems to me in so long refusing self-government to Ireland.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if my hon friend would mind if I asked him a question? Does he think at the present moment, in view of the very serious situation and the difficulties being experienced in preserving law and order in India, it is desirable that observations of that kind should go abroad from this parliament?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have only a few remarks more to make. As I said, I was loath to do anything whatever to embarrass the British government, if my poor words here would indeed embarrass them, but it seems to me from what I have already quoted from Mr. Ramsay MacDonald that he is as anxious as I or anybody else to settle this question by peaceful means, and I am not at all sure that an expression of opinion in this house may not do something to strengthen the hands of those who are seeking to settle matters by pacific means.

I was going to say that Great Britain advanced the cause of the British Empire in granting self-government to South Africa. It seems to me, as has been shown by the Minister of Justice this afternoon, that Great Britain has made a decided advance at the last Imperial conference the report of which we are discussing to-night.

Great Britain cannot be said to be the divinely appointed policeman of the world, and the sooner we get out of our heads the idea that she is, the better. My viewpoint to-night is simply this: if we believe in self-government for ourselves, why not urge that there be self-government for other portions of the British Empire? May I say to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) that I think that is a reasonable attitude? He may say that India is not as capable of self-government as we are. Possibly not, but when I was a child I remember we were told that Ireland was not ready for self-government and it took a long time before Great Britain came to the decision that Ireland was ready. We have to-day a few Irishmen who claim they were ready all along. I would urge that just as we desire self-government for ourselves, the time has come when a great body of people such as those in India ought to be given an opportunity, even though they may not immediately succeed, of working out their own destiny.

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I warmly welcome the resolution so ably introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and for two reasons I hope it will receive the unanimous support of the house. In the first place, the adoption of the resolution will involve acceptance without reservation of the doctrine that Canada is entitled to equality of status with Great Britain and the other British nations in that free association which, for want of a better name, is called the British commonwealth of nations. In the second place, it will be a definite mandate from this house to our Canadian representatives at the next imperial conference, whoever they may be, that when they speak at that conference their voice shall be that of Canadian autonomy over Canadian affairs, whether those affairs be external or domestic, and of free association of Canada with her equal sister British nations in that great league of British nations that has been established. Canada must at that conference play a role worthy of her place in the history of the British dominions, as the laboratory of constitutional experiment and the workshop of constitutional progress.

The Imperial conference of 1926 adopted a striking definition of the relationship of the dominions towards one another and towards Great Britain. I wish to repeat it here:

> They are autonomous communities within the British Empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegiance to the crown, and freely associated as members of the British commonwealth of nations.

Ever since that definition was framed there has been raging controversy as to its meaning, and many have directly challenged the accuracy and even the truth of the definition. There have been two distinct schools of thought, that of the legalist, who sees no change of legal machinery, and who denies that there has been any change of status; and that of the constitutionalist, who realizes that under the British system of government constitutional convention outgrows and replaces legal theory when the need for a change arises. The legalists trained in the atmosphere of the courts and steeped in legal precedents have stressed the purely legal argument. They point out that the Dominion of Canada owes its existence as a legal entity to the British North America Act, a statute passed by the parliament of Great Britain; that the British North America Act is the charter of Canada beyond which its legislatures, whether federal or provincial, cannot validly go, and that neither the dominion nor the provinces can amend its provisions. They argue also that Canada cannot validly give extra-territorial operation to its legislation. They contend that the status of Canada is that of a dependency, and they cap their argument by showing that all legislation passed by the parliament of Canada is subject to review and an unrestricted power of disallowance by the government of Great Britain and by advancing also the doctrine of the legislative sovereignty of the parliament of Great Britain over Canada. They point out as a legal fact that our legislation is subject to the restrictions of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, and that Canadian legislatures are powerless to pass valid legislation repugnant to any enactment of the parliament of Great Britain extending to Canada. Therefore, for example, Canada has no final control over her own shipping, nor over her own judicial system. The privy council has ruled that Canada cannot validly prohibit appeals to the privy council. In the face of these facts the legalists triumphantly proclaim: How can Canada be equal in status with Great Britain? The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and his distinguished predecessor in that office, the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) have been able and outstanding exponents of the point of view of the legalists. They even seem to gloat over the badges of legislative inferiority which have been pinned on Canada and her sister dominions. There is a great deal of force and much truth in the argument of the legalists; but they have not painted the complete picture. They have missed the spirit of the system of government under which we live. It has been left to our statesmen both in Great Britain and in the dominions assembled in solemn conference to catch the spirit of our constitutional position and embody it in the definition of equality of status to which I have just referred. They belong to the school of the constitutionalists, who realize that our constitution is a living thing capable of growth and expansion to meet the needs of changing conditions, and it is not confined to statutory enactments. They know that constitutional conventions are a vital part of our constitution and that these conventions have sanctions behind them at least as powerful as the sanctions of the law. Throughout the whole course of British constitutional development there has always been a distinction between legal theory and constitutional fact, between the legal power to act and the constitutional right to exercise that power. Frequently the legal forms are left unchanged and still remain on the statute books in theory, but the constitutional right to apply the forms has ceased in fact by reason of the development and crystalization of constitutional conventions and practice. In that distinction between legal power and constitutional right lies the vitality and capacity for growth of the British constitution. For example, the king has still the unrestricted legal power of veto, but he has not exercised that power for over two hundred years, and his constitutional right to exercise it no longer exists. Similarly, the government of Great Britain has still by virtue of section 56 of the British North America Act unrestricted legal power to disallow every single act of legislation that we may pass this session. But who will admit their constitutional right to exercise that legal power? What would happen, Mr. Speaker, if they sought to exercise it? The power of disallowance has not been exercised for fifty-seven years, and by reason of the constitutional convention that has grown up that it should not be exercised, the constitutional right to exercise it is as dead as the royal veto. Similarly, other constitutional conventions have grown up with the result that the constitutional status of the dominions has changed, and the Imperial conference of 1926 accepted the doctrine of equality of status as a matter of constitutional right and reality, no matter what the legal status might be.

The Imperial conference of 1926 said that equality of status is the root principle governing the relations between the dominions and Great Britain, but it recognized very frankly that existing administrative legislative and judicial forms are not wholly in accord with the constitutional position defined by it, and recommended that steps should be taken by Great Britain and by the dominions with a view to overhauling and repairing our legal machinery, so that legal theory might be brought into conformity with constitutional fact. It was recognized that in the case of the relationship of the dominions towards one another and towards Great Britain constitutional development had so far outgrown legal theory that legal change was essential in order that a broad foundation of autonomy and equality might be laid for the new structure of the future.

The report which is now before this house is that of the conference which was appointed by Great Britain and the dominions to carry out the recommendations of the Imperial conference of 1926 and is the result of their deliberations.

Mr. BENNETT: Not to carry them out, but to determine what had to be done to carry them out.

Mr. THORSON: It deals with a great number of matters of complexity and importance, but I shall confine myself to those recommendations of the report which, when carried into effect will increase our autonomy over our own affairs, remove the badges of legislative inferiority that we now wear, and give us that full self-government and equality of status to which we are entitled as a matter of legal as well as constitutional right.

In the first place, the conference recognizes that the dominions should have the same right to give extraterritorial operation to its legislation as is possessed by Great Britain with respect to its own enactments. There has been great controversy whether this right is not already possessed by the dominions. I have held the view that this parliament does possess the power to give extraterritorial operation to its legislation in order that it might effectively and adequately act within its own sphere of jurisdiction, and that the decisions of the courts denying that power are based on wrong principles. But it is proposed to place this question beyond all dispute and to recognize the power without any reservations whatsoever by an enactment of the parliament of Great Britain to the following effect:

> It is hereby declared and enacted that the parliament of a dominion has full power to make laws having extraterritorial operation.

When that enactment is passed one of the badges of legislative inferiority will drop from our lapels, and it will not be open to our courts to declare that our legislation is invalid by reason of its being extraterritorial in its operation. We shall then have fuller control and greater autonomy over such matters as fisheries, taxation, shipping, air navigation, radio communication, marriage, criminal law, smuggling, immigration, deportation, and other matters involving extraterritoriality. Who can deny that these are all matters of self-government in which the Canadian people are vitally interested? Why then should our antonomy over them be any longer restricted?

Mr. BENNETT: May I ask the hon. gentleman how it would increase our legislative powers with respect to deportation and radio communication? The privy council has held that we have full power of deportation. How would it widen our legislative powers with respect to radio communication?

Mr. THORSON: That question I shall not deal with at the moment. When the recommendations of this report are implemented we shall have absolute equality of status with Great Britain in this respect, and I think this parliament may be trusted to pass reasonable legislation within the jurisdiction it possesses.

A great portion of the report deals with the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865. That act has had a curious history. When it was enacted it was described as "an act to remove doubts as to the validity of colonial laws," and its purpose undoubtedly was to extend the powers of self-government of colonial legislatures beyond the narrow limits which had been assigned to them by judicial decisions particularly in the courts of South Australia. But at the same time the act imposed restrictions upon the legislative powers of the dominions in that it rendered void all acts passed by the dominions to the extent of their repugnancy to legislation of the parliament of Great Britain extending to the dominions. The parliament of Great Britain has in the past asserted and exercised its legislative sovereignty over the dominions, notwithstanding the various constitutional acts, such as the British North America Act, with all their implications of self-government, by extending its legislation to the dominions. Where it has done so it has abridged the right of self-government of the dominions affected and cut down their autonomy. The parliament of Great Britain has acted in this manner for the purpose of obtaining in respect of important legislation uniformity throughout the dominions. But it is recognized by the report that this procedure is no longer constitutionally appropriate in the case of the dominions in view of their constitutional equality of status with Great Britain. It is proposed therefore to repeal the Colonial Laws Validity Act in its application to laws made by the dominion parliaments, and to remove the restrictions upon their rights of self-government which were imposed by the operation of the act. It is proposed to accomplish this by an enactment of the parliament of Great Britain in the following terms:

(1) The Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, shall cease to apply to any law made by the parliament of a dominion.

When this legislation is enacted two other badges of Canadian legislative inferiority will disappear. This parliament will have full and complete control over Canadian shipping—a control which it does not possess to-day. It will of course be desirable to have uniformity as far as possible in the matter of shipping legislation, and the Canadian parliament can be trusted in that respect. But that uniformity will hereafter be the result of willing cooperation and concurrent legislation; it will no longer be imposed upon Canada by a parliament which is not responsible to the Canadian people.

The privy council has ruled in the case of Rex v. Nadan that the Canadian people cannot prohibit appeals to the privy council, even if they should wish to do so. That is a denial of self-government; for how can it be said that we have full self-government if the judicial function of government upon which we depend for the administration of justice, for the adjudication of our rights and the preservation of our liberties, is withheld from us, or we are restricted in the scope of its exercise? When this legislation is enacted it will be within the power of this parliament to abolish appeals to the privy council, at any rate in respect of all matters over which this parliament has jurisdiction. Whether this parliament should within its competence abolish appeals to the privy council is perhaps a matter of opinion, but surely there can be no question that Canada should have the right to abolish such appeals if, in the exercise of her free judgment she wishes to take such action. The abolition of appeals from Canadian courts to the judicial committee of the privy council is for the Canadian people to decide, and for no one else.

The report goes further, Mr. Speaker, than merely to recommend an increase of autonomy to the parliaments of the dominions, and to indicate the means whereby such an increase is to be brought about. The fundamental principle underlying the report is that of equality of status of all the British nations that are to be affected by the report, and the right of all of them to full self-government, complete autonomy over their own affairs, and freedom from external supervision or control. That autonomy cannot be effectively exercised, and the right of self-government is not complete, so long as the parliament of Great Britain asserts or exercises its legislative sovereignty over the dominions, otherwise than at their request and with their consent. The doctrine of the sovereignty of the parliament of Great Britain over the dominions is absolutely inconsistent with the conception of equality of status that has been accepted. It is recognized by the report that the parliament of Great Britain has no longer the constitutional right to exercise its legal powers of sovereignty over the dominions otherwise that at their request and with their consent. It is recommended—and this is the most important recommendation contained in the whole report—that the parliament of Great Britain shall renounce its sovereignty over the dominions in so far as it is within its power to make such a renunciation. That, Mr. Speaker, is the outstanding recommendation of the report, and the fundamental principle upon which the whole report is based. It is recommended that this renunciation of sovereignty should be embodied in a constitutional convention, and that the constitutional convention should be placed in the proceedings of the coming Imperial conference in these words:

It would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all members of the commonwealth in relation to one another that no law hereafter made by the parliament of the United Kingdom shall extend to any dominion otherwise than at the request, and with the consent of that dominion;

It is further recommended that this constitutional convention itself should appear as a formal recital or preamble in the proposed enactment of the parliament of Great Britain, and in order that there might be no doubt about the matter it is recommended that this principle should also be expressed in the enacting portion of the proposed constitutional act in the following terms:

> Be it therefore declared and enacted that no act of parliament hereafter made shall extend or be deemed to extend to a dominion unless it is expressly declared therein that the dominion has requested and consented to the enactment thereof.

That, Mr. Speaker, is, in my opinion, the most effective renunciation of the doctrine of the legislative sovereignty of the parliament of Great Britain over the dominions that it would be possible for that parliament to make. When that renunciation takes place there will be a binding agreement of equality of status between Great Britain and the dominions and a pledge that the parliament of Great Britain will not exercise its legislative powers in respect of the dominions otherwise than at their request and with their consent. This will mark the constitutional end of the doctrine of the sovereignty of the parliament of Great Britain over the dominions and the termination of their colonial status as dependencies of Great Britain. When effect has been given to these recommendations, the constitutional right of the parliament of Great Britain to exercise its legislative powers over the dominions, otherwise than at their request and with their consent, will be dead. It will be as constitutionally dead as the royal veto power, and the power of disallowance. One more badge of legislative inferiority will fall to the ground.

Only one badge of legislative inferiority then remains in Canada, and it will depend upon Canada herself how long she will continue to wear it. The constitution of Canada, so far as it depends upon the British North America Act, is left untouched, and no power of amending that act is conferred. In fact it will be provided in the proposed constitutional act that Canada shall not be allowed to repeal or alter the British North America Act otherwise than in accordance with the law and constitutional usage and practice heretofore existing. It is not defined in the report what that constitutional usage and practice is. It will not be possible for Canada, in view of these provisions, to repeal those sections of the British North America Act which provide for the disallowance of Canadian legislation by the government of Great Britain and the reservation of bills for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure. It is recognized by the report however that these powers are constitutionally dead and that if the dominion parliament wishes to have the provisions relating to them deleted from the British North America Act, all that will be necessary will be to make the request, and the necessary machinery will be automatically set in motion.

It will be further provided in the proposed constitutional act that the dominion parliament will not be authorized to encroach upon the provincial field of jurisdiction. There is to be included in the proposed constitutional act the following clause:

> Nothing in this act shall be deemed to authorize the parliament of the Dominion of Canada or the parliament of the commonwealth of Australia to make laws on any matter at present within the authority of the provinces of Canada or the states of Australia, as the case may be, not being a matter within the authority of the parliaments or governments of the Dominion of Canada and the commonwealth of Australia, respectively.

The constitutional status of the provinces remains unchanged, and their legislative jurisdiction remains intact. The conference felt that it had no authority to speak for the provinces, and that the terms of reference did not extend to them. When effect is given to the recommendations of the report this parliament will have no more power to amend the British North America Act or to encroach upon the provincial field of jurisdiction than it has had heretofore. Certain curious anomalies will result in our federal system. While the dominion parliament will receive a very substantial increase of autonomy in its sphere of jurisdiction there will be no increase of autonomy to the provincial legislatures. The provinces will remain subject to the Colonial Laws Validity Act and the legislative sovereignty of the parliament of Great Britain. They will continue to be dependent political entities; they will continue to be restricted in their rights of self-government, even within their own spheres of jurisdiction. They will not possess that full autonomy over their own affairs which every self-governing body ought to have. For example, while it will be competent for the dominion parliament to abolish appeals to the privy council in respect of subject matters within its jurisdiction, it will not be competent for the provinces to prohibit such appeals, even in respect of those subject matters which are assigned to the British North America Act to the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces; for the Colonial Laws Validity Act steps in and prohibits them from so doing. The provinces will remain in their inferior legislative position until they take steps themselves to improve it. The report indicates however the solution of the problem when it points out that it will be a matter for the proper authorities in Canada to consider whether, and to what extent, it is desired that the principle to be embodied in the proposed constitutional act of the parliament of Great Britain should be applied in the future to provincial legislation. I cannot believe that the provinces of Canada will willingly continue in this status of legislative inferiority as compared with that of the dominion, when they fully appreciate the significance of these constitutional changes, and their own anomalous position in relation thereto. I agree with the suggestion that an interprovincial conference should again be called for the purpose of removing the absurd anomalies which now exist, and also for the purpose of working out a scheme for amending our constitution in a manner suited to our changing needs, and conducive to a national development of which all Canadians may be proud. The problem of devising machinery for amending our own constitution is a Canadian problem for the Canadian people to solve. Its solution will require mutual confidence of the provinces in one another and in the dominion. When we in Canada solve that problem the last badge of legislative inferiority can be taken down; it is within our own power to remove it. When we have agreed among ourselves as to our constitutional machinery for amending our constitution, the parliament of Great Britain will automatically give legal effect to our wishes, and in that respect it will be an automatic machine registering legal effect upon the wishes of the Canadian people.

In conclusion may I say that the growth of Canada towards national status and nationhood is both right and inevitable. Canada is no longer a dependency of Great Britain; she does not belong to the people of Great Britain; she belongs to the people of Canada. Canada is a nation; we are united—and are glad to be united—with the people of Great Britain in common allegiance to the one crown, but our union however is that of equality and free association. We are British subjects; we are proud of being British subjects, and we are British subjects just as are the people of Great Britain. Is there any reason why we should not enjoy self-government in Canada to as full an extent as the people of Great Britain do? Is there any reason why our autonomy over our own affairs should be any less that their autonomy over theirs? I can think of no such reason, nor can any Canadian who is proud of his country and anxious to promote its full development. The spirit of the British constitution belongs to us in Canada just as it belongs to the people of Great Britain, and we are joint heirs with the people of Great Britain to the great traditions of liberty upon which the British constitution is founded. What is the essence of the British constitution? Let me express it very simply. It is the right of all peoples who live under it to self-government and autonomy over their own affairs. It is because we value that right that we desire effect to be given to this resolution. I am not alarmed, Mr. Speaker, over the future of Canada, because I have faith in Canada and in the genius of the Canadian people to work out a destiny for her, worthy of her great potentialities. That destiny belongs to Canada, and the responsibility for it lies with the Canadian people. I am willing to leave it in their hands. The future of our relationships with our equal sister British nations rests now upon the broad foundations of autonomy and self-government. That foundation is the strongest and safest foundation for the superstructure of the future that the genius of British statemanship has ever been able to devise.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the house at any great length, but I feel that I should not let this opportunity pass without congratulating the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) on the splendid work he did personally on behalf of Canada at the Imperial conference of 1929. I also congratulate the last speaker (Mr. Thorson) on his concluding remarks, in which he very ably summed up the position in which we find ourselves to-day.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, as an adopted son of this country, to stand in this parliament to-night and welcome with acclaim—and I think it will meet with unanimous approval—a report which definitely indicates the achievement on the part of Canada of the status of equality and freedom as a nation. With the change in the position of the Governor General, as determined in 1926, administrative control ceased; with the changes that are now proposed in the report which has been submitted to us, legislative control will cease. What then is left? There is left the union in the monarch, of which we are proud and with which we are satisfied.

Perhaps at this moment it may not be inappropriate very briefly to sum up in the words of the report itself the accomplishments of the committee. I am going to take the liberty of quoting from my notes in this regard. The report determined, by its resolutions, first the doctrine that it is the right of the government of each dominion to advise the crown in all matters relating to its own affairs, and that consequently it would not be in accordance with constitutional practice for advice to be tendered to His Majesty by His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom in any matter appertaining to the affairs of a dominion against the views of the government of that dominion. Further:

It is hereby declared and enacted that the parliament of a dominion has full power to make laws having extraterritorial operation.

There is no inferiority there; it is complete equality, complete national status. Then the report proceeds:

The Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, shall cease to apply to any law made by the parliament of a dominion.

And further:

No law and no provision of any law hereafter made by the parliament of a dominion shall be void or inoperative on the ground that it is repugnant to the law of England or to the provisions of any existing or future act of parliament or to any order, rule or regulation made thereunder, and the powers of the parliament of a dominion shall include the power to repeal or amend any such act, order, rule or regulation in so far as the same is part of the law of the dominion.

And again:

It would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all members of the commonwealth in relation to one another that no law hereafter made by the parliament of the United Kingdom shall extend to any dominion otherwise than at the request and with the consent of that dominion.

Referring to the British Nationality Act, it is determined that it is fully recognized that his common status is in no way inconsistent with the recognition within and without the commonwealth of the distinct nationality possessed by the nationals of the individual states of the British commonwealth.

The new position will be that each dominion will, amongst its other powers, have full and complete legislative authority over all ships within its territorial waters or engaged in its coasting trade, also over its own registered ships both intraterritorially and extraterritorially. The existing situation of control in the United Kingdom of admiralty courts in the dominions is not in accord with the present constitutional status of the dominions, and the recommendation is that this should be remedied.

Our recommendation is that each dominion in which the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890, is in force should have power to repeal that act.

The report goes on:

Our general conclusions on the operation of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, and reservation and disallowance are applicable to the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890. As soon as the legislation necessary to give effect to these recommendations is passed, each dominion will be free to repeal if and when desired the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890, in so far as that act relates to that dominion, and may then establish admiralty courts under its own laws.

I cannot for the life of me understand the mental attitude or the expressed attitude of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) on this whole question, but perhaps I had better deal with that later. Then the report goes on to state that a statute ought to be passed declaring as follows:

Be it therefore declared and enacted that no act of parliament hereafter made shall extend or be deemed to extend to a dominion unless it is expressly declared therein that that dominion has requested and consented to the enactment thereof.

And further:

Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provisions of this act—

(1) Sections seven hundred and thirty-five and seven hundred and thirty-six of the Merchant shipping Act, 1894, shall be construed as though reference therein to the legislature of a British possession did not include reference to the parliament of a dominion.

(2) Section four of the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890 (which requires certain laws to be reserved for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure or to contain a suspending clause), and so much of section seven of that act as requires the approval of His Majesty in council to any rules of court for regulating the practice and procedure of a colonial court of admiralty, shall cease to have effect in any dominion as from the commencement of this act.

If the above recommendations are adopted, acquisition by the parliaments of the dominions of full legislative powers will follow as a necessary consequence. These are the words of the report itself. It continues:

By the removal of all such restrictions upon the legislative powers of the parliaments of the dominions and the consequent and effective recognition of the equality of these parliaments with the parliament of the United Kingdom, the law will be brought into harmony with the root principle of equality governing the free association of the members of the British commonwealth of nations.

The recommendations submitted have been framed—

And will be adopted.

—with the object of carrying into full effect the equality of status established as the root principle governing the relations of the members of the commonwealth, and indicating methods for maintaining and strengthening the practical system of free cooperation which is its instrument.

So without any question of qualification we have, by an agreement among ourselves, definitely created an equality of status and freedom in undertakings as between each other.

I stated a moment ago that I could not understand the position taken by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. That gentleman is a learned representative of the legal profession, and a constitutionalist of no mean standing. He painted this afternoon a picture of such disaster that even I quaked. According to him, the report was in itself destructive to the entire political unity of what he called the empire. It affected shipping, it destroyed the confidence of those great interests with whom he is well acquainted as to the future of the shipping relations of this country and the other dominions. At the same time he pointed out—this is the strange contradiction—that whilst the report was tremendously disastrous and full of dangerous possibilities, it was at the same time infantile and futile. I could not for the life of me understand the attitude of the hon. member who is so learned in matters of this character. If I were not a very young and modest member of this house, if I were not a layman and therefore possessing no aspirations to the learning attributed quite properly to the legal profession, if I were a constitutionalist and not a humble student, I might have the temerity to refer to the remarks of the hon. gentleman in the words used by Lloyd George on a somewhat similar occasion. At that time Lloyd George was referring to some remarks made by Lord Roseberry, and I make this impression without any offence. The remarks of the hon. gentleman seemed to be like one of those torpedoes used by the navy for practice purposes. It looks like a torpedo, it acts exactly like a torpedo, but just about the time you expect it is going to blow something to pieces, it comes to the surface and fizzles itself into extinction. The speech of the hon. gentleman was for all the world just like that. I anticipated an explosion; I anticipated that at least an amendment would be offered, but we find there is no amendment, no real opposition offered to the report. I must content myself with asserting that even the Conservative opposition in this house seems to be in accord with the general tenor of the report, and will, I venture to say, agree to the passage of the recommendations without calling for a vote. In so doing I think they are wise, they are acting as Canadians, they are expressing by their attitude the position taken by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in speaking on the budget this year when he said "Canada first."

Because of the Imperial conference, Canada's constitutional equality has rapidly materialized until there is left only something for the lawyers and parliament to finish. When that is done, it will be an accomplished fact. Canada will then be able to take her proper place in the world as a nation. We are on the threshold of that day, but what of the future? Canada must have a foreign policy. If we continue to leave to others the determination of our international relations then we have not accepted the responsibilities which go with our national status. In this connection two main points occur to me. The first is, the war relations between this country and the United Kingdom. The next is, our relations with European troubles.

In connection with the United Kingdom, I would like to ask these questions: Are we to declare our willingness to be guided by successive British governments? Are we to agree to all their projects? Are we to endorse whatever they do? Are we to involve ourselves by a blanket assent given possibly years before the event? Are we to place ourselves in that humiliating position, or are we to assert a purpose of self-direction governed by self-respect? Are we ourselves to be the determinators of our future in our relationships with other nations? Are we to express the desire and intention to think and to act for ourselves, "guided by our own interests"? I use once more the words of the leader of the opposition. It will be gratifying to most members of the house to know that in certain unmistakable and quite significant ways we have indicated ourselves as being in favour of this latter attitude, the self-regarding attitude. Not only that, but that has been done unanimously and unhesitatingly.

There have been four converging lines of action, now historic, which we have followed. One of the greatest Canadians of this generation, one of the men with whom I am proud to have lived, a man who when outside Canada discovered that his Canadianism blossomed as the rose on the prairie, a man who went away an imperialist and away became a Canadian, Sir Robert Borden, secured in 1919 the adoption of the practice of inserting in British treaties a clause which provided as follows:

The present treaty shall impose no obligation upon any of the dominions of the British Empire, unless and until it is approved by the parliament of the dominion concerned.

The second converging line is this: The learned and always very genial Minister of Justice and his colleague (Mr. Mackenzie King) saw the adoption, as reported in the 1926 conference report on page 19, of an agreement that each of the six dominions would act as though they were, as indeed they have become, six kingdoms, making their own treaties. The employment of the Borden clause became unnecessary as the king would not in future make a treaty on behalf of the whole empire and insert a clause in such treaty which exempted from its operation those dominions which might not approve of it. The treaties now would be made on behalf of only those parts or portions of the empire that were to be bound by the treaty. For example, a British treaty would be one entered into by the king on behalf of the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland, and it would not involve any of the dominions. The point to which I have referred are the methods by which we indicated our separation from British foreign policy. We are taking a different stand in respect of treaty matters; that was the commencement stage. Did we ever assert a definite foreign policy of our own? Yes. We have an excellent illustration of that in our attitude toward the Locarno treaty in 1925. The United Kingdom through that treaty assumed very serious obligations involving participation in war between France and Germany, and Belgium and Germany, but this treaty contained the exemption clause and Canada declined the assumption of obligation in this matter. The United Kingdom is bound, but Canada is not.

The fourth converging line is that in respect to the Lausanne treaty. Departing from the precedent established by Sir Robert Borden in 1919, the British government in 1923 entered into a treaty with Turkey and omitted to insert the exempting clause. I do not know just why that omission occurred. I have my own opinion, but I am not going to give it to the house at the present moment. At any rate, that treaty provided for the following:

1. Freedom in peace and war of navigation of the straits.

2. Demilitarization of extents of Turkish territory on both sides of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus and certain funny little Turkish islands, with Greek names, in the Aegean sea and the Sea of Marmora.

3. Under article XVIII, subclause (b):

Should the freedom and navigation of the straits or the security of the demilitarized zones be imperilled by a violation of the provisions relating to freedom of passage, or by a surprise attack or some act of war or threat of war, the high contracting parties, and in any case France, Great Britain, Italy and Japan, acting in conjunction, will meet such violation, attack, or other act of war or threat of war, by all the means that the Council of the League of Nations may decide for this purpose.

This treaty was entered into in the name of the British Empire. Canada was not a party to the negotiations. Canada had not even been invited to be present at the negotiations, and when subsequently we were invited by Great Britain to ratify and sign the treaty, for the reasons I have given Canada refused. I think Canada is to be congratulated on the courage her Prime Minister showed at that time. The temptation was great, the situation was acute and there was a great deal of propaganda in both the British and the Canadian press, but the Prime Minister rose to the occasion and declined to become a party to the treaty. It may be said that constitutionally we are bound. Very well, but morally we are not.

These four considerations, these four converging lines to which I have drawn attention, make very clear our intention to form our own policy. In short, we will not engage in war simply because the United Kingdom is engaged in war. That does not mean that we shall not go to war to the assistance of the United Kingdom in the event of certain circumstances, but it means that we are not bound to do so nor are we automatically at war just because the United Kingdom is at war.

Supposing the position to be that we were involuntarily at war because the United Kingdom was at war, let me give the house an illustration. It may appear to some to be an exaggerated one, but to me it seems to be quite a natural one. Take the situation of the French dependencies, the Senegalese, the other African colonies, the Algerians, the Moors. During the last great war these dependencies of France were reservoirs from which France drew large numbers of fighting men. Germany did the same thing with her colonies; she drew from them large numbers of fighting troops and threw them into the conflict. These Africans knew nothing of the conflict, nothing of its merits, cared nothing for them. They had no direct interest in them and yet they killed and were killed. That is an appalling spectacle. Yet contrast that with our own situation. Was there any excuse for them? There was. They were not men learned in the art of government. They were not men who had studied this matter, who had an international point of view, and they were subject races. We are not a subject race, nor are we unlearned in the art of national government. Therefore by no stretch of the imagination can anyone justify the position where we should become a mere reservoir of fighting men and be automatically at war because Great Britain is at war. We may assert for ourselves the right definitely to determine for ourselves, or we may, if we will, renounce that right and do as we are told. I ask the house: What choice is it now going to make? Shall we act as an intelligent, self-respecting nation, or shall we proclaim our inability to judge for ourselves, to construct our own foreign policy in our own interest, and involuntarily follow the lead of others to the butcher's block of war in the future? There is the position in which we find ourselves. On which road are we going to place our feet? One or other of these alternatives we must choose.

As regards further reasons in this matter, I want to ask whether hon. members are fully satisfied that in every war since 1763 there were the essential elements requiring the use of arms; or could war have been avoided? Let us glance over some of them: the Anglo-American war of 1812-14 the Crimean war, the Afghan war, the Chinese war, the Zulu war, the Boer war, the Egyptian war and finally, the great war. There may be hon. gentlemen still who would exempt the last war from that category. They might say that that war was essential and unavoidable. If those gentlemen still assert that, I submit to them they have not read the criticism of the last war. They have not read the studies that have been made by others in connection with it. Let me refer to an article written by one of the most lauded and distinguished Conservatives in the Dominion of Canada. Writting in the Queen's Quarterly, volume 36, 1929, in a magnificent article that I ask the house to read when it has the leisure, Sir George Foster has this to say:

> How this after-study and research into the preceding diplomacy and subsequent conduct of the war dispels our war-time illusions and lays bare the trickery and falsehood played upon our most sacred feelings of patriotism and willingness to sacrifice life and fortune for the fair cause of justice and liberty!

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Played upon!

> One would only have had to eliminate less than a dozen individuals in Europe to have made it certain that the world would have been spared the holocaust of blood and suffering which took ten million of lives and caused twenty million casualties and brought untold misery to countless women and children the world over.

Those are not the words of a so called radical. Those are not the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). They are the words of Sir George Foster, one of the most distinguished members of the Conservative party of the Dominion of Canada.

If further justification may be desirable, it can be found in the wide dissimilarity between the British and the Canadian situation, a dissimilarity which cannot be better stated than in the language of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen himself. Mr. Meighen said:

> Our geography is different, our neighbourhood is different, our racial composition is different. The assets stored by nature in our soil—they are also different. No two nations of this empire have the same path to travel.

Note the words:

> No two nations in this matter have the same path to travel. Each encounters difficulties and enjoys advantages all its own. . . . Canada, for example, is a nation of about 9,000,000 spread over half a continent. You are 45,000,000 people gathered on two small islands. You have a homogeneous population. Only about one-half of ours have origin in these islands, and one-third are of French descent. Your transportation is almost wholly by sea, ours is mainly by land. But the contrast that is emphasized most is this. You are a mighty nation, for five centuries in the forefront of the world, you live on the edge of Europe, and around you are great competitive powers. Your foreign policy has of necessity been the chief pre-occupation of your government. We are a young nation just grown to a nation's stature. We have one neighbour, and one only, and that one an industrial colossus. It lies four thousand miles along our border, producing what we produce, and doing constant battle to forestall us in the world's markets. There is the big dominating fact that meets Canadians every morning. Save for the period of the great war, commercial questions have absorbed our minds. To achieve a measure of independence in commerce and transportation has been the constant care of our statesmen.

Those words, attributed to Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, may be found in a Canadian press despatch from London dated July 31, 1921.

On another occasion Right Hon. Arthur Meighen truly said that the burden on British statesmen at the present moment was nearly beyond comprehension, that there was hardly any point of Europe or Asia where Britain was not facing a responsibility or a problem. It ought to be observed at this stage that the interests of Canada differ quite materially from those of Australia and New Zealand. Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdome face some of these problems together. For example, these three states agree upon the necessity for the establishment of a very expensive naval base at Singapore. To Canada that is of little importance, and we decline to contribute to its cost. Again, in the matter of the military defence of the Suez canal this has been and still is a perpetual source of anxiety to the British government. It is thought to be of fundamental importance to Australia and New Zealand. It is one of the chief international danger spots. But Canada has as little interest in the subject as, for example, the Union of South Africa. I use the word "interest" there in the sense of direct interest, and not as meaning such interest as may be involved in consequence to others. If Canada is to tie herself for war purposes to the United Kingdom, I say that that should be accomplished by an alliance. It should be a well considered alliance. It should not be by mere abnegation of our own freedom and self-respect. This, Mr. Speaker, is not a new idea. When introducing the federation bill on the 6th of February, 1856, Sir John A. Macdonald used these very appropriate words—I am quoting from the confederation debates:

> I am satisfied that great as has been our increase in the past twenty-five years since the union of Upper and Lower Canada, our future progress during the next quarter of a century will be vastly greater and when we become a nation of eight or nine millions of inhabitants—

That day is now reached:

> Our alliance will be worthy of being sought by the great nations of the earth.

We can echo the "hear, hear" that then greeted Sir John A. Macdonald's words. He continued.

> I am proud to believe that our desire for a permanent alliance will be reciprocated in England. I know that there is a party in England, but it is inconsiderable in numbers, though strong in intellect in power—which speaks of the desirability of getting rid of the colonies; but I believe such is not the feeling of the statesmen and the people of England. I believe it will never be the deliberately expressed determination of the government of Great Britain. The colonies are now in a transition state. Gradually a different colonial system is being developed—and it will become, year by year, less a case of dependence on our part, and of overruling protection on the part of the mother country, and more the case of a healthy and cordial alliance.

On another occasion in a letter to Sir Charles Tupper, on the 12th of March following, Sir John A. Macdonald, in declining to offer contingents for the Soudan war, said:

> The time has not arrived nor the occasion for our volunteering military aid to the mother country. We do not stand at all in the same position as Australia. The Suez canal is nothing to us, and we do not ask England to quarrel with France or Gemany for our sakes. The offer of those colonies is a good move on their part, and somewhat like Cavour's sending Sardinian troops to the Crimea. Why should we waste money and men in this wretched business?

I am quoting Sir John A. Macdonald. Again:

> Reciprocal aid to be given by the colonies and England should be a matter of treaty deliberately entered into and settled on a permanent basis.

I submit at this stage that it may be difficult to reach agreement upon a treaty for a war alliance. At any rate, it may also be said that discussion of the proposal would be valuable. It would probably make clear to us the propriety of keeping our foreign policy under our own control and the necessity for a perfectly frank renunciation of the notion that Canada ought to engage in a war merely because the United Kingdom is engaged in it. The merits of it, and our interest in it, must in each case be a matter for our consideration.

Let us take next our attitude towards the European—may I call it in slang?—the European mess. Assuming, then, that Canada in framing our foreign policy will be guided by her own views rather than by the views of the British government, what is to be our attitude toward European quarrels? Under stress of war mentality after the war, we assumed certain obligations under clauses X and XVI of the covenant of the league of nations. We soon realized our mistake in that regard, and through our delegates to the league did our best to emasculate clause X. Upon the last occasion, in 1923, we had twenty-nine states voting with us. Persia alone voted no. The British representative at the session wisely said of the vote that "though of no binding effect it will no doubt in practice have a great influence on the conduct of members." Article XVI of the covenant provided that:

> Should any member of the league resort to war in disregard of its covenants under Articles XII, XIII or XV, it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately—

And so forth. The rigour of the clause has, however, in various ways been modified, and in 1929 in connection with the negotiation of the Locarno treaties, the United Kingdom, France, Italy and Belgium gave to Germany a memorandum declaring that the clause:

—must be understood to mean that each state member of the league is bound to cooperate loyally and effectively in support of the covenant and in resistance to any act of aggression, to an extent which is compatible with its military situation and takes its geographical position into account.

Those latter words qualify the commitment under clause 16 to a position which leaves the decision entirely to the nations concerned.

Geographically I submit that Canada is a part of North America. Is she therefore for war purposes to regard herself as part of Europe? I submit no. We can never by any stretch of the imagination induce the French to love the Germans, the Slavs the Turks, the Turks the Greeks, or the Greeks somebody else. We can only do what we can to cooperate with other nations in arriving at some solution of the problem But that solution in my opinion will never be found by making ourselves a part of Europe for war purposes. Make us a part for peace purposes, if you will, and let us stop at that. Canada is not European, she is North American, and we should pursue our policy based on that fact.

It may not be inappropriate at this stage to direct attention to the contrast pointed out by Sir Robert Borden in his Canadian Constitutional Studies. At pages 139 and 140 of that fine little set of studies Sir Robert said:

Of those who took part in the peace conference at Paris some at least returned to this continent with a sense of depression. The fierce antagonisms, the ancient hatreds, and the bitter jealousies of European nationals there assembled were not inspiring. Neither in its methods nor in its results can the highest success be claimed for the peace conference. The creation or recognition of numerous small states, whose populations are wholly untrained in self-government, can hardly assist in preventing war. . . . .

On this continent two nations speaking the same language constitute in effect one community in social and business aspects and relations. Each has its own laws and institutions, each is jealous of its rights and privileges, each has its own intense national spirit. At times there are strong differences, but there is no bitterness and no hatred. Therein is a vivid contrast to what may be observed in continental Europe.

Can any member of this house supply any reason why Canada should associate herself with the antagonisms and the hatreds and the jealousies of Europe? Is this a selfish policy? If it be, Mr. Speaker, I submit that we have many precedents for it, and before passing condemnation upon it we might venture to examine the policies of the powers of the world to discover when one of them acted on anything else but selfish policy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I submit that our answer to the two questions I started with should be: First, that Canada will formulate her own foreign policy; that she will not engage in war merely because the United Kingdom or somebody else is at war. Secondly, that we will, so far as possible, maintain ourselves free from the entanglements of Europe. By this I do not mean that we should stand aloof selfishly concentrating upon our own individual affairs and our own advancement alone. By no means. May I say that in order fully to discharge our responsibility as a nation respected by the other nations of the world we should take what part we can by cooperation, by pacific means and, if necessary, by conferences for that purpose, and so achieve as soon as we can, if indeed it ever can be achieved, "the brotherhood of man among the nations of the world." Let us further a fuller understanding of that philosophy throughout the world. It is the great ideal which must govern our actions in the future, and I am satisfied we can best reach that ideal by going our own course in respect to foreign policy, by determining that we will not be involved in war unless by our own will; and so determining I am certain that we can face the future with courage and with confidence.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, referred to a paper read before the Canadian Bar Association by Professor Kennedy of Toronto university, which paper he very properly said I had circulated in considerable numbers amongst members of the profession. I should like to read the two closing paragraphs of that paper:

First: let dominion autonomy be sane and realistic. There is a serious danger to-day that a dominion may become a cross between the individual and his "rights" and the reasonable man of the common law and go strutting about seeking privileges for merely doctrinaire reasons, may in other words become an imperial nuisance. We must not mortgage the future to abstractions nor bankrupt the general welfare of the empire by speculating on the stock market of theoretical extensions of legal rights for which the general will is not prepared. I have a profound contempt for grandiloquent nonsense about autonomy which is divorced from social facts. The empire if it is to survive, must move on Darwinian not on Newtonian lines.

Secondly: We must keep the whole question of empire and of commonwealth out of the mire of party controversy. We shall play with sacred things if we ever fight elections on this issue. It will be in the future, as it has always been in the past, the political unforgivable sin, when either empire loyalty or dominion loyalty or both are debased by political charlatans. The empire—each dominion—is greater than any ephemeral party triump, and ought to be dearer to us than any political office. Loyalty is a great virtue; we shall rob it of its sublimest meanings if we tarnish it on the political hustings. To do so would be like taking a "chalice of the grapes of God" and using it as the loving-cup of libertines.

When I listened this afternoon and this evening to some of the observations that have fallen from hon. gentlemen I wondered why they dealt with the problems that we are now considering in the tone in which they did. What resentment did they harbour against the little islands in the North sea? What had those islands done to us that hon. gentlemen should speak in terms of "striking from us the shackles that bind us?" Why should we endeavour to have the people of this country believe that we are suffering untold wrongs which we in some way must rise up and redress? Why should we endeavour to induce the rising generation to believe that in this day great numbers of Canadians have been suffering from the oppression heaped upon us by the government of Great Britain, and now at last under the guidance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and his Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) we have risen up and shaken off that oppression? Surely there must be something wrong in that attitude of mind.

Mr. THORSON: That is pure assumption on the hon. gentleman's part.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson) when he talked of "taking off this badge of inferiority from the lapel of his coat," and I wondered what he meant; I am wondering still. When he spoke of our difficulties respecting radio and deportation I knew that he knew that the statement was not warranted; I knew that he knew the case of Regina vs. Cain decided by the privy council; and I knew that he knew the decision of our own courts in that particular.

Mr. THORSON: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. THORSON: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I stated that I had held the opinion myself that Canada did possess the power of passing legislation with extraterritorial operation, and that any decisions to the contrary were founded upon wrong principle.

Mr. BENNETT: That, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will have to reconcile with various parts of his observations so as to make them consistent. I point this out for I find it so difficult to appreciate his attitude of mind. Was England lacking in regard for this young country in the days of the Behring sea controversy; was there any difficulty then? I think not. I think it will be found that at every moment in our history as a young people, whenever our rights were threatened or it became necessary to assert our position among the peoples of the world, the strong arm and all the resources of the little islands in the North sea were available for Canadians.

Then there is the second point that is so difficult to understand, and that is why hon gentlemen should arrogate to themselves a virtue which they do not possess. Why should they say that they have saved an empire, that they have blazed the pathway to an equality of status? Sir, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) has indicated two leaders of that line of thought. Sir John A. Macdonald, in the observations that have been read here to-night by the hon. member, as well as in extracts that were read from speeches of his by the right hon. Prime Minister on a previous occasion, has made it abundantly clear that the one object of his life was to maintain on the northern half of the North American continent a great free country, a dominion, but still a part of the British Empire. And so those of us who are interested recall that the effigy to his memory in St. Paul's bears the words:

A British subject I was born; a British subject I will die.

He was content to be known as a British subject, although he loved Canada and placed Canada before any other country in the world

Then if you come to the realization of our present hopes, what person who for a single moment has contemplated the history of our times will deny that the fighting men of Canada who gave their lives on the blood-red fields of France and Flanders have made possible our present constitutional development? The hon. member for Bow River referred to the attitude taken by Sir Robert Borden. Those of us who know something of the workings of the government in those days realize how difficult indeed was the task of our Prime Minister at that time. Especially do we recall the difficulties which he experienced in working out the position of this country amongst the various dominions which constitute the British Empire. At the end of the war when it became essential that our position should be defined, although there was a tendency on the part of some people to postpone that action, Sir Robert Borden said that this country should become a member of the League of Nations and become known to the people of the world as a country claiming full membership in that great body. Having that fact in mind if hon. members will take the trouble to read the recent books upon the subject they will find that membership in the League of Nations has been taken as the test of a people who have attained a certain definite position in the world. That being so, no one can deny that at least it was the genius of that statesman who led this country along the pathway which made us a member of the League of Nations. Then it was proposed by Sir Robert Borden—and I shall presently refer to the observations of General Smuts on this point—that we should have a great constitutional congress or convention. It was realized that in view of the anomalous position which we occupied as a people scattered over a quarter of the world, with our motherland a little island in the North sea, it was essential that we should have some constitutional arrangement whereby our relative positions might be in some way definitely defined. That constitutional congress was not held until 1926 when, although it was not especially called for that purpose, the Imperial conference of that day dealt with the problems that then confronted our empire. Those problems were met in the manner which has been indicated by hon. members in this house this afternoon. A special committee was appointed, and it was presided over by the late Lord Balfour. The constitutional bases of the major part of the resolutions were written by Lord Balfour and Mr. Amery, and they now stand in the form in which we have them. I think it is correct to say that those resolutions constitute a statement of the then existing conditions. It is true that in the earlier days the Prime Minister regarded them as a great charter, and as the magna charta of our times. I think however on reflection he has realized that they were declaratory. That is, as we sometimes have statutes declaring the common law, so the resolutions were declaratory of the position which had been attained by the various portions of the empire, together with the motherland, which constitute the British Empire.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said that for that reason they were like the magna charta.

Mr. BENNETT: The magna charta went farther than being merely declaratory; it was decidedly different from a mere statement of existing conditions. At least most of us who have read British history will say that while in part it was declaratory, in other instances it was not. Those who are interested in the matter should turn to the address of the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on December 13, 1926, and they will find that he then expressed the views, which have perhaps been softened to some extent by the passage of time—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not a bit.

Mr. BENNETT: —that he realized that they were but declaratory of the position which had been attained not by Liberal statesmen, not by Conservative statesmen, but by the—

Mr. THORSON: Nobody suggested that.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the hon. gentleman has said that nobody now questions that fact. It is delightful to think that the hon. gentleman himself has now ceased to question it. Be that as it may, I say that for the moment no one will contend that these privileges and usages found in the declaratory resolution were the work of any one man.

Mr. THORSON: Certainly not.

Mr. BENNETT: As Professor Kennedy has said, they represent the true Darwinian principle; they are the result of evolution.

Mr. THORSON: And as inevitable as evolution.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad the hon. gentleman now believes that they are part of the inevitable process of evolution. If however anyone will listen to his observations at this time and compare them with the observations of the hon. member for Bow River, who has just taken his seat, I think they will find some difficulty in accommodating themselves to the view that the expression of his opinion represented evolution, but they would be rather inclined to the thought that his remarks were revolutionary.

Be that as it may, I think there is a general recognition of the fact that the resolutions of 1926 are declaratory due to the vision and foresight and statesmanship of succeeding generations of statesmen who have directed the destinies not only of Canada but of all other dominions throughout the empire, and in the motherland as well. Particularly might it be said that we owe our position not only to the different parts of the empire but to the sacrifice, the courage and the blood of 60,000 Canadians; I think that fact can safely be stated. When the resolutions of 1926 declared that this country had attained equality of status with other parts of the British Empire and there was no subordination of one part to another, we realized, and the Prime Minister subsequently stated in this house anl elsewhere, that that was a statement of a condition which required to be qualified, because many events had to take place before it could be fully realized. It was because of that fact that a committee was set up under the Lord Chancellor, and which at a later date was presided over at the London conference by our Minister of Justice. As a result of the deliberations of that body, which represented every part of the self-governing portions of the empire, we have the resolution that is now before this house seeking approval of the work of that committee.

I recall very clearly that the late Bonar Law said that at any time if Canada desired to leave the British Empire there was no one in England who would raise a hand to stop us. In his lifetime he made it abundantly clear, born though he was in Canada, that if the people of Canada intimated, as apparently the member from Bow River hopes they will, their desire to dissociate themselves from the empire—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That inference is absolutely untrue.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman says the inference is untrue, and yet he has stated it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I said no such thing.

Mr. BENNETT: Hon. members will have to read his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask that the hon. gentleman be allowed to continue without interruption.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not concerned about the interruptions, Mr. Speaker.

May I further point out that that was the opinion not only of Mr. Law but of others, that if in time this country solemnly and seriously determined that the moment had come when we should dissociate ourselves from the British Empire, we might do so as far as Great Britain was concerned. They said that they would be sorry to see it happen, sorry to see the disruption and disintegration of the British Empire.

To proceed a step farther, we come to the matter of the appeals to the privy council. One would think that some stern power was sitting up devising ways and means of preventing Canadians from being able to appeal to the privy council. Did not Lord Chancellor Birkenhead and Lord Chancellor Haldane declare over and over again that if at any time the Canadian people took the necessary action to determine that they did not desire that their appeals should be heard by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, they would indeed be content because it would mean so much less labour for them?

Mr. THORSON: What about Lord Cave's decision in the case of Rex vs. Nadan?

Mr. BENNETT: I am very glad to answer that; I was counsel in that case. It merely was this, that as a matter of law as it then stood, this country was not in a position to deprive its citizens of the right to appeal. That is all, but if we indicate that we desire that the power should be exercised by the motherland, whose statutes admit the appeal, there would be no hesitancy in the passing of an amending statute. In other words, both Lord Chancellor Birkenhead—

Mr. THORSON: The hon. gentleman is not stating the grounds of that decision correctly.

Mr. BENNETT: The grounds of that decision, of course, were that there was a repugnance to a British statute, and the Colonial Laws Validity Act applied.

Mr. THORSON: And our section of the Criminal Code was contrary to the Colonial Laws Validity Act.

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound to say that I do not require to be enlightened by the hon. gentleman in that regard, and I am sure the rest of the house will spare itself that supreme pleasure at this moment.

Mr. THORSON: You may as well state the grounds of the decision correctly.

Mr. BENNETT: I was not even stating the grounds of the decision; I was indicating what Lords Chancellor Birkenhead and Haldane and several other Britiish statesmen who were not members of the legal profession had indicated, that if this country in form and manner provided indicated to the British parliament a desire that we should no longer have appeals to the privy council, such action would be taken, and that the British law lords and jurists were not imposing their services upon the Canadian people but that the Canadian people were utilizing their services because they were available. They were available because we were part of an empire, and every citizen in that empire, however humble and poor he may be, has the right to present his petition to the foot of the throne and have his grievance heard by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Only a few days ago a poor, weary traveller from India presented a petition in person to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, being a committee of the sovereign's advisers, and was heard, and a lady from Canada in person presented her case before that committee and succeeded, not because the British people coaxed her to go there; not because the judicial committee or any other committee asked that she bring her litigation there, but because she desired that the most eminent judges the world knows should sit and determine her case. The reason that the appeals to the privy council exist to-day is that the Canadian people desire that they should exist, and if at any time during the last fifty years this parliament had forwarded to Great Britain a resolution asking that appeals to the privy council be discontinued, the necessary action would have been taken by the British parliament and the necessary legislation passed in that regard.

It is another thing, however, to say that we should pass legislation prohibiting an appeal, because that would be unconstitutional as the parliament of one dominion seeking to deprive the citizens of that dominion of the inherent right that belongs to every citizen of that empire, namely, the right to present his case to the foot of the throne. You will recall that we are told in Holy Writ of the appeal made to Caesar in ancient days, and the appeal being made to Caesar, "unto Caesar shalt thou go." So it is that we have always had the right, during the last half century, through the imperial parliament, to deprive our citizens of the privilege of presenting their appeals to the privy council. If we have not done so it is because we have not so desired and if at any time we so desire the necessary action may be taken.

That clears up at least two of these matters. Now we come to something far more serious, far more complicated, and more far reaching in all its implications and consequences. The action taken by the conference at London is to give effect to a resolution that conferred equality of status upon Canada and Great Britain. That is, it became necessary, if this equality of status was to be realized, that certain outstanding imperial legislation should be either repealed or amended; it should be stricken out in its entirety and no longer have any applicability to this country or else it should be amended. The matters were taken up one after the other by that conference, and the report which we have before us was presented. That report deals at great length with the various matters which were considered. It will be remembered that it dealt with the origin and the purpose of the conference; then it took up the shipping act and the position of India, and the real questions before the conference. These were all by way of introduction. We dealt with the age-long discussion with respect to disallowance. Disallowance is not a matter that is at all singular when applied to Canada; it is a part of the survival of the idea of empire. When new communities were added to the empire by discovery, by conquest or by annexation, certain laws were made applicable to those new communities. If by discovery, then the laws of England became applicable in the absence of any laws from any other section of the world. There were no legislatures; there were no bodies to enact legislation, and so that law that we call the common law representing the accumulated common sense of centuries, became applicable to that new community thus discovered and added to the British Empire. Legislative power there was none in this new community, for it had no institutions; it had no legislature, to pass decrees or ordinances of any kind or character whatsoever. Therefore the legislation passed in London at the parliament at Westminster had applicability to this new community, because it had been added to the empire.

That is all that may be said about that, and when new institutions did grow up; when Cornwallis, for instance, signed at Halifax the first order on this continent for an election of members who constituted the legislative assembly of Nova Scotia, there grew up a community with power to pass laws for the peace, the order and the good government of the colony called Nova Scotia. There came a time when the legislation passed by this new colony was repugnant to or conflicted with the legislation passed by the parliament at Westminster. If that legislation was repugnant to the common law, the judges at Westminster decided that the legislation of this new colonial legislature was invalid if it conflicted with the common law of England as declared by the judges. The Colonial Laws Validity Act, as the minister very properly indicated this afternoon, was intended to expand and not to restrict the powers of colonial legislatures. Why do I say that? Because it provides that in case of repugnance or conflict between the common law and the legislation of a colonial legislature, the legislation of the colonial legislature shall prevail over the common law. But the very essence of the idea of empire still obtained, and in case of conflict, if there should be any, between the legislation of the parliament at Westminster and the legislation enacted by the legislature of the colony, whatever it might be, then the legislation passed at Westminster should prevail. The Colonial Laws Validity Act so provided.

That act was passed in 1865, two years before this confederation. What did it mean? It meant this, in practice: That when this parliament enacted a law that provided that there should be no appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in criminal cases, if that enactment conflicted with the British statute, as it did, the British statute should prevail and the right of appeal should be maintained, because the humblest subject had the right—not under Canadian law but under British law—to present his grievance to the foot of the throne.

The question of disallowance is somewhat similar in its history, because the power rests in the federal government here at Ottawa to disallow a provincial statute if in the opinion of the Justice department that statute contravenes well defined principles of jurisprudence, that is, if it is beyond the legislative competence of the legislature to enact such a statute there is power in the governor general to disallow and declare that statute to be of no effect. It will be recalled that only a few years ago a statute was passed by the legislature of Nova Scotia and was disallowed by the governor in council because it was felt that it was repugnant to natural justice and to the ideas which were held in this country as to the rights of individual citizens. It will be recalled that the Hon. Edward Blake took the view that instead of disallowance being exercised by the federal power, it was desirable that the matter should be referred to the courts which would determine whether the power exercised by the provincial legislature was or was not legally exercised. The power of disallowance has fallen into disrepute, having been exercised only once or twice during the past quarter century. It is said that disallowance is not in keeping with our institutions, and that for a period of two years or one year, as the case may be, there should not be power in the king in council to disallow a statute passed by a dominion parliament in the exercise of its plenary powers as a parliament. Some of the speeches would be inclined to make us think that we are trying to extract something from the government of England which it was reluctant to give us; something like pulling teeth. At all times and upon all occasions that government has expressed the utmost willingness to meet any views which we may express in that regard. Why look upon this as something wrung by a son from a reluctant mother? This is something which is given without question, something which represents the fulness of the operation of the institutions of our country. The power of disallowance disappears.

Another question arises, as was pointed out, although not fully, by the hon. Minister of Justice. We desire, and when I say "we" I am not distinguishing between Liberal and Conservative governments—it just happens to be a Liberal government—that our securities should be trustee securities in England. The Hon. Mr. Fielding desired it and for a long time he endeavoured to secure that concession. By reason of difficulties which were experienced in days gone by in connection with securities to which attention might be directed, we provided by an agreement with the British treasury that if legislation of this parliament menaces the validity of securities which have become trustee securities under the laws of England, that power of disallowance may be exercised. This provision is not peculiar to this particular country. It is pointed out in the report that there were certain provisions in that regard in the Colonial Stock Act of 1900. The reserving of statutes passed by this parliament for the consideration of the sovereign in council has not been in use for a very long time. It now disappears.

With these recommendations no difficulty will be experienced, but when we consider the question of the extraterritorial operation of dominion legislation, we are on different ground altogether, and one which may lead to complications of the first order. I shall not take up the time of the house by discussing them at length, as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has presented them with a wealth of detail. I think it will be agreed that the Right Hon. C. J. Doherty gave the fullest possible explanation regarding the exercise of extraterritorial powers which has ever been given in this house. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will bear me out in that statement with reference to the address of Mr. Doherty in introducing his resolution dealing with this matter. He went into the matter with a wealth of detail and knowledge and precedents which has not been since revealed in this house. As the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has said, there are those who believe that it is incidental to the exercise of our powers as a parliament that we should legislate in an extraterritorial sense. That view is not held by all. As I pointed out this afternoon, while the hon. Minister of Justice was speaking, our supreme court expressed a divided opinion upon divorce legislation. If I remember correctly, that matter did not go to the privy council. The privy council held in the Cain case that we had such powers. It is a very nice question, but one which I will not take the time to discuss, as to whether or not we possess already the power to enable us to enact legislation of an extraterritorial character. There is a possibility of grave difficulties in this regard, which those who had charge of this matter at London last fall did not fail to recognize. Extraterritorial legislation may bring about difficulties, but it is not my purpose to do more than point out the possibilities where you have various parts of the empire that may be affected thereby. It will be observed from the report made by the committee that special provisions were made to deal with this matter.

We now come to the question of dealing with our constitution, which is one of first importance. At page 29 of the report we read:

> Nothing in this act shall be deemed to confer any power to repeal or alter the constitution acts of the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, and the Dominion of New Zealand, otherwise than in accordance with the law and constitutional usage and practice heretofore existing.
> Nothing in this act shall be deemed to authorize the parliaments of the Dominion of Canada and the Commonwealth of Australia to make laws on any matter at present within the authority of the provinces of Canada or the states of Australia, as the case may be, not being a matter within the authority of the parliaments or governments of the Dominion of Canada and of the Commonwealth of Australia respectively.

I put this question to the Minister of Justice: Can you say that you have equality of status if you do not have power to amend your constitution?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Justice is too astute a lawyer to answer that question in the affirmative.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then I am not astute, because I do answer in the affirmative.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the hon. gentleman does not wish to negative the first qualification of a state, which is the power to amend its constitution?

Mr. LAPOINTE: A condition brought about by our own will is not a subordination.

Mr. BENNETT: I put to my hon. friend a fundamental principle which I think governs all these matters, and which should be in our minds when we are discussing them. It is this: If it becomes necessary for another parliament to exercise its power in order that we may attain our ends, we are not on an equality of status with that power. That is axiomatic, and it is one of the difficulties in connection with this matter. It is so axiomatic that I sent to the library to obtain an elementary book on constitutional cases, of which the second edition is under my hand. If it is necessary to call into operation the legislative power of another state to enable this state to attain its ends, then there is no equality of status as between this state and that. Leaving that aside for the moment, may I direct attention to these words on page 28 of the report:

> Canada alone among the dominions has at present no power to amend its constitution act without legislation by the parliament of the United Kingdom.

The Minister of Justice, when he signed that report, which contains paragraph 63 on page 28 stating in terms unequivocal that this Dominion "alone among the dominions has at present no power to amend its constitution act without legislation by the parliament of the United Kingdom," certainly will not say there can be any such thing as equality of status if that statement is correct. That does not require argument, does it? The Minister of Justice this afternoon said that if Canada desires to have its constitution amended, all it had to do was to express that desire as we are doing in the terms of the address we are now making to the imperial parliament regarding western natural resources and the imperial parliament would act upon our address. But that begs the question. Power must be exercised by another body, and whenever power has to be exercised by another body to effectuate a purpose that this state proposes, then that state and this one are not on an equality of status. That is clear beyond peradventure, so clear that the Minister of Justice recognizes it in paragraph 63 on page 28 of the report.

Following the discussion to which attention has been directed, is a legal anomaly which I shall refer to only in passing, and that is this, that while the Colonial Laws Validity Act is no longer to apply when we are dealing with legislation of this parliament, such power as still remains in the Colonial Laws Validity Act will be applicable against Quebec, or Ontario or New Brunswick or Nova Scotia or any other province of the Dominion. That is the position that the conference provides for, as will be found in paragraph 71 on page 31 of the report.

There remains for consideration a matter which, I think, might well involve the attention of the house for days, and that is the question of navigation. The greatness of this empire has been built up, of course, upon its power to man and sail ships, to penetrate to the most remote parts of the world, to carry on trade and commerce to meet the demands of peoples of all nations and living under all flags, and to bring their products and commodities to other lands for sale and barter. Every one admits that. The history of the navigation laws of this country would take entirely too long a time for me to trace to-night and I shall not endeavour to do so. But let me say this: I was not long since discussing this matter with a gentleman of the Liberal faith in politics, one of the most distinguished of what is called the advanced school of Liberal thought, to which the hon. gentleman referred this afternoon; and he felt that in dealing with this question as we have, we have taken a step that probably we should not have taken without having some alternative to substitute for present conditions. My only criticism is not a criticism that is urged against the principle of this country having full and plenary powers to deal with matters of navigation, but rather that in the exercise of those powers we should by conference and consultation with other parts of this great empire have an alternative scheme to take the place of what we now have.

I put this question to the house: Is it well for us that we and other parts of the British Empire should have differing laws with respect to navigation when one reads in that report all that is involved and implied, for instance, our rights that flow from being able to command the protection of the forces of the motherland under given conditions, the right to appeal to consuls, the questions of conditions in courts, the question of dealing with sailors, and so forth? Is it not well that we as an empire should have uniform laws in that regard? I think it will be admitted that that is so. I shall not deal at length with the report, but if hon. members will take the trouble to read it they will find it deals with the whole problem of carriage of goods by sea, the whole problem in connection with the enforcement of law, naval courts, destitute seamen, courts of inquiry and certificates of competency and service, internal discipline and agreements with crews. Is it not well that there should be some form of general agreement between the various maritime dominions which constitute the British Empire? That is not as a matter of theory, but as a matter of practice. It is necessary that it should be so if Canada is to take its place as a great maritime power. I recall that in days gone by there were on the registry of Canada more ships in point of tonnage than there is now. Before the day of iron ships we were building ships in great numbers. That day is past, but in that day we had the benefit of all the advantages and experience of the motherland in dealing with problems connected with navigation and shipping.

Now are we to say, without having any alternative scheme to take its place, that present conditions should be replaced by something that leads we know not where, the end of which we know not? The hon. gentleman this afternoon said that we were afraid to break new ground. It is sometimes better to be careful than careless; it is sometimes better to be discreet than otherwise, and history teaches us that unless we have some alternative to offer to an existing condition, you can give no excuse or reason why you should change that existing condition. The essence of progress is not change; it is a change from one condition to another, the new condition being better than that from which you changed. Here we have no alternative offer, nothing whatever. In fact, this report suggests that in dealing with matters of navigation it is well to remember that we should retain existing conditions for a season —lest what? Lest by trying an innovation we meet with disaster.

If there is one thing which is complicated, it is the law of shipping, as any gentleman who is familiar with the law in that regard knows. It is one of the most difficult subjects in the whole fabric of the law for law students, so difficult in fact that in every generation in Great Britain there are only two or three great shipping lawyers, men who are supreme in their profession, masters of the whole theory and practice of shipping laws. When I read these paragraphs as I did and saw the matters with which they dealt, I asked myself, as I asked friends of mine and as doubtless hon. members are now asking themselves: What is to take the place of existing conditions? What do you offer as a substitute? What shall replace it? Is it something better, or is it something worse, or nothing at all? At the moment it is nothing at all, and I submit with great confidence to my hon. friend that we should not lightly change a condition unless we have to offer for it something that is at least as good if not better. It is because of my difficulty in that regard that to this one phase of the whole report more than to any other, I direct attention. I also direct attention to the admiralty courts, because they have been so closely connected, so allied to the progress, growth and development of our whole system of navigation and maritime laws that if we were to say suddenly that we shall set up new tribunals dealing with these matters I think the house will agree that the observations made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George this afternoon indicating that Canadian ships will not remain upon the Canadian register upon such conditions, were not an overstatement of the case. Does any hon. gentleman think they are too far-fetched in view of the implications that are involved? I think not. Our merchant marine is now somewhat limited. It will become less in tonnage as the days go by, and you will find that the great ships owned by Canadian enterprise will be registered not from Canadian but British ports. I am sure every hon. member of this house realizes that there is tied up with this very matter one of the most difficult of all questions in the world. The flag a ship flies over her taffrail is the flag that determines the measure of protection she receives from the people of the world, and when we come to consider that we have the British flag, with the arms of the provinces in the fly, authorized for flying upon the seas, one begins to realize all that is involved in this problem. I have heard gentlemen discuss this matter whose knowledge of it is so very great that I feel I know but nothing when talking with them, gentlemen dealing with matters of shipping and matters of piracy on the high seas, and who have discussed with me the implications of our endeavour in this regard. I confess that when I listened to them I realized how far-reaching were the possible consequences of the action that we are asked to take to-night. It is for that reason that I have suggested that we should proceed slowly in a matter of this kind.

Who has complained? Has any man complained? Has any injustice been done? Has anyone for a single moment asserted that the rights and privileges of Canadians have been invaded, or wrested from them? To the British consuls who are sent out by Great Britatin all over the world Canadians have appealed on every occasion where matters affecting shipping were concerned. When the I'm Alone was sunk, if you read the life of Captain Randall, you will see that the first person he went to was the British consul. He is the man that the ship wrecked mariner always goes to. The master of a ship in distress in a foreign port always goes to see the British consul. Can we longer claim the right to go to the British consul if we are to set up our own views with respect to this matter, unless indeed we make a contribution to his upkeep, as possibly we may be asked to do? I know not; that may be. But if we pass this legislation, if we then suggest that the British consul shall be appealed to, we have divested ourselves of that right by the very action we are taking.

I was born beside the sea. I have seen great ships come and go since I was a youth. I realize just what part they play in the commerce of the world. I have listened to seafaring men tell tales of their experiences in far off lands ever since I can remember anything, and I know this, that the one tale which they have invariably told is that in moments of stress and strain, whether from the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, or from Quebec or the Pacific, the man they have gone to with their complaints has always been the British consul, and from him they have had the protection that came to them because their ships flew the flag of empire. It is because of that I say in all seriousness to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that I think this matter should be proceeded with slowly. Discussing it with a great legal mind in this country, by common consent I think the foremost Liberal legal mind in Canada, he agreed that we should have some alternative before we destroyed the existing condition.

I shall not weary the house with further discussion, but I should like to make this observation in answer to what was said by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. I deprecate more than I can say introducing into a discussion in this house at this time conditions in India. I have no desire to exaggerate, but, sir, I am profoundly convinced that whatever there may be about those little islands and their history, the greatest tribute that men will pay to them in the future will be to their administration of law and order and justice in India. There less than one hundred thousand men have maintained law and order among a population of hundreds of millions. The attack made tonight by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre I think was wholly unwarranted, and I do not like to see it go out from this house as representing in any sense a desire upon the part of this Canadian House of Commons to interfere with or even discuss problems of which it knows so little, and about which we are so illadvised. The only discussion I have had about India was certainly a very limited one. It was with the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and when I heard him make the statements he did, I then and there resolved that for me to discuss conditions in India would be indeed but to give evidence of my profound ignorance of a problem so far-reaching in its consequences and so complicated involving questions of caste and of various races and religions that I think we all should hesitate before we offer to express opinions on India at a moment when all the power of intellect of British statesmen is being used for the purpose of finding a solution of one of the most difficult problems of our time.

One word more, and I make it of general application. This afternoon and this evening we have heard the words "state" and "nation" bandied about and used as if this were an independent country. Those who read the observations of the hon. member for Bow River in that regard will read into them that he interprets the speech of the Minister of Justice to-day as warranting a conclusion which, if true, means that we are on the verge of jumping off into independence. It means that or nothing. I do not interpret the hon. gentleman's observations in that sense. His committee had no such object in mind. In the broad and general sense there is no man in this country who professes the Conservative faith in politics who has not endeavoured, so far as I know, from the days of Sir John A. Macdonald until to-day to see to it that Canadians occupy no subordinate position within our empire. The term "equality of status" is a term coined by a great philosophic statesman, the late Lord Balfour. It perhaps aptly expresses in a few words what every Canadian would wish, but when we use it we must always remember that in the ultimate analysis it is the judges who interpret and determine what things mean, and resolutions of this House of Commons have no place before the courts. They may not be cited because they are not authoritative. They may not be relied upon because they constitute no binding legislative act. When this parliament acts, it acts through the Senate, the House of Commons, and the King. The three bodies that constitute this parliament must act together. A resolution of this House of Commons has no binding power and no authority upon which judicial process may be predicated or founded. It is well that we should always keep in mind the essential meaning of a state. When we use the word "state" or "nation" let us remember that these words in international law have a well-defined and well-understood meaning. They have a meaning which is as exact in its terminology, as complete in all its implications, as the word, for instance, that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Crerar) looked for in the dictionary the other day. I hold in my hand the second edition of Outlines of Constitutional Law, and the introductory words are these:

> The state.—A state is an independent political society, occupying a defined territory, and the members of which are united together for mutual protection and assistance. Its function is to repel aggression from without, and to maintain law and order within its own dominion.

That is a modern and legally authenticated definition of a state. The first point is that it is an independent political society. We must always remember that loose speaking, involving loose thinking, with respect to constitutional matters, brings great difficulties. That has been so; it is so in this case. It is essentially desirable that we should utilize words in their exact meaning, and not use wrong terminology in referring to matters which have well-defined constitutional and international meanings.

Then you proceed to the next point, Government defined:

> The sovereign, according to Austin, is the person or persons having supreme authority in an independent political society, and in every state there must be a sovereign power which exercises and controls the functions of government, and conducts and regulates the intercourse with other political societies. "The aggregate of powers," says Sir William Markby," which is possessed by the rulers of a political society is called sovereignty. A single ruler, where there is one, is called the sovereign; the body of rulers, where there are several, is called the sovereign body, or the government, or the supreme government. The rest of the members of a political society, in contradistinction to the rulers, are called the subjects.

Now, may I refer to these words as words which every hon. gentleman, whether a member of the legal profession or not, can fully understand and realize the importance of:

> The internal functions of government are commonly divided into three categories, namely —(1) legislative; (2) judicial; and (3) executive. The legislature makes, alters and repeals the laws. The judicature, or judicial bench, interprets and applies those laws; the executive carries those laws into effect. The sovereign power of a state may be vested in a single individual, as in an autocratic state, or in a smaller or larger body of citizens, as in the case of an oligarchy or of a democracy. The allocation of sovereign powers may vary indefinitely, but whatever the form of government may be its functions must, in a modern state, be delegated to a large number of persons. Sir William Anson divides those persons into the following classes, namely, legislators, maintainers of order, and protectors of state independence in dealings with other societies.

These are the meanings which attach to the words I have used, and the division of government into legislative, judicial and executive branches is as old as the time of Aristotle. The legislative function we exercise here through the commons, the Senate and the sovereign. The judicial function is the function that, under our institutions, is delegated to those who sit upon the bench; they interpret the laws, and the meaning they give to them is the meaning warranted by precedent and authority. Every hon. member, whether he be a lawyer or not, realizes that you cannot describe Canada as a "state" or as a "nation" and be within the terms of the interpretation which the courts will give to these words. These resolutions have no place before the courts, as I have already said; but when they are crystallized into legislation and enacted by the parliament of Westminster they must be interpreted, and that is the reason it becomes so important that the far-reaching consequences of these acts we are about to pass upon should be considered in every phase. I do regret more than I can say that this matter should be discussed in this parliament so late in the session. In my judgment it should be very seriously studied by the various members of this house.

Sir, in the end they mean this. They mean that we have cut the painter completely, that we have let go the moorings that have heretofore tied us to the islands in the North sea. We have obtained equality of status by the process that I have indicated—by the blood and sacrifice of Canadians upon the field of battle and by the genius of our statesmen.

But, sir, it must not be forgotten that when we do these things and make ourselves, as the hon. gentleman has said, "in no way subordinate one to the other," we have attained a position which no longer means that unity of power which has made possible the development of our maritime supremacy. It means more. It does not mean difficulties in the field of domestic legislation; there are none. There is not a Canadian but desires to see what the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg so appropriately termed "constitutional practice embodied in statutory form." That is all that many of these recommendations amount to, merely the embodiment in statutory form of the constitutional practice that has grown up since confederation.

But there is the other phase of it, the phase that breaks new ground. The unitary system that has prevailed, that ties together every part of a quarter of the world's people inhabiting a quarter of its area, you have broken into fragments so far as their position one to another is concerned, and they can depend no longer upon the united action and the power and the authority that come from a unitary system in its dealings with the peoples of the world. We should pause and think before we do these things, we should understand their implications. As the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George said this afternoon they involve 150 imperial statutes that affect and touch the national life of Canada. Have we considered this? Do we realize it. Are we fully cognizant of all that is involved? I think not. Gladly do I give my approval to the changes that are but domestic in their character, that place upon the plane of statutory enactment the constitutional practice evolved during the last half century. But if I had the power this night I would ask that these amendments should not be made without full and fair consideration by the provinces, by all those who are concerned in the far-reaching consequences of a change in the system, a change that strikes at the very foundation of that unity which makes possible the strength of this country as a part of the greatest maritime power in the world.

That is the reason, sir, that I have ventured at some length to point these matters out. I certainly resent as deeply as anyone can resent the idea that one party in this country is the party that is entitled—to what? To credit. It has been said in various parts of the country that the Liberal party is responsible for any effort towards equality of status. Sir, the record does not so prove, and if some of us desire to point out, as it is our duty to point out in this house, the implications and the far-reaching consequences of legislation contemplated by the resolution, we do it not in any spirit of opposition but rather from an earnest desire that any amendment that may be made which will in any sense change the relations now existing between us and the other parts of that entity called the British empire should be made only after the fullest consideration of all the consequences that may follow. And I trust that the words of Professor Kennedy will ring in the ears of hon. members, and that they realize that grandiloquent terms about autonomy and equality of status are but sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. They do not constitute changes. The changes thus made are not recognized in the courts; the legislation that follows is what binds, and we should pause and consider very carefully before we give approval to legislation of far-reaching consequences which we have not contemplated.

That, sir, is the position we take with respect to these matters. All who read the two great addresses of the Right Hon. J. C. Smuts while visiting this continent cannot but realize that he of all men who had made so great a struggle for the autonomous units that constitute this empire realized the dangers towards which we are moving when he said that we have obtained equality of status. What is our duty now? The consolidation and the strengthening of empire. That will never, never be brought about by the passing of legislation that cuts our moorings and leaves us floating in the great sea of the world, content to work out our destiny alone, instead of continuing in unity and combination with the other nations that constitute this empire.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and other hon. members if it would be agreeable to them to conclude the debate this evening.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the Minister of Justice wishes to reply. I do not know that there are any other speakers.

Mr. BENNETT: No, there are those on this side who do not desire to continue tonight.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the debate was adjourned.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1930-31

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1931, was presented by Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Tuesday, May 27, 1930

The house met at eleven o'clock.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES

TREATY BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 344, respecting a certain convention signed the twenty-sixth day of May 1930, between His Majesty in respect of Canada and the United States of America for the preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon fisheries in the Fraser river system.

He said: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I tabled a treaty which had been signed in the morning on behalf of the United States and Canada with respect to the preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon in the Fraser river system. It is similar to the treaty which was introduced in the house last session but which was withdrawn before the session closed. The government is asking approval of the treaty in the form of an act rather than just by resolution, inasmuch as some legislation is required to give full effect to the provisions of the treaty. It is believed that the single measure will lend expedition in the enactment of the necessary provisions. The bill which is now being introduced includes the necessary legislation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—PROCEDURE

On the order of government notices of motion being called:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, probably it would facilitate the work of this morning's session if we were to proceed at once to government orders, with the consent of the house, and resume the debate which was being carried on when we adjourned last night.

Mr. SPEAKER: Then we will say "stand" for government notices of motion and proceed with the orders of the day.

CHINESE EMPLOYED ON BESCO SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg: I have just received a communication in which it is stated that on the ships plying between Montreal and Sydney, owned by the Besco corporation, white men recently have been replaced by Chinamen. I should like to ask the acting Minister of Immigration if he has heard anything in relation to this matter and whether he has issued any special permits to allow this to be done. I remember that some years ago a special permit was necessary in order to allow these Chinese to work on these steamers.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration): I am not aware of anything of the kind having taken place, but of course I will make inquiry and ascertain if this is being done to any extent. Of course my hon. friend will realize that the vessels would have to be of Canadian registry.

"PATRONAGE" SOUTH ESSEX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): Mr. Speaker, I had a question on the order paper which apparently has been sidetracked, and I cannot find out what has become of it. It was in relation to the government patronage in the riding of South Essex.

Mr. SPEAKER: It was answered yesterday.

UNEMPLOYED WORKMEN AT THE PAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Crerar) to the following letter which I have just received from The Pas:

> Two hundred men and four hundred new Canadians without work in The Pas, stranded. I personally served three years overseas being under age when I enlisted. All we want is work, not charity.
> Some of the men hired for Churchill and Hudson Bay railway are being shipped in here from all over the Dominion. In my opinion, men who have helped to develop this country are surely entitled to consideration. We do not want to mix politics in this matter.
> I am,
>
> Your obedient servant,
> Respectfully,
> R. G. Thomson.

I would like to ask the minister if anything further has been done in this matter, as it seems to be a very serious situation.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend I would say that there has been quite a number of men at The Pas for several weeks past. I suppose they went in expectation of work in the north country. A large number have been absorbed by the Canadian National Railways on ballasting work from The Pas to Churchill. So far as the reference to men coming in from other parts of Canada en route to Churchill is concerned, as I stated to the house before in reply to a question from my hon. friend, as many of the men who were working last year at Churchill as desired to return were given the opportunity to do so. Those coming in have been men who worked on the line last year, and they are going to work under that arrangement. I have received several communications from The Pas in respect to this situation, some of which I think should have been addressed to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan). A few days ago I received a telegram from the secretary treasurer of the municipality, but that telegram did not indicate quite so serious a condition of affairs as the communication my hon. friend has just read. In reply to that telegram, I sent the following:

> Telegram re unemployment at The Pas received. Relief is primarily matter for municipality and province to deal with. If province unable to do so and request financial assistance from federal authorities government here will consider what assistance it can give in the circumstances. Carter, Halls, Aldinger and Company who have been awarded the contract for building the elevator at Churchill will be commencing operations as soon as possible and have advised they will be glad to take as many men as may be suitable for the work from The Pas. They will require altogether from 300 to 400 men.

For the information of my hon. friend, I would say that a copy of that telegram was sent to the Premier of Manitoba.

FILIPINO IMMIGRATION INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the order of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Immigration if he has heard anything regarding Filipino immigration into British Columbia, which matter I brought up some days ago.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration): I have had inquiries made, but it would appear that no Filipinos have passed our immigration officers. Of course, that does not mean that they have not got in in some other way, but if my hon. friend will give me the particular localities in which they are located, I shall be glad to have further inquiries made.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I have received a letter from Mr. Charles E. Hope, manager of the Deep Creek Farm Limited, Fort Langley, B.C. in which among other things he says:

> You will be surprised to hear that the advance guard is already in British Columbia and we have had applications from Filipinos to work on my farm.

In any event, they have gone into Fort Langley.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend would let me have that information, I will investigate the matter.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I will be glad to give the minister a copy of this letter.

JUDICIAL ROTATION SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, we have in the province of Quebec what is known as a rotation system for the judges of the superior court. Each judge in turn is supposed to visit the rural districts, but there has been an exception made for several years in the district of Kamouraska, for which district the Minister of Justice for many years was the most distinguished member. I know this is not a federal matter, but I would ask the minister if he would be kind enough to communicate with the Attorney General of Quebec in an endeavour to see that the system in force in that province is applied to the district of Kamouraska as to the other constituencies. I am unable to give to the house the reasons for this request.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will be pleased to inquire into the facts mentioned by my hon. friend.

FONTAINE AND LACASSE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the case of the two young men, Fontaine and Lacasse, which was brought to the attention of the house the other day by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

Mr. MANION: And some time ago by myself.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The documents reached the Department of Justice only last week, and these men were immediately released on Saturday on ticket of leave. Since then I have looked into the matter and have investigated the circumstances, and yesterday I signed an order for a new trial as requested by their counsel.

FARM LOAN BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. BENOIT (St. Johns-Iberville): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the government whether it is its intention at this session to reduce the rate of interest exacted by the Canadian Farm Loan Board on loans made to farmers. I had a resolution on the order paper of March 20th, but on April 29, 1930, at the request of the Clerk of the House, who stated that private members' days were exhausted and that the resolution would involve useless expenditure, I agreed to withdraw it.

In the meantime a petition signed by ninety-five members of this house, who are in earnest, asking that the rate of interest be reduced by one per cent, has been addressed to the Minister of Finance—I was one of the members to sign that petition—and I now ask the government to grant the request on behalf of the farming community.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I received the petition to which my hon. friend has referred. Of course, the government is bound by the existing legislation, and it is not planned to introduce an amendment this session. The principle of the legislation is that the money should be loaned at cost, and it is intended to carry out that principle. At the present time I do not see how the rate of interest could be reduced to the borrowers and comply at the same time with the principle of the law, which is the loaning of money at cost. The matter is being studied but it must be remembered that the Farm Loan Board has been operating for less than one year, and it is rather difficult to say just what the situation in the future will be.

TRADE WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to a Canadian Press despatch which contains the information that because of the credits which have been arranged between Great Britain and Russia an order for no less than 3,000,000 pairs of boots has been received by England. Has anything been done to develop trade between Canada and Russia?

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

STEAM TRAWLERS AND DRAGGERS

Mr. HARRY B. SHORT (Digby-Annapolis): Mr. Speaker, on April 28 an order of this house was passed for a return; on May 14 I made inquiry as to when I might receive it and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) advised me that it would be forthcoming at the earliest possible date. Up to date I have not received it. I notice the minister is in his seat this morning. May I ask him when I may receive that return?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I kept my word with the hon. gentleman when I promised him I would expedite that return. I may inform him that it is going to be a very lengthy report. The officers tell me that when completed it will run over 400 pages. They are working at it as expeditiously as they can and I hope to be able to table it in a day or two.

[Mr. Benoit.]

DOMINION AND MERCHANT SHIPPING LEGISLATION

The house resumed from Monday, May 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lapointe:

That this house approves the recommendations of the conference on the operation of Dominion legislation and merchant shipping legislation, held in London, 1929, and considers that steps should be taken at the forthcoming imperial conference to ensure their being given effect at an early date.

Mr. SPEAKER: The reply of the Minister of Justice will close the debate.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, until the very last minutes of the debate yesterday evening it was not my intention to exercise my right of reply. The debate has, I think, been rather illuminating, conducted on a high plane, and I am quite willing to let the people of Canada decide as to the merits of the respective contentions which have been presented to the house. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), however, in his address last night made use of certain language and made certain statements which I cannot leave unanswered or unchallenged. He opened his remarks by reading a quotation from Professor Kennedy to the effect that a question like this should always be discussed free from all political leanings or partisanship, but I am compelled to say that my hon. friend did not follow that advice with conspicuous devotion. His first words were rather for the purpose of trying to belittle and even to throw ridicule upon the work of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and my own modest cooperation in that respect.

Mr. BENNETT: I think not.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But immediately afterwards he took good care to claim credit for everything that had been achieved by way of constitutional reform for the leaders of the Conservative party. Let me tell my hon. friend that I gladly and enthusiastically commend the work and achievements of Sir Robert Borden in regard to Canadian autonomy and his share in contributing towards building up the imperial structure on a stable and firm basis of equality of status and nationhood. I do so with all the more pleasure because that work stands in striking contrast to, and in glaring contradiction of, the words of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) and of the leader of the opposition himself. Listen to the language of the resolution adopted by the Imperial War conference of 1917 of which Sir Robert Borden was a leading member:

The Imperial War conference are of opinion that the readjustment of the constitutional relations of the component parts of the empire is too important and intricate a subject to be dealt with during the war, and that it should form the subject of a special imperial conference to be summoned as soon as possible after the cessation of hostilities.

They deem it their duty, however, to place on record their view that any such adjustment, while thoroughly preserving all existing powers of self-government and complete control of domestic affairs, should be based upon a full recognition of the dominions as autonomous nations—

They were not afraid of using that word.

—of an imperial commonwealth, and of India as an important portion of the same, should recognize the right of the dominions and India to an adequate voice in foreign policy and in foreign relations, and should provide effective arrangements for continuous consultation in all important matters of common imperial concern, and for such necessary concerted action, founded on consultation, as the several governments may determine.

May I quote also these words of Sir Robert Borden in his book, Constitutional Development:

But I have never wavered in the firm and constant belief that, within the British commonwealth of nations, Canada will find her most commanding influence, her widest usefulness, and her highest destiny. With that opinion is coupled a fixed and absolute conviction that the unity of the empire can alone find its expression in complete autonomy and in equality of nationhood. A strong Canadian national spirit is entirely consistent with a firm purpose to maintain our country in a high place within the British commonwealth.

Will the leader of the opposition apply to Sir Robert Borden the words he used towards his successor—

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —for exactly the same language, for the same work? Did Sir Robert Borden let go the mooring? Did he cut the painter? Did he drift away from the little islands, to use the words of my hon. friend? As regards the other men who were associated with him at that Imperial War conference, did Hughes of Australia cut the painter? Did Massey of New Zealand let go the mooring? Did Smuts of South Africa drift from the little islands? As regards those statesmen of the empire who came later in 1926, did Balfour, whose last political work is that great achievement of having coupled his name with that magnificent report of 1926, also let go the mooring? Did Baldwin, Chamberlain, Bruce of Australia, all the prime ministers of the six nations of the empire—and I am proud to use the word—also cut the painter? Indeed, the only discordant voices have been from some opponents of the Canadian government and I am sorry to have to reach the conclusion that political partisanship seems to have been the main reason of the criticism.

They have not even been in accord with themselves in their attacks. Listen to their objections; read their newspapers and hon. members will see that one school claims that the whole thing is a sham; that nothing has been done; that no change has been effected, while the other school claims that we are on the road to disaster; that revolution is looming ahead of us; that separation is the thing that we should dread. In fact, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George yesterday in the same speech propounded two doctrines. In one part he described the work of 1929 as being futile, infantile, childish, foolish. Really, I added some words to my vocabulary listening to my hon. friend yesterday. In the next breath he depicted the dangers which were on the horizon of the empire as a result of the work that has been done. That gloomy picture, which I am sorry to say my hon. friend the leader of the opposition also held up, has not even the merit of novelty. At every stage of our constitutional evolution, reactionaries have been seen opposing every reform because, they said, it was leading to separation. Every time, I repeat, the voice of reaction was raised. Yes, every step along the road to self-government was resisted as a step away from the empire and towards separation. When Baldwin and Lafontaine fought in order that parliament should control taxation and expenditure they were described as rebels leading this country to separation from the empire. They were called traitors. Sydenham, Metcalfe and Lord John Russell in their writings all took that stand. Yet who to-day will deny that those men who achieved responsible government in Canada have been the real founders of the British commonwealth? I agree with the suggestion that I heard somewhere that a monument should be erected to Baldwin and Lafontaine at the very door of Downing street because they had been the preservers of the British Empire. The winning of fiscal freedom in 1859, the right of negotiating commercial conventions, the efforts of Edward Blake in 1876 and 1877 to have the instructions to the governor generals of Canada changed in order that they might accord with the status of Canada, the negotiation and the signature of our treaties—all these were viewed with concern by those of that type of mind as manifestations of separatist tendencies. Separation, letting go the moorings, cutting the painter, drifting away from those little islands—these have always been the words that have been flung in the face of the reformer in this country and elsewhere in the British Empire. Let me illustrate that by a few quotations.

In 1839—I am going back a long way—when the battles were being fought for responsible government in Canada, the select committtee of the legislative council of Upper Canada brought in a report, and listen to this:

> After an attentive and disinterested consideration of this subject, your committee are led to the conclusion that the adoption of the plan proposed by the Earl of Durham, in which this (responsible government) is the prominent feature must lead to the overthrow of the great colonial empire of England.

Opposing the Durham report. In 1843, Governor Metcalfe was writing, "the obvious consequence of the concession of responsible government will be separation," and he was saying of Baldwin and Lafontaine, "I regard their faint professions of a desire to perpetuate the connection of the colony with the mother country as utterly worthless."

In 1855, when confederation was looming on the horizon of this country and being discussed in the parliament of the United Kingdom, Mr. Dunkin, in the parliamentary debates, was referring to separation and said:

> Sir, I believe in my conscience that this step now proposed—

Mind you, that was confederation:

> —is one directly and inevitably tending to this other step; and for that reason—even if I believed, as I do not, that it bids fair to answer ever so well in the other respects—because I am an Englishman and hold to the connection with England, I must be against this scheme.

In 1882, speaking on Edward Blake's motion that Canada should have the power to negotiate commercial agreements with any British possession or foreign state, Sir John A. Macdonald declared:

> Disguise it as you will, this means separation and independence.

In 1895, the Colonial Office sent the following despatch:

> To give the colonies the power of negotiating treaties for themselves without reference to Her Majesty's government would be to give them an international status as separate and sovereign states, and would be equivalent to breaking up the empire into a number of independent states.

I am free to admit that I am disappointed in my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. After his professions of Canadianism the other day and Canada first, I did not expect that he would indulge in this—shall I say?—distortion of the motives of those who have given their best to try to solve the present difficulties and to ensure the maintenance and preservation of our great association on a stable basis. Does he not realize that this is not a unilateral document? It is not the work of Canada alone. It is the combined work of the representatives of Great Britain and the Dominions. Does he not realize that the spirit which inspired them was an earnest desire and a determination to ensure the maintenance and preservation of our great association? Does he not realize that the voice of a group of free nations united by a great bond is more powerful than that of subordinate colonies? Has he not learned from the course of English and Canadian history that the fuller the liberty, the stronger the bond becomes?

I resent deeply, and my hon. friend will pardon me for being frank about it, the implied imputation contained in the words which were used by the leader of the opposition, and I throw back the unworthy suggestion and insinuation. It is that same spirit of resistance which still manifest itself as it has done at every period of our constitutional evolution; but let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, and the people of Canada that the definition of equal status will stand unchanged and unchangeable. By claiming, as my hon. friend did again last night, that the fact that we do not amend our own constitution implies inequality of status, my hon. friend is fighting a rearguard action in the defence of his theories. How is it that those who are responsible for the work that has been done, that those who have been the pioneers, that all those who have worked to achieve reform, are satisfied with this sort of equality, while my hon. friend who is rather putting obstacles in the way is not satisfied? May I refer to one man in Canada, a journalist of prominence, the editor of an important newspaper, who has been in the forefront of the work to achieve the position which Canada holds to-day? I refer to Mr. Dafoe of the Manitoba Free Press. What does Mr. Dafoe say in his journal about this new attitude of my hon. friend? It will be found in the issue of February 28, 1930.

An hon. MEMBER: Dispense.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I must impose this upon my hon. friend; if he does not want to listen to it he will have to go away. Mr. Dafoe said:

> The Still Obstructive Mr. Bennett
> Mr. Bennett still elects to belong to that small and everdwindling minority which concerns itself to find excuses for casting doubt upon the doctrine of constitutional equality between Great Britain and the dominions. The movement to establish this condition of equality, which, it should not be forgotten, must be precedent to effective cooperation by the British nations, has not been a party one. When its history comes to be written the name of Sir Robert Borden must stand very high in the list of those to whom credit is due. Indeed, when the movement is completed and the position of Canada as a coequal member of the commonwealth is accepted without question, the Conservative party, by reason of Sir Robert Borden's record, may be expected to claim the whole credit; indeed there have already been indications, as at the convention of the party held in Winnipeg in 1926, of its purpose to advance this claim. But meanwhile the party is so unfortunate as to have a leader who shows, in every reference which he makes to this question, his dislike to the movement and his desire to belittle the development.

Since the Balfour declaration of 1926 a little group of hair-splitters have been trying determinedly but ineffectively to deny the soundness of the constitutional doctrine embodied in that declaration. Their method has been simple enough. It has been boldly to deny that there is equality; to declare that the explicit statements of the 1926 report are without foundation; and to point to existing anomalies in suport of their contention. Prof. Berriedale Keith is the chief of these critics. Prof. Philip Noel Baker, of London University and a member of the present British parliament, deals very effectively with Dr. Keith and his associates in his recently published book, "The Present Judicial Status of the British Dominions in International Law." Meeting his arguments point by point, Prof Keith says it is impossible to accept his conclusions. In noting those who have associated themselves wth Dr. Keith in fighting this rearguard action, Prof. Baker includes the name of but a single public man. It is perhaps needless to say that the person thus referred to is our Mr. Bennett. Thus Prof. Baker says (page 140):

"The leader of the Conservative opposition in the Canadian House of Commons, Mr. Bennett, has made several speeches in which he has used similar language (i.e., language similar to Keith's), e.g., 'Equality of status was a high-sounding phrase, but it could not properly represent the existing position,' and he deprecated the continued use of wrong nomenclature."

It is therefore characteristic of Mr. Bennett that, having had most of his case against "equality" knocked out by the recommendations of the constitutional committee, he should, in place of accepting graciously this new way of escape from an impossible position, look around frantically for some new pretext for contending that our talk about dominion status is all moonshine, the real position being that we are still in a relation of colonial subordination. Hence his gleeful discovery, as announced in his contribution to the debate on the address, that any claim that Canada has constitutional equality with Great Britain is negatived by the fact that the Dominion parliament has not been vested with power to amend the Canadian constitution at will. The reply to this is quite simple and effective. The British parliament is not willingly retaining any control over our constitution; it is ready to turn a responsibility, which would be irksome and dangerous if it were called upon to exercise it, over to Canadian jurisdiction if the Dominion and the provinces can agree among themselves as to the methods by which the constitution is to be amended. The fact upon which Mr. Bennett seizes so hopefully relates to a purely domestic matter for which a domestic solution must be sought.

Are the Conservatives of Canada willing to have Mr. Bennett tie them up definitely to an attitude of unenlightened opposition to a constitutional development, already achieved, which is acceptable to the vast majority of Canadian people? This ungracious, stubborn attitude by Mr. Bennett towards the national status which Canada has achieved by grace of the combined efforts of public men of all parties is very tiresome to the great mass of the people of Canada, and it must be exasperating to most of his colleagues, who would doubtless be much happier in taking credit to themselves and their party for the constitutional progress that has been made.

So, as I stated, those who have worked to achieve the result which has been reached are satisfied with the present position, and I cannot understand why my hon. friend should still raise this question as implying inequality.

Fears were expressed by both the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George and the leader of the opposition with regard to what may happen concerning Canadian navigation and shipping. My hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George says that it means the sweeping away of legislation. It does not mean anything of the kind. It means the right to enact our own legislation. It means that we, as is stated in the report, want willingly to cooperate on all subjects where cooperation and concerted action are desirable. That will be done. Why distrust the people of Canada? Why distrust the parliament of Canada? The fact that we have the power of a self-governing country in shipping and navigation as well as in other spheres of legislation does not mean that we are going to exercise that power foolishly. Self-government, as I said yesterday, implies trust. Surely my hon. friend is not serious when he thinks that the first use that the parliament of Canada will make of the right of legislation will be to sweep away all the statutes which have been useful to Canadian shipping and navigation. The only change that is effected is a change from subordination to cooperation, from conflict to harmony. That is the change that is being made. My friend said: Let us proceed slowly in this matter. Then a few minutes later he blamed the government for having brought up this resolution at this late hour of the session. He says we are proceeding too fast, he beseeches us to proceed slowly, and afterward he blames us for having waited so long to submit this resolution. We cannot wait much longer because the conference will sit in September, parliament will prorogue in a few days, and surely this is the only way in which members of the house could deal with the question.

Mr. McQUARRIE: We will be here for a month at this rate.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, but apparently we should proceed slowly.

In the last part of his remarks—and it will be the last of mine—my hon. friend lectured the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) and I suppose, indirectly, myself, for using the word "nation" in the description of Canada. Well, surely this will be astounding news to the Canadian people. They have heard the word used by all their leaders for a number of years, certainly long prior to the conference of 1926. My friends from Bow River and Winnipeg are certainly in good company. I should like my hon. friend to peruse this work of Sir Robert Borden, his former leader. The word "nation" is the only one which is used by him to express what Canada is among the countries of the world. Shall I quote a few sentences? I think it is useless, but the word appears on every page. My hon. friend referred to the legal meaning which may be attached to it, and he says that the word should not be used. Will hon. members permit me to quote the words of the Hon. Charles Doherty, who was Minister of Justice during the whole term of the Borden government? Hon. members will find these words quoted in Hansard of 1927 at page 1703:

> It has not been claimed on this side of the house that this treaty—

Meaning the peace treaty.

> —made Canada a nation; nor has it been claimed that anything that happened at the Peace conference made Canada a nation. Canada has grown to nationhood and Canada is a nation; and she does not go seeking anywhere to any of the allied or associated powers, to any foreign power, to Great Britain herself, to the entire Peace conference, to confer upon her the gift of nationhood.

Later in the excerpt I find:

> Nationhood is a matter of fact; it is not a question of what is written in a statute book or what is declared by one nation in relation to another.

Then at a later time he stated:

> I have referred to the recent discussion with regard to the aviation law. Over in Great Britain they recognize our national status and that constitutionally the whole field of government of Canada is ours. It is only in this country that you find the little man who wants to hang on to the colonial status of his country and to insist that she is subordinate to and to be governed by another portion of the empire. However great that portion may be—and we all respect it, we all recognize what she was the source of for us all, and we shall all be happy to recognize her as the first among these equal nations—we contend that, as a matter of fact, we stand as an equal nation within the empire.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask a question? Does the hon. gentleman remember that after the Minister of Finance made his speech on the budget the words "Canadian nation" came from the lips of the leader of the opposition, but they were not recorded in Hansard the day after?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I could mention many similar statements indeed. If the rules of the house would permit me I would mention a statement contained in a message sent to the people of Canada on the sixtieth anniversary of confederation. All those high authorities surely did not want to let go the moorings; they did not want to cut the painter; they did not want to drift away from the little islands in the North sea, as my hon. friend so eloquently stated last night.

Canada is a nation; she may hold her head high because of the part she played in the world war and because of her work in all national, political, social and international fields, because of her sacrifice and because of the respect in which she is held by all foreign nations. Canada is a nation; she will not recognize those who refuse to work with her on terms of nationhood; she will not permit them to shape the thoughts and the policies of the Canadian people.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I did not desire to interrupt the remarks of the hon. gentleman, but he must have known that he put the wrong interpretation upon one observation I made. As he knows, I was referring to the legal definition of the term "nation," and he also knows that the authorities are clear that there can be no nation, in the sense in which it is judicially interpreted, unless it be an independent sovereignty. My hon. friend knows as a matter of law that my contention is correct; I used the word nation just as he used it and as we use it frequently —in the colloquial sense. The judicial interpretation is and always has been that there can be no such thing as a nation, either in international law or domestic law, unless there be a sovereignty.

Mr. POULIOT: So the hon. gentleman meant nothing when he used the word "nation"?

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

CONFIRMATION OF AGREEMENTS FOR TRANSFER OF NATURAL RESOURCES TO WESTERN PROVINCES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved that a resolution and humble address be presented to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, in the following words:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the (Senate and) Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty praying that you may graciously be pleased to give your consent to submitting a measure to the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and northern Ireland to amend the British North America acts, 1867 to 1916, the four agreements in the schedule hereto set out being scheduled to such act and the said act being expressed as follows or to the following effect:

An Act to Amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1916

Whereas the four several agreements in the schedule set out were entered into between the government of the Dominion of Canada and the governments of Manitoba, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan respectively on the dates which the said several agreements respectively bear;

And whereas each of the said agreements has been approved by the parliament of Canada and by the legislature of the province to which it relates;

And whereas subsequently to the execution of the agreement with the province of Alberta it was agreed that in addition to the rights accruing thereunder to the said province, it should be entitled to such further rights, if any, with respect to the subject matter of the said agreement as were required to be vested in the province in order that it might enjoy rights equal to those confered upon or reserved to the province of Saskatchewan under any agreement upon a like subject matter thereafter approved and confirmed in the same manner as the said agreement with the province of Alberta, and provision accordingly was made by the parliament of Canada and by the legislature of the province;

And whereas each of the said agreements provides that the same shall come into force only after it has been confirmed by this parliament, and the Dominion of Canada has requested and consented to the enactment of this act;

Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. The said several agreements are hereby confirmed and shall have the force of law respectively notwithstanding anything in the British North America acts, 1867 to 1916, or any order in council or terms or conditions of union made or approved under any of the said acts, or in any act of parliament of Canada.

2. The agreement with the province of Alberta in the schedule hereto contained shall have the force of law as aforesaid, subject to the proviso that in addition to the rights accruing thereunder to the said province, the said province shall be entitled to such further rights, if any, with respect to the subject matter of the said agreement as are required to be vested in the said province in order that it may enjoy rights equal to those which may be conferred upon or reserved to the province of Saskatchewan under agreement with such last mentioned province in the schedule hereto contained.

3. This act may be cited as the "British North America Act, 1930" and the British North America acts, 1867 to 1916, and this act may be cited together as the "British North America acts, 1867 to 1930."

All of which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into Your favourable and gracious consideration.

He said: The purpose of this address is apparent from the text. It is to ask the British parliament to confirm and thereby give force and effect to the agreements which have been entered into between the government of Canada and the legislatures of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. These several agreements have been approved by this parliament and by the several legislatures I have mentioned. They have been approved, without a division, by both houses of this parliament and for that reason I think it unnecessary at this moment to do more than indicate the purpose of the address in order to express the belief that it too will be passed with like unanimity.

My hon. friends will realize that at the moment we are amending the British North America Act; in other words, Canada is now engaged in the process of amending her own constitution in so far as that step has become necessary under the agreements into which she has entered. The part played by the parliament at Westminster is at the instance of this parliament; the parliament at Westminster lends its good offices, so to speak, to enact what in accordance with our method of proceeding is essential to give force and effect to the agreements. That, however, in no way lessens the significance of the amendment of the constitution being our own amendment and made in accordance with our established method of procedure. The parliament at Westminster, of its own initiative, would never think of attempting to make an amendment to our constitution. It acts in these matters as an agent of the government of Canada.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT: The observations of the right hon. the Prime Minister lend point and substance to the debate which took place yesterday in this house. It is now realized that without the action of the Imperial parliament at Westminster the Canadian parliament cannot amend its constitution. It is now made clear that we must ask another body three thousand miles away to pass a statute in order that our action may be made legal or valid. I had not expected proof of my contention to come so quickly from the government side of the house. The right hon. gentleman, with his usual astuteness, and anticipating the attitude of hon. members on this side of the house, said that we are now engaged in amending our constitution. And that is true; we are passing an address to ask the parliament in London to do that particular thing for us.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the proper method of procedure.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what we are asking them to do, and that coincides exactly with the remarks I made yesterday. Hon. gentlemen will notice that the legislation we are asking the British parliament to pass is in these words:

> Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

So far as I know the Lords Spiritual and Temporal hold office in Great Britain, not in Canada. The House of Commons that is referred to is the House of Commons sitting in Great Britain. So we now have complete and absolute proof upon the records of this parliament that by the constitutional changes that give us so-called equality of status we cannot amend our own constitution as can Australia, as can South Africa and as can Great Britain itself. That is the story.

I find it difficult to understand the warmth with which the Minister of Justice was dealing with this phase of the matter when he was considering another subject, but let there be no misunderstanding. Surely hon. members opposite do not insult the intelligence of the ordinary man on the street by asking him to believe there is an equality when the word "equality" means just what it says, the power to do the same thing, and we have not the power to do the same thing as England does, as Australia does and as South Africa does in the manner and form by their constitutions prescribed, which I will not take time to discuss at present.

We are solemnly sitting here, the elected members of the House of Commons, asking by petition of this house and the Senate that the parliament of Great Britain may be pleased to act as we request, and at the close of the petition we find these words:

> All of which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into your favourable and gracious consideration.

That is, we are asking that a parliament three thousand miles away may be pleased to do it. Suppose no one introduces the measure; then what happens? Suppose no one in the parliament of Great Britain introduces this matter into the House of Commons or the House of Lords. What is the result? The Minister of Justice will make a speech on equality of status, and in perfervid eloquence declare to the Canadian people that this is so or it is not so because he, the Minister of Justice, has said so. I do say this to the minister: It is just such observations as have been made here this morning and as the Prime Minister has made about the equality of status of Canada, when it is not so, that make Canadians question the sincerity of the government in the whole matter, because they are presuming upon the Canadian people when they make that statement. After all, there is some intelligence in Canada and people will not be deluded by observations made by any man, however important he may be, when he says things are equal when they are not equal. You cannot do it that way.

It is true that the British parliament will do as this parliament asks, or at least we assume that to be so, but supposing they do not do so? Who is going to introduce your bills? Someone must do it; someone in that parliament must take the responsibility of seeing that the bills are introduced and passed, that a majority is secured in their favour and that they are enacted, and all the sophistry in the world, all the casuistry in the world cannot get away from the fact that to amend our constitution, to give validity to the transfer of the resources to western Canada, to make legal that which is now illegal, we have to go to a parliament three thousand miles away. You cannot get away from it. It is a significant circumstance that on the same morning when a minister of the crown solemnly declares that there is equality of status between Great Britain and Canada, within the next few minutes the Prime Minister of the country moves that a humble petition be sent to His Majesty the King, praying that he have his parliament at Westminster enact legislation to give validity, life and form to something which to-day is not worth the paper on which it is written, because we have not the power to do that which we have done, and are now seeking ratification of the Imperial parliament. That is what causes distrust of the whole action of the government; that is what makes people ask, "What does this mean, when men go about and talk in these terms about equality when they know there is none, when they know that the essence of nationhood is the right to amend its own constitution." Why the attempt to deceive; why not at once say frankly that we use these words in the broad and colloquial sense? We know that as a matter of law this is not so; we know that any court that might consider the question would have to decide otherwise; we know what the legal position is, but we use these terms as I have used them from my youth in referring to Canada as a "nation," referring to the "status" and referring to these matters in that sense. When, as yesterday and this morning, we are dealing with matters which touch legal questions, then precedents, authorities and judgments govern, and you cannot give to words meanings they do not legally possess in order to attach significance to a phrase which will not bear judicial interpretation in the sense suggested.

That is the reason I said to the minister what I did say in connection with this matter some days ago. I gravely doubt whether we should proceed in this way. Once more I venture to fight a rearguard action, in the language of the Minister of Justice, when I point out to him that it has not been customary to deal with constitutional matters in this way. Constitutional matters usually have been dealt with in the form of a statute which embodies the arrangement or agreement which has been entered into. It was so in the original British North America Act, and it has been so in the different amendments which have been made to that act. We are now ratifying agreements, but part of those agreements require no ratification. I put this to the Minister of Justice as a suggestion which I think he, as a lawyer, will regard as important: If we make the agreements in question a part of our constitution when portions of the agreements require no confirmation because they deal with purely domestic matters, but do they not hereafter become a part of the constitution, and are they not only amendable in the manner in which the constitution can be amended? There is a section in the agreements which declares that any matter referred to in the agreements may be dealt with by an understanding between the parties concerned, that is, between Alberta and the Dominion, between Saskatchewan and the Dominion and between Manitoba and the Dominion. But that only refers, as I take it, to limited portions of the agreements and if the hon. gentleman will look at them he will see that the limitations to which I refer are thus expressed. I will say this, that not before in the history of British institutions has a constitutional change been made by the confirmation of agreements; such changes have heretofore been embodied in legislation, as in the Manitoba Act. The government takes the responsibility in this matter; the Minister of Justice, the chief law officer of the crown, is satisfied in that regard and therefore the motherland. Now I am merely speaking as a member of parliament, not in any sense as the leader of a party; I am making a suggestion to him as one lawyer to another. I suggest that this is not the way in which it has been done.

Just here I might point out one other matter. Those who read history and endeavour to form conclusions and draw inferences all realize that a day, a year, or fifty years in the life of a state are as nothing; all we can do is to endeavour as best we can to conclude that certain things done to-day will, years hence, have a result which we believe will be injurious or beneficial to the body politic. The immediate consequences are not of concern; what is of vital concern is the effect upon the body politic in the years that are to come, and in that regard I have some measure of pride and satisfaction in looking back upon the rearguard actions I have fought, for, by a strange circumstance, the results which I predicted would come about in connection with what has been done have usually occurred. I know not why that is so; I only know that has been the case. When I ventured, twenty-five years ago, to point out in connection with these resources what the inevitable result would be, I can remember one of the friends of my hon. friends saying, "We have heard the last of you. This country is going to have the money, and the resources are nothing." When I remember the vociferous cheers of those hon. gentlemen in those days; when I recall the scoffing and the scorn which they expressed, for our demand that the new provinces should be granted their resources I take some pride and satisfaction in thinking that where the vanguard camps to-day the rear will march to-morrow.

Mr. MORIN: The hon. gentleman's argument was that Canada could not claim nationhood because it had not the power of amending its own constitution. At the same time he acknowledged that Australia enjoyed that power, and therefore, we must infer from his statement that Australia has a higher status than has Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that that was one of the badges of nationhood, using the words of my hon. friend, but it is not the only attribute of nationhood. Nationhood, as it was defined last night—perhaps the hon. gentleman was not present—is really synonymous with an independent state. The right of amendment of a constitution is one of the determining factors as to whether or not a community is a nation, but it does not make it a nation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Speaker, I will not refer to the first part of my hon. friend's remarks, because I dealt with that matter both yesterday and to-day. I can see that my hon. friend is fighting a rearguard action. I would inform my hon. friend that the form of the address was carefully considered, as well as the bill to be enacted by the Imperial government. These matters were considered not only by the officers of the department, but by outside counsel, and they have been submitted to the various law departments of the provinces concerned.

Mr. MacLAREN: Has the consent been obtained of those provinces not directly interested in this address, that is to say, has the concurrence been received of the provinces other than British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All the provinces of Canada are at the present time represented in this house, and I assume that there will be unanimity on the part of this house in the matter of this address as there has been with respect to the agreements themselves. The provinces of Canada were represented at the Dominion-provincial conference, both by their premiers and members of their administrations. Among other subjects considered and discussed at that conference was this very question of the return of the natural resources to the western provinces. The view then expressed by the representatives of the other provinces seemed to be that the treatment of these western provinces should be liberal and cordial. I do not think it is necessary to have any formal submission of this address to the other provinces before this parliament takes action upon it. It relates exclusively to the western provinces, and should the other provinces have any matters to be discussed growing out of what we are now doing, those matters will receive every consideration.

Mr. MacLAREN: I cannot agree with the view put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). The British North America Act first received the assent of all the provinces, and I submit that the forwarding of this petition by this parliament does not represent the views of the provinces in the sense that it is expressing the acquiescence and concurrence of the provinces concerned. I contend that amendments to the British North America Act, especially those of the importance of the one we have before us, should be submitted not in an informal but in a very official way to all the provinces in order to obtain their concurrence therein, or to give them an opportunity of expressing objections. The procedure now suggested is contrary to both confederation and the British North America Act. It is not following out the spirit in which that act was framed; it is not giving to the provinces the opportunity of expressing objection or acquiescence. I do not see how it can be considered that the simple passage by this house of this petition represents the will of the provinces. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I enter my protest that a petition of this character should be forwarded without consulting all the provinces of the Dominion with a view of obtaining their assent thereto or their objections.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to delay these proceedings, but I feel that I should reiterate what I said when the agreements were before the house. After an agreement had been concluded with the province of Alberta, satisfactory both to the Dominion of Canada and to the province, the government of Saskatchewan succeeded in wresting from this government more favourable terms; and we now ask the British parliament to adopt legislation by which the province of Alberta will be given something which it has not asked for. That shows the weakness of the position which was created by this government agreeing to give to Saskatchewan something more than Alberta had asked for, and something more than I think was necessary. That is my first objection.

My second objection is that a wrong principle is introduced herein. It is a wrong policy to introduce into an agreement the principle introduced herein, that an act enacted by this parliament, even though reenacted or ratified by the British parliament, shall not be final. We thus open the way for litigation upon the agreements which we have concluded.

I think also there is something in the point raised by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren). I would remind him and the other representatives from the maritime provinces that at all times they have my deepest sympathy, because I think those provinces have been made the victims of confederation. However, I remind him also of the very lucid interpretation which was put upon the constitution by Lord Haldane. I do not remember the particular case—I am sure the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) would remember it—but it originated in Australia. His Lordship made an extremely interesting, and from my humble layman's point of view, a most conclusive comparison as between the constitutions of Australia, Canada and South Africa. He pointed out how mistaken many Canadians are in referring to the British North America Act as a contract, when in fact it was only the result of a contract. The old colonies agreed to renounce their existence, they laid down the terms under which they were prepared to enter into confederation in the form of provinces, and they sent that contract to London; but there it was amended greatly by the various representatives of those colonies, and finally the British parliament passed a statute which differed from both the contract passed in Quebec and the London treaty.

Mr. BENNETT: Prepared by the British draftsmen on the strength of the reprsentations made.

Mr. BOURASSA: I admit that, but nevertheless—and I think this was Lord Haldane's conclusion, and I believe it was right—once that law was passed, the old colonies lost their identity—they became provinces under the new law, just as the Dominion was created under the same new law. The powers of each are defined by the statute itself, and no further reference can be made to the contract as against the letter and spirit of the constitution itself. Of course, history records how both the contract and the legislation were imposed upon the people of the maritime provinces; and I quite realize they should be very sensitive in regard to anything which may look to them as a further abandonment of what they claim as their rights. But in regard to this I think the way is quite clear. The government of any of those provinces can have representatives before the British parliament and make such opposition to the enactment of these agreements as it may think fit. It may plead before the committee of the House of Commons in England what it considers to be an abridgement of its rights or claims in equity, as they were presented here during the debate on the agreements. That can be done; but I do not think we could agree in this house to renounce our right to make an agreement with various provinces upon matters concerning only those provinces, afterwards asking ratification by the British parliament in concurrence with the provinces immediately interested. Any individual, so far as that is concerned, may go before the British parliament and have his views presented to that body as against these agreements or any amendment of the constitution.

This brings me to the point made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and I think it is worth while looking into it also. There is no doubt something rather ludicrous in the contrast between the debates that have preceded, on the national status of Canada, and the debate on this motion. There is not the slightest doubt that so long as we submit to the exercise of imperial jurisdiction over our constitution, or upon any agreement that we may make with the provinces or with one or more of the provinces, it is absurd to talk of Canada having attained her full national status. But where I think the solution is to be found is in the comparison between two very simple words, that is, the word "right" and the word "power." Undoubtedly the leader of the opposition is quite right as a lawyer when he says that so long as we do not exercise the power of amending the constitution, there is something childish and ludicrous in our parading our title as a nation. This looks very much like a boy who would catch hold of his father's military uniform and sword and parade himself as a general because his father, being a general, has received from his commander a military uniform, a plumed hat and a sword.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is it not against the rules of the house so to characterize the Minister of Justice?

Mr. BOURASSA; I am not characterizing the Minister of Justice. I am characterizing the Canadian nation, whether it be the Minister of Justice, Sir Robert Borden or myself, because I have spoken very often concerning the matter. I admit there is something childish in our attitude, but at the same time it is by repeating it that one of these days we shall make good our rights. That is what I come back to. In a previous debate, I think at the opening of this parliament—and I do not want to refer to a past debate except by way of illustration—the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) put the matter quite clearly when he said in effect—and it has been stated time and again outside the house also, and quite rightly:—we have not yet chosen to exercise our undoubted right to amend our constitution according, of course, to the spirit under which it was framed, that is, after agreeing with the provinces as to the manner in which those powers which belong to both jurisdictions or those which belong to only one of them, should be treated. After we have agreed with them, it remains with ourselves to take action, and nobody in England would contradict or interfere, not even Mr. Keith. In Mr. Keith's latest book there is a somewhat melancholy but very clear admission that in the conference of 1926 and in the last conference of 1929 we have made much headway. There is not the slightest doubt that the day the parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures would assert their will to exercise their right of amending their constitution without going to Westminster, no word would be uttered in London against that action. Further, it would not take long before we made our position good before the Imperial parliament as regards the exercise of that power. I remember an opinion expressed as far back as twenty-eight years ago, I think it was, again by Lord Haldane, when he said that it was becoming clearer and clearer every day that in regard to passing legislation at the request of the various colonial legislatures as they were still called, it was realized that the Imperial parliament was exercising a mere power of trusteeship and had nothing to do but to legislate in the manner suggested by those various parliaments.

Mr. THORSON: Legislative action would be automatic.

Mr. BOURASSA: Well "automatic" may be a little too strong. Not with the idea of extending the debate that has passed before this motion, but precisely in conjunction with this motion and the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren), let me point out the situation which may arise: supposing the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, at the next session of the Imperial parliament, when this legislation comes up, make solemn protest against the passing of the legislation; supposing they convince a majority of the members of the Imperial parliament that this agreement is doing an injustice to the people of the maritime provinces: would anybody deny that the Imperial parliament would have both the right and the power to decide as between the claim of Canada in conjunction with Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia, and the counter claims of the maritime provinces?

Mr. THORSON: Not a constitutional right.

Mr. BOURASSA: Why? Supposing the governments of the maritime provinces demonstrate that, while they have not any possible access to those natural resources which were or which at least some people hold to have been the property of the people of Canada, the parliament of Canada is divesting itself of the rest of those resources after having handed over a large portion of them to Ontario and Quebec without an inch of territory being given to the maritime provinces; supposing the maritime provinces make their claim in equity before the Imperial parliament: will anyone deny that the Imperial parliament will have both the right and the power to say that as regards these agreements, especially after we have handed over to Quebec and Ontario such a large portion of those territories, the legislation should not pass until we have compensated the maritime provinces? I do not say that this should be done as a matter of equity, but I say that the British parliament would certainly have a right to say: So long as the people of Canada, through their various political powers, federal and provincial, have not chosen to exercise to the full their right of sovereignty over their constitution; so long as they choose to make us the final legislative arbiters, so to speak, in such matters, we have to consider Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island just as much as Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and just as much as the Dominion of Canada. So long as we rely upon the final exercise of legislative power by the Imperial parliament, surely we must be prepared to expect from that parliament the exercise of a duty which we would ourselves have to exercise if we had to decide between two or three different contentions presented to us by governments, corporations or individuals.

I repeat, I am not making these remarks to obstruct or retard the passage of this measure, but I am afraid that in the last few years we have developed the habit of giving a great deal of time to comparatively small questions and questions of money, and then leaving till the last two or three days of the session the greatest questions of state which should be most carefully considered because their consequences in the future may be very far-reaching, either as regards the relations between the Dominion and the provinces or the relations between the various provinces themselves. I thought it was my duty to suggest that the question was not so simple as it has been regarded; but at the same time I would not like to put myself along the same line of thought adopted by the hon. leader of the opposition, who seems to consider that this question of constitutional amendments is one that we cannot solve. We can solve it. We can exercise our rights, and therefore we can make the power in conformity with the right, make the fact conform with the theory. But so long as we have not done it, so long as for reasons good or bad, such as have been expressed time and again, by the premier of Quebec, Mr. Taschereau, whose views I respect but do not share—so long as you have people east and west who imagine that Canada is not just enough, that Canada is not manly enough, to exercise its nationhood to the full, that we must rely upon a foreign tribunal to pass final adjudication upon our legal quarrels, upon a foreign parliament to give the final touch to our most important pieces of legislation, then we must be prepared to accept some of the consequences, nay, all the consequences, of that state of fact which wisely or unwisely we choose to keep in being.

That was suggested to me partly by the argument made by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren). We of the west or of the central parts of Canada, are too apt to forget the dire position in which the maritime provinces find themselves. They have been, I repeat, the victims of confederation. They have paid practically all the penalties of the confederation pact, with very little compensation; and as far as I am concerned I would view with sympathy some means being taken by those provinces to assert their rights. I suggest humbly and in a friendly way to my friends of the maritime provinces—I think they know the sincerity of my feelings—that they should induce their provincial governments to take direct action and send their delegates to London to place their views before the Imperial parliament. They would then have at once the advantage of having their views properly aired and, as well, a declaration by the Imperial parliament as to whether that body still considers itself as the arbiter between the various provinces of Canada, or as between the Dominion and those provinces.

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): I want to join with the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren) in protesting against this legislation going through until the question is decided whether or not the maritime provinces have any right to those lands. They claim that they have. They may be wrong. Their claim is opposed by our friends from the west. I say that that claim should be determined before this thing passes irrevocably out of our hands. The present assurances do not go far enough. They are the same assurances that were given to our representatives in 1912, that when the matter came to be discussed and the lands were given over to the western provinces, the claims of the maritime provinces would be recognized. That time has come and those claims have not been recognized. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has enlarged on the point that I had in my mind, that it will be the duty of the three maritime governments to appear before the Imperial parliament and oppose the passage of this legislation until that claim is settled one way or the other. It may be that we have no claim. Very well; let us have it decided; and then the people of the maritimes will be satisfied. But until that question is settled I believe that the people of the maritime provinces will feel that they have been unjustly treated in this matter.

HALIBUT FISHERIES

CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient that parliament do approve of the convention between Canada and the United States for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific ocean and Bering sea, Ottawa, 9th May, 1930, signed in respect of the Dominion of Canada by the plenipotentiary named therein, and that this house do approve of the same.

He said: In 1923 a treaty was made between the United States and Canada for the purpose of protecting and preserving the halibut fisheries in the northern Pacific ocean and Bering sea. One of the provisions of that treaty was to the effect that an international fisheries commission should be appointed, which commission would have the power to study the life history of the halibut, to report the results of its investigation, and also to make recommendations in the nature of regulations for governing the fishing for halibut in those waters. The international fisheries commission took a period of some three years to make the investigation and reported that the halibut fisheries were being seriously depleted. It made important recommendations for the preservation of the halibut, and these recommendations were approved, so far as Canada is concerned, by order in council in 1928. It was thought that that was all that was necessary to give effect to the recommendations on behalf of Canada. The United States government, however, felt that something more in the way of authority was necessary for the United States to give like effect to the recommendations, and suggested that the former treaty should be modified in a manner which would embody the recommendations. That is what has been done, and the treaty which I laid on the table a day or two ago, and which the house is now being asked to approve, is virtually the treaty of 1923, as it was but embodying as well the recommendations of the international fisheries commission.

These recommendations are embodied in the following provisions of the treaty:

(a) divide the convention waters into areas;
(b) limit the catch of halibut to be taken from each area;
(c) fix the size and character of halibut fishing appliances to be used therein;
(d) make such regulations for the collection of statistics of the catch of halibut including the licensing and clearance of vessels, as will enable the International Fisheries Commission to determine the condition and trend of the halibut fishery by banks and areas, as a proper basis for protecting and conserving the fishery;
(e) close to all halibut fishing such portion or portions of an area or areas, as the International Fisheries Commission find to be populated by small, immature halibut.

Mr. BENNETT: Licensed by whom?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Under the authority of the commission.

Mr. BENNETT: I was a little uncertain about that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say the closed season has been extended under this treaty to commence on the first of November instead of the fifteenth and to continue as formerly to the fifteenth of February inclusive. Those, I think, are all the essential features of the new treaty.

Mr. SHORT: Have any important changes been made in the former treaty?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have just indicated one important change—the closed season has been extended by fifteen days. The present treaty embodies a number of the recommendations of the joint fisheries commission. These recommendations had been approved by order in council so far as Canada is concerned, but to meet the desires of the United States government in the matter of sufficient authority they have now been put in the form of a treaty.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last summer when I had an opportunity to visit Prince Rupert I went down to the boats and observed the operations in connection with the landing of the halibut catch and its treatment in cold storage for the purpose of ascertaining something in connection with the industry. The truth is that the fish are being absolutely destroyed. I found that halibut do not attain a reasonable size until their seventh or eighth year; some live to an age of thirty-five or forty years. Formerly halibut were caught weighing over four hundred pounds. Now the halibut from the open sea are being caught, brought into port and shipped in bond to the United States, principally to Boston, and this affords considerable traffic for the railways. Our fishermen get for their halibut a smaller price than the Americans get for their catch because of the duty against the importation of halibut into the United States. That is the basis, I assume, of the suggestion made the other day that there should be a countervailing duty in respect to fish.

Although I had heard a great deal about it before I went to Prince Rupert, I satisfied myself from the questions which I asked and from what I saw while there that unfortunately heretofore the provisions of the treaty have not been fully observed. In other words, the patrol has been inadequate, and being inadequate has been ineffective. I regret to say the fishermen told me that the industry was really threatened with extinction, and that unless very drastic action were taken to enforce the regulations the result would be extremely serious. I think we realize how desirable it is that the halibut fishing industry in the north Pacific should not be destroyed. Halibut is one of the best food fishes in the world, and it is in constant demand by our friends to the south. The extension of the closed season, I think, from the information I gathered at Prince Rupert, will improve conditions and I only desire to impress upon the government the very great importance of insisting on the regulations under the treaty being respected, and that without fear, favour or affection we should prosecute those who violate them. The member for Skeena (Mr. Brady) placed upon Hansard a year ago—I daresay hon. members will recall the occasion —a story in connection with the enforcement of the treaty regulations. I took the trouble to make some inquiries at the time, because it struck me that if what he related were repeated frequently it would result in the entire extinction of halibut in the northern Pacific.

I welcome this treaty as an advance on the former treaty. I hope the extension of the closed season and the establishment of areas in which no fish shall be taken will to some extent at least meet the difficulty. Under the circumstances I would impress upon the government once more how desirable it is to enforce the law. I am confident they may count upon the support of every Canadian who is interested in this great fishery in seeing that the law is observed and the treaty respected, and that no reasonable expenditure will be too great if it has the effect of maintaining the halibut fishery for posterity.

Mr. J. C. BRADY (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, permit me to say a few words on this very important treaty. The very fact that two nations decide to enter into a treaty presupposes the importance of the subject matter dealt with. Undoubtedly the halibut fishing industry is of very great importance, not merely to Canada but also to the United States. I have read the treaty as brought down yesterday. I am in perfect accord with the efforts made to conserve the greatest fishing banks at present in the world. If hon. members have read the story of our Atlantic fishing grounds they will recall that many years ago halibut existed in abundance on the great fishing banks of the North sea; to-day they are non-existent. We find that, steadily, for the last twenty years halibut which was caught in abundance off cape Flattery, many years ago, were decimated in that area, and then Hecate straits, became the great centre of our halibut industry and continued to be so for a period of ten to fifteen years. Once more the scene changed. To-day the halibut fishermen have to travel right to the extreme end of Alaskan boundaries; they have to go as far as Kodiak, and beyond, even to Unalaska near the Behring sea. That being the case we must realize the gravity and importance of this treaty renewed between two great nations.

I do regret however that in the text of the treaty the government has overlooked a very important matter in respect to the halibut situation. At the present time the great weight of power, wealth and control of these fisheries is not in Canadian hands and has not been for years past; it is in the hands of Americans. They have the wealth and the power, and through these sources they have obtained almost complete control of this great and important fishing industry. For example, last year in the port of Prince Rupert over 30,000,000 pounds of halibut were landed, and of that poundage 20,000,000 pounds came in American vessels. For some reason or another it is a very easy matter to have the press misrepresent what one is trying honestly to represent to the public. What I said last year, and what I repeat this year, has nothing to do with retaliation upon the United States; it is simply a question of equality and fair dealing between the two countries which have made this treaty. I want to impress upon the government the fact that in our salmon fisheries we have a large area of neutral waters; strictly speaking these should be part of the Canadian waters. I refer to the great Hecate straits lying between Queen Charlotte islands and the mainland of Canada. What happens in connection with this fishing ground? Every year hundreds of American fishing vessels enter our harbours and violate the sacred treaty which was entered into years ago between the United States and Canada. I gave evidence of this last year. The result is that in every phase of this great and important industry the Canadian fisherman has not the rights to which he is entitled, while on the other hand the American nation realize the importance and the greatness of the fishing industry and are ever alert to get every advantage. So important is the fishing industry and so great the demand of the American public for fish that we can never hope to supply it. Fish is one of the most important foods consumed by the American people. I may be too late, but I ask the Prime Minister to make one more effort to secure for Canadian fishermen, their rights in connection with this important industry. A few weeks ago, I placed before this house certain facts; they are facts which can be authenticated by any one who desires so to do. Canada has in Prince Rupert a wonderful port on the Pacific coast, and it is the only port at which American vessels can deliver their fish and have them sent with expedition to the great markets of the United States. The result is that the American fishing vessels bring their fish to that port, and they do not pay a single cent; they are charged only one dollar for the licence to fish, and they receive the full benefits of the port. They are allowed to ship their fish from that port in bond; they seek Canadian ports as a shelter from storm; they receive all the benefits we can confer and in return we receive practically nothing.

I urge the government in pursuance of this treaty to try to impress upon the United States the necessity of a fair deal in a matter which has a profound interest both for that country and Canada. That is all I ask.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate informing their honours that this house has adopted a resolution approving of the convention between Canada and the United States for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific ocean and Bering sea, Ottawa, 9th May, 1930, signed in respect of the Dominion of Canada by the plenipotentiary named therein; and that the clerk do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

At 1.05 p.m. the house took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS—PROCEDURE

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette) moved:

That all private bills reported upon to-day and contained in the tenth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills be placed upon the order paper of the house for consideration this day in committee of the whole and for third reading.

Motion agreed to.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Soldier Settlement Act to carry into effect the recommendations of the special committee on pensions and returned soldiers' problems, submitted to the house on the 23rd May, instant, and to provide that the total outstanding indebtedness of all soldier settlers who are still in active occupancy of their farms shall be reduced by the amount of thirty per cent, to take effect upon the last standard date, 1929, or, in the case of settlers whose applications for revaluation have not yet been finally dealt with, immediately after the final award has been given.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The leader of the opposition is not here, but there is no objection to this resolution carrying since he will have an opportunity of saying anything he wishes to say when the bill is in committee.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Stewart (Edmonton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 313, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read a second time?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Has this bill been printed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. Perhaps it would be better to continue to-morrow with the discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Or this day later?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, this day later.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill will be read a second time this day later.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 12, to amend the act respecting grain.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, may I suggest a method of procedure which might save the time of the committee. I think the committee on agriculture did excellent work in connection with this bill. The decisions in regard thereto were practically unanimous, indeed I may say absolutely unanimous, but there was just one matter in connection with the bill to which serious objection was taken, and in connection with that matter the minister has agreed to make a statement to the committee. The question to which I refer is the status of the assistant commissioners. Hon. members will recall that a provision was made last year that the assistant commissioner should have all the powers of a commissioner for the purpose of making inquiry, hearing complaints and making decisions. In the original draft of the present bill, which was finally agreed to by the committee, it is intended to take away from the assistant commissioner those powers, and to make him completely subject in every respect to the board and his future powers will depend upon regulations or orders passed by the board. While admitting that this feature from an administrative point of view has considerable merit, and while admitting that a great deal may be said for the change, yet I feel that the producers may not be wholly satisfied. The reason for making the change last year was to give the producer a man with power who would be close to him, a man who could deal effectively and in a speedy manner with any questions which might arise. Personally I believe that the new board will be a good one, will be efficient and will operate excellently, yet I feel that it would have been better if the producers had close to them a man with the powers of a commissioner. If the new board should delegate to these assistant commissioners the full power which they had last year, then my objection would be removed. Before we pass this bill I would like the minister to make a statement in regard to this matter. With that one criticism, I would suggest that considerable time would be saved if the bill were simply passed as a bill and sent forward to its conclusion.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Chairman, I think the remarks of the hon., member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) have clearly outlined the objection which he took in the committee when the bill was unanimously passed. Section 10 of the new bill provides:

The board or the chief commissioner may authorize a commissioner or assistant commissioner to inquire into any matter as to which the commission has power to make inquiry, and any commissioner or assistant commissioner so authorized shall have the same powers as the board might itself have exercised.

The person so authorized would have the same right of inquiry as the board itself. Section 11a of last year's amendment provided:

Each of the assistant commissioners shall have the like powers and duty to receive and investigate complaints and also make investigations without complaint received and make findings thereon, as by the act is given to and imposed upon the board of any commissioner,

Subsection (3) of section 11a of the amendment provides:

There shall be an appeal to the board within fifteen days by any person dissatisfied with a decision of an assistant commissioner.

While the assistant commissioner was given last year the full power to decide for the whole board, of which he was not a member, the individual who might feel that such decision was not a fair one could appeal to the board within fifteen days. I am free to say that the advice offered to me and to the committee in support of section 10 by the chairman of the board and by the legal advisers is that under the amendment, section 11a, the assistant commissioner was given more power that any one of the commissioners. He was given more power than the chairman of the board because he could make a finding, whereas no member of the board could do so under the act. Under the new section, which I think we should accept for at least a year's trial, I believe that the recommendations of the assistant commissioner would be more carefully considered because he would know that a finding would be based thereon. If the assistant commissioner possesed full power with appeal to the board, he might be influenced by a hasty judgment. When he knows that his investigation and his finding require the approval of the board, he will give very careful consideration thereto. Section 10 will provide a greater degree of finality once the case is heard. It does not seem to me that an assistant commissioner would be as careful in making his decision when there was a possibility of the case being reheard by the full board within fifteen days. If the power of making a decision were left with the assistant, many apepals would have to be made to the board, and I think it advisable that the board should have the opportunity to pass upon any matter in which an inquiry is advisable.

As minister of the department charged with the administration of this act through the Board of Grain Commissioners, I want to point out another objection to 11a. Under subsection 11a of the amendment of last year the department has to supervise two bodies. One body is the Board of Grain Commissioners, headed by a chairman charged with the administration of the act and responsible for decisions made by the assistant commissioner. Inasmuch as these assistant commissioners are appointed not by the governor in council but on the recommendation of the board itself; inasmuch as the three assistant commissioners were chosen for their technical and practical knowledge by the Board of Grain Commissioners, I think it is a very improper situation for these men not to be responsible to the board that engaged them. As regards the three assistant commissioners, one man was taken from the grain trade—I believe he was an elevator operator for the United Grain Growers—and another man, an excellent and well known operator, was taken from the pool. The third man was taken from the Manitoba Agricultural college, on account of his expert knowledge of the whole grain business. I do not think one could criticize the board for their selection of the assistant commissioners, but I do not believe these men selected by the board should be given any more power than any officer of the board. I submit that for the present at least I must take the advice of the officers of the board and ask the committee to accept section 10, which I believe is better than section 11a of the amendment of last year.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 138 inclusive agreed to.

On section 139—Leases for grain shipped to Pacific.

Mr. MALCOLM: I should like to move for the deletion of subsection (3) from section 139. The deletion of this section still leaves to the board the right to refuse to permit the leasing of special bin accommodation at any time, but it removes the statutory limitation on the power of the board and does not make the leasing a contravention of the act. The committee will note that subsection (3) of section 139 reads:

No contract for the leasing of special bin accommodation in any eastern elevator during the period between the 1st day of September and the 15th day of December in any year shall be approved by the board or permitted to take effect.

In other words, subsection 3 takes away from the board the right to approve special bin leasing. In the general interest of the trade it is felt by the board that they should have a right to permit special binning at any period of the crop season. I therefore move that subsection (3) of section 139 be deleted.

Mr. BENNETT: It is rather important in a matter of this kind, dealing with a lengthy statute where the minister suggests that certain amendments be made, that he should be able to assure the house beyond peradventure that every clause has been checked and that there is no doubt in the world that what we are doing with respect to this bill as a whole is something that will not cause difficulties in the operation of the statute. We are adopting a wholly unusual course, one for which the government must accept the fullest responsibility in every way. I trust that no difficulties may arise, but there is always the opportunity for them to occur, when you deal with a statute in the manner in which this one is now being dealt with. When the minister makes one amendment, this necessitates my making the observations I have. If it be necessary to make a change with respect to one clause, it may be like the budget of the Minister of Finance, where we increase a steel tariff item 50 per cent; or where we made a seasonal tariff on fruit and vegetables. Under those circumstances I should like some assurance from the minister.

Mr. MALCOLM: I can give the leader of the opposition this assurance and I quite realize the value and importance of his suggestion. Never before has there been such unanimity of opinion in committee and such a careful hearing of the various interested parties in the handling of grain as there has been on this occasion. I should like to join with the hon. member for Bow River in saying that the committee went so carefully through the bill that I doubt very much whether any hon member who did not have the advantage of being on the committee could find many suggestions to make. The striking out of subsection 3 of section 139 was reviewed carefully by the chairman of the board after listening to certain representations by the bay port elevator operators and I think, before recommending to the minister that he amend the section by striking out subsection 3, the chairman also discussed the matter with the interested members of the committee. Therefore, I have no hesitancy in expressing the belief that the amendment will operate to the general advantage of the trade, because it provides simply that should an emergency arise, the board may grant the right to special bin at a season at which it is now prohibited under the act to grant it.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 140 to 171 inclusive agreed to.

On section 172.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think the leader of the opposition will agree to the amendment I desire to make to section 172. This is purely a case of wording. I move to amend section 172 by inserting the word "coming" in the third line in place of the word "carrying." The section will then read:

> This act shall come into force on proclamation of the governor in council who may by such proclamation direct the coming into force—

Instead of "carrying into force," which was a misprint.

Mr. BENNETT: "Coming" is not a very good word. Indeed, I would say, from the standpoint of the hon. member for Lisgar neither word is very apt to express the meaning.

Mr. BROWN: I understand my hon. friend is a student of Roget's Thesaurus, and perhaps he might find the proper word.

Mr. BENNETT: If I had time, I certainly would. The word "coming" is not an apt word to use to express what the minister has in mind.

Mr. MALCOLM: The section as amended will read:

> This act shall come into force on proclamation of the governor in council who may by such proclamation direct the coming into force at any time of any specified sections or parts thereof subject to such conditions as the governor in council may direct.

Mr. DUNNING: The word "coming" relates to certain specified sections, not to the whole act.

Mr. MALCOLM: On behalf of the leader of the opposition, who probably is in a better position to judge the merit of any amendment, I had another amendment drafted for the whole section:

> This act shall come into force on proclamation of the governor in council who may from time to time direct the coming into force of any specified section subject to such conditions as the governor in council may direct.

That is another way of covering this. The word "carrying" was a misprint. If the second amendment suits my hon. friend, I will agree.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 9, to amend the Companies Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain?

Mr. RINFRET: The Senate has not really amended the bill as it has not changed any of the clauses that we adopted in this house, but it has added a clause as part IV of the bill, which would apply to all companies, whether incorporated by letters patent or by special act, the provision in part I of the bill, which allows companies to establish and support associations calculated to benefit their employees, and to guarantee or subscribe money for charitable purposes. This disposition which already exists in part I as applying to companies incorporated by letters patent will apply, under the Senate amendment, to all companies whether incorporated by letters patent or by special act of parliament. The amendment is benevolent in character, and has met with the unanimous approval of the Senate.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

The house in committee on Bill No. 310, to amend the Income War Tax Act—Mr. Dunning—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Dividends received by one corporation from another.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the minister has received representations from various sources in connection with this legislation. I have received communications from members of the legal profession indicating that they thought the retroactive features of it were very unfair. I usually am opposed to retroactive legislation having regard to what was once done in this house in connection with retroactive legislation. It always arouses great suspicion in the mind of every thoughtful man when you begin making an act apply to days gone by, because business men have made their arrangements, incurred their obligations, and then suddenly you say that all this is to be set at naught and something that happened two or three years ago treated as if it were happening to-day.

Mr. EULER: No, no.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. BENNETT: Some of my correspondents are fearful that the language of the statute is not sufficiently clear as to just when the retroactive feature will commence to operate.

Mr. EULER: I can hardly understand how anyone could construe the bill to mean that it becomes retroactive for two years. It states distinctly in the clause in question that it shall take effect only as from January 1 of this year, and the returns for the accounting period cannot be made until some time next year. So it is distinctly not retroactive. It just goes back to January 1 of this year.

Mr. HANSON: To the extent that it does go back to January 1 of this year it is retroactive, and it does affect pending transactions. That is the objection. If the bill were made to operate from the next accounting period, instead of from January 1 of this year, no one would be injured. But I am informed that there are transactions pending which this act is designed to catch as from the 1st day of January last, and there will be some damage done. I do not suggest that it will be as much as we thought when the resolution was on the order paper and before we had read the terms of the bill. Would it meet the views of the department if this provision were to operate only from the 1st day of July of this year?

Mr. DUNNING: Has my hon. friend read section 4?

Mr. HANSON: No.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish he would because I think we are misunderstanding each other again as we did in committee. Section 4 is the operative section, and provides for the repeal of the old section 19 and the substitution of a new section 19 for it. I think if my hon. friend will read that section, it will clear up his misapprehension.

Mr. EULER: The new section 19 reads:

> On the winding-up, discontinuance or reorganization of the business of any incorporated company, the distribution in any form of the property of the company shall be deemed to be the payment of a dividend to the extent that the company has on hand undistributed income earned in the taxation period 1930 and subsequent periods.

Mr. DUNNING: It is money earned in the period that counts.

Mr. HANSON: It is still retroactive from the 1st day of January.

Mr. EULER: You cannot very well break the period.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the minister is wrong in that. By section 4 of the bill he desires apparently to protect those who may be involved in transactions that are antecedent to the 1930 accounting period, which begins on the 1st day of January, or whatever day may be the close of the business year.

Mr. EULER: We take the calendar year.

Mr. BENNETT: You take the calendar year as being the accounting period?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the 27th of May. What my correspondent had in mind was a transaction that commenced say in January and was completed say in April, or perhaps previous to that, in good faith. Now it becomes subject to this statute.

Mr. DUNNING: Only with respect to the income earned in this calendar year, not with respect to its previously earned income.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. The minister perhaps has not quite caught the point. The new section 19 reads:

(1) On the winding-up, discontinuance or reorganization of the business of any incorporated company, the distribution in any form of the property of the company shall be deemed to be the payment of a dividend to the extent that the company has on hand undistributed income earned in the taxation period 1930 and subsequent periods.

That applies clearly only to such accretions to the company's resources as accrued after the 1st day of January. What I am pointing out is that in some of these reorganizations the distribution of what would now become income since the 1st day of January might be very large.

Mr. DUNNING: It is income earned by the subsidiary.

Mr. BENNETT: If it means that, then there is no doubt that the minister is correct; but that is not abundantly clear. If that is what is in his mind, I cannot think that there will be any trouble. It was a firm of solicitors who wrote to me. I do not think that I have the pleasure of knowing the gentlemen, and of course they did not have the advantage of having the bill before them.

Mr. DUNNING: They had not had the advantage of reading the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: But what they were fearful of was that a pending transaction might be affected by it. The addition of the words that the minister has just used makes it quite clear that what he had in his mind was not what the legal gentlemen have at all. What the minister suggests is that the earnings of the enterprise after the first day of January, 1930, shall, if distributed, be taxable as income.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and in the taxation period of 1930. That is very clear.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is the earnings of the subsidiary, not the earnings of the principal company.

Mr. DUNNING: Undoubtedly the whole reference is to the winding up, discontinuance, and so forth.

Mr. HANSON: The shoe might pinch in this way. In the case of a pending transaction where the purchase of a company has been agreed upon and a firm contract made the buyers would properly assume that legally they would not have to pay any tax on income earned since the first day of January. If you make it retroactive the buyers will have to pay the tax because they have made a firm contract. That is the only objection that occurs to me at the moment. However, if the minister will not remove this objectionable feature I do not think that I should press the matter any further. If it were stated that income earned on and after the date the act comes into effect is liable to taxation, the minister could no longer be charged with making the legislation retroactive. I do not see that it can make very much difference to the department in the matter of taxation. You are establishing a new principle that for thirty years has not been resorted to. You are foregoing all the unearned and undistributed incomes of companies of this character down to the first day of January. Why not go a little further and make it the first of July or the thirtieth of June, 1930? I do not see any reason in the objection urged by the minister that you cannot have a broken period. The amount of tax can be ascertained.

Mr. EULER: Not very readily.

Mr. RYCKMAN: My objection to the proposed legislation is that involves triple taxation. I do not think it has been sufficiently considered. If you take section 1 and, as the minister very properly pointed out, section 19, the result is that where company A has been successful, has made earnings, has been taxed, has heaped up, if you like, a surplus, and then this company is acquired by company B, the income falling into the hands of company B on the winding up of company A would not be exempt, but it should be exempt from further taxation; and when the dividends are paid by company B to its shareholders, these dividends are taxes. That is triple taxation. There is no question about it. Under section 19 a further criticism is that all shareholders of companies wound up prior to 1930 were liable to income tax on the undistributed income earned after 1927, except an incorporated company under paragraph (n) of section 4, whereas the shareholders of a company wound up after 1929 will be liable only on income earned after 1929. This is not fair; it is making fish of one and fowl of another. I should like to hear some justification for this difference in treatment.

Mr. EULER: I cannot get my hon. friend's point that it is triple taxation.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I will hand the minister a memorandum.

Mr. EULER: Thank you. It is true that undistributed income in the hands of a corporation is subject to the regular eight per cent tax. Then we desire to tax the surplus again which ordinarily would be paid out to the shareholders. In the case of all other companies it is so taxed. But there is no taxation beyond that because when it gets into the hands of the final company it is in the form of capital and is not further taxable.

Mr. RYCKMAN: That is where I do not agree with the minister. I say when there is taxation on realization or sale to a second company, and especially if dividends are paid to shareholders out of the surplus that comes to the second company, then there is double taxation.

Mr. EULER: But they bought that as a matter of capital, not as surplus, and did not distribute it as dividends. That is exactly what we want to get at. The method which has been followed makes it possible for the shareholders of a company to receive as capital moneys which are in the form of profits. It is an evasion of the act.

Mr. HANSON: It is not an evasion of the act. The minister is not justified in so stating.

Mr. EULER: Well, it is an evasion of the purpose of the government to tax all profits when distributed.

Mr. HANSON: That may be so.

Mr. EULER: We desire to get over that technicality.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Cooperative companies and associations.

Mr. BENNETT: Does section 2 give effect to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the wheat pool case?

[Mr. Ryckman.]

Mr. EULER: Yes, it is intended to recognize cooperative marketing and purchasing corporations.

Mr. BENNETT: I noticed on page 2 the wording of (q) is "the income of any banking institution." I fail to understand that. There is no such thing as a cooperatively organized bank in Canada, as the minister knows. The statute is very explicit on that point.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know as to the aptness of the wording. Of course the word "bank" is descriptively a federal word, legislatively speaking. The subsection is intended to cover these cooperative credit institutions—caises populaires—in Quebec. There are some hundreds of them in that province. I gather that they make no taxable profits in any event; but it was desired to recognize such institutions under the heading of cooperative institutions in order that whenever a few dollars did accumulate—which I understand cannot be distributed to anyone in the form of dividends, but can be applied only for charitable and other purposes—it would be clear that this amendment did not apply to such institutions.

Mr. BENNETT: "Banking institution" is the only troublesome expression.

Mr. DUNNING: I am advised that the word "bank" is used in the Quebec statute itself upon which this is based. It is a literal translation.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister no doubt knows the legal objection to the use of the word "bank" in that sense—no provincial legislature can authorize the creation of an institution called a bank. Although called "banking institutions" I am simply pointing out that there cannot be any such thing as a cooperative banking institution in this country.

Mr. DUNNING: I think it is about as descriptive as we can get it of the particular type of institution referred to.

Mr. EULER: I am told, Mr. Chairman, that the correct translation of the name of the organization known in Quebec as the "caisse populaire" is the "peoples' bank."

Mr. BENNETT: I know that.

Mr. EULER: The members of those organizations contribute their money for one purpose only, that those moneys shall again be loaned to the members themselves. It is entirely a cooperative institution.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, they have them in France. But the use of the word "bank" is illegal with respect to any institution incorporated under other than the Bank Act.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In deference to the house, and to yourself, Mr. Chairman, may I ask that this interesting conversation be carried on in a tone loud enough for the other members to hear?

Mr. DUNNING: I appreciate my hon. friends' point but if all the other conversations going on around us were carried on in lower tones or not at all the discussion would be audible without straining our hearing.

Mr. GARDINER: May I suggest that the chairman do his duty?

The CHAIRMAN: Order, order.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that the minister see one of his colleagues.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Dependent relatives—donations—$5,000 annuity exemption.

Mr. DUNNING: We had a lengthy discussion in committee in connection with this section.

Mr. BENNETT: The government has followed the old principle of allowing 10 per cent of a man's income to be exempt from income tax when used for philanthropic and charitable purposes. It is derived from the old Mosaic law, and it represents the tithing system to which we were brought up in our childhood days; we learned that we should give one-tenth of our income to the Lord. Here is a provision for giving away one-tenth of the income, but not more than that. Why should we not make the application of the provision as generous and broad as possible? If I have a thousand dollars to give away, and give it to a church the result is that on my tax return I am exempted to the extent of that donation. If on the other hand I give $500 to an organization which is not here mentioned I receive no exemption. Is it not the intention of the minister to give effect to the old theory that a tenth should be contributed to useful, philanthropic and religious purposes? Let us extend this section so that we shall have no discrimination. I am bound to say that there is no answer to the claims made with respect to federated charities.

Mr. HANSON: Or with respect to any charities.

Mr. BENNETT: We may take the Red Cross as an example; in the city of Calgary we have the junior Red Cross hospital, and it is necessary to maintain that institution by voluntary subscriptions. If I give a thousand dollars to the junior Red Cross I am not allowed to include the donation as an exemption in my income return. If on the other hand I give $10,000 to a university I receive an exemption of $10,000, provided always that my total donations subject to exemption shall not exceed 10 per cent of my income. To my mind that is the crux of this matter. The minister has said that an amount "not exceeding 10 per cent" shall go for these purposes. Let us expand the operation of the section.

Mr. EULER: I have a good deal of sympathy with the statement of my hon. friend, but this legislation is more or less experimental.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no, I do not think it is experimental.

Mr. EULER: It is so easy to make it broad and inclusive that I am sure that as a matter of departmental practice it would prove to be very difficult to administer. While I have sympathy with the remarks of the hon. gentleman and those of some other members of the house to the effect that we might go farther in connection with philanthropic contributions, it may be that we have gone far enough for the present. We have at least established the principle; we do not know just how much it will cost by way of revenue. We thought we would meet the exigencies of the present situation if we went as far as we have here indicated. If we have not gone far enough we can extend it—or perhaps our friends may extend it in another session—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. EULER: It is my belief that if it is made any broader there will be great difficulty in deciding, as a matter of administration, which organizations are and which are not entitled to it.

Mr. BENNETT: It could be specified; there is no difficulty in expressing them in the statute. I am in accord with the views of the minister, except for one fact. He has provided that up to 10 per cent shall be exempt.

Mr. EULER: We had to set a limit.

Mr. BENNETT: A man who has an income of $100,000 undoubtedly is anxious to give away $10,000.

Mr. EULER: Not always.

Mr. BENNETT: In a broad and general way I think it is true that men who are in receipt of incomes of $100,000 do give away much more than the sum I have mentioned. If that is so, every man in receipt of that income will be anxious to be allowed the largest exemption possible, because the super-tax applies with an increasing rate when dealing with incomes of $100,000. If a man pays a tax upon an income of $90,000 his rate is relatively much lower than it would be when he reached the $100,000 mark. From $90,000 to $100,000 the rate increases rapidly. Instead of paying the tax on $100,000 a man would give away $10,000, and for the distribution of this sum he picks out a university, a church, a school, and a hospital, giving to each the sum of $2,500. It may be that in his immediate community there are federated charities; there may be a community chest to which he would give nothing, because he would get no exemption for such donations. The state would lose nothing by extending the selections which could be made; under the present section he would be compelled to discriminate against a useful organization in his own community. The minister must realize that I am not asking him to extend the principle of 10 per cent; I only ask him to make it possible for that 10 per cent to be distributed more generously and more generally. I hope I have made myself clear. In case I have not I shall attempt to clarify my remarks by giving an illustration. In the city of Montreal Professor Falk has done excellent work in connection with the charities of that city. They have a community chest for the benefit of charitable organizations. They may seek a subscription of $25,000 from a man receiving an income of $250,000, and they may not receive a donation from that man because he will not be entitled to any exemption in respect of it. If on the other hand some one asked him to give that $25,000 to the Royal Victoria Hospital they would have no trouble in getting it; that would be the end of it. The exemption represents a great incentive, because the reduction in taxation amounts to a very substantial part of the $25,000. If a man receiving $250,000 gives away $25,000 he pays a tax on $225,000 only. The tax on the last $25,000 amounts to over $10,000. That is, the tax on the difference between $250,000 and $225,000, or $25,000, is over $10,000, so that in the end the donor is giving away something like $15,000. If he gives away $25,000 the state has lost $10,000, but the institution which he has selected has received the benefit of it. Do not increase the maximum beyond 10 per cent, but let us be consistent and let distribution be as general as possible for charities, churches and hospitals.

Last year we urged this point very strongly, and on that occasion the Minister of Finance said that he could not accept our proposition because it would have the effect of increasing the difficulties of administration. The present suggestion would place a limit upon the percentage of his income, subject to exemption in respect of donations, and as I say it is to be commended, because it is a recognition of the old biblical injunction to give one-tenth to the Lord.

Mr. DUNNING: I remember that.

Mr. BENNETT: Few of us will ever forget it. You have one dollar and you give ten cents to the missionary society, and as a result you feel a certain sense of satisfaction.

Mr. DUNNING: You learn to have that sense of satisfaction after a time, but in the beginning it is rather difficult to develop it. Eventually you appreciate its real significance.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no doubt that we have before us the recognition of a principle which I certainly commend. In view of the recognition I was hopeful that the number of institutions which might be benefited would be extended. We might take for example our western communities in which they have drives for charitable purposes. Here is a home, for instance, and they cannot get enough money to carry on the work connected with it.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh yes, they can, if it performs the functions of a hospital.

Mr. BENNETT: I am talking about a home, not a hospital; the home I have reference to does not perform the functions of a hospital. We have the Victorian Order of Nurses, and two or three others which I might mention; I know, alas, all too well what they are. If I give away $25,000 to a university I am going to save a considerable amount of money, and the university will get it. If I divided it up, however, and gave the Red Cross—

Mr. DUNNING: The government gets it.

Mr. BENNETT: I am pointing out that we are exercising a discrimination against deserving organizations.

Mr. GEARY: That is perfectly true.

Mr. BENNETT: I see no answer to it, and I think the minister would do well to see if he cannot draft a clause to meet that suggestion.

Mr. DUNNING: As I said the other day when the matter was under discussion, I am entirely in sympathy with the desires which have been expressed, but the difficulty in opening a system of this kind is to keep it within such limits at its inception that we would, by experience, find along what line it could be safely and properly broadened. When the matter was under consideration the government, particularly the Minister of National Revenue and myself, had before us the experience of those other countries which have tried to apply the same principle, and that experience is extremely varied and complex, particularly in the United States. I think members of the committee will remember that the other morning when we were speaking of this matter many suggestions were put forward of a much wider character even than those now made by the leader of the opposition as suitable objects for which exemption should be allowed in case of contribution.

Just to give the committee some idea of the breadth of the matter in the United States I should like to read the exemption in that country as an evidence of how broadly we would have to deal with the matter in order to be sure of covering everything, and even then I am quite sure some member of the committee will have in his mind some bodies that are not mentioned even here. In the United States exception is granted on contributions to any corporation or trust or community chest fund, or foundation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, but only if no part of the net earnings inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual. Distributions to the special fund under the vocational rehabilitation act, authorized by section 7 of that act, posts or organizations of war veterans or auxiliaries, units or societies are also exempt, but only to these posts or organizations if such posts or organizations, funds or societies are organized in the United States or any of its possessions and have no part of their net earnings which inures to the benefit of any private individual. Exemptions include also contributions to a fraternal society, order or association operating under the lodge system, but only if such contributions are to be used exclusively for religious, scientific, literary, charitable or educational purposes or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals.

I may say that the letters I have received since the introduction of the measure in the budget indicate an even wider range, which is still more difficult to describe, in Canada, which I am inclined to think would have at least an equal claim for such exemption. What I proposed to the committee the other day, while absolutely in agreement with the desirability of widening this exemption, was that we should operate it for a year as it is and in the meantime—and I know the leader of the opposition will appreciate this point—the various community chests and organizations such as the federated charities could perhaps evolve some common basis of organization or rather some common basis of handling their contributions. As my hon. friend knows, the system differs in different communities. In some places the contributor can allocate the particular object for which his subscription shall be used, while in others the societies themselves agree in advance that a certain percentage of the total contribution shall go to each of them. Many devices of this kind are in operation, and of course there are very many of our communities which have not as yet adopted the community chest idea. That makes it even more difficult to operate.

Really, the government had the idea that the recognition of the principle at this time would, during the year, bring about such organization of the charitable objects to which the leader of the opposition referred as to make it easier to widen the application of the section so as to include them and to see to it that discrimination would be avoided. Really that is the only argument I have to offer. With the logic of my hon. friend I entirely agree, but to attempt it without experience and without notice to the Canadian people who have various types of organizations, some of which I am quite sure we would manage to leave out, would not in my judgment be quite proper. I think it would be better to go ahead as we are for this year, knowing full well that by next year all these men and women from one end of this country to the other who devote themselves to the service of their fellow beings along charitable lines will be thinking of the matter and endeavouring so to create organizations as to facilitate the operation of such a law in relation to them. I feel sure we will be able to approach the question one year from now with very much clearer minds and greater ability to do the right thing without discrimination, beyond the limits I have indicated.

Mr. GEARY: If there is one thing of which the minister can be sure it is that he is working a discrimination in the present section. That is quite clear. The minister would go further towards obviating any discrimination if he increased the number of bodies affected. My leader has expressed the right idea; you have practically set aside 10 per cent of a man's income as being exempt if he cares to donate it to charities. For instance, I have in mind a drive, as they call it, now being made for a very worthy institution in my own city, a home for incurables. That institution has been carrying on for fifty or sixty years without having had to come to the people for much money; they have had very good subscriptions, but now they feel that they need a fund, and they are aiming at $100,000. These people are not going to get subscriptions, I am afraid, if this section carries.

Mr. DUNNING: Such a home would be a hospital.

Mr. GEARY: There is nothing here which would include it; the section describes a hospital as being a hospital exclusively operated as such, and I do not think a home where old people are being cared for would come within that section.

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly it is the intention to give the most liberal interpretation to the section, as far as that goes.

Mr. GEARY: I think you are going to discriminate against such institutions. In Toronto we have several hospitals, St. Michael's, Western, Toronto General, and many others; those are all hospitals acting as such, but a home is a different thing. Certainly there is a difference implied in the legislation, because here you describe a hospital as a hospital exclusively operating as such. Take Strachan House, which is a new institution in the old Trinity College building in Toronto. No one is ill there; the inmates are old people who are unable to look after themselves. They have nurses in attendance for the ordinary ailments but these people are not in a hospital in the ordinary sense of the word, with any illness or any hurt. They are there to be cared for and given, so far as possible, as far as they cannot afford payment, board and lodging. I know that people who have spoken to me in my own city feel aggrieved about this; they feel that they are being left out. One lady spoke to me the other day apropos of several charities, as we call them, which do not stand a chance of getting donations during the present year because of this section. The stream of donations will be diverted elsewhere, and probably to objects which are no more worthy. I think the feeling is very strong that you will avoid a great deal of discrimination if you make the class larger; that is, you will leave fewer outside.

[Mr. Geary.]

Mr. RYCKMAN: Mr. Chairman, I want to urge upon the minister that he be, I will say, compassionate as well as business-like and reasonable. I know a case—I may say without any hesitation that it is not my own case—of a distinguished man who gave $10,000 to a charitable object, and who had to pay the government $4,600 in order to do so, because his income was at that particular level. When a man has to pay $4,600 in order to give away $10,000 he begins to think, and he feels that it is unfair. I submit to the minister that with just a little adjustment—

Mr. EULER: He would have had to pay that amount anyway.

Mr. DUNNING: He was in the $100,000 class.

Mr. RYCKMAN: You cannot cavil at my statement; he simply paid $4,600 out of his pocket in order to give away $10,000. It was a nice thing to do—

Mr. DUNNING: Not because he gave it away, but because he had it as income; he was a $100,000 man and it did not matter what he did with the money.

Mr. BENNETT: That amount would have been saved to him if the object to which he contributed had been within this class.

Mr. RYCKMAN: You cannot say my statement is unfair, and a man will pause before he will have his charitable desires hedged about and hampered in this way. I think the minister admits the fairness of our presentation. Why make sheep of some and goats of others? Something should be done in this regard. It would not interfere with the prestige of the government but would be really beneficial to the charitable institutions of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: The Red Cross is mentioned in the treaty of peace as being the instrument selected by the warring nations to distribute charitable gifts amongst the people in peace times. Many of us have supported that organization rather generously, but such gifts will not be subject to exemption. I have received a letter from the general secretary and administrator of that society in Toronto, pointing out to me how unfair this provision is to an institution selected by the treaty of Peace to discharge certain obligations, and which was being maintained by the gifts of people from one end to the other of this country. Few people realize the amount of work this organization is doing, especially among the juniors of the country in the way of education. His Excellency the Governor General is the patron of the society. Why not include in our statutes the American provisions as read by the hon. minister?

Mr. DUNNING: They are not broad enough to meet all the suggestions made.

Mr. BENNETT: They would meet a great many of them. The broad basic principle is this: if no benefit accrues to individuals as members of the organization to which gifts are made, then such gifts shall be exempt.

Mr. EULER: Many of the provisions are purely American in character and would not apply to Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: But a number of them would.

Mr. EULER: I understood the hon. leader of the opposition to suggest that they should be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. BENNETT: The first part could be incorporated. I wonder if the minister has considered the result in the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I have.

Mr. BENNETT: Magnificent, private benevolences have placed an institution on a hill here, another there and another there; universities have been enriched and wonderful libraries established by gifts of this character. It is amazing what private benefactions have done in the United States during the last few years. The minister will remember that the Prime Minister once said that situated as we are in Canada we could not hope to maintain a higher income tax than obtained in the United States. The corporation tax in the United States is higher than in Canada, but the individual tax is lower, and the exemptions allowed have had a most desirable effect in that country. I was looking at the World Almanac not long ago for the purpose of finding out the extent of private benefactions in the United States during the year 1929, and an amazing amount of money has been given for charitable purposes. I suggest that this section be allowed to stand until eight o'clock so that the minister may be able to discuss the matter with his colleagues in an endeavour to see whether this clause cannot be extended without in any sense increasing the amount of exemption.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not a matter of money at all.

Mr. BENNETT: I feel very strongly on this matter.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a matter of administration. I will accede to my hon. friend's request and let this section stand. What would my hon. friend's views be to the inclusion of the words "charitable organization"? The reason for not including those words is the uncertainty as to the real meaning of a charitable organization.

Mr. GEARY: That has been settled fairly well in the province of Ontario.

Mr. DUNNING: But it has not been settled by the rest of Canada. That presents a real difficulty, but if the minister concerned with the administration, the Minister of National Revenue, is willing to take the responsibility, that amendment would cover nearly all the most deserving suggestions which have been made. It might not cover the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. MacLaren) who wants an exemption granted in respect of contributions to museums or the suggestions as to contributions for special objects other than of a charitable nature.

Mr. MacLAREN: Instead of using the words "universities, colleges and schools," why not use the term "educational institutions," which would include museums? The minister is going to consider this question until this evening, and I would ask him to consider my suggestion.

Mr. McGIBBON: The Red Cross as an organization has no hospitals; it simply operates such institutions and in addition to that is performing many services for this country. Under this legislation no grant could be made to the Red Cross and receive an exemption, because it is confined to hospitals. All this organization does is to run hospitals; they have to be procured and equipped by the municipality and then the Red Cross steps in and manages them. Having regard to the valuable services rendered by the Red Cross, I think the minister should consider this matter.

Mr. GEARY: I would direct the attention of the minister to the Ontario Assessment Act, which provides an exemption as follows:

> Every industrial farm, house of industry, house of refuge, orphan asylum, and every boys' and girls' or infants' home or other charitable institution conducted on philanthropic principles and not for the purpose of profit or gain,

That is a pretty wide section, and it might be considered by the minister in drafting any proposed amendment.

Mr. DUNNING: What really appeals to me is the use of some such term as "charitable institutions" in addition to what appears already in the bill. That, of course, would be qualified by the words which follow, "operated exclusively as such and not for the benefit of private gain."

Mr. BENNETT: That is the test.

Mr. DUNNING: According to the department, there would be difficulty in the administration.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not think the Red Cross would come under that classification.

Mr. DUNNING: Would the Red Cross come under the heading of charitable institutions?

Mr. BENNETT: My answer probably would be no. The Red Cross occupies a very significant position. It is an international organization which, as the hon. minister knows, had no peace time activities until the end of the war. Those peace time activities were sanctioned by a statute of this parliament because under the treaty of Peace the Red Cross society was selected as the instrument to accomplish certain purposes. It probably receives as much money as any one institution of that class in the United States of America.

Mr. DUNNING: But its work is largely charitable.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is in a sense different from charitable. Part of it is educational. It is really assisting the health department in some instances, for example, in distributing literature, thus creating a public opinion.

Mr. EULER: Make it read "Red Cross and charitable institutions."

Mr. DUNNING: There is a real difficulty if we single out just the Red Cross.

Mr. BENNETT: It is singled out in the treaty of Peace.

Mr. DUNNING: I have in mind literally hundreds of deserving institutions that would want to be mentioned by name, because of some peculiar feature that might make a difference in their case. From the point of view of income tax, the Red Cross would be regarded as falling within the term "charitable institutions."

Mr. BENNETT: I reached the same conclusion, but when the peace treaty was under consideration, when all the representatives of the warring countries met in the south of France to determine how they were to rehabilitate war-stricken Europe, they found it tremendously difficult to decide what institution they should select. However, they selected the Red Cross, which appears in the treaty of Peace as being the instrument selected for that purpose. Sometimes I think we have been derelict in our duty in that regard, for we have given grants to almost every other institution in Canada and nothing to the Red Cross, although as regards some of the others it would be difficult to find out where the money has gone except for salaries.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not want to introduce that point, but now that my hon. friend has mentioned it, that is one feature which does not make it easier to deal with a case of this kind.

Mr. BENNETT: But the Red Cross has at the instance of the government done a great deal of work on several occasions. At the end of the war it had, I think, $250,000 of accumulated funds. That has been distributed throughout Canada, and I know, for instance in northern Alberta at Pouce Coupe, they maintained a hospital when the provincial governments concerned would not undertake it. I was hopeful that the minister would see that that was not overlooked.

Mr. DUNNING: We will look into that.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the minister will agree that paragraph (k) is susceptible at any rate of a very discriminatory use. Take, for instance, the case of a man who puts $100,000 or $120,000 into a life insurance company and purchases an annuity of $5,000 under one of those special contracts by which he receives the interest on the capital during his lifetime and in the end the money is payable to his estate. That is a contract for life. Then take the case of the poor man who cannot afford to put up that amount of money and who does not get the exemption for his life insurance premium. What about that? In England there is an exemption with respect to the premium paid. In the one instance a single premium is paid for a given benefit issued under a contract which provides an annuity based on the earning power of the money and an ultimate payment of a fixed capital sum. In the other case the individual pays $40, $50 or $60 a year as premium on his life insurance. He gets no benefit, no exemption. We are exempting in the one case and not in the other.

Mr. DUNNING: The payment in the one case of a premium is analogous to the other. If the payment is made out of income in both cases, the income is taxable.

Mr. BENNETT: No, not out of income.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member means it is a capital transaction?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: I see the point now.

Mr. GEARY: A man may have an exemption of $3,000 and be unmarried.

Mr. DUNNING: By having dependents.

Mr. GEARY: Yes. When he becomes married, his wife has an exemption of another $1,500. That would make nominally an exemption of $4,500. On marriage that is cut down to $3,000 between them. The unfortunate part of it, in cases that have been represented to me, is that the law does not allow them to allocate that $3,000 either to the husband's income or to the wife's income. They are bound to divide it evenly, with the result that one of them may have a substantial income as against which an exemption of $3,000 would be a substantial reduction, while the other may have a small income, probably $1,500 taxable, as against which income the $1,500 would go and be of very little or no benefit. If the minister is going to make a common exemption of $3,000 instead of a joint exemption of $4,500, why should they not be allowed to apply that exemption to the husband's income or to the wife's income, whichever may be more profitable for the parties? This has always struck me as a very unfair provision. The minister knows the situation.

Mr. EULER: There is something in what the hon. member says.

Mr. GEARY: I wonder if that could not be dealt with. I think it is recognized in the department as being unfair. Could it be arranged in this bill or by regulation?

Mr. EULER: It is not touched in this at all. One would have to introduce another amendment.

Mr. GEARY: Section 3 touches it indirectly.

Mr. DUNNING: Quite indirectly.

Section 3 stands.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5.—Family corporations.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I think this proposed subsection (1) under section 5 operates unfairly. The law as it stood did not place a limit on the time within which shareholders might elect to have the income of the corporation dealt with as the income of a partnership and the shareholders were governed by the provisions of section 56 of the act which allows a corporation to claim a refund within twelve months of the date on which it paid its tax. Even with this period of a year in which to elect, many small corporations were precluded from reaping the advantages that this legislation was intended to give them, in view of the fact that they failed to make their election in time.

I submit that the minister has never attempted to direct the notice of the taxpayers to the provisions of this legislation. All of us receive forms T1, T2, T3, T4, and so on, but there is no form in relation to this taxation. All the forms that the minister sends out direct attention to the manner in which returns should be made, and certain exemptions are provided, but there is no return for a family corporation and no attempt has been made by the minister to call attention to the fact that a small corporation qualifying as a family corporation under section 2 (e) of the act is not liable to pay the corporation tax if election is made by the shareholders to be taxed as a partnership. That is unfair. I think this term of thirty days should be extended to at least one year as it was before. I understand that representations have been made to the minister, but I am not satisfied to have the matter glozed over without some attempt being made to say that there was error when the provision stood at a year. I therefore submit that this period of thirty days should be extended to twelve months in order that small corporation shareholders may all reap its advantages equally. Even to-day some have been able to elect for every year beginning with 1925 when the legislation became effective. Others that were late got only from 1926, others from 1927 and others from 1928. In conclusion, let me say I am not in anyway interested in any family corporation, but it seems to me it is not fair to the shareholders in a family corporation in relation to other taxpayers.

Mr. EULER: For the purposes of administration of the act, I think if the committee will consider it carefully, they will agree that it is not unreasonable that any corporation should know within at least a period of thirty days as to which form it comes under, whether it wants to be treated as a partnership or as a family corporation. It is a sufficient period of time, and no one can go wrong with regard to it, because I may tell the committee that the department intends on the passing of this legislation to notify all corporations in the country of the new enactment, so they will have no excuse for saying later on that they were not notified that they had to make their election in thirty days.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I thank the minister for that much, but I would point out to him that the individual shareholder has the right to elect, and I do not have to mention twice to the minister that very often a shareholder is not aware of his privileges. He may not know the date of the annual meeting or how the company is carrying on, but some day he may learn that if he had asked, being a shareholder in a family corporation, to be taxed on a certain scale, he would have been so taxed, and the answer of the department may be: We could have done that if you had asked us the day before yesterday, but to-day it is too late. Therefore, I suggest that if you have a limit, make it a year, because thirty days is too short. There was no complaint that a year was too long, and there was no trouble in the department because the time was a year. I do not see why that could not remain as it was. I am glad that the minister has given this much consideration, but I would ask him to let it go at a year.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Dividends of non-resident employees taxable.

Mr. SMOKE: On Saturday last when the resolution preceding this bill was under discussion I asked the minister how the government of Canada proposed to get at these non-resident directors, and his reply was to wait till the bill comes in. I do not see anything in the bill to cover that point. I would further point out what seems to me to be a little faulty drafting in the clause itself. It reads:

The income liable to taxation under the act of every person residing outside of Canada—

As I understand it, there is no income liable to taxation under the act of any person residing outside of Canada, and I think that that wording should be changed to bring the non-resident within the compass of the act. As I said before, I would also like the minister to point out how he proposes to get at these people. It must be remembered that the income tax is not payable until April of the following year. The moneys are paid out by the Canadian companies to their directors and shareholders in the year previous. Are you going to say that every company must know whether any employee or any shareholder is a non-resident of the Dominion of Canada, and impose the duty upon the company to deduct the tax of a certain amount—I do not know how much it is going to be—from the salary or dividend before it leaves the treasury of the company? I think that those points should be cleared up before this section passes.

Mr. EULER: The whole section is based on the assumption that the shareholder or director, if you will, is employed in Canada.

Mr. SMOKE: It says, not employed in Canada.

Mr. EULER: But the directors and employees are rendering service in Canada, which means that they must be employed in Canada. As to how we might collect from the shareholder in another country, I think my hon. friend who is a lawyer will realize that ways and means could be found of prosecuting and obtaining a judgment in the courts of Canada where the man is employed, and if he did not satisfy the judgment, his stock could be attached and sold.

Mr. SMOKE: His stock may been disposed of, or if he is an employee he may have left the employment of the company.

Mr. EULER: That may be done in any case, I suppose.

Mr. FRASER: Would a company like Brazilian Traction or Barcelona come under this section?

Mr. EULER: No. As a matter of fact, this memorandum will perhaps answer what my hon. friend has in mind. No tax arises unless the person renders service in Canada to a company carrying on business in Canada, and then only if he actually controls the company?

Mr. BENNETT: Actually controls the company?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

The house in committee on Bill No. 311, to amend the Special War Revenue Act—Mr. Euler—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Excise tax on sale, transfer or assignment of stocks, bonds, debentures and debenture stock.

Mr. LAWSON: Last year when the method of taxation proposed by the 1929 amendment was introduced into this house, I took occasion to point out to the then Minister of Finance and the committee the results which would probably flow therefrom and to state my objection to the provisions then proposed. This year the rate of taxation is reduced by the bill now before us, but the principle is maintained that was introduced in the amendment of last year. I submitted last year, first, that this taxation was excessive, secondly, that it was inequitable, and thirdly, that it would result in driving business from Canada to the United States. The amendment of last year came into effect on the first of July. It was in effect only six months of last year. For the nine months preceding the coming into effect of the 1929 amendment, the tax collected by the Dominion government on the sale and transfer of stocks was $921,967.07, while in the nine months succeeding the coming into effect of that amendment the tax collected was $1,894,382.97, or an increase of $972,000 odd. That, I submit, is excessive taxation, particularly when you have regard to the rates imposed by other countries and by the provinces. One exchange in 1929, the Standard Stock and Mining exchange, in spite of the fact that during the last half of the year the business done was only one-seventh of that done in the corresponding period of the previous year, paid in taxes to this government $765,029 on the transfer of shares, whereas they paid to the province, which is on the old basis, the provincial transfer tax the same as the American tax $200,041. In other words the Dominion collected from this source in the province of Ontario from one exchange $547,988 more than was paid to the province. What is the result? If you impose heavy taxation upon the transaction of business which can be done elsewhere, it will naturally flow to the other place. So we find that during last year the dividend-paying Canadian issues of the Canadian mining industry have been listed on the New York produce exchange, and two member-houses of that exchange have opened offices in the larger centres of Canada. They advertise for business— Canadian business, bear in mind—on the basis that you can do your business so much more cheaply through the New York produce exchange than through the Canadian exchanges.

Let me cite one or two examples—and from the reasonable attitude of the Minister of Finance I have some hope that he may be impressed by them. Suppose I wish to sell 100 shares of stock having a par value of $100, which stock is listed on both the Canadian and New York exchanges. In that case I pay the provincial tax of $3 and the Dominion tax of $4, or a total of $7. By doing my business through a New York exchange I pay the state tax of $2 and the federal tax of $2, or a total of $4. Let me remind hon. members I am dealing not with conditions brought about by the 1929 amendment, because they were much worse, but with conditions under the proposals now before the committee. Let me take another example: I desire to sell 100 shares of Teck-Hughes, a stock very generally dealt in in this country. The provincial tax is 3 cents, the Dominion tax $1, or a total tax of $1.03. I can transact the same business through a New York stock exchange for 2 cents state, and 2 cents federal tax, or a total of 4 cents. One more example which is even more striking. Let me assume that I wish to sell 100 shares of Lake Shore. At the moment Lake Shore, I think, is selling around $22, but ordinarily the price is about $26. My figures are on the basis of the ordinary price a few days ago. To sell 100 shares of that stock in Ontario I pay a provincial tax of 3 cents and the Dominion tax of $2, or $2.03. If I transact that business in New York state I pay a total tax of 4 cents, 2 cents state and 2 cents federal.

Surely it must be apparent to the government that this is a case in which we have specific evidence that by enacting this taxation you are driving Canadian business into American hands. And, bear in mind, you are driving the business of Canadians into American hands to be transacted in New York state. In fact, it is now proposed by an advertisement which I saw recently to incorporate—I am not so sure but what the actual act of incorporation has already been passed—in New York state a mining exchange upon which all the Canadian mining issues will be listed. They advertise quite openly that the object of that incorporation is to secure a tremendous volume of the Canadian business because it is so much cheaper to do business in the United States, particularly in the state of New York, than it is in Canada.

Now, I submit that in view of these facts the minister and the government should take into serious consideration, not the reducing of this tax further as they are doing this year, but the going back to the basis of taxation which was in force prior to the 1929 amendment, because that form of taxation is similar to the taxation in force in all the provinces and in all the states, and is equitable because it imposes an equal rate of taxation upon the high-priced and upon the low-priced issues.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 1 carry?

Mr. BENNETT: No. Is there any answer to what the hon. member for West York has said? Let us be frank about this transaction. Last session we on this side of the house pointed out that the proposals then made would be a failure, in that they were unjust, inequitable and unsound. The government persisted, but now they have abandoned them.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly they have abandoned them and are substituting another tax.

Mr. MANION: And during the election they will boast of lowering taxation.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. But what is much more to the point is this; what did it cost to administer this tax? We were promised figures of this last year. What about the law suit in Vancouver? What about the bluff—and I use that word deliberately—that this act was ultra vires? This bluff was resorted to by Liberal lawyers to induce the people to believe that there was going to be a change this session. They said that it was an unrighteous law and illegal and would be declared so by the courts. Fortunately they cannot control the courts. Now, we are going to amend that legislation. What will be the effect on the taxes already accrued and not collected? What has been the cost of collection? The people want to know what this means.

Mr. EULER: I cannot tell exactly what it cost, but we have eight auditors engaged on this work at $2,800 a year each.

Mr. BENNETT: For the whole of Canada?

Mr. EULER: And of course we pay commissions to the stock exchanges for collecting the tax.

Mr. BENNETT: What has been the total collection?

Mr. EULER: Approximately the total collections last year were a little over $2,000,000 and the cost would be approximately $70,000 or $75,000. That was through the exchanges only, but the greater part of the collection is done that way?

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the hon. gentleman realizes that on the basis of the alleged sales in the exchanges there must have been a great many transfers of certificates in blank if that is all the revenue he got out of it. Because we know, taking the figures of the transactions on the exchanges and adding them together for the first month of the year, if the tax had been collected as the then Minister of Finance thought it would be, instead of the manner in which it has been collected, namely by trying to check up the ultimate transactions while the stock certificates have been floating around endorsed in blank and passing by delivery with the result indicating that only $2,000,000 was involved, as the minister knows, not millions, but hundreds of millions of dollars would be the aggregate value of the transactions for the first nine months of the year.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. EULER: This is only the amount collected through the exchanges themselves. There was very little money lost through the exchanges. I will admit that audits have disclosed that the department did not receive what it should have received through other sources. This bill is to close some of the leaks. As a matter of fact we could not insist on the brokers keeping accounts; we are taking that authority under this bill.

Mr. BENNETT: I pointed out to the hon. minister last session that supposing I enter into a transaction to sell him certain shares of stock at $100; the certificate is endorsed in blank; it has not my name on it at all; I received it from somebody else; it is passed on by my friend to somebody else, and the exchange have no record of it. There may be no record of it of any kind. We pointed out to him then what this would lead to. You will check exchanges and check registers of the companies to see what has been done in that regard. The hon. member for South Timiskaming (Mr. Lang) last year voted and spoke against this measure. Some changes have been made, and I want to know what the results will be. I would ask the minister the result of litigation carried on in British Columbia; did the government pay the costs of all parties, or just part of the costs?

Mr. EULER: We were successful in both the British Columbia courts. As to transfers in blank between man and man I may say that they may pass through twenty or thirty hands, and my hon. friend will realize that their passage would be almost impossible to check. It would be just as impossible to check those transfers as to check the course of a ten dollar bill.

Mr. BENNETT: Did the government pay the whole of the costs in connection with the Vancouver litigation?

Mr. EULER: I am not certain.

Mr. BENNETT: We want to know, before the election.

Mr. MANION: May I ask the minister how the tax as it is rearranged now will compare with the tax as it existed before last year when the original change was made? Is this higher or lower?

Mr. EULER: It works out much lower. Does my hon. friend inquire whether we will receive less taxes?

Mr. MANION: I know it is lower than it was last year. The government last year brought in an increase in taxation; there was an increase per share to which we objected. Now you are withdrawing that increase, as you have done on so many different occasions, and you are going to undo what you did last year. Half of the time of this house has been taken up in undoing in one year what was done the year before. I am trying to find out how this figure compares with the rates as they were before the change was made last year.

Mr. EULER: It is impossible accurately to answer my hon. friend; the question was not anticipated. I am informed however by an officer of the department that perhaps we will get slightly more under the terms proposed here than we got before the changes were made last year.

Mr. MANION: As far as one can estimate it roughly, I thought the minister would answer in that way. At the moment I think this is a wrong system. Since the crash in stocks throughout the country the mining industry has been very seriously affected. It may have been properly affected, because I think there was an over-indulgence and an over-investment in mining stocks of the cheaper varieties; it may have been that there was some promoting done which should not have been done. Last night in the city of Toronto I was told of a claim owned by a company in which the gentleman to whom I was talking was interested. He told me that they had done a great deal of work on the claim, but that they could get no one interested. I do not think anything should be done which will interfere with the development of a growing industry in this country. I suggest to the minister that in view of the crash in the stock market, and the effect which it has had upon the whole mining industry, at this time it would be well to reconsider this tax and to endeavour to put it at such a figure that it would not be detrimental to the north country.

Mr. LAWSON: The Minister of National Revenue has made the statement, which he said was based upon information from the department, that the tax collected under this amendment will be very little more than what was collected prior to the 1929 amendment. That statement, to put it mildly, is widely in error, and to prove my contention I shall make some comparisons. Prior to the 1929 amendment the basis of taxation was three cents for each $100 par value of the stock sold. On one hundred shares of stock selling at a par value of $100 per share prior to the 1929 amendment, the Dominion tax would have been $3; it is now $4.

Mr. EULER: Under this?

Mr. LAWSON: No, under the law as it stood prior to the 1929 amendment. The basis of your taxation was three cents for each $100 par value. Therefore if you sold one hundred shares of $100 par value stock, sticking to the illustration I gave before, you would have collected prior to 1929 a tax of $3. Under the proposal contained in this bill No. 311, the tax would be $4. In the high priced issues there is not so much difference. Let me come down to the illustration I used in connection with the 100 shares of Teck-Hughes, and the sale of stock having $1 par value. Prior to the 1929 amendment three cents in taxation would have been collected. Under Bill No. 311 one dollar would be collected. On 100 shares of Lake Shore, prior to the 1929 amendment three cents would have been collected and under the present amendment, $2. That is the difference between the old tax and the new.

Mr. MANION: The remarks of the hon. gentleman, who has his facts carefully worked out, emphasize more stongly than I have done the point I had in mind. I think the government should hold over this tax; they should wait until to-morrow and reconsider the whole proposition, because in its present form it will result in great detriment to the mining industry of the north country.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the minister tell us at eight o'clock whether or not the costs of all parties in connection with the litigation in British Columbia have been paid by the government?

Mr. EULER: I shall try to.

Mr. LAWSON: I understood the Minister of Nationl Revenue to say that the expense in connection with the collection under this tax of $2,000,000 revenue had been $75,000, through exchanges only. Does that $75,000 include in the cost of collection the percentage paid the exchanges for making collections?

Mr. EULER: That includes the commissions paid to the exchanges.

Mr. LAWSON: Is that the amount when the exchanges were being paid one per cent of their collections, or since it has been increased to 3 per cent?

Mr. EULER: Under the old arrangement of 5 per cent, which I regarded as too much and which I changed.

Mr. LAWSON: So that the rate got down to 1 per cent and was subsequently increased to 3 per cent?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Certificate before distribution of assets.

Mr. BENNETT: There should be some promptness in connection with these matters. A case has been brought to my attention where because of delays in obtaining necessary information, relying upon what seemed to be a correct certificate, not issued by the government, it was found afterwards on investigation that further sums had to be paid. How nearly is the work of the department up to date?

Mr. EULER: Is my hon. friend referring to the sales tax audit?

Mr. BENNETT: No, I am referring to section 4 dealing with "Certificate before distribution of assets".

Mr. EULER: I am informed, I would say to my hon. friend, that really we are not in arrears on it at all now. Sometimes there is delay because the trustees have not submitted the balance sheet.

Mr. BENNETT: Before we leave these items there is another matter I wish to discuss. There has been a great deal of unrest in Canada in connection with the brokers' offices and the sale of shares. Certain investigations were carried on by federal and provincial authorities. The Department of National Revenue carried on certain investigations; reports were made and, as I understand it, such reports were submitted to the Department of Justice for action. On the very same day that they were communicated to the Attorney General of Ontario the leader of the Ontario provincial Liberal party, in the town of Waterloo, made a statement in terms similar to the statements contained in the statement sent to the attorney general. Did that emanate from the minister's office? I want an answer

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend need not demand an answer; he will get one. The Minister of National Revenue at no time had any communication of any kind whatsoever with the leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I am asking.

Mr. EULER: Whether it emanated from my office I do not know, but it certainly did not emanate from myself.

Mr. BENNETT: Did the minister investigate when he knew the same words were used in that speech?

Mr. EULER: No; there was nothing to investigate.

Mr. BENNETT: There was a great deal to investigate; this strikes at the whole root of law and order in this country.

Mr. EULER: Let me say this to my hon. friend, that as far as I know there was absolutely no possibility of anyone outside of the office knowing, until some time after the Attorney General of the province of Ontario had been communicated with and given the information, what that information was, and no person would have an opportunity to give out that information.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the minister aware that there went out over the wires on that night, from the Kitchener Record—of which he is the proprietor, his name being at the top of it—the message "Watch Sinclair's speech to-night"?

Mr. EULER: I will say this to my hon. friend, having knowledge of the circumstances: The meeting that was called at Waterloo and which was addressed by Mr. Sinclair—and I suppose my hon. friend knows it was also addressed by Mr. Tweed, the local member there, who was associated with him—was called before the report had been received in the department from the auditors, as far as I know. I may say this also, that the meeting was called, to my certain knowledge, without any information being in a report, so there was no possibility of that information with regard to the stock brokerage firms being in the possession of Mr. Sinclair prior to the calling of the meeting.

Mr. BENNETT: That does not answer the question in any way, shape or form. It is not when the meeting was called; it is when the meeting was held that I am talking about.

Mr. EULER: Did not my hon. friend ask me whether I was aware such a report had appeared in the Kitchener Record? I happen to be the owner of that paper and I read it occasionally. Yes; I read the article, if that is the answer my hon. friend wants.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the minister aware that a flash message went over the Canadian Press from the Kitchener Record, saying "Watch Sinclair's speech to-night"?

Mr. EULER: I am not aware of anything of the kind at all; I do not know whether such a message went out or whether it did not. I doubt very much whether it did.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I will put this to the minister: Does he know this, that the language used by Mr. Sinclair in that speech was language which contained in exact terms the information sent from the Department of Justice to the Attorney General of Ontario?

Mr. EULER: Yes, I saw that.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister knows that?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the minister taken any steps to investigate where the leak was?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Although the minister realizes what the statute says as to leaks and as to this information being secret, he did not take any action? The minister knows what it says? He has taken no steps to ascertain where that leak occurred by which Sinclair was enabled to make a statement in Waterloo, at a public meeting, in terms exactly similar to those contained in the communication from the Department of Justice to the Attorney General of Ontario? That is the kind of government we have, is it? Is that the situation?

Mr. EULER: I think my hon. friend might give credit to the Department of National Revenue for giving the information to the department at Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT: To Sinclair.

Mr. EULER: No, not to Sinclair; I deny that absolutely. The department did give information, which it had obtained through its own investigations, for the benefit of the people of the province of Ontario, and the department passed on that information without making it public, as it might very well have done. It passed on that information to the Department of the Attorney General of Ontario for action, and he took action.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, and that answers the question. The Department of National Revenue investigated the brokers' offices in regard to taxes. They made investigations, which were supposed to be secret investigations, using the word in the proper sense according to the statute. As a result of those investigations——

Mr. EULER: What statute is that to which my hon. friend is referring?

Mr. BENNETT: The statute with respect to the whole question of income and other taxes says that these matters shall be kept secret.

Mr. EULER: I am not going to argue with my hon. friend, but I know of no such statute with regard to sales taxes or transfer taxes. Income tax is on a different basis altogether from these other taxes.

Mr. BENNETT: I am putting it on income tax basis.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not income tax

Mr. EULER: That is the Special War Revenue Act.

Mr. CANNON: That does not apply to this act at all.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the Income War Tax Act to which I am referring now.

Mr. DUNNING: But the question has no relation to the income tax.

Mr. BENNETT: Then we will leave that for the moment. The minister had his confidential officers, his auditors, make a report, which report was made to the department. Whether or not the statute requires such information to be kept secret I will leave for the moment. The auditors made the report. That report was transmitted by the Minister of National Revenue to the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice asked the attorney general, of course, to take the necessary action, because the Department of Justice says—

Mr. EULER: Merely transmitted the information.

Mr. BENNETT: The Department of Justice, of course, takes the ground that it has nothing to do with prosecutions, that each province must deal with those, and that department transmitted the information received from the Department of National Revenue together with the report made by the minister's officials to the attorney general at Toronto. Now, the minister says he might have made that public. I say that is not so.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure that is exactly what I said, but I know of no law that would have prevented me from publishing that information if I had so desired. I did not do it, but I know of no law which would have prevented me from doing so if I had wished.

Mr. BENNETT: All I can say is that the practice of the departments is quite the opposite. I do not know about the law except in regard to the income tax, so we will not discuss that for the moment. We will leave that, but on the very same evening, before the department at Toronto could have taken any action Mr. Sinclair, the leader of the provincial Liberal party, made a speech in which he uses that information in the exact terms in which it has been communicated to the attorney general at Toronto. His words are exactly the same as the language in which the information was given. Then why select the leader of the Liberal party, the provincial Liberal party to make a public statement at Waterloo regarding the administration with regard to brokers' businesses in Ontario, resulting from information secured by the minister in his effort to collect a tax?

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend says "Why select the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario as the person to make that statement?" Is he saying to me that I made that selection? If not, what does he mean?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. minister said he did not do it; I say it must have come from his department somehow.

Mr. EULER: I think not.

Mr. BENNETT: How otherwise could it have come?

Mr. EULER: I do not know, but I will say—and I ask the committee to believe this—that no information went to Mr. Sinclair, and nothing was ever intended to go to Mr. Sinclair, so far as I am concerned. I have no knowledge of anything that took place with Mr. Sinclair. I had nothing whatever to do with it, and Mr. Sinclair himself has stated publicly that he did not receive the information from the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: It is unnecessary for any further statement to be made as far as the minister is personally concerned; everyone will accept his denial, I am sure.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend objected that I made no investigation at all.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister says he made no investigation as to the leakage. I say it was a public duty which rested upon him to do so, because the responsibility rested upon him as head of the department. No minister can escape his responsibility by saying "I personally did not do it" when it is apparent that for some reason—which must have been political—the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario stands upon a public platform and makes a statement which is in terms identical with the communication sent by the Attorney General of Canada to the Attorney General of Ontario with respect to a matter about which that department had knowledge in consequence of the investigations carried on under the direction of the Minister of National Revenue. I say that this condition of affairs warrants an investigation, for why was Mr. Sinclair selected by someone to be put in possession of that information? Is that government? Does that represent the correlation of effort between the Department of National Revenue, whose business it is to find out the facts about non-payment of taxes, and the leader of a party in a province who is using the information for political purposes to condemn his opponents? I want to know. We want to know whether this government is conducting the business of the country in the public interest or as an ally and an adjunct of the Liberal party in a province.

Mr. EULER: I make no admission whatever, Mr. Chairman, that the leak was from the Department of National Revenue; in fact I make no admission that there was a leak at all. I leave it to the judgment of the members of this house, to those on the other side as well as to those on this side, that if the Department of National Revenue had chosen to play politics with this situation they certainly would not have submitted that information first to the Attorney General of the province of Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT: That was part of the game, the idea being to see that the department of the Attorney General of Ontario would not take action, but fortunately action was taken.

Mr. EULER: Exactly.

Mr. BENNETT: That was the whole game.

Mr. EULER: They had the information through the department.

Mr. BENNETT: They had obtained the information themselves because they did not get the letter, by some strange coincidence, until after Mr. Sinclair had made his speech. The minister has put his finger right on the spot; the whole game was to say that the department of the Attorney General of Ontario neglected its duty, and Mr. Sinclair was to go and make his speech. Fortunately for the department, the attorney general had obtained information from his own officers and took action, and the letter to which the minister refers was not received by the attorney general until after Mr. Sinclair had made his speech.

Mr. EULER: I am not going to prolong this debate; I cannot help it if my hon. friend draws a deduction which—

Mr. BENNETT: Those are the facts.

Mr. EULER: —is not substantiated by facts. The Department of National Revenue acted in absolutely good faith in trying to clear up what it considered to be a rotten situation existing among the mining brokers in the province of Ontario. The information was passed on in absolutely good faith for the attorney general of the province to take such action as he saw fit. Whether he took that action as a result of the information we gave him, or as a result of information which he had obtained himself, I am not going to say. I have no desire to impugn his motives, and I do not want to have mine impugned.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman must remember that he is the head of a department, and as such he is responsible. If it was not his department that sent that information to the Attorney General of Ontario, then it was the Department of Justice, and that department indicated that the information was received from the minister's department. The Attorney General of Ontario received it from the attorney general at Ottawa, but the information, strange as it may seem, was not received in its entirety until after Mr. Sinclair had made his statement at Waterloo. How could Mr. Sinclair have made that statement unless he had received information from one of two departments, the Department of Justice or the Department of National Revenue? The Minister of National Revenue says that he had nothing to do with it, either directly or indirectly, nor did he know of it, and we accept gladly his word. But let us ask the other department whether that information was permitted to leak out. That information must have leaked out, otherwise Mr. Sinclair would not have been in possession of the information in connection with the taxes. There are the facts, and they demand some explanation.

Section agreed to.

Sections 5 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to refer again to section 5. Upon what basis are these changes made?

Mr. DUNNING: All of the items in the old act are covered. That is, there is no change involved by the change in numbers. The effect will be exactly the same as it was under the old act.

Mr. BENNETT: Simply a rearrangement of items?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Dunning moves that the bill do now pass and that the title be as on the order paper.

Mr. BENNETT: There was some information to be given this evening, and the third reading had better stand over till then.

Mr. DUNNING: The bill has had its third reading; we could allow the actual passing to stand if my hon. friend is afraid that he will not receive the information. Perhaps we had better do that.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a question of being afraid, it is a question of parliamentary procedure. This bill should not leave the house until the information is given, and no one knows that better than the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: I recognize parliamentary procedure.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not afraid of anything.

Motion stands.

BOUNTY ON COAL

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of forty-nine and one-half cents per ton of bituminous coal mined in Canada and converted into coke in Canada and used in the smelting of iron from ore, or in the production of steel.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING: There was an amendment proposed at the last sitting of the committee, but I understand that it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN: When this resolution was last before the committee, the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) moved the following amendment:

And to provide that the money so paid or a portion thereof shall be devoted to the improvement of the position of the men employed in such plants either by way of increased wages or shorter hours or both.

In looking up the authorities, the following is found at page 546 of the thirteenth edition of May:

An amendment proposing to substitute for the resolution an argumentative justification for the refusal of that demand is out of order, as are also amendments proposed with a view to substituting an alternative scheme to that proposed with the royal recommendation.

With that authority, I have to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend would wait until the bill has been introduced, I am sure that he will facilitate the course which he has in view. I propose to introduce the bill immediately and give it second reading.

Mr. CAHAN: Has the bill been printed?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and it will be distributed immediately the resolution is reported.

Resolution reported, on division, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 312, to place Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron or steel on a basis of equality with imported coal.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. DUNNING moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. CAHAN: Should we not have the bill distributed before it is read the second time, so that we may know what the contents are?

Mr. SPEAKER: It will be distributed in a moment.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CANTLEY: I would like to say something in regard to the bill before it passes, and I desire to know whether or not I am prevented from doing so if you declare the motion carried.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps it can be agreed to take the second reading at some time later this day. This will give opportunity for distribution of the bill and for everyone to become familiar with its contents.

Motion stands.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): It will be remembered that during the previous discussion one or two items were allowed to stand. Among them was the matter of grape juice which gave some concern I see that the hon. member for Lincoln is in his seat. He is familiar with the subject. My officers have had conferences with the grape growers and others interested in an effort to find some means to deal with this difficulty which has arisen within the past few weeks, but which has not yet become a real factor. There is considerable difficulty in arriving at a proper test for what is known as concentrated grape juice. When I spoke of the matter in the house before, I mentioned the growers' suggestion of what is called the Baume test. On examination it was found that the Baume test does not appear to be the standardized medium it was thought to be and it has been abandoned. What the growers now suggest is what I am about to read, as follows:

That the following item, enumeration and rates of duty be inserted in schedule A.

This will involve no change in the ordinary domestic grape juice item.

152b. Grape juice in containers of more than one gallon capacity each: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 22½ per cent.

The governor in council may by order in council direct that there be substituted for tariff item 152b in schedule A of the customs tariff, the enumeration of goods and the rates of duties of customs set opposite the said item the following:

152c. Grape juice in containers of more than one gallon capacity each: Testing not more than 1.074 specific gravity at 60 degrees temperature, per gallon: British preferential tariff, 20 cents; intermediate tariff, 25 cents; general tariff, 25 cents, and in addition thereto, for each increment of 0.01 in specific gravity above

1.074: British preferential tariff, 3 cents; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; general tariff, 3 cents.

From and after the publication of such order in council in the Canada Gazette, tariff item 152b as it appears in the said schedule at the time of the passing of this act shall be repealed and the provisions of tariff item 152c shall be substituted therefor.

The reason why the growers ask for this to come into effect by order in council is because they themselves are not yet absolutely assured of this method of testing the grape juice, and I must frankly confess, in the few weeks which have elapsed since the matter first became urgent, it has not been possible for the department to arrive definitely at what should be done and how the test should be applied with respect to concentrated grape juice. It is intended to investigate immediately as fully as possible any complaints that may come in from interested parties as a result of the very publicity which will be given to this provision, and then to bring the new duty into effect if that investigation shows this to be a practical method of meeting what everybody desires to have done.

Mr. BENNETT: Supposing it is not?

Mr. DUNNING: Then we are in the position of having grape juice in containers of more than one gallon capacity under the present rates: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 22½ per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Those are the existing rates?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I presume if the growers are satisfied, there is nothing further to be said. The only danger I can see is that if there is any delay about the matter, this year's crop will be lost, because, if a month or two goes by without anything being done, enough concentrated grape juice can be imported to destroy the price of the incoming native crop. I cannot for the life of me understand why it is necessary to do anything more than apply a percentage rate on the concentrated juice. As I pointed out a few days ago, if juice can be reduced from a five-gallon quantity to a one-gallon quantity, then you can make the duty on that concentrate five times as great. It would not be very hard to draft a clause which would cover that. If the juice is concentrated to the extent of only two to one, then the rate should be doubled. If it is three to one, the rate should be three times as great.

Mr. DUNNING: As my hon. friend will understand, the question which is worrying the growers is how to determine the extent of the concentration, whether it is five to one, four to one, three to one, and to base the rates accordingly.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The growers know what they want, and it is for the minister to put the thing into such shape that they can be protected. I do not care whether it is done by the Baume test or by any other test. I know this, that if concentrates are allowed to come in to ruin the business of these people, it is going to be a very serious thing for every farmer in that whole district.

Mr. DUNNING: I can assure my hon. friend that I am endeavouring to evolve something that will have the effect of meeting the desires of the growers. They have impressed me very much with their sincerity of purpose and fairness in the matter, and what I am here proposing is what is proposed by them and will be satisfactory to them.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I am quite satisfied as to the good intentions of the minister. I am only asking him to see that the matter is expedited so that no loss will come to these people.

Mr. DUNNING: I will undertake to expedite the matter so far as is humanly possible because I am keenly desirous of meeting this situation. Theoretical though it is, it is imminent and appears to be of practical moment. The intention certainly is to proceed immediately to deal with it. I have been consulting with my officers about it and I am quite sure that we can clear it up in less than a month.

Mr. PETTIT: I am informed by one of the wineries in my district at Niagara Falls that an agent for the California fruit growers has been soliciting orders in that district, and it is expected from information given out by him that at least one million gallons of concentrated grape juice will be shipped in here this year.

Mr. DUNNING: That information has been communicated to me.

Mr. PETTIT: So action is wanted at once.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the duty is sufficiently high to afford a measure of necessary protection to the Canadian grape grower as against this California competition.

Mr. DUNNING: What is intended is to proportion what is done to what already exists with respect to grapes. It is a matter of proportioning one rate to another.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister has not quite answered the question. If there is no attention whatever paid to concentrates, and concentrates are allowed to come in at the rate of duty proposed, that rate is not sufficient to take care of the situation; there is no doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved to insert the item accordingly.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—296. Flint, ground flint stone; feldspar, fluorspar; mica schist; cliff, chalk, china, or Cornwall stone, ground or unground, refuse stone, not sawn, hammered or chiselled nor fit for flagstone, building stone or paving: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DUNNING: I think I can meet the point raised by my hon. friend from Kingston City very easily by inserting after the word "feldspar" in the first line the words "crude only," and then adding a new sub-item to item 296, reading as follows:

Customs tariff—296d. Feldspar, not further manufactured than ground: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

That distinguishes between the crude feldspar and the ground feldspar, admitting the crude free under all tariffs, and imposing on the ground feldspar a duty of 10 per cent under the intermediate tariff, 15 per cent under the general tariff, and free under the British preference. That was the point my hon. friend raised, and he had every right to raise it on account of the magnesite which is alongside the feldspar.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved that the item be amended accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—377a. Blooms, cogged ingots, slabs, billets, n.o.p., sheet bars, of iron or steel, by whatever process made, n.o.p., per ton: British preferential tariff, $2.50; intermediate tariff, $4; general tariff, $4.50.

The CHAIRMAN: This item and items 377b and 377c are standing.

Mr. HEAPS: This is the item which was under discussion for a few moments last Friday evening when I objected to the increased duties granted to the corporation particularly on account of the conditions under which the men are compelled to work at Sydney, Nova Scotia.

In the first place, I think I ought to correct an impression which the Minister of Finance left with the house when he said that the men themselves had asked for this increased protection to the steel industry. That statement is only partially correct. It is quite true that a delegation of one or two workers from the steel mills at Algoma came before the tariff board and applied for some increased protection to the steel industry, but they in no way represented anyone beyond the men engaged in the steel industry at Algoma, and then only partially. They did not represent at all the men engaged in the Nova Scotia mills.

Mr. SIMPSON: Before my hon. friend leaves the Algoma end, while one or two men came down here, as he says, stating that they were representing the men and were in favour of this additional protection for the steel industry, I want to say that I have talked with a very great number of men engaged in the Algoma Steel works at Sault Ste. Marie, and generally speaking the men are unanimous in their wish for additional protection for the products of the Algoma Steel plant.

Mr. HEAPS: The hon. gentleman is just repeating what I said. I said that these men represented probably a large number of the men at the Algoma Steel plant, but I have also had representations made to me by quite a large number of men who object to anything being given to the company if the men receive no advantage from the company. Only last year or the year before when the Empire Parliamentary Union came here from Great Britain, a delegation of the men from the mills at the Soo appeared before them, and it is only the truth to say that they were shocked at the deplorable conditions which were revealed to them. I could bring communications to show that there are men at Algoma who object strenuously to this protection being given. The minister will realize, of course, how unfair it would be for me to give in this house the names of those men. What I was trying to point out in reply to the statement of the Minister of Finance, that the men themselves had asked for this increased protection, was that the only men who had asked for it were men representing a number of employees at the Algoma Steel works, and that there was nothing to show that the men employed at the steel works at Sydney wanted this increased protection. That was the point that I wished to make. I do not think that the Minister of Finance intentionally tried to convey a wrong impression.

Mr. DUNNING: I must here point out that the men in question from the Algoma plant appeared before the Tariff Advisory Board, and I must take their own representations as to who they were and whom they represented, and they certainly stated, as the evidence will show, that they represented the employees of the Algoma Steel plant and were sent here by those employees. That is as I remember it; I am speaking from memory.

With respect to the other steel plant, there is no doubt at all because there are resolutions in the possession of the government and of myself purporting to come from the men and the men's organizations in that plant.

Mr. HEAPS: Asking for this increased protection?

Mr. DUNNING: Undoubtedly.

Mr. HEAPS: Let me read something that took place before the tariff board itself, and which I accept as being correct. I refer to the report of the hearing before the tariff board on January 29, 1929. It was on this hearing that I believe the action of the government was based. The Reverend J. H. Hamilton was present and said, in part, as follows:

> The plant committee, representing 3,000 workmen of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, sent a request to our association—that is, the Ministerial Association of Sydney—asking us to use our influence in helping them to secure an eight hour day.

That statement was made before the tariff board. He proceeded to deal with the conditions, but all through his remarks there is nothing but a demand that something be done on behalf of the men employed at the Sydney steel plant. He pointed out the very deplorable conditions prevailing there and said in effect that they were a disgrace. The Reverend Mr. Hamilton also referred to the Robertson commission which was appointed by the present government in 1923. Perhaps I might quote the following recommendations made by that commission in 1924, which recommendations also were submitted to the tariff board. This will be found in the report:

> The commission are of the opinion that the hours of labour have been excessively long in some departments of the plant under the two-shift system of operation. The commission recommends that in the interests alike of the company and the workmen, early and earnest attention be given to the elimination of the twenty-four hour change-over period and to the abolition of the seven-day week. The commission recommends that the question of adopting the three-shift plan, eight hours per shift, in the departments of continuous processes, and a maximum of a ten-hour day for the workmen be given the most careful consideration. In our opinion the change would be advantageous to the company and beneficial to the men, and should be adopted.

At little further on the Reverend Mr. Hamilton made this statement:

> The men, of course, were aware of these findings, and their expectations were raised also by the parliament of Canada accepting the labour convention of the treaty of Versailles in regard to the hours of labour.

Evidently, so far as the mills at Sydney were concerned, where approximately 3,000 men are employed, no representations have been made on behalf of the men, openly at least, to the tariff board in favour of increased protection. However, the men have been led to believe by the recommendations of various commissions that something would be done on their behalf. As far back as 1919 when Sir Robert Borden signed the treaty of Versailles the men had great expectations that something would be done for them. In fact in this house a statement was made by the Hon. Mr. Rowell that the signing of the treaty of Versailles represented the magna carta of labour. He expressed his pride that it was Sir Robert Borden, the Prime Minister of Canada, who moved that the labour convention be incorporated in the treaty.

Now, correspondence took place between the officials of the steel plant and the government of Nova Scotia. I have in my hand a letter which is rather interesting because it is signed by Hon. G. Harrington, Minister of Mines for the province of Nova Scotia. It is in part as follows:

> In explanation I may say that without equal action throughout the Dominion so as to bring other plants on the same basis as your own I greatly fear that what your coworkers would make up in improved conditions or hours of employment they would be liable to lose in the amount of employment they would receive annually. That is why I was anxious to have the federal authorities attempt to get a uniform measure for the Dominion. At the same time I may tell you the deputy minister informs me that he believes he is making progress towards at least a partial solution and I must say it appears as though your general manager there is inclined to be sympathetic and fair from what my deputy tells me. All told, it looks as though if everyone is patient, something satisfactory may be worked out yet.

This letter, dated from Halifax, Nova Scotia, on December 12, 1928, was written to one of the workers at the Sydney plant. It is nearly two years ago, but nothing has yet been done to ameliorate the deplorable conditions. Letters have also passed between the federal Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) and the Minister of Mines in Nova Scotia, Hon. G. Harrington. Let me quote from a letter dated December 27, 1927, signed by the Minister of Labour here and directed to Colonel the Hon. G. S. Harrington, Minister of Public Works and Mines, Halifax. I am putting these letters on record to show that the matter has been under advisement by the federal Department of Labour for a number of years, and that it is time something was done to improve the working conditions of the men employed at Sydney. This is the portion of the letter to which I wish to direct the attention of hon. members:

> I quite agree with you as to the desirability of uniformity of legislation on labour matters in Canada and will be glad to have your cooperation in bringing this about. It is doubtful if much can be accomplished in this direction by correspondence, and probably the more effective plan would be to have the subject considered in conference between those who are charged with the administration of existing labour laws in different parts of the country. If it should be the case that you will be coming to Ottawa this winter, I should be very glad of any opportunity to talk things over.

A little further on the writer says:

> In case the same may be of any service I am sending you herewith copy of a publication of the Department of Labour containing the text of part XIII of the treaty of Versailles relative to labour, in which you will find a reference to the eight hour day in article 427.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, although it is approximately three years ago that this correspondence took place between our Department of Labour and the Department of Mines in Nova Scotia, nothing has been done towards relieving the deplorable conditions existing in that province. The men are still working under the same disgraceful conditions as in 1919 and 1920. The two-shift period system still prevails. But notwithstanding that the government know full well these conditions still exist, they are giving to the steel company at Sydney and to the Canadian steel industry in general a very decided advantage in the way of increased tariff preference.

A few moments ago when the hon. Minister of Finance was discussing the question of the tariff in connection with grape juice he stated that the growers of grapes desired the proposed change to be made. In other words, he paid great attention to what the growers themselves wanted. On other occasions I think we have heard in this house the statement that "the industry have asked for this particular thing". And because the industry or those who produce a certain commodity have asked for increased tariff protection, the Minister of Finance and the government have been quite pleased to incorporate their requests in the budget. Now, labour comes along and makes a certain request, and what do we hear from the government or from the Minister of Finance? We are told: "It is impracticable, it cannot be done." I refer to this to point out the different way we treat the manufacturer on the one hand and labour on the other. The minister shakes his head, meaning, I suppose, that his desire is to be just as fair to the employees as he has been to the employers in this particular case.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEAPS: I am going to accept that statement of the minister unreservedly and point out that one way in which he can show his fairness will be to withdraw entirely the steel schedules from the tariff bill until such time as the employers who are going to benefit thereby put into effect improved labour conditions, including the eight hour day.

I had great hopes that something would be done last Wednesday evening when the leader of the opposition made a suggestion which he asked the Minister of Finance to embody in the tariff resolution. The Minister of Finance pointed out that it was impracticable. However the suggestion of the leader of the opposition was a good one, and I was very pleased indeed to see how quickly it was taken up by the Prime Minister. In the meantime I am very sorry to see how quickly it has been dropped both by the Prime Minister and by the leader of the opposition. However I hope before the bill is passed the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition will have an opportunity to vote for the resolution even if the leader of the opposition does not happen to move it himself. Why has there been this sudden change since last Wednesday evening? It is very difficult indeed for the average person to understand why the sudden change has taken place. The report was broadcast throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion that the government and the House of Commons as a whole were almost unanimously in favour of doing something to further the acceptance of the eight-hour day. It was felt throughout the land that the House of Commons was in favour of introducing the eight-hour day into the steel mills of this Dominion. Then on Friday evening the leader of the opposition stated from his place in the house that he did not think the resolution was in order, and the Minister of Finance claimed that the idea was impracticable.

The hundreds of thousands of workingmen in this country are watching with a good deal of interest the action of the government in regard to this particular question. A more or less definite promise has been made by the leaders of the two major parties in the house. I do not say that a definite promise would be immediately put into effect, but I do say that an implied promise was given and the leader of the government and the opposition were in favour of doing something to inaugurate the eight-hour day in the steel mills of Canada where conditions are in a deplorable state. When we have decided to give something to these large corporations it would seem to me that the time is opportune to compel them to accept the eight-hour day. I would like to know why there has been a sudden change of front; why has there been a change of opinion since last Wednesday evening? I know it has been stated that directors of Besco have been seen around the corridors, and it is quite possible that the pitiful stories of these millionaire directors may have touched the hearts of some hon. members of this house. The men in the mills have had nobody to plead their case; they could not afford to send advocates to the house; hence other hon. members and myself intend to plead the case for these men who in our opinion require more protection than the directors of Besco. The conditions under which these men are working are known to practically every hon. member and it would work a great wrong on them if we passed measures for the relief of the shareholders and did nothing for the men employed in that great industrial concern. Sometimes we hear it suggetsed that when adjustments are made we are attempting to hold an even balance between capital and labour; in this case however it is quite apparent that the balance is weighted against the interests of the labouring men.

I am asking for consideration for the steel workers. They have lived and raised their families in the hope that something would be done for their relief. To what have these men to look forward in life? They work thirteen hours, which means that they are absent from their homes at least fourteen hours, leaving them ten hours each day to sleep, rest, and be ready for the next day's work. This continues seven days of the week for fifty-two weeks in the year.

What is this house going to do? I observe in the bill which the Minister of Finance brought in a few minutes ago, bill No. 312, which deals with the bounty on coal used in the steel industry, that he is putting in clause 2 thereof a provision which makes the granting of the bounty conditional upon the adoption by the province of Nova Scotia of certain provisions contained in the treaty of Versailles. I think that represents a new provision in the act; I do not know whether such a provision has been suggested before in this house. Under these circumstances I must congratulate the government on having adopted this principle so far as the bounty on coal is concerned. I would also ask the government to do something for the men employed in the steel industry of Nova Scotia.

Mr. DUNNING: The bill does something.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not touch the steel industry.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh yes, it does.

Mr. BENNETT: Not these steel items.

Mr. HEAPS: This refers only to the bounty and does not affect the tariff. The tariff will be operative, and it will give an advantage. All we are doing is to give one advantage instead of two.

Mr. DUNNING: The reason is that it is more practical to operate under the bounty. As yet I have found no practical means of making it work under the tariff. If my hon. friends have any suggestions as to how it might be made to operate in a practical way under the tariff without disarranging the industry throughout the country, I should be pleased to listen. I thought I would be meeting the situation when I endeavoured to attach a condition in respect to the bounties, and that it would have a salutary effect.

Mr. HEAPS: I appreciate the action of the government in that respect, and I congratulate them on including such a provision. I have made a practical suggestion to the minister; I have asked him not to put into effect these increases in the tariff until such time as the industry has adjusted itself to the new conditions which some of us are demanding.

Mr. DUNNING: Is my hon. friend referring to the whole iron and steel schedule?

Mr. HEAPS: I am referring to sections 377, 377a, 377b and 377c. There is nothing impracticable in my suggestion. This matter could be held over for a year, and when the industry is prepared to do something for the men the Minister of Finance might be prepared to do something for the industry. I think I am making a very reasonable request.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ARTHUR CAMERON

The house in committee on Bill No. 284, for the relief of Arthur Cameron—Mr. Young (Toronto Northeast)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

The CHAIRMAN: There are a number of unopposed divorce bills which were reported without amendment from the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills to-day. It has been moved and seconded that they be considered this day.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask if it is usual to request the blanket passing of a number of bills of this kind when they are not even on the order paper? I have no objection, but I suggest that the proceeding is rather unusual.

The CHAIRMAN: It has been done before at the close of a session.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then may I ask why they have not been printed on the order paper?

The CHAIRMAN: They were just reported to-day to the house, and a special motion was made that these bills be taken into consideration this day in committee of the whole and for third reading. That is usual at the end of a session.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed on division.

STAUNTONS LIMITED PATENT

The house in committee on Bill No. 300, respecting a certain patent of Stauntons Limited—Mr. Geary—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1.—Authority to commissioner of patents to extend the duration of the patent for five years from the date on which it would otherwise expire.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What bill are we considering now?

The CHAIRMAN: This is bill 300, respecting a certain patent of Stauntons Limited.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I notice this is one of these patent applications, and I should like to know whether the commissioner of patents has been consulted.

The CHAIRMAN: The sponsor of the bill is not here, but perhaps the Secretary of State knows the circumstances.

Mr. RINFRET: I have explained many times, and I must repeat, that these bills do not emanate from my department, and I have no information with respect to this bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I would suggest that this bill stand until the sponsor is present.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is the chairman of the committee here?

The CHAIRMAN: No.

Mr. RINFRET: Perhaps at this stage of the session we might try to accommodate the hon. member, but we have not the bill before us and I have no information about it.

The CHAIRMAN: There is just one section to the bill, and if it would meet the wish of the committee I might read it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not desire to hold up the house at this late stage of the session, but I do submit that when the bill is not printed, is not on the order paper and is not named on the orders of the day, the members of the house are at least entitled to a statement by the chairman or some member of the committee. If there is a member of the committee present who can tell the house that the bill has been considered and that in the opinion of the committee it is all right, I will have nothing further to say.

Mr. J. E. LETELLIER de ST. JUST: As a member of the committee I will say that the bill was discussed this morning and it was decided that the extension of time should be granted.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There was no objection, I take it?

Mr. J. E. LETELLIER de ST. JUST: Only from one member.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I may say objection was taken to the bill this morning; a representative of the patent office presented what I thought was a very clear case as to why the extension should not be granted.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Under these circumstances I would ask that the bill stand until the sponsor is present.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Perhaps it might be understood that since we have proceeded in rather an irregular fashion to-day, and have taken up different matters one after the other, the bill might be considered again if the sponsor should appear. This may be the last chance to put the bill through.

Mr. DUNNING: Am I to presume that we will be back in committee on private bills again, or is this the end of private bills for to-night?

The CHAIRMAN: I suppose this will end private bills for to-night.

Mr. DUNNING: It would be rather difficult to revert to private bills.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report progress on Bill No. 300 and ask leave to sit again this day?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Progress reported.

STANDING ORDERS COMMITTEE

Mr. L. S. RENE MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) presented the fourth report of the select standing committee on standing orders.

Mr. MORIN moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

STAUNTONS LIMITED PATENT

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 300, respecting a certain patent of Stauntons Limited.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Sir Eugene Fiset in the chair.

On section 1—Authority to the commissioner of patents to extend the duration of the patent for five years from the date on which it would otherwise expire.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, I think the committee should have some explanation. When this bill came before the private bills committee it seemed to me to be a very reasonable one, but after I heard the objections raised by the department to the granting of the extension, I thought it would be better if this bill were not passed. As far as I am aware, the patent has three years to run, and this company comes forward and asks for an extension of time before the final expiry date. The company claim that it is their intention to make a large expenditure of money and they desire some assurance that this extension will be granted, but should this be done it would be creating a precedent in patent law. That is an argument which should appeal to both sides of the house. The real point at issue is the fact that there have been improvements made in this patent and other men are waiting for the expiration of the present patent in order that their improvements may be brought into force. If this extension is granted it will mean that those men will have to wait a longer period before they are allowed to exercise their patent rights. If any good reason can be advanced why the time should be extended, I think the sponsor of the bill should now give it to the committee.

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Chairman, the bill was discussed in the committee and has finally found its way into the house. It is the ordinary bill for the extension of a patent. There may be a claim that someone else would apply for a patent if this company did not go on, but this is a substantial firm who intend to proceed with their work. They require this extension in order to take advantage of the money which they intend to spend in order to manufacture the article. There may be some objections raised by the patent office, but with only one dissenting voice the committee passed the bill. The committee took that action after full consideration, and I do not think any advantage could be gained by my entering into a long discussion on the matter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How long has the patent been in the possession of the company?

Mr. GEARY: I have forgotten, but I understand it has three years still to run.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How long has it been in force already?

Mr. GEARY: I believe for five years.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The patent itself has been in effect for a longer period than that, for about fifteen years?

Mr. GEARY: I think so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I protest against this bill in particular, and I protest against the passage of these renewal of patent bills in general. In some cases there have been extenuating circumstances which justified our action, but such is not the case with the present bill. I understand that the patent was granted for about fifteen years, and has about three years to run. It has been in the possession of the present owners for five years, and before the expiration of the patent they come to us and ask us to give them a further renewal. I think it is absurd; I think it is impertinent that they should come into this house and ask for such renewal. My objection is further buttressed by the fact that the officials of the department concerned appeared before the committee and registered definite objections against the bill. I think the committee will be making a serious mistake in adopting the principle involved in the passing of this bill, and I am definitely opposed to such action.

Mr. SPENCE: This bill came before the private bills committee this morning; it was discussed for over half an hour, and with one exception no objection was offered. The company in question is a reputable one, and they have been labouring under difficulties for many years. It is the intention of the company to erect this year a new building which will cost from $350,000 to $400,000, but are not disposed to make such an expenditure unless the patent is extended for a further five years. This industry will be considerably injured if the bill does not go through, and I think it is our duty to give consideration to the industries of this country.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What article is manufactured by this company?

Mr. SPENCE: Wallpaper.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am opposed to the bill unless a better explanation can be offered for its passage than has been advanced by the two hon. gentlemen opposite. I agree with what the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) has said about the bill. I had no knowledge until a few moments ago that there was such a bill before the committee, but I remember distinctly that two or three years ago a similar bill was introduced into the house to extend the patent on some sort of concrete pipe. I think that bill was introduced by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, the hon. member for Parkdale. I remember very distinctly the stand that was taken at the time by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that we should not extend these patents. I do not know of any precedent in the house for this bill. If we begin the practice of extending patents, we open the whole field of applications. I thought, of course, when the hon. member for South Toronto was giving reasons why the committee should pass the bill, we would hear some real reasons, but none have been forthcoming. The patent appears to have run for fifteen years already.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Twelve years.

Mr. SPENCE: The firm has had it for only five years.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is neither here nor there whether the present owners have had it for five, ten or fifteen years. The patent has run within three years of its expiration and unless some better explanation than this is given, I shall have to oppose the bill regardless of what action the private bills committee has taken.

Mr. SPENCE: During the few years I have been in the house I have many a time seen patents extended. There was an exception in the case of one that I had charge of some years ago; some of the committee opposed me and I was beaten out by manipulation in the house. If the hon. member realized the conditions as we do, I am sure he would agree to grant the extension.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): The request for the renewal of this patent is an extraordinary one. If it were a patent in connection with some machinery, it might have some claim on our consideration, but it is a patent on a process for the manufacture of wallpaper, and the fact that it is a patent on a process gives the firm a complete monopoly in that line. It will be remembered that wallpaper has a protection at present of 35 per cent, and to extend the patent three years before its expiration, thus giving a complete monopoly on a process of manufacture, seems to be forcing privilege to the extreme. I think it would be wise to wait at least until the expiration of the present patent before we consider granting any extension of time.

Mr. GEARY: I do not know that I can give any further reasons. I wonder what the hon. member for Hants-Kings wants that has not already been given in the way of reasons. In this case there is no question of validity or law or practice. Patents have been extended from time to time; it is nothing new in the house to grant such extensions. This patent may have been dormant for some time, but a reputable firm now possesses it, intends to use the process and is spending its money in that regard. If, however, it is to have only three years in order to get any return from its investment, that is too much of a risk for any enterprise to assume. The firm has put the matter very frankly and plainly before the committee and it was most thoroughly discussed. All that is wanted now is the grace of the committee and the house and I consider sufficient reasons have been given why the patent should be extended.

Mr. COOTE: I think we have a good right to ask the sponsor of the bill what the firm have been doing with this patent for the past five years. Why they have not made use of it and what was done during the seven years prior to that. I quite agree with those opposing the bill.

Mr. GEARY: Perhaps I have been a little obscure in my explanation. For three years the firm has been manufacturing, but it desires to extend and to put more money into the business. The point is that it is not good business to put that money in for simply three years, which is the present life of the patent. The firm has been bona fide in its operations under the patent since it bought it.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member has made a case for the interests of the firm, but in what way is it in the public interest to extend the patent?

Mr. SPENCE: The public are not worrying about it.

Mr. GEARY: If my hon. friend's argument is sound, we should never give an exclusive right to the use of a patent, but it has been determined time and again that people who have patents have some right to the exclusive use of the process that is patented.

Mr. JACOBS: I had a couple of these patent bills before the house last week and they went through without any opposition at all. Why make fish of one and flesh of another.

Mr. IRVINE: There is a great difference between this bill and the bills my hon. friend sponsored some days ago. This bill is in connection with a patent that has still three years to run. I think the patents referred to by my hon. friend had expired or almost expired when he asked for extensions. Let us wait until the expiration of the patent and then consider its extension.

Mr. McGREGOR: The hon. gentleman says: Let us wait until the patent expires. The reason these people are asking for an extension is this: they have been doing business in Toronto for seventy years; they want to extend that business; they want to spend $300,000 on a new building and new machinery. Unless they can have this patent extended, they cannot enter into that expenditure. They are at present employing 200 men and they expect to employ 400 men when this scheme goes through. I do not see any reason why the hon. member should deny to an industry in Toronto what has been granted to other people.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I object to the remarks of the last speaker. There is no argument in the sentences that he has uttered. This is a company asking for a monopoly charter from the House of Commons on this particular patent when the department informs us there are two or three other concerns willing to go into this very operation and business.

Mr. SPENCE: There is no such firm.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am so informed.

Mr. GEARY: The hon. member for Bow River, if he is giving us statements that are based on information, should state the source instead of making the statement as though he knew it of his own knowledge.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am informed by one of the members of the committee.

Mr. GEARY: The hon. member did not so state.

[Mr. Geary.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am informed by one of the members of the committee that an official or officials of the department appeared before the committee and stated that several firms were willing to engage in this particular work. Therefore the likelihood is that instead of having 400 additional men, we may have 800 or 1,000 additional men employed if we do not grant this extension. In the meantime what is the position with regard to the consuming public? If we grant this extension, we give the firm a monopoly that will enable it to charge high prices because of the control of the patent and the fact that there is no competition. If the members present represent the interest of the people and not that of the manufacturers, I ask them to oppose this bill.

Mr. McGIBBON: The committee should have some consideration for stability in business. What are the facts? This man has an idea and a process. Other people simply want to steal it. Is parliament going to give sanction to that or is it not? You cannot expect any firm to invest a large sum of money in a process of manufacturing for simply two or three years.

Section agreed to on division: Yeas, 81; Nays, 40.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) moved concurrence in the third report of the special committee on the Dominion Elections Act and the Corrupt Practices Inquiries Act.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solictor General) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act to carry into effect the recommendations of the special committee appointed to consider the Dominion Elections Act and the Corrupt Practices Inquiries Act submitted to the house on the 23rd May, instant, and to provide for the appointment of a legal adviser to the Chief Electoral Officer in reference to any matter relating to the pending general election.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the sugject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cannon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 309, to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. CANNON moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: Explain, please.

Mr. CANNON: This bill, which is now printed and ready for distribution, is in conformity with the committee's report. Briefly, section 1 provides a slight amendment to the provisions which was adopted last year in reference to summer residents. Section 1 is to the effect that when an elector is working in one part of a constituency, and has been there long enough to entitle him to vote at that place rather than his usual place of residence, he will be entitled to vote where he is earning his living provided it is in the same constituency. This is to meet a demand made by some of the western members, and to meet also the requirements of some of the labour people. It will be a convenience not only to the west but to the east, in such places as Seven Islands, in Charlevoix-Montmorency county, and other places of that kind, as it will save the voter travelling a very considerable distance to register his vote.

Section 2 lays down rules for a new system which will be adopted in the urban constituencies whereby a double set of enumerators will be used in making up the voters' lists. Last year the act provided for one set of enumerators; this year we have regulations to the effect that there shall be two sets, to make sure the list is as regular and as complete as possible.

Section 3 provides for by-elections. Under the new system inaugurated by the act last year, when a writ of election in any electoral district is issued within six months after a general election there will be no necessity to go through the long process of making up new lists; the lists in the hands of the chief electoral officer at the time will be used for the by-election.

Section 4 provides for the voting of blind men. Representations were made to the committee by blind people to the effect that the present system might be improved, and that a blind man who wishes to vote might be accompanied by a friend who would vouch for him and would also swear that he had accompanied but one man to the poll. This is now provided for and takes the place of the procedure to which they objected.

Section 5 applies to the constituency of Regina, where instead of providing for eight days between nomination and polling the interval will be fifteen days. I may say that the committee made this recommendation with the understanding that if any other member of the house wishes a similar change in his constituency it will be made now.

Section 6 provides that a legal adviser shall be retained to advise the chief electoral officer in reference to any matter relating to the present election. The idea of the government and of the committee is that Colonel Biggar, who has served as chief electoral officer in former elections, should be retained as legal adviser to his successor.

Section 7 is put forward, in view of the fact that the delay between prorogation and dissolution might be very short, to provide for the necessary changes in order that the regulations for the double set of enumerators will apply in urban centres at the pending election.

Mr. SPENCE: The next general election will likely be held during the summer months. If residents of Toronto or Montreal, say, are at their summer cottages 50 miles distant from their city homes during the time of the enumeration, will they be enumerated there and vote in the county, or will they be forced to go back home to vote?

Mr. CANNON: They will have to go back home.

Mr. SPENCE: It will be an inconvenience to many.

Mr. COOTE: It is hard to decide anything without the bill before us. Certainly I think we ought to have the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill, I understand, is on the table of the house.

Mr. CANNON: The contents of the bill will be found in Votes and Proceedings of Friday, May 23. This bill is exactly the same as the bill embodied in the report of the committee which was laid on the table of the house last Friday. I may say that that report was unanimous and represents the views of all the members of the committee belonging to the various parties.

Mr. COOTE: I am not objecting to the bill, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is only right that every member should insist on having a copy of the bill before him when it is under consideration. I have asked the pages for a copy of this bill, but they say there are none available.

An hon. MEMBER: They are on the table.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Progress reported.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr Johnston in the chair

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering item 377a Shall the item carry?

Mr HEAPS: No, Mr Chairman. When the house rose at six o'clock I was discussing the conditions of labour prevailing in the Besco plant at Sydney, and I have one or two other comments to make before we leave this particular item.

The men employed at the steel works at Sydney and for the Besco corporation generally have during the last ten or twelve years gone through several very trying experiences. In 1923 during a bitterly contested strike troops were sent down to Nova Scotia and ultimately the men were forced to go back to work under the same intolerable conditions against which they had so vigorously protested; and they are working under similar conditions at the present time. Several commissions have investigated the industry and in each case they have suggested that immediate improvement be made in the working conditions.

I know it may be said, Mr. Chairman, with a good deal of truth, that the question of labour hours and the general conditions under which the men are engaged in the industry is entirely for the provincial legislature and not for the federal parliament to deal with. Although recognizing that there is a certain amount of truth in the statement, I cannot altogether agree that the contention is sound. I think that the parliament of Canada, the supreme legislative body in the Dominion, has a very important duty to perform so far as the conditions of the people are concerned, and I do not think that we as members of this House of Commons are doing the right or proper thing when we attempt to shelve our responsibility in a matter of this character. I know it is very simple indeed for either this parliament or the provincial legislature to say: It is not our responsibility.

[Mr. Coote.]

But while this dispute between the provincial and federal governments is being settled the working people are getting no particular benefit. Although the question of legislative jurisdiction may be involved, at the present time we are confronted with a concrete situation of some difficulty. This government is being asked to grant certain concessions to an industry, and I say it is not beyond the powers of parliament to say to that industry that parliament will not grant them any such concession unless they are willing to put into effect certain improved conditions in connection with the men they employ. I do not think I am asking too much when I ask parliament to take that action. For the past eight or ten years, perhaps longer than that, the aggrieved men have been looking for some remedy, and up to the present time they have not been accorded it. In the past this parliament has appointed commissions to inquire into social conditions affecting the Canadian people. If parliament has not the right to legislate in connection with social conditions, why do we continue to appoint commissions for the purpose of inquiring into them? I do not think we should tell the working people that we have nothing to say as to the conditions under which men and women are employed in industry. I think I am correct in saying that practically every hon. gentleman in this house, whether he be on one side or the other, is opposed to the intolerable conditions which prevail in the Besco mills at Sydney, Nova Scotia. If such is the case, if we are unanimous, and if the expressions of opinion on the part of the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition last Wednesday evening are a criterion of the feeling of the men who sit behind those hon. gentlemen, is it beyond the wit of this parliament to devise ways and means to withhold from the iron and steel industry any increased tariff benefits until something is done by the industry to improve the conditions of the workers under its control? I do not think so.

As I said prior to the adjournment, as a result of the statement made by the Prime Minister, and the very concrete and definite suggestion made by the leader of the opposition within the last few days, the men have been led to believe that this House of Commons is ready to do something for them. But lo and behold, within a few days after those statements are made we are told that parliament is impotent to act in connection with this matter! What will the men say? What will be the average man's reaction to a situation of that kind? He will say that this government is not impotent when it comes to doing something for the directors and shareholders of a corporation, but that it is impotent in respect to the interests of the men employed by that concern. To my mind that is a very unfortunate impression to be broadcast throughout the length and breadth of this country. Parliament should not allow the impression to go out that it does not wish to do anything to better the conditions of the most oppressed men in our Dominion. It is an attitude of that character which brings parliament into disrepute. Parliament has functions to perform, and here we have an opportunity to do something in the interests of the men engaged in the steel industry.

We have been asked to give certain valuable concessions to the shareholders and bondholders of the British Empire Steel Corporation. I think I am correct when I say that a very large percentage of those who own bonds and stocks in the steel industries of this country do not live in the Dominion of Canada. In other words, we are going to give valuable concessions to men who are not Canadians, who live outside of Canada, yet it is suggested that we cannot do a thing for men of our own kith and kin engaged in the steel industry. That is why I have risen on these occasions and have protested against any aid being given to the steel corporations until first of all we have it understood that something will be done for the men employed in the steel industry.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to congratulate the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and his colleague for having brought to the attention of this house the dissatisfaction of the workers in the steel plants at Sydney and in other parts of the Dominion. He has made special reference to the employees in the plant of the British Empire Steel Corporation, and I believe properly so.

I remember very well the first speech I had the honour to make in this house. It was in the year 1922, and on that occasion I spoke on behalf of the very men whose case has been so ably championed by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. The men in the steel industry had passed through an appalling period of depression and strife. Shocking conditions of intense misery and destitution were depicted before the house. There have been some improvements since that time, but now, on May 27, 1930, we hear another appeal from the steel workers, and perhaps from the miners, for improved and reasonable working conditions. They ask for fair working hours and fair wages, and the case made out by the two hon. members who have spoken stands unchallenged. No member of the government has dared to challenge the rights of the workers, nor can the government deny the complaints that have been lodged in connection with this matter. Even the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) could not shatter the arguments made when he attempted to show that in connection with the Scotia plant there had been no particular disturbances and that the men appeared to be satisfied. Because the men do not go on strike is no indication that they are satisfied. If that principle were adopted a premium would be placed upon strikes. I say to the Minister of Finance that when he retorted that the men could look after their affairs by organization—

Mr. DUNNING: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I did not say that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the workers could adjust their conditions by organized action. I may have to quote the words he actually used.

Mr. DUNNING: Quote them correctly, then.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is one to imagine that nothing can be done for these men until they decide to strike? When they do strike, what is done for them? Troops are sent down; the country is burdened with civil conflict; disturbances result which are always contingent upon a strike. Are we to wait for that state of affairs before we recognize the fair stand taken by these people?

We are dealing with specific increases in the tariff concerning the steel industry. Let us turn for a moment to the condition of the industry. I have in my hand a Canadian Press despatch dated at Montreal, April 21, 1930,—a month and six days ago. I shall read it for the information of hon. members:

British Empire Steel Corporation's consolidated statement for 1929 showed an operating profit of $6,046,647 as compared with $4,187,403 in 1928 according to figures published here to-day.

That is an operating profit of over $6,000,000.

After writing off a larger amount for depreciation and depletion and taking care of bond interest and discount bonds, there remained a net profit of $2,226,635 as against $855,938 in the preceding year. With other minor charges taken care of the company reported a surplus of $2,070,001 which was sufficient to wipe out a previous deficit of $1,739,697 and carry forward a surplus of $330,303.

Dominion Iron and Steel showed an operating profit of $2,247,837 in 1929 as compared with $1,843,328 in 1928. The company reported a surplus carried forward of $2,741,609 as compared with $1,914,756 in the previous year.

Dominion Coal showed an operating profit of $1,745,095 as compared with $1,181,813 in 1928. Net profit amounted to $200,106 as compared with a deficit of $303,184 in the previous year.

And so on. The steel industry in this country has shown handsome profits and operating surpluses. At this time the country is asked through parliament to give to the shareholders and bondholders in the iron and steel industries an additional opportunity to make greater profits. Will the government which is proposing to grant these great privileges, increases of from 66 per cent to 80 per cent, to this industry, refuse to heed the just appeal of labour? Is labour not to get its share of this improved condition? There was a time, I remember, not so long ago when we used to refer to the hon. gentlemen who sit to the left of the Speaker and to my right as being the friends of the manufacturers. They were pilloried all over the hustings of this country as the friends of the manufacturers, the gentlemen who extended special privileges to their own friends. Not only that, but they frequently argued in response. "Oh, no, we want protection in order to protect the worker." Now we find this government adopting the same principle of protection, and for whom? Are they going to place themselves in the same position as hon. gentlemen to my right have been placed for so many years, as friends of the manufacturers and not friends of the workers? That is the issue, clear cut, which is before us in this house to-night. Are we going to befriend only industries which already make handsome profits, and are we going to leave labour to its own devices, to solve its own problems as best it may without extending to labour any reasonable opportunity to make better the conditions under which it exists? Why, Mr. Chairman, if that be the condition which we have reached in our political life in Canada to-day, I say we might as well have the Tories in office as have the Liberals in office.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. JACOBS: No, it is not as bad as that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I say in connection with this particular point that we might as well have the Tories in office as have the Liberals in office.

Mr. McINTOSH: You are losing faith, man.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Faith in whom?

Mr. McINTOSH: In yourself of course.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not in my hon. friend, certainly; I never had much faith in his ability to do anything for Liberalism.

Mr. McINTOSH Why apply that limitation to yourself?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Protection we are told, is to protect labour; we have heard that so frequently from my hon. friends to my right. They have repeated that phrase so often, that protection is to help labour, and we have time and again said to them, "Can you show us that it will help labour or save the consumer from additional costs? I well remember Right Hon. Arthur Meighen standing in his place and saying that protection did not necessarily increase the price to the consumer, and that if he went into office he would see to it that it did not increase the price to the consumer. He said in effect that he was going to protect the working people. Hon. gentlemen to my right always have said that, and to-night we have an opportunity to justify Mr. Meighen's contention and the contention of his friends who still sit in this house. Protection is a privilege which is extended by the Dominion to certain industries; it is a privilege that is eagerly sought by manufacturers and corporations everywhere. It is a privilege which extends to them the opportunity to sell their products to the people in a sheltered market at a higher price than they would bring if they were sold in open competition. The manufacturers seek that privilege eagerly, but they have never to my knowledge handed back in the aggregate to the workers or to the consumers the benefits which they have received by virtue of the protective tariff.

If you want one illustration in that regard all you have to do is to take the textile industry—and it is only an illustration; that is my excuse for introducing it into this discussion The textile industry is like the steel industry; one enjoys a protection of something over 30 per cent and the other enjoys an even higher protection, yet in the textile industry we have the lowest average weekly wage in any industry in the Dominion of Canada. It is one of the most highly protected industries we have. No longer can hon. gentlemen delude the worker or the common consuming public in this country—

Mr. MANION: Or anyone else.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):—or anyone else by saying that protection will help the worker. Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is not too much to ask that this government, this parliament which has the power to grant these privileges, shall also exact fair conditions in return for them. If you must grant them, then I say make sure that the workers at least get a measure of the relief that you are extending to the manufacturers. This does not imply the adoption on my part of the principle of protection. I am definitely opposed to protection as an economic principle, but I say if you feel that you must apply it, then make it mean what you say it should mean, relief to the people engaged in industry and not merely to the shareholders and the bondholders.

It is our duty as a parliament to see that in extending privileges to these industries they are carried down to the poorest worker in the plant benefiting by them; and if we fail in that duty we have failed in our responsibility as members representing the people of this country. As my hon. friend who has just taken his seat has said, we also throw into utter disrepute our whole parliamentary and political institutions. Why should industry be built up on a system of doles? That is what it means, a system of doles which you deny to the workers themselves. Better conditions, that is all we are asking for, better working conditions and a little more pay for these men. What would be the result? Better conditions would mean more efficiency; the whole history of industry is proof of that. I cannot for the life of me understand the blind greed of manufacturers who continue to employ men for ten hours and more a day. Surely they have learned the lesson that the physical ability and mental energy of the human being must and does decline after a certain number of hours of work continually performed from day to day, from week to week, from month to month and year to year. You cannot maintain a high peak of physical and mental efficiency when you are dulled by the very tedious monotony of the labour itself for almost unlimited hours.

In this connection I may refer to another fact. I wonder why, when the Minister of Finance was speaking upon this subject, he did not refer to other representations which had been made before the tariff board. His attention was called to them to-night, I think, by the hon. member for North Winnipeg, and perhaps in order to bring this point clearly before the house I might just quote once more the representations made by the Ministerial Association of Sydney to the tariff board, as follows:

> We recommend:
> (1) That this Ministerial Association of Sydney wait upon the responsible heads of the D.I.S. Co. at the earliest opportunity and urge the just claims of the men for a shorter working day.
> (2) That representatives be sent immediately to the federal Department of Labour and to the Prime Minister of Canada, urging that if and when the steel companies of Canada are allowed a protective tariff that provision be made for the men receiving the standard hours of labour adopted by the parliament of Canada, namely, the eight hour day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at this stage I think it will be fair to review very briefly one or two of the very striking statements made by hon. members in this debate. I find that the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) in an eloquent appeal following the member for Winnipeg North Centre, said:

> No member of this house, if he is fair, whether he is a Liberal, a Conservative, a Progressive or a Labour man, can argue that the British Empire Steel Corporation is doing what is right and fair when it compels its men to work thirteen hours a day, as they are doing in some cases, and ten hours a day as they are doing in all cases. A great many of these men do not even get one day off a week; they are compelled to work on Sunday as well.

It is almost unthinkable, Mr. Chairman, in this year and in this country that men should be working seven days a week and not less than ten hours on each of those days. The hon. member continued:

> . . . . I believe all parties in this house, irrespective of political affiliations, should join together and say that for once in this country we are going to place human values ahead of any other values that may be considered later. For my part I would not want one single concession made to the British Empire Steel Corporation by this government unless the government first bargained with them to give their employees a fair deal in the matter of wages and working hours.

I congratulate the hon. gentleman upon his fearless statement in that regard. He said further:

> Unless the workingmen of Sydney get some benefit from these concessions, I am opposed to them; for any company which compels its workmen in this civilized and Christian age to work twelve hours a day and a great many of them to work seven days a week, should not be given any concessions by a civilized government.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) then made the following statement:

> I have a practical object in view, and when the resolution comes before this house I am going to move that a provision be added that the money be not paid to the steel company unless it shall find its way into the wage envelopes of the men.

I congratulate in turn that hon. member for the courage with which he pronounced that sentence. I come now to the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Smith), who said:

> I am a strong believer in protection to industry, but I think that protection, unless it is passed along to the worker, is repugnant to every sense of fair play.

Let me congratulate those members of the Conservative party on the new philosophy which they are now bringing to bear upon this question of protection.

An hon. MEMBER: Nothing new about it at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It has never before been put into effect.

Mr. CAHAN: It is just dawning upon you.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would have preferred a practical illustration.

Mr. CAHAN: You would have had it, had you read some of my speeches.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That means nothing unless results are obtained. I come now to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), regarded as one of the most capable members in this house. His remarks were as follows:

This parliament and this government are not helpless in a matter of this character, which is sufficiently serious to warrant their asserting their power and influence.

And further:

In connection with these items—

The particular ones under discussion.

—we have an opportunity of saying to this industry: "Yes, the parliament of Canada is prepared to give you protection sufficient to enable you profitably to produce these articles but before such tariff will apply you will satisfy the governor in council that the conditions of labour, the hours of labour and the wages paid are such as will afford a decent living." That is what the government could do; that is what parliament could do, and I say right now that that is what parliament should do before it goes a step further.

Now I come to a man even greater than the member for Vancouver Centre, the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who said:

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that there is only one question in my mind: Have we the power? The answer must be in the affirmative. Having the power, then should we not exercise it? I put that to my hon. friends opposite, because here we have no division of opinion; we are all committed to it.

And further on he says:

Here we have a chance to say that these increases shall apply only to such mills as maintain the principles of the treaty of Versailles. Is it unfair to say that that should be done? I commend the matter to the government. I think it should be done. It may mean great differences, but an amendment such as this, I think, would meet the situation:

"Provided, however, that the rates of duty set out under items 377, 377a, 377b, 377c, shall apply only when the industry producing the articles enumerated therein have demonstrated to the satisfaction of the governor in council that there is maintained in the operation of such industry, hours of labour and rates of wages consistent with the provisions of the labour conference held under the treaty of Versailles."

Those are the very words in which the amendment was couched which was offered by the hon. gentleman to the government for its acceptance. He continues:

That is an amendment that I commend now to the government, and that I think at the proper time should be moved; because after all, Mr. Chairman, if we really represent Canadian democracy, if we are sincere in the expressions of our faith in our party conventions, if we really mean what we have declared unanimously in this house with respect to the provisions of the treaty of Versailles and at the League of Nations at Geneva regarding labour, there should not be a dissenting voice in this chamber. We have the opportunity and the jurisdiction; let us leave out all this talk about the province and assert that power affirmatively, and let it be understood in this country that when we agree to principles in treaties, in contracts and conventions, we mean what we say, and that our expressions are not mere sounding brass and tinkling cymbal.

When the hon. gentleman put that question, when he asked the government to accept this great gift, I noticed the eyes of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and those of his colleague sparkling with delight. Here was a gift worth accepting, but I leaned over to them and said: Beware the Greeks. However, I had hardly spoken those words before a Greek with greater gifts, the Prime Minister, rose in his place in the government ranks, and said: "No, if this applies at all, it must apply to all". Once more, beware the Greeks bearing gifts.

My hon. friends now find themselves disillusioned. Why, I am not as yet certain, but something strange has happened. Either the Greeks got together and compromised on the matter or else other gentlemen came to them and discussed the question. The statements to which I have referred were uttered in this house on the evening of the 21st of this month. On the 22nd there was a discussion on the Beauharnois situation, but I learned subsequent to that that some of the directors of the British Empire Steel Corporation had been in this city. Whether or not they were hurriedly called, I do not know, but I wondered if they interviewed either the Prime Minister or the leader of the opposition, and if such an interview took place, I wonder what passed between them.

An hon. MEMBER: Ask them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I hope that they will both tell the committee whether any discussion of this particular question arose in their conversation. The hon. leader of the opposition says that we have the power, and having that power we should exercise it, but I find that two days afterwards he suddenly discovers that his amendment may not be in order.

Mr. THORSON: Do not forget to read his recantation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not calling it a recantation or anything like that; I am calling it a slow retirement from position. He adopted the courageous position of insisting that these tariff revisions should not apply unless and until something was done for the worker, but two days later we find him receding steadily from that position. I do not know why that was done, unless this is again the little old sham battle between the two political parties when discussing tariff matters, which fact has been apparent to us for many years. I have in my hand a copy of the Scoop Shovel of May, 1930, the organ of the Manitoba wheat pool, which contains a very excellent cartoon. In the lower right hand corner is an inset circle containing a most unflattering representation of the right hon. the Prime Minister, and facing him upon a little pedestal there is portrayed the hon. leader of the opposition. Both hon. gentlemen are armed with wooden swords and carry wooden shields. They are shouting at each other at the top of their voices, but neither of them is actually striking any blows. This is labelled, "The Sham Fight." In the other part of the cartoon appears "The Real Fight," which is a fight between the profitism of protected interests and the consuming people represented by cooperation.

Mr. COOTE: Put it on Hansard.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish I could. That illustration on the records of the house would be well worth while. The principle we are discussing to-night is whether human life, happiness and decent living conditions are to come before or after profits. That in the final analysis is the crux of the whole discussion. I wonder whether any hon members have ever seen Millet's portrait, Man with Hoe? I am satisfied most of them have. If they have seen that picture they must have carried with them some of the thoughts I read on one occasion in a poem by Edwin Markham. I cannot remember the poem very well, but I have paraphrased and jotted down a few of the ideas. Here was the man with the hoe, and what did we see when we looked at the picture? We saw the mark of ages of toil in the work-dulled face; we saw an expression that was dead, unlighted by any spark of active mental energy; we saw a back bent by wearisome toil. We saw neither hopelessness nor hope shining there. The weight of a world was on his shoulders, the weight of an agricultural world slowly but surely giving way, or rather, so far as the age of the world goes, speedily giving way to the new industrial age, the machine age, the mechanical age.

Had Millet lived in these days, he might have painted a different picture, the picture that we have seen of huge furnaces, blazing heat, great open plants filled with titanic energy. He might have seen in those great plants, larger than the House of Commons, little figures of men plying their tasks in front of those furnaces in a deafening, coushing din. He might have seen the huge white-hot ingots taken out of those furnaces and carried by overhead trolleys to the rollers where, in almost a minute as one watches, those great moltent masses of metal are rolled out into steel strips undulating like gleaming serpents later on to be turned into rigid steel. Then he might have seen the steel cut with great circular saws throwing the sparks high as a rocket burst in midair. These pictures on can see in any steel mill. You see there great cranes carrying huge electro-magnets which come down and pick up four or five or more of those steel rails at one time, raise them up, a weight that it would take many men to lift, and throw them on to the racks as one would pile matches. You would see the driving ingenuity of man to save labour of man.

But has there been any change? If Millet could come and looked around him at the conditions of to-day he would find there the same type of man, the same work-dulled face hardened with dire hopelessness, with the misery and destitution of unfair exaction of labour in order that profits might come to those who own industries. Yes, he would have found men working, not as the Man with the Hoe, from sun to sun, but ten, even thirteen hours a day, for seven days a week. He would have found men working not outside in the open air and bright sunshine, but in those caverns, those huge plants with the darkening roof over them, and nothing within but the heat and stench and dust and dirt and clangor of the great machines. That is what he would have seen before him. How many years have passed since those days? I ask the house: Are we to continue to give our sanction to such conditions, or are we to take some opportunity to remedy them? I am not a lawyer; I wish I were, because if I were I would apply every energy I possessed in an endeavour to solve this problem. But there are lawyers in the house. The Prime Minister is an LL.D. The leader of the opposition is a lawyer of great reputation in this country. Surely they can get together and frame, in connection with this question, some constructive piece of legislation that will refer back to the worker the privileges that have always been extended to the manufacturer. Give the workers some chance; for if you do not you face the climax painted in Edwin Markham's story of the man with the hoe which is as applicable to these men in industry as it was in those days to the man with the hoe. Listen to his burning words.

O masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
How will the future reckon with this man?
How answer his brute question in that hour
When whirlwinds of rebellion shake all shores?
How will it be with kingdoms and with kings—
With those who shaped him to the thing he is—
When this dumb terror shall rise to judge the world,
After the silence of the centuries?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) on some of the very lofty sentiments which he has expressed to-night. Rising immediately after him I am under a great disadvantage, because it is always difficult to follow one who has within himself a monopoly of all virtue, truth, honesty of purpose, and integrity. Indeed, I could not speak after my hon. friend at all were it not for the fact that I am reminded that somewhere in the long ago a sinful man like myself went up to a certain temple to pray, and kneeling down at the door of the temple he struck his breast and said: "Mea culpa, mea culpa, mea maxima culpa." Another gentleman—probably he did not come from Bow River and perhaps he was not a Progressive; I do not know what his politics were—happened to come into the temple at the same time, and going up to the very altar rail he raised his voice on high and said: "God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are." But the funny part of it all was that Scripture records, rightly I presume, that of the two who visited the temple on that day, the man who entered at the door and confessed his sins of omission and commission went away justified.

I would point out to my hon. friend from Bow River that no matter what shade of politics we have in the house, it is a great mistake for any individual, whether he be Grit or Tory or Progressive, to think that he and he alone has a monopoly upon sympathy so far as it extends to the labouring people of the Dominion of Canada. What I said the other night in regard to having the benefits of protection extended to the workers, I stand by now, and I remember the first speech I made in the house when, coming as I did from a labour organization, I said that any measure that might be introduced that was calculated to assist the workers, whether it was proposed by friend or political foe, would have my support. My record in that respect has been consistent. I do not stand to-night holding any brief for the British Empire Steel Corporation. I repeat that I believe it is a crying shame that the employees of the steel company at Sydney should be compelled to work ten hours and in some cases thirteen hours a day, and in some instances, seven days a week. I believe this money which is being given to the corporation by the government ought not to be given until parliament decides that those men who make the profits for the corporation shall be given at least a fair portion of that in the way of increased wages or shorter working hours.

One of the choice illogical tit-bits in the speech of my hon. friend from Bow River who has just taken his seat, was this: With fiery denunciation he declared that protection could never assist the worker; and then in his next breath he made a long argument to show why the benefits of this protection should be applied to the steel workers of Nova Scotia.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I said that it never had protected the workers.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Then the hon. member believes that it can assist the workers, otherwise there was no reason for his speech to-night. He came to this house with all the free trade doctrines that he has imbibed, perhaps not wisely or too well, from the Manchester school, and to-night he says: Give us protection to assist the workers. He asks the government to see that the benefits from this protection shall be extended to the workers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Then the hon. gentleman admits that protection is for the benefit of the workers of Canada. That is what the Conservative party has always stood for. I join with my hon. friend most heartily to-night in trying to see that some of the benefits resulting from application of protection in the fiscal policy of this country shall be extended to the workingmen of Nova Scotia. Protection applied, mark you, by a government that has repudiated it. Protection applied by a government in which sits the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Crerar), who in 1922 left this house whining about abandoned farms in the county of Huron, although, to-day in the county of Huron there are twice as many abandoned farms as then, as a result of the fiscal policy of this government. Yet the Minister of Railways and Canals comes back to this parliament to be a member of the government that brought that condition about. Read his speeches in Hansard; for one fortunate thing about parliament is this, that the moving finger writes and having writ moves on, leaving its imprint upon the written page. My hon. friend to-day occupies a seat adjoining that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), who sits in a chair protected to the extent of 42 per cent. In 1922 the Minister of Railways told us that to apply protection to the extent of 30 per cent to the boot and shoe industry in this country was protecting exploitation. He comes back to parliament to join a government that protects beans to the extent of 400 per cent, that protects cast iron pipe over 100 per cent, and protects the boot and shoe industry 30 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Is the duty on cast iron pipe 100 per cent?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: It is.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): It is not.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: It is so, and my word is as good as my hon. friend's. Have we no longer the doctrine of cabinet solidarity in this country? During the years that have gone that principle was always maintained. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier was Prime Minister, if any cabinet minister disagreed with his policy he was discharged from the cabinet. Men were driven out of the cabinet by Laurier, who was a man of principle, and who stuck to his principles. But to-day, sitting around the Prime Minister, we find not only the Minister of Railways but the minister who on account of his sanctimonious look was chosen a few years ago to ring the death knell of protection. Yet he swallows 400 per cent of an increase in the tariff on beans and 105 per cent of an increase in the tariff on cast iron pipe.

I say to the house that I am glad to have a convert to protection to-night in the person of my learned and brilliant friend from Bow River, who admits that there are benefits to be derived by the workers of Canada as the result of a protective policy. I stand in this parliament to-night to say with my voice and with my vote, and I shall continue to do so as long as it is my privilege to be in this parliament, which will be some time yet, that so far as I can see to it the benefits of the tariff shall be passed on to the steel workers of Sydney and to the workers of Canada generally wherever protection is applied, and I trust that I shall get support not only from the hon. member for Bow River but from the house generally. I trust that I shall have the support in particular of members representing the province of Nova Scotia, who are immediately concerned in this matter. The British Empire Steel Corporation is well able to take care of itself, but the men who are working long hours of labour which do not give them an opportunity for proper recreation and rest and the opportunity which they should have to educate themselves, have found from experience that they are unable to protect themselves, and therefore it is up to the members of this parliament, irrespective of party, to stand together and see that the poor men of this country get a fair deal.

Let us remember this, and I give it as a warning to all political leaders: The politics of this country in the future, as Lord Balfour said some years ago in England, will be the politics of the poor. It is the poor persons who cannot protect themselves that I want to see receiving some benefits from protection. I trust that the house will not pass this matter over lightly, because it concerns the happiness and the standard of living of the men and women in this country who provide the purchasing power which alone is the basis on which the real progress and prosperity of this country can be built.

Mr. CANTLEY: On various occasions while the tariff proposals of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) have been before the house I have made some remarks in connection with them. On May 7, before I had had time to look fully into all the provisions of the tariff as brought down by the minister, and particularly the resolution referring to Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron and steel, which appears on page 47 of the ways and means resolutions, I thanked the hon. minister for having as I then supposed implemented one of the recommendations of the Duncan commission. That recommendation as set out on page 38 of the report reads:

> Having regard to the bounty system previously applied and to this aspect of the application of the drawback, we recommend that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

That, you will note, Mr. Chairman, is a reference to a bounty on steel. I regret to say that this bill does not, as I read it, comply with the recommendation of the Duncan commission which I have just quoted, and therefore I must now voice my disappointment and dissent because, as a matter of plain fact, the resolution of the minister does not provide for the payment of a bonus as recommended by the Duncan commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my hon. friend discussing the bill that has to do with the bounty?

Mr. CANTLEY: I am discussing the bill which I understood was now before us, Bill No. 312.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has got into the wrong pew for the moment. We are at the present time considering a tariff item.

Mr. CANTLEY: This is a tariff item, surely.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But it is a separate bill my hon. friend is discussing.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am willing to postpone what I have to say if—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I just wished to point out that my hon. friend was referring to a particular bill. I was not sure that he appreciated that we are dealing now with one or two items in the tariff schedules. The bill will come up later, but my hon. friend can make his remarks now if he likes.

Mr. CANTLEY: It does not make any particular difference. A little later on I was going to discuss several of the tariff items one by one. If my hon. friend will give me a few minutes I will exhaust all I have to say with regard to this bill, and I promise him I will not bother him again during this session.

The resolution before the house proposes a bounty on bituminous coal mined in Canada and converted into coke in Canada and used in the smelting of iron from ore or in the production of steel. Now, Mr. Speaker, coal either alone or in the form of coke, or a combination of both, can be and is used in the smelting of iron from ore. But coke is not used in the production of steel, save in very small and negligible amounts. As drafted the bill will make available a bonus of 49½ cents per ton for coal coked in Canada for the making of pig iron produced in Canada, or, say, from 72¼ to possibly as much as 80 cents per ton of pig iron so made. But, sir, the bituminous coal mined in Canada and used in the manufacture of steel is in this bill entirely ignored. Nova Scotia steel makers are large users of Canadian coal for the production of steam, hydraulic and electric power for operating steel melting shop and other cranes. A much greater quantity is constantly used for the generation of producer gas, which is the fuel largely used in the conversion of pig iron into steel in open hearth melting furnaces. All this coal which is daily so used in steel making is by this bill entirely ignored. Therefore the proposal of the minister as set out in his resolution falls far short of full compliance with the recommendation of the Duncan commission and cannot be accepted as such. The minister shakes his head, but I am convinced that my interpretation is correct.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend places me at a disadvantage because he is discussing a bill which is not before the house. I can assure him that the point he is now raising will be cleared up when the bill is under discussion. It is rather difficult to involve that debate with the one we are now engaged in.

Mr. CANTLEY: Now we may leave that matter and I will deal more particularly with the various items affected by the iron and steel tariff.

Item 374. Pig iron is under the British preference $1.50 per ton, equal to, say, 6 or 7 per cent, which surely is inadequate protection, particularly for eastern furnaces, where in the case of the nearest market being Montreal the British ironmasters have an advantage of quite $3 per ton in freight, or double the amount of preference duty. The situation in regard to pig iron is even worse in the matter of steel ingots, which carry the same rate as pig iron, although the cost of production is much greater.

Item 442a. Here pig iron, also hot rolled iron and steel, is on the free list for a wide range of manufacturers.

Item 377b. Ingots, blooms, slabs, billets valued at 3 cents per pound or over—free This should give the entire market in alloy steels to the British producers, and the same applies to item 378a, b, and c. The duties here imposed will have the same effect, while item 379, covering rods for horseshoe nails, chain, shovels, are all free, although in each case the materials produced from them are well protected and have been over a long period of years. The same will apply to 384 and 386 in all its subdivision from (a) on to (n) and (o).

Item 380. Plates 40 inches and less in width at $2 duty per ton British preference will undoubtedly give a large proportion of this business to the British ironmasters, who will also have a large portion of the plate covered by item 380 (b), plates over 40 inches, free; while item 381a at 7½ per cent will also have the same effect.

Item 387a. Railway fish-plates, splice plates, rail joints, tie-plates, etc. Here the British preference reduces the general tariff by $3 per ton. With the low ocean rates considerable business will probably be diverted overseas, as also will be the case as to angles, beams, channels, etc., tariff item 388, where the British preferential rate is $1 per ton.

Item 395. Hame steel, providing as it does for material not only rolled but cut to actual needed lengths, forged, punched and in every way ready to rivet on to the wooden hame, is one of the most outstanding of several examples of a wholly unwarranted and undue preference being given to certain favourite manufacturers.

Item 396. Cast pipe might also perhaps be included in that statement.

Item 401. Wire, iron or steel, free. Barb fencing, free. This is calculated to throw this business entirely into the hands of the United States makers.

We now come to an item of quite a different character, namely, 410b, machinery and apparatus for use exclusively in washing or dry cleaning coal at coal mines, etc., 7½, 10, 12½ per cent. Contrast this with the free admission accorded to well-drilling machinery, traction engines, electric generating plants and scores of other agricultural equipment articles, all accorded free admission into Canada.

In the matter of alloy steels containing varied percentages of several alloys, item 389, I doubt much if the officers of the customs department can interpret or administer this section of the act. Frankly I cannot see how it can be done.

Coming now to the matter of refund of duties, viewed from this angle the proposals of the finance minister are rather astonishing; for here we have gradations in the percentages of duty refunded to the importers of different classes of material. In 7 cases, 99 per cent is rebated; in 2 cases, 80 per cent; in one case, 70 per cent; in six cases, 60 per cent; in two cases, 50 per cent and in one case, 40 per cent; and it happens that the manufacturer accorded the lowest percentage of refund is a Nova Scotia skate maker whose protection on the finished product has been reduced—see item 450—5½ per cent on general, 7½ per cent on intermediate and British preference rates.

In general, the iron and steel tariff when examined and fully understood will not be considered satisfactory by the producers of the primary forms of steel, and I submit its operations will be viewed with disappointment, due primarily to the quite mistaken policy set out in the tariff proposals of the hon. the finance minister, which fails to give adequate protection to the primary forms and heavier tonnage of steel.

Again, no proper advance in duty proportioned on the additional labour involved in the various advance stages of manufacture is provided in this tariff. Further, makers of secondary products are given undue protection at the cost of the primary producers.

Due to the extended line in exemptions for duty and the free iron and steel items which are the raw material for the secondary producers, most of whose products have a fair and, indeed, some a high rate of protection, but the primary trade is unfairly dealt with.

The objectionable and most unfair former free list is here further extended in most cases where but little needed, certain favoured manufacturers thus obtaining undue protection at the expense of others who have invested immensely greater sums in plant and whose business is much more important to the state. The refunding of duty to other industries has in this tariff schedule been further extended, as has the other undesirable feature of graded percentages of refund of duty, ranging from 40 per cent to 99 per cent.

For these and other reasons I have been compelled to oppose the budget of the minister, and I fear I must look to another administration to supply an iron and steel tariff calculated to advance the real interests of this county which are centered on the production of the basic forms of iron and steel from our own native resources. I am particularly sorry that the minister has not seen to it that the recommendations of the Duncan commission should be met.

Mr. DUNNING: They have been.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am sure the minister will realize at a later time that they have not. I think I can speak with some slight degree of authority in view of forty or more years' experience, and I again tell the minister that the item to which I have referred does not meet the conditions set out in the recommendations contained in the Duncan report.

Mr. POULIOT: I congratulate my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Cantley) for not having been interrupted by his friends as he was the last time he spoke. I have only two statements to make to my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Macdougall). He said that the duty on cast iron pipe was 100 per cent more, and in that statement he made a gross mistake. The British preferential duty is $4 a ton; we have a countervailing duty with the United States, and the American duty is only 25 per cent. Hon. members will readily see that the figures are far from 100 per cent.

When my hon. friend says that he is in favour of protecting labour I must say that in theory his contention is absolutely correct, and I entirely agree with it. He must however go to the right door, and may I remind him that the right door is not the door of this parliament. He should go to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and state his complaints to Mr. Rhodes, the Tory premier of that province, who has not seen fit to make use of the minimum wage law for the benefit of the men engaged in industry in that province. As soon as he recognizes that law, the wages will increase automatically. If the miners and steel workers are underpaid in the province of Nova Scotia, every hon. gentleman in this house must feel sorry for them, but we must place the blame on the shoulders of Mr. Rhodes, who has not listened to the complaints of his own friends. Instead of going to their native province and speaking to the premier of that province as to the situation existing among the miners and steel workers, and instead of telling the premier of Nova Scotia that such a condition must not continue, hon. members from that province waste the time of this house by accusing the government of Canada of not doing its duty. Everyone knows that this government has been the friend of labour and has sought at all times to improve the conditions under which the labourers work.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: My Conservative friends may laugh, but I ask them what they have done for labour. They have done nothing; they have only screamed. They remind me of the old women who used to weep at the ancient Greek funerals. They have never brought any measure of relief for the labouring men, while the present government has been fair both to industry and to labour. It is a well known fact, and we see it exemplified repeatedly, that capitalists such as my hon. friend from Pictou are never satisfied. The Scriptures speak of such men when they say that the greedy man "can never have enough." I ask my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black), who is a capitalist and a director of several companies, why he does not share his fortune with the miners and steel workers of Nova Scotia? We see before us the front benchers of the Tory party who can walk on paths of gold; why do those hon. gentlemen not share their immense fortunes with the labourers? Why do they not give labour a chance?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not get the Beauharnois Power Company to help?

An hon. MEMBER: How about Mr. Taschereau?

Mr. POULIOT: If I were to remind my hon. friend of the fortunes that were made during the war it would be a long story, and it may be that he would not be as much interested in it as other hon. members in this house would be.

An hon. MEMBER: How about Mr. Taschereau?

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend will read in Hansard the speech made by the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) he will have a conclusive answer to his remark. He will note also that the hon. leader of the opposition said that he would not accuse the men who are directors of that company of being dishonest, and if the leader of the opposition, who is a better business man than any of the hecklers sitting behind him, can make that statement, I think those hon. members should at least be decent about the matter and not be too fussy. I now come to my point, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. POULIOT: When I reach the point it hurts the hon. gentleman as he hurts his desk when he pounds it. However, may I say that there is a bad situation in the province of Nova Scotia? Men are underpaid by people who claim that they do not make sufficient profits.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Where is the point?

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend were in my class I would place him at the tailend, because it would seem that he does not understand anything; his voice is stronger than his brains, and the noise he makes by banging his desk is stronger than his voice.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I should like to say to my hon. friend that it would take a Solomon to understand the point he is trying to bring out.

Mr. POULIOT: I suggest that my hon. friend make his speech to the electors of St.

Peter's in Nova Scotia. He might go to Inverness and speak in the constituency of my hon. friend (Mr. Macdougall) who has just entered the house, and whom I like very much.

Mr. BRADY: And we like you, too.

Mr. POULIOT: I will speak about Skeena after a while. If my hon. friend from Richmond-West Cape Breton (Mr. Macdonald) goes to Inverness he will have to address them by saying, "dear constituents of my quiet neighbour"—because there is no doubt that the hon. gentleman from Richmond-West Cape Breton is the more noisy. If my hon. friend from Inverness goes to Richmond-West Cape Breton, he will have to say to them, "Dear constituents of my noisy neighbour." The hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton may go to the people at Inverness and say that he has heard the eloquent speeches made in the House of Commons by the member from Inverness, and he may add, "I was next to him when he made his speech, and sometimes I drowned his voice by the noise I made by banging my desk." My hon. friend from Inverness has made some very eloquent speeches, but they amounted to nothing because he has approached the wrong door.

An hon. MEMBER: Where is the point?

Mr. POULIOT: This is the third occasion upon which I have had to enlighten my hon. friend since the beginning of my speech; does he not understand it yet? Poor fellow, I feel sorry for him.

The question before us is one which involves political economy, and it is very easy to understand. When a bad condition exists in a province as to wages which are being paid, the remedy should be supplied by the provincial government; the provincial government has full and exclusive authority in a matter of that kind. This is a well known and accepted principle. The miners of Nova Scotia are not working for the federal government; the federal government has jurisdiction only over those people who work for it. The Dominion government cannot enact legislation to increase wages, but the provincial government can do so very easily. This is what my hon. friends should say to the electors of their part of the country: "If you have wages which are too low; if your wages are not sufficient to enable you to live decently, it depends upon the provincial government," which in Nova Scotia is the Tory party. My hon. friend from Richmond-West Cape Breton will be glad to say that, because he was a Liberal before he was Conservative, and then he was ready to ask for the secession of Nova Scotia from confederation. He was radical at that time, when he was a Tory; previously he was a Liberal, but the gold turned into lead. He should say, "My poor fellows, you should overturn the Rhodes government and put in a Liberal government so that you will get a minimum wage law which will increase your wages automatically, and you will be happy. You should have justice; you have a right to justice."

Mr. QUINN: Rot; they were there for forty years and did nothing.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend knows that these questions are rather new.

Mr. QUINN: I know very well that the conditions of the mining population were at a very low ebb under the Liberal government. Conditions never improved until the Rhodes government came into office in 1925.

Mr. POULIOT: But I remember very well, Mr. Chairman, that when the Liberal government was in power in Nova Scotia we had a delegation here headed by Mayor Murphy, a good Liberal, and that delegation came during the first year I was in parliament to express the views of the people of Nova Scotia to the government of this country. At that time my hon. friend was not a member. He was elected by screaming and complaining before his electors, and they are now fed up with that; he will be defeated at the next election. If he screams in his county as he does in this house he will meet with the same success that the senior member for Halifax will, and we shall never see him again in this parliament.

Mr. QUINN: Don't worry.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not worry at all; I think it will be a general satisfaction to everyone. Oh, the old women used to weep only when the funeral procession passed by in ancient Greece, but we hear hon. gentlemen in the house screaming all the time. There is no one who can scream so loud as a Tory; that is well known. In my county, when two or three Tories get together they can scream as loudly as a whole crowd. It is their specialty; they advertise themselves in that way, with loud voices, but afterwards we hear nothing.

Mr. QUINN: Go on and say something.

Mr. POULIOT: Say something? I am taking your picture. I have just a word more to say.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: Surely it will be carried, because it is sense to carry it. If, instead of giving such exhibitions in this house, these gentlemen were more sensible; if they had some influence with their provincial tory friends and really wanted to help labour they would have to be more powerful than the voice of capitalism with the Rhodes government, and they might then get something from that government. Mr. Rhodes, however, has absorbent cotton in his ears when he hears delegations from the people.

Mr. McGREGOR: What has Taschereau in his ears?

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend would do better to grow celery than to utter such nonsense in this house; he would be more useful to the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we will come to the miners. I insist again on that point, that my hon. friends make complaints here that should be directed to the Rhodes government but which cannot be directed against this government, because this government gives fair play to industry and labour in this country and we will see the result at the next general election. In the meantime my hon. friends will go back to their own part of the country, and they should see Mr. Rhodes and his Tory gang in Halifax and tell him he should improve the conditions of labour for the miners and labouring men in general of Nova Scotia. Then they will be doing something useful to the country and they will erase the bad impression they have left with this house by their nonsensical utterances.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief in my remarks on this subject.

An hon. MEMBER: The briefer the better.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. IRVINE: If my hon. friends opposite take that unkindly attitude, of course I may be much longer than I had intended. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to take my stand with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). His argument, so eloquently put before this house, is the point of view which I hold, and I say that in spite of the remarks of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall).

May I be permitted at this point to observe that I think the remarks of the hon. member for Inverness were rather uncalled for. When hon. members of the house read the speech of the hon. member for Bow River to-morrow I am sure they will not find any grounds whatever for the assumption of the hon. member for Inverness that my hon. friend from Bow River took the position of a Pharisee and assumed that he was better fitted to speak for labour than anyone else and that the policies and standards of members in this corner were better than others. I am sure there was nothing further from the mind of the hon. member for Bow River. Indeed I am not so sure that the hon. member for Inverness was fortunate in his simile. He said the hon. member for Bow River was like the Pharisee who said he was better than other people. My hon. friend to my right takes the other prayer, which was the prayer of the Publican, "God be merciful to me, a sinner" and after hearing the speech of my hon. friend I know he took the right prayer. I might go further and state that it would take a god to forgive him for it.

Certainly the hon. member for Bow River took his stand on the human side of the industrial issue, and there is only one question as far as many of us are concerned with respect to industry. That is, does industry turn out better men, nobler men, cleaner men, stronger men; not does the steel industry produce greater profits or increase its output. I think the time has come when someone should lay the emphasis where it belongs, on the human side of the issue. My hon. friend from Inverness waxed eloquent on the tariff, but my hon. friend from Bow River waxed eloquent on the human interest. It was the low standard of living and the suffering of ill-paid labour which awakened the eloquence of the hon. member for Bow River.

Now let me ask the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister what they intend to do. As far as I am concerned I have no evidence that the Prime Minister is going to refuse some consideration to this question; I have no evidence that the Minister of Finance will refuse to listen to the plea which has been put forward in this connection. Indeed, I should be surprised if they did not respond, knowing them as I do, or at least knowing their viewpoint as I have heard it expressed from time to time, and knowing that they understand and respond to the human side of the question. I am not prepared to assume that they are going to turn a deaf ear to the appeal which has been made. However, let me emphasize to the Minister of Finance and to the Prime Minister that as far as I am concerned, if we are going to have protection we must make it go all round. I think it was Kant, the great philosopher, who laid down the principle that anything is wrong that you cannot universalize. If we cannot extend the principle of protection to the working classes and to the agricultural classes, and put all classes on a basis of equality, we had better drop it altogether. I believe that something can be done in this particular instance in the interests of the working people and in the interests of the principle which I have enunciated, and I should be surprised if the leader of the opposition did not take a similar stand on this question. The party which he leads has been arguing for many years that protection does assist the working classes. Let us prove that it does by seeing that it does, and we have the opportunity here to do so.

I anticipate that if the Prime Minister refuses this request he will do so to some extent on the ground that again we shall be interfering with provincial rights, that this house has no control over the wages paid to men in certain industries, and so forth. It is the parliament of Canada which is granting to these industries the privilege of protection and parliament surely has the right to lay down conditions to the granting of that privilege. That is all we are asking the Prime Minister to do, to lay down conditions under which the protection to be extended to this industry will be available to them. We are asking that one of those conditions shall be that a fair and reasonable wage shall be paid. If anyone should ask what that means, we will refer them to the bill presented by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan). We ask that the eight hour day shall be established and that the provisions of the treaty of Versailles shall be observed. There may be technical difficulties, but it should be possible to overcome them. Personally, until I am compelled to believe it, I will not believe that either the Prime Minister or the leader of the opposition have been compelled, by any interviews with any class of people whatsoever, to recant from the position which they took a few days ago. I still have some faith in humanity, although it may have to be shaken. Once we lose our faith in humanity, nothing remains to help us along the road. In the interests of humanity I hope the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition will stretch their hands across the floor of this chamber and give a little protection to the working class to make up for what they will lose for having to pay more for their goods because of the protection proposed for the manufacturers.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—377b. Ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, n.o.p., of iron or steel, valued at not less than three cents per pound, when imported by manufacturers of steels for use exclusively in the manufacture of steels, in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—377c. Ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, n.o.p., of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when employed by manufacturers of forgings for use exclusively in the manufacture of forgings in their own factories, under regulations prescribed by the minister, per ton: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, $2.25; general tariff, $2.50.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate some statement in regard to this matter from the Prime Minister. He made a rather significant remark the other night when the leader of the opposition was speaking about what might be done to protect labour in this country. Ever since I have been in parliament for the last nine years I have heard considerable argument in favour of protection, which argument was predicated always upon this one fact: that Canadian workmen should be given a decent standard of living. Before the last item is passed, I think the Prime Minister should inform this committee whether or not the government is prepared at this time to make some provision whereby the steel industry must pay its men a living wage before it can enjoy the benefits of increased protection.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I shall be only too glad to endeavour to make clear my position. What I shall have to say about both the tariff and labour applies generally and at all times. There is a right and a wrong way to deal with any matter. There is a right way to deal with the tariff, and that is to treat all industries alike and not to discriminate with respect to any particular one. At the present time it is suggested that we deal with the tariff only as it relates to one particular industry, and as I said the other evening, we should deal either with all or with none at all. I cannot see why this house should enact tariff legislation in a manner which would single out one particular industry in one locality for one kind of treatment, and do differently with every other industry in every other locality throughout the Dominion. This parliament, I believe, would do well to adhere to the attitude which has been always adopted, namely, not to attempt to discriminate as between industry and industry, as between class and class, or as between locality and locality.

There is a right and a wong method of seeking to redress industrial wrongs. The right method is the direct method; the wrong method is to seek to do by indirect means what cannot be done by direct methods. The right method of dealing with the questions of wages and hours of labour is to deal with them in the legislatures of the provinces, which under our constitution have those questions specifically within their jurisdiction. Hon. members know very well that this parliament has no power to enact an eight hour day in any province of Canada. Hon. members who suggest we should impose an eight hour condition to any one item of our tariff legislation as respects an industry in one particular province, are seeking to do indirectly what they have no right to do directly. That is not a correct method of procedure, and I submit that in the long run we will get nowhere in this country if we attempt to deal with industrial problems in that way.

The constitution of our country clearly defines the different fields in which legislative efforts with respect to certain matters shall be put forth. So far as hours of labour, working conditions, wages and the like are concerned, the constitution of our land lays it down definitely that those are matters for provincial legislatures.

Mr. IRVINE: Might I ask the hon. gentleman—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member has had his say, and I should like to have the opportunity to have mine. He, amongst others, asked me to say something, and I hope he will listen to what I have to say. I repeat that the constitution of our country provides for a known and definite method of dealing with questions of industrial reform, and it will only help to confuse the issue to have the workingmen of this country believe that this is the legislative body to which they should look for laws respecting hours of labour and rates of wages.

Some little time ago this government referred to the supreme court a question with respect to the relative jurisdictions of the federal and provincial governments in matters of this kind, and the decision of the supreme court is very pertinent to the matter under discussion at the present moment. As hon. members well know, this whole discussion arose out of a reference to the treaty of versailles, and to the labour convention of principles associated with the League of Nations in industrial matters. That was how the question first came up for discussion in reference to the tariff generally, and more specifically in reference to the bill regarding the so-called bonus.

An hon. MEMBER: The five cent piece.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was this very matter of obligation as between the federal and the provincial governments arising out of the treaty of Versailles which was referred to the supreme court. I have in my hand the opinion which was given by the Supreme Court of Canada in this matter. It may be well for me to place it on Hansard because it will go very far towards clearing up some of the confusion which has been created in the course of this debate.

On January 12, 1925, the reference to which I refer was made by an order in council of the Dominion government of certain questions as to the obligations of Canada arising out of the Labour part of the treaties of Peace, and also as to the legislative authority of the Dominion parliament or of the provincial legislatures to deal with a certain draft convention which had been adopted by the International Labour Conference (League of Nations) in 1919, limiting the hours of work in industries to eight in the day and forty-eight in the week. The judgment of the court was delivered on June 11, 1925, and it was unanimous. In effect it is a confirmation of the view which was expressed by the law officers of the crown and embodied in an order in council of the Dominion government adopted in November, 1920.

The judgment of the court was in the terms following:—

In the matter of a reference by His Excellency the Governor General in Council to the Supreme Court of Canada of certain questions relating to legislative jurisdiction over hours of labour.

The very question we are discussing at the moment.

The judgment of the court—the Chief Justice and Duff, Mignault, Rinfret, and Magee J.J.—was delivered by Duff J.—

The first of the questions submitted concerns the general effect of one of the clauses in Artcile 405 of the Treaty of Versailles and the corresponding provision in the other treaties of peace. This article is one of those comprised in the labour part (part 13) of the treaties and it defines the undertaking entered into by each of the members respecting recommendations and draft conventions adopted by the general conference of representatives of the members of the League of Nations established as part of a permanent organization for the promotion of the objects set forth in the preamble to that part. The pertinent clause is in these words:—

"Each of the members undertakes that it will, within the period of one year at most from the closing of the session of the conference, or if it is impossible owing to exceptional circumstances to do so within the period of one year, then at the earliest practical moment and in no case later than eighteen months from the closing of the session of the conference bring the recommendation or draft convention before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, for the enactment or legislation or other action."

It seems very clear that the duty arising under this clause is not a duty to enact legislation or to promote legislation; it is an undertaking simply to bring the recommendation or draft convention before the competent authority

No question is submitted as to the duty of the member arising under the succeeding clauses of the same article in the event of the competent authority or authorities giving its or their consent to the recommendation or draft convention; and upon this no opinion is expressed.

The second, third and fourth questions submitted relate to a particular draft convention; that, namely, adopted by the general conference of the International Labour Organization of the League of Nations on the 29th of October, 1919, which has for its object the limiting of the hours of work in industrial undertakings as therein defined to eight hours in the day and forty-eight hours in the week.

Under the scheme of distribution of legislative authority in the British North America Act, legislative jurisdiction touching the subject matter of this convention is, subject to a qualification to be mentioned, primarily vested in the provinces. Under the head of jurisdiction numbered 13 in section 92, Property and Civil Rights, or under the sixteenth head, Local and Private Matters Within the Province, or under both heads, each of the provinces possesses authority to give the force of law in the province to provisions such as those contained in the draft convention. This general proposition is subject to this qualification, namely that as a rule a province has no authority to regulate the hours of employment of the servants of the Dominion government.

It seems questionable whether government employees, in industrial undertakings carried on by the government, such, for example, as shipbuilding, are within the scope of the convention. The point was not the subject of argument before us, and concerning it no opinion in intended to be expressed.

It is necessary to observe, also, that as regards those parts of Canada which are not included within the limits of any province, the legislative authority in relation to civil rights generally, and to the subject matter of the convention in particular, is the Dominion parliament.

Then a little further down:

It follows from what has been said that the draft convention ought to be brought before the parliament of Canada as being the competent legislative authority for those parts of Canada not within the boundaries of any province; and if servants of the Dominion government engaged in industrial undertakings as defined by the convention are within the scope of its provisions, then the Dominion parliament is the competent authority also to give force of law to those provisions as applicable to such persons.

The convention should also be brought before the lieutenant-governor of each of the provinces for the purpose of enabling him to bring it to the attention of the provincial legislature as possessing, subject to the qualification mentioned, legislative jurisdiction within the province in relation to the subject matter of the convention.

The judgment continues to give answers to the several questions as indicated. I submit that that judgment is a guide as to the correct method of procedure to those who are interested in industrial matters, particularly to those who seek the improvement of conditions under which labour is working in our country. Where the matter is one that comes within the jurisdiction of the Dominion, let us by all means seek to the extent of our power to see that the principles associated with the League of Nations are carried out under federal jurisdiction. That is what the government has done in larger measure at this session than has been done at any previous time. We have in the supplementary estimates which have been brought down an item with respect to employees in only one department of the public service, amounting, as far as I am able to recall at the moment, to something like $667,000. I am not sure that in the supplementary estimates which were laid on the table last night more than $1,000,000 is not being asked of parliament for the sole purpose of making possible the carrying out of the eight-hour day principle in its application to classes of labour or service controlled by the Dominon.

Mr. DUNNING: It is more than $1,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Minister of Finance tells me that it is over $1,000,000. Similarly with regard to construction work undertaken by the government itself and public works carried out by contract under the government, we have enacted at this session, or there will be enacted when His Excellency the Governor General gives his consent, an eight hour day law and a fair wage law with respect to all labour employed on such work. So far as I am aware, in so far as the jurisdiction of this parliament extends as regards labour, and speaking broadly, there is not left in any particular any provisions of the treaty of Versailles which have not been made applicable to the terms and conditions of employment of persons employed by the government or engaged on government contract construction work. In regard to work carried on in the provinces and under provincial laws, we have followed a method which, in so far as the judgment of the supreme court which I have read may serve as a guide, is suggested as the one that should be followed.

In the bill which was placed before the hous this afternoon by the Minister of Finance there is an important section which I may be permitted to read again. It applies to the bonus which will be given to the industry being discussed, among other industries which comply with the conditions laid down:

> No payment shall be made to any person or corporation entitled to receive any payment under this act, or any drawback under the tariff item mentioned in the preceding section, where it is shown to the satisfaction of the governor in council that such person or corporation is not complying with laws enacted by the province, in which the industry concerned is operating, for the purpose of maintaining in the operation of such industry hours of labour and rates of wages consistent with the provisions of any international convention adopted by a labour conference held under the treaty of Versailles.

What does that provision mean? It means that this government stands foursquare in its intention, to the extent of its power, not indirectly, not by some subterfuge, but directly, out in the open, in a straightforward way, to do all it can to ensure that the principles associated with the League of Nations with respect to industrial conditions and labour are carried out. Where those principles relate to matters coming within the jurisdiction of the provinces, we say that if a province will notify us that there is any industry within their jurisdiction which is receiving aid from the federal treasury and which is not complying in any particular with any law which it has passed for the purpose of carrying out principles associated with the League of Nations—the eight hour day, the minimum wage, the fair wage, or any of those conditions—we will withhold whatever is being given that industry from the federal treasury. I ask, can there be a more effective way of dealing with these matters?

We are discussing at the moment one particular concern, but these laws are made for all concerns which may to-day or hereafter come to be applicable under them. So far as the industry which has been particularly referred to is concerned, the British Empire Steel Corporation, I believe it is true that that industry has recently been considerably reorganized. I know a good deal about labour conditions in that industry in previous years. I have had something to do with seeking to bring about better conditions in that industry during a period of twenty or thirty years. I have followed the progress of that industry with a good deal of personal interest and concern. I believe it is true that to-day that industry comes nearer to being on its feet, so to speak, in a legitimate way than it has been at any time since its inception. At this moment the men employed in that industry as well as those who have capital invested in it are looking forward hopefully to seeing that industry become established, under fair conditions, in the province of Nova Scotia. Now it may take very little to have that hope realized; it may take equally little altogether to destroy it. What we as a government are seeking to do is to follow the direction given to us by the commission on maritime claims which investigated conditions in Nova Scotia, and which made certain recommendations with respect to what they believe should be done for the iron and steel industry and the coal industry in that province in order to give them their fair chance. We have taken the recommendations of that commission. We have not acted on them hastily. Why?

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says "hear, hear," and I am very glad he draws attention to it because it enables me to give the reason why. The reason has been given in this house in two or three different sessions. Hon. members opposite from Nova Scotia have asked us at different sessions when we were going to implement these different recommendations of the Duncan commission, and we have replied that we would do it when those connected with the industry itself got together and straightened out their difficulties, reorganized the concern, put it on a fair basis and gave it a fair start.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Was there any condition in the recommendations made by the Duncan commission such as the right hon. gentleman speaks of?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, there was not, but I say to my hon. friend that we were justified in taking the position that before we should be expected to do anything for this industry we should be satisfied that those who had their capital invested in it were doing by the elimination of watered stock, by settling litigation, and in other ways, all that it was possible to do to put that industry on a fair basis so far as conditions applicable to labour were concerned; and on that account, and also because of delays in tariff hearings for which those engaged in the industry were themselves responsible, we have held back our support in the matter of implementing this recommendation for fully three years. Our action has I think been justified by the reorganization that has taken place.

Now there has been I believe very considerable reorganization effected within that period; I think no one will deny that. I believe that that reorganization has already resulted in material improvement and will result in the course of a short time in a very great improvement with respect to the conditions of labour. My hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) said that he saw one of the directors of the company around this parliament buildings the other evening, and he said that he would like to know whether the leader of the opposition or the Prime Minister had been conferring with him. I wish some hon. gentlemen would believe that other men seek to be just as honest and straightforward in their dealings as they themselves. I wish that they would not always be imputing or insinuating some sinister or ulterior motive to those who are trying to cooperate with them in seeking to improve industrial conditions—not trying to antagonize them, not trying to make their path more difficult, but trying to cooperate with them in helping to improve the conditions of those in whose welfare we believe they are honestly concerned. May I say to my hon. friend that I had a talk with the director who was here the other evening, and I asked him how long he expected it would be before this industry would establish the eight hour day. I said to him that my belief was that the industry ought to establish it, and establish it forthwith. I said to him: I have seen something of other iron and steel industries that have established the eight hour day in their works, and I cited cases to him where I had reason to believe that the employers themselves were very much pleased with the consequences of the change from the twelve hour to the eight hour day. I said to him that I would like to be in a position when I spoke in this debate to tell this house that that company was serious with respect to the conditions of its labour, and what it was going to do to improve them. His reply to me was that before the company paid out anything in the way of dividends it would be seen that the bonus had helped to improve the conditions of labour, that I might expect to see that before dividends were declared the conditions of labour would be still further improved over what they are at the present time.

May I say this? If I find so far as the British Empire Steel Corporation is concerned that they begin to pay dividends to their shareholders without at the same time improving the conditions of their workmen, in the matter of wages and in the matter of hours, if I am in the place in the government of this country which I occupy at the moment, I will seek to do my part to see that any assistance that is being given by this government is withheld until some action is taken along the right line.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Perhaps the Prime Minister would tell us what the British Empire Steel Corporation did with the million dollars profit which they made on steel last year. Did they apply that to giving better wages or shorter hours to their workmen?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know nothing about what they have done with it, but I have no doubt their financial statements will speak for themselves. I am not aware that any dividends have been paid by the company. We have heard it said over and over again in this debate that money should not be paid as dividends to the shareholders until something was done to improve the conditions of labour. With that I agree entirely, but I say that the way to go about effecting that result so far as parliament is concerned, is to proceed in accordance with a method that is not open to question, and which in the long run is certain to bring about the best results.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up further time. All I desire to make clear is this, that so far as Canada is concerned it is a country made up of nine provinces, each with its own government, having jurisdiction with regard to certain matters and this federal parliament to deal with other matters. One of the most serious problems continually confronting us, it seems to me, is to maintain on an even, fair and just basis the relations between the respective provinces and the Dominion, and any efforts that are made, so far as this Dominion government is concerned, to encroach upon the field of the provinces in matters of legislation, or efforts made to coerce the provinces by indirect methods, will not help in the long run, nor will they serve to maintain the structure of confederation as it is to-day. I say, Mr. Speaker, that by each of us in our own field doing the best we can, we will in the end do more for those we are seeking to help than by any other method.

I would say to my hon. friends who have spoken so eloquently and so feelingly on this matter to-night that I hope they will at the earliest opportunity go and repeat the speeches which they have made in this house to the government of Nova Scotia, to the members of that government who have it within their power at this minute—

Mr. MACDOUGALL: You have it too.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have not.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Yes, you have.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shut up.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —who have it within their power to-day to enact an eight hour law in the province of Nova Scotia. If they will pass that eight hour law or any law in respect of wages which is based upon the labour convention of the Versailles treaty or the principles associated with the League of Nations, and will tell us that that law is not being observed by a company that is being aided by moneys from the treasury of this country, and the governor in council has reason to be satisfied that such is the case, then I say from that moment further assistance will be withheld until the law is observed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the Prime Minister has taken the stand that he has taken to-night. Once again he has sought refuge behind the British North America Act. Further than that, it seems to me that the statement he has made has tended to obscure the real issue before the house. The judgment of the supreme court, which was read at length and with which we are familiar, deals with legislative authority. No one is proposing to draft legislation here to-night. We know perfectly well that under the decision of the supreme court we cannot draft such legislation. Some of us may doubt whether the decisions of the supreme court might not ultimately be reversed, but so long as they stand we will accept the position for the purpose of this argument that we cannot draft such legislation.

But, Mr. Chairman, none of us to-night is proposing that, none of us is asking the government to do that. What we are asking the government to do is altogether a different matter and one which comes entirely within the jurisdiction of this parliament. What we find to-day is a request from these corporations for special privileges, and what we do say is that in granting special privileges the grantor has a perfect right to lay down the conditions under which they shall be granted. The Prime Minister says that in the future if the company does not live up to the undertaking which they have given to him he will find means to make them do so. Why not find such means now? Some of us have watched these deplorable conditions for a good many years. I have known these conditions to exist during the nine years I have been in this house, and we have seen no amelioration of them. We have had during that time strike upon strike; we have had the military sent down again and again to this district to quell labour troubles; we have had commission after commission go down and report. The Duncan commission report is to be implemented, we are told, because it deals with the relief of the industry; but the other reports are not to be implemented. No, they deal only with the relief of the men who work.

The Prime Minister says that wages and hours of labour should be dealt with by the province. I say as far as legislation is concerned let us concede that. But we have a great many precedents under which we as a parliament may have something to say with regard to wages, working hours and so on. For expamle, when we give a contract we stipulate what wages and hours shall govern, whether the contractor lives in Nova Scotia or British Columbia; that is one case in which we deal with wages and hours—not by legislation, but by regulation, because we are dealing with matters that come under our own jurisdiction. In the same way in the granting of certain licences we determine the conditions under which those licences shall be granted, and it is conceded that we have a perfect right to deal with such matters even though they relate to wages and working hours. We are not putting legislation on the statute books; we are exercising powers vested in this government in relation to the granting of such licences. The same thing applies on the incorporation of a private concern; again and again in the past few years in the case of certain international bridges we have inserted in the charters a fair wage clause, even though these structures authorized were situated in the province of Ontario on one bank of the river and in New York state on the other bank. There again it was not a matter of legislation, but we said: Since these companies come to us asking for incorporation, we have a perfect right to state the conditions under which that incorporation shall be granted. I do not think I need continue to give further precedents along that line.

The Prime Minister says that we must not coerce the provinces. I want to suggest that in this very tariff we have in the past again and again coerced outside bodies. We have even coerced, if you like to put it that way, the empire itself, because we have insisted that there shall be a certain empire content of material and labour in their manufactured goods or else they cannot be imported under the preferential tariff. If you talk of coercion in that sense, I say we are coercing the empire by insisting on certain conditions with which their manufactured goods must comply. We do no more here. We say: Before this tariff is applicable the industries must come up to a certain standard. That is not legislation, and I do not think the Prime Minister will seriously state that the supreme court decided anything which touches upon this matter at all.

The Prime Minister says that it is not fair to deal with one particular industry, that any legislation should deal with all industries. Possibly that may be correct in theory, but we have pointed out again and again that this particular industry is the only industry in Canada which is working a considerable body of its men eleven and thirteen hours a day. We are not concerned with the other industries that are working their men only eight hours a day; perhaps we are not even concerned with those that are working their men ten hours a day, although that is longer than the hours prescribed by the Versailles treaty. But we are trying to find some means of curbing these corporations that are working their men eleven and thirteen hours a day and seven days a week. And so I say we have to deal with a particular industry, and there is nothing wrong in dealing with that industry when it is the industry that is sinning in this regard.

Further than that it is this particular industry that is seeking this special protection. We are dealing with a special item of the tariff. I would point out to the Prime Minister that some industries are protected to the extent of 10 or 15 or 20 per cent, some to the extent of 30 and 40 per cent; surely we have discrimination between industries. Some industries such as farming, are not protected at all. Surely this is discrimination. Surely the very complexity of our tariff schedules shows discrimination. So when it is stated that we must not discriminate against one industry, again I say we are elaborating a theoretical principle which in practice does not exist. In taking action along this line we are simply doing something which we are doing every day when we put through any of these tariff items.

The Prime Minister has brought forward as the only one contribution that the government is prepared to make in regard to this whole matter a section in the bill before the house, an act to place Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron and steel on a basis of equality with imported coal. That section would contain a condition that before this bonus is given there should be certain conditions complied with. If the government of the province of Nova Scotia or any other government enacted the eight hour day it would have to be complied with. That may sound well, and it may look well on paper, but it is not worth the paper upon which it is written. Hon. members in this house know very well that the British Empire Steel Corporation practically controls the province of Nova Scotia. We know that since the Versailles treaty this government, in the performance of its duty, has asked the province of Nova Scotia to inaugurate an eight hour working day, and that province so far has refused to do so. There is no particular reason to hope that in the near future the attitude of the province of Nova Scotia will change. Under these conditions we are simply putting in a dead letter clause; that is all that this government is offering to help the situation.

I do not want to prolong this debate, but we in this corner of the house are honest in our contentions, and I think that some who have claimed honesty will permit us to say that we have introduced this matter in the hope that we may secure some alleviation for the conditions under which the steel workers find themselves. I am not concerned with the factional disputes over the items contained in the tariff, but I am concerned in getting better conditions for these labouring men. I had hoped that this government, which has claimed again and again to be the friend of the workers, would solve my problem, but it has failed to do so. At this particular stage of the proceedings I believe it is out of order to offer a resolution, but at a later stage when we are in a position to discuss the bill which I understand is to follow, we propose to move an amendment. It may be that we in this corner of the house are too weak to pass such an amendment; certainly we cannot carry it by ourselves, but I am hoping that a considerable number of gentlemen to my right will come to our assistance, and it may be that there are some hon. members across the floor of the house who will lend their aid. We purpose to move an amendment to the effect that these tariff privileges will be given only when the industry producing the articles has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the governor in council that in the operation of such industry employees are being paid a fair and reasonable wage, and that there has been instituted an eight hour day and a forty-eight hour week in accordance with the conditions of the Washington labour conference held under the authority of the treaty of Versailles. If we are successful in passing an amendment of that nature we will bring immediate relief to these steel workers. When the government intends to give special privileges which will mean the placing of larger amounts of money into the hands of the British Empire Steel Corporation I see no reason why we should not insist that such privileges should be granted conditionally upon the workers being paid a decent wage and living under decent conditions.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend knows very well that I respect him; we are two members in this house who suffer most through our allegiance to truth and principle. He makes the suggestion that he will propose an amendment, but may I remind him that his proposed amendment is ultra vires of the jurisdiction of this parliament. He wants to help the miners, but if his amendment is ultra vires and is declared null and void by the courts, it will not be much help to the miners.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In the first place, I am not talking about the miners; I am talking about steel workers. If what I have said does not show that my amendment in the miners' interests is intra vires, nothing I can say will help.

Mr. THORSON: I wish to make a few observations in connection with this matter. I think that the Prime Minister and my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre both have the same object in view; they are working in the interests of the workers in the steel industry. As to the constitutional powers of this parliament to impose conditions upon tariff increases I regret that I must differ from the opinion expressed by my leader, the Prime Minister, and must agree with the sentiments of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. In my opinion it is within the jurisdiction of this parliament to impose such conditions as it might consider reasonable upon any tariff changes which are made in this parliament. We have full jurisdiction over the tariff and we have the right to impose any conditions we desire with regard to tariffs or the changing of tariffs. That is my opinion as to the constitutional powers of this parliament, and I can see no reason whatever why it would not be within our jurisdiction to impose such a condition as has been suggested by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. The rules of the house preclude any amendment by a private member at this stage, but if my hon. friend will bring in his suggested amendment to the bill when it is in committee I shall be glad to vote for it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I wish to move at this time that the house do not adjourn at eleven o'clock. I think there is unanimous agreement that we should sit at least one hour longer.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any specified time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Until twelve o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose we were considering item 377c.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, I feel that there are some things I should like to say in regard to the item under discussion. When one listens to the righteously indignant speech of the Prime Minister one is convinced of what one often hears, that he has a flair for waxing righteously indignant when that particular method is required. Indeed, the Prime Minister, who has time and again said that he was the friend of the worker, and who is now in the position of defending legislation brought forward for the benefit of a special privilege group without at the same time guaranteeing that part of that special privilege for which all the people in Canada pay will be passed on to the worker, has every need for a flair for righteous indignation. I do not forget the conditions of the steel workers as I saw them when I visited Nova Scotia in 1925. These men and women live as none of us want to live; as we would not want any of our people to live, as our hardworking farmers who work more than twelve hours a day live. They do need whatever help we can give them, and I support most heartily what has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

After all, it is the business of the Dominion parliament to look after the people of Canada and not after the specially privileged groups in Canada. Surely the people in the country soon ought to come to realize what has been true for some time in Canada, that special privilege groups work under the mantles of the two great political parties. When the Prime Minister hurls—particularly at the hon. member for Bow River but after all at all of us in this corner—the suggestion that we are giving ourselves a righteousness that does not belong to us, we can say to him that we are at least quite honestly and clearly and above board a class group, and we are not ashamed of it. We do not hide it under a mantle with a general name, and it does seem to me perfectly clear that under the mantle of so-called great Liberal principles, special privilege groups are being well looked after and that the welfare of the workers in this particular matter is not being looked after at all.

I am sorry to disappoint the Prime Minister. While I admire the cleverness with which he made his speech and the vigour which came to him—one might almost say the eloquence—I am afraid it falls on deaf ears in this corner. We have heard the same kind of thing for a long time without seeing results follow.

Mr. BROWN: The question which has been going through my mind ever since the proposal was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was whether his proposition was practicable and whether it would be possible for a minister of national revenue, entrusted with the administration of an act containing such a provision, to administer that are. I listened with a great deal of interest to the very eloquent speech made by the hon. member for Bow River, and I should be very loath to do anything that would seem for a moment to underestimate the importance of this matter from the humanitarian standpoint; but we are here this evening dealing with a question which we must consider not from the theoretical standpoint only but from the standpoint also of whether or not the proposition is practicable.

With what the hon. member for Bow River said in regard to tariffs in general I am in hearty accord, and if he takes the position that these particular duties are wrong in themselves, I am willing to agree with him most heartily. However, when he takes the position that these tariffs must be levied only on consideration that certain conditions be observed by the Besco Company, and advances that as a practical proposition, I must say that I dissent. He referred to the words of the leader of the opposition, when he said:

> Here we have a chance to say that these increases shall apply only to such mills as maintain the principles of the treaty of Versailles.

I should like the hon. member for Bow River or those who are supporting him in this matter to point out how it is possible to make the benefits of tariff legislation apply only to certain companies in this country. Tariff legislation must be general in its scope; it cannot possibly be made to apply to the Besco Company and not apply to another steel company which possibly may be observing the terms of the treaty of Versailles in regard to the eight hour day.

With me this is a practical proposition; how can it be done? It would seem to me rather inconsiderate of the hon. member for Bow River to recall the words of the leader of the opposition. The hon. gentleman has the sometimes fatal gift of fluency in language, and sometimes I think his words run ahead of his thoughts. I believe that on more mature consideration the leader of the opposition would admit that the proposal involved in the sentence quoted is absolutely impracticable. This is the question which concerns me at the moment, Mr. Chairman: How is it possible, under tariff legislation which must be general in its scope, to make it apply to only such a branch of the industry or to such a company engaged in the particular industry as observes certain conditions? If it were a matter of a bonus to a particular manufacturer, then we might impose that obligation, but how it can be done under tariff legislation is a mystery to me. I hope those who have indicated their intention to bring forward an amendment at a later date will consider it from this standpoint and not be content with general expressions of opinion, not say merely that the thing is theoretically sound, is desirable from the humanitarian standpoint, but also show how it possibly can be done and how the Minister of National Revenue, in carrying out the act, will be able to do it in accordance with the wishes expressed by hon. members themselves.

I express this hope, that when the time comes to move that amendment, as I understand my hon. friends intend to do, they will show that the proposal is practicable. Otherwise I am afraid I shall have to vote against it, as I would feel disposed to do at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: The observations made by the right hon. Prime Minister more fittingly illustrate the difficulties of disregarding principles than anything I have heard for some time. He says that we must never forget the relative rights, constitutionally, of the provinces, and that to impose conditions upon provinces might be and is highly improper, if not illegal.

Mr. THORSON: We are not imposing any conditions upon the provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: At the moment I am addressing my remarks to the committee; I was referring to the observations of the right hon. Prime Minister and not to those of his deputy. May I observe that the legislation which was adopted by this house on a previous occasion at the instance of the Prime Minister and his government disregarded that principle? It will be recalled that the premier of Quebec, Mr. Taschereau, has indicated that he has had the opinion of two eminent lawyers to the effect that the action taken by this parliament on that occasion was illegal. We provided for the granting of old age pensions by the provinces, and stated that we would pay half of the money, but we imposed conditions under which we would pay it. Those conditions were imposed upon the provinces whether they did or did not like them; if they accepted the principle they accepted the conditions. This parliament, at the instance of the Prime Minister and his government, imposed upon the various provinces which accepted the old age pensions scheme, a plan which provided conditions under which they could obtain the benefits; if they did not want the benefits, they did not accept the scheme. The scheme contained conditions with which every hon. member of this house is familiar; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows quite well what they were.

Let us analyze the proposal to see whether it be sound or unsound from the point of view of the constitution. Undoubtedly parliament has the jurisdiction to deal with the tariff; in fact it is the only legislative body in Canada which can deal with that matter. The tariff which existed before the present tariff bill was introduced had existed for many years, and under it and by virtue of reorganization the institution mentioned had grown to a position, as the Prime Minister said, which was better than ever before attained in its history. That being so, a special concession is being given to that organization because of the recommendations of the Duncan report.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was referring to the matter of reorganization of the industry.

Mr. BENNETT: Financially.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know anything about the financial position of the industry; I was speaking about the more favourable position of that industry to bring about better relations as between labour and capital.

Mr. BENNETT: That means finance. I think the right hon. gentleman made it abundantly clear that he was not speaking of the conditions with respect to labour; he was speaking of the position of the plant under its present reorganization. It was in the hands of a receiver, which meant that it did not have to pay interest on its debentures or bonds, indeed had not done so until a few months ago, when it was taken out of the hands of the receiver; and an endeavour is now being made to reorganize it under the conditions to which the right hon. gentlemen referred. The only question to which I directed my mind the other evening was whether or not we had a legal right to impose conditions, and I agree with the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg in the view he has expressed in that regard.

Leaving that for the moment, we then consider the matter of an amendment. I do not think there is any doubt that an amendment moved by a private member of this house would be out of order, because it would be interfering with a plan or scheme of finance introduced by the minister. When I made inquiry the other afternoon the clerk of the house satisfied me in that regard. The Deputy Speaker has ruled out of order a certain amendment in that direction.

Mr. DUNNING: Only at this stage.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be out of order at any stage if it interfered with the scheme of the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: I would not say that it would be out of order at a later stage.

Mr. BENNETT: I gathered from the quotation from May which the Chairman read, that that would be the case. However, I am not certain about that, but it has nothing to do with the point I am endeavouring to make. I ventured to point out the other evening that parliament, in my judgment, has the power to adopt this course of action. I made also a very strong statement with respect to the eighty-four hour week. However, any man is entitled to search for information, and in answer to the question raised by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) I should like to associate myself with the right hon. the Prime Minister in stating that anyone should be entitled to ask for information without being suspected of improper motives. I asked information of certain gentlemen who I thought would be able to inform me.

The making of steel is a continuous process; it is not a question of an eight hour day, it is a question of shifts. There must be either two or three; if three, they would be of eight hours each, if two, they would be divided into two twelve hour shifts or one thirteen and one eleven hour shift. I have been advised, and I have seen the process myself, that the work itself is not continuous. Between the opening of the furnace in order to allow the metal to pour out there are certain periods of rest which make the actual hours of labour much less than has been indicated. I have been informed that under modern practice the use of pneumatic tools eases the actual labour to a considerable extent, and the conditions are not as bad as I was led to believe.

Three years ago the system was changed in some of the plants in the United States from two shifts to three, but up to date all the plants have not been able to adopt that new system. This change involves an expenditure of from $200,000 to $300,000 for a moderately small plant, and the reasons given by those responsible for the management of this enterprise for their inability to adopt the new method is that the company is only recently out of a receivership, and the solution as to how they would be able to attain this end has not been arrived at. As I understand it, they have given to the Prime Minister an undertaking that no dividends will be paid upon the capital stock of the enterprise in its reorganized condition unless and until an improvement in working conditions has been provided for those who create the profits out of which the dividends can be paid. Speaking for myself, I am disposed to say that an enterprise which has been in the hands of a receiver as long as this one has been, and which has met with the difficulties encountered by this one, should be given an opportunity—not a long one—to determine whether or not it is possible to attain to the condition which now obtains in the United States Steel Corporation and other plants in the United States.

It is not a question of an eight hour day, but rather one of eight hour shifts, because steel making being a continuous process it is necessary that workmen should be there prepared at all times to do the work. However, I am informed that these men do not work continuously for an eighty-four hour week; they work six days out of the week and have one day in seven of rest. If the furnaces are operated on Sunday it is necessary that some men work on that day, but they receive another day of rest during the week. That is the practice which obtains at the present time in the larger plants. What the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said as to its being advisable from the standpoint of the proprietors has, I think, been abundantly established by the results which have been obtained in certain plants. In view of the information which I have received that some 25,000 men are employed in this enterprise, one has to consider whether or not the promise given steadily to improve conditions until there are three shifts instead of two, should be substituted at this moment for any legislative action. If this were my own property to be dealt with under the circumstances, I would endeavour to see to what extent good faith would be accepted in the promise made by the Prime Minister. That is the way it would strike me at the moment.

The hon. member for Bow River and others have referred to the fact that in days gone by the party with which I am associated has indicated that the protection of the workingman is of fundamental importance. I think they have hardly put the matter fairly. We say that industry can be developed in this country only if it is afforded an opportunity to compete on even terms with industry in other countries. That involves a consideration of rates of pay, hours of labour, cost of raw materials and everything that is a factor in cost of production. But may I add this: the only reason that tariffs are regarded as being of value in that respect is that without tariffs there can be no industry in Canada —let us face that frankly—and there must be a tariff until industry in our own country has attained to such a strength and position that it can compete with industry in other countries. No one in Canada learned that more quickly than the farmer in respect to the New Zealand treaty, and he learned it to his sorrow. No one has learned it better than the bean producers, who have the benefit of the tariff placed on their product at the present session. It was a Liberal government led by a free trade Minister of Finance who placed upon the tariff books of this country for the protection of the bean grower a provision amounting to an increase of something like 200 per cent over the old duty rate.

An hon. MEMBER: Three hundred per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The rate being four times as much and the increase being 300 per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: Five hundred per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad to see that my hon. friends are now thinking in terms of hundreds per cent increases in order that they may justify their action to their constituents. They no longer are the party of free trade. They have now become the party of increase in tariffs by hundreds per cent.

The question in this case is purely as to how and when the end can best be accomplished, having regard to the number of people employed and the necessity for some protection. Protection is not primarily for capital; it is in order that there may be any industry at all in this country that we asked for it in the first instance. We ask for it not as an expedient, not as a deathbed repentance just before an election, but as a principle; when we had no election pending we asked for it from one session to another. Everyone has now adopted it; in the case of my hon. friends opposite not as a principle but as an expedient, and in our case as a continuing principle. I put this to the house: Would there be in this country any industry of any kind in the steel business without some protection? If there would not be, then obviously the tariff ensures employment, and as it ensures employment it therefore is a protection for labour; because it means that labour can stay in Canada and not have to migrate to some other country in order to secure a job.

I could give instance after instance. The hon. member for Bow River referred to the textile industry. The other day I was given the names of nine woollen mills in Ontario that are closed and the number of spindles in those mills that are idle because they no longer have an opportunity to compete on even terms with the mills of other countries. I went to Sherbrooke, to the great Paton plant, and I found there the spindles idle because of the tariff enacted in this house. The manager did not hesitate to say: You can come and look at the machines and the men; there is the list of workmen employed; there is the diminution of the number because of the tariff enacted in parliament. I went to another plant and I found there the same condition.

I give these instances because I desire to point out how unfair are the statements that have been made in the house this afternoon. Protection is a principle that, applied to Canada, means that we have an opportunity to develop our industrial life. Unless we have that we cannot develop; for as long as this country is the slaughter market for the surplus mass production of our great neighbour to the south, there can be no industrial life and consequently no general employment in Canada. That, it seems to me, is the whole reason behind the effort to apply the principle of protection—and the government has now adopted that principle—to the fiscal life of the country. Of course, if this country develops as we believe it will, the necessity for the protection should become less. As the industry strengthens, the necessity for supporting it correspondingly diminishes, and there is no doubt, despite what my hon. friend from Rosetown will say, that the principle enunciated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is true, namely, that if the domestic industry has the domestic market there will be such competition as to ensure that there will be no increase in prices by reason of communities outside of Canada not being permitted on unfair terms to compete with Canadian industry.

A manufacturer pointed out to me a year ago that if the tariff on his product could be increased 10 per cent, he would reduce his prices by 10 per cent because the volume of his business would be increased accordingly. That has been the history of the United States —volume of business decreasing unit overhead cost and the decreasing of unit overhead cost meaning, of course, a lessening of prices. The point that the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen made in dealing with the problem is that in the mind of every Canadian legislator there is the idea that in giving the necessary encouragement to the development of industry in Canada we should take the essential steps to protect the consumer from exploitation; in other words, that the domestic competition, to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce referred, is ensured in order that there be such active demand for the products produced in our own country that the price will not be out of line with what it would be for the imported article. It does not follow that the price in the domestic market is the price in the foreign country plus the protection. The duty may be high enough to shut out the commodity altogether. Then it becomes necessary for parliament so to legislate as to ensure the consumer against exploitation while supplying an opportunity for labour on the part of our own Canadian people. There can be employment in this country only if we afford the opportunity, and I agree with my hon. friend —and I believe those who have been before me in this position have always enunciated the same view whether in office or out of office —that the application of that principle to the fiscal life of the country is not only for the purpose of developing Canadian life, of affording opportunities for employment to Canadians in Canada, of encouraging the building of homes in Canada, of creating of stable conditions in Canada, but of providing a living wage for men who toil and giving them in addition some opportunity for leisure and the improvement of their homes and family life so that they may become good and useful citizens of this Dominion.

I firmly believe that unless that principle is applied, the end aimed at cannot be attained. Aiming at that end, as we do in Nova Scotia and other parts of the Dominion, I believe an opportunity should be afforded to those who have given their solemn assurance to the Prime Minister that they will endeavour to bring about that purpose, to see whether or not they can effectuate it; and if with the facilities which the government has at its command those purposes are not effectuated by the efforts of those concerned, then indeed the parliament that grants is the parliament that can repeal.

I have not changed a single thought that I expressed the other evening with respect to a matter of this kind. In view of what was said to me I did make inquiries; I invited an opportunity to ask questions of gentlemen whose words I accept as being true, and the assurance which the Prime Minister was given is an assurance which was given also to myself. I have reason to believe that unless that assurance is implemented by effort, and in the end by results commensurate with the promise given, parliament will not be slow to indicate its views in the premises.

Those are my convictions, which I have no hesitation in expressing to this house because I do not conceive it possible for Canada to make any progress in industry and in the development of our vast resources unless we aim to protect those who toil with their hands as well as those who risk their capital in enterprise. The first consideration must be for those who toil; for they have a more difficult task and are less able to look after their own interests. Capital may seek employment elsewhere usefully and profitably, whereas those who live in our own country can never migrate without grave inconvenience to themselves and the disruption of their homes. It is for these reasons that I venture at this time to say, in connection with the statement made by the Prime Minister, that he applied an entirely different principle in dealing with the problem of old age pensions. It is competent for parliament at all times to impose any condition it pleases upon legislation that it enacts, and granting that those conditions may be imposed, the only question is whether or not that power should be exercised to-day or to-morrow; if to-morrow, then only because waiting until then affords an opportunity to ascertain whether or not, having regard to the complexity of modern industry, the competition that exists, and the difficulties that have been experienced in establishing a stable industry, the assurances given are capable of being implemented to the full.

Mr. EVANS: I did not intend to enter into this debate, but seeing that the house is not disposed to let this measure go through, I will add a word or two. We seem to be enacting over again the old scene which was enacted some thirty years or more ago when these same companies got every concession possible, tariffs, bonuses, and special privileges, to establish an industry down there by the sea. We are no nearer the establishment of a steel industry in Canada to-day than we were when Sir Wilfrid Laurier bonused the Dominion Iron and Steel Company for that very purpose, and our efforts to-day are just as futile as they were then. The tariff has never yet established any industry. There is no industry, according to my friends on the protectionist benches, that is any nearer making its own way to-day than it was forty years ago.

I am sorry that the Prime Minister has thrown out a kind of a challenge to-night to this corner of the house, accusing us of insinuations regarding this tariff question. I have heard before these old promises of having protection extended to other classes. In fact some thirty or more years ago it was a common thing to hear from one end of this Dominion to the other the statement that the workingman was going to get a cosy home and a full dinner pail, and so on; yet after all the billions of dollars that have been spent in the establishment of these industries we are not any nearer that objective than we were thirty years ago, and the conditions of the workingmen in some of our industries cannot be compared with those which prevail in any other country on the northern hemisphere. In fact I believe our workingmen are in a more precarious condition as to their living and employment than the workingmen in England. If we did throw out insinuations, we are in mighty good company. Let me quote from the words of the present leader of the opposition, speaking on this very subject some years ago. He said:

> I appeal to every man in this house and say that if he will take the time to read the history of the operations of Mackenzie and Mann from that time till now, he will find nothing but a long trail of parliamentary corruption, of lobbying, of degradation of parliamentary institutions, of the lowering of the morale of public life, and the degrading of those standards by which public life should be truly measured. Both sides of the house have been to blame. Look to the statute books for the aid that has been given to this company.

Change the name from Mackenzie and Mann to the British Empire Steel Corporation, and the same words apply to them in all their truth. He continues:

> Just a few days before a general election, one party proposes and the other acquiesces.

What is the insinuation there, may I ask? He continues:

> They are bound to ask a few questions in order that the contribution to the party funds may be large enough.

Who made that insinuation?

> Let us look the business squarely in the face. The time has come when we must take stock of the conditions, and now faced as we are with conditions such as we never met before, we must decide whether we will continue to add to the predatory wealth of promoters or whether we shall strike a blow for the people of this country.

The promises that these companies are going to create conditions that will be respectable and commensurate with the treatment which the workman in this country should receive are not worth the paper they are written on.

Both parties in this house have been very careful of capital and the capitalist, but nothing yet has been done in a permanent way for those who are engaged in primary production or for the man who earns his living by a day's wage. Nothing permanent, I say, has been done. The Prime Minister has already said that this company is on a better footing to-day than it has ever been in the past. Then, let me ask, why increase the protection for this industry? Surely we have given them everything it has been possible to give properly to establish that industry down by the sea. Thirty years ago we gave them practically everything that they could receive. We gave them protection up to 17½ per cent; we gave them favoured railway rates over this Dominion; the province gave them thirty years' exemption from taxation; and in bonuses and bounties untold wealth has been poured into that corner of the Dominion. We gave them $7 a ton bounty on steel rails, and then we paid a price for our steel rails that was nearly twice the amount that it should have been after paying the bounty. For the government sections of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway we paid a price of $32 a ton for the steel rails. It is on record in a paragraph of one of Edward Porritt's books that while we were paying $32 a ton for the steel rails, and giving at the same time $7 a ton bounty, that same company was cutting prices against the whole world and selling rails in the southern Punjab at $24 a ton, and the wheat of the western farmer has been paying for it ever since in freight rates to cover the interest charge on that high cost of construction. I say that the farmer has never been protected, and he never can be. I challenge the leader of the opposition to-night to come out with some plan by which we can protect the farmer. It cannot be done.

The leader of the opposition says that no industry can be established without the tariff, and he points to certain woollen industries and looms that are idle to-day. He wants a duty on wool. Let me give the position of the western farmer as regards his wool. Our woollen market to-day is in the United States, and any wool that is sold in Canada is based on the freight rate all the way to Boston and New York and back here again. Then, as if we had not done enough already, we gave free yarns to these leaders in the woollen industry, and they are importing their yarns rather than making them from Canadian wool. Is that protection for the farmer? No. I say that the increase in protection that we are giving to the steel industry by this budget will be just as futile as the assistance that was given thirty years ago. Protection has never been of any benefit except to the capitalist, and it has not increased their capacity to establish industry in this country. If I have spoken strongly in this house in days gone by, and in this very session regarding the tariff, it has been because the iron has entered my very soul as I see to-day many of my friends and neighbours forced to leave their farms. Instead of the people increasing their hold on the farms, farming is becoming a capitalist concern to be run by high-powered machinery. Our people to-day are leaving the farms, and my own township is a case in point. They cannot make ends meet and into the cities they go to find work. What then? They have to face such conditions as prevail in the steel industry and in our large centres where men congregate to find work. Have we not had a protected country for the last sixty years? What do the leader of the opposition and his party want to do? Where is the limit of protection? Can the protectionist ever be satisfied? No, protection creates its own appetite; the greater the protection the more the protectionist wants.

Now, these are some thoughts that I wanted to throw out to-night regarding the futility of establishing industry by a privileged class through the tariff. By that means we place the interests of that privileged class entirely contrary to the interests of the people. If we are going to apply the tariff to industry, should it be done by giving all the benefits into the hands of one class so that they may exploit the people generally?

No. If the tariff is to benefit industry at all it must go down to the workingmen, and I think that in the days to come if any help is to be given to industry it must be by another plan altogether whereby the workingmen will be afforded a chance through the privilege that is given to industry to get hold of manufacturing concerns themselves as partners. In different countries of the world to-day where the workers are themselves co-operatively running certain industries the results have been very satisfactory. This is the only method by which this money that is handed out to capitalistic concerns through the tariff can be of any benefit. And I am placing no reliance on promises from any member of the government unless those promises are embodied in the act.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—389. Provided: that upon any article or commodity enumerated in tariff items 377, 377a, 378a, 378b, 378c, 388a, 388b and 388c of this schedule, not being of greater value than 6½ cents per pound, there shall be levied, collected and paid, under regulations prescribed by the minister, in addition to the rates of customs duties enumerated in such said tariff items, an ad valorem surtax of five per centum when any such said article or commodity contains:

(a) Vanadium, 0.15 per centum or more, by weight.

(b) Molybdenum, 0.15 per centum or more, by weight.

(c) Nickel, 0.4 per centum or more, by weight.

(d) Chromium, 0.4 per centum or more by weight.

(e) Tungsten, 0.4 per centum or more, by weight.

(f) Cobalt, 0.4 per centum or more, by weight.

(g) Manganese, 1.0 per centum or more, by weight.

(h) Silicon, 1.0 per centum or more, by weight.

(i) Any other element, not being iron or carbon, in excess of .5 per centum by weight.

Mr. DUNNING: The question was raised by several members whether the five per cent mentioned in this item is the maximum. It is the opinion of the draftsmen that five per cent is the maximum, but in order to place it beyond peradventure I desire to insert after the word "contains" in line 9 the following words "any one or more of the following."

Mr. BENNETT: The total surtax is five per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—439f. Children's carriages, sleds, and other vehicles; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. BOIVIN: I would ask the minister that this item be dropped altogether, for several reasons. First, we want these goods made in Canada; we want Canadian-born babies to ride in Canadian-made baby carriages. That is one reason. The second reason is that we have about a dozen concerns in Canada with an investment of $1,125,000 in this industry, and they are employing at least 500 people with an annual wage roll of $600,000. I see no reason why these concerns should be destroyed. They are legitimate companies, well equipped with up to date machinery, there is no water in their stock, and they are managed by good business men. Under the existing tariff of 22½, 30 and 35 per cent we find that more goods were brought into Canada from the United States in 1929 than in 1928. Consequently there seems no reason why the tariff on this item should be reduced on American made goods from 35 to 30 per cent. What do we owe the Americans? Why should we open our doors to let them bring in their goods here to compete with our legitimate manufacturers? Most farmers do not buy baby carriages they have no sidewalks to use them on; it is mostly city people that buy them; so I do not think the farmers are very much interested in this item and to reduce the tariff will not do them very much good. I have two of these industries in my constituency and I know they need this protection. Therefore I request the minister to drop the item and leave the duty as it was.

Mr. BENNETT: Was the item before the tariff board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: What about item 61, wheat flour?

Mr. DUNNING: I find that Canada produces in the neighbourhood of 4,000,000 barrels of soft wheat flour. It is practically all milled in eastern Canada from our own native soft wheats, and it is used by the confectioners. I was surprised to learn that there is some export business, the product going as far as Scotland in considerable volume, having relation to the total production. It is also sent to the West Indies where it has become very popular. I am advised that it is possible to arrange to secure supplies of this flour in Canada, and eastern millers state that they are anxious to cater to the western market. They say that even without a milling in transit rate they can lay the product down in the prairie provinces at prices which will be advantageous to the western users. In car lots the rate from Toronto to Calgary is 76½ cents par barrel.

Mr. BENNETT: That would be only about 38 cents per one hundred pounds. Is my hon. friend sure of the figure?

Mr. DUNNING: I was surprised at the low rate. The rail rate from Fort William to Calgary on similar shipments is 50½ cents per barrel. The lake and rail rate from Toronto to Calgary is less than the 76½ cents. The value at the present time is approximately $5 a barrel, carload lots, f.o.b. the mill. Then of course the customs tariff on biscuits is 30 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: I certainly was not and I do not think Mr. Shaw was aware of the fact that soft wheat would be available in eastern Canada to supply the small biscuit factories at Regina, Calgary and Edmonton; I did not know that they could get flour from those sources. The new American rate would be $2.03 per barrel, including duty and freight. My hon. friend says that the purchase price is $5 at the mill, and the rate from Toronto to Calgary is about 76 cents per barrel, or a total charge of about $1 per barrel. I think there must be something wrong in the figures supplied by my hon. friend, because formerly the duty was 50 cents, and they paid the 50 cents because they could not get sufficient supplies in Canada. I am simply pointing this out to the minister because the matter is new to me, and as the industry employs about 125 people I thought it my duty to present the case as strongly as I could. If the minister is certain of his position—

Mr. DUNNING: I asked my office to have rates quoted to-day, and I was surprised to find the keen interest taken by the Canadian milling industry in the western trade.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 345, to amend the customs tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first and second times.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 309, to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—When new list of voters unnecessary.

Mr. KELLNER: Last year the committee reported that section 9 of the act should be struck out. The labour organizations are very much opposed to this particular section, and I think the hon. member for North Winnipeg intended to move that it be struck out. I do not know whether or not it appears in the present bill.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend is referring to a section of the Dominion Election Act which was not considered this year in the sittings of the committee.

Mr. KELLNER: That may be so.

Mr. POWER: It was discussed last year, but members of the committee which sat this year decided that the section to which my hon. friend refers should not be taken up in view of the fact that we barely had time to pass the amendments which were urgently needed in order to carry on the present election. I think it was clearly stated to the committee and to the subcommittee of which my hon. friend was a member that the amendments proposed in the fifth and final reports of the committee of last year could not be taken up this year. It was thought that legislation could not be put into effect if we were going to carry on with the bill and finish our business in connection with it in time to deal with matters which were probably of more importance, and matters which would directly affect the coming election. I may say to my hon. friend that that is the only reason why nothing was done in respect to section 9 of the present Dominion Elections Act. I think it is too late at this time to go into the matter he has suggested.

Section agreed to.

Sections 4 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. BENNETT. At the next sitting of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Put it through to-night.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I object; I have a good reason for delaying consideration until the next sitting.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 12.03 a.m. (Wednesday).

Wednesday, May 28, 1930.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the table report in accordance with the provisions of section 17 of the Old Age Pensions Act of the operation of the agreements made pursuant to the act and of the moneys of Canada paid to the provinces under each of the several agreements entered into pursuant thereto.

HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That the organization and establishment of the permanent positions on the staff of the House of Commons, as approved by the house on the 14th June, 1929, be amended as follows:

Committees and private legislation branch: for "4 committee clerks" substitute "5 committee clerks;" delete "1 clerk of petitions."

Debates reporting branch: for "three assistant parliamentary reporters" substitute "4 assistant parliamentary reporters;" add "1 assistant parliamentary reporter (French)."

Mr. SPEAKER: These appointments will be made by the Civil Service Commission under recommendation of the Board of Internal Economy.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER CORPORATION

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE BY MR. GARDINER RESPECTING REPORTED STATEMENT OF MR. SWEEZEY

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak to a question of privilege and to refer to certain statements reflecting on my honour and integrity both as a member of the house and as a private citizen, which are contained in a newspaper, the Toronto Daily Star. I hold in my hand a copy of the Toronto Daily Star of Friday, May 23, 1930. The heading of the article is as follows:

R. O. Sweezey Assails Beauharnois Attack. Electioneering Play, Power Head Styles Demand for Probe.

Special to The Star by Staff Reporter. Ottawa, May 23. In a statement to The Star to-day, R. O. Sweezey, president of the Beauharnois Power Corporation described the attack on Beauharnois in the house yesterday as a crude electioneering play that would deceive no honest or intelligent Canadian.

"I'm afraid," he said, "that Mr. Gardiner has been utterly deceived by a group who have confused him with a jumble of distorted facts and deliberate falsehoods. He has shown such utter disregard for the truth that I should scarcely know where to begin in an attempt to convince him that he has been led into a silly lot of misstatements.

Intelligent investors in this country, however, know full well that last night's kind of performance in parliament is usual on the eve of a general election.

I assure all fair-minded Canadians that our undertaking is sound, honest and sincere. Ninety-nine per cent of Beauharnois Power stock is owned in Canada by Canadians, and there are several thousand shareholders.

Personally, I am very busy with engineering development work, and would as soon try to explain the Einstein theory to an Eskimo as to enter into a controversy with some people."

In the first place I want to say that Mr. Sweezey's statement, as above reported, that I have been deceived by a group who have confused me by a jumble of distorted facts and deliberate falsehoods, is utterly untrue and without foundation in fact. I have not consulted nor have I been consulted by any group, either financial or political, in reference to the Beauharnois project, and the statements made by me in the house were the result of private investigations by myself and certain of my colleagues. His statement that this attack was purely "electioneering play" on my part is not only false but deliberately misleading.

I desire to enlighten him as to both the sources of my information and the reasons which prompted my bringing this matter to the attention of the house. In doing this I am also inspired with the desire to place the facts fairly and impartially before the house and the people of the Dominion of Canada, so that they will be able to decide impartially and fairly as to whether or not what I said in the house in connection with Mr. Sweezey and the Beauharnois project was justifiable or not. In view of the statement that Mr. Sweezey made in the dispatch just quoted, namely, that he does not know where to begin in denying my statements, I propose to give him an opportunity to start by going over the main points of last Thursday's discussion in the house.

The order in council dated Friday, March 8, 1929, P.C. 422, is authority for the statement made in the house respecting the incorporation of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, as well as authority for the statement made in connection with the securing of the lease from the province of Quebec and the application made by the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, for approval of its plans by the Dominion government. Surely Mr. Sweezey does not hope successfully to deny the facts mentioned in this order in council, although these are the very facts that are denied by him in the newspaper despatch above indicated. Apparently his conception of the mentality of the members of the house and of the Canadian people is not very flattering, but it is quite consistent when one realizes what he has attempted to perpetrate upon an unsuspecting public. My statement that the Robert interests had to be acquired is founded upon a statement found in a letter signed by Mr. Sweezey himself and addressed to Mr. J. Alderic Raymond, brother of Senator Donat Raymond and the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Raymond). I placed that letter on Hansard last Thursday and hon. members may read it there so that the time of the house may be saved. Further Mr. Sweezey has admitted under oath that he personally purchased the Robert interests referred to in this letter, which interests were essential to this undertaking. If Mr. Sweezey has forgotten about giving such evidence under oath, he can refresh his memory by reference to a transcript of the evidence given by him in connection with this matter.

The statements made in the house that the company was over-capitalized are based on statements contained in a document called "A Statement in Lieu of Prospectus," which was prepared and issued by the Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, of which he is now president, and filed in the office of the Secretary of State, Ottawa. I have the statement under my hand and I propose to take the time of the house to put it on Hansard in order that hon. members may know that when I was dealing with the capitalization of this company last Thursday I was taking the facts from the statement of the company itself. It is headed first of all, "Dominion." Then "The Companies Act." It continues:

Statement in Lieu of Prospectus
Filed by Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited

Pursuant to section 52 of The Companies' Act presented for filing by McGiverin, Haydon & Ebbs.

1. The nominal share capital of the company.

Five management preferred shares without nominal or par value;

1,799,995 class A common shares without nominal or par value;

3,200,000 class B non-voting common shares, without nominal or par value.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Provided, however, that the said shares without any nominal or par value may be issued for such consideration as may from time to time be fixed by resolution of the board of directors of the company, not exceeding in the aggregate the sum of $50,000,000, or such greater amount as the directors may deem expedient and as shall be authorized from time to time by the Secretary of State of Canada.

2. Divided into—

(See answer to one above.)

3. Names, description and addresses of directors or proposed directors.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the statement which was filed in the office of the Secretary of State in lieu of a prospectus of this company. It sets out very clearly the claim which I made last Thursday when I dealt with the capitalization of the company.

The valuation of the shares of this corporation is fully dealt with in a statement described as an "Analytical study of values of the Beauharnois Corporation" by Robert Dodd and Company, Incorporated, dated March 31, 1930, which gives the value of the class A and class B shares at the end of a five-year period This valuation is based on an earning power of $4.25 a share. The study goes further and states at the end of a ten-year period these shares will earn around $10 per share, so that the value of the shares will then be in the neighbourhood of $141 per share. All that is fully and carefully explained.

I hold in my hand a document issued by the Robert Dodd and Company Incorporated, investment bankers, Royal Bank building, Montreal. It is headed "Beauharnois Power Corporation—A comprehensive analytical study of values." I quote one paragraph:

Over $4 per Share

It will be observed that our analysis discusses in circumstantial detail the expectations of this 30-year bond-share-warrant investment over a five year period, when 1,000,000 h.p. should be in operation; and we show with that production unit, which is 50 per cent of the final objective, an earning power equal to slightly over $4 a share on the combined common stock outstanding.

With this $4.25 per share earning power on half the projected development, we believe a price of $60 for the stock to be quite conservative, without giving consideration to the investment momentum which will gather force when the public realize the company's industry—building characteristics in the territory adjacent to the Beauharnois operations.

We also give due consideration to the fact that it will be several years before dividends are declared, but in that respect it is well known that market increment does not wait for dividend declarations—and precedent tells us that prospective discounting of events is the astute investor's road to Eldorado.

The following tabulation considers the prospective market equity of the 30-year bond and its share attachments, if all securities, bond and shares, are held for permanent investment at a market price of, say, $60 a share for the common stock.

|---|---|
| A $1,000 bond cost.. .. .. .. .. ..$ | 1,000 |
| 5 shares valued at $60.. .. .. .. | 300 |
| Increment on 20 shares at $25.. .. | 500 |
| Market value of the $1,000 investment.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. ..$ | 1,800 |

On this tabular calculation, we find what is equal to an 80 per cent increase in the capital investment, on a bond which returns a regular 6 per cent yield during the entire period of increment growth.

Then we have another paragraph, Mr. Speaker, that is important:

[Mr. Gardiner.]

As we have shown in this analytic study, there is every reason to anticipate the progressive sale of the total projected 2,000,000 horse-power, as and even before each 500,000 units is completed. Therefore, we would estimate, within ten years, an annual gross revenue of at least $40,000,000. This will entail a mortgage capitalization of well under $200,000,000, which, at, say, the high average of 6 per cent, would require $12,000,000 as fixed charges, with $4,000,000 of over-all operating costs, resulting in a net surplus of $24,000,000, equal to $10 a share on the combined "A" and "B" stock.

While it is perfectly true that this analytical study is not an official publication by Mr. Sweezey, the fact nevertheless remains that in a prospectus issued by the same Robert Dodd & Company Incorporated, and which is signed by Mr Sweezey himself, the value of "B non-voting shares" is fixed at $35 a share and the bondholders are given the privilege of purchasing class B shares at that figure.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Is an hon. member allowed to bring up a question again that has already been debated on a motion for adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance? This is not a question of privilege; it is a question of special privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is a question of privilege and Bourinot says at page 303:

In the Canadian house questions of privilege take a wide range, but it may be stated in general terms that they refer to all matters affecting the rights and immunities of the house collectively, or to the position and conduct of members in their representative character. In this category may be placed: motions touching the seat or election of members; reflections or libels in books and newspapers on the house or members thereof, or any of its committees; forgery of signatures to petitions; motions for new writs; questions affecting the internal economy or proceedings of the house;

Bourinot says also that great latitude is given in the house when the question of privilege is raised. But the question of libel should be dealt with in a brief way so as not to take up the time of the house unduly. The moment the hon. gentleman has denied the statement and explained why it is not true according to his own interpretation he should not proceed much further. I understand the hon. gentleman is practically through.

Mr. GARDINER: Not quite, Mr. Speaker, I will not take very many more minutes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Very well.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, it is rather remarkable that any hon. member should question my right after I had read this statement in the press despatch:

"I am afraid," he said,—

That is, Mr. Sweezey.

—"that Mr. Gardiner has been utterly deceived by a group who have confused him with a jumble of distorted facts and deliberate falsehoods."

I am trying to show, Mr. Speaker, that every word I said was absolutely true, and I am going to proceed. The prospectus is so worded that one is forced to the conclusion that the bondholders are getting more or less favoured treatment in respect to class B shares, and that if the general public were allowed to purchase them $60 would likely be the amount that would be asked for them.

The charge made in the house that this company was violating the terms of its lease and order in council is founded on and substantiated by the prospectuses signed by Mr. Sweezey and issued by Wood, Gundy & Company Limited, Dominion Securities Corporation Limited, Robert Dodd & Company Incorporated, and a number of other brokerage houses both in Canada and in the United States.

In these prospectuses it is made perfectly clear that the plans of the company make provision to take the whole flow of the river through the company's canal and that work is being done under these plans with that end in view and money being spent therefor. All clearly in violation of the terms of its lease and of the order in council.

I have in my hand a copy of this prospectus issued by Robert Dodd & Company Incorporated, investment bankers, the Royal Bank Building, Montreal. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that it is getting late in the session and desirable that the house should conclude its business as soon as possible. Therefore if I have the permission of the house I will not read the prospectus, but if I have not that permission, then I must proceed to read it, because in it is contained many of the allegations which I made last Thursday, and I am here, sir, to protect my honour. May I have the permission of the house to file this with Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think in view of the position occupied by the hon. gentleman as the leader of an important group he should be allowed to place the statement on Hansard. It will save time also.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

(Closed Issue)

Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited

(to own and control Beauharnois Light, Heat, and Power Company and other subsidiary companies which are proceeding with the installation of 500,000 horse power on the St. Lawrence River.)

Thirty-year 6% Collateral Trust Sinking Fund Bonds

With Stock Bonus Delivery Warrants and Stock Purchase warrants attached

To be dated October 1, 1929.

To be due October 1, 1959.

Principal and semi-annual interest (April 1 and October 1) payable at the holder's option in lawful Money of Canada at any branch of the Bank of Montreal in Canada (Yukon Territory excepted) or in the United States gold coin of or equal to the present standard of weight and fineness, at the agency of the said Bank in New York City, or in sterling at the fixed rate of $4.86\frac{2}{3}$ to the pound, at the chief office of the said Bank in London, England. Redeemable at any time in whole or in part for Sinking Fund or otherwise, at the option of the Corporation, on sixty days' notice at 103%, to and including October 1, 1934; and thereafter, prior to maturity at 103%, less one-half of one per cent for each five years or part thereof elapsed since October 1, 1934, and in each case with accrued interest to the date of redemption. Coupon Bonds registerable as to principal only in denominations of $1,000, $500 and $100. Fully Registered Bonds in denominations of $1,000 and authorized multiples thereof.

Trustee: The Royal Trust Company, Montreal.

Stock Bonus Delivery Warrant

Attached to each Bond will be a stock Bonus Delivery Warrant conferring the right to receive on or after October 1, 1932 (or such earlier date as may be notified in the manner to be stated in the Warrant) from the Royal Trust Company, Montreal, without payment, on surrender of such Warrant, fully paid Class A Common Shares (no par value) of Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, on the basis of five such shares in respect of each One thousand dollars ($1,000) of Collateral Trust Bonds. Such Warrant will be non-detachable otherwise than by the Trust Company at the time of its surrender, except in the event of the Bond being redeemed, in which case the Warrant will be detachable by the Trust Company, remain in force and confer the right to receive shares as above set out. Fractions of shares will be adjusted at time of exercise of the Warrant, at market prices. All as will be more fully set out in the Stock Bonus Delivery Warrant.

Stock Purchase Warrant

There will also be attached to each Bond a Stock Purchase Warrant conferring the right on surrender of such warrant to the Trustee at any time on or after October 1, 1932 (or such earlier date as may be notified in the manner to be stated in the Warrant) but not later than October 1, 1937, to purchase at $35 per share, fully paid Class B Non-Voting Common Shares (no par value) of Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, on the basis of twenty such shares in respect of each One thousand dollars ($1,000) of Collateral Trust Bonds. Such Warrant will be non-detachable (otherwise than by the Trustee at the time of its surrender) except in the event of the Bond being redeemed, in which case it will be detachable by the Trustee and remain in force until October 1, 1937.

In the event of provision for distribution of its assets as an entirety or substantially as an entirety, sixty days' notice may be given by the Corporation within which the stock purchase right conferred by the Warrant may be exercised, and on the termination of such notice such right shall cease. But any Class B Common Shares so purchased on or before such termination shall be entitled to participate in such distribution of assets. The Corporation reserves the right to increase the amount of its authorized or outstanding shares and otherwise change its capital structure, but in the event of subdivision or consolidation of its Class B Common Shares, or their conversion into shares of another kind, the rights conferred by the Warrant will be correspondingly adjusted. All as will be more fully set out in the Stock Purchase Warrant.

These Bonds are offered for sale when, as and if issued and received by us and subject to the approval of Messrs. Meredith, Holden, Heward & Holden, on behalf of the Corporation, and Messrs. Blake, Lash, Anglin & Cassels on behalf of the Bankers, as to the incorporation and organization of the Corporation, the issue of its stock and the creation and issue of the Bonds, and of Aimé Geoffrion, Esq., K.C., as to the franchise and water rights of Beauharnois Light, Heat & Power Company and the contracts for sale of power already entered into by it.

Price: 100 and accrued interest

Letterhead—Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited

Montreal, December 2, 1929

Newman, Sweezey & Company, Limited,
The Dominion Securities Corporation, Limited,
Wood, Gundy & Company, Limited.

Dear Sirs:

Referring to the purchase of $30,000,000 Thirty-year 6% Collateral Trust Sinking Fund Bonds of Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited, I give you the following information:

Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited has been incorporated under the laws of the Dominion of Canada and is to own or control all the outstanding shares of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company (which is carrying on the Beauharnois hydro-electric development) and of its associated companies, Beauharnois Land Company, Beauharnois Transmission Company and Beauharnois Construction Company.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company

Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company has acquired under a lease from the Province of Quebec extending to the year 2003, and under authorization from the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Quebec, water power rights on the St. Lawrence River about twenty-five miles above the City of Montreal. Its power house, in which it is proposed to install equipment capable of producing 500,000 horse power, will be west of the Town of Beauharnois, on Lake St. Louis. This development involves the construction of a canal approximately fifteen miles in length to the south of the River St. Lawrence, running from Lake St. Francis to Lake St. Louis. Complying with the conditions imposed by the Dominion Government, the canal has been designed so that if the St. Lawrence Deep Waterways project is proceeded with, the canal can be used jointly for navigation and power purposes. In addition to the above water power rights the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company has entered into a contract with Montreal Cotton Company providing for the acquisition of the latter's rights to divert water for power purposes from the St. Lawrence River at Lake St. Francis. In the opinion of the Company's engineers, the water available from the above sources when diverted through the canal will generate 500,000 horse power equivalent to 7,500,000 kilowatt hours per day. Between Lake St. Francis and Lake St. Louis the St. Lawrence River drops eighty-three feet in a series of rapids, making this section of the River one of the most important water power sites in Canada, being capable of developing about 2,000,000 horse power. The average low water flow of the River through this section is approximately 220,000 cubic feet per second. Of this flow approximately 120,000 cubic feet per second is presently allotted to power developments, which amount includes the quantity allocated to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company. It is estimated that the unallocated balance of about 100,000 cubic feet per second, if passed through the Company's canal, would permit installation of approximately 1,000,000 additional horse power. The Company's proposed development, in the opinion of its engineers, is the most efficient method of utilizing the entire drop in this section of the River. In view of the above provision is made in the plans and considerable work is now being done with a view to installing further units if additional water becomes available. After the completion of the present 500,000 horse power installation it is estimated that further units can be installed at an average cost of less than $65 per horse power. The present plans contemplate that 200,000 horse power will be available by October 1, 1932, at which time the Company will commence delivering the first blocks of power under contracts already entered into, and that the total of 500,000 horse power will be available by October 1, 1935.

Engineering

The plans and estimates of the present development have been prepared or approved by the following engineers on behalf of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company.

Frederick Baylis Brown, Esq., Montreal, Que.
Thomas H. Hogg, Esq., Toronto, Ont.
William S. Lee, Esq., New York City.

These plans and estimates have been concurred in by Albert S. Crane, Esq., consulting engineer of New York City, acting on behalf of the Bankers.

Capitalization

Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited
(Upon completion of present financing)

| | Authorized | To be issued |
|---|---|---|
| Collateral Trust Bonds (this issue) | $30,000,000 | $30,000,000 |
| Management Preferred Shares (no par value) | 5 shares | 5 shares |
| Class A Common Shares (no par value) | 1,799,995 shares | 1,791,000 shares |
| Class B Non-Voting Common Shares (no par value) | *3,200,000 shares | None |

*600,000 Class B Non Voting Common Shares to be available for purchase under Stock Purchase Warrants attached to the Bonds.

The Management Preferred Shares above mentioned confer on the holders the exclusive right for a period of ten years from September 17, 1929, to elect and remove the Directors of the Corporation and otherwise confer in respect thereof the same rights as if each Management Preferred Share were a Class A Common Share. The Management Preferred Shares at the end of the ten-year period will automatically be converted into Class A Common Shares, but, with the consent of all the holders thereof, may be so converted prior to that time. These shares have been provided to ensure continuity of direction and policy during the important initial period covering the construction and early operation of the development of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, and will be held between Hon. W. L. McDougald, M.D.; R. O. Sweezey, Esq.; and A. F. White, Esq.

Class B Non-Voting Common Shares do not carry the right to attend or vote at meetings, but otherwise are entitled to the same righs as Class A Common Shares in all respects.

Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company

Proposed Bond Issue

It is proposed that Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company shall issue in due course bonds, debentures or other securities in such principal amounts (estimated at $50,000,000) as its Directors may from time to time consider sufficient, together with the monies made available to it from the proceeds of the Collateral Trust Bonds, to complete the installation of five hundred thousand (500,000) horse power. The above-mentionned bonds, debentures or other securities will not constitute a closed issue and the Company will be permitted to issue further securities as more specifically set out below.

Power Contracts

Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company has entered into contracts extending beyond the maturity of these Bonds with The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario for the sale of 250,000 horse power and with Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated for the sale of 150,000 horse power. The first blocks of power under these contracts are to be taken on October 1, 1932, with increasing quantities each year, the full amount to be taken at the end of five years. From past experience it is anticipated that, owing to the rapidly increasing demand for power, the entire amount of power deliverable under the above contracts will be required well before the end of the five-year period. These two contracts dispose of 400,000 horse power of the 500,000 horse power now being installed, and it is expected that the balance of available power will be under contract before the plant is completed. The construction plans for the development have been prepared with a view to making available in the most economical manner the amount of power estimated to be required each year.

Earnings

|---|---|
| It is estimated by the engineers of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company that upon the sale and delivery of the 500,000 horse power now being installed, the consolidated annual earnings of Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited and its Subsidiary companies (after providing for all operating expenses) available for interest and Sinking Fund on the First Mortgage Bonds of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and on these Collateral Trust Bonds will amount to over. | $6,200,000 |
| It is estimated that annual interest and sinking fund requirements on the securities of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company expected to be issued in connection with completion of the 500,000 horse power, now being installed, will be.. .. | $2,750,000 |
| Balance available for annual interest and sinking fund on these Collateral Trust Bonds.. .. .. .. .. | $3,450,000 |
| Annual interest and sinking fund requirements on these Collateral Trust Bonds.. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $1,950,000 |

The revenue from the sale and delivery of 400,000 horse power now contracted for by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario and Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated, will be more than sufficient to pay all estimated operating expenses of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, interest and sinking fund on the First Mortgage Bonds of the Company expected to be issued in connection with the installation of 500,000 horse power as set out above, and interest and sinking fund on these Collateral Trust Bonds.

Security

The Collateral Trust Bonds are to be secured by a first fixed and specific charge on all the shares at any time outstanding of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Beauharnois Construction Company, Beauharnois Land Company and Beauharnois Transmission Company, on any shares of any other corporation acquired with the proceeds of the Collateral Trust Bonds, and on the principal of all indebtedness in favour of the Corporation arising from the application of the proceeds of the bonds, and also by a first floating charge on the undertaking, property and assets, present and future, of the Corporation. The first fixed and specific charge on the shares of such companies is not to prevent the issue by any of such companies of bonds, debentures or other securities or other evidences of indebtedness, but the issue of such bonds, debentures or other securities by Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company is to be permitted only:

(a) to such principal amounts (estimated at $50,000,000) as its Directors may from time to time consider sufficient, together with the monies made available to it from the proceeds of the Collateral Trust Bonds, to complete the installation of 500,000 horse power; and

(b) to an additional principal amount equal to the cost or estimated cost (including interest charges, taxes during construction and discount on securities) of the installation or proposed installation of additional horse power and/or of the acquisition or proposed acquisition of rights and other property in connection therewith, provided that the total principal amount of such securities at any time outstanding in respect of such additional horse power shall not exceed in the aggregate $100 for each additional horse power installed or proposed to be installed; and

(c) to an additional principal amount equal to not over seventy-five per cent (75%) of the cost (as above defined) of any other rights and other property acquired or constructed or contracted to be acquired or constructed by or on behalf of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company in connection with its business;

Provided that Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company may borrow from and give security to banks, may give purchase money, mortgages, and may incur unsecured indebtedness, all in the ordinary course of business, and may borrow from and give security to Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited.

Such securities of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company may be issued from time to time in such series, made payable in such currencies and places, on such date or dates and with such rates of interest and carrying such sinking fund, conversion, redemption and other provisions as its Directors may from time to time determine.

All as will be more fully defined in the Instruments securing such bonds, debentures or other securities.

Sinking Fund

The Trust Deed securing the Collateral Trust Bonds will provide for an annual cumulative Sinking Fund, commencing in the year 1940, under which on or before October 1 of each year from 1940 to 1958, inclusive, payments of not less than $150,000 will be made, together with a sum equal to the annual interest which would have been payable on all Bonds previously retired through the operation of the Sinking Fund had such Bonds remained outstanding. This Sinking Found is to be used for the purpose of retiring Bonds of this issue by purchase at or below redemption prices, failing which Bonds will be redeemed by lot. All as will be more fully set out in the Trust Deed securing this issue.

Proceeds of Issue

The entire proceeds of the Collateral Trust Bonds will be deposited with the Trustee to be released to or to the order of the Corporation in accordance with the provisions of the Trust Deed securing this issue, and will be used by the Corporation for the acquisition of the undertaking and assets of The Beauharnois Power Syndicate (including the whole of the issued stock of Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company), for proceeding directly or through subsidiaries with the construction of the Beauharnois power development, with the acquisition of rights and other property in connection with the project and for other corporate purposes.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Board of Directors

The Board of Directors will include

President Beauharnois Power Corporation Limited.

The charge that the government disregarded the recommendations made unanimously by the joint board of engineers is founded on the fact that if the recommendations of the joint board of engineers had been followed the canal would be located in an entirely different place to where it is now being dug.

May I here point out for the benefit of the honourable members of this house and of the people of the Dominion that the recommendation of the joint board of engineers in connection with this matter is contained on pages 36, 37 and 38 of their report. With the permission of the house I will quote section 175 of the main report of the joint board as found on page 38 thereof:

175. Conclusions—The board unites in the view that the navigation improvement combined with the progressive development of power (paragraphs 162 to 169) hereinbefore set forth better provides for the present and future development of the waterway than any scheme for navigation alone, and is therefore the disirable scheme, if arrangements are made whereby power interests bear a fair proportion of the cost of the initial expenditure required.

The plan outlined in paragraphs 162 to 169 mentioned in the above paragraph is an entirely different plan to that proposed by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and approved of by the government. It will be clearly seen that the plan recommended by the joint board is a plan in which navigation and power are combined and their report on that situation is unanimous. It is true, however, that where navigation alone was considered the board was unable to agree on a plan. The majority of the Canadian section favoured the development of the south shore of the St. Lawrence river, a plan similar to the Beauharnois project, but it must be recalled that the other members of the Canadian board and the United States section recommended a different plan. But the fact nevertheless remains that when that power and navigation were combined the joint board of engineers were unanimous in recommending a plan entirely different to the Beauharnois plan and the government in approving of the Beauharnois plan did not accept the recommendations of the Joint Board of Engineers.

The charge made in the house that Sweezey and his associates were guilty of fraud and should be prosecuted under the criminal code have their foundation in the fact that the above advertising is not in accordance with the facts. According to the statements of Mr. King and Mr. Bennett there is no agreement between either the Liberal or the Conservative parties and Mr. Sweezey and his associates which justifies the statements over the signature of Mr. Sweezey himself that the company will secure the whole flow of the river and as a result of which people are being induced to invest in this undertaking. That Frank P. Jones was connected with this company as a director and is now no longer one is established by reference to the returns made by the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company to the Provincial Secretary of the province of Quebec. The figures for the cost of this undertaking were secured from a report made to the corporation by Frederick Bayliss Brown, consulting engineer, and verified by W. S. Lee and T. H. Hogg, two other eminent engineers, and which report is on file with the Minister of Public Works at Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, I have covered the main points of the statement made in the House of Commons on Thursday last in connection with the Beauharnois project. These sources are official, some of them are over the signature of Mr. Sweezey himself and some in documents which, while not signed by the corporation, are nevertheless authoritative inasmuch as Mr. Sweezey has not repudiated the statements contained therein but rather has confirmed them by other documents over his own signature. Mr. Sweezey cannot deny successfully the truth of these statements. In fact his reported denial is in keeping with his whole disgraceful conduct in connection with this vast project. Deceit and duplicity amounting to fraud mark his every step in the handling of this affair. If Mr. Sweezey, as he says in the article in The Star "scarcely knows where to begin to convince me that I have been led into a silly lot of misstatements" I would suggest that he start at the beginning and tell the whole story of this outrageous affair. He can do this in no better way than to ask the government for a judicial investigation, a request in which no doubt he will be joined by Senators McDougald, Haydon and Raymond. If he does, I shall facilitate him in every way as far as it lies within my power.

I repeat that I was not acting on behalf of any group, nor had I the interests of any individual or group of individuals when I brought this matter before the house originally, or in discussing it to-day. If it were not for the fact that the house desires to prorogue at the earliest possible date, it would be my duty to ask leave to bring Mr. Sweezey before the bar of this house to answer for his wholly unwarranted, false and insulting reference to myself and to the other members who took part in the discussion in the house on Thursday last. The honour of this house has been impunged by Mr. Sweezey and I would respectfully suggest that when the house reassembles at the next session, appropriate proceedings be taken to summons Mr. Sweezey before the bar of this house to answer for his conduct.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On basis of present population, $738,816.66. As population increases, the amount paid in respect of per capita grant will increase. The grant for government and legislation also will increase from $190,0000 to $220,000 when population exceeds 800,000, and to $240,000 when population exceeds 1,500,000.

IMMIGRATION INTO PALESTINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question in his capacity of Minister of External Affairs:

In view of the fact that Canada is a member of the council of the League of Nations and a signatory to the treaty of Versailles, and that the mandate over Palestine was conferred on Great Britain to be exercised as a trust under the supervision of the League of Nations, was the government of Canada consulted with regard to the recent stoppage of immigration into Palestine, or has this government taken steps to inquire into the causes of such action on the part of the government of Great Britain, or, if not, will it undertake to do so?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend was kind enough to acquaint me with the fact that he was going to ask this question, and I am prepared at this time to answer it.

Under the rules laid down by the League of Nations for the regulation of mandated territories it is not customary for the mandatory power to bring any question of administration before the council or before individual members of the council, and the question referred to, the restriction of immigration into Palestine, has accordingly not been brought to the attention of the Canadian government. Provision is made for periodic review of the administration of the mandatory power by the organ of the league, the Mandates Commission, before which this question will doubtless come in due course.

"PATRONAGE" SOUTH ESSEX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. C. GOTT (Essex): The Prime Minister does not always answer his questions so fully as he has answered the present one. I had a question on the order paper the other day concerning patronage in South Essex, and the right hon. gentleman did not give it such full consideration.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

MABOU HARBOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. I. D. MACDOUGALL (Inverness): I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) when I may expect a return which I asked for in connection with dredging at Mabou harbour.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): In reply to my hon. friend may I say that I think the return is now ready; I may be able to table it to-day.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I would like to have it.

FISHWAYS IN DAMS

Hon. W. A. BLACK (Halifax): May I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) when I may expect an answer to an order for a return which was placed on the order paper on May 5th? On Saturday, May 24th, I called the attention of the minister to the fact that an answer had not yet been given.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): The report has been sent to the Department of the Secretary of State.

CHINESE EMPLOYED ON BESCO SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I would ask the Acting Minister of Immigration (Mr Stewart, Edmonton) to make a statement in regard to the fact that it is rumoured that Chinese are being employed in the coal carrying vessels running between Montreal and Sydney.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration): I have not received an answer to my investigation, but I shall answer the question of the hon. gentleman as soon as I can.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill No. 311, to amend the Special War Revenue Act, do now pass and that the title be as on the order paper.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT: Will the hon. gentleman supply me with the information for which I asked?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): My hon. friend asked for certain information regarding a legal action brought by the department against the brokerage firm of Miller, Court and Company of the city of Vancouver. Action was brought by the department on account of a denial by the firm in question of the constitutionality of the law under which they were taxed in connection with transfer taxes. The action was tried before the senior magistrate and judgment was given in favour of the department, and a fine of $100 imposed. No mention was made of costs. An appeal was entered, and it was tried before the supreme court of British Columbia, and on that appeal the finding of the magistrate was sustained. Again no mention was made of costs.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General) moved the third reading of Bill No. 309, to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move in amendment that section 9 of the said act be repealed. I may say that this section relates to contributions for political purposes, and is as follows:

> No unincorported company or association and no incorporated company or association other than one incorporated for political purposes alone shall, directly or indirectly, contribute, loan, advance, pay, or promise or offer to pay any money or its equivalent to, or for, or in aid of, any candidate at an election, or to or for, or in aid of, any political party, committee or association, or to or for, or in aid of, any company incorporated for political purposes, or to, or for, or in furtherance of, any political purpose whatever, or for the indemnification or reimbursement of any person for moneys so used.

Subsection 2 of that section deals with the officers liable to punishment for violation of the above subsection. Last year the committee dealing with this matter made the recommendation that this section be repealed. Section 4 of the report brought in on Wednesday, June 5, 1929, according to the votes and proceedings, contains the recommendation that the said act be amended by repealing section 9 thereof. As I understand the matter, when the committee met this year there were some matters that were not dealt with which were in the recommendation of last year, this being one of them.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that for some years labour bodies all over this country have protested against this section. It is quite easy for great corporations to hide their contributions to campaign funds, and undoubtedly great corporations do contribute to campaign funds in spite of this section. However, this section works a very great hardship on the labour movement in Canada in that it effectively prevents any labour union from contributing to campaign funds. We do not believe this is fair. When the trades unions undertake to contribute to campaign funds, using their money for this purpose in a perfectly open way, it seems only right that they should be permitted to do so.

I think a great many members on both sides of the house will realize the justice of such action as I am proposing. Several years ago we had this matter before the house as an amendment, and the amendment to repeal this section received a very great deal of support in the house. I do not wish to precipitate a debate at this time, but I would hope that in view of the fact that the whole question has been considered several times by this house, and further that it was recommended last year by the committee, the house might accept my amendment to-day.

Mr. CANNON: Mr. Speaker, as was said last night by the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), this amendment was recommended to the house last year in the fifth report of the committee. This year, in view of special circumstances, the committee agreed that the amendments which were contained in that report were not to be pressed this year, and that only the amendments which were necessary and required to meet the conditions of the coming election would be brought down. That was agreed upon, and the legislation was introduced by the government along the lines of the report unanimously brought in.

As my hon. friend has said, this amendment was recommended by the committee last year. I have no objection to the amendment, except that perhaps the members of the committee would rather have the matter referred back, which would involve some delay.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I just say that the Labour group in the house as such was not of sufficient strength to have its own representative on the committee. We could not make any direct representations, but this is a matter which affects us in this immediate election just as much as some other matters which were before the committee, and if the chairman of the committee has no strenuous objection it would seem to me the most direct way to let the amendment go through now without referring the matter back.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I may say this, that as chairman of the committee I have no greater authority than any other member of the committee. I presume in this house to be only the spokesman for the committee, and my duty is to lay before the house, in case a question comes up, what were the views of the committee on matters which were brought before it.

In this particular instance, last year in the report it was decided to abrogate section 9 of the Dominion Elections Act. The report was laid on the table here, and it was decided not to act upon it during the course of last session. During the course of this session a great deal of time was taken up by discussion of other matters. At the last meeting the general committee came to the conclusion that it was not expedient at this session of parliament to consider even the amendments which had been adopted last year, so that no debate or discussion took place on the particular suggestion of my hon. friend.

May I say that in the committee of 1929 there was considerable discussion just on this very point, and I might go further and say that some of the members who at one time or another have been most emphatic in their condemnation of this section were not quite so sure last year that it should be taken from the act. In fact, though it was incorporated in the report, it was not by any means the definite conclusion of the committee that this section should be taken out. I am going to give my own personal opinion, which is that had the members of the committee been perfectly sure that legislation was to be enacted in the sense of taking section 9 out of the act at the last session of parliament, there would have been very much more difficulty in having such a suggestion placed in the report. The very persons, as I said before, who have discussed this matter most frequently, are not quite sure that the repeal will save the purpose which they intended it should serve.

Under the circumstances, though I personally have not the slightest objection nor do I know that any member of the committee has any objection, I believe that unless the matter is further discussed and further studied it would be well for us not to take any action upon this suggestion during this session

Mr. D. F. KELLNER (Athabaska): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that there were amendments moved to that section last year in committee but that the amendments were struck out. I do not think there is any doubt in the world that the committee, after careful consideration, thought this section should be removed from the act This session, unfortunately, we never reached the amendment. If it is going to materially affect the time when the election shall be held or anything like that it might be all right to leave it, but if it can be struck out and if there is no objection from the other members—and I doubt very much if there is—we might very well indeed strike out this section.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. member is asking for my personal opinion, I am absolutely of opinion that it should be struck out, but I am not now speaking for the members of the committee when I say that.

Mr. CANNON: I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment should be redrafted.

Mr. BENNETT: The bill will have to be recommitted.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understand the Solicitor General accepts this amendment?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes, but the Solicitor General would not violate the standing orders of the house.

Mr. CANNON: I have no objection to the amendment provided it is adopted in accordance with the rules of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill should be ordered to be reported back to the committee and there to be amended in the way suggested by the hon. member. Shall I draft the amendment accordingly? It is moved by Mr. Woodsworth, seconded by Mr. Heaps, that the said bill be not now read a third time but be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions to add a clause providing for the repeal of section 9 of the Dominion Elections Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Woodsworth moves that section 9 of the Dominion Elections Act be repealed as a new clause to Bill No. 309. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNUNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 310, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: There was one clause regarding charities which was allowed to stand.

Mr. EULER: Subsection (j) of section 3 was allowed to stand in order that some decision might be arrived at to widen the exemptions from income tax. The government felt at the time that the exemptions allowed for donations to schools, hospitals, universities and churches went far enough, but during the discussion we realized that there was a great deal to be said for the arguments advanced that this clause might be broadened out in so far as the federated charities, the Red Cross and other organizations were concerned, and we decided that it would be desirable that this clause should be broadened out to that extent. We did not feel that there could be included in this clause definite reference to such organizations as the federated charities and the Red Cross, because we knew that protests would be coming in such as were presented yesterday. In casting about for some phrase which would make this clause as broad as possible, we decided on the phrase "charitable organization," and I propose to move the following amendment:

That section 3 (j) be amended by striking out the words "any church, university, college, school or hospital" in lines 24 and 25, and substituting therefor the words "any charitable organization."

Objections might be raised that the words "charitable organization" would not cover such institutions as churches, universities, schools and so on but I think the hon. leader of the opposition is familiar with Halsbury's Laws of England in which Charities are discussed as follows:

Only those purposes are charitable in the eye of the law which are of a public nature, whose object, that is to say, is to benefit the community or some part of it, not merely particular individuals pointed out by the donor.

Accordingly gifts which are directed to the abstract purposes of relieving poverty, advancing education or religion, are charitable.

A bequest for the relief of such poor persons as the testator's trustees may choose is charitable, but not where the choice is to be made from a number of named individuals.

"Charity" in its legal sense comprises four pricipal divisions: trusts for the relief of poverty, trusts for the advancement of education, trusts for the advancement of religion, and trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community not falling under any of the preceding heads. Within one of these divisions all charities to be administered by the court must fall, though every object which might be brought within one of them is not necessarily a charity.

I submit that this phrase embraces every organization of this kind. The section will then read as follows:

not more than ten per centum of the net taxable income of any taxpayer which has been actually paid by way of donation within the taxation period to, and receipted for as such by any charitable organization in Canada operated exclusively as such and not operated for the benefit or private gain or profit of any person, member or shareholder thereof.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to congratulate the hon. minister upon having introduced this amendment. I had an opportunity of looking into the authorities after the sitting of last evening and I am satisfied that the term "charitable organization" covers every species of benevolence that any citizen of Canada may desire to indulge in. The limitation not to exceed 10 per cent of the taxable income protects the government and enables the broadest field of choice to the individual who may desire to utilize 10 per cent of his earnings for the benefit of charitable purposes. In fact, the word " charitable" is so broad that there is no field of human endeavour which he may desire to assist that is not open to him.

Mr. EULER: This is going to give us a lot of work.

Mr. BENNETT: I think not.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: Before the bill passes, I do not presume to request an amendment to clause 3, but I should like to direct the attention of the minister to a fact that should, I think, call for an amendment at some future time. I am not referring to my own particular circumstances, although I have two families of grandchildren dependent upon me. But it has come to my notice that there is a very considerable number of cases in which the father of a family has been killed in the war or has died on account of wounds suffered during the war, and as a result the grandparent has been called upon to provide for young and growing families. Under those circumstances I think the grandparent is equally entitled to and should be allowed the same exemption of $500 as is allowed in the case of an individual who is supporting a parent, grandparent, brother or sister incapable of self-support on account of mental or physical infirmity I know of some other cases, in which, owing to war service, young men have become not only physically but mentally incapacitated and where the pension tendered in such case by the pension board is utterly inadequate to provide properly for their children's care. I think there should be some exemption when a grand-parent is called upon to make provision for grandchildren who are suffering under such circumstances.

Mr. EULER: I should like to congratulate my hon friend upon not pressing the matter at this time. Further consideration may be given to it on another occasion when the act is being amended.

Section 3 as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No 345, to amend the customs tariff.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: I find the bill is not yet ready.

Progress reported.

BOUNTY ON COAL

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 312, to place Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron or steel on a basis of equality with imported coal.

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, before the motion for the second reading of this bill is passed, I desire to say a few words in regard to it along the lines of my remarks when the resolution was before the house. I do not intend, however, to repeat what I said at that time. I may point out now that the bill as introduced is somewhat different from the resolution and no doubt clause 2 of the bill was introduced for the purpose of defeating the amendment that I moved when the resolution was before the house. As hon. members are aware, the bill provides for the payment of a bonus to the steel company of fifty cents a ton on every ton of coal used in the manufacture of steel. The object of my amendment was that the money so paid to the company should find its way into the wage envelopes of the workmen. Clause 2 of the bill was evidently framed for the purpose of defeating that amendment. It is nothing more nor less than camouflage. It is in exactly the same position as the coke oven legislation which was introduced by the government some two or three years ago and which was held out by the government as tending to implement the recommendations of the Dnucan report regarding the establishment of coking plants in different parts of Canada. Clause 2 means shortly that the company will receive the money and may do with it what it pleases. If there is a law in the province of Nova Scotia and the company does not comply with it, then this government may withhold the payment of the bounty. Now there is no eight hour law in the province of Nova Scotia. Hon. members of this house attach great importance to this eight hour law. I may say that for the men employed in the steel works at Sydney it is not a question of eight hours or twelve hours a day, but it is a question of getting some hours of work. When I was speaking on the resolution I pointed out that hundreds of men had been thrown out of employment, and that others had been given only two or three days' work a week. I gave as an illustration one man who in the past four months had earned only $144. Let this money go into the wage envelopes of the men. Put on a restriction, if you want to, about eight hours, and give them extra pay for extra time; but do not let us try and shield ourselves behind the province passing an eight hour law or any other kind of law.

Has anybody ever considered what the effect of a province passing an eight hour law would be? If Nova Scotia passed an eight hour law covering the industries of the province, say the boot and shoe industry, what would happen? The result would be that that industry would immediately pull out of Nova Scotia and go to some other province where there was no foolish law of that kind. You cannot pass legislation that is going to go up against the economic laws.

[Mr. Finlay MacDonald.]

I may say for the information of hon. gentlemen in the corner to my left that there is a great body of the men employed in the steel works at Sydney who are in favour of protection. It is true that there is a number of them who are discouraged and disheartened, men who have spent twenty-five years of their lives in the employment of that company and who now find themselves no better off than they were when they began. It is only natural to expect in such cases that these ment would be quite content to take desperate chances on ditching the company by denying them any protection at all.

Hon. gentlemen in that corner pretend to be free traders. Let me ask what pressure a free trade government could bring to bear on an industry such as the steel industry at Sydney to give their workmen any increase in wages or shorter hours. The only pressure that you can bring to bear on them is the pressure that arises from the protection that you give them. I quite appreciate the fact referred to by the Prime Minister that difficulty would arise in trying to put any such provision in the tariff as was advocated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). But there is no such difficulty with regard to this bonus. This is money that is going out of the federal treasury into the hands of the company, and there would be no difficulty in attaching to it a provision that that money should go to the benefit of the wage earners.

I may say that we had hoped to get a great deal of assistance from this bounty on coal. It is calculated that between four and five tons of coal would go to make a ton of steel, which would mean a bounty of $2 to $2.50 on every ton of steel.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman would allow me to interrupt him, I understand that he is going to conclude his speech with an amendment. I think I know the nature of his amendment. It is with respect to attaching a provision to the bounty. That amendment would not be in order on the second reading, but it would be in order to move it on the committee stage of the bill. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow the second reading to go through and then move his amendment in committee.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Adjustment to facilitate further development of native iron and steel industry.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, we had hoped that a bounty of 50 cents a ton on coal would mean a bounty of $2 to $2.50 on every ton of steel. But, according to the statement made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) the other night, that under this bill there would be only a certain amount of coal used in the primary operations, which will not carry through to the point where steel is manufactured, instead of receiving a bonus of $2 to $2.50 a ton on steel we shall receive, according to his calculation only between 70 and 80 cents a ton. If that is going to be the result, and in my opinion the hon. member for Pictou knows more about this question than the tariff board and all the experts they have ever employed, then I say it is going to be a great disappointment for those of us in the maritime provinces who have been fighting this fight for the last three or four years. I do not wish to take up any more time, and therefore, I move that section 2 be struck out and—

Mr. DUNNING: We are not yet on section 2.

Mr. CAHAN: Before that section carries I should like to ask the Minister of Finance exactly what interpretation is to be placed upon these words:

—the governor in council may authorize the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to manufacturers of iron or steel, of forty-nine and one-half cents per ton of bituminous coal mined in Canada and converted into coke by a proprietor of coke ovens at his coke ovens in Canada, and used by such manufacturers in the smelting in Canada of iron from ore or in the manufacture in Canada of steel ingots or steel castings. No such payment shall be made more than once in respect of any coal so used.

I understood the Prime Minister, I think it was, last evening to state that this section was intended to implement to the full the report of the commission which sat and considered maritime province claims. I have not before me the report of the Duncan commission, but I remember its words quite well, and I understood from that report that all coal used in the manufacture of iron and steel should receive a sort of differential bounty, if I may call it that. I listened later to the statements of the hon. member from Pictou (Mr. Cantley) to the effect that these words exclude from the so-called bounty all coal which was really used in the manufacture of iron and steel except that smaller portion of the coal which was converted into coke; that the coal used in all the other processes of the manufacture of iron and steel was excluded from the so-called bounty of forty-nine and a half cents per ton Now, what is the minister's understanding? Is this bounty to apply only to coal which is to be converted into coke?

Mr. DUNNING: Wholly that.

Mr. CAHAN: I think that is the clear expression of the clause; but I understood from the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister that this was to implement the Duncan report, and certainly it does not.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, yes.

Mr. CAHAN: I have not the report before me—

Mr. DUNNING: I have the report and I will read it:

We were asked to recommend that a bounty should be again made available. In this connection we have thought it right to give consideration to a point which was emphasized in the course of the evidence, viz:—that a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty is given when imported coal is used for metallurgical purposes, and that this is tantamount to giving a bonus of that amount, since it means that the Dominion is yielding up money which otherwise under its general policy in regard to bituminous coal would accrue to it. While there are, no doubt, other angles from which this concession can be regarded, it does in its operation have the effect of a bonus, and it is difficult to see how the same bonus can be denied to native coal.

Having regard to the bounty system previously applied, and to this aspect of the application of the drawback, we recommend that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

This bill places native coal in exactly the position of coal which is imported and on which a drawback is paid only when it is converted into coke.

Mr. CAHAN: I followed the hon. minister as carefully as I could. Is the drawback given at present upon every ton of coal used in the manufacture of iron or steel, or is it given upon every ton of coal used solely and exclusively for the purpose of producing coke?

Mr. DUNNING: I will read the drawback item.

Mr. CAHAN: I would rather have your expression of opinion.

Mr. DUNNING: This is the drawback item:

Bituminous coal when imported by proprietors of coke ovens and converted at their coke ovens into coke for use in the smelting of metals from ores and in the melting of metals.

It is confined to the coking process.

Mr. CAHAN: But is it?

Mr. DUNNING: I assure my hon. friend that in practice it is.

Mr. CAHAN: I would like to have the opinion, for instance, of the hon. member for Pictou, who I know for many years has been interested in this manufacture. But coke alone is not used in the processes of manufacture, is it? I am a perfect novice in these matters, but I have been so many times in those steel works and seen coal used in the manufacture of gas and other ancillary processes. Do I understand the minister to say that the Hamilton Steel Works, for instance, which receives a drawback, receives it only in respect of coal imported to be converted into coke?

Mr. DUNNING: That is quite right.

Mr. SIMPSON: That applies to the Algoma Steel Corporation too.

Mr. CAHAN: That clears up the misunderstanding in my mind.

Mr. DUNNING: I assure my hon. friend that only the coal imported which is converted into coke and used as coke in smelting is, to coin a word, "drawbackable."

Mr. CAHAN: I thank the minister for the explanation, I did not so understand it.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Restriction.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Has any estimate been made as to what the amount of this bonus would be per ton of steel?

Mr. DUNNING: On the basis of their normal output we calculate about $360,000.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): That is very gratifying indeed. I propose that the following be added to section 2:

and money so paid or a portion thereof shall be devoted to the improvement of the condition of the men employed in such plants, either by way of increased wages or shorter hours or both.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two in connection with this subject. At this late stage of the session I shall be very brief. I have listened to two debates on the question of steel bounties and assistance to the steel industry and I do not propose to traverse the ground already covered. I can say at once that I have every sympathy in the world and I agree fully with the remarks which have been made with regard to the men working eleven and thirteen hours in the steel plants. I do not think I can over emphasize that point. What we are considering is the practical situation which is facing this parliament. May I say that for the last three years I have been intensely interested in this subject, and I think my colleagues will bear me out when I say that I have not permitted them to lose sight of the fact that the steel industry of Sydney is a matter worthy of consideration, and I have endeavoured to bring that fact to the attention of the government on every possible occasion. With other members of the house I have realized the difficulties, first with regard to litigation which prevailed, secondly with regard to the situation of the company respecting the over capitalization and the unwieldly organization composed of the large number of companies which were grouped together, some fourteen in number, with a capitalization of over $100,000,000, a matter which seemed to me ought to be straightened out, and thirdly with regard to the fact that the whole matter was before the tariff board. Hon. gentlemen will remember that we are not simply dealing with the question of a straight bounty; we are dealing with something which will compensate for a rebate of duty. Duties have to do particularly with the tariff board, and the whole question had to be considered by the tariff board in the light of the application which was being made regarding the tariff on steel and coal. Those matters have been before the board and no one is more pleased than I that the Minister of Finance has been able to bring in a bill to-day in order to carry out the recommendations contained in the Duncan report. I feel sure the explanation given by the Minister of Finance will be sufficient for hon. members of this house who have questioned whether or not this bill carries out the recommendations contained in the report. The present bill does for the steel industry of Sydney exactly what section 1019 of the tariff act does for the steel industry of upper Canada, namely, it pays to the steel industry of Sydney a bonus of 49½ cents per ton for every ton of coal used for coking purposes, and afterwards used for the production of iron and steel. On the other hand the tariff act pays a rebate of 49½ cents per ton on coal brought into Canada and used for exactly the same purposes.

Let me say to the committee that this measure has been urged by everybody in Sydney who could be interested in the matter. It has been urged by hon. members on the other side of the house. As I have said before it has been urged by me, and I have repeatedly discussed the matter. It has been urged not simply by those who are in public life but by the associated boards of trade of Cape Breton. I have in my hand a resolution passed by them asking that these recommendations of the Duncan report be carried out; they do not suggest any conditions, nor do they suggest that there should be any restrictions, but they simply ask that the provisions of the Duncan report be put into effect. A year ago I had the pleasure of being present when a delegation was received from Cape Breton. Dr. Coady acted as chief spokesman, and the delegation consisted of men holding different political views and representing various public interests in Cape Breton. That delegation asked that these recommendations be carried out. In addition to that I have had similar representations on behalf of the miners themselves through their president, Mr. D. W. Morrison. I have had representations from the three thousand steel workers asking that this report be carried out, that the tariff recommendations be carried out and that the suggested bonus be carried into effect. In not one single instance has there been a suggestion of a condition being applied in regard to wages or hours of labour.

I had been convinced, and I think other hon. members also had been convinced, that the iron and steel industry might be on the verge of disaster; it was said the industry was going to languish and decline. Those expressions have been used in this house on more than one occasion. That there was danger of collapse of that industry; people were not making large profits, but on the other hand there was the possibility that the whole industry would close down. The object I had in view was to try to help save the iron and steel industry of Nova Scotia. On this occasion we are trying to do that, and we are using this bill to effect that end. As pointed out by the leader of the opposition last night this steel industry has been in the hands of the receivers for the last four years. There has been talk about the profits which have been made; someone mentioned a surplus amounting to about $2,000,000. We must remember however that that $2,000,000 was met by a deficit of about $1,700,000, and leaving a net surplus for the British Empire Steel Corporation, from the time of its organization until the end of last year, of something like $300,000. That is not the type of concern in connection with which it could be said that we are bonusing for the purpose of putting money into the pockets of the shareholders. The object of this government is to try to put money into the pockets of the workers. The people who will benefit by the assistance given to the industry will not be the shareholders or the bondholders, but the men who are working in the industry. That is the result which we have been trying to attain. During the last three or four weeks the company has completed a reorganization. As one particularly interested in the province of Nova Scotia and interested in the iron and steel industry I have scanned as carefully as I possibly could the reorganization proposals which have been published in the newspapers. If hon. members will take the trouble to investigate they will find that several companies with a combined capitalization of something like $100,000,000 have been dealt with so that their capitalization is reduced to about $21,000,000. On the balance sheet the properties are shown at cost at something like $130,000,000. I do not think we can say there has been a very large payment so far as the shareholders are concerned; the bond interest has not been paid for the last four years.

Mr. BENNETT: It was paid last year.

Mr. RALSTON: On the two junior issues of bonds there has been no interest paid for the last four years. I am referring to bond interest and not to dividends on shares. That is a résumé of the condition of the industry we are trying to help to-day.

As to labour conditions and the statements in regard thereto I wish to congratulate my hon. friend from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and his colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) in calling the attention of the house to this matter. The remarks of these hon. gentlemen have served to focus the attention of the Canadian people on this matter of labour conditions. I say that these hon. members have done a great service to labour, and in bringing the matter to attention they have done a service to this house. I am not sure my hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald), for whom I have the greatest friendliness, can be credited with exactly the same disinterested motives. My hon. friend was good enough to give the government the benefit of his confidence and the benefit of his vote in connection with the budget. I am not so sure the hon. gentleman was prompted by his love for the government, or by the fact that he loved more his seat down in Nova Scotia. He may have been prompted by both motives, however.

I have listened to the debate in connection with this labour question, and I have decided that it has not been an argument in favour of the labouring man so much as it has been a debate between two schools of thought, one protectionist and the other free trade. I am not concerned with protection or free trade in the abstract in connection with this debate. On the contrary I am more interested in trying to help this industry and to assist the men engaged therein. I would be very much afraid that the labouring men would be crushed between the upper and nether millstones of those who are talking about free trade on the one hand and protection on the other. The workingman would be forgotten entirely if some of us did not try to stick to the real issue, and the real issue in this particular case is the bill before the house which has for its object the placing of the steel industry on its feet. I want to say to my hon. friends from Winnipeg North Centre and North Winnipeg that since the report to which they referred was made there have been some improvements in regard to the hours of labour. I understand that the mills have come down to ten hours. That may be far too much, but at least there has been some improvement. The continuous operations to which my hon. friends referred, as the hon. leader of the opposition said last night, are still continuing at eleven and thirteen hours, and I agree that such a condition is not good for an industry or good for a country. My hon. friends cannot speak any more strongly on that point than I can, but the question is what to do.

It seems to me that this brings us really to our function in this house. My hon. friend from South Cape Breton, in his second attempt—a rather shrewd attempt and perhaps good politics—sought to focus the attention of the men on himself by moving a rather specious amendment to this bill. What was the amendment? It was that the whole or a portion of this money should be applied for the purpose of improving the condition of the men. That does not mean anything at all; it is simply eye-wash. The whole or any portion of it means that you could spend five cents, or you could paint some workman's house, and get away with it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, not five cents.

Mr. RALSTON: The slightest assistance in the world would be enough to comply with this resolution, and my hon. friend would walk out and claim that he had done something for the labouring men of Cape Breton. Let me say to him that I do not believe this kind of resolution means anything except that it means he is going to endeavour to be the champion of the labouring men down there if he can, but I believe that what the labouring men want is some real asistance to this industry in order to put it on its feet. I have under my hand the resolutions to which I have referred, and just the other day, since this discussion came up, I received a telegram which I am going to place on Hansard. It is from exactly the same men, and headed in exactly the same way as the telegram which my hon. friend read two years ago from the steel people of Sydney, that is, the representatives of 3,000 men. It is as follows:

At a regular meeting of the general works committee, employees representative plan, Dominion Iron and Steel Company, representing over three thousand steel workers in session this afternoon unanimously decided on the following resolution: We the representatives of the employees of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company Limited do hereby recommend that the budget as handed down be approved without further amendment regarding bonus on coal and tariff on steel. We have confidence in the management to the extent that they will as soon as conditions warrant instal the eight hour day.

That telegram is dated May 22, and it followed the telegrams and letters which I have received from time to time as indicating the attitude of the men down there. I do not question my hon. friend's knowledge of local conditions; they are far better than mine, but if he knows anything at all he knows that men are walking the streets of Sydney to-day and that the first thing to do is to get them employment. That is what this bill is intended to do.

Mr. HEAPS: May I ask by whom that telegram was signed?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. It is signed by P. W. McDougall, secretary of the employees' representative plan.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

---

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at one o'clock we were discussing Bill No. 312.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I was speaking with regard to the provisions of this bill as they concern assistance to be given to the steel industry. The hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) understands the conditions which exist down there, and, as I said before, there is considerable unemployment in that particular section. We are trying to put this industry on its feet and thus relieve some of this unemployment. Some 250 men are employed in the open hearth furnaces, but they are working only about 3½ days per week. We feel that that situation should be remedied if at all possible.

I submit that we cannot pass special legislation in respect to one particular industry. Let me remind my hon. friends just what this bill is. The steel industries of central Canada —I group them together—receive a rebate on account of duty which has been levied on coal used in their plants. This bill on the other hand provides that an amount shall be paid to those industries which use Canadian coal. I find that in the customs tariff there are no less than 50 to 55 items in respect of which drawbacks are paid, and after all this provision is simply a drawback in another form. With this industry in its present condition, this is not the time to propose a principle which if applied at all should be considered in connection with every one of the 55 items, and every one of the 55 concerns represented by those items. This is exactly the same principle which was enunciated with regard to the tariff. I do not think it is fair to single out one particular industry because it happens to be receiving now what other industries have been receiving right along. So I say to my hon. friends that from the point of view of fairness to the industry, and outside of the question of the position in which it finds itself, I do not believe that this is the proper thing to do.

What we have suggested, and what I believe will appeal to hon. members of this house, is this: If, under the circumstances, the province which possesses the jurisdiction considers that some provision should be passed, not with respect to one particular industry but with respect to all, regarding the hours of labour or the rates of wages, then this government will assist the provincial government in enforcing that law. The law must be made, not by this parliament but by the provincial legislature, and that is the reason for the provision contained in the bill which has been referred to by the hon. member for South Cape Breton as being camouflage. I submit that it is not camouflage, it is a serious effort to put the power of this parliament behind the enforcement of provincial legislation. As has been said repeatedly in this house, the function of the federal authorities will be to pay out the money not to make the law regarding labour, but we will say: If you infringe the laws of the jurisdiction which has the power to make those laws, then in addition to whatever penalty you incur from that infringement we will impose the additional penalty of withholding this bounty.

Reference has been made to the labour conditions in this particular community, and since that time the manager of the company, Mr. Kelley, has made a statement which appears in the Sydney Post of May 23, reading as follows:—

> The workmen know that we are behind the eight-hour day move at the steel plant and we have told them that we intend to install that system as soon as practicable. That is, the ten- and eight-hour day or eight-hour shifts for those whose departments are kept in continuous 24-hour operation, and 10 hours in the service departments which are not kept going continuously. At present we are operating the plant on the 10- and 12-hour day system, and it has been our intention for some time past to remedy this condition as soon as conditions improve.
> The plant has been through a hard period, and the company have spent considerable in trying to build it up to its proper efficiency. When that is accomplished the eight-hour day will be established.
> The coal bounty, while not as great as might be expected, will help towards bringing about conditions we are anxious to have at the local plant, and we are very thankful for what we have got. It is at least a move in the right direction.

This is a very important industry to the province of Nova Scotia. I believe that hon. gentlemen sometimes feel that this is an industry situated away down in one end of the Dominion and having to do only with that community. I want the committee to realize that the combined coal and steel industry employs something like 20,000 men; that nearly one-fifth of the population of Nova Scotia is interested directly or indirectly in connection with that industry; that it purchases something like $60,000,000 worth of goods; that it pays out in wages something like $23,000,000; that it pays in Nova Scotia more than 50 per cent of the workmen's compensation assessments being paid in that province. Therefore the prosperity of the steel and coal industry means a great deal for the prosperity of the province. The assistance in the form in which it is granted means assistance not only for the steel industry but for the coal industry as well, because the steel industry uses about one-quarter of the production of the coal mines at Cape Breton, with the result that when you pay a bounty based on coal used for the purpose of making iron and steel, you are giving a very substantial benefit to the coal industry itself.

Let me say one thing more. As regards my hon. friend opposite voting for and supporting the budget, I can quite understand his action when we look over the record of the government with regard to the coal and steel industry in Nova Scotia, and when we see exactly who it is that has done anything to assist that industry. Let me remind my hon. friend of what has been said before, namely, that the first real assistance to the industry was given in 1897 by a system of bounties which was then put into vogue and which has continued until 1910. Let me remind my hon. friends also that the revision of the tariff in respect of steel, the great revision prior to this one, was in 1907 under a Liberal government. Let me remind them also that slack coal was paying a duty of something like fifteen cents a ton and that it was not a Conservative government, but a Liberal government, which increased that duty to fifty cents a ton because the tariff item regarding slack coal was being used as subterfuge to bring in United States coal and affect the market for Canadian screened coal.

Mr. BENNETT: How many rebates were thereupon granted?

Mr. RALSTON: I can remember only one. Under tariff item 1049 one of the rebates was granted. It was granted on coal imported for the purpose of being made into coke and it was granted because of the fact that our friends opposite and their friends had put United States coke on the free list. This meant that United States bituminous coal could be imported free in the form of coke and it was thought better to encourage the manufacture of coke in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the hon. member remembers one that his government put into force since he became a member of it.

Mr. RALSTON: That was the one I was talking about.

Mr. BENNETT: The one put through in connection with salt?

Mr. RALSTON: How many tons of coal does that affect?

Mr. BENNETT: It is just the principle of the thing.

Mr. RALSTON: I suppose that might amount to 1,000 or 2,000 tons of coal in a year and on that account I do not think my hon. friend's interpretation is justified.

Mr. BENNETT: It shows what is done.

Mr. RALSTON: With regard to coal, it was left for the present government to make it possible to bring Canadian coal up to the central Canadian markets. First, as to all rail coal, a recommendation was made by the Duncan commisison that the freight subvention which had been granted on coal should be renewed. A subvention had been put into force a year or two before the Duncan commission sat. What was done was this, and not by a Conservative government, not by friends of my hon. friend from South Cape Breton, but by a Liberal government. The rate on coal was $4.80 to Montreal. By the 20 per cent reduction of the Duncan report the freight rate was reduced to $3.80. On top of that was placed a subvention which brought the freight rate on coal down to $3. In other words, there was an increase of thirty cents a ton in the subvention which had previously existed and which had been recommended for renewal by the Duncan report.

Then there was coal which came up the St. Lawrence by water and which it was desired to move further west. A subvention had existed which permitted the payment up to fifty cents a ton on that coal. This government accepted the recommendation of the Duncan report, but in addition it increased that subvention by 50 per cent, making the maximum subvention seventy-five cents a ton, and to-day coal is moving to Ottawa, Hull, Kingston, Noranda and as far west as Taschereau on the Transcontinental railway. How much coal has moved under that subvention? It is as follows:

| Year | Tons |
|---|---|
| 1928 | 85,000 |
| 1929 | 61,000 |

These are the figures as regards water-borne coal:

| Year | Tons |
|---|---|
| 1929 | 193,000 |

This year the amount of business which has been accepted is not 193,000 tons, but 502,000 tons proposed to be assisted by the present government and the business has already been closed for 330,000 tons so far this year, or almost double the total business done in the whole of last year. This makes a tonnage of over 700,000 tons to be moved under that rate. In addition, bunker coal was taken off the free list. So I think that the Liberal party can claim to have done something for the steel and coal industry.

Now we come along with this bounty provision and the provisions of the tariff with respect to steel. What have the Conservatives done? I have searched in vain and I cannot find that my hon. friends, even during the eleven years they were in power, ever thought of renewing the bounties on coal. I find they granted rebates in duties on iron, on steel. I find that their contribution to the coal industry was to put coke on the free list and anthracite coal on the free list under governments led by Conservative prime ministers. I cannot, however, find very much that would lead my hon. friend from Cape Breton South to look to the Conservative party for support for the steel industry and I can well understand why he or anyone else claiming to be interested in the steel industry would vote for the present government in connection with the budget.

What is proposed with regard to this labour matter is this: we have the announcement of the manager of the steel company and I have read it to the house. The house sees what it is; attention has been focussed on it and the company desires and believe they can put into force the eight-hour shift. In addition to that we have the statement made by the Prime Minister last night as a result of a conference with a director of the company in regard to the improvement of labour conditions. Further we have the legislation now before the house providing that the Dominion government will assist the local government to enforce any law which that local government may pass not simply for the purpose, as my hon. friend's resolution suggests, of employing the "whole" or any "portion" of that money, but for the purpose of putting into force any labour legislation which is passed as a result of any labour conference held under the treaty of Versailles. Those are the things with which we can go to the men and I believe the men in Sydney know just as well as anyone what they want and their conditions and perhaps better than even the hon. member for South Cape Breton or any other hon. member. I am content to take their judgment in that respect. I believe they will see through the amendment moved by my hon. friend. It is a life saver, an attempt, as I said before, to indicate that my hon. friend is the champion of the labour men but I do not think an amendment couched in that language and with those nebulous words "the whole" or any "portion" to be devoted to improving conditions, will afford much comfort to the men of Sydney. I believe they will regard the implementing of the recommendations of the Duncan report, the granting of this substantial bounty, the assurance which has been given by the manager of the company, the assurance given by the Prime Minister and the evidence of sincerity which appears in the bill itself as being more calculated to improve their conditions than the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend. My endeavour is to continue assisting this industry to get on its feet. I believe that it can be done. I believe that that industry involves a great deal for the province of Nova Scotia, and I propose when the time comes to go to the men of Sydney and tell them squarely what we have done and what we are doing, and to present this bill to them as it stands, and I am quite content to abide by the result of that appeal. I believe that I shall get their approval of what we are now doing and that they will not be misled by the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend.

Mr. HEAPS: I have listened very attentively to the speech of the hon. Minister of National Defence, and with one portion of his remarks I entirely agree. That was his statement that the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) would not be of much use as far as the men are concerned. I think that that goes without saying because it is stated in the amendment that a part of the money shall be devoted to the interests of the men. That part would have to be determined by the company, in which event I think that the men would get very little out of this bounty which I presume is to be voted by parliament.

With other portions of the remarks of the hon. minister I cannot agree. In his later statements I think he tried to convince the house that the party of which he is a member was a higher tariff party than the Conservative party and he almost convinced me that he was right. I do not know whether in that statement he was voicing the opinions of hon. gentlemen who sit on his own side of the house.

The speech of the minister may be summarized under four heads. He dealt with the bounty on coal; the conditions of the industry; the conditions of the men; and lastly with what the Liberal party has done for the province of Nova Scotia. With the latter part of his remarks I am not going to take issue nor indeed touch upon them but I wish to say a few words in reference to some of his other statements.

The minister said that, first of all, we should try to put the industry on its feet, and for that reason he thought that it would be unwise to take any action at the present time which would compel the company to give the eight-hour day or higher wages to its employees. Secondly he said that it is not a matter within the jurisdiction of this parliament to say what labour conditions in Nova Scotia shall be, that that was entirely a matter for the province itself. Suppose that in the near future the provincial legislature of Nova Scotia decided to put into effect the eight-hour day and insisted on fair wages for the men employed in industry. The whole argument of the minister then falls to the ground because the industry would be compelled to put those conditions into effect irrespective of the conditions of the industry itself. The minister shakes his head. If I am wrong I must have misunderstood him. but that is the only meaning that I could take from his statements this morning and this afternoon. He said that so far as this parliament was concerned, we should not do anything that would interfere with labour conditions in Nova Scotia. Secondly he said that it would be unwise to take any such action at the present time because this company and others are taking a sort of fatherly interest in the condition of their workmen, and that if we wait long enough the time may come when the men may receive better working conditions, and therefore it would be unwise, he said, to take the action suggested at the present time. Suppose that the province of Nova Scotia insisted on the eight-hour day and better wages in industry in the province. It would then be just as unwise for the province to insist upon those conditions as it would be for this house. It makes no difference so far as the men are concerned and so far as the industries are concerned where the jurisdiction lies because the law would be effective in any event.

The minister also said that we should not legislate for one particular industry. What are we doing at the present time? Are we not at this very moment introducing legislation for the benefit of one particular industry? Are we not giving to one industry, even to a portion of one industry, special legislation? This bounty is special legislation for the benefit of a portion of the coal industry in the Dominion.

Mr. RALSTON: Perhaps my hon. friend did not quite get my point. I was pointing out that this was just one particular industry, and that there were fifty-five others on the books that were getting rebates. This is the same as a rebate, and you could not pick out one industry without legislating with regard to them all.

Mr. HEAPS: It is not a rebate; it is a bounty. The steel mills generally buy their coal in the open market and buy to what they consider is their best advantage. But the British Empire Steel Corporation buys coal from its own mines, and we do not know whether they are paying a fair or an unfair price for that coal. But we do know that we have to pay 49½ cents a ton to one company under the control of the British Empire Steel Corporation. There is no equality whatsoever in giving a rebate to the steel company at Hamilton and giving a bounty to a company which owns its coal mines.

[Mr. Heaps.]

Mr. RALSTON: The Duncan commission decided the reverse of that. Sir Andrew Rae Duncan decided that the very basis of this grant was that money was paid out of the treasury to the steel mills of upper Canada, and therefore a like amount should be paid out to the steel mills of Nova Scotia.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not accept Sir Andrew Rae Duncan as any authority on this particular question. It was the same Sir Andrew Rae Duncan who stated in his report when dealing with labour conditions in Nova Scotia that the men employed in the mills should be paid according to the ability of the industry to pay wages, and when a man makes a statement of that sort it appears to me that he is not a fit and proper person to consider labour conditions anywhere in this Dominion. Wages, irrespective of the condition of the industry should be the first charge on the industry, and whether or not the company can afford to pay good wages is not a matter of primary importance so far as the men are concerned.

I might go a little further. The minister has been very profuse to-day in his declarations about being willing to put the industry on its feet and giving consideration to the industry. I am more concerned, as I have stated on more than one occasion in this house, with giving first consideration to the men.

Mr. RALSTON: I said that too.

Mr. HEAPS: I want to give first consideration to the men, and secondly consideration to the industry.

Mr. RALSTON: I said that too.

Mr. HEAPS: But what we are doing at the present time is giving first consideration to the industry, and letting the men take care of themselves.

I am sorry that I cannot see eye to eye with the hon. gentleman who has moved an amendment to the second section of this bill. I have an amendment which I hope to move if his amendment is not agreed to, and perhaps at this particular juncture I may be allowed to state that by my amendment I adopt a portion of section 2 as contained in the bill, but leave out that portion which deals with making this bounty operative when the legislature of Nova Scotia has passed legislation for the eight-hour day and fair wages in that province. My intention is to make this bounty operative only from such time as the industry itself gives fair and reasonable conditions of labour and the eight-hour day to its employees.

Mr. QUINN: I did not intend to say anything on this subject, but I am prompted to do so after listening to the remarks of the Minister of National Defence, who accused members on this side of the house of playing politics with this question. I am sure that the people of this country, and particularly the people of the province of Nova Scotia, are best able to judge who is playing politics with this question. Going back to 1923, there was then a solid representation of sixteen Liberal members sitting in this house from the province of Nova Scotia. In that year the Conservative party in Nova Scotia adopted the platform of maritime rights, and on that platform they elected the present senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) and thus broke the "solid sixteen." That program was preached by the Conservative party in the two general elections of 1925, with the result that the Liberal party which had held power in Nova Scotia for over forty years was defeated and returned only three members to the legislature. A few months afterwards eleven Conservative members were elected to this house from Nova Scotia. Hon. members know what happened the following year, and they will recall that the Conservative party has advocated that platform consistently up to the present day. The pressure of public opinion became so strong that this government became panicky and in 1926, in the speech from the throne they told us they were going to appoint a royal commission to investigate maritime claims. In due time Sir Andrew Rae Duncan and two associates were appointed and made an investigation. In this they were assisted very materially by the Nova Scotia government of Premier Rhodes, which submitted to the commission a comprehensive brief on the subject matter of the inquiry. Undoubtedly this brief aided the commission in making the report which was submitted to this house in 1926. The legislation now presented by the government with regard to a bonus on steel and coal is based on the recommendations made by the Duncan commission, but although that report was submitted, as I say, in 1926, this government has delayed dealing with them until to-day in the dying hours of the last session of this parliament. I submit that the government is playing politics on this question, not the Conservative party.

The members of the government have pointed out on several occasions that they are treating the maritime provinces very generously and they have called particular attention to the increased subsidy of $875,000 paid to Nova Scotia. But the Duncan commission recommended that this subsidy should be paid annually until the proper amount was adjusted, and this adjustment the commission stated should be made at the earliest possible moment. Well, that recommendation was made four years ago, and no adjustment has yet been made. Let me ask the government why?

In this connection I would point out that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) has referred to the bonus granted to the steel companies in 1897. But that was before there was any British Empire Steel Corporation; that was when we had the steel and coal companies in Nova Scotia carrying on a fairly successful business. Because of that fact the money grabbers of this country —the money grabbers that we heard about last week with respect to the Beauharnois deal—saw an opportunity by merging these coal and steel companies into a big organization to make a handsome profit for themselves. They therefore increased the capitalization to such an enormous amount that when they applied to the Borden government for a Dominion charter they were refused. Where did they go? They applied to the old Liberal government then in control of Nova Scotia for a provincial charter, and that government granted the request. I submit to the house that the former Liberal government of Nova Scotia were responsible for the British Empire Steel Corporation and for all the disastrous consequences which have resulted from its incorporation.

There is another matter I desire to call to the attention of hon. members in connection with the payment of subsidies. In the days of the Liberal regime in Nova Scotia we had unrest and disquietude amongst the miners of Cape Breton year in and year out, and strikes were of almost yearly occurrence until 1925, when the Rhodes government succeeded to office. In 1924, the position became so critical that the Liberal government of Nova Scotia applied to the King government to send down troops. This government promptly despatched military units drawn from all over the Dominion and on their arrival in Cape Breton they marched through the affected area with fixed bayonets and loaded rifles the same as our soldiers marched into Germany. What were those troops sent down to Cape Breton for? To threaten these miners who were asking only for fair wages and fair living conditions. In 1925 the federal authorities sent the Rhodes government a bill for the expenses incidental to the movement of those troops.

This bill amounted to $133,000 and from the first half-yearly subsidy paid by this government on the recommendation of the Duncan commission they deducted this amount. This $133,000 has been withheld up to the present day, and unfairly withheld, I submit, because the question being sub judice the money should be paid to the Nova Scotia government until the courts have decided whether the Dominion or the provincial authorities are responsible for its payment.

Our friends opposite have been the supporters and the heroes of the big interests, not the members on this side of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. QUINN: Well, what about the Beauharnois deal? Who gave the charter to the British Empire Steel Corporation? Is that not good enough? If the Minister of National Defence and his government are so much interested in the miners of Canada, why don't they do something to stop the importation of Russian coal? Why do they force the miners of this country to enter into competition with the miners of Russia? I submit it is the duty of this government to give immediate attention to this matter and place a protective tariff on coal so that the further importation of Russian coal will cease. Only by doing this will it be possible for the miners of Nova Scotia and the other coal mining regions of Canada to market their product in their own country.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the hon. gentleman aware that the coal coming in from Russia is anthracite? Not one pound of anthracite is mined in Canada.

Mr. QUINN: I understand it is anthracite coal just as well as the member for Cartier does, and I appreciate the difference between anthracite and bituminous coal. But I am accepting the word of one of the cabinet ministers that this Russian coal does come into Canada in competition with Nova Scotia coal. That was stated on the floor of the house the other day. My hon. friend has not been very regular in his attendance or he would have heard that 250,000 tons of Russian coal has been imported. May I ask him if he is in favour of anthracite coal being imported into this country from Russia?

Mr. JACOBS: I am in favour of bringing into this country coal that we ourselves cannot mine.

Mr. QUINN: But we can mine coal that will meet the same requirements as this Russian anthracite coal meets. Our coal can be used to advantage in this country. We have done without Russian anthracite coal for years, and why cannot we do without it now?

Mr. JACOBS: We have not done without it. We got it from Pennsylvania before.

Mr. DUNNING: May I suggest to my hon. friends that the subject about which they are quarrelling is scarcely relevant to the sub-amendment of my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. QUINN: I have about finished. I rose to speak because of the statement of the Minister of National Defence.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): It is not often one hears a member of an administration accept responsibility for an existing situation and attach the blame to his own government. That much at least has been done by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) in the speech he delivered in this house to-day. It must have been gratifying to his supporters in this house to hear him put it so clearly. He has indicated that the British Empire Steel Corporation has for some time been in a very precarious condition, and in fact had to go into the hands of a receiver. He has also admitted that three years ago a recommendation was made that that which now is being done should have been done.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Partly.

Mr. BENNETT: That being so if what is now being done is intended to save the industry, why was the industry not saved three years ago? It is not very difficult for hon. members to place the blame where it belongs if for a period of eight years, from 1922 to 1930, a great industry has been allowed to languish, to use the word of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. RALSTON: That was the hon. gentleman's word.

Mr. BENNETT: He used the word "languish"; if I used the word I am glad my hon. friend has copied it. If this administration has allowed the iron and steel industry to languish for a period of eight years most people will be greatly pleased that those who hold power have at last recognized their obligation in the premises.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In part only.

Mr. BENNETT: In part only. They have increased the duties on steel 66⅔ per cent and 80 per cent, and my hon. friend suggests that that is the proper procedure in order to prevent this industry from destruction. He also says that they are now giving a bounty of 49½ cents a ton on coal to be used for coking in connection with the steel industry, and that such action has been taken to prevent the industry from destruction. Why was such action not taken during the last eight years; why at any time during the last eight years did the government not take that action, or why was it not done during the last three years, since it was advocated by the Duncan report? If the hon. gentleman was as zealous in the interests of the steel industry as he would have us believe, if he was desirous of protecting this industry as he now states, and if he was desirous of seeing that thousands of men found employment and that the indutry was prevented from falling into decline, why did he not do something in 1926, 1927, 1928 and 1929?

Mr. RALSTON: What about 1911 to 1921?

Mr. BENNETT: The reason was that there was a great war.

Mr. RALSTON: Oh no.

Mr. BENNETT: He knows better than anyone else.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. BENNETT: He knows from 1911 to 1914, when the war broke out, certain investigations were being carried on in that regard, and he knows further that from 1914 to 1918, there was an increase of 7½ per cent in all the tariffs. One of the first acts of the Minister of Finance when the war broke out was to increase the tariffs by 7½ per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: As a war measure.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, as a war measure. That was one of the first actions of the government, and the result of course inured to the benefit of the industry, whether in war time or peace time.

Mr. RALSTON: And to every industry.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and the hon. gentleman realizes that the competition in our market was to a very great extent lessened by reason of the demands made by the warring countries upon steel-producing countries. The opportunities for producing steel in our own country were correspondingly greater, and the industry flourished as it had never flourished before. In fact one of the anomalies of life is that the foundation of increased industrial development in Canada has been directly attributable to the war.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend knows that from 1919 to 1922 the industry did not flourish.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that it did. After the war there was a reaction which proved to be injurious, not only to the British Empire Steel Corporation but to almost all the industrial enterprises in this country. The revival was very slow and gradual. The situation was so difficult that—

Mr. RALSTON: What did my hon. friends do about it?

Mr. BENNETT: They did a very great deal, the details of which I shall not endeavour to give at this time. I was not in the house in those days, and the hon. gentleman knows that fact, because I was not a candidate in the election of 1917. I was not in the house during the period referred to, the year 1922, but the industry was on the upward grade; conditions were reviving. I can say at least that it was subsequent to that date when the industry went into the hands of the receiver, and I would ask my hon. friends to bear that in mind. If it was allowed to go into the hands of receivers while this government was in power, and this government now says this remedy should be applied to make the situation sound, why did they not take action earlier? Why did they not take action, because it was pressed at all times by the industry that this action should be taken?

Mr. RALSTON: The Prime Minister made his announcement in March, 1927, that the bounty could not be granted in view of the litigation pending at that time. That was agreed to by members of the local administration in the province of Nova Scotia; there was a Conservative administration in that province at that time, and the Conservative newspapers thought the situation was one which should not be dealt with at that time, until the affairs of the company were straightened out.

Mr. BENNETT: But the Duncan report of the year 1926 recommended immediate action.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand that.

Mr. BENNETT: I have yet to learn that the fact that litigation existed is sufficient excuse for the failure of a government to save an industry from utter destruction.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend's party said that, as I have read to this house.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman says he has been reading. May I point out again that the responsibility for the condition which existed in the industry must be accepted by the Liberal party in this house, and by no other party. They must accept the responsibility for the simple and obvious reason that it was after the year 1922 that the industry went into the hands of a receiver, and it was after that date that the government imposed a duty of 50 cents per ton upon slack coal. It was then suggested that a bounty should be paid to compensate the industry in Nova Scotia, and other companies which were operating in other parts of the country.

Mr. RALSTON: The drawback to which my hon. friend refers was put on by the hon. gentleman's friends in 1914, and not by the Liberal administration.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that a Liberal administration put it on.

Mr. RALSTON: All right.

Mr. BENNETT: And the hon. gentleman very properly contends that there should be a bounty paid to compensate for that drawback. If that be so why was the bounty not granted at any time during the last eight years if, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, it is going to save the industry? Why not have saved it during the last eight years, and not let it go into the hands of receivers?

Mr. RALSTON: Why was it not granted in 1914?

Mr. BENNETT: Because the duty upon slack coal was not 50 cents a ton; it was only 15 cents. It was later increased to 50 cents a ton in the days of Mr. Macdonald who was Minister of Militia and who came from Nova Scotia. That is when the duty was increased to 50 cents a ton on slack coal. Thereupon it was contended that as 99 per cent of the duty was being granted to industry as a drawback, a bounty equivalent to 99 per cent of the duty of 50 cents per ton, or 49½ cents, the amount mentioned in this bill, should be granted on coal which is converted into coke for the purpose of manufacturing steel in Canada, Nova Scotia being the principal province affected.

Mr. RALSTON: Why was it not contemporaneous with the drawback?

Mr. BENNETT: It should have been contemporaneous with the duty of 50 cents per ton; 15 cents was very insignificant.

Mr. RALSTON: On 700,000 or 800,000 tons of coal?

Mr. BENNETT: Fifteen cents a ton was said to be of no use at all. The predecessor of the hon. gentleman who came from Nova Scotia contended that 15 cents was useless and that there should be a duty of 50 cents a ton. As a result a duty of 50 cents per ton was put on coal; the government of this Prime Minister imposed a tariff upon imported coal of 50 cents a ton, and the drawback was extended accordingly. The hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce secured a drawback in connection with one industry in his particular locality; I went down and looked at it and I recommend that every hon. gentleman should go down and see what it meant to give a drawback on the coal used in that industry, and see what encouragement is given to Canadian enterprise.

By this bounty the hon. gentleman now proposes to accomplish the purpose which he has defined in very clear terms, and which I shall not again express, namely, to give this industry the benefit that results from drawbacks on duty paid on imported coal to the manufacturers of iron and steel in Nova Scotia and elsewhere. His desire is to put the Nova Scotia industry on an equal basis with competitors in other parts of Canada. If it be sound that this should be done in 1930, on the eve of an election, why was it not done at any time during the last eight years? Why has there been no action in connection with this matter for the last two years; why has the hon. gentleman been so silent all this time? Has his voice been raised in parliament to say that this should be done? Has he at any time risen in his place and said to the people of Canada that this bounty should be granted or that the steel duties should be raised?

Mr. RALSTON: I can tell my hon. friend that I have spoken of it in this house and told the people of Canada the exact facts in regard to it.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us see the speeches; there is no record of the hon. gentleman risking his place in the government for his province. If the hon. gentleman believed in this as he now says he does, he would have said to his Prime Minister, "Either we get a tariff on steel and a bounty on coal or I will have to resign my seat." That is the answer; that is what other ministers have said in days gone by when the industrial life of their provinces was threatened. The minister stands here now and says, "We are going to do something for this industry, eight years after this government has been in power."

Mr. RALSTON: No, after nineteen years.

Mr. BENNETT: Do not becloud the issue; eight years after this government has been in power, and in spite of the fact that for the past four years he has been in the government which he now adorns.

Mr. RALSTON: I have told my hon. friend that I have repeatedly made statements regarding the matter, and I have stated exactly why I did not believe it should be granted at that time. I stand by those statements, but I believe the time has come when it should be granted, in view of the reorganization.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right; there is always one gentleman on the other side the muscles of whose right hand are ever ready to move in a noisy direction whenever he can find anyone else to do it. The other afternoon he found that his groans against his own Prime Minister's speech placed him in rather a difficult position, and so the chief whip retired for the moment somewhat in disgrace. The hon. Minister of National Defence was not far behind him in that regard; his tears were also somewhat palpably apparent.

Now let us proceed. I say the Minister of National Defence says that the reason he is now doing this is because the company is being reorganized, but he saw them go into a receivership; he saw employment threatened; he spoke about unemployment; he saw the strike to which reference has been made; he saw the troops there. When did he rise in this house and say as a representative of Nova Scotia, "Either there will be a duty on steel and a bounty on coal or I will leave the government"?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend must stick to the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. RALSTON: I was not in parliament nor was I a member of the government when the receivership took place, and when the situation did develop the receivership was on. It was felt and agreed by everyone in Nova Scotia who was thinking and who knew about it that this could not be done until the company cleaned up its whole situation, and then it was put before the tariff board by the company. Tariff and rebate were all twined in one; both applications were heard together, and the moment the tariff board reported and the moment the reorganization took place this measure was brought down, and it is the last major recommendation of the Duncan report to be implemented.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, the hon. gentleman says once more that this matter was placed before the tariff board. When was it placed before that board?

Mr. RALSTON: In November, 1928, and the experts of the company before the board—and this is on record, although I am afraid my hon. friend does not read my speeches very much—

Mr. BENNETT: No, I have to listen to them.

Mr. RALSTON: The expert of the company said at that time that it was impossible to have the tariff board deal with the matter in time for last session.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly; the tariff board in this country never has dealt with anything except the convenience of the government.

Mr. RALSTON: I am talking about the company's counsel, not the counsel for the board.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course the tariff board has only dealt with such matters as the government desired to have dealt with, in the manner and form desired by the government, and the chairman of the board is getting ready now to be a candidate at this election, after establishing certain relationships. That is the situation. Is it any wonder Mr. Darby of the United Farmers sent a letter to the Toronto Star last fall pointing out the political tendencies of this tariff board, and how politics had crept into it to destroy its usefulness? Is it any wonder that is so? Now we have the spectacle again brought before this country of the gentleman whom they say is primarily responsible for the preparation of this tariff and for this recommendation preparing to be a candidate for the Liberal government in a nearby constituency.

Some hon. MEMBERS: A good candidate, too.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course there is not a Liberal who will not say that any man who has raised the duty on steel 80 per cent and 66⅔ per cent and 300 per cent on other articles is not a good candidate for the Liberal party. There is not a Liberal from the west who recalls the days of Billy Moore when he was in charge of the Mackenzie and Mann slush funds, who will not say he is a good candidate; not one of them.

Mr. McINTOSH: He is doing good work.

Mr. BENNETT: He certainly was doing good work in those days, according to the Liberal views, and I am glad to hear the hon. member for North Battleford say that one who recommends an increase in the tariff of 300 per cent is doing good work. He did not always say that; I remember an article which appeared in his paper over his own name in which he seemed to think high tariffs were a menace, that danger was everywhere about. He looked over his shoulder and saw the spectre of evil everywhere, but now Mr. Moore is doing "good work." Let him go and tell his constituents what he is doing in that regard, and see how pleased they will be.

However, let us get back to the hon. gentleman. We have had a minister of the crown come here and admit the condition; he says this is a remedy; he admits that the condition has existed in the past, but that no effort has been made to provide a remedy either by increased duties or by the payment of a bounty. Those who have heard political speeches in the west; those who have listened to them made in this house by the Minister of Railways and Canals hardly think it possible that a man who has made such speeches against increased duties and bounties would sit here and look on while this action is being taken. Those who remember the speeches of the Minister of Finance in times past, when he talked about the iniquity of tariffs and when he spoke of pap-fed industries; those who recall the speeches of the hon. member for Lisgar, who made the air almost blue with the invective with which he spoke against a high tariff policy in this country, must be truly amazed. How must the hon. member for Lisgar feel when he sees these duties put upon steel? Now the hon. minister says this is the remedy for the evil, the remedy that is going to replace the present conditions in Nova Scotia with prosperity and happiness. because the government has done something now that might have been done years ago to bring about that prosperity which was denied when the industry was threatened and men were idle. Now when the receiver has gone we can raise the duties 80 per cent and 66⅔ per cent and pay a bounty of 49½ cents a ton on coal and all is well; everything prospers and blooms as the rose. It is no wonder my hon. friend from Lisgar has a headache.

I simply leave this with the committee and with the house, and say to the hon. gentleman that I congratulate him upon having made this admission of his own culpability and the culpability of his own government in not having taken steps to provide prosperity where they now say it will come by reason of the action they are taking, when in 1926 the Duncan report was in their possession and no action was taken. It is well that these things should be understood and that there should be a proper appreciation by the people of this country of the utilization of a tariff and of bounties in the manner in which the government say they are now using them in order to bring about prosperity, though in times past hon. gentlemen went to and fro throughout the country denouncing pap-fed industries and tariffs and bounties and special privileges for the few.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to take exception to the statement of several of the ministers to the effect that the Duncan report has been carried out in this legislative measure. I want to read first of all the statement of the Minister of Finance when delivering his budget speech, when he said:

> It is proposed to implement the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Maritime Claims with respect to Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron or steel.

I make this statement, Mr. Chairman: Under this provision not one cent is being provided for the manufacture of steel. That is how the Duncan report is being carried out. That report contains the following:

> Having regard to the bounty system previously applied, and to this aspect of the application of the drawback, we recommend that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

I would like to ask the hon. minister, or any hon. member in this house who has any knowledge as to the manufacture of steel, if there is one pound of coal used in the manufacture of steel, or if one cent will be paid on coal used in that manner.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, the discussion has reverted to section 1 of the bill, which has been passed. We are considering section 2, which deals with the conditions of payment, and the amendment thereto.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would not have spoken had I not heard the minister say that the Duncan report has been implemented, and I deny that absolutely as being a fact.

Mr. DUNNING: I tried to deal this morning with the point raised by my hon. friend, by illustrating the application of the bounty to be precisely in the terms of the present drawback which is granted to other steel companies; they are to be on a similar basis.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That does not cover the case at all.

Mr. DUNNING: That is what the Duncan commission recommended.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Duncan commission does not recommend any such thing. The report says that a drawback shall be given on all coal used in the manufacture of steel. That is what the report says, and that report is not being implemented.

Mr. DUNNING: The report says, "and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture." That is what is being done.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister is not reading from the Duncan report.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I am. The following appears on page 38 of the report of the Royal Commission on Maritime Claims:

> Having regard to the bounty system previously applied, and to this aspect of the application of the drawback, we recommend that a bonus should be given in respect of steel when Canadian coal is used in its manufacture, and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback for every ton of coal used in such manufacture.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What the government is doing is this: it is giving a drawback on coke which enters into the manufacture of pig iron —no coke is used in the manufacture of steel. That is the joker in this proposition. If the people of Nova Scotia are satisfied, then I have nothing to say, but I am afraid they will be very much dissatisfied before we are through with this thing. It is like everything else done by this government, there is a joker to be found somewhere in every one of their enterprises.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is useless for the Minister of Finance to make the argument he has made. He quoted the clause in the Duncan report which reads, "and that the bonus should be calculated on the basis of the present drawback." That is all we are asking for, but Bill No. 312 does not propose that. That bill proposes a rebate on coal used in the manufacture of pig iron, which is a totally different thing. Practically all the steel manufactured in Nova Scotia is made from pig iron, and it is not true that the coal consumed in the making of pig iron is all the coal which is consumed in the production of steel. The government does not propose to pay any attention to the differenec in these two definitions. It is useless for the minister to quote the words "on the basis of" because the basis refers only to the 49½ cents as the amount per ton of coal which shall be rebated by way of bonus. The 49⅔ cents is there the basis of the bonus payments to be made.

Mr. DUNNING: The same conditions will apply as apply to the granting of the drawback on foreign coal imported by other steel industries.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister is playing on another string. The minister cannot change the manifest and well understood meaning of the Duncan commission's report, and every man in Nova Scotia who knows anything about this question has expected not what we are now getting, but 49½ cents per ton on all coal used in the manufacture of steel.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, we have to thank the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) for making clear the position of the government; that it does not intend that the money shall go into the wage envelopes of the men. The hon. member for Winnipeg claims that the suggestion that a portion of this money be paid to the men is too indefinite. That would be a matter which would be in the hands of the government, and it could determine whether one-half or one-quarter or the whole amount should go into the wage envelopes. That could be determined by the fair wage officers of the department.

From 1926 on we have been urging in the house that this bonus be granted, and on March 5, 1926, the hon. Minister of National Defence made a speech in this house.

Mr. DUNNING: The minister was not in the house in 1926.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): It was 1928. In answer to our repeated protestations about the delay, he said:

> But there still remain certain things to be done. It seems to me that it is in the interest of this industry and in the interest of the Dominion that—first, there should be unity between the coal and steel businesses. Secondly, that there should be a shrinkage of the capital so that the industry will have an opportunity of earning a dividend on some reasonable investment. Thirdly, the unwieldly organization should be simplified. It now consists of fourteen companies. Fourthly, there ought to be cooperation by the provincial and municipal authorities in the work of building up this great industry. With the litigation ended and these conditions met, the way will be open for serious consideration by the federal government of the presentation of the real and legitimate needs of the industry.

If the bonus had been granted in 1926 the company would not have been forced into receivership. This government has allowed the company to go into receivership and after it has pulled itself out of the hole they take the credit for giving it a bonus. One hon. member of this house has said that the labouring man of this country will not be deluded very much longer, and he is not going to be deluded on this question. Either this money is going to the company or it is going to the men, and should this bill pass as at present constituted the money will go to the company.

The telegram which was read by the Minister of National Defence was dictated by the company executives sitting around the table with some representatives of the men. The great majority of the men were not consulted at all, and the great rank and file are back of our contention in this matter.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. HEAPS: I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Woodsworth:

That section 2 be amended by striking out all the words after "not" in the twenty-third line, and substituting the following therefor:

"paying to its employees a fair and reasonable wage and in its operation is not maintaining for all its employees the eight-hour day and the forty-eight hour week and other conditions consistent with the provisions of any international convention adopted by a labour conference held under the treaty of Versailles."

The CHAIRMAN: The section with the proposed amendment would read as follows:

No payment shall be made to any person or corporation entitled to receive any payment under this act, or any drawbacks under the tariff items mentioned in the preceding section, where it is shown to the satisfaction of the governor in council that such person or corporation is not paying to its employees a fair and reasonable wage and in its operation is not maintaining for all its employees the eight-hour day and the forty-eight hour week and other conditions consistent with the provisions of any international convention adopted by a labour conference held under the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. KAISER: Seeing that the city of Sydney has the greatest number of employees on a payroll in percentage to population and that the city of Oshawa which I represent is the second in that class in Canada, I should like to make one or two observations. I sympathize very strongly with the remarks made by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), the representatives of labour in this house, in regard to conditions under which men may toil. I am concerned with the establishment of industry, but I am more concerned with the human aspect than with any other feature of it. We are at this moment confronted with a strange situation in Canada. We who desire to see the lot of the labouring man in this country improved are told, according to a statement read last night by the Prime Minister, that the supreme court gave a decision that the Dominion cannot act in regard to hours of labour in accordance with this proposed amendment; that the matters referred to in the amendment, the provinces alone have power to deal with. If that be the case, it occurs to me that the amendment should be further amended by stating that an amendment should first be made to the British North America Act permitting the Dominion of Canada to have some supervision over wages and hours of labour and to be able to make laws in regard to questions of labour and the conditions under which men work in this country. I have been overwhelmed by the remarks made by these and other hon. gentlemen. I never dreamed that men worked in Canada under such conditions as those described, and as a friend of labour, as I have always been, legislation that will mean something for humanity will always receive my support. I would therefore like to ask whether the amendment as presented can possibly remedy the condition of affairs obtaining in Canada, until the British North America Act is amended to meet the situation.

Amendment negatived: yeas, 37; nays, 62.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. DUNNING moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg Northe Centre): I beg to move in amendment:

That Bill No. 312 be not now read a third time, but be sent back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by striking out all the words after the word "not" in the twenty-third line of the bill and substituting the following:

"paying to its employees a fair and reasonable wage, and in its operation is not maintaining for all its employees the eight-hour day and the forty-eight hour week and other conditions consistent with the provisions of any international convention adopted by a labour conference held under the Treaty of Versailles."

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Woodsworth) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. BOIVIN: I was paired with the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. BENNETT: Before the third reading of this bill is proceeded with, I desire to say that the other evening I intimated my belief that this country should preserve the provisions of the treaty of Versailles so far as that might be possible. I intimated, after having listened to the explanations made by those in charge of the enterprise in question, indicating that they were proceeding towards an eight-hour shift and a forty-eight hour week, and realizing that this bounty must be renewed from year to year, that I would be acting at variance with my idea that a reasonable opportunity should be afforded to people to effect their purpose and give evidence of the sincerity of their desire to reduce the hours of labour as they have intimated. I have always endeavoured to be reasonable and fair to those charged with great responsibility and to give them an opportunity to effect their declared purposes. I therefore did not vote.

I was called out of the chamber just as the vote was called, and I did not have time to send word to the Prime Minister with regard to my pair. I did not propose to vote at all because I felt that by so doing I would indicate my unwillingness to give a reasonable opportunity to those directly affected to advance the interests of those that I had most at heart. As I say, I was called out of the chamber just as the vote was called. I told our whip later that I should have intimated to him that I did not intend to vote.

I, with others who share my views as to a reasonable opportunity being afforded to the managers of an industry to effect their purpose as expressed, refrained from voting on this occasion, reserving to ourselves the right to determine our future action in the light of performance when we are called upon to pay out of the treasury the sums that may be necessary to discharge the obligations under this bill. I say that for myself and for those with whom I am associated who share my views and have refrained from voting for the same reason. I do not believe that my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre has advanced the cause that is as dear to us as it is to him by not affording the company in question the opportunity to prove by its actions that it is sincere and earnest in its desire to bring about an improvement of the conditions under which the men in this industry work.

Main motion agreed to, on division, and bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee on Bill No. 345, to amend the customs tariff—Mr. Dunning—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Schedule A amended.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say, Mr. Chairman, that bearing in mind what was said by the Minister of Finance yesterday in connection with the rate on flour under item 61, I am informed now that he was in error and that the rate he then quoted was per 100 pounds and not per barrel.

Mr. ADSHEAD: We cannot hear a word.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: I was dealing with item 61 which provides for countervailing duties being applied to flour. Flour is made from soft wheat and from other qualities of wheat, and I endeavoured the other evening to impress upon the minister the desirability of provision being made for the importation of soft wheat to meet the requirements of a small biscuit factory at Calgary and another at Edmonton. Yesterday the minister in declining to accede to the suggestion to divide flour into the two classes, for tariff purposes, indicated that the rate on flour from Toronto to Calgary was 76½ cents per barrel. On inquiry this morning I am informed that the rate is $1.51 per barrel and 76½ cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. EVANS: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I should like to know whether this is a free-for-all, or are we excluded from the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN: I would ask hon. gentlemen to try to keep order in the committee. At present it is almost impossible for any one to hear the discussion.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me: The figures he is now quoting as to rates are the same figures as were supplied to me, but the difference between them is not the difference between per hundred pounds and per barrel but between the less than car load and the carload rate per barrel.

Mr. BENNETT: Do you mean it is just half?

Mr. DUNNING: That is the information supplied to me. I have had the figures checked once, but in order to be absolutely certain I am arranging to have them checked again.

Mr. BENNETT: I can hardly think there is a differential of 100 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There might be over such a long distance as from Toronto to Calgary. The less than carload rate, as my hon. friend from his long experience of freight rates knows, would be very high for a single barrel, whereas the carload rate would be much lower proportionately. However, I am again checking the matter. I assure my hon. friend that I gave the information just as I received it.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not the slightest doubt that the minister gave the information in the utmost good faith. I questioned it at the moment, and he said it was his information. This morning I am advised that the rate is 76½ cents per hundred pounds.

Mr. DUNNING: And how much per barrel?

Mr. BENNETT: Per barrel, $1.51, I think.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, my hon. friend's figures may be right, but he may not be quoting the carlot rate; that is the whole point.

The $1.53, I think, is the figure I quoted on the less than carload basis; but the carlot rate was what I quoted as 76½ cents. Is my hon. friend sure he asked for the carlot rate?

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact I left a memorandum with regard to it, and I never speak with certainty about something that I am not certain about. My desire was to obtain the rate per hundred pounds on flour from Toronto to Calgary in carload lots; but whether or not the information I have received is correct I cannot say. But I apprehend from what the minister said yesterday it would not change the fate of the item so far as he is concerned—that he intends to let it go into operation as it stands.

Mr. DUNNING: The correctness of the information I supplied was one of the factors I undertook to consider when my hon. friend raised the matter first. I think we had better proceed.

Mr. BENNETT: On the theory that it is correct?

Mr. ADSHEAD: As this wheat is a necessity in Canada why should we penalize ourselves by putting a duty on it? This wheat is necessary for the biscuit industry of the Dominion.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend perhaps is not aware that large volumes of soft wheat are produced in Canada. Last year Canada milled over 4,000,000 barrels of soft wheat flour and in fact exported some of it.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Schedule B amended.

Mr. BENNETT: Before this bill is disposed of I have a very important question to ask the minister and I ask it with some hesitancy. In the Toronto Daily Star under date of May 19 there is a despatch from Ottawa by a staff reporter reading, in part, as follows:

> It is suggested in some quarters that Mr. Dunning put the high duties on these commodities to demonstrate to Canada what high protection really meant in dollars and cents on the cost of living. Having plainly shown it, he intends to revise the fruit and vegetable schedule into a moderate tariff.

On May 17, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) sent a communication to various persons in connection with the tariff situation, and among other things on page 4 of his letter he wrote:

> In the event, however, of any of these customs duties on fruit and vegetables working out in commercial practice higher than anticipated, they are quite likely to be modified in committee, as in former budgets.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Now, I ask the Minister of Finance, occupying one of the most responsible positions in this country, whether or not there is any foundation in fact for the statement made by the newspaper correspondent and others—some members of this house from Saskatchewan have made a similar statement—that he deliberately introduced into the tariff resolutions a provision with respect to fruit and vegetables which necessitated the payment of high duties, thereby increasing the cost to the consumer, as indicated by the reports made the other evening from Winnipeg and Calgary and other points, and then repealed such provisions and inserted other provisions for the purpose of indicating to the Canadian people that the imposition of such duties involved a higher cost of fruit and vegetables to the consumer?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend knows what the answer is. I can of course state that the increases in prices of fruits and vegetables which resulted were entirely out of proportion to the increased duties levied—that goes without saying—and to that extent were a surprise to me. But as to introducing a matter of this importance to this house under any subterfuge, I think my hon. friend knows me better than to imagine that I would do so. And I can certainly say definitely, "no" to his question whether I introduced something to this house in the tariff with the deliberate intention of afterwards changing it.

Mr. BENNETT: I need hardly say, Mr. Chairman, that I asked the question only to afford the minister an opportunity to deny that he would do any such thing. No man would be fit for the high position of Minister of Finance who would do such a thing. Yet I am bound to say that there are members who have stated that that was his purpose in doing it, and I must say that those members sit on the other side of the house and come from his own province of Saskatchewan.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Who are they?

Mr. BENNETT: I thought it highly desirable that there should be no further opportunity for misunderstanding in respect to that matter.

Mr. McPHEE: I would like to know to what members from Saskatchewan the hon. gentleman has referred.

Mr. BENNETT: I have no intention of naming them; they name themselves.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish to call the attention of members of the committee to a printer's error which occurs at page 7; I want to be sure that hon. members understand it correctly. In connection with item 152d the printer has the figure 27½ in the general and intermediate columns; it should be 22½ in each case. It is purely a printer's error.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I would like to ask the leader of the opposition to what members from the province of Saskatchewan he has referred. He made the statement that the Minister of Finance had put something in the budget because of certain action by members from Saskatchewan. I think it is only fair that he should state the names of those members.

Mr. RYERSON: Mr. Chairman, I have just received a message from the manager of Robbins and Myers Company of Canada, Limited, of Brantford, manufacturers of small motors. With the permission of the committee I shall read the message:

Am informed tariff item 457 has been amended, page 2617 Hansard, May 23rd, admitting washing machine motors 10 per cent duty general tariff. This is very bad for our business which has been built up under bad competition from the States. Old duty should hold. Please do what you can.

This telegram is sent by K. C. Berney of the Robbins and Myers Company, Brantford. I might say that under the former item there was a duty of 30 and 35 per cent, and under the new tariff the general rate is 10 per cent. This manufacturing concern began business in Brantford a number of years ago; it is a branch of an American factory, and I believe it is still connected with the American concern. They employ a large number of people, and it is altogether likely that this proposed change will make it impossible for them to continue their business. Will the minister consider taking off this item?

Mr. DUNNING: The matter of adding those small less-than-one-horse-power machines to the concessions granted to the washing machine people was very carefully considered. I cannot promise that there would be any possibility of changing the rate.

Mr. RYERSON: This industry was organized in the city of Brantford practically for the sole purpose of manufacturing these small motors for washing machines and vacuum cleaners, and I may say to the minister that this item hits their industry very hard.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it possible to deal with the matter by using the same language as is used in item 457a, which is limited by the use of the words "of a class or kind not made in Canada"? Inasmuch as this industry and probably other industries of the same character are affected, the use of these words might be sufficient. Would such a clause interfere with the general principle which the hon. gentleman has in mind?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, very seriously.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would like to move an amendment, that the bill be amended by adding the following words:

Provided however that the rates of duty set out under items 377, 377a, 377b, and 377c shall apply only when the industry producing the articles enumerated therein has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the governor in council that in the operation of such industry the employees are paid a fair and reasonable wage, and that there is instituted the eight-hour day and the forty-eight-hour week in accordance with the provisions of any international convention adopted by a labour conference held under the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish to take only one or two minutes to point out the impracticability of this amendment. I hope my hon. friend will not again reproach me from the point of view of lack of sympathy or lack of knowledge; the question is purely one of practical administration. I think my hon. friends will be kind enough to credit me with having the same sympathy which they themselves have shown.

The customs tariff is made for use in customs ports of entry wherever they may be, all across this country. The rates set out in that tariff become the rates charged upon imported goods. As I understand the amendment it applies to the whole of the industry engaged in producing the articles named in these four schedules, and it will be noted that in connection with some of them the tariff has actually been lowered, particularly as to the British preference. My point is that at the present time there is one concern, a part of this industry, which has established the eight-hour day with respect to the major portion if not all its undertakings. My hon. friend will see at once the unfairness of the position created by his amendment. If even one of the concerns engaged in this industry did not comply with the conditions of his amendment, assuming it to be passed, then all those engaged in the industry would have applied to their product the former tariff instead of the present one. If industries in the United States were interested in getting their goods into this country at the old tariff rate it would be a very simple matter for them, through the control of one Canadian concern, to ensure that the new tariff would never become operative; they would simply refuse to comply with the conditions of the amendment. In that way the whole Canadian industry might be placed at the mercy of one particular company. I point this out for the reason that again we are attempting to accomplish by indirect means something which we cannot do directly, as was pointed out last night by the Prime Minister. The provincial legislatures can legislate with respect to hours of labour and rates of wages within their provinces. If we tried to do it in the manner proposed by my hon. friend we would simply create a condition of chaos in the administration of customs along the border; otherwise we must apply to the whole industry a condition which is unfair to those of the industry who are complying with the conditions described in the amendment. My hon. friend sees, I am sure, the dilemma from a practical point of view which would arise out of the adoption of his proposal.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There may be some ground for the minister's statement, but I would point out that similar difficulties prevail at the present time. For example, if the Algoma Steel Corporation should undertake to put in the eight-hour day they would be handicapped because of competition with the Besco people at Sydney who would not have the eight-hour day, and thus, for those who want to do the thing fairly, there would be a very great hardship involved. I say that a like situation actually exists to-day which probably is worthy of more consideration than the hypothetical case with regard to which the minister speaks.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I can assure my hon. friend that the difficulty created by his amendment would be in fact much worse. I have had it very carefully looked into.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then further, whilst there might be difficulty with regard to American firms establishing branches in this country, we already have that situation to-day where a great many American firms are actually establishing branches here in order to get in under the British preference. Therefore that situation also is one which at present prevails.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend sees that his own point bears out what I say now. Under his amendment, if one of them refuses to comply with the conditions, he would place the whole Canadian industry under the handicap of having imports of these commodities come in from the United States at the old rates instead of at the rates proposed in this tariff. My hon. friend is reinforcing my point purely on the practical side.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite admit that practical difficulties are involved, but I want to suggest, as we have been trying to do in several of these debates during the last few days, that practical difficulties exist at the present time so far as the men are concerned. I think I may say the government has done nothing whatever to obviate the practical difficulties that are experienced with regard to labour in the industry, and it proposes nothing to obviate them. Those of us who have been trying to represent especially the interests of labour—because industry has enough people to stand behind it—must do what we can on an occasion of this kind to press again upon the government the necessity of caring for the labour men who are engaged in industry.

This resolution which I have submitted to the committee is almost identical with and certainly follows very closely the lines of that suggested the other day by the leader of the opposition. There are a few phrases which are slightly changed in order to bring it more closely in conformity with the phraseology of the Versailles treaty, that is all. The idea is one which I took directly from the leader of the opposition. From what he said on another occasion this afternoon, in connection with the amendment to the bill providing for a bonus on coal, apparently he feels that under present conditions it is not advisable to force the hands of the company. I have no qualms of conscience with regard to that at all. The company has been going on for a good many years in one form or another, maintaining these same bad conditions. The fact that it has been reorganized does not seem to me to be a sufficient reason for us to refuse to attempt to safeguard the men at this time of reorganization. Everywhere the interests of capital are given preeminence; in this amendment which I am seeking to have the committee adopt, the interests of the workers are given preeminence and we are making provision that wages and decent conditions of labour ought to be a first claim. I think I can trust the Minister of Finance so to manage its administration that some of these evils which he foresees might be obviated.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that the hon. gentleman has not given this matter his usual care and attention. Certainly I have given a great deal more attention to it during the past few days than I ever thought I should have done. Suppose this amendment carries; it imposes a duty on the importation of steel, as indicated by the statute.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This follows almost precisely the suggestion made by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend will observe that I did not move that as an amendment. It was handed to me by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, and I did suggest, as perhaps the hon. gentleman will remember, that something of this sort might be enacted. The next day—because the matter came suddenly to my attention—I took some time to consider it and I studied it carefully. I do not see how you can impose that amendment upon a tariff item and make it inure to the benefit of those whom the hon. gentlemen desires to assist. They are not interested in the importation of steel, and not being interested they are not concerned about the tariff. The tariff is imposed for the purpose of providing more work for Canadians in Canada, not somewhere else, and it is believed that this enactment, by increasing the duties on steel 80 per cent, will have the effect of shutting out steel from the United States and enable steel to be made in Canada that heretofore has been made somewhere else. That means that much more work for Canadians who now have no jobs, but to say that the tariff should not apply unless the people in the factories that would be benefited work only a certain number of hours per week is an impracticable suggestion from the point of view of its being carried into effect, because workmen do not import; they only work at new jobs created by reason of this tariff shutting out the importation of steel and enabling the demand to be supplied in Canada.

That is the first reason why I began to study the proposal, but there is a second reason which I commend to my hon. friend. Reforms are not won in a day. The hon. gentleman himself is a striking illustration of that.

Mr. HOWARD: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: There is nothing to laugh at, because the hon. gentleman has accomplished a great deal, but he has not done it in a day and he would be the first to say that progress is slow and that reforms are not won in a day or a night. Here is the case of an industry which employs over 20,000 men, and which has recently emerged from a receivership. If it continued in that receivership certainly it could never hope to be a worth while industry; but now it has emerged. There is an industry in another part of the country that has just managed to pay its bond interest, that is, interest on that part of the capital which is borrowed. Usually if you say that 75 per cent of the capital is borrowed you are stating a maximum, because in many instances it is less in this type of enterprise. For some time the dividends payable to shareholders have been nil; that is, eliminating the watered stock, the money which has been put into the enterprise has produced no return. It is not necessary to say that when it was put in it was expected that it would produce a return, and it is hoped that it will produce a return. Moreover, they have given an understanding to the Prime Minister that they do not look for a return until they have accomplished the reforms which my hon. friend desires to have accomplished and which I think it is fair to say every hon. member in this house expects to see accomplished. If that be so, having regard to the fact that we have control over this matter in this house, which in the ordinary course of human events will meet again within the next eight months, and having regard to the fact that the hon. member has succeeded in bringing to the attention of these corporations and of parliament a condition which parliament desires to remedy, should there not be afforded to the companies an opportunity to change gradually their whole business structure? They have introduced many new practices which render the lot of the workingmen much less difficult than it was. Is it not fair to say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has accomplished his purpose in having brought this matter to the attention of parliament and having secured a favourable judgment upon the necessity of the change being made. Should we not afford to those who have to undertake the change a reasonable opportunity to do so? The reasonable view is the one which in the end prevails, and when one considers the statement made to the Prime Minister and to myself, although not by the same gentlemen, backed by the observations made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), it must be conceded that the hon. member has made a great step forward. Assuming that the Minister of Finance adopted this amendment, where would we be?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask a question of the hon. leader of the opposition?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member has said that we would be here in parliament next year, and no doubt this matter will come up again. I do not want to press unduly the leader of the opposition, but will he be willing to support a movement along this line when we meet here at the next session of parliament?

Mr. BENNETT: The question is not an unfair one, and I have no hesitancy in saying that unless a reasonable excuse is offered, I propose to do so.

Mr. DUNNING: In fairness to myself, I would like to point out the impracticability of this present amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member did not ask me if I would support this amendment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I mean to support the idea we have in mind, that is, a forty-eight-hour week and six days per week.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not an eight-hour day, it is eight-hour shifts in respect to steel manufacture.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That reasonable conditions and rates of wages and hours of labour shall be secured for the steel and coal workers?

Mr. BENNETT: I assure the hon. member that I shall make every effort that I can in that direction. Suppose a crisis should arise and the plant should shut down because no orders are on hand, surely the hon. gentleman would not expect that the change would be effected in that case. I have already discussed with him the conditions which obtained in Germany, France and Great Britain immediately after the war, and the conditions which now obtain in the United States. These changed conditions do not obtain in all the plants in the United States, but most of them have adopted the general principle of the eight-hour shift. The Prime Minister spoke last evening, and I suppose with that discipline which prevails in a government but which does not always prevail in opposing groups, his remarks can be accepted as applying to all supporters of the government. I believe it is the unanimous opinion of this House of Commons that everything reasonable should be done to bring about the changed conditions to which the hon. member has referred. Judging from what has been said, I think that is a fair statement to make. I do not believe that by being, shall I say too insistent upon relief being granted, one readily obtains the end aimed at. If one reads the lives of Lord Shaftesbury and Samuel Plimsoll, one will realize that that is so. Progress may be slow but it is steady. I think the cause of the hon member could be advanced by a moderate expression of opinion—I am not complaining —and by a steady insistence upon the soundness of the views expressed, and by bringing to its support and assistance that great body of moderate public opinion which controls in the end the actions of parliaments and legislatures.

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Chairman, the unreasonable part of this whole thing is that the government is seeking still further to privilege this concern, after the bonuses, bounties and privileges it has received for the last thirty years. The hon. leader of the opposition and the government should not accuse the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre of being unreasonable in trying to insert in this bill what I consider to be a reasonable condition. I object to giving these concessions and privileges to this company without the imposition of any conditions. I deny the words of the hon. leader of the opposition that this is done in order to provide more jobs in Canada; it is not done for the workingman at all, and never has been done for that purpose. I protest against the whole business.

Amendment negatived.

Section 5 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. DUNNING moved that the bill be now read a third time.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. minister be good enough to look at section 5 of the bill, which reads:—

> This act shall be deemed to have come into force on the second day of May, one thousand nine hundred and thirty, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the preceding sections imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date.

Does that involve the possibility of refunds, or is that section in the usual form of sections of like character?

Mr. DUNNING: It is the usual form. I cannot add anything to the statement which I made regarding refunds.

Mr. BENNETT: I wanted to be sure of the exact meaning.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course, applications for refunds are always in order.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 265, to amend the Pension Act.

He said: There are two amendments proposed by the Senate. The first is to qualify section 9 of the bill, and deals with the reinstatement of pensioners who have commuted their pensions. It provides that the pensioner shall be entitled to the pension which he was drawing previous to the time of commutation. The second amendment is on page 7, line eight. The word "heretofore" is substituted for the word "herebefore." All the amendments are accepted.

Mr. MANION: I do not know all the amendments. Do they make any change in the meaning of the bill as put forward by the committee?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No. There was some misunderstanding before the Senate committee and this is merely to clarify that. The amendment was drawn by the Department of Justice.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. 313, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

TORONTO TERMINALS RAILWAY COMPANY

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 129, respecting the Toronto Terminals Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No 138, to amend the criminal code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Promoting changes by unlawful means.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Clause 2 covers the same bill as has passed this house six times to repeal certain sections introduced into the criminal code in 1919. This has been debated so many times that I presume I need not again give the purpose of this clause. The committee know very well what is involved.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Unlicensed importation, manufacture, sale, gift, etc., of certain weapons.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Clauses 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 would enact a bill which has passed the Senate on three occasions concerning firearms and licensing of weapons. That bill was submitted one year to a committee of the house, passed the committee, but was not proceeded with by the whole house. I admit that this involves a rather important and considerable change, and some members have represented to me that at this late stage of the session it might be better to leave the matter over for another year when I expect we shall all be here again in our respective capacities. Therefore I would ask that sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 be dropped.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Cardin moves that sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 be dropped.

Motion agreed to.

Sections 3 to 7 inclusive dropped.

On section 8—Intentions not seditious.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is in the same class as clause 2. It is to replace in the code a limitation which was there prior to 1919 Clause 9 is also to replace the law as it was prior to 1919.

Section agreed to.

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10—French version amended.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is to correct certain words in the French translation of the statute. It does not change the law.

Section agreed to.

On section 11—Broker reducing stock by selling for his own account.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Clause 11 is an amendment which all the attorneys general of the provinces, in a report of their conference following certain stock market operations, have asked us to enact. Its purpose is to prohibit brokers from selling shares which they have under their control in such a way as to reduce the amount of such shares in their hands in the ordinary course of business below the amount of such shares which they should be carrying for all customers. I have kept the wording adopted unanimously by the provinces.

Mr. LAWSON: I feel it incumbent upon me to deal with sections 11, 14 and 15 of this bill, and as much as I have to say under sections 14 and 15 is referable to section 11, the time of the committee would be saved if the minister would be good enough to allow section 11 to stand until sections 14 and 15 have been disposed of.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is no objection.

Section 11 stands.

On section 12—Advertising, printing, posting or selling intelligence on horse races.

Mr. GEARY: I would suggest that the minister let this section stand until we are all together again next year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. I am very obliging, but not to that extent.

Mr. GEARY: The difficulty to my mind is just this. Section 235 of the act includes advertising, printing, publishing and so forth of information intended to assist in, or intended for use in connection with bookmaking, pool-selling, betting or wagering upon horse races or upon any fight, game or sport. I do not know whether "sport" would include contract bridge or not. This bill takes out of the general section horse racing. If you are inside the high board fence, you can be shown anything; you may look at the horses and look at the board and see what you want; not that that gives you much satisfaction as a rule, but the information is there available. The only condition is that you must put up your money and get inside the high board fence. People are interested in horse racing aside from betting. Horse racing has been described as the sport of kings, and betting has been associated with horse racing from time immemorial. This House of Commons has endorsed the practice of betting on horse races. The province from which I come has also more or less endorsed it and takes a considerable fee from the operations of the betting machines. The betting has become more or less mechanical, and the province profits by it; so that we have endorsed it.

Under the section before us you must not even know a day or so before a race that a certain horse is the son or daughter of another horse, or what that other horse did in his or her day. That is to say, you are not to be given any information. The newspaper is prohibited from publishing news in regard to a very fine animal because it may be that it would have something to do with betting upon the result of that animal's efforts in a race. Then afterwards you cannot go home and tell anybody what the horse paid on a race because you are publishing information. You go down to the race track, knowing nothing, whether you want to bet or not, because you are not allowed to discuss or read about a horse. You pay your money and get inside the high board fence. You do your betting if inclined that way, and when you get outside you must forget the whole business. It seems to me that we are being made too good. I am not a racing man myself and am not particularly interested in racing, but I know a great many people who are interested in horse racing and in knowing about the horses, what they do and have done, and in what they did at the races, but under this section when you are going home on the street car with a friend you cannot even tell him that a certain horse paid $2.15 on a $2 ticket, because that would be publishing information. The whole thing is ridiculous. There will be some betting on the election this year, probably more than on most horses races. There is hardly a member of this house who does not go home in the evening and play a game of bridge for a small stake, and I do not suppose there is any harm in that.

If you preserve the old provision and require some intention in the publishing, I think you will reach the evil. The police, of course, would like that struck out. They do not like to have to prove things too closely. It is easier for them to get people convicted when they do not have to prove intent. It seems to me that we are going very far. I know that there are certain papers which are behind this bill and certain papers which are against it. I must say to the minister and to the committee that, after all, no matter how badly it may be abused, horse racing is a sport in which a great many people in this country are interested, and if the papers of this country are not to be permitted to publish what is perfectly legitimate news you are clamping on them a sort of embargo or prohibition to which it seems to me a free press should not have to submit.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would be the last man to say that horse racing is necessarily a wrong thing; far from it. But as my hon. friend will see, there is nothing here to prevent horse racing or even betting on the pari-mutuels at the races. The object of this bill is to make more difficult the business of certain bookmakers who are carrying on their trade almost everywhere in the cities—in the barber shops, in the hotels and in the stores—and are creating a situation which many people believe is a curse. This amendment has been asked for by many associations, and it is exactly the same as has been introduced into this house and passed by it on two occasions.

Mr. GEARY: How will this prevent handbook-making?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It will make it more difficult. They will not have all the present facilities for giving to the poor fellows who frequent those places information by way of tips, odds and that sort of thing which they now give out. It is illegal to do that under the law as it stands now, but the law is very difficult of enforcement because, as my hon. friend pointed out, you have to prove that the tips or odds, advertising or printing and so forth were intended for use in connection with bookmaking. It has been found in practice that these words tended to make the law absolutely ineffective and very difficult of enforcement. The law will remain the same for all other games. But horse racing is really granted a privilege under the code; only when it applies to horse racing is betting not unlawful. Therefore no serious objection to this section should come from those interested in horce racing.

Mr. GEARY: I can understand the minister's argument with regard to pre-race tips, but surely no part of it has any bearing on the publishing of post-race news.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not suppose that publishing the names of the winning horses and their places would be illegal; that is altogether different from publishing odds or tips, or anything of that kind.

Mr. MANION: Could not they arrange to have the names of the winning horses published before the race?

Mr. POWER: Although I am not very strongly in favour of this bill, it is quite possible that handbook betting would be materially assisted by the publication of the odds of a race after the race has been run, because it is the custom of the handbook men to pay off the bettors on the starting-price basis published in the newspapers. That becomes the official return in the transactions between the handbook men and their clients. At any rate, that is my information.

Mr. McGIBBON: These proposed amendments, Mr. Chairman, bring back memories of old times. During the war and after we had a kind of hysteria that found expression in amendments to the criminal code. In course of time with the assistance of hon. gentlemen in the Senate and some of us in this house, like my friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power), we succeeded in defeating many of those proposed amendments. They are making their appearance again now.

Mr. CAHILL: We are getting good again.

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes. Some of them are absolutely ridiculous. There is one thing that I have always tried to uphold in this country, consistent of course with the enforcement of decent law and order, and that is the liberties of the people. I am not a lawyer, but I would be inclined to agree with the interpretation given this section by my friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary). If he is correct, we are making ridiculous infringements on the liberties of the people. It is all right to say here that these proposed amendments do not mean this and that they mean that, but my observation has been,—thank God! I have not had any experience—that that does not help much in the courts. On behalf of the people of this country, Mr. Chairman, I strongly object to these constant attempts to take away our liberties—liberties that were bought dearly in the years gone by. There are other amendments, for instance, section 13, that I think it would be a crime to pass. I desire to associate myself in this regard with the member for Quebec South and the member for South Toronto. I think this section should stand.

Mr. CHURCH: Who is asking for this particular amendment?

An hon. MEMBER: The Toronto Globe.

Mr. CHURCH: If this amendment is accepted betting will be legal inside, say, the Woodbine, among a crowd of 15,000 or 25,000, and illegal over the fence across the road. I am not a race track man, I never made a bet on a horse in my life, but I think this is the wrong method to stamp out the evil of gambling. Why does not the Minister of Justice go further? I see some papers are crediting him with giving tips on the coming election.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Toronto Star offered 10 to 1 the other day.

Mr. CHURCH: Why does not the Minister go further and declare illegal tips on football, baseball and other games? Some people lose more money on those games than they do on horse racing. I suppose we shall be told that this is another example of "twentieth century Liberalism." Well, I am certain our friends opposite know what will happen to this bill. They know it will meet the same fate as a similar bill last session—some hon. gentlemen elsewhere will chloroform it. If the Minister of Justice wants to do something practical to cure this evil, let him try to stop gambling in the pool rooms of the larger cities of this country. I doubt very much whether the bill if enacted would have the effect the minister expects; but certainly it will have one effect—it will abolish the race track.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is exactly the purpose of the bill, to stop betting in pool rooms. As to betting on political elections, I may say it is already covered by the criminal code. Of course, anybody can make a private bet —I enjoy it myself—but public betting on anything of this kind is covered by the criminal code. Anybody who records or registers any bet or wager or sells any tip with respect to a political or municipal election brings himself within the criminal code. If my hon. friend did that he would be guilty of an indictable offence and would have to go to gaol for a year.

Mr. MANION: But, as the member for Toronto Northwest pointed out, the minister himself has been giving tips on that very thing.

Mr. CANNON: He is not selling them.

Mr. MANION: The member for Toronto Northwest inquired as to who had been asking for this legislation. I should like to know as well.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As I said before, this question has been before the house on two previous occasions. I can find resolutions of very worthy associations which have asked for this reform.

Mr. MANION: I would like to have the names of some of those associations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. MANION: I am serious; I would like to know who is asking for this legislation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are some church organizations.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. MANION: Sometimes church organizations ask for strange things; who are the people asking for this legislation?

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like to ask the minister if those who asked for it requested discriminating legislation of this type.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is the bill which they have been asking for.

Mr. McGIBBON: Did they ask to make betting legal inside the track and illegal outside the track?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I wonder if my hon. friend remembers an occasion when we discussed this question for a week, the matter of allowing betting on race courses was discussed at great length in this house. It was decided that racing must be under the control of incorporated clubs, and that they should have only one or two meets each year. I voted for that legislation; I do not know whether my hon. friend did.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister apparently does not appreciate my point. This is legislation for the rich. I am not particularly in favour of betting—

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is legislation against book-makers.

Mr. McGIBBON: But it allows the man who can pay an admission fee to bet as much as he likes, whereas the man who cannot afford to pay an admission cannot make a bet. I am not in favour of betting, but I am opposed to legislation which discriminates in favour of the rich.

An hon. MEMBER: If he has no money he cannot bet.

Mr. MANION: The minister has said that he can give the names of certain organizations, and I ask for one or two of those names. I do not dispute the word of the minister, but I would like to know who is responsible.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Would you like me to read the newspaper? I will tell my hon. friend that I am responsible for the bill.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman does not surprise the house by saying that the responsible minister is in charge of the introduction of the bill. I would not however like to be held responsible for all the things for which the minister is responsible. I am asking for information.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my hon. friend wishes to know at whose instigation the bill was introduced I may tell him that it was at my instigation.

Mr. MANION: Who requested it? The minister stood in the house a few minutes ago and laughed at the proposition contained in his own bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh no, I never did.

Mr. MANION: His whole statement was made in that spirit.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend as usual is carried away by his enthusiasm; he is a very nice chap but he is a little too excitable.

Mr. MANION: I am not a bit more excitable than the minister himself. The only difference between him and me is that I do not write so many of my speeches.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANION: I do not write so many of my speeches; we can keep cooler when we read our speeches. When the minister reads he keeps his personality to himself, and I could keep mine to myself if I wished to read all I have to say. I am asking the minister for information; I would like to have the names of the organizations to which he has referred. What reason has the minister for refusing to give the information I have requested? He has made the statement that many organizations have asked for this legislation; why does he object to giving the names of those organizations? He says he has read many newspaper articles; so have I, but I did not think the government would introduce legislation every time it read a newspaper article.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I did not say it was because of that.

Mr. MANION: The minister stated he read many articles in the newspapers, but I did not suppose he would introduce legislation every time he read a newspaper article. I again ask for the names of the organizations to which he has referred, and I can see no reason why he should object to giving them. With all due respect I ask for this information. He says there are many; why can he not name some of them?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at 6 o'clock we were considering section 12 of Bill 138, which is found on page 9 of the bill.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—exemption from duty to supply medical attendance.

Mr. BISSETT: Mr. Chairman, in connection with section 13 I think we all agree that one of the greatest responsibilities of the state is that which has to do with the protection of children. This section added to the bill will certainly remove the protection all children ought to have in respect to medical care and attention. I have no quarrel with the Christian Science treatment in any shape or form as far as adults are concerned and I do not think members of the medical profession have any such objection. It is not a question of treatment as far as adults are concerned at all; it is simply a question of protecting children, and I object to the proposed amendment as set out in this section.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Mr. Chairman, I quite appreciate the position taken by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, but I desire to record my own approval and support of the section for one reason only. I should think that under all circumstances we would view with great hesitation a section of this kind if it were something that dealt with opportunities to be afforded to people who desire to practise in the way indicated for their own personal profit, but it seems to me that inasmuch as the section as it appears in the bill involves the exercise of the practice of a religious belief, the house should entertain the proposal favourably. I cannot see how otherwise we can conscientiously and consistently support that with which I believe the entire house is in accord, namely that every man and every woman shall be free to practise to the fullest extent those religious beliefs he or she entertains. If it were not for that point, Mr. Chairman, I would view the section with considerable disfavour, but in view of the fact that those who are supporting it and those who, I am given to understand, have asked for it, are people who have entertained the proposals as part of the religious belief which they support, I support it. I believe it to be agreed by all members of this house that every man in this country should be free to practise his own religious belief, whatever it may be, without let or hindrance, and therefore I think the house should support this section.

Mr. MacLAREN: Mr. Chairman, I think there are some serious objections to this clause at it stands. One objection has been referred to by the hon. member opposite, and the point would seem to be whether it does include the children of those who might be Christian Scientists. We would like to have a statement from the minister on that point.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, yes, it does.

Mr. MacLAREN: In that case I am strongly opposed to the section, because while it may be proper to give individual liberty with regard to religious beliefs, if that liberty entails serious danger to children with regard to their life and health it is a very different matter. Therefore I oppose this section on that ground as far as the children are concerned. It is a different matter, in connection with adults, and I am not referring to that at all. The other objection I have is with reference to infectious diseases. No one person is a law unto himself, especially if he is suffering from an infectious disease.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think it would cover that.

Mr. MacLAREN: The clause does not make that clear.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The provincial regulations concerning health and having regard to contagious diseases still would be in force for these people as well as for anyone else.

Mr. MacLAREN: That is not clear from the section. If there is to be a limitation I think it would be well to state it in that clause. The question is whether it will or will not conflict with provincial health acts. I think that is unquestionably a matter which should be cleared up now, when we are considering this section. In any event, I understand that the minister says this does not apply in the case of infectious diseases.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MacLAREN: How can one draw that inference? How can one judge as to that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Because this does not amend the dispositions of the criminal code which make it criminal to neglect doing certain things, giving the necessaries of life and the care to children; this relates only to the three sections of the code as they are. As I say, the provincial regulations concerning contagious diseases and any others regarding health certainly will apply, and we have no power to deal with them.

Mr. MacLAREN: I do not think that is very clear. The minister referred to the failure to do certain things. What did he mean? I would say it meant the failure to report infectious diseases.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They would be compelled to do that.

Mr. MacLAREN: In any case, Mr. Chairman, I object on account of children who are not able to judge for themselves, and then I do not think it is clear as the clause stands that it will not apply in cases of diseases that are a danger to the community.

Mr. MANION: There is more than that, if I understand the purpose of the section correctly; but perhaps before I say anything I should make sure that I do understand it. I will get the purpose from the minister in this way. Supposing a child had diphtheria and its parents were Christian Scientists. There is a specific and almost perfect treatment for diphtheria by the use of antidiphtheritic serum. I have no desire to say one word against the religious beliefs of any man or woman, but suppose because of those beliefs the parents of that child are permitted to refuse the giving of antidiphtheritic serum—

Mr. LAPOINTE: If provincial regulations provide for compulsory treatment, they would have to allow the treatment to be given.

Mr. MANION: But that is not compulsory.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Under this section it would not be a criminal offence under the criminal code.

Mr. MANION: While it is quite true that medical men themselves practise Christian Science in the cure of patients, down through the years a number of scientific discoveries, such as the one I have mentioned, have been made for the treatment of disease. This treatment might be advised under provincial law, but I doubt if it would be enforced, and the doing away with a treatment of this kind because of religious belief would not be fair to the child. That is the opinion of medical men who know anything about the treatment of disease. The same thing would be true of other conditions such as tetanus. There is a simple preventive treatment for tetanus, which treatment saved probably tens of thousands and perhaps hundreds of thousands of lives during the war.

Mr. MacLAREN: And typhoid fever.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps that is not quite so specific an example. Pasteur, one of the greatest scientists of the medical world discovered a treatment for the prevention of hydrophobia. Those are the three distinct treatments which I do not think this house should permit even Christian Scientists, or people of any other belief, to neglect to give to children requiring them from a curative or preventive standpoint.

I remember reading a few years ago of some Christian Scientist parents who refused treatment to a child suffering from tuberculosis of the knee joint. There is a fairly successful treatment for tuberculosis of the knee joint, and not to permit a child to receive treatment because of some religious belief seems to me to be almost criminal. No doubt there are other medical members of the committee who know of scientific methods of treatment for other diseases which are not guesswork or gunshot prescription methods. I wish to place myself on record as being opposed to any legislation which would prevent the proper treatment being given to children who cannot think for themselves. I think it is the duty of those in this house who know something of disease to oppose strenuously this legislation.

Mr. KAISER: Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the attention of the minister to a few features in connection with this amendment, without desiring to say anything regarding the belief of people who practise Christian Science, or to impugn their sincerity of purpose. A very extended debate would be necessary in order to obtain a full understanding of what this amendment means, but we are faced at once with two or three features. These sections have to do with three classes of persons. The first covers the care of people unable to care for themselves; the second is the obligation of parents towards children under sixteen years of age; but the most important one applies to the guardians of children under sixteen years of age. Those are very sacred trusts, and the bill distinctly says that anything which would tend to produce ill health or death in these particular cases should not be regarded in the light of a crime. Why should one class of people be excluded from these obligations? The bill is discriminatory in its provisions.

The minister says that in the case of diphtheria or smallpox, the provincial authorities can apply quarantine and prevent the spread of the disease. The important point in the application of quarantine is the matter of diagnosis. Who is to say that a child has diphtheria or smallpox? There is only one man can say that, the trained medical expert. Some of the best trained men have been mistaken in the diagnosis of these diseases at their inception. Due to a misunderstanding of all phases of these intricate diseases, they have often swept on and obtained a foothold simply because they were not recognized in time. It is wrong to say that a whole class of a community shall be put in the position of saying that no one shall make a diagnosis or report to the provincial board of health and thereby prevent the spread of disease. The prevention of disease is the result of thousands of years of observation. The march of science has been going on for hundreds and hundreds of years, and has now reached the point where we are enabled, by applied methods, to save hundreds of thousands from disease and disaster. We are now asked to say that all this accumulated knowledge shall be set aside and that a certain section of the community shall have the privilege of allowing conditions to obtain which we claim should not be permitted.

Take the child who has just died of diphtheria, and let me say that no sadder picture can be presented to the eyes of man in these modern days, than to find again "Rachel weeping for her children" when no warning of disease had been given. There is a child that has died. Somebody had not called in a doctor and the child had not received proper treatment. The persons responsible, in order to escape this criminal action, may plead that they believed in Christian Science and nobody knows whether they do or not until they are charged in a court of law. Some modification must be made in this provision before it is put into force, and to my mind it would be better to let the matter stand over for the present. At this stage of the session this amendment cannot be properly considered and it should be delayed until the members of parliament have had an opportunity of examining into it in all its bearings. I would ask that the minister be fair to men of science, men who have devoted their lives to this subject. At my time of life I am not particularly concerned whether I am called to exercise my function as a physician or not, but as one interested in humanity I would plead with the minister to drop this for the present and if he wishes to bring it up at another session when there will be plenty of time to lay the case before the house and the country, then I am willing to take my chances as to whether this amendment will go through or not.

Mr. DONNELLY: If I understand this clause in the bill aright, it means that no one is compelled to call in either a medical man or a surgeon to attend to any case of sickness. If an individual does not call them in. he is not liable for criminal negligence. Many of us who are medical men believe that all cases of sickness and surgical cases should be treated by medical men or surgeons, but there are some of the laity who believe that anyone who is sick or diseased in any way has a perfect right to use his method, whatever it may be, of curing such sickness, or for the treatment of the disease. We shall not find fault with those who take that view, so long as they are at least of the age of twenty-one years of age and of sound mind, if they are willing to lie down and die from diphtheria or appendicitis without calling in a medical man or a surgeon to attend to them. Many people consider that they have a perfect right to do as they wish in these matters, but on the other hand many contend that grown up people who impose their will upon children of tender years who are not responsible for themselves are going too far in deciding not to call in a medical man in case of sickness or disease. I can conceive, for example, a case of a child who has a broken leg or arm. Under this provision it will not be necessary for persons holding the views to which I have referred to call in a surgeon to X-ray that broken limb, see what is the matter with it, and help to set it right. The result will be that the child will go through life crippled and the parents cannot be punished. I believe if we pass legislation such as this we shall be liable for criminal negligence ourselves. Nothing could be more outrageous; no one in his senses would think of passing a law such as this.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: We have heard speeches by several medical men in the house on this proposed amendment and they would almost give us the impression they are afraid that their craft is in danger; that medical science is going to be seriously interfered with and that perhaps the practice of a physician or a surgeon will be hampered because of the proposed amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Not at all.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: We have listened to several medical men and the tenor of their remarks has all been along the same line, very strenuously opposed to the proposed amendment. The hon. member for Springfield mentioned that the object of medical science was the preservation of life. If we are going to carry that through to its logical conclusion, we had better pass legislation that will make it a criminal offence for parents to be neglectful if their children catch cold, for fear that they may get pneumonia and lose their lives. We had better have legislation to make it a criminal offence for parents to clothe their children improperly or under-nourish them. To my mind it would be just as reasonable to have legislation making that a criminal offence as to make it a criminal offence for any person who has a sincere belief in some other remedy, to resort to it.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

The object of medical science is to heal or cure any disease. I am not at variance with medical science. I do not discount the ability or usefulness of the doctor. I admit there are cases when the doctor can do work that perhaps it is necessary to have done, but along with that I am prepared to state that there are people who believe they can accomplish more by other means than can be accomplished by medical science. I am not a Christian Scientist; neither do I approve the Christian Science doctrine, but I know personally, absolutely, that we have in Canada several religious sects who practise faith healing. They do so on the basis of the Scripture. They believe what the Bible says. They take the simple reading of the Bible, believe what it says, and when they are sick they call in the elders who pray with them, often with favourable results. The people who are sick are sometimes healed, although not always, but neither are all those who are sick, healed who call the doctors. Sometimes sick people who call in doctors die, but the doctors are not penalized because their patients do not survive. If those who believe in some other method of healing and resort to it, are not successful; if their faith does not reach through, I do not see that they should be charged in a criminal court and penalized.

It would look as though this clause were inserted at the instance of Christian Scientists, but I would judge that it was intended to apply not only to that cult but to people of any religious beliefs or persuasions who care to resort to spiritual means for the restoration and healing of the body. If under the criminal code a penalty is to be imposed on those who resort to other means than medical science for the restoration of health and are unsuccessful it is only reasonable that we should have a premium given to those who resort to other means and are successful. If we have a penalty in the one case, we should have a premium in the other.

Just a few days ago—to be exact, last Sunday—I listened to a gentleman in this city preaching to approximately 2,000 people. He was the picture of manhood and health. Yet he told us that just a few years ago he lay at death's door. His heart was broken down, his stomach had refused to function for months, and his intestines had been paralyzed for eighteen months. He had been under the care and supervision of ten different medical specialists, who had done all they could to restore him to health and had finally given him up. Yet that individual through other means than medical science was restored to perfect health and is to-day a perfect specimen of manhood. If we allow people to resort to such means as suit them best, I do not think we are violating anything in our legislative enactments. I feel that this amendment is long overdue and that it is something that this house can very well pass.

Mr. McGIBBON: If this amendment was confined to grown up people in a normal state of mind, probably we would not find very much objection to it. But there is a duty imposed upon all legislative bodies, and that is to look after the community at large. One of the great objects of the medical profession to-day is not the cure of disease but its prevention. The prevention of disease is the big thing before the medical world to-day. If you are going to allow people to spread contagious diseases throughout this country without any check at all, I ask the Minister of Justice and the committee, how can you protect the public health? I can give the minister an example from my own experience of a patient who lived in my riding and went to Toronto and died. The corpse was shipped back to Muskoka. I was called to go out thirty-five miles in the country to a lonely part, and there I found ten children sick with malignant scarlet fever, and about three-quarters of them died. That will show you how any contagious disease that is not properly handled and quarantined may produce an epidemic that is destructive to the health not only of the particular family affected but of the public at large. I submit that this house has the duty of protecting the public at large from epidemics that are so destructive to life. I submit, further, that we have no right to allow people to inflict their opinions in these matters upon immature children who have not yet reached the age when they can make decisions for themselves, especially where it is a question of life and death.

This section does not prevent people from employing spiritual means of healing if they wish to do so. Nobody can prevent that. But we do say that people who are responsible for the care of children and those who are not mentally capable of looking after themselves should not be relieved of all responsibility. Less than a year ago I had a case of diphtheria break out in a family, and the father absolutely refused to let me administer antitoxin. Every medical man knows that that is the best and practically the only specific treatment that we have for diphtheria, and if given early enough it will save probably nine hundred and ninety-five cases out of a thousand. I had to report the father of that family to the Minister of Health at Toronto in order to bring pressure enough to bear so that those children could be properly treated. If I had not done so, the disease might have spread to the six or eight other children in the family and might have cleaned them all out. When we get a case of that kind we not only treat the patient but administer antitoxin to every child in the family. I ask the Minister of Justice, is he going to lift the responsibility from everybody for maintaining public health and taking care of immature children and others who are not capable of making decisions for themselves?

I submit that this section is dreadful. I submit, further, that it does not prevent anybody from using spiritual means if they wish to. But people should not be relieved of all responsibility in these matters, and I ask the Minister of Justice very seriously to consider withdrawing this section altogether.

Mr. GUERIN: I am a little astonished that the Minister of Justice should have allowed himself to be inspired by some such deceptive spirit as must have taken possession of his soul when he conceived this amendment to the criminal code. I thought that the Justice department was quite alive—it should be—to the benefits that can come from the judicious application of science, but in this amendment I see an inclination to efface at one stroke all possible succour to people who through ignorance of their own state of health or through an ill-disposition towards others would put the life of the community in danger. I do not look upon this as a question of faith and morals; I look upon it as a matter of the public weal.

I was rather amused at the hon. member for Kindersley reflecting upon the medical profession, fearing that they might lose a patient or two. I would tell the hon. member that if his craft or that of any other member of this house were to carry on its practice with the same abnegation that characterizes the medical profession, people might be a great deal better off and suffer much less. There is too much of a disposition on the part of the laity to ignore the benefits that accrue from medical science. In France formerly there used to be such an amount of charlatanism practised that Moliere in many of his writings makes the physician appear ridiculous, and many people from reading his works are inclined to look upon the medical profession as being influenced more by suggestion than by action. But, Mr. Chairman, we must awaken to the necessities that surround us. We must safeguard our own interest in so far as our community life is concerned. I can readily imagine persons suffering from tubercular disease of the lungs taking no precautions simply because of ignorance. I can conceive of a person suffering from a mild attack of smallpox walking about the community without the disease being recognized—as was the case, I may say, in Montreal some years ago. On that occasion over a thousand lives were lost because the necessary precautions were not taken in time. This is not a matter to be trifled with at all, it is of most serious moment and I hope that the minister will see the advisability of withdrawing the clause.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Chairman, I am free to admit that I expected opposition to this section, though not perhaps to the extent that it has developed. My reasons for inserting the section in the bill are to a large extent those which have induced my hon. friend from West Hamilton (Mr. Bell) to support it. During the last few years it has been represented to me that an exception should be made in this case. Since this bill was introduced I have received hundreds of telegrams from all parts of the country congratulating me on this section and urging that it be passed. They feel very deeply—and I can assure my friend from St. Ann (Mr. Guerin) that they are intelligent people and belong to all classes in the community—they feel very deeply that their moral obligation to provide necessary treatment for their children should not be placed in conflict with a legal obligation in a certain way which according to their conscience and even to their religious conviction is not the best form of treatment.

I may say that one of the principal reasons which influenced me is that such an exception is recognized in some way or another in the legislation of almost all the provinces. In Alberta, for instance, the law defining and regulating the practice of medicine provides that:

> Nothing in this act contained shall apply to or affect those who practise the religious tenets of their church without pretending a knowledge of medicine or surgery, and provided that the laws, rules and regulations relating to contagious diseases and sanitary matters are not violated.

In Manitoba an act respecting the welfare of children provides that:

> Any child may be apprehended as a neglected child "whose parent or guardian neglects or refuses, when able to do so, to provide medical, surgical or other remedial care necessary for his or her health and well-being."

In Nova Scotia the law defining and regulating the practice of medicine contains this clause:

> Provided further that nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the practice of the religious tenets or general beliefs of any church.

In Ontario the law for the regulation of drugless practitioners provides that:

> Nothing in this act contained shall apply to or affect persons treating human ailments by prayer or spiritual means as an enjoyment or exercise of religious freedom.

Mr. McGIBBON: Those citations do not apply to this case, do they?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. I stated I was citing them to show that this exception is recognized in the legislation of the provinces.

Mr. McGIBBON: No.

Mr. MANION: Oh, no.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In the way I have suggested.

Mr. MANION: It is very general.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I admit that the clauses I have cited are not exactly similar to this section, but I want merely to show that the religious conviction of those gentlemen, and ladies too, is recognized in the legislation of the provinces.

Mr. McGIBBON: Quite so; but this bill is altogether different, it penalizes people for neglecting to provide proper treatment.

Mr. MacLAREN: Did this clause receive the support of the Minister of Public Health (Mr. King)?

Mr. LAPOINTE: As my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) would say, the principle of government solidarity applies in this case.

Mr. MANION: In the one case where it should not.

Mr. LAPOINTE: However, this is the first time that a section of this nature has been placed before the house, and I think in justice to those who have urged the amendment it is well that it should have been presented to hon. members. We have heard the arguments against the clause, and I am pleased indeed to have received the support of my friend from West Hamilton and my friend from Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael). A campaign of education is perhaps desirable in this matter, and with the permission of the house I will withdraw the section for the present.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I entirely agree with the minister's decision to withdraw the section, and I congratulate him upon his decision. But I think a word should be said in reply to what I think was an unintentional but uncomplimentary remark by my hon. friend from Kindersley. I have the utmost respect for him, largely because of his general fairmindedness upon all questions that come before the house, but he unconsciously, I am confident, twitted a profession which for centuries has been noted throughout the world because of the fact that its practitioners regard all questions concerning health from the public standpoint. I will give my proofs of that in fairness to the large body of medical men in Canada, thousands of whom have sacrificed much of their time for charity. Every advance in the practice of medicine and surgery—and advances have been made in practically all the civilized countries of the world—has been placed at the disposal of humanity free of charge. Take for example, the outstanding discoveries which I have jotted down from memory while the minister was speaking. The discoverer of anaesthesia was a Scotchman, Simpson; of antiseptics, Lord Lister, an Englishman; of antidiptheritic serum, a Japanese; of hydrophobia serum, Pasteur, a Frenchman; of Salvarsan, Ehrlich, a German; of insulin treatment for diabetes, Banting, a Canadian. Not one of those men—and I name only six that came to my mind as I listened to the minister—patented his discovery or derived any monetary advantage from it. I should have made one exception, but I will not mention his nationality. And by the way, our present Deputy Minister of Health is a man who bears an outstanding reputation in this country. I was glad to have the honour to assist in his appointment some years ago. Practically all the advances in public health have been made by medical men and it has been pointed out on many occasions that because of the advances they have made in public health they have been depriving themselves of their own livelihood. Without wishing to delay the committee further may I say that I think the remarks I have just made are due to a profession which certainly deserves to be numbered among the noble professions of the world. I am sure my hon. friend from Kindersley will be one of the first to acknowledge that in my remarks I have merely done justice to the profession.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I think the hon. gentleman has read into the few remarks I made much more than was placed in them or was ever intended to be placed in them. I am of the opinion that the hon. gentleman has been much more generous towards the profession which he represents than he has been towards the religious sect to which I referred during my remarks.

Section 13 withdrawn.

On section 14—Evidence in trial for manslaughter through negligence.

Mr. LAWSON: Sections 14 and 15 in this bill make such drastic changes in the criminal law that I feel it incumbent upon me to take a few minutes of the time of this committee to point out, particularly to the members of the committee who have not legal training, what the effect of these proposed amendments will be. For this purpose I think it is necessary to state that section 261 of the criminal code, which section 14 of this bill purports to amend, is the manslaughter section, and section 284, which section 15 purports to amend, is what is commonly known as the criminal negligence section of the criminal code. Section 284 reads:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, by an unlawful act, or by doing negligently or omitting to do any act which it is his duty to do, causes grievous bodily injury to any other person.

It has always been one of the basic doctrines of our criminal law that before a man can be found guilty of a criminal offence there must be mens rea or a guilty mind. May I point out to the lay members of the house that this does not mean that the crown must read the mind of a man who stands before the court? Where, however, a man has been guilty of a wanton disregard of the rights of others a guilty mind or wrongful intent is properly inferred by the court, and he becomes guilty of a criminal offence. Under the section which is proposed the merest civil negligence plus physical injury resulting in death would make a man ipso facto guilty of manslaughter. The same mere negligence plus physical injury, but not resulting in death, makes a man guilty ipso facto of a criminal offence punishable by two years' imprisonment. I fully appreciate that this amendment was designed to affect the drivers of motor cars, but on careful analysis it will be found that the section is more far-reaching in its effect. To illustrate I shall point out one or two instances which have come to my notice.

A returned soldier who had lost an arm at the war was appointed as a gatekeeper at one of the Toronto railroad crossings where there is a great deal of shunting of trains. The man's duty was to raise and lower the four protecting gates at the crossing when the trains were shunting in the immediate vicinity. On the occasion in question he managed to lower three of the gates and had lowered the fourth one from a perpendicular position to a position half way between perpendicular and horizontal when a motor car travelling down the street went through the gate. A section of the gate touched the top of the motor car when it was passing through. The result was that a shunting freight train struck the motor car and the two occupants were killed. Action was brought in the civil court against the railway company and the jury found negligence. As a result the railway company had to pay damages. On the other hand the gatekeeper was charged with the criminal offence of manslaughter, but the charge was reduced by the crown counsel to an offence under section 284 of the criminal code. Under our law as it then stood, there not being such a degree of negligence as to amount to a wanton disregard of the rights of others, he was found not guilty. Under the proposed amendment however that man would be ipso facto guilty of negligence.

Mr. THORSON: Not at all.

Mr. LAWSON: My hon. friend says "not at all." I could illustrate further, but I do not wish to take up the time of the committee by considering in detail the circumstances connected with the leading decisions handed down by our appeal courts of Canada for the last five or ten years.

I shall state another illustration. A farmer and his hired man went into a field to load turnips, and the farmer drove the horses up to the fence. He and the hired man loaded the turnips, and at the conclusion of their task the hired man was not feeling well, and for that reason he leaned against the tail-board of the wagon with his head resting on his hand. At that time the employer stopped and chatted with him. At the conclusion of their conversation the farmer left the hired man leaning against the tail-board and climbed on to the wagon. With the intention of backing up the team in order to turn them he seized the reins; as a result the team backed up quickly, the man was knocked over and the hind wheel of the wagon went over his leg. It was found that the leg was broken and in the court the farmer was held civilly liable in damages for negligence; because as an ordinary, reasonable and prudent man he should have looked around to see that the hired man was not in the position in which he had left him before he pulled on the reins. Under the proposed amendment I most seriously submit that the man is ipso facto guilty of negligence.

One of the hon. members from the city of Winnipeg who is at times rather dogmatic in his opinions is now of the opinion that I am wrong in my deduction. I shall read the new clause proposed to be enacted by section 15:

> When any person is charged under the provisions of this section with causing grievous bodily injury to any other person by doing negligently or omitting to do any act which it is his duty to do, evidence which is sufficient to establish negligence upon the same facts in a civil case shall be sufficient for the conviction of any such person so charged.

I submit to the hon. members of this committee that it does not require a gentleman of legal training to interpret that section. It is perfectly obvious that, if it is passed, mere negligence plus physical injury ipso facto amounts to a criminal offence, and under section 14 mere negligence plus physical injury resulting in death ipso facto makes a man guilty of manslaughter. I for one, sir, as a lawyer who has had some little experience as crown counsel and also in defending some of those charged under the criminal code, cannot permit these sections to pass without registering my strenuous protest against any such legislation.

Mr. CHURCH: Everyone knows that sections 284 and 285 of the code, which for some years have been the law of Canada with regard to motor accidents, are too uncertain and inconsistent to secure a verdict in any court in this country. I am surprised at this late stage of the session the minister should bring down a makeshift amendment like this. He has had recommendations from many of the ablest judges in the land as to how these sections might be strengthened. One of the judges refers to these amendments as tinkering with the sections, whatever that means. Section 285 is poorly worded; in the dying days of parliament a short time ago the words "by wanton or furious driving, or racing, or other wilful misconduct, or wilful negligence" were added. That has given reason for some of the judges to hold that in no case can there be criminal negligence unless it is of the peculiar character set out in the words quoted.

We have a large department of justice here; surely they can bring this law up to date. This country is miles behind the mother land in law reform. There is no law reform in Canada at all; a grand jury is not allowed to go into one of our federal institutions, and the officers of the crown are to be judge and jury and everything else. In my opinion the present department needs to get some modern ideas instead of living in the dead text books of the past.

The proposed amendment to section 284 is clearly illegal. The hon. member for West York has referred to one particular case. In the case of Rex vs. Palmer it was stated in the English court of appeal that there must be some quality of mind expressed in the act of the person before there is a criminal offence, in the absence of wilfulness and recklessness.

In my opinion the minister has not touched even the fringe of the subject. This matter was before the house on March 4 last, when I quoted the opinion of the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas for Ontario, given at the London assizes. He said:

> And as now nearly everyone is a car owner and car driver, young and old of all sorts and conditions, it is difficult to get justice in even a civil action. Car-driver-jurors have nearly all the speed fever; and self preservation instincts are so strong that they will not be persuaded to decide against drivers who have been no more unlawful than they themselves often, if not commonly, are.
> What then is the remedy? I think it should be: make the laws plain and reasonably severe and enforce them; and cancel licences freely.
> And at the other end of the matter: Give no licence to anyone who is not proved to be mentally and physically, and from experience and a knowledge of the highway laws, thoroughly capable.

The amendment proposed now will mean nothing; it will simply lead to more chaos and confusion than there is to-day along the lines I have stated. The same judge suggested that the words "with negligence" might be added to section 284, but that suggestion has not been adopted either. In England they appointed a committee of both houses of parliament to consider these questions. I have before me the evidence which was taken and the changes which they made to their law. On March 7, 1930, the report was presented to both houses of parliament and a bill was introduced known as the road traffic bill which contained 82 pages dealing with the whole question.

Last year there were 72 people killed on the highways of Toronto through the negligence of automobile drivers. Have the public no right to use the streets; are they to be killed off in this manner? Four times as many people have been killed on the highways of Toronto as were killed at the battle of Queenston Heights many years ago, but here we have a department of justice to which recommendations have been sent by judges all over the country and as far as I can see they are simply pigeonholed. If the minister wanted to be progressive and do something for the public safety he should have appointed a committee of both houses to consider this matter and bring in a proper bill. At the present time a judge can tell the jury that there is no definition of negligence under the code. It is enough to make more judges write letters to the newspapers.

Just here I might quote a paragraph which appeared in the English Review of April, 1930. It is as follows:

> Lord Hewart, Lord Chief Justice of England, has recently published a book under the title The New Despotism. The book is an important one, both because of the high office of its author and because of its subject. Lord Hewart has, quite rightly, refused to accept the idea that a judge is, to use his own words, "condemned to a lifelong and compulsory silence upon the affairs and the interests of the state." The country should be grateful to him for this book and for his criticism of an undesirable but growing tendency in public affairs. His theme is, in the words of his publishers, the exposure of "certain tendencies and methods which threaten to impair the reality of free institutions. . . . . Government departments secure to themselves power to make rules, orders, and regulations without any real and effective control on the part of parliament. They obtain for their orders the force of statutes, and prevent their decisions from being reviewed by the courts of law." The tendency has been developing for a generation at least.

The Minister of Justice has been in England; I think he might have learned something about law reform there. There is no provision here to take care of the hit and run driver, the most cowardly person in the world, who knocks down some little child and then gets away before anyone can catch him. The Ontario Safety League has made recommendations as to how these sections should be strengthened; why did not those recommendations receive some consideration? I introduced a bill last March to amend this section, defining reckless driving and injuring persons by negligence, having to do with hit and run drivers and so on, but I was unable to proceed with it.

There is another matter which might have been considered by the minister in connection with these two sections; I refer to the recommendation of the Chief Constables' Association. I read last February of a case which was brought up at a meeting of that body, where a poor farmer of Tecumseh, in the county of Essex, was injured by an automobile, in which accident his wife and children also sustained some injuries. The driver of the automobile was an American, who said he lived somewhere away down in Ohio. He paid a small fine and got away, and as a result the farmer was out of pocket for the injuries sustained by himself and his family, which cost him something over $700. They had first to find the man, but he had given a wrong name and address. The constables' association has recommended that in such cases the driver shall be required to give a bond or put up some money before he is permitted to leave the country. Are we to have the children of this country knocked down in this manner?

The Minister of Justice has said that this is a matter of civil rights and comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces, but it is nothing of the kind. I submitted these proposed amendments to one or two of the judges in Toronto who have had considerable experience with this class of case, and they were not in favour of them. The first amendment dealing with the evidence in a trial for manslaughter is clearly illegal, and should it pass the section of the criminal code will be still more inconsistent. The only way to stop this maiming and killing is to impose a stiff penalty and treat them all alike, both high and low.

The code should contain some provisions as to who shall and who shall not drive a motor vehicle. These matters should have been brought before parliament earlier in the session. For the past five or six years these amendments have been brought down during the dying days of parliament, they are hurried through this house and sent over to the Senate. That is not the way to protect life and property on the highways of this country. The time has come when something will have to be done. In my opinion, the minister should appoint a commission composed of three or four judges to consider the present inconsistencies in the criminal code. The way the law is to-day, the public is not protected. A man can knock down another man and kill him, obtain bail and be tried for negligence, and in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred he will get off. This matter has been the subject of inquiry by coroners' juries, by judges and by grand juries, and it is considered to be a menace and peril to the country.

It would be far better if these sections were not amended, because they are made still more inconsistent. It is hard enough now for a judge to know what is meant, without adding further inconsistencies. The practice which prevails in England should be adopted in this country, and the bill should be circulated throughout the country and criticism and discussion invited thereon. This haphazard method of bringing in amendments should not be allowed to continue. A word is changed there, a comma is added there, and the result is more disorder than ever.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Mr. Chairman, I desire to add my protest to that already voiced by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson) against sections 14 and 15 of this bill. It will be noted that in each of these sections the test of criminal liability is the giving in court of evidence sufficient to establish negligence, upon the same facts as in a civil case. I cannot say what effect that will have in some provinces, but in the province of Ontario its effect would be rather disastrous and its application would be most onerous and unreasonable.

For example, in all cases governed by the Highway Traffic Act of the province of Ontario, where a pedestrian is struck by an automobile, the direct burden of proof is put upon the driver of the automobile to establish that he was not negligent. If the wording of the present proposed sections were made applicable, it would mean that every motorist would have cast upon him the burden of establishing his innocence in a criminal charge brought under these two sections. That is absolutely repugnant to the spirit of British justice and fair play. It has always been conceded that whatever burden might be cast upon a man to show himself innocent in respect of any difficulty in which he was involved, should be a civil condition only, and no man should ever be put in the position of having to prove himself innocent of a criminal offence.

In the province of Ontario, and perhaps it is common to other provinces, we have certain by-laws which, having been passed, are invested with the force and effect of statutes. For example, there is a rather general provision that certain municipalities may designate what are known as stop streets. If a man passes a stop sign and enters on to a through street, he is adjudged guilty of negligence. Shall we say that such a man becomes a criminal under the criminal code in like circumstances? That would be the necessary and inevitable effect of the passage of these two sections.

There are many cities which have enacted by-laws providing that certain motor vehicles must not approach nearer to the curb of the street than five feet. Shall we say that the man who operates a motor vehicle which strikes someone who is within four feet of the curb is a criminal, but the man who strikes someone within five feet and a half of the curb has no liability? That would be the only possible effect of the adoption of sections 14 and 15.

It has become a matter of litigation in our courts as to whether or not civil liability attaches in cases of breach of that section of the Highway Traffic Act which provides that every automobile must carry a tail light visible at a certain distance to any other motor vehicle or a vehicle of any kind approaching it from the rear. The Supreme Court of Canada has found itself unable to solve that question satisfactorily—I refer now to the Hall versus Guelph case—as to whether or not there was negligence in the case of a man who operated a motor vehicle which had its tail-light burning in compliance with the law when he started on his trip but the tail light of which had gone out without his knowledge before he concluded his trip. That was the decision in the case to which I have referred and which went through the Supreme Court of Canada. Under this provision shall we say that a man who starts out with a light properly equipped, who has made every test for safety to himself and the rest of the travelling public, shall be made a criminal because the lamp which he has properly lighted has gone out without his knowledge before the conclusion of his trip? Under sections 14 and 15 of the bill, that would be the inevitable result for him. The only possible effect of embodying in our criminal code those provisions to which I now allude would be the unfortunate one of making the laws so onerous, bear so hardly on innocent men, that juries would refuse to convict. We have seen enough of that sort of thing from what happens south of the line. We do not desire that our criminal laws shall bear so severely that people will resent the spirit of them and refuse to enforce them in the courts of the land. I ask the minister to give this matter further consideration. He knows I am making these suggestions to him earnestly and to the best of my ability and I trust he will pause before proceeding further with these two sections.

Mr. LAPOINTE: These two sections have been inserted in the bill to meet the demand of the authorities of Ontario; as a matter of fact it is the Deputy Attorney General of Ontario who has been insistent on what he claims to be the need of improving the law in this regard. As the opposition to the bill is so strenuous, and coming especially from my brethren of the legal profession in Ontario, I am quite willing to withdraw the two sections.

Sections 14 and 15 dropped.

On section 16—Driving while under the influence of liquor.

Mr. LAWSON: I do not want to be in the position of opposing every section in the bill, but may I direct the attention of the minister to the tremendously far-reaching effect of the amendment proposed:

Every one who, while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

The minister is probably well aware that the old section read:

Every person who is intoxicated.

By a series of decisions those words have been defined. We know what they mean. Now we bring in a much wider term "under the influence of intoxicating liquor." Has the minister considered what that term means? I presume, from a physiological standpoint, I am now under the influence of a glass of wine that I had with my dinner.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think my hon. friend would be.

Mr. LAWSON: Perhaps on account of the sensitive nervous system of the Minister of Justice, he may be under the influence of a glass of wine he had with last night's dinner. I would respectfully ask: Is there any advantage in this change, which is bound to cause a tremendous amount of confusion, a change which creates a new term which has not been defined, although the law seems to be very well and strictly administered under present provisions by our police magistrates and fully covers the case of a man who is in charge of a car while intoxicated?

Mr. SMOKE: I would point out that by adopting such legislation as this we are subordinating our jurisdiction to that of any one of the nine provinces that might be so unwise as to pass some foolish law. I am quite sure the Minister of Justice has no intention of placing the administration of justice in criminal matters under the jurisdiction and power of any provincial legislature.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am quite willing to restore the word "intoxicated" instead of "under the influence of intoxicating liquors," if that meets the views of my hon. friend.

Mr. LAWSON: Thank you.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The other amendment, paragraph (a), is asked for by the prosecuting authorities of the province of Ontario. I suppose there is no objection to that.

Mr. LAWSON: I have none.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is some objection to that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I move that the word "intoxicated" be substituted for the term "under the influence of intoxicating liquors." That will make the clause read as it was formerly.

Mr. HANSON: The minister is about to amend the first part of the section, putting the law back as it was before. I have a good deal of sympathy with the proposal as drafted, but I have no strong opinion on the subject and I am not going to oppose what it is proposed to do now. With regard to the penalty, I agree there is necessity for increasing the penalty in these cases, but greater discretion should be placed in the hands of the magistrates. My experience is that these cases usually come, on summary conviction, before a police magistrate. As paragraph (a) is now drafted, the minimum is thirty days. It seems to me that the magistrate should have a discretion up to a maximum and a smaller minimum. That is the suggestion I have to offer to the minister. Imprisonment for three months is a pretty stiff penalty for driving a motor car while intoxicated. My suggestion to the minister is that that be left as the maximum, but that the minimum be reduced.

Mr. BROWN: I have a good deal of sympathy with the bill as originally drafted:

> Everyone who, while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or any narcotic, drives any motor vehicle or automobile.

It is recognized now that alcohol and high-powered motor cars make the worst kind of combination, and it has been shown conclusively that the man under the influence of the first drink is perhaps the most dangerous. The most dangerous man is not the one who is completely incapacitated. The most dangerous one is the one who perhaps thinks he is in a position to act quickly. Anything that destroys a man's ability to act quickly, perhaps by just a fraction of a second, makes the difference between an accident and safety. Just as the man who has taken one or two drinks is a bigger nuisance than the man who is dead drunk in the gutter, so it has been pretty conclusively proved that the most dangerous man on the highway is the one who has had just enough not to incapacitate him altogether, but to destroy his ability to act quickly in an emergency. For my part I am willing to have the law made as severe as possible against the man who, having indulged in intoxicating liquor, undertakes to drive a motor car.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): As regards the proposed amendment, I think the section as drafted is altogether too severe. Under these words "or has the care or control of a motor vehicle or automobile," there have been in Montreal cases where people have been compelled to go to gaol. I remember one instance in particular of a man who came out of a club and stepped into his motor car. He felt that he had been imbibing too freely to drive the car. He sent down to the garage to get a helper to come up and take his car to the garage, but when seated in his car, waiting for the helper, he was arrested by a police officer and later sentenced to gaol. Is that justice? I know of another case of a very prominent Montreal doctor who came out of a private house and as soon as he came out some person had in the meantime reported him as being intoxicated. He stepped into his car in front of the house. He was then arrested by a couple of police officers, but fortunately for him, in some manner or other, he got out of it. But that is the law, and it seems to me that it is not the right kind of law to have on our statute books. Under the section, if a man has "the care or control of a motor vehicle whether it is in motion or not," if he should be even found in his car, harming nobody, but just sitting there realizing that he is too intoxicated to drive his car, and he sends for another man to drive it, he has to go to gaol if some police officer comes along and arrests him; and they call that justice. I cannot see it. Personally I think the clause even as it stood before the proposed amendment is too drastic. It is not the kind of law that any Canadian citizen should be subject to and condemned to a gaol sentence.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I must say that up until this evening I have always been receiving complaints and representations that the law concerning motor car accidents was not strict enough. Complaints come from everywhere that the law should be made stricter. As far as the clause referred to by my hon. friend is concerned, it is already in the law, and I am not changing it at all. The only change that I was proposing was to substitute the words "under the influence of intoxicating liquor" for the word "intoxicated." This has been requested by many people, but in view of the objections I have withdrawn it. So far as paragraph (a) is concerned—

Mr. HANSON: I find that paragraph (b) covers the point that I had in mind.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, and I will give my hon. friend the reason why it is there. As it is, if a man is prosecuted for having caused bodily injury, the jury cannot convict him for any lesser offence, but with this amendment the offence may be reduced to the one provided for in section 16.

Mr. HANSON: Then I have no objection.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think there is some objection to the choice which the prosecuting attorney will have. On a certain set of circumstances one prosecuting attorney may decide to proceed by way of indictment; on the same set of circumstances another prosecuting attorney may decide to proceed by way of summary conviction, with very different results in the two prosecutions. It seems to me that the object could be accomplished by increasing the penalties but not leaving it open to the prosecuting attorney of his own motion to decide which course he shall adopt, whether to proceed by indictment or by summary conviction. We have a similar provision, as I recall it, in the Narcotic Drugs Act, where for a very serious offence, posibly long continued violation of the law, there is the right to proceed by indictment, whereas in the same act there is the right to proceed by way of summary conviction. It seems to me this is leaving the door open to possible abuse by a prosecuting attorney who, even with the best of intentions, might in one case to-day decide to proceed by way of indictment and to-morrow proceed by way of summary conviction, with very unequal results to two offenders who are really guilty of the very same offence.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid that the object which we have in view cannot be achieved otherwise than by this means. As I stated, it is to enable the court to reduce the offence if it believes that the charge of causing bodily injury is rather too serious a one for the case. It could not be reduced to an offence punishable upon summary conviction. I think my hon. friend understands what I have in mind. I really believe that this will be an improvement.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Let us assume that the prosecuting attorney decides to proceed by way of indictment. Do I understand the minister to say that upon a prosecution by way of indictment we can come down to the penalty that is imposed under paragraph (b) for summary conviction?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That cannot be done. So it all depends upon the whim or the decision of the prosecuting attorney whether on the same set of circumstances a man shall incur a penalty not exceeding three months and not less than thirty days, or whether he shall incur a penalty not exceeding thirty days and not less than seven days —very different penalties for what after all is the same offence. I have great respect for the prosecuting attorneys of the province of Ontario as I know them, but it seems to me that this is placing them in an unfair position. It is placing upon them the burden of deciding in a particular case against a particular individual whether to proceed by indictment or by summary conviction. We do know that all culprits may not look alike, may not be of the same standing, may not appear to the county attorney in just the same way; but it does seem to me that as this is drawn it is bound to result in inequalities and in some cases in injustice, or at all events it will give rise to the feeling that someone else has had a much better deal in the same set of circumstances.

Mr. CHURCH: This particular section might just as well be withdrawn too. Only the other day a small newsboy, nine years of age, crossing the highway to sell a man a paper was knocked down. I have a list here of twenty-six juries which presented recommendations last year for more drastic laws along this line, and if this is the best the minister can do, I suggest that he withdraw the section altogether. He might as well present these offenders with a watch and an illuminated address.

Section agreed to.

Sections 17 to 38 inclusive agreed to.

On section 39—Shorthand notes of proceedings and evidence.

Mr. LUCAS: During last session I brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice the question of amending section 236 of the criminal code, under which agricultural fairs are allowed to operate games of chance, and the minister promised to give it his attention at this session. I have read the bill but I fail to see any section for this purpose.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In what way was my hon. friend suggesting an amendment of the section?

Mr. LUCAS: In section 236 the minister will note that a special privilege is granted to agricultural fairs to operate games of chance on their grounds. This is an offence if practised elsewhere. There is a very strong feeling in western Canada that this privilege should be withdrawn, because agricultural fairs are primarily conducted for the purpose of developing agriculture, and the federal grants made to those fairs should be used for educational purposes. We find that the farmers' sons instead of devoting their time to the judging of the stock and getting the full educational benefit from it have their attention distracted by these games of chance, the proprietors of which make a handsome profit without giving any corresponding benefit in return. Resolutions have been passed by our local organizations asking that this section be amended so as to prevent gambling at these fairs.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know whether my hon. friend was a member of the house when this amendment to the criminal code was enacted a few years ago. I am almost afraid that my colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) is largely responsible for it; it was asked for by the Department of Agriculture as a means of encouraging agricultural fairs. The amendment was debated by the house at considerable length before it was adopted. I would not feel at liberty to propose any change at the present time, but I shall be pleased to submit my hon. friend's request to those who asked for that amendment.

Mr. LUCAS: I have also had a large number of requests from fraternal organizations, as I believe have several other members, asking that this privilege be extended to them. Personally I am in favour of withdrawing the privilege from agricultural fairs; but if this is not done I see no reason why a similar privilege should not be extended to the fraternal organizations. If the minister will not consent to withdraw this privilege from agricultural fairs, I would ask if he can give any good reason why it should not be extended to fraternal organizations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My only good reason is that I have always thought an amendment of this kind would have no chance of going through parliament. As far as I am concerned I am free to admit to my hon. friend that I would have no conscientious objection, or in fact any objection, to the change that he proposes; but when the section was first discussed in the house there was a strong feeling against extending facilities for these games of chance. However, if my hon. friend could persuade me that a majority of the house would support his request I would have no hesitation in helping him. But I think the whole thing should be carefully considered, and perhaps we might postpone such consideration to a future date.

Mr. GEARY: I would suggest to the Minister of Justice that if he is going to continue to the patrons of agricultural fairs the privilege of spending their time and their money trying to find which shell the pea is under, and that sort of thing, he should take into consideration the desirability of seeing that no previous knowledge is given of the game and that the winning odds are not published afterwards—precautions that apparently he thinks so necessary in other cases.

Section agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 11 was allowed to stand.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, at the request of my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Lawson).

On section 11—Broker reducing stock by selling for his own account.

Mr. LAWSON: Mr. Chairman, this section, I believe, was recommended by the conference of attorneys general, with the exception of the representative of the province of Quebec who, I understand, did not take part in it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is that so?

Mr. LAWSON: That is my understanding. The object of the section was to prevent brokers selling stocks short. I realize that in the present state of public opinion it would be a hopeless task for me to advocate its withdrawal. However, I do want to put myself on record as being opposed to it in the interests of the public themselves, but I am not going to take the time of the committee to advance any argument in that regard.

I wish to draw the attention of the minister to the words in the latter part of the section:

> —if the effect of such sale shall otherwise than unintentionally be to reduce the amount of such shares.

And so forth. That phrase is unknown in all our legislation with respect to criminal offences. I would submit that, instead of the words "otherwise than unintentionally" we should use the words "with intent," which are always employed in connection with criminal offences. I asked to have the section left over because of the very able argument advanced by several hon. gentlemen on both sides of the house when we were dealing with the criminal negligence section that there should be intent in order to constitute a criminal offence. Now I submit to the minister for his very serious consideration the substitution of the words, "with intent," for the words "otherwise than unintentionally." The minister will no doubt be concerned as to whether the public would be protected if these words were changed. May I point out to him that every province in the Dominion of Canada, with the exception of the province of Quebec, has now adopted and enacted a uniform act known as the Security Frauds Prevention Act, for the control of the brokerage business. In section 21 of that act is contained the very provision which is in this code making it an offence under the provincial statute punishable by a minimum fine of $1,000 and an optional imprisonment of six months for a first offence. In addition thereto under the provincial legislation there are additional clauses which give to the customer of any brokerage house the right to repudiate his entire transaction with that house and to obtain his money back if the broker is guilty of making a short sale. That is what is intended by the section. As I pointed out, the proposed section goes much farther. For instance, if I am a director of a large brokerage house in Canada—and I have in mind one of those houses with twenty-six or twenty-seven branches—because I happen to be a director of the concern, although I may take no part in its operations, I am prevented from making a short sale in the market. It may be that some customer of that brokerage house in New York city has purchased a stock of the same class and kind that I as a director am selling short on the Canadian market. As I said, I realize that it would be unwise under present conditions to ask that the section be withdrawn. I feel however that the minister will agree that we should preserve that which has always been a cardinal principle in our criminal law; there must be intent.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I appreciate the viewpoint expressed by my hon. friend, and I take this opportunity to congratulate him on the clarity with which he has discussed this bill. I feel sure that he will understand my position when I say that we have thought it better to adhere to the language suggested by all the provinces. There may be two or three words which we would have liked to change, but I think on the whole it is advisable to leave the section as the provinces have desired it to be left.

Mr. CHURCH: On March 4 the Minister of Justice promised that when this bill was presented I would have an opportunity to bring in one or two amendments, and on that occasion he asked me to let my amendments stand. In Ontario some of the judges have apparently disregarded the respective rights of judge and jury. In some cases the judges have made comments on the verdicts rendered by juries, and have made unfortunate remarks in regard to the way the juries dealt with the evidence before them. With these facts in mind I think some amendment should be made to the criminal code. I would suggest the following amendment:

It shall be the duty of the presiding judge to record and enter the jury's verdict without comment thereon.

This is a practice which has become prevalent throughout the country, and as a result it is difficult to obtain men to serve on jury panels. The functions of a judge are defined by law; they are set out by precedent and by statute. There is no legislative authority for a judge to criticize the action of a jury. He sits in the capacity of a presiding judge; both judge and jury have functions to perform. I think however that at the present time the judges are going altogether too far, and this applies to some of the recent appointees in the province of Ontario. They are overstepping the line which separates the function of the judge and that of the jury. I understand there are some common law references to this matter; the English judges do not attempt to encroach upon the duties of the jury, and in my opinion Canadian judges should take a similar attitude. In fact, under our wonderful new status, now that we have a status of our own, I doubt very much if the judges should be addressed as "my lord" or "your lordship". I understand all these old obsolete laws have been repealed, as have been the forms and usages in connection with them. Something should be done by the minister to check this growing practice of invading the rights of the people. In my opinion judges have no legislative authority from this parliament to make either favourable or unfavourable comment in connection with a verdict once it has been rendered by a jury. With these facts in mind I ask the minister to accept the amendment I have proposed. In the province of Ontario the jury system has been assailed by three or four judges. I shall not take the time of the house to give details, but I wish to say that their remarks have been entirely out of order. I would like to know whether the minister will accept the amendment or whether it is his opinion that anything should be done in connection with this important question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid the suggested amendment cannot be accepted. It almost amounts to a reflection upon the judges. Apart from that I think the judges have a right, if they wish, to send juries back to reconsider their verdicts. I wonder how a judge could take that action without first addressing some remarks to the jury. I do not think the proposed amendment can be considered.

Mr. CHURCH: Very well, I shall withdraw the amendment, temporarily.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. CHURCH: The subject matter of the second amendment is contained in Hansard of March 4. In amendment I move that the following words be added to section 41:

The grand jury of any county in which a penitentiary is situated may visit, view and inspect the same and make a presentment of any recommendation they see fit, notwithstanding the provisions of the Penitentiaries Act, chapter 154 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, or of any law, custom or usage to the contrary.

This matter is referred to in Hansard of March 4. Within the past few days public attention has been directed to the case of two young boys who were sentenced to imprisonment in one of these institutions, and it has been proved that they were wrongfully sent there. I wonder if there are any others like them down there. How many great penal institutions are there in which innocent people are incarcerated. In Hansard of March 4, 1930, I find the following:

In Hamilton, two sane men for several years were in the asylum and in one case in York county girls were found without food and shelter, in a dungeon below ground, this being a punishment for some minor offence. The chief justice in addressing the grand jury said:

"I am in accord with your views as to inspection of these penitentiaries. Such inspection is in accord with that great principle in the administration of justice which for centuries has been applied and was confirmed by Magna Charta, namely, that the people shall have a large share in the administration of justice in criminal cases.

Whether penitentiaries are well or ill managed they are managed altogether by crown officers; and the management of them is a thing of much importance in the administration of the criminal laws so much that assuredly the people should be entitled to some means of learning for themselves what the crown officials are doing and how it is being done.

The grand jury, representing the people of the judicial district, can most conveniently, and at no cost, perform for the people the duty of visitation.

But one matter of detail I mention, because it seems to me that it should receive consideration.

In some counties there may be five grand juries in a year. Let me suggest that their power be limited thus: say twice a year."

These institutions have been managed by the crown and while there is no complaint as to the way they have been run I think it is in the public interest that they should be visited by the grand jury. The minister has said these are provincial institutions, but that is not so; they are established under the criminal code, and the officials are appointed by this government, which maintains the institutions. No one knows what is going on there. Are there any more innocent people in these places and, if so, how did they get there? It is the right of the grand jury to go through provincial institutions in the same way. There was a big fire in one of these places across the border a short time ago because the proper inspection was not carried on. Are we just to take some person's word for it that everything is all right? We will have more reforms if we have the grand jury go to these places once or twice a year and make a presentment to the court. The grand jury represents parliament and the people; it is an old institution and should be allowed to go through these places and make inspections.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. gentleman has proposed an amendment of this kind where, if it should be desirable, it should be made; that is, to the Penitentiaries Act. That amendment did not meet with favour in the house, and properly so, because after all provincial institutions must not be under federal control. Our officers have no jurisdiction in the provincial gaols, and grand juries, which are provincial bodies, do not have and should not have jurisdiction in federal institutions. Why should the grand jury in the county of Laval have jurisdiction over the penitentiary at St. Vincent de Paul, when the other grand juries in other sections of the province would have no such jurisdiction? Why should the grand jury of Frontenac county have a special privilege or duty with regard to the penitentiary at Kingston which would not belong to the other grand juries in other sections of Ontario? I do not think the amendment is workable; it has been debated in the house and settled.

Amendment withdrawn.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—PEACE RIVER RAILWAY OUTLET

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE FOR COMMITTEE

The house resumed from Monday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Dunning for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Kennedy.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned while we were discussing the amendment to the motion to go into supply, I had been speaking with reference to it. The amendment was to the effect that immediate steps be taken to implement the pledge alleged to have been given by the Prime Minister at Edmonton in November, 1924, with regard to the Peace river outlet, and as I recall it the alleged pledge was to the effect that this outlet should be decided upon and a railroad constructed as soon as was humanly possible.

If I remember correctly I had mentioned that at the time of making the speech referred to, I had said that so far as the government was concerned we were confronted in this parliament with, to say the least, some uncertainty as to what might be possible with respect to railway legislation, inasmuch as some of the railway legislation which we had introduced had failed to pass the other house and we were without a majority there. However, this evening I do not wish to delay the committee, and perhaps I can satisfy my hon. friend as to the government's intention in the matter if I say to him that since this amendment was introduced I have had a personal interview with the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Minister of Railways and Canals has interviewed the president of the Canadian National Railways. Both presidents agree that in their view it should be possible for some appropriate outlet to be agreed upon within a period of possibly six months, and I understand they have their surveyors at work with a view of determining a suitable route.

The president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company mentioned that a joint survey of the natural resources of British Columbia had been undertaken last year at the expense of the government of British Columbia, the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which was done in consequence of a suggestion made by him to the provincial authorities. It is expected that the result of that survey will shortly be made available. Not long ago the provincial government asked that the work should be continued to include the Peace river block recently transferred from the Dominion to the province, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian National Railways each undertook to pay one-third of the expense. When the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was in the west last fall with the directors of the company he gave an assurance that this year the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would undertake a detailed survey of the possible routes for the outlet with a view to ascertaining which was the more feasible, and also to settle the question whether a crossing of the Peace river at Hudson's Hope can be made. The president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company mentioned to me, in the course of our conversation, that he thought this work should be completed within the course of the next few months, and he stated also that he felt that he and the president of the Canadian National Railways should be able to get together and decide upon the route. He was of the view, which I understand is held also by the president of the Canadian National Railways, that the work should be undertaken jointly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I repeat what I said the other evening, that in the opinion of the government it ought to be possible for these companies to agree upon a route within six months and to have work begun within a year on a railway which will afford an outlet from the Peace river district to the Pacific. I will say that if they do not make a beginning within a year and the present administration should be in office at the end of that period, we will undertake to find a way or make it for the beginning of the construction of a railway line from the Peace river district to connect with the Pacific via some other railway line or otherwise. Under these circumstances, perhaps my hon. friend will feel that it is unnecessary to press his amendment any further. I said that the government would accept his amendment. To accept an amendment to the motion to go into committee of supply may seem contradictory, but I was anxious that the government should not be put in a position of appearing in any way to be unwilling to implement to the full any promise which has been made, either directly or indirectly. I hope that what I have said will be satisfactory to my hon. friend.

Mr. BRADY: The right hon. the Prime Minister realizes the importance of having a survey made and he states that within six months there should be definite information at hand as to what is to be the outlet from the Peace River district to the Pacific coast.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. gentleman has spoken once already on this debate.

Mr. BRADY: I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. BRADY: The right hon. gentleman says that this outlet is to be undertaken jointly by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways, and he states that if within one year this work is not accomplished the present government, if in power, will accomplish what the united efforts of these two organizations may fail to accomplish. Does the right hon. gentleman believe that the engineers of these two companies will be so impartial as to settle once and for all this problem of an outlet to the Pacific coast?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am afraid my hon. friend has been hearing either more or less than I actually said. What I did say was that it was desirable that the work should be undertaken as a joint undertaking. I did not say that it necessarily would be so undertaken, but that the presidents of both roads felt it was desirable that it should be undertaken as a joint undertaking. I was endeavouring to anticipate every possible contingency, and so I said that if a start were not made by the railways jointly, or one of them, within a year, and the present administration were in office at that time, we would find a way or make it to have a start made in the construction of a railway.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. gentleman shall have leave to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand that there is some objection to the withdrawal of the amendment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no objection, if the hon. member does not object.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. gentleman shall have leave to withdraw his amendment?

Amendment withdrawn.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Indians—Ontario and Quebec, $448,485.

Mr. MALONEY: Mr. Chairman, the total vote for Indians in Canada amounts to over $5,000,000. I have not one word to say against the administration of the Indian department because I believe that the minister in charge and his deputy are doing everything possible for the welfare of these people. However, has not the time come when we should consider the Indians of Canada as being no longer wards of the government? These boys and girls are given a fairly good education, taught a trade, and they leave the reservation and should be permitted to grow up as we grow up, to become real citizens of this country. In the county of Renfrew we have an Indian reserve. During the past five or six years many boys and girls have left that reserve after having been educated, rightly so at the expense of the government, have gone out into the world and have made good. If we could arrange that Indians throughout Canada could receive an education or training in a trade and the government would keep on placing these boys and girls where they should be placed, surely at the end of at least a generation we might be saved a great deal of money which we are spending from year to year. This money is often spent very foolishly. Indians who have lived on the reserves return there, many of them living absolutely in idleness, depending on the few fish they may be able to catch or the few game they may be able to corral. If the government would take this matter in hand, the time would come when these large amounts, like the $5,000,000 that we have been asked to vote to-day, would not be required and the Indians would be as good people as any others in this country.

Mr. CHURCH: If these Indians were good enough to serve in the great war in large numbers, why are they not good enough to receive the citizenship of this country? While we are bringing in immigrants from all over the world, the red man has no rights in Canada. His rights, privileges and land are taken away from him and the agreements we have made with him are being broken.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend surely does not appreciate the fact that the Indians happen to be the wards of the government and they are so by treaty. We have to deal with a situation that came about by the evolution which took place when the white man came and established himself in this country, and out of that grew the system of placing the Indians on reservations. Year by year I frankly confess that I have strongly advocated larger expenditures of money on these people.

May I say to the hon. member for South Renfrew that we are doing a great deal of work in educating the Indians. In this regard much credit is due to religious organizations that are carrying on this work. Possbily it would not be carried on so reasonably as it is were it not for the fact that they do the education work. We have been providing, during the last five or six years since I came into my present position, the necessary schools and equipment for the education of the Indian children. The department have lent every assistance possible towards educating and encouraging the Indians to take enfranchisement and to become citizens in the real sense of the word. That is not urged upon them, but it is a privilege they may accept if they are in a position to do so. Therefore in every way we are endeavouring to educate the Indians and I should like, if funds were available, to carry the work even further, to give technical education, to train these young boys in trades after they secure, as they do, a good common school education in their own schools in every province. But this will require more money. Year by year we have to vote more money. Since fur has become so valuable in this country and the white man has become active in trapping animals and securing their furs, it has been much more difficult for the Indians to obtain a livelihood. For that reason we have to spend more money on them, for relief, for medical attention and for what, undoubtedly, the country and the government owe to our aborigines. I believe we are not spending enough money upon the Indians, but I realize one must keep within reason in asking for the necessary funds to carry on this work. We shall, however, have to spend more money in giving the Indians better medical attention in the future than we have done in the past and I make no apology for asking these sums of money for Indian work in Canada.

Mr. SIMPSON: Can the minister give any information as to the intention of the government with respect to the erection of a new building to replace the old Shingwauk Home building?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sorry my deputy is not with me at this moment, but I may say that we are as quickly as possible replacing old buildings with new and modern ones, and erecting new buildings where they seem to be required for Indian educational work. My deputy will be here in a few minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON: They are carrying on at present in a building that has been in existence for a period of upwards of fifty years. It is not modern at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have it in mind. I cannot say whether it is in the program for this year or not.

Mr. MANION: I would like to refer to the question of the fire extending from the Indian reserve at Fort William into the park. The minister is quite familiar with the facts and it is some time since I put them on record in a letter to him. The minister's deputy takes the attitude that the parks board which asks for assistance in the putting out of that fire has not a just claim inasmuch as the Indian department, although admitting that the fire started on the reserve, contend that they have already spent, I think, some $3,500 in assisting the Indians in fire protection. I am informed that $3,500 was spent on an absolute necessity in the shape of fire protection which should have been put in long before, and it has no effect so far as past accident is concerned. I wish, without delaying the committee at all, to impress upon the minister once again what I have done in private and by letter, namely, that I believe the parks board, which has had a very difficult time getting along and which has suffered because of the fire extending into their park from the Indian reserve, should be given consideration by the minister and some assistance towards at least the expenditure made by them for the upkeep of the volunteer fire fighting force—it is only a matter of about $700—should be given by the department of Indian Affairs, in spite of what my good friend the deputy minister states in regard to the matter. I trust the minister will look into this once again and endeavour to see that the parks board receive this assistance. It can be done without delaying the matter at the moment and without any special vote. I presume there are in the Indian department as in other departments votes out of which a sum of $700 or $800 could be taken. I am not speaking for what little political effect this might have; I am speaking very seriously because I think the parks board have a just case. I feel the minister thinks they have a just case and I hope he will see they are given some assistance in regard to the matter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am familiar with the subject the hon. member has brought up. It is one upon which we have not reached decision. I have had inquiry made and I may say the report is not particularly favourable, but I think my hon. friend is correct in saying there may be some claim and I will look into the matter again.

Mr. MANION: I think in this case the minister's deputy is a little too economical for the department and he should let down the gates in justice to the parks board of Fort William.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to say a few words about this item. Lest it be taken for granted that we approve these votes, I desire to point out to the minister that during the last few months, in fact during the last year, I have received very serious complaints respecting the administration of the Indian department in western Canada. The fault does not rest with the officer immediately in charge. political patronage has played a large part in the matter, in which the deputy head is wholly without authority. For instance there have been cases of machinery bought merely for the purpose of providing business for friends and which lies outdoors unused. In one instance the minister employed as farm instructor to the Indians an undischarged bankrupt, and in another case a man who is addicted to the use of liquor to too great an extent was put in a position of authority with the result that at times he gets under the weather with injurious consequences to the Indians.

There is a vast sum of money being expended for the Indians, and this talk of the minister about his desire to help these wards of the nation would sound better if he would give some little expression to that sentiment in concrete form in a proper expenditure of the money voted for the purpose, and with less exercise of political patronage in the making of appointments. The Civil Service Commission which makes appointments in some cases should make them in all. It is not simply one case; there are three cases in particular. Why is it that the near relative of a member of parliament is taken from Portage la Prairie and put on a reserve? Did the Civil Service Commission approve of it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Under what circumstances?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot tell my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the minister could if he took the trouble to. The people in that locality at all events think so. In one instance the Indians were moved off one reserve—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where was that?

Mr. BENNETT: Not far from Portage, and they are supposed to be removed to another place; I do not know whether they have been or not. This is the report that was made by a gentleman who went through the west, a gentleman with no political bias at all, but with the one object of seeing how the aborigines were treated. He inquired why farm machinery should be left lying around unused—mechanical power for farming purposes unused. He also saw this reserve that I mention. In fairness to all concerned I am leaving out the name of the particular individual, the minister having ample opportunity to investigate these matters, lest it be said that injury is being done to any particular person.

Some years ago the idea was started that the Indians were raising very large crops. For instance, in my own province of Alberta there were the exigencies of—shall I say?—the demands of friends that reserves should be leased near Macleod; then reserves somewhere else; then the sale of the lands of a reserve east of Calgary; and when you go into Saskatchewan you find difficulties of the same sort, especially in the northern part of the province; and as well in Manitoba. The result is that although it is said that the Indians are producing large quantities of grain, in the main it will be found that they are not making the progress they should for the moneys that are expended, and part of the moneys we are expending belong to the Indians. There is a vast fund in this country that belongs to the Indians; for when lands are sold which the Indians own the proceeds from the sale of these lands goes into a trust fund the income of which is available for the maintenance of the Indians.

I have referred to three reserves in Alberta. I refer to a reserve in Saskatchewan. There is also a reserve in Manitoba, the Long Plains reserve, which I mentioned a little while ago. The Indians I referred to are the Indians who were removed from Portage to the Long Plains reserve. I could go into these matters in detail, but I think it is sufficient for my purpose to indicate them lest it be said that we have approved of this vast expenditure; and I say "vast" advisedly, because while it may be a relatively small sum of money, actually it is a very substantial sum. You have $2,500,000 out of $5,000,000 being used for Indian education, including the construction of school buildings. It would be desirable, if we had time, that we should have a complete statement from the minister as to just what work is being done and what the results are. Possibly the nearness of the end of the session is a good reason for not wanting to go into the matter in detail, but I should like the minister to know that there are those deeply interested in these questions who are studying them from outside observation, and they believe that the results obtained are not at all in keeping with what could be secured from the expenditures made. A tendency is manifesting itself to expend money in the purchase of facilities for farming which are not used for farming, with resultant idleness on the part of the Indians—the tendency of the Indian in that direction is well known to all—with the unfortunate result that instead of the Indian becoming more self-respecting he is becoming more dependent. Occupying as they do very excellent areas of land of high agricultural value, we know that there are not wanting those who are always endeavouring to see that these lands are sold and purchased by someone else. The minister has had a good deal of experience in that regard in various sections of the country. He knows the means that are taken to have the Indians made to believe that it is desirable for them to sell, and then when they find their reserves gone and the lands sold the result is that you have a worse condition than you had before. The minister knows the difficulties which sometimes have been pointed out in correspondence from, I fancy many others besides myself.

Without taking the minister's time or the time of the committee to go into the mass of detail which I have under my hand, and which I had expected would be useful at this session of the house, representing accumulated detail extending over twelve months, I do suggest to him that whatever little time he may have at his disposal for Indian affairs might be utilized in having the closest possible inspection made of all the reserves in the western provinces. I know the inspectors' reports. Unfortunately I have seen some of them and have checked them up. I know the difficulties in connection with farm instructors, and I am not unmindful of the difficulties which the minister has to experience with those who think that they are fitted by a kindly Providence better to discharge the duties of instructors, farm and others, to Indians than any other people in the world. But if we are to get some value for the money that we are expending and make the Indian, as we all desire to do somewhat more self-reliant and less dependent and improve his position in the community by encouraging him to engage in agricultural pursuits and the raising of stock, as was done at one time in connection with two reserves in Alberta, we shall have to adopt different means from those which are now in vogue. I know not whether it is so or not, but certainly an authority to whose judgment I attach a great deal of importance is strongly of the opinion that there has been a steady deterioration in recent years in the morale of the Indians upon the reserves. That is not wholly attributable to my hon. friend's administration, of course, but it is attributable to causes which the government might, it seems to me, by taking strong action overcome. I content myself with pointing out these matters, without taking time to read a vast quantity of evidence which I have dealing with them. I ask the minister to endeavour to ensure by—shall I say?—observation and action on the ground, and not departmental action from Ottawa, that better results are obtained for the money expended than those which we have heretofore realized; for some of the education that we have given the Indians has only resulted in the poor unfortunate becoming the easier the victim of the tendencies of modern civilization. I think the minister knows what I refer to in that regard. Despite the efforts that are made to prevent the Indian becoming the victim of drink, very often his improved education has the more readily made him the victim of—shall I say?—civilization. All these things are matters that I regard as of great importance from the standpoint of the treatment of our aborigines, and I earnestly hope that steps will be taken to improve the conditions I have mentioned.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are reserves in western Canada—I presume my hon. friend is speaking of the farming reserves—where implements are left out of doors. But that is the case on almost very farm in western Canada. On the whole I think we have more facilities on the Indian reserves for storing agricultural implements than will be found on ordinary farms in any given locality in the western country. As fast as we can get money—because after all it is a question of money—we believe in providing facilities for covering these implements at or near the agent's quarters on the reserve. The appointment of agents is made by the Civil Service Commission, usually after a competitive examination.

Mr. BENNETT: It was not agents that I mentioned.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Farm instructors are appointed by the commissioner at Regina. The case mentioned by my hon. friend is that of Mr. Edwards, who, he says, was an undischarged bankrupt when he received his appointment. I did not know anything about that at the time. After his period of probation he did not prove to have the necessary qualifications for the work and he is no longer in the employ of the department. My hon. friend says that the Indians are making no improvement in the way of farming. May I direct his attention to the Blood reserve at Macleod? They had well over one hundred thousand bushels of grain on that reserve last year. The Indians on the Blackfoot reserve are also making progress. As to the sale of Indian land, I agree with everything my hon. friend has said. Usually the reserve covers the best land in any given locality, and there is a desire on the part of the people who surround it to secure that land and they try every means in their power to get possession. The Blackfoot reserve was sold long before I became Superintendent

General of Indian Affairs, and we have had a good deal of trouble in getting collections of the moneys due the Indians, but we have succeeded in straightening out the difficulty. It is not the policy of the department to sell any land required now or that may be required in the future by the Indians of western Canada if it can be utilized by them for grazing, agriculture or any other purpose.

With respect to the education of the Indians, when I took charge of this department I found the various churches of the country, the Roman Catholic under the Oblate Fathers, the Anglicans, the Presbyterians, the Methodists—of course the Anglicans and the Catholics were engaged in this work to a much greater extent than the Presbyterians and the Methodists—I found that these churches had constructed buildings and had become responsible for the indebtedness incurred in their construction, and they were levying upon their adherents to secure money necessary to carry on their educational work. These churches had gone into the country in a missionary spirit to educate and christianize the young Indians, and I did not think it was fair to have them carrying that heavy financial burden. Therefore I immediately took steps to purchase from them the institutions that were considered to be useful for a number of years to come and to replace as far as possible the structures that had fallen into disrepair. To-day the churches are carrying on their work under much better conditions than they did when I became minister of the department.

With 105,000 Indians scattered over the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and away up in the Arctic, it would be strange if some of our officials did not go wrong once in a while. But may I say to the hon. leader of the opposition that I will not tolerate an official on an Indian reserve who has anything to do with liquor—and I am not a prohibitionist.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is one very strong resolution I have made in this regard, and I intend to carry it out. So far as I know, we try to keep the staff engaged in Indian work as reasonably clean as we possibly can. I do not say that we will not have difficulties now and again; anyone who has to administer this department is bound to have difficulties; but I say we are making progress, and did time permit I should be glad to inform the house of the lines along which we are making splendid progress in Indian affairs.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. BRADY: I want to bring home to the Minister of the Interior a few facts that are vital in this discussion. I think he will admit it without hesitation, that the money we are spending on the education of Indians in Canada has not resulted in making the Indian part of our Canadian life. No hon. member of this house who has studied the Indian problem can dare tell me that beneficial results have accrued from this large expenditure. If we compare the condition of the Indians in Canada with that of the Maoris in New Zealand, we find a striking contrast. The Maoris in New Zealand have entered almost every profession and you even find them in the legislative halls of that dominion. Unfortunately we cannot point to a similar advance among the Indians in our country. I believe that the minister has honestly endeavoured to the best of his ability to solve the problem of educating the Indian, but he has not succeeded. The Indian on the many reserves to-day, with the most valuable land in the country at his disposal, is not doing for himself what he should do when we take into account what we expend upon his education. What is the position of the Indian to-day? I grant that the Indian schools are doing good work? There is the Coqualeetza school, the school at Fort Simpson, Alert Bay, Telegraph Creek and Wrangel, and although they are doing very good work we must admit that they are not solving the problem of getting the full value of these 105,000 Indians who have been taken from their natural habitat by our modern methods, and to whom we are trying to give a modern education. We have succeeded only in giving them a veneer of education, and we have not followed the education of those Indians to its legitimate end. In their education I suggest that we should strive to teach those Indian children to be part of the modern life in which they find themselves. Are the Indian schools doing that? I desire that when we spend so much money on Indian education we shall see to it that those Indian children have good teachers, and teachers who are well paid. Furthermore those children should be taught technical work in which pursuit the Indian is an expert.

Without taking more time of the committee I wish to say that by instinct the Indian is a craftsman. Hon. members would do well to take note of the work they have done with wood carving in western Canada; they are efficient in painting and basket weaving. What have we done to fit the Indian for the vocation to which he is entitled? We should direct our attention to the study of the Indian in a more practical fashion than we are doing to-day and I hope that during the coming year a great and concerted effort will be made to make those Indians part and parcel of our modern civilization, a position which they do not hold at the present time.

Mr. KELLNER: I have a long letter concerning the dismissal without notice of Mr. W. Edwards. Is the minister in a position to make a statement as to why this man was dismissed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I believe my department received a letter from my hon. friend. I made inquiries, and as a result I find that there were statements made to the effect that this man was an undischarged bankrupt. The claim was made that the Indians owed him money, which claim I believe has been denied. The chief complaint however was that the man was not fit and capable to carry out his duties, and for that reason was not employed longer.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTING THIS DAY AFTER ELEVEN O'CLOCK—SITTING ON ASCENSION DAY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I wish to move that this house do not adjourn at eleven o'clock to-night.

Mr. BENNETT: We should have a definite statement as to when the house will rise. We had difficulty on one occasion in connection with that matter and it is better to have a definite time to take the place of eleven o'clock rather than to proceed indefinitely and then have difficulty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend and other members of the house are no doubt aware that to-morrow is Ascension day, and that in the past it has not been customary for this house to sit on that day. It has not been customary either to sit on May 24. As we had two sittings on that day and are now doing our utmost to get through with the business of parliament as rapidly as possible, it might suit the convenience of all if we were to meet only for two sittings to-morrow instead of three as we are doing at present. In that way we would leave the morning clear and meet in the afternoon. If that is agreeable, I would suggest that it might be advisable to meet at the hour of two o'clock in the afternoon instead of at three o'clock. In regard to this evening, I imagine it will meet the convenience of all parties if we fix the hour of adjournment at one o'clock. Some hon. members have mentioned that we might continue to sit until two o'clock; on the other hand, I have learned that there are other members who prefer to adjourn at one o'clock. That being the case I would suggest the hour of one o'clock, and with the consent of the house I shall include that hour in my motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall make the formal motion that this house do sit to-morrow, May 29, 1930, beginning at the hour of two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I add that I hope the fact that for part of the day we are to sit on Ascension day will not be regarded as in any way establishing a precedent?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Indians—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—$1,061,257.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I want to bring to the attention of the minister the matter of some Indian accounts. In some instances in the province of Saskatchewan Indian agents have gone out to the farmers and purchased seed grain, feed oats, hay for horses and in some instances cattle. In some cases these people have received part pay, but in others they have not received anything. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister last year, and my remarks are recorded at pages 3807 and 3808 of unrevised Hansard. Among other things the minister said:

> In every case where he is able to produce such an order we are prepared to settle, and in some cases where the evidence is clear that the transaction actually took place and that the creditor has given value for the claim, we will try to make an adjustment.

It seems to me that some provision should be made at this session of parliament to pay these accounts when the agents get seed grain or feed from farmers. I hope the minister will see that these accounts are paid this summer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All I can say is that we do recognize the orders of the agents, but we do not pretend to recognize trading done with Indians unless by the authority of the agents. We have had a great deal of difficulty in settling up old accounts which have dragged on for some years; many of the obligations in this respect occurred during and just after the war. I think, however, with the exception of just one or two at Touchwood we have paid up most of these accounts, and the crop on the Blood reserve this year will no doubt clear up a very heavy indebtedness which exists there. We are watching the matter very closely and hope we will be able to clean up the last of these accounts before the year is over.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Am I to understand that it is not the intention of the department to take care of these accounts at all until such time as the money comes from crops belonging to the Indians themselves?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, that is not what I want my hon. friend to understand. As far as possible we want to avoid taking money from our Indian account for the purpose of paying these amounts. In the case of the Blood Indians there was about $50,000 owing, a very large amount, and I am informed that this year their crop will clean up that account. In some cases we have had accounts long overdue and have had to vote the money to pay for them. I want my hon. friend to understand that it has not been an easy task to clean up this old indebtedness, but I say we hope to be able to clean it up during the present year.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I should like the minister to understand also that it has not been an easy task for these men to carry these accounts for ten or twelve years, some of them for very large amounts. I do not refer to any cases where trading has been done between the Indian and the farmer; I refer to cases where the agent went out and gave orders on government stationery. The farmer, thinking he was going to get his pay in the near future, let go of a valuable liquid asset and still has not received his money. We make loans to harbour commissions and many other institutions throughout Canada, and it seems to me this matter should be cleaned up now. It should not be difficult to make a loan to the department which would enable these legitimate accounts to be paid. They should be paid; it would not take a great deal of money and it would relieve a great deal of hardship among the farmers who have been carrying these accounts for a long time.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. McQUARRIE: I have quite a large file of correspondence here in reference to the case of C. B. Rothery, who was a clerk in the Indian office at Onion Lake. This man claims to have been unjustly treated; he was appointed to the position through the Civil Service Commission, and after six months probation he was dismissed by the department. I have a recent letter from him in which he says:

> A communication from J. C. G. Herwig, service bureau, Canadian Legion, to the representative of the imperial section of the Legion—a copy of which letter has been passed to me—reveals the following interesting admission by the Indian department:
> "We have been met with a bland denial of such interference (political) and been told that the department did not wish to accept Rothery in the first place, doubting his competency." This I consider explains the attitude of the Indian department throughout the whole business and does prove their intention to appoint the nominee of C. R. McIntosh, M.P.; further that it certainly supports my contention that they did not intend that I should get past the period of probation.

And so on. I also have a number of communications from prominent people in the district, which I will not take time to read to the committee. However, there is one letter from a prominent gentleman in Fort Pitt, Saskatchewan. I will let the minister see this letter if he wishes, but I do not wish to put it all on Hansard or to give the name of my correspondent. I should like to read a short extract, however, as follows:

> The whole district feels most strongly about his dismissal from the position he held as clerk at the Onion lake Indian agency, a feeling I certainly share myself. We all know Rothery as a very capable, courteous man fitted in every way for the position he held at Onion lake. His academic qualifications and experience place him right in the front rank, and it is disgraceful to think that he should have been dismissed from Onion lake on such paltry grounds. I have gone into the whole matter most fully, and to me the business will hardly bear the light of day.
> We all feel that Rothery was eminently suited for the job as clerk at Onion lake. His past records are irreproachable. I have made a number of private inquiries into this matter and have viewed all possible aspects of this case. I now come to the conclusion that there should be a thorough, impartial inquiry into the whole business, which I know would lead to Rothery's reinstatement.

Would the minister care to make a statement in connection with that case?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. I may say that I have heard of this case to-night for the first time, but I am informed that this man was selected by the Civil Service Commission for the position; he was taken on for a period of probation of six months, and was found to be unfitted for his job, so he was let out. As I say, I had not heard of this matter until my hon. friend brought it up to-night, but that is the information I have with respect to the case. I may add that surely the officials of the department ought to be the judges of whether or not a man is capable of filling a position after he is given a trial. If he had not received a trial it would be a different matter, but I am bound to say that I shall have to accept the opinion of my officials against any outside suggestions as to efficiency or anything else with respect to the department. I do not know anything about this case; it has been dealt with by the department officially, and the officials of the department must be the judges of a man's qualification to fill a position after he is given a fair and impartial trial.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister know whether it is true that the man who got the position was recommended by the hon. member mentioned in this letter?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know who has the letter or where it is filed. I had no knowledge of this matter until just this moment.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The statement is made to that effect.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot be responsible for all the statements which are made but undoubtedly the Civil Service Commission would have to pass upon the applicant, and would also send us another one.

Mr. McQUARRIE: As a matter of fact they did give this man the appointment. He is a returned man, while the man appointed in his place was not. Does the minister know that to be the fact?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know anything about the appointment. As clerks are required they are advertised for in the usual way and the appointment is made by the Civil Service Commission. The individual who obtains the appointment is taken on probation, but if he is found to be unfitted for the position he is let out and we ask the Civil Service Commission to give us another appointment.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister agree that there should be an investigation made?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will give me the information which he has and I find that an investigation is warranted, yes. Every man is entitled to fair treatment, but many of these cases come up and it is found usually that the officials in charge are capable of deciding whether or not a man is fitted for the position. If that man has not had an opportunity of demonstrating his fitness for the position, then there might be grounds for complaint.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The gravamen of this charge is that the department never intended that this man should retain the position. That would appear to be a clear case of fraud, and more than that there is the suggestion of political interference.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend is willing to give me the information in his possession I will go into this matter thoroughly and if in my opinion any injustice has been done to this man, an investigation will be held.

Mr. McQUARRIE: No doubt the deputy has full information as to what took place. These are rather serious charges, and they seem to be backed up by very prominent residents of that district who think that an injustice has been done to this man. I should be very glad to give the minister all the information I have, and I would ask that he consider the holding of an investigation. It is very unsatisfactory that there should be, as there has been in this case, any political interference, particularly when a returned man is displaced by a man who did not serve overseas.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Has any provision been made for the payment of these accounts?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does the hon. member mean by way of a special vote?

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, but should it be deemed absolutely necessary that payments be made, and the accounts do not run into too large a sum, they will be taken care of.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Does not the minister think that some of these accounts should be paid? The crops were poor last year and the farmers would like to receive their money. I would like to see the minister bring in a supplementary estimate to cover this matter. It would not mean the payment of a very large sum out of the federal treasury, and that would be returned as new crops are grown.

Indians—British Columbia—$591,600.

Mr. FRASER: What percentage of this vote was expended last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as education is concerned, we have found that we have overspent our votes in all the provinces. We do not carry over any amounts in the Indian department, especially in those items dealing with medical health and medical services.

Mr. FRASER: One of the items in this vote is for $100,000 to provide for technical education, hospitals, medical attendance, promotion of agriculture, stockraising, fruit culture, and irrigation projects, and I would like to know in a general way what disposition was made last year of that amount, and how it is proposed to expend this present vote.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the sum which was fixed two years ago as a settlement with the Indians.

Mr. FRASER: Could the minister indicate in a general way how the amount is being spent? For instance, how much is being spent on technical education?

Mr. BENNETT: And what is meant by technical education?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not anticipate being asked these questions, and I have not that information with me. The $100,000 is divided up in various ways for the benefit of the Indians in British Columbia. Does the hon. member want a statement as to how that amount was spent?

Mr. FRASER: I wanted only a general statement, but if the minister is going to prepare one, perhaps he would prepare a complete statement.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The expenditures for this year were as follows:

|---|---|
| Technical education.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | $10,000 |
| Hospitals and medical attendance.. .. | 60,000 |
| Promotion of agriculture, stock raising and fruit culture.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 15,000 |
| Irrigation projects.. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 15,000 |

Mr. FRASER: Most of the amount went for medical purposes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is quite right.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is it the policy of the department to lease Indian lands to orientals?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that where they are available for leasehold, Indian lands are leased to orientals.

[Mr. Fansher.]

Mr. McQUARRIE: On page 1311 of Hansard of this year appears an answer by the minister to a question asked by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer). A list is shown of about 32 orientals who have obtained leases on the Kamloops No. 1, Tsooahadie, "foreshore", Tsussie, Whonock and Musqueam reserves. I presume the minister knows of the agitation in British Columbia against the leasing of lands to orientals. He knows the foothold they are getting on lands in that province. I suggest to the minister that this is a policy the department should not pursue. Is there any particular reason why such a policy should be pursued?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know of no particular reason. So far as I am aware, the oriental rents property freely in British Columbia for the purpose of raising vegetables. The Indian department is not unique in the fact that it happens to have a few leases with orientals, who, so far as I know make very good gardeners; they take good care of the land and we get the rentals from them. There is no difficulty about getting our rentals. They are not receiving possession of the land in any way; it is merely on leasehold. I may say frankly, if Anglo-Saxons wish to rent the land they would certainly have the privilege, but I do not know that we should take the ground that we would absolutely refuse to lease lands to orientals unless that were a general policy in British Columbia and then, of course, we would acquiesce in it. The hon. member knows the oriental is a very large leaseholder in British Columbia.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister says that the orientals take good care of the land. Perhaps the minister does not know. As a matter of fact the orientals do just the opposite; they use up the land. It is estimated that if an oriental can have land for five years, its productive qualities are practically nil for quite a long period after. The minister has not that information, I presume.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend knows that right at his own home on the delta there is a very large settlement of orientals who have been there for a number of years. I happen to know that from observation. I had not heard they were leaving the land; they are farming it under leasehold. I had not heard that they were more extravagant in the use of land or took the life out of it more quickly than their white competitors. That is news to me, I confess.

Mr. McQUARRIE: It is quite true nevertheless. I presume the minister is not aware that the great majority of the farmers throughout that district have decided not to lease any lands to orientals. The minister has not that information?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I want to ask another question in regard to unused Indian reserves. What is the policy of the government in connection with lands that are not being occupied by Indians at all? How many reserves have we like that in British Columbia?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think we have in the neighbourhood of 1,200 in the province of British Columbia. I frankly confess we are not anxious to sell Indian lands, but when there are no Indians going to make use of them and they are of any particular value for agricultural purposes, they are usually sold or put under leasehold. Use is being made of them in some way, but the Indians of course receive the benefit of the receipts from the leases, and in this way we are assisted in carrying on the Indian work. As I say, we are not keen on selling Indian lands; we believe there is little enough land reserved for the Indians without depleting it further.

Mr. McQUARRIE: When the department proceeds to lease lands, does it advertise them in any way or give opportunity to the public generally to know that such lands are for rental?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Usually we have applications for them and we seek to make known, in the locality in which the land is located, the fact that it is for rental. In the case of sales they are always by public auction and more often than otherwise there is only one individual interested, or there may be two. We try to meet all who are desirous of obtaining leases of these lands.

Item agreed to.

Indians—general, $336,500.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister will give us a few words of explanation in connection with the item of $137,000 for the prevention of the spread of tuberculosis. I had a communication in respect to that the other day.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are not anything like meeting the requirements of the case in regard to the suppression of tuberculosis amongst the Indians. Indeed, there is in Canada scarcely a band of Indian which is not more or less affected by tuberculosis. Unfortunately the disease has spread to rather an alarming degree, so much so that we are really anxious about it. I am asking for the apointment of an assistant Indian medical officer, but even that does not touch the fringe of the question. Something further will have to be done, and a very considerable sum of money spent on this work in order to meet the situation. I am having a survey made at the present time of the hospital facilities in every province in Canada, because we believe, rightly or wrongly, that it will be more economical for the department to work through the existing hospitals of the provinces than to attempt to set up large institutions of our own with the incidental cost. Of course in some instances we shall have to establish hospitals. Moreover, growing out of this is another demand, a demand for some sort of institution to house our old people, but I frankly confess our chief cause of alarm at the moment is tuberculosis and the ravages of this disease amongst the Indians and also the danger of the spreading into the communities that surround them as a result of so much of it being found on the reserves. Year by year we shall have to increase the vote for this purpose. I consider it a real menace and we are giving it very careful attention in the hope of meeting the situation as far as it is possible to do so, not to eradicate, but to suppress, if possible, the spread of the malady.

Mr. BENNETT: Last week I was at the Byron hospital near London and I saw some Indian inmates of that hospital. During the past year I had occasion to observe the ravages of this disease in the Sarcee band near Calgary, where the band is certainly in a very precarious condition, where diseases of other kinds than tuberculosis have undermined the vitality of the survivors, and something must be done. The same thing is equally true in regard to other reserves in Alberta. I have had no opportnuity to see other reserves but one, and therefore I cannot with any degree of certainty speak about the matter. The minister anticipated a suggestion I was going to make to him, and it is this: We have a Department of Health and there should be the closest cooperation between the two departments. This overlapping is one of the things that disturb people greatly. The federal Department of Health should be of some service in matters of this kind. The hon. gentleman has referred to a subject that, I think, is of considerable importance, namely, the tying of the efforts of the department to those of the provincial organizations in some way. I do not know just how this can best be accomplished. Take, for instance, the large institution near Robertson, west of Calgary, where large numbers of tubercular patients are being treated. From the inquiries I have made, it did not seem to me you could take the Indian patients to that sanatorium and have them treated with the other patients there.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What we are doing—and we are trying to extend it—is to provide a sum of money to build extensions to those institutions, and they are operated as Indian annexes.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member knows what was done at Gleichen in connection with trying to put up little houses for them. It is their way of living that makes them so susceptible to the inroads of this disease. Certainly there are a great many people who are intensely concerned as to whether or not the existing conditions are not a menace to the public health of the surrounding community, as the minister has said. The deaths last year were very considerable, especially among the younger men and women on the reserves. The sum of $137,000 properly expended in one year in a concentrated effort at one particular point might provide facilities that would ensure that community against the ravages of this disease being so apparent next year, but a sum like $137,000 spread over as thinly as it has to be to take care of the whole situation, I am afraid, accomplishes very little good. I am bound to say that the facilities that have been provided in connection with the Sarcee and Blackfoot reserves and at one or two other places have done an amazing amount of good. But the Indian does not take kindly to the preventive measures that have to be taken to ensure anything like reasonable results. The reason I brought this matter up was that there might be on Hansard for the benefit of those who are tremendously interested in this matter a statement from the minister to which I could refer them, indicating a realization on his part of the dangers of the situation and as to what steps are being taken, not to eradicate, but to bring about an attitude of mind on the part of those concerned by which they will let nature operate so as to prevent their becoming victims of tuberculosis.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have been expending very large sums of money on the building of educational institutions, and I think we have now reached the stage where we shall not require so much money for that purpose. Both this year and last, in conjunction with the Department of Health at Ottawa and the provincial departments of health, we have been making a survey with a view to establishing additions to the institutions already built to take care of the Indians who are suffering from this and other diseases.

Mr. MANION: May I suggest that there is this point to be remembered? The Indians are more susceptible to any disease taken from the white men than are the white men themselves, and a good deal of the work done should be directed not so much to taking care of the Indian after he has taken the disease as to preventing him from taking it. Tuberculosis is a disease which comes upon patients particularly after having had measles, and keeping the Indians from getting such diseases as measles will render them less susceptible to tuberculosis. Preventive measures of that sort will do more good than looking after the Indian after he has taken the disease.

Item agreed to.

Indian education, including the construction of school buildings, $2,409,500.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister would give us some statement as to how this money is to be expended. The minister knows the demands in connection with buildings in certain parts of western Canada, and I think it would be desirable to have a statement on Hansard for reference.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have in operation this year boarding and day schools in the various provinces as follows: Prince Edward Island, 1; Nova Scotia, 11; New Brunswick, 10; Quebec, 33; Ontario, 96; Manitoba, 55; Saskatchewan, 39; Alberta, 21; Northwest Territories, 6; British Columbia, 62; Yukon, 7; or 341 in all. There are no boarding schools in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Quebec, but there are 13 boarding schools in Ontario; Manitoba, 10; Saskatchewan, 14; Alberta, 19; Northwest Territories, 4; British Columbia, 16; Yukon, 2.

Mr. BENNETT: Is this new construction?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, these are schools in operation. The new construction is as follows:

|---|---|
| Shingwauk Home, Ontario (C.E.) | $ 50,000 |
| Norway House, Manitoba (United) | 15,000 |
| Birtle, Manitoba (Pres.) | 125,000 |
| Muscowequan, Saskatchewan (R.C.) | 145,000 |
| Beauval, Saskatchewan (R.C.) | 25,000 |
| Albert Bay, British Columbia (C.E.) | 10,000 |
| Blue Quills, Alberta (R.C.) | 125,000 |
| Edmonton, Alberta (United) | 14,000 |
| Old Sun, Alberta (C.E.) | 50,000 |

|---|---|
| Providence, Northwest Territories (R.C.) | 15,000 |
| Cariboo, British Columbia (R.C.) | 26,000 |
| Carcross, Yukon (C.E.) | 10,000 |

That is our program for new construction and improvements to existing buildings for this year.

Mr. PECK: What schools are maintained in the Northwest Territories?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have a day school at Aklavik, with 40 pupils; one at Fort Resolution, with 80 pupils; one at Hay river, with 50 pupils; one at Providence, with 65 pupils.

Mr. SIMPSON: Is the amount the minister mentioned for the Shingwauk Home at Sault Ste Marie to be used for the construction of a new building? The old building has been there for over fifty years, and they are hopeful—I understand that they were led to believe —that a new building would be erected.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed by the deputy minister that this is to commence a new building, which it is expected will cost $160,000. But this is all we shall expend this year.

Mr. FRASER: The minister mentioned a new building at Cariboo.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): An amount of $26,000 is being spent for a water suply at the school at Cariboo.

Mr. FRASER: I noticed in the Auditor General's report for 1929 an amount of about $35,000 for Indian children attending white schools. What is the policy of the government in regard to paying the expenses of Indian children attending white schools?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where the Indian children are attending the school, as we contribute nothing as ratepayers we have to pay fees.

Mr. FRASER: That is the general policy?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Indian education—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What is this?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): When we closed the year we found that a number of the votes had lapsed with respect to the construction of buildings and we were short $100,000.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—to provide for a gratuity to Peter Tomkins, farming instructor, formerly of Saddle Lake agency, Alberta, $500.

Mr. BENNETT: Is Peter Tomkins an Indian?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. For many years he was in the employ of the Indian department, particularly through the period of the rebellion. Now he is unable to maintain himself, and we are voting this as a gratuity for the services he rendered in the early days.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a small sum, but there is a precedent involved which is of very great importance having regard to the letters one in my position receives from those who took part in the Northwest rebellion. When did he leave the public service?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He left the Indian service some years ago, but later he was employed in the Department of the Interior as a homestead inspector. I do not think he has been engaged in the Indian department for twenty years.

Mr. KENNEDY: He has been in the public service forty years altogether. He was Dominion Land Agent at Grouard until 1911.

Item agreed to.

Indian affairs—salaries, $195,000; contingencies, $23,000.

Mr. COWAN: Is there any provision in the supplementary or the main estimates for making an addition to the hospital at Sioux Lookout in the northern part of the territory? It is a convenient point to establish a hospital by reason of the fact that Indians resident in the area from the Manitoba boundary to as far as Cochrane are treated there. Representations have been made to the department that a wing should be added to the hospital. At present the Indians are treated in an institution erected by the citizens of the community. I think it is only fair that the department should pay for the construction of a wing to the hospital in pursuance of the request that has been forwarded to the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If we can make an arrangement with the hospital authorities we intend to provide the money for the construction of a wing for the purpose my hon. friend has mentioned. It is our intention to put an item in the estimates next year. In the meantime we will continue to pay the ordinary hospital fees.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is the reason for the increase of over $16,000 for salaries?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are appointing a new medical officer to assist the chief medical officer at a salary of $4,000; a departmental accountant, grade 5; a survey engineer, grade 1; a clerk, grade 4; an inspector of Indian agencies, grade 2. This official in the past has been paid from the vote for the outside service; we are transferring him to the permanent inside service. These, with a few other increases make the total of $16,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: There is an increase of $1,500 for contingencies.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We find that we have not had enough money in the past for contingencies, and we are now asking for $1,500 more.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

National Revenue—Civil government—salaries, $776,980; contingencies, $60,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Does this amount include the salaries of special officers who have been taking charge of prosecutions and looking after matters of that kind?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): No, this is under the civil government section.

Mr. BENNETT: They are not included in that?

Mr. EULER: No; this applies to the officers in the departmental head office.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including pay for overtime of officers, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, and temporary buildings and rentals, $8,064,000.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection and in connection with the Board of Customs, and amount required to create positions, make appointments and pay salaries and expenses of Dominion appraisers, investigators of values and claims for drawbacks, $1,327,940.

Miscellaneous—Printing and stationery, subscriptions to commercial papers, flags, dating stamps, locks, instruments, etc., for various ports of entry, express charges on samples, stationery and legal forms, legal expenses, premiums on guarantee bonds and uniforms for customs officers, $650,000.

To provide for expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and for preventive service and amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue; also to provide for the expenses of such officers and for the purchase or charter of vessels, and for the purchase or hire of automobiles to be used in the prevention of smuggling or other offences against the revenue laws, $1,812,512.

[Mr. McQuarrie.]

Amount to be paid to the Department of Justice, to be disbursed by and accounted for to it, for secret preventive service; amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act, $60,000.

To provide for the administration of the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, and the Income War Tax Act, 1917, and amendments thereof, and authority for this purpose to create positions and make appointments notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed are hereby wholly excluded from the operation of the said act, and salary of $8,000 for the Commissioner of Income Tax, $2,200,000.

To hereby provide, notwithstanding anything in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to A. C. Lacouvee, special customs excise officer grade 2, on the preventive service staff of the Department of National Revenue of an amount at the rate of $500 per annum to commence from July 1, 1930, and to continue thereafter until the death of the annuitant, $500.—Total, $14,114,952.

Mr. MANION: There are a number of increases here, and some decreases. I would like the minister to give us some explanation, because it is a long item.

Mr. EULER: The total increases for all the main estimates amount to $24,000 more than they were last year. Does my hon. friend refer to any particular increase?

Mr. MANION: It is rather a long item, and I was anxious to have the minister say something about it. What is the first increase?

Mr. EULER: The statutory increases account for $112,340, and the amount necessary for salaries for additional officers required to cope with the increased customs excise business is $222,780. The increase in contingencies based on expenditure for 1929-30, is $99,910; increase due to the promotion of officers, $7,635; increase due to transfers and retaining services of seasonal officers longer than estimated for, $19,455; and salaries underestimated for 1929-30, $1,175, making a total of $463,295. Less the decrease due to newly appointed or promoted officers coming in at the minimum or lower salary than that received by predecessors, $91,875; decrease due to positions abolished on account of closing of customs offices, $123,395.

Mr. MANION: May I ask if the minister expects to have increased expenditures due to the liquor export act?

Mr. EULER: I have not put anything in the estimates for that purpose. We are going to try it out the way it is.

Mr. MANION: Does the minister expect there will be any increase in expenses?

Mr. EULER: I hope not; I made no provision in the estimates for it.

Mr. FRASER: How is the department getting along in the closing up of many of these customs offices?

Mr. EULER: Up to date we have closed 233 offices, and it may be possible to close more of them.

Mr. FRASER: I know where a couple of them have been closed, and I have heard a good deal about it. Do you contemplate closing any offices in British Columbia; do you know of any in particular?

Mr. EULER: No, not in British Columbia.

Mr. FRASER: I have a protest from Merritt, in my own constituency, against the closing of the customs office in that town. Complaint is made that they are put to considerable inconvenience in getting their customs parcels and that there is a good deal of delay. In fact they have to send to Revelstoke, and there is inconvenience and delay in connection with the receipt of the packages or merchandise which come through in that way.

Mr. EULER: Does my hon. friend refer to postal parcels?

Mr. FRASER: No, they have no complaint in regard to postal parcels. I am referring to the ordinary customs parcels which come in by freight or express. The complaint is that from the time the parcel arrives in Revelstoke until they are advised and are able to send the money to the customs house at that place there is too long a delay. I was wondering if there could not be some arrangement to make it easier and quicker for these people to secure delivery of customs parcels.

Mr. EULER: I can assure my hon. friend that we will do everything we can to make it more convenient for the people concerned. The complaint lodged by the hon. gentleman, however, is quite common in cases where the offices have been closed. The committee will very well understand that people never take kindly to the removal of a privilege which they have enjoyed in the past. We have, however, tried to accompany the closing of these ports with the minimum of inconvenience to the public. In connection with the port to which my hon. friend has referred the import duties for a year were only $2,500, and there were 114 import entries—about one every three days. I think the committee will fully realize that there was ample reason for the closing of this port; we have closed many others where the receipts were a great deal higher than in this instance. But I can tell the hon. gentleman that we will do all in our power to render the service more convenient.

Mr. FRASER: If the minister has not already received an application for the restoration of this office he will no doubt receive it shortly; I am so advised. It does seem to me, however, that there must be some method whereby the payment of the duty and the receipt of the merchandise could be expedited. I suggest that the minister look into the matter; he may be able to do something to relieve the difficulty which has been experienced there.

Mr. EULER: We shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. ESLING: No doubt the minister has had a great many complaints. It is quite possible that complaints do follow the closing of customs offices. So far as the small express parcels are concerned, however, could provision not be made to have them cleared by the postmaster? At the present time there is the necessity for travelling from one town to another, and it may be that the man who receives the parcel has to pay a dollar or two in order to get clearance in the next town.

Mr. EULER: The matter is now under consideration, and if it can be worked out we intend to take a course somewhat similar to that suggested by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I would like to ask the minister about a port which was closed in the constituency which I represent in Nova Scotia. I refer to the port of Cheticamp, where the people have to travel 125 miles to get their clearances at the town of Port Hawkesbury. In Cheticamp we have a gypsum company employing some 300 men, and naturally it is a very great nuisance to the people there to have to go to this trouble. I think my hon. friend should look into the matter and see if something cannot be done to remedy that situation.

Mr. EULER: For the information of the committee and my hon. friend I may say that the import duties at that port were $463.60 in a year.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: When was that?

Mr. EULER: I think that would be for the year 1928, because the port was closed January 1, 1929.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I think the minister is wrong, and that those figures were for 1927. If the port were open now the revenue would be at least four times that amount.

Mr. EULER: That amount was for 1927-28.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I am pointing out to the minister that there is a great difference between the condition which existed in Cheticamp in 1927 and the condition there to-day. There was practically nothing there at that time except the fishing industry, but to-day we have a gypsum company which employs 300 men. You closed that port and have made no investigation about it whatever. That port should be opened because now you would have a revenue at least four times as great as the revenue in 1927.

Mr. EULER: I may assure my hon. friend that when the port was closed the matter was thoroughly investigated.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I do not dispute that; perhaps it should have been closed then, but it should be opened now.

Mr. EULER: I think my hon. friend is in error with regard to the date of the closure. As I have it here the port was closed January 1, 1929, just a little over a year ago. I have no objection to making another investigation.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I am pointing out that within the past year a gypsum company was organized in that district which to-day employs 300 men, and that company has to go to Port Hawkesbury to make its clearances. No investigation has been held within the last year, but if you had a customs port at Cheticamp to-day you would get at least twice and I think probably four times the revenue of 1927. It is a very serious inconvenience to the people there and I think the minister should investigate it.

Mr. EULER: Of course it is the old story; I assure my hon. friend that there are always complaints. I hardly think he would suggest that for the sake of perhaps one business, important though it may be in that particular community, the department should maintain a customs house. If we had followed that principle we would not have closed any ports at all. In this instance, where the revenue amounted to $463, the salary of the collector was $1,020 per annum, so the port cost us a great deal more money than we received from it. However, I shall be very glad to make an investigation.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The minister should not pass over this matter too lightly because it greatly concerns the people down there. I want an investigation conducted by his department in respect to this port. If the revenues are not sufficient to justify the establishment of a port, well and good, but I believe no investigation has been held and that the minister has not taken into account the fact that a very large industry employing a large number of men has been established in that district during the last year. I want some assurance from the minister that this matter will be investigated, because it is ridiculous for people carrying on a large business to have to go 125 miles to get clearances.

Mr. EULER: I do not understand what my hon. friend wants further; I have assured him that I have no objection to making an investigation. He says no investigation has been made in the past year. The port has been closed only a little over a year and until to-night no investigation was asked for. I cannot promise him anything more than that I will investigate the matter.

Mr. GARDINER: I notice the last item provides for a pension. Would the minister explain the circumstances in connection with that item?

Mr. EULER: Mr. Lacouvee has been captain of the Margaret, the largest of our cruisers, for a great many years. Altogether he has been in the service of the department some 35 years. It is desired now to retire him; he is not in good health, but for certain reasons the entire period of his service cannot be recognized in his retiring allowance, which would amount to about $1,475. Capatin Lacouvee, I may say for the information of the committee, lost a leg as the result of an accident which occurred while he was employed on one of our vessels. He never has received any real consideration for that loss, and it is felt now that after 35 years of service for which he cannot receive complete allowance it is not unfair to give him an additional $500.

Mr. BENNETT: What is his age?

Mr. EULER: About 65 or so.

Mr. BARBER: There is a matter which has been called to my attention and which at first I thought was a matter of classification but which I find to be a matter of administration. This concerns the port of Abbotsford, in my district, where there is a certain amount of discontent. Abbotsford is a chief customs and excise port, where three men are employed. The variety of work is just the same as at such a port as Vancouver, though of course the volume is much smaller, and the demand is for just as much efficiency as at the larger ports. At all such offices as Abbotsford there are two or more sub-offices under its jurisdiction, and at these boundary points there is provision for the classification of the man in charge as a senior customs and excise examiner, but at such chief ports there is no such provision. The result is that the officer next to the collector at the chief port, while required to assume responsibility as acting collector, cashier, in charge of excise and sales tax and so on, is placed in an entirely unfair position as regards the possibility of promotion. When there is a vacancy in the position of collector the senior examiners at the boundary offices are given preference by their higher classification, in spite of the fact that they have no experience whatever in the work of a chief port. During the absence of the collector on holidays, sick leave and at other times, the second man at the chief port takes his place, when the position becomes absurd. He is classified lower than the senior examiners, yet is applied to by them for information and instructions. However, the chief reason for dissatisfaction is that he is obliged at all times to do the most responsible work, yet is given the lowest classification.

I find that this is not a matter of classification at all; I have a letter from the Civil Service Commission stating that it is a matter of administration and should be taken up with the department. I thought perhaps the minister could give me some explanation in this connection and, if possible, see that some arrangement is made whereby these experienced men will have an opportunity for promotion.

Mr. EULER: I can assure my hon. friend that these men have an opportunity for promotion. This is the first intimation I have had of any dissatisfaction, and if my hon. friend will send me a memorandum embodying what he has just stated I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. FRASER: I notice there is a substantial amount spent in advertising with one agency in Toronto, amounting to some $27,000. I wonder if the minister would tell us the general policy of his department in regard to this advertising.

Mr. EULER: I think my hon. friend refers to the income tax advertising. We have adopted the policy, when the payments become due, of advertising the fact so that business men may govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. FRASER: Does that take $28,000?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. COWAN: I would direct the attention of the minister to the necessity of creating a customs port at Sioux Lookout in the district of Kenora. Considerable mining machinery comes through this point destined for the districts of Patricia and Red Lake and the nearest customs ports on the west are Winnipeg and Kenora, and on the east, Cochrane. These points are nearly 300 miles away, and considerable delay is occasioned in clearing machinery in from the United States. I suggest to the minister that it might be an opportune time to establish a customs port at this point, it being the most central point in northern Ontario.

Mr. EULER: I shall be very glad to inquire into this matter, but I would suggest to my hon. friend that the tendency is not to establish additional ports inland. I understand that Sioux Lookout is situated pretty well inland, but I should think that the people in that district could have their importations cleared by customs brokers at the boundary ports without undue delay.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with the items on page 67, which amount to over $14,000,000 and which have to do with the administration of the Department of National Revenue. Could the minister give the committee particulars of the item at the bottom of the page, which has to do with the administration of the Business Profits War Tax Act, and the amendments thereto?

I should like to know also the result of the investigations into the Department of Income Tax at Lethbridge. Considerable public curiosity was raised in connection with scandals and swindles regarding income tax returns, and I should like to know whether the minister is in position to give me any information in that regard. In connection with the item of $1,812,512 for the expenses and maintenance of revenue cruisers, and so on, I would direct the minister's attention to certain complaints which have been made regarding the officers of the department carrying firearms and their unfitness to carry out their duties in Halifax and at other points along the seacoast. I should like to know how many officers have been selected without regard to the Civil Service Act, and having regard to the legislation of two years ago, I should like to know the general results obtained in connection with seizures for breach of the customs and excise laws of the country.

Mr. EULER: The Business Profits War Tax Act is practically dead. Regarding the investigation at Lethbridge, a charge was made against the assistant inspector, whose wife was engaged in the floral business, that he was using the time of the department in trying to dispose of the goods sold by his wife.

Mr. BENNETT: I was not interested in that phase of the matter, but rather in the returns which were made by those supposed to pay taxes, and the subsequent investigation by the department.

Mr. EULER: I know of no such investigation. I am informed that the chief inspector went over the returns made at that port and found nothing criminal.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say there was anything criminal.

Mr. EULER: It was necessary that some higher assessments be made, but that is found to be the case in many instances.

Mr. BENNETT: It is just that point upon which I desire information.

Mr. EULER: As to the amount of the increases?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. EULER: They amounted to a few hundred dollars.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that all?

Mr. EULER: That is what the commissioner tells me.

Mr. BENNETT: I hope he is correct as to that.

Mr. EULER: I have no reason to doubt his word.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not doubt his word, but he may be speaking from memory.

Mr. EULER: I did not anticipate that question, and I am giving my hon. friend the best information I have.

Mr. BENNETT: Considerable public discussion has taken place upon this matter, and the suggestion has been put forth that strong efforts have been made to prevent this discussion in further detail. There has been a suggestion that returns have been made through connivance with some of the officials, with a consequent loss of revenue. It must be remembered that outside of my hon. friends to my left, there is only one member in opposition to the government between the head of the lakes and the mountains. I receive more communications than I otherwise would were that not the case, and I have to ask many questions in detail. I would prefer not to have to do this, but this difficulty will be removed by the next election. If the commissioner says that in connection with the Lethbridge situation the assessments had to be raised only a few hundred dollars, that is the end of it, because the matter is not worth wasting time over.

Mr. GEARY: I would like to inquire of the minister regarding the last phrase in the previous item, which reads:

—notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act.

Will the minister give me the number of appointees under this particular item, and, following up that answer, tell me if returned soldiers are given preference?

Mr. EULER: Returned soldiers are given preference. I take it that my hon. friend is referring to the income tax branch when he inquires as to the number of appointees.

Mr. GEARY: Yes, that is right.

Mr. EULER: The hon. member desires the appointments made this year?

Mr. GEARY: I want to know how many employees in that department are outside the provisions of the act.

Mr. EULER: The total number of employees, 1,175, are outside the provisions of the act.

Mr. GEARY: And returned soldiers are given preference in that department?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: In connection with the payment of sales tax, does the minister say that the department will not accept other than marked cheques in payment of that tax?

Mr. EULER: The commissioner informs me that instructions are given to the collectors to accept nothing but marked cheques.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the minister familiar with a prosecution carried on in Kincardine against a very large manufacturer in that town? The charge was that the cheque had not been marked, and it just happened that the relations of this manufacturer with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) were not of a harmonious nature. The prosecution was carried on and action brought for a small sum of money because his cheque was not marked. I want to know from the department whether or not all payments have been by marked cheques.

Mr. EULER: I have some recollection of the matter because I had some correspondence with the gentleman concerned, perhaps rather violent in its nature on his side.

Mr. BENNETT: Why would it not be?

Mr. EULER: That does not make any difference, for this reason, that the gentleman in question refused to carry out the very regulations to which he refers now. The department was not going to treat him differently from anybody else, so suit was brought and the department won the suit.

Mr. BENNETT: It was bound to do so.

Mr. EULER: Why not?

Mr. BENNETT: For this reason: Will the minister say that in no instance in Canada have cheques not marked been accepted by officers in payment of sales tax?

Mr. EULER: I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought not.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend surely knows the minister cannot possibly have knowledge of every payment of sales tax when there are some 17,000 concerns throughout the country. I have no such knowledge. If the commissioner says that this is so in all cases, I shall have to accept what he says.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. EULER: The commissioner informs me that the instructions to the collectors are that they must accept marked cheques and if they do not, the obligation is upon themselves if a cheque is not paid.

Mr. BENNETT: This is what happened in Kincardine; a manufacturer there sent his cheque, which was an unmarked one, in settlement of sales tax in the ordinary course of business. The officer of the department sent it back. Ultimately, having secured a marked cheque, the department brought action for the loss of interest involved from the date that the unmarked cheque was sent, when it might have been paid—and this man's cheques had never been dishonoured—and I am informed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce said to this man, why did he not see his friends, or words to that effect. The man who was sued at least for this interest, is a man in a very large way of manufacturing in the town of Kincardine and his payments are very considerable. His cheques had never been dishonoured, nor were they likely to be. He sent the cheque to the agent and the agent had been dealing with the man on a satisfactory basis before, realizing that the responsibility was his. Suddenly the agent told him no; he sent the cheque back and in the end action was brought to recover interest for a few days upon the sales tax, or a prosecution was instituted, I forget which. I happened to be in Kincardine the day the case came before the county court judge. It was obvious what the result would be. The crown was bound to succeed. The question I put to the minister is this: Is that his conception of the discharge of the business obligation resting upon a department in connection with the administration of the sales tax in Canada?

Mr. EULER: I would merely say to my hon. friend that it is the duty of the department, and the minister conceives it his duty to see to it that when regulations are laid down, as nearly as possible they are carried out. In this particular case we carried out, exactly as I said a moment ago, the rule laid down that cheques should be marked. This cheque was not marked; the collector refused to accept the responsibility, and the natural result followed. I am not desirous of being offensive to anyone, and least of all, perhaps, to the gentleman whose case my hon. friend is now speaking of, but possibly the action the gentleman took and the correspondence which he sent, both to myself and to the department, were not calculated in any way to lead the department to waive the rule and make an exception in his case. Why, indeed, should we make an exception in the case of a man simply because he is a large manufacturer and pays large sums in sales tax? I do not think my hon. friend would ask me to make discrimination in favour of a large manufacturer as against a smaller one.

As regards the other matter, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is in his seat and can speak for himself. I have no knowledge of that at all.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is drawing a red herring across the trail, which is a very simple thing to do. I was not suggesting any discrimination between the large manufacturer and the small. I was suggesting the question of discrimination between manufacturers in different towns. The instructions are payment in cash or with a marked cheque. That is clear; but if a marked cheque is not produced, the agent takes the risk.

Mr. EULER: In this case he would not take the risk.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but he had been doing so. Why, suddenly, was he not willing to take the risk?

Mr. EULER: I do not know whether he was changing his mind.

Mr. BENNETT: No, he was changing his practice, because unmarked cheques had been sent before. That is the position. This was in the town of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and, indeed, this gentleman will be his opponent in the approaching election.

Mr. EULER: So I believe.

Mr. BENNETT: It is what I call an abuse of authority when you have a tax such as this amongst business men, and you know that in many cases throughout the country sales taxes are paid with cheques. These cheques are sent by manufacturers of known probity, integrity and worth throughout the country. The department does not bother them; the agent does the collecting, and that is the end of the matter. The department could not possibly lose any money by the acceptance of this cheque. There was no question about it. It was sent in; it was then rejected, and later the action was brought. The objectionable feature of the matter, as I said, was that my information from the gentleman in question is that the Minister of Trade and Commerce said: "Well, why don't you rely upon your friends?" That is the position. He can answer that.

Mr. MALCOLM: I should like very much to reply to that.

Mr. EULER: I should like to make this comment: it is not fair to say that a sudden change was made with regard to marked cheques.

Mr. BENNETT: In this instance there was.

Mr. EULER: Just before this occurred, I am informed by the commissioner—my memory is not very retentive on the point—that general instructions had been sent to all collectors that marked cheques or cash must be produced. I am bound to say that in this particular case the department would not likely have lost money if the unmarked cheque had been accepted. I have no doubt that the gentleman to whom my hon. friend refers was perfectly responsible and capable of meeting the amount of the cheque. But does my hon. friend ask the department to pick and choose, to accept one man's unmarked cheque and not another's? I am sure, as a business man, he will not say that. As regards the rest of the matter, and the relationship between the manufacturer and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I have no knowledge of that, and as the minister is here he can speak for himself.

Mr. MALCOLM: I would like the leader of the opposition to repeat what he stated a moment ago that my opponent in the forthcoming election said.

Mr. BENNETT: The man was discussing the matter and the Minister of Trade and Commerce said: "Why don't you consult your friend?"

Mr. MALCOLM: Who said that?

Mr. BENNETT: The minister.

Mr. MALCOLM: It was I who was supposed to have said it to him?

Mr. BENNETT: Talking to him.

Mr. MALCOLM: I have not spoken to that gentleman for many years.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought that is what the hon. gentleman would say. Now I have the answer I wanted. He was not on speaking terms with this man, who is carrying on a manufacturing business that is not protected to the extent of 42 per cent.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is not the point.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the point, and the minister said—this information was given to me by reputable citizens in Kincardine—that this man should place himself under obligation to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If he had, this would not have happened.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is absurd.

Mr. BENNETT: It shows the smallness of the way in which these things are being done and the oppression that is put on a man when you have the chance.

Mr. MALCOLM: There was no oppression. I can say truthfully to the house and to the people of my riding that I had no knowledge of any difference existing between the man in question and the department over a marked cheque until I saw the report in the papers, and I never heard it discussed again until my hon. friend mentioned it in the corridor the other night. I know nothing of the case except what was in the papers. The minister never consulted me in the matter or discussed it with me.

I want to say something else to my hon. friend. As a business man, he knows the rules of the department. The sales tax is compiled at the end of the month, and we are all given thirty days in which to make our payments. There is not an industry in the town of Kincardine with which the commissioner of taxation has ever had any difficulty except this particular industry, and I know of no reason why this man should not pay his cheque the same as my firm and every other firm in the town does. I knew nothing of the fact that he was having a difference with the department, and I can assure my hon. friend that the last thing I would do would be to ask anybody to advise Mr. Mitchell to consult me because I know he would not consult me in any case.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. MALCOLM: And I certainly made no suggestion of the kind. I was not particularly interested in his quarrels, of which he has plenty with a lot of people.

Mr. BENNETT: The animus of the minister has certainly been displayed. So far as his statement is concerned, I am bound to accept it. I am just giving the version that was prevalent on the day the court was sitting when I happened to be in Kincardine, and I resolved that I would bring the matter to the attention of this parliament. It is all very well for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to say: Why should one man be treated differently from other manufacturers? Will he say that in every instance his firm has sent a marked cheque for sales tax?

Mr. MALCOLM: I can assure my hon. friend that the practice in our business is to pay the taxes we owe in the way the regulations prescribe. I am not in touch with my accountant, but I will guarantee that any regulation of the Department of National Revenue is carried out in the payment of taxes by every firm with which I am associated.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the question. The question I put was this: Would the minister say that he had never paid the sales tax other than with a marked cheque? Payments in this country have to be made in money, and money means actual specie or legal tender, or a marked cheque. If the officer takes the risk of accepting other than a marked cheque, he is responsible if any loss occurs and must make it good. I can give the minister instances in which marked cheques have not been asked for in connection with the sales tax, and quite properly so. This tax is administered on the theory that it will be administered with as little friction as possible to those who are concerned, and when you are dealing with firms whose credit is beyond all doubt, which have always credit balances, the officials of the department are not going to send down every time to get a cheque marked. That would be a nuisance. The regulation is simply for the purpose of making the officers realize that they must be responsible if they accept payment in other than the form prescribed.

Mr. EULER: Would my hon. friend suggest that the collector should discriminate?

Mr. BENNETT: It is not discrimination.

Mr. EULER: Is my hon. friend suggesting that the officer should use his own judgment as to whether he shall accept a marked cheque or not?

Mr. BENNETT: I say they do.

Mr. EULER: As a matter of fact my hon. friend would not advocate that as a principle.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not putting it as a principle. The discrimination comes the other way.

Mr. EULER: I know of no discrimination. All the collectors receive the same instructions.

Mr. BENNETT: The whole administration of the sales tax is calculated to suit the convenience of business men so far as possible, because, after all, it is becoming almost a nuisance tax.

Mr. EULER: Primarily it is a source of revenue.

Mr. BENNETT: And the idea is to collect that revenue. Will the minister say that he has experienced any loss through the lack of marked cheques?

Mr. EULER: Prior to the order, yes.

Mr. BENNETT: How much? Because the crown has a prior claim over anybody else, so there never can be any loss, even in bankruptcy.

Mr. EULER: We have not any now.

Mr. BENNETT: You could not have anyway. You take priority over everybody else.

Mr. EULER: No, not over mortgages. The law was changed.

Mr. BENNETT: But you do take priority, and with respect to a mortgage that is something altogether different. I am dealing with the assets of an individual, and I say that you take priority over everybody else.

Mr. EULER: Even the bank has priority over us.

Mr. BENNETT: The bank has priority only in limited cases, not with respect to this tax.

Mr. EULER: In all cases, under section 88.

Mr. BENNETT: No. That was a special provision provided for manufacturers where the goods are, to use the language of the street, hypothecated. That is another thing altogether. I am familiar with the Bank Act, whatever else I may not be familiar with, and I know that section pretty well at any rate. I merely give this as an illustration of what may sometimes happen.

Mr. POULIOT: In the province of Quebec a new debt is created when a cheque or a note is issued when not marked without novation; and so the privileged creditor might lose his privileged claim if he accepted an unmarked cheque under such conditions.

Mr. BENNETT: That does not arise in this case. This is not a question of novation.

There is another matter, the question of special appraisers. I have many communications here; I make a habit during the year to keep special files relating to the different departments so that when the estimates come up I shall be prepared. As I said to the Minister of the Interior, I passed up a lot of the material I had before me because I happened to be in a difficult position with respect to the west.

The question of appraisers is one of very great difficulty. I should like to know what appointments have been made during the last year of special customs appraisers in the three western provinces, and in reference to which branches of trade, hardware, dry goods and so forth.

Mr. EULER: Does my hon. friend want the number?

Mr. BENNETT: That will do, the number in each province, without the names.

Mr. EULER: We have not that information.

Mr. BENNETT: All right.

Mr. EULER: We make appointments wherever vacancies occur.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister will recall that a few years ago when the customs investigation was in progress it was brought out that goods were not properly appraised, and a special effort was to be made to have a proper valuation placed on importations at border points. To do that, we appointed special appraisers. The minister asked and obtained from parliament authority to do so without regard to the Civil Service Act, and I was endeavouring to ascertain how many had been appointed in each branch of merchandise, hardware, dry goods, and so forth, in the western provinces. If the minister has not the information, all right.

Mr. EULER: I regret that it is not here.

Mr. BENNETT: The other question was in regard to the preventive service. I do not mean the old-time preventive service, but the preventive service set up under the act—ships, automobiles, and so on. I have already indicated to the minister a complaint made in connection with Halifax, and I think others have done so with respect to Nova Scotia generally as well as other parts of the country.

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend will be a little more definite I may be able to satisfy him.

Mr. BENNETT: What appointments have been made during the year, what vessels have been purchased or leased, and what was the character of the service carried on on the seaboard? I was trying to get the two, inland and seaboard, under the special legislation which we passed two years ago to meet the wishes of the minister.

Mr. EULER: The salaries of the land force amounted to $627,595; patrol boats and provision for new boats, $922,317; patrol cars in operation, 120, valued at $139,600; travelling expenses, investigating and patrol officers, $123,000. Those items total $1,812,512. In British Columbia there are sixteen officers. In the western district, comprising Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba—I am afraid my hon. friend is not getting this information.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend knows it is not the information I want. I have those figures before me.

Mr. EULER: I do not know what the hon. gentleman wants. If he will wait a moment the chief of the preventive service will be here.

Mr. BENNETT: I will not bother the minister now; he will not finish to-night anyway.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Is special consideration given to returned soldiers for appointment as preventive officers?

Mr. EULER: We observe the same principle, as far as possible, that we do in the income tax department.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I should like to know why in my county all the preventive officers have been selected for the reason that they are dyed-in-the-wool supporters of this government. There is not a single preventive officer in my county who is a returned soldier, although there are many returned soldiers in the locality who would be eligible for the positions. Is a former rum seller eligible for a position in the preventive service?

Mr. EULER: Not if we know it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The first man arrested for operating an illicit still in my county proved to the satisfaction of the court that he had purchased the still from the preventive officer who arrested him. The preventive service in Nova Scotia is nothing but a cheap political machine.

Mr. BENNETT: And in other parts of the country as well.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The thing is an absolute farce.

Mr. EULER: I merely say in reply, Mr. Chairman, that no appointment is made without the recommendation of the chief of the preventive service.

Mr. BENNETT: Where does he get his recommendations?

Mr. EULER: The chief of the preventive service is instructed never to recommend anybody who he is satisfied is not competent.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Take my own constituency of Inverness; upon whose recommendations did the minister make the appointments? No single appointment was made at the request of the chief of the preventive service; it was made at the request and upon the recommendation of the defeated Liberal candidate.

Mr. EULER: I merely have to repeat that there has not been one appointment made except upon the recommendation of the chief of the preventive service.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Every appointment in my constituency has been made upon the recommendation of the defeated Liberal candidate.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps I am wrong—

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The minister is wrong.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend does not even know what I am going to say. Probably I am wrong anyway, he thinks. I was going to say that I doubt very much whether he himself made any recommendations to me with regard to any officer whom he desired appointed.

Mr. BENNETT: Why not?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Because it would be of no use. The preventive service in Nova Scotia is a political machine. Every single appointment made in my county was made upon the recommendation of the defeated Liberal candidate, and I challenge the minister to contradict that statement.

Mr. EULER: I have already answered it.

Mr. FRASER: I notice a vote to provide for the expense of maintenance of revenue cruisers, and so on, amounting to $1,812,000. It was $2,007,000 last year. How much of that vote has been spent?

Mr. EULER: The total expenditure last year on the preventive service was $1,658,-864.51. There was some liability on account of boats building which was carried over into the next year.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: How many months in the year are those preventive officers supposed to work?

Mr. EULER: Nearly all full time—twelve months in the year. The boat crews are not on full time.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Are they paid by the month or by the year?

Mr. EULER: The land officers are all on a yearly basis. The crews on the boats are on a monthly basis.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I know one man in my county who has been home on his farm six months, and never did any work at all in that period as a preventive officer. If the minister's answer is correct, that man was paid for doing nothing. This shows what a fine political machine the preventive service is.

Mr. EULER: We have some part time officers.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: This is not a part time officer.

Mr. EULER: I will make inquiries, and if any officer in his constituency spent six months on his farm when he was supposed to be working for the department, I can assure my hon. friend he will be fired.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I thank the minister, for he will lose a very good Grit worker.

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend will give me a little more definite information I shall be very glad to have it.

Mr. BENNETT: Could the minister furnish a list of the appointments of officers, together with their addresses, made to these special services during the past year in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island? I think that could be done without much difficulty.

Mr. EULER: Of the land force only?

Mr. BENNETT: No, of this class of officer that we made special provision for.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The patronage crew.

Mr. EULER: The return was tabled, as the law calls for.

Mr. BENNETT: I want the return supplementing that, bringing it down to date.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend wants a return showing the appointments made from April 1, 1929, to April 1, 1930, for the maritime provinces?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. EULER: Names and addresses?

Mr. BENNETT: That is all. I have a number of letters before me.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure that it will be possible to have the information when the house opens to-morrow.

Mr. BENNETT: Are they as numerous as that?

Mr. EULER: We would have to search several records to get the information.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, now—

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend is smiling, and I also have to smile. I must say that I do not know how long it will take to get the information he wishes, but I am perfectly willing to give him all the information he wishes to have. I cannot say whether it will take five minutes or an hour.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the hon. minister knows that no one expects him to do that. There have been a number of appointments made, however, in relation to which the hon. member for Inverness has spoken. I have a number of letters before me which might or might not be wholly accurate.

Mr. EULER: Often they are not.

Mr. BENNETT: That is true; we cannot always understand what people write when prejudiced; sometimes the statements they make are not wholly accurate. On the other hand it should not be very difficult to prepare a list of those who have been appointed from April 1st, 1929, to April 1st, 1930, in the three maritime provinces, giving their names and addresses. Unless the signs fail, I am sure the information would be very interesting.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): On what recommendations does the minister accept captains on patrol boats?

Mr. EULER: The same recommendations upon which land preventive officers are accepted; we accept the recommendations of the chief of the preventive service.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): From whom are the recommendations generally received? From whom does the chief preventive officer get the recommendations?

Mr. EULER: The chief preventive officer makes inquiry through the Marine department and through the examiner of masters and mates of the naval service. We have a record of their past services and satisfy ourselves as to their qualifications and as to where they have been employed.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Has the department in every case a record of past services? And by the way, I may tell the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) that I may go over and see him for a minute or two.

Mr. McPHEE: I invite my hon. friend to come over.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): You are one of the type who would not stay, if I did go over.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Am I to understand that the past histories of these men are known to the department? Does the minister mean to give me that information? I ask that question for a very definite reason.

Mr. EULER: So far as we know all the captains of the vessels are thoroughly reliable men; if we find they are not, they are dismissed. I may say that we have had to dismiss some of the men in the preventive service; it is very difficult to get reliable men, and we have had to let a good many of them out; probably we will have to do so in the future.

Mr. MANION: Reliable from a navigation or a political standpoint?

Mr. EULER: I know my hon. friend does not want an answer to that question.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The minister said he would dismiss certain men for doing certain things. I may tell him that I want to have one of the preventive officers dismissed before the election. I ask the minister if he will dismiss from the preventive service a man in connection with whom it can be proved that he has been engaged in the liquor traffic for years.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: He is a preventive officer, and for years he has sold liquor in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend can produce the proof, yes.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I can, and gladly.

Mr. MANION: Does the minister know of any officer of that sort in the maritime preventive service who is a Conservative?

Mr. EULER: There might be, but I am not sure.

Mr. BENNETT: But so far as the minister knows, there are none.

Mr. EULER: I do not know that there are any, to be quite frank about it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Since the minister has made the statement that the record is known in connection with each of these men engaged in the maritime preventive service, would he be willing to give this house their histories, and would he tell the house how many of them during the last four years have been engaged in the rum running business?

Mr. EULER: Is my hon. friend asking that question seriously?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Yes, I am.

Mr. EULER: I am perfectly willing to be fair in the matter, and perhaps I can be more or less humorous in connection with it; but surely my hon. friend does not ask me to say that I know how many men in that service are engaged in the rum running business.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): According to the minister these men were appointed on their records, and he has told us that their records are known to the department, and because of their records they have received appointments. In view of that statement I want to know exactly how many of these men were known to the government when they were appointed.

Mr. EULER: Not one.

Mr. BENNETT: You have not their records, then?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I know of one man who was on board a rum runner, and he was placed in the preventive service, and refused to sign a document stating that he had not been aboard a rum runner.

Mr. POULIOT: I must take this opportunity to recommend that the Minister of National Revenue should appoint the two Siamese twins on the other side of the house to act as preventive officers.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: In reply to the suggestion made by my hon. friend, I think it would be a good idea to have him appointed to the preventive service. With his outstanding qualifications, with the absolute intellectual abyss which does duty as his head, he would be quite in line with the calibre of the men the minister is appointing to do this work in the province of Nova Scotia.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I corresponded with the chief preventive officer asking for an interview. I did not meet him, but the secretary to the Minister of National Revenue came to me and asked me if I had any information to give. I certainly was not going to give my information to any man in a subordinate position. I had information regarding certain men who had been in the preventive service, and I had information which I had obtained from sea captains.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BENNETT: No. You will not make any progress that way.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 1 a.m. (Thursday).

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GORVERNMENT VESSELS

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton):

1. Is the ship Connestoga now owned by the government?
2. If so, from whom was she purchased?
3. What price was paid for the ship, and what amount has been expended on her for repairs, alterations, etc?
4. What is her speed, and is such speed as represented when ship purchased?
5. What is the present condition of the ship and how many days has she been in actual service since purchase?
6. What was the date of purchase?
7. Is the ship Vigilant owned or hired by the government?
8. If purchased, what was purchase price?
9. How much has the ship cost the department so far, for hires, repairs, etc?
10. How many days was the ship on patrol service outside harbours during year?
11. What is the demonstrated speed of the boat, and is it equal to speed represented?
12. What is the coal consumption of this ship on maximum speed for 24 hours?
13. Who recommended this boat and has she proven equal to service required?
14. Does the government own the boat Fleur-De-Lis?
15. What has been her cost in purchase price, repairs, etc?
16. Has she proven suitable for coastal service under all weather conditions?
17. Does the government own the boat Bayhound?
18. If so, from whom was she purchased, price paid, and amount spent on repairs, etc?
19. Does the government own the boat Preventor?
20. If so, what purchase price was paid, and what amount has been spent on repairs, etc?
21. Has the boat proved suitable for coastal service, or has she suffered damage while so engaged?
22. Were any of the crew injured in such service, and what were their names?
23. Have original plans of this boat been changed, and does she differ from the above named Fleur-De-Lis?
24. Is it a fact that this boat was unable to make the passage from Louisburg to Sydney, on a day when the motor boat Stumble In made such passage?
25. What is gross amount expended on this ship to date, and how many days has she been in service at sea?

Mr. EULER:

1. Yes.

2. James Playfair.

[Mr. Bennett.]

3. (a) $70,000. Ship thoroughly overhauled, reconditioned and fitted out for patrol duty at owners' expense under agreement of purchase.

(b) Cost of overhaul and repairs since date of purchase $8,915.

4. (a) Fifteen to sixteen knots. (b) Yes.

5. (a) First class; (b) 1928: 150 days, exclusive of boiler cleaning; 1929: 190 days, exclusive of boiler cleaning.

6. December 9, 1927. Delivery taken May 13, 1928.

7. No.

8. Answered by No. 7.

9. Vigilant under charter to the Department of National Revenue during the years 1927, 1928 and 1929. Charter expired December 15, 1929. Total cost to the department for the period under charter, covering rental and repairs, etc., $70,321.53. Vessel returned to owners October 27, 1929.

10. 1927; 128 days. 1928; 198 days 1929; 230 days.

Note: First on patrol July 26th, 1927.

11. (a) Thirteen and one-half knots.

(b) No.

12. Twenty to twenty-five tons for twenty-four hours at maximum speed. Average coal consumption per day in actual service, eleven to twelve tons.

13. (a) Chief of the Customs-Excise preventive service, after the vessels had been thoroughly examined by technical officers of the Naval Service, Department of National Defence.

(b) Yes.

14. Yes.

15. (a) Contract price, including extras, $306,200.

(b) Repairs, etc., $350.

16. Yes.

17. Yes.

18. (a) Sir Charles Gordon.

(b) $25,000.

(c) Cost of changing power plant from steam to Diesel and fitting boat out for patrol duty, $33,400.

19. Yes.

20. (a) Contract price, including extras, $295,490.

(b) $810.

21. (a) Yes.

(b) Suffered slight damage to pilot-house and upper works during month of January, 1930, through being hit by a tidal wave.

22. No.
23. (a) No.
(b) No.
Note: Some of top weight removed from both vessels with a view to improving stability, having in mind ice conditions off the Nova Scotia coast in the winter season.
24. No.
25. (a) $300,607.
(b) 109 days to date.
Note: This ship only taken over from builders on January 4, 1930.

TATAMAGOUCHE, N.S. CUSTOMS OFFICE

Mr. MacNUTT:

1. Is there any customs officer at Tatamagouche, in the county of Colchester?
2. Is there any such customs office or customs sub-office at Tatamagouche, in the county of Colchester? If not, when was the same abolished?
3. What was the revenue at this office for its last year?
4. What was the annual salary of the officer in charge?
5. What is the nearest customs office from which vessels may make entry to or receive clearance from Tatamagouche harbour?
6. Is it true that baggage and luggage arriving at Tatamagouche from places outside of Canada must first be examined at either Amherst or Pictou?
7. Is there any customs officer nearer to Tatamagouche than Amherst or Pictou who can examine baggage or luggage landed at Tatamagouche?

Mr. EULER:

1. Yes.
2. Tatamagouche was closed as an outport of customs on the 1st March, 1929, and the postmistress was employed from that date to make collections on dutiable postal parcels.
3. $782.33 import duty, and $420.25 excise taxes, collected from 1st April, 1928, to the 1st March, 1929.
4. $200.
5. The nearest customs office to Tatamagouche harbour at which foreign vessels may enter and clear is Malagash. During the fiscal years 1926-27, 1927-28 and 1928-29 no foreign vessels reported in or out at Tatamagouche.
6. In addition to Amherst, Pictou and Truro, baggage for Tatamagouche arriving by rail may be examined at the boundary, and if arriving by vessel may be examined at the seaport of entry.
7. No.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD—THOMAS MCILWRAITH

Mr. McGIBBON:

1. Does Mr. Thomas McIlwraith hold a farm from the Soldier Settlement Board in Manitoba?
2. If so, how much is his indebtedness as to this farm?
3. Is he up to date in his payments to the Soldier Settlement Board?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. Not now. Agreement was rescinded 29th of January, 1929.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Answered by No. 1.

PROPOSED CAUGHNAWAGA BRIDGE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee forthwith to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure respecting the construction and maintenance of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river at Caughnawaga, and to empower the governor in council to authorize the Minister of Finance to enter into a contract with the corporation created to construct and maintain the said bridge.

He said: May I be permitted to give a word of explanation with regard to this notice of motion which appears on the order paper of to-day in the name of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott). The reason the resolution appears at the moment is due to an oversight which I shall explain. It is not in consequence of any last minute efforts to put through a piece of legislation. In 1928 the late Hon. Mr. Robb, then Minister of Finance, sent a communication to the Minister of Lands and Forests of Quebec, in reply to one from the Quebec government, in which on behalf of the government of Canada he undertook to cooperate in the construction of this bridge. I will read the letter because it will place the whole facts on record. It is as follows:

Ottawa, June 27, 1928.

My Dear Mercier:—

In reference to representations made by you concerning a proposed bridge over the St. Lawrence river between the Caughnawaga Indian Reserve and some point on the Island of Montreal, I am writing to inform you that provided the government of the province of Quebec is prepared to be responsible for the financing, either by guarantee as to principal and interest or by cash advances, of two-thirds of the amount of debentures issued for the construction of such bridge, the Dominion government, in view of the fact that the bridge will connect with the south shore of the St. Lawrence river on the Caughnawaga Indian reserve, is prepared to introduce at the next session of parliament a measure to authorize the guaranteeing of the payments of principal and interest of one-third of the amount of the debentures authorized to be issued by an act of the Quebec legislature entitled "An Act respecting the Construction and Maintenance of a Bridge over the River St. Lawrence at Caughnawaga," the total amount of such debentures not to exceed one million seven hundred thousand dollars.

Yours faithfully,

Jas. A. Robb.

Owing to the fact that there was some delay in the introduction of the bill at Quebec or need for its amendment, the matter was not proceeded with by the present administration; but at the beginning of this year I received from the Hon. Mr. Mercier, Minister of Lands and Forests, a communication enclosing a copy of the letter from Mr. Robb and reminding me of the undertaking given by the Dominion government promised in Mr. Robb's letter, and stating that the Quebec government was introducing the necessary legislation this session. I have since received a further communication that the legislation has been introduced and passed by the Quebec legislature. When the last communication was received, I was under the impression that our obligation in the matter could be met by an item in the supplementary estimates and I had my secretary so advise the Department of Finance. After the estimates were prepared, or rather during the consideration of them, it was discovered that a bill rather than a sum in the estimates would be necessary. What the government now asks of the house is permission to introduce legislation necessary to implement the undertaking given to the Quebec government.

His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I might well have desired that this resolution had been introduced earlier in the session. I can quite understand the difficulties to which the right hon. the Prime Minister has referred. It is always very unfortunate that legislation of this character should be introduced in the closing days of the session when an election is not far distant, as I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) will agree. It seems to be quite clear that a promise was given in 1928 for work apparently that was to be begun the next year. The legislation does not seem to have been passed until 1930 by the province of Quebec, and presumably the obligation still continues. I suppose the theory is that when a promise is given by the crown it must be implemented, whoever may have given it and whoever may have to carry it out. So I am not going to interpose any obstacles to the introduction of the bill, but when the bill is before us I may have something further to say once its terms are known.

Mr. MANION: In what constituency is this bridge?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Caughnawaga is in Laprairie-Napierville and Lachine is in Cartier.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Is the government going to follow this same practice with regard to the rest of Canada, especially the building of bridges in the province of Ontario? This resolution is outside the powers of this parliament because this is not an international bridge, nor an interprovincial bridge, nor does it affect navigation. Those are the only three grounds upon which this parliament can vote money for bridges. This is a purely municipal undertaking or a bridge between municipalities all in the same provnces—Lachine and Caughnawaga. The city of Toronto has had a contract with this government for seventeen years since 1913 for the building of a bridge across to the island at Toronto, and the government have backed out of the agreement although this order in council is enforceable in the exchequer court. There should be equality of treatment for all the provinces, and if the government is going to do this for the province of Quebec it should do the same thing for the province of Ontario, the maritime provinces and every other province. The British North America Act, as a matter of fact, does not allow aid to be granted for bridges that are purely municipal undertakings.

Mr. IRVINE: I wish the minister would explain briefly what justification there is for this parliament having anything to do with the building of this bridge.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Briefly, the reason why the federal government is interested in the construction of this bridge is that the southern end of the structure is on the Caughnawaga Indian reserve. We have spent considerable money on this reserve for the construction of a highway leading to the counties south of the St. Lawrence river and to the United States. We are forced to do this work on all the reserves where public highways pass through them, for the convenience of the public as well as for the convenience of the Indians. This matter first came to my attention in 1926 on representations made by the Hon. Mr. Robb. It was suggested that as the Department of Indian Affairs was interested, a sum of money should be devoted towards the construction of this bridge. Negotiations went on with the Quebec government for some time, but no definite arrangement was made, although we did admit some responsibility. Later on, the Quebec government decided to give the construction of this bridge to a company and to charge tolls. They are now asking that there be a joint guarantee of the interest on the bonds which the company will sell for the purpose of getting funds to construct the bridge, and our share of the guarantee was deemed to be for one-third of the interest on the bonds.

Mr. IRVINE: Will this be a toll bridge?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: What company is constructing the bridge?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot say.

Mr. IRVINE: It will be a private corporation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will have to get that information from someone else. I am simply explaining how we are interested.

Mr. BENNETT: When the bill is before us we shall be able to discuss the matter intelligently, and I would suggest that the minister defer his explanation until we have the terms of the bill before us and know exactly what we are talking about.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Elliott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 346, respecting the construction and maintenance of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river at Caughnawaga.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. ELLIOTT moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: Having the bill before us, we can now make some intelligent criticism. The statute incorporating the bridge company appears to have been passed in 1928 and the promise given by the late minister was to be implemented in 1929. There is no reason why the matter should not have been proceeded with. Apparently this is a private corporation, and if it is, I find it very difficult to bring my mind to the view that we should support it. I think that the minister should now give us a very full explanation, and if possible a copy of the statute incorporating the company, for before we give the aid of this parliament to an enterprise of this character we should know what we are giving it to. The observations made by my friend from Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) have a singular bearing on the matter if it is a private corporation organized for gain charging tolls on traffic and we are asked to give a guarantee or supply a part of the cost. I am sure the Prime Minister has not had an opportunity to look into the terms of the act of incorporation of the bridge company, but that is an all important matter at the moment so far as this parliament is concerned.

Mr. CARDIN: The corporation, organized under Quebec legislation, is a public corporation. It is not a private enterprise at all.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain what he means by a "public corporation"?

Mr. CARDIN: My colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) has a copy of the bill before him.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this legislation did not arise in 1928 or 1929, due to the fact that the bill incorporating the company—and I shall be very glad to hand to my hon. friend a copy—was passed in 1928 by the Quebec legislature. It did not provide for anything beyond vesting power in the company to construct the bridge and to charge tolls and for their regulation. The first part of the act sets out that it was in the interests of the cities, towns and villages situated in the district on the south shore of the St. Lawrence and of the cities, towns and villages situated on the island of Montreal and of the whole province to construct a bridge connecting the north and south shores of the St. Lawrence opposite the Caughnawaga reservation on lake St. Louis, and that to ensure the construction of such bridge it was necessary to create a corporation with the powers requisite for its purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: Why was that necessary?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is a bridge over the St. Lawrence—

Mr. BENNETT: Oh yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —and it was necessary—

Mr. BENNETT: The privy council has held that the bed of the river belongs to the province.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the practice, I believe, followed in the province of Quebec with regard to all bridges of this kind. That act contained no provision for the assistance which the province of Quebec was giving for the construction of the bridge. An act was passed this year—and I have a copy of it also—providing for the province of Quebec to assist in the construction of the bridge by giving a guarantee of this kind; that is, it is a toll bridge, and it is expected that at a very early period in the life of the bridge it will pay its own way; but in case of a deficit an assurance has been given by the province of Quebec to pay two thirds of the costs of operation and maintenance, interest on any sums borrowed for the purpose of construction and the sinking fund, less the tolls. It is possible that neither the province nor the Dominion may be called upon to pay anything; but in the early stages, the first few years at any rate, it is likely the amount of the tolls may not be sufficient to pay interest on the cost of construction, and expenses of operation and maintenance.

Mr. MANION: Who is putting up the money in the first place for construction?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The company.

Mr. MANION: Who are the incorporators?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The incorporators are set out in the act.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no private interest in it.

Mr. CANNON: They are appointed by the lieutenant-governor in council.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The act provides that:

> The lieutenant-governor in council may authorize the issue of letters patent, under the great seal of the province, for the purpose of forming a corporation under the name of "The Corporation of Lake St. Louis Bridge" or under whatever name he may deem—

Mr. HANSON: Who is to own the issue of the capital stock?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think this will give my hon. friend the information he desires. Let me quote the act further:

> Such corporation shall be composed of five members, appointed in accordance with section 2, for the objects hereinafter mentioned. The members of the corporation shall be appointed by order of the lieutenant-governor in Council. The corporation shall elect a president from among its members. The affairs of the corporation shall be administered by its members, three of whom shall form a quorum. Any member of the corporation may be dismissed for cause by an order of the lieutenant-governor in council.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Provision is made for filling vacancies. The act also provides:

> The corporation shall appoint its officers and employees, and fix their remuneration, subject to the approval of the lieutenant-governor in council.
> As to the rest, the corporation shall be governed by the provisions of the civil code respecting corporations, and it may:
> (a) Have a common seal and alter it at will;
> (b) Appear before the courts;
> (c) Administer its property,—

And so on. The last paragraph provides that the corporation:

> may adopt all by-laws, ordinances and rules necessary for its organization, government and management.

Mr. MANION: How do they raise the funds to build the bridge?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Section 9 (e) provides that the corporation may:

> Issue bonds or other securities of the corporation and sell, exchange, pledge or give the same in guarantee.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Who will own the bridge after the bonds are paid?

Mr. SPEAKER: In order to facilitate answers to the questions being asked by hon. members perhaps it would be better to go into committee stage.

Mr. BENNETT: Giving of its second reading to the bill involves approval of its principle. If, Mr. Speaker, our friends are content that the bill should go into committee with a distinct reservation of our objection to the principle of it, we are willing to expedite the business of the house. As I am at present advised, I fear this is a measure the principle of which I cannot approve.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready to adopt the motion?

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I think, Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we have got into the habit of adopting resolutions without knowing what they contain. I have always understood that resolutions were intended to acquaint the house with the purpose of the bill which would follow. Certainly by adopting the resolution we signify a measure of approval of the subject matter of the bill to be introduced.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am in the hands of the house. If the house thinks at this stage several questions may be put by hon. members, I am ready to forget the rules.

Mr. COOTE: I just want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that I think the house should not be put in the position of having to approve the principle of a bill like this, so that we could get the bill into committee and secure information from the minister in charge of it.

Mr. BENNETT: I suspect that I must have some responsibility for having suggested that if the bill were read we would find in print the terms of the proposed measure instead of taking up the time of the house listening to a verbal explanation and reading the bill afterwards. I assure the member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) that it was only with that object in view that I made the suggestion.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, the principle of the bill is decided on the second reading. If the house adopts its principle the bill is beyond our power. The private bills committee of this house has been considering the principle of the construction of bridges by private corporations at Sarnia, Windsor, Cornwall and in the Niagara district. The province of Quebec are to appoint the five members of the board to build and operate the bridge. The Dominion and municipalities by the Quebec Act of 1928 appoint no one. It is taxation without representation. The day has passed when the provinces of Quebec and Ontario should maintain toll bridges. There are few such bridges left now across in the United States, and it is most unfortunate that tourists and persons entering the province of Quebec should have to pay a toll on a municipal bridge. I wonder what the tourists would think of such a system; they would wonder what kind of a country we live in when we go to the extent of exacting tolls which should never be charged for a bridge on a highway which is purely municipal. The province of Ontario has a Department of Highways in which during the last year they spent $11,000,000 or $12,000,000 on construction, and I can say at this time that that province is entirely opposed to the whole system of tolls. These bridge concession bills granted to private parties in the past three sessions have resulted and will result in making millionaires out of the recipients of such legislation.

In my view the subject under discussion represents a clearly municipal undertaking; it merely connects one municipality with another. It is not interprovincial in the legal sense. Neither is it international, running from the north shore of the St. Lawrence to United States territory, nor does it affect navigation. Those are the only grounds upon which this house can vote money for the building of bridges.

In my opinion this is a political bridge with the object of pleasing the people in Laprairie-Napierville and Beauharnois where there have been some difficulties over the vegetable duties in the tariff. To attempt to pass this bill in the dying hours of the session is not fair either to this house or to the country. The provinces of Ontario, British Columbia, the maritime and the western provinces will be obligated to pay for this municipal bridge. This government should not give such a franchise to private corporations and thereby make millionaires. The government has come along and has stated that it would in effect build a political bridge on the five cent principle. This is what I would call a five cent bridge bill, because the five cent principle will certainly apply to the building of this bridge. The building of this bridge is a purely political proposition lodged on the eve of an election.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps I would assist in the discussion if I were to say that in the first place there are no profits to be made by any individuals in connection with this bridge.

Mr. HANSON: The legislation you have read does not so state.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh, yes.

Mr. HANSON: My question was not answered as to who owned the shares in the corporation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are no shares; this is under the authority of a commission appointed by the province of Quebec. The bridge is to be constructed, guarantees are to be made by the province, and the Dominion is to contribute towards deficits. The Dominion is to pay one-third and the province two-thirds of any deficits which might accrue each year.

Mr. MANION: What becomes of the profits, if there are any?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are used to reduce the load, to pay off the sinking fund, and for maintenance. The tolls are used for the purpose of defraying the costs of maintenance and operation, and the interest on any loan which may be advanced for the purpose of construction and sinking fund.

Mr. MANION: Supposing there is a profit after paying off the original loan, what will become of it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The tolls would be reduced. The province of Quebec retains control over the tolls which are to be charged, and the policy is to reduce those tolls accordingly. The idea is to make it a self-sustaining proposition so far as possible.

Mr. IRVINE: Will the bridge ultimately be free?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the corporation in this case the province of Quebec?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Appointees of the province of Quebec.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it publicly owned?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think I must call the house to order; the discussion is irregular. We are discussing the principle of the bridge construction, and only one speech may properly be delivered by each member. There may be no cross-questioning, because we have not reached the committee stage.

Mr. HEAPS: Is the federal government represented on this board?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, there is no provision in the act to that effect.

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (Calgary East): It is very important at this stage to consider the principle of the bill. In this instance we have the province of Quebec entering into an agreement with another corporation to build a bridge.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it is really forming a corporation.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But it is entirely the business of the province of Quebec. We as the Dominion parliament have no right to enter into an agreement which affects the province of Quebec and this other corporation. As the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) has told us, because the enterprise touches an Indian reserve we have certain obligations. It may be proper for us to determine what our obligation is in that connection to the province of Quebec. By this bill we are obligating the Dominion parliament to pay $1,700,000 spread over a forty-year period, or about $42,500 each year.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has emphasized the fact that tolls will be available to pay the expenses of this bridge, and to pay the deficit and something by way of principal. In that connection may I point out to the minister that this matter is in the unfortunate position that the lieutenant-governor in council of the province of Quebec is allowed to set the toll, not the Dominion Railway Board, not the Quebec Commission. The Dominion parliament has no jurisdiction in the matter. I think the government would do well if it were to discount the forty annual payments of $42,500 each and have the obligation paid off. The day of toll bridges is past, and the public would not allow the province of Quebec to maintain a toll on this bridge. The bridge would no sooner be built and the toll charged, than the government of the province of Quebec, having sole jurisdiction in the matter, would allow the tolls to be discontinued.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor-General): There are several bridges which have been constructed and in connection with which tolls are now being charged; we might take for example the bridges at Vaudreuil and Ste. Anne.

Mr. GEARY: I am not familiar with those bridges.

Mr. CANNON: And what about the Quebec bridge?

Mr. GEARY: I am surprised to hear that.

Mr. CANNON: Well, it is a fact.

Mr. GEARY: I am sure that this bridge which is on a highway leading to the United States would not be allowed to remain as a toll bridge. I think we should reconcile ourselves to that making the future payments in cash, and be through with it. Here is a direct contribution to a more or less local undertaking. On what principle? I do not like to urge other local situations on the minister, but he knows that he has not implemented promises or engagements made on behalf of the government long ago, and I know that is not so through any contrariness on his part. There has been promised a very important bridge to connect the island with the mainland at Toronto. This undertaking was accepted by the government of Canada many years ago, but year after year the government has felt itself obliged to refuse to make an appropriation and I think we have a right to feel somewhat disturbed over the fact that other bridges are going to be constructed which have not been planned for so long. I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that if anything is to be done in this matter—and I do not think this is the proper time to do it—we should have more information and should be able to discuss it at greater length than we are able to do to-day. There should be some definite arrangement as to these things. My hon. friend the Solicitor General named certain other bridges and told us that they are toll bridges. I know that toll roads are a thing of the past and feel that toll bridges also should be a thing of the past, except perhaps those bridges which are international or interprovincial.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The tolls are fixed by section 17 of the Quebec act, and they are similar to the tolls paid on other bridges of a similar nature in that province. If my hon. friend has ever motored from here to Montreal he will remember that there are at least two toll bridges, one at Ste. Anne and one at Vaudreuil, between here and Montreal.

Mr. GEARY: May I ask the minister one question: Does he approve of toll bridges on highways?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In answer to my hon. friend, if it is a matter of getting a bridge or not getting a bridge, it is better to have a bridge on which you pay a toll than not to have a bridge at all. I am told that the distance which will be saved by the people in I think four or five counties, comprising a large and important and thickly settled district, will amount to thirty-five miles on a trip to Montreal. This bridge has been under consideration since 1910. Some years ago there was a movement on foot, in which the Canadian Pacific Railway interested itself very greatly, to have the bridge joined with the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge, but that plan never was carried through to completion. This way is looked upon by all the parties interested as the best solution that can be arrived at.

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): During the course of this discussion there has been only one excuse advanced for a grant of this kind to a purely provincial undertaking and that excuse was advanced by the Minister of the Interior who said that the grant was required or made necessary because one end of this bridge is in an Indian reserve. This is an entirely new policy for this government to adopt. I have had occasion to endeavour to secure a grant for a cantilever section of a railway bridge connecting an Indian reserve in my riding with the mainland, which would cost only a few thousand dollars, but no grant has been made and no assistance given in spite of the fact that on that Indian reserve there is a town of some size under lease by the Canadian National Railways. At any rate, no measure of relief has been given to these other undertakings. It has been said that similar action was taken regarding highways. I think I am correct in stating that in every case in Ontario the provincial government built the highways through the Indian reserve and only received permission to construct that highway, without getting any other assistance at all from the Dominion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is my information, and I have never known of a case where that has been granted. At any rate I can see no reason why we should pass this bill for an undertaking which to my mind is entirely provincial and which should be regarded in that light.

Mr. M. J. MALONEY (South Renfrew): According to the information given the house by the Minister of the Interior this matter has been under negotiation between this government and the province of Quebec for some time, but I believe this is the first hon. members of the House of Commons have heard of it. Now, in the dying hours of this parliament, and in the dying hours of this government, it seems strange indeed that such a measure should be brought in. It smells badly, and personally I feel that we should hold it up.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was advised last evening by the right hon. Prime Minister that he thought the government was obligated to bring this measure before the house. At that time I do not think he had the particulars of the bill in mind any more than I had. The position, as has been indicated, is that this is a measure dealing solely with a local matter.

I wonder if the house realizes that this involves consideration of a method adopted as a matter of policy by the government of the province of Quebec in connection with the building of bridges; they provide that those who use the bridges pay for them. As a matter of provincial policy the province of Quebec has a right to do that, and the method it pursues is to create a commission, which is authorized to charge tolls which pay for the bridge, thereby relieving the general taxpayer of any charge for the general construction of bridges in the province of Quebec. That is a matter of provincial policy, and Quebec has adopted and utilized that policy in connection with the construction of bridges in that province. If the government of Quebec desires to continue that policy it is the business of that government; it concerns no one but the people of the province of Quebec, they having found that method advantageous for their own purposes, and they should be permitted to pursue it in any way they please.

Now, however, we have a bridge which is to cost $1,700,000 at least, because the authorized debentures amount to that sum, and it is proposed to charge tolls to those who use the bridge in order that these debentures may be liquidated both as to principal and interest, the principal being cared for by sinking fund provisions made from time to time. Coming from Montreal to Ottawa with a four passenger car it costs about $2.25 in tolls. That is the result of this policy. I am not quarrelling with that policy, which is purely a matter for the provincial administration, but I protest against this parliament giving one dollar of money directly or indirectly for any toll highway or bridge in Canada unless it be an interprovincial or international undertaking, where the situation of course would be entirely different. That would be easily understood, but when you ask parliament to vote a sum not exceeding $42,500 per annum to take care of possible deficits in connection with the King's highway, I must say that I cannot bring myself to do it. A bridge is nothing more than a part of the King's highway projected over a stream or a gully or whatever it may be, and that highway in principle is free for use to all the King's subjects. The toll idea is very much exploded as far as the general use of highways is concerned, and has been for years.

Mr. CANNON: What about taxes to pay for the highway?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; the taxes are of universal and general application.

Mr. CANNON: A tax is a toll.

Mr. BENNETT: All taxes are tolls, but taxes are imposed upon all persons whether or not they are users. In this case the users only are asked to pay. It is purely a matter for each province to determine for itself, and the province of Quebec having determined it in this way, that is their business.

Mr. CANNON: What about the Americans using our highways?

Mr. BENNETT: The Americans pay at the bridge across which they enter this country.

Mr. CANNON: You are talking about highways.

Mr. BENNETT: I am talking about tolls on provincial undertakings, and I excepted interprovincial or international bridges. The international bridge to which reference was made by my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary) and an hon. member to my right involves, of course, the taxing of those who come into this country. Tolls are imposed for two purposes; one is to enable a record to be kept of those who come and go, and the second is to ensure payment for the use of the facilities provided. The idea of asking this parliament, which represents the general body of Canadian taxpayers, to contribute towards any deficit which might arise by the application of a provincial policy is unsound. If this were an interprovincial or international proposition, there would be no difficulty in dealing with it, but to say that this parliament, the general body of the taxpayers of Canada shall be asked to make a contribution towards paying any deficit which might arise between the amount necessary to pay the obligations upon the debentures and the amount received from tolls, is going too far and I regret that such a suggestion is made at this late date.

An hon. MEMBER: What about an international highway?

Mr. BENNETT: I favoured an international highway, and I hope that the hon. gentleman may in the fullness of time be ready and willing to give his vote for the construction of a trans-Canada highway wholly within Canada. But the bridges on that highway will not be toll bridges.

I have done everything possible to expedite this matter reaching the stage it has, but we will not permit this bill to go into committee to-day. It must proceed in committee tomorrow, and the following day will see the next stage of the bill. If this proposition was a free bridge without tolls, I would be open to argument, but I hope never to find myself in the position where I will ask the general body of the taxpayers of Canada to contribute towards a bridge solely within a province by way of a subsidy necessary to make up the difference between the annual charges on the undertaking and the annual revenue derived from tolls.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The sole reason for the introduction of this bill at this time as explained is to enable the government to implement an undertaking given in the name of the crown by the government of Canada to the government of the province of Quebec. I realize that it is unfortunate that this measure should have to be considered at this late moment. However, the measure speaks for itself. The discussion which has taken place would seem to indicate that there is a disposition to regard the bill as being highly controversial. I stated last evening that the government would not wish to proceed with any measures which were deemed controversial and if it should appear, after allowing this bill to stand, that it is still to be regarded as being controversial, I would feel that we should not proceed further with it. For the present the bill had better stand.

I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

CONFIRMATION OF AGREEMENTS FOR TRANSFER OF NATURAL RESOURCES TO WESTERN PROVINCES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I should like to move a resolution requesting His Excellency the Governor General to transmit to His Majesty the King the necessary address in connection with the transfer of the natural resources of the western provinces, as follows:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house doth unite with the Senate in an address to His Excellency the Governor General praying His Excellency to transmit the joint address of both houses to His Most Excellent Majesty the King, relative to a measure to be submitted to the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, to amend The British North America Acts, 1867 to 1916, in the manner set forth in the said joint address; in such a way as to His Excellency may seem fit, in order that the same may be laid at the foot of the throne, and have filled in the blank space therein with the word "Commons";

And that the Clerk of the House do carry the said message to the Senate.

Mr. BENNETT: I congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) in his seconding of this motion which speaks so eloquently for the equality of status between the two communities. It offers a significant justification for the observations which he has made.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As long as this condition exists by our own will, I do not object to it.

Mr. MacLAREN: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this motion be carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF WILLIAM NEVILLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the government to question No. 1 on the order paper, which I submit is a proper question and one not requiring very much clerical work. The sitting member surely is entitled to the information asked for, especially as these appointments are supposed to be non-political in character.

DOMINION AND MERCHANT SHIPPING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a personal explanation and rectification. When speaking on Monday last to the resolution to approve of the report of the conference on Dominion legislation, I gave a quotation supposed to have been made by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), as follows:

Since January, 1926, we have had representations in London at a peace parley. You would almost think that it was a six power instead of a five power party. We are gradually interfering in the affairs of Europe generally. . . . We are posing as a nation when we are not a nation at all.

Since I gave that quotation my hon. friend has conveyed to me the information that he did not utter those words. After investigation I found that the quotation had been obtained from a report appearing in the Montreal Gazette of April 9. Through a mistake, the statement had been attributed to my hon. friend when in fact the words were uttered on April 8 by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). I desire to make this rectification in fairness to my hon. friend, and I apologize to him for the mistake and I am very sorry if it has caused him any annoyance.

DUTY ON TEA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) if he is in a position to make any statement regarding a refund to be made to the dealers in tea.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): I take it that my hon. friend is referring to the request made by the importers of tea for a refund of the duty which they have paid?

Mr. MacLAREN: Yes.

Mr. EULER: A conference was had with the tea importers but no definite answer was given. We are making certain investigations after which due consideration will be given and the matter will be disposed of.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

On the orders of the day.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, shortly after the Easter recess the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) told the house that he hoped to be able to make a definite statement within two weeks as to the St. Lawrence waterway. Will that statement be forthcoming before the house closes?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I will think this matter over and let my hon. friend have a reply tomorrow.

CHINESE EMPLOYED ON BESCO SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES A. STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) with reference to Chinese employed on the boats operated by the Besco corporation, I would say that I have made inquiry and have discovered that four ships are operated under British registry. Fifty-six Chinese are employed on these vessels, over which we have no control other than to see that they do not enter Canada. The department has not approved since 1924 of the entry into Canada of persons of Chinese origin to join ships operated by the Besco or the Dominion Shipping Company. I may say that the Chinese who were temporarily admitted in 1924 were properly checked outward at the end of the season.

There is nothing in the Chinese Immigration Act to prevent vessels coming to Canadian ports from bringing with them crews of Chinese origin and keeping such crews on board such vessels until they leave Canada. Of course, if application is made for entry to Canada by an individual member of the crew, or of the whole crew, then the act immediately operates. The act requires the depositing of bonds and provides severe penalties for allowing persons of Chinese origin to leave a vessel without the consent of the proper official of the department. This provision, of course, is a safeguard against the desertion of members of the crews and the illegal entry of Chinese.

Mr. HEAPS: Am I correct in assuming that these vessels that ply between Montreal and Halifax or Sydney are operated by Besco?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot tell my hon. friend where they ply, but the registry is British and they are apparently chartered by the corporation.

Mr. HEAPS: And they ply between two Canadian ports?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They may. I presume they do.

[Mr. Church.]

CALGARY RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I have a telegram this morning from the railway mail clerks in the city of Calgary stating that certain rearrangements have been made and they feel an apprehension that their seniority and standing in the service may be interfered with. I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether any arrangement that may be made will interfere with their right of seniority or not?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Nearly every year at this season when the timetables of railways are being changed, we have to shift railway mail clerks from one place to another in order to meet the requirements of the service, but I can assure my hon. friend that in no case will seniority be interfered with in bringing about this arrangement.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Or any other right?

Mr. VENIOT: No.

UPPER ST. LAWRENCE PILOTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): A few days ago I asked the government whether consideration had been given to the question of pilotage on the upper St. Lawrence. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is now in his seat and I should like to know whether any request has been received by the government and whether any consideration has been given to the matter?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Several requests have been made in accordance with what my hon. friend has just mentioned. The matter is receiving consideration, but no decision has as yet been reached.

HOUSE OF COMMONS SESSIONAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): On account of the very short session, I understand the temporary staff of the Senate have been granted 120 days' pay for 99 days' actual work. I should like to ask: What about the temporary staff of the House of Commons? Would it not seem right that there should be no discrimination? I fancy the House of Commons employees work, if anything, longer hours than those of the Senate. I am thinking particularly of the Hansard amanuenses who are not of the permanent staff and who are working excessively long hours at high tension. I would ask what can be done in regard to this particular class of employees?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The matter to which my hon. friend has just referred is at the present time being considered as between the Speaker and the government.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Cannot the Prime Minister give a more definite answer than that?

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to say, before the matter is finally disposed of, that all of those who sit to the left of you, Mr. Speaker, are deeply appreciative of all the service that is rendered by the Hansard staff. It involves very long hours and sometimes very difficult work, especially when one has regard to the rapidity with which my hon. friend (Mr. Manion) sitting right beside me sometimes speaks. Under those circumstances, anything that can be done to place the Hansard staff upon a basis of equality with those in the Senate will be welcomed, I think, by all of us, equality of status being very desirable as between the Senate and the House of Commons.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say to my hon. friend that what I had in mind was to call him into conference with the Speaker and myself in order to see whether we could not agree upon an arrangement that would be satisfactory to all. I do not think there will be any difficulty in reaching a satisfactory agreement.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether the plans in connection with the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company have been prepared, whether plans have been approved by him and where, if possible, anyone can have an opportunity of examining them.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): The plans which have been approved are in the office of the Department of Public Works in the Hunter building and we shall be glad to show them to any hon. member.

CONFERENCE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to hold a conference on unemployment in the month of June of this year, as was stated in the house some weeks ago?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend will find in the supplementary estimates that the government is proposing to ask the house to vote the sum of $10,000 to enable a conference to be held in Ottawa as soon as may be possible after the general elections, in order to consider the question of cooperation in the matter of continuous employment as between the Dominion government, the provinces, the municipalities and other corporate entities. The idea is to have the conference as representative of interested bodies likely to be affected as possible; to invite to it representatives of industrial organizations and labour organizations as well as the leading municipalities and the provincial governments. The government recognizes, as I think I made clear when speaking on a previous occasion, that there is a problem of seasonal unemployment which occurs regularly in the Dominion, and it is believed by the administration that a conference of this kind might lead to such cooperation, as between those who have to do with work of construction and employment generally, as will be helpful in affording more continuous employment in the winter months than would otherwise be possible. I feel sure the house will give its approval to that appropriation.

Mr. HEAPS: Arising out of the statement made by the Prime Minister, I should like to put a second question. At this conference which is to be held later on this year, will the government consider asking the provinces to inaugurate the eight-hour day for certain industries in the Dominion? I make the suggestion to the Prime Minister, because I observe in this morning's press the Premier of Nova Scotia was quite willing to have the government look into the question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I direct the attention of my hon. friend to the item in the supplementary estimates which is vote No. 426:

To provide for a conference of representatives of Dominion and provincial governments, municipalities, transportation companies and industrial and labour associations, to consider methods of cooperation in furthering continuous employment throughout Canada during the winter months, $10,000.

The conference will be free to discuss any and all aspects of the problem of employment and unemployment.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): The government has on occasions during this session taken credit very properly for the introduction of the eight-hour day bill as applied to civil servants. May I ask the government now: How many departments have accepted that bill and applied it in their departments?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My understanding is that it has been made applicable to all the departments. It applies to civil servants generally.

CHIGNECTO CANAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Crerar) a question. As he is not in his place at present, perhaps if I put the question on Hansard, he can answer it later. Speaking at the Liberal convention at Amherst, Nova Scotia, May 21, Senator H. J. Logan spoke as follows re the proposed Chignecto canal, as reported in Amherst Daily News of May 22:

"The Chignecto canal survey is nearly completed, and a commission, of whom I know the names, is to be appointed to consider the commercial feasibility of the canal."

Senator Logan intimated that he did not desire to make the canal a political issue, but remarked that a Liberal candidate might find it possible to do more for Cumberland county.

I was going to ask the minister if it is proposed to appoint such a commission, and if so, have the names of such commissioners been given to Senator Logan, and has Senator Logan been authorized to speak on behalf of the administration in the remarks that he made?

APPOINTMENT OF WILLIAM NEVILLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): May I obtain from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) the assurance that the informaiton asked for in question No. 1 on to-day's order paper will be brought down forthwith? Very little clerical work is involved in it.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): I must remind my hon. friend that this question is directed to the Chief Electoral Officer, and the only thing the government can do is to bring my hon. friend's question to the attention of that officer, who is responsible to the house and not to the government.

Mr. GOTT: Why has that not been done already?

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES

TREATY BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 344, respecting a certain convention signed the 26th day of May, 1930, between His Majesty in respect of Canada and the United States of America for the preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon fisheries in the Fraser river system.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Convention confirmed.

Mr. McRAE: Mr. Chairman, the natural resource which it is hoped that this treaty will restore, the sockeye salmon of the Fraser river, together with the industry resulting therefrom, is a major issue in the province of British Columbia and a very important question for the Dominion as a whole. It is hoped that under this treaty the Fraser river, a river which for many years was the greatest salmon stream in the world, a river the maximum catch of which at to-day's salmon value would probably exceed $30,000,000 or more annually, the finest salmon stream without question I think on the Pacific ocean, will be restored to its former greatness. That is the expectation of the people of my province. They have been somewhat disappointed with the long negotiations which have been carried on in connection with this problem. Last year I took a rather active part when the treaty came before the committee on marine and fisheries. The long experience which I had in the salmon business on our coast I felt rather qualified me to put my views before the committee at that time. I do not intend to delay the house very long, but I think it is opportune to refer to the present treaty, which I believe is a material improvement on the treaty that was submitted to the house last session.

In the first place, I think that the criticism offered last year as to loose draftsmanship is, in this treaty as I view it, entirely eliminated. This year's treaty appears to be more like the finished article.

The first important alteration in the treaty this year is the addition of section 1 of article I, which includes a very considerable addition to the territory placed under the direction of the commission. If time permitted I could explain to the committee the importance of this addition. Suffice it to say that I believe that this addition is absolutely essential if the efforts of the Salmon Fisheries Commission are to be effective. Without this additional territory I believe their efforts would have been largely, if not entirely, nullified.

There is one other matter in article I, which I would like to have seen somewhat altered. It has to do with the extension of the northern boundary to Lasqueti island, which involves in the jurisdiction of the commission the fishermen who catch the northern run in that section. That is a matter in which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), who I regret is not in his seat is equally concerned. However, I make no serious objection because, after all, the boundaries as set must be very general. I have no doubt that in some cases it will be found when investigated that our sockeye salmon reaching the Fraser by the American route are not included in the present boundaries, and here I think will be found one section that should be omitted from the regulations of the commission being outside the area reached by such sockeyes. It is a matter affecting only the fishermen of the two constituencies I have mentioned, and I am prepared to leave it to the good intentions of the commission to deal with this matter fairly when it comes up. I am quite satisfied that the regulations they may prescribe based on their subsequent investigations will respect the interests of the fishermen in this particular section of the territory allotted to the commission.

Article 2. There is a change in this article which provides that the members of the commission shall be appointed at the pleasure of the respective governments. I think that is important. In the former treaty there was no such provision, and it was felt by some of us that the appointments would necessarily be for life. This change greatly improves this article.

Article 3. The third article in the treaty as submitted to the house last session received probably the most consideration. We contended that this article as then drawn involved, to some extent at least, the question of territorial or sovereign rights and would conflict with the power development of the Fraser river. I am pleased indeed to see that in its present form article 3 has been materially changed in both respects. As previously drawn we objected to the fact that the commission was empowered to "acquire" spawning grounds. I am pleased to see that this word does not appear in the new treaty. In this connection I wish to refer to the last paragraph of article 8 in the treaty of this year:

> Each high contracting party shall acquire and place at the disposition of the commission any land within its territory required for the construction and maintenance of hatcheries, rearing ponds and other such facilities as set forth in article 3.

It might have been advisable to have made the matter a little clearer by providing that the improvements at the expiration of the treaty should belong to the high contracting party in whose territory they were located. I might add that the Fraser river is the only fresh water included in the treaty, and consequently is the only section that is affected by this paragraph. However, the present paragraph is very good indeed and pretty well clears up the question. I notice that the paragraph refers to each high contracting party, and thereby the United States accepts the principle as well as Canada.

In article 4 it will be noted that the period within which the commission is empowered to limit or prohibit fishing is not limited this year. In last year's treaty it read:

> That the commission is hereby empowered from June 1st, to August 20th, to limit and prohibit fishing, etc.

I think it highly desirable that the commission should be given unlimited power in that regard, particularly having regard to the division of the catch.

Article 6. There is a very important change here. In the treaty of 1929 this section read:

> That no action taken by the commission under the authority of articles 4 and 5 of this convention shall be effective unless affirmatively voted for by at least two of the commissioners from each country.

This omitted section three in last year's treaty.

In the treaty this year it will be observed that the approval of two out of three of the commissioners of each country is necessary before anything can be affirmatively voted on. This is a safeguard to both countries, and I think it is an assurance that the commission will be conducted along lines satisfactory both to Canada and the United States.

Article 7 has to do with the division of the catch. This has caused much concern among those interested in the industry. They have grave doubts as to the ability of the commission to divide the catch equally between the two countries. I think, this matter will have to be left to the good faith of the commission. It is about the only way I see of dealing with it. I am sure it will not be possible for any commission to make an exact division each and every year. I assume that in all fairness they will take the current year with the preceding year and endeavour to the best of their ability to divide up the catch equitably between the fishermen of the two countries over the period.

Article 10, I presume, is necessary on account of the inclusion in the treaty of the territory covered by section one of article 1. I think that will be found to agree almost, if not entirely, with the provision in the halibut treaty, and as such presumably it is acceptable to all interests. It is a marine matter that I do not feel competent to pass upon.

Now, from the practical standpoint, I take it that in negotiating treaties there must be give and take between both countries. Neither one high contracting party nor the other can get all it wants. We have had long drawn out negotiations in connection with a treaty for the great Fraser river, and it is my considered opinion that this treaty is now about as satisfactory as we can expect. Of course, the success of this or any similar treaty will depend almost entirely on the good faith of the high contracting parties. In any event we cannot be any worse off under this treaty than we are at the present time.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks the Fraser river has in the past been a wonderful stream. It has produced millions of cases of salmon. In fact, as described by a gentleman whom I met a few days ago, about forty-five years ago when he knew it, it seemed as though one could walk across the river on the fish, and I may tell hon. members that the river is a mile wide. What is the situation to-day? Through the lack of proper protection the fish in that stream have been almost exterminated. I refer to neither one political party nor another, but I wish to say in all kindness that the failure of the fishing industry on the British Columbia coast has been due largely to the fact that for the last quarter of a century it has been used as a political football. I make that statement advisedly, because for many years I was engaged in the business. I am quite sure there is nobody in our province and I hope there is no member in this committee who expects that this treaty can be put into effect without inconveniencing and discommoding certain interests. If we are going to bring about the restoration of the run of fish in the Fraser river we must have conditions different from what they have been in the past. I notice in this treaty a slight alteration from last year's treaty which is no doubt a proper one; I refer to the omission of the appointment of the commissioner of fisheries in the United States, as one of the United States commissioners. At the present time that position is held by Mr. O'Malley. I would like to say a word about Mr. O'Malley, because I think members of the committee ought to know something about him. I have no doubt that he will be one of the American commissioners on this treaty, and undoubtedly he is the best qualified man on this continent to deal with the restoration of salmon fisheries.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Who says that?

Mr. McRAE: He has been responsible for the restoration of the fisheries in Alaska, and he has accomplished wonders. He had great difficulties the first few years because the changes he instituted in connection with the Alaskan fisheries were greatly resented by those engaged in the business. After a few years however when it became apparent that the life of the industry depended on the regulations he had put into effect, and when it became further apparent that the industry was going to be restored, the complaints ceased. To-day the fishing industry in those waters is practically restored to its former greatness, and Mr. O'Malley is accepted by the fishing interests, both men and corporations, as the necessary governor of that great industry. With Mr. O'Malley on the commission and with other Americans who will thoroughly know the business, I suggest to the government that in this particular case they make use of some of the many men in British Columbia who are familiar with the fishing industry, who know the business thoroughly and who are willing and anxious to give their time to assist in restoring this great natural wealth to the people of British Columbia.

In closing may I say that there will be many difficulties ahead of this commission; their task is a difficult one. As I have already said the business is of great importance to the people of my province, and to the whole Dominion. Complaints will arise without number, but I hope that both parties in this house regardless of which party is successful in the coming election will undertake to give to the sockeye salmon commission that assistance and support during the next sixteen years, which is essential to the success of this treaty.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I also was on the special committee last session to which the original treaty was referred, and I presume I was placed on that committee because I have lived on the banks of the Fraser river for some forty years, and particularly during recent years I have been closely in touch with the fishermen on that river. It is true that there are not as many men engaged in the industry as there were some years ago; however, last year 1,473 licences were issued in the Fraser river district; that means that there were twice as many, or over 2,800 men engaged in fishing on the Fraser river, because there are two men to each boat. About 400 of those licences were issued to Japanese. The number of Japanese engaged in the fishing industry has been greatly decreased and at the present time the large majority of fishermen in British Columbia waters are of the white race. That is a condition which no doubt all hon. members will agree should prevail. Last year I was somewhat critical of the treaty which was submitted to us, and in that respect I think I had the support of the fishermen of the Fraser river, because after I returned to New Westminster they held a meeting of their organization and at its conclusion by standing vote they unanimously approved of the stand I had taken. I am pleased to say that this year we have a treaty which is quite different in many important particulars from the one which was first submitted; I think there has been a great deal of improvement, and for that reason I do not think I am called upon to oppose the treaty. On the contrary, I think it represents a step in the right direction; I hope it will work out to the advantage of Canada and result more particularly in the restoration of the sockeye salmon run on the Fraser river. There was a time when that run was very extensive. In the year 1913 there was a pack of sockeye salmon on the Fraser river amounting to about 900,000 cases. The largest pack we have had since that time has been only about 60,000 cases. From those figures it is very easy to judge the extent of depletion, and what that depletion has meant to Canada and to those engaged in the industry. I do not wish the committee to understand that there is any real conflict between the fishermen and those engaged in the canning industry; I think they are both imbued with the same ideas and are both interested in the restoration of the run of sockeye salmon; it means a livelihood to the fishermen. Without the sockeye fishing I am afraid it would be very difficult for the fishermen on the Fraser river to eke out an existence.

Now, what is going to happen? I fear that this treaty will have a very injurious effect on the men who are engaged in the industry at the present time. It may be that as a result of this treaty, at the end of sixteen years, or later or perhaps earlier, there will be a partial or perhaps an entire restoration of the run that we previously had, but in the meantime these men have to carry on their work. They all have their boats, and these are not ordinary row boats; they are quite expensive gasoline boats which have expensive gear. The investment of each of these 1,473 men amounts to a great deal. I am afraid it is just possible that these men who are engaged in the industry at the present time are going to suffer to a great extent. The hon. member for North Vancouver has spoken of the division of the fish. That is covered by article 7, which reads as follows:

> Inasmuch as the purpose of this convention is to establish for the high contracting parties, by their joint effort and expense, a fishery that is now largely non-existent, it is agreed by the high contracting parties that they should share equally in the fishery. The commission shall, consequently, regulate the fishery with a view to allowing, as nearly as may be practicable, an equal portion of the fish that may be caught each year to be taken by the fishermen of each high contracting party.

The great difficulty in that connection, as I see it, is that fishing is carried on in United States waters by means of traps. I am not going to take the time of the house to explain what these traps are like; suffice it to say that by the use of traps they carry on in American waters wholesale fishing. On our side of the line we have practically no traps; all the fishing is carried on by nets operated by the fisherman, and you might say on the Canadian side we have retail fishing. Under this treaty the difficulty is going to be for the commission to see that the Canadians will catch as many fish as the Americans. I am afraid that by the use of traps it will be much easier for the Americans to get their allowance, and I am afraid that the Canadians will not be able to get their share with the present methods in use.

Let me say just here that I would strongly deprecate the abolition of the gill net fishing on the Canadian side and the adoption of traps as the proper method of fishing. It would put out of employment a great many men and I think that is something we should not try to encourage. It may be said that there will not be so much difficulty in connection with the division of fish, but in that connection I should like to refer to some remarks made by the deputy minister of Fisheries last year before the committee. I would refer first to page 85 of the proceedings of Tuesday, May 28, 1929, and Wednesday, May 29, 1929, as follows:

> By Mr. McQuarrie:
> Q. The idea is that, in order to regulate and bring about this 50-50 division, the fisheries will be alternately closed on one side or the other, as the case may be? I want to submit to you—we will say, the Canadians are getting behind, as they usually do in matters of this kind, having in view the geography and the question of the priority of the American fishermen—it would require the Americans to close down their traps and seines, and in that event, could not the Americans say: "The escapement of fish is ample in the Fraser river for propagating purposes; we object to closing down because the Canadians have not enough equipment to catch their 50 per cent"? Is that not one of the things which might come up?

A. That may be one of the main difficulties with which the commission will have to deal, but the federal government of the United States undertakes by this treaty to see that the regulations provided by the commission are carried out.

Then at page 95 there is another question by myself, as follows:

Q. What will happen if the Americans get more fish than the Canadians?

A. Well, Mr. Chairman, the duty of the commission will be to see that they do not. As I said a little while ago, the commission will have my sympathy. It will be quite impossible to say that we will get 50 fish on the one side and 50 on the other. It must be as near as possible that that be done.

Of course it will be difficult; I do not see how it is going to be done in any reasonable way. I am afraid our fishermen are going to suffer by this treaty. I am afraid this matter will work out in such a way that it will cause the adoption of traps in Canadian waters for the purpose of enabling Canada to catch its proper proportion of the fish. In that event what is going to happen to our fishermen?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would my hon. friend like us to drop the treaty?

Mr. McQUARRIE: No, not at all; I am just coming to a point which I think the Prime Minister will appreciate. What is going to happen to the fishermen who are now engaged in that occupation? There is no doubt it will assist other fisheremen who may be there in years to come, but as to the men engaged in that industry I am afraid they will suffer by reason of the fact that they are going to be prohibited for a certain number of years from catching sockeye salmon at all, or they are going to be prohibited for a certain period every year during sixteen years or longer from catching sockeye salmon, which is prehaps one of the most profitable branches of their business. As I say, I am interested in these fishermen and I am afraid they will suffer also in connection with other varities of salmon, because when the catching of sockeye salmon is prohibited it may be necessary also to prohibit the catching of other varieties of fish which may be running at the same time. The sockeye salmon is not the only class of salmon that we have on the Fraser river, as of course is well known.

That matter was discussed in the committee with Mr. Found, and I would refer the house to page 92 of the evidence of the same proceedings of the committee. The following are the questions asked by myself and the answers given by Mr. Found:

Q. What about other varieties of fish during the close season for sockeye? There will be other fish running?

A. Not to any considerable extent; and that is the reason why the time is limited during which the commission is to take full control.

Q. Well, does not the cohoe season overlap the sockeye salmon?

A. To some extent; but not during this period.

Q. That is, there would be no cohoes?

A. I would not say there would be no cohoes; but there would not be a large run.

Q. Cohoe fishing also will be prevented during that period?

A. To the extent that may be necessary to protect the sockeye.

Q. When sockeye fishing is prevented, cohoe fishing will also be prevented?

A. To the extent that it will be necessary to carry out the regulations provided by the commission for the protection of the sockeye.

Q. If sockeye fishing is prevented then, naturally, and necessarily, cohoe fishing will also be prevented?

A. That is why other fishing is prohibited.

Q. Yes?

A. Quite so.

Then on page 93:

Q. As to other varieties of fish—the pinks, for instance—will they be covered by the size of the mesh? Or will fish like chums and pinks be also prohibited when the fishing for sockeye is prohibited?

A. If the prohibition in the fishing of sockeye necessitates the removal of nets from the water, then, of course, the catch of other kinds of fish will be affected to that extent.

Q. So, it may be that all fishing—all salmon fishing will be prevented during those prohibited times?

A. That was the reason for limiting the control of the commission to the period that is mainly affected by this run.

Q. So you would have the chums and the pinks and the cohoes in the same class as the sockeye so far as prohibition is concerned during the period that the commission decides shall be a close season for sockeyes?

A. But the fact is that they are not there at that time in any considerable number.

Q. It will be so with those fish which are there?

A. Oh, yes.

It will be noticed by reference to the treaty that no fixed period is given as to when prohibition shall be effective. Under the terms of the previous treaty I believe that time was fixed as being from June 1 to August 20. Under the present treaty it is left wide open to the commission, and if it sees fit the commission may prohibit and prevent the fishermen from catching fish during the profitable season. The point I wish to make, and one

I think which will appeal to the Prime Minister, is that although this treaty may be of great advantage to Canada as a whole, it is possible that it may injuriously affect the men engaged in the fishing industry. I would suggest that the Prime Minister make a declaration that if such proves to be the case and it is shown later on that the fishermen have been injuriously affected by this treaty, then some fair and reasonable compensation will be made to the men. That is my only object in rising to-day. I think that proposal is a reasonable one, I think it is a fair and just one, because if any class is to be injured by a treaty of this kind entered into for the advantage of Canada as a whole, then I think they should receive some kind of consideration.

I have in my hand sessional papers No. 79, dated February 9, 1916, brought down upon the motion of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who took this same stand regarding the men engaged in the sealing industry and who were prevented from carrying on their occupation by reason of the Washington treaty of 1911 and the Paris regulations of 1893. This return contains the report of Mr. Justice Audette, who was then a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, and certain amounts were allowed as compensation to the men engaged in the sealing industry. It may be said that the salmon fishermen have no legal right to compensation. I will admit that, and I will admit also that this parliament can enter into a treaty which may effectively obliterate the occupation of any man and no legal claim for compensation could be made. This was the case in connection with the sealing treaty, but I would like to read a short statement which appears on page 25 of this return, as follows:

> These claims, as has already been said, do not rest upon legal right; they originate from the benevolence, grace and bounty of the crown.

I submit that our salmon fishermen will be in a similar position and will be entitled to the benevolence, grace and bounty of the crown. I should like the Prime Minister to make two statements: first, that this country is not going to encourage or permit the catching of salmon by means of traps and, secondly, that if the fishermen should be injuriously affected by this treaty they will receive consideration.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I have been keenly interested in listening to the speeches of the two hon. members opposite, the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. McRae) and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie). It takes me back to last year when both of these hon. gentlemen intensely opposed this treaty being entered into with the United States. If I remember rightly, there was a desire at that time on the part of some members in this house to create throughout Canada an anti-American spirit, and for the purpose of creating such a feeling in this country our friends opposite were prepared to sacrifice the treaty in order that they could accomplish some political effect.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I must take exception to that statement, and I do not think it should be allowed to pass.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no evidence for it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: It is absolutely untrue.

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Mr. McQUARRIE: And unfounded.

Mr. KING (Kooenay): I will complete my statement; my hon. friends have had almost an hour.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I submit that that statement should be withdrawn.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It will not be withdrawn because I will follow it up with the evidence.

Mr. BENNETT: Go on with the evidence.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friends challenged not only the desire of the people engaged in this industry, but they challenged their friends in the government of British Columbia. They challenged the opinion of the officials of that government, and put their opinion before the people as being contrary to the opinion of the officials in British Columbia, with the result that the treaty has been delayed for a year. They have undertaken to-day, by a discussion of the amendments which have been made to the treaty, to justify their consideration of the treaty.

Mr. LADNER: I should like to ask the minister whether he intends to carry on a debate along these lines. I had not intended to participate in the debate nor had other hon. members on this side. We are commending the treaty. We believe it is a good one. I was going to ask the minister whether, on reconsideration, he would not think it wiser under the circumstances to abstain in his remarks from partisanship, because otherwise there will be involved a really warm discussion in which most of us will have to participate.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am prepared to do that and to discuss the amendments to the treaty. I do not want to prolong the discussion. The treaty is, I am sure, acceptable to the members of the house. The first amendment, which is a most important one, is that dealing with the extension of extra-territorial waters. That was brought about by the experience of last summer when it was found the fishermen moved outside of the prohibited limit and fished there.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Did I not raise that same point before the committee?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That may be. The effect of the second amendment is to give fuller power to the commission. The previous treaty limited the power of the commission in connection with the removal of an obstruction. It has been thought wise in the interval to amend the treaty so that the commission may have authority in our waters to remove obstructions if they see fit. We have also arranged under the new treaty that the commission may acquire lands for the purpose of developing the fisheries in our territory.

Mr. BENNETT: Just where is that in the treaty? Perhaps the hon. gentleman will read it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is article VIII of the treaty which reads:

Each high contracting party shall acquire and place at the disposition of the commission any land within its territory—

Mr. BENNETT: Then what does the minister mean by saying that the commission shall buy land? The government buys it, not the commission. Read the agreement.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The treaty provides that the government—

Mr. BENNETT: Not the commission, but the government.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is no difference, because we had an opinion of the Department of Justice last year, that when the commission went out of existence they had no control or ownership.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman know what he is talking about?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do. Let me have the floor.

Mr. CANNON: One assumes he thinks he does.

Mr. BENNETT: That would be somewhat doubtful.

Mr. KING Kootenay): Under the treaty of last year it required unanimous approval of two commissioners from each party to concur in fishing regulations. That provision has been extended so that it affects the regulations that may be brought into effect on the upper reaches of the Fraser river. I think those are the important changes in the bill.

I promise my hon. friends I shall not develop the argument I started out to do. I wish merely to say that the treaty is of great importance not only to the people of British Columbia, to those engaged in the industry there, but to the people of Canada on account of the fact that its restoration means an annual wealth of some $30,000,000 to the people of that province and the people of the Dominion as a whole. It is so important that from time to time various governments of Canada have undertaken to negotiate such a treaty and this is considered to be the best treaty that as yet has been negotiated or considered by the two governments. The other treaties were never brought into being, the Senate of the United States failing to agree to them and pass them; but it is understood that this treaty will become law, and if so, no doubt much good will come from it.

The hon. member for New Westminster spoke of the hardship that might be placed upon those who are engaged in the fishing industry on the Fraser river through the operations of the treaty. That has been well considered by the fishermen themselves and they realize, as they have realized in the state of Washington, that if they continue their occupation as fishermen each year as they have been doing in the past, it will not be long before that industry will disappear entirely. So it has been considered by them—and I believe they are in agreement on this point—that in the interest of the fishing industry and in their own interest some scheme or plan of this kind should be devised in order to restore the fishery. I have very much pleasure in thoroughly endorsing the treaty, and I believe it will be approved generally throughout Canada.

Mr. DICKIE: Having been a member of the fisheries committee which considered the treaty as it was submitted last year, and having, perhaps, severely criticized it in some respects, I wish to say that the remarks of the Minister of Health with respect to any anti-Americanism tinging the considerations of that committee or any thought of such a thing, is nonsensical and untrue. There was not one anti-American thought in connection with the consideration of that treaty. I approve unhesitatingly of the treaty this year. The other treaty as submitted to us contained clauses of which we did not approve. We reasoned them out and our hon. friends opposite saw the point in our objections. Now we have a treaty which, I believe, is the best that can be devised and I am wholeheartedly in favour of it. My purpose in rising is simply to impress upon the government that the success or otherwise of the treaty will depend upon the personnel of the commission. The problems that they will have to consider will bristle with difficulties. Let there be appointed good strong men without regard to political persuasion, men that can resist the enormous pressure that will be brought to bear upon them, men of sound common sense, and in that case we shall rehabilitate the fisheries of the Fraser river. It will be one of the finest treaties ever entered into by the Dominion of Canada. People who live in the east do not realize what we have lost through the depletion of the salmon fisheries in the Fraser river. As a parting word, I implore the government to select good strong men for the commission and doubtless the people of the United States will do the same.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I say one word in endorsation of what was stated by the hon. member for New Westminster? I am not going to discuss the treaty; I am wholly in favour of its passing. I think the people on the west coast and indeed, all over Canada will endorse it. Several years ago, when I lived on the west coast, I had come in touch with and developed a good deal of sympathy for the fishermen there. Very likely the coming into force of this treaty may work a hardship on some of them as individuals. It may be rather dangerous to establish a precedent that the introduction of new machinery or improved methods should give ground for complaint on the part of those who are injured by such new machinery or improved methods, yet since these things are in the interests of the whole community, I have never been able to see why some little help should not be given during the transition period to the people who are prejudicially affected. The big fishing companies can probably look after themselves, but there are many small fishermen who have through the years invested their all in boats and fishing tackle and it may not be easy for them to accommodate themselves to the new situation. I do not profess to have given sufficient thought to the matter to know how this end might be achieved, but I would urge the government to give some consideration to the case of these men as they may be adversely affected by the treaty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is deeply gratifying to the government to know that we have succeeded in bringing before the house a treaty which apparently has the unanimous support of its members. I take it that I am justified in making that statement by what has been said on both sides of the house.

As hon. members recall, the government brought in a treaty last session for the purpose of the protection, preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon industry in the Fraser river system. That treaty was referred to a committee of the house, and there developed in the course of the committee's examination some differences of view and of opinion. I do not wish to dwell on what may have occasioned the differences of view or of opinion, but I confess that at the time the government did find it somewhat difficult to account for the attitude of some hon. members opposite in opposing the treaty, especially as we had been advised by the premier of the province of British Columbia that he was whole-heartedly in favour of the treaty as it stood. May I congratulate my hon. friends opposite on the change of heart and of attitude which has come over them since their return to British Columbia after the last session of parliament? I just wish to make quite clear that the government in bringing in the treaty last year in the form in which it was brought in did so not only with the whole-hearted cooperation throughout of the government of the province of British Columbia, but with the strong endorsation of the premier of that province of the treaty as it then stood. I have in my hand a copy of the minute of the hon. executive council of British Columbia, which minute of council was forwarded by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the province to the Under Secretary of State in the following communication:

Privy Council
Canada
The 13th of April, 1929,
At Government House,
Victoria, B.C.

Sir:—

I have the honour to enclose, herewith, certified copy of Order in Council No. 478 which my government has requested me to convey to the government of Canada relative to the Fraser River Salmon Treaty.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) R. Randolph Bruce,
Lieutenant-Governor.

The Under Secretary of State,
Ottawa.

The copy of the minute is as follows:

P. Walker,
Deputy Clerk, Executive Council.

Certified copy of a Minute of the Honourable the Executive Council, approved by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor on the 4th day of April, A.D. 1929.

—478—

To His Honour
the Lieutenant-Governor in Council:

The undersigned has the honour to recommend:

That His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor be requested to convey to the government of Canada, through the Secretary of State, the strong sense of satisfaction and gratification felt by the government of this province upon learning of the conclusion in Washington of the Fraser River Salmon Treaty.

Dated this 3rd day of April, A.D. 1929.

Provincial Secretary.

Approved this 3rd day of April, A.D. 1929.

"R. W. Bruhn,"
Presiding Member of the Executive Council.

Shortly after this order in council had been passed by the government of British Columbia, the premier of British Columbia gave an interview which appeared in the Vancouver Daily Province of May 23, 1929. It is headed, "Premier Tolmie Issues Statement," and reads:

In a statement issued to-day, Premier Tolmie said:

"According to our views and legal advice received after careful reading of the treaty, there is no provision there which either impliedly, or directly, contains any interference either territorially or in an administrative sense with, or surrender of, Canadian rights. The province was at all times completely represented and fully informed during the negotiations leading to the signing of the treaty with a view to safeguarding provincial rights.

"The Dominion conducted the negotiations, but conferred at all times with the province, which fully approved of, and has repeatedly endorsed the treaty.

"The restoration of the sockeye salmon fisheries of the Fraser river system is one of the greatest reclamation projects in which Canada and the United States can jointly engage, and cannot be consummated except under the terms of such a treaty as the present. The government of British Columbia and, I believe, the whole people of British Columbia desire that parliament ratify this treaty."

That is the treaty as it was when introduced in this house last year and referred to a committee; but it was afterwards withdrawn because of the discussion which took place, and because of the implication—I will put it mildly—which was spread abroad that in some way or another—to make use of words used by Premier Tolmie in referring to the matter—there was an implied surrender of some Canadian interest to the United States. Premier Tolmie made it quite clear that in his opinion neither impliedly nor directly was this the case; that his opinion given under legal advice was that it could not be found that the treaty contained any interference either territorially, or in an administrative sense with, or surrender of, Canadian rights.

Changes that have since been made in the treaty have been of relatively minor significance. The treaty itself was for the purpose of appointing an international commission with certain powers which would enable them to make regulations for the protection, preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon industry. There have been some modifications, and I am free to confess that it is a satisfaction to the government that it has been possible to make modifications even if they serve no other purpose, so far as Canada is concerned, than that of bringing all parties into accord on a great international engagement such as the treaty is.

Possibly for purposes of record I should give to the house what the government understands to be the modifications that have been made. They have been set forth fairly accurately by the hon. member for North Vancouver in his remarks this afternoon, though with an emphasis, perhaps, that accords more with my hon. friend's desires in the matter than with the facts. The significance which he has attached to some of the modifications is, perhaps, greater in his own mind than it is in the minds of others, in the house, who have also given the matter careful study. Be that as it may, I will give the various modifications and leave it to the house and the country to judge for themselves as to the extent to which they are really significant.

The previous treaty did not cover any extra-territorial waters, as up to the time it was entered into no sockeye salmon fishing had taken place in such waters. Last year a number of United States and a few Canadian purse-seiners tried to meet the approaching salmon beyond the three mile limit off the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait. They were successful. Hence it became obvious that if such waters were not placed under the control of the commission to be appointed under the treaty, their efforts could be nullified by the capture of the fish before they entered the treaty waters. The United States government proposed that these waters should be included, and this was agreed to. Article I has been redrafted accordingly. That, it will be observed, is a change due to representations made by the government of the United States, not a change to be credited to last year's committee or action on the part of any of its members. The feature dealt with had not presented itself for consideration to the committee when it met.

I should perhaps inform the house that while the treaty was withdrawn for the time being in this country, it was also withdrawn by the government of the United States when before the Senate as a result of representations which had been made to Washington on the part of certain interests in the United States; more than one of the modifications that have been made in the treaty have been made at the instance of representations made to Washington by citizens of that country. The one to which I have just referred is the first.

Mr. BENNETT: May I correct the right hon. gentleman? When the treaty was withdrawn in Congress, Senator Borah stated that the reason for its being withdrawn was that they had agreed on a reconsideration of the treaty. That was in December.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly they withdrew it for reconsideration, just as we withdrew it to permit of further consideration; but they reconsidered it at the instance of representations with respect to certain features of the treaty made by their own people.

Mr. BENNETT: The record does not show that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And it does not show either that some hon. gentlemen from British Columbia, members of this house, got into conference with certain American citizens and sought to arrange modifications of this treaty through the avenue of Washington, rather than through the instrumentality of this parliament. That does not appear on the record either, but I believe nevertheless that it is true.

Mr. BENNETT: This parliament would not be the place.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is the place for Canadians to deal with Canadian legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: The Canadian government, not the Canadian House of Commons.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Surely my hon. friend does not think the citizens of this country ought to go to the United States in order to make treaties for Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: I said, the Canadian government, not this house, could deal with it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Article II of the previous treaty provided for the appointment of an international commission, consisting of three members from each country to regulate and develop the fishery, and, at the instance of the United States, it specified that one of the United States members would be the Commissioner of Fisheries for that country. The United States now wish this latter provision deleted. This was agreed to, and Article II has been modified accordingly.

This is another modification, not made at the instance of this country in any way, but at the wish of the United States itself to suit the representations that were made to the United States government by its own citizens.

Article III of the previous treaty limited the power of the commission in connection with the removal of obstruction to the ascent of salmon, to recommending such to the two governments, but it gave the committee authority to improve conditions for the ascent of salmon. In the discussion last year before the committee it developed that there was some apprehension that under this authority potential water-powers might be interfered with. Hence in the new treaty, the commission's power in this respect is limited to recommending.

It also developed in the discussion before the committee last year that there was apprehension that under this article, should the treaty at any time be terminated, the United States would have a property interest in any works established in Canadian territory by the commission in connection with fish cultural operations. The Department of Justice, however, gave the opinion that in such contingency the United States would not have any legal right, title or interest in any such works. It is also obvious that such a commission could not properly own property, as should the treaty be terminated the commission would immediately cease to exist. Hence the word "acquire" in the fifth line of article 3 of the previous treaty served no useful purpose and has been deleted in the new treaty. It has not been deleted because of some power which the inclusion of the word "acquire" would have given to the United States to exercise any control over our country. The position, in point of fact, remains identically what it was according to the advice which we had at the time and still have from our own Department of Justice.

In order to remove all possible doubt a paragraph has been added to article 8 of the treaty, which provides that the government of either country shall acquire and place at the disposition of the commission any land within its territory required for the construction and maintenance of hatcheries, rearing ponds and other such facilities. Any structures erected on said land will continue to vest in the government of the high contracting party by which the land was acquired, at the expiration of the treaty period.

Article 4 of the previous treaty limited the authority of the commission to the period between June 1 and August 20 in each year. Canada's original draft did not limit such power to any season, but it appeared that interests in the state of Washington would not agree to a longer period as they feared other fisheries might be interfered with by the commission. It has been realized, however, that the 50-50 division in the catch provided for by the treaty could not be properly controlled in the limited period, as while the run of sockeye in United States waters is usually over by August 20, it continues later in Canadian waters. The United States' objections have now been overcome, and article 4 of the new treaty gives the commission authority to regulate the sockeye fishery throughout the year. Again the change made has been to meet certain objections not raised by this country but raised by the United States.

Article 5 is not changed in substance, except to make it apply to the whole year.

Article 6 of the previous treaty required that the affirmative vote of two commissioners from each side would be necessary for any fishery regulation. There was no such requirement in connection with the development work in the upper waters. The discussion in the committee last year seemed to indicate that it would have been considered better if this requirement applied to all operations of the commission. This article has been modified accordingly. That is one change that has been made, though whether if the treaty had been left as it was the consequences in any particular would have been different is, I think, very much open to question.

Article 7 is not changed.

Article 8 is modified so as to provide for proper legislation to cover extraterritorial fishing, and also as explained under article 5. The latter part of the former article 8 is covered by article 10 of the new treaty.

Article 9 is new. It provides for the control of fishing in extraterritorial waters.

Article 11 does not differ from article 9 of the previous treaty.

Now, those are the changes, and as I say, anyone reading them will see they are quite minor changes considered in relation to the significance of the treaty as originally drafted and as originally introduced. However, let me say again, if it is going to relieve any of our friends from British Columbia of a certain embarrassment which they have experienced as a result of their attitude taken last session, why, the government is all the happier on that account.

My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) spoke of the possible temporary injurious effect the treaty might have on some of the fishermen engaged in that industry. The underlying purpose of the treaty is to help the fishermen. Whatever will help the industry will help the fishermen in the long run. My hon. friend has been kind enough to say that this treaty was for the benefit of Canada as a whole. May I say that while that is true, the treaty is essentially and immediately for the benefit of the province of British Columbia. The whole area within which this commission will operate will be in the province of British Columbia; to the extent to which the province will benefit by the treaty, and I think it will greatly benefit, to that extent the Dominion as a whole will benefit.

Might I suggest to my hon. friend that when he goes back to British Columbia he might make to the head of the government there, who is one of his own political faith, the representations which he has been good enough to make in this house this afternoon as to caring for the fisherman who may be affected by any temporary changes which may result from the enforcement of the treaty. I think that would be the appropriate government to which to make his appeal, and I shall be greatly surprised if he does not find Premier Tolmie sympathetic, and prepared to meet any situation that may arise from the cause indicated.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does that mean that this government would not do anything to assist these fishermen if they were found—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This government has done everything in securing the treaty, and is doing everything in securing its enactment and providing for its enforcement. If when the treaty is in force representations are made to this government as to effects of its operation, those representations will certainly be considered on their merits.

May I say one further word in regard to one matter mentioned by my hon. friend from Vancouver North (Mr. McRae)? He spoke of the difficult problem which the commission will have in carrying out the duties assigned to it under the treaty, and he expressed the hope that all parties would unite in giving the commission the support it should have. I heartily join with him in that appeal. I think it will be recognized that the treaty is for the purpose of preserving a great industry, one of the real assets of our Dominion, and without question the commission will have to be firm and strong in discharging the functions assigned to it. Certainly so far as the present administration is concerned, and so far as the party to which those of us on this side of the house belong is concerned, I think I can speak in the name of both, every effort will be made to strengthen the hands of the commission in the task which it undertakes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Before the Prime Minister takes his seat, would he be good enough to give an assurance that this government will not encourage the use of fish traps in Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must thank my hon. friend for his implied compliment of assuming that the government will be returned to office. I assure him that such being the case, we will do all in our power not to disappoint him in regard to any feature of the administration of this treaty.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That does not answer my question at all, Mr. Chairman. As to the result of this election, of course that is for the people to say. I have one idea of what they will say, and the Prime Minister has another. I do not think, however, it is asking too much to suggest that a statement should be made in regard to the policy of the government as to fish traps.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have made a statement.

Mr. LADNER: I rise to express regret that the Prime Minister, as the Minister of External Affairs, should have been disposed to view an international treaty in this way. The hon. gentleman has viewed it from a partisan standpoint.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What nonsense.

Mr. LADNER: The Prime Minister says no. The fact however is quite evident to those of us who know what has been going on. We can read between the lines of the remarks of the Prime Minister, and when we view some of his remarks which have appeared in type and consider the care with which they were recorded, it is clear to anyone who can read and can understand that the intention of those remarks and those recorded documents was of a partisan political nature.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that the remarks I recorded were from a statement handed to me by an officer of the department in response to a request to be advised as to the exact nature of the change. It was not a statement prepared by myself, and I never had a look at it until it was placed in my hands, and since then it has undergone no change.

Mr. BENNETT: It was the Doctor Tolmie letter my hon. friend was talking about.

Mr. LADNER: The Prime Minister may not have prepared it himself, but the intended effect of the statement was to be entirely political and to affect the next election.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The statement was to give the house exact information as to the modifications of the treaty, and in giving that information I merely complied with my duty.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is talking about Doctor Tolmie's letter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The letter speaks for itself; it is an expression of his beliefs from the Premier of British Columbia.

Mr. BENNETT: About another treaty altogether.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: About the previous treaty, which the present one so completely reproduces.

Mr. LADNER: The Prime Minister has stated that the differences between the treaties were of minor importance, but he takes great care to expand the degree of difference which exists with respect to every particular clause. Speaking for the members on this side of the house I want to say that their sentiments and desire were to view the clauses of the treaty between Canada and the United States in the interests of Canada, and to safeguard the great industry concerned. Had we been in a state of animated disturbance like my good friend the Minister of National Health (Mr. King), during his speech between last year and this year we might have developed the subject matter of the treaty distinctly along partisan lines. That, however, was not the intention of hon. members on this side of the house. The idea was to produce a sound treaty, and the fact that modifications have been made is indicative that changes were necessary. The fact that the Prime Minister was willing to let the treaty stand last year and bring it up this year during the last days of the session is indicative of the fact that he could not have had a full faith in the soundness of the treaty last year. Perhaps

I should not put it that way, but I may say that at least he must have been satisfied that it could not have been put through last year. I regret the position taken by the Prime Minister when he uses this treaty to develop a bias of political partisanship where circumstances did not require and did not warrant such action. After all we are concerned with a public question highly important in international affairs and with the working out of the ideas contained in the treaty. It has constructive features and its operation might be beneficial to Canada as a whole, in which we as citizens and members of parliament are interested.

I commend the treaty; I believe the principles involved in both the treaties of last year and this year were sound, and that good will be the result. I reflect the suggestions made by some other hon. members that wisdom, discretion and care should be exercised in the presentation of our case to the commission, because we will not only be faced with important and difficult problems but we will be met by the best brains of the United States.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Inconsistent legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: The manner of approach in dealing with international problems is of first-rate importance. When I read from Hansard of last year as to the manner in which we approached this problem, and contrast it with the observations made by the Minister of National Health and to a lesser degree the right hon. the Prime Minister, I am perfectly content that it be left to the public to judge as to whether we on this side of the house have approached this matter in a spirit of narrow partisanship. I have been attacked with great ferocity by one of the newspaper organs of the hon. gentleman opposite, the Vancouver Sun, for the position which I took last year in connection with the treaty. The treaty submitted last year has vanished, and another has taken its place; the treaty submitted last year was never discussed in this house. It was referred to a committee and in that committee it was discussed, the evidence was taken down and is recorded as a matter of history in the proceedings of this parliament. In view of what took place in the committee the right hon. the Prime Minister withdrew the treaty.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The Solicitor General says no.

Mr. CANNON: I never said anything.

[Mr. Ladner.]

Mr. BENNETT: If hon. members will look at Hansard—

Mr. CANNON: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I did not say anything.

Mr. BENNETT: I thank the Solicitor General; some one else said it, but I thought it was he. It must have been someone sitting beside him. Appearances are sometimes deceptive and remarks do not always indicate with the greatest degree of certainty the individual who made them. On that occasion I think the Prime Minister took a very proper course. He said that he had taken such action for the purpose of enabling the matter to be further considered. Hansard reports his remarks as follows:

> We believe that it would be in the best interests of all people interested that it should be withdrawn because of the attitude expressed in the committee by some of the members from British Columbia—

At that time the right hon. gentleman read into the record telegrams which had passed between the premier of British Columbia and himself. The position which I took at that time is reported as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I think the conclusion at which the right hon. gentleman has arrived is a sound one in the premises. I do not know that that will strengthen his own opinion, but at least that is my view.

Then I made the following observations:

> I may say, Mr. Speaker, that so far as we who sit to your left are concerned, with respect to all matters dealing with international relations we approach them in a spirit entirely non-political, or at least we endeavour to do so. It is with us not a question of Liberal or Conservative, not a question of the opposition or the government. I think we are all agreed that a satisfactory treaty is desirable. In view of the fact that the propagation of sockeye salmon takes place in the province of British Columbia and that the larger number of the salmon has heretofore been caught in American waters, it becomes of great importance that we should, if possible, arrive at some arrangement with our neighbours. A satisfactory treaty is therefore not only desirable, but is necessary for the preservation of the industry and the making available for food of this very valuable fish. But that a treaty is desirable does not make it imperative for a public man to accept as the last word any treaty that has been submitted; and there are acute divisions of opinions as to the desirability of this particular treaty. Some of the terms of the treaty are found upon analysis to be most undesirable from a national viewpoint.

The right hon. the Prime Minister made further observations, during which he read a telegram from the British Columbia Packers, Limited, and in the end I said:

> Under these circumstances I congratulate the Prime Minister upon taking the course he has, which I think is in the public interest, wholly devoid of any political consideration, and which will enable the public, by careful study and research, to ascertain fully what is involved in this treaty at this time. In that attitude we approach the solution of the problem, and not in any narrow party sense.

The hon. Minister of Public Health has referred to the fact that there were differences between the federal party in this house known as the official opposition and the Conservative government of the province of British Columbia. There is no doubt about the fact that the government of British Columbia expressed its approval of the treaty in formal terms, and that the premier of that province was most anxious that it should be adopted. After parliament had prorogued I ventured to point out to him certain considerations which I thought should influence his judgment, to which his attention had not been directed at that time. Those matters were considered by him. In December last, in consequence of considerations, as the right hon. gentleman says, which appeared to the American Senate to be good, the treaty was withdrawn from the Senate where it had been sent for ratification. It will be remembered that when we were sitting here last year, on June 4, 1929, it was thought that the American Senate might decline to ratify or approve the treaty, but at any rate the treaty was withdrawn in December last from the Senate and thereupon a successful effort was made to negotiate a new treaty, which is the document now before the house.

May I point out that so far as the government of British Columbia is concerned, doubtless members of this house have seen an interview given by Premier Tolmie in which he stated that he had sent a telegram to me asking me to communicate with the Prime Minister before the treaty was signed, and make such suggestions as I thought desirable. I am bound to say that the attitude of the right hon. gentleman was one of great frankness. He received my expressions of opinion with great courtesy and I shall presently point out that I think the substance of the few suggestions I did make have been accepted. I certainly did not approach the right hon. gentleman at the instance of the premier of British Columbia in any party sense, and I am bound to say that he did not consider the observations I made in any party sense either. He thanked me for what I had said to him and I thanked him for the opportunity he afforded me to present the views which I held. More than that, he was good enough to indicate in a general sense what the contemplated treaty was, and the matter ended.

Now, the treaty that is submitted for ratification to-day in my judgment is being submitted in the form in which such an instrument should come before this house. Last year I pointed out that instead of a mere resolution being submitted it was the better opinion of the authorities, especially of Professor McNair of Cambridge University, who edited the last edition of Professor Oppenheimer's book on international law, that any treaty which involved a charge upon the revenues of the country should be submitted to parliament by bill and not by resolution. When the right hon. gentleman the other day stated that he proposed to submit the treaty for the approval of this house by bill, I thought then and still think that he and the government are to be congratulated for having accepted not my opinion only but the opinion expressed by Professor McNair and the leading authorities as to the way in which a treaty should be considered by a parliament when it is desired to ratify it.

Now let us ask just a few questions with respect to the treaty, and in no narrow sense. The Minister of National Health apparently has not read the treaty with the care one would expect. There are certain very well defined changes between the document now submitted for ratification and the document which was before the house last year. One of the most essential matters, and the really essential matter about which a great deal of opposition was raised last year in the committee, was this: We did believe and held the view very strongly that it was not desirable that the commission should acquire property or purchase real estate. I stated my reasons with great frankness. This treaty meets that difficulty, and in my judgment meets it in a manner that should commend itself to every thoughtful Canadian. The concluding paragraph of article 8 is as follows:

> Each high contracting party shall acquire and place at the disposition of the commission any land within its territory required for the construction and maintenance of hatcheries, rearing ponds and other such facilities as set forth in article III.

In my judgment that is the correct method under which an international commission should operate when dealing with problems which affect both parties. Instead of asking an international commission to acquire the property we say that the respective governments will acquire the property for the use of the commission, and what is the benefit of that? I think the benefit was acknowledged and admirably expressed by the reference made by the right hon. Prime Minister to the legal result that follows at the expiration or termination of the treaty. If the high contracting parties own the property, obviously any improvements made upon the property so owned will inure to the benefit of the party who owns the property, thereby relieving us of any difficulty as to whether or not the commission should own property upon which joint moneys have been expended; because it is contemplated that moneys will be expended alike by the United States and the Dominion of Canada and, that money being so expended upon the property of each of the nationals, it follows that the improvements so placed will become the property of the national that owns the land in question. Instead of the commission owning the land, as was contemplated last year, we now have the government acquiring the land for the use of the commission, thereby removing from the treaty one point about which we made the strongest possible statements in the committee, of which I was not a member, but when I say "we" I mean our friends.

That there was another point about which—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before my hon. friend leaves the point on which he has been touching, I assume he recognizes that the advice given by the Department of Justice with respect to the significance of the word "acquire" was correct.

Mr. BENNETT: That it did not mean anything?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That nothing further has been secured under this present treaty with respect to the point which my hon. friend has raised. The Department of Justice contends we would have been in the same position under the treaty as it formerly existed.

Mr. BENNETT: I entirely differ; I think the right hon. gentleman has adopted the correct course by providing that the land does not belong to the commission but to the governments which acquire it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Department of Justice held that under the former treaty that result would follow.

Mr. BENNETT: But the distinction, in my judgment, is that the whole problem has been removed from the realm of doubt and now becomes a matter of certainty. In the one instance you say the government owns the property and in the other instance you said the commission owned the property, and it would be a fruitful source of difficulty if, after the expiration of the treaty, one of the contracting parties should say "We have spent large sums of money upon this particular area of land that belongs to the commission, and we claim it to be ours." You have no longer left it in the realm of conjecture and doubt but have removed it from that realm and made it certain that the commission does not acquire or own the property but that the respective governments purchase and acquire the property for the use of the commission. It follows as an implication of law that any improvements made upon the land so acquired by either national or by anyone else shall inure to and become the property of the party who owns the land. That, it seems to me, is highly desirable, and I congratulate the government upon having made that change in the treaty, which I consider to be of the utmost importance.

The other point is one to which too much importance cannot be attached, namely, that there shall be two members representing each of the parties affected voting on any particular question before it can be resolved at all, either favourably or unfavourably. In other words, instead of leaving it to three members of the commission from Canada, with one American commissioner, to determine a question, there must be at least two members from the United States voting affirmatively with two from Canada before there can be any final action taken. Last year such determination as I have indicated was limited in its operation. It is now applied to every feature of the treaty, and I think no thoughtful Canadian will but agree that this is highly desirable.

Then there was the question of obstructions in the river. One of the questions which we did endeavour to press in the committee was that the Fraser river ultimately would become useful for the development of a great volume of hydro electric power and that we would have grave difficulties if we gave a commission composed of three foreigners and three Canadians the power to remove obstructions in that river. That power now has been taken from the commission. All the commission can do is to recommend to the national authority, namely the government of the country, the desirability of removing the obstructions and the respective governments of the countries assume the duty. Every Canadian desirous of maintaining friendly relations with a nearby country will rejoice in this possible source of difficulty having been removed. Instead of the commission being charged with the power to remove obstructions, such removal can be made only by the government of the country upon the recommendations of the commission, thereby leaving the exercise of discretion to the government of the country whose territory may be affected. If there is any hon. member of this house who does not think that that is a distinct advantage, then I am sure he is not present this afternoon.

One other matter was referred to by the Minister of National Health (Mr. King), and one which could not have arisen had it not been that this treaty was rejected last year. That delay of nearly a year has been in the interests of Canada and I think of the United States as well. There are three distinct areas of water affected: First, the fresh water of the Fraser river; second, the coastal waters of both the United States and Canada, and third, the open sea—the Spanish banks. The jurisdiction of Canada and the United States over the last named body of water is, of course, no greater than the rights of other people. In other words, the Scandinavians may utilize those waters just as freely as do the fishing boats from Canada or the United States. The treaty gives us the privilege of police jurisdiction over our own nationals and in the exercise of that police power we can make certain that when other nations utilize these fishing banks the catch, which can be landed only in the United States or Canada, would be considered as contraband—using the word in the broadest sense—and would not be permitted to be landed. In that way the police jurisdiction would have affected the purpose intended. To remove the possibility of a difference in that regard, the language of the treaty has been modelled upon that of other treaties, and such offending vessels would be delivered to their own nationals to be dealt with according to the law of the country concerned.

I think we can approach this matter with a great deal of satisfaction, not only because the treaty is better in every sense but because it has made it more difficult for, shall I say, differences to arise between the United States authorities and our own. That is a consideration of the first importance, that the sources or possibilities of differences should be removed. I submit that the present treaty does that to a much greater extent than did the treaty submitted last year. In view of the attacks which have been so unjustly made by those who apparently do not know anything about the treaty, it can be said with pride that because of the treaty having been withdrawn last year by this government, and withdrawn by the American senate in December, a new treaty has been negotiated which removes from the field of international difficulties many causes which undoubtedly would be a source of friction in the administration of the treaty. That being so, it affords me a great deal of pleasure, in view of the opportunity I had to make suggestions to the right hon. the Prime Minister and the sense in which he received them, although somewhat at variance with the observations made to-day, to commend the government for having negotiated this treaty. I express the hope that it will be ratified by the senate of the United States at the earliest possible moment.

I agree with the observations which have been made as to the desirability of the best possible commissioners being appointed. I trust that political considerations will not influence the government in the appointment of these commissioners. The United States government has been very careful in dealing with another treaty not to permit political considerations to influence appointments, and I hope that will be the case with this treaty. If that spirit is observed in the appointment of the commissioners, we will do a great deal to bring to its full fruitfulness one of the most important and valuable industries on the Pacific coast.

It is true that the fish are spawned in Canada; it is true that they go out to sea, and it is true that when they come back fit for human food and seek again their original habitat, they pass by the territory of the United States, so that if great care were not exercised practically the whole catch would be made by them. This treaty provides that the catch shall be divided equally between the two countries, but therein lies one of the remaining sources of difficulty. How that matter will be worked out depends upon the common sense, good judgment and skill of the commissioners who it is hoped will exercise their judgment calmly, their power firmly, and their authority with discretion. When that is done I am sure that Canadians will rejoice that we have been able to secure more of the catch than has been the case heretofore, although it is clear that by reason of the fish having their birth in our country we should be entitled to at least one half.

I deprecate the efforts made by my hon. friend the Minister of National Health, and in a lesser degree by the Prime Minister, to suggest that there is a division of opinion between the premier of British Columbia and myself. They hoped, for reasons which are most obvious, to be able to capitalize that, but I hasten to assure both hon. gentlemen that any efforts they make in that regard will be fruitless and unavailing and that at the appropriate moment forces over which they have no control will be found to be allied in the future, as they have been in the past, with the party with which I am associated, for the purpose of maintaining its principles and securing a decisive victory at the polls.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That looks like politics.

Mr. BENNETT: I am answering the hon. gentleman.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MAPLE SUGAR INDUSTRY

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 59, respecting the maple sugar industry.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if the committee was unanimous in its consideration of this bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With the exception of Clause 6, to which an amendment will be offered.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Violation of provision.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In connection with this bill, may I ask the minister whether all the changes proposed by the committee in regard to the different sections are now in the amended bill?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Use of certain substances prohibited.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The differences that have existed with regard to section 6 have been harmonized in an amendment which I beg to move as follows:

6. All articles of food other than maple sugar or maple syrup offered for sale and having a maple flavour not produced by the use of maple syrup or maple sugar must be plainly marked as containing imitation maple flavour, and in the case of public eating places where articles of food so flavoured are offered the menu or bill of fare must state that the flavouring used is imitation maple flavour.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman think that is intra vires of this parliament? I have had only a moment to look at the amendment, but the Minister of Justice will remember that under the egg grading statute a conviction was quashed on the ground that the section in question was within the jurisdiction of the province and not the Dominion. I have not had time to consider this, but I presume the minister has done so and is satisfied that it is intra vires.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The department has done so.

Mr. BENNETT: One instance that has just crossed my mind is that of walnut maple ice cream; how is one going to put on a menu "imitation flavour walnut maple ice cream"? Are we not interfering with provincial matters in dealing with menus in eating places? I have grave doubts on this point.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We endeavoured to safeguard it in every possible manner.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: How much supervision is it intended to exercise over the people who produce the maple sap in the first instance?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We shall come to that a few sections further on.

Section agreed to.

Sections 7 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

On section 14.—Certificates of official analyst to be evidence.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I simply wish to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that this bill was contentious from beginning to end because of its particularly restrictive character. The members of the committee, however, in order to secure some sort of unanimity, compromised on many of the clauses. The discussion was fairly full, but there still remains some consideration of the principle, if you like, of the bill itself, and especially of the power that is to be given to the inspectors. Under the bill they are empowered to enter and inspect at will, apparently of their own volition. I do not see in the bill any clause compelling the inspector to have grounds to suspect a violation before he may enter upon premises such as a railway car, a ship, a restaurant, an hotel or anything else Surely there should be in the bill some provision that the inspector must have at least grounds to suspect that something is wrong This clause provides simply that he may enter at will.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think clause 8 gives that power.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Clause 8 reads:

Any inspector charged with the enforcement of this act shall be empowered—

(1) to enter at will and inspect any or all buildings of whatsoever character in connection with any manufacturing or packing plant, sugar camp or sugar orchard, and take samples of the maple products or any other products found therein, and to enter hotels, restaurants, retail or wholesale stores or warehouses and railway cars, trucks, boats or other conveyances where maple products or products resembling maple products are being manufactured or offered for sale or being carried or held for carriage,—

And so forth.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend think that is too much power? It is usual to have it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is meant by "at will"?

Mr. BROWN: It should be noted that the words "at will" apply only to manufacturing or packing plants, and not to hotels and restaurants.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I cannot for the life of me see where any differentiation can be made. The opening clause reads: "to enter at will" and the same clause continues to read "to enter." A lawyer can perhaps make the fine distinction.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The words "at will" apply only to the first five lines. The meaning stops before "and to enter hotels."

Section agreed to.

Section 15 agreed to.

On section 16—Regulations.

Mr. GEARY: It looks as if we are going to be so regulated and inspected that by and by we shall have no time to do anything but to be regulated and inspected.

Section agreed to.

Sections 17, 18 and 19 agreed to.

On section 20—Commencement of act.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Would the minister tell me what clause covers the extent of the supervision the department intends to exercise over the farmers and others who actually produce the maple sap?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Clause 10, dealing with manufacturing plants under paragraphs (d) and (e).

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That provides that all the minister can do is to have a sugar bush registered.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If it is registered, it is subject to inspection. We must have some supervision over the sugar bushes and the places in which the article is manufactured, so as to be sure that they are reasonably sanitary.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: All that this says is that the minister may require the sugar bush or sugar orchard to be licensed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then they will be subject to inspection.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Where does the act give that power?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In section 8, and then under section 16 we have authority to draft regulations consistent with the act prescribing the duties of inspectors.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No one realizes the importance of the maple syrup industry more than I do. I quite agree with the object of this bill to prevent spurious imitations of the genuine products, but when it comes to inspecting and regulating these little camps all over the country where the sap is being produced, I do not think it can be done satisfactorily. It is all very well to inspect large manufacturing establishments, but there are little places all over the country where maple sap is being produced, sometimes in very small quantities, and it seems to me that the minister is undertaking more than he can handle.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do not anticipate that it will be necessary to visit and inspect all these little camps, but when we receive reports of insanitary conditions or of adulteration being practised in any of these sugar camps, we will make an inspection. My hon. friend will note the procedure set out in section 10(a) and 10(b).

Mr. PECK: I had not previously had an opportunity to read through the act, but I notice that in the definitions it is stated that maple syrup may not contain more than 35 per cent of water, and a gallon of maple syrup shall weigh not less than thirteen pounds, two ounces, and shall contain 277·274 cubic inches. Then section 4 says:

Any person who sells or offers, exposes or holds in possession for sale in Canada, or ships or causes to be shipped any maple sugar or maple syrup found to be adulterated or to fail to comply with the provisions of this act or of the regulations thereunder, shall be deemed to be guilty of a violation of this act.

If the owner of a sugar bush produces a certain amount of syrup and it does not contain the exact weight prescribed by this act, he is subject to a penalty of $300. I think that is going a great deal too far. I would like to know whether my understanding of the act is right or wrong.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He must bring the quality up to the required standard. This business has been exploited by various institutions for a great many years, and this is the first attempt that has been made to regulate the industry. The restrictions have to be of such a nature that they will eliminate the abuses and protect the genuine article. That is the object of this bill. There must be some provision regarding the quality of the product.

Mr. PECK: How are these people going to tell whether the syrup they produce complies exactly with the provisions of this act or not? How are they going to test their product?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that there will be no difficulty about it. Scientists have discovered ways of testing it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am very anxious that nothing but the real article should be sold as maple sugar or maple syrup, and so far as the manufacturing plants are concerned, the provisions are all right, but when it comes to regulating and inspecting all the little places where the original maple sap is produced, I would warn the minister to go very slowly. I think it is absolutely impossible for him to inspect these places all over the country.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What would the hon. member suggest to secure the purpose that he himself says is desirable?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am in favour of this bill but I would warn the minister against interfering with those who actually produce the original article.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will go gently. We are always lenient at the start in connection with all these restrictive measures.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I can understand that the large producers want this legislation. But the adulteration very seldom takes place where the sap is produced. It takes place afterwards, and again I warn the minister against attempting to regulate the places where the sap is produced in the first instance.

[Mr. Peck.]

Mr. BENNETT: May I direct the attention of the Solicitor General to sections 16 and 17, whereby the minister is empowered once more to make regulations and promulgate them. Those who violate them are liable to be fined $300, and to be sent to gaol if they do not pay the fine. Surely we should have the regulations published in the Gazette before they become operative.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They will be.

Mr. BENNETT: Naturally, but I am talking about notice being given. The Solicitor General was good enough the other evening to accept my suggestion with respect to another bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All these regulations are published in the Gazette.

Mr. BENNETT: But I want it stated in the statute that the regulations shall only become effective so many days after they are published, so that men will not be violating the law unknowingly. I have not prepared a clause, but the Solicitor General knows the sort of clause that I think should be added here.

Mr. MANION: How many inspectors of various kinds has the department appointed since the present minister took charge of the department? Has he any idea?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No more than were absolutely necessary. These inspectors will come under the Fruit branch.

Mr. MANION: It is a question whether all the appointments were absolutely necessary or not. Year after year, ever since the minister has been minister, he has been appointing inspectors. There has never been a year when he has not had three or four bills to appoint inspectors of one thing or another. This year, owing to his health not being very good, we have escaped bills of that nature until the very end of the session. Of course, I am very glad to see that the minister's health is better, as we all are. Can he tell the committee how many inspectors he has appointed since he became Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the hon. member will ask for a return, I will try and get the information.

Mr. MANION: I am afraid that if I did the next government would have to bring it down.

Mr. KAISER: Have we had any inspectors on this particular job before?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: So far as possible the present fruit inspectional staff will take care of this work. It may require one or two more inspectors; I do not know. It will come under the fruit commissioner, whose inspectional staff already looks after two or three different classes of commodities. We are now adding maple sugar to them.

Mr. KAISER: This is essentially a question of the adulteration of food, and how does it happen to fall to the Minister of Agriculture to administer an act that should be administered by the Department of National Health?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When we get cases of adulteration of food, we submit them to the Department of National Health for analysis.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is there any recognized organization of producers of this product in the province of Ontario?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not that I know of in Ontario.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then the minister has no official representations from the producer in Ontario with respect to the subject matter of this bill. Is there an oganization of that nature in Quebec?

An hon. MEMBER: Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And have they made representations asking for legislation of this kind?

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It seems to me that the troubles in the past have come, not from the producer but from those who purchase the product and then manipulate, adulterate and misrepresent it to the public. This legislation, I think, bears too severely on the producers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think not. My hon. friend will notice that there is not even any fee charged.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is not a matter of fee; the financial end of it is all right. But the farmer with a hundred trees in his bush must apply to the minister for a licence before he can make or sell his product.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If he exports or sells it in interprovincial trade, but not otherwise.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If he sells to a man who is going to export it, he will have to live up to these conditions. So the effect of this bill goes right back to the producer. He will have to comply with its provisions, otherwise his prospective purchaser will not take the product.

Mr. BROWN: He would not take it anyway if he did not consider it came up to the proper standard.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): But the intending purchaser has the opportunity of inspecting the product. That gets me back to the point that the troubles in the past have not been with the producer at all but with the purchaser who manipulates and adulterates the product. Yet you are imposing on the producer handicaps and restrictions that are going to be very grievous and I think you will hear from those affected.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will have to suffer, but they will not.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not think the minister will have to suffer at all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If we put through any foolish legislation we will naturally suffer.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You have always a chance to change it as you did the New Zealand treaty.

Mr. PECK: Section 4 provides that any person who sells or offers, exposes or holds in possession for sale in Canada maple sugar or maple syrup not complying with the standards prescribed by this bill shall be deemed to be guilty of a violation of the act. Any small farmer with a few gallons of maple syrup is forbidden to sell it unless it stands the test set out in the bill. How is the small producer going to test his syrup by these standards?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand there is a little instrument in use called a densimeter that registers the density of the syrup.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister's deputy say that every producer has one of these densimeters?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, but every considerable one has.

Mr. TUMMON: How far does that go "every considerable one"? A farmer with fifty trees may make a certain amount of syrup for his own use and sell a few gallons to a neighbour or to a town nearby, and he will be subject to these regulations.

Mr. COTNAM: Are the small producers to be subject to all these regulations?

Mr MOTHERWELL: I think the complaint is that the owners of small sugar bushes will not be able to get the proper analysis of their syrup in order to protect themselves. As far as that is concerned, under the regulations of the Department of Public Health sugars have to be of a certain quality to comply with the food laws. There is no change in that respect whatever.

Mr. COTNAM: But the reference is to the small producer who makes sixty or seventy gallons of maple syrup, uses a small quantity for himself and sells the surplus. Are all these regulations to be inflicted on him?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Has my hon. friend any suggestion to make superior to this? We have been working on this bill for two or three years before the agricultural committee, but we are still open to suggestions.

Mr. KAISER: Could the minister give us some idea of the number of inspectors he will require?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will need only three or four in addition to the fruit inspectors that we already have.

Mr. TUMMON: I may be living alongside another farmer who taps a hundred trees in the spring. He makes four or five gallons of maple syrup more than he needs for his own use. Could he sell that surplus to me or to another neighbour without coming under this bill?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. COTNAM: Suppose we go a little further, suppose the farmer brings his surplus maple syrup to a neighbouring market, will he be subject to these regulations?

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. COTNAM: Do you not think that is going to work a hardship?

Mr. CANNON: They have to sell pure syrup anyway.

Mr. COTNAM: They are selling pure syrup.

Mr. CANNON: Then they will not be bothered.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read a third time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL moved the third reading of the bill.

[Mr. Cotnam.]

Mr. BENNETT: As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, an effort will be made in another place to ensure that the regulations do not become effective until the expiration of some days at least after they have been promulgated in the Canada Gazette.

Mr. CANNON: I assure my hon. friend that that will be looked after.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General) moved the second reading of Bill No. 13, to amend the Representation Act.

He said: Before the house decides whether or not we should go into committee I wish to point out to the house that it is the intention of the government when we reach the committee stage to delete from the bill as it now stands sections 1, 2 and 3, and in connection with section 4 we would leave the first paragraph and delete the remainder. In explanation may I say that we would like to pass the bill now, taking from it anything in connection with the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, but giving the Dominion franchise to the people who inhabit the mining area in the territory of Patricia, and that that mining area, which is wholly within the province of Ontario and the citizens of which vote at provincial elections, would be entitled to vote at Dominion elections in the district of Kenora-Rainy River. The other sections of Patricia would be left as they are at the present time. That is they would not be attached or annexed to the adjoining constituencies, because I understand that there the population is not very considerable. We will attach the one section to Kenora-Rainy River because it is a mining area where several hundred electors, who vote at provincial elections, live, and we would like to give them the same privilege for the federal election.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, a more barefaced, iniquitous piece of political legislation has never been placed before this House of Commons in the dying hours of a session; never. No part of the province of Ontario exists which is not within an electoral district at this moment. The object of this legislation is to take from one electoral district a small area and give it to another for the benefit of the Minister of Labour, because there were a few votes given in favour of a candidate whom he supported at the last provincial election.

Mr. CANNON: Surely my hon. friend wishes to be fair. This territory of Patricia is not within any constituency, and it is actually unorganized.

Mr. BENNETT: Part of it is.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend says that I want to take a section which is in one constituency and attach it to another.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: This territory is unorganized and the proposed legislation does not amount to bold robbery. I explained frankly to my hon. friend what we intend to do. Our object is to give the franchise to people who live there, and to people who want to have it. There is no robbery in that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They will not vote anyway.

Mr. CANNON: The provincial government gives them a franchise. Why should we deny them what the Ferguson government gives them?

Mr. BENNETT: The point is that the Northwest Territories of Canada have been given representation in this house only with regard to that part which constitutes the district of Yukon, and no other part.

Mr. CANNON: But this is in Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT: I will come to that. A portion of this territory—

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is provincial territory.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. The Northwest Territories are without any province; this district is within a province, and every part of the province belongs to an electoral district.

Mr. CANNON: No, not if it is unorganized.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not matter whether it is organized or not.

Mr. CANNON: It certainly does.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no part of the province of Ontario which is not within an electoral district.

Mr. CANNON: Yes, certainly, Patricia is not.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no part of the province of Ontario under the constitution which is not within an electoral district.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will my hon. friend say whether those people are entitled to a vote?

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the Minister of Justice knows that the province of Ontario is divided into 82 electoral districts; every acre of land in Ontario is comprised in those districts.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my hon. friend is right this is absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But I think he is wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: Let it stand, then.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will drop it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Where is the political iniquity, if they already have the right to vote?

Mr. BENNETT: The political iniquity would be in taking from one constituency—

Mr. CANNON: We know.

Mr. BENNETT: Every part of Ontario is in some constituency.

Mr. CANNON: Surely my hon. friend is not serious.

Mr. BENNETT: The Solicitor General knows very well that the constitution of this country provides that the province of Quebec shall have 65 members in the federal house, and under the constitutional arrangement the province of Ontario has 82. My hon. friend did not look into the Representation Act. I have investigated this matter with extraordinary care, but not in connection with this particular bill. The map clearly shows, and the Representation Act makes it clear, that no part of the province can be excluded from some electoral district. That is the position in respect to it.

Mr. CANNON: In view of the stand taken by the leader of the opposition, although I do not admit that this bill represents anything of an inquitous nature, I am satisfied that it should be dropped. Apparently the hon. gentleman considers that this is a contentious measure.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I certainly do.

Mr. CANNON: In view of that fact the government is satisfied to drop it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my hon. friend is right all those people will vote somewhere.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member have leave to withdraw the bill?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Motion withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDERS WITHDRAWN—EXPEDITING BUSINESS IN ANTICIPATION OF PROROGATION AND ELECTIONS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are some bills on the order paper which, as I said last night, are likely to be contentious, and with them we shall not proceed. It was thought that when the Solicitor General had made an explanation in connection with the last bill there might be no objection. However, as strong objection has been taken, the bill has been dropped. I am advised also that there will be some contention in regard to item No. 12 on the order paper respecting Bill No. 56, an Act to amend the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act. Under the circumstances I ask for the consent of this house to have this bill also dropped.

Mr. BENNETT: May I say to the right hon. gentleman that the only point raised the other day was as to whether or not the provinces affected had expressed their desire that this legislation should be passed. I am advised that officials in one of the provinces thought it should not be, and as a result the minister is in doubt as to whether he should proceed with it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My purpose is to shorten as much as possible the present proceedings.

I direct the attention of the house to item No. 15, under government orders, the second reading of Bill No. 36, an act to amend the Government Harbours and Piers Act. I have been told that this bill may occasion controversy, and I ask for unanimous consent to drop it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

M. MACKENZIE KING: I direct the attention of the house to item No. 16, under government orders, the second reading of Bill No. 37, an act to amend the Copyright Act. This is a cumbersome piece of legislation and is contentious in many respects. If my hon. friends will agree, it also will be dropped.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite agreeable.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have only one other matter before me; I refer to item No. 17 on the order paper, a resolution respecting the Government Employees Compensation Act. I am told that there is likely to be some controversy in connection with this resolution, and it had better therefore be left over for another session. In the circustances I ask for permission to drop it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. BENNETT: I am not informed as to the details of this resolution, but I assume the statement of the Prime Minister is correct.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would suggest that the house do now go into committee of supply. At this point, I think I should say a word to the house with respect to the present position of the order paper. We have now completely cleared the order paper of all business except what remains of supply to be voted. It is true that there is still a considerable amount of supply to be considered, and I realize hon. gentlemen opposite are anxious that no supply should be granted that should not be granted and that they should have ample opportunity to discuss the different items. Every facility has been offered by members on all sides towards enabling the government to reach the point where it may be possible to prorogue not later than to-morrow night. I realize that if we are to prorogue not later than to-morrow night there will have to be some further and final agreement between members in all parts of the house to make that possible. What I am now about to say is with the object of enabling every hon. member to see the situation as it actually is, with its important bearing on present and future matters which will have to be very carefully considered.

First of all, I have heard to-day from different sources that there was a rumour abroad that the government intended, if we did not complete supply by to-morrow evening, to ask His Excellency to dissolve parliament notwithstanding.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think anyone took that seriously.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was going to say that if anyone took it seriously he could dismiss the idea at once. There is no thought of that kind in the mind of the government and there has never been any such thought. I stated at the outset that I hoped it would be possible for us to bring the proceedings of parliament to a speedy determination in an orderly fashion; that has been done up to the present, I think, in a remarkably orderly way, and I hope will so continue until the close. As hon. members know the government has desired to bring on the election as soon after prorogation as may be possible, for this reason amongst others: The period required between the issue of the writs and the day of polling is two months, and that is a long time. It was about a month ago, or rather, to be exact, near the beginning of this month, that I announced to the house and to the country that there would be a general election this year and that dissolution would take place immediately after prorogation. The effect of that announcement has been that ever since we have had the campaign proceeding to quite a considerable extent outside of this house. If we are to have the election by July 28, which is the date on which the government has hoped it may be possible to hold it, it will be necessary to effect prorogation to-morrow night. If we do not manage that it is just possible that by some special arrangement it might still be within the power of the chief electoral officer to arrange for steps to be taken which will permit of prorogation on Saturday, but that at the present moment is not certain.

Mr. BENNETT: I think not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At all events, we should err on the side of safety. If we do not prorogue to-morrow night then, as I explained on a previous occasion, the election cannot take place until the eleventh of August, for the reason that under the Elections Act the election must be on a Monday and the first Monday in August is a public holiday throughout the province of Ontario, a civic holiday in most localities. Everyone agrees that it would not be wise to have an election on that day. The alternative to having the election on July 28 is to have it on August 11. May I say that so far as the country is concerned, the business interests of the country in particular, I feel sure they would greatly prefer that the election be brought on in July rather than in August. An electoral contest until it is over is an unsettling business, and as I have said we have been carrying on an election campaign now nearly a month. If that is to be extended another two months and then for a further two weeks beyond that time, it will mean that something like three and a half months, or over a quarter of the year, will have been taken up in electioneering. I do not believe hon. members themselves desire to have the campaign carried on for that length of time, and I feel perfectly certain that the country will feel that if such a condition can be reasonably avoided it should be done by having the election at the earlier date. Another factor which I think is important to consider is that an election on August 11 will bring us into the period of harvesting in the west and in other parts of the country; that, I believe, would be considered unfortunate as far as the western provinces and other parts of the Dominion are concerned.

However, in the opinion of the government, there is another reason which I feel I ought to make very clear to the house why we should make every effort—and it will have to be by general agreement—to prorogue immediately. It is this: The whole purpose of bringing on the election at an early date has been to enable Canada to be represented at the Imperial conference and the Imperial economic conference which open in London on September 30. My hon. friend at the beginning of the session expressed the view that whatever government was representing Canada at the time of the Imperial conferences should have a mandate from the people which would permit its ministers to speak in the name of the country at these conferences. I think in that particular he is entirely right and in that the country will agree with him.

Mr. BENNETT: I hope so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I point out that it is going to be difficult, no matter what may be the outcome of the election, for Canada to be as well prepared for these very important conferences as she should be. There are one or two possibilities as to the outcome of a contest. The present administration may be returned; I hope it may. I will not go further than that at the moment, but if it is returned, I know from some experience of previous conferences and what they mean that it is going to take some little time properly to prepare for their proceedings. The ministers who are to attend, and the officials who will go with them, will need as much time as they possibly can get, especially after a general election, to enable them to have the work in such shape that Canada can be represented satisfactorily.

There is another possibility, which I hope is not going to be realized; that is that my hon. friend opposite may be returned to power. May I say that should he be returned to power he and the members of his administration will find the task of being in readiness for those conferences still more difficult. There will be the necessity of by-elections, but there will be also the problem of forming a government and becoming familiar with the matters to be taken up at the conferences. I imagine little enough time will be permitted even under these circumstances, but there is a third possibility, which is that there may be some uncertainty as to the results of the election itself. May I say that I very much hope that that will not happen, but if it should happen—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It will happen.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING.—that there is any uncertainty as to which party commands the confidence of the electors, then I would feel it necessary to ask His Excellency to summon parliament immediately in order to decide that question before any representation of Canada was made at the conferences. I do not believe that any other course would meet with the approval of hon. gentlemen opposite; certainly in such circumstances no other course would enable an administration to say that it had a mandate from the electors to represent Canada at the conferences. If we are to provide for that possible contingency it must be remembered that it takes something like forty days after the day of polling at a general election before the last of the writs is likely to be returned; at least some such length of time has been the period in the past. It would in case of uncertainty take a day or two after the elections to know what the final result would be, and in case of any uncertainty as I have just said there would be the necessity of summoning parliament. Then there would be the time required for the procedure essential to the opening of parliament, and the time likely to be involved in the discussion which would follow, and in any such contingency I venture to say it will prove impossible, unless we prorogue to-morrow night, to have Canada represented at the conferences in September. If we are to have the elections on August 11, then it must be understood that in the event of there being any uncertainty in the results, parliament will be reconvened, but equally that there can be no representation of Canada at the conferences until they are well under way with their proceedings.

These facts can be verified for themselves by hon. gentlemen. I have brought this matter before the house because I realize that hon. gentlemen opposite have it in their power to prevent prorogation to-morrow night. I wish to be scrupulously fair in this matter. The government has no desire to withhold discussion on any of the estimates. As I stated a few days ago, the estimates have been before parliament for two or three months and if there are any features which hon. members wish to have discussed, the government will bring those forward immediately so that they will not be left until the last minute. The government is prepared to bring forward the estimates for the purposes of discussion, in any order which my hon. friend and the leader of the Progressive group (Mr. Gardiner) may suggest. We shall do that in order to ensure that matters in which hon. members are specially interested shall be discussed at once. While I realize that there may not be an opportunity for the full discussion which hon. members might desire should take place, it must be agreed that the present situation is a little different from what would apply to any other session of parliament. The government has it within its power to carry the estimates, and I think they will be carried no matter how long we take in discussion. If my hon. friend should be returned to power, I am sure that he will be very glad that we have carried them because he will find they are all necessary. However, the opportunity will be afforded for the next few months of discussion before the people, and I think that that should serve any purpose which would be served by additional discussion here.

Let me repeat, as a government we are, as respects the dates of prorogation and of the elections, in the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite. If we cannot conclude to-morow night, then the elections will take place, I hope not later than August 11, but certainly not before that date. If we prorogue to-morrow night, the intention of the government is to ask His Excellency for an immediate dissolution of parliament and to have the elections on July 28.

In the preparation of the supplementary estimates the administration has been careful to endeavour to exercise economy and discretion in what we have recommended to the house. It will be seen that care has been taken not to include items which might be regarded as having been included for political purposes. We have tried to keep the supplementary estimates as to purposes and amounts in a form which would commend itself to the house generally. Let me repeat, if any arrangement is to be arrived at as between the different parties in the house it can only be by cooperation on the part of all. In so far as the government is concerned we will do all that is within our power to further that cooperation.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER: On Thursdays I leave the chair without question put for the house to go into committee of supply, but following the remarks made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), I think it is only fair that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) should be permitted to speak.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was quite content to make the observations I desire to make after you left the chair, but I rose only to say that I proposed to make a few remarks. The Prime Minister in his observations this afternoon indicated that a situation had been reached when we should decide whether the estimates that are before the house should be carefully and faithfully considered in detail or we should endeavour to secure prorogation by to-morrow night in order that dissolution may follow and a general election be held on the 28th of July. I cannot but think it desirable under our form of government that every possible opportunity should be taken by those who constitute an opposition or who sit in opposition to a government, to analyse its expenditures for the purpose of ascertaining just what the administration proposes to do with the money raised by the taxation of the people of the country. It is idle to say that on the hustings there can be a discussion of the causes for the expenditures. It is because of this fact that when supply is being granted, we ask questions, sometimes embarrassing for those who have to answer, for the purpose of ascertaining just how the country's business is being transacted. We can do that only in supply as our institution now exists. The right hon. gentleman, in his all-too-brief, but what let us hope, will be more extended, experience in opposition, will remember that he regarded it as important that he should study expenditures and criticize the attitude of administrations with respect to them. That after all, has been the duty of an opposition since the party system first began to develop. In other words, with the airing of grievances preceding supply, when the house goes into committee of supply for the purpose of determining what expenditures shall be made, it has a right to inquire and usually does inquire with great care as to how the money is proposed to be spent. That opportunity will not be afforded to the house if it prorogues to-morrow night.

On the other hand, as the Prime Minister has said, there may be in each of the departments certain large contemplated expenditures about which it may be possible to obtain information. I think the Prime Minister has, perhaps with some reluctance, reduced the demands in the supplementary estimates of those who sit behind him. At least, knowing human nature as I do, I think it would be very strange if he had not, and I can readily understand he experienced some difficulty in that regard, for the supplementary estimates, although amounting to $11,000,000, of which $2,500,000 represents a number of items from the Auditor General's report and governor general warrants, have been reduced by, I should think, about 500 per cent from what the hon. gentleman was asked to accede to. To that extent he has endeavoured to reduce to a minimum the causes for discussion and dispute.

Mr. MANION: There is a further supplementary of $9,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: The amount was $20,000,000 altogether, but of that amount $9,000,000 arises in connection with legislation which the house has unanimously adopted. I think that is a fair way to put the matter.

I am not unmindful of the fact that business is in some respects dislocated during a period of a general election, but that is usually so when elections are held in days of buoyant revenues and large favourable balances of trade. Under existing conditions, however, which have been brought about by my hon. friends opposite, a little more difficulty in business because of an election will perhaps not be so perceptible. At any rate I think that is so. While we desire, as I have said, to criticize many of these items; while in fact there is one department alone regarding which I think the public interest would be well served if we took a week in discussing its estimates; in view of the position taken by the administration; in view of the provisions of the Elections Act necesitating a contest being held on a Monday—the act might have been amended if it had been done early enough, but certainly it could not be amended as the matter stands now because the whole machinery of the act is predicated upon an election being held on a given day of the week and all the computations of time are made from that date—in view of the possible effect upon business, and in view of the very earnest desire there is on this side of the house that this administration should be replaced at the earliest possible moment, we will continue to the best of our ability to expedite the business of the country; and unless some unforeseen circumstance arises or some revelations of startling character appear when the ministers indicate what they propose to do with the people's money, we shall be glad to assist the government in bringing about the prorogation of parliament tomorrow. That is the best that we can do under the circumstances.

I think that the right hon. gentleman will say that since we first discussed the matter we have endeavoured to the best of our ability to expedite the business of this parliament. We had hoped that by so doing there would be a greater opportunity afforded for the discussion of the estimates; but I warn hon. gentlemen opposite that if they go to their constituencies and say that the opposition have acceded to all the expenditures that the government proposed, unnecessary though some of them may be, they will be confronted with the observations of their own Prime Minister this afternoon, who indicated that discussion of the estimates in detail would not be possible if dissolution of this parliament were to take place to-morrow. So choosing, as we do, dissolution rather than detailed discussion of the estimates, we will to the best of our ability assist in bringing about that end.

I do not know that I can usefully add anything further except to say that the views of those who sit to your left, Mr. Speaker, and who a few short weeks ago expressed their earnest desire for an early opportunity to present to the people of this country their views upon political matters, have been greatly confirmed by what has transpired since in their opinion of the insincerity and instability of the administration, and hope that the people may have an early opportunity to pronounce judgment upon a body of men who are no longer fit to govern the country.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I have taken the opportunity of consulting with my colleagues with regard to the possibility of proroguing to-morrow. In view of the fact that the date of the Imperial conference had been set, I think it would have been better if the Prime Minister had called parliament earlier; for we were two weeks later in meeting this year than in recent years. There was also the possibility of an election before the Imperial conference, and in view of those circumstances it might have been better not to have had such a long recess at Easter. Remembering also that this house has accepted the proposal from this corner that some of the more important estimates should go to a committee of this house, a lot of the time of the house might have been saved if the wishes of the house in that respect had been carried out this session, and an opportunity would then have been given to discuss the more important estimates thoroughly. There are a few items in the estimates which my colleagues wish to discuss, but in view of the statements of the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we shall do our best to expedite the business of the house so that we may prorogue to-morrow.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I feel I should say to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and to my hon. friend the leader of the progressive group, speaking on behalf of the government, that we appreciate the manner in which they have cooperated with us in helping to bring the session to a speedy termination. Throughout there has been disclosed a willingness to cooperate towards that end, and I wish to express appreciation of it.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the three single leaders of this house mean in their references to the general agreement between the parties of this house, when there are still a few men left who are free to express their views without being commanded by anybody, and without being directed by a party leader or subject to party discipline.

Mr. QUINN: Did you consult your followers?

Mr. BOURASSA: Oh yes. I am in the happy position that I can speak in the name of the leader of my party, in the name of the whip and of all the inside and outside supporters. I can therefore always express the unanimous opinion of this party to you, Mr. Speaker.

There is a good deal in what the leader of the progressive party (Mr. Gardiner) has said. Everybody knew that there was to be an Imperial conference this fall. Everybody expected that there was to be a general election this year. I therefore agree with the leader of the progressive group that the government might have called parliament at an earlier date. On previous occasions I have pointed out the habit which governments, in this and other countries, but especially in this free and democratic country, have developed of late years of deciding matters altogether according to their own individual convenience without consulting the desire of parliament or even of the country. On the other hand, I agree with the three single gentlemen that the people are expecting at this juncture to have a dissolution of parliament as early as possible, and to have the political situation settled by an expression of public opinion. It has been stated that this parliament should be dissolved now in order that our delegates might go to the Imperial conference with a popular mandate behind them. That is the most serious reason, I think. On the other hand, it should be made clear once for all that the desirability of meeting the representatives of other portions of the British Empire at the Imperial conference should not come before the interests of this country. The first duty of the government is to the parliament of Canada, and the first duty of the parliament of Canada is to the people of Canada. Especially with such a program as we have, I think it would have been useful for the people to have had a more thorough examination both of the budget and of the estimates, and especially of the budget. But let that pass. I think we should do our best to make it possible to prorogue to-morrow in order that we may have an election in the month of July. At the same time it should be made quite clear that the manner in which the estimates are voted in this house is entirely unsatisfactory, and whatever party is in power after this election, I hope that some means will be taken to prevent hours and days and weeks of discussion of trivial matters, and then the voting of millions of dollars in a few hours under the pretence that we are in a hurry and that this matter or that matter which is entirely outside the necessities of the situation demand an immediate decision. Parliament is primarily constituted to vote subsidies, and the primary duty of members of parliament is to examine every item in the estimates so as to be able to render an account to the people they represent and to the people of Canada at large. I rose, and it is not the first time since I have been in this parliament, to protest against the manner in which the money of the people, because after all it is the people who pay for these expenditures, is disposed of by their representatives who are supposed to be here to look after the public interest.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Amount to be paid to the Department of Justice, to be disbursed by and accounted for to it, for secret preventive service: amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act, $60,000.

To provide for the administration of the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, and the Income War Tax Act, 1917, and amendments thereof, and authority for this purpose to create positions and make appointments notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed are hereby wholly excluded from the operation of the said act, and salary of $8,000 for the Commissioner of Income Tax, $2,200,000.

To hereby provide, notwithstanding anything in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to A. C. Lacouvee, special customs excise officer grade 2, on the preventive service staff of the Department of National Revenue of an amount at the rate of $500 per annum to commence from July 1, 1930, and to continue thereafter until the death of the annuitant, $500.—Total, $14,114,952.

Mr. BENNETT: What about the information we were to get last evening?

Mr. EULER: I have the information here for my hon. friend. I will hand it to him.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports of the Dominion—further amount required for salaries of additional officers employed on account of institution of the eight-hour day, $677,000.

To provide for payments to Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle and Nash for services in connection with work arising from reports of the special committee and royal commission and in connection with special tax investigations, $3,000.—Total, $680,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that for the eight-hour day?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister explain it?

Mr. EULER: $3,000 of this supplementary item is to provide for payments to Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle and Nash; otherwise the vote is for the eight-hour day.

Mr. BENNETT: Is provision made for some overtime also?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Item agreed to.

MINES AND GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

For explorations, surveys and investigations, wages of explorers, topographers and others, $230,000.

For publication of English and French editions of reports, maps, illustrations, etc., $60,000.

For maintenance of offices and museum, expenses of special exhibitions pertaining to natural resources, purchase of books of reference, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $65,000.

For museum equipment, $15,000.

For purchase of specimens, $3,000.—Total, $373,000.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): In Ontario Mr. T. L. Tanton is engaged in completing the one-mile geological mapping of the Michipicoten quadrangle; examination of mineral occurrences in Deroche township; completion of geographical and geological survey of Shebandowan one-mile quadrangle; revision of part of Manitou four mile sheet. Mr. H. M. Bannerman at Woman River is engaged on conclusion of geographical and geological mapping of Horwood one-mile quadrangle. Mr. A. G. Haultain at Sudbury is engaged in a continuation of topographical mapping of portions of four one-mile quadrangles that include the Sudbury nickel irruptive, adjoining railway lines and power developments. Mr. W. H. Collins and Mr. T. C. Phemister, also at Sudbury, are engaged in continuation of geological mapping of Copper Cliff one-mile quadrangle. Mr. H. N. Spence at Rabbit lake, Wanapitei and Michipicoten is engaged on: control surveys for geographical map of Rabbit lake one-mile quadrangle; control surveys for geographical map of east half of Wanapitei one-mile quadrangle; control surveys for geographical map of Gargantua one-mile quadrangle. Mr. T. T. Quirke at Parry Sound is engaged in: completion of geological mapping of one-mile quadrangle between latitudes 45° 15′ and 45° 30′, and longitudes 79° 30′-80° 00′; commencement of similar work in quadrangle adjoining on the west.

Mr. MacLAREN: Does that include the topographical survey?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, the geological survey.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Do peat operations come under this vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: But the main expenses are paid out of this vote, I take it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, we have only $1,000 voted to take care of the situation at Alfred this year. The peat operations have ceased for the past two years, as my hon. friend knows. We have not been able to arrive at a settlement with Peat Fuels Limited. The plant was in shape to manufacture peat, but we did not feel warranted in going into a commercial enterprise. The dispute was referred to the exchequer court; judgment was given the other day, but I have not the details.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the result?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed by the assistant deputy that the judgment is practically for the amount of our claim; although I believe it is not given in definite figures.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is the plant idle at this time?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, the plant has not been operating.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Has the minister concluded he made a mistake going on with those operations? I think we talked about it in the house several times. He was only experimenting; it was all right to spend a little money, but there should have been no attempt to make it on a commercial basis until he knew how it was going to turn out.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The dispute as to what amount the company should pay the government for the time the plant was being operated by us and being put into shape has deterred the company and the department from operating the plant. However, Mr. Stinson, who seems to be the moving spirit in Peat Fuels Limited, has expressed the desire to go on. I think he intends ultimately to have his plans mature, and to operate this plant in conjunction with others.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does he think it can be operated successfully?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He did not want to pay the government what we thought it should have.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does he think it can be made a commercial success?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He claims it can.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is he running any other plant at this time?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think he is operating any plant. There is one plant in which he appears to be interested, and his statement to me is to the effect that a combination of the two would make a more profitable operation.

Mr. DICKIE: I see before me an item for the purchase of specimens. May I suggest the advisability of securing the true specimen of a free trader before the genus becomes extinct in Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I may explain to my hon. friend that they are not found by geologists.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister tell us how much has been spent altogether on this peat bog?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed by the assistant deputy minister that $300,000 has been spent. I wish my hon. friend to understand that I am speaking from memory. That amount has been spent by the Ontario and federal governments. Since we have operated alone we have spent $150,000. That figure is authentic, but I am speaking from memory about the first amount.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Did my hon. friend mention the sum of $150,000?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is an acknowledgment of the fact that the minister, despite the advice he received, pursued his course and wasted that amount of money.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, I would not say that. At this time I do not wish to get into an argument with my hon. friend, but to put it shortly I would not say it was wasted. I do not think any sum of money spent on experiments can be said to have been wasted.

Item agreed to.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

|---|---|
| Salaries: | |
| Administrative | $1,056,000 |
| Insurance | 40,000 |
| Hospitals and clinics | 1,750,000 |

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am not going to devote as much time to this matter as I had intended, but there are two or three things I should like to draw to the attention of the hon. minister. At the present time there are a number of ex-service men in certain hospitals, and these men are being requested by officials of the department to sign over their pensions, whether they be old age pensions or any other kind, and to go to the old people's home at Ste. Anne de Bellevue.

Mr. KING: (Kootenay): No; the men are not requested to give up their pensions. As my hon. friend knows, the man who is entitled to pension for disability is given pay and allowance. Then there is the man who comes under the non-pensionable disability class who is a pensioner, and does not receive pay and allowance. Then we have a class of returned soldiers who come in and receive treatment. Is that the class to which my hon. friend is referring?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No. I have before me at least three letters, and the letters contain the information that they have been asked to sign over their pensions and go to the old people's home at Ste. Anne de Bellevue. The three letters contain practically the same information, and state the fact that the same request has been made in each case.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I know of no such cases. I shall be pleased to look into the matter if my hon. friend will give me the correspondence he has in his possession.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It sometimes happens that when these hospital cases make complaints they do not thereafter receive the same treatment.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): What is that?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I shall give these names to the minister and ask him to investigate the complaint.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Very well.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is another matter I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. There has been quite a bit of complaint from Christie Street hospital in Toronto that the men receive the attention of the doctors only when the doctors are free from golf; that they go up for examination and wait in the room there until it pleases the doctor to finish his game of golf. I think someone should bring these complaints to the attention of the minister or the condition will continue. I know the minister is sympathetic, and if he wishes to do something to help the ex-service men he will bring this complaint to the attention of the doctors. Time and attention must be given to these ex-service men, yet it is a very common complaint—it has been made to me many times—that the men wait there for hours while the doctors who are on full or on part time are playing golf. Hours should be set and the doctors should be there when examinations are called.

Mr. ARTHURS: Before the minister answers, I have a case in point along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Kingston. A man was in Christie Street hospital—according to his statement, which I believe to be correct—for twelve days, and he stood in line there hour after hour waiting for a chest examination. Eventually he was turned back and sent home without having been given any examination, X-ray or otherwise. I would think that was simply on account of the negligence of the doctors, because this man was sent down as a case for examination.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not want to complain, but I think it is rather unfair to bring up these matters now. If hon. members had this knowledge previously surely it should have been submitted to the department. I cannot believe that men are held up at Christie Street hospital while the doctors are out playing golf. My information is that these men go on duty certain hours of the day and are continuously on duty during that period. I shall be very glad to look into the case suggested, but surely information of that kind should be transmitted to the department so that these things can be remedied. I am glad my hon. friend has brought the matter to my attention; I shall be able to advise him in regard to the case of which he speaks.

Mr. ARTHURS: I might tell the minister that this complaint has been submitted to his department but received no attention.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have still another complaint. Perhaps the minister may not be responsible for this one, but at least he can bring it to the attention of the Board of Pension Commissioners. There is a great neglect of orphans. The position is this, that once an orphan reaches the age of sixteen he is immediately struck off the pension list, although there is a regulation which provides that if that orphan is attending college or going to school the pension may be continued. I think before the orphan is struck off the list some investigation should be made. I know children who have practically had to leave school because the mother did not know this regulation was in the act. I think it would be only a small favour to grant that before a child is struck off the list the question should be asked whether or not that child is attending school, and if the child is attending school the pension should be continued. There are cases where the father has been killed and the mother dies and leaves one or two children. I think it is the duty of the Board of Pension Commissioners to look up these cases and see how they are provided for. I have come across three cases where no care was taken; the children were simply struck off and had to be cared for in one case by an aunt and in another by an uncle. I think it is only a very small thing that before these orphans are struck off the list, the department or the Board of Pension Commissioners should look them up, and I submit that suggestion without any further remarks.

[Mr. Arthurs.]

Then there is another and perhaps rather more serious complaint about which I am sure the minister has knowledge. There is a situation at present down at the Plaza building where a certain employee is making use of his position there for political purposes. I have had three cases where applicants for pensions have come here, and as they made their applications and came into the other office, they fell into the hands of this employee who said, "Here, you put your case in the hands of the defeated Liberal candidate, and he will see that you get your pension." I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is going on openly to-day, and I am sure the minister knows the person who is doing it. It is well known to employees of the department and if the minister cares to have us do so we will give him the names of the applicants and the particulars of the case referred by this official to his Liberal friends. We are trying to keep out of this thing; we have a committee which deals with that work and which is non-political, but the sooner the minister gets rid of an official of this kind the better for himself and for the country.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I might say to my hon. friend that certainly it is my desire to have no officials of that kind around the department. Since I have been there, and I think since the department has been established, the desire of the minister and of the officials generally has been to keep the matter out of politics. I know that has been my desire at all times. I shall be glad to have the information to which my hon. friend has referred.

In regard to the children now under the care of the pension board, I shall be glad to bring the remarks of my hon. friend to the attention of the board. There is a provision in the act whereby the pension may be extended beyond the age of sixteen, and in many cases I know that action has been taken. In fact, in some cases the pension has been extended I think beyond the age of twenty, where the child showed exceptional capabilities at school and had a certificate from the superintendent. I shall be glad to bring this matter to the attention of the board. I quite agree with my hon. friend that there is no reason why the commissioners should not make inquiry as to the condition of the children.

Mr. ARTHURS: There are certain departments of the government whose duty it is to exercise after-care with respect to immigrants coming to this country. I would think it far more essential that the Department of Pensions and National Health should exercise after-care with regard to orphans, but so far there has been nothing done along these lines We do not want to delay these items, but we could cite many glaring instances if it were necessary.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Kingston has brought up a matter which I regard as being of some importance, and the hon. member will give the minister the name in the case, which it is unnecessary to mention here. I am sure the minister will agree that if a soldier wrote a letter addressed to the Minister of Pensions and National Health and received no reply from him but received a communication from the defeated Liberal candidate in his constituency, there is something wrong.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes I would say there is something wrong if that is the way it happened. I do not know any case of that kind, myself. I try to reply personally to the soldier correspondents I have, but there are times when I am away and cannot do that. An application for pension naturally would be referred to the board for action.

Mr. BENNETT: He applied for a form.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That letter should have been sent to the pension board.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and National Health—unemployment relief, $250,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Could the minister give me any information as to the amount spent on unemployment relief last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, $517,947.

Mr. MALONEY: Where was that unemployment relief distributed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That question was answered the other day and a statement of detailed expenditures will be found in Hansard. I will have it looked up for my hon. friend and send it to him.

Mr. MALONEY: I am quite certain that the money was not expended in Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan or British Columbia.

Item agreed to.

Federal appeal board, $130,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Certain chest cases are being treated in the Vancouver hospital and they find the weather at certain times of the year to be quite damp. A request has been made for treatment at some point further inland where the weather would be drier. There are two cases of cancer who claim that they have been recommended for treatment by radium but this has been refused by the department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Are those at Vancouver?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No, one case is in Ontario. They claim that the treatment has been refused although recommended by the doctors. I do not know whether or not the department has adopted this attitude because of the expense. I asked a question of the minister if an order in council had been passed in this connection and he answered, no. I sent that answer to one of these cases and he replied that that had been the reason given for the refusal of treatment.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know the case to which my hon. friend is referring. If the pensioner were within reach of an institution where such treatment could be given, I would be inclined to say that treatment should be given. Radium has not been installed in our hospitals and I do not think it would be wise for us to undergo that expense. However, I would be prepared to use the facilities available in Toronto, Montreal and the other cities of Canada if it is found that the pensioners require such treatment.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister will consider these chest cases at Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A change is often made at the request of the man. Sometimes a man will want a transfer from the interior to Vancouver, and such transfers are made from time to time.

Mr. COTNAM: I hold in my hand the report of the work done by the Department of Pensions and National Health, and I would like to know who is primarily responsible for the preparation of this report, and if the minister endorses the statements made therein.

Mr. KING (Kootenty): Yes, I do.

Mr. COTNAM: I should like to take up about two hours of the time of the committee in discussing these health matters, but that not being possible, I would refer the minister to page 83 of the report where certain references are made to radium, as follows:

> The unusual and striking properties of radium as well as its use for the treatment of certain forms of cancer, have resulted in somewhat exaggerated notice having been given it in the daily press. For some years after its romantic discovery great hopes were held that a wonderful therapeutic agent had been given to the medical profession and a trial was made of radium in an immense variety of diseases. During this period enthusiastic workers announced wonderful results. Subsequently, and in the light of properly controlled clinical trials, the bulk of the results were negatived and at the present time the use of radium is severely limited.

The minister admits that he is primarily responsible for that statement which is at variance with the established medical practice of the present time. The report continues:

It is also better known now that radium is dangerous and should only be used clinically, by specially trained radiologists.

On March 17th I had the honour of introducing a resolution asking for the nationalization of the supply of radium. Unfortunately, only a limited time was available in which to discuss that subject, but we were able to discover that the minister and his government apparently have very little interest in the public health of this country so far as the use of radium is concerned in the treatment of people afflicted with cancer. Shortly after this resolution was introduced, along about the last of April, Doctor Ellice McDonald of the Dupont cancer research institute, University of Pennsylvania, recommended to the American congress practically the identical method of handling radium and cancer cases that had been proposed to this house under the resolution referred to. I would recommend to the minister that he investigate this subject a little more fully. After July 28th next I am sure that we will have a government and a department of health which will give a little more attention to the needs of the public as far as health matters are concerned.

Mr. KING (Kootenay)): There is a difference of opinion among professional men as to the use of radium. It is quite true that radium is being more frequently used, but the limitation of its use is much greater than it was thought to be. If my hon. friend will follow the clinical reports throughout the country he will find that the hopes of those dealing with this matter are not now as high as they were formerly.

Mr. COTNAM: When the Radiological Society of North America met in Toronto last December the claim was made in their report that fifteen per cent of the cancer cases in this country were curable by radium. That would mean that the lives of fifteen per cent of the 8,000 who are dying annually in this country could be saved if radium treatment and proper administration were available. That is the same percentage of expected cures in surgery, and yet the use of radium is in its infancy. The treatment is being carried on by men who are more or less inexperienced and who do not possess an adequate supply. Under those circumstances more harm than good may arise from the use of radium, and I asked in my resolution that the radium supply be nationalized in order that those afflicted could receive the treatment to which they are entitled.

Mr. KING (Kootenay)): I do not intend to go over the debate that has already taken place this session except to say that I believe the cures being obtained to-day are greater in number. However, I do not think that that is the case in the larger field to which my hon. friend referred.

Mr. MacLAREN: Was the total amount of the vote under item 230 of last year expended?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We expended $128,653.

Item agreed to.

Grant to Last Post fund, $30,000.

Mr. GARDINER: How much was spent last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): $20,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does this vote take care of nearly all the cases, or is there any necessity to apply to municipalities for assistance in the burying of veterans?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As my hon. friend knows, these moneys are expended in the burial of ex-service men who have died in indigent circumstances. The burials are taken care of in the community under the Last Post fund which the government subsidizes each year.

Mr. ARTHURS: In what way are they taken care of? For instance, if a man dies out in the country at some distance from a city, what provision would be made? Would any refund be made?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In each province there is a branch of the Last Post fund organization which is officered by certain individuals. If a death occurs in the country, application is made to the organization which advises as to its responsibility. If the burial takes place at the expense of the Last Post fund, the department will bear a portion, if not the whole, of the expense, depending on the circumstances.

Mr. GEARY: Is this service being extended? Is the department discovering more cases in which this service is required?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We find that we are expending more money under this vote each year.

Mr. GEARY: More persons buried?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Probably. The amount provided in previous years was not sufficient to meet the cost of burial and there is more than $4,000 of accounts outstanding. We have to provide for the erection of markers on graves. Markers are gradually being placed as funds permit, the cost varying according to the requirements of the cemetery in which the burial is made. At the present time the amount for markers to be placed and arrears of burial charges will require about $16,000.

Mr. GEARY: I only hope the fact that this service is in existence is being made known in the outlying districts.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We depend for that more on the Last Post fund people themselves. Sir Arthur Currie is president and they have a secretary in Montreal. They have pretty active branches throughout the whole of Canada.

Item agreed to.

National Health—the administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietory or patent medicines, including the laboratory of hygiene, $163,500.

Mr. BRADY: I would ask the minister to explain lucidly but briefly the work that is being done by his department in regard to the very important matter of narcotic drugs.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have an organization known as the narcotic division. It is officered by chief officer Colonel Sharman, with assistant officers, clerks and stenographers under him. He is in charge of the work of that division and he cooperates with the mounted police force throughout Canada. He is also in close contact with the municipal and provincial authorities. We have of late confined our activities more to the larger trafficker under an arrangement with the provincial and municipal authorities, depending upon them to take care of the smaller trafficker. We have, I think, been fairly successful. There have been a good many convictions. In the early days, through the efforts of the provincial and other police, the number of convictions was high. They are as follows:

| Year | Number of convictions |
|---|---|
| 1922-23 | 1,858 |
| 1923-24 | 1,102 |
| 1926-27 | 743 |
| 1927-28 | 490 |
| 1928-29 | 430 |
| 1929-30 | 563 |

As regards our later convictions, we have been fairly successful in securing long term sentences. It was difficult in the earlier stages to get the magistrates to commit these people for long terms. On the 31st March, 1930, there were in the Westminster penitentiary 82 traffickers, many for five years and some for seven years. As stated in the 1929 annual report, whereas in the preceding year the number of cases in which the option of a fine was given largely exceeded those in which there was none, in 1928-29 the situation was reversed, and 240 of the 430 convictions resulted in gaol sentences in that year; one of seven years, eleven of five years, four of four years, eight of three years, nine of two years, and twenty-eight of one year and over. In checking up with the statistical department we found there were duplications in the same case and the number was reduced.

Mr. BRADY: This is a subject of such vital importance to Canada that I would like the minister to understand my purpose is really to bring out exactly what this branch of the department is doing. I find there has been an increase in the proportion of expenditures to prosecutions and convictions by the department in connection with this subject, I find, moreover, there is an increase in travelling expenses, a decrease in revenue, an increase in salaries, a decrease in the number of convictions. The department to-day has a larger staff dealing with this very important subject when, before, according to the minister himself, with a lesser staff it was more efficient than it is now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. BRADY: I do not know—and the minister can inform me—whether or not increases are proposed to be made in connection with the staff handling this matter. I honestly believe there is some kind of concealment by the department lumping convictions which are really obtained by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, with those secured by the department. In other words, a number of these convictions which the minister has mentioned really are the result of the work of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I have here figures which reveal an extraordinary story which concerns the national life of Canada. I find that in 1921-22 the total revenue from licensed fees, fines and seizures was $29,832.82, and to January 31, 1929-30, $12,375.77. If those figures are not correct, I wish the minister would correct me.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would like to correct my hon. friend. He has given the totals, and I think he has the figures reversed. The figures are for 1925, $12,833.43, and for 1929-30, $14,240.77.

Mr. BRADY: My figures are a little out, but not much.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Just reversed.

Mr. BRADY: The expenditure charged to the appropriation, not including the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, was in 1921-22, $13,305.83, and to January 31, 1929-30, $31,-235.77. The civil government salaries, permanent and temporary, were $7,292.78 in 1921-22, and to January 31, 1929-30, $14,-808.40. What about travelling expenses? In 1921-22 travelling expenses amounted to $704.31, and to January 31, 1929.30, to $3,748.57. The total national health expenditure in 1921-22 was $21,302.92 and to January 31, 1929-30, $49,792.74.

I come now to the number of federal, provincial and municipal convictions for the judicial years ended September 30. They are as follows:

|---|---|
| 1922-23 | $1,858 |
| 1923-24 | 1,102 |
| 1924-25 | 997 |
| 1925-26 | 835 |
| 1926-27 | 743 |
| 1927-28 | 490 |
| 1928-29 | 551 |

I cannot get the number of convictions for 1929-30. Now, one of two things is taking place to-day. In the report issued by the department of national health, I find a statement which is not in accordance with the figures which I have given. On page 85 of that report there is this very important paragraph:

> Such improvement, of course, is only relative and is to a great extent occasioned by the increasing number of drug traffickers actually being incarcerated, together with a much greater cooperation with and control of the wholesale and retail druggists.

That is in contradiction of the figures which I have here, which show increased expenditure, a bigger staff, and a smaller number of convictions. In fact, it is difficult to ascertain with any authority just what the number of convictions is. The minister must admit that whoever wrote this report realized the gravity of the situation. There is something wrong in the department. Just three weeks ago I asked a number of questions with the purpose of eliciting information as to the actual situation. It is one that deeply concerns our national life, because opium and narcotic drugs generally are the ruination of many. I have not yet received an answer to my questions. I repeat, I find increased expenditure, a bigger staff, and a smaller number of convictions, and the public is convinced that the opium and narcotic traffic is on the increase. I would like to know from the minister just what the situation is.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The figures which my hon. friend has been quoting are not proper figures. I regret very much that the report which he asked for has not been tabled. I found it on my desk yesterday, and it was sent to the Secretary of State, and I thought it would have been tabled to-day. The figures in that report do not coincide with the figures which my hon. friend has quoted to-night; his figures are not correct. Of course, our expenditure and costs are increasing. We have been very active in control. If my hon. friend has any knowledge of the traffic or would care to go to Montreal and make inquiries, he would find that it was very difficult for him or anyone else to secure narcotics in the city of Montreal, whereas five or six or seven years ago there were recognized places throughout the city where men could go and get a supply without difficulty. That is confirmed by the fact that at that time you could buy crude opium for $25 an ounce whereas to-day it cannot be procured for $125 an ounce. We know from day to day from the correspondence in the department that the addict is having a more difficult time in securing a supply, and that is due to the activities of the department. It is true that our travelling expenses have increased, from $635.35 in 1925, to $4,881 last year. The small travelling expenses in 1925 did not aid in diminishing the traffic in Vancouver. To-day the officers of the department make not one trip, but two or three or four trips across this continent, and travel to different centres in the United States, getting in touch with those in control of gangs in that country. We also have men in the old country trying to tie up the threads of this traffic, in order that we may have control. I am pleased to say to the committee that of all countries that are trying to control this traffic to-day, Canada is recognized I think as having the best control of all.

Mr. BRADY: Does the minister feel that the staff employed in this very important branch are really doing what they should do?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, they are doing very well, I think.

Mr. COTNAM: What work is being undertaken by the laboratory of hygiene?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This department furnishes bacteriological, biological and biochemical data and reports on the qualities of foods, raw or manufactured; disinfectants; water supplies; sanitary conditions of shellfish areas and of shellfish; examination of diseased tissues, and determines the potencies of drugs, curative serums and vaccines.

Item agreed to.

Pollution of inland waters and Public Works Health Act, $26,000.

Mr. SIMPSON: Is this in respect of navigation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our staff see that pure water is supplied at certain places to ships on the lake and river sections.

Item agreed to.

Quarantine—salaries and contingencies of organized districts—public health in other districts—Tracadie and Bentinck island lazarettoes and leprosy generally, $210,000.

Mr. MacLAREN: How many cases are there in Tracadie?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Eight.

Mr. KAISER: This item calls for $210,000 for national health. A day or two ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) whether bovine tuberculosis came within his sphere or within the Department of Public Health, and he answered that both departments dealt with it. Therefore my remarks will apply not only to the national health department but also to the agriculture department. I cannot attempt to go into this question at the length I intended owing to the exigencies of time. I assume the Minister of Health has read the report of the Minister of Agriculture. If so, he read that in the province of Quebec 18 to 19 per cent of the cattle of some areas were found to be affected with bovine tuberculosis, while only 2 per cent of the cattle examined in other parts of the Dominion were found to be suffering from this disease. The records of the last seventeen years show that in no other area on this north American continent has the examination of cattle for bovine tuberculosis shown any approach to 18 or 19 per cent of the cattle diseased, with the exception of a small area in the District of Columbia. If the minister viewed this matter from a national standpoint, surely he would be alarmed at the situation in Quebec. In the year 1928, 23,000 cattle in Quebec have been found to be affected with bovine tuberculosis, and were slaughtered. This phenomenal condition cost the country $750,000 last year. The minister knows there must be some explainable reason for this condition, and he should ask the National Research Council to investigate and report to parliament the causes. It may be due to bad housing of the cattle, if the condition exists at all. I do not believe it does exist, because I am satisfied in my mind that our method of tracing this disease is inferior to that followed by other advanced countries. The work is being done in a slipshod way, but I have not the time to go into that now. Bovine tuberculosis is communicated to man, and has resulted in many of the children of Canada being affected by bone, pulmonary and nodular tuberculosis. This appalling situation ought to arouse the concern and active interest of the Minister of National Health. When we bring his attention to this serious condition of affairs he tells us that the British North America Act has assigned health matters to the various provinces. I want to break down that theory that national health is confined to the jurisdiction of the provinces. Cases and conditions such as these, should surely convince anybody that we ought to have a national health policy.

I wrote the agriculture department of the province of Quebec and asked them whether they had examined any cattle in the province for bovine tuberculosis, and they told me they had been doing it for the last ten years, and in that period had examined 375,000 cattle, and the highest percentage affected was only 3 per cent. Contrast this percentage with the 18 to 19 per cent stated to have been discovered by the federal Department of Agriculture. These contradictory figures naturally make us question whether this department is actually prepared to carry on its work. I say to the Minister of Agriculture that the research council should convince him and convince Canada as to the peculiar causes which obtain and which bring about such a staggering result. The minister should have his department checked up. I have asked how many men they have in the department whose duty it is to go out and examine the cattle, and they have given me five or six names. I have asked the officials connected with the United States government how many experts they used to examine the cattle in that country and I find where in this country we would have nine they would have ninety.

I would like to ask the Minister of Health to permit me to place upon Hansard a statement the preparation of which has caused me considerable effort. I have gained the information from the findings of royal commissions in England and in various other parts of the continent to show the diseases actually transmitted to the children, young and older people from coming in contact with bovine tuberculosis.

The following is the information which I have been able to gather:

The British royal commission investigating the prevalence of bovine infection in England and Wales analyzed 1,139 cases both in children and adults. Their findings are given as follows:

| Variety of Cases | No. of Cases | Under 5 yrs. of age | All ages Per cent |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cervical lymph nodes | 125 | 85.0% of 20 cases | 48.0 |
| Lupus vulgaris | 140 | 66.0% of 50 cases | 51.0 |
| Scrofuloderma | 52 | 58.3% of 12 cases | 38.4 |
| Bone and joint tuberculosis | 514 | 30.2% of 96 cases | 19.2 |
| Genito urinary tuberculosis | 21 | | 19.0 |
| Tubercular meningitis | 12 | | 16.6 |
| Pulmonary tuberculosis | 275 | | 1.1 |

Park and Krumwiede, of the New York State Board of Health, in a series of 1,042 unselected medical and surgical cases, dividing the cases into three age groups, found the incidence of bovine infection as follows:

(a) Children under 5 years of age, 220 cases with 59 bovine strains isolated, or 26.8 per cent.

(b) Children from 5 to 16 years of age, 132 cases with 33 bovine strains recovered, or 25 per cent.

(c) Adults, 16 years and over, 689 cases, with 9 bovine strains recovered, or 1.31 per cent.

A study of 2,516 cases of various forms of tuberculosis reported in the literature up to 1914 compiled by Wang, of the University of Edinburgh, gives perhaps the most comprehensive idea of the amount of bovine tuberculosis in man existing in western Europe, the British Isles and the United States. He found that, dividing the cases into three age groups, the incidence of bovine infection is as follows:—

(a) Children under 5 years of age, 614 cases, with 199 bovine strains isolated, or 32.4 per cent.

(b) Children from 5 to 16 years of age, 591 cases with 171 bovine strains isolated, or 28.9 per cent.

(c) Adults, 16 years and over, 1,311 cases with 38 bovine strains isolated, or 2.9 per cent.

For the past three years a study has been carried out under the auspices of the National Research Council into the incidence of tuberculosis in children in the Toronto area, where regulations require pasteurization of milk.

There is a migration of sick individuals from outlying districts into the hospitals in this area. A study has been made of cases in these hospitals and particularly in the Hospital for Sick Children. In addition to this, a study has been made of tuberculous children living in other towns and villages in Ontario. The following is a summary of the study showing the incidence of bovine infection in children:

| | No. | Human Type | Bovine Type |
|---|---|---|---|
| Bone and joint tuberculosis | 65 | 63 | 2 |
| Tuberculous meningitis | 32 | 31 | 1 |
| Renal Tuberculosis | 26 | 25 | 1 |
| Pulmonary tuberculosis (laryngeal Swabs) | 16 | 15 | 1 |
| Tuberculosis of lymph Nodes (cervical and mesenteric) | 16 | 4 | 12 |
| Tuberculosis of tonsils. | 7 | 5 | 2 |
| Tuberculosis of adenoid (pharyngeal tonsil) | 4 | 3 | 1 |
| Tuberculous pleurisy | 2 | 2 | 0 |

Of 190 strains of tubercle bacilli from 168 children studied, 30 strains recovered from 20 different patients proved to be of bovine origin. All of the children from whom bovine tuberculosis was recovered came from districts where pasteurization of milk is not carried out. In the Toronto district, which is a pasteurization area, not a single case of bovine infection was brought to light. As a result of this investigation, it is concluded that 12 per cent of surgical tuberculosis in children, leading to operation, disablement, and occasionally death, may be controlled by the simple process of pasteurization.

Certain cities in Canada and the United States which through research have taught their people to pasteurize milk have absolutely banished the diseases, conditions and deformities which follow bovine tuberculosis. I think it is the business of this department to educate the people of our country as to how they may escape the conditions caused through this disease. The Department of National Health should become more national in character and should exert greater effort to teach our people how to fight disease and disaster.

Item agreed to.

Immigration medical inspection, $300,000.

Mr. MANION: I would like to ask the minister why we have an immigration medical inspection which is costing the country $300,000. It is as high this year as it was last year, despite the fact that there is no immigration, and the government has taken the attitude that the whole immigration problem is being handed over to the provinces. In view of those facts I think the item should either be cut out or materially cut down.

Mr. MALCOLM: I would like to answer the question directed by my hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Manion). This matter was discussed this afternoon with the Acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart). The acting minister stated that he thought we had better leave this item so that it would come up for discussion when the conference is held with the provinces, as it may be possible that we may agree to carry on certain services for them. The agreement is that we do not need to go on with this service, and the vote could be dropped, but in case we undertake certain services for the provinces the minister stated he would like to have my support.

Mr. MANION: I would like to say, with all due respect to the remarks of the minister, that there is no doubt whatever we will not have an extensive immigration into this country this year. With conditions as they are there is no doubt we will not need anything like the amount of immigration inspection we have had in the past, and taking into account the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I think the item should be cut in two.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it should not be cut at the present time. We required the vote last year, and the work done was of a very excellent and useful character. Of the 160,000 people examined for immigration to Canada from Great Britain and the continent, 10 per cent were rejected and not allowed to come to Canada. We are all familiar with the policy which was introduced in 1927 wherein we decided that rather than try to check people coming into this country who were not physically or mentally fit we would place our own officers in Great Britain and on the continent of Europe to make examinations at certain points. We took that action with a view to overcoming the difficulty which had been experienced by the United States authorities. To correct the difficulty under which they were labouring they established the port at Ellis Island. We in this country were faced with two alternatives in connection with protecting our Canadian people against the entrance of foreigners who were physically or mentally undesirable; we had to establish on an island or elsewhere a place on our shores where we could hold them for the period during which they could be properly examined, and if found unfit they could be sent back, or we could place our own officers on the other side. The United States government, faced with the same problem, requested the British government to give them permission to place United States officials in Great Britain, with the intention of eliminating the trouble they had experienced at Ellis Island. Their request was granted and we have heard of no more trouble. We undertook a plan some years ago in conjunction with the transportation companies. Our officers were sent to Great Britain and to the continent. At first there were difficulties, because the men were not experienced. However, I had the pleasure last year of visiting some of those men and generally speaking I think the service is of an excellent character and of great benefit to the people of Canada. It is true that the immigration will be less, and I have instructed the officers of my department to retire these men as retirements come before the department, and to allow the vacancies to exist on the staff. There will be further retirements in the future, because we do not intend to keep more men than necessary. However, we have an officer at Danzig, and when we withdraw him we will require those people to go to Rotterdam. We have an officer in Paris, and as that city is the clearing house for southern Europe he will be allowed to remain there. Then we have our officers in Great Britain.

Mr. MANION: When are any of them due to be retired?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): None of them is due to be retired, but of their own will some of them will retire. The attraction by way of salary is not very great, and we have had a number of retirements since they went over there. As I have said, instructions have been issued not to fill vacancies.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Where is the estimate of the number of immigrants expected this year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not know that I have that information before me. We receive reports from time to time, but I have not the figures before me for the present year. From day to day there are people going into those offices for examinations in order that they may be allowed to come to this country. That is true in Great Britain.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I fancy the Acting Minister of Immigration could give us that information. What is the estimated number of immigrants expected to come to Canada this year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I doubt if I can give that information, but I shall ask the deputy minister whether he can give us the figures.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the explanation given by the Minister of Pensions and National Health, and I must say that I have no quarrel with his statement as to the good work being done by these men. The fact remains, however, that when the work is not there to be done the men do not have to do the work.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They will be withdrawn.

Mr. MANION: And if they are withdrawn the item does not require to be fully passed. I have given the minister a chance to reduce the vote, and if he does not avail himself of the opportunity I will move that the item be reduced by $100,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): And in so doing I think my hon. friend would make a great mistake.

Mr. MANION: I am giving the minister an opportunity to cut down the vote. He admits the item is not fully necessary, because he says when the retirements take place the positions will not be refilled. He has told us that retirements are taking place right along, and no doubt retirements will continue to take place.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some of them.

Mr. MANION: As they are not going to be replaced, the full amount of this vote will not be required. I also take the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce who admitted the amount probably would not be needed, but suggested that it should be left in in case of emergency. Emergencies can be met when they arise. I wish to move that this item be reduced by $50,000. My hon. friend from Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) has suggested that amount to me, and I am content to accept the suggestion. I would be pleased if the minister would accept the amendment because it would be an indication that he is not simply stubbornly trying to stick to an item which he knows is not necessary.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am convinced that my hon. friend does not understand the nature of the situation. There will be some immigration through the port of Rotterdam, and we have an officer at that point. Does my hon. friend suggest that the officer should be withdrawn? There will be people coming through Paris; I wonder if my hon. friend would have the department withdraw the officer at that point. We have had three officers at Glasgow, and there will be many people coming through that port. The same is true at Liverpool and in the central part of England, and until we know what the reduction is in immigration and the places where the reduction will take place, I do not see how we can reduce our officers very much. However, I have told my officers that where vacancies occur they should not be filled until we know what is going to happen in regard to migration to this country. I think the $300,000 last year was practically all expended, and I do not think we can close these agencies. You cannot close the agency at Glasgow or the agency in the north of Scotland; if you do you put the people there to very great inconvenience. I would suggest to my hon. friend that it should be left in the hands of the department to make the reduction. We do not want to spend money unless it is necessary, but we wish to retain this service at a very high state of efficiency, because I believe the people of Canada should be protected and the people of the old country should be protected as well.

Mr. MANION: I have listened to the minister with every desire to be agreeable, and I am not making this proposal in any desire to embarrass the minister or the service, but I still submit that in view of the attitude taken by the government itself; in view of the attitude taken by the Minister of Immigration himself, when he said there was not going to be any immigration so far as the Dominion was concerned but that it was to be left to the provinces, I submit that this item is not necessary. The minister himself has proved that the item is not necessary, because he says that when these men retire he is not going to replace them. I further point out to this committee that as this session has been going on proposal after proposal has been made that this government should assist this country in various ways. For example there was a highways proposal, but the government voted it down and would give nothing for highways. There was an unemployment relief proposal and the Prime Minister made his famous, or infamous, statement that not a five cent piece should be given for the relief of unemployment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. MANION: Yes, he did. I know the Prime Minister denied it the other evening, but all his supporters heard it and surely they cannot deny it. He said he would not have a five cent piece given for the relief of unemployment in any province in which there was a Conservative government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MANION: I stick to my point, because there is no doubt about it whatever.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it in Hansard.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): That is not what it says in Hansard.

Mr. MANION: I challenge my hon. friend to read what the Prime Minister said, which is on page 1227 of Hansard. I know it so well because I have looked it up and quoted it so often. He said he would not give a five cent piece for the relief of unemployment in any province where there was a Conservative government.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): No, he did not; he said he would not give a five cent piece to any Conservative government to use for their own purposes.

Mr. MANION: I will read what he said, in just a few moments.

Mr. POULIOT: Can I explain it?

The CHAIRMAN: Order, pleace. Surely this discussion is not relevant to this item.

Mr. MANION: I cannot agree with you, Mr. Chairman; surely it is relevant.

The CHAIRMAN: My hon. friend knows that a further reference to a debate which took place during this session is out of order.

Mr. MANION: If it is out of order then I cannot quote it, and the point cannot be decided at the moment, but I have the words right here.

Mr. POULIOT: I would just like to save the time of the committee—

Mr. MANION: You will not make headway by this sort of thing, because I do not intend to be intimidated into sitting down. In regard to your asking me if this question is relevant, Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is entirely relevant, because we are discussing the expenditure of the money of this country, the expenditure of the sum of $300,000, which I sincerely submit is not necessary at the present time. I submit that half of that amount would be ample. I submit that if the minister is sincere in his statement that he is not going to replace these men, there will be no necessity for $300,000 in this item. If he wished to play the game fairly he would have moved the reduction himself, and I shall be glad to sit down now to let him move it if he wishes.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I do not wish to; this is the item of the department for these services.

Mr. MANION: Then you can keep your seat; I will finish my remarks first. I was stating that since there was not a five cent piece for unemployment, for highways or for technical education, then surely we should not spend $300,000 for a service which the Acting Minister of Immigration himself says is out of business at the present time. I believe he is right; we do not want immigrants in Canada at this time, with conditions as they are at present; we do not need them. We have trouble enough, with a government such as this, to find work and wages for the people here now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think in justice to myself I should be permitted to read this statement of the Prime Minister, because a number of hon. gentlemen have said that the Prime Minister did not make any such statement. I will read it, and the people can judge for themselves. On April 3, 1930, the Prime Minister said the following words which are found at page 1227 of Hansard:

> Mr. Mackenzie King: May I conclude what I have to say? So far as giving money from this federal treasury to provincial governments is concerned, in relation to this question of unemployment as it exists to-day, I might be prepared to go a certain length possibly in meeting one or two of the western provinces that have Progressive premiers at the head of their governments—
> Some hon. Members: Oh!
> Mr. Mackenzie King: —but I would not give a single cent to any Tory government.
>
> Mr. Bennett: Shame!
> Mr. Stevens: Shame!
> Mr. Mackenzie King: Do my hon. friends say "shame"?
> Mr. Bennett: Yes, shame!
>
> Mr. Mackenzie King: What is there to be ashamed of?
>
> Mr. Stevens: You ought to be ashamed of that.
> Mr. Mackenzie King: My hon. friend is getting very indignant. Something evidently has got under his skin. May I repeat what I have said? With respect to giving moneys out of the federal treasury to any Tory government in this country for these alleged unemployment purposes, with these governments situated as they are to-day, with policies diametrically opposed to those of this government, I would not give them a five-cent piece.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if hon. gentlemen opposite can get any satisfaction or any contentment out of that statement they are perfectly welcome to it. I can assure them they are not going to get much satisfaction out of it during the next election.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): This was not the quotation given by my hon. friend from memory; that was quite different.

Mr. MANION: I could not quote it word for word, but I quoted the substance and sense of it. However, Mr. Chairman, I have submitted my point and I again offer to the minister or to any of the ministers the privilege of moving the amendment themselves. I show my sincerity in this way, but if the minister will not agree to move the reduction himself I am going to move a reduction of $50,000 in this vote.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, I do not think we will gain very much by discussing the estimates in a heated manner. It is quite true, I may say to my hon. friend, that immigration will be greatly reduced but it will not entirely cease from Great Britain or from the preferred countries. There are always people coming forward, although it is true they are not coming in such large numbers as formerly. I may point out to my hon. friend that many of these agreements are still in existence. We know that the agreements with the British government for child immigration, for the domestic movement and for the nominated movement do not expire until the end of this year. The railway movement expires on May 31; that is for labour, but of course it would not be fair to say that the medical inspection officers have very much to do with that movement. I would think that the number of medical men now employed could be reduced, but I had this difficulty before in the interior estimates and in the immigration estimates, to know just how much we might reduce these items. I will say for the information of the committee—and my hon. friend knows it as a matter of fact—that the money voted for this purpose cannot be spent for any other purpose; that is, it cannot be diverted to some other use. It is voted specifically by the house for this purpose and must be spent in this way or remain unspent. It is not wasted; I mean it cannot be diverted, because we know it is the feeling that very frequently sums are diverted for other purposes when they are voted for specific objects called for in the estimates. It is very difficult to know just how much to reduce the service. I have the same difficulty in trying to estimate by how much the immigration service can be reduced.

Mr. MANION: The hon. minister is very moderate in his attitude, and I know that if he gave his own opinion he would agree that $50,000 could be cut off this estimate without making any change in the service. The only trouble is that the minister who is attempting to put these estimates through the committee has adopted a stubborn attitude and refuses to make a reduction.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MANION: I did not mean that disrespectfully, but the minister is adopting an obstinate attitude in the face of the reasons he gave himself that this service could be cut down. If this reduction of $50,000 is made the service could be carried on for ten months. Long before that time has elapsed another minister will have to study out the managing of these offices. I am ready to withdraw my motion for a reduction if the minister will suggest a cut in this service. At the end of ten months if by any strange accident he is still in power—I do not think that will occur—I am sure that he could take $50,000 out of some other estimate.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend must realize that that could not be done. It is impossible to divert any estimate to other purposes; that is the object of voting money. There is a strong possibility that this item could be cut down, but I doubt very much if a reduction of $50,000 could be made. I would say that a fairer amount would be $20,000 or $25,000.

Mr. MANION: If the minister would suggest $25,000 it would show good faith on his part.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If any amount is not expended it cannot be diverted to some other purpose; that is contrary to the act.

Mr. MANION: I will not quarrel with that statement, but it is often done; it is worked out in some way and then replaced. Is the minister willing to agree to a $25,000 reduction?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is all right for my hon. friend to suggest that because he has no responsibility and knows nothing of this service.

Mr. MANION: I do not think the minister knows much more than I do.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is not a fair statement from my hon. friend; I have not treated him that way. These estimates are made up by the department officials and they have been carefully surveyed by the government. It is quite true that immigration may ease off but it will not cease entirely. It will be necessary to retain a staff at the different ports; either that must be done or the service must be abandoned. It is only a mere opinion to say that this amount can be reduced by $50,000 or $25,000.

Mr. SHORT: How much was expended last year?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The expenditure last year amounted to $287,000. If it will satisfy my hon. friend, I will reduce the estimates by $15,000.

Mr. MANION: There is a difference of $13,000 right there.

Mr. SHORT: And there will not be nearly the immigration this year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would be willing to reduce the estimate comparable with the expenditure for last year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How many medical inspectors were sent overseas following the action taken in 1927?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Twenty-eight.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How many are employed at the present time?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): About twenty.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where are they stationed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have to maintain a service at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal and throughout Canada. There are officers located at London, Bristol, Birmingham, Glasgow, Inverness, Belfast, Cobh, Paris, Antwerp, Danzig, Hamburg, and Rotterdam.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The officer at Liverpool should be able to do the work for Birmingham and other ports nearby. How is the minister able to direct these officers from Canada?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A superior officer is located at London.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In considering these estimates, this department does not look like a department of health, it looks more like the game played by children in which they try to tag a tail on a donkey. Everything is tagged on to this department and it is only a combination and accumulation of tail-tags.

Mr. MANION: And donkeys.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a service department; if my hon. friend delights in using that expression, well and good.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The department should be rearranged. Just consider this item which reads:

> The administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietary or patent medicines, including the laboratory of hygiene.

Then further down there is another item dealing with quarantine. There should be coordination and cooperation with the medical and health branches in all the provinces. There should be some understanding that in the case of epidemics the minister could step in and prevent the spread of disease from one province to another. In the case of an epidemic in Ontario it is all very well for Quebec to put officers on the border, but that does not prevent the spread of disease in other ways. Perhaps, as the minister is to be transplanted and will not have again the experience he has had to-night—

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It has not been a bad experience so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): —he may not have an opportunity to get the provinces together. There are some very important subjects which should be discussed with the provinces, such as radium, epidemics, and the upkeep of laboratories. Laboratories are conducted in many of the provinces, and it is found to be very expensive to operate those institutions. There is a large field open for the federal department in the coordination of this great subject of health; instead of having all these little donkey tails tagged onto it and calling it a department of health—we have too much respect for the name to call it a real department—it should do some real constructive work. I hope the minister or whoever succeeds him will have something better to offer as a department of national health than all these tail-tags.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a word to say in answer to my hon. friend from Fort William. I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Kingston city on his very interesting suggestion in regard to the matter.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Thank you.

Mr. POULIOT: I have a special liking for the hon. member for Fort William, although I do not present him with a loving cup. I am, however, tired of hearing all the time about that five-cent story.

Mr. MANION: No doubt the hon. member is.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He is not the only one who is sick about it.

Mr. POULIOT: I will tell my hon. friend from Lincoln it is easy to understand why the Prime Minister said that.

Mr. COTNAM: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. POULIOT: If it was relevant for the hon. member for Fort William to say a word about this, I wish to say just one word also.

Mr. COTNAM: The hon. member is not speaking to the item before the chair.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a point of order, and it is this: that the hon. member for North Renfrew should have raised his point of order when the hon. member for Fort William was speaking before. The hon. member was in the house and he was listening to the hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. COTNAM: The hon. member was also in his seat. If he wished to raise a point of order then, he should have done so.

Mr. POULIOT: I thought there was no point of order in that and that is why I did not raise it. I remember very well that shameful disregard of health in refusing a mother's pension in Toronto when the Hon. Dr. Godfrey refused a mother's allowance. He wrote to one of his electors—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I claim fair play.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. My hon. friend complains about the matter raised by the hon. member for Fort William. He will remember that the Chair pointed out that the matter that the hon. member for Fort William was discussing was not relevant to the subject before the Chair and asked him to desist from that part of his discussion. My hon. friend is not making matters better by introducing a new subject of a similar nature. I ask all hon. members to bring their remarks to bear more closely upon the item under consideration. Mr. Manion moves that item 227 be reduced by the sum of $50,000.

Amendment negatived.

Item agreed to.

Venereal diseases, $100,000.

Mr. COTNAM: I have a great deal of sympathy for the Minister of National Health. I do not think there is any medical man in the house, or for that matter, in the country, who believes the Department of National Health has been functioning as such a department should function in Canada to-day. The greatest asset we have, after all, is the health and happiness of our people, and surely there should be some arrangement whereby the federal Department of Health, could, as has been said so ably by the hon. member for Kingston city, cooperate with the provincial health departments and help to coordinate the work. Unfortunately, disease does not stop at provincial boundaries and, moreover, it is not confined by the limitations of the British North America Act. If, under the provisions of the British North America Act, the department is not able to cooperate with the provincial health authorities, the Department of National Health has no reason for existing. I would suggest that the minister call a conference of the medical departments of the different provinces and see whether some working arrangement cannot be devised whereby his department can cooperate fully with the provincial health departments.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am not going to take up any time in answering my hon. friend in regard to the conduct of the department. The work of the department is well known in Canada. My hon. friend, who seems to be so well informed must know that we have a Dominion Council of Health made up of the provincial boards of health or authorities representing the provincial governments and other health bodies throughout Canada. That council meets twice a year and brings about the coordination of which my hon. friend has spoken. I do not wish to do more than merely make that statement and leave the matter as it is, because I think the desire of the committee is to get on with the estimates.

Mr. QUINN: Does this item provide for salaries and maintenance of quarantine offices in the different ports?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is under item 236, quarantine, which has been passed.

Mr. QUINN: Who is the port physician at Halifax?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Doctor Chisholm is acting. Doctor Graham resigned recently.

Mr. QUINN: I had a question on the order paper only three weeks ago, and at that time Doctor Graham was still in the employ of the department. Doctor Chisholm had not then been appointed. Was Doctor Graham asked for his resignation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I think he resigned on his own initiative.

Mr. QUINN: Doctor Chisholm was formerly one of the roster doctors on the other side?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and national health — salaries, $210,185; contingencies, $69,000.

Mr. ESLING: What portion of this amount for contingencies goes for travelling expenses for the minister? While the minister is looking it up, I would like to know what portion of his travelling expenses goes towards taking Liberal candidates and his Liberal supporters around the country in a private car.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No portion is used for that purpose.

Mr. ESLING: Then it seems to me the minister must burn up an awful lot of gas. I find that for the past five years his travelling expenses amount to $20,950; we will call it $21,000. Considering that we are in session here for six months of the year, he can travel only the other six months, which brings it to about $4,000 for travelling expenses every six months. I notice also in the Auditor General's report a pretty good-sized automobile bill for the minister. I can find his automobile repairs for only three years, and the repairs during that period amounted to $2,317. In order to drive the car, the public is paying $8,438. In other words, in addition to his salary and his indemnity, the minister has charged up to travelling expenses, chauffeur and automobile repairs in the past five years the huge sum of $31,000, and I want to ask the minister now in all candour, does he think he is worth it?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do.

Mr. ESLING: This may be very humorous, but there is another side to it. The minister represents East Kootenay, where to-day 350 coal miners are out of work and the rest are working only half time. The city is feeding their children, and while these men are out of work the minister spends $31,000 in five years—and Russian coal is coming into the country too. Add to that $31,000 in five years, the minister's salary and indemnity of $70,000 and you get the sum of $100,000. Is it any wonder that the minister goes through my part of the country and calls for help! He says: I need help from British Columbia. He is the only Liberal member in this house from British Columbia and the main theme of all his speeches during his recent tour of that province was: Send me help. I venture to say Mr. Chairman, that there is nobody on this side of the house or on that who will dispute the minister's need for help.

Item agreed to.

Quarantine—salaries and contingencies of organized districts; public health in other districts; Tracadie and Bentinck Island lazarettoes and leprosy generally — further amount required, $60,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This amount is required for the construction of a boat for our quarantine service at Victoria and for repairs to a boat at St. John harbour.

Item agreed to.

European war—further amount required, $8,000,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is this required for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This vote is an increase over last year's on account of the legislation that was brought down this year. It is largely made up of an item of $6,500,000 for the restoration of pensions of those who commuted them some years ago. The balance is required on account of other pension amendments.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is all covered by the act?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is that $6,500,000 for the restoration of pensions for this year.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is to bring it up to 1931. There will be back pension and the amount necessary to carry them on through the year when they are reinstated.

Mr. ARTHURS: Then the minister admits that that amount was stolen during past years.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not admit anything of the kind. I think it was unfair that the commutation should have been made some years ago.

Item agreed to.

Relief of pensioners (governor general's warrant of February 20, 1930), $300,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is to cover the over-expenditure on relief. There is an item each year. It is very hard to estimate the amount.

Mr. MANION: Is this vote for unemployment relief?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, for relief to pensioners.

Mr. MANION: I thought by mistake something had been given to relieve unemployment.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Undoubtedly some of the men were out of employment.

Mr. MANION: Yes, a lot of them.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What is this?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is a relief fund for pensioners who are in distress during the winter months or at other seasons of the year.

Mr. ARTHURS: How much has been distributed in the last two years?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Last year we distributed $378,000; this year, $517,000.

Mr. PECK: What is the item for Bill 19?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Vote 451, war veterans' allowances, $1,000,000.

Mr. MANION: The increase of this relief from $300,000 last year to nearly $600,000 this year is one of the evidences, I suppose, of the prosperity which the ministers talk so much about throughout the country?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The total amount of money spent on this relief, is $550,000. Is this partly the reason why Bill 19 was put through?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We hope Bill 19 will relieve many cases of distress during the winter months. These men will have a steady allowance throughout the year if they are unemployable and have reached the age of sixty. At present they accept odd jobs during the summer months and come into the cities during the winter. Some provision has to be made for this item.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This $550,000 is not paid to unemployable pensioners. These men are actually out of work, no-job men.

Mr. KING (Kootenay) Some of them.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then there is a large amount of unemployment.

Mr. FRASER: The amount paid on unemployment last year was in the neighbourhood of $800,000.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, $550,000 last year.

Mr. ARTHURS: These expenditures are distributed largely in the cities?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ARTHURS: A poor fellow outside in the less populated sections has no means of knowing that he can get any relief.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, through the legion they know very well. Fortunately in the smaller communities you do not find the distress that prevails in the larger centres.

Mr. ARTHURS: Quite true; but a man in the country might be in equally as distressed circumstances as another man in a large centre without knowing that any relief was available.

Mr. FRASER: Through what agency does the minister distribute this money?

[Mr. Arthurs.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The departmental officers, but in some cases we have asked the mayor to administer the funds. In the larger centres we have our own officers and investigators.

Mr. FRASER: How does the minister think unemployed people out in the country would know of this fund?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is well known among the legion officers and the soldiers throughout Canada.

Mr. FRASER: Does the minister distribute the money through the officers of the legion?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, but they know of the fund.

Mr. ARTHURS: No, they do not.

Mr. FRASER: I do not question that the minister believes what he is saying, but I want him to understand that this is a new thing to me. I have a branch of the legion in my own town and I will guarantee they never heard of it. At what points were these amounts distributed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I can give the information by provinces: Alberta, $11,333; British Columbia, $71,759—

Mr. FRASER: At what particular points in the province was this money distributed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have not the information at hand but it could be ascertained in the department.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister should know, I think, that this fund is paid out through his district officers in the large cities. It is a large amount of money, but only a few cities get the benefit.

Mr. FRASER: If that is the case I protest. The whole proceeding is most unfair. Why is not the unemployed man in the outside districts as much entitled to relief as his unfortunate brother in the large centres?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think my hon. friend understands the situation. This relief is paid to pensioners, and you will find that in the winter months the main body of that type of men are in the large centres, and that is necessarily where most of the relief is paid. We have communications from time to time from small country districts advising us of some person or persons who require relief. An officer is sent out, the cases are investigated, and relief given. We do not advertise that we have millions of dollars to give away. Usually when people are in distress they make their wants known, and if possible they are relieved under this provision.

Mr. SHORT: It is not generally known, even in rural districts, where the legion have their organization. Am I to understand from the minister now that there is a fund of $300,000 available for cases of distress if application is made through the legion to his department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is so.

Mr. SHORT: It may be known in the cities, but it is not known in the small places. I do not think the legion knows of it in the small towns of Nova Scotia.

Mr. FRASER: I do not think the manner in which this fund is distributed is fair to a province like British Columbia. The minister is just as well aware as I am that not ten per cent of British Columbia is organized into municipalities. Consequently in the unorganized districts there is no means by which men can get in contact with this relief.

Mr. COTNAM: Who decides whether a case is deserving or not, the department officers or the legion in the locality?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our investigators and executive officers in the vicinity.

Mr. ARTHURS: I again protest that the majority of cases in the outlying districts of Ontario or any other province have absolutely no knowledge that such a fund exists. Their sole dependence in the past has been upon the poppy fund, and in the majority of cases these men who deserve relief under this fund are compelled to go to the municipality. In many instances they have no knowledge that such relief as described in this vote exists.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Department of Trade and Commerce—British and foreign news service, $32,000.

Mr. SHORT: I ask for an explanation of this service. Does it refer to the advertising item which we used to have?

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No. This is for the British and foreign news service, and it has been carried on for some years.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics, $235,000.

Mr. FRASER: Why the large increase?

Mr. MALCOLM: On account of the preparation for next year's census.

Item agreed to.

National Research Council, $500,000.

Mr. SHORT: What is the explanation of the increase of $100,000?

Mr. MALCOLM: This increase is because of preparation being made for the use of the new building on its completion. There are more technical men being engaged to take over the new departments, and work is increasing in the laboratory. Rather than have an extra large increase in one year we are increasing it slightly this year.

Item agreed to.

Canadian exhibit at the British Empire trade exhibition, Buenos Aires, $150,000.

Mr. FRASER: What is this for?

Mr. MALCOLM: This is for Canada's exhibit at the British Empire exhibition held at Buenos Aires. We are cooperating with the British Empire in the erection of a pavilion in that city. A fair is being held there in 1930 and 1931. This is a new vote, and it provides for the construction of a building costing $70,000, for the removal of exhibition material from London to Buenos Aires, freight thereon, travelling expenses and maintenance of the staff while the exhibition is in progress. The rental of the space will cost $30,000. As all other parts of the empire are joining with the mother country in displaying British goods to the people of Latin America we feel that Canada's part will be profitable and useful to Dominion trade.

Mr. FRASER: I was wondering if some of us who might be out of employment after the election might get a job at this place.

Mr. MALCOLM: If I had as much faith as my hon. friend I should conclude that he would have the giving of the job.

Item agreed to.

Exhibitions and fairs, including the sum of $143,870 required for the Department of Immigration and Colonization, $367,130.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Why is the Department of Trade and Commerce including in this item an item for the Department of Immigration and Colonization?

Mr. MALCOLM: I would like to speak on this item, because it involves the question relative to medical services brought up by my hon. friend. In the Department of Trade and Commerce we maintain a service which costs $119,000. This service covers a warehouse at St. Catharines, of which Mr. Corkery is in charge. He collects the various fruit exhibits and puts them up in glass jars for the various Canadian exhibitions. We maintain offices at London, England, with a staff of four people. In Winnipeg there is a staff engaged in the collection of grains, seeds and other cereal products. In the collection of exhibits we spend about $50,000. During the past we have exhibited at state fairs in the United States of America. These samples have also been exhibited in Great Britain; I might say that the cost in connection with all these exhibitions has amounted to about $54,000. Exhibits have also been placed in all the windows of the immigration offices on the continent, in Europe and in the United States. The major portion of the vote is chargeable to the Department of Immigration and Colonization, because that department formerly collected the samples. However, when the exhibition branch was taken over by the Department of Trade and Commerce this work was transferred and remained chargeable to immigration. I discussed the matter with my colleague, the acting minister (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton), to decide if it was advisable for us to continue to collect these samples, for use at state fairs and on the continent. We concluded that these exhibitions had a double value. They have a general advertising value to Canada. They advertise the Dominion, whether a man be interested in Canada from a tourist standpoint, from the standpoint of an investor or as an immigrant. It is quite possible that when the conference is held with the provinces as to the taking over of immigration the existing service may be continued. It may be that the acting minister may offer to continue to do this work for the provinces. It would be difficult for the general exhibition branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce to get along without this service, whether it is voted for the Department of Immigration and Colonization or for the Department of Trade and Commerce. If there is a saving to be effected as a result of a conference between the minister and the provincial authorities I can assure the committee that I shall be glad to reduce the vote if the result of the conference warrants such action.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: At what places on the continent do you have these exhibits?

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. MALCOLM: There are many of them in England. There are exhibits at Southampton, Liverpool, Bristol, London, Glasgow, Inverness and Edinburgh.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Are there some on the continent?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, I think there is one at Paris. I am sorry to inform the hon. gentleman that I have not a complete list of immigration offices before me.

Mr. SHORT: I should like to revert to item 341 and have the minister give some little explanation as to how this $250,000 for advertising in Canada and abroad is spent.

Mr. MALCOLM: I can tell my hon. friend exactly how it is spent. It is practically all spent on four advertisements, two advertisements a year in the daily press of Canada.

Mr. SHORT: Advertising our natural products?

Mr. MALCOLM: No, advertising the opportunity for foreign trade. There are two advertisements a year in the weekly press of Canada. We also advertise in a great many of the trade magazines pointing out the inquiries for goods which are of interest to that particular trade and which come each month from our commercial intelligence department. The whole purpose of this expenditure is to awaken interest in the opportunity Canada has for the sale largely of manufactured goods in foreign countries and to bring to the attention of industrialists in as clear a way as we can the inquiries made daily of our trade commissioners in the thirty-five offices we have abroad. This is really to supplement the work of our trade commissioners in getting the information they acquire to the Canadian manufacturer or exporters.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Did the minister say this advertisement is put in every daily newspaper in Canada?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, without exception.

Mr. LADNER: I rose a moment ago to ask the minister a question in respect to item 316. This provides for an expenditure of $367,000 in connection with exhibitions and fairs. Has the minister any tangible evidence of the result which these exhibitions bring to the country?

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not think there is any doubt about it. If I wanted to weary the committee I could read a great many letters which have been received by the department, but I shall not do so.

Mr. LADNER: I really wanted the frank judgment of the minister, from a business point of view.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, I would say to my hon. friend that although I had nothing whatever to do with it, Canada never received any better advertising value than at the Wembley exhibition. People from all over the world were astonished at the progress Canada had made in manufacturing and in other lines as shown at Wembley. I think in Mr. Turcotte, the head of our exhibition branch, we have a man of whom we should be proud. It seems that during the last couple of decades Canada always has been in the forefront in the quality of her exhibitions. Just at the opening of the Antwerp fair a week or so ago Canada was the only country which had its pavilion open on time. A good deal of press comment followed all over Europe to the effect that Canada's exhibition commissioner had been the only one to have his exhibit open on time. I do believe that the display of our products at international affairs has been of great benefit to the Dominion, and I think the money is wisely spent.

Mr. MANION: In regard to that publicity and advertising item, during what months are these advertisements published across Canada? Is there a special time of the year?

Mr. MALCOLM: Usually we run one advertisement in the early part of the year and one in the fall.

Mr. MANION: Has the early advertisement been run this year?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, there was one I think in January.

Mr. MANION: So that in all probability it will not be necessary to run one during the election?

Mr. MALCOLM: No, I do not think there will be another one this year.

Mr. HARRIS: I should like to direct the minister's attention to item 310, which provides for the expenditure of $1,625 in connection with the International Customs Tariff Bureau. I should like to know just what that has reference to, and also once more I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a matter which I have brought to his attention in previous years. It is this: What are our trade commissioners doing towards stopping the practice of continental manufacturers of sending their goods to England and then having the same goods find their way to Canada under the British preference? That is the first part of the question. The second part is this: With goods of continental origin finding their way to the British market, and with the same commodity manufactured in Great Britain and shipped to this country under the British preference, the minister knows that this leads to bootlegging in these goods. In my judgment there is a good deal of bootlegging in merchandise which originates on the continent and which finds its way to Canada under the British preference. In the event that it does not find its way here it supplies the home market in Great Britain, which in turn supplies this market with goods of British manufacture. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister last year, and I bring it to his attention again this year and ask what is being done.

Mr. MALCOLM: In reply to my hon. friend I would say that the point of course is important in trade, but it is hardly relevant to this item. The trade commissioners of Canada are not charged with any duties such as he describes. Their job is to sell Canadian products. He is complaining about a condition which exists whereby continental manufacturers take advantage of the British preference by shipping via Great Britain. I think my hon. friend knows that we have a clause in our customs tariff which compels the man shipping goods under the British preference to take an affidavit to the effect that the goods are 50 per cent British content to enjoy the preference. That is purely a matter for the customs department.

My hon. friend wished to know something about the contributions we make to the International Customs Tariff Bureau. The International Customs Tariff Bureau at Brussels was founded as the result of a convention, signed at Brussels on July 5, 1890, by thirty-nine countries, including Canada. The purpose of the bureau is to translate and distribute, to the various states supporting it, the customs tariffs of the world, with amendments thereto which may be enacted from time to time. To maintain this bureau countries are classified according to their respective volumes of trade and assessed accordingly. At the outset Canada was placed in the third class, for which the contribution was $600. In 1929 Canada, on account of her increased trade, was advanced to the first class, and the Canadian contribution was raised to about $1,319. This amount was increased by 10 per cent, to provide for the superannuation of the few bureau employees. This item is to provide for the translation of the customs tariffs of the world, so that we may have them in our own language.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to item 303. Last year a bill introduced by the Minister of Agriculture provided for the erection of a seed warehouse in Saskatchewan, and at that time the minister said that whenever the seed growers in the other two prairie provinces were ready for it he would be glad to do the same thing for them. The seed growers in Alberta say they could not afford to pay the interest charges on a building similar to the one constructed in Saskatchewan, and they have asked that some additional storage facilities be provided at the government elevator at Edmonton, which could be done at much less cost. I just wanted to ask the minister if the matter has been decided upon by him, whether his department is in a position to take this action, and whether there is money available for it in the estimates.

Mr. MALCOLM: In reply to my hon. friend, although this really is a matter more for the Department of Agriculture, I may say that representations were made to the Department of Trade and Commerce along the lines suggested by my hon. friend, to the effect that we might put an annex on the Edmonton elevator to clean seed grain. The officers of my department felt that attaching a seed grain warehouse to a commercial elevator was not the best way to get good seed. It is difficult for a commercial house to clean seed grain properly. My officers recommended strongly that it would be more advisable to erect a separate building and that the Department of Agriculture should look after the work. I see no reason why the general handling charges should be loaded with the cleaning of grain for seed purposes. I advised my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture that we did not feel like going on with the work; we thought that it should come under his department. I would assure my hon. friend that the superintendent of the elevator at Edmonton is prepared to go ahead to the best of his ability with the cleaning of grain, but he cannot guarantee as clean seed as would be produced by a separate plant.

Mr. COOTE: That is being done now?

Mr. MALCOLM: It is being done now and he will continue to do it to the best of his ability.

Mr. COOTE: That will continue until some other arrangement can be made?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the minister a trade agent in Russia?

Mr. MALCOLM: No.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the minister any source of accurate information regarding conditions existing in that country?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think it is well known by members of the committee that accuracy of information regarding Russia is rather difficult to obtain. I presume my hon. friend is interested in the wheat grown in that country. We ship to Mediterranean ports—16 vessels have left Canada said to be for southern Russia—and at the same time wheat is being shipped from northern Russia. I am told that Russia is selling coal to Cardiff, while Cardiff coal is going into northern Russia. My hon. friend can take the press reports for what they are worth.

Mr. MANION: And they are selling coal to Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I hesitate to detain the committee at this stage, but I feel that I must say a word or two upon this question. There is nothing more important to the Dominion of Canada than the wheat production of other countries. Wheat is the one basic wealth which we produce annually out of the soil of Canada; it is one of the most important factors in the financial and industrial stability of this country. I am not easily alarmed in matters of this kind, but I must say that I am alarmed at the reports in this connection. For fifteen years I have been hearing of the threat of Russia to the wheat markets of the world; it has been held up before me as the great bugbear or ghost to be feared, but it has never materialized.

Mr. MALCOLM: Would my hon. friend permit the committee to rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again in order that the Prime Minister may make a motion to continue the sitting of the house?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This discussion will continue?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE

The house proceeded to consider certain resolutions reported from committee of supply this day.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTING THIS DAY AFTER ELEVEN O'CLOCK

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I wish to move that this house shall not be adjourned at eleven o'clock to-day. I have an understanding with the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. leader of the Progressive group that it will be agreeable to them to sit until one o'clock. I understand also that that will be agreeable to other members of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Mackenzie King moves that when this house adjourns at eleven o'clock it shall sit again this day.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the correct motion; the hour should be changed from eleven o'clock to one o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will repeat the motion as amended: It is moved by Mr. Mackenzie King:

That this house shall not be adjourned at eleven o'clock to-day but at one o'clock a.m. to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When the committee rose a moment ago I was stating that up to this time I had not been unduly alarmed about this situation. However, I find information coming forward, the authenticity of which I cannot vouch for, and I find myself in the same position as the minister. There appears to be a strong belief that in a great section of Russia there has been instituted what might be called a revolution in agricultural operations. I am informed that five years ago some three hundred mechanics were sent from that country to Cleveland and other cities in the United States to study the construction and repairing of tractors. These men returned to Russia and established schools for education in the use of tractors for farming purposes. I am informed that at the beginning of this year there were some 2,000,000 households—that is a unit used as the standard in agricultural matters—in Russia who were under this collectivized system of agriculture. I am informed that on April 1 of this year there were some 14,000,000 households in the scheme, and from 54 to 64 per cent of the tilled land is now alleged to be collectivized. Collectivizing means the organizing of the country into artels, under the guidance of a peasant committee. Upon that committee is a representative of the Soviet government, a farming expert and an expert accountant. All this appears to have commenced about eighteen months or two years ago with the first experiment being held on a farm which was called the giant farm, under the management of a man named Yourkin. This farm was operated so successfully that the Soviet government became interested and attempted a compulsory organization of the peasants. That was subsequently abandoned as not being the best type of organization, it being found that men who were forced to join were guilty of sabotage or else refused to work. The result was that this scheme was put upon a voluntary basis, and I am informed that the change met with instantaneous success. I have obtained most of my information from an article which appeared in an English paper known as The New Leader. The article in part reads as follows:

With anything like fair weather, it seems quite possible that the Russian grain crop this coming year will go over the top with a surplus to shake the markets of the world.

This has not been without effort and considerable cost. Yesterday, under my window, marched to the sound of a band the ranks of 1,500 Moscow students, mobilized out to organize farm collectives. The upper two classes of all the agricultural colleges in the land, and the upper class of all agricultural high schools, are being hurled in this first week of March from their desks into the rural districts. Some months ago they were preceded by 25,000 factory workers, the most skilled and the best organizers. The young communist league of the ward of Moscow, where I live, has adopted a township to the north of Moscow, and has sent out hundreds of its chosen youth to organize work in the collectives there.

For the seed collection is only the first sign of success. Now the program of work must be organized, fitting the backward individualist peasants into modern grain production on the factory system. Methods of accounting must, be set up, so that each peasant knows his tasks and his share of the harvest, and sees that he is treated equally with his neighbours. Every piece of farm machinery of every kind in Russia must be got out of warehouse to the soil in the place where it is most needed.

This gigantic job is being done in the first few weeks of March for more than half the entire peasantry of Russia.

The figures at the end of that month were that 14,000,000 households were enrolled in this single collectivized area and divided in turn into small subdistricts called artels. The organization is one of the most amazingly comprehensive and intelligently conducted I have ever heard of, and far exceeds my wildest dreams of a cooperative commonwealth. I say to the minister that if this thing is only one-tenth successful, it will mean that Russia will again be a tremendous factor in the markets of the world. We cannot prevent that, but we should know about it from authoritative sources which cannot be questioned. As I said at the outset, we are going entirely upon articles, some emanating from Russia, others from visitors to Russia and others from possibly guesswork, but I have two or three of these articles under my hand, and they all tell the same story; they all talk of this great scheme. For example, the Labour News, printed in Washington, D.C., says at page 6 of the issue of Saturday, April 5:

The harvest this year in Russia will be the most historic harvest that ever occurred since the prehistoric harvest when man first learned to cast seed on the soil for his food. The harvest this year ushers in a new form of farming, which differs so completely from the old that it must either fail in famine, or begin the farm revolution the world over. To-day the latter alternative seems likely.

The 30 days from January 20 to February 20 of this winter saw a revolution in Russia compared with which the ten days that shook the world was a mere bagatelle. In those 30 days 40 per cent of all Russia's peasants joined collectives, throwing land, horses and implements, into a common pot and planning together for ploughing and sowing. On January 20 only 17 per cent had joined the collectives; by February 20 it was 59 per cent. On January 20, only 55 per cent of the horses were yet collectives; on February 20 it was 44 per cent.

I am informed there are ten or eleven million work animals in the collectivized area, and out of that number more than 8,000,000 are now pooled in the common pot that is spoken of in this article. The article continues:

But how will these collective farms plough? What kind of a harvest will they get? Can fourteen million individual households be merged in one month into a factory form of farming—mass production of grain? That is the number that have joined collectives. The first answer came on March 1, when it was shown that collectives had brought into their central barn the staggering total of 130 million bushels of grain, which they were busy exchanging for cleaned and selected seed of the Department of Agriculture. This fact made it possible for the state to release nearly an equal amount from its reserves to give seed to regions where last year the crop failed.

This is, however, only the beginning. Fourteen million households must be listed on a working schedule, assigned their jobs each day under elected field managers. All implements in warehouses must be rushed to the fields; all local implements must be repaired. To help in this fight 25,000 of the skilled and organized factory workers have been hurled into the villages for the past three months, assisted by 100,000 disciplined red army men. They are followed now by a mobilization of 90 per cent of the farm experts of the nation.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

It is most interesting to note that all these stories carry the same basic facts, namely, that the agricultural scientists of Russia are being mobilized and thrown into this tremendous scheme. This man Yourkin, of whom I spoke earlier, was a man who studied this idea on the Campbell farm. Campbell who has the greatest single farm in the United States, at that time the greatest single farm in the world, was taken to Russia and he there gave them information regarding the operation of a gigantic farm of this kind. Some two years ago Yourkin took over the operation of the first experiment of this kind. The description of that is as follows:

Last year Yourkin was director of the Gigant, the biggest farm in the world, three times as big as Campbell's. This year he has a job which completely dwarfs last year's: he is managing the farming of half Russia. Over 200,000,000 acres of farmland in Russia have come during the past winter under collectivization. This is the farm that Yourkin manages!

The total wheat acreage in western Russia at the present time is 24,000,000 acres. In this we have a suggestion of collective operation of 200,000,000 acres. In no manner does this mean that acreage will be sown to wheat, but I am informed that the most intelligently organized areas are in the best wheat districts of Russia. I do not want to suggest to the committee that we should become unduly alarmed about this situation, although frankly, I am alarmed about it; but I say that we should be in a position to secure accurate information, and I would urge upon the minister, with all the earnestness I can command, that he undertake in some way to see that Canada has that information which is so vital to her, and that we have it in a way and from a source that cannot be questioned. As to how he can get that information I do not know, and I would not dare to venture any particular or specific suggestion; but it occurs to me that he has in Canada organizations now operating in agriculture, some of which would be glad to cooperate with him in this matter. If any means could be found whereby he could send an agent or secure an agent being sent from this country for the purpose of finding out all about this scheme, he would be only doing his duty. I am sorry we have no definite information about it. I realize that is because we cut off trade relations with Russia some years ago. I am not going to argue at the moment that those relations should be restored. Personally I feel they should be; I think it would be in the trade interests of Canada that they be restored under certain restrictions with regard to propaganda. We are missing a lot of good business by not restoring those trade relations.

Relations between the two countries would be better if trade relations were restored, but the thing of chief importance to me at the moment is the possibility of this tremendous volume of wheat being suddenly thrown on the markets of the world to their complete demoralization. That would be bad enough, but to have it happen without forewarning would be disastrous to western Canada and a very serious matter to the whole of Canada. If we are forewarned, we shall be prepared for the catastrophe, mentally, if not otherwise. We may not be able to take any direct steps to offset it, but I feel we are at least entitled to accurate information as to the condition of affairs in Russia.

Mr. MALCOLM: I can assure my hon. friend I would like very much to be able to secure accurate information as to what is being done in every country in the world, if that were possible; but in the case of Russia I believe he will agree with me that when one gets an optimistic statement from Russia, one can never tell whether it is propaganda or a bear attack on the market. Anybody who has followed the wheat market in Liverpool will recall that on more than one occasion the Liverpool market was brought down several shillings a quarter on account of information from Russia. The cry of "wolf!" has gone out so often I have ceased to be alarmed about the 200,000,000 acres of which my hon. friend has spoken. The most authoritative statements that I have heard made about Russia, or rather, statements made by men whose judgment is, I think conservative and reliable, are to the effect that Russia has to some extent entered on the venture which my hon. friend points out, namely, industrialized agriculture. Having failed deplorably in the operation of her industry to attain any mass production, she seems to have now turned her endeavours to industrialized agriculture.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Where did the minister get the information that Russia had failed deplorably in regard to industry?

Mr. MALCOLM: I told my hon. friend that I got information from men whose opinions I value but whose names I do not wish to make public, that Russia has failed deplorably in trying to organize her factories, but that she has turned with some success to the organizations of her coal fields and probably of her agricultural areas. I have been informed that Russia is not particularly interested in the growing of wheat in the southern areas, but that she is taking a very great interest and sees possibilities of better returns in growing cotton. That would seem to be borne out by the fact that a great deal of wheat is now going to Mediterranean ports and supposedly to Russia. I cannot join with my hon. friend in being so fearful of what Russia may do to the Canadian wheat business. Russia may be a factor and will be a factor in producing very good wheat, but I doubt very much if the condition which my hon. friend points out will obtain.

As to sending someone to Russia, as my hon. friend suggests, we have not at the present time any trade relations with Russia. There is very little that we can buy from Russia. Lumber, coal and wheat are her three principal commodities of export, and those three are also commodities of export from this dominion. It is true that we can sell Russia some manufactured goods, and we are doing so, to the extent of a few million dollar's worth in recent years. But there is very little trade in return. In the case of a country like Russia, where payments seem to depend on the trading country's ability to lend Russia money, I am not so enamoured of opening trade relations with Russia as my hon. friend. I would like to see more stability in Russia before I would recommend any such step to the government.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do I understand the minister to say that he does not propose to take any steps to find out more accurately about conditions there?

Mr. MALCOLM: I did not say that I would not take steps, but I have no intention of opening a detective agency to find out what is going on in Russia.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I did not suggest that.

Mr. MALCOLM: If my hon. friend can tell me how I or anybody else can make a survey of Russia except through the ordinary business channels, I shall be glad to hear from him. My hon. friend agrees with me that in the past five years probably three out of four of the statements that have emanated from Russia have been simply propaganda. Some of the statements may be truthful, but to pick out the truthful ones is a gamble. I have heard so many contradictory statements made by people who have been in Russia. Some of them I have found to be correct, but three out of four have been wrong. I have no intention at the present time of sending an investigator to Russia to find out what effect Russia's program is going to have on Canada's trade. It may be advisable in the future, but I do not think it is advisable at the moment.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am disappointed in the position taken by the minister, because I have usually found him very reasonable. I am disappointed, but I should not be surprised, because I remember that last year he made a speech in this house in which he said that his department was interested in finding markets for manufactured goods but not in finding markets for grain.

Mr. MALCOLM: I never said that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): He said that products of that kind find their own markets. I can quote his words in Hansard.

Mr. MALCOLM: What I said was that our trade commissioners had no facilities for marketing grain, that grain was sold on the exchanges of the world, and that our trade commissioners in their offices had no opportunity to sell grain. My hon. friend knows that, and that is exactly what I meant when I made that statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On March 14, 1929, the minister said on page 948 of Hansard:

> The department of trade and commerce is not exercised over the sale of such commodities as wheat, because those commodities find their own markets; but we are interested in assisting the sale of manufactured products.

Mr. MALCOLM: I stand by that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is exactly what I said the minister said, and he said he did not say it.

Mr. MALCOLM: No. Hansard will show what I said.

Mr. MANION: Wheat has not found its own market this year very well.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am going to ask the minister once more to consider this situation. I agree with him that we have been fooled with the cry of "wolf" for thirty years, if he likes, but that was in the days when the peasants of Russia were under the rule of the czar, when conditions in that country were deplorable, when the peasant was a downtrodden wreck of citizenship, poverty stricken and starving for the most part, his grain and foodstuffs taken from him to pay for taxes, and with nothing left to live on but brown or black bread. Since that time I am informed from many sources, not just by one or two travellers, that conditions have vastly changed. Read some of the most modern works on Russia and you will find that there is a changed mentality amongst the people. They were in danger not long ago of a partial famine, and as a result we find from one article after another, coming from a variety of sources, that agriculture is being organized. In view of that and the effect that it must have on the welfare of Canada, it is not too much to ask that the minister undertake to find out in some way—I do not care in what way—the truth for the benefit of those in this country whose living is in agriculture.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I just wish to endorse what my hon. friend from Bow River has said with respect to Russia. If a year ago I had told the minister that to-day Russian pulpwood would be coming up the St. Lawrence and landing at Canadian ports, he would have said that I had a mental aberration. Yet that is the fact to-day. There is no doubt that a lot of the statements coming out of Russia in recent years have been propaganda, but when we see Russian goods being sold in Canada in competition with our own, we are faced with facts, not propaganda. To-day we find Russian pulpwood selling in Canada, and Russian coal and lumber. What are we going to do if Russian wheat is sold in large quantities in England next year? We are almost entirely shut out of continental markets for our wheat, and England is about the only market we have left. If Russia should take that market from us, and there is a serious danger of that happening, what are we going to do about it? Since we are maintaining a department of trade and commerce and have trade commissioners all over the world, it seems to me that this is a subject that we should inquire into right now. The minister should be able to secure information through his trade commissioners, and with accurate information before us we can adjust ourselves to conditions as we see them arise. The Russian farmer has a very much lower standard of living than the Canadian farmer, and if we have to face Russian competition in Great Britain and the outside world, it may be a most disastrous thing for us. The sooner we know what the actual situation is, the better. I would press on the minister the absolute necessity of inquiring into the situation so that we may secure the best information possible.

Mr. MALCOLM: I would like to say in reply to my hon. friends as to the work of our trade commissioners, that I meant just what I said last year in discussing the work of the trade and commerce men in the field. We are not exercised over the marketing of wheat because we have no control over wheat. The pool in this country sells its own wheat, and it controls 60 per cent of Canada's crop. The rest of the crop is sold when in the opinion of the owners of the wheat the price is advantageous. I defy any hon. gentleman to say that he can represent Canada in Liverpool and can persuade any miller to buy wheat on any other basis than the day's prevailing price for the grade of a Canadian certificate. The market is so well established that I do not think anybody could persuade the buyer to pay a cent more for a grade that he wanted or to buy a grade that he did not want. We have looked into this situation. There are countries where our trade commissioners have done everything possible to assist, and have cooperated with the agents of the pool; but those countries have not the great buying power of Britain. We are interested in the marketing of anything where we can help, but wheat is a commodity in which it is particularly hard for us to be of active assistance because the owner sells only at the moment he thinks the price is as high as he can obtain.

As to the Russian situation, two things have been pointed out by members who have spoken; namely that Russia is likely to grow a lot more wheat, and that the Russian people are raising their standard of living. I think everybody realizes that in the days before the war when Russia produced and exported a considerable quantity of wheat she was not a large consumer of her best grades. Now we are told Russia will be a very substantial consumer of those grades. These statements must be judged one in relation to the other. I am informed there will be some Russian wheat come out of northern Russia, and I am told also that there will be a market in southern Russia for as much wheat as northern Russia will export. As a matter of fact, of nineteen boats in all that came from Russia to Canada with coal or pulpwood, sixteen were chartered to take wheat back to Mediterranean ports.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Exactly.

Mr. MALCOLM: Where their ultimate destination is I do not know.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is not Russia.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am also informed that southern Russia at the moment is very short of wheat and that wheat is likely to go in there. All these statements from Russia are more or less rumours, and to investigate the actual conditions there is a very difficult matter. Canada broke off trade relations with Russia in 1927; therefore we cannot at the present time send trade commissioners to ask their statisticians to supply us with information. Calculations have been made by various agencies, and we are trying to get from these sources authoritative information that may be of assistance to our wheat growers. In a word, we are watching the situation, and from what I know I do not see the disaster facing us that my hon. friend thinks is imminent. I do not believe Russia will be such a tremendous factor in the wheat market this year as has been reported.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Perhaps the minister might get information from the British government. I offer the suggestion to the minister for what it is worth. I understand they have reestablished trade relations with Russia.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not think official relations have been reestablished.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have an idea, Mr. Chairman, that the minister should know more about it than I do—

Mr. BENNETT: They have reestablished quasi diplomatic relations.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I suggest to the minister that he take the matter up with the board of trade department of Great Britain and find out whether they think there is any truth in the reports which have been in circulation. I am only anxious to help the minister get the best information. If he cannot send a man there himself I ask him to take it up with the British authorities.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am trying to get information, but I may tell my hon. friend frankly that the reports are very conflicting. We get information from our trade commissioner in London which he secures in various ways, but the reports emanating from Russia are so contradictory that the authorities in England are not inclined to attach much importance to them. I do not think we can place full credence in some of the reports, because nothing would be so much to the personal advantage of a man who wished to depress the market as to circulate rumours that Russian grain was coming in in large quantities. As I said before, you can never tell whether these statements are authentic or mere propaganda.

Mr. SHORT: A few minutes ago the minister said that Russia was increasing her trade in coal. Has he or the government taken into serious consideration doing anything to prevent the importations of hundreds of thousands of tons of Russian coal to the detriment of the coal industry of Nova Scotia? The minister says there are no diplomatic relations between Russia and this country. If that is so there is certainly a very undiplomatic trade going on, because he and his government must be well aware that not a few cargoes, but hundreds of thousands of tons of Russian coal are coming into this country and are being sold at a price below that at which Nova Scotia can land her coal in Montreal. I think the minister or his department should give very serious consideration to the question of why one of the natural products of this country should be displaced by coal imported from Russia which is mined with prison labour.

Mr. MALCOLM: No.

Mr. SHORT: Well, with very cheap labour —labour that lives at a standard very much below what our miners live or what we would want them to live. This is a very serious question, and it is increasing in gravity all the time. Certainly the minister's department or the government should do something about it.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to direct a few questions to the minister with respect to coal. I brought the matter to his attention in connection with the first importations of coal from Russia in 1928. At that time he thought very lightly of it and told me it would not amount to anything. I then also spoke to three of his colleagues, the Minister of Mines (Mr. Stewart), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) and the then Minister of Finance Mr. Robb. The only one who took any interest in the matter was the late Mr. Robb. Now, I want to point out to the minister that this coal has continued to come in in increasing quantities. As I say, it began in 1928. The importations largely increased a year ago, and to-day we have hundreds of thousands of tons coming, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) has just said. This matter was dealt with a week ago when I asked a question of the Minister of Mines who is now in his seat beside the minister. His reply then was:

There has been some coal carried from Montreal as far west as Cobalt.

Then he made this astounding statement:

It has been coming in under the subvention granted to the movement of Nova Scotia coal, but I am informed that only a small amount has reached Cobalt. It is not expected that the importation of Soviet or Russian coal will exceed 300,000 tons.

I think the Minister of Mines was under a misapprehension when he made that statement. He had an idea, due to imperfect knowledge of the facts, that that coal would not compete with our coal. Indeed he said that it did not affect the importation of anthracite coal from Great Britain, the proof of that in his mind being that the importation of anthracite from Great Britain was increasing and the importation of American anthracite was decreasing. For the moment I am not particularly interested in the question of the relative increase or decrease of anthracite coal from Great Britain or the United States, but I am interested in the class of coal to which I have referred and of which I have a sample in my hand. I may say that I showed this coal last week to the Minister of Mines. We have here a coal which comes as a result of a very great improvement in Soviet mining conditions and scientific treatment of that product. These people have set for themselves the mark of 300,000,000 tons as a yearly output, and judging from the progress they have made in the last few years it is not unlikely they will reach that enormous output within a short time. This coal may be considered a by-product of anthracite coal. May I point out to the minister that when the first cargoes of Russian anthracite coal came out they consisted of totally unprepared run-of-mine anthracite, and it proved to be a fine fuel. As analysis proved, it is superior to any anthracite of which I am aware, and in that statement I include the anthracite from Scotland, Wales and the United States. It is higher in fixed carbon and lower in ash than the anthracite coal produced to-day in any of those countries, or any such coal which has been mined in those countries within the last twenty years. Last year the coal came out sized egg and nut, and this year it is coming in buckwheat sizes also. This Soviet coal is air washed and is beautifully polished, and entirely free from dust or other impurities. If not air washed it would be a waste product and would be thrown on the dump. It is brought out under a guarantee rate of freight not exceeding 12 shillings a ton with a guarantee to the importers that if the freight goes up to 14, 18 or 20 shillings the exporters will bear the difference between 12 shillings and any advance in freight rates up to 20 shillings per ton. In other words, Russian producers will contribute up to 8 shillings a ton to meet any increase in the freight. The coal can be air-cleaned for say five cents per ton. Twelve shillings in our money amounts to $2.88. If sold on the Montreal market at $3 a ton the producers will come out even, indeed have a small profit of say seven or eight cents. Nova Scotia cannot place run-of-mine coal on the bunkhead for $3 a ton, to say nothing about transporting from Nova Scotia to Montreal. Now I ask the minister, what is the government going to do about it? This coal is now actually going into the interior of Ontario, and the Minister of Mines stated it is being transported west from Montreal under the subvention rail freight granted to the moving of Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sorry if Hansard interpreted my statement in that way. I did not read my remarks, but if I made that statement it is not the fact. Soviet coal does not enjoy the subvention granted to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick coal. The payment of subvention is dependent upon the coal coming from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick from our own field.

Mr. SHORT: Why did you make the statement which appears in Hansard?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Hansard must have misinterpreted my remarks, or if I made the statement my hon. friend has quoted I should have changed it.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am glad to have the correction, but in all fairness I would like to read the statement made by the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend has read it.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is as follows:

> There has been some coal carried from Montreal as far west as Cobalt. It has been coming in under the subvention granted to the movement of Nova Scotia coal, but I am informed that only a small amount has reached Cobalt. It is not expected that the importation of Soviet or Russian coal will exceed 300,000 tons. Perhaps the total will be about 150,000 tons.

That is the statement made by the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but I wish to make a correction to the effect that there is no coal moved under the subvention, except Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to point out to the government that this Soviet coal which is coming out here to-day can be sold at a small profit even if sold for $3 a ton. It is offered freely at $6 a ton, and if a buyer could be found who wanted it in large quantities I am quite satisfied he could obtain it at a much smaller price. The exporters have demonstrated that they are in a position to sell it at as low as $3 a ton, delivered at the port of Montreal.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): There is no mining cost in connection with it. Did my hon. friend say there was $2.88 freight?

Mr. CANTLEY: I wish someone would interpret to me what the hon. gentleman is saying; I am anxious to answer, but I cannot hear him. However, I do not know that it makes very much difference.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The hon. gentleman has said that we are including mining costs.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is the use of saying that? I have given the cost of the coal delivered at Montreal.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): My hon. friend stated there was a charge of 12 shillings for freight.

Mr. CANTLEY: I have already pointed out that it is a by-product, and if it did not come out here or find a market elsewhere it would go to the dump. However, by air washing it as they can do at a cost of about five cents per ton they are able to offer it if necessary as low as $3 a ton and are freely offering it for $6 in Montreal. They are able to offer this fuel at a much lower figure than that at which we can produce and sell Nova Scotia coal on the same market. Is that clear?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It is clear enough, but you have said it is waste coal, and you have said that it will compete with the very best grade of anthracite.

Mr. CANTLEY: I say the coal would be a waste product if not classified and air washed, which is done, and exported to this country, and we are foolish enough to allow them to do it. This is a better fuel than any bituminous coal that is mined in Canada, or can be produced anywhere in Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The hon. gentleman said it was better than the best.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is a better boiler fuel than any bituminous coal mined in Wales, the United States, Canada, or anywhere else, and what are we going to do about it? When the first carload of Soviet coal reached the United States during the fall of 1928 it was refused admission. The collector of the port of New York appealed to the government at Washington as to how he should deal with the situation, and as a result Washington promptly placed on that coal a duty of $2.84 a ton. The ship there was diverted to Montreal and there discharged the cargo free of duty. Cargo after cargo has come out since, and it is expected that three or four hundred thousand tons will come out this year. I appeal to the government, and I want to know what the government intends to do.

The miners of Nova Scotia and the Alberta coal miners are interested and demand action from the minister; and I want to tell the minister that probably before members of this house reach their homes this Soviet coal will have reached the city of Winnipeg. Hon. members need not express doubt about it, they may depend that it will be there and very soon unless there are effective steps taken to prevent it. One of the members of the British House of Commons, who is thoroughly familiar with the coal trade, in calling attention to the matter, recently made the statement that the men who produce this coal are working for a rouble or say 18 cents per day. The Soviet coal producers have spent enormous sums of money within the past five years in perfecting their methods of treatment of this coal with the result that they have a product which is coming to this country today in large volume and apparently the government is powerless to deal with it, although they have had three years in which to consider the situation and meet the difficulty.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I regret very much that I did not previously correct the statement in Hansard, to the effect that Russian coal was moved under the subvention, which in fact applies only to Nova Scotia coal. I wish to make that correction at this time, and make it perfectly clear that it is not true. There is no coal except the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick coal moved under the subvention, either on the railway, the steamships, or by combination of rail and steamship. The subvention applies to it only and never was intended to apply elsewhere. With respect to the statement of my hon. friend, that he is not concerned about the importation of Russian anthracite—

Mr. CANTLEY: I did not say that; I did not say I was not concerned. I said I was not concerned as to whether the relative quantity of British or American coal was greater or less. The importation of this coal overshadows the whole question.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All right, I shall accept that statement. I have been making some inquiries in recent days since my hon. friend raised the question in the house and the conversation I had with him in respect to this particular product, and the fact is that we are importing more British anthracite coal than ever before; it is constantly growing. The falling off is in the United States coal, so that there is evidence that the Russian anthracite is supplanting the importation from the United States. With respect to the product about which my hon. friend complains and the importation of which he fears will grow to large proportions, I am making careful inquiries with a view to seeing whether or not the duty now imposed against the American product can be applied against importations from Russia.

Mr. SHORT: The duty is only 50 cents on the American product, is it not?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: There is no duty on anthracite coal from any country.

Mr. SHORT: A duty of 50 cents will not prevent it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but there are other means which can be adopted whereby duty can be charged.

Mr. CANTLEY: Undoubtedly there are other methods. My complaint against the minister and the government is that they talk about other methods, but for three years they have allowed this coal to come into Canada and have done absolutely nothing. Two years ago they scouted the idea that there was anything in it all; only one minister at that time exhibited any interest whatever. The quantity imported has been increasing, and unless something very definite is done to meet the situation you will find half a million tons of this coal coming into Montreal and large tonnages to other parts of Canada as well within the next year. As a matter of fact this coal is being sold down in Halifax now; the importation is not confined to Montreal, and within a few months, and before the frost comes, you will find it in Winnipeg. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I am very sorry the Minister of Trade and Commerce does not take as seriously as I thought he should the remarks of the hon. members for Bow River and Mackenzie. I have made a study of the Russian situation as it affects the British market for our wheat ever since it has been my privilege to be in the House of Commons, and I must say that I am alarmed over this situation. Usually I take a very optimistic view of these things, but I am alarmed now. We know that our wheat did not move last fall and that we did not get a pro rata part of the importations of wheat into Great Britain, and the one real reason for that was because we were not buying a sufficient quantity of British goods. There were two delegations came over from Great Britain to try and arrange better trade agreements or understandings between Canada and that country, and after those delegations were more or less turned down Great Britain went to the Argentine and practically took the entire crop. In return they gave goods. I have several photostatic copies of editorials and articles which appeared in the Manchester Guardian, which very forcibly state the situation with regard to the Canadian wheat in the British market, and every article shows the necessity of our taking more British goods. Nearly every article makes reference to that 50 per cent clause which went into effect on February 1, 1929, and which shut out the major portion of cotton textiles and some manufactures of copper. As I have said before, this was the last straw that broke the camel's back, and if these conditions are not remedied in the near future we will have another crop on our hands and the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be reporting another loss of $21,000,000. I have here a short statement which appeared in the Toronto press, as follows:

> The reduced wheat crop, and its failure to move normally, resulted in a loss of $21,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, E. W. Beatty, the president, told newspaper men to-day. Less than half of this, however, will be made up when the wheat does start to move, which Mr. Beatty expects will be next month.

This statement appeared on February 27, but the wheat did not begin to move until recently. The statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on March 14, 1929, has been read already; the minister said he was not interested in the marketing of wheat, which would find its own level in the markets of the world.

Mr. MALCOLM: I did not use those words, and I cannot allow my hon. friend to say that we are not concerned in the market for Canadian wheat. I said we were not exercised, and I think my hon. friend should be fair enough to use the word I used.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): When I spoke of the minister I spoke of him as the head of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I will read the exact words:

> The Department of Trade and Commerce is not exercised over the sale of such commodities as wheat, because those commodities find their own markets; but we are interested in assisting the sale of manufactured products.

Mr. MALCOLM: Quite so.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): It is quite all right to be interested in the sale of manufactured products; several million dollars worth of manufactured products go to Great Britain and to Russia from Canada. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said a few moments ago that we would have to take something in return if we exported to Russia, and the Minister of Finance has made that statement several times during the course of this session. If that be true—and no one doubts it—of necessity we must take more goods from Great Britain. That is absolutely necessary if we expect Great Britain to take from 300,000,000 to 350,000,000 bushels of our wheat to relieve the Canadian market. We must take that much in goods from Great Britain.

I do not wish to delay the committee, but I could give statistics to show that up until the last few months we were taking less than half the amount of goods from Great Britain that would compensate for this amount of wheat. That balance of trade must be looked into. The more we pry the foreign markets open for manufactured goods the more we will have to take in return to pay for those goods, and it is just a question of whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce is going to interest himself in the marketing of our wheat as to whether our next crop will be in any better position than the last one.

I do hope he will seriously consider the remarks of the hon. members I previously mentioned and interest himself in finding out the Russian situation, and interest himself very seriously in seeing what can be done in regard to the marketing of our wheat because it will not find its own market any more; it must be merchandised. When Great Britain has come to the place where she has to resort to bartering, trading her goods for other goods, we must be up and doing in order to get in on that market. The situation is too serious to pass over.

Mr. MALCOLM: Does not my hon. friend know that the whole basis of this year's budget was to let Great Britain sell us more goods so that we could sell her more wheat? My hon. friend realizes that.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I will tell the minister that all the articles put on the free list from Great Britain do not amount to the snap of my fingers when compared to the damage done by the 50 per cent content regulation.

Mr. GEARY: Surely no one could suggest that the budget is going to remedy this wheat condition; surely my hon. friend the minister who has just spoken does not think that the English trade with Canada will be greatly increased by the new budget. If my hon. friend wants to change that balance of trade and get the credits right, let him shut out American goods; let him raise the duty on those goods and divert the trade in reality from the United States to Great Britain. He cannot do it by the miserable little gestures that have been made by this government in connection with the British preference. No one in this house seriously thinks for one moment that that is going to make any difference to amount to anything.

I am a little concerned about my hon. friends here to my left; they are getting to the same point as hon. gentlemen opposite and are finding out that they must rely upon protection after all, even if it is upon wheat. Apparently they want the minister to take some steps to protect them against inroads of Russian wheat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. GEARY: I have heard it said that they do not want any more farmers in the west because those farmers will produce more wheat and the prices will be brought down.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I do not think the hon. member quite caught my argument. I claim that the 50 per cent clause is an extreme one; if it were changed to 40 per cent British Empire labour and materials, as regards cotton and copper manufactures, it would remedy the situation.

Mr. GEARY: I understood the point my hon. friend was trying to make. I would suggest to my hon. friends that they call upon their gods, the old god of free trade. That is a faith they have been holding to for many years. Surely if we follow that theory the countries of the world should take advantage of their opportunities and grow what they are able to grow, spread their products throughout the world, bring down the prices, and thus bring about that cheapness of commodities which is the desideratum of free trade. But I do not think my hon. friends really want cheap wheat, and I do not blame them in taking the stand they do. They want to obtain a profit; they do not want the consumer to obtain the cheapest wheat possible, neither do they want their market interfered with.

Mr. COOTE: If it were not a sacrilege, we would call upon the gods across the way to give us free trade. If we had free trade in the goods which we have to purchase, then we could meet this competition from Russia with the prices we are obtaining for our wheat. A vote of about $750,000 appears under the heading of commercial intelligence service. All we are asking is that the government spend some of that money in an endeavour to obtain accurate information regarding the wheat situation. Surely the wheat producers are entitled to know just what is happening. If it is necessary to meet this competition from Russia we may have to come back here and ask for free trade in certain things, but I do not want to be led away into a discussion on free trade. The minister must have some idea of the amount of money expended by Russia in the purchase in this country of agricultural machinery, and he must know that that machinery is being purchased for one object only, the growing of wheat. We are asking that we receive some service from the commercial intelligence service branch, and I think we are entitled to that. In his opening remarks the minister led us to believe that he had no way of obtaining reliable information; the information which he was able to get was not reliable, so why bother with it.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) made the statement that the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) would not help to move Canadian wheat. There is no doubt that it is helping to move Canadian wheat. Because of this budget the people of England have had their attention drawn to the situation, and they are demanding more and more that Canadian wheat be supplied. The hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Fansher) is going to try to sell 350,000,000 bushels of wheat to England, when she cannot use more than 225,000,000 bushels. The present situation in this country has not been caused by the competition of Russian wheat. During the war and for some time following the end of the war, wheat prices were high and many additional acres of land were brought under cultivation. Wheat prices have since fallen, and the acreage must be limited. Although we may have competition from Russia, other countries which have been competing with us in the growing of wheat will have to get out of that business, and then the market will be as it was before. Russian competition existed before the war and it will exist again, but the wheat farmer of western Canada, with his improved methods of farming, can compete in the growing of wheat with anyone in the world. He can grow a better wheat and he will find a market for it.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand the minister has taken the position that it is impossible to obtain reliable information regarding Russia. There is a committee in the old country which has upon its membership some of the Labour members of parliament. That committee has been studying trade relations as between Great Britain and Russia and they have issued a pamphlet in which they claim that the statistics coming from Russia are absolutely reliable. The sooner we make it our business to obtain all the available facts, the better it will be for us. I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce should bend every effort and use every resource at his command in order that we may be supplied with reliable information.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is not necessary to go to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in order to obtain reliable information as to the possible wheat competition from Russia. Broomhall publishes a report which is available on every exchange in western Canada, and which contains very reliable information. I say again what I said to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), that I cannot find anything in the best authorities which would justify the extravagant statement that Russia this year is going to flood the wheat markets of the world. I believe she is going to be in production but I do not believe it will be to the extent stated by my hon. friends.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): In answer to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross), and to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I would state that the Financial Post reports that Russia put 84,000 tons of wheat into Great Britain during the months of December and January.

Inspection of subsidized steamship services, $5,000.—Total, $1,276,050.

Mr. MANION: I suppose we are dealing with all these items together?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. MANION: I mentioned these subsidies for local services to the minister some time ago. They amount to something like $1,000,000. As regards the St. Lawrence river, many subsidies are paid to one company. I understand that Clarke Brothers are receiving something like $300,000. Many of them are quite heavy, but there is one to which I would like to refer, as follows:

Rimouski and Matane and points on the north shore of the lower St. Lawrence, service between, $50,000.

This item was passed as an order in council on December 20th of last year. Instead of the government waiting until the matter came into the house, for some reason an order in council was passed to grant this $50,000 subsidy.

Mr. BENNETT: How could they do that?

Mr. MANION: I do not know, but they did it in any case. They put it on the list by an order in council providing a subsidy, not for one year but for ten years. A strange thing is that this session in the provincial legislature at Quebec there was a proposal that the same company receive $50,000 for ten years also on the same service. This was fought in the Quebec house and the period was finally cut down to five years. This company, then, is receiving $100,000 a year for this service, and I am informed on very good authority that the same service was carried on in the past for $12,500 a year under a subsidy given not for ten years or five years, but by the year. The minister shakes his head.

Mr. MALCOLM: I shall be pleased to give my hon. friend the explanation.

Mr. MANION: Let the minister give the explanation and then I will continue with my remarks.

Mr. MALCOLM: I will give the explanation after my hon. friend has finished.

[Mr. W. R. Fansher.]

Mr. MANION: I am giving the facts as I have received them from people in whom I have confidence. They may be wrong; the minister may dispute them, but I have under my hand some of the returns, copies of some of the letters written by the minister's department, and so on, and I have studied the matter carefully. That is the statement. Moreover, I am told—and I will give the name of the company in this case—the Des Monts Shipping Company of Quebec offer to give, for $10,000 a year, the same service for which $50,000 a year is being paid by this government and $50,000 a year by the Quebec government. By the way, I might mention that the subsidy given by the provincial government was not given as a subsidy but was brought in as a bill, so that, although we have nothing to do with the provincial government, this emphasizes the great friendship the provincial government and this government have for these people.

It is true the Clarke's, I am told, deny that they own this company. The name of the company is The Lower St. Lawrence Transportation Company, but I am informed that the Clarke's, who get altogether, including this sum, $300,000 a year in subsidies, own about 95 per cent of the stock. I am also advised—and I am giving the minister all the facts I have—that the two boats together that are carrying out this service are not equal in value to the subsidy for one year. It is true that the improvements—and this I did not get from the people who gave me the original information; I got it from one of the officers of the company just yesterday—that are being made on these boats, are to be completed some time next year, and I am informed that when the boats are improved they will be very much more valuable than they are now and will give a much better service. But in the meantime, although the improvements are not to be completed for a year, or until some time in the summer of 1931, the subsidy is being paid. It is stated by my informant—and I will conclude with this—that the total at the outside for this service should not be more than $15,000 a year between the provincial and the Dominion governments, instead of $100,000 a year. He stated also that the same coast route is served to-day by some seven vessels, including Gaspe County, Gaspe Trader, Miron, Annie Nodeau, Tremblay and a couple of others, without their receiving any subsidy at all. I have stated the whole matter very briefly. I have taken all these reports which I have, amounting to some tens of thousands of words, and condensed them into a very brief statement of the facts, as they were given to me. I shall be glad to hear what the minister has to say in reply.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend from Fort William has apparently fallen into the hands of someone who did not have the full particulars regarding this service. This is really an amalgamation of three services, and I am free to say to the committee that I was the instigator of the amalgamation of these various companies. There were three very indifferent services being given on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. QUINN: Had the three services two boats?

Mr. MALCOLM: There were three separate services.

Mr. MANION: I am informed that they are exactly the same boats.

Mr. MALCOLM: Will my hon. friend allow me to finish my explanation? Owing to the development on the north shore and the desire of the people on the south shore to take advantage, by way of opportunities for employment and the sale of merchandise, of the development work of the large paper companies that were going in, we were approached by boards of trade or received communications asking us to institute a good service. We had wanted to get commodities from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia more cheaply into northern Quebec in order to give the maritime provinces an opportunity to compete. There are no railways and no good roads through this rapidly developing area and the people are entirely dependent on water service. I had been approached by various people who had little auxiliary schooners like some of the vessels my hon. friend speaks of, to grant a subsidy. I think we had in all four or five appeals for subsidies. During last session I had to provide for a service with good boats across the St. Lawrence and on up to the various points of call. I shall be very frank with my hon. friend as to the Clarke Steamship Company, before I tell him how this amalgamation was brought about. This is the first service in which I have had anything to do with the Clarke Steamship Company which is affiliated with the other companies in this service. The other services they have are the Quebec, Montreal and Gaspe service for which they built a splendid boat called the New Northland, for which service they got $60,000 a year. They extended that to Cornerbrook.

Mr. BENNETT: How much did she cost?

Mr. MALCOLM: About $300,000. They operate the Gaspesia too on the service.

Mr. BENNETT: They got 20 per cent of the value of the boat as a subsidy.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend must allow 10 per cent for depreciation and maintenance. These services were installed before I came to the department, and had been in existence for a number of years. There is also the Quebec and Harrington service, carried on by the North Shore and the Voyageur. That is an $85,000 subsidy. The service is extended to Cornerbrook fortnightly. Then there is the Murray Bay and north shore winter service, for $32,500. On this service a good deal of money was lost because of ice conditions. I consulted the people who were performing these indifferent services, and asked them whether they could make an amalgamation of the various interests and provide a high class boat which would cost about $250,000, also using the boats that are there at the present time. I suggested that if they would provide an adequate service, and the province of Quebec would pay half of the cost, as it was primarily a business of the province of Quebec, although we were interested in giving Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia products an opportunity with proper facilities to get into that area, I would consider a term contract. That was the proposition I made to the various interests in the lower St. Lawrence. Mr. Clarke was interested and so were a number of others. I left the matter with those interested to see what could be worked out. They worked out a service and after considerable bartering, we finally agreed that we would pay half of this service if the provincial government would pay half.

The representations made by the hon. member for Fort William do not take into account what is given by way of service. The services are all increased in frequency. The new service to be performed by the Lower St. Lawrence Transportation Company replaces the following services: Rimouski, Bersimis and Pointe aux Outardes; Rimouski, Pointe aux Outardes and Trinity Bay; Matane, Trinity Bay and Seven Islands.

The Manicouagan will make three trips a week instead of two, and will be remodelled and improved.

On the Rimouski, Pointe aux Outardes and Trinity Bay route, there is the steamer Mayita. This was formerly operated by the Rimouski-Saguenay Navigation company under subsidy, between Rimouski and Pointe aux Outardes only. The Mayita will make three trips a week instead of two, will perform a regular service to north shore ports as far east as Trinity Bay, and will be replaced on the opening of navigation in 1931 by a new ship with a speed of from eleven to fourteen knots.

On the Matane, Trinity bay and Seven islands route, there was no subsidized service formerly, but applications for subsidy have been received frequently in past years from the Heppell Transportation company, the St. Regis Paper company, La Cie de Commerce Maritime de Matane, the Quebec and St. Lawrence Navigation company and Capt. Theodore Piuze.

The Heppell transportation company and the Rimouski-Saguenay Navigation company, have been absorbed by the new Lower St. Lawrence Transportation company.

We have had other applications for the service between the north and south shores from various people. When I took this step I can assure my hon. friend that I was acting much in my own interests, to relieve the pressure from people who wanted subsidies. There were many small services, and there were many requests for more. I can assure my hon. friend that the contract which was drawn up with the Lower St. Lawrence navigation company is dependent on the vote being passed by this house. If parliament does not vote the money, it cannot be paid. I do submit, however, that the provincial government went carefully into the matter. My hon. friend said that the vote was opposed in the provincial house; I did not know that. I know that the subsidy was to be 50 per cent provincial and 50 per cent federal. I contend, after having looked into the matter very carefully, considering the service they are called upon to perform they will not make much money out of the subsidy they are receiving. My hon. friend also said that someone had offered to perform this service for $10,000. We have had other applications for services between the north and the south shores, from $10,000 down to $5,000. The Des Monts company has just one boat the Savoy. Others who offered to perform the service had no steamer at all, nothing but a schooner.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to delay the house, and while I do not question the minister's explanation from his own standpoint, I would point out that while he said that I had got into evil hands—

Mr. MALCOLM: No, wrong information.

Mr. MANION: I am afraid that the minister got into the wicked hands of those who are getting this subsidy. Before going any further, let me say that I am not opposing this service in any shape or form, and I do not wish to be considered as opposing it. I want these people on the St. Lawrence to get this service, but at the same time I submit that these facts have been given to me by a gentleman who I believe is pretty well informed; he has given me copies of letters of a most interesting kind which I shall not take up time to put on Hansard. He admits a number of facts which the minister has stated. For instance, the minister says that two services have been amalgamated into one. This gentleman admits that, but he says that it is the same service which last year was getting $12,500.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is quite incorrect.

Mr. MANION: It is his word against the minister's.

Mr. MALCOLM: I can show my hon. friend the contract.

Mr. MANION: The minister has proved himself wrong in some cases. For instance, he says that this company has agreed to build a new boat, and it is on the basis of that agreement that they get this $100,000 subsidy. The boat will not be built until July 1931, over one year and two months from now, and yet the subsidy is being paid now with no better service being performed. Again, according to the minister's statement, this boat is to cost $250,000, and they are getting a subsidy of $100,000, or nearly 50 per cent of the cost of the boat.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is not a relationship that works. The cost of operating a service like that is very high.

Mr. MANION: But they have other traffic. I venture to make this assertion, that the minister can get all the boats he wants built in this country instead of going to England, if he will offer a subsidy of nearly 50 per cent of the cost of the boat.

There is another strange thing, which I forgot to mention before. There were no tenders called for this service. There are in this section of the river a number of shipping companies, the Des Monts shipping company and the Bras d'Or shipping company, to mention only two that come to my mind, and a great many others giving service down the St. Lawrence, but not one of them was called on to tender for this luscious plum, and all were willing to perform the service. I have copies of letters on my file protesting against tenders not being called for. Instead of calling for tenders, the government did not even wait for the house to meet but passed an order in council to give this subsidy for ten years.

The minister says that he was not aware that there was opposition in the Quebec house to the subsidy. May I enlighten him? It was proposed in the provincial house in the first place to give a subsidy of $50,000 for ten years, but due to the opposition of the member for Hull, Mr. Guertin, the subsidy was granted for only five years. I submit that the minister ought not to grant this subsidy at least until the boat that is to be built is performing the service. I think it is most unfair to the province of Quebec and the Dominion of Canada that this company should be getting a subsidy of $100,000 between the two parliaments for the service that it is giving at the present time. The minister does not choose to answer. I would ask him why tenders were not called for.

Mr. MALCOLM: There are certain inferences there. The Clarke Steamship Company had some interest at the lower St. Lawrence. If my hon. friend will look at the map, he will see that this service crosses from the south shore of the St. Lawrence to the north shore, giving a service to a great many ports on the upper St. Lawrence, which is already served by the Clarke Steamship Company by one of their other ships. I am not a great believer in vested rights, but we have given to the Clarke Steamship Company the service on the north shore, and the Clarke Steamship Company will lose by reason of the competition of this service from the south shore. The service is a great convenience to the travelling public who otherwise would have to go to Quebec and take the boat down the St. Lawrence, or go across to some other point and take the service existing there. I am quite prepared to say to my hon. friend that the interested parties were well approached and had been asked to try to form one amalgamation in the lower St. Lawrence, because I wanted to have one strong company formed and the service put in the hands of those who would put on good boats. We have had people applying for the service who had only an auxiliary schooner. We had applications from people who were not in the transportation business at all. I may say to my hon. friend that the demands the department is making on the Lower St. Lawrence Navigation Company will entail an expenditure on the existing boats of about $35,000 or $40,000, with a 50 per cent greater frequency of service. The existing boats will be scrapped next year when the new boats come on. I am told by the officers of my department who have drawn the contract that we are insisting on harder terms than were first put forward. I think my hon. friend will find that it is not a bad service.

Mr. MANION: I think the service is as good as they were getting, possibly a little better. But this company takes over the same boats. The minister says they are going to expend $30,000 or $35,000 on the boats and are going to build another boat, and on the strength of that he has tied the government up to a ten year contract by order in council. I submit it is not good business. I do not quarrel with his opinion that these companies might well amalgamate and form a stronger company; but the amalgamation simply amounts to the uniting of a couple of small companies into a bigger company using the same boats, and instead of getting $25,000 they are getting $50,000 from this government and $50,000 from the provincial government for giving practically the same service. I repeat, it is bad business. I submit it is not fair that a company that is getting $250,000, mostly from this government, should be handed another $50,000 for a service such as this under the conditions I have described.

Mr. BENNETT: What authority has this government by order in council to make a contract for a subsidy for ten years?

Mr. MALCOLM: I cannot give my hon. friend any answer as to the authority, but I know it has been the practice for a great many years.

Mr. BENNETT: What?

Mr. MALCOLM: It has been done quite often.

Mr. BENNETT: It has never been the practice in any country that I know of except by bill or ratification of the contract by parliament.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend does not appreciate the fact that all these contracts are subject to the estimates being voted yearly.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the point. The contract was made by order in council. What authority can there be for that being done? Surely there must be some regard for legislative authority. Here is an order in council made for ten years and then an estimate is brought in. My hon. friend from Rimouski (Sir Eugène Fiset) will remember that when he was a plain medical doctor the rafters used to ring with the talk of the way the country was being run by order in council. Surely there must be something wrong in this.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am informed by my officers that it has been the practice for many years.

Mr. BENNETT: What authority is there for making a ten year contract by order in council?

Mr. MALCOLM: The estimates have to be passed each year.

Mr. SHORT: The contract for the service between Pictou, Souris and the Magdalen islands at $50,000 was made by order in Council?

Mr. MALCOLM: They all have to be.

Mr. SHORT: That subsidy is being paid into the Eastern Trust Company to the credit of the bondholders. Those interested sold the bonds to the public of Nova Scotia on the strength of having that subsidy contract for ten years. That was the practice by this government. I do not think any other government made a contract for ten years for a subsidy of $50,000 a year and gave the parties an opportunity to go out on that guarantee and raise money to build their boats.

Mr. MANION: And pay them a year's subsidy in advance to build the boat.

Mr. BENNETT: You cannot do these things by order in council; there must be legislative authority to do it. The government get over it by saying: We do not bind ourselves for more than one year, but we fill in ten years or whatever sounds good to the person exploiting the subsidy.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend knows parliamentary procedure better than I do. But how could we do it if we did not pass an order in council?

Mr. BENNETT: By coming to this parliament.

Mr. MALCOLM: We do.

Mr. BENNETT: No, only a year after. Suppose something happens to the government?

Mr. MALCOLM: Well, if my hon. friend does not vote the money next year—

Mr. BENNETT: Then there is an action in the exchequer court for damages.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MALCOLM: There is a clause in the contract to that effect. It has been going on for years.

Mr. MANION: I move that this item be reduced by $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN: Which item?

Mr. MANION: The service between Rimouski and Matane and points no the north shore of the lower St. Lawrence, $50,000. I do not expect to carry the amendment. I am simply moving it to see if the minister will not accept it, because I believe he realizes that this deal is not fair to the people of Canada.

Mr. MALCOLM: I wish I could agree with my hon. friend, but I cannot. I am not as familiar with the item to-night as I was when the contract was made, but at that time I gave it some thought and considered that it was a fair agreement in the interests of the lower St. Lawrence development. This item is backed by the boards of trade of the whole area. I have had more representations made to me on behalf of this item by supporters of my hon. friend's party than on behalf of any other service. The item has been very carefully considered for six months, and in the face of the information I have received and the advice of my officials I could not cancel the contract. I must support the item.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend knows very well that boards of trade will always support anything that they think will give them more service. I am not saying this in disrespect of boards of trade generally, but I have had some experience of them and I know they are very quick to pass resolutions if asked by somebody interested in getting what they represent to be a better boat service. Therefore I do not depend very much on such representations. I am not by any means suggesting that the service should be lessened; on the other hand I submit that if it is necessary the service should be carried on as well as, and better than, it is being carried on to-day. I am not opposing any measure which would give that section of the St. Lawrence a good service, because I am familiar with that part of the country and I have a very great affection for that old part of Quebec which, in my opinion, is one of the most charming parts of Canada. For that reason I would not do anything to interfere with it, but I do not know why good service could not be given for much less money under such circumstances as these.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Manion moves that the item relating to service between Rimouski and Matane and points on the north shore of the lower St. Lawrence be reduced by $25,000.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SHORT: I would like to ask for information in reference to the mail service between St. John and Weymouth. In connection with this service there is a contract with the Eastern Coastal Steamship Company. It is an amalagamation of a number of companies operating many small steamers out of St. John to the bay of Fundy ports. I am told that this service is not being operated this year although there is an amount of $1,500 in the estimates for it. Can the minister give me further information in regard to it?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am informed—

Mr. SHORT: I will give a further explanation.

Mr. MALCOLM: I am informed that the boat was sunk at a time after the estimates were prepared, and the company is not prepared to go on with the service at the existing rate.

Mr. SHORT: That is not the case. The boat which operated on this service was lost last winter, and in connection with it the lives of several of her crew were lost. However, she was not operating on that service last year, nor has she operated since the Eastern Coastal Steamship Company took over the service. They were operating a very much smaller boat from Weymouth, touching at Sandy Cove, Little River and Freeport on Long Island, connecting with their larger steamer, the Keith Cann, which operated the service between St. John and Yarmouth. This was purely a freight service. They transferred their freight at Freeport to this small boat, the Wanda, and she touched at Little River, Sandy Cove and Weymouth. This year they have withdrawn that service, and the sum of $1,500 for the service which they were giving during the season of navigation was a fair sum. I think the department should insist that they carry out their contract. This is a company somewhat similiar to the company mentioned by my hon. friend; there was an amalgamation of practically all the coastal boats around the Bay of Fundy and they are getting an increased subsidy on the Keith Cann service in connection with which the ship Keith Cann operates between St. John and Yarmouth. The subsidy to that service last year was increased to $5,000, and there is no reason in the world why they cannot operate this small boat from Freeport to Weymouth, and take care of the ports which have always been served by this line. I should like an explanation.

Mr. MALCOLM: My deputy informs me that the boat which was on the service was lost.

Mr. SHORT: But the boat which did that service last year is not lost.

Mr. MALCOLM: Their contract has expired, and I am informed the contractors refuse to renew it unless they get $2,000 for the service.

Mr. SHORT: Well, the department increased the payment for the service between St. John and Yarmouth to $5,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: Several years ago.

Mr. SHORT: No, last year. It was increased last year to $5,000, and to my mind that is a very large subsidy for the service which they are giving. There is no reason why this company could not operate a small service from Freeport to Weymouth, connecting with the service running from St. John to Yarmouth and stopping at Freeport. They would give the service if the department insisted upon it, because they are receiving subsidies for every port along the bay of Fundy.

Mr. MALCOLM: I would like to get a boat to perform that service, but my deputy informs me that a boat cannot be secured.

Mr. SHORT: They have the ship Wanda which operated last year.

Mr. MALCOLM: The owners of that boat have refused to give the service for $1,500.

Mr. SHORT: Why not increase the amount?

Mr. MALCOLM: We will endeavour to get the service.

Mr. SHORT: This boat service represents the only connection that these people have with the outside world.

Mr. MALCOLM: I appreciate the need for the service.

Mr. SHORT: I think the minister should give some assurance that the service will be continued. Take $1,500 off the Yarmouth-St. John service; it was increased to $5,000 last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SHORT: No, it is not carried, and it will not be carried until I have some satisfaction.

Mr. MALCOLM: I assure the hon. gentleman that I shall do my best to induce these people to put on a service at the amount voted, if I can possibly do so.

Mr. QUINN: Why is the subsidy to the service between Sydney and Bay St. Lawrence increased $7,000 while that between Halifax and Bay St. Lawrence is decreased $1,200?

Mr. MALCOLM: This subsidy was increased from $18,000 to $25,000 in consideration of two round trips a week to Bay St. Lawrence in the winter months. There was a demand that this service should be continued twice a week during the whole winter. The increased service was asked for by the fishermen and strongly supported by the Department of Fisheries, as the best fishing season is in the fall.

Mr. QUINN: The subsidy for the service between Halifax and Bay St. Lawrence has been decreased by $1,200.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is not really decreased, it is a matter of book-keeping.

Mr. BENNETT: When is the hon. gentleman going to deal with the Australian and Chinese subsidies? I have a telegram which states:

> Melville Dollar advises his company has maintained a minimum monthly service to Japan and China for over eight years associated with Coughlans, therefore in arranging for subsidy to China these Canadian firms should be protected and given opportunity to participate or tender.

That is in connection with the subsidies to service to China and Japan.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is the next item to be considered.

Item agreed to.

Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions

To authorize insertion after the word "Australia" in the item for British Columbia and Australia, in the schedule of the appropriation act based on the main estimates, of the words "and/or China."

Canada and British East Africa, service between, $96,250.

Charlottetown, Victoria and Holliday's wharf, service between — further amount required, $2,000.

Grand Manan and the mainland, service between—further amount required, $1,250.

Ile-aux-Coudres and Les Eboulements, service between, $2,500.

Sydney and Bay St. Lawrence, calling at way ports, service between — further amount required, $2,227.26.

[Mr. Short.]

Vancouver and the British West Indies, service between — further amount required, $13,800.—Total, $118,027.26.

Mr. MALCOLM: We simply wish to add to the description of the item the word "China" in order to give the company the option of calling at China.

Mr. BENNETT: Had you not better put in "Japan" as well?

Mr. MALCOLM: No, not Japan. This service, which has been carried on by the Australia-British Columbia Shipping Company, has been able practically to double our shipments of lumber since it has been in effect, but during the last three or four months it has been very difficult to market any lumber in Australia, and it would almost appear as though we would have to add other ports of call. I discussed this matter with the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, and he thought it advisable to put on a complete new service to China. We would like to offer to this existing service the right to make two or three calls at China as an experiment in connection with the suggestion of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre. It is a very difficult matter at the moment to market any lumber in Australia, due to the difficulty of getting payments and also to the fact that there is about a six months' supply in Australia at present, so we are suggesting the addition of these words.

I had word from the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to-night, and probably the leader of the opposition also had word, on behalf of the Dollar line. I looked into the matter and considered it before I decided to bring this matter to the attention of the house. The Dollar line is shipping practically all American lumber to China, and they have not been taking Canadian lumber to any extent. Our desire was to get a Canadian company with British ships to take Canadian lumber in the meantime. If the experiment works out it may justify a separate service to China. The Robert Dollar line is an American service and should not interfere with this experiment.

Item agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—salaries and contingencies, $635,755.

Mr. SHORT: The minister might give us a little explanation as to the increase in this item.

Mr. MALCOLM: One of the main reasons is the increase which is noted in the statistical department, amounting to about $95,000, to provide for the new census. A large staff has to be taken on for this work, and there is a large expense in connection with stationery and machinery as well.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Post Office—outside service—salaries and allowances, $18,632,694.40.

Mail service, including mail service by air, $17,267,000.

Miscellaneous, including $5,000 for the payment of compassionate allowances to employees injured while in the performance of their duties, or to the dependents of employees killed while on duty, such payments to be made only on the specific authority of the governor in council, $1,286,675.

Yukon Territory, $150,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, on previous occasions we have had some discussion in reference to these items and this year the Postmaster General has lumped his estimates under about three headings. Our discussion was principally in connection with the first item of salaries and allowances, and under that we discussed the question of rural mail service and other matters. I suggest that in order to make some progress we should turn to page 72, which gives these different services more in detail, and deal with the services as they are set out there. If it would suit the minister I would suggest that he deal with the item of $6,500 to provide for the payment of royalties to R. Hill, patentee and holder of patents on conveyor and distributer equipment used by the Post Office department for mail handling purposes, and make an explanation with regard to that item.

Mr. VENIOT: Before proceeding with an extensive installation of conveying and mail-handling machinery the department endeavoured to obtain standard Canadian manufactured equipment, flexible in construction and noiseless in operation. Not only have the desired results been obtained, but the installation has been completed at a saving of not less than $90,000 as compared with the cost of American stock conveyors previously purchased by the department. The work was let by public tender from time to time during the last four or five years. As regards efficiency of operation it may be mentioned that in the large postal terminal in Toronto, where the installation includes about 3,000 feet of conveyor in daily operation, there has not been a single delay due to mechanical causes since this equipment has been put in.

The use of the patents covered by this vote was obtained at a minimum charge, and the related equipment is of a type which is not duplicated elsewhere in postal work. It embodies time-saving features and so on, and the results of this system may be seen to best advantage in the Toronto postal terminal, where practically all the actual mail handling has been mechanized. The building is open for inspection.

This gentleman is not a regular employee of the department; he is a part-time employee as mechanical architect and engineer in charge of the installation of machinery in the large terminal at Toronto as well as in other large offices in Canada. Under the statute we have the power to pay a certain percentage, and I believe this payment of $6,500 is to be the only payment which will be made for the use of this invention.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will tell my hon. friends opposite that they are not going to make any speed by shouting "carried." I want some more information. Is this gentleman a civil servant?

Mr. VENIOT: He is not.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When was he first employed by the Post Office Department?

Mr. VENIOT: My information is about three years ago.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What was his salary when he entered the employ of the department?

Mr. VENIOT: $3,400.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And in what capacity was he employed?

Mr. VENIOT: As mechanical engineer, on a temporary basis.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Was that salary of $3,400 for all of his time?

Mr. VENIOT: For nearly all of his time.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This gentleman is a public servant receiving a salary of $3,400, occupying a position which requires him to devote his whole time to the public service?

Mr. VENIOT: He certainly is. I cannot understand the objection of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I want to know if that is a fact. For what patents are these payments to be made?

Mr. VENIOT: For the use of labour saving machinery which this gentleman has invented and handed over to the postal department for use throughout Canada. This gentleman is employed on certificates renewed by the Civil Service Commission every three or four months; he is not a permanent employee.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Was it part of his duty to go to the United States and investigate machines of this type?

Mr. VENIOT: We have sent him to the United States.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would like to have more particulars concerning these patents. Were patents obtained in the United States previous to their being obtained here?

An hon. MEMBER: It is a good machine.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is a pretty good machine; it is working quite smoothly.

Mr. VENIOT: My information is that this machine or one similar to it has been patented in the United States by this gentleman. The one we have here is a machine of an improved type.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Were those American patents taken out since he entered the employ of the department?

Mr. VENIOT: I am not in a position to answer that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think the committee should have that information.

Mr. VENIOT: I believe they were.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Here is a civil servant receiving a salary for his whole time—

An hon. MEMBER: Eight hours a day.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —and in the course of his employment he obtained certain information through the inspection of machines in the United States which enabled him to take out a patent. It is proposed to pay him annually the sum of $6,500 as royalties upon these machines. I wonder if the committee really understands the situation. This man is paid as a civil servant. In the course of his duty he becomes familiar with certain machines patented in the United States, and he takes out certain patents while employed by this department. It is proposed to create the precedent of paying him annually, in addition to his salary and the expenses which he incurred in connection with these trips, the sum of $6,500.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. member must realize that this man is a temporary employee. Were he a permanent employee of the department we could expropriate his patent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That could be done now under the common law.

Mr. VENIOT: He is a temporary employee whose employment is renewed every three or four months. I contend that this man having patented machinery which saves the postal department of Canada $90,000 per year, is entitled to something for his work. Not only is he entitled morally, but he is entitled under the law which governs these matters to a certain percentage of the value placed upon his patent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, it is not, and it will not be carried for a few minutes. Were his expenses paid during his trips to the United States?

Mr. VENIOT: No, not when he went to the United States on his own research.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Was his salary paid during those periods?

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I understood the Postmaster General to say that this man came into the employ of the department some years ago.

Mr. VENIOT: I said about three years ago.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): And he has been there ever since.

Mr. VENIOT: No; I understand there have been times when he was not employed.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The hon. minister understands that to be the case.

Mr. VENIOT: I am sure.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think the committee should have more information as to the actual time this man was not in the employ of the department.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have asked for additional information.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. VENIOT: I am desirous of giving all the information possible, and I do not like this calling out of "Carried, carried" when the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with the information he has received. If this item is allowed to stand I will endeavour to obtain the details for my hon. friend. Had I been made aware that the hon. gentleman was going into this question in such detail I would have had the information this evening.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE

The house proceeded to consider certain resolutions reported from committee of supply this day.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 1.00 a.m. (Friday).

---

Friday, May 30, 1930

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Mr. G. W. McPHEE (Yorkton) presented the eighth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. McPHEE moved that the report be concurred in.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Will the hon. member explain what the report is about?

Mr. McPHEE: On the 23rd of May, as acting chairman of the banking and commerce committee, I presented the eighth and ninth reports, which were concurred in, as will be seen by Hansard of May 23rd, but by some oversight as will be seen by reference to the votes and proceedings at page 385, the proper entry was not made on the scroll.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Post Office—Outside Service—salaries and allowances, $18,632,694.40.

Mail service, including mail service by air, $17,267,000.

Miscellaneous, including $5,000 for the payment of compassionate allowances to employees injured while in the performance of their duties, or to the dependents of employees killed while on duty, such payments to be made only on the specific authority of the governor in council, $1,286,675.

Yukon Territory, $150,000.—Total, $37,336,369.40.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): I explained last night the reasons why this bonus was being paid to Mr. R. Hill. I think that my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Stewart) was under a misapprehension because if I mistake not he understood that this was to be a yearly payment. Am I correct in that?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I had not asked that question, but I proposed to do so.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not a yearly payment, as I think I stated last night, but a lump sum payment which carries no further responsibility for future payments. The bonus was based on a valuation of the patent rights granted to the department. Those rights are generally valued by outside parties and a percentage ranging from 5 to 7 per cent of the value may be paid as a bonus for the right of the government to use machinery of that kind.

I wish to give a brief history of this matter and especially as to the employment of Mr. Hill. I think I led the committee a little astray last night as to the number of years he had been employed. My information is that Mr. Hill came to the Post Office Department around 1924 or 1925. He was formerly employed as an efficiency man with the Civil Service Commission, filling a position equal to that of chief investigator. When the time came for changing the railway and postal facilities in the city of Toronto, which made a complete change of the railway terminals as well as the new postal terminals, Mr. Hill was invited owing to his knowledge of such matters to become connected with the Post Office Department. It was necessary at that time to employ a person who had a good scientific knowledge not only of railway terminals but postal terminals, and it was then that Mr. Hill became connected with the department. His trip to the United States was in connection with railway as well as postal terminals. He was accompanied by the chief engineers of the railways interested and other officials, and his expenses were paid by the Post Office Department. Afterwards the knowledge secured from the investigation that he made in the United States was used in connection with both railway and postal terminals in Toronto.

May I add for the information of the committee that we have to-day at Toronto the largest and most up-to-date postal terminals in the whole world, and I speak with absolute knowledge of what I am saying. To Mr. Hill is due the credit for the installation of a system in Toronto which is equalled by no other place in the world. Up to 1927 or 1928 the United States had the best postal terminals in the world, Chicago and other places in the United States being looked upon as having superior facilities in that respect to any others in the world. I am glad to say that Toronto is now superior to these places, and the same system which has been adopted at the postal terminals in Toronto will be adopted also in Montreal. Montreal will be placed on a basis equal to that of Toronto. Throughout all this work Mr. Hill was the engineer or mechanical architect in connection with the laying out of these terminals. During that time he had perfected, or at least invented, machinery that was necessary in connection with the railway terminals and which could not be found in the United States. The machinery that we could have purchased in the United States would not have met the requirements at the larger postal terminals in the Dominion. Mr. Hill invented certain machinery which places Toronto on the basis I have referred to. He did not come to the postal department as a permanent employee because the salary attached to the classification by the commission did not warrant a man of his mechanical ability accepting a permanent position. Mr. Hill to-day is still a temporary employee of the department under certificates issued from time to time by the Civil Service Commission to continue him temporarily in the service as long as we need him. We will need him at least until the completion of the postal terminals in Montreal. Let me quote for my hon. friend's benefit section 17 of the Civil Service Act:

> In the absence of special authority of parliament no payment additional to the salary authorized by law shall be made to any deputy head, officer, clerk or employee permanently employed in the civil service in respect of any service rendered by him, whether in the discharge of his ordinary duties of office or of any other duties which may be imposed upon him, or which he may undertake or volunteer to discharge or otherwise perform.

It will be seen that it was not in violation of this section that Mr. Hill was granted a bonus. The bonus was granted, not for any additional services he had rendered but for the right of the department to use for all time to come the machinery which he had invented and patented both in the United States and Canada. This machinery, as I have said, is used in our postal terminals and other large offices.

Mr. HANSON: Was not this man a full time employee and were not his expenses fully paid by the department while he was working on this invention?

Mr. VENIOT: They were.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. HANSON: Then he was paid for his time while doing this work.

Mr. VENIOT: No, he was not employed by the department at night. He never applied himself to developing his invention while he was on day work for the department.

Mr. HANSON: How does the minister know that?

Mr. VENIOT: From the records of the office.

Mr. HANSON: From hearsay?

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman has no right to say that. I also know it from personal contact with Mr. Hill, because I was with him at nights looking over the work he was planning out, and I was also with him when he installed the system that is now in operation in the smaller offices for the distribution of mail. So I have first hand knowledge of his work in that connection. If the hon. member for Leeds requires any further information I will endeavour to get it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I want to thank the Postmaster General for the extensive explanation. However, he did not refer to the matter that I asked him especially about, namely, the particulars of the patents in respect of which this allowance is made. It appears to me perfectly clear that this is an atempt to do indirectly what legally cannot be done directly.

Mr. VENIOT: No such thing.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Here is a man employed by the Dominion who to all practical intents and purposes is a permanent employee. In the course of that employment and as a result of information which he obtained from inspection and examination of the machines in the department he gets a patent in some way. I am not going to question how he got it. Under ordinary circumstances if he were with a private corporation that patent, I submit, would belong to the corporation, and he would not be entitled to any extra compensation. However, the minister has decided to give him this amount. I am glad to know that it is not for more than one year. While I think it is irregular and contrary to the spirit of the act, that is all I desire to say about it.

Mr. HANSON: I was not in the house when the minister's estimates were taken up with respect to the payment of the outside service, but I read in Hansard that he had stated that rural mail carriers were now being paid at the rate of $45 per mile per annum. In this connection I desire to place on Hansard particulars of the payments made to rural mail carriers for services originating in my home city of Fredericton. These are the particulars:

| Name of Service | Contractor | Contract Price | Miles | Frequency | Price per mile per year |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | $ cts. | | | $ cts. |
| Fredericton, R.R. No. 1 | H. Fulton | 1,000 00 | 30 | Daily | 33 33 |
| " " 2 | S. Fulton | 1,045 00 | 30 | " | 34 86 |
| " " 3 | C. McConnell | 320 00 | 15 | Tri-weekly | 42 66 |
| " " 4 | J. Gourley | 1,034 75 | 32 | Daily | 32 33 |
| " " 5 | E. Ball | 1,100 00 | 32 | " | 34 40 |
| " " 6 | L. Hanson | 1,080 00 | 32 | " | 33 75 |
| " " 7 | Thos. Fulton | 655 00 | 30 | Tri-weekly | 46 61 |

This shows that the contract prices on these rural routes are away below the average suggested by the Postmaster General.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not want to get into an argument—

Mr. HANSON: I do not either, but I want to place that on record.

Mr. VENIOT: —but my hon. friend is dealing with rural mail routes, and he should distinguish between the rural mail route and the ordinary route, rural it is true, from office to office. Some of the routes mentioned by the hon. gentleman are round trips and are not what we call rural mail delivery routes, for there are only ten of those routes in the whole province of New Brunswick. I think he is referring also to the transportation from one office to another, and not to delivery along the line.

Mr. HANSON: No, I am talking about rural routes proper.

Mr. VENIOT: Until the end of last year there were only ten rural routes in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. HANSON: There are seven rural free deliveries, and the average rate is away below $45 a month.

Mr. VENIOT: I never made the statement that the average rate was $45 a month.

Mr. HANSON: There is a misunderstanding about it, then; as a matter of fact the rate is altogether too low.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend may be quite correct.

Mr. HANSON: However, I do not wish to get into discussion at this stage of the session.

Mr. KENNEDY: I would like to call the attention of the minister to the condition which exists in mail deliveries to settlers in my constituency of Peace River. I suppose it is difficult for anyone who has not been living in a new district to visualize what happens. I have no doubt however that some of the officials in the office of the minister have had communications regarding the need for post office service and mail routes in some of the new settlements.

Mr. VENIOT: What is the name of the district?

Mr. KENNEDY: There are three or four of them in the Peace River district. In connection with those districts there may be twenty-five or fifty families living from twenty to thirty miles from a post office. One applicant received the reply that it would be too expensive to supply mail routes for those localities. I will admit the roads are not paved highways, but it seems to me that when there are about fifty settlers living twenty-five miles from a post office there should be some sort of mail service. I think they have the right to expect this country to undertake development in their districts.

Mr. VENIOT: Is that in the Peace River, North Vermilion section?

Mr. KENNEDY: No, it is northwest of Fairview.

Mr. VENIOT: In the Peace River section we are considering a flying service, so that delivery may be made by air mail. Owing to the lack of roads required to reach these people the air mail is now under consideration, and I can assure my hon. friend everything within our power will be done to give service. In connection with the expenditures of this department during the last two years our object has been to give as much service as possible; I am not attempting to keep down expenditure where I find service is necessary for the welfare of the people. I can assure my hon. friend the matter will be investigated.

Mr. GEARY: Will the minister tell us if we have had the last word in regard to salaries of letter carriers? I understand there is to be a general reference to the Beatty commission in regard to all civil servants' salaries. The minister has stated that he will be willing to have the money recommended in order to make the increases. In that connection I wish to ask him if any amount has been set aside in the estimates for the projected increases in this branch.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. GEARY: Then these men will have to wait until the report of that commission is received and this house takes action.

Mr. VENIOT: I may say that it is true that the question of the salaries of this class, as well as others, has been referred to the Beatty commission and if I am not mistaken the lower paid officials will receive particular consideration, and there will be the matter of fixing a minimum salary for them. There is nothing in the present estimates which enables us to pay them for this year's work, unless the commission in its report would recommend retroaction to April 1st, 1930.

Mr. GEARY: Does the minister propose to abandon his efforts in this particular matter?

Mr. VENIOT: I certainly do not; I shall make it a point to attend to the interests of these men and if it is at all possible I shall appear before the commission.

Mr. GEARY: But that may be a matter of a year or so. I take the word of the minister that he is anxious to do something, and that he recognizes the justice of the claim made by the letter carriers. In fact he has actually stated that their requests should be acceded to. If the minister were able to convince the Civil Service Commission in regard to the necessities of this particular branch, would he now be able to provide the money?

Mr. VENIOT: Not at the present time, or through these estimates. It may be done by means of retroaction. The putting into effect of recommendations by the Beatty commission would depend upon the policy of the government holding office at that time. So far as I personally am concerned, I shall certainly stand behind what I have already attempted to do for these men.

Mr. GEARY: The minister is obliged to say that reference to the Beatty commission shuts off any possible action along other lines?

Mr. VENIOT: No.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. GEARY: What other action does the minister propose to take?

Mr. VENIOT: It does not cut off action, but rather gives us more action, because the reference to the Beatty commission will be investigated and there will be a reference to the government. I feel fairly sure that from the expressions of opinion on both sides of the house in connection with this question the government will be disposed to do whatever is proper under the report of the Beatty commission.

Mr. GEARY: The minister has misunderstood me. He proposes to take no further action in regard to increasing the salaries of letter carriers, pending the report of the Beatty commission?

Mr. VENIOT: That is correct.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): With a view to making further progress, may I suggest that the Hill matter to which we were referring is included in the item with which we are now dealing, the $5,000 for the payment of compassionate allowances. I have no objection to the passing of this item.

Mr. GEARY: There is a man by the name of Kirk with whom there has been some correspondence. He was arrested, tried and acquitted but he lost his job. In the meantime he has paid a considerable sum of money towards the superannuation fund, and he cannot get it back. He cannot receive superannuation because he is not in the service and, I suppose, never will be. Has the minister made any provision to deal with such cases as this?

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend drew my attention last year to the case of this man; I know he does not wish me at this time to go into the particulars of the case. Under the refund clause however this gentleman cannot receive a return of the amount of money which was coming to him. May I explain that this refund clause is under the control of the service, not of the government? The men pay 5 per cent into it; true, the government does add certain other percentages to the fund. We have to be very careful in the administration of a fund which belongs to the service, and I remember that last year I was asked the question whether I would recommend a compassionate allowance. In order to do that I would have to bring the matter before the treasury board and from the treasury board it would have to go to the council. I promised the hon. gentleman from Toronto South (Mr. Geary) that I would go into the matter, and when I did so I found that if we once opened the door we would have to open it to hundreds of men who knew when they entered the service what the consequences would be if for cause they should lose their positions. I discovered that if we opened up this case we would have to take the same action in connection with hundreds of other cases and in this way deplete the fund which the men should have to their credit. I refrained from recomending to the government the payment of a compassionate allowance, and that is how the matter stands at the present time.

Mr. GEARY: In the courts they said the minister had no right to dismiss this man.

Mr. VENIOT: No, the courts did not find against the minister. If the hon. gentleman wishes to go into the details of that case and have them placed on Hansard we will do so, but I think for the sake of the individual himself that should not be done.

Item agreed to.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The next item I would suggest is the amount of $925 to provide for a telegraphic news service for the Magdalen islands during the winter months.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, Mr. Chairman; do you realize that if you carry the resolution you carry the whole thing? We are going through these items and picking out the ones that are contentious.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I want to ask the Postmaster General whether he has yet applied to his department the recommendations of order in council P.C. 670, requiring the eight-hour day?

Mr. VENIOT: In reply to the hon. gentleman I may say that there is no need of applying it at the present time, because we have had it in effect for many years in the postal department in the large city offices, the classified offices.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask what is the practice in regard to small city offices?

Mr. VENIOT: In the small city offices, or commission offices, the salary of the postmaster is made up of pay and commission. He employs his own help.

Mr. HANSON: And the eight-hour day does not apply?

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman should possess his soul in patience; I will give the information.

Mr. HANSON: I can give the information just as well.

Mr. VENIOT: Perhaps I can give it a little better.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to get the information from one or the other of you two gentlemen.

Mr. VENIOT: The postmaster has the right to employ his own help, but the hours of the post office are regulated by the department, generally from about eight o'clock in the morning until eight o'clock at night. In cases where the office is open later than that overtime is allowed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In other words, do I understand that the ten hour and sometimes the twelve hour day applies to employees working in post offices under the postmasters in small city and town offices?

Mr. VENIOT: It may happen, and it may happen without our knowledge. It may also happen that the postmaster has divided off his staff, giving each so many hours during the period between eight o'clock in the morning and eight o'clock at night.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In the event of the attention of the minister being directed to the fact that post office employees—and I use that term to include those who are hired by the postmaster—are in many cases working ten and twelve hours a day, will he see that the postmaster does not continue that practice?

Mr. VENIOT: I will, so far as that order in council applies.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am delighted to know that, because I was to direct the attention of the Postmaster General to the practice in the post office in the town, or rather city of Drumheller, which I am informed now is an incorporated city. In that city I am told that employees in the post office at present are working some twelve hours a day and that sanitary conditions are such that with the long work days this combination results in periodical breakdowns of many of the girls working there. One of these at least, known personally to my correspondent, has to receive medical attention from time to time, and her doctor's advice is that the frequent breakdowns are the result of the long day and the unsanitary conditions. Even though this order in council only recently has been passed I think it is a disgraceful state of affairs that this condition should be permitted to continue. Certainly the minister must have known that in many of these smaller town and city post offices the postmasters, either with or without the knowledge of the Postmaster General but certainly with the knowledge of his department, have been employing men and women for ten hours or more a day, and in this case as I have shown, twelve hours a day. I sincerely hope the minister will keep his word and undertake to see that this practice ceases and that the eight-hour day applies to the employees of this post office.

Mr. VENIOT: This is the first time my attention has been directed to the Drumheller case.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, it is not; I mentioned the matter during the unemployment debate.

Mr. VENIOT: This is the first time my attention has been officially drawn to the Drumheller case with reference to complaints from the employees as to their hours of work. I know there is a demand for a new public building at Drumheller, but that is a matter for my colleague the Minister of Public Works to work out. However, I can assure my hon. friend that since the complaint now has been made openly in parliament it will be looked into and I will see what remedy can be applied.

Mr. LUCAS: I understand there was a revision in the salaries of the country postmasters when we adopted penny postage.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the Postmaster General say how these salaries compare to-day with the salaries formerly received when we had three cent postage?

Mr. VENIOT: I do not know to what class of office the hon. gentleman refers. For instance, if it is a small country office, at that time the postmaster received $60 a year as a minimum. Since the penny postage came into effect that minimum has been raised to $100 a year.

Mr. LUCAS: I refer to the offices in the next class above that.

Mr. VENIOT: In the offices of the next class the salary of the postmasters are on a sounder basis. They receive a larger remuneration to-day, since the revision of the commissions, than was paid previous to the penny postage. Since we inaugurated the penny postage, in order to give more pay to these people we have put in a new system of commissions. We have come across several cases of apparent discrimination, but these have been ironed out, if I can use that term, as speedily as possible. In other cases where complaints of that kind were made they were carefully and immediately looked into, and lately we have been in consultation with the executive officers of the postal association throughout Canada with a view to bettering their conditions in that respect across the whole Dominion. That applies to unclassified offices, if I can use that term, offices below the city office class.

Mr. LUCAS: Do I understand from the Postmaster General that these salaries are higher to-day than they were previously.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, the superintendent informs me that upward adjustments have been made in all these cases. There are some people who claim that their salaries are less, but my hon. friend must distinguish between salaries and allowances. In some cases the allowances are taken to mean addition to the salaries. For instance, rentals, night work and forwarding allowances would come in that class. In many instances these forwarding allowances will be reduced because the number of offices to which mail is forwarded will be diminished in number owing to the introduction of rural delivery routes. Overtime and night work will be reduced owing to changes in train conditions for the delivery of mail.

The CHAIRMAN: While it is not considered to be part of the duty of the chairman, I would point out to the committee that there are some 200 items in the main estimates, and some 100 items in the supplementaries still to be passed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the minister any practical way by which he could provide that all postmasters would be compelled to recommend and accept the eight-hour day for employees which they in turn hire?

Mr. VENIOT: The department will go fully into that question.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the minister prepared to insist that some practical means be adopted to apply the eight-hour day to all employees in the department?

Mr. VENIOT: The terms under which these things are regulated by order in council will be carried out.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the committee that I desire to cooperate in getting these estimates through as soon as possible, but I would like to make a few statements regarding the air mail service. The amount involved by this item is $1,912,000, an increase of $712,000 over the previous year.

One or two days might well be spent in the discussion of this interesting subject. I have had certain returns brought down, one of which contained 760 pages of recommendations, contracts and correspondence regarding this service. It is a most interesting file, and it, together with other information which the Postmaster General has disclosed, should receive very serious consideration. It is impossible at this late date to do justice to this matter. It am not opposed to the air mail service; in fact, I have no hesitation in saying that it is most desirable that this service should be provided in the outlying districts. However, in the thickly populated districts such as between Montreal and Toronto and Montreal and Ottawa, where two railway companies provide rapid service, I do not feel that this large expenditure is justified; the cost of the service is out of all proportion to the revenue derived. The rate fixed by order in council for air mail is 5 cents for the first ounce and 10 cents for the second, which would amount to 80 cents per pound, or, if it were all based on the higher rate, $1.60 per pound.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman is in error there; it would amount to $2.60 per pound.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The return shows that the rate is 5 cents for the first and 10 cents for the second ounce.

Mr. VENIOT: There are about 50 letters to the pound.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There are only 16 ounces to the pound.

Mr. VENIOT: If the letter weighed only one-quarter or one-half ounce, It would pay the 5 cent rate.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I was taking the rates given in the return; however, I will accept the postmaster's rate of $2.60 per pound. From the information which the Postmaster General has supplied I find that the service between Montreal and Toronto cost $97,420.80 for the year under consideration. The total mail carried weighed 7,724 pounds, and this works out at a rate of $12.61 per pound. I submit that that is extravagant and out of proportion to the service rendered. The service between Montreal and St. John, via Quebec and Moncton cost $14,246.05, to carry 1,118 pounds at a cost of $12.74 per pound. The service between Montreal and Detroit cost $13.071.85 to carry 18,401 pounds at a cost of $7.45 per pound.

In going through the files I find that most of these air mail contracts have been let without public advertisement. I think there is only one case in which that practice was carried out. This is in striking contrast with the manner in which the Postmaster General deals with rural mail routes. If mail is to be carried for ten or twelve miles, the contract is put up for tender. The lowest tenderer receives a contract which would involve an expenditure of $400 or $500. An air mail service contract involving an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars is let without public advertisement or tender.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman is not quite correct in that statement.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Postmaster General may make his statement after I am finished as I have no desire to enter into a controversy at the present time. Any one of these air mail contracts would be worthy of very careful study. For instance, a term is included in the contract requiring the contractor to report after each trip his revenue from passengers or other goods carried. I asked the Postmaster General what the revenue was from these different contractors and his reply is: "I have no information," although his contract with these carriers provides that on every trip they shall report the revenue in addition to carrying the mail. That has not been enforced. In some cases this provision varies. With regard to carrying the mail into the United States, there are certain services running between Montreal and Detroit and Toronto and Buffalo, and it is peculiar that the contract does not contain the provision that they are to report what they are carrying on those trips. These are all matters that would require a great deal of time to clean up, and I did desire to make a motion substantially reducing this vote and to explain in detail my reasons for so doing. I am satisfied, if I had an opportunity to do so, I could convince the committee that here has been waste; that there has been extravagance and that the public interest has not been safeguarded in connection with the air mail service. But that would take entirely too long, and I am not going to make that motion at this time.

Mr. DUPUIS: It is too long already.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Well, I will continue a little longer. I am going to refer, just to satisfy the hon. gentleman who has spoken, to an editorial in the Moose Jaw Evening Times of Tuesday, March 4, 1930. I understand this paper is not unfriendly to the Postmaster General or to the government; in fact it is one of their supporters. I quote this editorial in part; it is long and I do not propose to read it all. In connection with one of these air mail services it states:

According to the present existing orders this will be the daily program. For some reason or other the powers that be at Ottawa have decided that the northern air mail will be flown out of Regina. That it will cost the Canadian people at a minimum at least $12,000 a year extra, makes little difference, apparently, to the individuals who regulate these things, Regina's pride and hoggishness must be catered to. The politicians have so decreed. The Postmaster General and Hon. C. A. Dunning, Minister of Finance, may be able to explain why they are willing to throw away an extra $12,000 a year on flight mileage, but to the citizens of Moose Jaw it has no other meaning than "political pull" by Regina, regardless of the cost to the people.

No other view is taken in Moose Jaw of this wasteful extravagance than that the Regina politicians have brought undue and unfair pressure to bear on the Postmaster General to order that the pivotal point in the air service must be Regina, because such an order would mean that the Western Canada Airways would have to transfer their staff of mechanics and their terminus, now at Moose Jaw, to Regina.

In the intervening months until the Regina hangar has been built and the bog which surrounds it has been surfaced in some way to keep the heavy machines from becoming mired, the planes will be flown out of Moose Jaw. There will be weeks pass, when it will be absolutely impossible to land a three ton plane on the Regina field without its becoming mired. Then some time late in the summer the field will be surfaced, if plans are carried through. For two or three months, the Regina field will be safe, and then when the snow begins to fall and drift, hard-surfaced runways or not, it will be just as dangerous as it was the past six weeks.

Premier Mackenzie King surely cannot be countenancing this barefaced robbery of the public treasury by those who for political reasons of "bringing home the bacon" are flaunting all economic argument and the opinion of their technical advisers and the desires of the contractors who are carrying the mail.

The discrimination which has been shown by the Postmaster General for political reasons in favour of Regina is most apparent. With the mail routed out of Regina, letters by air mail for Saskatoon, Battleford and Edmonton from Moose Jaw will be carried east forty miles and then back again over an equal distance over the route to Saskatoon. This duplication of flight mileage would be completely overcome, if the mail from Regina for Saskatoon, Battleford and Edmonton was carried through to Moose Jaw on the plane which arrives here at 12.10 midnight, and placed on board a plane for the northern cities at this point.

I could duplicate that with respect to other services. All I want to say, however, is that this matter must some time, sooner or later, be thoroughly investigated. In my opinion it cannot be done this session in this committee, and the only course that I suggest is that next session this matter be brought before the public accounts committee and a searching investigation be conducted in connection with all these contracts.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. VENIOT: I court the fullest investigation under oath in regard to this matter. As regards the article which the hon. gentleman has read from the press, it is in reference to a row between Regina and Moose Jaw as to where the plane should land. The Post Office Department has nothing whatever to do with the matter. There is absolutely no duplication for which we are paying. Our contract is clear and distinct. I hope when the elections are over and we come back to this side of the house, my hon. friend will be returned if for no other purpose than to institute this investigation. I court it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Those are very like words that the Postmaster General has thrown out on previous occasions, and the investigations, when they were finished, showed that he was not justified in making the challenge. We found him wanting. Civil service discharges and refusals were investigated and it was found that the Postmaster General was openly defying the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. VENIOT: We have discussed that before.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Well, we are prepared to discuss it again if the Postmaster General wants that.

Mr. VENIOT: Not necessarily now.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have endeavoured to be reasonable and moderate in my presentation.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, but my hon. friend issued a challenge for an investigation and I accepted it.

Mr. MANION: But the trouble is that the hon. gentleman will not be in his present position then.

Mr. VENIOT: I will, and nobody else can refuse an investigation.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The hon. gentleman knows very well he will not be in a position to accept it. This is just an effort to get by. That, however, is the situation. As I say, I have not nearly exhausted this subject and when it is all investigated, the file I have under my hand will make a very interesting disclosure.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital —Canadian Government Railways: To provide additional car ferry, and facilities for car ferry service, between the mainland and Prince Edward Island (revote, $2,000,000), $2,500,000.

Mr. MANION: Who gets the subsidy for that ferry?

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Railways and Canals): There is no subsidy. It is a government car ferry.

Mr. MANION: There is a subsidized ferry running across there, and I thought this was it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings)): When will that ferry be in operation?

Mr. CRERAR: The contract has been let for the car ferry, and it is to be completed in July, 1931. I expect that it will be in service immediately after that.

Item agreed to.

Hudson Bay railway and terminals: Construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500, $5,900,000.

Mr. MANION: I think the minister should make a statement in regard to the conditions up there.

Mr. CRERAR: The question is a perfectly proper one; I had intended to do that. This vote is for the purpose of carrying on the work that has been going on during the past two years at Fort Churchill in the construction of terminal facilities, and to enable us to complete the ballasting on the Hudson Bay railway line from The Pas to Fort Churchill. The amount is divided approximately thus: $1,900,000 for railway purposes, and $3,500,000 for the terminals at Fort Churchill. The railway expenditure involves the building of section houses and some stations, but mainly it is for the ballasting of the line. The work at Fort Churchill is for the construction of the new grain elevator, for dredging and for building docks and also for bringing in a water supply to the town.

Mr. MANION: What are the prospects as to the first use of the line?

Mr. CRERAR: It is not intended to open the Hudson Bay railway for commercial traffic before the autumn of 1931. By that time the docking facilities will have been completed, the grain elevator will have been completed, and sufficient dredging done to let the sea-going vessels come into the dock. My deputy now advises me that the docking facilities will not quite be completed at that time.

Mr. MANION: Before the autumn of 1931?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes.

Mr. MANION: Unless it is fairly early in the autumn, it would not be of any use until 1932; is not that right?

Mr. CRERAR: The elevator is expected to be finished early in September, 1931, or before, with facilities for the shipment of grain. Dredging sufficient to allow the boats to get in will also have been done.

Mr. MANION: It was for this elevator that Carter, Halls and Aldinger got the contract the other day, was it not?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I have suffered a great deal from misrepresentation by hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with the Hudson Bay railway, and the opportunity is now afforded to enable me to make a statement, which I propose to do.

Mr. CRERAR: Frankly I do not think I have ever said a word anywhere about the hon. gentleman's position on the Hudson Bay railway. Someone else may have done so, but I have not.

Mr. BENNETT: It is very gratifying to hear the minister make that statement. I had not the minister in mind; I was using the word in the plural not the singular, but I am grateful to him for that statement.

Last year when this item was under consideration we were discussing expenditures by day's work for the completion of the railway to Port Nelson, and I was attacked that evening just at the close of the session. Telegrams were sent out that I was endeavouring to prevent the completion of the Hudson Bay railway. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson) was very solicitous about the welfare of his party. I came into this house in 1911, having lived in western Canada for some few years prior to that—a very considerable number of years as life is measured. I had heard of the Hudson Bay railway from the day I went there. It was common knowledge that on one occasion some forty odd years ago a telegram was referred to in a public meeting to the effect that the rails were on the sea to construct this line to the bay. In 1911, I was privileged to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and on that occasion I took the trouble to state my position with respect to the Hudson Bay railway, and although it may be rather late to do this I feel that I should present the matter as fairly as possible and indicate that at that time I was most anxious that the road should be completed. Without reading from the pages of Hansard, I said that the policy of the party was that the road should be completed at as early a date as possible. The contract which had been awarded for a portion of the road had not been proceeded with very far at the time of the election in 1911. The late Hon. Frank Cochrane, as Minister of Railways and Canals, took the matter actively in hand, construction was pushed forward, and strange as it may sound to this house, the railroad was completed within 92 miles of Port Nelson at the time the Liberal government came into power in 1921, so that ten years ago next fall the railroad was completed to within almost 92 miles of the bay. During the war the railway fell into a state of disrepair, but no action was taken to remedy that until 1925 or 1926. In the meantime the minister will perhaps recall that while he was a member of the Union government the matter was under discussion, but it was felt that conditions in the country did not warrant active steps being taken; but after the Liberal government came into power in 1921 the Progressive group, as the minister will recall, was most insistent that action should be taken, and while no vote was taken in this house it will be found that in 1923 the government of the day declined to take any action towards completing the road. The reasons given were that the conditions did not warrant the expenditure at that time. Apparently at that moment the present Minister of Railways and Canals himself shared that view. In 1926 the present Minister of Finance became Minister of Railways, and at the session of 1926, this matter was discussed at considerable length. The discussion will be found in Hansard of June 8 and June 9, 1926. The then Minister of Railways was asking for a grant to rehabilitate the road, and at pages 4191 and 4192 of Hansard, he said:

I do not want to complicate this particular vote—

That is the vote for rehabilitation:

—because there will be a discussion of that later, but I think probably it would be as well to have all the information on Hansard.

It is estimated that it will cost $6,153,000 to complete the railway. It is estimated that the harbour works at Port Nelson, including elevator accommodation to the extent of 4,000,000 bushels—I would ask my hon. friend to bear in mind that that is not yet decided upon, but the estimate does include provision for it—with accommodation in the harbour for ten ships at the same time, will cost $20,200,000.

And on page 4192 Mr. Dunning said:

Now, in connection with these figures I want it distinctly understood that I am not committing the government to this expenditure. I anticipated being asked a question as to what the engineering estimates were with respect to the completion of the terminal at Port Nelson. I want, in this connection, to revert to my previous statement: It is the policy of the government to complete this route as economically as possible in order to enable a fair trial of it to be made. While I have carefully gone over the figure with respect to the vote which is now before the committee and have carefully gone over the figures with respect to the cost of completing the 92 miles of railway, I cannot say that it has been possible to do the same thing with reference to the estimated cost of the work at Nelson.

Then on page 4193 in reply to a question, Mr. Dunning said:

Now we understand each other. My point is that so far as the testing of the route is concerned it is something which has been a matter of repeated discussion and repeated investigation from a theoretical point of view, for the last forty years.

There is further discussion of the cost for the completion of the terminals at Port Nelson, and in the end this is what was said by the then minister as reported at page 4194:

It must be quite apparent to my hon. friend that investigation is required before one can determine precisely the aids to navigation which are needed. Previous information on the subject does not lead me to believe that any considerable expenditure will be necessary in connection with lighthouses and things of that sort through the strait, and the bay is open sea. Provision is made in the estimates which I have just dealt with for a lighthouse at the entrance to Nelson channel. There are related questions upon which I could give general information in a little time. I thought there would be a more or less general discussion which would give me an opportunity of feeding the information more gradually than I have been able to do so far.

The discussion was somewhat lengthy having regard to what the minister said, that is, that he was not then undertaking to complete the 92 miles to the bay but to rehabilitate the existing railway which terminated, I think, at mileage 332, although a part of the roadbed was constructed beyond that point. That is, he asked only for a grant for rehabilitation and he made a statement to the house, as I have read, indicating what would be necessary to complete the railway and the terminals at Port Nelson. In that regard it is important also to observe that that very day he was asked whether or not there was any intention on the part of the government to shift the terminals from Port Nelson to any other point, and he replied that such was not the intention of the government at that time. So that in June, 1926, the government had seen no reason to change the proposed terminals from Port Nelson to Fort Churchill or elsewhere; and in the spring of 1926, after the government had been in power for some years, the undertaking had not been proceeded with beyond the effort made in June to secure the necessary capital to rehabilitate the road as constructed to within 92 miles of the bay.

In succeeding years appropriations were granted by parliament to complete the road, but before the road was completed the minister, on the advice of Mr. Palmer, changed the terminus from Port Nelson to Fort Churchill. In that regard the Right Hon. Mr. Graham, the former Minister of Railways, in another chamber indicated that on the report of the engineers it was decided to make Nelson the terminal before his government went out of power in 1911, and that when Mr. Cochrane after a personal visit to Port Nelson and Fort Churchill concluded that the terminus should be at Port Nelson, he did so on the reports of the engineers of his department. That is common ground, both from the observations made by Mr. Graham in the Senate and from the statements made in this chamber by the then Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Cochrane. So that the terminus selected by both parties on the report of the engineers of the department was Port Nelson up to 1926, when the now Minister of Finance stated the government had no intention at the moment to change the terminus.

At a later date, in consequence of investigations made by the government, the terminals at Port Nelson were abandoned on the report of Mr. Palmer, and the work on terminals at Fort Churchill was commenced.

Now, it must be abundantly clear that there is nothing upon the records of this house to which any member can point that at any time there has been any inclination on my part or on the part of anyone else to do other than the very thing the government itself said it desired to do—to investigate before acting. It was in consequence of that very policy being pursued that the terminus was changed from Port Nelson to Fort Churchill, for had the minister proceeded without further investigation and carried out the declared policy of the government in 1926, the terminus would have been Port Nelson and not Fort Churchill. But because the minister desired in the light of the information he had received that further opportunity should be afforded for investigation, that investigation did take place and the terminus was changed to Fort Churchill, with the consequent abandonment of the terminals that had been constructed at Port Nelson. The expenditures on those terminals, as the minister pointed out last session, amounted to a very considerable sum, $6,000,000. Those expenditures had been made largely by the hon. gentleman's predecessors in office, acting under the authority of this parliament, with money that had been appropriated for the purpose by the House of Commons and Senate of Canada.

Now, it is quite clear—let there be no misunderstanding about it—that the terminus at Port Nelson was selected, alike by Liberal and Conservative governments, on the recommendation of the engineers of the department.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman says "No." His predecessor as Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Graham, said so in the Senate, whatever importance may be attached to his statement.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a very slight difference. The selection was not made until after the Conservative government came in in 1911, but in this house the Right Hon. Mr. Graham stated on a subsequent occasion that the engineers' reports at the time he left office indicated that Port Nelson should be the place. That is the fact of the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, and so far as he was concerned Port Nelson was the place.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, he said that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is, so far as the Liberal administration was concerned, Mr. Graham had determined that Port Nelson should be the terminus. The result of the election was that the actual choice had to be made by the successors of the Liberal government on the same reports that were before Mr. Graham, and upon which he was prepared to act.

Mr. DUNNING: That is hardly correct, because after Mr. Cochrane came into office—

Mr. BENNETT: He made a trip there.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and further engineering reports were made.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, on the same reports, supplemented by personal investigation by Mr. Cochrane, and on further engineering reports.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: So up to this point hon. members when they go out on the hustings in western Canada must realize—

Mr. VALLANCE: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: There is one who would be only too glad to misrepresent the facts, I take it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. VALLANCE: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman accuses some of us of wanting to misrepresent the facts on the hustings. I ask that he retract that statement.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman said "Hear, hear" to my statement; that is exactly what he wanted to do, he wanted to misrepresent the facts.

Mr. VALLANCE: You said this would be the issue in Saskatchewan and I said "Hear, hear."

Mr. BENNETT: No, I never mentioned Saskatchewan. I said hon. gentleman would be only too glad to go out on the platform and make misrepresentations, and the hon. gentleman said "Hear, hear."

Mr. VALLANCE: No.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugène Fiset): The hon. gentleman said that one member here present would be glad to misrepresent the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: No, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman said "Hear, hear" and I said "There is one of them." If the hon. gentleman says he is not one of them, I accept his statement that it does not apply to him, and I am very glad to have this expression of repentance on his part. Perhaps no one in this house has been more misrepresented than I have in connection with the Hudson Bay railway. I shall take the sequence of events. What happened was that in 1912 the terminal having been agreed upon by both parties—mark you, 15 years after that and after an expenditure of about $6,000,000 had been made on the Nelson terminal—

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is missing one important feature in the sequence.

Mr. BENNETT: The war?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, what is it?

Mr. DUNNING: The Senate investigation.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh yes, there was a Senate investigation.

Mr. DUNNING: And a very important investigation, too.

Mr. BENNETT: There was an investigation by the Senate, but I do not think it was of any importance in determining where the terminal should be.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh yes. On that particular point I assure my hon. friend that that is correct.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: On the statement of the minister, I attributed the change to the report of Mr. Palmer.

Mr. DUNNING: May I be allowed to explain? The Senate committee made a very thorough inquiry into the matter and strongly recommended that no further work should be done pending a further investigation of the comparative merits of the two ports.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. DUNNING: And a great deal of evidence came out before the Senate committee which had not previously been available to anybody.

Mr. BENNETT: I thank the Minister of Finance for reminding me at this point of the Senate committee. I had not intended to refer to it until later, but it serves my purpose to refer to it now. Between 1911 and 1926 a select committee of the Senate had investigated this matter.

Mr. DUNNING: And work had stopped in the meantime.

Mr. BENNETT: In consequence of the war work had stopped, although it is fair to say at this point that my hon. friends to the left had very strongly urged that the work should be proceeded with during the sessions which followed the session of 1921; I think that point is clear. Shall we say, then, in consequence of the Senate report the then Minister of Railways retained the services of Mr. Palmer, and Mr. Palmer recommended that the terminal port be Churchill and not Nelson; the result is that the road is now completed with Churchill as its terminus, Nelson having been abandoned. That seems to be complete so far as that part of the operation is concerned.

My point is that in consequence of the action taken by the minister, whether it followed upon the report of the Senate committee or the general disposition of the government to investigate matters further, in 1926 the government was committed to Nelson. The minister was asked directly whether or not any other port was in mind and he answered positively and definitely that he had in mind no other port but Nelson.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend read it?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; I shall have to turn it up. I have before me Hansard of June 8,

1926, and I find that at page 4193 Mr. Rogers asked the Minister of Finance, who was then Minister of Railways:

Mr. Rogers: My hon. friend spoke of "this particular port." Has he in mind any other port?
Mr. Dunning: I may as well settle that question right now.
Mr. Lapointe: Trouble maker.
Mr. Dunning: The government has no intention of changing to any other port at the present time.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I ask a question? At the time that the railroad was being built presumably to Nelson, was the hon. gentleman in favour of the construction of the Hudson Bay railway?

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman has ears to hear he will probably have heard what I said with regard to the statement of my position when I came to this house in 1911, and moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne. My utterances on that occasion were in the strongest and most emphatic terms. In 1926, in consequence of the very factors to which the hon. gentleman referred, I ventured to point out in this house that I was not favouring without an investigation the further extension beyond mileage 332. The other night the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) referred to my stand, and other hon. gentlemen in and out of this house have referred to my views. What I was doing was to place upon Hansard my views that the then government was well advised to take the course advocated by the minister to make investigations which were made with respect to the enterprise, following, as he said—and this is where I propose to speak of it—the investigation that took place in the Senate. I am not informed that much new information was afforded by reason of that investigation. The minister has stated that new information was unfolded, and I am prepared to accept his statement. However my first speech in this house in 1911 was in favour of the Hudson Bay railway, and that is before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Vallance) was in this house.

Mr. VALLANCE: But in 1926 you changed your mind.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I have not changed my mind at all. The hon. gentleman might as well read my statement from Hansard; it would be better to do so here than on the hustings.

Mr. VALLANCE: Page 4293 of Hansard, 1926 records the hon. gentleman as follows:

But from the information I have I could not under any circumstances vote to extend the railway a single foot beyond the present end of steel. I could not vote to send the railway to Nelson.

That is the statement of the hon. gentleman as it appears in Hansard.

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly what the minister has stated, only his statement was a little stronger than mine. He said the government had no intention of changing from Nelson.

Mr. DUNNING: At that present time.

Mr. BENNETT: And it was in consequence of the very factors to which the minister has referred that I stood in the House of Commons and said I was not prepared to do the very thing the minister said he would not do, namely to go beyond that mile until he had further information. The hon. gentleman says the decision of the Senate committee warranted his opinion. My opinion was based upon that and one other consideration to which I shall presently refer. I knew nothing of these ports. I did however know the late Minister of Railways very well, I was a supporter of his administration, and I had a report of the visit he made that summer to the Hudson bay. Although he had one artificial limb he visited the bay for the purpose of determining what action should be taken in the light of his personal observation. He took with him the necessary engineers and suffered much inconvenience on the trip. Upon his return he made a report, and as a result of the report construction of the road to Nelson was continued. In 1926 my hon. friend the present Minister of Finance was not prepared to change the opinion of the government as expressed by the expenditure of the money in question on the report of the engineers. In the succeeding year however the minister took the opinion of Mr. Palmer and Churchill was selected as the terminus. May I point out that but for the pause and investigation the road would have been finished through to Nelson, but because the minister saw fit to stop to investigate the road was not finished. This is exactly what I said I thought should be done, as the member has now read and which statement has been read from time to time in this house detached from its context in the endeavour to make it appear that I have been opposed to this enterprise, which attitude I know will not succeed as far as the country in which I live is concerned.

When I went west the Hudson Bay railway was one of the few undertakings which I thought would be of incalculable value to western Canada, if the prophecies of those who had to do with it materialized. I was anxious that before spending money, especially after the war, there should be a full investigation. The minister himself took that view, and as a result and in consequence of the investigations made following the attitude he had taken, the terminus was changed from Nelson to Churchill and Nelson was abandoned. There are the events; "he that runs may read" and he who desires not to mislead cannot state it otherwise. It is a little longer distance from the end of the steel to Churchill than to Nelson and in 1927 the government began to construct the road to Churchill; since that time it will be found that no voice has been raised against it. It has been criticized by some as still not being the sounder choice; there are some people who still believe that in the end Nelson will be regarded as the better port. That is a matter of expert opinion about which I offer no view, but the minister has accepted the opinion of Mr. Palmer, and Mr. Palmer's opinion having been taken and he being an eminent man, you will observe there has been no questioning of it and the construction has proceeded with the unanimous support of this House of Commons. No voice of which I know has been raised against it, and I have heard no objection from any quarter. After the minister stopped work and went forward with his investigations—

Mr. DUNNING: No, work was not stopped.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, beyond the end of steel.

Mr. DUNNING: No, my hon. friend forgets that no work had been done for years. Work on the railway which was necessary in order to reach this terminus at mile 332 continued all the time. There was no stoppage of work.

Mr. BENNETT: That is rehabilitation, and I was talking about work. The hon. gentleman must have known that. Construction is not rehabilitation.

Mr. DUNNING: But you could not do any construction until you rehabilitated the road.

Mr. BENNETT: I am pointing out that no reconstruction took place beyond mile 332 towards Port Nelson, because although in 1926 the hon. gentleman said the government still believed in Nelson, after that he thought it desirable to make further investigations and in consequence of his desire to make the investigations the construction towards Nelson was not carried on nor was the work of construction beyond mile 332 commenced or carried on until after Churchill had been selected instead of Nelson. I have just given the grounds upon which these conclusions were reached, because the government had made up its mind that it was desirable to have another opinion and they obtained that other opinion. The gentleman whose opinion was secured was put forward as a man of such eminence that the government felt itself warranted in abandoning Nelson, where an expenditure of $6,000,000 had been made and accepted Churchill, it being a little greater distance than it was to Nelson, from the end of steel. So Churchill is the terminal.

From that moment this house has given unanimous support, without objection on the part of anyone, to the pushing forward of that work with all possible speed, and every member who sits on this side of the house has been a party to the work being expedited in every possible way by the granting of money for that purpose. Now, will the hon. gentleman name one member who has made any objection to that.

Mr. VALLANCE: Out on the hustings.

Mr. BENNETT: I said in this house; I am talking about debates in the house.

Mr. VALLANCE: You were referring to statements we might make on the hustings.

Mr. BENNETT: I am referring to statements made in this house, and I shall come to the hustings in just a moment and give the details in that regard. Will the hon. gentleman name any member of the party which sits to the left of Mr. Speaker who has raised a single objection in this house with regard to the expenditures in connection with this work?

Mr. VALLANCE: Some of those who did were left at home.

Mr. BENNETT: Name one.

Mr. VALLANCE: Donald Sutherland, with Harry Mullins sitting on the same platform with him and allowing it to go across.

Mr. BENNETT: Hon. Donald Sutherland has not been in this house since 1926.

Mr. VALLANCE: But he was running in that campaign.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, in 1926; he was defeated in the election of 1926. Just exactly what Mr. Mullins sitting on a platform had to do with the Hon. Donald Sutherland in North Oxford is a matter which might be somewhat difficult to explain. That is the sort of politics in which the hon. gentleman indulges; if you sit on the platform with someone who makes a speech, thereby you are supporting that speech. The hon. gentleman, I doubt not, has gone to church, but it does not follow that because he did not get up and go out he believed everything the preacher said. However, his theory is that if you sit on a political platform where you may be invited, you are responsible for everything that is said.

Mr. VALLANCE: I think I would at least assume the responsibility of getting up and saying I did not agree with what the other man said, rather than sit complacently by and allow it to be put across.

Mr. BENNETT: There are various views as to manners; the manners of some people would induce them not to endeavour to break up a meeting by making a statement of that kind.

Mr. VALLANCE: Both gentlemen were speakers at the meeting that night, and Harry Mullins had the opportunity to contradict the statement.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, if Mr. Mullins did not contradict what Mr. Sutherland said it afforded an opportunity to the hon. gentleman to talk about something far removed from the merits of the transaction. That is all; that is the only benefit I can see accruing to him.

Now, let us proceed one step further. Since that time the government has been responsible for the enterprise. They commenced in 1926 and this is 1930. In 1926 the Minister of Finance, then Minister of Railways, was going to push this work through with the utmost expedition. He secured definite opinions from others before he proceeded to carry on his undertaking, and the result is that in 1930 we are advised that this work is not to be finished for commercial purposes until 1931. In other words, five years will have elapsed during the construction of less than 100 miles of railway to Churchill.

Mr. CRERAR: That is not correct.

Mr. BENNETT: To make it commercially available.

Mr. CRERAR: No, the railway is constructed, and has been for some time.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is not available as such.

Mr. CRERAR: Yes, it is; what I had reference to were the port facilities.

Mr. BENNETT: We will come to that. My hon. friend says the railway is completed and is available to run trains over and that he is talking about the port facilities. Well, this government came into power in 1922, eight years ago, committed to the building of the Hudson Bay Railway. They have not been able to build less than 100 miles of railway and establish terminals in that time. That is the story.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is not.

Mr. BENNETT: What is it?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend's mileage is wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it less than 100 miles from the end of steel to Churchill?

Mr. DUNNING: It is from mile 332 to mile 511.

Mr. BENNETT: How far was it from the end of steel to Nelson?

Mr. DUNNING: It was 92 miles, I think.

Mr. BENNETT: That was the figure given in Hansard, and how far was it from the end of steel to Churchill?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It was 180 miles.

Mr. DUNNING: The difference between 511 and 332.

Mr. BENNETT: That is 179 miles, so the statement I have just made should be corrected.

Mr. DUNNING: And the whole 332 miles had to be rebuilt.

Mr. BENNETT: I have already dealt with the question of rehabilitation. The reconstruction of 332 miles of road is not such a tremendous task as the minister would have us believe.

Mr. DUNNING: In that country it is.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought it was a fine country.

Mr. DUNNING: No, the greater part of the road is constructed through muskeg.

Mr. BENNETT: The greater part of the road is constructed through muskeg, so the minister tells me now. As yet I have not been over that road, so I accept that statement that muskeg it is. I have looked at a great many photographs of the line up there, and some of the country I thought from the observations of the hon. member for South Battleford was country where wheat grew all the year round.

Mr. VALLANCE: You never heard me say that. I want the leader of the opposition to retract that statement, because he never heard me make such a statement at all. Just because of the position held by the hon. gentleman in this house he tried to ridicule some of us from Saskatchewan, but I for one do not propose to allow him to do so. He cannot bulldoze me, either on the hustings or in this house, and I tell him so now.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman would exhibit a little more light and a little less heat I think it would be desirable.

Mr. VALLANCE: You need somebody to talk to you.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not see any reason why the hon. gentleman should get so angry.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am not angry; it is righteous indignation.

Mr. BENNETT: I think, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt about it being indignation, but there might be some difference of opinion as to the quality of that indignation. At any rate, I was not endeavouring to heap ridicule upon the hon. gentleman; I was only endeavouring to show how ridiculous some of his statements have been.

Mr. DUNNING: But he said he did not make the statement which you attributed to him.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, I see.

Mr. VALLANCE: I would like to invite the hon. gentleman to enter into a debate in South Battleford in order to see how much ridicule he could bring down upon himself.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is always very brave at a distance.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am inviting you right to my home; that is as near as I can get.

Mr. BENNETT: With equal force, I might invite my hon. friend to come to Calgary or one of various other ridings in the country which I have to visit.

Mr. VALLANCE: I would be glad to go.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure that my hon. friend's presence would be welcome, but by that time his righteous indignation probably would be cooled off. That is not a commodity in great demand in that locality.

It will be recalled also that at a celebrated meeting held in Prince Albert the Prime Minister of this country put the building of the Hudson Bay railway upon a very high plane indeed, when he said: Give me members and I will give you miles. All you had to do was to increase the number of members and you would receive an increased number of miles.

[Mr. Vallance.]

An hon. MEMBER: It worked out all right.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman says that it worked out all right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I never made any statement of that kind at any time or at any place.

Mr. BENNETT: After recess I will bring the statement made by the right hon. gentleman, as reported, and read it to the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: You might tell us at the same time who the reporter was.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman took his own reporters with him on these trips. It was the reporters who were with him who made the report of the meeting at Prince Albert. Presumably the report was accurate for those who accepted his hospitality would certainly not be so unworthy as improperly to report his meeting. After lunch I will put this matter on record.

I intend to deal with this Hudson Bay matter even if the house does not adjourn in time for an election on July 28th; do not make any mistake about that. Men have been going around the country denouncing the leader of the opposition for the attitude which he took. I will deal presently with the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee), and the reference he made in his speech of the other evening to Mr. Clarence Graham. I will refer to the report of the speech of the Prime Minister so that there may be no question as to its accuracy.

It will be recalled that there was a meeting at Portage la Prairie, at which I was present. The presiding officer at that meeting was Mayor Burns of Portage la Prairie, who is now a candidate in the interests of the Conservative party. Upon the platform was Mr. R. C. Anderson, of Winnipeg. The government always has regarded that gentleman as being of great worth. He is president of the street railway company in Winnipeg and is interested in the electrical power development in that district, so no complaint can be made about him. The newspaper correspondents were supposed to be present. One of them met with an accident and could not get to the meeting. The next day I read in the Winnipeg Free Press a report indicating that I had made a pronouncement against both the Hudson Bay railway and the views of my leader. It took a long time and the expenditure of some time and money, but every newspaper in Canada which had carried that report subsequently carried a retraction.

Mr. MANION: But after the elections.

Mr. BENNETT: But after the elections, after the injury had been done and after the effort to induce the people to believe that I had made a statement against the Hudson Bay railway had been successful. A radio installation had been made for the meeting and what I said had been heard in Winnipeg and various other parts of the west. I took the trouble to obtain the names of reputable witnesses who could vouch for what I had said, and I armed myself with everything which would be necessary in a court of law to secure the vindication to which I was entitled. The result was that the Canadian Press sent to every one of its newspapers a retraction of the statement which had been made with respect to that meeting. However, that did no good so far as the elections were concerned; they had been held. Despite the fact that Mr. Anderson had gone to Winnipeg and made a statement as to what I did say, the retraction was not made early enough to effect a redress of the injury which had been done.

In the northern part of Manitoba, where Mr. Myers was running as a candidate against Mr. Bird, the misrepresentation as to what I had said was received by means of the circulation of a dodger containing the report which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press, a report wholly false and certainly maliciously prepared.

What occurred at that meeting was this: I read from a statement which had been made by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, my leader. I read that statement without comment, word for word, because I realized that it was essential that I should not be subject to adverse criticism in connection with a matter about which so many people were interested and asking questions. Reading from that statement, in the exact words in which it had been made, I made my address at Portage la Prairie. The sequel shows the means resorted to in the midst of an election to endeavour to create a false impression.

I cannot refer to a past debate, but the remarks of the hon. member for Yorkton the other evening appear in Hansard and they leave the impression that Mr. Bury of East Edmonton had felt that in 1926 I was opposed to the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. This reference to Hansard will show that the minister himself proposed to go on to Nelson, the rehabilitation having been completed. Neither he nor the government had changed their attitude, but in consequence of further information—

Mr. DUNNING: The minister did not state that he proposed to go on to Nelson; he was then asking for certain money to rehabilitate the existing mileage.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is becoming the champion hair splitter of the country. As reported on page 4193 of Hansard of 1926, he said:

> The government has no intention of changing to another port at the present time.

Mr. DUNNING: At the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the minister had in the back of his mind the idea of making a change at some other time.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend could, if he wished to, quote the terms in which I presented the vote.

Mr. BENNETT: I will read it again:

> Mr. Rogers: My hon. friend spoke of "this particular port." Has he in mind any other port?
>
> Mr. Dunning: I may as well settle that question right now.
> Mr. Lapointe: Trouble maker.
> Mr. Dunning: The government has no intention of changing to another port at the present time.

Mr. DUNNING: At the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: I would point out to the hon. member for Yorkton that the minister himself permitted a delay for the purpose of having an investigation made by Mr. Palmer, partly in consequence of the Senate investigation, which had been made prior to the time of the minister's statement.

Mr. McPHEE: The question under consideration in 1926 was the expenditure of $3,000,000 for rehabilitating the road, and the question of a port was not being considered.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if the hon. gentleman realizes what he said the other day? I said at that time that we were in favour of the vote for rehabilitation but I was not prepared, without further information, to vote money to go beyond the end of steel. The minister said that it was not intended to do that, and he said that what he proposed to do and in fact what he did do, was to carry on investigations which ultimately resulted in the road being constructed to Fort Churchill, a distance of 180 miles, as against 92 miles to Nelson. That is the story. It being almost one o'clock, I will, when the house resumes, read from my files the record with respect to the Hudson Bay speech of the Prime Minister whom I do not intend to misrepresent in any sense of the word. I intend to rely on the report given by the press at that time. That is the position with respect to Hudson bay and I challenge any member to contradict successfully that narrative of the facts in connection with it. There it stands, and I have nothing to apologize for in connection with my record since I came into the house in 1911 nor nothing to withdraw from my statements as to the advocacy of this undertaking before I came into the house. It is not advancing the interests of hon. gentlemen opposite, when one has no opportunity to answer, to make the representations that have been made in times past as to my attitude and that of those who sit with me in the house with respect to this matter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have listened carefully to my hon. friend's explanation of his position. There is one point I am not quite clear about. Was my hon. friend's anxiety with respect to whether Churchill or Nelson should be the ultimate port? Had he any doubt in his mind about the advisability of going to Nelson?

Mr. BENNETT: As I endeavoured to explain, the then Minister of Railways and Canals, after he came back, discussed the matter with me very fully. He told me of the difficulties that subsequently were referred to in the report by Mr. Palmer. He told me also of conditions as he found them at Churchill. He said he felt he was bound to accept the opinion of the engineers.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is speaking of Mr. Cochrane?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. My memory is there will be found on Hansard a statement of his that he entirely followed the opinion of the engineers. I confess to the Minister of the Interior that not having been there, depending wholly and entirely on engineers' reports, I was not and I am not now in a position, beyond those reports, to indicate whether Churchill is to be preferred to Nelson or Nelson to Churchill. All I know is that the then Minister of Railways acted on technical advice and the moneys expended at Nelson were expended under that advice. The minister will find that all stated in the Senate discussions that took place in connection with the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know whether it would suit the convenience of hon. members to resume at two o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: Say half past two.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We might say half past two and possibly it might be understood that we just continue in session until we finish passing the estimates; otherwise it will be very difficult to arrange for prorogation. I will make this motion if the Speaker will resume the chair.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I move:

The when the house resumes this afternoon, it shall resume at half past two and continue in session until the business of the house is disposed of.

Motion agreed to.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

---

The house resumed at 2.30 o'clock.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Report of the Canadian delegates to the conference on the Limitation of Naval Armaments—Mr. Mackenzie King.

Report of the regulations made pursuant to provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act—Mr. King (Kootenay).

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Mr. GOTT:

1. What were the total trade imports and exports, separately, between Canada and Great Britain for the fiscal years 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929 and 1930?

2. What were the total trade imports and exports, separately, between Canada and the United States for the fiscal years above mentioned?

Mr. MALCOLM:

1. Canada's imports from and exports to the United Kingdom, years ended March 31, 1920 to 1930, inclusive, were—

| Fiscal years | Imports from United Kingdom | Exports to United Kingdom | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | Canadian produce | Foreign produce |
| 1920 | $126,362,631 | $489,152,637 | $6,807,481 |
| 1921 | 213,973,562 | 312,844,871 | 1,383,800 |
| 1922 | 117,135,343 | 299,361,675 | 1,001,518 |
| 1923 | 141,330,143 | 379,067,445 | 851,081 |
| 1924 | 153,586,690 | 360,057,782 | 1,103,020 |
| 1925 | 151,083,946 | 395,843,433 | 1,324,615 |
| 1926 | 163,731,210 | 508,237,560 | 1,028,583 |
| 1927 | 163,939,065 | 446,872,851 | 1,146,233 |
| 1928 | 186,435,824 | 410,691,392 | 2,071,961 |
| 1929 | 194,041,381 | 429,730,485 | 1,930,456 |
| 1930 | 189,178,156 | 281,838,175 | 1,336,380 |

2. Canada's imports from and exports to the United States, years ended March 31, 1920 to 1930, inclusive, were—

| Fiscal years | Imports from United States | Exports to United States | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | Canadian produce | Foreign produce |
| 1920 | $801,097,318 | $464,028,183 | $37,101,934 |
| 1921 | 856,176,820 | 542,322,967 | 18,378,969 |
| 1922 | 515,958,196 | 292,588,643 | 11,515,534 |
| 1923 | 540,989,738 | 369,080,218 | 11,267,503 |
| 1924 | 601,256,447 | 430,707,544 | 10,935,365 |
| 1925 | 509,780,009 | 417,417,144 | 9,767,499 |

CHIGNECTO CANAL

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Railways and Canals): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I might answer a question that was asked by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) yesterday on the orders of the day in reference to the Chignecto canal. As hon. members may recall, a resolution was passed by this house a year ago asking that a survey and an economic study be made of that proposal. The field part of the survey work has been completed and the notes are now being extended and studied. A commission will shortly be appointed to study the economic aspects of the problem. The personnel of the commission has not been determined, and no one was authorized to speak in that regard on behalf of the government.

PRIVILEGE—MR. DUFF

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to a question of privilege. A day or two ago in the regular course of the mail, I received in my post office box in the House of Commons the two envelopes which I hold in my hand. These are the ordinary House of Commons envelopes, and although they are not addressed to me they came back to my post office box. One of the envelopes is addressed to Thomas Young, Esquire, Sydney, N.S., and the other to Fred H. Sullivan, Esquire, 1 Argyle street, Glace Bay, N.S.

Before I go any further, may I say that I absolve the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) of any knowledge of what has occurred in connection with this matter, but I think it is necessary for me to lay the whole facts before the house. Stamped on these envelopes to show the reason why they were sent back to me are the words, "Returned to sender," and the reason given for non-delivery in each case is that the persons to whom the letters were addressed were not at the addresses named. I am going to send you these envelopes, Mr. Speaker, in a moment, and you will be interested to know what they contain.

Mr. GEARY: Did my hon. friend read the contents?

Mr. DUFF: Read the contents, does my hon. friend say?

Mr. GEARY: I do not want you to read them. I asked if you did read them.

Mr. DUFF: No, but I looked inside and found whom they were from.

Mr. BENNETT: It is an offence under the law to open a letter that is not addressed to you.

Mr. DUFF: Wait till I get through, and then my hon. friend will see that I did what was correct.

Mr. BENNETT: Nothing will make correct the opening of a letter addressed to somebody else. We cannot have a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, involving the opening of a letter addressed to somebody else. Surely this house has not fallen that low.

Mr. DUFF: Somebody has fallen low when he deliberately used my frank and forged my initials on these two envelopes, and under my frank and under my initials sent out Tory literature in my name. I say that I am perfectly justified in bringing this matter to the attention of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: As to the frank, yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Having stated that, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that his question of privilege is covered. But as to reading what is contained in the envelope—

Mr. DUFF: I did not intend to read the contents, Mr. Speaker, but I thought somebody asked me to. All I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is that this letter is signed by my good friend the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. McRae), the chief whip of the Conservative party. I do not believe that he either had anything to do with sending out this literature under my frank, but I do say, in view of the fact that the people of Nova Scotia have received letters of this kind evidently, because if two have come back certainly more than two were sent out, that it is not fair to me as a Liberal member of the House of Commons from the province of Nova Scotia to have these letters sent out under my frank, and I want to protest against it

Mr. SPEAKER: Nobody has the right to use the hon. gentleman's frank, but I am sure after what he has just stated that his electors will know that he never said what is in those letters.

Mr. BENNETT: It is now a question of the privileges of this house, not the privilege of any particular member. I trust that the hon. gentleman will lay the envelopes on the table. Having laid the envelopes upon the table, they should be kept in the custody of the clerk. It may well be that initials which purport to be the hon. gentleman's are somebody else's. That is for the clerk of the house. In the second place, the opening of a letter not addressed to him by any member and a statement of the contents is an offence against the law.

Mr. DUNNING: The frank and the initials purported to be his own.

Mr. BENNETT: He had no right to open the letters knowing they were not addressed to him.

Mr. DUNNING: How could he know until he opened them?

Mr. BENNETT: He said that there was a direction on the envelope where it should be sent if not delivered. His statement was predicated upon the assumption that he had not sent out those letters, and then to open them certainly puts this house in a very, very difficult position. I desire to dissociate myself and those with whom I am associated on this side from becoming parties to the opening of a letter that may be placed in my box or that of any other hon. member simply because the post office clerk assures me that it was my letter originally.

Mr. J. C. BRADY (Skeena): Apropos of what has just taken place, and to show exactly what is being done, let me mention that a few weeks ago a letter was addressed to the house of Olaf Hanson, the Liberal candidate in Skeena. He was not at home at the time, being either in Montreal or in the United States, and that letter was delivered to me by the post office. I retained it and made sure that Mr. Hanson got it even though I knew, Mr. Speaker, that the substance of that letter would not be a bit helpful to me.

Mr. BROWN: How did you know?

Mr. BRADY: I will tell you why. I know this for a fact, that when Olaf Hanson returned to Prince Rupert, every step that I advanced to better conditions in my constituency he took the credit for; and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that any man who opens a letter that is not addressed to him is doing something that is contrary to the law.

Mr. DUNNING: Is a question of privilege involved here, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. I. D. MACDOUGALL (Inverness): This matter should not be lightly passed over by the House of Commons. I have here in my hand the envelope to which my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) referred, and I am prepared to go on my oath and testify that this frank is the frank of Mr. Finlay MacDonald who represents Cape Breton South.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, it is as clear as anything in the world. All you have to do is to look at it and see.

Mr. CANNON: What is all the fuss about?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The fuss is about a member of your party opening a letter that did not belong to him. You would not have done that, I trust, and I trust you would raise some fuss about it if anybody had done it against you.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentleman to use the third person when referring to another hon. member.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: My hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough by no stretch of his imagination, and he has quite a good imagination, I fancy, could interpret this as being his frank. He has opened a letter addressed to a certain person, Fred H. Sullivan, Esquire, Argyle Street, Glace Bay, which is not even in the hon. gentleman's county.

Mr. DUFF: It was returned to my post office box.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: You opened it knowing it did not belong to you.

Mr. DUFF: How did I know?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: You could see by the letter it did not belong to you.

Mr. DUFF: Not until I opened it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: It is not your frank, the letter is not addressed to you, and exercising the ordinary courtesy of a gentleman you should have returned that letter, but you opened it.

Mr. DUFF: To whom was I to return it?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: To the post office because you knew that letter did not belong to you.

Mr. DUFF: I know now, of course.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: You opened a letter belonging to somebody else.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The question of privilege has been stated, the answer has been given. Now, I leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I suggest that the wrongful use of a frank is a matter within Your Honour's control as Speaker of the house. Allegations have been made and in turn denied. The questions, I presume, are questions of fact. I have not seen the frank, and I am not attempting to judge as to the correctness of my hon. friend's statement. I am merely remarking that it is a matter for Your Honour to deal with.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is a matter for the Postmaster General to deal with.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that the members of the house would be satisfied to leave the matter in your hands. I think everybody will agree that no member should open a letter not addressed to him; and if the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysboro (Mr. Duff) did so, I am confident it was under a misapprehension that the letter was addressed to himself.

Mr. DUFF: I opened it thinking I had sent it. It had my frank on it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: It was not your frank.

Mr. DUFF: I saw my initials.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is a matter for experts to determine.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I will now summarize the position. In 1910 Sir Robert Borden made a speech at Halifax outlining the platform of his party, and later in the west elaborating that he used these words:

> The Liberal-Conservative party has been committed to the construction of the Hudson Bay railway since 1896, when Sir Charles Tupper embodied it in his policy. It will be built by the next Liberal-Conservative administration without one day's unnecessary delay. It will be operated by an independent, non-political commission on behalf of and in the interests of the people, with full control of rates, and it will not be handed over to the control of any railway corporation.

That was reported in the press and amongst other papers in the Yorkton Enterprise of July 6, 1911, when Sir Robert Borden was making his tour through that section of the country. When the government of Sir Robert Borden met the house for the first time in November, 1911, the speech from the throne contained this paragraph:

> The selection of the best route for the Hudson Bay railway is engaging the attention of my advisers, and an announcement will be made to you of the result of their inquiry.

I had the privilege of moving the adoption of the address in reply in the House of Commons on November 20, 1911, and in the course of my remarks I said:

> It is, therefore, of vital importance in the minds and thoughts of those who produce grain in the west that no mistake be made so far as the terminals at Hudson Bay are concerned, and we rejoice that the speedy completion of the railway will be one of the matters which will receive the most earnest consideration of this administration. It is a matter in which the people in the west are vitally interested, that terminals shall be constructed there under the control of a commission, and that no private corporation will have an opportunity to unnecessarily control or dominate those terminals. That will obviate the necessity, of course, of our having to expropriate them, as we may some of the terminals at the head of the lakes.

I have already indicated the action taken by the administration of Sir Robert Borden, and the journey of Mr. Cochrane to that section of the country and the selection of the terminus for the railway. The war followed and operations were suspended, but it will be within the memory of this house, if it has followed what I have said, that the railway was completed to within 92 miles of Port Nelson and within 179 miles of Churchill when the present administration came into power. It will also be recalled that in 1926, when the present Minister of Finance was in control of the Department of Railways and Canals, further investigations were made which resulted in the terminals being changed from Port Nelson to Fort Churchill where the terminals mentioned by the Minister of Railways and Canals are now being constructed.

I think that makes the matter perfectly clear with one exception. Between 1911 and 1926 the Senate committee had investigated the whole question, and the answers I gave to the questions put to me in 1926 were made subsequent to that report. I do not now recall whether or not the Minister of Railways and Canals referred to the report in the course of his remarks, but all members interested in the Hudson Bay railway development will recall that that report was one of the factors, as the minister very properly said this morning, that brought about the further investigation as to whether Port Nelson should remain the terminus of the Hudson Bay line.

I have already recalled what took place in the election campaigns in the west, and I also desire to point out that the hon. gentleman from Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) the other day referred to an interview given by Mr. Clarence Graham a few days before—

Mr. McPHEE: As reported in the western press.

Mr. BENNETT: It was not an interview at all. A few days later Mr. Graham telegraphed to me as follows:

> Hansard May 14 contains McPhee's quotation of alleged interview by me. Have given no interview this year anywhere nor on any subject nor in any manner whatever made public comment on or reference to Dunning budget. Utterance quoted made addressing Cosmopolitan Club here as guest 5th instant.

That is the incident to which the hon. gentleman must have referred. It was at a banquet at the Cosmopolitan Club and had no reference in any way, shape or form to the budget. Mr. Graham followed that with a letter in which he asked me that the misapprehension be cleared up. I also referred to the fact that during the election campaign of 1925 the right hon. Prime Minister is reported in the Regina Leader of October 8, 1925, to have addressed a public meeting in Saskatoon on the day previous. The quotation from the Regina Leader is as follows:

> The next question is, how soon will Mr. King finish the Hudson's Bay line? Will he ask for the necessary appropriation at the next session? I am not going to evade the issue. I am not here to say that what I say will go, but I say this: You send me followers from Saskatchewan, let me have Mr. Dunning in the cabinet, and it will not take long to satisfy the people on this question.
> A voice: How many miles per member?
> Premier King: I am afraid if I said, "You send me the limit and I will go the limit," Mr. Meighen might say I was trying to bribe you. I want to make the position clear. The government wants to complete the road and to do it immediately. Let me also make this clear: how far we can go in that desire depends upon the complexion of parliament. Supposing after October 29th such a calamity should happen that the Liberal party was in power but no Liberal followers from Saskatchewan. Do you think I could get the other representatives to do it?
> A voice: What about the Progressives helping you?
> Premier King: Let me answer that clearly. When the Progressives take the attitude that they will support us when we do what they want and we can go to blazes when we do not, you cannot get very far. You cannot get people to work together under that system. I have the greatest admiration for the motives of the Progressive party and am in sympathy with most of their policies as those of the Liberals are alike. But while I take that position my admiration stops when it comes to the methods.

I will not offer any comment whatever and just leave that extract as an indication of the policy pursued by the Prime Minister as outlined in his remarks at Saskatoon on October 7, 1925. Bearing in mind that at that time the railway was within 92 miles of Nelson and 179 miles of Churchill—query: How long will it take to finish it if in five years it has got to its present state? In five years the Minister of Railways instituted an investigation, changed the port from Nelson to Churchill, and began to construct the line. According to the present Minister of Railways it may be opened next year. Six years after the speech to which I have referred 179 miles will be completed, and probably trains will be running into Churchill.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not wish to develop any controversy in reference to this matter except in regard to my hon. friend's remarks as to the sequence of events. His remarks have departed somewhat from my understanding of the sequence, and I shall be very brief in my reply. I think my hon. friend will agree that his last remarks regarding the length of time will call for some reply. Chronologically the position is stated approximately correctly by the leader of the opposition. The first sod was turned on the Hudson Bay railway in 1910, and work continued on it throughout the war period. In fact work was not stopped until a month or so before the close of the war. At the time of the cessation of work the railway had reached mile 332, some 90 miles from Nelson and 179 miles from Churchill. At that time it was the intention of the then government to build the road through to Nelson, but for a number of years after 1918 no work was done on the railway. Trains were operated once a month and sometimes not that often for a short distance along the line only. In 1926 as my hon. friend has stated I became Minister of Railways and in that session on behalf of the government I asked parliament for a vote of $3,000,000 for the rehabilitation of the existing railway. When asking for the vote I stated plainly that it would all be necessary to rebuild the line. My hon. friend has spoken of the 332 miles as if in 1926 it would have been possible to begin building the remaining portion. As a matter of fact in 1926 it was not possible for a train to get anywhere near the end of the existing steel because in the years which had intervened between 1918 and 1926 the road-bed which was built originally on muskeg had completely disappeared over large portions of the distance, particularly from mile 200 to mile 332. As a matter of actual fact so far as practical purposes are concerned it has been necessary to rebuild the whole of the former Hudson Bay railway in addition to constructing the remaining mileage to Churchill. With respect to the five years to which my hon. friend has referred I would like in the first place to place before him the actual facts. The date of the debate in this house was June 9, 1926, and on that date not one dollar was yet available with which to do anything. Shortly afterwards my hon. friends opposite came into office for a short time. I did not resume the position of Minister of Railways and Canals until some time in October of 1926. It is now the month of May, 1930, and at this point I wish to remind my hon. friend that September of 1926 is not five years distant. I think as a matter of fact he said it was six years.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I said it would be six years next year when it is completed.

Mr. DUNNING: It will not be that long; I would point out however that it was not possible to do any work on the rehabilitation of the existing line during the year 1926. It was only possible to assemble materials in order that a start might be made on the rehabilitation in the year 1927. As a matter of fact in that year substantial progress was made. What had to be done? As I have reported to this house on previous occasions a complete new dump had to be built over the major portion of the mileage concerned.

I do not wish to refer particularly to my hon friend's Portage speech. I did not hear it, and I have no quarrel with his statement as to what he said. Under those circumstances I usually allow a man to state what he said, and am content to take his word for it. I take my hon. friend's interpretation in this particular instance. However, in reference to his remarks about the discussion which took place in this chamber on June 9, 1926, I think I owe it to myself to point out to my hon. friend that his remarks on that occasion indicated his position not as to the choice of ports—my hon. friend did not indicate anything about a choice between Nelson or Churchill.

Mr. BENNETT: Did he not; we shall see.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not quarrelling with my hon. friend. His words are recorded on Hansard and they speak for themselves. He was referring to the feasibility of the whole route, and repeatedly he so stated. Until he had further assurances along that line he would not feel justified in voting for the extension of the railway one single mile beyond its present terminus, and he was satisfied to vote for the sum then being placed before the house for the reason that it contemplated only the rehabilitation of the existing mileage. In that connection my hon. friend referred to the expenditures which had been made, and at page 4293 of Hansard he said:

As a matter of business in an ordinary transaction most men would consider an expenditure of $3,000,000 somewhat large for the purpose of saving an investment of $20,000,000 amounting as it does to 15 per cent of the whole. I do not think it will be necessary to spend $3,000,000 for that purpose; less money than that will recondition the road and restore it to proper working condition. That is my view after hearing the estimate of the work that has to be done to put the road into shape.

And then after a reference to decayed ties, he said:

I therefore support the vote as it is proposed by the government. But from the information I have I could not under any circumstances vote to extend the railway a single foot beyond the present end of steel. I could not vote to send the railway to Nelson. I say that because I have not adequate information that would convince me that the expenditure of the money necessary, some $29,000,000 or $30,000,000, would be in the public interest. We have no such data as would warrant a board of directors, in the case of private corporation, speaking for intelligent, sober minded shareholders, in arriving at the conclusion that the expenditure now proposed was justifiable.

And as I have frequently observed, we in this parliament in relation to railway matters are in the capacity of shareholders. We are shareholders of the Hudson Bay railway. Speaking from that point of view I should not be prepared upon the information which has been submitted to us, to vote if I were asked to,—I am not as a matter of fact called upon to vote at the moment—in favour of an extension of the Hudson Bay raliway to the bay.

Then my hon. friend goes on:

My mind is open; I have no preconceived notions, no prejudices and no bias with respect to this question. On the evidence as I have read it—I have read all the evidence that has been available—there seems to be a marked conflict of opinion. These points are apparent: first, that since the opening of the Panama canal and the movement of wheat from as far east as Maple Creek, and perhaps a little further, to the Pacific slope there is no longer that urgent demand for the movement of grain west of that point to the Hudson bay or Fort William. Rather the desire is to move it to Vancouver. In the second place it must be remembered that the population of the country is not expanding as we should like, and that any movement that takes place of grain toward Hudson bay must necessarily involve a corresponding diminution in traffic on the two roads that now operate. And the Canadian National Railway system cannot afford at this juncture to lose any traffic.

And then further on:

I do suggest to the minister that inasmuch as—if he is permitted to remain in his office as I trust he will not be—

By the way, I was:

—he proposes to submit to parliament some day a vote for the construction of the road to Hudson bay, he takes steps immediately to demonstrate beyond any peradventure the feasibility of navigation in the straits.

And so on. Without quarrelling with my hon. friend, there may be some justification for those who understood his remarks to indicate doubt of the feasibility of the Hudson bay project as a whole. I say there may be in those remarks some excuse, and if proof of that is required I may point out that in that very debate one of my hon. friend's own colleagues at that time, the then member for East Edmonton, Mr. Bury, said in his address on page 4459 of Hansard of June 9:

Now, I cannot let that statement go unchallenged, because there is at least one member—and indeed the house has heard another in the person of the member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett)—who does not believe in the project of the Hudson Bay route as a grain route. I cannot concede that it will be an economic grain route.

Evidently Mr. Bury understood my hon. friend the leader of the opposition as lacking belief in the Hudson Bay route as a grain route. I will admit quite frankly that my hon. friend's observations regarding what should be done from the point of view of investigation and so forth were good suggestions.

Mr. BENNETT: They were adopted, as a matter of fact.

Mr. DUNNING: As he himself pointed out this morning, they were suggestions which were acted upon, whether or not that was done because they were his suggestions. I really rose to my feet, Mr. Chairman, on account of my hon. friend indicating some criticism of the speed with which the work has been prosecuted since it was commenced. It is generally conceded among railway men and in the world of engineering that a very remarkable piece of work has been accomplished by the engineers and the staff of the Canadian National Railways in dealing with the work.

Mr. THORSON: And by the minister as well.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is very kind to say that, but as a matter of fact the actual conduct of the work of rebuilding and extending the railway was in the hands of the Canadian National construction forces, and during my time as a minister I cannot but acknowledge the whole hearted and effective cooperation which I received from that organization in prosecuting the work. Far from it being delayed in any sense, I can assure the house and the country that it was expedited every minute of the time by the Canadian National organization. I can also say that the departmental staff in charge of the work at the port, labouring as they did for a number of years under the great difficulty of carrying on operations without a railway behind them, with no rail connection, with only a sea connection, in my judgment have done remarkably good work in advancing the project as far as they have. Certainly so far as I know the people of western Canada believe that the work has been sincerely pushed forward by those in charge of it to the full extent of economical possibility.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, there is just one extract which I think my hon. friend might have read from my discussion of this matter which shows what was in my mind at that time. It will be found at page 4294 of Hansard of 1926, as follows:

> Have a careful investigation made of all the circumstances—the nature of the port and the channel; the shifting character of the sand bars; the possibility of erecting proper docks; the availability of material for the construction of such docks; the cost of elevators; the time required in the movement of grain from Port Nelson to Liverpool; the dangers that would be encountered in transportation, so that the insurance rate might be determined; and other allied questions. All these questions could be studied at first-hand by men specially deputed to carry out the investigation.
> This, I submit, is not an unreasonable suggestion to make at this time. I will concede that the minister is as desirous as any other hon. member to avoid any unnecessary expenditures. I believe my friends who support so strenuously this route are just as anxious as I am that public money should not be wasted, are just as desirous as any person could be that this route, if established, should be a success. But I do ask them to support the representations to the minister that we should not rush into this enterprise without having that measure of information, that extensive knowledge which private business men as directors of a well-defined body of shareholders would be required to have before they would recommend to their shareholders the expenditure of these sums of money.
> I do this to-night because, fortunately, it is not that vote which is being considered by the committee

Previously, as the hon. gentleman has said, I had given my unqualified support of the expenditure of the money required for the purpose of rehabilitating the enterprise, and I think the minister has done one other good service which I commend to one of the hon. gentlemen who interrupted me. That is this: The government itself has not been carrying on the contract. The contract was put in the hands of the Canadian National Railways, and the government as such has not been carrying on the work. The government merely put it in the hands of a first class contractor to carry into effect—

Mr. THORSON: Technically.

Mr. BENNETT: Not technically at all. The hon. gentleman, when dealing with this matter, dwelt upon that fact at great length, but he will recall that the government said that the Canadian National Railways, as contractors in this matter, were free to pursue any course they pleased and to employ whom they desired.

Mr. DUNNING: Pardon me, not to pursue any course they pleased.

Mr. BENNETT: I mean any course with respect to the work.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Under the specifications?

Mr. DUNNING: The character of the work was agreed upon before the Canadian National Railways assumed the position of agent of the minister in carrying it out.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it true that the Canadian National Railways assumed the position of contractors for this enterprise and did the work?

Mr. DUNNING: No, they carried it out entirely as agent of the minister and were so appointed, in the same manner as they have carried out work on the National Transcontinental and other lines.

Mr. BENNETT: They were responsible for the completion of the work in the same manner as a firm of contractors would be?

Mr. DUNNING: Scarcely that.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the difference? They had to do the work. Surely this job has not been political.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. BENNETT: Then if it is not political the Canadian National Railways are carrying on this work as contractors for the enterprise.

Mr. DUNNING: You can call them contractors if you wish; that is not quite the actual fact.

Mr. BENNETT: There is not very much difference anyway.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Did I understand my hon. friend to complain about the length of time taken by the Canadian National Railways to complete the work?

Mr. BENNETT: I was complaining that the government had not pressed the work forward, since the government has been in the position of being in control of the contractors. That is my position exactly.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In view of the attacks which we have had to meet on every platform in my province and in the Conservative press because of our support of the Hudson Bay railway project, I will take good care to publish and circulate the remarks of my hon. friend to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: That is very satisfactory.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I noticed that the minister made a public statement some time ago to the effect that the Crowsnest rates would be extended to Churchill. I wonder if the minister could give us some definite assurance on that point.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is misinformed as to the statement attributed to me. I have no recollection of making any statement that the Crowsnest pass rates would apply to the Hudson Bay line because there was no occasion for making such a statement and the matter never has been given consideration. However, I may tell my hon. friend that it will receive very serious consideration and personally I have no doubt that those rates will apply.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am not sure where I read the statement, but I definitely recollect reading something in the newspapers to that effect.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend has in mind the statement I made during my tenure of office as Minister of Railways, which was to the effect that by virtue of judgments given by the Board of Railway Commissioners in other cases there was no doubt at all that the Crowsnest pass rates would apply, in my opinion. As the minister of railways has said, until the tariffs of rates are filed by the railway company with the Board of Railway Commissioners and are approved, this matter cannot be said technically to have been decided upon. However, because of the nature of the judgments given by the railway board in rate cases of a similar character, there is no doubt that the Crowsnest pass rates for grain will apply.

Mr. COWAN: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct the attention of the minister to a matter which I consider to be worthy of consideration. That portion of the Canadian National Railways, formerly the old National Transcontinental, running from the eastern boundary of Manitoba into the province of Quebec, is not subject to municipal and school taxation. The remainder of the Canadian National system pays full taxes, and I do not see why this other portion of the road should not be in the same position, especially with respect to the pioneer communities in northern Ontario. The towns of Sioux Lookout, Longlac and Nakina are more particularly affected by this situation. I submit that it is unfair for the employees of the railway who live in these communities to have to pay municipal and school taxes which should be paid by the railway company. The employees of the railway in other communities receive the benefit of taxation paid by the company, and these people should be put in a like position. The town of Sioux Lookout, an important divisional point, offers a concrete illustration. The assessments in that community, outside of railway property, amount to something like $900,000, while the assessment on the railway property amounts to a little over $430,000. It will be seen that over one-third of the assessed value of the community belongs to the railway, and yet no taxation is paid. That condition should be remedied. This is a community of some 1,750 people comprising perhaps 500 families, and each family is forced to pay at least $50 to $60 more per year because the railway is not taxed. The assessments in Nakina in 1924 amounted to $96,000, while for this year they should amount to $120,000. Nearly one-half of the taxes paid in that community should be paid by the railway company. These same facts would apply to the towns of Hudson, Allanwater and Armstrong, but let us consider the case of Longlac. In this community a certain portion of the railway property is taxed while another portion is not. This is a very anomalous situation. It is estimated by these communities, and particularly by Sioux Lookout that the railway owes them over $200,000 in back taxes. That is a considerable burden upon the people of that community. This government has had nine years in which to consider this matter and has had ample time to remedy this situation. I submit to the minister that these taxes should be paid and that the arrears for the past nine or ten years should be adjusted. In lieu of that, compensatory allowances should be made to these communities until such time as the matter has been adjusted satisfactorily.

Mr. MANION: I desire to support the contention of the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I brought this matter to the attention of the committee some years ago, I think on two or three occasions. At that time I was supported by my hon. friend and by other members from northern Ontario. I believe the government should consider the pioneer character of these northern Ontario towns which are having a difficult time under the best of circumstances.

Mr. CRERAR: This is the first time this matter has been drawn to my attention. I can assure my hon. friends that it will receive my very earnest consideration, but at the present time I would not care to make any commitment. A reasonable case has been presented and I shall be very glad to go into it as fully as possible.

Mr. BENNETT: It could be handled in the same way as other cases were handled, by agreement.

Mr. COTNAM: I would like to direct the attention of the minister to the question of seniority of certain conductors and brakemen formerly employed on the Ottawa division of the former Grand Trunk railway. Perhaps the best method of doing this would be to read a letter which I have received covering this point. It is as follows:

When the amalgamation of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern took place all the freight traffic was diverted away from the Ottawa division and a number of our men were thrown out of employment. New men were engaged on other divisions while men on the Ottawa division were without work.

We have been looking to the Brotherhood of Railway trainmen for the past six or seven years to effect a settlement whereby we would be given work according to our seniority. A settlement was put into effect April 1, this year (they could not have chosen a better date to put it into effect as we were worse off than ever). The engineers and firemen of the Ottawa division received a settlement. They were given their seniority and a larger territory to work on, also the agents and operators were given their seniority on a larger territory, maintenance of way men, water service men, shopmen and carmen have all been given consideration while we have been left to the Ottawa division with practically nothing to do.

We used to have as high as fifty crews in extra service comprising one hundred and fifty men, to-day we have only about four crews. As seniority is the foundation of all labour organizations and all other men affected have received their seniority we cannot understand why we cannot get the same. Yard brakemen who belong to our organization received their seniority; where there were two separate terminals they were joined into one.

The present settlement was made by the representatives of the men and our delegate accepted it. It turns out now that a lot of things went on he did not know about and we are going to have to suffer for his mistakes. The men of the former Ottawa division have protested this in a body to our labour union. Other districts which have profited by the amalgamation naturally want things to remain as they are and as they are in the majority they control the vote at our meetings. As it stands now men on this division with fifteen to twenty years seniority are without work and men with ten years seniority working on other divisions are employed. We consider this unfair and would like you to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Labour or Minister of Railways and could take up with the President of the Canadian National with a view of giving us justice. We have been patiently waiting for years for our organization to effect a settlement but their settlement is far from being any assistance to us. I am sure all men affected would be agreeable to a board of arbitration composed of railwaymen who would be neutral to all parties affected.

In view of the statements contained in that letter, I should like to ask the minister whether he will give me an assurance that this matter of seniority for these men will be taken up with the president of the Canadian National Railways and adjusted at as early a date as possible.

Mr. CRERAR: The matter is primarily one for the management of the railways to deal with. I am not aware of the circumstances of the case that my hon. friend has brought up. It certainly has not come to my personal attention since I have been in the department. It is, however, a matter for the management of the railways to settle with the railway organizations. I shall be glad to draw it to the attention of the management of the railways, but I do not care to give my hon. friend any assurance that I will intrude myself into the management of the railways to tell them what they should do in this or any other matter of management.

Mr. MALONEY: The statement of the minister is quite in line with a speech delivered by the president of the Canadian National Railways in London in December last. The minister is, I surmise, a director of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is misinformed; I have not that distinction.

Mr. MALONEY: Well, the minister should be a director. Nevertheless, let me read a quotation from a speech delivered by the president of the Canadian National Railways, a man who is pulling down $75,000 of our good money every year. This is what he said in London, England:

> Referring to the field with which I happen to have some familiarity, namely the railways, one makes a noticeable improvement in thought and method.

He was endeavouring to tell the people of England how to manage their railroads.

> But in most cases I should offer a friendly criticism with respect to the organization of your railway systems. The interference—and I use the term in no provocative sense—of directors with respect to details must be abandoned. The chief function, as I conceive it, of a board of directors is vigilance.
> The ideal situation is that which permits a board of directors to remain silent.

If the minister is not a member of the board of directors, he should be, and he should not remain silent. He should have a word to say with regard to the management of the railways of this country.

Mr. CRERAR: What is my hon. friend reading from?

Mr. MALONEY: From Quebec, a journal published in England in the interests of the province of Quebec. Has the minister ever seen it?

Mr. CRERAR: No.

Mr. MALONEY: He should. It is an excellent paper.

Mr. COTNAM: I hope the minister will take into his serious consideration the matter, to which I have referred, because these men have no method of securing redress unless a little pressure can be brought to bear from some quarter. The men themselves have gone as far as they can go and it is time that someone with a little more authority should step in and see that these men secure the rights of which they have been deprived for the past few years.

Item agreed to.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to income —Quebec canals: Lachine, improvements, $7,400.

Mr. RHEAUME: I have looked through the estimates and I fail to find any grant for the proposed two tunnels under the Lachine canal, one at Wellington street and the second at Côte St. Paul. The Montreal Tramways Company has already declared its intention to defray one-third of the cost, and according to a statement recently made by its chief executive, the city of Montreal by way of referendum will soon seek authority to proceed with the carrying out of those two projects. Its contribution would be a second one-third of the cost. I feel it my duty to renew my plea in favour of a grant representing the remaining one-third of the cost of those two tunnels. I would like very much to know from the Minister of Railways the policy of the government on this question.

Mr. GUERIN: Just a word in support of the representations of my good friend the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. We represent contiguous constituencies, both of which suffer very keenly on account of the fact that the canal separates one part of the population of Montreal from another. As hon. members are aware, Montreal is a place of some importance. It comprises one-tenth of the population of the whole Dominion of Canada and about 100,000 of that population are cut off from communication with the rest whenever the canal is in operation. This means practically every ten minutes during the day while navigation lasts. I would say that the canal bridges are open for from ten to fifteen minutes at a time, preventing all intercourse between the north and the south portions of Montreal. We see frequently several street cars, sometimes eight, ten or twelve, lined up waiting for the bridges to open and people going to business suffer acutely on account of the obstruction of the traffic. Navigation has become so active now that we cannot put up much longer with this terrible inconvenience. We had reason to think an amount would be inserted in the supplementary estimates. I can understand that the minister did not care to have the supplementary estimates appear too large, but we want to have some assurance that the government is going to come to our aid. We are in absolute need of this improvement; it must take place. We are suffering on account of a canal which is a government institution. I leave the matter in the hands of the minister and I hope he can give some pledge or assurance that the government is prepared to come to our help in this regard.

Mr. CRERAR: In January, 1929, the department received a resolution from the clerk of the city council of Montreal asking if the department would be prepared to make a contribution to the building of subways at Wellington street and Cote St. Paul. That matter has been examined by the officers of the department, and I find that such a contribution could be made by the federal government. The bridge at Wellington street across the canal and the bridge at Cote St Paul have been in operation for a very considerable number of years, the Wellington street bridge for thirty years, and the other for a little less than that. There is no doubt that the traffic crossing these bridges from the city of Verdun, and the district adjacent to Pointe St. Charles, is very considerable and interferes, as my hon. friends have pointed out, with the free passageway along the canal. Subways would undoubtedly be desirable. Our officers have made an estimate that the department could make a contribution of I should say approximately $1,000,000 for these two subways and still be no further behind than what it is costing at the present time to maintain these bridges and provide for depreciation and the other expenses incidental to their maintenance. If the subways were built, it would of course facilitate the passenger traffic to and from the city of Verdun, and would also greatly facilitate the passage of boats through the canal. I think I can say to my hon. friends who have made this request that the department will be prepared to make a contribution of $1,000,000, or at any rate I will say that I would be prepared to recommend such a contribution purely on the basis of its being a businesslike construction, as soon as the city of Montreal and the Montreal Tramways Company come to an agreement as to the amount which they will contribute to the building of these subways.

Mr. KAISER: Has the minister ever heard of the Oshawa railway station?

Mr. CRERAR: The matter of a railway station at Oshawa has never been directly brought to my attention, but I have been under the impression that there was a railway station there.

Mr. KAISER: Would the minister mind having a little conversation about it with Sir Henry Thornton? He visited the station a few days ago, and the people of Oshawa offered him the station as a present, if he would remove it to a pioneer museum. He declared that the station was too old for that and should be put in an archaeological department. Will the minister use his best efforts to see that either one or the other is done?

Mr. CRERAR: I have no doubt that my hon. friend's observations will reach the attention and have the careful consideration of Sir Henry Thornton.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would like to refer to the promise made by the minister just a few moments ago. Does he think that that is a proper promise to make just prior to an election? If he were prepared to put the item in his estimates, all right; but I do not think it is a promise that should have been made.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is wholly under a misapprehension. As I stated a moment ago, this matter was drawn to the attention of the department eighteen months ago.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That makes it worse.

Mr. CRERAR: Let my hon. friend possess his soul in patience until I have made my explanation. The difficulty, so I am informed, has been that the city of Montreal and the Montreal Tramways Company have not been able to reach an agreement as to the contribution which they will make to these subways. The request was made of the government that an amount should be placed in the estimates as an evidence of the intention of the government to make this contribution when the other parties came to an agreement. But the item was not put in the estimates because it is not required until the other parties reach an agreement. When they do, I am prepared to recommend that an amount equal to $1,000,000 be provided through the estimates of the Railway department on the ground that this is a business arrangement which will improve the service on the canal and improve the service to the residents of Verdun, and will not mean any additional cost to the government of Canada.

Mr. MacNUTT: As subways are under discussion, may I ask the minister if he has received a memorial from the council and board of trade of the town of Truro, Nova Scotia, asking that a subway be constructed under the tracks at that place?

Mr. CRERAR: That matter has been before the Canadian National Railways, I am informed by my deputy, for some considerable time. Apparently there was some difficulty on the part of the town of Truro as to the precise location where they desired the subway. I understand that that difficulty has been settled and that they have notified the management of the railways where they wish to have the subway, and that arrangements are being made to have the subway built at an early date.

Item agreed to.

Canals—staff and repairs, $2,891,500.

Mr. SIMPSON: We have heard a great deal in the house during the last few days with respect to the long hours of labour of the men engaged in the steel industry in this country May I say that similar conditions have prevailed on the canals in this country for years? The men engaged on the ship canals have been working eleven and thirteen hours a day, and sometimes a twenty-four hour shift. So the government had not very good grounds to rest on when they insisted upon the steel industry changing the hours of labour of its employees, when they were maintaining on government works the hours of labour I have just mentioned. I presume the men working on these canals will be included in the new order that has been passed for the eight-hour day.

Mr. CRERAR: There is a vote in the supplementary estimates to provide for the establishment of the eight-hour day on the main St. Lawrence route where the traffic warrants it.

Mr, SIMPSON: Will that apply to the canal at the Soo where the traffic is practically continuous?

Mr. CRERAR: I cannot answer my hon. friend as to that at the moment. It will apply at the Soo if the conditions warrant. I do not know the amount of traffic passing through the Canadian Soo; my impression is the great bulk of it passes through the American Soo.

Mr. SIMPSON: While that is true, it is accounted for by the fact that there are four locks on the American side and only one on our side. But notwithstanding that, quite a substantial portion of the traffic passes through on the Canadian side of the river. For years these men have been working long hours, while just across the river the men have been on the eight-hour shift for several years and are getting more money than our men. If any change is being made on the canal system, I appeal to the minister to take care of the men at the Soo.

Mr. CRERAR: I shall be very glad to take it into consideration, and if the facts warrant the eight-hour day being applied, I will see that it is applied.

Item agreed to.

Canals—staff and repairs—further amount required for salaries of additional officers employed on account of institution of the eight hour day, $400,000.

Mr. MALONEY: Where will the $400,000 be expended?

[Mr. Crerar.]

Mr. CRERAR: I explained a few moments ago, in answer to my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Simpson), that this vote is to apply the eight-hour day to our men engaged on the main channels of travel on the St. Lawrence route. He raised the point about it being applied to the Soo. I am going to make full inquiry, and if the facts warrant it will be established there.

Mr. BENNETT: Before the hon. minister leaves his estimates I wish to ask him a question. At the present moment it is impossible for the travelling public to get to Churchill. There is a pass system—not railway passes—with respect to those who go into that territory. I should like some assurance from the minister that no discrimination will be practised in affording facilities to all persons to go into that territory during the general elections.

Mr. CRERAR: I unhesitatingly say to my friend that there will be no discrimination. If he should find any I shall be very glad if he will bring it to my notice at once.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

National Defence—militia services—topographic survey, $45,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Taking the votes for this department generally, Mr. Chairman, will the minister explain the purpose of the expenditures, including the increases?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): The expenditures have been practically for the same sort of services for which votes have been asked for several years past. The increase since 1926 of approximately $2,000,000 for militia services is largely in connection with three or four items such as the engineer services, which we have increased considerably in order to take care of depreciation and repairs to buildings; replacement of clothing and supplies on account of depletion in war stocks, and annual training, which as I have told the committee before, has been increased on the average from 9 to 12 days and from about 27,000 to 33,000 men.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think the increases are expected to take care of training and assistance to officers in the upkeep of battalions, yet there is complaint that that is not being done. In 1926 the militia vote was $9,000,000 as against $11,000,000 in 1928. That additional money should pretty well take care of assistance to officers in helping them to maintain their units. Has there been no increase to them for this purpose between 1926 and 1929?

Mr. RALSTON: I am not aware of any increase to officers, that is, officers commanding non-permanent active militia units.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is what I mean. There has been no assistance given to those officers?

Mr. RALSTON: No, I know of no increases. My hon. friend is talking of the regular allowances?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am asking if there has been any increase to these officers between 1926 and 1929?

Mr. RALSTON: I say I am not aware of any. My hon. friend knows of course that in most non-permanent active militia units the officers are contributing rather than getting something, and that has rather been a source of satisfaction to me to be able so to report to the house. Our officers, and even our non-commissioned officers and men, have in many instances been pooling their pay for what they consider the good of the service.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is exactly the point. We have understood that these officers would be assisted, but they have not, although there is an increase of $2,000,000 in the militia vote. This increased expenditure is not because of any increase in the number of men training. In 1926 the department trained 328 permanent officers, while in 1928 it trained only 411; other ranks in 1926 it trained 3,088 and in 1928, 3,175. There is a slight difference in that case. Officers trained at local headquarters in 1926 numbered 3,097 and in 1928-29, the figure decreased to 2,573. Other ranks trained at local headquarters in 1926, 21,481; in 1928-29, 19,754, showing a decrease. There was, however, an increase of those at camps. In 1926 there were 1,303 officers trained and in 1928 there were 1,610, showing an increase of 300; other ranks in 1926, 6,108 as compared with 10,248. So that after all I want to point out that if there are complaints in regard to the maintenance and upkeep of these battalions it is not because any great number have been added to the training in camp, because if you take the figures of those at local headquarters there is very little increase as compared with those trained at camp. There have been complaints that in spite of the fact that the appropriation has been increased by $2,000,000 these officers are not getting any assistance. In 1924 the estimates were $11,000,000 for this work and in 1929-30, they were $20,000,000. That would seem to give the minister quite an increase to assist in the military work and in the training of the units. There is also a continued increase in the special votes. There is a decrease in the adjustment of war claims; in 1926 the amount spent was $148,000 and in 1928, $112,000, showing a decrease of $36,000. In 1926 in connection with imperial war graves the amount of $799,000 was spent, whereas in 1928 only $573,000 were spent, or a reduction of $226,000. There is a reduction in these extra items in the militia estimates, and it might be still greater even if the grant to assist the officers commanding the non-permanent units had remained the same. The minister knows as well as I do that there are complaints, and it is not fair to do no more than call attention to the insufficiency of the amounts these commanding officers are getting, and to give them credit for paying money out of their own pockets for the maintenance of their units, when as a matter of fact the department is getting an increased appropriation of two or three millions a year. The minister may be able to explain it, but so far he has not done so.

Mr. RALSTON: The explanation lies in the fact that my hon. friend is mixing the total vote of the department with the vote for the militia service to which we are referring.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No, I am not mixing it.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon friend compared $20,000,000 with $11,000,000. May I tell him that $20,000,000 has nothing to do with the $11,000,000; the figures are not comparative. The comparison is between something over $9,000,000 and $11,000,000 for militia services. In order that there may be no doubt about it I shall mention the services in connection with which increases have been made:

Administration, $20,000; cadets, $100,000; contingencies, $12,000; engineer services, $264,000; general stores, $526,800; manufacturing establishments, $167,000; non-permanent active militia, $615,000.

May I pause here to say that this last one is the vote from which any payments such as my hon. friend has mentioned would have to be made. The items of increases continue:

Permanent force, $160,000; Royal Military College, $10,000; topographic survey, $10,000.

In all there is a total of $1,884,800 increases since 1926-27. This is made up of three large items: general stores, $526,800; non-permanent active militia, $615,000, and a combination of permanent force and engineering service amounting to something like $400,000. The only vote out of which any such assistance could be given as that to which my hon. friend refers, is the item of $615,000. May I point out also that instead of 27,000 men in 1926-27 there have been trained in the last two years 33,000, or an increase of 6,000 and there has been an increase in average days of training from 9 to 12. I should have mentioned in addition that the number which have been given special training courses has practically doubled in the past three years. We have tried to do all we could with that comparatively small item of $615,000. If my hon. friend has any other suggestions I should like to have them. I think the service has been looked after as well as could be done considering the amount of money which has been provided.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am not mixing things up. I have them all separated before me. In 1924 there was $8,821,000 for militia; in 1926, when the minister took over the department, there was $9,158,000. This year you are asking for $11,000,000, which is $2,000,000 more for the militia alone.

Mr. RALSTON: No, not for militia alone.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Those are the figures which have been taken from your estimates. I say there was $2,000,000 more for the militia alone.

Mr. RALSTON: No, it is not for the militia it is for all these services—permanent force, Royal Military College, etc.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): As to the figures for training I have only been able to copy the reports, and I have stated what those reports show. I say that the increase of $2,000,000 should show something more in the matter of training and assistance to these officers who are trying to maintain their units. I am glad the minister has made the statement that between 1926 and 1930 the officers have had no increased assistance from the vote in regard to their maintenance.

Mr. MacLAREN: In view of the statement that it is proposed to abolish the royal army pay corps, would the minister make a statement?

Mr. RALSTON: Some time ago I had the whole organization of the department reviewed by Mr. Gordon Scott of the firm of P. S. Ross & Sons. One of the recommendations made at that time was that the army pay corps as a separate unit should be gradually dispensed with in view of the suggested changes in the accounting branch and the appointment of district accountants. If time permitted I should like to go fully into that, but perhaps I can indicate the general idea to the committee. It is that in the department, as far as the officers who are now administering it are concerned, the intention is as far as possible to utilize civilian services more generally but to use of course military services when the technical nature of the employment requires it, or in other words not to build up a large military establishment in collateral services. The situation which existed and which I may say still exists is that the army pay corps and the accounting branch duplicate their work to some extent. The accountants branch has to keep the accounts of the department generally. The pay corps keeps certain accounts in connection with certain essentially military services which also have to be included in the accountant's books as well. The information for the pay corps in many instances has to come from the chief accountant's branch to the pay corps—for instance accounts for general supply. There seemed no reason to Mr. Gordon Scott for having these two sets of accounts.

The pay corps as we generally think of it is for the purpose of paying the troops, but in this instance they are keeping a lot of other accounts, as well. It was felt, however, that accounting was principally a civilian occupation, and not only Mr. Scott but my departmental advisers concurred in the recommendation. As yet no change in personnel has been made, but an instruction was issued that from March 1 the pay corps should come under the chief accountant's branch, and that is the situation at the present time. The idea expressed in the instruction from the adjutant general was that there should be as little as possible individual hardship worked on the members of the pay corps, and that the personnel as far as their qualifications permitted and vacancies exist would be absorbed in the civil organization. At present the only change which has been made is the transfer of the administration of the pay corps from the adjutant general to the chief accountant, looking forward to the time when it may be absorbed in the accounting branch. Naturally I am concerned with the dislocation which any administration change like this causes and I want to have it seen to that the dislocation be just as slight as possible.

Mr. MacLAREN: After all this is the Department of National Defence, and one would naturally expect that as far as possible the developments should take place along military lines. From what the minister says, I understand it is proposed to transfer the military pay portion of the service to the civilian pay force. To me this is regrettable. I quite understand that there may be duplications; I understand that it is desirable to improve the organization and administration, but I should have thought the pay branch would have been kept under the militia services and not put under a civilian branch. These different departmental corps aid in the efficiency of the department. Surely the minister does not suggest that civilian employees, without necessarily any military training, are as efficient as the permanently trained pay corps? That applies to the other branches of departmental corps. They are there for the purpose of efficiency and for training, and in the event of the forces requiring to take the field what would the minister do? He would be employing civilians.

Mr. RALSTON: We would do exactly what we did in the last war; during the last war the civilians enlisted and went into uniform.

Mr. MacLAREN: They still had to go through a process of training.

Mr. RALSTON: Not so much for the accountants.

Mr. MacLAREN: I submit that the pay branch of an army, especially in the field, carries on a very important and complicated duty. Civilians are not enlisted men.

Mr. RALSTON: Perhaps my hon. friend does not understand the situation in the British army. I think probably during the war the Canadians were one of the few forces who had battalion paymasters; in the British army they had what they called field cashiers, civilians I understand, who came with the cash to a certain point, carrying the pay for perhaps a division, and who distributed the cash to the battalion commanders, who in turn distributed it to the company commanders, who, under the old British system as at present, as my hon. friend knows, paid their men. The company commander was supposed to be the father of his men, and if a man had a complaint about his pay or allowances, the pay parade when he came before his company commander was the time to make that complaint known. I should think if we ever have the misfortune to go into the field again that system might have a good deal to commend it as compared to the practice of having regimental paymasters such as we had in the last war. That is just an opinion. I mention the system to my hon. friend to remind him that it has been recognized elsewhere that the fact that a man happens to be in uniform does not necessarily equip him any better for cashier's work.

Mr. MacLAREN: But the man in uniform could do it with equal efficiency.

Mr. RALSTON: But not because he is in uniform.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Surely the minister does not mean to say that civilians should go into the field, not being under discipline and not being enlisted like any other officer, and that these men would be just as efficient?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is talking about a permanent pay corps. I see nothing especially advantageous in the system we had in the last war of having regimental paymasters. I think the company commander might be a better and more logical paymaster.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Surely the minister does not suggest that the commanding officer should be responsible for the pay. We tried that out in the smaller units and it was an absolute failure. Whoever handles the cash should be under discipline, and should not be a civilian.

Mr. GEARY: But the paymaster was a battalion officer; he was not on the pay corps. Now I should like to ask a question. As I understand it the training vote this year is about $25,000 more than it was last year for the non-permanent active militia?

Mr. RALSTON: No, it is just the same.

Mr. GEARY: Then are we training fewer men?

Mr. RALSTON: No, I think not. It is exactly the same amount this year.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am sorry I must bring up a matter now which may delay the committee for a few minutes, but I do not believe I can afford to let it go. I refer to a matter which I think is known to a number of members and to many officials in the department. In July last tenders were called for the supply of coal in Kingston. These tenders were received on July 19. There were three tenders for this coal in the city of Kingston, but on July 25 another tender was received from one of the companies and on July 29 a third tender was received. The result was that this tenderer was able to reduce his first figure of $12.22 to $12.12. No such opportunity was given to the other tenderers, and although the company which sent in the three tenders reduced the price by 2 cents and in another case by 10 cents, at the same time the company was enabled to raise the price on one quality of coal in order to make up for what was lost on the other two tenders. I submit, shortly, that this is a most unfair system; if a second and third tender is to be allowed in respect to these supplies, then every person who made a tender in the first place should be given the same privilege. There are certain regulations governing the weighing of the coal. When this firm had been permitted to submit the second and third tenders they should have been satisfied, but I find from the records of the department that this coal was not weighed on military scales. The payments have been made, the coal is in the bins, and we must let it go.

A third method of delivery was by truck. Weights were submitted for 8,800 pounds, 8,700 pounds and 8,400 pounds, but it was finally discovered that the scales upon which this coal had been weighed had a capacity of only 8,000 pounds. It is to the credit of some official of the department that this discrepancy was discovered, and a certain amount of money was refunded. If that were done with a few truckloads, how much did the department suffer in the delivery of 1,500 cartloads which came in unweighed?

These tenders have been handled in a very unfair manner. I find that the department has two kinds of notices. One is sent to the tenderer when he is not the lowest; if he is the lowest and does not get the contract, he receives a different kind of notice. That is a most unusual method to be adopted by any department, and one which enables people to bid the second time. This matter should be investigated and had I known of it earlier I would have brought it before the house earlier in the session.

Mr. RALSTON: When my hon. friend mentioned the other day the matter of the return, I made inquiry of the deputy just before he went away and I understood that the difficulty was as to the weigh bills. As my hon. friend knows, I arranged that he should be allowed to see the original weigh bills.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I took advantage of that opportunity and it was from that examination that I discovered that the regulations had never been complied with. It was claimed that they possessed two or three signatures of the quartermaster, but there was not a single item of payment which was initialled by that gentleman. I might state that the man who was supposed to weigh this coal was taken away on the last day by the tenderer. There should have been a check made of the weigh bills presented by the tenderer, and military form No. 19 should have been used. However, that was not done in the case of about 1,100 cartloads.

[Mr. Ross (Kingston).]

Mr. RALSTON: I thought the only matter in dispute was with regard to the weigh bills, and I asked the department and the commandant to give me a report in this regard. Therefore I am unable to give my hon. friend all the facts which he desired. Two tenders were put in—

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There were three.

Mr. RALSTON: My officer here tells me that two tenders at least were put in for delivery at two different places. One tenderer quoted a different price for each place and the other tenderer quoted a flat rate. Later on, without any suggestion either directly or indirectly from the department, a telegram was received from the tenderer who had quoted different prices for each delivery point quoting the lower price for both delivery points. This telegram was received before the time for receiving tenders had elapsed and the contract was awarded to that particular tenderer.

The report of the commandant regarding the weighing of the coal is as follows:

It is explained that, although M.F.B. 19 has not been utilized, nevertheless all of the coal was weighed on the government weigh scales at Kingston by a qualified representative of the commandant, R.M.C. in the person of E. H. West, caretaker, R.M.C., whose signature is appended to weigh bills, with the exception of those signed by the quartermaster himself. The other signature, viz., that of A. Cockerham, cleaner and helper, R.M.C., vouches for the actual receipt of each load of coal at the R.M.C. at the end of the journey between the government weigh scale in the city of Kingston and the R.M.C. grounds. The greatest possible supervision and care has been exercised over the weighing and cartage of this coal; the government weigh scale was daily visited by the quartermaster R.M.C. who personally witnessed during his visits the weighing of coal and has himself signed certain weigh bills, in addition to giving his certificate on the fact of the firm's account.

So long as the coal was weighed on government weigh scales and the weighing carried out —as has been done in this case—by a responsible and competent civil employee representing the R.M.C., it was felt that the regulations governing the receipt of coal were being properly and adequately carried out; importance was unfortunately not attached to the use of M.F.B. 19 to record weights, in fact the regulation governing this point did not come to mind when the forms supplied by contractor were taken into use. As soon, however, as it was pointed out by district auditor that M.F.B. 19 should be used, a supply of that form was immediately obtained from the D.S. and T.O., M.D. No. 3, and is now being utilized, and will accompany the accounts for the balance of the coal still due under this contract.

That is signed by C. F. Constantine, Brigadier, commandant, Royal Military College.

I did not know there was any question except about the weighing until it was mentioned by my hon. friend to-day, but in view of what he has said the fullest investigation will be made.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would be very sorry to see anything like that put over on any minister. The quatermaster was away at the time this coal was being delivered. His signature appears on only two or three of these slips. His initials appear on some corrected figures, but that has nothing to do with the weighing. I drew this to the attention of the commandant at the time but it was allowed to go on. I understand that the quartermaster was visiting in London on a holiday.

Mr. RALSTON: The report states that the quartermaster signed certain weigh bills.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I went over the 1,500 weigh bills and I could not find one signature, and the department admitted finally that that was the case. The statement read by the minister was submitted before I made my examination, and the accounting department will admit that there is nothing to it. They assumed that the initials were those of the quartermaster, but they were not. I really think this is a very important matter, and I can assure the minister it is one I shall go into next session very thoroughly. I am going into it so thoroughly that I acquainted the commandant with what was going on. No effort was made either to confirm the statements made or to correct the condition. If you had to cut off as much as 700 or 800 pounds of coal from a truck, what did you lose with those 1,500 loads? It does not satisfy me to say that the coal is weighed. One receives a blue slip and the other a white one and it is found there are only about 150 white slips as against 1,500 blue. I am going to leave the matter there and say that this is a question we cannot let stand in this condition. I have not time to discuss it further now.

Mr. RALSTON: I assure my hon. friend I shall not wait until next session to deal with the matter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I wonder whether the minister would allow me to call attention to a matter that concerns discipline within his own department. I have already spoken to him about it privately. A year ago, when the estimate for cadet service was under discussion, I pointed out that some of the officers were very active in seeking to enforce military training in some of the schools in the vicinity of Winnipeg. The Minister of National Defence made this statement on June 4, 1929:

Mr. Ralston: My hon. friend has said that before. I have told my hon. friend from Calgary and I say to the hon. member for Southeast Grey very sincerely: if they can show any case in which there has been instigation on the part of officers, I will deal with it promptly. The whole principle of this is that it is optional with the school authorities. There are about 7,000 teachers who are instructed this year in physical training, who are not cadet instructors, but who are giving their classes the benefit of physical training and whose instruction is being paid for out of this appropriation.

Notwithstanding that assurance given by the minister on the floor of the house and further given to various groups of people in Winnipeg and Vancouver, we find the same activity being manifested by the officers who are in charge of cadet services. As an example of this, on March 6, 1930, I read the following letter:

Winnipeg, Man., February 5, 1930.

Mr. F. A. Allden,
Secretary, School Board,
Winnipeg.
Dear Sir:

May permission be granted for a deputation of citizens to wait upon the school board on Thursday evening, February 6, when the management committee of that organization will be in session?

The delegation will deal with the introduction of cadet training in the schools and there will be at least five who wish to address the board on this important matter.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Geo. H. Gillespie, Lt.-Col.

So it would seem as if Colonel Gillespie, who was so prominent the year before and who, the minister had said, would not be permitted to continue this kind of work, has again been very active this year. This kind of activity led to the passing of a resolution by the Manitoba legislature. I wish to quote this resolution from the votes and proceedings of the legislative assembly of Manitoba:

Winnipeg, Thursday, April 10, 1930.

Resolved: That, whereas, the Minister of National Defence stated in the House of Commons on April 11, 1927, that the Dominion government received, under date of March 22, 1911, a memorandum from the provincial authorities of Manitoba in part as follows:

"The Education department encourages the formation of cadet corps including the practice of rifle shooting under suitable conditions by the older boys, in all educational establishments under its control" and also at a later date a communication signed by the Deputy Minister of Education, in part as follows:

"I am instructed by the minister to acknowledge receipt of your letters of August 29 and September 4, enclosing copies of circulars sent out by the district cadet officer at Winnipeg under date of February 27 and March 27, 1925; and to advise in connection with the letter addressed to the principals of schools, that we take the position that the establishing of cadet training is entirely a matter for the various school boards of the province to determine for themselves; the consent of the parents in all cases we presume to be implied; consequently exception is taken to paragraph in the letter circular beginning 'The Department of Education has endorsed the movement.' We kindly ask you to have this paragraph withdrawn or in the alternative, the circular to the principals in its entirety be withdrawn."

Whereas, the Minister of National Defence stated during the same debate that he did not interpret the later communication as a repudiation of the original memorandum;

Whereas, the most recent information in the possession of the Department of Education is that cadet battalions were reported in January, 1928, as being established in public schools at eleven points in the province;

Whereas, governments and people in all parts of the world are striving to substitute methods of peace and arbitration for those of violence and war in international affairs; and,

Whereas, cadet training fosters militarism and the war spirit in the rising generation.

Therefore, be it resolved, that this house is of the opinion that the government should discourage the continuance and future organization of cadet training in the public schools of Manitoba.

And be it further resolved, that this house petition the Dominion government to substitute for the present grant for cadet training, a similar grant for national physical instruction under a department other than the Department of National Defence.

It is not my intention to detain the committee further with regard to this affair, but since the minister has given his word to us that this kind of activity in initiating the cadet movement in schools would not be permitted; since notwithstanding, the officers in his department have continued to carry on activities of this kind; and, further, a resolution of the Manitoba legislative assembly has been passed stating that in view of the circumstances it is resolved—

That this house is of opinion that the government should discourage the continuance and future organization of cadet training in the public schools of Manitoba.

I submit it is high time that the Dominion government should keep its hands off our provincial affairs. It is proper too that we should know whether the men in the employ of the department are really carrying out the instructions of the minister. I hope the minister will give us some further information with regard to the whole matter.

Mr. RALSTON: The matter is very simple. My hon. friend was good enough to call my attention to it some days ago, and in fact I noticed it in the newspapers when I was away. The district officer commanding was written to at the time the hon. member made his reference in the house and his attention was called to what my hon. friend has referred to, namely, what I said in the house on June 4, 1929. I discovered this after my hon. friend had referred the matter to me. The explanation received is that after the last civic elections, a considerable number of citizens of Winnipeg considered that the time had arrived for the reintroduction of cadet training into the public schools of Winnipeg. They accordingly decided to wait upon the school board. The district cadet officer was asked to accompany them to answer any question that might arise regarding cadet training. The district cadet officer informed the district officer commanding of this request and the district officer commanding authorized him to comply with it. This is the point: the delegation was to appear before the board on the 6th of February, and the day previous thereto the chairman of the board, knowing that the district cadet officer was in charge of cadet training in that district, telephoned him that no formal application for the delegation to be heard had been received by the board, and as such formal application was necessary, he requested the district cadet officer to submit a formal application, which he did. Reading the letter which my hon. friend has read in the light of that explanation, I think it is straining things a little to say that the district cadet officer was an instigator of the movement. He was doing this only because his attention was called by the chairman of the board to the fact that it was necessary to file a formal letter with regard to the appointment to receive the delegation which he himself had been asked to accompany, and his only intervention was at the request of the chairman who said that a letter ought to be written formally requesting that an appointment be arranged. I am anxious to avoid even the appearance of evil, but I think it is straining the terms of the letter a little to say that there was any instigation. It is true there was a district cadet officer there. He is there to serve those who desire cadet training. He is there to give information with regard to it. I am just in the position I was in on June 4 last. I do not want our officers to be instigating cadet training or doing anything which would interfere with anybody's susceptibilities. I want them to do the job for which they are paid.

One word more, and my hon. friend will forgive me for not going into this matter fully, and I appreciate his motive in not taking up the time of the committee and I have expressed my views on this subject before. Cadet training is becoming more and more a provincial and a local matter. With regard to the uniforms, for instance; perhaps my hon. friend does not know that the department does not care what uniforms the cadets wear. They can wear white shirts and blue trousers or anything they like; they can wear dresses if they want to. There is no requirement that they have a military uniform or any uniform. With regard to rifles, it is entirely a matter for the local authorities whether they desire that they be carried. Cadet training is primarily for the purpose that my hon. friend points out in the resolution, namely, physical training, and I regret that my hon. friend feels that it should be removed from the department over which I have charge.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has not quite caught my point. It is not what I personally feel about it, but what the province of Manitoba feels about it. In the resolution which I have just read the provincial house declared that cadet training fosters militarism, and it believes it ought to be discouraged within the bounds of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. RALSTON: It is a resolution of the provincial house addressed to the provincial government; is it not?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The provincial house passed the resolution.

Mr. RALSTON: Urging the provincial government to discourage it; did it not?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and the government accepted that resolution. My question is, what is the minister going to do in the circumstances?

Mr. RALSTON: I have had no communication from the Manitoba government at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I shall be glad to place in the hands of the minister a copy of the votes and proceedings of the Manitoba assembly containing this resolution.

Mr. RALSTON: The resolution calls on the government of Manitoba to discourage cadet training.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was a resolution accepted by the government and passed by the provincial legislature.

Mr. RALSTON: But still it only deals with action to be taken by the government of Manitoba; does it not?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, it is the action of the whole house.

Mr. RALSTON: But it calls on the government of Manitoba to discourage the training?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: We have had no communication from the government of Manitoba regarding it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Now that the legislature of the province of Manitoba is definitely opposed to cadet training, is the minister going to permit the officer in charge of the cadet movement to go into the schools in various parts of Manitoba to try and induce them to introduce military training?

Mr. RALSTON: My answer, and I am sure it would be my hon. friend's too if he were in my position, is that I would prefer to receive representations from those who represent the people of Manitoba officially—that is the provincial government—rather than taking notice of a resolution of the house which itself is expressly directed to the government of Manitoba, from whom generally communications of that kind are sent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so, and I think I can promise that the government of Manitoba sends a communication to the minister. In the meantime are we going to have Colonel Gillespie going to the school board next year or writing another letter to the school board asking that military training shall be introduced into the schools at Winnipeg?

Mr. RALSTON: I have already dealt with that. I think we are talking at cross-purposes. The matter of disciplining Colonel Gillespie has passed, and I think my hon. friend, as a fair-minded man, will agree that I should not be called upon to pronounce now upon the disciplining of Colonel Gillespie on a hypothetical set of facts, and before the circumstances that he suggests might arise do arise.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): In view of the minister's announcement that it is his policy to disestablish the military pay corps, is the same policy to be followed with regard to the military records branch and the historical section of it?

Mr. RALSTON: The historical section is practically all civilians, except perhaps the director and assistant director.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Is it the policy of the department to do away with the military records branch?

Mr. RALSTON: There has been some discussion as to whether the historical section had not better go to the archives, and I will tell my hon. friend why we have thought it advisable for a little while at least to keep it with the department, and that is because there is a great deal of information asked for by the units from time to time which can perhaps be better supplied under our auspices than when it goes to the archives.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then there is no decision as to the pay corps, the historical section, and the military records branch?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is right so far as the historical section is concerned. So far as the pay corps is concerned, it has been decided that it shall be under the chief accountant for purposes of administration.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister must know that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction because it was decided at one time that a certain policy was going to be adopted; but something happened between then and the present time to stop it. I think the minister should submit a statement to the house with regard to these matters rather than allow the information to leak out to members of the house in an underground way. There were some other matters that I wished to take up, but I do not wish to delay the committee. There were matters in connection with the Royal Military College. The minister knows what they are. I am not dropping these things. I shall not take up time to deal with them now, but I shall follow them up later.

Mr. BENNETT: I have to ask the minister's attention to one matter. He will recall that tenders were asked for the construction of beacons on the airway between Calgary and Winnipeg. The specifications and the plans apparently were taken from the American government's specifications. I hold in my hand a copy of the plans. I think it is very bad practice that there should appear on the plans these words: "Department of Commerce, Airways Division, Serial No...." A blank is left for the serial number, and a blank for the name of the manufacturer. Then come the words, "Department of Commerce, U.S. Airways." The specifications call for inspection by the representative of the bureau of lighthouses, and tanks must receive the initial test in his presence. The contractor shall furnish without cost to the United States complete facilities including all necessary labour, instruments, tools, and so forth, for the inspection of all material and workmanship. On the strength of these specifications certain Canadians tendered for that work, and they based their prices upon the cost of securing from local manufacturers in Winnipeg, namely, the Vulcan Iron Works, tanks that would meet with the specifications.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. RALSTON: Would my hon. friend read the details as to the tanks?

Mr. BENNETT: I was endeavouring not to take up too much time. I will read the memorandum:

Specifications for gasoline storage tanks of approximately 515 gallons capacity.

Kerosene or gasoline storage tanks of approximately 515 gallon capacity suitable for installing above ground complete with a 6 inch channel and screen vent header and as shown on sketch No. 40 attached.

That is a reproduction of the American sketch.

Tanks shall be approximately 48 inches diameter by 66 inches long with bumped heads 5/16 inch thick, and shall be 3/16 inch thick with all seams electrically welded and tested to 30 pounds per square inch air pressure, at which pressure the tank shall be air tight. Longitudinal seams shall be riveted, also tanks shall conform to the specifications of the national Board of Fire Underwriters.

That is an American organization. The closing words are these:

Workmanship shall be first class. All welding shall be of high quality, free from cracks, pin holes, porousness, burns, etc. In no case will the sealing of cracks, by peening, be permitted. Flaws in welding may be sealed only by rewelding and then at the option of the inspector.

Inspection will be made at the contractor's works by a representative of the Bureau of Lighthouses and tanks shall receive the initial test in his presence. The contractor shall furnish without cost to United States complete facilities including all necessary labour, instruments, tools, etc., for the inspection of all material and workmanship.

Bidders will state approximate shipping weight per tank in pounds.

Now the tanks in situ are tanks which it is submitted by those who have inspected them are not tanks answering to this specification. They have not been inspected by any person representing the inspecting authority mentioned, and they were produced by local manufacturers at about $40 per tank, whereas the lowest price quoted by the Vulcan Iron Works on this class of tank was $120. As a result the job went to other tenderers—which might well be of course in any case—than to the tenderers who complained.

Mr. RALSTON: Other than the Vulcan Iron Works?

Mr. BENNETT: They were producing only this part; they were not tendering for the whole work. The sketches and plans are wholly of American preparation, and they look to me to be merely plans photographed from American plans prepared for other purposes. I hand these to the minister.

I think this is a very important matter, and in connection with it I want to put this consideration before the minister. One of the difficulties that Canadian manufacturers are suffering from arises from the fact that when branches of manufacturing organizations in foreign countries are established here an effort is made to standardize every product that is required by naming specifically their particular make of goods. If an American architect is consulted he asks for some standard product produced in his country, and in other branches, be it engineering or any of the allied professions, the same situation prevails. So we have tenders called for the construction of beacons for airways, and the specifications involve inspection by a man from Washington representing the Bureau of Lighthouses; they involve construction in conformity with United States standards. The hon. minister will observe from the brown prints—rather than blue prints —which I have sent across the floor to him, that in that particular also a United States beacon and not Canadian beacon is contemplated, and that the words "Department of Commerce" are marked upon the brown print as well as the words "U.S. Airways." I protest against that, and I trust the minister will take steps to see that something is done better to protect Canadian industry than would appear to have been done in this case; and that further steps be immediately taken for the purpose of ascertaining why these beacons have not been inspected as provided by the specifications.

Mr. RALSTON: As my hon. friend appreciates, this is a complete surprise to me.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, I only got it myself a short time ago.

Mr. RALSTON: I have just been speaking to the Controller of Civil Aviation here and the information that he is able to give me at the moment is this. He feels satisfied that the actual specifications and call for tenders which went out contained no reference to the American details or to the American plans, except one, and I have it in my hand.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the one I sent across the floor to the minister. It is part of the set.

Mr. RALSTON: He feels that some contractor may have sent to Washington and got these American specifications. He says the specifications were all made over on Canadian lines. It is true the United States has gone further in the matter of lighting airways than any other country, but we have no intention of encouraging American manufacturers of this equipment. The records of my department will show that we are trying to encourage Canadian manufacturers, and after Canadians then British manufacturers. The Controller of Civil Aviation feels that there is some mistake. He tells me the specifications were entirely revamped along Canadian lines. May I point out to my hon. friend that on one of the prints he sent me there appears in the corner the words "Department of National Defence"—

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that makes it all the worse.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes; on the face of the drawing there also appears indications of the words "Department of Commerce" as though made by a rubber stamp. I appreciate my hon. friend bringing the matter to my attention, for we do not want things of this sort to occur. We are drafting our own specifications for these beacons, and as far as Canadian manufacturers are concerned we are endeavouring to protect them and develop Canadian industry, not only in connection with this equipment but in connection with aircraft manufacture in every possible way. I believe this contract was let to the Canadian General Electric.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. My hon. friend will see that his suggestion that that plan came from Washington is negatived by his reference to what appears in the corner, because on all the three brown prints he will find a reference to Canadian Airways Limited down in the lefthand corner.

Mr. RALSTON: I see it.

Mr. BENNETT: So clearly this is a plan that was official. What I object to is that we are placing ourselves in such a position that we will be dependent in the worst sense of the term on "standardized" American equipment.

Mr. RALSTON: There was no inspection by the man from Washington.

Mr. BENNETT: But there has been no inspection of any kind in connection with the tanks.

Mr. RALSTON: The Controller of Civil Aviation states that our own departmental inspector inspected the beacons and tanks.

Mr. BENNETT: I am referring solely to the tanks, because they were produced at a cost just one third of that quoted by the Vulcan Iron Works.

Mr. QUINN: The minister is just as familiar as I am with the situation in Halifax with respect to military property. Forty-five per cent of the property there is tax exempt, and 188 properties in the city are held by the military authorities with an assessed valuation of some $3,000,000. Now that the military force has been considerably reduced there is no longer any necessity for maintaining and holding these properties. I might mention the Sackville street property, the old artillery and engineers' barracks which could very well be turned over to the city and a thoroughfare provided through from Brunswick street to the south end of the city. There is another property which would be of great advantage to the city authorities for rental purposes; I refer to the old ordnance property. I think it could very well be turned over to the civil authorities. This is a matter which seriously affects the city of Halifax. There is a great deal of tax exemption on these government properties. There are military, federal, provincial, civic, charitable and church institutions, and because of them the taxpayers find themselves in an unfortunate position. Their tax rate is very high because of these exempted properties. Would the minister make a statement as to the intention of the government in connection with these properties?

Mr. RALSTON: I wish I could give my hon. friend more definite information. As he knows, representations have been made to me by representatives from the city council and board of trade. These representations were made unofficially but nevertheless earnestly. May I say to my hon. friend that I have worked and am working in every way to see if there is a possibility of greater concentration in connection with the military properties of Halifax. I might say however that the situation is no more satisfactory from a military than it is from a civic standpoint. The difficulty is to get the money in order to effect these changes. At the present time we are trying to improve the Wellington barracks which have been vacant for a long time and I am hopeful that we may be able to concentrate some troops at that point.

Mr. QUINN: How soon may we expect to have the Royal Canadian Regiment transferred to that barracks?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend knows that at least one company of that regiment is down there now.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister have one of his officials investigate the coal question in the city of Moose Jaw? I am not asking for details, in view of the short time at our disposal.

Mr. RALSTON: Very well, I shall do so.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Quinn.]

Battlefields Memorials, $144,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Can my hon. friend tell me when the Vimy memorial will be completed?

Mr. RALSTON: To answer that question I could make only a more or less informed guess. I have been over there myself, and I can only hope that it may be sufficiently completed by 1932 to permit unveiling. Colonel Osborne, the Secretary of the Canadian Battlefields Commission, which is in charge of the work, is there at present and is making complete investigations, and we will be better informed when he returns.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Dairying, including grant of $5,000 to National Dairy Council and new buildings, $295,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I directed a question to the minister, which I believe appears on the order paper for to-day, and I believe this would be the opportune time to have the answer. I asked first as to the salary of the Montreal district veterinary inspector. My second question was as to where he resided, and my third as to whether he is expected to devote his whole time to this work.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I have prepared an answer to the question of my hon. friend. In answer to the first question, I find that the minimum salary is $2,640, the maximum $3,000, and the present salary, $2,760. I am informed that he resides at Huntingdon, Quebec, and that he is expected to devote his whole time to this work.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that we pass the items with the understanding that we might have a general discussion when the items are completed.

Item agreed to.

Health of Animals—administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and the Meat and Canned Foods Act, and necessary buildings, $2,550,000.

Mr. BENOIT: With regard to this item, Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to see that it has been reduced by $400,000. I should like to point out to the minister that although this government has been somewhat generous in introducing vast restricted areas for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis, many complaints have been received from cattle owners whose herds have been depleted by the tubercular test without their receiving a substantial indemnity, and they have thereby sustained considerable losses. Some of these farmers were not in a position to stand such losses and have had to quit their farms and go to the cities, thus increasing the number of unemployed. I wonder if the Department of Agriculture could not be a little more generous with the farming community and increase the indemnities paid for cattle which prove to be reactors in the tubercular test. I suggest that the minister increase this indemnity by at least 50 per cent in the case of cross-bred cattle and 25 per cent in the case of pure-bred cattle. The present indemnity is two-thirds of $150 for the pure-breds and of $60 for the cross-breds, and I think every hon. member will agree that this indemnity is not sufficient. During the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, out of a total vote of $2,450,000 the owners of cattle slaughtered under these regulations received a total of $669,651.05, the average indemnity for pure-breds amounting to $77.10 and to $32.58 for the cross-breds. If we estimate that the pure-breds amount to 20 per cent and the cross-breds to 80 per cent of all the cattle, the increase would be almost $300,000 a year, basing the figures on last year's returns. This eradication of bovine tuberculosis being a question of public interest, it is only fair that the sufferers should not bear more than their fair share of this loss. What is an increase of $300,000 a year in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, which has to do with the great basic industry of this country, when you look at the grants made to other departments? Just look at page 4 of the main estimates and it will be seen that my suggestion is not unreasonable.

Referring to agricultural conditions in this country, I believe hon. members will remember that a few years ago at the request of a certain group in the house for the establishment of a rural credit system similar to that which has prevailed in Europe since 1770, this government appointed Doctor Tory in 1923 or 1924 to study the European and United States systems. The results of his survey were submitted to this government in 1924 or 1925, and it was recommended that a rural credit system of long term loans should be established. A bill was introduced in the house in 1926, but because of the tragic ending of that session it did not pass. At the following session we had a bill from the Senate, which passed this house, and the Canadian Farm Loan Board was established under the provisions of chapter 66 of the revised statutes of Canada.

This board was a long time organizing, but finally it began its work in the early part of 1929. In the bill the rate of interest was not specified; that matter was left to the board. These credits having been established to aid the farming community by making loans at a reasonable rate of interest, the prospective borrowers in Quebec were greatly disappointed when the board announced that the rate of interest would be 6½ per cent, while the average rate prevailing was only about 5½ per cent. Protests were heard everywhere in Quebec, but so far no action has been taken. On March 20, 1930, I placed a resolution on the order paper recommending that the rate of interest be reduced by one per cent, but unfortunately my resolution was not debated. On April 10 a petition was addressed to the Minister of Finance signed by ninety-five members of the house requesting that the rate of interest charged by the board on loans to farmers should be decreased by one per cent, but this also was without result.

In all fairness to the farming community I make the assertion that our request is only reasonable. The rate of interest is too high; the farmers cannot afford to pay 6½ per cent. Profits are too small in agriculture; if it were otherwise you would see the big financiers of St. James street operating farms. Look at our experimental farms; do you think they make any profits? The public accounts for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1929, show that $1,887,037.30 was voted for experimental farms, and in the same volume will be found an item showing that experimental farm produce sold for $171,359.80, leaving a discrepancy of $1,715,677.50. I do not wish to cast any reflection on the management of the experimental farms; I know that work is carried on by the most honest people in this country, but I use this illustration in order to show the force of my argument.

I will go to another source for information with respect to the profits made from agriculture. I hold in my hand bulletin No. 98, published by the Department of Agriculture, relating to a survey made in six counties of Quebec by Mr. F. A. Ste. Marie, B.S.A., of the division of animal husbandry. That survey is for the year ending June 1, 1920, and I see at page 6 of the bulletin a table which shows that the average annual profit on 1,148 farms which were thoroughly surveyed amounted to $463. That represented the total annual wages of the owner of the farm, of his wife—because you know the wives help their husbands on the farms—and of the children under fourteen, who also work in the farming communities. Just compute the capitalization of these farms, where there is no watered stock. It happens that the total actual capital engaged amounts to $22,618,451, including the value of live stock and farm implements. This capital yields the enormous amount of $521,524, which works out at 2·3057 per cent of a dividend, much less than the dividends paid by some corporations which are over-capitalized by 300 per cent. It is to noted that one per cent of the actual capital tied up in these farms is equivalent to 45 per cent of the annual wages of the owner and his family. No. hon. member will suggest that the farmer is over paid.

This all means that the rate of interest paid by the farmers is very important. Since this survey was made in 1920 some people may think farming conditions very different to-day, and as a matter of fact they are very different, notwithstanding the fact that during 1919 and 1920 Canadian products were selling at much higher prices. I would refer hon. members to the Labour Gazette of March, 1930, at page 350.

I am inclined to believe that the guarantees offered by the farmers are first-class in character. The loans are made on 50 per cent of the value of the land and 20 per cent of the value of the buildings, which means that when the buildings are valued at the same price as the land the percentage is reduced to 35 per cent of the whole estate. I do not think this is quite fair to the farmer, and the law should be changed in order that loans can be made on 50 per cent to 55 per cent of the whole estate.

It might be said that a reduction of one per cent in the rate of interest would not amount to anything. I have prepared five different tables which show the growth of a small investment made at the end of each year over a period of 33 years.

The value of an investment of one dollar made at the end of the year, bearing interest at four per cent, compounded annually during the period of thirty-three years is equivalent to $66.21. The following statement shows the surplus paid by a borrower during a period of thirty-three years, when a 6½ per cent rate has been paid instead of a 5 per cent rate:

On a loan of $1,000.—$10 yearly, equivalent to $662.10 after 33 years.
On a loan of $2,000.—$20 yearly, equivalent to $1,324.19 after 33 years.
On a loan of $3,000.—$30 yearly, equivalent to $1,986.29 after 33 years.
On a loan of $4,000.—$40 yearly, equivalent to $2,648.38 after 33 years.
On a loan of $5,000.—$50 yearly, equivalent to $3,310.48 after 33 years.
On a loan of $6,000.—$60 yearly, equivalent to $3,972.59 after 33 years.
On a loan of $7,000.—$70 yearly, equivalent to $4,634.67 after 33 years.
On a loan of $8,000.—$80 yearly, equivalent to $5,296.76 after 33 years.
On a loan of $9,000.—$90 yearly, equivalent to $5,958.86 after 33 years.
On a loan of $10,000.—$100 yearly, equivalent to $6,620.95 after 33 years.

[Mr. Benoit.]

If the request made to reduce by one per cent the rate of interest actually exacted by the Canadian Farm Loan Board from farmer borrowers was met, the difference between the now prevailing rate of 6½ per cent and the proposed rate of 5½ per cent on a $10,000 loan, compounding the interest at 4 per cent during a period of thirty-three years, would be the capitalized amount of $6,620.95, the actual present value at 4 per cent being $1,814.75.

The value of an investment of one dollar made at the end of the year bearing interest at 5 per cent compounded annually during a period of 33 years, is equivalent to $80.64. The following statment shows the surplus paid by a borrower during a period of 33 years, when a 6½ per cent rate has been paid instead of 5 per cent:

On a loan of $1,000.—$10 yearly, is equivalent to $800.64 after 33 years.
On a loan of $2,000.—$20 yearly, is equivalent to $1,601.28 after 33 years.
On a loan of $3,000.—$30 yearly, is equivalent to $2,401.91 after 33 years.
On a loan of $4,000.—$40 yearly, is equivalent to $3,202.55 after 33 years.
On a loan of $5,000.—$50 yearly, is equivalent to $4,003.19 after 33 years.
On a loan of $6,000.—$60 yearly, is equivalent to $4,803.83 after 33 years.
On a loan of $7,000.—$70 yearly, is equivalent to $5,604.46 after 33 years.
On a loan of $8,000.—$80 yearly, is equivalent to $6,405.10 after 33 years.
On a loan of $9,000.—$90 yearly, is equivalent to $7,205.10 after 33 years.
On a loan of $10,000.—$100 yearly, is equivalent to $8,006.38 after 33 years.

The above statement shows the difference in a loan made by the Canadian Farm Loan Board to a farmer in Quebec and one made to a farmer in Ontario borrowing from the agricultural development board. The saving of the Ontario farmer during a period of 33 years, placed at 5 per cent compound interest on a $10,000 loan, would represent a capital of $8,006.38, the actual present value being $1,600.17 at 5 per cent.

The value of an investment of one dollar made at the end of the year bearing interest at 3 per cent compounded annually during a period of 33 years, is equivalent to $55.08. The following statement shows the surplus paid by a borrower during a period of 33 years when a 6½ per cent rate has been paid instead of 5 per cent.

On a loan of $1,000.—$10 a year, is equivalent to $550.78 after 33 years.
On a loan of $2,000.—$20 a year, is equivalent to $1,101.56 after 33 years.
On a loan of $3,000.—$30 a year, is equivalent to $1,652.34 after 33 years.
On a loan of $4,000.—$40 a year, is equivalent to $2,203.12 after 33 years.
On a loan of $5,000.—$50 a year, is equivalent to $2,753.90 after 33 years.

On a loan of $6,000.—$60 a year, is equivalent to $3,304.68 after 33 years.
On a loan of $7,000.—$70 a year, is equivalent to $3,855.46 after 33 years.
On a loan of $8,000.—$80 a year, is equivalent to $4,406.24 after 33 years.
On a loan of $9,000.—$90 a year, is equivalent to $4,958.02 after 33 years.
On a loan of $10,000.—$100 a year, is equivalent to $5,507.78 after 33 years.

The above table shows the advantage which would accrue to the farmer borrower if he were charged 5½ per cent interest instead of 6½ per cent. The excess of interest which he is forced to pay on a $10,000 loan if placed in a savings bank would represent after 33 years a capitalized amount of $5,507.78; the actual present value at 3 per cent being $2,076.43.

The value of an investment of $1.50 a year made at the end of the year with compound interest at 5 per cent, would represent a capitalized amount of $120.10. The interest charged by the Canadian Farm Loan Board is 6½ per cent, while the rate charged by the American federal Farm Loan Board is 5 per cent. The value of the savings to the American farmer, placed at 5 per cent compound interest for a period of 33 years is shown by the following statement:

On a loan of $1,000 savings are $15 yearly, equivalent to $1,200.96 after 33 years.
On a loan of $2,000 savings are $30 yearly, equivalent to $2,401.92 after 33 years.
On a loan of $3,000 savings are $45 yearly, equivalent to $3,602.87 after 33 years.
On a loan of $4,000 savings are $60 yearly, equivalent to $4,803.82 after 33 years.
On a loan of $5,000 savings are $75 yearly, equivalent to $6,004.78 after 33 years.
On a loan of $6,000 savings are $90 yearly, equivalent to $7,205.74 after 33 years.
On a loan of $7,000 savings are $105 yearly, equivalent to $8,406.70 after 33 years.
On a loan of $8,000 savings are $120 yearly, equivalent to $9,607.65 after 33 years.
On a loan of $9,000 savings are $135 yearly, equivalent to $10,808.61 after 33 years.
On a loan of $10,000 savings are $150 yearly, equivalent to $12,009.57 after 33 years.

At 5 per cent the actual value of $12,009.57 for to-day is $2,397.77.

The value of an investment of $1.50 a year for a period of 33 years, bearing interest at 3 per cent compounded yearly, is represented by a capitalized amount of $8.62. The interest charged by the Canadian Farm Loan Board is 6½ per cent, while the rate charged by the American Farm Loan Board is 5 per cent. The value of the savings to the American farmer placed at 5 per cent compound interest for a period of 33 years is shown by the following statement:

On a loan of $1,000, savings $15 yearly, is equivalent to $826.17 after 33 years.
On a loan of $2,000, savings $30 yearly, is equivalent to $1,652.34 after 33 years.
On a loan of $3,000, savings $45 yearly, is equivalent to $2,478.50 after 33 years.
On a loan of $4,000, savings $60 yearly, is equivalent to $3,304.87 after 33 years.
On a loan of $5,000, savings $75 yearly, is equivalent to $4,130.83 after 33 years.
On a loan of $6,000, savings $90 yearly, is equivalent to $4,957 after 33 years.
On a loan of $7,000, savings $105 yearly, is equivalent to $5,783.17 after 33 years.
On a loan of $8,000, savings $120 yearly, is equivalent to $6,609.34 after 33 years.
On a loan of $9,000, savings $135 yearly, is equivalent to $7,435.50 after 33 years.
On a loan of $10,000, savings $150 yearly, is equivalent to $8,261.67 after 33 years.

At 5 per cent the actual value of $8,261.67 for to-day is $1,650.67.

Borrowers are compelled to take shares from the Canadian Farm Loan Board, and they are allowed only 5 per cent compound interest. Subsection 4, section 9, chapter 66, revised statutes of Canada, 1927, cover this point. In addition to this, they have to pay 6½ per cent for the money used to buy the share. I think something should be done to cure this anomaly. It will probably be said that money cannot be borrowed on our security markets at a rate cheap enough to make loans to farmers at 5½ per cent. The following is a report published by the Banque Canadienne Nationale, dated May, 1930, as follows:

Dominion loans are yielding as follows:
5½ per cent due 1932 sells for $100.50 yields $4.63.
5½ per cent due 1934 sells for $102.25 yields $4.94.
4½ per cent due 1940 sells for $97.85 yields $4.76.
5 per cent due 1943 sells for $102.30 yields $4.77.
4½ per cent due 1944 sells for $97.75 yields $4.72.
4½ per cent due 1946 sells for $97.85 yields $4.69.

All tax exempted

C.N.R. guaranteed by government.
5 per cent due 1954 sells for $102.50 yields $4.82.
5 per cent due 1969 sells for $10.50 yields $4.80.
4½ per cent Montreal city 1950 sells for $97, yields $4.73.
4½ per cent Montreal city 1970 sells for $96.50, yields $4.69.
5 per cent City of Sorel 1952 sells for $100, yields $5.00.
4½ per cent C.P.R. 1954 sells for $103, yields $4.80.
5 per cent Abitibi power 1953 sells for $88, yields $5.95.
5 per cent Bell telephone 1957 sells for $103.50, yields $4.76.
6 per cent Beauharnois 1959 sells for $100, yields $6.00.
5 per cent Montreal L.H. & P. Co., 1970 sells for $101.50 yields $4.92.
4½ per cent Shawinigan 1967 sells for $95.50, yields $4.75.
5 per cent Shawinigan water and power 1970 sells for $102.50 yields $4.86.

There are other bond securities which do not earn 5 per cent for the investor, but I believe

I have proven that the Canadian Farm Loan Board could sell its bonds at a rate of interest not exceeding 5 per cent. If there was any hesitancy on the part of the public to buy these bonds—they are considered to be a first class security—it should be possible for the government to endorse them, as is done with the Canadian National bond. I contend that the cost of administration of the board at Ottawa should be borne by the government, as is the case with other commissions. Where there is an agency of the board in the different provinces, the provincial government should bear that cost.

The twelfth report of the federal Farm Loan Board of the United States shows that loans are made from east to west in that country at the rate of 5 per cent. One exception is a small area where the rate is 5¼ per cent. The Canadian farmer should receive the same treatment as does the American farmer. The province of Ontario is making loans to farmers at 5½ per cent without requiring that any shares be purchased. I am informed that in Denmark loans to farmers bear a rate of 4½ per cent, and in France from 4½ per cent to 5½ per cent.

I believe I have demonstrated that the conditions prevailing in this country do not warrant the rate of 6½ per cent charged by the Canadian Farm Loan Board, and that the bonds could be sold on the market for a rate not exceeding 5 per cent. I trust that in the near future this government will grant the request made by the farmer borrower, and thus keep the farmers on the land and away from the cities where they might increase the number of unemployed. Might I add, in closing my remarks that, notwithstanding the present agricultural conditions prevailing in this country, farmers, when all is considered, are better off than most workers in cities, where life is so intricate. Many factors contribute to lowering the cost of rural life. Beside being free from monthly rent, a great number of farmers draw from the soil part of the subsistence for their families as well as their fuel. What must we think of the numerous occasions which city people have of spending their savings, these opportunities do not exist in rural districts.

For these reasons and many others which would take too much time to enumerate, I cannot too strongly urge upon the farmer to cling more closely to the soil which, it is true, will not always bring him wealth, but, in return, will assure him a frugal, peaceful and happy life.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, replying very briefly to the statement made by the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Benoit), I would state that the compensation paid in the case of pure-breds is two-thirds of the valuation of $150, and in the case of cross-breds, two-thirds of $60. This is the highest compensation in the world for tuberculin cattle, and any proposal to raise these rates would have to be considered very carefully. It must be considered that the owner of the animal receives any salvage which might be saved from the slaughtered beast, and this runs up to as high as $50 in some cases. I shall be very glad however, to give this matter my consideration.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the minister's attention the question of hog grading at Calgary. I have brought this matter to the attention of the minister before, but there is another feature which has perhaps been overlooked. Under the present practice at Calgary hogs are going to the abattoir without being graded, which hogs are paid for by the packing plant on a basis of their own grading. The farmer is under the impression that those hogs have been graded by the government grader, and it would seem as if the whole system of grading had fallen into disrepute. The farmer raises a select hog which is sent to the abattoir, but his statement and cheque shows a payment on the basis of butcher hogs. Naturally, the farmer thinks that these hogs have been graded by the government grader, and he begins to think that there is no use raising select hogs.

I think this matter could be taken care of by issuing instructions to the graders that a slip certifying to the grade of the animal be sent to the producer. I took this matter up with the grader at Calgary and he seemed to think that the only difficulty would be the need of additional clerical help in the office. I think the estimates are large enough to cover the carrying out of this suggestion.

I know of one case where hogs were shipped to Calgary during the month of February, which were presumably graded as butcher hogs. The cheque came back from the packing house making payment on that basis. The shipper went after the graders at Calgary who finally admitted that these hogs had not been seen by them. An offer of settlement was made for whatever difference this man might claim because of the difference in grading. In his letter to me he enclosed the cheque which he had received from Burns and Company, as well as the statement. This showed that apparently in many cases the hogs sent to the packing plants had not been graded, and I would like to have the assurance of the minister appear on Hansard in order to satisfy the farmers in that area who have been raising hogs. They should be assured that they will be able to secure a certificate from the government grader.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: An amendment had been prepared to the Live Stock Products Act wihch would have taken care of part of the complaint made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). In this present instance, it would seem as though the grader had been delinquent in his duties. This is the first time this matter has come to my attention, but an inquiry will be instituted and if the grader is found to be guilty instant dismissal will follow. This is the first case of its kind that has come to my attention and this is what started the difficulty. Certain legislation or a more stringent regulation is required.

Mr. COOTE: Can the minister assure us that in any case where the hogs are graded by inspectors, the certificates will be sent back the same as in the case of the grading of grain?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. That was the very essence of the recent regulations, to get the certificates back to the owner of the animal so that he might know how he was being dealt with by the packer or the buyer. With regard to the difficulty which has increased in getting hogs graded off trucks, we had provision for that in the new bill proposing an amendment to the Live Stock and Live Stock Products Act, but we shall have to defer it. The house at this stage of the session does not like these grading bills, so we shall just let it go. We had a little flurry last night over the innocent maple sugar bill; what would have happened if we had introduced a new bill in regard to hogs, I can hardly imagine.

Mr. MANION: Is it possible that the minister has missed appointing any inspectors?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I fancy this is one requiring to be fired.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to remind the committee that we have been in session for five hours to-day. We have passed some eighty items of the estimates and there are some 200 or more remaining.

Mr. LUCAS: During this session a delegation from the live stock pools waited upon the government requesting that a grant be given for the erection of a demonstration plant to establish the cost of processing. What is the intention of the government with regard to dealing with that matter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know that we have come to that. In the supplementary estimates there is an item providing for an inquiry into the live stock situation.

Mr. LUCAS: I have not seen that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will possibly deal with that then.

Item agreed to.

Cold storage warehouses, further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. FRASER: A year ago, when this item was under consideration, I reviewed the necessity for the establishment of another experimental farm in central British Columbia. At that time the minister was good enough to promise me that during the following year, that is last year, his officials would make a survey of the situation. Was that survey made, and if so, has a report been made to the minister in regard to it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Last summer I was in British Columbia and I had hoped to visit that interesting district represented by my hon. friend, but subsequent events, to which I do not need to refer, interfered with my year's program, and we have not been able to make that survey. I regret that fact very much. I do not know whether it would have made any difference, because I have no money for another experimental farm anywhere in Canada.

Mr. SPENCE: I should like to discuss some of the items in the main estimates in regard to agriculture. For instance, under the item of "fruit, including grant of $8,000 to Canadian Horticultural Council and necessary new buildings," there is an increase of $120,000. The government has gone wild in the erecting of new buildings everywhere. Another item is "for experiments in dehydration of fruits and vegetables." I notice there is a decrease in that item. Experiments in this connection have been going on for many years. There is no necessity for the item, because the results of those experiments will never be of any commercial value and the cost involved is simply a waste of money. Then, under "entomology," there is an increase of $5,000. This may not be large, but these branches are started with a few employees, and the first thing you know there is a whole army of them.

As regards the item "administration of Destructive Insect and Pest Act and necessary buildings", there is an increase of $75,000. What is the minister going to do? Is he going to erect a big new building in which to house Motherwell's moth, in beautiful glass cases? This is a piece of nonsense. As regards the item "publications", fifty per cent of them are never seen by anybody, and fifty per cent of the people who get them never read them. They are lying around all over Canada and the mail men are being killed carrying them.

In the item "Farm economics, including agricultural cooperative marketing" there is an increase of $2,000. Who asked for all this kind of stuff? There is a grant to the executive committee of the World's Grain Congress of $100,000. Who are they, and where do they come from? I may be ignorant, but I want to know where some of this money is going. I think the minister has lived long enough to know there should be some economy in his department.

Mr. BENNETT: It is going to Saskatchewan.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The main estimates are decreased by $375,000.

Mr. SPENCE: Well, the minister has cut it off something he should not have cut it off. He is increasing it on something he should not increase it on.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I would like to reply to the leader of the opposition who said that the members of Saskatchewan are always endeavouring to get the Minister of Agriculture to spend money.

Mr. BENNETT: To appoint inspectors.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Neither this government nor any other government in Canada has ever spent enough money on agriculture. It is about time that governments in Canada started to spend money on agriculture.

Mr. SPENCE: I am not discussing agriculture; I am discussing these sidelines that do not pertain to agriculture at all.

Mr. COOTE: Last year money was voted to erect a seed warehouse in Saskatchewan. At that time the minister said he would be willing to do the same thing in the other provinces when they were ready for it. As nothing has been built in Alberta since, and I am sure they have not asked for a new warehouse, still they did ask for an annex to be built to the government warehouse at Edmonton. I understand, however, the Department of Trade and Commerce are not very favourable to that suggestion. In the meantime I would like to ask the minister whether he will renew that promise so that when next year the Seed Growers' Association are ready for that warehouse it will be forthcoming.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the offer stands, as we shall all be here in our present capacities next year.

Mr. KAISER: Just a word or two in regard to the item for health of animals. The public accounts show that $500,000 was spent last year in one province in the matter of preventing tuberculosis. I am not finding fault with the endeavour to eradicate the disease, but I want to point out the futility of spending $750,000 or $1,000,000 a year under the existing circumstances, for this reason: if you have twenty per cent tubercular conditions existing over an area and you do not discover the reason and remedy the cause, you will have to repeat that expenditure every year. I want to impress upon the minister that there are some conditions underlying this that require investigation. The method of handling the slaughtering of those cattle is not fair to the farmers. The position is that the inspector comes along and says that so many cattle are affected with tuberculosis and the farmer receives a certain sum from the government. A drover takes them away to the market and then brings back a certificate. I would like to point out what the United States government does in this regard. In this country the farmer for his salvage gets about $15 a head. In every state of the union the government takes the salvage and undertakes to market it and gets for the farmer all that is in the discarded animal, and they have increased to the farmers from that source eight to ten dollars per year for the last few years. In Canada the farmer gets only fifteen or sixteen dollars for a diseased animal, while the farmer in the United States get $45 to $46 per head. The government is not doing enough along the line of investigating the basic conditions under which cattle are kept and which cause disease to break out among herds. After reading the report of last year I travelled over a thousand miles myself through the province of Quebec where this disease was reported, and I convinced myself that we have not even begun to investigate the conditions under which certain cattle are housed. In this far north part of America we may be mistaken in the way we handle our cattle in the winter, having regard to bovine tuberculosis. In the neighbourhood in which I lived for a great number of years we did not know in those pioneer years about bovine tuberculosis, but herds of cattle were on the decline. There was one farmer who had the finest herds in the district. I will tell the minister who he was. He was the pioneer ancestor of the Aikins family in Canada, the father of Sir J. A. M. Aikins, the late lieutenant-governor of the province of Manitoba and of the distinguished Doctor Aikins of Toronto. It was an old pioneer family, with magnificent powers of observation. This particular farmer discovered that every animal in his barn required so many cubic feet of space, and he provided a proper system of ventilation for every animal, as well as the right kind of housing, with the result that in a few years his herds surpassed all the other herds in the neighbourhood. Three generations have passed since that day, but to-day the young men in that district still point to the wisdom and the powers of observation of the man who laid the foundations of the healthy herds in that district. I plead with the minister to-day to have an investigation made in those areas in this country where there is such a tremendous amount of bovine tuberculosis. I am satisfied that if the basic conditions are improved, a great deal will have been done to conquer this disease. Otherwise I am satisfied that every dollar you are spending will have to be spent over again in the next few years. It is the underlying conditions that should be investigated apart from what the government should do in seeing that the farmers of this country get what they are justly entitled to in the matter of salvage.

Item agreed to.

To inquire into the live stock industry of Canada through the medium of cooperative marketing, $25,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Last March we had a conference of live stock men in Ottawa discussing the best methods of improving and developing the live stock industry in Canada. Consumption has grown so rapidly that it has overtaken production, and the result is that some of our products have disappeared from the export market. One of the recommendations made by that conference was that we hold an inquiry not only into the live stock situation but into the feed situation, which is closely related to it. That resolution was passed by the whole conference. Later on a section of the conference, the Canadian Co-operative Live Stock Producers, Limited, made a request of my deputy that we adopt the policy of establishing two demonstration packing plants in this country, one in the east and one in the west; but inasmuch as they spoke for just a part of the conference, while the other resolution had been passed by the whole conference, we thought it the wiser and safer course to pursue to put an item in for an inquiry which will be broad enough to cover all phases of the industry. We do not want to establish two abattoirs without knowing where we are going to get off at, especially as that was asked for by only a part of the conference.

Mr. SPENCE: I would warn the minister that the gentlemen who came before the agriculture committee are simply trying to exploit the farmers, and the government should be very careful before spending any money on that scheme, or it will kill the industry.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to ask the minister as to the system of condemnation insurance, which is exercising the minds of a great many of the farmers, particularly in co-operative societies. A great many of the farmers feel that they have not the slightest idea as to how the money is spent, and who reaps any advantage from that insurance. One cooperative society spent $700 in premiums, and when they lost stock in transit or in the yards they were unable to get any advantage from the insurance. I suggest that a report be issued annually or semi-annually showing how the money is expended, what return there is to those who pay the premium, and who reaps the benefit. I would like the minister to tell us in a few words what is being done now in this connection, under what authority it is being done, and if there is any chance of the people at large securing information as to the results.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no particular authority for charging that. There is an agreement between the packers and a passive acquiescence in it by the farmers. In actual practice it is bound to be less than the condemned animals come to. But the principle is wrong. It is charged on a flat rate basis: the man with clean cattle is charged on the same basis as the man with unclean cattle. In the maritime provinces there is no condemnation insurance because there they have practically no tuberculosis. The moral is: Clean up your animals, and there will be no question of condemnation insurance.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: So long as this condemnation insurance is carried on with the tacit permission of the Department of Agriculture it would help those in cooperative shipping to have a semi-annual statement issued by the stock yards showing the amount of premiums and to whom the indemnities have been paid. In many cases they have not been able to find out to whom the money went.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think we can get a statement of the actual losses from condemnation and make a comparison.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As to who pays the premium and who receives the indemnity?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: I think the Cooperative Live Stock Producers will feel grateful for the $25,000 to be expended for this purpose. I have had the privilege on more than one occasion to be present with the president and secretary of the live stock producers organization, and I happen to be a member and know something about the organization. I think the investigation will result in bringing out everything that needs to be brought out. But there are 50,000 members in the live stock producers cooperative and unless in the very near future we can get from the government what we asked for this year I cannot see that this $25,000 will be of any great value to us.

Mr. BENNETT: Are all the cooperative enterprises in the west?

Mr. VALLANCE: We have forty-three in the western provinces, and the others are distributed over the eastern provinces.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The minister can spend money to no better purpose than in investigating the marketing of live stock and live stock products at the present time. I hope he will expedite his investigation and carry out whatever recommendations may be made.

Mr. BENNETT: What is wanted to save the live stock industry is action, not inquiry. During the last few years the industry has steadily deteriorated with extreme loss to those who formerly found it a lucrative business. Part of this deterioration is attributable to the New Zealand treaty, with the consequent loss of milch cows in this country, a corresponding failure to produce cattle here, followed necessarily by the constantly increasing importations of meat that are to be found in the trade and commerce returns of this country every month for the last year and a half. Until the government takes action the live stock industry will continue to languish. It is one of the most important industries that you can have in the western provinces. I am not a practical live stock man, but I have read enough to know that of all the interests in an agricultural country that should be assisted and maintained by the government live stock is the first. I do think this government has failed to realize the magnitude of the loss suffered and the far-reaching consequences of its failure. What is more, this industry cannot be built up in one year or two, and if my friend from South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) with the best intentions in the world were to start to-day with all the machinery of government behind him it would be two years, if not three, before any appreciable advance in this industry would be observable. I repeat, this condition has been brought about by wrong policies pursued by the government and their failure to realize the importance to this country of immediate action being taken to resuscitate the live stock industry. I say it with conviction, from a study of the trade returns, and from discussions with friends of mine all over western Canada. Their one complaint is: Here is a great industry that has been allowed to fall into a condition that is ruinous to Canada.

An hon. MEMBER: Demoralized.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend behind me suggests it is demoralized. The representations made by the cooperative organizations that attended the convention in this city last spring indicated that. What did the minister point out when he called that convention? He pointed out that this country with respect to cattle, swine and sheep was getting into a position where it would cease to be an exporting country at all, and he emphasized that by pointing out the steadily increasing volume of imports. Under these circumstances can there be any doubt that while an inquiry may do something it is only an opiate to put the patient to sleep for another twelve months? What is needed is something to resuscitate this industry; what is needed is not an opiate by way of an inquiry, but action. And the hon. gentleman knows quite well what that action should do. If not, there are those beside him who could tell him. I speak strongly on this matter because I feel strongly from seeing the disastrous results to the industry from the government's indifference. In Ontario the other day on a passenger train travelling to a small community I discussed the matter with a drover, and he told me what was happening. In recent years he told me they have been importing into Ontario stockers from the west and feeding them for the Toronto market—a reversal of the former practice. I clearly remember in the early days when our live stock men were encouraged by the government to improve their herds by the use of pure-bred sires. The results of that policy could be plainly seen in western Canada. I speak from observation. I saw in those days at Calgary the spring sales of live stock from these improved herds. And it was an incentive to private enterprise to take up the industry because the government encouraged breeders to produce stock that was the pride of the country. Where are those great breeders of the past? They have gone out of the business because the government has ceased to be the patron of the industry in that way, and there has been a steady failure all along the line. Go to any live stock man in Ontario and he will tell you the same thing. In every part of the country this condition prevails. I am not speaking of theories, I am speaking of what I know from observation and discussion with men who are deeply interested in the live stock industry. Our young boys and young girls on the farm used to be interested in live stock, but they found a lack of appreciation of their efforts because of the changed policy of the government, and as a consequence the farm has become less attractive to them and they move off to the cities, with results we know. What was the grant made to the cooperatives when they met down here? It was $30,000, was it not, which was voted to assist them in their efforts?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Be that as it may, these are but drops in the bucket. Let us have a great, comprehensive, live stock policy in Canada, not a little picayune policy, but one as broad as this Dominion, which will apply to every province in it. It may involve the expenditure of millions of dollars; as far as the agricultural industry is concerned the expenditure of ten or fifteen million dollars for a real solution of the problems of agriculture in Canada would be money well spent. Our great neighbours to the south of us have established the Federal Farm Relief Board and for the work of that board $500,000,000 is available. Where are we? What is going to happen to us? Where they are producing in competition with us we will lose our own markets and our own products. As I say these are facts to which any man can have access who takes the trouble to look at the live stock history of this country. Failure. Milch cows gone; calves gone; swine gone. Go to the railways and ask them what they think about it. I have asked the live stock men connected with the railways and they tell me the same sad tale. When the live stock trade fails and when there is failure to understand and appreciate the great agricultural development upon which this country's wealth depends, we are making a retrograde movement; we are not advancing.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I take it my hon. friend is in favour of the inquiry; his complaint appears to be that it is too small. The import of his remarks would seem to amount to a warning not to procrastinate. May I say to the hon. gentleman that before there can be a prescription there must be a diagnosis of the difficulty, and that is what the inquiry is for.

Mr. BENNETT: Everybody knows what is the matter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend has attempted to say what the trouble is; frankly I must say that I have never heard live stock men lay the blame on the Australian treaty.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say the Australian treaty; I said New Zealand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is farther from the mark. All I can say is that everybody seems to have some proposal to effect a remedy; I think an inquiry is the best way to find out. We had a splendid conference composed of excellent men, yet we could not agree on the proper course to effect a betterment of the condition. We are now faced with a new diagnosis, and the statement that the New Zealand treaty is responsible for a good many things. All these statements show the necessity for an inquiry. Because of the fact that inquiries have recently resulted so beneficially in clearing up certain problems I am encouraged to try an inquiry in this case. Thirteen years ago I instituted an inquiry into the live stock situation of the province of Saskatchewan, and we got some results from that investigation.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the diagnosis is no good now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From the investigation concerned we secured the cooperative stock yards at Moose Jaw and Prince Albert, and I am hopeful that we may get great results from the present proposed inquiry.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the total expenditure on the Moose Jaw seed house?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: $300,000. It was estimated at first at $150,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Where did the remaining money come from?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From the same vote. Somebody else had to go a little short.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, I see. So the hon. gentleman took from another agricultural item money which had been voted for the purpose of that item, and put it into the seed warehouse.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, I did not take it from the other item; it was the same item.

Mr. BENNETT: But somebody else had to go short.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was in the same item.

Mr. BENNETT: But there was only $150,000 in it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was in the same item with seed, feed and fertilizers.

Mr. BENNETT: So the hon. gentleman took away from the fertilizer, seed and feed estimates and put it into the warehouse, did he?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The $300,000 expended on the seed warehouse at Moose Jaw was as well spent as any money devoted to the purposes of agriculture in this Dominion. The first estimate of the cost of the building was only a rough estimate, and when the figures came down from the government engineers they were found to be much higher, so that it cost much more money to build and equip the plant than had been originally anticipated. Even at that it is money well spent, and if other provinces want the same thing they should have it.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROSS (Moos Jaw): Nothing in agriculture is more important than the handling of clean and registered seed grains, and seeds of all kinds. As a matter of fact we found that on account of that plant we had to use thousands and thousands of extra seed tags over and above the ordinary number required, showing the extra amount of seed grain being used out there.

Mr. BENNETT: Who owns the property?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do.

Mr. BENNETT: The government owns it; I thought so.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The crown owns it.

Mr. BENNETT: Who has the administration of it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Registered Seed Growers' Association of Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that an incorporated company?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, by private bill.

Mr. BENNETT: It is leased to them?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: What rental?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: $5,000 a year for the last eight years and $1,000 for the first two years.

Mr. BENNETT: A private enterprise gets the benefit of it and we get the rental of $5,000.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No, it is a co-operative enterprise; it is a non-profit organization.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The seed company is operated on a pool basis, and there are no profits whatever.

Mr. MANION: I am not going to speak about seed grain, but there is another matter to which I wish to direct the attention of the minister. I have already written to him about it. I refer to the question of a grant to the fair at the head of the lakes. In the province of Ontario there are two class B fairs which receive grants, and in other parts of the country there are about twenty fairs which receive similar grants. To my knowledge, this fair is the only one of its kind in a territory a thousand miles wide, and I wish to impress upon the minister the necessity for this grant. I do not do so from any political motive, because the matter affects the large district to which I have referred. This particular fair has made application for a grant, and I think it should have it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As yet the matter has not come to my attention.

Mr. SPENCER: What consideration has been given to the province of Alberta for seed grain housing?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the seed growers in Alberta have been relying upon two particular sources for their seed; as far as I know they have fallen between the two. I was authorized last year to make an offer, and I repeated it to-day; when they are ready to accept we shall be glad to help them.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suggest that we follow the same practice in this department and pass the items first. Then we can have a general discussion on any of them.

Lighthouse and coast service, $3,290,700.

Mr. SHORT: Last year when these estimates were up a small increase was granted to the lightkeepers of this country, amounting to only $25,000. They asked for increases totalling $137,000 but received only $25,000, with the understanding that there would be a further increase this year. I believe these men made their representations again this year to the minister and submitted a schedule of what they considered to be fair increases in their salaries, which do not in any way compare with the salaries paid for the same services by the United States. I should like to ask the minister what he proposes to do this year for these underpaid, hard working civil servants of this country?

Mr. CARDIN: We have considered the representations which have been made to us and the minimum salary for a light keeper has been increased to $100.

Mr. SHORT: That is for just the lowest grade?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: Has there been no increase granted to the other grades?

Mr. CARDIN: No. Several particular cases have been considered, but there has been no general increase.

Mr. SHORT: Then you do not propose to increase any grade except the lowest one, where you have increased the minimum from $60 to $100? Those are just the small lightkeepers who simply light their lights at night and put them out in the morning. You have not considered grades 6 to 10 or 11 to 15 at all?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. SHORT: Do you not think the request of the Lightkeepers' Association was very reasonable? They asked for an increase of only about $90 in grades 11 to 15, and about $80 in grades 6 to 10. I think these are very reasonable requests which would not involve a very large sum of money. I would have expected the minister to grant such a request.

Mr. CARDIN: Apparently the representatives of the lightkeepers were more concerned with the lower classes than with those receiving a higher salary, but we are quite willing to consider any particular case which may arise. I think the lightkeepers themselves, generally speaking, are satisfied with the increase we have given the lower class, but the door is not closed.

Mr. SHORT: My information is that they are not satisfied. I know some lightkeepers who are getting only $240 per year and who have not had an increase for many years. Everyone knows that the cost of living has increased very materially, and simply because a man lives in a remote district along the coast of Nova Scotia does not mean that his cost of living has not increased proportionately as it has increased elsewhere. I know one man who walks a mile at night to light his light and the same distance in the morning to put it out, and he gets only $240 a year.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to ask a few questions in regard to the recent appointment of fishery guardians in British Columbia.

Mr. SHORT: Let us get through the marine items first before we go on with fisheries. There is another matter about which I want to speak. Has the minister given any further consideration to the use of hydro-electric power in light houses where such is available?

Mr. CARDIN: Consideration has been given to this matter, and I can inform my hon. friend that the Point Prim light will be electrified.

Mr. SHORT: This matter was brought up last year. The line has been extended to the lighthouse and I was wondering what arrangements would be made.

Mr. CARDIN: They will be completed this week.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The speech from the throne contained the following paragraph:

> The report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the existing situation with respect to radio broadcasting in Canada will be presented for your consideration.

That report was without question a very excellent one, and many people expected the government to act upon it. I am informed that subsequent to the introduction of the report a bill was prepared, but for some reason that bill was not presented to the house. Agitation was created by some private interests, particularly a notable newspaper, and this seemed to acquire some support. A special committee of the house was appointed with a great blare of trumpets; the press carried photographs of members of the committee with the announcement of the great work they were to do. That committee was never convened although on two occasions I myself requested the chairman to call a meeting.

I deplore the fact that the government did not press for the passage of a bill based upon this report. Since a bill is not to be introduced this year, will the minister give an assurance to the house and to the country that no further licences will be granted to private interests until this question of the control of radio has been definitely decided? I have no desire to embarrass the minister by multiplying the complications, but this result would be brought about by the granting of further broadcasting licences. The question of vested interests would arise and additional difficulties would confront parliament and the country. I trust the minister will be able to assure the committee that no further licences will be granted until this question is settled.

Mr. CARDIN: I regret that the special committee has not had the opportunity of dealing with the report.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They had the opportunity.

Mr. CARDIN: In view of the agitation which arose all over the country, and the protests which were received by the department, it was thought that the proper course to follow would be to submit the report to a special committee. Shortly after the matter was placed before the committee it was decided that in view of the coming elections it would not be possible in the short time remaining at our disposal to deal with it in a satisfactory way. I agree that a special committee should be appointed to consider all the details of this very complex problem, and before which all interested parties would have an opportunity of expressing their views. I cannot meet the request that in the meantime no further licences be granted, because it must be understood that at least one year will elapse before parliament will be in a position to deal with the problem. Would it be fair to prevent certain stations from adding to their power?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Absolutely.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think it would be fair to prevent other companies obtaining new licences. However, should new licences be granted it will be upon the distinct understanding that no claim will lie against the government should it be decided to nationalize radio broadcasting.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister undertake to have a clause included in the agreement under which any licence may be granted to prevent private interests from making any claim upon the administration, the government, this parliament or the people, in the event of the government taking over radio broadcasting?

Mr. CARDIN: I have no hesitation in replying that that condition will be imposed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And any interests applying for licences from now on will do so at their own risk?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is understood?

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. CARDIN: That is understood.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And under no circumstances will any vested rights be created?

Mr. CARDIN: That is understood.

Mr. GARDINER: Have any new licences been granted since the radio report was presented?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. MANION: Has the fact that there are two outstanding Liberal papers in Canada, one in Ontario and the other in Quebec, that have radio broadcasting stations, anything to do with the fact that there has been no progress made with the committee?

Mr. CARDIN: Not at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am glad the hon. member for Fort William raised that question again. I do not want the words of the minister to go out as implying that there was any agreement, there was none that I know of or have ever heard of, between any of the parties in this house to the effect that the work of this committee should be postponed. No such agreement was ever made. There may have been an understanding to try to expedite the business of the house, but I do not think the minister meant to say there was an agreement not to allow the committee to sit.

Mr. CARDIN: I did not say that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River)): I am still at a loss to know why it did not sit. It was appointed either just before or just after Easter and we had ample time to have had meetings, but for some reason the committee was suppressed. I do not want to accuse the minister of deliberately desiring to suppress the committee, but in view of the strange circumstances that surround the whole handling of this question by the government this year, I felt I was justified in making the request I made a minute or two ago of the minister.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There is a matter along another line altogether to which I should like to call the minister's attention. A memorandum was submitted by the Vancouver Labour Council, to the Vancouver Board of Harbour Commissioners, and by the All-Canadian Congress of Labour to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with respect to waterfront accidents at Vancouver. A request has been made that the government should create and establish a government safety official or inspector on the waterfront at Vancouver. The memorandum urges that such an inspector should be appointed—

—whose word would be final and binding in reguard to the use of gear, equipment, et cetera; and whereas the Vancouver Labour Council has duly considered the report of this committee, this petition and demand for the appointment of a government safety inspector for the port of Vancouver is hereby made.

I should like to quote just a few brief paragraphs:

Statistics from the annual report of the Workmen's Compensation Board of British Columbia for the year 1928 show the following figures:

Stevedoring: Temporary total disability, 528.
Wage loss of over $100,000.
Permanent partial disability, 32.
Fatal accidents, 5.

This report shows a total final compensation award to workmen or their dependents of $111,498.88 for the year 1928.

The statement goes on to point out:

At the present time there is a sort of supervision of gear and practice on the waterfront. The Shipping Federation of British Columbia has a man whom they call "safety engineer" who, being employed by the employers, has authority only to suggest and advise but has no absolute power to stop any unsafe practices or the using of unsafe gear, and therefore is unable to aid materially in the protection that the workers in these industries are entitled to.

There is a safety engineer also appointed by the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners but, as he has no absolute authority. his advice and suggestions are acted upon by the employers only when it suits their immediate convenience.

The request has been made, since the submission of that memorandum, that the responsible officials should take the necessary action for the appointment of a safety inspector with full authority for the loading and unloading of ships. On the 5th instant, a definite refusal to move in the matter was received by letter from Mr. E. Hawken, Acting Deputy Minister of Marine. In his letter Mr. Hawken says:

In reply would advise that the representations made respecting the proposed duties of an inspector are not considered practicable as it would be impossible for any individual to efficiently inspect all cargo appliances and general loading conditions as applied to the individual holds in the several vessels loading and unloading, without seriously affecting the dispatch of the ships concerned which would ultimately reflect upon the port.

I would also advise that there is no authority under any Canadian legislation before me, whereby the department could appoint a safety engineer with power as suggested.

Tackle inspectors are appointed under the Canada Shipping Act, Part VIII, and their powers prescribed by sections 674, and penalties by section 681.

The request that has been presented in the memorandum forwarded to the minister is eminently reasonable, and I do not think the letter written by the deputy minister altogether covers the case and his objections are not well taken. It was not proposed that this officer should inspect the holds of each individual vessel. I quite agree that that would be impracticable, but if there were a man present who had authority to act, the very fact that he was there would in most cases prevent the continuance of the abuses which not exist. The men who are at work in the holds of these ships are familiar with the necessary safety devices; they are so accustomed to handling the various types of gear that they could easily discover whether or not these were in proper condition. If they were in improper condition and if a safety inspector were available, the men could readily apply to him and he would then come and inspect the appliances.

This is a case where there is apparently some authority and responsibility resting with the department. I would assume the department has authority to make such appointments as are necessary for the safeguarding of life and limb and for protecting the welfare of the workers on the waterfront. I speak rather feelingly with regard to this particular matter, because some twelve years ago I myself worked in this particular occupation on the waterfront in Vancouver and I know from personal experience something of the hazards which must be undertaken. I know the appliances in those days were far from being satisfactory and according to the memorandum before me there has been no very great change for the better. When the statistics of the Workmen's Compensation Board show such a heavy list of accidents and a number of fatalities, it seems to me that the least the government can do for the waterfront workers is to provide that an inspector with authority is appointed. The matter is urgent and should not be laid over for another year.

Mr. CARDIN: I quite understand the importance of the question raised by my hon. friend, but we already have inspectors of tackle and gear appointed by the harbour commission and also the Shipping Federation. According to the law as it stands, we have not authority to appoint any inspector having greater powers than those exercised at present by the appointees of the harbour commission or the Shipping Federation. But I assure my hon. friend we are considering the introduction of legislation in order to meet the objects indicated in the representations that have been made.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it possible that some order in council might be passed to meet the need at the present time?

Mr. CARDIN: I may say I am quite ready to ask for any power from council in order to meet the situation, but I am afraid we shall have to proceed first through legislation. I am quite willing to ascertain whether it will be possible to deal with the matter by order in council.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to hear the minister take that attitude, but I would point out the serious situation where men are being injured and even killed. Last year several were killed and a large number injured. I do not think we should wait for another year before taking action.

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend will not contend that those workers have been killed on account of the unsatisfactory condition of tackle and gear. Surely a certain amount of negligence has been responsible.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am contending that the equipment is unsatisfactory because I know of no group of men more careful in their work. I do not want to take up the time of the committee, but I have under my hand five or six pages full of details of accidents in which the trouble was due directly to lack of proper gear. In one case, for instance,—

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is all right for the hon. gentleman to say, "carried" but when life is at stake I think we might reasonably take one or two minutes to consider the matter. In this particular case the jury brought in a verdict with this rider:

> The accident was due to faulty loading without bracing of the timber, and we feel that it is absolutely necessary that there should be a man with authority appointed to supervise conditions on the ship to be loaded.

I have a dozen different cases of that kind of thing. I submit that under these circumstances prompt action should be taken.

Mr. COWAN: A year ago I suggested to the minister the necessity of establishing on lake Superior at the head of the lakes life-saving equipment and a wireless station on account of the great loss of life and property on the great lakes. The minister said that he would give the matter consideration, but I have not yet heard what that consideration amounted to.

Mr. CARDIN: We have had a ship there equipped with radio and other equipment to aid in life saving. The problem of establishing life saving stations is a very large one. With the equipment we have at present we may not be able to cope with all accidents that may occur anywhere. To provide life saving stations at every point on the lakes and rivers and shores of this country would mean an expenditure of millions and millions of dollars. Comparison was made last year between Canada and the United States, and it was contended that the United States were doing much more in this regard than we are doing. I took the trouble last year of visiting a few life saving stations in the United States, some not very far from here, and I was told by the man in charge of one station that he had been there for thirty years and had never been called upon to save life or a vessel. I admit that something should be done, and it is a problem that will have to be seriously considered by parliament one of these days because if we are to have a life saving organization that would take care of all accidents and difficulties the expenditure would run into millions and millions of dollars. In regard to the particular point raised by my hon. friend, something has been done towards providing what he requested.

Mr. COWAN: Has anything been done along the line of compelling the navigation companies to have wireless on their boats?

Mr. CARDIN: All ships carrying passengers have to have wireless.

Mr. COWAN: But not freighters?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. SHORT: A great deal of money has been spent by the department on life saving stations, and I do not think that in all cases you are getting the best returns. There is a life saving station in my constituency, where a body of men is kept the year round, and they do very good work indeed, but they would be able to do very much better had they proper equipment. They have a boat that was obtained in 1911 or 1912, and it was a second hand boat then. The department is spending a lot of money on repairs to that old boat, and she cannot be made seaworthy because she is out of date and obsolete. But if the minister would spend a few thousand dollars in new equipment for the Bayview life saving station at the entrance to Digby harbour, this station could render splendid service. There is a long coast line which this boat patrols, and it is very often called upon to render aid to the fishermen; but owing to the fact that the boat is obsolete and her engine breaks down when she is most needed, she is not able to render the service she should. I understand that last year some repairs were made to this boat, but she is still obsolete because you cannot take an old fashioned boat, remove her engine and replace it with another second-hand engine, and make anything out of her. You want an up-to-date life boat that can render service to the hundreds of fishermen along the bay of fundy coast. You have a good crew and a good building, and if you had a proper boat you would then be in a position to render the service that is supposed to be given to the fisherman who take their lives in their hands to go out to sea to fish. The minister would be well advised to have a new boat placed at the life saving station at Bayview.

Mr. COOTE: There are only two whole-time men and two part-time men in the radio engineers' department in Alberta. That is too small a number to cover such a great area. There are many complaints because of leaks from the Calgary Power Company's main line. The engineers cannot possibly cover the ground satisfactorily. The minister has a surplus of $11,000 from the operation of the radio department in Alberta, and I would ask him if he could not give us a couple more engineers to give the people the service to which I think they are entitled in view of the fees that are being received by the department.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that that situation is being attended to.

Item agreed to.

Mr. SHORT: If all the marine items have now been disposed of, Mr. Chairman. I have a word to say in connection with the Fisheries department, particularly in connection with Bill No 26, which was passed last session, and order in council P.C. 2196, dated October 30, 1929. The house, of course, is aware that in 1927 a commission was appointed to investigate the fisheries of the maritime provvinces, particularly of Nova Scotia. One of the very live questions then occupying the minds of the fishermen of Nova Scotia was the steam trawler question. This commission sat in all parts of the province of Nova Scotia, heard evidence from fishermen in every section, and then brought in a majority and a minority report. The commission was composed of five members. The chairman was Mr. Justice Maclean, a man who is very familiar with conditions in Nova Scotia because he represented a fishing constituency for a number of years and was in close touch with the fishing industry of the province. Another member of the commission was Professor Cyrus Macmillan, of McGill university. He knew nothing whatever about the fisheries, but is a very fine man. The other three members were Nova Scotia fish dealers whose minds were made up before they entered on the inquiry—they were very much opposed to the trawler. The result was that Professor Macmillan and these others brought in a majority report advocating the abolition of trawelrs. Mr. Justice Maclean, the chairman, did not agree and recommended that trawlers should not be abolished, that they were an absolute necessity if we were to continue to supply the markets of Canada with regular shipments of fresh fish. Bill No. 26, based on that report was introduced last session and passed. It was satisfactory to all concerned, both the trawler people and I think the shore fishermen, and had its provisions been put into effect there would have been no trouble. But on October 30, 1929, the government passed order in council P.C. 2196. Let me put on Hansard the circular issued by the minister's department with respect to this order in council:

Canada
Department of Marine and Fisheries
Fisheries Branch
Notice

By order in council of October thirtieth, 1929 P.C. 2196, and under the authority of section 69A of the Fisheries Act, which section was established by 19-20, George V, Chapter 42, it was provided that a licence to any fishing vessel which uses an otter or other trawl of a similar nature, will not be granted except under the following conditions:

1. That such vessel was built in Canada and is now operating under temporary licence or was built in Canada subsequent to November 1, 1929.

Provided, however, that existing fishing vessels, other than Canadian built, which use otter or other trawls of a similar nature, and in respect of which temporary licences are now in force, shall be eligible for licence but only during the period ending April 1, 1932.

2. On and after April 1, 1930, a licence fee at the rate of one cent per pound, shall be payable by the owner or operator of any such fishing vessel that was not built in Canada, and, at the rate of two-thirds of a cent per pound, shall be payable by the owner or operator of any such fishing vessel that was built in Canada, under regulations approved by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on all cod, haddock and halibut that are caught and landed on the Atlantic coast of Canada by any such fishing vessel. In determining the weights of such fish, in the case of cod and haddock, such shall be done with the heads on, but with the entrails removed, and in the case of halibut, with the heads off and the entrails removed; provided that no licence fee shall be payable on fish caught and landed during the months of January, February and March in each year, nor on scrod—that is, fish with the heads on, but with the entrails removed, that weigh less than two and one-half pounds each.

Wm. A. Found,
Deputy Minister of Fisheries.

Ottawa, November 2, 1929.

This means that after 1932 five British trawlers with Canadian registry will be practically confiscated because it is an impossibility to keep those vessels in order so that they can fish only three months in the year and the other nine months pay a tax of one cent a pound on all the fish they land. This, I claim, is the most drastic legislation that has ever been enacted in this country. The idea of a government, a Liberal government especially, that claims it does not want to tax the food of the people, putting a one cent tax on one of the natural food products of our country, is to my mind simply preposterous. We had no fresh fish industry in this country until trawlers started to operate in 1910 or 1911. Prior to that time we had to depend upon our shore boats in the summer time and on our schooners in the winter. We had no regular supply, with the result that we had no fresh fish market in this country. Most of our supplies came in from the United States because our cities could not depend upon Nova Scotia giving them a regular supply during all seasons of the year.

The companies that were in business then decided that if we were to build up a fresh fish market in this country we must have modern methods, that is, trawlers that can fish in all kinds of weather and land regular supplies. As a result a splendid market has been built up by being able to give regular supplies of fish. Now this government comes forward with legislation that is going to prevent these trawlers from operating in our waters during nine months of the year unless they pay a tax of one cent a pound, which is practically prohibitive. Both the minister and his deputy know that.

Now, these trawlers have not interfered with the shore fishermen to the extent the minister thinks they have, for the simple reason that the trawler companies have in the past handled all the fish that have been offered to them by the shore fishermen. This order in council would never have been passed had it not been for the agitation, not by the boat fishermen but by the fish dealers who are operating vessels instead of steam trawlers. They were the people who agitated for the abolition of the steam trawler. But even they did not ask for its abolition altogether; they asked that nothing but Canadian-built trawlers be used. This matter was brought up in the house last session by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Quinn) when Bill No. 26 was under discussion. He moved an amendment asking that nothing but Canadian trawlers be allowed to operate. The minister's answer to that was that this would mean confiscation of the five British trawlers with Canadian registry that were already operating in Nova Scotia. Let me quote from page 3483 of Hansard of June 10 last year:

Mr. Cardin: Although I am in sympathy with the policy advocated by my hon. friend from Halifax in regard to encouraging our shipbuilding industry, I cannot accept his amendment. It would have the effect of practically confiscating a certain number of vessels which are now in operation and have been for a period of years.

So the minister's opinion then was that if these boats were not allowed to operate it meant confiscation. That is just what the minister is doing to-day by this order in council. He is prohibiting these vessels from operating, and it practically means that after April, 1932, they will not be able to operate even if they pay a tax of a cent a pound. Therefore those vessels will be confiscated. But there is no mention whatever of compensation to the owners. I believe the companies that own these trawlers if they felt they were going to be compensated would be able to make arrangements to carry on their business. Does the minister think that it is fair to confiscate these five British built trawlers with Canadian registry? They cost from $65,000 to $75,000 each, and they are British built. They have been registered in this country since 1917, some of them since 1915, and yet we say that after 1932 they must go to the junk heap. That is the practical effect of the order in council, because the trawlers were built totally and solely for the fishing industry and are suitable for no other purpose. Surely if it is intended to carry out this order in council and to confiscate those ships after 1932, the companies are entitled to compensation.

This matter of catching fish by steam trawlers is not new; every fishing country in the world is operating steam trawlers, and Canada is the only country which has suggested legislation of this nature.

Mr. RALSTON: Japan has this legislation.

Mr. SHORT: She is the only country in the world, with the exception of Canada which has such legislation. The United States, Great Britain, France, Spain, Norway and other fishing countries have no legislation of this nature. I do not know very much about Japan, but I hope we are further advanced than that country is. The United States have about 170 trawlers which come down and fish in the same grounds we are using. If this government prevents our trawlers from fishing the result will be that in the winter season the markets of the upper provinces will be supplied by fish from the United States. That is the condition which we had previous to the use of trawlers. I know the minister will say that the fishing schooners of to-day can supply the market. I say they cannot, because they are affected by weather conditions. The fishing schooners of to-day are the same class of vessels which we had fifteen years ago. We had fishing schooners operating out of Nova Scotia for many years, but they could not supply the market for fresh fish, for the simple reason that they were unable to maintain a steady supply. There would be weeks during the fall and winter months when gales of wind would prevent the landing of any fish, consequently the Canadian market could not depend on a regular supply of this important commodity, and to meet the demand importations were made from the United States. Do we want to revert to that situation? I do not think so. Last winter, it is true, a number of schooners operated out of Halifax, Lunenburg, and Liverpool, but there were times when the demand could not be supplied. There was either a feast or a famine; there was a full supply in fine weather and in stormy weather there was none. If we reverted to this style of fishing we would be confronted with the same difficulty.

What would our friends in the western provinces do if we put on a tax on all the wheat they harvested with the aid of the new combine machine? That machine does away with the necessity for hundreds of labourers. What would happen if this government told the western harvesters that they could not operate by these new methods, but must go back to the methods in vogue many years ago? How would they consider a proposal of that kind? Yet that is practically what this government is doing in connection with the trawlers. When any new invention has been put on the market the use of which would favourably affect the fishing industry, we have been confronted with the same condition. Years ago we used the hand line, and when we discarded the old method there were objections raised. In 1875 the fishery officer for Nova Scotia reported, as contained in the report of the Commissioner of Fisheries to the minister, as follows:

> The short yield of cod may be accounted for as follows: this fishing is pursued around the shores of Nova Scotia entirely in open boats which can only remain on the fishing grounds during comparatively smooth weather, and as winds this year were continuous and heavy during the fishing season, little was done in shore fishing.
> I would also beg to call your attention to what overseer Ross says with reference to trawl fishing. I have no personal knowledge of this mode of fishing, but wherever practised it is generally considered injurious to the fisheries for reasons stated by Mr. Ross.

This statement here made has reference to the time we used the hand line. The present system was adopted in 1875, and it was thought that it would ruin the fisheries. To continue reading:

> After a very careful investigation of the subject I have come to the conclusion that it is a very great injury to the fisheries of our coast, for the following reasons, namely, trawls are set on Saturday and left so during Sunday; many fish disengage themselves from the trawls, and in several instances are so cut and mangled as to die in the water. Another evil from the result of trawl fishing is the practice of cleaning the fish taken wherever the trawls are set. Some of the oldest fishermen in this country tell me that the codfish spawn in these bays and along these shores. If this is true, and I have no reason to doubt it, the sooner that mode of fishing be abolished the better for our country because it is not the people of our province that derive the most benefit from trawl fishing, but the Americans. Just imagine a fleet of forty vessels, fitted out with five trawls each, and five or six hundred hooks on each trawl; how quick they will sweep the fishing grounds of all kinds.

That is what the fishermen thought away back in 1875. Then in 1910 the steam trawler was introduced, and it has been used in the fish industries of every country. To-day we are faced with the same complaint which was lodged in 1875, except that in this instance it is levelled against the steam trawler, and it is suggested that this particular vessel is going to ruin the fishing industry. The fact of the matter is that the industry requires markets. If we had a wider market for our fish, and if the department would give a little more attention to the marketing of our fish rather than passing legislation such as this, our industry would profit to a greater extent than it has in the past. If the department had put forth efforts to find new markets there would have been no difficulties in the province of Nova Scotia regarding the use of the trawler. The reason the contention with regard to trawlers arose is that in 1927 conditions were very bad in the fish markets of the country. Prices were very low, and the fishermen thought they were not getting adequate prices for their catch. That was not because of the trawler, which had nothing to do with it; it was because of the condition of the market, and if you and your department had expended a little more effort in securing markets rather than in passing legislation such as this it would have been very much more in the interests of the fishing industry. The trouble with the department is that you are endeavouring to develop the fishing industry by legislation and by bolstering it up with subsidies, when what is required is good, common sense business administration along practical and progressive lines. If you would do that rather than pass so much legislation it would be very much better for the industry.

I have read the correspondence in connection with this trawler question and I find many letters from prominent people interested in the fishing industry of Nova Scotia protesting against this order in council. You have had letters from the Halifax Cold Storage Company, which operates one of the largest cold storage plants in the maritime provinces and which is subsidized to the extent of about $700,000 by this government. They are practically out of business so far as the fishing industry is concerned.

I protest most vigorously against this order in council; I think the government would be well advised to pass another order in council now allowing the trawlers to land their fish under certain restrictions. If you carried out the provisions of Bill 26 it would satisfy both the trawler people and the shore fishermen. Something has to be done; you cannot confiscate these vessels without compensating these people for them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not want to interrupt another address by my hon. friend, but I think I should submit to the committee that there are some 150 items still to be carried, and either we will each have to apply a self-denial ordinance or we must entirely forego the idea of proroguing this evening.

Mr. SHORT: I have taken very little time on any of the estimates, and I propose to have something to say in connection with some of these fishery items.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to ask the minister a few questions with regard to the fishery branch at Stuart lake. I have a return here with regard to the appointment of fishery guardians at Fort St. James and Takla lake. First there is a memorandum appointing J. P. Myers and George Hamilton to these two positions; then there is a memorandum from the deputy minister to Mr. Motherwell, superintendent in Vancouver, followed by a protest from Mr. Motherwell with regard to the suggested appointment. Mr. Motherwell says:

> The information received at this office is to the effect that both the nominees in these cases, that is Messrs. Myers and Hamilton, are entirely unsuitable for the work required of them.

Then he goes on to say, with regard to the two men who are replaced:

> Messrs. Kynoch and Forfar served last year and both very satisfactorily. Kynoch has had many years experience in the salmon business and several years in the Stuart lake hatchery. He is a very keen, conscientious man and has a thorough knowledge of his duties. It would be a great mistake to change him.

Then there is a letter from Mr. Casey to Mr. Motherwell asking his objections to these men, in these words:

> You do not state in what respects the above mentioned men are unsuitable. . . .

Then there is a protest from John B. Babcock, deputy minister of fisheries of British Columbia, as follows:

> Trust there is not truth in the report that Kynoch of Stuart lake is to be relieved. In my judgment he is one of the most capable and energetic fishery officers in the Fraser basin. I urge his retention.

Then there is a letter from Mr. Casey to Mr. Babcock under date of May 15 stating:

> As you are doubtless aware the position is a seasonal one and while arrangements for the coming season do not contemplate the reemployment of Mr. Kynoch, further inquiry is being made in the premises to assure that the interests concerned are fully safeguarded.

There you have it from your own inspector of fisheries, your own chief man in British Columbia, that these are capable and desirable men who have discharged their duties to the satisfaction of the department, and you also have the commissioner of fisheries of British Columbia asking that these men be retained. What explanation has the minister for the removal of these men and the appointment of two men who are not acceptable to his own officials?

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend was good enough to tell me that he intended to bring up this matter on the discussion of the estimates. I have looked into the question, and after discussing it with the deputy minister I have come to the conclusion that the recommendation of Mr. Motherwell should be followed.

Mr. FRASER: Thank you.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is provision being made in the estimates for the clearing of small salmon streams on the New Brunswick coast of the bay of Fundy?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, it is provided for in the general vote.

Mr. MacLAREN: Will it continue this year?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: I have a few words more to say; I am sorry to detain the committee, but I will not do it unnecessarily. These items should have been brought down weeks ago in order to allow a full discussion of them. I want to call attention to an item of $236,000 to assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish. There is an increase here of $106,000, and I should like to ask the minister how that is to be expended.

Mr. CARDIN: The increase is due to the development of that branch of the department. The amount of $236,000 is required to cover fish collection services, aid in establishing fishermen, aid in expanding the demand for fish, fisheries inspection, educational work leading to the use of better methods in fishing, aid in the organization of fishermen, and scallop investigations.

Mr. SHORT: Will some of this amount be spent for advertising?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: The vote for last year amounted to $130,000. When that vote was under consideration I asked the minister the following question, which appears on page 3358 of Hansard:

Mr. Short: Is it the intention of the department to expend any of this $130,000 for advertising?
Mr. Cardin: I am informed that the officers are preparing to do advertising out of this vote.
Mr. Short: A portion of this money will be used on advertising?
Mr. Cardin: Yes.

I understand that not one dollar was spent in the advertising of fish products, notwithstanding the fact that application was made by the Canadian Fishermen's Association that the department carry on a vigorous advertising campaign in connection with the industry. A bulletin is issued by the department covering their activities, but that is of no use in the creating of a demand for fish. Is it the intention this year to spend a suitable amount for advertising?

Mr. CARDIN: We are going to cooperate with the Canadian Fishermen's Association.

Mr. SHORT: To what extent?

Mr. CARDIN: We will spend one dollar for every dollar they spend.

Mr. SHORT: I would like to make a few observations regarding the fish carrying service. The following statement was issued by the department covering some twenty boats engaged in the fish carrying service.

| Name | Fish carried lbs. | Cost $ |
|---|---|---|
| Flor del Mar | 8,250 | 554 84 |
| Bessie L. Morse | 342,685 | 4,066 67 |

| Harvey & Ralph | 587,115 | 3,096 77 |
| Shemogue | 541,691 | 5,351 32 |
| Magdalen | 37,530 | 333 33 |
| Betty L. | 1,359,075 | 5,959 36 |
| Mary E. Kenny | 737,601 | 5,483 87 |
| Elizabeth Cann | 884,851 | 7,678 71 |
| Nova I | 192,865 | 1,683 87 |
| Kenneth W. | 141,054 | 1,548 39 |
| Rex II | 333,018 | 5,090 32 |
| O'Leary Lee | 31,737 | 348 39 |
| Lilly M. Hodge | 381,930 | 4,611 62 |
| Maripac | 28,542 | 354 84 |

It will be seen that the average cost is about one per cent per pound. Does the minister think it is good business to carry a product worth from 1¾ cents to 2 cents per pound at a cost of 1 cent per pound? I understand that a contract has been entered into with a concern in Halifax whereby a charter of $1,975 each is being paid for five boats for five years. The order in council covering this contract was passed in December. How long does the minister think a business concern could carry on under conditions such as these? This contract was entered into with the concern which owned most of the boats mentioned in the list I have referred to. I think it is time that this committee should consider if this department could not be operated in a businesslike manner.

Mr. CARDIN: The subsidy of $1,975 per month applies for five months only in the year. I do not think we should be criticized for making any expenditure which might prove useful to the fishermen. Up to this year I believe the collecting service has proved very profitable. The high cost of operating the service was caused by an inability to secure boats suitable to do the work, and that is the reason we entered into the contract referred to by the hon. member.

Mr. SHORT: I have nothing to say against the collecting service because I want everything done that is possible for the shore fishermen in Nova Scotia. They need every assistance that can be given to them. However, it would have been much better for the fishermen if the $5,270 which was paid to the Sadie Mac had been distributed among the fishermen. It might be mentioned that this boat is owned by a very good friend of the government. That boat carried 32,550 pounds of fish at a cost of $5,270. The fishermen could have eaten their fish, or salted them down, and the distribution of this amount among them would have been much better. The minister says that suitable boats could not be obtained, and he enters into a contract for five years with Mr. R. W. Hendry of Halifax for the five boats. Why was it necessary to enter into a contract for that period? The minister could have gone along the coast of Nova Scotia and obtained all the boats he required on a monthly rental basis. He could have obtained any number of boats at a rental of from $1,200 to $1,700 per month with the option of cancelling the charter on a month's notice. Instead of that he enters into a contract for 5 years for five boats at a rental of $1,975 each per month.

Item agreed to.

Legislation — House of Commons — salaries, $257,610.
Expenses of committees, clerical assistance, etc., $11,950.
Contingencies, $46,775.
Publishing debates, $60,000.
Estimates of Sergeant-at-Arms, $188,394.—Total, $664,729.

Mr. KENNEDY: I believe this is the item covering the temporary staff of the House of Commons. Is any allowance being made to them on account of the short session? I am referring to the Hansard and members' stenographic staffs.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have been in the house almost every minute for several days. Yesterday I heard what was said in the house by the two leaders. I do not know whether the hon. member for Acadia spoke, but I suppose he shared the views of both leaders, and I will act accordingly. I saw the leader of the opposition this morning. Although I am nearer to the Prime Minister, I have not yet had an opportunity of conferring with him. There is to be a conference and on the broad principle of acting generously the committee can depend I shall do the right thing.

Mr. HARRIS: I should like to know whether this also covers the protective staff. These men, as the Speaker knows, are mostly married men, with families, and I trust they will receive the same consideration as the stenographic staff.

[Mr. Short.]

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentlemen should not confuse those that are permanent with those that are temporary. I will have regard to the temporary ones when reviewing this matter with the leaders.

Mr. HARRIS: But as a matter of fact, a number of the protective staff are temporary during the session.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will review the whole question with both leaders and the hon. gentleman can can be assured that I shall deal generously with the staff, having regard to what was asked yesterday by hon. members.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It seems to me that a very important principle is involved. There is a distinct discrimination between the staff of the House of Commons and that of the Senate. Why there should be, I do not know.

Mr. SPEAKER: Let me tell my hon. friend at once: the Senate itself deals with its own employees. It appoints its officers; it appoints its servants as it pleases. The House of Commons is in a different position. Our appointments come under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I quite understand that, but that is what I am protesting about. The people of Canada pay both Senate and House of Commons and this house very generously votes the money to pay the higher salaries in the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman make that statement. He takes the view taken by that great public servant, Sir John Bourinot, whose view was that when the House of Commons decided to appoint an officer, that officer should be ipso facto appointed. I advocated the same policy four years ago, but I was denied the privilege of appointing our own officers under the control of the House of Commons, as the matter should be.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Nothing can take away from the House of Commons the responsibility for passing estimates.

Mr. SPEAKER: Exactly.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the Senate want to appoint a man to a position, it cannot do so until the money is voted by the House of Commons. There is a distinct discrimination and it does not reflect any credit upon this house to vote larger salaries for men holding certain positions in the Senate than are received by men holding similar positions in the House of Commons. That is a discrimination which should be done away with. Either we should refuse to vote the higher salaries for the Senate staff or we should vote increases in salary for the House of Commons staff.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I know to what my hon. friend is referring. Is he referring to the clerk of the house?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am referring to the whole staff. There is discrimination.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as I am aware, there are one or two cases where no corresponding recommendations came to the council from the Senate and in which there have been increases in the Commons. The intention of the council is to see that no discrimination is made and that there is a proper adjustment.

Mr. COOTE: I understand the protective service in the House of Commons is paid $4 a day and in the Senate $4.50 a day. I do not think the protective service in the Senate is working any harder than that in the House of Commons, and we know from past experience the stenographic service in the Senate is paid a higher rate than that of the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Senate acts as regard salaries without consulting anyone.

Mr. MacNUTT: Yesterday, when this matter was being discussed, the Prime Minister promised a conference with Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: And with the leader of the opposition.

Mr. MacNUTT: Evidently from the remarks of the Speaker this evening, this conference has not been held. While the Speaker has given his word he will deal generously with the staff, I think we should know definitely that they are going to receive as much as the temporary staff of the Senate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend had been as busy as I have been during the past twenty-four hours, he would have found it difficult to arrange conferences for all purposes. There is no question about the hon. the leader of the opposition, Mr. Speaker and myself being able to agree on what will be considered fair by the house generally That, I think, ought to be a sufficient answer. There is no desire to discriminate in any way.

Mr. DUFF: Will the messengers receive a special allowance as well as the stenographers?

Mr. SPEAKER: We will review that at the conference. The leader of the opposition, the Prime Minister and your humble servant will decide that.

Mr. DUFF: I would like to know whether they will receive the same treatment.

Item agreed to.

Immigration and Colonization—immigration outside services—salaries, $1,155,000.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I rise to protest against our newcomers being made the goat of all our social and industrial discontent. Only recently the remark was made by Bishop Lloyd about our newcomers that they had criminal proclivities. I have searched in the report of the superintendent of penitentiaries for the year ending March 31, 1929, and I find that there were 2,769 prisoners incarcerated in our penitentiaries during the year 1929, and that their birthplaces were as follows:

|---|---|
| Canada | 1,747 |
| Great Britain | 326 |
| Other British possessions | 36 |
| United States | 223 |
| Russia | 75 |
| Italy | 66 |
| Austria-Hungary | 78 |
| China | 62 |
| Roumania | 16 |
| Other countries | 140 |

These statistics prove that only 12 per cent of our newcomers are to be found among the prisoners in our Dominion penitentiaries. It is not my intention to take up much of the time of the house, but I wish to deal with certain discriminatory statements which have been made against our newcomers. I have in my hand a letter which I received from a young Red Cross nurse in which she refers to a news item that I shall quote later. She writes as follows:

> Article enclosed was published in the News of the World about one month ago. I think a paper of such wide circulation should offer a printed apology for such uncalled for and ignorant remarks, which concern the Ukrainian people in the Vegreville district.
> I am taking the privilege of writing you a few lines regarding this matter, as you are in a position to make them offer that apology on their front page.
>
> According to newspaper reports, it is the British settlers that are making all the trouble.
>
> Trusting you will give this important matter your kind and prompt attention, and do all you can to expose these brutal traducers of an honest hard-working and law-abiding people, I remain,
>
> Yours very truly,

The article which this young lady enclosed reads as follows:

Canada's New Problem
Alien Menace in the Golden West
Bad Old Days of the Gold Rushes Revived
("News of the World" Special)

Canadian wheat farmers on the rich corn lands of Alberta and Saskatchewan are seriously perturbed by the continued drought which threatens their harvest, and which may spell ruin to a number of settlers who have laboured hard and sunk their capital in creating farms on the wide Western prairies. Only in scattered districts where there may have been local showers will there be any wheat crop worth harvesting. To add to the troubles of British settlers a number of Russians, Galicians, and other migrants from eastern Europe have recently swarmed over the western portions of Canada. They have been encouraged by the Dominion authorities, who, it is alleged, have not exercised due care in their selection, with the result that many districts are becoming unfit for decent Britishers to reside in. Complaint is made that the authorities do not trouble to inquire into the character of these people, so long as they can prove that they have financial resources sufficient to take up holdings. There is a large settlement of these undesirables around the town of Vegreville, which was until recently a prosperous community of English-speaking yeomen, but which is rapidly degenerating into a hotbed of vice and lawlessness such as characterised the mining camps of other settlements during the hectic days of gold rushes some fifty years ago. Gambling hells, gin palaces, and dancing saloons have made Vegreville and other towns the haunt of every grade of alien rascal in search of "a good time and easy money." Cunning frauds by "real estate" tricksters have resulted in scores of settlers being cheated in the purchase of farms. Illicit stills remain unchecked, and commercial morality in these districts has almost reached vanishing point. Canadian police are too busy to bother much about such matters, as they are fully occupied in dealing with serious crimes of violence and outrage that have occurred since the influx from eastern Europe. Indeed, matters have reached a point when the police have been glad of the aid of a number of Canadian ex-service men, who settled in the area immediately after the war, and have recently banded together to put down the worst forms of violent crime and so afford mutual protection against the criminal propensities of these alien ruffians. Former members of that famous corps —the Alberta Dragoons—have recently tracked down one of the worst gangs of Galician horse thieves and treated them to that rough-and-ready justice which, it is hoped, will have convinced them of the error of their ways, as they fled in terror across the open country after being stripped and flogged by the angry troopers.

Mr. BENNETT: Who was the author of that?

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: It appeared in the News of the World, London, England, and was reprinted subsequently in many Canadian papers. One editor in Edmonton had the decency to make this comment upon it:

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

Police officials in Edmonton, both provincial police and Royal Canadian Mounted Police don't even consider these ridiculous misstatements worthy of answer.

Mayor Holden of Vegreville, over the long distance telephone Thursday morning, expressed a keen desire to get his hands on the fiction writer responsible for the article. "Every man in Alberta knows that the town of Vegreville is as quiet and law-abiding as there is anywhere in Canada," he declared heatedly. "Our district is largely settled by Galicians and Ukrainians, but if you know of any better citizens of Canada I'd like to meet 'em."

Commissioner Bryan of the Alberta provincial police is surprised to find how many "gin palaces and gambling hells" exist in a town so well policed as Vegreville, and in which there is so little crime. This kind of nonsense he described the British paper's articles as can't be printed in a polite newspaper like the Journal.

Superintendent James Ritchie of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police left the city to-day on an inspection trip to northern posts, but mounted police officials laughed merrily at the heart-breaking story of the old members of the "Alberta Dragoons" who have banded together, much to the relief of the police, to round up "Galician horse thieves."

The story to any person who knows Vegreville and other towns is altogether too ridiculous for anything but derisive laughter. It is quoted merely as the worst example yet of the length to which writers, ignorant of conditions, will go in making "copy" of the "penny-a-line" type, and of the manner in which certain newspapers will grasp at such articles without first assuring themselves of the veracity of the statements made.

I do not know who the irresponsible person was that put this article in the News of the World, but whoever did certainly did not do any good to the inhabitants of Canada; but I do know that when people occupying responsible positions in Canada make such statements as the one made before the immigration commissioner by Bishop Lloyd in Prince Albert recently, I think it is about time that such people should be taken to task.

I have proven by figures that the newcomer in Canada is not as criminal as some people would like us to believe. I had intended to deal with this matter at greater length, but I do not wish to delay the committee. There are several things that I had intended to say in connection with assimilation. It is said that inter-marriage is possibly the greatest test of assimilation, and in support of this contention, having in view the proposition that we should start from the top down rather than the bottom up I think it would be a mighty fine thing at the present time, when we are on the eve of an election, if the Prime Minister chose from among the beautiful central European belles at Prince Albert a desirable helpmate to cheer him on in the forthcoming campaign.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why does my hon. friend discriminate? What about his own leader and the leader of the opposition?

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I will apply it to the leader of the opposition, and suggest that he stop opposing and start proposing, with a view to changing not only his own personal status but that of his party as well; and I would also suggest to the leader of the Progressive group to stop baking biscuits that taste like shrapnel and preserve the health and integrity of this group by eating food such as only a Czechoslovakian wife can cook. To crown the whole thing I would suggest that Bishop Lloyd of Saskatchewan marry all these people off, and that all the Ku Kluxers, Orangemen and Knights of Columbus be allowed to attend the ceremony, as well as the subsequent festivities.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems most unfortunate that there has been practically no opportunity this entire session of discussing matters of this kind which are of the utmost importance to Canada. It is only upon the estimates that we have really an opportunity of reviewing the policies of the government. I had placed on the order paper a resolution upon the discussion of which I do not intend to enter, but which I should like to pass on as a suggestion to the government. This resolution was not reached. It read:

> That in the opinion of this house the Department of Immigration and Colonization should be abolished, and that the administration of the Immigration Act should be placed under the Department of Labour and the work of colonization left to the provincial governments.

I suggest that the department should be abolished. Apparently the government has partly anticipated this resolution in that no successor to the former minister has been appointed, and we are told there is to be a less vigorous policy. However, I should think that now that the natural resources have passed into the hands of the three western provinces, where in the past, immigration has been considered most necessary, it would be a very good time for the transference of the whole of the colonization end of the department to those provinces, The provincial authorities there, working in cooperation with the municipalities, it would seem to me are the best agencies for carrying on work of this character. I do not believe that colonization work should be carried on from the city of Ottawa now that the natural resources are in the hands of those provinces. The Soldier Settlement Board, which has been doing good work along this line, will I fancy have to be completely reorganized. This then is the time for that whole section of the department to be transferred to the prairie provinces.

Further with regard to immigration, I believe it would be a very great advantage indeed if we could closely correlate the Department of Immigration and the Department of Labour. In the United States, as hon. members are aware, immigration comes under the department of labour. That seems to be the natural place for it, because in the settlement of a country the number of new people introduced ought to a very considerable extent to depend upon the state of the labour market—the demands for workers. If that principle were rigidly adhered to we would not have a recurrence of the troubles with which we have been afflicted in the past. An increasingly large number of citizens are beginning to question the theory that "the more people the more prosperity." Immigration may indeed mean prosperity for the railroads, because not only do they participate in the general welfare by increased traffic, but they are very large employers of labour, and there is no doubt that they have been the principal beneficiaries of vigorous immigration policies of the past. I am glad to know that the immigration agreement with the railway companies has been terminated, and I hope it will never again be renewed in any way, shape or form. The Dominion government ought to be the only authority to decide who shall come to this country. They ought to stand at the gate. I hope that no private organization of any kind will be permitted to decide who are to become the future citizens of this country.

I have a number of other matters that I should like to bring before the house, but as we are all anxious to get away I must deal with them on another occasion. I have scores and scores of letters before me which I should like to have read showing the extreme difficulties under which a large number of our immigrants are labouring, and the equally grave difficulties that are being experienced by people who to-day are out of work in part at least, because of the introduction of so many immigrants. There is not the slightest doubt that a great deal of our unemployment is due to the fact that many of our own people have been supplanted in their jobs by newly-arrived immigrants. Only the other day the minister himself in dealing with unemployment in Winnipeg said that before long some of the new arrivals in Winnipeg would be despatched up the Hudson Bay line to Le Pas. Already at Le Pas, returned men and other Canadians were out of work. That is simply an illustration of what has been going on all along. I would not be doing my duty by the class of people who send me to this house if I did not protest against any more immigrants being induced to come here while any of our own people are unemployed.

Just one other aspect of the case. I read the other day the annual report issued by the public school board of my own city of Winnipeg. Of the 6,938 pupils between the ages of 14 and 18 who left school, 4,449 are employed. There are still, however, 760 boys and 1,587 girls over 14 years of age who have left school and have not found employment. Now, that is a serious state of affairs for any one city. And what is true of Winnipeg is equally true of a large number of towns and cities in the west. Our own girls and boys do not know which way to turn for work. Any of us who have children in our families know how difficult it is to find work for them. I have scores of my own constituents come to me imploring help in this direction. They say: "Tell us how we can place our girls and boys; what is there for them to do?" And yet these girls and boys walking the streets of Winnipeg and other cities not knowing what to do meet at the trains thousands of people who are brought in here, and who in too many cases are given the preference by employers of labour.

Had I time I should like to have presented to this house a series of statistics prepared for me by a professor of economics that go to show that after all we have needed immigrants only in the pioneer stage when there were not large numbers of young people growing up in our own homes, but that to-day we have reached the stage where young families are rapidly coming to the working age, and in the years to come we will have increasing numbers of these young people, especially in the west, thrown on the labour market. So we will not have the same need of immigrants, and cannot absorb them as we have been doing in the past. I would impress upon the government the urgent necessity of refusing to permit more immigrants to come into this country until our unemployed people are reabsorbed into industry. I would also suggest that before very long this department be transferred in the way I have indicated.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the reason for the big increase of $75,000 in the outside service?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In this case it is not immigration work but preventive work. We have eleven new employees in the eastern district located at the entrances from the United States. At the new bridge in Windsor, where there is very heavy traffic requiring a large staff, we have twenty-two people employed. As new ports are opened for entry to and exit from Canada they have to be manned by immigration officials whose duty it is to examine the people passing to and fro. I think that accounts very largely for the increased staff which is required.

Mr. LUCAS: Do I understand the government contemplates making a change in its immigration policy? Will the minister state briefly what the plan is, and also when the present agreement with the railways expires?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Some years ago, acting in the capacity of minister, I thought we should have more care exercised to ascertain where we could place people. I agree entirely with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In the year 1923 I visited the various provinces of Canada to discuss with them the advisability of the provinces taking the responsibility for colonization. At that time we were administering the western resources, the Peace River block and the belt in British Columbia. I was told that the matter of immigration was a responsibility of the federal government and that therefore the provinces could not agree to assume any responsibility in that connection. Upon that occasion I was not successful in interesting the provinces, but we have now reached the stage in our history when the federal government will have no control of crown lands. The provinces are taking them over, and for that reason I have again entered into correspondence with the provincial legislatures with a view to having them take over the colonization of their own provinces. The provinces are almost unanimous that they should accept this responsibility. I have sent the deputy minister to visit all the provincial governments for the purpose of discussing this matter with them. We had decided to hold a conference when he returns in June, but with the election before us we find that such a course would be impossible. There is no doubt the election would interfere and it would be utterly impossible to hold a conference during an election contest, particularly when two of the provinces are engaged in provincial contests. With those facts in mind we have decided to call a conference in the month of August to settle the details. Briefly, my hope is that the provinces themselves will stipulate what numbers of people they can absorb; I hope they will give us the details of the numbers they may require and from what countries they want them. We will endeavour to supervise their selection, bring them to the provinces and deliver them or turn them over to the provinces upon arrival. One of the serious difficulties which exists in Canada is that the moment a person enters a province he is outside federal jurisdiction except when we act more or less in the capacity of a policeman and deport him. I have always thought the provinces should state what numbers of immigrants they require and the type of people they want in their midst. My hope is that the provinces will agree to that, and at such time we will begin a program of recruiting such people as the provinces desire. We will bring them here and deliver them to the appropriate provincial officers. If the necessity for deportation should arise we would have to shoulder that responsibility.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How will the immigration records of the provinces be kept?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A very careful record of the entries should be kept; each person's movements should be checked as he goes from one province to another. The provincial governments should have an understanding with the municipalities which would take care of the indigents, so that domicile could be declared and a particular locality made responsible. That action is taken at the present time between municipality and municipality, and between province and province. The work of the department would be largely that of recruiting such people as are required. More particularly however its work would be along the line of what we were discussing, namely, manning the ports of entry into Canada. At the present time I am not in a position to go into details as to how this would work out, because a great deal will depend upon the conference and the arrangements which are arrived at with the provinces. Broadly however the matter of whom they require will be left to the judgment of the provinces; they will be able to state the number and the nationalities they want within their control.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will central Europeans be admitted under permit?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The railway agreement as far as farm labour is concerned expires to-morrow, and it is not our intention to renew it. We are following the recommendation of the committee in allowing the agreement to expire. During the year the assisted passages will also expire; this was a term which applied to domestics. The only system of assisted immigration which we intend to continue is in connection with the young boys and girls, and in that we are working in conjunction with the British government. The provinces will be in a position to decide how many they require. As far as I am concerned that is the only recommendation I will make to the conference. I wish my hon. friends to realize my desire is that the provinces will make their choice as to the immigrants they want.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the position in regard to the three thousand family scheme?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are a few of them working as labourers, but there are no more coming into the country under that scheme.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Can the minister tell us whether Canadian boys will be given preference over the old country boys in the matter of finding work?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In answer to that I can only say that we will have to be guided by the desire of the provincial governments. I think that is where the responsibility should rest, and I would advocate that we should not bring in anybody except when requested to do so by a provincial government. However that is a matter which will have to be settled at a later time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has anything further been heard about the $300,000,000 colonization plan of the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. McRae)?

Item agreed to.

Immigration contingencies and general expenses including grants to immigration societies, women's hostels, provinces, and loans for stock, equipment, etc., for Canadian boys, as may be authorized by the governor general in council, $1,160,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Before the vote is carried I would like to ask the minister if he can give the names of organizations to which grants have been given during the past year, and the amounts.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Salvation Army, $5,000; British Settlement Society of Toronto, $1,000; United Church of England, $1,000; Council of Social Service of the Church of England, Toronto, $1,000; British Welcome and Welfare League, Toronto, $1,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Could the minister give us some information as to whether Quebec received a grant last year for repatriation?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is not in the nature of a grant; it is an arrangement with the Quebec government whereby we spend dollar for dollar with them on repatriation.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the amount spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We spent $50,000 last year and they spent $65,000 for the repatriation of people who had left Quebec and gone to the United States.

Mr. GARDINER: Do you get any statement as to the expenditure of this money?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that the accounts are audited by both auditors general.

Mr. LUCAS: Is there any statement as to the number of people brought back under that vote?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They numbered 1,837.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understood the minister to say that this was in the nature of a grant to share the cost of repatriation; is that so?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The government has no control over the manner in which it is to be spent?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The vote is for repatriation work in the United States, for transportation and assistance to the repatriated persons returning to Canada to settle on the lands, and for directional work and after-care in connection with land settlement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it correct to say that the government pays over to the Quebec government a sum of money for some purpose, over which it has no control and for which it has no further responsibility?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that all these accounts are checked by our auditor general and that while we have no officers of the federal department engaged in this work, all the men being employed by the Quebec government—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In other words it would be fair to say this is a case in which one government collecting taxes from the whole people turns over a portion of those taxes to another government over which it has no control and in connection with which it has no responsibility. It looks to me as though it were the vicious principle which has been discussed so often, and if there is any consistency in this government the grant should be stopped.

Mr. SPENCER: Could the minister inform the committee where those who are brought back to Canada are eventually settled?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that they are all placed on farms in various portions of Quebec, wherever land is available.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I may not be strictly in order on this particular item, but I should like to ask the minister just what is the policy of the department with respect to newly arrived immigrants who have to undergo hospital treatment. I have had many complaints in my constituency of cases where these sick and distressed people have had to undergo hospitalization and it is pretty hard for the hospitals to finance. The contention is that the Department of Immigration should accept some responsibility for immigrants of that kind. Perhaps the minister could tell us the policy of his department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is a very difficult problem and has always appealed to me as a reason why we should not bring in people who are not requested by the provinces. The difficulty of immigration as conducted at present is that there seems to be an idea that all we had to do was to pour people in, particularly in western Canada, and they would be absorbed. Long ago we realized that this was not possible, and as far as I am concerned I think this will be the remedy for a great deal of difficulty which has been experienced in the past with respect to people who through injury or illness become public charges. They are in the province and they are on the hands of the province. It may be and quite frequently is said with some truth that the Department of Immigration has nothing to do with bringing them into the country except to pass them for physical and mental fitness. In no way did the department bring them here, yet they become a public charge and frequently demands are made upon us. We are trying to meet that situation as far as we possibly can, but it is a difficulty which I think will be covered by this agreement.

Relief of distressed Canadians outside of Canada—$4,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to revert for a few minutes to item 59, having to do with Chinese immigration, and to ask a question arising out of the reply made recently by the minister with regard to Chinese employed on coastal boats in Canada. It seems to me it is very serious if the fact that a ship is under British registry entitles that ship, when chartered by a Canadian firm, to employ Chinese sailors or workers on it. I take it that we ought to have complete control—and I think we have—over the people in Canada or on boats in the coastal trade. To have Chinese brought in whether in bond or in any other way when that work can be done by our own white people does seem to be absurd. I should like some explanation from the minister as to his powers in this regard.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend will agree that we have very little power outside of our own shores, and strictly speaking, when a ship ties up to one of our docks, if the crew does not leave the ship and does not commit any misdemeanour against the crown I understand that we have absolutely no control over them. If the ship is of Canadian registry it is a different situation, but foreign ships coming to Canada and plying in these waters have a right to bring their own crews.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: These ships are engaged in coastal trade.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend will understand that there are very many American ships and Canadian ships engaged in coastal trade between Canada and the United States. My hon. friend would not argue that because an American ship was on the great lakes, plying between Canadian and American ports—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This case covers Canadian ports.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not think we should say to the Besco people that they cannot charter foreign ships for cargo carrying purposes. If they charter foreign ships, then the ship is under foreign registry.

Amount required for soldier land settlement advances and cost of administration of soldier land settlement, $1,445,000; amount required for general land settlement advances and cost of administration of general land settlement, $870,000; total, $2,315,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Mr Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the minister to a long-standing grievance in my constituency with reference to a returned soldier who has an account for a barn built upon one of the soldier settlement farms. In 1919 a soldier settler by the name of Ogilvy purchased a farm from the board, and undertook to build a barn the material for which cost over $1,600. He then engaged a carpenter, also a returned soldier, to erect the barn. This man undertook the work, built the barn and overhauled the house, at a total labour cost of $480. Shortly after this time Ogilvy found himself unable to carry on and he abandoned the farm, and because this was crown property the carpenter was unable to file a lien and thus protect his interests. I have brought this matter to the attention of the government practically every year since I have been in the house, and I trust that this year the minister will be able to find some method of settling this account.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. member has spoken to me already about this matter, and there is another case before the department based on practically the same fact. The one difficulty in a settlement of these matters is the fact that the board has no authority to pay an account of this kind. It does seem to be a hardship that because of lack of knowledge of the act a man should perform services and then be denied his wage, especially in view of the fact that the farm has been considerably improved by the construction of the barn. I will promise my hon. friend that this matter will be looked into very carefully to see if something cannot be done.

Mr. LUCAS: The government has received a certain value through the erection of the barn. Fifty-five hundred dollars was paid for the farm which Ogilvy abandoned and it was resold to a British settler for $5,200. I have been advised by the officials of the department that had this barn not been on the property the farm could not have been sold for within $1,000 of the price received. I have seen this barn myself; it is 60 feet by 28 feet, one of those fine hip-roof barns you see when driving through the country. This man is a returned soldier who has received no benefits or assistance from the government and who is attempting to carry on in the district. He is finding it hard to make ends meet and I think the government should attempt to meet this situation.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Mr. Chairman, owing to the fact that a bill has been brought in as a result of the labours of the pensions committee, which bill will ameliorate many of the conditions pertaining under the act, the necessity of my speaking at length is obviated. However, there are one or two matters I should like to discuss with the minister.

Under present conditions there is a possibility, and indeed the probability, that many settlers will be forced to evacuate in the near future owing to dispossession being made of their property. I have already suggested to the minister that no action should be taken in this regard until next spring. I notice an item in an Ottawa paper advising men not to go to Calgary as there are at present 2,000 unemployed in that city. Under such conditions as these, I would suggest that if possible no foreclosures should take place until next spring. If a family is forced off the land they will go into the bread line and some public body will have to support them, and I think the minister will agree with me that the outside cost to the government of carrying these people, even though they may be hopelessly behind in their payments, would not be a very large item. It would be the cheapest and best way of keeping them in decency and in some comfort for the balance of the year. I think the minister sympathizes with me in this regard. No matter how far behind they may be in their payments, I suggest that it would be good business to allow them to remain until next spring.

Owing to the present conditions which exist in connection with immigration and colonization, we may expect some reorganization in connection with this department as well as in connection with the land settlement board. I think the minister will agree and the house will appreciate that even with reorganization a certain number of men will be required to carry on the work. At the present time there are some hundreds of men working under the board. They are all returned men and have been in the service of the board for some ten or twelve years. Like all the rest of us they are not getting any younger, and possibly they have become unfitted for other forms of work and would find it extremely difficult to find employment. I would suggest that when the irreducible minimum has been reached the men who are left should be placed in a permanent position, and no matter under what department this matter may be placed, or what methods are adopted, as far as possible the men who are to do the work shall be those at present performing these duties. This would be only a measure of reestablishment for returned men, and would be only fair to those who have worked faithfully for ten or twelve years. I would ask the minister to give the assurance to those men and to the committee that as far as possible the personnel in the west that may be necessary to carry on this work and work of a similar character, under whatever department it may come, shall be the personnel at present engaged who have fitted themselves for the jobs. That would be an assurance which would be appreciated by the house and the country as a whole.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as my influence goes, as regards whatever readjustments may be necessary—because that is all that I can conceive will happen—we will seek to place the men, if they are not required in that service, in some other branch of the government. If that is not possible, of course some very reasonable consideration should be given them. I am speaking not only of the Soldier Settlement Board, but the Immigration department and the Department of the Interior, and I have notified the Civil Service Commission that positions should be filled by men and women who may find themselves out of employment in these various branches that are to be reduced. In that way we hope to absorb many of the employees who will suffer on account of reductions of staff. As regards the Soldier Settlement Board personnel, undoubtedly they are best fitted for carrying on and will carry on the work in the future as they have done in the past, except as they are surplus, and the latter we shall seek to absorb in the other branches.

Mr. CAMPBELL: As regards the question raised by the hon. member for Camrose, that is a case in which the government can say it has no legal liability. Certainly that is so, but on the other hand, the government is under a distinct moral obligation. The minister pointed out that the board has no authority to pay out money for any such purpose, and he seemed to dismiss the matter with that statement. May I remind the minister that whenever the government want to grant gratuities to particular persons, especially pensions of some kind to deal with compassionate cases, provision for such cases is made every year in the estimates. There are in the estimates at the present time items that are not covered by any legislation; that are purely compassionate cases. We are granting pensions to widows on compassionate grounds. This is in the instance under consideration a distinct claim on compassionate grounds, and there is nothing in the world to prevent the government from bringing down a small sum in the estimates to cover the $480 which is morally due to this man.

Public Printing and Stationery—printing, binding et cetera, the Annual Statutes, $12,000.

Mr. MacLAREN: Last year the Secretary of State, on request, said that he would have published the London resolutions along with the British North America Act. This promise he carried out, and in doing so he has rendered an important service. This has been the first time that the London resolutions have been printed under official circumstances. Having made that acknowledgment, I wish to point out to the minister that his department, in publishing this document, has not given evidence of the comprehension or care that it deserves. The minister will not overlook the fact that last year he promised that copies of the British North America Act and the London resolutions would be distributed to each member of the house. On several occasions I have asked at the parliamentary library for a copy of this document which I hold in my hand, that is to say, the one containing the British North America Act and the London resolutions, but I have not succeeded in obtaining it there. I have no doubt the minister will carry out his promise of distributing it to the members, and that the parliamentary library will have it. The publication itself is defective and has not been carefully prepared. If the minister will see that the present document is scrapped and a proper publication substituted, copies can then be distributed to the members and placed in the library. Even the title of this document is incorrect—The British North America Act. There is more than one act. It should have read: "The British North America Acts", and so on.

Mr. CANNON: All the amendments are included in the one act.

Mr. MacLAREN: I have looked the matter up, and with much deference to the Solicitor General, I understand there is more than one act; there are both amendments and acts.

Mr. CANNON: There is only one act.

Mr. MacLAREN: I wish to draw attention to the date: "1867 to 1927". Under those circumstances it should not have gone beyond the year 1918. There are only one or two other little things I might point out. There is put in smaller type in brackets "The text of Quebec resolutions, 1864, and London resolutions, 1866." Why that should be in brackets is difficult to understand, and, moreover, I do not understand why it should be "the text" any more than the text of the British North America Act. The London resolutions are put in as an appendix. Unless that is done on the principle that the tail wags the dog, I do not see the justification for it. The London resolution should receive a more prominent and definite position as being the basis of the British North America Act. Would the minister take this matter up carefully with his department? I am satisfied we could have a much more valuable addition to the library and the facilities for members by a better selection of the contents. I believe the minister is interested, and I am sure he would like to have the thing done properly.

Mr. RINFRET: I want to thank the hon. member for his commendation. I have given some care to the preparation of the document he has in his hand. I shall certainly bear his remarks in mind and look into the matter very carefully, and if this improvement can be effected I shall see to it that that is done and that copies are then distributed as my hon. friend has suggested.

Mr. MacLAREN: If the minister would let me have his draft before it is finally adopted, I should be very glad to have the opportunity of making a few comments.

Miscellaneous—Grant to the Montreal Association for the Blind, $5,000.

Mr. BANCROFT: Is there any possibility of a conference with the provinces or something of that nature with a view to considering the matter of providing for pensions for the blind? I think the government has received a memorial from the government of Manitoba in that regard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that the matter to which he has just referred is one to which the government wishes to give careful consideration. I cannot say more at the present time, but certainly the object is of a character that appeals very strongly to the government and should equally appeal to the governments of the several provinces.

Item agreed to.

Roads and Bridges—Interprovincial bridge over Ottawa river at Hawkesbury, the Quebec government to contribute one-third of the cost of construction only, the Ontario government to contribute one-quarter of the cost of construction and pay annually one-quarter of all maintenance charges thereafter, $40,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: We all want to congratulate ourselves that our joint efforts have resulted in getting this arrangement to build this very necessary bridge between Hawkesbury and Grenville. Is it the intention to call for tenders during the coming summer?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. The matter seemed of such urgency that in spite of the fact that one province did seem to be a bit backward about doing what my hon. friend from Argenteuil and I thought was their fair share, we have felt that the work should go on, and go on this summer.

Item agreed to.

To provide for payments to the railways in connection with the movements of coal—revote, $182,721.55—$551,985.41.

Mr. BENNETT: This is an item that I assume should be available to assist in the movement of coal from Fernie to Winnipeg. I have pressed upon the house from time to time the desirability of some action being taken because of the large number, amounting now to several hundreds, of idle miners in Fernie. They have represented that a portion of the moneys provided for the purpose of compensating the railways for a reduction of freight rates should be made available to move coal to Winnipeg. It would improve conditions in Fernie very greatly, and I should like to have some assurance that the money will be available not only for the purpose for which it was voted last year, but also to take care of the very unfortunate and difficult situation in that section.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to make a statement to the house on that. First let me say that we intend to continue to assist the movement of coal from the east and from the west for one year more. In addition it is our intention to apply the subvention of $1 a ton to bituminous coal only from the mountain region—that would take in Fernie —as well as the Alberta region. In addition there will be a subvention of 50 cents a ton on briquettes from the Bienfait district of Saskatchewan, which now find a market in the city of Winnipeg. Without going into details I may say that this is being done for the purpose of relieving the very serious situation that exists in the coal mining regions in the mountains. The lignite fields have a subvention still in effect to bring their coal eastward and they do send into the city of Winnipeg about 400,000 tons. We feel that the extension of this subvention to bituminous and semi-bituminous coal will be a very considerable help, as will also the subvention extended to briquettes made in the Bienfait area.

[Sir George Perley.]

Mr. McRAE: Will the minister give an assurance that some of this money will be available at an early date for relief of the situation at Fernie?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Fernie field can get into Winnipeg. At present there is going into that city and the eastern portions of Manitoba about 235,000 tons of American coal of this character.

Miscellaneous—to provide for participation in the celebration of the 900th anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Norway, $2,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What is this?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that the celebration of the 900th anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Norway is to be made a great international event. Certain European governments are I understand sending representatives. The government of the United States is sending two or three representatives. Our government felt it would be much appreciated by many of those who have come to this country from Norway if Canada were also officially represented.

Item agreed to.

To provide for participation in the celebration of the 1,000th anniversary of the founding of the parliament of Iceland, $6,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Why the difference, $6,000 in this case as against $2,000 in the other?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In regard to the celebration of the one-thousandth anniversary of the founding of the parliament of Iceland, it has been thought desirable to have three delegates attend from Canada. The event is a very important one in the history of parliamentary institutions, and it will be an international event. The government had in mind the presentation to Iceland of something of a permanent nature which would be a worthy memorial of the occasion, and I should like the house to know that next year, if the present administration is in office, some proposal along that line will be made. I hope and feel quite sure that if some other administration should be in office, it will be prepared to make a similar appropriation.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: When is the celebration to take place?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In a month or two; in June, I think.

Mr. BENNETT: Last year I made some observations in another place on this historic event, and I think it highly desirable that Canada should be represented. Whether three delegates should be sent in view of the present unemployment condition I am not prepared to say; but as to manifesting our interest in an event of such historic concern to all the world as the establishment of parliamentary institution a thousand years ago, I certainly think that perhaps my hon. friend to my right, if he were in the place the Prime Minister suggests, would undoubtedly take care of the matter in the way of giving some permanent memorial to Iceland, and I should regard it as a privilege and an honour to make a similar proposal.

Last year I acquired an address presented by settlers from Iceland to Sir John A. Macdonald on the occasion of his first visit to Winnipeg. It is written on parchment and is an impressive story of their own struggles against the condition they found in this country and their hopes and aspirations for their future development; and the results attained have been in keeping very largely with the expectations they then expressed.

Item agreed to.

To provide for extension of the inquiry concerning technical and professional classes to all classes in the public service, $25,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Might I say with respect to the part of the inquiry which has already been made namely that into the classification and salaries of technical and professional classes, that the government's first thought was to include a sum in these supplementary estimates to enable payments to be made immediately upon approval of the commission's recommendations, or such of them as it was deemed advisable to approve. However, on consideration it was thought preferable not to provide a lump sum at the moment but to have it understood that the government should be free, if it was thought advisable so to do, to make any increases retroactive so as to begin from about the time at which the commission had made its report, that is to say from the beginning of the present fiscal year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has any provision been made to remove the discrimination which was shown the other day to exist as between the Senate staff and the House of Commons staff?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, we dealt with that this afternoon.

Item agreed to.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS

Mr. BENNETT: Why should not the provision with respect to Governor General's warrants, which comprise items 431 to 444, have been made in the main estimates in view of the expressed policy of the administration in this connection?

Mr. DUNNING: I find it rather difficult to answer my hon. friend's question, except to say it is the practice. I think my hon. friend's point is well taken and I shall look into the matter.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE

The house proceeded to consider certain resolutions reported from committee of supply.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING moved:

Resolved that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, the sum of $234,229,125.26 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. BENNETT: This probably concludes supply so far as the committee is concerned, and there are two or three questions upon which I would like to receive information. In common with other members of this house I have received many telegrams asking for information from the government as to the change in customs duties on automobiles from wholesale to retail prices by order in council after the house closes. This is a matter of vital importance on the question of ways and means of making good the supply to His Majesty. I would like a statement from the Minister of National Revenue in that regard. In my judgment the statute does not contemplate a change of tariff by that method, but I would like some assurance in the matter.

Mr. EULER: I have had a great many communications similar to the one read by the leader of the opposition. Representations have been made that in view of the fact that there are varying discounts in connection with the importation of different makes of automobiles, and that as difficulties in that regard are experienced in the department, it might be well to have a uniform rate of discount. That is as far as it has gone; nothing whatever has been done.

Mr. BENNETT: Is such action contemplated?—because we know a good deal in connection with what the hon. gentleman is talking about. There is an election pending, and we know what happened on a former occasion. We have the right to ask for a definite assurance, and we will have it if this house has to sit until to-morrow morning.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend is even pointing his finger at me, and I may tell him that that is entirely unnecessary. I have given him the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: Those are not the facts.

Mr. EULER: No action has been taken.

Mr. BENNETT: I have asked if action is contemplated. That is the question I asked, and I have a right to ask it.

Mr. EULER: The representations have not been considered.

Mr. BENNETT: That does not answer my question. Does my hon. friend propose to give effect to those representations?

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that that would be a matter of policy, and that no one minister could make a definite statement in regard to it. Representations have been made and received, and have not been considered.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, does the minister think that we have no idea of what is involved in that?

Mr. EULER: I cannot read my hon. friend's mind.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but my hon. friend will understand his language. We can have no difficulty in understanding what is behind this; none whatever. Surely the hon. members who come from Saskatchewan and members to my left will have some interest in this matter, if they believe in what they have been talking about so far as protection is concerned. The hon. gentleman says representations have been made to him. Were they made to him through the chairman of the tariff board?

Mr. EULER: They were not.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the representations which were made to the tariff board in connection with it have nothing to do with the representations made to him. Is that clear?

Mr. EULER: What were the representations?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman asks what the representations were. They were representations in connection with varying rates of discount that were made by importers of goods into this country, and it was suggested that a uniform rate might be established on such importations for tariff purposes. The hon. gentleman at once sees what the effect of that would be; it would change the whole incidence of taxation with respect to given matters. Is the incidence of taxation to be changed by order in council with respect to automobiles? That is the question I asked.

Mr. EULER: The question is really one of administration. My hon. friend knows very well that as a matter of administration, when difficulty might be experienced in establishing what the discounts are to be, the government would have power to establish certain rates of discount. Certain difficulties do exist. I am not prepared to say that they exist to such a degree that we would be justified by order in council in establishing a certain uniform rate of discount. It does not follow either that if a certain fixed rate of discount were adopted it would increase the protection.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say anything about increasing protection.

Mr. EULER: It might reduce it, as a matter of fact. The matter would have to be considered from the point of view of the administration of the department itself. No action has been taken at all.

Mr. BENNETT: I will ask this: Have these varying rates of discount existed now for the first time or have they existed for the last three years?

Mr. EULER: For a long time; and I can tell my hon. friend that it has been constantly necessary, in order that we might ascertain the actual prices in the country of origin, to make investigations in the United States to see whether those rates actually correspond with the rates made to apply when the goods are exported to Canada. That constitutes a fairly serious consideration. Because I have come to no decision at all in regard to the matter, I am not saying that these difficulties are so great as to render it impossible for the department to administer the law. I have no intention of taking or recommending action until I am quite convinced I am within the law and that it will be what seems to me in the best interests of all concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: What right has the minister to raise the price? If it had not been for what happened in this country by regulation I would not be presenting this matter to the house and country for consideration. Let us look at the matter fairly. The other day a regulation was read over the signature of Mr. Breadner, the Commissioner of Customs, increasing by 40 per cent the price at which furniture was to be valued for duty purposes—forty per cent, mind you. I ask the minister where he finds authority to do that, when the dumping clause places a limit of 15 per cent.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend knows very well that when the department of customs has reason to believe or perhaps even to know that goods are being imported into this country at a value less than they hold in the country of origin we have the absolute right to make an appraisal, pending the establishment of the facts which we believe to exist. If after the establishing of the fact we find that we are wrong, the valuation is placed upon its proper basis and a refund is made. That is what was done in the case of furniture. We had reason to think that furniture was imported from the southern United States or from the central southern United States at less than cost. I think my hon. friend knows that to be the fact.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know it; I only know what has been said.

Mr. EULER: I am saying that absolutely in good faith. Instructions were given by the commissioner—and by the way, I will say that I had nothing to do with the rate at which the increase was made, 40 per cent. That is not too high if goods are being sold we will say at 50 per cent of their cost, as sometimes is the case when people in the United States have stocks on hand which they cannot sell in that country and which they attempt to dump into this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. EULER: Yes, I mean exactly what I say. My hon. friends are just as much opposed to that as I am. If goods, for example came into this country at 50 per cent of their cost in the United States, an increase of 40 per cent on that 50 per cent would only amount to 20 per cent, which would make a valuation of 70 per cent, still 30 per cent lower than their actual cost, so that the amount of 40 per cent sounds a great deal higher than it may be in actual fact.

Mr. BENNETT: It exactly means forty cents on the dollar.

Mr. EULER: It depends on what you have as your basis. If goods come in at 70 per cent of their cost, 40 per cent of that is only 28 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; but these two things stand together, and let there be no misunderstanding. What happened was this: furniture came into this country under a 30 per cent duty. The commissioner of customs and the minister says he does not know anything about this 40 per cent—

Mr. EULER: I do not want to be misunderstood; I knew that a higher valuation was being asked for but I did not know it would be 40 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: The law says he is the man who should know.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend knows very well that the minister is empowered to do a great many things which are done by his deputy.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister must take the responsibility for that action. If he does not know about its being taken he does not know his business.

Mr. EULER: I will do that; I will take the responsibility.

Mr. BENNETT: If he does not know what is done he does not know his business. Knowing it means that he approves of it. Who is Mr. Breadner, the Commissioner of Customs? He has no place in our institutions; he is not responsible to parliament. The minister is responsible; the minister is the man who under the statute is responsible, and he increased the duty by 40 per cent. Therefore the duty becomes 42 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Pending adjustment.

Mr. BENNETT: Pending adjustment, as the minister says, but you delay the adjustment and maintain a duty of 42 per cent.

Mr. EULER: Forty per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: No forty-two per cent; forty per cent of 30 per cent is 12 per cent, and 12 per cent added to the present 30 per cent makes a duty of 42 per cent which is now imposed. There should be no misunderstanding about that. Now we come to the other item about which he says he has had applications. If the application is acceded to, the proposal will be to change the rate of discount. Why could not the same power be exercised in the one instance as in the other?—because in the one instance they ship over goods at wholesale prices and then put in a traders' or dealers' discount, the discount they allow to large dealers in their own country, or large wholesale buyers. This discount varies with various factories. The suggestion has been made that this should not be allowed. The effect, of course, would be the same as the effect which has been attained by the use of the regulation referred to.

My submission is this, that if anything of this sort was contemplated, instead of doing it by an indirect method by which the public would not be advised that tariffs were being increased, the government should have faced it like men and increased the tariffs and put them on the statute books of the country rather than do it by that indirect method. I am making that point in all sincerity, because the people of this country have the right to know about these things. Now, in the closing hours of this parliament they see in newspapers coming from the border cities and scattered all over Canada that this method is to be taken to effectuate the same purpose as was attained with respect to furniture. Why was not the tariff on furniture dealt with boldly and bravely and squarely and fairly and honestly in this house, instead of utilizing the Commissioner of Customs for the purpose of increasing by 40 per cent the value for duty on that commodity? That is the question I am putting to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. EULER: I am afraid my hon. friend is waxing indignant about something that does not exist. As far as furniture is concerned, that happened to be a matter of emergency because there were great stocks of furniture which the manufacturers in the United States were attempting to dump into this country. The very same action would follow, so far as the customs department is concerned, if the the same conditions obtained in any other line of manufacture.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. EULER: I am sure my hon. friend does not question the propriety of the department doing that.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: It is the way in which it was done.

Mr. EULER: It is the legal way. My hon. friend knows this, that if goods are coming into this country at a less value than they legally ought to for the purposes of duty, it immediately becomes the duty of the minister, if you like—and I will take responsibility for that—to give instructions that new appraisals be made. That is exactly what was done. My hon. friend may think that on a new appraisal an added appraisal of 40 per cent is too high. That is a matter of opinion. If it is shown to be too high, those who have had to pay those duties will get their refunds, and that is all there is to it.

I should like to add just one further word in regard to the responsibility of the minister. My hon. friend says the minister does not know his business. Perhaps he does not know it quite so well as the hon. leader of the opposition, but he is doing his best. I may say this to him, and he knows it is true because he has had a little experience himself as a minister: no minister in this or any other government could function if he tried to attend to all the little details in his department. I will give him an example. The hon. gentleman was a member of the committee which investigated the customs department four years ago. He was one of those who said—I think I am doing him no injustice when I say this, and he will correct me if I am wrong— that whereas the minister is supposed to pass on all seizures, some five hundred or six hundred of which occur every month, the minister should not do that but should leave it to his deputy.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that was not the way it was put. However, go on and I will deal with it later.

Mr. EULER: Yet under the law the minister, as my hon. friend from Lincoln knows, is supposed to sign every decision on the seizures.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It was impossible.

Mr. EULER: Of course it was impossible, and this particular minister in charge of the customs department divested himself of that authority and gave it to the Commissioner of Customs, which is exactly what the committee desired.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I did that myself.

Mr. EULER: And yet it is well known that the minister has to take responsibility under the law.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has not quite understood. Questions of taxation must be approved by the minister. Questions involving taxation must be considered by the minister, because it is the executive action of the government; it is something for which the government must assume responsibility. Surely the minister will admit that. Questions of routine we did report should not be dealt with in that day; we recommended that the minister should not be concerned with questions of routine and seizures and so on. That we put as strongly and fairly as we could, and it is because I believe that the whole theory of responsible government is concerned that I put it to the minister myself. That is, the executive substitute, its functions for those of parliament, but when it does so the minister must assume the responsibility.

So much for that. I should have liked to get some assurance from the minister as to what his contemplated action may be, but he has told us that he has not given the matter any consideration and therefore has no contemplated action in mind.

There is one further matter with which I should like to deal, although the Minister of Labour is not in his place. I asked him what steps were being taken in connection with the introduction into this country of a monopoly in films, and he said the matter was under consideration and that we would get some further information on that point. It is possible that some other member of the administration may be able to answer the question and I should like to know whether that investigation is being proceeded with. I hold in my hand a few of the telegrams which I have received from various organizations, women's organizations being particularly concerned about the films and asking whether we are to be at the mercy of an alleged monopoly. If so, then of course we should know it, and I have asked the question for the purpose of eliciting information with which the people of Canada are vitally concerned.

Mr. EULER: In order that the house may be informed of the scope of this furniture regulation, I may say that the order applied only to furniture coming from quite a restricted area in the United States. I am not sure that I mentioned that before, but I think it applies to North Carolina and possibly one or two other states; with regard to importations from Michigan or any other of the United States, or any other country, the regulation does not apply at all. If we find that we were wrong in adding the 40 per cent as I said before, refunds will be made upon application.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I think the whole question rests upon the point whether the goods were sold in the territory named by the minister below the regular market price. That is the whole point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as the films are concerned I may say to my hon. friend that I understand the Minister of Labour is now exercising such authority as he has under the combines act to investigate the position of matters to see if a combine exists. If it is found that there is reason to believe that a combine exists in contravention of the provisions of the act, then proceedings will be taken under the act.

Mr. BENNETT: I thank the right hon. gentleman for the information he has given. I was pressed to ask before this parliament prorogued whether or not the minister had directed proceedings to be taken. If an investigation is held and it is found that the conditions are not as alleged, that would be the end of it. The right hon. gentleman has said that action will be taken and that is all that can fairly be said.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I was not present in the committee when the question of furniture was first brought up. Do the investigations carried on by the minister show that the articles in question were being slaughtered across the line, or that the price at which they were brought into Canada was less than the fair market value?

Mr. EULER: The report has not been received; if it has come in during the last day or so, I have not seen it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How did the minister come to take the initial step?

Mr. EULER: Complaints were received from Canadian manufacturers of furniture that goods were being slaughtered in Canada. I do not think there is any doubt that in some southern factories great stocks of furniture have accumulated and under the stress of circumstances they attempted to dispose of the goods, and did dispose of them in Canada. That is how the whole matter came about.

Mr. STIRLING: Were they being sold in Canada at a price lower than that charged in the country of origin?

Mr. EULER: That is the complaint which is being investigated.

Mr. BENNETT: They were being sold at the same price in some cities.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is it not a fact that the officers of the department reported that the American Furniture Company were selling furniture in Canada at the same prices charged in the United States? The minister refused to permit an order of the house to pass stating that the information asked for was confidential. I contend that it is a matter of urgent public importance that those papers should be brought before this house. If my information is correct, those papers in connection with the investigations into the prices of furniture sold by the American furniture companies were in the hands of the department at that time.

Mr. EULER: I think my hon. friend will admit that when that question was asked I stated that the report had not been received, but I said if it had been received that it would not be given to the house because it was the practice of the department not to disclose the business of any private individual. If that practice is to be reversed by the will of this house, I have nothing more to say. That is the practice which has always been followed, and I think it is a good one.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 347, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1931.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

MAPLE SUGAR INDUSTRY

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 59, respecting the maple sugar industry.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BENNETT

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. It will be observed that one of the evening papers has displayed in large letters a declaration that a member of the house alleges that his frank has been forged. I thought the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) was in his place, but I see I am mistaken. That hon. member made a charge of the most serious character involving his opening a letter which had been placed in his post office box. At my request the envelope in which the letter was enclosed was handed to the clerk. After seeing this letter, the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) was certain that the initials were those of Mr. Finlay MacDonald, the hon. member for South Cape Breton. A few minutes later the hon. member for South Cape Breton entered the house and at once recognized his initials. He then communicated with Your Honour, as it was necessary that he leave immediately in order to catch a train, and stated that his initials "F. MacD" were those appearing on the envelope in question. I had not the slightest difficulty in recognizing the initials.

I desire, speaking only as one member of this house—this is not a question of privilege which attaches to me alone, but one which concerns every hon. member of this house—to place this matter before the house in order that the charge made against one of our members, namely that of forgery, should be met immediately before it can be sent out through the country. It was suggested that the initials of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough had been forged, but there was no difficulty in recognizing them as being the initials of the hon. member for South Cape Breton. This is a question of privilege which does not belong to any individual member of the house; it is a question of privilege which concerns the whole house, and I raise it because it touches the honour of every hon. member. An hon. member asserts on the closing day of the session that he opened the letter under the circumstances. The envelope is placed on the table of the house before the clerk and remains there in order that an opportunity may be afforded for a statement to be made by Your Honour in consequence of the hon. member for South Cape Breton being called away to catch his train.

Mr. SPEAKER: After the incident this afternoon the clerk of the house sent the envelope to me, and I had the pleasure of a visit from Mr. MacDonald. He said in my presence that the initials were his; that it was his own frank, and I have no doubt, after what I have seen and knowing his handwriting, that they were his initials.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 138, to amend the criminal code.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, May 30, 1930.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate chamber at 10.15 p.m. for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, Sir
Your obedient servant,
E. C. Mieville,
Secretary to the Governor General.

SUSPENSION OF SITTING

EXPRESSION OF CONGRATULATIONS AND GOOD WISHES TO MR. SPEAKER

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): We have concluded the business of the evening, and this brings to a conclusion, so far as the House of Commons is concerned, the fourth session of the sixteenth parliament of Canada. I would move Mr. Speaker, that the sitting be now suspended until 10.15 o'clock this day.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is entirely out of order to make any observations at the moment, but as the Prime Minister has indicated, we are now in the dying hours of the fourth session of the sixteenth parliament. It might not be thought out of place, therefore, if one who sits to your left, sir, should convey to you our thanks, our regards and good wishes for your future. While I believe it is not usual to do so, because in England I understand the office of Speaker continues from parliament to parliament, in view of our constitutional position there is not much likelihood of that happening in this country for a long time, and as representing the opposition or at least one portion of the opposition in parliament it affords me great pleasure to congratulate Mr. Speaker upon the eminent fairness he has shown in the discharge of the difficult duties of his position; his urbanity; his courtesy, characteristic as it is of his race; his willingness and desire at all times to represent faithfully, as the spokesman of the House of Commons, the great traditions embodied in the wealth of lore that has accumulated during the centuries in connection with the high office that he holds.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased indeed that the last word it should be my privilege to utter in this parliament this session should be one of entire accord with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). He has expressed so eloquently what I believe to be the feeling of all here assembled, that it is unnecessary for me to say more that that we to your right, and indeed, I may speak for all, are in most cordial accord with what has been said about yourself in the discharge of the duties of your high and honourable position. May I add that as we bring to a close the proceedings of another parliament and take our leave, whatever the future may hold in store for him or for us, our best wishes go with the present Speaker of the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. Bennett, I wish to thank you from the bottom of my heart for your kind words. I have been in the house for thirty-four years. My heart is in this house. From the day I came here I have met friends only. On returning home this evening I can truly say that as Speaker of the Commons I have been actuated by good faith and fairness to all. When I took the Chair in 1922, I resolved that from the moment I stepped into it I should cease to be a partisan. I had been, God knows, a good partisan. I have striven to live up to my promise and I can declare honestly and conscientiously, that in every ruling, in every decision I gave as Speaker of the House of Commons, I have ignored parties and have followed the standing orders, the usages, the customs and traditions of parliament.

In 1926, when for the third time you unanimously reelected me Speaker of the house, I said that every morning as I passed in front of the monument of Alexander Mackenzie, that great Scotch-Canadian and revered Prime Minister of the Dominion from 1874 to 1878,—I would read the beautiful inscription which characterized his life and crystallized his sense of responsibility:

Duty was his law, conscience his ruler.

I have tried to live up to the great teaching that I find in that sentence.

Once more, I thank all parties in the House of Commons for the support they have given me. I have tried to maintain here British parliamentary traditions, and if I have a word of advice to offer to you, my friends, it is that in future, whether you sit on the left or on the right of the Speaker, or there, yonder, you will live up to those traditions. What is taking place in the world to-day shows conclusively that after all those traditions, when deeply rooted in the soil, constitute the best safeguard for justice and Liberty.

Motion agreed to and at 9.30 p.m. the sitting was suspended until 10.15 this day.

The house resumed at 10.15 o'clock.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber, His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1931.

To which bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of His Excellency the Governor General, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the fourth session of the sixteenth parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

In bringing the present session to a close, I desire to congratulate you upon the expedition with which parliament has conducted its proceedings, and upon the extent and importance of the legislative enactments of the session. Matters which have been the subject of long-standing controversy have been successfully adjusted. In several other directions legislation of far-reaching significance has been enacted.

It is a source of particular satisfaction that the public accounts of the fiscal year recently ended again disclose a large surplus and that it has again been possible to effect further material reductions in taxation, as well as a further reduction in the national debt.

Especially gratifying is the fact that, in continuance of the policy of endeavouring to remove all substantial difficulties in the relations between the Dominion and the provinces, a settlement of the long-standing controversies respecting the natural resources of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta has been effected. The several agreements have received your approval, as well as the approval of the provincial legislatures. Approval has also been given to the agreement reached with the province of British Columbia concerning the restoration to the province of the lands comprising what is known as the railway belt and Peace River block.

The recommendations of the royal commission on maritime claims have been further implemented by the legislation which has been enacted with respect to the coal and iron and steel industries.

Extensive and comprehensive revisions have been made in the customs tariff with a view to bringing certain schedules more into line with modern business requirements, and existing economic conditions. Material and broad extensions have been made in the British Preferential tariff schedules, as well as other adjustments which it is believed will serve to promote a larger measure of reciprocal trade between the component parts of the British Empire and with other countries.

The interest which has been evinced during the session in all matters affecting ex-service men demonstrates once more that Canada stands in the forefront in continued appreciation of her soldier-citizens and their dependents. The legislation providing allowances for veterans who may be unemployable as a result of non-pensionable disabilities, the amended procedure and methods of administration under the Pensions Act, the extension of time to applicants under the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act, and the more liberal treatment accorded soldier settlers, will bring a much sought for relief to numerous individuals and homes.

The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act gives statutory effect to the fair wages policy which, for some years past, has been observed on construction work under public contract. It provides also for the observance on such work of an eight hour day. The benefits of this legislation, both as to wages and hours, have been extended, under government policy, to workmen employed on construction work by the government itself. The principle of the eight hour working day has also been made applicable by the government to employees in the public service.

To aid in the solution of the problem of seasonal unemployment, provision has been made for holding at an early date a conference of Dominion and provincial governments, of representatives of municipalities, of transportation companies, and of industrial and labour associations, to consider methods of cooperation in furthering continuous employment throughout Canada during the winter months.

A federal-provincial conference for the purpose of furthering cooperation between the Dominion government and the governments of the several provinces of Canada on matters pertaining to immigration has also been arranged.

The consolidation of the Canada Grain Act in accordance with the recommendations of the standing committee of the House of Commons on agriculture, the provision made for increased storage facilities for grain, as well as the inquiry into the promotion of the live stock industry of Canada for which provision has also been made, should prove of substantial benefit to the agricultural industry.

To ensure the development of the fisheries resources of the Dominion and of the industries based thereon, provision has been made for the appointment of a minister of the crown to preside over a separate Department of Fisheries.

Conventions with the United States for the protection and extension of the sockeye salmon fisheries and for the preservation of the halibut fisheries of the Pacific coast have received approval.

Forward steps in the field of international relations have been taken by the signature of the treaty for Reduction of Naval Armament, by the extension of arbitration through the acceptance of the optional clause, and by the revision of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, all of which measures have received your approval.

Amendments to the Dominion Elections Act have been made which should further ensure fairness and the avoidance of partisanship in the administration of our electoral system.

Among other enactments of the session have been important amendments to the Companies Act, the Export Act, and the Criminal Code.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the supplies granted for the carrying on of the public services of the Dominion.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

In the opinion of my ministers, it is desirable that the judgment of the people upon the questions which now engage public attention should be obtained during the course of the present year. In order to permit of Canada being represented at the Imperial conference and the Imperial economic conference, which open their proceedings in London, on September 30th, and to afford to ministers of the crown as ample an opportunity as may be possible to prepare for the important work of these conferences, it has been deemed advisable that the present parliament should be dissolved without delay, and the day of polling fixed for the earliest date possible after dissolution. I have, accordingly, to announce my intention of causing Parliament to be dissolved immediately following prorogation.

In taking leave of you at this time and under these circumstances, I desire to express the unqualified pleasure which I have derived from my association with you throughout the four sessions of this the sixteenth parliament of Canada. I pray that upon your labours the blessing of Divine Providence may be abundantly bestowed.

This concluded the fourth session of the sixteenth parliament.
